I write this email in support of House Bill 50. This bill has been long in coming and I believe it will provide our younger heroes a better and more conducive venue to shed the pressures of military life. All too often, younger veterans are limited to on-base attractions. This allows them to congregate with their peers, but doesn't offer the mentorship opportunities that Patriotic Organizations such as the Veterans of Foreign Wars or the American Legion do. It should be noted that there is no age restriction for membership in the VFW, only that they be an American citizen, honorable service in the Armed Forces, and be the recipient of a qualifying campaign medal. As such, young (under 21) veterans may return from their deployment fresh from combat and be eligible for immediate membership, only to be told they can enter their club only during a special event. This is wrong and must be changed. I believe the verbiage in HB 50 will remove the confusion and correct this wrong.

Sec. 04.11.110. Club license.

(a) A club license authorizes a club or organization to sell alcoholic beverages for consumption only on the licensed premises.

(b) A club license may only be issued to a club, fraternal organization, patriotic organization, or social organization that has been (1) chartered by a state or national organization for a period of two consecutive years before application for a license under this section; or (2) chartered by a national organization and the national organization has maintained a chartered club or organization within the state for a period of at least 20 years. The organization licensed under this section must be operated for social, recreational, political, benevolent, or athletic purposes and not for profit. A club license may only be issued to an organization if none of the income from the sale of alcoholic beverages is distributed to its members, directors, or officers. Soliciting of public patronage of the club premises except as approved by the board is a violation of this section.

(c) The biennial club license fee is $1,200.

(d) Alcoholic beverages sold under a club license may be purchased only by (1) members of the club and their families, (2) widows or widowers of deceased members who have been accorded club privileges, and (3) military personnel on active duty and their accompanying spouses who are extended the privilege by patriotic organizations [upon special occasions]. Alcoholic beverages may be purchased only in the portion of the club rooms that are part of the licensed premises.

(e) Guests who enter the club premises on the invitation of a member and in the company of the member may be served but not sold alcoholic beverages. A guest must leave the premises immediately upon the departure of the member who extended the invitation to enter.

(f) Alcoholic beverages purchased by a club or organization licensed under this section may not be used or consumed off the licensed premises of the club or organization by any person, including club members and employees unless used or consumed at social, recreational, benevolent, or athletic functions of the club or organization and the use or consumption is approved by the board.

(g) [Notwithstanding AS 04.16.049], Access by persons under 21 years of age to

(1) a club's licensed premises is permitted when alcoholic beverages are not present; and

(2) the premises of a patriotic organization licensed as a club under this section is permitted when alcoholic beverages are present if the person is a guest or member of the club or the spouse of a guest or member of the club and possesses a valid active duty military or armed forces identification card issued by the United States Department of Defense or the United States Department of Homeland Security.

(h) In this section, "member" means a holder of paid-up membership entitling the holder to all voting rights and privileges of membership under the constitution or bylaws of the club or organization.

The Central Council of the Tlingit and Haida Indian Tribes of Alaska qualifies for a "club license" under this section, but licensure is conditioned on the receipt of an express, written waiver of the council's sovereignty in regard to the enforcement of this title and local laws pertaining to alcoholic beverages, which waiver should be reviewed by the Attorney General's office before the license is issued. December 18, 1985 Op. Att'y Gen.

Decisions -

Editor's notes. - The cases cited in the note below were decided under earlier statutes.

A national charter is one which is derived from the nation by act of Congress. In re Capper, 11 Alaska 480 (D. Alaska 1948).

Use of part of club premises for public dining room. - While the use of a part of the club premises for a public dining room might have been in some degree inconsistent with its restricted and private use as part of the club premises, nothing in the law forbade such duplicate use. There was no legal reason why members of the club should not purchase and be served with intoxicating liquor in that room under the club license, although persons not members of the club and not beneficiaries of the bounty of the members of the club could not lawfully purchase any liquor there. In re Alaska Labor Trades Ass'n, 10 Alaska 472 (D. Alaska 1945). This section now provides that "soliciting of public patronage of the club premises except as approved by the board is a violation of this section." - Ed. note.

Sales are limited to members of club. - The legislature considered disposal of liquor in clubs as sales, and limited such sales to the members of the club. In re Alaska Labor Trades Ass'n, 10 Alaska 472 (D. Alaska 1945).

But there is nothing in the law forbidding the serving of liquor to guests. In re Alaska Labor Trades Ass'n, 10 Alaska 472 (D. Alaska 1945).

So long as they do not pay for liquor consumed. - Where evidence given at the hearing disclosed that persons other than members of the club had been served with liquor on the club's premises, but there was no testimony that any of the nonclub members so served paid for the liquor consumed, the only proper presumption in which the court can indulge is that the liquor so served was sold to and paid for by members of the club and, therefore, the sales were lawful. In re Alaska Labor Trades Ass'n, 10 Alaska 472 (D. Alaska 1945).

Interest of manager in business of club. - Where the business affairs of a club, including the purchase and keeping and sale to members of liquor, are so inextricably intermingled with those of the manager of the club, the manager has an interest in the business and a license may not be lawfully issued. In re Alaska Labor Trades Ass'n, 10 Alaska 472 (D. Alaska 1945).

And if the bill passes, the state

te transportation officials say,
:ause Alaska would be in viola-

"It sends a mixed message.
r some it's OK, for others it's t," said Royal Bidwell, business nager of the Forget Me Not undation, an anti-drunken ving group based in Wasilla.

The law could set a prece-

Kodiak, where any young per-n whose profession puts them risk of losing their life, such police or firefighters, could be owed to drink.

Kentucky, South Carolina and isconsin have all considered
Kingston, R-Georgia, proposed a similar measure last year that ultimately died in committee.

About 2,000 soldiers under age 21 serve in the Army in Alaska, said Maj. Bill Coppernoll, public affairs officer for U.S. Army Alaska. Federal law prohibits them from drinking on base.

Alcohol is involved in a third of misconduct incidents on Alaska's military installation, three generals said in a letter to Rep. Dan Saddler, co-chairman of the House Special Committee on Military & Veterans' Affairs. Saddler is sponsoring a separate bill that would establish more access to private clubs for members of the military younger than 21, but not allow them to drink (See accompanying sidebar)

Lowering the drinking age could further increase drunken driving arrests of young soldiers who would drive back from off-men and women deploy, they understand even those of drinking age may not be allowed to consume alcohol while deployed," said the letter from Lt. Gen. Dana T. The legislation may linger before lawmakers decide any-

Cody Short, a cadet in the Army ROTC at the University of Alaska Anchorage, said he was unsure why a special law should be created just for young soldiers.

"We follow the laws applied to the U.S," said Short, 20. "I can wait till I'm 21."

VFW asks Saddler to get under-21 military into club

Bill wouldn't let them drink

BY ZAZ HOLLANDER
Alaska Star 4-14-11

Officers at Eagle River's Veterans of Foreign Wars club enlisted Eagle River's Representative Dan Saddler in their mission to open the doors to active-duty service men and women – even those who aren't quite 21 yet.

House Bill 50 sponsored by Saddler would let soldiers under 21 enter licensed premises of patriotic clubs if they are members or guests of a member. It would not allow them to drink alcohol.

The bill also has a section that expands access to service and patriotic organizations for active-duty service men and women over 21. Some language in statute limits such access to "special occasions" only, Saddler wrote in an e-mail. HB 50 deletes this language.

Saddler called the bill "simply an access bill" and said he wanted to emphasize that the bill would not allow underage persons to drink.

"It simply clarifies that soldiers over 21 don't have to wait for a 'special occasion' to visit patriotic clubs, and that soldiers under 21 can visit if they are club members, or guests," he wrote.

Eagle River's VFW Post 9785 asked for Saddler's help several months ago while the legislator was at the post, according to John Mattison, the post quartermaster and himself a Vietnam-era veteran who retired as a U.S. Army major. Mattison talked to Saddler again by phone in late March.

"A young troop can enlist when he's 17, go through his training, go to Afghanistan, come back when he's 19," Mattison said. "He's eligible for the VFW but he can't come in. I wanted to untangle that mess."

But once inside, wouldn't it be pretty easy for an underage soldier to wander up to the bar and order a beer? Or get a friend to do the buying for him?

Mattison said the VFW doesn't go through a lot of bartenders, and the staff gets to know patrons.

"I don't see that as being a problem at all," he said. "We've talked to our bartenders. They said, 'No, it won't be a problem.' They card everybody they don't know."

In terms of someone buying for an underage member, Mattison said that could theoretically happen the way laws are written now – somebody can bring in an underage soldier as a guest, sit them at a table and buy the table a pitcher of beer.

The larger problem is that right now, an Afghanistan veteran can't come in the door of the VFW unless there's a special occasion, Mattison said. If the bill passes, the soldier could become a dues-paying member.

"Any time we get an Afghanistan or Iraqi vet in there, it's a special occasion, that's how we treat it," he said. "But we've got to sign them in as guests."

The bill remained in the House Judiciary Committee as of Tuesday.

Sponsor Statement HB 55 Knife Rights Act

"An Act adding definitions of 'gravity knife' and 'switchblade' to the criminal law."

In Alaska, spring loaded knives are an important tool used by hunters, anglers, and craftsmen. According to the American Knife and Tool Institute, there are over 35.6 million Americans who carry and use some type of utilitarian knife which opens with one hand. In the United States, assisted-opening and one-hand-opening knives now make up 80 percent of all knives sold.

In recent years some jurisdictions have acted to restrict the type of knives individuals may carry. In a number of instances this has been done by attempting to define common pocketknives as switchblades, gravity knives, or other knives.

Frequently that switchblade definition is assigned to a knife capable of being opened with one hand and having a "bias towards closure". A "bias toward closure" simply means it has a spring, detent, or other mechanism, which maintains the knife in a closed position until the bias is overcome with applied pressure.

A knife of this configuration falls short of the definition of switchblade used in other states and by the federal government: "...any knife having a blade which opens automatically (1) by hand pressure applied to a button or other device in the handle of the knife, or (2) by operation of inertia, gravity, or both."

Presently Alaskan's are able to purchases these knives in Alaska and online. They are used in the work environment and in recreation. This bill simply clarifies that one handed hunting and utility knives do not qualify as a switchblade and as such are legally owned.

I would appreciate your support

MEMORANDUM December 17, 2010

SUBJECT: Draft definitions of "switchblade" and "gravity knife" (Work Order No. 27-LS0298\A)

TO: Representative Mark Neuman
Attn: Rex Shattuck

FROM: Dan Wayne
Legislative Counsel

I've prepared the enclosed draft bill, based on language from Texas, as asked. The draft defines "gravity knife" separately in order to distinguish gravity knives from switchblades and because "gravity knife" is in the same sentence as "switchblade" in the only two places (AS 11.61.210 and 11.61.220) where "switchblade" appears in the Alaska Statutes. I also modified the language you provided, slightly, for reasons of drafting style.

In two Alaska cases, the Alaska Supreme Court has considered how to define "gravity knife" and "switchblade" in the absence of a statutory definition. The court upheld a weapons crime conviction in one case, finding that the term "gravity knife" is not improperly vague but has a readily ascertainable and consistent definition. According to the Court, in that case, a gravity knife is one in which the blade opens, falls into place, or is ejected into position by the force of gravity or by centrifugal force. State v. Weaver, 736 P.2d 781 (Alaska Ct. App. 1987). A few years later, the Court affirmed a lower court's dismissal of a weapons charge, reasoning that butterfly knives and balisong knives do not fit within the common definition of "gravity knife." State v. Strange, 785 P.2d 563 (Alaska Ct. App. 1990). I've enclosed a copy of State v. Strange to this memo because the court's discussion of various knives and their definitions might be of use.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

Knife Definitions

Introduction

In an effort to limit the type of knives that can be legally imported into the United States, the Department of Homeland Secretary proposed revocation of the admissibility of certain knives with spring assisted opening mechanisms. This proposal would establish a new definition for qualifying switchblade knives.

Under the Switchblade Knife Act of 1958, a switchblade is defined as any knife with a blade which opens automatically by hand pressure applied to a button or other device in the handle of the knife, or by operation of inertia, gravity, or both. The proposed regulation would designate one-hand and assisted opening knives as being switchblades, even though the federal law does not declare these knives as switchblades.

Issue

Spring loaded knives are an important tool for hunters and anglers. According to the American Knife and Tool Institute, there are over 35.6 million Americans, including many who are hunters and anglers, who carry and use some type of utilitarian knife which opens with one hand. In the United States, assisted-opening and one-hand-opening knives are 80 percent of all knives sold. Spring loaded hunting knives should not qualify as switchblade knives.

Language

The Texas State Legislature passed H.B. No. 4456. This bill provided the state definition for qualifying switchblade knives.

1. "Switchblade knife" means any knife that has a blade that folds, closes, or retracts into the handle or sheath that opens automatically by pressure applied to a button or other device located on the handle, or opens or releases a blade from the handle or sheath by the force of gravity or by the application of centrifugal force.
2. The term (Switchblade) does not include a knife that has a spring, detent, or other mechanism designed to create a bias toward closure that requires exertion applied to the blade by hand, wrist, or arm to overcome the bias toward closure and open the knife.

Points of Interest

- Court cases in several states such as California, Illinois, Michigan, and Texas, have all ruled in favor of assisted-opening and one-hand opening knives. These knives are not considered switchblades because they do not possess the activating button or device on the handle of the knife.

Apprentice Hunting License

Introduction

The apprentice hunting license is an idea in which hunters may hunt prior to having passed a hunter education course. The idea of "try before you buy" is the driving force behind this new recruitment tool. These laws provide novice hunters, who have yet to pass the education course, the chance to purchase an apprentice hunting license and hunt under the direct supervision of a licensed hunter. The apprentice hunter receives hands-on experience and additional incentive to complete hunter education. In some states the apprentice hunting license is also called the mentored hunter program.

Language

By incorporating the views of our partners and other state legislators who have passed this legislation, we present the following language:

> The state may issue to a person a temporary firearm and/or hunter education deferral license which shall exempt the person from the requirement for successful completion of a firearm and hunter education course prior to obtaining a hunting license.
> The fee for such deferral license shall be ($ or free). For residents, the deferral license shall be valid for (variable time period depending on the state) from the date of issuance and shall be issued in lieu of basic hunting, big game, bow, muzzleloader, and state waterfowl licenses, turkey hunting stamps, and WMA hunting permits. For nonresidents, the deferral license shall be valid for (variable time period depending on the state) and shall be purchased in addition to nonresident basic hunting, big game, bow, muzzleloader, and state waterfowl licenses, turkey hunting stamps, or WMA hunting permits.
> The recipient of a deferral license shall carry the deferral license on him while hunting and shall be accompanied by and under the direct supervision of a person who is eighteen years of age or older and has a valid hunting license."

Points of Interest

It is the duty of each caucus leadership team to determine the best means of action in your respective state and modify the above language as necessary. If the language must be modified, please keep in mind the following:

- Laws such as minimum age requirements and coursework mandates can be relaxed without compromising safety.
- The time period for which the apprentice licenses are valid is different state to state, as is the minimum age requirement.
- Apprentice opportunities should be available to each person for a minimum of three years because the process of recruiting a new hunter may take several years due to limited opportunity. For this reason, many states allow multiple year extensions.

History

The issue was introduced to NASC at the 2005 NASC Annual Meeting and issued as a NASC issue brief during the 2006 legislative session. In 2010 Vermont became the 30th state to pass the apprentice hunting license.

Dear Representative,

The possession of a knife in Alaska is not just a common practice, as it may be in other states, but in many cases the possession of a knife in Alaska is a necessity, which can determine the difference between life and death, between surviving and perishing.

Alaska currently has a prohibition on the possession of gravity knives and switchblade knives. Unfortunately, in many states the standard definition of these knives as used in Alaska's current statute, has resulted in the prosecution and jailing of people in possession of knives which are not, in fact, gravity knives or switchblade knives. Rather, these are folding pocket knives that are commonly used for hunting, fishing, camping, hiking, on worksites and other outdoor and everyday activities, and represent some 80% of the knives sold in the U.S. today.

In many states this definition has led to thousands of dollars in fines and court costs, for both the defendants and the jurisdictions prosecuting them. HB55 would clarify the definition of gravity knives and switchblade knives so it clearly does not include average, everyday knives that are commonly in possession by the public. HB55 protects honest law abiding Alaskans from potential legal jeopardy.

Knife Law Preemption Amendment:

Because knives are so prevalent in Alaska and possession is so common, knife laws around the state should be consistent. What is legal in Juneau should be legal in Barrow. Alaskans should be able to know that the law is consistent statewide. Alaskans already benefit from state firearms preemption, which makes the gun laws of Alaska consistent throughout the state. The same should hold true for knives.

Preemption would assure that if you change the definition of switchblades and gravity knives with HB55 ,it will apply statewide.

As we have seen in recent U.S. Supreme Court rulings, the Second Amendment is an individual right and that right has been incorporated to apply in the states. For this reason alone, all states should have knife preemption laws to assure that citizens are protected from onerous local laws, which infringe on their rights.

Beyond that argument, knife preemption laws make sense. Preemption allows law enforcement as well as citizens to know that what is legal in Anchorage is legal everywhere in Alaska.

It is for these reasons, as well as others, that Knife Rights strongly urges you to vote YES on HB55 and YES on the preemption amendment.

A letter in regards to HB 55 (2 pages)

DEAR REP. NEUMAN

AND CO-SPONSORSHIP

As a lifelong Alaskan, I would like to express my appreciation for your support of HB55: "An Act adding definitions of 'gravity knife' and 'switchblade' to the Criminal Law". I presume it was motivated by the recent attempt by US Customs to redefine "switchblade" in Federal law to include common one-handed opening pocket knives, the same pocket knives owned and carried by thousands of law-abiding Alaskans. That something so obvious need be formalized in law is disheartening and seemingly unnecessary.

My purpose in writing, however, is to address another seemingly unnecessary bit of law; the restriction on the purchase and transfer of those gravity knives and switchblades in Alaska state statute and the existence of differing restrictions on their possession and carry at the Municipal level. As you may or may not be aware, over half the states in the US currently allow the purchase, transfer, and possession of automatic knives by law-abiding citizens. Most of those allow the public carry of those knives as well. There is no evidence that those states have a higher incidence of "knife crime" or suffer any degradation in public safety.

I realize on first reflection automatic knives may seem worthy of heightened regulation but, when looked at more closely, the fact we need a HB 55 at all supports the fact that today there is little to no practical functional or public safety difference between a knife that opens almost instantaneously with the flick of a thumb and one that does so by the same thumb pressing a button; as far as their potential misuse as a weapon goes, once opened a blade is a blade.

The current exceptions in the law for law enforcement and active military personnel also appear to support this interpretation. As far as I can tell the exceptions do not exist because members of those groups prefer to use automatic knives as weapons but rather that a quality automatic knife is easier and more reliable to use as a safety tool in certain emergency situations (cutting oneself or others free of seatbelts, entangling ropes or various types of harnesses, etc) than one that requires even a modicum more effort. Given that many "civilian" Alaskans participate in the same type of "extreme" activities and can thus find themselves in the same emergency situations as average military and law enforcement members, the exceptions seem arbitrary.

Looking at the laws themselves, like most gun possession and carry ordinances nationwide "switchblade" laws almost uniformly were enacted as a result of fear and prejudices, not any facts or public safety issues. In the case of "switchblades" the fear was of dangerous "knife culture" minorities, fears promulgated by exploitive movies and the yellow journalism of the day. Rather than looking backward to criticize such laws though, we should instead look at what other states who share Alaska's strong Constitutional RKBA are doing today.

Arizona, Utah, and New Hampshire have recently included automatic knives in their state RKBA preemptions, there is no reason Alaska shouldn't do the same. After all, if we are prepared to allow law-abiding Alaskans to carry loaded firearms in public with only a few limitations, to restrict those same Alaskan's ability to own and carry a knife, a tool by design, merely because of how it opens is ludicrous.

In the spirit of the Right to Keep and Bear all personal Arms enshrined in the Alaska Constitution, I ask that you consider amending HB 55 or introduce additional legislation to treat all non-firearm weapons, as defined in statute as either "deadly weapons" (primarily bladed and impact) or "defensive weapons" (whether chemical (pepper spray/Mace) or electrical (TASERs/ stun guns)), as lawful for purchase, possession and carry statewide, openly or concealed, by law-abiding, non-prohibited Alaskans, preempted from the existing patchwork of additional local and Municipal regulations.

Just as with firearms, this would still allow the restriction of ownership and carry by those deemed underage, by prohibited persons, and in areas currently off limits such as courthouses and other statutorily-restricted locations. K-12 schools could still restrict weapons possession by students and visitors and private businesses would remain free to refuse entry and service to people so armed. Those who actually misused any weapon would still be subject to existing criminal and civil sanctions.

I thank you for your thoughtful consideration and hope that you take this opportunity to bring additional reason and consistency to Alaska's weapons laws.

Respectfully,

Matthew Carberry

PS: On a side note, the only other weapons specifically restricted in state statute are "metal knuckles", which perhaps unsurprisingly share the same racist and media-contrived regulatory history of automatic knives. While there may not be any real "need" for the law-abiding to possess and carry them, the same argument could apply to many other common arms. In any event, the state RKBA doesn't involve "needs", merely freedoms. If people misuse weapons, of whatever type, they should be held accountable for their actions; the law-abiding should not simply be restricted from owning or carrying them outright.

CASE SUMMARY:

PROCEDURAL POSTURE: The state sought review of orders from two Superior Courts (Alaska), which dismissed the charges against defendants for first-degree misconduct involving weapons, a class C felony, in violation of Alaska Stat. § 11.61.200(a)(3).

OVERVIEW: All defendants were indicted by a grand jury for first-degree misconduct involving weapons. Defendants possessed a "butterfly knife" which is also known as a "balisong knife." The trial courts concluded that a butterfly or balisong knife was not a prohibited switchblade or gravity knife and dismissed the charges against defendants. The court affirmed the decision of the trial courts. The court found that the applicable statutes were ambiguous, and given that criminal statutes were to be strictly construed against the government, the court concluded that butterfly knives and balisong knives were not gravity knives and not a prohibited weapon. The court based its decision on the fact that butterfly knives were not switchblade knives nor were they sprung by a downward snap of the wrist. In fact, the court found that a number of motions, albeit quickly performed, were necessary to bring the knives to bear. These knives also do not fit the definition of automatic or semi-automatic. Finally, these knives did not appear to fit the common understanding of the term gravity knife or the way that the term was used in common usage.

OUTCOME: The court affirmed the judgments of the trial court that dismissed the charges against defendants for first-degree misconduct involving weapons.

HN1 Alaska Stat. § 11.61.200(a)(3) makes it a felony to possess a "prohibited weapon." "Prohibited weapon" is defined in Alaska Stat. § 11.61.200(e)(1)(D) to include a "switchblade or gravity knife." Neither "switchblade" nor "gravity knife" is specifically defined in the statutes.

OPINION

[*564] Each of these defendants was indicted by a grand jury for first-degree misconduct involving weapons, a class C felony, in violation of AS 11.61.200(a)(3). HN1 This statute makes it a felony to possess a "prohibited weapon." "Prohibited weapon" [2] is defined in AS 11.61.200(e)(1)(D) to include a "switchblade or gravity knife." Neither "switchblade" nor "gravity knife" is specifically defined in the statutes. See State v. Weaver, 736 P.2d 781, 782 (Alaska App. 1987). Each of these defendants possessed a "butterfly knife" which is also known as a "balisong knife." The sole question presented by these appeals is whether a butterfly or balisong knife is a prohibited switchblade or gravity knife.

Two evidentiary hearings were held: the first, in Fairbanks before Judge Jay Hodges involved John E. Strange and Rudy Kempen; the second, in Anchorage before Judge Mark C. Rowland involved Strange, again, Christopher A. Stading, and Troy Gonzales. Judge Hodges and Judge Rowland independently determined that a butterfly knife is not a prohibited weapon and therefore dismissed the charges against the defendants and the state appeals. We affirm.

Because neither gravity knife nor switchblade knife are defined in Alaska statutes, we must look to general usage for their meaning. AS 01.10.040. In determining the meaning of words in common usage, we generally look to the dictionary. See Walker v. State, 742 P.2d 790, 791 (Alaska App. 1987). [3] The dictionary defines a switchblade knife or switchblade "as a pocketknife having the blade spring-operated so that pressure on a release catch causes it to fly open." Webster's Third New International Dictionary of the English Language Unabridged, 2314 (1966) (hereinafter Webster's). The butterfly or balisong knives which were seized in this case are identical to those described in People v. Quattrone, 211 Cal. App. 3d 1389, 260 Cal. Rptr. 44, 45 (Cal. App. 1 Dist. 1989) as follows:

> The butterfly knife sold by defendant has a fixed blade over two inches long. When not in use, a two-part handle is folded around the blade as a sheath and is secured by a latch at the base of the knife. To open, the latch is released, allowing the two halves of the sheath to swing down on pivots to form a handle exposing the blade. The handle may be [*565] secured manually or closed with the latch.

The knives introduced in evidence and demonstrated in the videotapes prepared at the evidentiary hearing satisfy this definition. It is not seriously contended that the butterfly or balisong knives are switchblade knives as we have defined that term. Rather, the contention is that they are gravity knives. In Weaver, we [4] addressed the definition of gravity knives. We said:

> HN2↑The term [gravity knife] has a readily ascertainable and consistent definition. As commonly understood, a gravity knife is one in which the blade opens, falls into place, or is ejected into position by the force of gravity or by centrifugal force . . . .
> Furthermore, in the Alaska Statute on prohibited weapons, the term "gravity knife" is used in conjunction with "switchblade knife." AS 11.61.200(e)(1)(D). The ordinary person is therefore put on notice that a "gravity knife" must be similar to a switchblade in operating automatically or semi-automatically. The pertinent characteristics which a switchblade and a gravity knife have in common are that they are easily concealed and quickly brought to bear. These characteristics are indicative of knives which are used as weapons rather than tools. Some utility knives are quickly brought to bear, such as a fishing knife or hunting knife in a sheath, but are not easily concealed. Indeed, it is only when these utility knives are concealed that their possession is unlawful. AS 11.61.220(a)(1). An ordinary pocket knife may be concealed upon the person. AS 11.61.220(a)(1). However, an ordinary [5] pocketknife is incapable of being quickly brought to bear.

Weaver, 736 P.2d at 782-83 (footnote omitted).

The two evidentiary hearings produced essentially the same evidence. At the first hearing in Fairbanks, the defendants called Wayne Ross, a local attorney, as a weapons expert to testify that the terms switchblade and gravity knife have a commonly accepted meaning in the weapons trade and that balisong or butterfly knives do not fall within either meaning. He testified that gravity knives, like switchblade knives are released by a button, but differ from switchblade knives in that they do not have a spring. Ross testified that gravity knives were developed by German paratroopers in World War II as a utility knife to cut parachute shrouds.

The state called Alaska State Trooper Jeffrey Hall at the first hearing in Fairbanks to show how easily butterfly knives could be brought to bear. He testified that butterfly knives were primarily used in the martial arts and in combat. He also testified that a butterfly knife was not within his understanding of the term switchblade knife or gravity knife. The defense also put on a number of witnesses to testify that butterfly knives were [6] readily available in commercial stores in Anchorage and Fairbanks.

Testimony before Judge Rowland at the second hearing in Anchorage paralleled testimony before Judge Hodges with one exception. Trooper Hall who had been called as a prosecution witness in Fairbanks was called as a defense witness in Anchorage. The state introduced a videotape of Alaska State Trooper John Johnston demonstrating the use of three of the butterfly knives which had been seized from defendant Strange. Trooper Johnston showed that the knives could be easily concealed on the body and could quickly be rbought to bear by a series of wrist movements utilizing centrifugal or inertial force. He indicated that he had only had about ten minutes experience with butterfly knives before making the videotape. He was able to bring the knives to bear quickly even though he took them as he found them without oiling them or working them to make them loose and easier to open.

Trooper Johnston's demonstration paralleled one given in Quattrone, where the officer was also able to rapidly open and lock the butterfly knife with one hand using three wrist movements. In that case, the officer testified that he needed only half [7] an hour to perfect his technique. Quattrone, 260 Cal. Rptr. at 45.

[*566] A number of courts have considered whether butterfly or balisong knives qualify as prohibited switchblade or gravity knives. See, e.g., Taylor v. United States, 848 F.2d 715 (6th Cir. 1988); Precise Imports Corporation v. Kelly, 378 F.2d 1014 (2d Cir. 1967), cert. denied, 389 U.S. 973, 19 L. Ed. 2d 465, 88 S. Ct. 472 (1967); Quattrone, 211 Cal. App. 3d 1389, 260 Cal. Rptr. 44; People v. Dolson, 142 Misc. 2d 779, 538 N.Y.S.2d 393 (N.Y. Co. Ct. 1989); People v. Mott, 137 Misc. 2d 757, 522 N.Y.S.2d 429 (N.Y. Co. Ct. 1987). The courts, which disagree on whether butterfly knives are switchblades or gravity knives, have not been particularly helpful because of differences in statutory language. In Quattrone, the court dealt with California Penal Code § 653k which "defines an illegal switchblade as 'a spring-blade knife, snap-blade knife, gravity knife or any other similar type knife, [having a blade or blades] which can be released automatically . . . . by any type of mechanism whatsoever.'" Quattrone, 260 Cal. Rptr. at 46. In Taylor, the court dealt with the Switchblade Knife Act which defines a switchblade knife at 15 U.S.C. § 1241(b) as follows:

> The term "switchblade knife" means [8] any knife having a blade which opens automatically --
> (1) by hand pressure applied to a button or other device in the handle of the knife, or
> (2) by operation of inertia, gravity or both.

Taylor, 848 F.2d at 716 n.1. Both of these definitions are broader than the definitions in our statute which simply uses the terms without further defining them. Taylor is also distinguishable because the court there relied heavily on an administrative interpretation of the Act in determining that balisong or butterfly knives were covered.

The New York cases dealt with New York Penal Code § 265.00(5) which stated that:

> "Gravity knife" means any knife which has a blade which is released from the handle or sheath thereof by the force of gravity or the application of centrifugal force which, when released, is locked in place by means of a button, spring, lever or other device.

The New York cases held balisong or butterfly knives not to be gravity knives because they were not locked in place by means of a button, spring, lever or other device when released. Dolson, 538 N.Y.S.2d 393; Mott, 137 Misc. 2d 757, 522 N.Y.S.2d 429. Our statute does not have similar language.

Having carefully reviewed the statutes and [9] the knives introduced into evidence and bearing in mind that HN3 criminal statutes should be strictly construed against the government, see State v. Andrews, 707 P.2d 900, 907 (Alaska App. 1985), aff'd, 723 P.2d 85 (Alaska 1986), we conclude that butterfly knives and balisong knives are not gravity knives.

A number of considerations lead us to this conclusion. First, butterfly knives are not "switchblade knives in which the blade is sprung by a downward snap of the wrist." Webster's at 993. As we have seen, these knives do not meet the definition of switchblade knives. Nor are they sprung by a downward snap of the wrist. In fact, a number of motions, albeit quickly performed, are necessary to bring the knives to bear. These knives also do not fit the definition of automatic or semi-automatic. Finally, these knives do not appear to fit the common understanding of the term gravity knife or the way that the term is used in common usage. See, e.g., Quattrone, 260 Cal. Rptr. at 47-48. It is instructive that the expert testimony in Quattrone apparently paralleled the expert testimony given at the two evidentiary hearings in this case regarding the meaning of the term "gravity [10] knife."

The judgment of the superior court is AFFIRMED.

Dear Team Neuman,
Regarding HB 55, 'Adding definitions of 'gravity knife' and 'switchblade' to the criminal law'
Status: House Judiciary Committee

RE: Hearing Request for House Bill 76

Mr. Chair, I would like to request a hearing for House Bill 76, "An act relating to costs and fees for stalking and sexual assault protective orders," in the House Judiciary Committee. HB 76 is a bill designed to increase protection for victims of sexual assault and stalking. I expect that the Alaska Network on Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault (ANDVSA), the Council on Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault (CDVSA) and other organizations concerned with sexual assault and stalking will testify in favor of this bill. Attached you will find a copy of the bill, the sponsor statement, a sectional prepared by legislative legal and a letter from the ANDVSA. James R. Waldo from my staff is carrying this bill. He can be reached by email at james.waldo@legis.state.ak.us or his direct line at 465.6597. Please contact myself or James if you have any questions regarding this legislation. Thank you very much for your consideration.

Representative Lindsey Holmes

House Bill 76 Sponsor Statement
"An Act relating to costs and fees for stalking and sexual assault protective orders."

House Bill 76 changes the law so that when a victim of stalking or sexual assault gets a protective order, the judge may order the perpetrator to pay any fees associated with the order. Obtaining a protective order can be a very difficult and confusing task. Adding fees or other costs in addition to the other difficulties involved seems inappropriate for a victim seeking safety from a perpetrator of sexual assault or stalking. HB 76 will ensure that the perpetrators of these crimes, and not the victims, will bear the cost of court protection.

There are two types of restraining orders a person can file for: domestic violence protective orders, or stalking and sexual assault protective orders. Right now, when a person petitions for a domestic violence restraining order, the court can require the perpetrator to pay fees associated with obtaining the protective order. However, this cannot currently be done with sexual assault and stalking protective orders that do not involve domestic violence. Victims of stalking and sexual assault should have the same protection as victims of domestic violence. HB 76 would close this gap, bringing parity to the protective order statutes.

The legislature recognized the difficulties in obtaining a protective order for victims of domestic violence when it included this fee provision in the domestic violence protective order statute. Unfortunately, this remedy was left out when the sexual assault and stalking protective order statute was adopted. Please join me in supporting HB 76, so we can extend this protection to the victims of sexual assault and stalking.

FROM: Gerald P. Luckhaupt

You have requested a sectional summary of the above-described bill. As a preliminary matter, please note that a sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill - the bill itself is the best statement of its contents.

Section 1 of the bill amends AS 18.65.850(c) to allow a court, when issuing a stalking or sexual assault protective order, to require the respondent to pay the costs and fees incurred by the petitioner in bringing the action.

Section 2 of the bill amends AS 18.65.855 to clarify that a court, when issuing an exparte or emergency stalking or sexual assault protective order, may order any of the relief available in AS 18.65.850(c) other than the award of costs and fees.

BILL NO. HB 076

Analysis

HB 76 allows the court to order the respondent to pay the costs and fees incurred by a petitioner in bringing a petition for a sexual assault or stalking protective order. An order to pay costs under the bill would only be allowed if the respondent had notice and an opportunity to be heard on the petition.

Passage of this legislation would have no foreseeable fiscal impact on the Department of Law.

RE: Letter of Support for HB 76

Dear Representative Holmes:

On behalf of the Alaska Network on Domestic Violence & Sexual Assault member programs, and the victims of domestic violence, sexual assault and stalking that we serve, thank you for sponsoring HB 76.

HB 76 will bring parity to the statutes regarding remedies available to domestic violence, sexual assault and stalking victims. HB 76 will insure that abusers, and not victims, bear the costs when a victim must seek safety for herself and her children. Under current law, a judge, in their discretion, may order an abuser to pay the costs incurred by a domestic violence victim who obtains a protective order. No similar remedy exists for sexual assault and stalking victims.

Obtaining a protective order for safety can often be a confusing matter, especially for those who have never experienced the criminal or civil justice systems. Attorneys can assist victims with successfully getting this safety measure, but the costs of obtaining a lawyer can preclude victims from seeking such assistance. Further, victims can face an additional hurdle when they need an interpreter to translate their story to the judge or magistrate and relay back the questions asked, when English is not their first language.

The legislature realized these obstacles victims of domestic violence experience in obtaining safety and included this remedy in the domestic violence statute. Unfortunately, when the sexual assault and stalking protective order statute was adopted, this remedy was left out. HB 76 will correct this disparity by providing the same remedies to victims of sexual assault and stalking, that victims of domestic violence already have and insure that victims of domestic violence, sexual assault and stalking are treated equally under the law.

Sincerely,

Peggy Brown, Executive Director

MEMORANDUM March 10, 2011

SUBJECT: HB 76 -- Stalking and Sexual Assault Protective Orders Costs and Fees (Work Order No. 27-LS0067\A)

TO: Representative Carl Gatto
Chair of the House Judiciary Committee
Attn: Sarah Munson

FROM: Gerald P. Luckhaupt
Assistant Revisor

You have asked if sec. 1 of the bill amends a court rule (specifically Civil Rule 79) and if so should a court rule change be noticed in the title and in the bill. In my opinion HB 76 does not amend a court rule and notice of a court rule change is not necessary. HB 76 merely provides that the court when issuing a stalking and sexual assault protective order may order the respondent to pay the costs and fees incurred by the petitioner. This provision does not change the costs and fees that may be awarded under the civil rules nor, for that matter, does it change the way costs and fees may be awarded.

I would also direct your attention to AS 18.66.100(c)(14) upon which this bill is based. AS 18.66.100(c)(14) provides for the awarding of costs and fees in a domestic violence protective order and was enacted as § 33, ch. 64, SLA 1996. Numerous court rule changes were noticed and contained in ch. 64, SLA 1996 although none related to AS 18.66.100(c)(14) and the inclusion of a requirement that the respondent pay the costs and fees of the petitioner. I have not heard of a case where this provision has been questioned as improperly amending a court rule.[1]

[1] Rarely will costs and fees ever be awarded as most of the costs and fees that are normally awarded in civil actions (such as filing fees and service fees) are not charged to a petitioner for a protective order.

Sponsor Statement

HB 80 recognizes that Alaskan residents have a right to use deadly force to protect their family and person, whether they are at home, work, or in any place they have a right to be present. It does this by expanding your right to stand your ground when threatened and by making statutes clear that deadly force is justified not only in the case of burglary, the kidnapping of household members, but also in the case of a carjacking of an occupied vehicle and any other place a person has a right to be.

By expanding the rights of Alaskans to stand their ground in any place they are rightfully present, we tell our residents that their decision to use deadly force to defend themselves and their families will not be questioned, and make it clear that it is the criminal who has the duty to retreat.

House Bill 80 strengthens the legal recognition of the basic human right to defend oneself.

FISCAL NOTE

STATE OF ALASKA
2011 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB 080

Analysis

House Bill 80 expands the places from which a person need not retreat before using deadly force in self defense to any place the person has a right to be. The Criminal Division anticipates it would need 2 new FTE attorney positions to handle the increased cases, to both screen referrals and prosecute those that are accepted. This number is based upon the referral of 1,155 cases in 2010 in which self defense was a potential justification.

Re: House Bill 381

Dear Chairman Ramras:

I am writing to express my serious concern over the current language in House Bill 381. Every experienced prosecutor with whom I have spoken about this bill uniformly agrees that it would promote violence and be a bad idea for our state. We believe that as drafted this bill will encourage unnecessary violence in our state. Whatever source one thinks our laws should be drawn from – the ten commandments which say "thou shall not kill," simple morality, utilitarianism principles of the greater good, or simply the concept that life is sacred –this bill would encourage the needless taking of human life.

AS 11.81.335(b) as currently written sets forth the duty to retreat before resorting to deadly force. It requires that if "with complete personal safety and with complete safety to others being defended, the person can avoid the necessity of using deadly force by leaving the area" then the person must do so. This avoids the unnecessary loss of life and encourages our citizens to seek ways other than violence to resolve disputes. The addition of subsections 5 and 6 to this statute eradicates the duty to retreat - in fact should they be enacted, there would no longer be a duty to retreat in Alaska. That is to say if person A could avoid killing person B by walking away, he/she would no longer be required to do so, but instead would be authorized by law to kill person B. This does not promote the protection of our citizens or suggest that Alaska as a state places a high value on life itself. While this is highly unlikely to have been the goal of the bill's sponsors, it is nevertheless the result of what has been proposed. This is best explained by closely examing the language of the proposed changes and additions.

Section 1 of the bill proposes amending AS 11.81.335(b) by adding a subsection (5) that would say there would be no duty to retreat when the person is "in a vehicle" owned, leased, used, or even just occupied with the owner's consent. Here are but just three examples of how this would encourage violence:

First example:

A person picks up a hitchhiker, or offers a ride to someone, and, for whatever reason, a confrontation arises while in the vehicle such that deadly force could be used, but for the duty to retreat. Under the current law the hitchhiker must leave your vehicle if he knows he can do so safely. Under the proposed amendment, that hitchhiker would be authorized to kill the driver instead -- even if he could have simply walked away. These facts are similar of a recent murder trial in Anchorage, but they are close. The defendant was convicted of and sentenced for second-degree murder. The case is now on appeal. Why would we want to say killing another person is okay when it could be avoided? Why would we want to authorize the taking of a life when one could walk away in complete safety?

Second Example:

Joe Smith drives to a party. At the party he gets into an altercation and is thrown out of the party. He goes to his car and gets inside to leave. Before leaving, Mr. Smith sees the person with whom he got into the altercation. Though Mr. Smith is in his car, behind the wheel and ready to leave, he fears the other guy may come after him. Instead of driving off – which he could do with complete personal safety, he gets out of his car and grabs a shotgun from the trunk and kills the other man. Again, these are facts similar to a recent murder trial in Anchorage. The defendant was convicted of and sentenced for manslaughter. The case is now on appeal. This is yet another situation in which our current law requires our citizens to walk away if they can do so with safety, but this proposed change in the law would authorize killing another human being instead.

Third Example:

An occupant in car A points a gun at the occupant in car B. If the occupant in car B can drive away with complete safety, then under the current law he must do so. Under the proposed change, the driver in car B would be authorized by this bill to open fire instead of driving away. The law of self-defense in Alaska requires the state to prove beyond a reasonable doubt a defendant's claim of self-defense is not true. It is difficult to prove a negative. If the state cannot prove the negative beyond a reasonable doubt, then at least the state can try to prove that the driver of car B had a duty to retreat and could have done so. This law would eliminate that duty. That is a recipe for inviting gang violence on our streets. These facts are in fact very similar to another case prosecuted by our department. In 2006 there was a shooting at Reka and Bragaw in Anchorage. Two vehicles with young men exchanging gunfire. One young man was killed and the two men in the other vehicle were convicted of murder. One of those cases is on appeal. This loss of life occurred for one of the participants. What about the innocent bystander? For example, there was the election day shooting in Anchorage when a campaign worker for former Gov. Murkowski was hit by a stray bullet at campaign HQ in Anchorage across from the Sears mall. That case involved two vehicles with young men – not in gangs, but still rivals – who opened fire on one another. While we did prosecute the shooters in that case, do so would have been impossible under this law.

This bill would unintentionally encourage such conduct by making it legal or at least offering a defense – which even if not true – could not be disproved. In each of the four examples the defendants were convicted, but this proposed change would make such prosecutions much harder, if even possible.

The proposed subsection (6) in AS 11.81.330(b) would almost completely eliminate the duty to retreat. That subsection says there is no such duty when a person is "in any place where the person has a right to be." That means in the Diamond Mall, Sears Mall, McDonalds, or any other public location a person is no longer required to walk away from a confrontation, but instead may kill another citizen even if they could have walked away with complete safety. This does not express a value for human life. This does not encourage finding a resolution for disputes other than violence. The only time there would be a duty to retreat is if the person is some place they have no right to be – they must be trespassing, or committing a burglary in order to have such a duty. With this change you might as well simply eliminate the duty to retreat completely from our statutes.

The bill also proposes adding a new section that whittles away some of the other protections put in place to prevent unnecessary taking of human life. Our current self- defense law is set up with both a subjective and objective test to determine when deadly force is authorized. The subjective test means the person using the force believes he/she needs to do so. The objective tests means the "reasonable person" would have concluded the same thing. The added section proposes to eliminate the objective test in several circumstances: burglary, carjacking, and kidnapping. That is it takes away from the jury the question of whether a reasonable person would view a particular event as unlawful force against a person that required a response of deadly force. At first blush this seems reasonable. However, when you examine what is proposed more closely, it becomes very disturbing. To understand why, you must first understand each of the three crimes it references.

Burglary is found in AS 11.46 and not AS 11.41 because it is a crime against property, not a person. Burglary requires a person to enter a building with the intent to commit a crime – theft, vandalism, and assault are all examples. What must be noted though is that no person needs to be in the building in order for this to be a crime. If a person breaks into a home or business to steal something, this is a burglary. If a student breaks into a school to vandalize it, this is a burglary. If a person breaks into a home to assault another person – even if no one is home, this is still a burglary because burglary only addresses the entry of premises with the intent to commit a crime (called a target crime) whether that (target) crime is committed or not. This is why burglary is classified as a crime against property and not against a person.

Under current law non-deadly force may be used to protect property, and deadly force is only authorized when terminating an arson or attempted arson on a dwelling or occupied building (See AS 11.81.350(b)), or when terminating a burglary upon an occupied building or dwelling if the person using the force is in possession or control of that premises, or is a guest. See AS 11.81.350(c)).

The current bill would now authorize deadly force against a person who burgles a dwelling whether anyone was home or not. Thus deadly force may be used even when no human life is at risk.

The proposed bill would also authorize any person to use deadly force as compared to only a person who is in possession or control of or is an invited guest in the dwelling. This means the guy driving down the street may kill a person he thinks is breaking into a home. The state must disprove defense of property, so the state must disprove that a victim was committing burglary. While this new section is fraught with the potential for misunderstandings to lead to the unnecessary loss of human life, there is another more serious problem with this section. This new section authorizes deadly force against a person who is currently committing or had committed a burglary. This language authorizes vigilantism. It authorizes deadly force against any person whom the person using the force "had reason to believe" had – past tense – had committed a burglary. This new section says such force is reasonable. The only question left is if the person using the force also thought it was "reasonable."

The section on carjacking does the same thing. It authorizes the use of deadly force against someone who had -- past tense -- taken a car by force. Even if no human life was at risk in the taking, this law would say it is okay to kill to keep your car from being taken from you or afterwards. That sounds like retaliation and vigilantism, not like a legislature enacting laws to protect our citizens and improve our lives.

The kidnapping subsection has the same issue with past tense. In each and every section this bill would legalize and authorize vigilantism.

Finally the bill also says no arrest may be made "unless the agency" determines that there is probable cause that the force that used was unlawful. This puts the police in a difficult position especially when confronting gang related violence. It is also unclear to whom "the agency" refers. This could potentially require magistrates and grand juries to start deciding if self-defense has been disproven. This in turn would require the state to act as defense counsel for the defendant to present such a defense only to have to then disprove it. This may sound confusing, and that is because this bill could cause serious problems in the criminal justice system with regard to self-defense law.

Thank you for your consideration of this letter.

Sincerely,

DANIEL S. SULLIVAN
ATTORNEY GENERAL

the general provision's own terms, since the criminal mischief law would be a "statute defining the offense" in a manner that "provides exemptions or defenses dealing with the justification." McGee v. State, 162 P.3d 1251 (Alaska 2007).

Defense for illegally taking game. — Because a regulation (5 AAC 81.375) outlining the defense of necessity for illegally taking game was properly enacted in accordance with the legislative grant of authority to the Board of Game, it established the only circumstances under which the defense could be interposed to a claim that game was illegally taken. Jordan v. State, 681 P.2d 346 (Alaska Ct. App. 1984).

Evidence of necessity. — Before a person is entitled to an instruction on "necessity" there must be "some evidence" in the record that the action which the person took was necessary, i.e., that he had no other alternative, to avoid an irreparable injury which, under the circumstances, outweighed any injury likely to result from the action taken. Schnabel v. State, 663 P.2d 960 (Alaska Ct. App. 1983).

Trial judge erred in precluding defendant from presenting a necessity defense because the judge concluded that defendant had had an adequate, reasonably available alternative to his action; the adequacy of available alternatives is only a matter of law in cases where the defendant knew or reasonably should have known of the availability and reasonableness of the alternatives, and defendant's evidence was held to have created a jury question sufficient to warrant a necessity instruction. Allen v. State, 123 P.3d 1106 (Alaska Ct. App. 2005).

A defendant relying on necessity to justify an escape must present some evidence justifying his continued absence from custody as well as his initial departure because escape under state law is a continuing offense. Wells v. State, 687 P.2d 346 (Alaska Ct. App. 1984).

In a prosecution for driving with a suspended license in violation of AS 28.15.291, evidence of the defendant's two prior convictions for driving while intoxicated was not properly admitted to contest the defense of necessity because the jury might have been prejudiced. Nelson v. State, 691 P.2d 1056 (Alaska Ct. App. 1984).

In order to satisfy the "some evidence" test, a person claiming necessity in justification of a "continuing offense" must offer some evidence that the continued violation of the law—as well as the initial violation— [illegible] Reeve v. State, 764 P.2d 324 (Alaska Ct.

Defense unavailable. — Defense of necessity was unavailable to defendants charged with criminal trespass in an abortion clinic. Cleveland v. Municipality of Anchorage, 631 P.2d 1073 (Alaska 1981); Bird v. Municipality of Anchorage, 787 P.2d 119 (Alaska Ct. App. 1990).

Defense of necessity was inapplicable where appellant had failed to pursue adequate alternatives in judicial and administrative remedies that were available to him. Schnabel v. State, 663 P.2d 960 (Alaska Ct. App. 1983).

The trial court did not err in denying defendant the right to rely on a necessity defense in prosecution for custodial intervention in the first degree. Gerlach v. State, 699 P.2d 358 (Alaska Ct. App. 1985).

Under the provisions of AS 11.81.320(a) and 11.81.900(b)(2)(A) and (b)(18)(A) (now (b)(19)(A)), appellant failed to establish the defense of necessity to the crime of escape because he failed to seek administrative relief from prison officials and he failed to offer a legitimate justification for his decision to remain a fugitive for 13 months. Lacey v. State, 54 P.3d 304 (Alaska Ct. App. 2002).

Defense of necessity was unavailable to defendant who argued need for marijuana for medical purposes, because defendant should have argued the separate medical marijuana defense available in Alaska. Noy v. State, 83 P.3d 538 (Alaska Ct. App. 2003), rehearing denied, 83 P.3d 545 (Alaska Ct. App. 2003).

Facts sufficient to place justification defense in issue. — Defendant's conviction of criminal mischief was reversed where defendant presented some evidence placing the justification defense under AS 11.81.320(a) at issue by testifying that the victim had threatened to run over him, he was frightened, and he broke the windows of the victim's truck to prevent the victim from carrying out his threat, and because the trial court erroneously instructed the jury that defendant bore the burden of proving the defense by a preponderance of the evidence. McGee v. State, 162 P.3d 1251 (Alaska 2007).

Jury instruction. — In prosecution for third-degree criminal mischief for damaging a truck owned by defendant's mother's lover following an altercation, the trial court properly instructed the jury that defendant's actions were potentially justifiable under the defense of necessity.

Jury instruction unwarranted. — In the absence of any evidence explaining that an escaped convict's continued absence resulted from duress, or otherwise justifying his continuing absence, the trial court's refusal to instruct the jury on the defense of necessity was not error. Wells v. State, 687 P.2d 346 (Alaska Ct. App. 1984).

Trial court properly declined to instruct on the necessity defense at defendant's trial for driving while intoxicated, where defendant failed to produce "some evidence" that she brought her conduct into compliance with the law as soon as the necessity ended. Reeve v. State, 764 P.2d 324 (Alaska Ct. App. 1988).

NOTES TO DECISIONS

Elements of defense of necessity. — This section and AS 11.81.340 contemplate a situation in which force is used by one who reasonably believes that force is necessary to prevent the use of unlawful force against a third person. Thus, the defense is composed of an objective element, i.e., a reasonable belief that force is necessary and a subjective element, i.e., an actual belief that force is necessary. David v. State, 698 P.2d 1233 (Alaska Ct. App. 1985).

Requirement of imminency. — Subsection (a) of this section, does not specifically mention the requirement of imminency but this section can be silent on this point because the legislature placed the requirement of imminency in the statutory definition of "force" contained in AS 11.81.900(b)(23) (now (b)(27)). Xi Van Ha v. State, 892 P.2d 184 (Alaska Ct. App. 1995).

A defendant claiming self-defense as justification for the use of force must prove that they acted to avoid what was reasonably perceived to be a threat of imminent harm. A defendant's reasonable belief that harm will come at some future time is not sufficient to support a claim of self-defense or defense of others. Xi Van Ha v. State, 892 P.2d 184 (Alaska Ct. App. 1995).

Inevitable harm is not the same as imminent harm. Xi Van Ha v. State, 892 P.2d 184 (Alaska Ct. App. 1995).

Reasonable fear of attack. — When a homicide defendant asserts that he or she acted in self-defense, the law does not require the defendant to prove that he or she actually faced imminent deadly attack. Even if the defendant's fear turns out to have been mistaken, the defense still may be established if the defendant proves that, under the circumstances, he or she reasonably feared imminent deadly attack at the hand of the victim. McCracken v. State, 914 P.2d 893 (Alaska Ct. App. 1996).

Evidence of victim's character for violence. — When a homicide defendant raises the defense of self-defense, evidence concerning the victim's character for violence is potentially admissible for two reasons: First, it may tend to demonstrate who was the initial aggressor in the confrontation; second, it may tend to demonstrate that the defendant's fear for imminent deadly force at the victim's hand was reasonable. McCracken v. State, 914 P.2d 893 (Alaska Ct. App. 1996).

Evidence of victim's conduct. — In assault case, evidence of specific instances of the victim's violent conduct was necessary to enable the jury to determine how much force a reasonable person with defendant's knowledge of the victim's propensity for violence would have felt compelled to use in self-defense. Amarok v. State, 671 P.2d 882 (Alaska Ct. App. 1983).

Jury properly rejected defendant's theory of self-defense where there was ample evidence from which reasonable jurors could have concluded that the victim was not threatening defendant with deadly force at the time defendant stabbed the victim. Morrell v. State, 216 P.3d 574 (Alaska Ct. App. 2009).

Mental dysfunction not a consideration. — The reasonableness of a defendant's perceptions and actions must be evaluated from the point of view of a reasonable person in the defendant's situation, not a person suffering mental dysfunction. Xi Van Ha v. State, 892 P.2d 184 (Alaska Ct. App. 1995).

Instructions. — Burden is on defendant to produce some evidence in support of claim of self-defense before he is entitled to jury instruction on that de- r v. State, 648 P.2d 111 (Alaska Ct. App.

estion. — Even a weak or implausible claim is a question for the jury. Folger v. 2d 111 (Alaska Ct. App. 1982).

instruction. — In prosecution for first- ult while it was only defendant's own hich supported his theory that he entered use in a non-aggressive manner with the n of conversing with the victim, there was ce that defendant did not provoke a dis- victim under circumstances that he knew or should have known would result in mortal combat, and therefore defendant was entitled to have his self-defense claim, weak as it may have been, properly determined by the jury. Brown v. State, 698 P.2d 671 (Alaska Ct. App. 1985).

Giving instruction misallocating the burden of proof on self-defense amounted to plain error. Brown v. State, 698 P.2d 671 (Alaska Ct. App. 1985).

Sec. 11.81.335. Justification: Use of deadly force in defense of self. (a) Except as provided in (b) of this section, a person who is justified in using nondeadly force in self-defense under AS 11.81.330 may use deadly force in self-defense upon another person when and to the extent the person reasonably believes the use of deadly force is necessary for self-defense against

(1) death;

(2) serious physical injury;

(3) kidnapping, except for what is described as custodial interference in the first degree in AS 11.41.320;

(4) sexual assault in the first degree;

(5) sexual assault in the second degree;

(6) sexual abuse of a minor in the first degree; or

(7) robbery in any degree.

(b) A person may not use deadly force under this section if the person knows that, with complete personal safety and with complete safety as to others being defended, the person can avoid the necessity of using deadly force by leaving the area of the encounter, except there is no duty to leave the area if the person is

(1) on premises

(A) that the person owns or leases;

(B) where the person resides, temporarily or permanently; or

(C) as a guest or express or implied agent of the owner, lessor, or resident;

(2) a peace officer acting within the scope and authority of the officer's employment or a person assisting a peace officer under AS 11.81.380;

(3) in a building where the person works in the ordinary course of the person's employment; or which party attacked may act. attacked by another with a deadly attacked may, if he does so honestly h, safely act in the light of his circumstances, and on the appearances to him at the time. Owens v. United States, 130 F. 279 (9th Cir. 1904).

(4) protecting a child or a member of the person's household. (§ 10 ch 166 SLA 1978; am § 10 ch 4 SLA 1990; am § 3 ch 68 SLA 2006)

To employ self-defense a defendant must satisfy both an objective and subjective standard: he must have actually believed deadly force was necessary to protect himself, and his belief must be one that a reasonable person would have held under the circumstances. Weston v. State, 682 P.2d 1119 (Alaska 1984).

Focus on circumstances as they appear to reasonable person. — The defense of self-defense in a prosecution for manslaughter requires that the circumstances be such that a reasonable person would believe that she was in imminent danger of death or great bodily injury, thus the focus is on the circumstances as they would appear to a reasonable person, and the intoxication of the appellant is not germane to that question since an actual belief may be entertained regardless of whether one is intoxicated. Nygren v. State, 616 P.2d 20 (Alaska 1980).

Unreasonable subjective belief as defense. — An unreasonable subjective belief as to justification for use of deadly force may be used as a defense to reduce murder to manslaughter. Weston v. State, 656 P.2d 1186 (Alaska Ct. App. 1982), rev'd on other grounds, 682 P.2d 1119 (Alaska 1984).

Trial court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury on self-defense in an assault case because any theory of self-defense was purely speculative. Clarke v. State, — P.3d — (Alaska Ct. App. Nov. 4, 2009), (memorandum opinion).

A person who provokes a difficulty forfeits his right to self-defense. This doctrine has been extended to preclude a person who commits a felony from claiming self-defense not only to the intended victim of the felony, but also as to any person intervening in an attempt either to prevent the crime or to apprehend the criminal. Gray v. State, 463 P.2d 897 (Alaska 1970).

Where the defendant commits a felony which includes an immediate threat of violence, he has created a situation so fraught with peril as to preclude his claim of self-defense to any act of violence arising therefrom. This holding is limited to the situation where the armed robbery is still in progress and where there is grave danger of violence, injury, or loss of life because a weapon is being used to consummate the felony. Gray v. State, 463 P.2d 897 (Alaska 1970).

A person who commits an armed robbery forfeits his right to claim as a defense the necessity to protect himself against the use of excessive force by either the intended victim of the robbery or by any person intervening to prevent the crime or to apprehend the criminal, absent a factual showing that at the time the violence occurred, the dangerous situation created by the armed robbery no longer existed. Gray v. State, 463 P.2d 897 (Alaska 1970).

Exceptions to forfeiture by aggressor. — An aggressor forfeits the right to claim self-defense except in two situations: (1) where an aggressor using nondeadly force (i.e., one who begins an encounter, using only his fists or some nondeadly weapon) is met with deadly force, the initial aggressor may justifiably defend himself against the deadly attack; (2) when an aggressor withdraws from the altercation that he has started, he may then defend himself from further attack. Castillo v. State, 614 P.2d 756 (Alaska 1980).

Use of unnecessary force by officer. — If an officer uses unnecessary force in making a lawful arrest and the person sought to be arrested believes, and has reason to believe, that he is in danger of being killed or of receiving great bodily harm, he may defend himself, even to the point of taking the life of the officer. The rule of self-defense applies to the case of an officer attempting to make an arrest, who abuses his authority and transcends the bounds thereof by the use of unnecessary force and violence as well as to the case of a private individual who unlawfully uses such force and violence. Gray v. State, 463 P.2d 897 (Alaska 1970).

When possibility of retirement by defendant in issue. — The possibility of retirement by a defendant fearful of his life is not in issue unless at the time of the affray he was an intruder upon the ground where the killing occurred. De Groot v. United States, 78 F.2d 244 (9th Cir. 1935).

Mere threats insufficient to justify homicide. — Threats unaccompanied at the time of the killing with any attempt to carry them into execution are insufficient to justify homicide. Ball v. United States, 147 F. 32 (9th Cir. 1906).

Threat of deadly force not supported by evidence. — Although evidence did show that victim, having learned about common-law wife's affair with another man, was at times angry and threatening in the days before his death, these pre-event occurrences suggested nothing more than motive and a possible willingness on victim's part to use deadly force at some future time; none of the evidence concerning the circumstances surrounding the shooting itself supported the conclusion that victim's prior expressions of anger culminated in an actual use or threat of deadly force by victim, or that his killer acted in the reasonable belief that the use of deadly force in self-defense was necessary to protect against victim. Hilbish v. State, 891 P.2d 841 (Alaska Ct. App. 1995).

Evidence as to the character or reputation of the deceased for turbulence or violence is not admissible unless the defendant is relying on self-defense or justification for his act. Marrone v. State, 359 P.2d 969 (Alaska 1961).

Defense too speculative. — Although the State offered no motive for defendant's attack on the victim and defendant was bleeding from a wound to his thigh when the police stopped his car, under all of the evidence, any argument that defendant acted in self-defense or as a result of serious provocation by the victim would have been based on pure speculation and defendant's request for jury instructions on self-defense and heat of passion were properly denied. Hamilton v. State, 59 P.3d 760 (Alaska Ct. App. 2002).

Jury question. — Whether or not under all the circumstances the accused pleading self-defense had the right to stand his ground depends upon a conclusion of fact, which conclusion is one for the jury. Frank v. United States, 42 F.2d 623 (9th Cir. 1930).

Even a weak or implausible self-defense claim is a question for the jury. Folger v. State, 648 P.2d 111 (Alaska Ct. App. 1982).

The burden of establishing self-defense is upon the defendant. Frank v. United States, 42 F.2d 623 (9th Cir. 1930).

Burden is on defendant to produce some evidence in support of claim of self-defense before he is entitled to jury instruction. Folger v. State, 648 P.2d 111 (Alaska Ct. App. 1982).

When burden sustained. — The burden of establishing self-defense is sustained when, as a result of the whole evidence, a reasonable doubt has been created in the minds of the jury as to whether or not the homicide was in self-defense. If, from a consideration of the whole evidence, the jury entertains a reasonable doubt upon that question, that doubt is to be determined, like all other doubts in the case, in favor of the defendant. Frank v. United States, 42 F.2d 623 (9th Cir. 1930).

On the issue of self-defense, where the prosecution rests with bare proof of the homicide, the burden of going forward with the evidence is on the defendant, and he must offer proof of facts upon that issue. It is not enough for him to say, "I did it in self-defense," whereupon the prosecution must establish the negative. The proofs of the accused are not required to establish self-defense by preponderance of the evidence. The evidence adduced, however, must be sufficient to require the consideration of a reasonable doubt as to the justification for the homicide. To that extent there is a burden of proof on the defendant. De Groot v. United States, 78 F.2d 244 (9th Cir. 1935).

Distinction between burden on prosecution and burden upon defendant. — Logically there is a possible distinction between the burden on the prosecution to prove the absence of self-defense beyond a reasonable doubt and the burden upon the defendant to prove affirmatively enough to create a reasonable doubt that he so acted. The burdens seem different if any value to the accused is to be given to the word "beyond" in the historic phrase "beyond a reasonable doubt." Proof beyond a reasonable doubt suggests something less than such a doubt; that the jury's minds must travel a less distance from the presumed innocence of the accused. It suggests that something more may be required of the defendant to bring the minds of the jury to the full possession of a reasonable doubt than into the lesser area of belief beyond a reasonable doubt; an area between that beyond reasonable doubt and affirmative belief in the defendant's innocence. De Groot v. United States, 78 F.2d 244 (9th Cir. 1935).

Tests for self-defense instruction. — Before a self-defense instruction will be required, two evidentiary tests must be met. First there must be some evidence that excessive force was used to effect an arrest or stop the commission of a felony. Second, there must be some evidence from which a jury could conclude that the dangerous situation created by the felony no longer existed. Gray v. State, 463 P.2d 897 (Alaska 1970).

A self-defense instruction must be given if there is evidence from which a reasonable juror could entertain a reasonable doubt as to the defendant's guilt. Weston v. State, 682 P.2d 1119 (Alaska 1984).

Right to instruction. — In prosecution for first-degree assault while it was only defendant's own testimony which supported his theory that he entered the party house in a non-aggressive manner with the sole intention of conversing with the victim, there was some evidence that defendant did not provoke a dispute with victim under circumstances that he knew or should have known would result in mortal combat, and therefore defendant was entitled to have his self-defense claim, weak as it may have been, properly determined by the jury. Brown v. State, 698 P.2d 671 (Alaska Ct. App. 1985).

In a prosecution for third-degree assault, defendant was not required to show that a robbery was actually imminent, but merely that he reasonably believed one to be imminent, and, having presented some evidence supporting all necessary elements of his claim of self-defense, it was error to refuse to instruct the jury on such claim and to preclude him from presenting evidence to support the claim. Lamont v. State, 934 P.2d 774 (Alaska Ct. App. 1997).

Sufficiency of evidence for instruction on self-defense. — See Paul v. State, 655 P.2d 772 (Alaska Ct. App. 1982); Weston v. State, 682 P.2d 1119 (Alaska 1984).

Error in specific instruction not cured by later general statements. — A specific instruction, based upon the choice of a few of the facts testified, but omitting the paramount facts as to the state of the defendant's mind, emotions, and inferable impulses is final in its declaration as to the absence of self-defense in the case, and the error in such a specific instruction is not cured by later general statements concerning the right of the jury to take into consideration the deceased victim's threats. De Groot v. United States, 78 F.2d 244 (9th Cir. 1935).

When instruction on no duty to retreat properly rejected. — Where a defendant who was a long-time hotel resident used deadly force against the hotel desk clerk in the hotel office, the trial court did not err in rejecting the defendant's proposed instruction that there is no duty to retreat before using deadly force if a person is attacked on premises which are leased or rented to him and he is not the initial aggressor. Stapleton v. State, 696 P.2d 180 (Alaska Ct. App. 1985).

When instructions on self-defense properly refused. — Instructions on self-defense are properly refused where there is nothing in the evidence to which they are applicable. Itow v. United States, 228 F. 25 (9th Cir. 1915).

Refusal to instruct held error. — Refusal to grant defendant's request for a fury instruction on the issue of self-defense was error where defendant satisfied the burden of producing "some evidence" that he had acted in self-defense. Paul v. State, 655 P.2d 772 (Alaska Ct. App. 1982).

Failure to instruct on self-defense was not harmless although the jury had rejected the affirmative defense of imperfect self-defense, since the burden of establishing imperfect self-defense rests on the defendant, and the standard of proof is a preponderance of the evidence, while the burden of disproving self-defense rests on the state and the standard of proof is beyond a reasonable doubt. Weston v. State, 682 P.2d 1119 (Alaska 1984).

Proper instruction. — An instruction was proper which expressly authorized the jury to acquit the defendant if they found that it appeared to his apprehension that he was actually in danger, and which authorized the jury to consider apparent actual danger, and the court immediately thereafter properly charged the jury on the subject of the appearance of danger to the defendant. Ball v. United States, 147 F. 32 (9th Cir. 1906).

The trial court did not err in instructing the jury on the matter of self-defense. Nielsen v. State, 623 P.2d 304 (Alaska 1981).

Improper instruction. — There is no ground for instructing the jury that the threats of a man of vicious character are to give any greater right to a defendant to kill in self-defense than would the threats of a virtuous man. Ball v. United States, 147 F. 32 (9th Cir. 1906).

NOTES TO DECISIONS

Harm must be unlawful. — The two related defenses of defense of others and crime prevention require that the harm avoided by the charged act be unlawful. Cleveland v. Municipality of Anchorage, 631 P.2d 1073 (Alaska 1981).

When the threatened harm emanates from a human source, an actor who violates the law in response to it can defend only on the grounds of duress, defense of others, or crime prevention. Cleveland v. Municipality of Anchorage, 631 P.2d 1073 (Alaska 1981).

Reasonable belief that force is necessary. — Alaska Statutes 11.81.330 and this section contemplate a situation in which force is used by one who reasonably believes that force is necessary to prevent the use of unlawful force against a third person. Thus, the defense is composed of an objective element, i.e., a reasonable belief that force is necessary and a subjective element, i.e., an actual belief that force is necessary. David v. State, 698 P.2d 1233 (Alaska Ct. App. 1985).

Right to instruction on defense. — In prosecution for fourth-degree assault, since there was evidence from which the jury could infer that defendant believed he had to kick his uncle to prevent harm to his daughter, and that this belief was reasonable, he was entitled to an instruction on defense of a third person as justification for his conduct. David v. State, 698 P.2d 1233 (Alaska Ct. App. 1985).

Sec. 11.81.350. Justification: Use of force in defense of property and premises. (b) A person may use deadly force upon another when and to the extent the person reasonably believes it necessary to terminate what the person reasonably believes to be the commission or attempted commission of arson upon a dwelling or occupied building.

(c) A person in possession or control of any premises, or a guest or an express or implied agent of that person, may use

(1) nondeadly force upon another when and to the extent the person reasonably believes it is necessary to terminate what the person reasonably believes to be the commission or attempted commission by the other of criminal trespass in any degree upon the premises:

(2) has escaped or is attempting to escape from custody while in possession of a firearm on or about the person; or

(3) may otherwise endanger life or inflict serious physical injury unless arrested without delay.

(b) The use of force in making an arrest or stop is not justified under this section unless the peace officer reasonably believes the arrest or stop is lawful.

(c) Nothing in this section prohibits or restricts a peace officer in preparing to use or threatening to use a dangerous instrument. (§ 10 ch 166 SLA 1978)

NOTES TO DECISIONS

Subjecting felon to possibility of summary execution. — It is only in situations articulated in this section that a felon should be subjected to the possibility of summary execution. State v. Sundberg, 611 P.2d 44 (Alaska 1980).

Level of force must be objectively reasonable. — Regardless of whether the individual officer actually believed that his use of force was reasonable, and regardless of the reasonableness of that belief, the officer is not privileged to use an objectively unreasonable level of force in making an arrest. Samaniego v. City of Kodiak, 2 P.3d 78 (Alaska 2000).

This section and AS 12.25.070 are only general statutes which set out when deadly force is appropriate, with the latter indicating only that a police officer making an arrest may not use any restraint that is not necessary and proper for the arrest or detention of a person; however, such statutes cannot purport to give notice to officers that specific actions taken in specific circumstances may or may not be reasonable for immunity purposes. Sheldon v. City of Ambler, 178 P.3d 459 (Alaska 2008).

On a claim of excessive force, the court erred in applying an immunity analysis, driven by the officers' subjective beliefs as to the reasonableness of the force used. Samaniego v. City of Kodiak, 2 P.3d 78 (Alaska 2000).

Criteria for resolving issues under former law. — The criteria embodied in this section should be looked to as the relevant standards to be applied by Alaska's courts in resolving issues which might still arise under the "necessary and proper means" phraseology of former AS 12.25.080, which provided that "[i]f a person being arrested either flees or forcibly resists after notice of intention to make the arrest, the peace officer may use all the necessary and proper means to effect the arrest." State v. Sundberg, 611 P.2d 44 (Alaska 1980).

Lawful stops and custodial arrest distinguished. — See Howard v. State, 664 P.2d 603 (Alaska Ct. App. 1983).

Drawn guns and handcuffing do not necessarily turn a stop into an arrest. Howard v. State, 664 P.2d 603 (Alaska Ct. App. 1983).

Threats with nightstick. — Where the evidence establishes, at best, that the officer threatened defendant with the nightstick but never struck him with it and he consistently characterized the officer's conduct with the stick as menacing, and never intimated that the officer actually attempted to strike him there was insufficient evidence that the officer's threats with the nightstick amounted to a prohibited use of "deadly force." Carson v. State, 736 P.2d 356 (Alaska Ct. App. 1987).

Immunity standard for police officers clarified. — After clarifying the standard for qualified immunity to emphasize that the question was whether an officer reasonably believed that his actions were lawful, the court found that a police officer was not on notice under this section, AS 12.25.070, or through case law or regulation, that a bear hug and a take down were excessive uses of force when applied to an intoxicated and assaultive arrestee, and the officer was entitled to immunity. Sheldon v. City of Ambler, 178 P.3d 459 (Alaska 2008).

Unresolved factual questions prevented dismissal of excessive force claim. — Dismissal of arrestee's excessive force claim could not have been affirmed based subdivision (a)(2) because there were unresolved factual questions that prevented an appellate court from concluding that use of deadly force was reasonably necessary to accomplish the stated objectives because issue preclusive effect could not have been given to a federal district court's factual findings at a sentencing hearing for illegal possession of a firearm. Maness v. Daily, 184 P.3d 1 (Alaska 2008).

Sec. 11.81.380. Justification: Use of force by private person assisting an arrest or terminating an escape. (a) Except as provided in (b) of this section, a person who has been directed by another who that person reasonably believes to be a peace officer to assist in making an arrest or terminating or preventing an escape may use nondeadly force when and to the extent the person reasonably believes it necessary to carry out the peace officer's direction. A person may use deadly force under this section only when the person reasonably believes it necessary to carry out the peace officer's direction to use deadly force.

(b) The use of force under (a) of this section is not justified if the person believes that the peace officer is not justified in using that degree of force under the circumstances. (§ 10 ch 166 SLA 1978)

Sec. 11.81.390. Use of force by a private person in making arrest or terminating an escape. In addition to using force justified under other sections of this chapter, a person, acting as a private person, may use nondeadly force to make the arrest or terminate the escape or attempted escape from custody of a person who the private person reasonably believes has committed a misdemeanor in the private person's presence or a felony when and to the extent the private person reasonably believes it necessary to make that arrest or terminate that escape or attempted escape from custody. A private person may use deadly force under this section only when and to the extent the private person reasonably believes the use of deadly force is necessary to make the arrest or terminate the escape or attempted escape from custody of another who the private person reasonably believes

(1) has committed or attempted to commit a felony which involved the use of force against a person; or

(2) has escaped or is attempting to escape from custody while in possession of a firearm on or about the person. (§ 10 ch 166 SLA 1978)

NOTES TO DECISIONS

Instructions. — A jury should have been instructed that a private person may use such means as may be necessary and proper to effect the arrest of an actual felon, including deadly force in a charge stemming from a shooting of one believed by a private citizen to have committed a crime. (1) the force used by the peace officer exceeds that allowed under AS 11.81.370;

bill # / subject — public hearing date

This bill is a common sense response to someone who is threatening you or your family's life. Why should a lawful gun owner who is carrying a firearm have a duty to retreat? It makes no sense to run and hide (when you are carrying a firearm) if your life is being threatened.

Please support this common sense bill.

Dear Representative,

I would like to urge you to support House Bill 80. It concerns me that I am limited in my right to defend myself when the use of "deadly force" becomes necessary.

I am a new mother with a five month old baby boy. Having to take a baby with me everywhere I go has made me much more vulnerable than I ever used to be! This makes me much more concerned about defending myself if the situation ever calls for it.

Being able to defend myself with "deadly force" is a choice I hope I never have to make but if I do I certainly hope the law will be on my side.

Sincerely,
Cheri Weed

Subject: Duty to Retreat

Sir:

Thank you for your service in the legislature.

I am writing to urge you to vote for and continue to push for passage of this Bill. The right to defend oneself is the basic of rights in the Natural Law. The Natural Law has been citied as the basis for our jurisprudence since the first English settlers. The great commentator on the English Common Law Sir William Blackstone commented that the foundation of the right to bear arms in defense of oneself was the true right of a free person. Indeed the right goes back to the field at Runnymead England when John was forced to sign the Magna Carta. It is an embedded inherent right of survival and the foundation of the rights of a free people.

Nothing is so intimate as the right to repel an attacker. The old saying when you have only seconds the police are minutes away is so very true. Many would argue that we need to retreat to preserve life but I say anyone who puts their own life in peril and has assumed the risk by committing the crime is at fault. We know that the police would not retreat, why would anyone ask it of a citizen, have we erected an elite group that exercise a greater right than the citizen had before the formation of government? Indeed the right has been passed to the police for the orderly execution of justice but it was never given away in its entirety.

The example of violence along our southern boarder is an example of the citizens need to be able to defend themselves. Violence is not just localized in the south nor is it exclusive of the boarder. The example of the rampage against police in recent weeks is proof of this. Last year an officer was shot in Anchorage while doing reports in his cruiser, and not long after a trooper was shot while on patrol. This occurred just shortly after 4 officers in Lakewood, Washington were gunned down while they sat in a coffee stop. The plain truth is that lawlessness is very real and very dangerous. But this law that creates a duty to pause may be the pause that ends a lawful law abiding citizen's life. Too often it is a criminal that crys foul, why is it then that we should create another impediment by allowing a criminal to do so again. The law in its present state shifts the burden from the criminal to the victim, how utterly unreasonable can that possibly be? It is an old concept that if you run from a vicious animal you will encourage the attack. Whoever would by violence do harm to another has already proved their viciousness. Are we then to be encumbered by the doubt as to whether we will be judged to have acted prematurely? Are we to be victims before we are able to suppress a violent attack? Are we encumbered by the thought that we may be held liable for the acts of another? It goes beyond the pale of being reasonable.

Imagine a lone individual minding their business in a local store when a group of gang members enter and begin to accost the individual. Imagine then one of the assailants draws a weapon and in a threatening manner approaches the individual and begins an attack. If the defender draws a weapon and defends in a correct manner of self defense he has no witnesses. Do you suppose the gang member's friends would speak the truth?? Has this happened, on a daily basis? You have to but peruse the news papers, the internet or watch TV to find such events throughout the country.

I trust sir that you will do the right thing.

Subject: Support of HB 80

Sir,

I'm writing to encourage you to support HB 80. I am an Alaskan and have lived here since my birth 33 years ago except for the years that I served as an infantryman in the US Army.

For me, one of the most important rights that I have as an American, is my right to defend both my life and the lives of those around me. Most of the time that I am not at work, I carry a concealed handgun. I have taken courses and training in the laws surrounding when I can use my weapon to defend the mine and other's lives...and just as importantly, when not to use my weapon. I also shoot regularly as I believe that as someone who carries a weapon, I have a responsibility to be as prepared as possible in the event that I have to use it.

Taking another's life is something that I pray that I never have to do. But should I find myself in a situation where I am confronted by an attacker who is armed with either a weapon or a knife, turning my back to that attacker both presents a danger to myself as well as shifting responsibility for stopping an attack to someone else who may not be able to either defend themselves or flee. I may be able to run away safely, but that attacker will still be free to go after other people. Removing the requirement to flee, would enable me to help deter future attacks on others by either presenting my weapon and holding the attacker for the police, or God forbid, remove the threat myself.

Too often in today's society, we turn a blind eye and ignore what we don't want to see. Too often we flee away from an attacker rather than confront and overcome them. If I am in a position to stop a threat to either myself or others, I don't want to have to worry about my actions being reviewed in the comfort of a courtroom and then having others decide whether I may have been able to flee or not.

I thank you for your time and again, please allow Alaskans to defend themselves.

Respectfully,

Brandon Erickson

As crimes against persons are ever growing in Alaska we need this law to send the message that we are armed, and detour the perpetrator from infringing on our civil rights to be a safe, rather armed or for the unarmed, this will help send a message that Alaskans want to protect themselves and property from unwanted harm. No man or women should have to retreat or fear prosecution for self-defense of life and property.

I urge you to support this bill, it may save someone you know or love

Mr Chairman:

"Introduced by state Representative Mark Neuman (R-15), HB 80 would remove the duty-to-retreat in Alaska. Under this bill, Alaskans would have the right to use force, including deadly force, for self-defense anywhere they have a right to be."

I fully support the intent of House Bill 80, as stated above. It is time to give more reasonable options to law abiding Alaskans. This is one of them, and it is long overdue. I hope this Bill will get the strong support it deserves from the House Judiciary Committee. I would like to see this Bill become law in Alaska.

Alaskans should not be at the mercy of the lawless, nor should we have to "read law on whether we have a right to self defense" in order to decide if we are "allowed" to protect ourselves and our loved ones. Let the lawless reap the consequences of their actions in a more timely manner for a change.

My thanks to Representative Neuman for introducing this Bill for the benefit of all law abiding Alaskans. I hope it will become law soon.

I have exercised my right to vote in every election since I became eligible, after arriving in Alaska in 1977. I AM a serious Alaskan.

RE: Fiscal Note HB080-LAW-CRIM-02-09-11

The House Judiciary Committee has reservations about the fiscal note from the Criminal Division of the Department of Law on HB 80 "Self Defense." Several members have concerns about the Department's claim that this legislation will produce a sufficient amount of new cases to merit two additional full-time attorneys. The committee also questions whether $450,000 annually is an appropriate estimate for these two positions.

We respectfully request that the House Finance Committee exercise due care and consideration of this fiscal note.

House Bill 87 Sponsor Statement

"An Act relating to penalties for antitrust violations."

House Bill 87 updates the criminal penalties for the state's anti-trust laws, and adds a civil penalty provision. Under current law, an antitrust violation under AS 45.50.562 or 45.50.564 is a misdemeanor that is punishable by a fine of up to $20,000 for natural persons or $50,000 for organizations. These penalties do not serve as a significant deterrent to individuals and companies engaging in antitrust violations.

HB 87 increases criminal fines to $1 million for an individual and $50 million for an organization, and make such a violation a class "C" felony. Under analogous Federal antitrust law, violations are a felony and criminal fines are set at $1 million for individuals, and $100 million for a corporation (15 U.S.C.A. § 3).

Additionally, HB 87 adds a new provision to the antitrust law that will allow the Department of Law to pursue a civil action for antitrust violations, with the same maximum penalties of $1 million for a natural person and $50 million for an organization. The antitrust laws in most other states already contain civil penalty provisions, with fines of varying amounts.

This update to our antitrust statutes will give the Department of Law the necessary teeth for dealing with any antitrust violations in our state. Please join us in supporting HB 87

MEMORANDUM February 25, 2011

SUBJECT: Sectional summary of CSHB 87( ) relating to civil and criminal penalties for antitrust violations (Work Order No. 27-LS0331\I)

TO: Representative Lindsey Holmes
Attn: James Waldo

FROM: Theresa Bannister
Legislative Counsel

You have requested a sectional summary of the above-described bill. As a preliminary matter, note that a sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill and the bill itself is the best statement of its contents.

Section 1. Amends AS 45.50.578 to increase the criminal penalty for a violation of AS 45.50.562 or 45.50.564 to a class C felony. Increases the possible fine for a natural person to $1,000,000, and refers to AS 12.55 (the sentencing and probation chapter) for the possible imprisonment for a natural person. Increases the possible fine for a person who is not a natural person to $50,000,000.

Section 2. Authorizes the attorney general to bring a civil action against a person who violates specified antitrust provisions or who violates an injunction issued under AS 45.50.580. Sets the maximum civil penalties.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

HB 87 will amend Alaska's antitrust statute to increase the criminal penalty for violating the statute from a misdemeanor to a class C felony, and increase the criminal fines from $20,000 to $1 million for a natural person, and from $50,000 to $50 million if not a natural person. It will also add a new section that allows the attorney general to bring a civil action for antitrust violations, and seek the same amounts in civil penalties.

There will be no fiscal impacts to the Department of Law.

27-19-306. Security for damages. (1) Subject to 25-1-402, on granting an injunction or restraining order, the judge shall require a written undertaking to be given by the applicant for the payment of the costs and damages that may be incurred or suffered by any party who is found to have been wrongfully enjoined or restrained. Except as provided in subsection (2), the undertaking:

(a) must be fixed at a sum that the judge considers proper; and

(b) may be waived:

(i) in domestic disputes; or

(ii) in the interest of justice.

(2) (a) If a party seeks an injunction or restraining order against an industrial operation or activity, the judge shall require a written undertaking to be filed by the applicant. The amount of the written undertaking must be set in an amount that includes all of the wages, salaries, and benefits of the employees of the party enjoined or restrained during the anticipated time that the injunction or restraining order will be in effect. The amount of the written undertaking may not exceed $50,000 unless the interests of justice require. The written undertaking must be conditioned to indemnify the employees of the party enjoined or restrained against lost wages, salaries, and benefits sustained by reason of the injunction or restraining order.

(b) As used in subsection (2)(a), "industrial operation or activity" includes but is not limited to construction, mining, timber, and grazing operations.

(3) Within 30 days after the service of the injunction, the party enjoined may object to the sufficiency of the sureties. If the party enjoined fails to object, all objections to the sufficiency of the sureties are waived. When objected to, the applicant's sureties, upon notice to the party enjoined of not less than 2 or more than 5 days, shall justify before a judge or clerk in the same manner as upon bail on arrest. If the sureties fail to justify or if others in their place fail to justify at the time and place appointed, the order granting the injunction must be dissolved.

(4) This section does not prohibit a person who is wrongfully enjoined from filing an action for any claim for relief otherwise available to that person in law or equity and does not limit the recovery that may be obtained in that action.

ACTION ITEMS

1. Provide support for permitting agencies instead of wasting state resources on an ill-timed Pebble study.
2. Implement reforms to prevent public litigant and third-party lawsuits from stifling development.
3. Build a road to Western Alaska that includes access to Brooks Range mineral deposits.
4. Support efforts to communicate the benefits that mining brings to Alaska and its communities.
5. Bring energy infrastructure to western Alaska to support communities and mining projects in the region.

Mining provides the necessary building blocks of our society. The mining industry has demonstrated its ability to help diversify Alaska's economy and to provide wide-ranging employment opportunities in both rural and urban areas, all while operating to the highest environmental standards. In an industry controlled by global economic conditions, Alaska mineral development must be competitive while developing a sustainable industry. To this end, there are actions that the Governor and Legislature should take now in order for the mining industry to be able to grow and to continue to contribute to our society in the future for the prosperity of Alaska.

The Alaska Minerals Commission presents this 2011 report with the 5 specific action items identified above, thereby fulfilling the Commission's statutory mandate to make recommendations annually to the Governor and Legislature on ways to mitigate constraints on the development of minerals in Alaska.

CRITICAL SUPPORT FOR PERMITTING AGENCIES

Spending $750,000 on a poorly timed and misguided "study" aimed at Pebble is a waste of State resources. Alaska's interest would be better served by spending the money to augment the State's technical review of the project if and when one is proposed.

Funding a study of Pebble now would be a waste of State resources because there is no specific project to evaluate and the study lacks a specific scope or objective. Such a study could only be a sham, with the appearance of a predetermined outcome, as it would have no choice but to conjecture about potential project configurations and would have no way to evaluate what actually might be proposed by the company, including any mitigative measures that might be included. Such a small sum of money could never hope to improve upon the years of field work and the over one hundred million dollars that have been spent to understand the environment in the region. With no specific project to review and no way to better understand the local environment, such a study is doomed to irrelevancy compared to the multi-year, multi-million dollar environmental review process that surely awaits the actual project.

Spending this sum now would also impair the investment climate for the entire mining industry in Alaska, as unfortunately it would demonstrate that the project review process in Alaska is political rather than science based.

RECOMMENDATION

A better use of limited public funds would be to invest in technical support for the State Large Mine Permitting team. These funds could augment the team with experienced staff and third party technical experts to critically evaluate the project once a definitive proposal that warrants review is received. In fact, the State should critically review its financial support for all regulatory agencies to ensure that a core of competent staff are available to timely review all development projects in Alaska, not just at Pebble.

An alternative use of the funds would be for the legislature to study the entire permitting process to see if there are ways to make the process more efficient while still maintaining Alaska's high environmental standards.

LITIGATION REFORM

Resource development in Alaska must comply with one of the most stringent environmental jurisdictions in North America, yet public litigant and third-party lawsuits are further delaying and stifling development. Beyond the adverse impact on industries and investment in Alaska, the information requests for "discovery purposes" are further paralyzing the agencies by consuming their budgets and diverting limited staff from completing their constitutionally and legislatively assigned tasks. The following administrative and legislative support is required to limit the negative impact from this obstructionist legal maneuvering:

RECOMMENDATION

- Require bonds from organizations initiating legal actions;
- Continue to enjoin suits as an affected party in other states if an adverse decision in that case will become a precedent that may be applied in Alaska;
- Continue to enjoin suits filed in Alaska if an adverse decision in that case will adversely affect the state's ability to financially benefit from its natural resources;
- Support budgets to hire legal expertise needed in natural resource development cases;
- Require plaintiffs to pay legal fees for all portions of the rulings against their position;
- Support budgets that will enable the Attorney General to evaluate previous litigation reform in court rulings to develop a game plan for meaningful reform; and Work with other states to petition U.S. Congress to remove the "Tax Exempt" status from these litigious organizations.

TRANSPORTATION INFRASTRUCTURE

The Commission would like to thank the Governor's office and the legislature for support for the Western Alaska Access Project and for the Ambler Mining District Access studies. We encourage ongoing support to complete these critical projects.

RECOMMENDATION

- Build a road from Fairbanks to Nome that includes access to the Brooks Range mineral deposits in the Ambler Mining District through the Roads to Resources program.
- Investigate transportation corridors in southwest Alaska that would facilitate mineral development and also lower the cost of living and provide more affordable energy.

FINDINGS

- Transportation infrastructure related to mineral development has played a critical role in rural areas of the state, supporting lower cost energy and a lower cost of living. With the current upswing in commodity prices and interest in minerals development, Alaska can capitalize on leveraging private sector development with statewide goals and rural needs in public-private partnerships.
- The increase in activity in the Arctic for shipping, energy, and mineral development is necessitating an increased presence by the U.S. Coast Guard in the Arctic. The need for deep water ports in the Arctic associated with this increased presence provides an opportunity to coordinate roads to potential ports with mineral development projects.
- We also recommend that any transportation plan grow from the regional and project need in concert with statewide planning. Local support will be key for any projects to advance, hence the need for local support. Again a good example is the growing interest in roads in Northwest Alaska from the local levels and the coordination of the Department of Transportation working with industry and the communities for viable projects with local support.

MARKETING AND EDUCATION

The State of Alaska must very actively market itself to the rest of the world and demonstrate that it is open for business in resource development. Legislators and Alaskans in general need to understand the great benefits that mining brings to the State and its communities.

RECOMMENDATION

- Expand budget for marketing presence domestically and in foreign countries
- Encourage elected officials to participate in mine tours provided through the Council of Alaska Producers
- Increase funding for Alaska Resource Education (ARE) to $150,000 annually
- Provide funding for a statewide Minerals Education & Promotion Program
- Provide funding to make the UAF College of Engineering and Mines the premier mining and geology program in the United States
- Support state and federal programs to train and educate workers for the mining industry

ENERGY

Invest in low-cost energy capacity on the existing grid. On a regional basis, expand energy distribution infrastructure and generation capacity using the least costly, most available resource whether that is coal, wind, solar, hydro, geothermal, or small scale nuclear.

RECOMMENDATION

- Bring energy infrastructure to western and southwestern Alaska to support communities and mining projects in the region.
- Expand low-cost base load energy on the existing electrical grid.

The Alaska Minerals Commission was created by the 14th Legislature and signed into law on June 6, 1986. The enabling legislation instructs the Commission to make recommendations to the Governor and Legislature on ways to mitigate constraints, including governmental constraints, on the development of minerals, including coal, in the state.

This publication was released by the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development. Its purpose is to report the findings and recommendations of the Alaska Minerals Commission to the Governor and to the Legislature of Alaska. MEMORANDUM March 21, 2011

SUBJECT: Constitutionality of HB 168 relating to security for injunction (Work Order No. 27-LS0395\B)

TO: Representative Max Gruenberg
Attn: Gretchen Staft

FROM: Dennis C. Bailey DCB
Legislative Counsel

You have asked me to review constitutional considerations with respect to HB 168 in light of two decisions, Patrick v. Lynden Transport., 765 P.2d 1375 (Alaska 1988) and Ware v. City of Anchorage, 439 P.2d 793 (Alaska 1968).

HB 168 amends AS 09.40.230 by adding a new subsection that requires a party seeking a restraining order, preliminary injunction, or order vacating or staying the operation of a permit that affects an industrial operation to give security in an amount determined by a court for costs and damages that may be incurred by an industrial operation that has been wrongfully enjoined or restrained. It also requires that the amount determined by the court "must include an amount for the payment of wages and benefits for the employees of an industrial operation and the contractors and subcontractors of the operation."

The new subsection added by HB 168 parallels the requirements of Alaska Civil Rule 65(c), which requires a court to require a person seeking an injunction to provide security to protect a person who may be wrongfully restrained or enjoined. Civil Rule 65(c) reads:

> (c) Security. No restraining order or preliminary injunction shall issue except upon the giving of security by the applicant, in such sum as the court deems proper, for the payment of such costs and damages as may be incurred or suffered by any party who is found to have been wrongfully enjoined or restrained. No such security shall be required of the state or a municipality or of an officer or agency thereof, or unless otherwise ordered by the court, in domestic relations actions or proceedings. A surety upon a bond or undertaking under this rule submits to the jurisdiction of the court and irrevocably appoints the clerk of the court as the surety's agent upon whom any papers affecting the surety's liability on the bond or undertaking may be served. The surety's liability may be enforced on motion without the necessity of an independent action. The > motion and such notice of the motion as the court prescribes may be served on the clerk of the court who shall forthwith mail copies to the persons giving the security if their addresses are known.

Civil Rule 65(c) exists to protect the interests of a party who is the subject of a temporary restraining order or a preliminary injunction. The analysis used by a court issuing a preliminary injunction is set out as follows:

> The showing required to obtain a preliminary injunction depends on the nature of the threatened injury. If the plaintiff faces the danger of "irreparable harm" and if the opposing party is adequately protected, then we apply a "balance of hardships" approach in which the plaintiff "must raise 'serious' and substantial questions going to the merits of the case; that is, the issues raised cannot be 'frivolous or obviously without merit.'" [State v. Kluti Kaah Native Vill. of Copper Ctr., 831 P.2d 1270, 1273 (Alaska 1992) (citations omitted).] If, however, the plaintiff's threatened harm is less than irreparable or if the opposing party cannot be adequately protected, then we demand of the plaintiff the heightened standard of a "clear showing of probable success on the merits." [Id. at 1272 (quoting A.J. Indus., Inc. v. Alaska Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 470 P.2d 537, 540 (Alaska 1970)), modified in other respects, 483 P.2d 198 (Alaska 1971).]

HB 168 differs from Civil Rule 65(c) because under HB 168, (1) the security requirement applies not only to a temporary restraining order or a preliminary injunction, but also includes "an order vacating or staying the operation of a permit that affects an industrial operation"; and (2) requires that the amount of the security determined by the court must include "an amount for the payment of wages and benefits for employees and payment to contractors and subcontractors of the industrial operation."

Arguably, the change proposed by HB 168 applying the security requirement to a stay of the operation of a permit, could be in the form of an injunction, although the issue is less clear with an order vacating the operation of a permit, which seems more likely to be the result of litigation rather than the subject of a preliminary injunction. On the other hand, application for injunctive relief and the associated security under Civil Rule 65(c) may be interpreted not to apply to an "order" that is not in the form of an injunction.

With respect to the requirement that the court include an amount for wages and contract payments, the bill does not specify an amount that is required, and does not affect the discretion of the judge to determine the amount. The bill does not explicitly say that the amount of security is the amount of the payments for wages and contract payments. However, an argument could be made that HB 168 was intended to impose a requirement that the full amount of the wages and contracts must be included in the amount of the security.

Whether HB 168 actually changes the application of Civil Rule 65(c) may determine whether a two-thirds vote is required. An argument can be made that the court has the same authority both before and after enactment of HB 168. Under this argument, the court could apply the new provisions under HB 168 and require security for a preliminary injunction relating to the vacation or stay of a permit using existing law, and, also under existing law, the court could consider and include an amount for wages, benefits and contract payments. Under this interpretation, the bill does not enact a change to a court rule. If, however, HB 168 is interpreted to require wages, benefits, and contract payments to be covered by security, then HB 168 may be interpreted to change a court rule.

In Ware v. City of Anchorage, 439 P.2d 793 (Alaska 1968), the court addressed the issue of whether the statute that required a nonresident to post security for litigation costs and attorney fees was invalid based on the argument that the legislature may not make a court rule relating to practice and procedure, it may only change a court rule under art. IV, sec. 15 of the Alaska Constitution. Article IV, sec. 15 provides:

> Section 15. Rule-Making Power. The supreme court shall make and promulgate rules governing the administration of all courts. It shall make and promulgate rules governing practice and procedure in civil and criminal cases in all courts. These rules may be changed by the legislature by two-thirds vote of the members elected to each house.

Rule 39(e) of the Uniform Rules requires:

> (e) If a bill or portion of a bill contains matter changing a supreme court rule governing practice and procedure in civil or criminal cases, the bill must contain a section expressly citing the rule and noting what change is being proposed. The section containing the change in a court rule must be approved by an affirmative vote of two-thirds of the full membership of each house. If the section effecting a change in the court rule fails to receive the required two-thirds vote, the section is void and without effect and is deleted from the bill. The fact that a bill contains a section which changes a court rule shall also be noted in the title of the bill.

In order to decide whether a court rule change requires a two-thirds vote, a determination must be made whether the change to the court rules is

(1) a substantive change to court rules, e.g., limitations of actions, burden of proof, presumption, creation of courts, and matters of jurisdiction, which may be changed without special voting requirements;

(2) a matter of practice or procedure of the courts, e.g., forms of action, how an action is commenced, the manner of notice, pleading and motion practice, joinder, pre-trial practice, discovery, the conduct of trial, stay of proceedings, enforcement procedures, post-trial procedures, appeal, venue evidence and special proceedings such as adoption and probate; or

(3) a rule of administration which is protected from legislative modification based on principles of separation of power.[1]

Whether the measure creates a substantive court rule change requiring no special voting requirements or a change to a matter of practice and procedures, which would require a two-thirds vote, is a close question. The problems created by this distinction are readily acknowledged by the court.

> We then turned to the definitions of the terms "procedural" and "substantive." . . . But while this distinction claims venerable origins, it has been recognized that the definition falls far short of drawing an unequivocal line. Decisions on the method of enforcing a right often affect substantive rights, and the regulation of substantive rights may have an impact upon judicial procedure.

State v. Native Village of Nunapitchuk, 156 P.3d 389, 397 (Alaska 2007) (citations omitted).

An argument could be made that the proposed change offered by HB 168, even if it limits the court's discretion in determining the amount of security required, would be considered a matter of procedure. The Alaska Supreme Court found that AS 09.60.060, which allowed the Court to require security for costs and attorneys fees, to be a substantive matter. Ware v. Anchorage, 439 P.2d 793, 794 (Alaska 1968). The Court said, "The authorities generally agree that substantive law creates, defines and regulates rights, while procedural law prescribes the method of enforcing the rights." The Court acknowledged differing decisions on similar facts in both state and federal courts, but concluded that AS 09.60.060 enacted a substantive change to the court rules. The Court reasoned that the act created a new right in the resident defendant and a new liability in the nonresident plaintiff which are separate and apart from, and go beyond, the procedure of computing and assessing costs and attorney's fees. Ware, at 795.

In the more recent case, Nunapitchuk, supra, the court concluded that changes to Civil Rule 82, which relates to attorneys fees, is a rule of practice and procedure that would require a two-thirds vote, but the change to the public interest litigant exception to the attorney fees rules was a rule of substantive law which could be changed by the legislature without a two-thirds vote. Further, the court concluded that when deciding whether the changes to the public interest litigant attorney fees provisions impede access to the courts, the court would not strike the statute down entirely but would determine whether application of the statute would impede access to the courts on a case-by-case basis.

A court considering whether a court rule change and a two-thirds vote is required for HB 168 could take a position similar to Ware and conclude that the changes relating to posting security creates a new liability and is, therefore, a substantive change. Or, a court could conclude that the changes are a procedural change which would require a two-thirds vote. How the issue would be decided cannot be predicted with any certainty.

The current bill draft takes the approach that the change is a substantive change. Taking this approach presumes that a two-thirds vote is not required but runs the risk that a court could conclude that the measure makes a procedural change so a court rule change had actually occurred, and because a two-thirds vote was required, but not obtained, the change is invalid. With respect to the voting requirement, the safest procedure would be to treat the measure as requiring a rule change and obtain the two-thirds vote required to approve a rule change.

You also asked about the constitutionality of HB 168 in light of the holding in Patrick v. Lynden Transport., 765 P.2d 1375 (Alaska 1988). That case involved a statute that required payment of security for court costs and attorney fees when the plaintiff is a nonresident as a condition for maintaining the lawsuit in Alaska. The court found that access to the courts is a fundamental right, analyzed the case on equal protection grounds under the Alaska Constitution, and relied heavily on the residency versus non-residency issues presented by the case to reach the conclusion that the statute was unconstitutional.

HB 168 differs from the issue present in Patrick v. Lynden. In Patrick v. Lynden the plaintiff could not maintain the action without filing security for costs and fees. In contrast, HB 168 does not explicitly deny access to the courts, although, arguably it may have the same effect by denying access to restraining order or preliminary injunction. Another important difference is that HB 168 does not involve residency issues comparable to those in Patrick v. Lynden Transport and that were used by the court as the basis for the court's decision.

In short, the precedent established in Patrick v. Lynden does not determine whether HB 168 is constitutional, although it does establish that access to the courts is a fundamental right. Whether the requirements of HB 168 infringe on that right is an open question.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

court to require the plaintiff to give security for the reasonable expense, including attorney fees, that may be incurred by the moving party. The amount of the security may be increased or decreased from time to time in this discretion of the court upon a showing that the security has become inadequate or excessive. The corporation or other defendants may have recourse to the security in an amount as the court may determine upon the termination of the derivative action, whether or not the court finds the action was brought without reasonable cause.

(i) A derivative action may not be discontinued, abandoned, compromised or settled without the approval of the court having jurisdiction of the action. If the court determines that the interests of the shareholders or any class or classes of shareholders will be substantially affected by a discontinuance, abandonment, compromise, or settlement, the court in its discretion may direct that notice, by publication or otherwise, shall be given to the shareholders or class or classes of shareholders whose interests will be affected. If the court directs notice to be given, it shall determine which of the parties to the action shall bear the expense of giving the notice in an amount the court determines to be reasonable in the circumstances. The amount shall be awarded as special costs of the action.

(j) If the derivative action is successful, in whole or in part, or if anything is received as a result of the judgment, compromise, or settlement of that action, the court may award to the plaintiff or plaintiffs reasonable expenses, including reasonable attorney fees, and shall direct an accounting to the corporation for the remainder of the proceeds. This subsection does not apply to a judgment rendered only for the benefit of injured shareholders and limited to a recovery of the loss or damage sustained by them.

Note: Civil Rule 23.1 in its entirety was adopted by the Alaska Legislature in ch. 166, §§ 1, 17, SLA 1988, rather than by the Alaska Supreme Court.

Annotations

Cases

Shareholders who filed a derivative suit against the directors of a village corporation were not prevailing parties because the trial court found that the shareholders' failure to make a pre-suit demand was not excused; the trial court did not err in denying the shareholders' request for attorney fees. Jerue v. Millett, Op. No. 5676, 66 P.3d 736 (Alaska 2003).

Where a village corporation did not become a party plaintiff until after the events occurred that mooted a derivative suit, the village was not a prevailing party for purposes of recovering attorney fees. Jerue v. Millett, Op. No. 5676, 66 P.3d 736 (Alaska 2003).

Rule 23.2. Actions Relating to Unincorporated Associations.

An action brought by or against the members of an unincorporated association as a class by naming certain members as representative parties may be maintained only if it appears that the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interest of the association and its members. In the conduct of the action the court may make appropriate orders corresponding with those described in Rule 23 (d), and the procedure for dismissal or compromise of the action shall correspond with that provided in Rule 23(e).

Rule 24. Intervention.

(a) Intervention of Right. Upon timely application anyone shall be permitted to intervene in an action when the applicant claims an interest relating to the property or transaction which is the subject of the action and the applicant is so situated that the disposition of the action may as a practical matter impair or impede the applicant's ability to protect that interest, unless the applicant's interest is adequately represented by existing parties.

(b) Permissive Intervention. Upon timely application anyone may be permitted to intervene in an action when an applicant's claim or defense and the main action have a question of law or fact in common. When a party to an action relies for ground of claim or defense upon any statute or executive order administered by a federal or state governmental officer or agency or upon any regulation, order, requirement, or agreement issued or made pursuant to the statute or executive order, the officer or agency upon timely application may be permitted to intervene in the action. In exercising its discretion the court shall consider whether the intervention will unduly delay or prejudice the adjudication of the rights of the original parties.

(c) Procedure. A person desiring to intervene shall serve a motion to intervene upon the parties as provided in Rule 5. The motion shall state the ground therefor and shall be accompanied by a pleading setting forth the claim or defense for which intervention is sought. When the constitutionality of a state statute affecting the public interest is drawn in question in any action to which the state or an officer, agency, or employee thereof is not a party, the court shall notify the Attorney General of Alaska of such fact, and the state shall be permitted to intervene in the action.

(Adopted by SCO 5 October 9, 1959; amended by SCO 258 effective November 15, 1976; corrected January, 1993; amended by SCO 1153 effective July 15, 1994; by SCO 1342 effective September 15 1998; by SCO 1713 effective May 16, 2009; and by SCO 1716 effective July 1, 2009)

Note: AS 10.06.628, as enacted by ch. 166, § 1, SLA 1988, amended Civil Rule 24 by allowing a shareholder or creditor of a corporation to intervene in an action for involuntary dissolution of the corporation under AS 10.06.628.

Note: Chapter 105 SLA 1998 adopts AS 13.36.175 pertaining to contract actions against a trustee. According to section 23 of the act, subsection (c) of this statute amends Civil Rule 24 by allowing a beneficiary, or the attorney general and certain corporations under certain circumstances, to intervene in a contract action against a trustee without satisfying the criteria in the court rule. The act also adopts AS 13.36.185 pertaining to the tort liability of a trust. According to section

CSHB 88 (HSTA) Use of Foreign Law

America has unique values of liberty which do not exist in foreign legal systems. Yet foreign laws are increasingly finding their way into U.S. court cases, particularly in the area of family law, involving divorce and child custody.

CSHB 88 (STA) aims at preventing "a court or other enforcement authority" from enforcing foreign law in Alaska. The bill preempts violations of an individual's constitutional rights resulting from the application of foreign law. CSHB 88 (STA) exempts corporations, partnerships, or other forms of business association. The CS also states that foreign law shall not mean, nor shall it include, any laws of the Alaska Native or American Native tribes in the state of Alaska, in the limited circumstances when tribal members may be subject to the concurrent jurisdiction of the tribal courts and the state courts.

CS for HB88 (STA) offers a baseline law that provides a statutory framework for precluding constitutionally objectionable foreign laws and legal systems from finding their way into the state judicial system. To the question of whether this bill would affect conventions or treaties, such as, the Law of the Sea, Pacific Salmon Treaty, etc., the Attorney General replied in a legal opinion, dated March 21, 2011, "...it is the United States who is a party to some of these conventions and/or treaties... These federal laws, to the extent they apply to Alaska, will preempt inconsistent state law, including HB88."

There are 16 other states with similar legislation regarding foreign law being considered in state courts. Alaska, like other states, recognizes the growing need to emphasize the fact that our state and U.S. constitutions are the fundamental basis for civil law for everyone in our country.

This bill is not about religion or First Amendment rights. Nothing in this bill prevents any person from freely exercising his or her right to freedom of religion and worship. CSHB88 (STA) only applies to legal doctrines in our court systems. The bill is not even principally focused on religious law, but any foreign law that violates constitutionally protected liberties. But to those who are accustomed to their religion and their civil laws being inextricably connected, we must clarify that all individual rights are guaranteed and protected under the Constitution of the State of Alaska and the United States Constitution.

Explanation of Changes from HB 88, version M To CSHB 88 (STA) version I

There were several questions asked at the first hearing in HSTA Committee regarding how HB 88 will affect corporations, partnerships, or other business associations. In addition, a legal opinion from the Department of Law indicated that "HB 88 might affect a foreign entity's willingness to do business ...in Alaska..."

Therefore, a change to Page 2, Line 26 adds

> (g) This section shall not apply to a corporation, partnership, or other form of business association.

There are several states with similar legislation and this amendment has been inserted in those bills as well.

In addition, there were concerns if HB 88 affected family matters involving tribes in Alaska. The Department of Law legal opinion states that although family matters should not be affected, "...in limited circumstances, tribal members may be subject to the concurrent jurisdiction of the tribal courts and the state courts. ... Tribes have the concurrent authority to initiate cases regarding children's proceedings or custody proceedings involving native children."

To alleviate questions about tribal law under this Act, a change to Page 2, Line 25 adds

> After 'States.' For the purposes of this act, foreign law shall not mean, nor shall it include, any laws of the Alaska Native or American Native tribes in the state of Alaska.

2011 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. CSHB088(STA) \B

Analysis

This bill is designed to protect the rights of citizens of Alaska from the application of foreign law if the application would violate the individual's rights guaranteed by the Alaska Constitution or the United States Constitution. The Department of Law cannot estimate how many cases in which the State or State agencies might be named in which this new standard might be an issue. The new legal standard could likely involve interpretation of federal treaties and compacts and the application of those treaties on states by federal law.

The fiscal impact of this legislation cannot be accurately determined at this time.

Re: HB 88

Representative Gatto:

You have asked the Department of Law ("Department") for an opinion on HB 88 and its impact on Alaska natives and tribal law, international conventions, litigation with foreign corporations, and contracts with foreign entities. One premise applicable to all of the questions posed is that HB 88 would have no effect to the extent it conflicts with a federal law or treaty. Pursuant to the Supremacy Clause of the US Constitution (Article VI, clause 2), the US Supreme Court has recognized for many years that State laws that conflict with federal law are "without effect." Maryland v. Louisiana, 451 U.S. 725, 746 (1981).

HB 88 defines "foreign law" as a law, rule or legal code or system used or applied outside of the United States and the territories of the United States. With regard to family matters, tribes operate within the United States. Accordingly, HB 88 should not affect family matters involving tribes. Tribal members are citizens of Alaska as well as citizens of their tribes. Therefore, in limited circumstances, tribal members may be subject to the concurrent jurisdiction of the tribal courts and the state courts. One example of this concurrent jurisdiction is domestic relations among members. Tribes have the concurrent authority to initiate cases regarding children's proceedings or custody proceedings involving native children. As to the final question regarding American Indian tribal law and Alaska Indian tribal law, there is no difference between the two.

With regard to conventions on the Law of the Sea, the International Pacific Halibut Convention, and the Pacific Salmon Treaty, to name a few, Alaska is not a party to these conventions. Instead, it is the United States who is a party to some of these conventions and/or treaties. For example, the United States has not yet signed the latest Law of the Sea Convention, though there is a resolution currently pending before the Alaska legislature urging the United States to ratify the convention. The laws that directly affect Alaska are the federal statutes and regulations that implement the treaties, such as the Northern Pacific Halibut Act. These federal laws, to the extent they apply to Alaska, will preempt inconsistent state law, including HB 88.

In general, Alaska courts and enforcement entities can only apply Alaska law and federal law. Sometimes they will apply applicable law from another state, but only after determining that that law is applicable to the matter before the tribunal. But Alaska courts will not apply a foreign law if application of the law would violate an individual's constitutional rights. Generally, "foreign law" does not apply in Alaska. Judges take an oath to uphold the laws of the state and of the United States. If a foreign choice of law provision in a contract deprives the party to the contract of a fundamental constitutional right, the offending provision would be void as against public policy. In some instances a court might confront the application of foreign law, but these instances likely involve foreign treaties and compacts (such as the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects if International Parental Child Abduction), in which case the foreign law would not be impacted by a state statute such as HB 88.

All courts have the ability to reform or modify a contract provision if enforcement of the provisions would be contrary to public policy. This would apply to both a choice of law provision and choice of venue or choice of forum provision. If the contract has a choice of venue or forum provision and a party (whether an individual or a corporation or other type of business entity) complies with the provision by filing a dispute in the foreign venue, then HB 88 would have no effect for Alaska law would not be applicable in the foreign venue. The provisions of HB 88 would apply if the party filed a lawsuit in Alaska and was opposing a motion to change venue to the foreign venue because of the clause in the contract. If the fundamental constitutional rights of the party opposing the change of venue motion would be impaired by the foreign venue, the Alaska court could void the venue provision as against public policy.

HB 88 might affect a foreign entity's willingness to do business with individuals or businesses in Alaska if it knows that provisions of the contract may be void by law should HB 88 become law. If a contract is entered into with a foreign entity to provide goods or services to the foreign entity in that entity's country, it would not be unusual for the contract to contain choice of law and/or choice of venue provisions. The foreign entity might be hesitant to enter into such a contract if there is the possibility that in the future the terms of the contract might be changed by an Alaskan court because the other party to the contract claims that his or its constitutional rights are being violated if the choice of law or choice of venue provisions are enforced. Finally, what is unclear from HB 88 is how an Alaska state court could interpret a choice of venue or forum provision so as to preserve constitutional rights other than by determining the provision to be void and to allow a lawsuit to proceed in Alaska rather than in the country chosen in the contract.

As part of the common law doctrine of forum non conveniens, consideration is given to the laws applicable in the foreign jurisdiction and their impact on the parties to a lawsuit. A party will not be sent to a jurisdiction that does not have equal protection and due process. For example, in a divorce case between two Kenyan citizens, a judge denied a forum non conveniens motion to move the case to Kenya because the wife would have had diminished property rights under the laws of Kenya.

In conclusion, the general concern the Department has with HB 88 is whether the legislation is necessary considering the current ability of the courts to reform or modify contracts if enforcement of provisions of the contract would be contrary to public policy and the general premise that Alaska courts and enforcement entities apply only Alaska and federal law, not foreign law of a foreign country.

The Department is available to answer any question you have about these comments.

Sincerely,

JOHN J. BURNS
ATTORNEY GENERAL

MEMORANDUM March 15, 2011

SUBJECT: Limited application of foreign law
(Work Order No. 27-LS0333\M)

TO: Representative Carl Gatto
Attn: Karen Sawyer

FROM: Dennis C. Bailey DCB
Legislative Counsel
and Dan Wayne
Legislative Counsel

Since there is a hearing on your bill coming up on March 17 and drafting attorney Dennis Bailey has been out of the office because of illness for a few days, I've briefly addressed the three concerns raised in the March 10 e-mail from Karen Sawyer to this office.

1. The bill's potential for interfering with a choice of law provision in a contract seems direct and not inadvertent, as far as I am able to determine. Language on page 2 of the bill, lines 2 - 8, relates to agreements containing choice of law provisions. This language would void an agreement containing a choice of law provision if the provision has an effect that violates an individual's constitutionally protected individual rights unless the provision can be changed to eliminate its unconstitutional effect.

2. The bill uses the term "foreign law" instead of "law," and defines the term to mean "a law, rule, or legal code or system established and used or applied in a jurisdiction outside of the United States and the territories of the United States." I understand that the "foreign law" that is of concern to you is the law from outside of the U. S. If that is correct, no change is necessary.

3. HB 88 does not necessarily conflict with provisions of AS 25.30.400 - 25.30.590 that may require enforcement of foreign orders under the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction, a multinational treaty to which the United States is a signatory. The United States Congress implemented the Convention in the International Child Abduction Remedies Act, (ICARA), 42 U.S.C. 11601 et seq. The ICARA grants concurrent jurisdiction to state and federal courts. 42 U.S.C. 11603. It allows a court that has jurisdiction to exercise discretion that is potentially very broad. 42 U.S.C. 11604. This may reduce the risk of a conflict between the bill's provisions and federal law to some degree. 42 U.S.C. 11604, reads:

§ 11604. Provisional remedies

(a) Authority of courts. In furtherance of the objectives of article 7(b) and other provisions of the Convention, and subject to the provisions of subsection (b) of this section, any court exercising jurisdiction of an action brought under section 11603 (b) of this title may take or cause to be taken measures under Federal or State law, as appropriate, to protect the well-being of the child involved or to prevent the child's further removal or concealment before the final disposition of the petition.

(b) Limitation on authority. No court exercising jurisdiction of an action brought under section 11603 (b) of this title may, under subsection (a) of this section, order a child removed from a person having physical control of the child unless the applicable requirements of State law are satisfied.

Keep in mind that, as noted in the December 30, 2010 memo to your office, if the bill's provisions are adopted and are later found to be in conflict with federal law, including ICARA, the Supremacy Clause of the U. S. Constitution would cause the conflict to be resolved in favor of the federal law.

If I can be of further assistance, please advise.

Hello,

Attached are two e-mails from Doug Wolliver, Courts System legislative liaison, in response to my request for information about whether any of the Family Courts in Alaska have experienced cases where foreign law (example, Sharia Law) had been invoked. These two e-mails are his replies to date. I am requesting a legal opinion on the questions below.

Doug made these suggestions based on what the family court judges said:

- look into "choice of law" clauses in contracts. I don't believe that such a contract clause can be upheld if it violated our constitutions and your bill drafter has probably already considered this (they generally think of most everything).
    - MY REQUEST: double-check just to make sure the bill does not inadvertently interfere with choice of law clauses. which are routine.
- consider defining law "foreign law." In many contexts a foreign jurisdiction is any jurisdiction other than Alaska. So, for example, registering a domestic violence restraining order from Washington State is considered registering a foreign order.
    - MY REQUEST: HB 88, version M, already has a definition of foreign law. However, it limits the jurisdiction to the United States and its territories. Do we need to specifically mention "Alaska jurisdiction", or is it okay as is?
- AS 25.30.400-590 (a portion of the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act) provides for the enforcement of foreign orders under the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction. I don't know if HB 88 conflicts with that statute, but it is something you might consider investigating.
    - MY REQUEST: Does HB 88 conflict with statute above?

FYI: My request of the Department of Law regarding cases involving foreign law came back with the answer of 'the State has had no cases'.

We have a bill hearing on HB 88 next week, Thursday, March 17th, at 8AM in House State Affairs.

Thanks much.

Shaheed Allah, Plaintiff, v. Adella Jordan-Luster, et al., Defendants: Inmate demands Halal-slaughtered meat in prison

http://scholar.google.com/scholar_case?case=10507683704817451581

Shaheed Allah, an inmate incarcerated at Pontiac Correctional Center, alleged violations of the First Amendment and the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act ("RLUIPA") caused by the Defendants' failure to provide him with a Halal diet.

Allah requested to be provided with a Halal diet. Pontiac Correctional Center claimed it was already in compliance with this dietary requirement as pork and pork by-products are not served at Pontiac. The Plaintiff disagreed that the only dietary restriction for Muslims is the abstinence of pork and pork by-products. Plaintiff requested that the Defendants confer with Aqueel Khan, the Muslim Chaplain, to verify the validity of the Plaintiff's dietary request.

Although he was provided with bread, fruit and vegetables, he asserted that a Halal diet must consist of "meat that has been slaughtered in the manner prescribed by the Sharia."

> According to Plaintiff, the prescribed method for Halal meat includes keeping the animal "in a humane way prior to slaughter," then slaughtering the animal by "slitting of the throat" while reciting the Qur'an.

The court found that the Plaintiff has not met his initial hurdle of showing a substantial burden was placed upon his religious beliefs as he admittedly could consume vegetables and grains without violating his faith. Thus, the practice of the Plaintiff's faith was not hindered by the provision of a general prison diet rather than the Halal diet the Plaintiff sought.

Wafra Leasing Corporation, Plaintiff, v. Prime Capital Corporation, et al., Defendants.

United States District Court, N.D. Illinois, Eastern Division - August 30, 2004

Prime Capital was a specialty finance company that through its affiliates financed certain equipment leases. Wafra Leasing Corp. invested in Prime Capital securities. Wafra claimed it was the victim of securities fraud and improper auditing.

> The plaintiff corporation, Wafra, is a wholly owned subsidiary of the Wafra Fund. The sole owners of the Wafra Fund are the Kuwaiti National Security Administration, a branch of the Kuwaiti government, and Aref Investment Group, owned by the Kuwait Public Institution for Social Security and an Islamic bank. Wafra invested in the 1999-A Securitization on May 4, 1999. Wafra's investors sought to comply with Islamic law, or Sharia, which prohibits investors from collecting interest, but allows them to earn money from the ownership and operation of assets.

Of the multiple counts against Prime Capital individuals, several requests for summary judgments were approved.

Amin v. Bakhaty: Louisiana court refuses to enforce Egyptian child custody order

Supreme Court of Louisiana - October 16, 2001

http://scholar.google.com/scholar_case?case=4590415366527786188

In the 2001 custody case of Amin v. Bakhaty, 01-1967 (La.10/16/01), 798 So.2d 75, the defendant (father) Abdelrahman Bakhaty filed an affidavit when he petitioned for a civil warrant stating that by operation of Egyptian law both the temporary guardianship and physical custody of the child rested exclusively with him. Egypt follows Islamic family law, which structures some of the rights between family members based solely on gender. Under the Egyptian concept of "guardianship," the father has the absolute right to the guardianship and the physical custody of the minor child.

Louisiana Supreme Court refused to enforce an Egyptian custody order stating that:

> The only other forum that could possibly determine custody would be Egypt. However, the Egyptian Court is not compelled to consider the minor child's best interest. [The father] would have the absolute right to guardianship, as well as the right to physical custody. This Court believes that a parent's interest in a relationship with his or her child is a basic human right. The unique circumstances of this case required more consideration for the best interest of this child than for the extension of comity toward the Egyptian/Islamic legal system.

The court ruled that the child would stay in the custody of the mother, Magda Amin, in Louisiana.

Aleem vs. Aleem: Maryland's Highest Court Refuses to Recognize Pakistani Shariah Divorce

http://mdcourts.gov/opinions/coa/2008/108a07.pdf

Farah Aleem filed suit for a limited divorce from her husband, Irfan Aleem in the Circuit Court of Montgomery County, MD. In response her husband, a Pakistani resident of Maryland, tried to divorce her preemptively by entering the Pakistani Embassy in Washington, DC and performing talaq, the Shariah-approved way for a man to declare a divorce by simply stating "I divorce thee ..." three times.

The court reasoned that while foreign divorces are generally recognized unless they violate the state's public policy, the sex-discriminatory nature of Islamic divorce law does violate Maryland public policy when the parties are Maryland residents:

> The talaq divorce of countries applying Islamic law, unless substantially modified, is contrary to the public policy of this state and we decline to give talaq, as it is presented in this case, any comity. The Pakistani statutes providing that property owned by the parties to a marriage, follows title upon the dissolution of the marriage unless there are agreements otherwise, conflicts with the laws of this State where, in the absence of valid agreements otherwise or in the absence of waiver, marital property is subject to fair and equitable division. Thus the Pakistani statutes are wholly in conflict with the public policy of this State as expressed in our statutes and we shall afford no comity to those Pakistani statutes.

Hosain v. Malik: Maryland grants custody of child to father over mother in accordance with (Shariah-based) Pakistani law

http://scholar.google.com/scholar_case?case=13345154354945640474

In Hosain v. Malik, 108 Md.App. 284, 671 A.2d 988 (Md.1996), a Maryland Court granted comity and enforced a Pakistani custody order turning a child brought to the US by the mother (Joohi Q. Hosain) over to the father (Anwar Malik).

The Maryland Court held that: the burden was on the mother to prove the Pakistani court did not apply law in "substantial conformity with Maryland law" by a preponderance of the evidence; the case was "not about whether Pakistani religion, culture, or legal system is personally offensive to us or whether we share all of the same values, mores and customs, but rather whether the Pakistani courts applied a rule of law, evidence, or procedure so contradictory to Maryland public policy as to undermine the confidence in the trial"; the best interest of the child should not be "determined based on Maryland law, i.e., American cultures and mores," but rather "by applying relevant Pakistani customs, culture and mores";"a Pakistani court could only determine the best interest of a Pakistani child by an analysis utilizing the customs, culture, religion, and mores of ... Pakistan"; "in the Pakistani culture, the well being of the child and the child's proper development is thought to be facilitated by adherence to Islamic teachings";

The court recognized the "longstanding doctrine [of Hazanit1] of one of the world's oldest and largest religions practiced by hundreds of millions of people around the world and in this country, as applied as one factor in the best interest of the child test, is [not] repugnant to Maryland public policy."

The mother argued that Maryland law was violated because she may have been arrested for adultery if she returned to Pakistan for the custody proceedings and have been subject to "public whipping or death by stoning." The court found this was "not repugnant" to Maryland public policy because such punishments were "extremely unlikely."

Rhodes v. ITT Sheraton Corp: Rejection of Saudi Arabia as an Alternate Forum for Resolving a Dispute

http://volokh.com/2009/08/12/rejection-of-saudi-arabia-as-an-alternate-forum-for-resolving-a-dispute/

The Plaintiff Rhodes was a British citizen on summer break from her university when she visited her parents at their home in Jeddah, Saudi Arabia. On August 23, 1994, she and her sister met two of their friends at the Sheraton Jeddah Hotel and Villas. The resort complex encompassed a beach, a large concrete wharf, a wooden platform or jetty and a lagoon. Coral stretched out from under the jetty and around the edge of the lagoon. The Plaintiff struck her head on this coral when she dove into the lagoon from the jetty. She lay in the water, face down and unable to move, until she was pulled out and taken to a nearby hospital. The Plaintiff sustained a high level spinal injury and Plaintiff's expert estimated that her medical expenses resulting from the accident would exceed ten million dollars.

Under Massachusetts law a judge may dismiss or stay an action upon finding "that in the interest of substantial justice the action should be heard in another forum." The judge found that Saudi Arabia was not an adequate alternative forum because the Plaintiff would experience severely restricted rights under the Shariah-based Saudi legal code:

> The first significant drawback to trial of this case in Saudi Arabia is that plaintiff would not be permitted to testify...
> Prevailing in Saudi Arabia would be even more difficult for plaintiff in light of the requirement that, "[i]n financial matters, a party must produce two male witnesses or one male and two female witnesses in order to prove a point."...
> Saudi Arabia does not offer parties the opportunity to be heard by a jury...
> ... a Saudi forum would deprive plaintiff of basic procedures which she expects to enjoy in a Massachusetts forum.
> Finally, the existence of biases against women and non-Muslims in Saudi Arabia would impose additional disadvantages on plaintiff. Defendants' expert attributes the differential treatment based on gender and religion to "long-standing, well-known provisions in the law." Although defendants promise to ensure that any recovery by plaintiff in a Saudi court would not be diminished because of her gender and religion, their guarantee cannot insulate plaintiff entirely from the systemic prejudices...

Saida Banu Tarikonda v. Bade Saheb Pinjari: Lower court recognizes Shariah divorce law; appeals court overrules

http://www.michbar.org/opinions/appeals/2009/040709/42377.pdf

http://scholar.google.com/scholar_case?case=4294001533062003586

Plaintiff Tarikonda (wife) and defendant Pinjari (husband) are Muslim citizens of India who were married in Hyderabad, India in 2001. The couple resided in Michigan from February 2006 to January 2008, when they separated. Plaintiff remained in Michigan and defendant moved to New Jersey.

The triple talaq is a mechanism for divorce which exists in Sunni Islam. It simply consists of the husband saying the phrase I divorce you (Arabic:talaq) to the wife, three times.

In April 2008, the husband traveled to India and pronounced the following written triple talaq:

> Now this deed witnesses that I the said Bade Pinjari, do hereby divorce Saida Tarikonda, daughter of T. Babu Khan, by pronouncing upon her Divorce/Talaq three times irrevocably and by severing all connections of husband and wife with her forever and for good.
> 1. I Divorce thee Saida Tarikonda
> 2. I Divorce thee Saida Tarikonda
> 3. I Divorce thee Saida Tarikonda

In May 2008, the wife filed a complaint for divorce in Michigan. The husband filed a motion to dismiss the complaint pursuant because of the existing Indian divorce. To prove the divorce occurred, he offered a divorce certificate from a Wakf Board in Andhra Pradesh, India. The trial court granted his motion. It instructed the wife to register the Indian divorce in Michigan and file a separate complaint for custody and child support.

On appeal, the wife argues that the trial court erred when it recognized the Indian divorce, because the triple talaq is violative of due process and contrary to public policy. The court of appeals reversed the previous decision as void and against public policy since it violates due process and equal protection.

Nabil Taiseer Hassan and Sawsan Hassan v. Eric H. Holder, Jr.: Michigan case cites Shariah courts, documents and marriage certificates

http://scholar.google.com/scholar_case?case=17900651172709546887

The Petitioners were Nabil Hassan and his wife Sawsan Hassan, both Muslim and self-identified "Palestinians" born and raised in Jerusalem. Nabil Hassan was admitted to the United States in 1995 on an F-24 Immigrant Visa, which is reserved for unmarried children of lawful permanent residents. Hassan qualified for this visa because his mother was living in the United States and had LPR status. Sawsan Hassan entered the United States on the same day as Nabil and was admitted to the country on a Nonimmigrant Tourist Visa. On April 10, 1995, Nabil and Sawsan had a small wedding ceremony at a mosque in Michigan and signed documents to certify their marriage.

On December 29, 1999, Nabil filed an application for naturalization. Daniel Wells of the Immigration and Naturalization Service was assigned to investigate and adjudicate Nabil's application. On July 27, 2000, Officer Wells conducted an in-person interview of Nabil Hassan and became suspicious that Nabil and Sawsan had in fact married sometime before their 1995 entry in the United States. Nabil's naturalization application was denied. On May 23, 2002, the government served Nabil Hassan with a Notice to Appear, alleging that he had married Sawsan before entering the United States which would automatically revoke his visa.

Pursuant to Israeli law, the Shariah courts (and Shariah law) control personal status matters of Muslims residing in Jerusalem. Therefore the evidence in the case was based on Shariah marriage documents issued by Islamic legal authorities in Jerusalem and whether the couple had "completed" their Shariah marriage via sexual intercourse.

Nabil testified that on February 24, 1995, the families created a written engagement contract, and that a Sharia agent named Nasra helped the families create the document and then file it with the appropriate authorities. Nabil claimed that he and Sawsan did not finalize (i.e. consummate) their marriage in Jerusalem, however. Instead, they waited until April 10, 1995, when they had their ceremony in the mosque and celebration in Michigan.

The appeals court noted that the lower court was looking for "evidence that Petitioners had performed all the steps required for a marriage under Sharia law before they left for the United States." The lower court found that "the evidence on the record, when viewed as a whole, compels the contrary conclusion that the government did not offer clear and convincing evidence that Petitioners had completed the steps required for a Muslim marriage under Sharia law before entering the United States."

The appeals court both affirmed in part and reversed in part the ruling, but ordered that "removal proceedings against Petitioners" be quashed and that they may remain in the United States.

MINNESOTA

Mohamed D. ABD ALLA v. Mohamed MOURSSI: Minnesota man appeals to court regarding decision in Islamic arbitration hearing

http://scholar.google.com/scholar_case?case=8449493111914467247

In August 2001, Mourssi and respondent Mohamed D. Abd Alla entered into a partnership to manage and acquire restaurants. The partnership was subject to a partnership agreement. The partnership agreement included an arbitration clause, which provides:

> Any dispute, controversy or claim arising out of or in connection with or relating to this Agreement or any breach or alleged breach hereof shall, upon the request of any party involved, be submitted to and settled by arbitration before the Arbitration Court of an Islamic Mosque located in the State of Minnesota pursuant to the laws of Islam (or at any other place or under any other form of arbitration mutually acceptable to the parties so involved). Any award rendered shall be final and conclusive upon the parties and a judgment thereon may be entered in the highest court of the forum, state or Federal, having jurisdiction. The expenses of the arbitration shall be borne equally by the parties to the arbitration, provided that each party shall pay for and bear the costs of its own experts, evidence, and counsel.

At some point, the partnership acquired the Al-Bustan Restaurant. After purchasing the restaurant, numerous disputes arose between the partners. The parties agreed to arbitrate their difference before an Islamic arbitration committee. In September 2002, the committee issued its decision in favor of Abd Alla against Mourssi.

In April 2003, Abd Alla moved the district court to confirm the arbitration award. On May 14, 2003, Mourssi responded that the court should deny Abd Alla's motion and vacate the arbitration award "on the grounds that it was procured by corruption, fraud or other undue means and that the Committee exceeded its authority." During the hearing Abd Alla argued Mourssi had not timely contested the arbitration award and therefore could not now contest the award. Mourssi argued that under Islamic law there is no set time for appeal.

The district court confirmed the arbitration reward and appeals court affirmed their decision under Minn.Stat., ch. 572.

NEW JERSEY

S.D. v. M.J.R.: Man rapes wife and claims Shariah as a defense S.D. v. M.J.R.

Superior Court of New Jersey, Appellate Division - Decided July 23, 2010.

http://www.leagle.com/unsecure/page.htm?shortname=innico20100723325

Plaintiff S.D. (wife) and defendant M.J.R.(husband) are Muslim citizens of Morocco who were wed in an arranged marriage on July 31, 2008, when plaintiff was seventeen years old. On August 29, 2008, they came to New Jersey as the result of defendant's employment in this country as an accountant.

She describes a continual pattern of abuse culminating on January 22, 2009, when the defendant forced plaintiff to have sex with him while she cried. Plaintiff testified that defendant always told her, "This is according to our religion. You are my wife, I c[an] do anything to you. The woman, she should submit and do anything I ask her to do."

While recognizing that defendant had engaged in sexual relations with plaintiff against her expressed wishes in November 2008 and on the night of January 15 to 16, 2009, the judge did not find sexual assault or criminal sexual conduct to have been proven. He stated:

> This court does not feel that, under the circumstances, that this defendant had a criminal desire to or intent to sexually assault or to sexually contact the plaintiff when he did. The court believes that he was operating under his belief that it is, as the husband, his desire to have sex when and whether he wanted to, was something that was consistent with his practices and it was something that was not prohibited.

After acknowledging that this was a case in which religious custom clashed with the law, and that under the law, plaintiff had a right to refuse defendant's advances, the judge found that defendant did not act with a criminal intent when he repeatedly insisted upon intercourse, despite plaintiff's contrary wishes.

An appellate court reversed in 2010, writing: "Defendant's conduct in engaging in nonconsensual sexual intercourse was unquestionably knowing, regardless of his view that his religion permitted him to act as he did."

The appeals court ruled that the judge was wrong to excuse the Defendant's actions due to his religious beliefs. The appellate court remanded for entry of a restraining order.

Odatalla v Odatalla – Enforcement of Islamic Mahr Agreement

http://scholar.google.com/scholar_case?case=2649501230049632360

This case presented the issue of whether a civil court can enforce the terms of an Islamic Mahr Agreement, and arose in an action brought by the plaintiff for a divorce based upon grounds of extreme cruelty. The Defendant filed an answer and a countercomplaint for divorce also on grounds of extreme cruelty. The plaintiff sought enforcement of the Mahr Agreement contained in the Islamic marriage license.

The court used testimonial evidence from both plaintiff and defendant and an actual copy of the Islamic marriage license. The videotape of the entire ceremony showed the families sitting on separate couches in the living room negotiating the terms and conditions of the entire Islamic marriage license including those of the Mahr Agreement. After the negotiations, when a sum of money was determined for the Mahr Agreement, both families went to a table where the Imam began preparing the written Islamic marriage license including the Mahr Agreement. When the Islamic marriage license, including Mahr, was completed, the Imam presented it to each party for their signature. Each party read the entire license and Mahr Agreement and signed the same freely and voluntarily.

The Mahr Agreement, a section of the Islamic marriage license in the lower left portion of the license, read: "According to Islamic Law Dower is: Prompt One golden pound coin, Postponed Ten Thousand U.S. Dollars, Personal conditions___"

The defendant, Zuhair Odatalla, claimed the agreement was not a valid contract under New Jersey law. The court found that the Mahr Agreement is not void simply because it was entered into during an Islamic ceremony of marriage. Rather, enforcement of the secular parts of a written agreement is consistent with the constitutional mandate for a "free exercise" of religious beliefs. The court found that all of the essential elements of a contract were present and ruled that the defendant owed to the plaintiff the sum of $10,000.

Clearly, the Mahr Agreement in the case at bar is nothing more and nothing less than a simple contract between two consenting adults. It does not contravene any statute or interests of society. Rather, the Mahr Agreement continues a custom and tradition that is unique to a certain segment of our current society and is not at war with any public morals.

NEW YORK

Sofyan Ali SALEH, Petitioner,v. UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE: Yemeni jailed in US fights deportation on Shariah grounds

http://scholar.google.com/scholar_case?case=12533084801905965406

Saleh contended that because he was under a death sentence imposed by an Islamic court in Yemen for a homicide which he committed in the United States that had already resulted in his imprisonment here, he had established a "well-founded fear of persecution on account of race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion" within the meaning of 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(42) (1988), and thus qualified for asylum and withholding of deportation.

Saleh, a Yemeni citizen, became a permanent resident alien through marriage to a U.S. citizen in 1982. On February 4, 1983, while living in New York City, he shot and killed Abdulla Elhosheshi, another Yemeni national. Saleh pled guilty to first degree manslaughter and commenced serving a sentence of 8 1/3 to 25 years. Based on the same occurrence, Saleh was also tried and convicted in absentia in Yemen and sentenced to death by a "Sharia" (Islamic) court. Jurisdiction existed because Saleh and the victim were both Yemeni Muslems.

He submitted a memorandum of law arguing that his Yemeni conviction entitled him to asylum. He argued that he was being persecuted on account of his religion — because he would be punished in Yemen under the "fanatical interpretation of age old [religious] laws and customs," and that he was being persecuted because of his membership in a particular social group — Yemeni Moslems residing outside of Yemen, "upon whom the Islamic authorities in Yemen are attempting to exert their power and control."

Also, under Islamic law, the victim's family could waive the death sentence by electing to receive "blood money" from Saleh in lieu of his execution. In this case, the amount of "blood money" could range from $186,000 to $360,000. Saleh contended that he was being persecuted on account of his membership in the "particular social group" of poor Yemenis who could not afford to pay "blood money" to buy their way out of a death sentence.

On June 5, 1990, the IJ rendered a decision that denied Saleh's applications and ordered his deportation. The IJ concluded that Saleh's conviction in Yemen did not constitute statutory "persecution" because Saleh had simply been "`prosecut[ed] for a common law offense.'"

http://volokh.com/archives/archive_2008_07_13-2008_07_19.shtml#1216332053

Mohammed Zawahiri and Raghad Z. Alwattar were married, in an arranged marriage. The day of the wedding, Zawahiri signed a "mahr" under which he promised to pay his wife $25,000 in the event of divorce.

This case is similar to the Odatalla v Odatalla mahr agreement case in New Jersey above.

HOSSEIN AGHILI VS. HAMIDEH SABA SAADATNEJADI: Legitimates Polygamy and "expertise" in Islamic Studies

COURT OF APPEALS OF TENNESSEE June 11, 1997

http://www.tsc.state.tn.us/opinions/TCA/PDF/972/aghilih.pdf

This appellate decision dealt with the validity of an Islamic marriage under U.S. law, and the decision acknowledges that Islamic law supports polygamy with up to four wives:

> This appeal involves the validity of an Islamic marriage. Shortly after the marriage, the husband filed suit in the Circuit Court for Davidson County seeking a divorce or, in the alternative, an annulment. After the wife counterclaimed for a divorce, the husband moved for a summary judgment on his annulment claim. The trial court granted the summary judgment, finding that the undisputed evidence demonstrated that the officiant was not qualified to perform the marriage under Islamic law and that the officiant had failed to file the marriage license within the legally prescribed time. The wife takes issue on this appeal with the trial court's conclusion that the marriage was void ab initio. We have determined that the trial court erred and, therefore, reverse the summary judgment.

AMIR AHMED V. AFREEN S. AHMED: Texas Divorce Case; $50,000 Mahr agreement disputed

http://scholar.google.com/scholar_case?case=13628678145937799273

MAJORITY OPINION

LESLIE B. YATES, Justice.

In this divorce case, appellant Amir Ahmed appeals from the trial court's order awarding his ex-wife, appellee Afreen S. Ahmed, $50,000 pursuant to an Islamic marriage certificate signed by the parties. We affirm in part and reverse and remand in part.

Amir and Afreen married in a civil ceremony in November 1999. Both are of Indian descent, and both practice the Islamic faith. The marriage was arranged 193*193 between the parties' families. They did not live together until about six months later after their Islamic marriage ceremony in New York on May 21, 2000. As part of this ceremony, the parties signed an Islamic marriage certificate called a "Nikah Nama," which mentions a deferred "Mahr" of $50,000. According to Afreen's trial testimony, a Mahr is an Islamic religious custom whereby the husband contracts to give the wife a sum of money, either at the time of the marriage or deferred in the event of a divorce. On appeal, Amir argues that the trial court erred in enforcing the Mahr because (1) it is not a valid premarital agreement under the Family Code, (2) its terms are too vague and uncertain to be enforced, (3) the evidence is legally and factually insufficient to support the $50,000 award, (4) it is a religious agreement and enforcing it violates the Establishment Clause of the United States Constitution, (5) it encourages divorce, which is against public policy, and (6) according to Islamic law, enforcing a Mahr is inconsistent with an additional division of marital property.

The Court erred when it granted a money judgment in favor of [Afreen] in the amount of $50,000 for a [Mahr] agreement between the parties. Even though the court did not make an express finding, the court erred when it implicitly found that the religious based [Mahr] agreement constitutes an enforceable contract under the laws of Texas and [the] United States. The finding is not supported by evidence, or in the alternative, there is insufficient evidence to support the finding.

Saadallah JABRI and Aida Jabri, Appellants, v. Jamal QADDURA, Appellee: Texas Islamic arbitration court taken into account in divorce case

Court of Appeals of Texas - May 8, 2003

Rola Qaddura and Jamal Qaddura were married on September 3, 1993. Previously, on August 28, 1993, they had signed an "Islamic Society of Arlington Islamic Marriage Certificate" which reflects that the 407*407 "dowry for the bride" was: "One-half of the value of the house located at 2206 Gladstone. This is in addition to $40,000 Fourty [sic] Thousand U.S. Dollars the payment of which is deferred."

On October 19, 1999, Rola filed for divorce. She sought sole managing conservatorship of the parties' two children, child support, division of the parties' estate, and enforcement of the terms of the Islamic Marriage Certificate. Rola subsequently sued Jamal's brother, Osama Qaddura, as a third-party defendant, alleging he was engaged in a conspiracy with Jamal whereby Jamal was wrongfully transferring community assets to Osama, including a house on Vesta Via Court.

Jamal filed a counterclaim seeking sole managing conservatorship and child support. He sought a declaration that the Islamic Marriage Certificate was unenforceable because it was induced by Rola by fraud. He also alleged a separate cause of action against Rola for "defamation and false light," in which he sought $250,000 actual damages and $1,000,000 exemplary damages.

Osama filed a counterclaim seeking a declaratory judgment that he is the sole owner of the house on Vesta Via Court (with no right of reimbursement by Rola or Jamal) and of a specific bank account.

On January 18, 2002, Jamal filed a separate suit seeking a protective order against Rola's parents (the children's grandparents), Saadallah Jabri and Aida Jabri, alleging the children had been injured while in their care.

On September 25, 2002, all five parties signed an "Arbitration Agreement" to submit all claims to the TEXAS ISLAMIC COURT, 888 S. Greenville Ave., Suite 188, Richardson, Texas.

Accomodations

- Deference to Islamist sensibilities in education. A St. Cloud State student, who was disabled and assisted by a dog, was simply granted credit for a required course when the dog was found to be offensive to the majority of Muslim students at the school location where he was assigned to gain his teaching credit. http://www.wnd.com/?pageId=64151
- A public school with Islamist principles. The Tarek ibn Ziyad Academy in Minneapolis is a public, magnet school, funded with taxpayer money, that was discovered to mandate prayer on the premises and impose other sharia mandates on its students, such as full coverage uniforms for female students. There is a mosque on campus and a Muslim studies course taught in addition to the regular curriculum, which is essentially mandatory due to the fact that school buses do not leave the campus until the extra course ends each day. http://www.startribune.com/local/17406054.html
- State governments going outside their duty to accommodate sharia. In Minnesota, the state actively works to sponsor Murabaha financed mortgages, acting as intermediaries when they buy homes from realtors and re-sell them to Muslims at their total, with mortgage interest included, price. It is not within a state's duty to actively participate in the real estate market. http://wcco.com/local/islamic.mortgages.minnesota.2.952805.html
- US medical organization adopts accommodationist stance on FGM. On April 26, the American Association of Pediatrics revised its 1998 policy on FGM. They replaced "mutilation" with "cutting" and advocated a "compromise" position of "clitoral nicking" be practiced in the United States. Under intense scrutiny from anti-FGM advocates, AAP reversed itself a month later. The WHO has fervently and repeatedly condemned the practice on ethical and medical grounds. http://www.who.int/reproductivehealth/publications/fgm/en/index.html
- Sharia activism in the political system. In certain parts of Minnesota, politicians directly engage their constituency on a platform advocating Somali Muslim rights and sensibilities. Particularly, Representative Keith Ellison has come to be their national campaigner. It is clear that as a Muslim community with Islamist interests they are attempting to make a voice for themselves within the American legal system. Ellison's strong ties to radical groups is enough to cause great alarm. http://www.weeklystandard.com/Content/Public/Articles/000/000/012/764obcsx.asp?page=2
- Sharia rules for Minneapolis cabbies. In October of 2006, the issue of sharia incorporation was brought to national attention when Minneapolis-St. Paul airport taxi cab drivers were refusing services to any potential riders who were carrying alcohol. They made an attempt to make a legal right of their refusal of service, going so far as to work with the Metropolitan Airports Commission to make sure that drivers were in no way penalized for this refusal. Thus read the instructions for seventh graders in Islam: A Simulation of Islamic History and Culture, 610-1100, a three-week curriculum produced by Interaction Publishers, Inc. In classrooms across the United States, students who follow its directions find themselves fighting mock battles of jihad against "Christian crusaders" and other assorted "infidels." Upon gaining victory, our mock-Muslim warriors "Praise Allah." A lawsuit to stop the program's use in California schools failed in 2003.

- Proselytizing with taxpayer funds. In 2002, PBS aired a documentary entitled "Muhammad: Legacy of a Prophet" funded in large part by the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, a private, nonprofit corporation created by Congress that in fiscal 2002 received $350 million in taxpayers' funds. The film treated religious beliefs, such as Muhammad's trip to Heaven, as historical fact, painted Muslim wars as exclusively defensive, and praised Muhammad's treatment of women while ignoring the conditions of women in the Muslim world.

- Muslim-only swim time. A Seattle pool sets aside time for Muslim women to use the pool by themselves so they could adhere to strict religious restrictions, which require women to be completely covered. The outfit that organizes and pays for the Muslim Sister Swim program is the North Seattle Family Center, a unit of the Children's Home Society, a non-profit that gets most of its money from various government sources. Though taking identical courses, the students met in gender-specific classes. According to the New York Times, "But as a legal and political matter, that solution has not been quite so simple. When word of the plan got out this spring, it created instant controversy, with bloggers going on about the Islamification of the university, students divided on the use of their building-maintenance fees, and tricky legal questions about whether the plan was a legitimate accommodation of students' right to practice their religion or unconstitutional government." http://www.nytimes.com/2007/08/07/world/americas/07iht-muslims.4.7022566.html

- A community for sharia-practicioners only. Little Rock, Arkansas's Local Planning Commission has granted the right to zone land for an Islamic community, which will feature a mosque, school, and public calls to prayer. Most importantly, however, the community will ban all alcohol, which is in direct contrast to American law, making this a specifically sharia-abiding community. Although the community is proclaimed as "open to everybody," there is no doubt that it will attract mainly Muslims.

AMERICAN LAWS FOR AMERICAN COURTS (ALAC)

FAQ, ISSUES AND OBJECTIONS

1. This bill is not needed because it states what is already reality in state courts

First, this is not true. Most states merely state that foreign laws and judgments that violate the state's "public policy" shall not be recognized. But the courts consistently rule that the state legislature has the responsibility to articulate clearly what the state's public policy actually is. For the state to make clear that comity, choice of law, and choice of venue issues must still safeguard fundamental state and federal constitutional rights is precisely the role of the state legislature.

Second, there are actually hundreds of cases on the books in which foreign laws and foreign legal doctrines were invoked by parties to a dispute. In many cases those foreign laws and foreign legal doctrines are anathema to our constitutional ideals.

2. This bill is not needed because shariah is not a threat in the US and is not in our court systems.

The Act is not simply about shariah but also transnationalism—or the documented creep of foreign and offensive laws being recognized by state and federal courts. More, shariah has already creeped into the legal systems of Western Europe, including 85 shariah courts operating openly with the full authority of law in the United Kingdom. There are numerous cases in which shariah doctrines have been invoked in the US. Here is a sampling of 17 examples from 11 states:

http://publicpolicyalliance.org/wp-content/uploads/2010/11/Shariah_Cases_11states_11-08-2010.pdf

3. This bill interferes with foreign treaties.

By operation of law this cannot be. Treaties, when signed by the President of the United States and ratified by the United States Senate, are the law of the United States, and not foreign law. Thus, the Act, or a specific application of the Act, could not by operation of the Supremacy Clause affect in any way a treaty.

Some uninformed critics of the Act assume, without citation, that certain ratified treaties require the enforcement of foreign judgments or the application of foreign law in contradiction with the Act. Although some treaties address the treatment of foreign arbitral awards or child custody judgments, all of these treaties have an exemption when the foreign tribunal enforces a law that violates the fundamental public policy of the domestic state. This is also the common law and state statutory rule for recognizing foreign judgments of any kind not affected by federal treaty or federal preemptive statutes.

The Act articulates what the boundaries are for the state's important public policy—to protect fundamental state and federal constitutional liberties.

Further, state courts consistently hold that it is up to the state legislature to set the state public policy in the first instance.

4. This bill restricts the right to contract.

The right to contract is not unlimited. The state may legitimately restrict the right to contract if the contract is found to have some deleterious effect on the public or to contravene some other matter of public policy. As the Supreme Court has noted, a state's police power to protect the health and safety of its citizenry in the area of contract law not touching upon a suspect class is subject to a rational basis scrutiny—does the state law have any rational basis.

Innumerable regulations exist governing contractual provisions, including choice of law and forum selection clauses. For an impairment of a contract to violate the constitutional right to contract the state regulation must constitute a substantial impairment, and no significant and legitimate public purpose may justify the regulation. The requirement of a legitimate public purpose is primarily designed to prevent a state from embarking on a policy motivated by a simple desire to escape its financial obligations or to injure others through the repudiation of debts or the destruction of contracts or the denial of the means to enforce them.

It is patently clear that the Act—which merely sets fundamental state and federal constitutional liberties as protectable interests—is constitutional.

Indeed, all of the state courts and the federal courts have allowed such impairments of contract when the provisions violate the public policy announced in statutes.

Moreover, American Laws for American Courts only restricts the right to contract in terms of enforcement. Theoretically, people can contract for whatever they want to, on whatever terms. Obviously the only time the state gets involved with regard to policy is when there is a dispute and the parties go to the courts to resolve and enforce. In this case it is properly the role of the state to protect constitutional liberties.

5. This bill impacts "comity" and violates the Full Faith & Credit Clause of the US Constitution

The Full Faith & Credit Clause only applies to sister states. Moreover, even sister states may deny comity if the sister state's foreign judgment violates the domestic state's public policy. In the context of the Act, however, only foreign country judgments are at issue. All state courts have ruled, as has the U.S. Supreme Court, that foreign judgments from aboard are subject to the public policy of the state granting comity.

Even in the case of granting domestic arbitral awards comity or recognition in state courts, the Federal Arbitration Act permits states to preclude granting comity or recognition if the arbitral award was based on a decision process or law that was contrary to public policy.

6. This bill interferes with business activity and commerce and thus would adversely impact economic development in the state.

Protecting the fundamental constitutional rights of the citizens of a state does not adversely impact commerce or business. In fact, quite the contrary. Our free enterprise system was built upon the fundamental liberties in our constitutions and thus preserving them protects free enterprise.

Specifically, state courts have consistently refused to allow parties to enter into agreements that violate public policy. Moreover, a party to a contract does not typically knowingly waive his/her/its fundamental constitutional liberties. The question the courts consistently ask is whether the contract waiver was entered into knowingly and at arm's length. Courts consistently reject waivers of a parties statutory or inherent rights when the parties are not equally sophisticated and where there is evidence that the contract was an adhesion contract more or less forced upon the waiving party.

If these protections are applied to statutory or inherent rights, a fortiori they apply to is a purported waiver of a fundamental constitutional liberty.

Thus, in the case of two businesses entering into a contract and one business waiving its constitutional protections, at the very least any amendment to the Act should limit such waivers only to cases where all of the parties to the contract are businesses and the waiving party has expressly waived its fundamental constitutional liberties protected by the Act.

Nevertheless, because so many of the cases involving foreign laws that violate constitutional rights infiltrating our state legal systems involve family law, particularly the rights of women and children, appropriate language can be included to exempt businesses and corporations without destroying the intent of American Laws for American Courts.

7. The business exemption language used in some states violates the equal protection clause of the constitution.

The Act would not likely be struck as violative of "equal protection" simply because it exempts contracts involving corporations. There is no "protected class", such as race, religion, sex or even age, affected by distinguishing individuals from corporations, that would require "strict scrutiny" by the judiciary. All the legislature requires is a "rational basis" for the distinction, the lowest level of judicial scrutiny. As constitutional rights affecting individuals rationally receive greater concern than rights of businesses, and businesses tend to be more sophisticated in entering contracts, the legislature has a rational basis for making the distinction and allowing businesses to contractually waive rights when submitting to foreign law, but individuals to not.

8. Provisions of this bill would violate the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act (UCCJEA).

The UCCJEA only applies to foreign child custody judgments for those foreign countries not "contracting parties" to the Hague Child Abduction Convention. The UCCJEA specifically exempts states from granting comity or enforcing a foreign child custody judgment or foreign jurisdiction when doing so violates "fundamental principles of human rights." It is hard to imagine how fundamental state and federal constitutional liberties are not fundamental human rights in the context of state law.

And, even among the contracting parties to the Hague Child Abduction Convention, the treaty exempts cases where the foreign jurisdiction or judgment would violate the public policy of the domestic jurisdiction.

9. This bill could violate the federal Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act (PKPA)

The PKPA does not apply to foreign jurisdictions. It applies within the US between the states.

10. This bill would violate international treaties dealing with child custody, namely the Hague Convention.

As noted above, the Hague Convention itself provides a public policy exemption. Beyond this, as a treaty entered into by the federal government, the Hague Convention is federal law and cannot be trumped by state law. There is no way for ALAC to do so. Moreover, it is important to note that the only country that employs shariah in its legal system that is a member of the Hague Convention is Morocco. The following countries are some that are not parties to the Hague Convention, thus it does not apply to US relations with them:

- Egypt
- Iran
- Pakistan
- Saudi Arabia
- Syria
- Jordan
- Libya
- Sudan
- Somalia
- Algeria
- Lebanon
- Indonesia
- Afghanistan
- Iraq
- India
- Bangladesh
- Nigeria
- Kuwait
- Bahrain
- Qatar
- Tunisia
- Yemen
- United Arab Emirates
- Oman

11. This bill would interfere with English Common Law

To the extent that English Common Law forms the foundation of our legal traditions, it is not a foreign law. Moreover, all states have by statute or by "common law" adopted the common law as adopted by the courts in that state to be part of state law and thus not foreign.

Moreover, this bill does not ban all foreign or international law, just the use of such law when it would violate the constitutional rights of someone in the state AND specifically applied in the particular case. The fact that a country like Germany or China might have some law that violates our constitutional liberties is wholly irrelevant. It only becomes relevant if the particular offensive law is the law at issue in the particular case being litigated in the domestic state court.

12. This bill would open up states that pass it to expensive law suits

This legislation already passed in two states in 2010 with no legal challenges. There is no basis on which to challenge a law which seeks to safeguard individual constitutional rights as its express purpose. Indeed, it is absurd to even suggest such a proposition. A state might be sued if it does NOT protect fundamental state and federal constitutional liberties.

13. This bill would interfere with Native American tribal law

Federal law, in the form of treaties with Native Americans, preempts state law. Thus, ALAC would not because it could not as a matter of law affect those federal laws. If absolutely necessary, language can be inserted in ALAC expressly confirming this.

14. This bill would interfere with Jewish law

This bill would not interfere with Jewish law because Jewish law has a provision inherent which instructs people of the Jewish faith to follow the law of the land in which they live. Moreover, ALAC only applies when the use of a foreign legal doctrine in a court would violate someone's constitutional rights. This is not the case with Jewish law.

15. ALAC unfairly targets Muslims

Nothing in the ALAC bill prevents any person from freely exercising his or her right to freedom of religion and worship. ALAC only applies to legal doctrines in our court systems. Furthermore, ALAC is facially neutral. It does not discriminate in any way based on faith of any kind. The bill makes no mention of Islam or Muslims and is not even principally focused on religious law, but any foreign law that violates constitutionally protected liberties.

Civil law

Main article: Civil law (legal system)

Civil law is the most widespread system of law around the world. It is also sometimes known as Continental European law. The central source of law that is recognized as authoritative are codifications in a constitution or statute passed by legislature, to amend a code.

While the concept of codification dates back to the Code of Hammurabi in Babylon ca. 1790 BC, civil law systems mainly derive from the Roman Empire, and more particularly, the Corpus Juris Civilis issued by the Emperor Justinian ca. AD 529. This was an extensive reform of the law in the Byzantine Empire, bringing it together into codified documents. Civil law was also partly influenced by religious laws such as Canon law and Islamic law.[1][2] Civil law today, in theory, is interpreted rather than developed or made by judges. Only legislative enactments (rather than judicial precedents, as in common law) are considered legally binding.

Shamash (the Babylonian sun god) hands King Hammurabi a code of law

Scholars of comparative law and economists promoting the legal origins theory usually subdivide civil law into four distinct groups:

- French civil law: in France, the Benelux countries, Italy, Romania, Spain and former colonies of those countries;
- German civil law: in Germany, Austria, Switzerland, former Yugoslav republics, Greece, Portugal, Turkey, Japan, South Korea and the Republic of China;
- Scandinavian civil law: in Denmark, Norway and Sweden. As historically integrated in the Scandinavian cultural sphere, Finland and Iceland also inherited the system.
- Chinese law: a mixture of civil law and socialist law in use in the People's Republic of China.

A comprehensive list of countries that base their legal system on a codified civil law follows:

Country	Description
Albania	The Civil Code of the Republic of Albania, 1991 [1] (http://unpan1.un.org/intradoc/groups/public/documents/UNTC/UNPAN014893.pdf)
Angola	Based on Portuguese civil law
Argentina	The Spanish legal tradition had a great influence on the Civil Code of Argentina, basically a work of the Argentine jurist Dalmacio Vélez Sársfield, who dedicated five years of his life on this task. The Civil Code came into effect on January 1, 1871. Beyond the influence of the Spanish legal tradition, the Argentinian Civil Code was also inspired by the Draft of the Brazilian Civil Code, the Draft of the Spanish Civil Code of 1851, the Napoleonic code and the Chilean Civil Code. The sources of this Civil Code also include various theoretical legal works, mainly of the great French jurists of the 19th century. It was the first Civil Law that consciously adopted as its cornerstone the distinction between i. rights from obligations and ii. real property rights, thus distancing itself from the French model. The Argentinian Civil Code was also in effect in Paraguay, as per a Paraguayan law of 1880, until the new Civil Code went in force in 1987. During the second half of the 20th century, the German legal theory became increasingly influential in Argentina.
Andorra	Courts apply the customary laws of Andorra, supplemented with Roman law and customary Catalan law.[3]

Azerbaijan
Belarus
Belgium	The Napoleonic Code is still in use, although it is heavily modified (especially concerning family law)
Benin
Bolivia	Influenced by the Napoleonic Code
Bosnia and Herzegovina	Influenced by Austrian law. The Swiss civil law (Zivilgesetzbuch) was a model for the Law on Obligations of 1978.
Brazil	Derived from the German and Roman civil law
Bulgaria	Civil Law system influenced by Germanic and Roman law systems

Republic of the Congo
Democratic Republic of the Congo
Cote d'Ivoire

Cape Verde	Based on Portuguese civil law
Central African Republic
Chile	The Spanish legal tradition exercised an especially great influence on the civil code of Chile. On its turn, the Chilean civil code influenced to a large degree the drafting of the civil codes of other Latin-American states. For instance, the codes of Ecuador (1861) and Colombia (1873) constituted faithful reproductions of the Chilean code, but for very few exceptions. The compiler of the Civil Code of Chile, Venezuelan Andrés Bello, worked for its completion for almost 30 years, using elements, of the Spanish law on the one hand, and of other Western laws, especially of the French one, on the other. Indeed, it is noted that he consulted and used all of the codes that had been issued till then, starting from the era of Justinian. The Civil Code came into effect on January 1, 1857. Its technique is regarded as perfect; it is distinguished for the clarity, logic and cohesiveness of its provisions. As mentioned by Arminjon, Nolde, and Wolff ('Traite de droit comparé', Paris, 1950–1952) Andrés Bello may be regarded as one of the great legislators of mankind. The influence of the Napoleonic code is great; it is observed however that e.g. in many provisions of property law, the solutions of the French code civil were put aside in favor of pure Roman law.
Colombia	Civil code introduced in 1873. Nearly faithful reproduction of the Chilean civil code
Costa Rica	First Civil Code (a part of the General Code or Carrillo Code) came into effect in 1841; its text was inspired by the South Peruvian Civil Code of Marshal Andres de Santa Cruz. The present Civil Code is into effect since January 1, 1888, and reveals the influenced by the Napoleonic Code and the Spanish Civil Code of 1889 (from its 1851 draft version).
Croatia	Influenced by Austrian and Hungarian law. The Law on Obligations of 2005.

Cuba	Influenced by Spanish and American law with large elements of Communist legal theory.
Czech Republic	Descended from the Civil Code of the Austrian Empire (1811), influenced by German (1939-45) and Soviet (1947/68-89) legal codes during occupation periods, substantially reformed to remove Soviet influence and elements of socialist law after the Velvet Revolution (1989).
Denmark	Scandinavian-German civil law
Dominican Republic	Based by the Napoleonic Code
Ecuador	Civil code introduced in 1861. Nearly faithful reproduction of the Chilean civil code
El Salvador
Estonia
Finland	civil law system based on Swedish law[4]
France	Based on the Napoleonic code (code civil of 1804)
Equatorial Guinea
Ethiopia
Gabon
Guinea	based on French civil law system, customary law, and decree[4]
Guinea-Bissau
Georgia
Germany	The Bürgerliches Gesetzbuch of 1900 ("BGB"). The BGB is influenced both by Roman and German law traditions.
Greece	The Greek civil code of 1946, highly influenced by the German civil code of 1900 (Bürgerliches Gesetzbuch); the Greek civil code replaced the Byzantine-Roman civil law in effect in Greece since its independence (Νομική Διάταξη της Ανατολικής Χέρσου Ελλάδος, Legal Provision of Eastern Mainland Greece, November 1821: 'Οι Κοινωνικοί Νόμοι των Αειμνήστων Χριστιανών Αυτοκρατόρων της Ελλάδος μόνοι ισχύουσι κατά το παρόν εις την Ανατολικήν Χέρσον Ελλάδα', 'The Social [i.e. Civil] Laws of the Dear Departed Christian Emperors of Greece [referring to the Byzantine Emperors] alone are in effect at present in Eastern Mainland Greece')

Guatemala	Guatemala has had three Civil Codes: the first one from 1877, a new one introduced in 1933, and the one currently in force, which was passed in 1963. This Civil Code has suffered some reforms throughout the years, as well as a few derogations relating to areas which have subsequently been regulated by newer laws, such as the Code of Commerce and the Law of the National Registry of Persons. In general, it follows the tradition of the roman-French system of civil codification. Regarding the theory of 'sources of law' in the Guatemalan legal system, the 'Ley del Organismo Judicial' recognizes 'the law' as the main legal source (in the sense of legislative texts), although it also establishes 'jurisprudence' as a complementary source. Although jurisprudence technically refers to judicial decisions in general, in practice it tends to be confused and identified with the concept of 'legal doctrine', which is a qualified series of identical resolutions in similar cases pronounced by higher courts (the Constitutional Court acting as a 'Tribunal de Amparo', and the Supreme Court acting as a 'Tribunal de Casación') whose theses become binding for lower courts.
Haiti	Influenced by the Napoleonic Code
Honduras
Hungary	Based on codified Roman law, with elements of the Napoleonic civil code
Iceland	Based on Germanic traditional laws and influenced by Medieval Norwegian and Danish laws.
Italy	Based on codified Roman law, with elements of the Napoleonic civil code; civil code of 1942 replaced the original one of 1865
Japan	Modeled after European (primarily German) civil law system. Japanese civil code of 1895.
Latvia	Largely influenced by Germany, medium influences from Russian and Soviet law.
Lebanon	Modeled after French civil law
Lithuania	Modeled after Dutch civil law
Luxembourg	Influenced by the Napoleonic Code
Macau	Based on the Portuguese strand of the continental tradition, itself much influenced by Germany; also influenced by the law of the PRC

Mongolia	Civil Code of 2002 based on German BGB
Montenegro	First: the General Property Code for the Principality of Montenegro of 1888, written by Valtazar Bogišić. Present: the Law on Obligations of 2008.
Netherlands	Influenced by the Napoleonic Code
Norway	Scandinavian-German civil law. King Magnus VI the Lawmender unified the regional laws into a single code of law for the whole kingdom in 1274. This was replaced by Christian V's Norwegian Code of 1687.

Portugal	Influenced by the Napoleonic Code and later by the German Civil Law
Republic of China (Taiwan)	Codification derived from German BGB.
Romania	Based on the Napoleonic Code
Russia	Civil Law system descendant from Roman Law through Byzantine tradition. Heavily influenced by German and Dutch norms in 1700-1800's. Socialist-style modification in 1900's, and Continental European Law influences since 1990's.
São Tomé e Príncipe	Based on Portuguese civil law
Serbia	First: the Civil Code of Principality of Serbia of 1844, written by Jovan Hadžić, was influenced by the Austrian Civil Code (Allgemeines bürgerliches Gesetzbuch). Present: The Swiss civil law (Zivilgesetzbuch) was a model for the Law on Obligations of 1978.

Slovakia	Descended from the Civil Code of the Austrian Empire (1811), influenced by German (1939-45) and Soviet (1947/68-89) legal codes during occupation periods, substantially reformed to remove Soviet influence and elements of socialist law after the Velvet Revolution (1989).
Slovenia	A Civil Law system influenced mostly by Germanic and Austro-Hungarian law systems
Spain	Influenced by the Napoleonic Code, it also has some elements of Spain's legal tradition, starting with the Siete Partidas, a major legislative achievement from the Middle Ages. That body of law remained more or less unchanged until the 19th century, when the first civil codes were drafted, merging both the Napoleonic style with the Castilian traditions.
Sweden	Scandinavian-German civil law. Like all Scandinavian legal systems, it is distinguished by its traditional character and for the fact that it did not adopt elements of Roman law. It is indeed worth mentioning that it assimilated very few elements of foreign laws whatsoever. It is also interesting that the Napoleonic Code had no influence in codification of law in Scandinavia. The historical basis of the law of Sweden, just as for all Nordic countries, is Old German law. Codification of the law started in Sweden during the 18th century, preceding the codifications of most other European countries. However, neither Sweden, nor any other Nordic state created a civil code of the kind of the Code Civil or the BGB.
Switzerland	The Swiss civil code of 1908 and 1912 (obligations; fifth book)
Turkey	Modeled after the Swiss civil law (Zivilgesetzbuch) of 1907; this has been a conscious choice of Kemal Atatürk, the founder of the modern Turkish state, in order to abolish the Islamic law (Sharia), aiming at westernizing the country
Ukraine	Civil Code of Ukraine of 2004
Uruguay
Uzbekistan	Represents an evolution of Soviet civil law. Overwhelmingly strong impact of the Communist legal theory is traceable.
Vietnam	Communist legal theory and French civil law

Common law

Main article: Common law

Common law and equity are systems of law whose sources are the decisions in cases by judges. Alongside, every system will have a legislature that passes new laws and statutes. The relationships between statutes and judicial decisions can be complex. In some jurisdictions such statutes may overrule judicial decisions or codify the topic covered by several contradictory or ambiguous decisions. In some jurisdictions judicial decisions may decide whether the jurisdiction's constitution allowed a particular statute or statutory provision to be made or what meaning is contained within the statutory provisions. Statutes were allowed to be made by the government. Common law developed in England, influenced by the Norman conquest of England which introduced legal concepts from Norman law, which in turn was influenced by aspects of Islamic law.[2] Common law was later inherited by the Commonwealth of Nations, and almost every former colony of the British Empire has adopted it (Malta being an exception). The doctrine of stare decisis or precedent by courts is the major difference to codified civil law systems.

King John of England signs Magna Carta

Common law is currently in practice in Ireland, most of the United Kingdom (England and Wales and Northern Ireland), Australia, India (excluding Goa), Pakistan, South Africa, Canada (excluding Quebec), Hong Kong, the United States (excluding Louisiana) and many other places. In addition to these countries, several others have adapted the common law system into a mixed system. For example, Nigeria operates largely on a common law system, but incorporates religious law.

In the European Union the Court of Justice takes an approach mixing civil law (based on the treaties) with an attachment to the importance of case law. One of the most fundamental documents to shape common law is Magna Carta[5] which placed limits on the power of the English Kings. It served as a kind of medieval bill of rights for the aristocracy and the judiciary who developed the law.

Religious law

Main article: Religious law

Religious law refers to the notion of a religious system or document being used as a legal source, though the methodology used varies. For example, the use of Jewish Halakha for public law has a static and unalterable quality, precluding amendment through legislative acts of government or development through judicial precedent; Christian Canon law is more similar to civil law in its use of civil codes; and Islamic Sharia law (and Fiqh jurisprudence) is based on legal precedent and reasoning by analogy (Qiyas), and is thus considered similar to common law.[7]

The main kinds of religious law are Sharia in Islam, Halakha in Judaism, and canon law in some Christian groups. In some cases these are intended purely as individual moral guidance, whereas in other cases they are intended and may be used as the basis for a country's legal system. The latter was particularly common during the Middle Ages.

The Islamic legal system of Sharia (Islamic law) and Fiqh (Islamic jurisprudence) is the most widely used religious law, and one of the three most common legal systems in the world alongside common law and civil law.[8] It is the most protected divine law, because, the majority of the rulings of Sharia law are based on the Qur'an and Sunnah, while a small fraction of its rulings are based on the Ulema (jurists) who used the methods of Ijma (consensus), Qiyas (analogical deduction), Ijtihad (research) and Urf (common practice) to derive Fatwā (legal opinions). An Ulema was required to qualify for an Ijazah (legal doctorate) at a Madrasah (school) before they could issue Fatwā.[9] During the Islamic Golden Age, classical Islamic law may have had an influence on the development of common law[2] and several civil law institutions.[1] Sharia law governs a number of Islamic countries, including Saudi Arabia and Iran, though most countries use Sharia law only as a supplement to national law. It can relate to all aspects of civil law, including property rights, contracts or public law.

The Halakha is followed by orthodox and conservative Jews in both ecclesiastical and civil relations. No country is fully governed by Halakha, but two Jewish people may decide, because of personal belief, to have a dispute heard by a Jewish court, and be bound by its rulings.

Canon law is not a divine law, properly speaking, because it is not found in revelation. Instead, it is seen as human law inspired by the word of God and applying the demands of that revelation to the actual situation of the church. Canon law regulates the internal ordering of the Roman Catholic Church, the Eastern Orthodox Church and the Anglican Communion. Canon law is amended and adapted by the legislative authority of the church, such as councils of bishops, single bishops for their respective sees, the Pope for the entire Catholic Church, and the British Parliament for the Church of England.

Country	Description
Botswana	South African law (a mixed system) transferred uno acto through a proclamation of reception
Cameroon
Cyprus	Based on English common law (Cyprus was a British colony 1878-1960), with admixtures of French and Greek civil and public law, Italian civil law, Indian contract law, Greek Orthodox canon law, Muslim religious law, and Ottoman civil law.
Guyana
Israel	Originally (1948) based on English common law; in the process, influenced by German civil law—for instance, between 1962 and 1981, the Knesset issued twenty (20) wide-ranging laws, which were clearly influenced by civil law, and were in the form of codes. Religious law plays a role, especially in matters of personal status and family law, and judicial and legislative decisions take into account Jewish law (halakhah) on occasion.[10]
Lesotho	South African law (a mixed system) transferred uno acto through a proclamation of reception
Louisiana (U.S.)	Based on French and Spanish civil law, but federal laws (based on common law) are in effect in Louisiana as well.
Malta	Initially based on Roman Law and eventually progressed to the Code de Rohan, Code Napoleon with influences from Italian Civil Law. English common law however is also a source of Maltese Law, most notably in Public Law
Mauritius
Namibia	South African law (a mixed system) transferred uno acto through a proclamation of reception
Philippines	Based on Spanish law; influenced by U.S. common law after 1898 Spanish and Philippine-American Wars, personal law based on sharia law applies to Muslims
Puerto Rico (U.S.)	Based on Spanish law; influenced by U.S. common law after 1898 (victory of the U.S. over Spain in the Spanish-American war of 1898 and cession of Puerto Rico to the U.S.)
Quebec (Canada)	After the defeat of the French in the battle at the Plains of Abraham, the British tried to convert Quebec to English language and Common Law, but given the growing menace of the United States, had to allow them to keep their language (French), their religion (Roman Catholicism), and their legal system (civil law), as part of the Quebec Act of 1774. However, as Quebec is part of the Canadian Confederation (since 1867), English-based laws applied at the federal level are in effect in Quebec also.
Saint Lucia
Scotland (UK)	Based on Roman and continental law, with common law elements dating back to the High Middle Ages

Seychelles	The substantive civil law is based on the French Civil Code. Otherwise the criminal law and court procedure are based on the English common law. See Seychelles Legal Environment (http://sites.google.com/site/theseychelleslegalenvironment/legal-system) .
South Africa	An amalgam of English common law and Roman-Dutch civil law as well as Customary Law.
Sri Lanka	An amalgam of English common law, Roman-Dutch civil law and Customary Law
Swaziland	South African law (a mixed system) transferred uno acto through a proclamation of reception
Thailand	The Thai legal system became an amalgam of German, Swiss, French, English, Japanese, Italian, and Indian laws and practices. Even today, Islamic laws and practices exist in four southern provinces. Over the years, Thai law has naturally taken on its own Thai identity.
Vanuatu	Consists of a mixed system combining the legacy of English common law, French civil law and indigenous customary law.
Zimbabwe	South African law (a mixed system) transferred uno acto through a proclamation of reception

Hybrid law

The most prominent example of a hybrid legal system is the Indian legal system. India follows a mixture of civil, common law and customary or religious law. Separate personal law codes apply to Muslims, Christians, and Hindus. Decisions by the Supreme Court of India and High Courts are binding on the lower courts. Further, most of the laws are statutory and it also has a constitution which signifies the Civil nature of law in India.

Sir, I am 64 years of age and now have the ability to say I have witnessed a lot of change within our country. Words absolutely cannot express my disappointment in individuals who call themselves "American" who first would allow any form of "Law" outside of that equated to the United States Constitutionally based expression of law.

I will not debate with anyone the personal basis early lawmakers based their conclusions, i.e, the Bible, Hammurabi, as that is just stupid argument.

My wife and I as well as most persons I call friends support your and Rep. Bob Lynn's effort to prohibit Sharia Law. Keep up this good fight.

Rep. Gatto, I just finished reading "Infidel" by Ayaan Hirsr Ali. It was a real eye opener for me. I think most people in this country have no idea what dangerous times we are living in. We are at war with Islam.! Their whole objective is to destroy the west and all nonbelievers. We have our laws and they should be forced to obey them or get out of the country. If we are not careful and vigilant we will be in the same situation Europe finds itself in. Good luck in your efforts and we will pray for your success. Barbara Lopetrone

Hello Rep. Gatto,

My name is Vicki and I'm not a constituent, but I'm very interested in a bill you're bringing to the Legislature.

I recently read that you've proposed a bill that will eliminate foreign law being honored in Alaska. Bravo! How can I help you with that? I hope your bill is successful. From what I've been reading it seems our state should be out a head of any problems that may come our way over this issue. If we're pro-active(like the State of Virginia and the ObamaCare bill) it seems to me our standing is much stronger.

Please let me know what I can do. I don't know what the bill number is or any details in order to contact my Rep. and Senator about it.

Thanks for looking out for us Alaskans!

Dear Representative Gatto,

I saw a story on page A-3 of this morning's ADN and fully support your bill prohibiting state courts from honoring foreign law such as the Islamic Sharia Law. For other members of the State House who have any doubt about passing this bill, I would ask that you share the following message and video.

I am currently reading a book titled CRUEL AND USUAL PUNISHMENT - The terrifying global implications of Islamic Law written by Nonie Darwish. If you think what the video states are not true, I encourage you to read this woman's book.

A group calling themselves "White Roses" created a video to inform non-Muslims about Islam. The name of this video is Three Things About Islam. White Roses is headquartered in Sweden.
The name "White Roses" is based on a student resistance group "Die weiße Rose" in Nazi Germany. The group became known for an anonymous leaflet campaign, from June 1942 until February 1943, which called for active opposition to Adolf Hitler's regime.

I urge you to view this video and forward it to your email list. You may be familiar with the points made in this video, but many Americans are to dumb to pull their heads out of the sand to avoid confronting the problem or just simple ignorance of the crisis we face. It may not be possible to get all the Dramatis Persona to acknowledge this Islamic road to perdition but those Americans, who just do not know, out of ignorance, just might find the learning experience worth while.

As a person who has spent time studying Islam I can tell you this video is one of the best I have seen. It's short and to the point and all those points are right on!

Subject: House Bill 88, Use of Foreign Law

Dear Representative Gatto:

It appears to me that the effect of House Bill 88 is to preclude within the borders of the State of Alaska the subjugation of Alaskans to the whims of laws practiced by foreign entities that conflict with rights guaranteed to us by our laws and Constitution. Particularly, it will shield Alaskans from the depredations of Islamic Sharia law. I fully support its' adoption.

I am forwarding this because the body of evidence suggests it's true that Sharia law is an affront to every person who values human rights. Already there is a shrill, galling Muslim voice in America that demands the practice of Sharia law be allowed here, and there are gullible, bleeding-heart non-Muslims who blindly and stupidly support this insidious Islamic "cause." Already, among Muslims, it is happening in our America!

I personally will not condone the imposition of Sharia law at any level of our free society, not for myself nor for anyone else in America. Those who wish to impose Sharia law in America are the enemies of my blood. Sharia law is the antithesis of every right guaranteed to Alaskans and to all people in the United States of America. This is the land of the free and our demand for equality is that which makes us great among nations. The practices and punishments inflicted by Sharia law are patently illegal in this land. Enslavement, subjugation, beating, torture, mutilation, murder, discrimination, and child abuse deprive others of their guaranteed human rights under our Constitution and are crimes, all punishable upon conviction in this country.

Anyone in Alaska or America, who harms another person or deprives another person of guaranteed rights under the auspices of Sharia law or any other alien, foreign law, including Muslims, must be held accountable under our country's laws and prosecuted to our law's fullest extent. Multiculturalism be damned. Sharia law is an abomination and a pox on anyone who seeks to practice it or condone it in these United States of America.

Champions of Sharia BEWARE! There is only one law in America, and that is American jurisprudence, established by the duly enacted legislations of those freely elected to represent us. I pledge, as a duty of my American citizenship and as the right of a human being, to seek the prosecution of anyone I find inflicting the cruel and illicit depredations of Sharia law upon anyone in my America and I expect every other American citizen to do the same.

It's time for Alaskans and all Americans to stand together, get some guts, and renounce all efforts to suborn our freedoms and subjugate us under the illusion that any discriminatory foreign law should have any sway within the boundaries the State of Alaska or of these United States of America.

Sincerely,

Jim

Dear Representative Gatto:

I am writing to urge you and your committee to support HB 88. Alaska and the United States has no need for our system of laws and judiciary to be corrupted by outside influences, most especially Sharia Law. I consider the backing of Sharia Law by groups such as CAIR and the Muslim Brotherhood to be a sure sign of the intention by these groups to impose their doctrine and ultimately destroy our culture, otherwise known as "creeping jihad". Our laws must be based only on the constitutions of Alaska and the USA.

Thank you for your sponsorship of HB 88.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Representative Gatto:

This letter is in regard to HB-88, specifying that no individual citizen's Constitutional rights may be violated by the application of foreign laws, rules or provisions. I am in favor of the bill and urge you to vote in favor of it.

Law is a form of communication within a society. The clearer the communication, the better. When two or more contradictory legal systems operate within a single society, there is confusion and insecurity. For example, after the fall of the Ottoman Empire, European colonial powers brought their own judicial systems into the Middle East, which had been governed for centuries by Islamic law (Shari'ah). The result was two incompatible legal systems operating side-by-side in the same locale. In some cases, aggrieved individuals would complain to the system they thought most likely to give them the desired result, and if they lost would appeal to the other system. The result was confusion and expense rather than justice.

There must be clarity about which source of law carries ultimate authority. In Alaska, the Constitution of Alaska is the predominant and overarching source of law. If that ever changes, it should be as a result of an open and public process, not as a result of individuals or judges altering things bit by bit.

Different legal systems can rest on entirely different foundations, as do the two systems mentioned previously (Western law and Shari'ah). Because they appeal to different sources of ultimate authority, they are fundamentally incompatible and cannot be adopted piecemeal or cobbled together into a cohesive whole. Such incompatibility is stressed again and again by Muslim writers. The following quotes are from books recently kpurchased at a prominent California mosque:

> Islam is an original genuine system with its own unique bases and an integral comprehensive plan, not mere adjustments to current outstanding conditions. —Sayyid Qutb in Islam: The Religion of the Future
> Islam and Western civilization, being built on diametrically opposed conceptions of life, are not compatible. —Muhammad Asad in Islam at the Crossroads
> Islam should either be adopted and applied as a whole or wholly abandoned. As a system of life it can bear fruit only if all its demands and its instructions are followed and complied with in toto. — Muhammad Qutb in Islam: The Misunderstood Religion
> Allah alone is entitled to prescribe laws and regulations for making things lawful or unlawful, pure and impure; consequently all laws imposed by others must be abolished. —Sayyid Abul A'la Al-Mawdudi
> Islam and democracy can never coexist. In Islam, every decision is based on the demands of Allah. Democracy is based on what the people want. Allah holds the ultimate power. He does not require the people's consent. —Abu Bakar Bashir

Please consider my strong support for HB88. The Foreign Law Bill. I think it very wise, prudent and timely to enact this bill before things in this area get too out of hand, allowing for further and faster erosion of our state and national sovereignty. Thank you for considering such a bill in the first place. I think it appropriate and urgent in this political climate in which we find ourselves. Often we have judiciary who pride themselves in thinking too far out of the box and need containment. This is one of those times. Central to Alaskan and American justice is the idea of equality of individual citizens before the law, irrespective of group identity. Though we do not always reach that ideal, it should remain the standard toward which we strive. For that fundamental idea to be upheld, there must be only ONE standard of law in Alaskan courts.

Thank you for your service to the state. Please vote in favor of this bill.

Hello!

I wanted to take a moment to let all of you know that I STRONGLY SUPPORT the passing of HB-88. This bill would prohibit Alaska courts from using any law other than the US Constitution or the Alaska Constitution. Courts would not be allowed to consider European Law, International Law or Sharia Law while adjudicating in Alaska.

The US Constitution is the supreme law of our nation. Our Alaska Constitution is the supreme law for our state. No other type of law should be considered when litigating cases in our state and federal courts.

Please do what is right for our state and our nation by passing HB-88. Protect our nation and our state by protecting our courts from Foreign Law. It is the right thing to do.

Thank you.

Representatives;

Please pass this legislation HB 88. We do not need any foreign or religious law here in Alaska. There should be one set of laws, one set of standards for all Alaskans. England is dealing with over 90 Sharia law courts now and it is creating chaos. Shariah law permits caning of women, marriage of girls as young as 6, limb amputations for minor crimes, and killing of nonbelievers or believers who convert from Islam to other faiths.

International law is now removing Christian home schooled children from their families and forcing them into public institutions which is unethical and against our freedom of speech, religion and violates our rights as parents. There are hundreds of other examples but this bill is very important to retain our freedoms here in Alaska and America. The judge in Florida by agreeing to use Shariah law in an American court is setting a very dangerous precedent. We need to pass this legislation before it becomes an issue here.

Ladies & Gentlemen of the Judiciary Committee,

Please consider passing House Bill 88, Use of Foreign Law. Rep. Gatto is correct to design a law that protects our State and US Constitutional rights as citizens. He took an oath to protect those precious documents and his constituents kept him in office knowing that he would keep his oath. It's disheartening to even need a Bill that specifically protects our citizens, but what is even more disheartening is someone voting against this protection.

Too many countries have been too "tolerant" and allowed laws and courts that conflict with theirs to be introduced. I have read a lot of regrets about this. I've also spent a little time in Saudi Arabia and saw first hand how women are treated. I experienced some of that as well.

We have the opportunity to keep our freedoms afforded to us by our Constitutions now. Please do what is right for the people of Alaska. Vote Yes on HB 88. I have included an in depth report from Great Britain on this subject and the challenges it has posed. Here are some excerpts:

Sharia law is being exercised in Great Britain. "Sharia has been operating here, in parallel to the British legal system, since 1982. Work includes issuing fatwas - religious rulings on matters ranging from why Islam considers homosexuality a sin to why two women are equivalent to one male witness in an Islamic court."

Under Muslim law, a man can divorce his wife simply by uttering the word 'talaq', yet a woman cannot be granted a divorce without the consent of her husband or winning a dissolution of the marriage from the Imam. Even if the couple is divorced under British law, they remain married under Islam until divorced under the religious law, too.

Representative Gatto,

I am asking you to please vote, YES, on HB-88. It is extremely important to our sovereignty that we not allow our courts to follow any other laws other than our own State constitution and the United States Constitution.
In fact, you could make this bill even better by adding language to it, that if any court in this land, attempts to use any other guide for their basis of law, besides our State or the US constitution, the judge presiding over that court should stand trial and face prison time, for violating either constitution.

We could be the example to the rest of our country and encourage other states to follow suit. The only way we will ever win back our freedoms is to start taking a stand.

PLEASE take that stand on not only on our behalf, but for our ancestors and what they fought and died for.

Sir, et al, I would first like to introduce myself. My name is LTC(Ret) Nick Herrera and I am resident of Wasilla. I served in the United States Army for over 22 years and deployed on numerou occasions. I have served in over 70 countries, many of which were Muslim countries, and I can tell you that no country is greater than the United States of America. I fought to defend our Constitution, rights, and the people of this great country of ours, often leaving my family for long periods of time (as long as two years) at great cost to my family, but I did it willingly and with pride in the service of our country. Its also important for you to note that I have extensive background in the Muslim culture, religion, and dealing with Muslim sensitivities as I also lived (and grew up) in the Middle East for 12 years living among the Muslim population and even practicing their customs, traditions, and learning their language. In fact, prior to entering service into the Army, I had spent half of my life living in the Middle East. My parents worked in the Middle East for 33 years straight and recently retired from there. Thus, I feel I fully understand their culture and religion. Despite what anyone may say or advocate, I am a strong believer that all faiths have the God given right to practice their faith in this country, and I respect that. That said, I will tell you from personal experience from living in the Middle East, that Islam is NOT a religion of tolerance or respect. I am a practicing Catholic and have seen first hand the persecution of non-Muslim faiths in the Middle East. As a practicing Catholic, my family and I were NOT allowed to practice our faith in the Middle East. In fact, on one case, I was present when the "Mutawa" (Muslim religious police), came into the home of a Catholic priest who was holding a secret church service (since we were not permitted to openly or secretly practice our faith) for us, and burst into his home and violently subdued him, arrested him, and dragged him off during the church service and then had him deported. This is NOT a religion of tolerance!! Islam does NOT practice any form of tolerance, but only DOMINATION and submission of all non-Muslims. I was also present on numerous occasions for "public beheadings, floggings, and punishments" executed by this "tolerant religion". I personally can recount friends who were tortured merely because of a "Ministry of Vice and Virtue" had received "confessions (aka tortured). I could go on about how, while on active duty, as an American soldier in Bosnia I witnessed the results of what Islam, this religion of tolerance, did to other faiths in the name of "Allah", but I will stop here.

I strongly urge you to pass HB 88. I am NOT alone in STRONGLY SUPPORTING this bill. This bill does NOT restrict our Constitutional Rights. In fact, it protects us from becoming SUBJECTS to a FOREIGN LAW in our OWN COUNTRY. Failing to pass HB 88 signals victory for Islam and our enemies who would seek to subjugate us, within our own country, to a foreign law. We have our Constitution which protects us, and you, our representatives, are our "first line of defense", and much like our Armed Services fight to protect us, we/I, rely on YOU to protect us. PLEASE pass this bill and protect us, your citizens here in Alaska. Much like you relied on me to defend your rights and this country, now I depend on YOU to protect me and my family for foreign laws and invaders.

God bless you all, guide you, and the United States of America.

Sincerely,
Nick Herrera

Thank you Carl for seeing the big picture and protecting my children's future enacting your Foreign Law bill.

A few thoughts...

AS the national economy slows and AK's P fund appears as a easy ride to new arrivals.....
I'd like to see new families with another state's welfare history - with any miners having repeated criminal history - contract to re- pay the state with the families permanent fund money for state expenses.
Alaska should appear un-friendly to non-productive individuals. Let the moms and dads be motivated to raise their children to be productive self sufficent adults.
Do not enable (through the P fund) adults to be dead beat parents.

Also...
I suggest you find a way for children / miners to have meaningful trade work site experience. Most kids do not see the use for their HS education, few goals are set beyond the discharge diploma.

Today, the only way a miner can learn and understand gainful employment experience is if he/she is working in their family's business.
The child labor laws are to restrictive and do not allow exposure to work site tasks and challenges that train for a trade's entry position.
Few businesses can afford to "carry a kid" that cannot legally have a productive job task.

Thank you.

Biography of Nonie Darwish: Director

Nonie Darwish is an American human rights activist, writer, public speaker and founder of Arabs For Israel. She is the author of the book Now they Call Me Infidel; Why I Renounced Jihad for America, Israel and the War on Terror. Her second book is Cruel And Usual Punishment: The Terrifying Global Implications of Islamic Law. Her speech topics cover human rights, with emphasis on women's rights and minority rights in the Middle East.

Born in Egypt, Darwish is the daughter of an Egyptian Army lieutenant general, who, when assassinated by the Israeli army in 1956, was called a "shahid" by the Egyptian president Gamal Abdel Nasser, although Darwish blames "the Middle Eastern Islamic culture and the propaganda of hatred taught to children from birth" for the assassination. In 1978, she moved with her husband to the United States, and converted to Christianity there. After September 11, 2001 she has written on Islam-related topics.

Born in Cairo, Egypt, Darwish moved to Gaza in the 1950s when her father, Lt. General Mustafa Hafez, was sent by Gamal Abdel Nasser to serve as commander of the Egyptian Army Intelligence in Gaza, which was under supervision of Egypt. Hafez founded the fedayeen who launched raids across Israel's southern border, that between 1951 and 1956, killed some 400 Israelis. In July 1956 when Nonie was eight years old, her father became the first targeted assassination carried out by the Israeli Defense Forces in response to Fedayeen's attacks, making him a shahid. During his speech announcing the nationalization of the Suez Canal, Nasser vowed that all of Egypt would take revenge for Hafez's death. Darwish claims that Nasser asked her and her siblings, "Which one of you will avenge your father's death by killing Jews?"

Re: House Bill 88
ACLU Review of Legal Issues

Chair Lynn, Vice-Chair Keller:

Thank you for the opportunity to submit written testimony regarding House Bill 88, relating to the application of international law.

The American Civil Liberties Union of Alaska represents thousands of members and activists throughout the State of Alaska who seek to preserve and expand individual freedoms and civil liberties guaranteed under the United States and Alaska Constitutions. We have several concerns with the proposed legislation, outlined in greater detail below, and urge a DO NOT PASS vote by Members of the Committee.

Attack on Separation or Powers and Judicial Independence

Fundamentally, HB 88 is counterproductive legislation. This bill represents an attack on the separation of powers, an unwarranted mistrust of the state judiciary and an unnecessary interference in the function of Alaska's legal system.

It is a core function of both state and federal courts to determine what law is at issue in a given matter. The Alaska Legislature should not seek to legislate what law the courts can and cannot consider when deciding cases. By doing so, the Legislature violates the fundamental principle of judicial independence and the constitutional principle of separation of powers.

Negative Impacts on Alaska Citizens and Businesses

Passage of HB 88 would harm the rights of Alaska citizens and businesses who travel and transact across international borders, and would also negatively impact the United States' standing in the global community.

In the normal course of business, organizations may voluntarily choose to waive certain constitutional rights. For instance, an individual generally retains the constitutional right to say what she thinks without restraint. U.S. Const., Amdt. I; Alaska Const., Art. I, Sec. 5. However, individuals regularly contract away their constitutional right to speak freely, for instance, by engaging in nondisclosure agreements. While the ACLU of Alaska strongly values constitutional rights, there are certainly legitimate and appropriate reasons why an informed, non-coerced waiver of such rights should be permitted and legally respected.

Contrary to these principles, the language of HB 88 presumes to disregard all waivers of constitutional rights, in any contract that contains a choice of law clause preferring the law of a foreign jurisdiction. For instance, proposed AS 09.68.140(b) states that if a contract contains a choice of law clause preferring foreign law and "if the interpretation or enforcement of the agreement would violate an individual's [constitutional] right," the contract must be read to preserve the constitutional right, not to waive it. The effect of the statute – by its literal terms – appears to be to nullify any waiver of constitutional right where made in conjunction with a foreign choice of law provision.

Other examples of commonly waived constitutional rights include the right of medical privacy permitting medical records to be shared with a foreign medical provider, or a due process right to an official hearing or trial, such as a provision mandating that disputes go to an arbitrator. The Alaska Legislature risks sweeping up a wide variety of commonplace waivers of constitutional rights in the bill as currently drafted.

HB 88 is structurally flawed in that it is not narrowly tailored to prevent coerced or uninformed waiver of rights. Its only caveat is that the contract must have a foreign choice of law provision. This overbreadth would result – should the bill pass – in exposing foreign partners to the potential that Alaska businesses may unilaterally and improperly evade their contractual obligations by using the Bill's provisions. This obvious legal flaw would make it highly problematic for Alaskans to conduct business with foreign individuals or organizations.

Choice of Forum Provision

A similar problem attends subsections (c) and (d), which prohibit the application of choice of forum or venue contractual provisions, and the granting of motions to dismiss on the grounds of forum non conveniens, where a constitutional right could be impaired.

In the case of subsection (c), a business or person may have a valid, legally appropriate and commercially necessary reason to waive certain constitutional rights. But, the extremely broad language of the legislation would invalidate the contractual provisions.

An example of a problem with this language is presented by the Seventh Amendment to the United States Constitution, which guarantees the right to trial by jury in any civil case addressing a matter in value of at least twenty dollars. U.S. Const., Amdt. VII.

The United States jury system does not necessarily have a corollary in judicial proceedings in other countries. Not all countries apply a common law system, and fewer still have regular jury trials. HB 88 could thus be used to prevent the enforcement of any choice of venue or forum clause in any contract with a foreign company, or any forum non conveniens action, if the foreign court at issue does not guarantee a jury trial for civil action where $20 or more was at stake. This would seriously deter foreign individuals or corporations from doing business in Alaska.

U.S. and Alaska Standing in Foreign Relations

HB 88 would generally strain our relations and standing with other nations. Opportunistic businesses and individuals could thwart efficient judicial enforcement by filing suit in Alaska and then demanding that the defendant respond in Alaska.

For example, a person with a contractual dispute with a Spanish oil services company[1] could (assuming that the matter had sufficient minimal Alaska contacts to establish personal and subject matter jurisdiction), file a suit for declaratory relief in Anchorage, even where all the evidence, witnesses, and items at issue were in Spain.

Even where such a suit would normally be dismissed as forum non conveniens and then re-filed in Spain, an Alaska court could be obliged to hear the case in Alaska, since the plaintiff would be deprived of her Seventh Amendment right to a jury trial if the case were heard in Spain.

While there may be foreign jurisdictions whose legal systems are so deeply unfair as to offend fundamental American values of fairness, there are many – such as Spain's – that do not. One should also note that the doctrine of forum non conveniens is one of mutual respect, which may be undermined where one nation flouts the respect owed to other nations. Passage of HB 88, along with similar bills in sister states, could result in many American litigants finding themselves sued in foreign jurisdictions and unable to remove their cases to Alaska or other US state courts.

HB 88 signals to the rest of the world that Alaska believes that our judges have "little to learn from their counterparts in other nations . . . . This wholesale rejection of the value of consulting international law or foreign decisions in certain circumstances evokes years of 'American exceptionalism,' during which the U.S. was internationally criticized for exempting itself from human rights standards that were otherwise universal."[2]

A vote for HB 88 would have the effect of alienating U.S. allies and the commercial partners of Alaska companies, putting at risk U.S. interests at home and abroad. Indeed, the simple perception that the United States is ignoring its legal obligations puts Alaskan citizens and Alaskan companies seeking to do business internationally at risk. If potential foreign business partners believe that Alaska's courts will not enforce foreign judgments or adhere to the businesses' choice of law in their contracts, international companies may simply be unwilling to contract with Alaska businesses or establish commercial ties to our state. Given the ambiguity surrounding which laws Alaskan courts may consider, foreign investors may be wary of ever consenting to jurisdiction in our state courts.

Conclusion

In sum, HB 88 is unnecessary, and its passage would cause real harm to Alaska's citizens, businesses, and judicial system. We urge you to oppose HB 88.

Dear Representative Gatto:

I reviewed HB 88 after reading the recent ADN article about the bill. Having practiced law in Alaska for 28 years, I believe this bill is a "solution" in search of a problem. The bill – reflecting the lack of any real problem – is extremely vague and overbroad. It is very hard to predict what effect this bill would have if passed. What if an Alaskan company wants to work as a subcontractor for a Canadian company building a gas line across Alaska and Canada? Under HB 88, the Canadian general contractor and the Alaska subcontractor apparently cannot choose Canadian law or a Canadian forum to the extent that any dispute might be affected by the U.S. or Alaska Constitutions if the dispute were instead heard in Alaska under Alaska law. Maybe the Canadian company will just pass on hiring the Alaskan company and avoid this vague legal morass.

And if this bill is really directed against "Sharia law," as stated in the ADN article, then it seems even more pointless and counterproductive. I have never seen, heard, or have anyone ever suggest that "Sharia law" applied to any legal dispute in Alaska. Since the U.S. Constitution has unquestionably been the supreme law in the land since the United States Supreme Court decided Marbury v. Madison in 1803, I also cannot conceive of how "Sharia law" could possibly "violate an individual's right under . . . the United State Constitution" as stated in the bill's legislative "findings" provision. Absent a real problem, the only remaining purpose of the bill is simply to pander to anti-Muslim sentiment.

We have hosted several exchange students over the years including two Muslim students. Through them we have met several members of the small Anchorage Muslim community, including an Egyptian engineer working for a major oil company and several successful small business owners. The world in becoming more interconnected. Unless there is some real problem that needs to be addressed, I think it is a bad idea to be passing legislation intended to mark one religious group as dangerous outsiders whose alleged practices need to be carefully watched and guarded against.

As sponsor of HB 88, can you please include this e-mail as part of the official comments on this bill and any companion Senate bill.

I appreciate your consideration.

COUNCIL ON AMERICAN-ISLAMIC RELATIONS (CAIR)

453 New Jersey Avenue SE
Washington, DC
20003

Phone :202-488-8787
Fax :202-488-0883
URL :http://www.cair-net.org/

- Civil rights group partially funded by the Saudi Wahhabi establishment
- Has numerous ties to extremist Islamic organizations

The Council on American-Islamic Relations (CAIR) describes itself as a "non-profit, grassroots membership organization ... established to promote a positive image of Islam and Muslims in America," to protect Muslims from hate crimes and discrimination, and to present "an Islamic perspective on issues of importance to the American public." According to the Council's Director of Communications, Ibrahim Hooper, "We are similar to a Muslim NAACP." As of June 2007, CAIR claimed 32 branch affiliates in the United States and one in Canada.

CAIR was co-founded in 1994 by Nihad Awad and Omar Ahmad, both of whom had close ties to the Islamic Association for Palestine (IAP), which was established by senior Hamas operative Mousa Abu Marzook and functioned as Hamas' public relations and recruitment arm in the United States. Awad and Ahmad previously had served, respectively, as IAP's Public Relations Director and President. Thus it can be said that CAIR was an outgrowth of IAP.

CAIR opened its first office in Washington, DC, with the help of a $5,000 donation from the Holy Land Foundation for Relief and Development (HLF), a self-described charity founded by Mousa Abu Marzook. In May 1996, CAIR coordinated a press conference to protest the decision of the U.S. government to extradite Marzook for his connection to terrorist acts performed by Hamas. CAIR characterized the extradition as "anti-Islamic" and "anti-American." When President Bush closed HLF in December 2001 for collecting money "to support the Hamas terror organization," CAIR decried his action as "unjust" and "disturbing."

From its inception, CAIR has sought to portray itself as a moderate, mainstream organization, and as early as 1996 its officials became frequent guests at State Department and White House events. In the aftermath of 9/11, when the Bush administration tried to reassure American Muslims that Islam was not the target of the war on terrorism, CAIR officials were prominent among the invitees. CAIR was the main Islamic group to gain U.S. media access in the post-9/11 period, providing the "Muslim view" of the terrorist attacks and of America's response to them. As self-acclaimed Muslim spokesmen, CAIR officials typically refused to "simplify the situation" by blaming Osama bin Laden for the attacks on America. Moreover, while they eventually were induced by journalists to condemn Palestinian suicide terror in a pro forma manner, they hedged their disavowals by describing it as an understandable response to Israeli brutality.

Contending that American Muslims are the victims of wholesale repression, CAIR has provided sensitivity training to police departments across the United States, instructing law officers in the art of dealing with Muslims respectfully.

CAIR further claims that U.S. foreign policy is dictated largely by Zionist extremists. As Evan McCormick of the Center for Security Policy puts it: "By convincing moderate Muslims that they are being targeted unfairly by the Bush administration's [anti-terror] policies, CAIR incites fear in members of that demographic. If innocent Muslims are then convinced that they will be the target of government action, then they have no incentive to reject an extremist ideology that resists the government's anti-terror policies. ... This is the essence of CAIR's strategy: shock moderate Muslims about the motivations of the U.S. Government, turn them into post-[9/11] victims, and then recruit them as supporters for your political agenda when they are ripe for the taking."

Along the same lines, a civil suit filed by the estate of 9/11 victim and former high-ranking FBI counter-terrorism agent John O'Neill, Sr. asserted that CAIR's goal "is to create as much self-doubt, hesitation, fear of name-calling, and litigation within police departments and intelligence agencies as possible so as to render such authorities ineffective in pursuing international and domestic terrorist entities."

CAIR endorsed an October 22, 2002 "National Day of Protest" whose premise was: "Since September 11th thousands of Muslims, Arabs and South Asians have been rounded up, detained and disappeared. ... Hard-won civil liberties and protections have been stripped away as part of the government's 'war on terrorism.' The USA-PATRIOT Act brings in a new set of repressive laws and restrictions on people and grants even greater power to law enforcement agents of all kinds." Moreover, this document explicitly defended the convicted murderers Mumia Abu-Jamal and Leonard Peltier, as well as Lynne Stewart and Jose Padilla, who were convicted on terrorism-related charges -- depicting all four as persecuted political prisoners of a repressive American government.

CAIR was a signatory to a February 20, 2002 document, composed by C. Clark Kissinger's radical group Refuse & Resist, condemning military tribunals and the detention of immigrants apprehended in connection with post-9/11 terrorism investigations. The document lamented that "the denial of any due process for Arab[s], Muslim[s], South Asians and others" bore "chilling similarities to a police state."

In February 2003, CAIR joined the American Muslim Council, the American Muslim Alliance, and the Muslim Public Affairs Council in forming a coalition to repeal and amend the Patriot Act -- alleging that it violated the civil liberties of Americans, particularly Muslims. CAIR also endorsed the Civil Liberties Restoration Act of 2004, which was designed to roll back, in the name of protecting civil liberties, vital national-security policies that had been adopted after the 9/11 terrorist attacks.

CAIR promotes a radical Islamic vision, as evidenced by the fact that its co-founder Omar Ahmad told a Fremont, California audience in July 1998: "Islam isn't in America to be equal to any other faith, but to become dominant. The Koran ... should be the highest authority in America, and Islam the only accepted religion on Earth." In a similar spirit, co-founder Ibrahim Hooper told a reporter in 1993: "I wouldn't want to create the impression that I wouldn't like the government of the United States to be Islamic sometime in the future." In 2003 Hooper stated that if Muslims ever become a majority in the United States, they will likely seek to replace the U.S. Constitution with Islamic law, which they deem superior to man-made law. In the late 1980s, Ihsan Bagby, who would later become a CAIR Board member, stated that Muslims "can never be full citizens of this country," referring to the United States, "because there is no way we can be fully committed to the institutions and ideologies of this country."

In 2003 CAIR invested, according to its own Form 990 filed with the Internal Revenue Service, $325,000 from its California offices with the North American Islamic Trust (NAIT). According to Newsweek, authorities say that over the years "NAIT money has helped the Saudi Arabian sect of Wahhabism -- or Salafism, as the broader, pan-Islamic movement is called -- to seize control of hundreds of mosques in U.S. Muslim communities." A recent study by the Center for Religious Freedom found that a very large number of American mosques teach hatred of Jews and Christians, coupled with doctrines of Islamic supremacism.

Writes Islam scholar Stephen Schwartz: "CAIR should be considered a foreign-based subversive organization, comparable in the Islamist field to the Soviet-controlled Communist Party USA, and the Cuban-controlled front groups that infiltrated 'Latin American solidarity' organizations in the U.S. during the 1980s. It has organized numerous community branches and has had immense success in gaining position as an 'official' representative of Islam in the U.S."

Notable facts about CAIR's pas de deux with Islamic extremism and terrorism include the following:

- Co-founder Nihad Awad asserted at a 1994 meeting at Barry University, "I am a supporter of the Hamas movement." Awad wrote in the Muslim World Monitor that the 1994 trial which had resulted in the conviction of four Islamic fundamentalist terrorists who had perpetrated the previous year's World Trade Center bombing was "a travesty of justice."
- On February 2, 1995, U.S. Attorney Mary Jo White named CAIR Advisory Board member and New York imam Siraj Wahhaj as one of the "unindicted persons who may be alleged as co-conspirators" in Islamic Group leader Omar Abdel Rahman's foiled plot to blow up numerous New York City monuments.
- On June 6, 2006, CAIR's Ohio affiliate held a large fundraiser in honor of Siraj Wahhaj. Following the event, CAIR-Ohio issued a press release heralding the more than $100,000 that Wahhaj had helped raise that evening for the organization's "civil liberties work."

- In October 1998, CAIR demanded the removal of a Los Angeles billboard describing Osama bin Laden as "the sworn enemy." According to CAIR, this depiction was "offensive to Muslims."
- In 1998, CAIR denied bin Laden's responsibility for the two al Qaeda bombings of American embassies in Africa. According to Ibrahim Hooper, the bombings resulted from "misunderstandings of both sides."

- In September 2003, CAIR's former Community Affairs Director, Bassem Khafagi, pled guilty to three federal counts of bank and visa fraud and agreed to be deported to Egypt. Federal investigators said that a group Khafagi founded, the Islamic Assembly of North America, had funneled money to activities supporting terrorism and had published material advocating suicide attacks against the United States. Khafagi's illegal activities took place while he was employed by CAIR.

- In July 2004, Ghassan Elashi, a founding Board member of CAIR's Texas chapter, was convicted along with his four brothers of having illegally shipped computers from their Dallas-area business, InfoCom Corporation, to Libya and Syria, two designated state sponsors of terrorism. That same month, Elashi was charged with having provided more than $12.4 million to Hamas while he was running HLF. In April 2005, Elashi and two of his brothers were also convicted of knowingly doing business with Hamas operative Mousa Abu Marzook, who was Elashi's brother-in-law. Elashi's illegal activities took place while he was employed by CAIR, whose Dallas-Fort Worth chapter depicted the Elashis' indictment as "a war on Islam and Muslims."

- On September 6, 2001, the day that federal agents first raided Infocom's headquarters, CAIR Executive Director Nihad Awad denounced the U.S. government for "tak[ing] us back to the McCarthy era."

- FBI wiretap evidence which was introduced during the 2007 trial of the Holy Land Foundation (a trial that explored HLF's financial ties to Hamas), proved that Nihad Awad had attended a 1993 Philadelphia meeting of Hamas leaders and operatives who collaborated on a plan to disguise funding for Hamas as charitable donations.

- CAIR co-founder and Chairman Emeritus Omar Ahmad was named, in the same 2007 Holy Land Foundation trial, as an unindicted co-conspirator with HLF. During the trial, evidence was supplied proving that Ahmad had attended, along with Nihad Awad, the aforementioned 1993 Philadelphia meeting of Hamas leaders and operatives. Moreover, prosecutors described Ahmad as a member of the Muslim Brotherhood's "Palestine Committee" in America.

- The home of Muthanna al-Hanooti, one of CAIR's directors, was raided in 2006 by FBI agents in connection with an active terrorism investigation. FBI agents also searched the offices of Focus on Advocacy and Advancement of International Relations, al-Hanooti's Michigan- and Washington DC-based consulting firm that investigators suspect to be a front supporting the Sunni-led insurgency in Iraq.

  Al-Hanooti is an ethnic Palestinian who, according to a 2001 FBI report, "collected over $6 million for support of Hamas" and attended, along with CAIR and Holy Land Foundation officials, the previously cited Hamas fundraising summit in Philadelphia in 1993. Currently a prayer leader at a Washington-area mosque that aided some of the 9/11 hijackers, he is a relative of Shiek Mohammed al-Hanooti, an unindicted co-conspirator in the 1993 World Trade Center bombing. Muthanna al-Hanooti formerly helped run an organization called LIFE for Relief and Development, a suspected Hamas terror front whose Michigan offices were raided by the FBI in September 2006, and whose Baghdad office was raided by U.S. troops in 2004.

  In March 2011, al-Hanooti was sentenced to a year in federal prison for violating U.S. sanctions against Iraq. According to the FBI, al-Hanooti also raised more than $6 million for support of Hamas and was present with CAIR and Holy Land Foundation officials at a secret Hamas fundraising summit held in Philadelphia during the 1990s.

- Randall Todd Royer, who served as a communications specialist and civil rights coordinator for CAIR, trained with Lashkar-I-Taiba, an al Qaeda-tied Kashmir organization that is listed on the State Department's international terror list. He was also indicted on charges of conspiring to help al Qaeda and the Taliban battle American troops in Afghanistan. He later pled guilty to lesser firearm-related charges and was sentenced to twenty years in prison. Royer's illegal activities took place while he was employed by CAIR.

- Onetime CAIR fundraiser Rabih Haddad was arrested on terrorism-related charges and was deported from the United States due to his subsequent work as Executive Director of the Global Relief Foundation, which in October 2002 was designated by the U.S. Treasury Department for financing al Qaeda and other terrorist organizations.

- During the 2005 trial of Sami Al-Arian, who was a key figure for Palestinian Islamic Jihad in the United States, Ahmed Bedier of CAIR's Florida branch emerged as one of Al-Arian's most vocal advocates.

- In the aftermath of 9/11, federal agents raided the Washington-area home of CAIR civil rights coordinator Laura Jaghlit as part of a probe into terrorist financing, money laundering and tax fraud. Her husband Mohammed Jaghlit, a director of the Saudi-backed SAAR Foundation, is a suspect in the still-active (as of January 2008) investigation.

- Abdurahman Alamoudi, one of CAIR's former directors, is a supporter of both Hamas and Hezbollah, and is currently serving a 23-year prison sentence for terrorism-related convictions.

- Current CAIR board member Nabil Sadoun co-founded, along with Mousa Abu Marzook, the United Association for Studies and Research (UASR), which investigators consider to be a key Hamas front in America. Sadoun now sits on UASR's board.

- Current CAIR research director Mohamed Nimer previously served as a Board Director for UASR.

- One of CAIR's founding directors, Rafeeq Jaber, is a supporter of Hezbollah and served as the longtime President of the Islamic Association for Palestine.

- CAIR Board member Hamza Yusuf was investigated by the FBI shortly after 9/11 because, just two days before the attacks, he had told a Muslim audience: "This country [the U.S.] is facing a terrible fate and the reason for that is because this country stands condemned. It stands condemned like Europe stood condemned because of what it did. And lest people forget, Europe suffered two world wars after conquering the Muslim lands."

The foregoing affiliations have drawn the notice of numerous commentators:

- Steven Pomerantz, the FBI's former chief of counter-terrorism, has stated that "CAIR, its leaders and its activities effectively give aid to international terrorist groups."

- WorldNetDaily quotes an FBI veteran as saying: "Their [CAIR's] offices have been a turnstile for terrorists and their supporters."

- The family of John P. O'Neill, Sr., the former FBI counter-terrorism chief who died at the World Trade Center on 9/11, named CAIR in a lawsuit as having "been part of the criminal conspiracy of radical Islamic terrorism" responsible for the September 11 attacks.

- Terrorism expert Steven Emerson, citing federal law enforcement sources and internal documents, characterizes CAIR as "a radical fundamentalist front group for Hamas."

- U.S. Senator Richard Durbin has said, "CAIR is unusual in its extreme rhetoric and its associations with groups that are suspect."

- On September 17, 2003, U.S. Senator Charles Schumer stated that CAIR co-founders Nihad Awad and Omar Ahmad have "intimate links with Hamas." He later remarked that "we know [CAIR] has ties to terrorism."

- According to U.S. Rep. Sue Myrick (R - North Carolina), co-founder of the House Anti-Terrorism/Jihad Caucus: "Groups like CAIR have a proven record of senior officials being indicted and either imprisoned or deported from the United States."

- During September 2003 hearings held by the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Terrorism, Technology, and Homeland Security, Chairman Jon Kyl noted the connections between such groups as CAIR and the Saudi government, stating: "A small group of organizations based in the U.S. with Saudi backing and support is well advanced in its four-decade effort to control Islam in America -- from mosques, universities and community centers to our prisons and even within our military. Moderate Muslims who love America and want to be part of our great country are being forced out of those institutions."

A number of American Muslims have made similar observations:

- The late Seifeldin Ashmawy, who published Voice of Peace, called CAIR the champion of "extremists whose views do not represent Islam."

- Tashbih Sayyed of the Council for Democracy and Tolerance (CDT) called CAIR "the most accomplished fifth column" in the United States. Jamal Hasan, also of CDT, said that CAIR's goal is to spread "Islamic hegemony the world over by hook or by crook."

- According to Kamal Nawash of the Free Muslim Coalition Against Terrorism, CAIR and similar groups "condemn terrorism on the surface while endorsing an ideology that helps foster extremism," and adds that "almost all of their members are theocratic Muslims who reject secularism and want to establish Islamic states."

In 1998, CAIR co-hosted a rally at Brooklyn College where Islamic militants exhorted the attendees to carry out "jihad" and described Jews as "pigs and monkeys." The crowd chanted: "No to the Jews, descendants of the apes." Referring to Israel as a "racist country and state," CAIR was a signatory to a MAY 20, 2004 "Joint Muslims/Arab-American Statement on Israeli Violence in Gaza," which "strongly condemn[ed]" Israel's "indiscriminate killings of innocent Palestinians, including many children," and its "demolition of Palestinian homes." In August 2006 CAIR accused Israel of practicing state terrorism in its war against the Lebanese terrorist organization Hezbollah. Said CAIR Communications Director Ibrahim Hooper, "Our [American] government must end its support for Israel's campaign of terror in Lebanon and join an international effort to protect and bring humanitarian aid to the civilian population of that devastated nation."

CAIR officials have displayed a double standard for denouncing violence. For example, Ibrahim Hooper in a Pittsburg Post-Gazette interview refused to denounce the terrorism of Hamas and Hezbollah, stating, "we're not in the business of condemning." By contrast, when Israeli troops killed Hamas leader Ahmed Yassin, CAIR condemned "the assassination of a wheelchair-bound Palestinian Muslim religious leader," calling the operation "an act of state terror."

According to terrorism expert Steven Emerson: "Hussam Ayloush, the Executive Director of the Southern California chapter of [CAIR] ... is known to use the term 'Zionazi' to refer to Israelis, and [he] compare[s] Zionism to Nazism, once writing in an e-mail, 'Indeed, the Zionazis are a bunch of nice people; just like their Nazi brethren!'"

CAIR chose not to endorse or participate in the May 14, 2005 "Free Muslims March Against Terror," an event whose stated purpose was to "send a message to the terrorists and extremists that their days are numbered ... [and to send] a message to the people of the Middle East, the Muslim world and all people who seek freedom, democracy and peaceful coexistence that we support them."

CAIR states that it "works in close cooperation with other civic and civil liberties groups such as the American Civil Liberties Union, Amnesty International, NAACP, Hispanic Unity, Organization of Chinese Americans, Japanese American Citizens League, Sikh Mediawatch and Resource Task Force, among many others." CAIR also identifies the National Council of Churches as a "partner" organization.

On December 12, 2006, CAIR Board Chairman Parvez Ahmed called the war in Iraq a "pure unadulterated projection of raw power" and said the U.S. should withdraw its forces immediately.

Another notable CAIR official is Altaf Ali, the organization's Florida Director. Ali alleges that America responded to the 9/11 attacks by trampling on the civil liberties of all Muslims, and he has wavered on the question of whether or not the victims who died in the World Trade Center on 9/11 could be classified as innocents whose killings were unjustified.

In 2007 CAIR became involved in the infamous "flying imams" lawsuit, a case that centered around six Muslim clerics aboard a November 2006 US Airways flight from Minneapolis to Phoenix. Shortly before takeoff, they began engaging in bizarre behaviors eerily reminiscent of those that had been used by the 9/11 hijackers: shouting slogans in Arabic; leaving their assigned seats to position themselves in different places; requesting seat belt extenders that they positioned on the floor, rather than using them to secure themselves. Responding to the concerns of alarmed passengers and the flight crew, authorities removed the imams from the plane. Soon thereafter the imams filed a lawsuit against US Airways, claiming that they had been removed from the flight for no reason other than anti-Muslim discrimination. The lawyer representing the imams was Omar T. Mohammedi, who as of 2006 was President of CAIR's New York chapter.

In February 2007, CAIR endorsed a call by the American Muslim Taskforce for Civil Rights and Elections, for a worldwide "rolling fast" in support of the incarcerated Sami Al-Arian, who had initiated a hunger strike on January 21 to protest his detention and treatment by federal authorities. Participants in the campaign agreed to fast every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday for as long as Al-Arian continued his hunger strike.

On June 4, 2007, the New York Sun reported that CAIR had been named as an unindicted co-conspirator in an alleged criminal conspiracy to support both Hamas and the Holy Land Foundation for Relief and Development (HLF). The federal prosecution document, in naming CAIR as an unindicted co-conspirator, described the organization as a present or past member of the U.S. Muslim Brotherhood's Palestine Committee.

Also named as unindicted co-conspirators in the HLF trial were groups such as Hamas, INFOCOM, the Islamic Association for Palestine, the Islamic Society of North America, the Muslim Arab Youth Association, the United Association for Studies and Research, and the North American Islamic Trust. The list also included many individuals affiliated with the Muslim Brotherhood and/or Hamas. Among these were Omar Ahmad, Abdurahman Alamoudi, Jamal Badawi, Yousef al-Qaradawi, Abdallah Azzam, Mohammad Jaghlit, Mousa Abu Marzook, Abdel Aziz Rantisi, and Ahmed Yassin.

Two weeks after the Justice Department had named CAIR as an unindicted co-conspirator in the HLF trial, the organization legally changed its name to "Council on American-Islamic Relations Action Network."

In the summer 2007 Holy Land Foundation trial, it was learned that CAIR's parent organization, the Islamic Association for Palestine, had been named in a May 1991 Muslim Brotherhood memorandum as one of the Brotherhood's likeminded "organizations of our friends" who shared the common goal of conducting "a kind of grand Jihad in eliminating and destroying the Western civilization from within and 'sabotaging' its miserable house by their hands ... so that ... God's religion [Islam] is made victorious over all other religions."

According to a June 2007 Washington Times report, CAIR's membership had declined more than 90 percent since the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks, from approximately 29,000 in the year 2000, to fewer than 1,700 six years later. As a result, CAIR's annual income from dues dropped from $732,765 in 2000 (when yearly dues cost $25 per person), to $58,750 in 2006 (when dues cost $35). As of 2007, the majority of CAIR's $3 million annual budget derived from about two dozen individual donors.

M. Zuhdi Jasser, Director of the American-Islamic Forum for Democracy, said in June 2007 that the decline in CAIR's membership contradicted the organization's claim that it represents the interests and concerns of 7 million American Muslims. "This is the untold story in the myth that CAIR represents the American Muslim population," said Jasser. "They only represent their membership and donors."

CAIR has received funding from the Community Foundation for Greater Atlanta, the New York Foundation, and the Tides Foundation.

CAIR also receives considerable funding from Saudi Arabia, whose Washington embassy in 1999 announced a $250,000 grant by the Saudi-based Islamic Development Bank to help CAIR purchase some land in Washington, DC -- to be used in the construction of "an education and research center." In 2002 the World Assembly of Muslim Youth, which is bankrolled by the Saudi government, financed CAIR's distribution of books on Islam and CAIR's immensely expensive advertising campaign in a number of American publications -- including a weekly ad in USA Today which cost approximately $1.04 million over the course of the year. In 2003, Saudi Prince Alwaleed bin Talal donated $500,000 to help CAIR distribute the Koran and other Islam-related books throughout the United States. Two years later, a Saudi Arabian named Adnan Bogary gave CAIR's Washington branch a donation of more than $1.36 million.

In 2006 Sheikh Hamdan bin Rashid Al Maktoum, Deputy Ruler of Dubai, financed the building of a property in the United States to serve as an endowment for CAIR. That property now generates some $3 million annually for CAIR.

According to the Investigative Project on Terrorism, CAIR in 2006 sent delegations to Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates in an effort to procure millions of dollars in donations from wealthy Gulf donors.

According to the Investigative Project on Terrorism, in September 2009 CAIR executive ditector Nihad Awad (along with CAIR national spokesman Ibrahim Hooper and chairman Larry Shaw) praised Libyan dictator Muammar Gaddafi for his "leadership" and his "continuing efforts for world peace," and asked him to underwrite a CAIR program to distribute a million copies of the Quran to American government officials and the general public. "We want to assure you that Muslims in America are your brothers and supporters," Shaw said. "They share with you your interests and aspirations." The CAIR officials also asked Gaddafi for financial assistance to help them run an entity known as the Muslim Peace Foundation, founded in 2008 ostensibly to help repair American-Muslim relations. One of the foundation's founders was a man named Winslow Seale, a Muslim convert who later changed his name to Johari Abdul Malik. Malik's Dar al-Hijrah mosque is believed to be "associated with Islamic extremists" and "has been linked to numerous individuals linked to terrorism financing."

In October 2010, CAIR announced that it was forming a new "Islamophobia" department that would produce an annual report tracking "trends in rhetorical attacks on Islam and Muslims and ... offer accurate and balanced information to be used in the struggle for tolerance and mutual understanding."

In November 2010, Muneer Awad, director of CAIR's Oklahoma state chapter, filed a federal lawsuit challenging a measure -- approved by 70 percent of Oklahoma voters -- that barred the state's judges from considering Sharia, or Islamic law, in formulating their rulings. According to Awad, the measure not only violated the First Amendment right to "free exercise" of religion, but also singled out Islam for "profound stigma."

IBRAHIM HOOPER

- Spokesman and co-founder of the Council on American Islamic Relations
- Wants "government of the United States to be Islamic sometime in the future"
- Downplays threat of Islamic extremism and declined to condemn Islamic terrorist groups

Ibrahim Hooper (formerly Doug Hooper) is a white American convert to Islam and one of the founders of the Council on American-Islamic Relations (CAIR). At present, he serves as a spokesman and "Director of Strategic Communications" for that organization. He holds a bachelor's degree in history and a master's degree in journalism & mass communication.

Hooper has candidly stated that while he does not endorse the violent tactics of Islamic radicals, he does share their desire to impose Islam on all of America. "I wouldn't want to create the impression that I wouldn't like the government of the United States to be Islamic sometime in the future," he told the Minneapolis Star Tribune in a 1993 interview. "But I'm not going to do anything violent to promote that. I'm going to do it through education."

Ten years later, in 2003, Hooper stated that if Muslims were ever to become a numerical majority in the U.S., they would likely seek to replace the Constitution with Islamic law (Sharia), which they view as divinely inspired and thus superior to all other legal systems.

In 1998 Hooper and CAIR denied Osama bin Laden's culpability for that year's bombings of two U.S. embassies in Africa. Despite the demonstrable links between the al Qaeda leader and the bombings, Hooper asserted that "a great deal of what happened is ... due to misunderstandings on both sides." Three years later, in the wake of the 9/11 attacks, Hooper again hedged on whether he thought bin Laden was responsible: "If Osama bin Laden was behind it, we condemn him by name." (Emphasis added)

Hooper attended an October 28, 2000 rally in Washington, DC, where Abdurahman Alamoudi, then-President of the American Muslim Federation, shouted to a cheering crowd: "We are all supporters of Hamas." In the event's aftermath, neither CAIR nor Hooper publicly criticized Alamoudi's comment.

On March 17, 2001, Hooper spoke at a "Conference on Palestine" held at the University of Michigan. The event was co-sponsored by a number of organizations, including the Global Relief Foundation, the International Action Center, the Islamic Association for Palestine, and CAIR. Also speaking at the event was Stephen Sosebee, head of the Palestine Children's Relief Fund. The conference began with the screening of a video titled The New Uprising, a reference to the Second Palestinian Intifada against Israel.

In June 2001, Hooper helped organize a "sit-in" where a dozen leaders of various American Muslim groups demonstrated outside the U.S. State Department. American Muslim Council Director Ali Ramadan Abu Zakouk used the occasion to declare that suicide-bombing attacks on civilian targets were a "God-given right" for Muslims. When Hooper later was asked whether Zakouk's assertion could be interpreted as a defense of terrorism, he claimed that he "did not hear" the statement. Videotape footage chronicling the event, however, clearly showed Hooper standing only a few feet away from Zakouk as he made the comments.

As the public voice of CAIR, Hooper has routinely characterized the U.S. government's counterterrorism initiatives as threats to the civil rights of American Muslims. For example, when the Justice Department asked visa holders from Middle Eastern countries to voluntarily submit to interviews by American authorities in the wake of 9/11, Hooper complained that the request sent "a chill through the community" by unjustly perpetuating "racial and religious profiling of American Muslims and Arab-Americans."

When the Washington Post in November 2001 asked Hooper if he would disavow the terrorist activities of Hamas and Islamic Jihad, he responded, "It's not our job to go around denouncing." He reprised the same theme in a 2002 interview with the Pittsburg Post-Gazette, refusing to condemn Hamas and Hezbollah because "we're not in the business of condemning." (By contrast, Hooper and CAIR have commonly condemned Israeli military strikes against Hamas and other Palestinian terrorist groups.)

When onetime Palestinian Islamic Jihad operative Sami Al-Arian was indicted by the U.S. government in 2003, Hooper appeared on the cable television program Buchanan and Press to defend Al-Arian's right to support "Islamic causes and the struggle of the Palestinian people to be free of Israeli occupation." He portrayed Al-Arian as the blameless victim of an organized conspiracy by "attack dogs of the pro-Israel lobby" seeking to bring about the "Israelization of American policy and procedures."

In 2004 Hooper said that after two decades of attending services at U.S. mosques, "I've never heard violence preached [therein]; I've never heard anti-Semitism or anti-Americanism preached." On other occasions, however, he has contradicted that assertion to some degree, arguing that the extremism found in mosques, while real, is less dangerous than the threat posed by critics of radical Islam, especially those on conservative talk radio. "There is a difference with hate speech at your local mosque and talk radio that reaches millions," says Hooper.

In a similar vein, Hooper equates conservative Christian televangelists such as Pat Robertson, Jimmy Swaggart, and the late Jerry Falwell with Islamic terrorists -- claiming that if given the opportunity, such individuals would commit mass murder against Muslims.

During Israel's 2006 war against Hezbollah (in Lebanon), Hooper said: "Our [American] government must end its support for Israel's campaign of terror in Lebanon and join an international effort to protect and bring humanitarian aid to the civilian population of that devastated nation."

In September 2006 Hooper stated publicly that CAIR did not "take money from the government of Saudi Arabia." Contrary to that claim, however, CAIR's ideological and financial connections to the Saudi Wahhabi establishment are numerous and well documented.

In late November 2006, shortly after airport police in Minneapolis had forcibly removed six Muslim imams from a U.S. Airways plane because of their bizarre behavior just before takeoff, Hooper said: "Unfortunately, this is a growing problem of singling out Muslims or people perceived to be Muslims at airports, and it's one that we've been addressing for some time." It was later learned that one of the imams was affiliated with a Hamas-linked organization and had developed a connection to Osama bin Laden during the 1990s.

In the aftermath of the U.S. Airways incident, CAIR filed a lawsuit against both the airline and the passengers who had complained about the six imams' suspicious behavior. In response to the suit, Republican congressmen Peter King and Steven Pearce crafted an amendment (which ultimately was passed by the House of Representatives) granting legal immunity to citizens who, in good faith, report suspicious behavior to authorities. Hooper nonetheless defended the CAIR lawsuit and suggested that the passengers in question had exhibited "malicious intent" by demanding that the imams be deplaned.

In December 2007, CAIR produced a media guide to "disabuse journalists of misinformation" about Islam. According to Hooper, his organization had developed this publication because the negative portrayal of Islam and Muslims in the media was "one of the hot-button issues for American Muslims and Muslims worldwide."

Representative Mike Chenault
Room 208 Alaska State Capital
Juneau, Alaska 99811

Dear Representative Chenault:

We are writing today to express our concerns on CSHB88, "An Act prohibiting a court, arbitrator, mediator, administrative agency, or enforcement authority from applying a law, rule, or provision of an agreement that violates an individual's right under the Constitution of the State of Alaska or the United States Constitution."

Within the Roman Catholic Church, we operate under Canon Law which could be considered "foreign law" as the bill is currently written. Passage of CSHB88 would impact decisions made by the bishops and or their canon lawyers on matters important within the church. For example, one of us could make the decision to close a parish within our jurisdiction, completely within the bounds of canon law. However, we could envision a situation where a suit gets filed by parishioners claiming the process that lead to our decision did not afford all of the constitutional protections to members of the congregation. This has happened in St Louis. A second example could be priests who could be canonically required to operate under Canon Law requirements that would have no bearing in a civil court.

However, of a larger concern is our Marriage Tribunals. The tribunals operate within the confines of Canon Law specifically in regards to marriages and divorces. The tribunal process allows for Catholic marriages, once the civil decisions are rendered, to be annulled allowing for remarriage within the Church at a future date. During the tribunal process often very personal information is shared about one person or the other in the marriage. Sometimes these people hold public positions within the community. While we respect civil law, the tribunal has nothing to do with civil law. This legislation could potentially allow for one party or the other to sue in civil court to obtain confidential information shared in the marriage tribunal office that had no bearing on a civil divorce case.

Re: House Bill 88
ACLU Review of Legal Issues

Chair Gatto, Vice-Chair Thompson:

Thank you for the opportunity to submit written testimony regarding House Bill 88, relating to the application of international law.

The American Civil Liberties Union of Alaska represents thousands of members and activists throughout the State of Alaska who seek to preserve and expand individual freedoms and civil liberties guaranteed under the United States and Alaska Constitutions. We have several concerns with the proposed legislation, outlined in greater detail below, and urge a DO NOT PASS vote by Members of the Committee.

Attack on Separation of Powers and Judicial Independence

Fundamentally, HB 88 is counterproductive legislation. This bill represents an attack on the separation of powers, an unwarranted mistrust of the state judiciary and an unnecessary interference in the function of Alaska's legal system.

It is a core function of both state and federal courts to determine what law is at issue in a given matter. The Alaska Legislature should not seek to legislate what law the courts can and cannot consider when deciding cases. By doing so, the Legislature violates the fundamental principle of judicial independence and the constitutional principle of separation of powers.[1]

Negative Impacts on Alaska Citizens and Businesses

Passage of HB 88 would harm the rights of Alaska citizens and businesses who travel and transact across international borders, and would also negatively impact the United States' standing in the global community.

In the normal course of business, organizations may voluntarily choose to waive certain constitutional rights. For instance, an individual generally retains the constitutional right to say what she thinks without restraint. U.S. Const., Amdt. I; Alaska Const., Art. I, Sec. 5. However, individuals regularly contract away their constitutional right to speak freely, for instance, by engaging in nondisclosure agreements. While the ACLU of Alaska strongly values constitutional rights, there are certainly legitimate and appropriate reasons why an informed, non-coerced waiver of such rights should be permitted and legally respected.

Contrary to these principles, the language of HB 88 presumes to disregard all waivers of constitutional rights, in any contract that contains a choice of law clause preferring the law of a foreign jurisdiction. For instance, proposed AS 09.68.140(b) states that if a contract contains a choice of law clause preferring foreign law and "if the interpretation or enforcement of the agreement would violate an individual's [constitutional] right," the contract must be read to preserve the constitutional right, not to waive it. The effect of the statute – by its literal terms – appears to be to nullify any waiver of constitutional rights where made in conjunction with a foreign choice of law provision.

Other examples of commonly waived constitutional rights include the right of medical privacy permitting medical records to be shared with a foreign medical provider, or a due process right to an official hearing or trial, such as a provision mandating that disputes go to an arbitrator. See, pg. 3, infra. The Alaska Legislature risks sweeping up a wide variety of commonplace waivers of constitutional rights in the bill as currently drafted.

HB 88 is structurally flawed in that it is not narrowly tailored to prevent coerced or uninformed waiver of rights. Its only caveat is that the contract must have a foreign choice of law provision. This overbreadth would result – should the bill pass – in exposing foreign

[1] In this regard, we draw the Committee's attention to the Opinion Letter of the Attorney General, dated March 21, 2011, "Re: HB 88," signed by Mary Ellen Beardsley, Assistant Attorney General ("Beardsley, AG Opinion"), wherein she notes: "Alaska courts will not apply a foreign law if application of the law would violate an individual's constitutional rights." Id. at 2. Thus, HB 88 does not provide any positive protections, and has only negative consequences.

partners to the potential that Alaska businesses may unilaterally and improperly evade their contractual obligations by using the Bill's provisions. This obvious legal flaw would make it highly problematic for Alaskans to conduct business with foreign individuals or organizations.[2]

Choice of Forum Provision

A similar problem attends subsections (c) and (d), which prohibit the application of choice of forum or venue contractual provisions, and the granting of motions to dismiss on the grounds of forum non conveniens, where a constitutional right could be impaired.

In the case of subsection (c), a business or person may have a valid, legally appropriate and commercially necessary reason to waive certain constitutional rights. But, the extremely broad language of the legislation would invalidate the contractual provisions.

An example of a problem with this language is presented by the Seventh Amendment to the United States Constitution, which guarantees the right to trial by jury in any civil case addressing a matter in value of at least twenty dollars. U.S. Const., Amdt. VII.

The United States jury system does not necessarily have a corollary in judicial proceedings in other countries. Not all countries apply a common law system, and fewer still have regular jury trials. HB 88 could thus be used to prevent the enforcement of any choice of venue or forum clause in any contract with a foreign company, or any forum non conveniens action, if the foreign court at issue does not guarantee a jury trial for civil action where $20 or more was at stake. This would seriously deter foreign individuals or corporations from doing business in Alaska.

Negative Impact on Elections to Arbitrate

Courts across the country encourage alternative dispute resolution, as an option to reduce the work-load on an often over-taxed judicial system, and as a benefit to the parties in reducing the potentially high costs of litigation. Many contracts include an arbitration clause. In some cases, parties may choose a specific arbitrator or alternate quasi-judicial forum. HB 88 would unnecessarily introduce uncertainty into the validity of these provisions, negatively impacting both the courts and the parties.[3]

[2] Again, it is instructive to note that Alaska's Attorney General has cited this problem as well. See, Beardsley AG Opinion, pg 2, "HB 88 might affect a foreign entity's willingness to do business with individuals or businesses in Alaska if it knows that provisions of the contract may be void by law . . . ."

[3] Of note, attorneys in Georgia, where a bill similar to HB 88 was introduced, testified against it. "Michael J. Broyde, academic director of Emory University's law and religion program, said he thinks 'the consequences of the bill have not been well thought out' partly because its restrictions on arbitrators and choice of venue would

HB 88 would generally strain our relations and standing with other nations. Opportunistic businesses and individuals could thwart efficient judicial enforcement by filing suit in Alaska and then demanding that the defendant respond in Alaska.

For example, a person with a contractual dispute with a Spanish oil services company[4] could (assuming that the matter had sufficient minimal Alaska contacts to establish personal and subject matter jurisdiction), file a suit for declaratory relief in Anchorage, even where all the evidence, witnesses, and items at issue were in Spain.

Even where such a suit would normally be dismissed as forum non conveniens and then re-filed in Spain, an Alaska court could be obliged to hear the case in Alaska, since the plaintiff would be deprived of her Seventh Amendment right to a jury trial if the case were heard in Spain.

While there may be foreign jurisdictions whose legal systems are so deeply unfair as to offend fundamental American values of fairness, there are many – such as Spain's – that do not. One should also note that the doctrine of forum non conveniens is one of mutual respect, which may be undermined where one nation flouts the respect owed to other nations.[5] Passage of HB 88, along with similar bills in sister states, could result in many American litigants finding themselves sued in foreign jurisdictions and unable to remove their cases to Alaska or other US state courts.

HB 88 signals to the rest of the world that Alaska believes that our judges have "little to learn from their counterparts in other nations . . . . This wholesale rejection of the value of consulting international law or foreign decisions in certain circumstances evokes years of 'American exceptionalism,' during which the U.S. was internationally criticized for exempting itself from human rights standards that were otherwise universal."[6]

'incapacitate Georgia companies as they engage in international commerce.' [¶] A bigger problem, he added, is that the bill 'violates the Federal Arbitration Act and becomes an unconstitutional exercise of state authority. Arbitration is a routine business exercise by people who are prepared to sacrifice some of their constitutional rights in return for reduced cost and expediency,' said Broyde, who also is an ordained rabbi and member of the Beth Din of America -- the largest Jewish law court in the country. Banning people from 'willingly submitting to an ecclesiastical tribunal' is 'inconsistent with traditional American practice.' Lawyers Speak Against Ga. Bill That Bans Use of Foreign Laws in State Courts, Kathleen Baydala Joyner, Fulton County Daily Report, February 07, 2011. http://www.law.com/jsp/article.jsp?id=1202480459397&Lawyers_Speak_Against_Ga_Bill_That_Bans_Use_of_Foreign_Laws_in_State_Courts&slreturn=1&hbxlogin=1.

A vote for HB 88 would have the effect of alienating U.S. allies and the commercial partners of Alaska companies, putting at risk U.S. interests at home and abroad. Indeed, the simple perception that the United States is ignoring its legal obligations puts Alaskan citizens and Alaskan companies seeking to do business internationally at risk. If potential foreign business partners believe that Alaska's courts will not enforce foreign judgments or adhere to the businesses' choice of law in their contracts, international companies may simply be unwilling to contract with Alaska businesses or establish commercial ties to our state. Given the ambiguity surrounding which laws Alaskan courts may consider, foreign investors may be wary of ever consenting to jurisdiction in our state courts.

Misrepresentations of American Public Policy Alliance and Others

It is important to note the misleading testimony that has been supplied at length in support of this bill by, amongst others, the American Public Policy Alliance. See, "Representative Civil Legal Cases Involving Shariah Law," November 8, 20101, American Public Policy Alliance, HB88 Supporting Documents-Relevant Cases APPA 11-08-10.pdf, http://www.legis.state.ak.us/basis/get_documents.asp?session=27&bill=HB88, implying that Sharia law is being used in US courts to the detriment of parties' rights. See, also, HB88 Supporting Documents-FAQ ALAC 03-14-11.pdf, "2. This bill is not needed because shariah is not a threat in the US and is not in our court systems. The Act is not simply about shariah but also transnationalism—or the documented creep of foreign and offensive laws being recognized by state and federal courts. More, shariah has already creeped into the legal systems of Western Europe, including 85 shariah courts operating openly with the full authority of law in the United Kingdom. There are numerous cases in which shariah doctrines have been invoked in the US. Here is a sampling of 17 examples from 11 states."

In fact, however, the document mostly contains examples of cases where Islam was involved due to a religious freedom claim, an arbitration claim, or in connection with a discussion of comity being granted to a decision of a foreign legal system that happens to be based on Islam. Other cases merely involve reference to Islam because it bears on the facts of the case. Such references to Islam are not impermissible.

The cases cited in this report illustrate exactly why Sharia law is NOT being improperly imposed in the United States and highlight the problem with this measure and others intended to target Islam.

Courts often consider a prisoner's religious beliefs and requirements when adjudicating a claim under RLUIPA, a law passed to protect the religious exercise rights of prisoners of all faiths. Thus, the court's discussion of an inmate's religious views in *Allah v. Jordana-Luste*r, which is the first case cited in the report, is appropriate. Were the courts to be barred from referring to religious laws in these cases, Christian and Jewish inmates (or inmates of other faiths) would be unable to provide support for their free exercise claims. In any event, the court did not accept the inmate's evidence in that case, and the inmate lost his claim for halal meat.

In other cases involving Islamic law, where it conflicts with our public policy, courts have refused to recognize it, just as they are required to do with regard to any rule that violates public policy. For example, in Aleem vs. Aleem, which is cited in the report, a Maryland court of appeals held that a Pakistani divorce granted in accordance with Pakistani customs (based on Islamic law) would not be recognized in Maryland because it conflicted with state public policy requiring fair and equitable division of assets.

In another case, when a New Jersey court held that a man's Islamic religious beliefs regarding sex with his spouse meant that he did not have the requisite intent to commit sexual assault, consistent with our public policy, the appeals court immediately reversed the decision and issued a restraining order to the petitioning wife.

Other cases involve courts enforcing agreements to present disputes for Islamic arbitration. But it is not unusual for a court to enforce an arbitration agreement where the parties agree in advance that they will take any disputes to a particular type of arbitrator. The court's enforcement is based on neutral principles of law and denying courts the ability to enforce such agreements could compromise arbitration itself as a means to settle legal disputes.

These cases show that our courts are very aware of their obligations to comply with public policy and do so when presented with any claims that may undermine that public policy, regardless of whether Islam or some other faith may be involved.

Potential for Needless Entanglement in Lengthy Litigation

Finally, we note that there are significant constitutional infirminties with respect to HB 88 and constitutional protections for the free exercise of religion and the establishment clause.

While the plain language of HB 88 refers only to "international law," in reviewing the constitutionality of HB 88 or any statute, the courts will necessarily look to legislative intent. In that regard, the Sponsor Statement will be reviewed by the courts as one element of that intent.

While the revised Statement does not reference Sharia, it is important to note that the original does so, asserting:

> HB88 offers a baseline law that provides a statutory framework for precluding constitutionally objectionable foreign laws and legal systems from finding their way into the state judicial system. One example of an offending transnational law is sharia—authoritative Islamic law that is applied as the law of the land in many countries around the world. Sharia is patently offensive to U.S. and Alaska constitutional law because it criminalizes apostasy (violation of Free Exercise of Religion) and blasphemy against Islam, Mohammed, and sharia itself (violation of > Free Speech). Sharia also violates principles of due process and equal protection by discriminating against non-Muslims and women.

HB 88 Use of Foreign Law, original Sponsor Statement, dated March 9, 2011, (emphasis added).

Conclusion

In sum, HB 88 is unnecessary, and its passage would cause real harm to Alaska's citizens, businesses, and judicial system. We urge you to oppose HB 88.

Please feel free to contact the undersigned should you require any additional information. We are happy to reply to any questions which Members of the Committee may have.

Dear Representative Gatto and Members of the House Judiciary Committee:

Thank you for the opportunity to submit our views on HB88. We appreciate your openness to the presentation by Father Pat Travers regarding our concerns on the effect this bill might have on the legitimate application of Canon Law in the governance of the Catholic Church in our State. We hope Fr. Travers' testimony clarified that the bill could upset a complex existing legal structure that has generally worked well to govern the application of religious law in the United States. This consists of State and Federal constitutional provisions, court decisions, statutes, and regulations governing religious freedom, avoidance of government entanglement in religious affairs, contracts, and such matters as choice of law and court jurisdiction and venue. From our perspective, this legal structure has safeguarded the application of Canon Law within its legitimate sphere of the internal governance of the Catholic Church and the religious affairs of its members. At the same time, it has so limited the applicability of Canon Law and other religious law systems as to prevent them from impinging on secular affairs and the rights and freedoms of those Americans who do not freely choose to be governed by these systems.

Yesterday, our counterparts in Florida, where a similar bill is being considered, brought to our attention the attached article from The Florida Independent of March 24, 2011. Without in any way endorsing the opinions expressed about the motivation of this or similar bills, we believe it illustrates the disruption of legitimate, useful, and freely entered legal arrangements that could result from such legislation. While the article focuses on examples involving Jewish and Islamic laws, these are quite similar to the examples we provided the Committee on ways a bill like this could disrupt such arrangements relying on Canon Law.

In light of these considerations, we respectfully request that HB88 not be reported out of Committee. Perhaps an immediate alternative would be a careful study, under the auspices of the Department of Law, of the current and prospective roles of religious legal systems in the lives of Alaskans. We would be very happy to cooperate in such a study. We believe it would show the current legal structures sufficiently prevent the abuses against with HB88 is directed. To the extent that further safeguards might be required, we would be ready to assist in their development.

Thank you for your consideration of our views, and for your service to the people of our State. Please feel free to contact any of us through the number below. Additionally, Fr. Pat Travers is available to answer any other concerns or questions you may have. He can be reached on his cell phone at 723-7303. Please be assured of our best wishes and prayers as you continue your service.

Explanation of Changes from CSHB 88 (STA), version I to draft CSHB 88 ( ) version D

March 30, 2011

CSHB 88 (STA) includes language about Alaska Native or American Native tribes.

However, we received information this week from an attorney who specializes in tribal law, Peter Putzier, with the Alaska Department of Law. We agreed with his suggestions for language change as follows:

This language will amend the uncodified law by inserting the following language on Page 1, Section 1:

> "This Act is not intended directly or indirectly to address questions of tribal law or application of such tribal law, or otherwise to address the intersection between state law and tribal law."

The language in CSHB 88 (STA) could be confusing under Section 2, (g)
Delete the following language on Page 2, Section 2, (g) Lines 27-28:

After States, [,EXCEPT THAT "FOREIGN LAW" DOES NOT MEAN NOR SHALL IT INCLUDE A LAW OF AN ALASKA NATIVE OR NATIVE AMERICAN TRIBE IN THE STATE].

Peter Putzier will be available online for questions regarding this CS or tribal laws.

2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB 114

Analysis

This bill proposes amendments to AS 10.25 by adding a new section that will allow an electric or telephone cooperative to engage in an opt-out "round-up" charitable giving program that allows the cooperative to round up customer bills to the next whole dollar amount. Amounts collected must be used for charitable purposes. Currently, all opt-out programs are prohibited under AS 45.45.930. The bill will amend AS 45.45.930 to create an exception for electric and telephone cooperatives organized under AS 10.25 that meet the opt-out criteria contained in the bill. In order to qualify for the exemption, the program must be a "round-up" program, and the cooperative must meet several criteria, including adequate notice of the program, disclosure on every bill that the round-up is voluntary, and an opportunity to ask for a full refund for up to three years.

There is no anticipated fiscal impact to Department of Law.

HB 114

"An Act relating to an opt-out charitable giving program offered by an electric or telephone cooperative"

House Bill 114 gives statutory authority for electric and telephone cooperatives to offer an opt-out charitable giving program to their members, when the program has been approved by a majority of the membership. More than 250 electric cooperatives across the U.S. have implemented similar successful programs.

House Bill 114 allows the cooperative's members the opportunity to participate in a charitable giving program that will round their monthly bill to the next whole dollar amount, not to exceed 99 cents a month.

Under HB 114, the participating cooperative would clearly have to identify on each monthly billing statement the amount voluntarily added to a member's bill, after rounding to the next whole dollar, and provide instruction on how to opt out of the program, should a member so choose.

The monies collected under HB 114 may only be used for charitable donations and members are given the opportunity to claim a full refund of all amounts they paid under the program for at least the three preceding years.

Based on the collective generosity of cooperative members, charitable donations will add up quickly. Funds will then be disbursed back into the community to benefit qualified organizations and help neighbors in need.

Additionally, HB 114 authorizes electrical cooperatives to provide weatherization and energy efficiency products and services to their members.

2011 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. CSHB114(L&C)

Analysis

This bill proposes amendments to AS 10.25 by adding a new section that will allow an electric or telephone cooperative to engage in an opt-out "round-up" charitable giving program that allows the cooperative to round up customer bills to the next whole dollar amount. Amounts collected must be used for charitable purposes. Currently, all opt-out programs are prohibited under AS 45.45.930. The bill will amend AS 45.45.930 to create an exception for electric and telephone cooperatives organized under AS 10.25 that meet the opt-out criteria contained in the bill. In order to qualify for the exemption, the program must be a "round-up" program, and the cooperative must meet several criteria, including adequate notice of the program, disclosure on every bill that the round-up is voluntary, and an opportunity to ask for a full refund for up to three years.

There is no anticipated fiscal impact to Department of Law.

Subject: Round up Utilities

I sent this to Mary Ann Shows email address as listed on Rep Seaton's email, but it came back and said there was no such email address. Maybe they left off the s.

I have property in Oregon. I participate in the Midstate Electric program to "Round-up" my bill each month and the money goes to a variety of social services. Since my bill is often a round number like the $18 a month utilities charge, I receive a discount for prompt payment, that amount is then rounded up and goes to the charities. It is a win-win situation. I don't really notice the change and maybe it comes to $5 a year, but I am sure it adds up when every customer participates. If you have not already researched the other utilities that use this concept, you should check in with Midstate Electric in Oregon. They are actually donating the amount they would be gifting their customers for paying on time. They could be charging a late fee instead. So it is pretty cool for them to support their community this way and it probably saves them money because their customers enjoying paying on time.

January 2011

About the program

Good¢ents, in the sense that it is a round up program, is not new. More than 250 electric cooperatives across the U.S. have implemented similar programs. And they have been wildly successful.

In 2010, GVEA's Member Advisory Committee suggested the co-op initiate a round-up program. The board of directors agreed it would benefit the cooperative and an amendment to the Bylaws allowing such a program was sent out for membership vote in the 2010 elections. This is how it was worded on the ballot:

> GVEA Bylaw, Section 8. Utility Bill Round-up Program
> The Cooperative may establish a program to permit members to round up their bills to the nearest dollar. The monies collected shall be used for charitable purposes in the Cooperative's service area. Members may be automatically included in this program, but may voluntarily choose not to participate in the program by request to the Cooperative.
> Discussion: … "This Section allows GVEA to form a fund to assist community organizations, but members may voluntarily choose not to participate. More than 250 electric co-ops have Operation Round Up programs. Approval of this amendment would make GVEA the first in Alaska with such a community-oriented program."

More than 70 percent of the membership that cast a ballot voted in favor of a round up program.

How the program will work

Good¢ents will round up a monthly electric bill to the next highest dollar. For example, a bill of $97.65 will round up to $98.00 with the additional 35 cents going to the Good¢ents fund. The small change, about 50 cents per bill per month, will add up quickly. The funds will be dispersed to qualified organizations and individuals in need on a quarterly basis by the Good¢ents Board of Trustees. The goal of the program is to help build a stronger community.

RCA Approval

In October, the RCA approved GVEA's amended tariff sheets for Good¢ents. At the same time, they cautioned us that Good¢ents may be in conflict with Alaska Statute 45.45.930, dealing with Opt-out Marketing Plans. Shortly thereafter, we received a letter from Senior Assistant Attorney General, Ed Sniffen, expressing the same concern.

GVEA had two options, hold fast to our attorney's written opinion that Good¢ents was not in conflict with AS 45.45.930, or pursue a legislative fix. We decided the best course of action was a legislative solution.

After meeting with Assistant AG Ed Sniffen and Senator Meyer's chief of staff, Josh Applebee about the situation, both agreed to support our efforts in a legislative solution.

Where we are now

Legislation has been introduced into the 27th Legislative session to formally authorize electric and telephone cooperatives to offer opt-out charitable giving programs. On January 21, 2011, House Bill 114 was introduced by Representative Steve Thompson (R), Fairbanks and co-sponsored by Mark Neuman (R), Big Lake. It was referred to the Labor & Commerce and Judiciary Committees.

HB 114 includes two provisions. The first to Alaska Statute 10.25.237, were it provides authorization for telephone or electric cooperatives to offer an opt-out charitable giving program. The second is an amendment to AS 45.45.930, which provides clarification that AS 45.45.930 does not apply to telephone or electric cooperative opt-out charitable giving programs.

RE: House Bill 114, Opt-out Charitable Giving by Cooperatives

Dear Sirs,

Cordova Electric Cooperative supports adoption of HB 114. One of the core tenants of the Cooperative model is that of democratic membership control. As a private, non-profit corporation solely owned by the rate-paying members of the Cooperative, the members are financially vested as equity owners. Members of a Cooperative have the freedom to adopt charitable giving programs to benefit the sustainable development of their communities either by a direct vote to amend their bylaws, or by a vote of their elected board of directors to adopt a policy. The Laws of the State of Alaska should not intervene.

In the opt-out charitable giving programs, the members are free to participate or decline thus retaining their freedom of choice in the matter. I strongly encourage you to recommend this bill for adoption, recognizing that it allows Cooperatives the freedom to exercise their democratic membership control to adopt either opt-in or opt-out charitable giving programs should they choose to engage in charitable giving programs within their communities.

Sincerely,

Clay R. Koplin

House Labor and Commerce Committee
Representative Kurt Olson, Chair
Capitol Building, Room 24
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Chair Olson, Vice-Chair Johnson and members of the House Labor and Commerce Committee:

I would like to go on record in support of an amendment to House Bill 114 that would add language to the Electric and Telephone Cooperative Act (Act) allowing electric cooperatives to finance the purchase of weatherization and energy efficiency products and services. Currently, the Act only allows cooperatives to finance the purchase of electrical and plumbing appliances, fixtures and apparatus.

Homer Electric Association, Inc. (HEA) has a Line of Credit program that offers financing to its members for the purchase of products covered under the Act. While this is a popular program, many of our members have inquired about using the Line of Credit program to purchase materials and products that would improve the energy efficiency of their home or business. Unfortunately, due to the limitations specified in the Act, HEA is unable to offer any assistance in the purchase of these types of products.

Homer Electric has worked very hard over the past several years to provide its members with information that will help lower their energy usage and manage their electric bill. Along with regular newsletter articles, web site information and media advertisements, HEA has sponsored Energy and Conservation Fairs to promote energy efficiency products and services. The fairs have attracted nearly 1,000 HEA members annually over the past two years.

As we continue to promote conservation, it makes sense to have energy efficiency and weatherization products included in the Line of Credit program.

We believe that HB 114 is an excellent bill and the proposed amendment will be a valuable addition to this legislation. Thank you for considering our request.

Sincerely,

Bradley P. Janorschke

MEMORANDUM February 9, 2011

SUBJECT: Sectional Summary of a Special 2011 Revisor's Bill Relating to a Criminal Law Issue (Work Order No. 27-LS0369\A)

TO: Representative Carl Gatto
Attn: Sarah Munson

FROM: Gerald P. Luckhaupt
Assistant Revisor

This is a sectional summary of a special 2011 revisor's bill. The bill is prepared under AS 01.05.036, which provides, in part, that the Legislative Affairs Agency, working in cooperation with the Revisor of Statutes > shall make recommendations to the legislative council concerning deficiencies, conflicts, or obsolete provisions in and the need for reorganization or revision of the statutes, and, at the direction of the legislative council, shall prepare for submission to the legislature legislation for the correction or removal of the deficiencies, conflicts, or obsolete provisions, or to otherwise improve the form or substance of any portion of the statute law of this state. . . .

As a preliminary matter, please note that a sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill -- the bill itself is the best statement of its contents.

Section 1 of the bill amends AS 11.71.170(b)(11) by correcting a misspelling of the drug "lorazepam." AS 11.71.170(b)(11) was enacted in 1982 and at that time a typographical error was made and "lorazepa*m" was spelled incorrectly as "lorazepa*n."

Section 2 of the bill provides an applicability provision to clarify that the correction that is being made in sec. 1 is not a substantive change to the law and that it applies generally to all persons who might be affected by AS 11.71.170(b)(11) before, on, or after the effective date of this bill. This provision is included out of an abundance of caution to ensure that former or ongoing criminal prosecutions are not called into question.

Section 3 of the bill provides an immediate effective date.

If you have any questions about the bill or this summary, please contact me at your convenience.

HB 116 corrects the spelling of a Schedule IVA controlled substance. Currently AS 11.71.170(b) incorrectly spells the substance "lorazepam" as "lorazepan". The bill corrects the spelling.

There is zero fiscal impact to the Department of Law from this bill.

Sponsor Statement - House Bill 124

"An Act requiring a person who commences a cause of action seeking to delay a project on state or private land to provide security equal to 10 percent of the value of the project to protect a person who is wrongfully delayed."

Natural resource development is the foundation that Alaska's economy rests on. For as long as Alaska has been a state, developers of all types have fought legal action seeking to wrongfully delay or stop an environmentally responsible and beneficial project from happening.

House Bill 124 makes a direct, simple and significant change to state statutes to protect project developers. If passed, anyone seeking to delay a project on state or private land, including land owned by a subdivision of the state, will be required to post a bond or letter of credit equal to ten percent of the value of the project. The bond or letter of credit must be issued by a financial institution based in the United States.

This will cover damages and reasonable attorney fees incurred by the individual; group or business financially harmed by the restraining order or preliminary injunction.

HB 124 has been referred to the House Judiciary Committee. I encourage all my colleagues to endorse this legislation.

Re: House Bill 127 -- relating to stalking and child exploitation

Dear Representative Gatto:

I am writing to request that you schedule House Bill 127 for a hearing in the House Judiciary Committee at your earliest convenience. HB 127 is a bill that builds on and refines legislation adopted by the legislature in the past several years to address the serious problems of sexual exploitation and domestic violence.

The bill expands the crime of stalking to prohibit placing a person in fear of death or physical injury using technology such as global position devices or devices that invade, record or photograph events in private places like the home or office. It also addresses the issue of young people sending explicit images of themselves to others in a way that seeks to protect the young person.

A sectional analysis is attached that describes each provision of the bill. I expect Annie Carpeneti, Legislative Liaison from the Department of Law, Criminal Division and Sue Stancliff, Legislative Liaison from the Department of Public Safety to testify regarding this legislation. No teleconference sites are expected. Thank you for your consideration of this request.

Sincerely,

Governor Sean Parnell
STATE OF ALASKA

January 24, 2011

The Honorable Mike Chenault
Speaker of the House
Alaska State Legislature
State Capitol, Room 208
Juneau, AK 99801-1182

Dear Speaker Chenault,

Together, we can better protect Alaska's children against abuse, exploitation, harm, and fear. To that end, and under the authority of Article III, Section 18, of the Alaska Constitution, I am transmitting a bill relating to the crimes of stalking, online enticement of a minor, unlawful exploitation of a minor, endangering the welfare of a child, sending an explicit image of a minor, harassment, distribution of indecent material to minors, and misconduct involving confidential information and probation.

The bill would strengthen Alaska laws related to sexual exploitation of children and domestic violence. The bill prohibits the creation of indecent images of children, online enticement of a child, and using a computer to solicit or entice a minor to engage in sexual behavior.

The bill would expand the crime of stalking to include those acts of following or monitoring the victim with a global positioning device, and using or installing a device to record or photograph events in the victim's home, workplace, vehicle, or on the victim's telephone or computer. These changes are in response to technologies that stalkers have available to terrorize victims.

Also, the bill would prohibit graphic texting, commonly known as "sexting." Perpetrators would be punished for distributing a sexually explicit image of a child under 16 years old.

The bill clarifies that conduct by predators outside the state that harm victims in Alaska may be prosecuted in this state. The bill also clarifies that a child under 16 years old may not be left with an individual who must register as a child kidnapper.

Finally, the bill would clarify that a court may order active supervision for probationers who are on felony probation. Active supervision in particular cases enhances public safety by requiring close supervision of certain offenders. Active supervision could also be provided to certain misdemeanants in the discretion of the commissioner of corrections.

I urge your prompt and favorable action on this measure.

Sincerely,

Sean Parnell
Governor

HB 127
STALKING AND EXPLOITATION OF A MINOR
Sectional Analysis

Sections 1 and 2 expand the crime of stalking by amending the definition of "nonconsensual contact". Stalking prohibits a person from engaging in a course of conduct that places another in fear of death or physical injury. "Course of conduct" is defined as repeated acts of nonconsensual conduct. The bill adds two ways that a defendant may contact a victim that is beyond the victim's consent. First, it includes following or monitoring the victim with a global positioning device. Second, it includes installing or attempting to install a device for observing, recording, or photographing events in the home, workplace, or vehicle of the victim, or on the victim's personal telephone or computer.

Section 3 raises the classification of the crime of online enticement of a minor for a person who is not required to register as a sex offender or child kidnapper from a class C felony (maximum term of imprisonment five years) to a class B felony (maximum term of imprisonment 10 years).

Section 4 raises the classification of the crime of online enticement of a minor for a person who is required to register as a sex offender or child kidnapper from a class B felony (maximum term of imprisonment 10 years) to a class A felony (maximum term of imprisonment 20 years).

Section 5 raises the classification of the crime of unlawful exploitation of a minor from a class B felony (maximum term of imprisonment 10 years) to a class A felony (maximum term of imprisonment 20 years).

Section 6 amends the crime of endangering the welfare of a child in the first degree by prohibiting a parent or guardian from leaving a child under 16 years of age with a person who is required to register as a child kidnapper. The law currently prohibits this conduct if the parent or guardian leaves a child with a person required to register as a sex offender.

Section 7 adopts a new crime – sending an explicit image of a minor. It would prohibit publishing or distributing an image of a minor's genitals, anus, or female breast if the minor is under 16 years of age and the publication or distribution was without the consent of the parent or guardian of the minor. The conduct would not apply to a minor under 16 years of age who publishes or distributes the minor's own image. The prohibited conduct would be a class B misdemeanor (maximum term of imprisonment 90 days) if the person publishes the image to one or two others; a class A misdemeanor (maximum term of imprisonment one year) if the person publishes the image to three or more others; and a class C felony (maximum term of imprisonment five years) if the person publishes the image on the Internet.

Section 8 makes a conforming amendment to AS 11.61.120(a)(6), harassment in the second degree, to make it clear that the new crimes of sending an explicit image of a minor in Section 7 are not included in the crime of harassment in the second degree.

Section 9 makes two amendments to the crime of distribution of indecent material to minors; first, to clarify that the person must know that the material distributed depicts the prohibited conduct; and second to clarify that if the minor to whom the material is sent is under 16 years of age, the defendant must be reckless as to that circumstance.

Section 10 adopts two new crimes – misconduct involving confidential information in the first and second degrees. The second degree offense prohibits a person from obtaining the confidential information about another person without legal authority or consent to do so. This conduct would be a class B misdemeanor (maximum term of imprisonment 90 days).

Misconduct involving confidential information in the first degree would prohibit a person from violating the second degree prohibition and using the confidential information to commit a crime or to obtain a benefit to which a person is not entitled, or injure or deprive another person of a benefit. This conduct would be a class A misdemeanor (maximum term of imprisonment one year).

Section 11 clarifies that a person may be prosecuted for online enticement of a minor and for sending an explicit image of a minor if the minor whose image is published, or with whom the person communicated, was in this state, even if the defendant was in another jurisdiction at the time he or she committed the prohibited acts.

Section 12 amends AS 12.55.125(i) (terms of imprisonment for persons who commit sex offenses) by conforming the terms of imprisonment for persons who commit unlawful exploitation of a minor or online enticement of a minor to the correct level in accord with the changes in Sections 3 – 5 of the bill.

Section 13 clarifies the law by stating that while the Commissioner of Corrections provides probation officers to the superior court for the active supervision of person on probation for felony offenses, the Commissioner may, at his or her discretion, also provide probation officers for the active supervision of persons released for misdemeanor offenses.

Sections 14 and 15 include the applicability and effective date provisions.

HB 127
STALKING AND EXPLOITATION OF A MINOR
Sectional Analysis (Revised)

Sections 1 and 2 expand the crime of stalking by amending the definition of "nonconsensual contact". Stalking prohibits a person from engaging in a course of conduct that places another in fear of death or physical injury. "Course of conduct" is defined as repeated acts of nonconsensual conduct. The bill adds two ways that a defendant may contact a victim that is beyond the victim's consent. First, it includes following or monitoring the victim with a global positioning device. Second, it includes installing or attempting to install a device for observing, recording, or photographing events in the home, workplace, or vehicle of the victim, or on the victim's personal telephone or computer.

Section 3 raises the classification of the crime of online enticement of a minor for a person who is not required to register as a sex offender or child kidnapper from a class C felony to a class B felony. This change, in addition to the amendments to AS 12.55.125(i) in the bill, would be to raise the penalty from a range of zero to two years for a first offense (maximum term of five years) to a range of five to 15 years for a first offense (maximum term of 99 years). Also refer to section 12 of this analysis.

Section 4 raises the classification of the crime of online enticement of a minor for a person who is required to register as a sex offender or child kidnapper from a class B felony to a class A felony. This change, in addition to the amendments to AS 12.55.125(i) in the bill, would be to raise the penalty from a range of one to three years (maximum term of 10 years) to a range of 15 to 30 years for a first offense (maximum term of 99 years). Also refer to section 12 of this analysis.

Section 5 raises the classification of the crime of unlawful exploitation of a minor from a class B felony to a class A felony for all offenders. Under current law the offense is a class A felony if the person has previously been convicted of unlawful exploitation of a minor, and it is a class B felony for other offenders. This change, in addition to the amendments to AS 12.55.125(i) in the bill, would be to raise the penalty from a range of two to 12 years or five to 15 years (depending on whether it is a first or second offense) to a range of 15 to 30 years for a first offense. Also refer to section 12 of this analysis.

Section 6 amends the crime of endangering the welfare of a child in the first degree by prohibiting a parent or guardian from leaving a child under 16 years of age with a person who is required to register as a child kidnapper. The law currently prohibits this conduct if the parent or guardian leaves a child with a person required to register as a sex offender.

Section 7 adopts a new crime – sending an explicit image of a minor. It would prohibit publishing or distributing an image of a minor's genitals, anus, or female breast if the minor is under 16 years of age and the publication or distribution was without the consent of the parent or guardian of the minor. The conduct would not apply to a minor under 16 years of age who publishes or distributes the minor's own image. The prohibited conduct would be a class B misdemeanor (maximum term of imprisonment 90 days) if the person publishes the image to one or two others; a class A misdemeanor (maximum term of imprisonment one year) if the person publishes the image to three or more others; and a class C felony (maximum term of imprisonment five years) if the person publishes the image on the Internet.

Section 8 makes a conforming amendment to AS 11.61.120(a)(6), harassment in the second degree, to make it clear that the new crimes of sending an explicit image of a minor in Section 7 are not included in the crime of harassment in the second degree.

Section 9 makes two amendments to the crime of distribution of indecent material to minors; first, to clarify that the person must know that the material distributed depicts the prohibited conduct; and second to clarify that if the minor to whom the material is sent is under 16 years of age, the defendant must be reckless as to that circumstance.

Section 10 adopts two new crimes – misconduct involving confidential information in the first and second degrees. The second degree offense prohibits a person from obtaining the confidential information about another person without legal authority or consent to do so. This conduct would be a class B misdemeanor (maximum term of imprisonment 90 days).

Misconduct involving confidential information in the first degree would prohibit a person from violating the second degree prohibition and using the confidential information to commit a crime or to obtain a benefit to which a person is not entitled, or injure or deprive another person of a benefit. This conduct would be a class A misdemeanor (maximum term of imprisonment one year).

Section 11 clarifies that a person may be prosecuted for online enticement of a minor and for sending an explicit image of a minor if the minor whose image is published, or with whom the person communicated, was in this state, even if the defendant was in another jurisdiction at the time he or she committed the prohibited acts.

Section 12 amends AS 12.55.125(i) (terms of imprisonment for persons who commit sex offenses) by conforming the terms of imprisonment for persons who commit unlawful exploitation of a minor or online enticement of a minor to the correct level in accord with the changes in Sections 3 – 5 of the bill.

Section 13 clarifies the law by stating that while the Commissioner of Corrections provides probation officers to the superior court for the active supervision of person on probation for felony offenses, the Commissioner may, at his or her discretion, also provide probation officers for the active supervision of persons released for misdemeanor offenses.

Sections 14 and 15 include the applicability and effective date provisions.

(A) spouse, child, grandchild, parent, grandparent, sibling, uncle, aunt, nephew, or niece, of the victim, whether related by blood, marriage, or adoption;

(3) "nonconsensual contact" means any contact with another person that is initiated or continued without that person's consent, that is beyond the scope of the consent provided by that person, or that is in disregard of that person's expressed desire that the contact be avoided or discontinued; "nonconsensual contact" includes

(A) following or appearing within the sight of that person;

(Sec. 1 ch 40 SLA 1993)

History Reports -

For Senate letter of intent in connection with the enactment of this section, see 1993 Senate Journal 1026 - 1027.

Decisions -

Constitutionality. - The potential due process and overbreadth problems in the definition of stalking do not require invalidation of the stalking statutes; rather, those problems should be resolved on a case-by-case basis. Petersen v. State, 930 P.2d 414 (Alaska Ct. App. 1996).

Sufficiency of evidence. - Grand jury evidence was sufficient for indictment for first-degree stalking, under AS 11.41.260, where there was a protective order in place against defendant who nevertheless made ongoing contact with victim, including numerous hang-up calls to the victim and victim's boyfriend, paging the victim when she attended one of her boyfriend's musical performances, and slashing tires on her and her boyfriend's cars. Kenison v. State, 107 P.3d 335 (Alaska Ct. App. 2005).

Construction of "contact". - Inclusion within AS 18.66.100(c)(2) of the phrase "or otherwise communicating" immediately after "contacting" strongly suggests that nonphysical contact must involve some element of direct or indirect communication and does not merely mean coming within view; further, "nonconsensual contact" in this section is not all that is needed for a crime to take place; the contact must also be "repeated," so that it is a course of conduct, and it must place the protected person in fear, and the need for these additional requirements to make stalking a crime argues against a construction that makes merely appearing in the sight of a protected person, without more, a crime. Cooper v. Cooper, 144 P.3d 451 (Alaska 2006).

Stalking of ex-wife as domestic violence. - Ex-husband's threatening communications to his ex-wife constituted stalking; these acts by the ex-husband were sufficient support for the issuance of a protective order under AS 18.66.990(3)(A) because stalking in the second degree is a crime involving domestic violence when committed against a former spouse. McComas v. Kirn, 105 P.3d 1130 (Alaska 2005).

Legitimate nonconsensual contacts and telephone calls not prohibited. - The stalking statutes do not prohibit telephone calls or other nonconsensual contact made for a legitimate purpose, even when the defendant knows that the person contacted may or will unreasonably perceive the contact as threatening. Petersen v. State, 930 P.2d 414 (Alaska Ct. App. 1996).

Husband admitted to having been at a mall at a time when his wife, who had sought a protective order against the husband, was also there, but he denied having seen his wife. Only knowing contact was required, but the superior court's error was harmless in holding that contact must be intentional because there was no conduct that amounted to"contacting" within the meaning of AS 18.66.100(c)(2); being in the mere presence of the husband's wife did not mean the husband was "contacting" his wife; the meaning of "contacting" had a normal meaning, and a nonphysical "contact" did not mean merely coming within view. Cooper v. Cooper, 144 P.3d 451 (Alaska 2006).

Cited in Prentzel v. State, 169 P.3d 573 (Alaska 2007).

Sec. 11.41.452. Online enticement of a minor.

(a) A person commits the crime of online enticement of a minor if the person, being 18 years of age or older, knowingly uses a computer to communicate with another person to entice, solicit, or encourage the person to engage in an act described in AS 11.41.455(a)(1) - (7) and

(1) the other person is a child under 16 years of age; or

(2) the person believes that the other person is a child under 16 years of age.

(b) In a prosecution under (a)(2) of this section, it is not a defense that the person enticed, solicited, or encouraged was not actually a child under 16 years of age.

(c) In a prosecution under this section, it is not necessary for the prosecution to show that the act described in AS 11.41.455(a)(1) - (7) was actually committed.

(d) Except as provided in (e) of this section, online enticement is a class C felony.

(e) Online enticement is a class B felony if the defendant was, at the time of the offense, required to register as a sex offender or child kidnapper under AS 12.63 or a similar law of another jurisdiction.

History -
(Sec. 1 ch 97 SLA 2005)
Effective Date Notes -

Section 1, ch. 97, SLA 2005, which enacted this section, took effect on November 28, 2005.

Editors Notes -

Section 5, ch. 96, SLA 2005, provides that this section applies "to offenses occurring on or after November 28, 2005."

Sec. 11.41.455. Unlawful exploitation of a minor.

(a) A person commits the crime of unlawful exploitation of a minor if, in the state and with the intent of producing a live performance, film, audio, video, electronic, or electromagnetic recording, photograph, negative, slide, book, newspaper, magazine, or other material that visually or aurally depicts the conduct listed in (1) - (7) of this subsection, the person knowingly induces or employs a child under 18 years of age to engage in, or photographs, films, records, or televises a child under 18 years of age engaged in, the following actual or simulated conduct:

(1) sexual penetration;

(2) the lewd touching of another person's genitals, anus, or breast;

(3) the lewd touching by another person of the child's genitals, anus, or breast;

(4) masturbation;

(5) bestiality;

(6) the lewd exhibition of the child's genitals; or

(7) sexual masochism or sadism.

(b) A parent, legal guardian, or person having custody or control of a child under 18 years of age commits the crime of unlawful exploitation of a minor if, in the state, the person permits the child to engage in conduct described in (a) of this section knowing that the conduct is intended to be used in producing a live performance, film, audio, video, electronic, or electromagnetic recording, photograph, negative, slide, book, newspaper, magazine, or other material that visually or aurally depicts the conduct.

(c) Unlawful exploitation of a minor is a

(1) class B felony; or

(2) class A felony if the person has been previously convicted of unlawful exploitation of a minor in this jurisdiction or a similar crime in this or another jurisdiction.

(d) In this section, "audio recording" means a nonbook prerecorded item without a visual component, and includes a record, tape, cassette, and compact disc.

Amendment Notes -

The 2000 amendment, effective May 23, 2000, inserted ", video, electronic, or electromagnetic" and "or aurally" in subsections (a) and (b) and deleted "printed" preceding "material" near the end of subsection (b).

The 2004 amendment, effective September 27, 2004, added paragraph (c)(2) and made related changes.

Decisions -

"Live performance". - This section covers private, noncommercial live performances; however, "live performance" does not include the situation in which a single adult requests a child to display his or her genitals to that adult in private. Braun v. State, 911 P.2d 1075 (Alaska Ct. App. 1996).

Statutory construction. - Defendant's interpretation of this section under the rule of lenity, alleging that it was absurd that he was permitted to have sex with someone between the ages of 16 and 18, yet he was prohibited from photographing someone between those ages, was not persuasive; the relevant provisions simply refer to a child under 18 years of age, and do not distinguish between child pornography produced or possessed for private purposes and that intended for distribution. State v. Parker, 147 P.3d 690 (Alaska 2006).

AS 11.61.127(a) forbids the possession of pornographic material that is generated by the conduct prohibited by AS 11.41.455(a), pornography that was generated by the use of a child under the age of 18; the government had to prove that defendant knew that this child pornography was in their possession and that defendant acted knowingly with respect to the circumstance that the pornography was generated illegally. Ferrick v. State, 217 P.3d 418 (Alaska Ct. App. 2009).

Joinder of offenses. - Where defendant was charged with sexual abuse of a minor, unlawful exploitation of a minor, distribution of child pornography, and possession of child pornography stemming from his sexual involvement with his girlfriend's minor daughter, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to sever the sexual abuse charges from the pornography charges because all charges stemmed from defendant's inappropriate relationship with the young girl and were connected. Ogletree v. State, - P.3d - (Alaska Ct. App. Aug. 19, 2009).

Solicitation of crime. - Where defendant was charged with soliciting the crime of unlawful exploitation of a minor based on his asking victims to take off their clothes and let him photograph them, defendant's argument that he did not "solicit" the crime because the victims could not be guilty of the intended crime was foreclosed by the provision of AS 11.31.110 that it is no defense that the person solicited could not be guilty of the crime that is the object of the solicitation. Braun v. State, 911 P.2d 1075 (Alaska Ct. App. 1996).

Defendant's convictions for soliciting the crime of unlawful exploitation of a minor which were based on his asking victims to take off their clothes and let him photograph them were erroneous since defendant did not ask anyone else to engage in the prohibited conduct, i.e., inducing a child to engage in one of the sexual activities prohibited by this section, and thus he did not commit the crime of solicitation. Braun v. State, 911 P.2d 1075 (Alaska Ct. App. 1996).

Aggravating factors. - Where the superior court found an aggravating factor at the defendant's original sentencing, he faced a sentence more severe than the four-year presumptive term for second felony offenders at the time of his sentencing for exploitation of a minor. Harris v. State, 980 P.2d 482 (Alaska Ct. App. 1999).

Conviction and sentence upheld. - See Depp v. State, 686 P.2d 712 (Alaska Ct. App. 1984).

Withdrawal of plea bargain denied. - Where defendant pleaded no contest to three felonies as part of a plea bargain, his decision to plead no contest was not materially influenced by his mistaken understanding concerning the consequences of winning a suppression motion; trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to withdraw his plea. Parker v. State, 90 P.3d 194 (Alaska Ct. App. 2004).

"Least serious" mitigator held inapplicable. - Defendant's alleged lack of intent to distribute pornographic photographs and videos of children, purportedly evidenced by his concealment of them in a locked briefcase in a closet in his house, even if proven by clear and convincing evidence, did not mandate a "least serious" mitigator. State v. Parker, 147 P.3d 690 (Alaska 2006).

Applied in Qualle v. State, 652 P.2d 481 (Alaska Ct. App. 1982); Harris v. State, 790 P.2d 1379 (Alaska Ct. App. 1990); Parker v. State, 151 P.3d 478 (Alaska Ct. App. 2006).

Cited in Lawrence v. State, 764 P.2d 318 (Alaska Ct. App. 1988); Scroggins v. State, 951 P.2d 442 (Alaska Ct. App. 1998); Labrake v. State, 152 P.3d 474 (Alaska Ct. App. 2007).

Sec. 33.05.020. Duties of commissioner.

(a) The commissioner shall appoint and make available to the superior court, where necessary, qualified probation officers and assistants.

(b) The commissioner shall fix probation officers' and assistants' salaries, assign them to the various judicial districts, and shall provide for their necessary expenses including clerical services and travel. The commissioner may assign to all probation officers and personnel any duties concerning the administration of the parole system as provided in AS 33.16.

(c) The commissioner shall by regulation

(1) establish standards for calibration, certification, maintenance, and monitoring of ignition interlock devices required as a condition of probation or as part of a sentence under AS 12.55.102 or another statute; and

(2) establish a fee to be paid by the manufacturer for the cost of certifying an ignition interlock device.

(d) The regulations in (c) of this section must require that the ignition interlock device operate reliably over the range of automobile environments, otherwise known as automobile manufacturing standards, for the geographic area for which the device is certified.

(e) The commissioner shall notify the manufacturer of the ignition interlock device when the device is certified. The commissioner may not certify an ignition interlock device unless the device prominently displays a label warning that a person circumventing or tampering with the device violates AS 11.76.140 and may be imprisoned and fined.

FISCAL NOTE #2

STATE OF ALASKA
2011 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB 127

Analysis

This bill amends the law relating to stalking by adding to the definition of nonconsensual conduct methods of contacting people with modern technology such as global positioning systems. It makes a clarifying amendment to AS 11.51.100, which prohibits endangering the welfare of a minor. It adopts new statutes to prohibit sending an explicit image of a minor and misconduct involving confidential information. It also increases the penalties for the crimes of online enticement of a minor and unlawful exploitation of a minor. The bill makes it clear that the commissioner of corrections may, in his or her discretion, provide supervised probation to a person on probation for conviction of a misdemeanor.

Although the bill would adopt new crimes we believe that they can be prosecuted with current resources.

FISCAL NOTE #3

STATE OF ALASKA
2011 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB 127

Analysis

This bill expands the definition of "nonconsensual contact" under stalking; creates a new crime for sending an explicit image of a minor without the consent of the minor's parent; and creates new crimes for obtaining confidential information of another person.

The bill also provides for the prosecution of an out of state individual for online enticement of a minor if the communications involve an individual in the State of Alaska. Finally, the bill specifically permits the Department of Corrections to provide active supervision to a person placed on probation for a misdemeanor offense.

Expanding the definition of nonconsensual contact, creating additional crimes, and providing for supervised misdemeanor probation will likely result in an increase in cases assigned to the Public Defender Agency. It is not possible to reliably predict the number of cases that will be assigned to the Agency, however. The Agency, therefore, submits an indeterminate fiscal note.

FISCAL NOTE #4

STATE OF ALASKA
2011 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB 127

Analysis

DOC averages two new incarcerations per year for the crime of enticement of a minor. This bill would increase the penalty for this crime from a Class C felony to a Class B felony. This change has the potential to increase mandays by 10,220 in FY12 thru FY17. Applying the current cost of care ($134.21 per day), the increase of cost could be in the range of $0.0 to $1,371.60 to DOC.

DOC averages two incarcerations per year for the crime of online enticement of a minor. This bill increases the penalty for this crime from a Class B felony to a Class A felony if the defendant was, at the time of the offense, a registered or required to register as a sex offender or child kidnapper. This would increase the penalty three years. Applying the current daily cost of care ($134.21 per day), this could potentially increase costs in the range of $0.0 to $734.80 to DOC.

DOC averages one new incarceration per year for the crime of unlawful exploitation of a minor. This bill would increase the penalty for this crime from a Class B felony to a Class A felony. This would increase the penalty three years. This has the potential to increase mandays by 5,475 beginning in FY12 thru FY17. Applying the current daily cost of care ($134.21 per day) could potentially add costs in the range of $0.0 to $734.80 to DOC.

Other provisions that the department is unable to quantify at this time but will closely monitor for potential fiscal impact are as follows:

- Adding Monitoring a Person with a Global Positioning Device or Similar Technology Means
- Adding Child Kidnapper to 2(A) under AS12.63
- Adding Sending and Explicit Image of a Minor in the Degree and Second Degree to Statute
- Adding Crimes Involving Minors Committed Out of State, Specifically Online Enticement to Statute
- Adding Online Enticement of a Minor to Statute

Re: House Bill 127
ACLU Review of Constitutional Issues

Chair Gatto, Vice-Chair Thompson:

Thank you for the opportunity to submit written testimony with respect to House Bill 127.

The American Civil Liberties Union of Alaska represents thousands of members and activists throughout the State of Alaska who seek to preserve and expand individual freedoms and civil liberties guaranteed under the United States and Alaska Constitutions. In that respect, we wish to advise you of constitutional issues with the Bill.

As you may know, the ACLU of Alaska Foundation is currently representing several Alaska bookstores and others in American Booksellers Foundation for Free Expression (ABFFE) v. Burns. The federal court has already granted a preliminary injunction, on First Amendment grounds, against AS 11.61.128(a).

Section 9 of H.B. 127 would narrow AS 11.61.128(a) to only criminalize the distribution of material "harmful to minors" by an adult if the recipient is under 16 years old and the adult is reckless regarding the recipients age or the adult believes the recipient is less than 16 years old. The legislation would also add a knowledge requirement as to the content being sent to the minor.

This bill is an improvement on AS 11.61.128(a) which was enjoined October 21, but even with these changes the law would still violate the First Amendment and the Commerce Clause of the US Constitution. We welcome the opportunity to work with the Attorney General and this Committee to amend Section 9 to make it constitutionally sound. We believe that modest changes to the bill would cure the constitutional problems in Section 9 while still providing law enforcement with the means to protect minors from adults looking to prey on them.

Please feel free to contact the undersigned should you require any additional information. We are happy to reply to any questions that may arise, or to answer informally any questions which Members of the Committee may have.

Thank you again for the opportunity to share our thoughts.

Sincerely,

Jeffrey Mittman

Re: Section 9 of House Bill 127

Dear Chairman Gatto and Vice-Chair Thompson,

The members of Media Coalition have asked me to communicate their concerns regarding H.B. 127 sec. 9. The trade associations and other organizations that comprise Media Coalition have many members throughout the country, including Alaska: publishers, booksellers and librarians as well as manufacturers and retailers of recordings, films, videos and video games and their consumers. Some of our members are plaintiffs in American Booksellers Foundation for Free Expression (ABFFE) v. Burns (preliminary injunction granted as ABFFE v. Sullivan) a First Amendment challenge to 11.61.128(a).

Section 9 of H.B. 127 would narrow AS 11.61.128(a) to only criminalize the distribution of material "harmful to minors" by an adult if the recipient is under 16 years old and the adult is reckless regarding the recipients age or the adult believes the recipient is less than 16 years old. The legislation would also add a knowledge requirement as to the content being sent to the minor.

Anne Carpeneti, Assistant Attorney General
Department of Law
Criminal Division
Juneau, AK 99801

Dear Ms. Carpeneti:

As a follow-up to yesterday's House Judiciary Committee hearing on House Bill 127, I would appreciate a written response to the following questions:

Sec. 1: 1) Page 2, line 13: What if the residence or vehicle is not in the victim's name?

Sec. 3,4&5: 1) Is raising the penalties necessary? Is this to cure a known deficiency in current law?

Sec 6: 1) Has leaving children with child kidnappers been a problem?

2) What if a child is left with a group of people and one of them is a sex offender or child kidnapper?

3) Page 3, lines 11-16: Should we amend the statute to allow children to be left with people whose charges have been dismissed? If so, can DOL suggest language for an amendment?

Sec. 7: 1) How will prosecution of a minor under this section be handled?

2) (a) What constitutes "publication" and "distribution"? Does DOL have suggested definitions we could add in an amendment?

(b)Would showing a picture on your phone to another person count as distribution or publication? Eg. If a 15 year-old girl texts an explicit photo of herself to her 15 year-old boyfriend and he shows his phone to his friend sitting next to him, is that publication and/or distribution?

3) If a minor (or anyone else) is convicted under this section, might they need to register as a sex offender in another state?

4) If a person distributed pictures of their infant niece/nephew in the bath, could they be convicted under this section?

5) Page 4, lines 5-7: What about posting a photo on a restricted access webpage where the user can make a photo "private" and only available for viewing under his/her login? It seems that under the definition of "internet", this would also be a class C felony, despite the fact that no one else can access the photo.

6) What is the definition of "female breast"?

Sec. 9: 1) Page 5, lines 8-9: What must an online bookseller do to avoid being reckless as to a purchaser's age? Is Amazon reckless by not asking for the customer's age when a customer is purchasing "indecent" materials? Need they ask for age? Ask for proof of age? What is the duty?

2) Would all online booksellers who sell materials to people in Alaska be subject to this section? There probably wouldn't be adequate notice that they are all now required to ask for a customer's age if they want to avoid prosecution in Alaska.

Sec. 11: 1) Doesn't current law already provide for this? Is this section necessary?

Sec. 14: 1) Page 9, lines 11-12: Does current law allow for active supervision of misdemeanants? Could active supervision be considered part of the punishment for a crime? If it could be considered as punishment and current law does not allow for active supervision of misdemeanants, could there be ex post facto issues with this section?

If you have any questions, please contact my legislative aide, Gretchen Staft, at 465-4940. Thank you very much for your time.

RE: Conceptual Amendment to HB 127

Given that HB 127 deals with predatory use of computers and telephones, I would like to offer a conceptual amendment to prohibit false caller identification. Anyone can download software off the Internet that allows them to make calls that show up on the recipient's cell phone or Caller ID as coming from another number. A predator could use this technology to convince an innocent victim that he is calling from the police department, a local school, or the home of a close personal friend. It is not my intention that this amendment should prohibit any activities by law enforcement or U.S. intelligence agencies. I simply want to insure that the State of Alaska prohibits the average person from using false caller identification to defraud or mislead our citizens.

This is a conceptual amendment, and as such I am open to whatever construction suits the members of the committee and satisfies the drafting attorney. I have included the following construction for the purposes of discussion.

"knowingly obtains confidential information about the other person or knowingly represents the other person's telephone number as their own for the purposes of misleading another, commonly known as false caller ID.

"(c) the telephone provision listed in (a) of this section does not apply to

(1) law enforcement agencies of the federal government, the state government, or a municipality; or
(2) intelligence or security agencies of the United States government"

Renumber the proceeding sections accordingly.

Sec. 44.23.080. Subpoena power of attorney general in cases involving use of an Internet service account. (a) If there is reasonable cause to believe that an Internet service account has been used in connection with a violation of AS 11.41.452, 11.41.455, or AS 11.61.125 - 11.61.128, and that the identity, address, and other information about the account owner will assist in obtaining evidence that is relevant to the offense, a law enforcement officer may apply to the attorney general or the attorney general's designee for an administrative subpoena to obtain the business records of the Internet service provider located inside or outside of the state.

(b) If an application meets the requirements of (a) of this section, the attorney general or the attorney general's designee may, consistent with regulations adopted under (i) of this section, issue an administrative subpoena to the Internet service provider requiring the production of the following records:

(1) the name and other identifying information of the account holder;

(2) the address and physical location associated with the account;

(3) a description of the length of service, service start date, and types of service associated with the account.

(c) A subpoena issued under (b) of this section must prescribe a reasonable time after service for the production of the information.

(d) At any time before the return date specified on the subpoena, the Internet service provider may petition a court of competent jurisdiction for the judicial district in which the provider resides or does business for an order modifying or setting aside the subpoena or for an order sealing the court record.

(e) If the Internet service provider refuses to obey a subpoena issued under (b) of this section, the superior court may, upon application of the attorney general or the attorney general's designee, issue an order requiring the Internet service provider to appear at the office of the attorney general with the information described in the subpoena.

(f) An Internet service provider who knowingly fails to produce the information required to be produced by the subpoena or court order is guilty of contempt under AS 09.50.010.

(g) Nothing in this section limits the authority of law enforcement from obtaining process from the court or through a grand jury subpoena to obtain the information described in (b) of this section.

(h) A person may not bring a civil action against an Internet service provider, its officers, employees, agents, or other person for complying with an administrative subpoena issued under (b) of this section or a court order issued under (e) of this section.

(i) The attorney general shall adopt regulations prescribing the manner of issuance of an administrative subpoena under (b) of this section.

 Sec. 15. AS 47.12.030(a) is amended to read:

(a) When a minor who was at least 16 years of age at the time of the offense is charged by complaint, information, or indictment with an offense specified in this subsection, this chapter and the Alaska Delinquency Rules do not apply to the offense for which the minor is charged or to any additional offenses joinable to it under the applicable rules of court governing criminal procedure. The minor shall be charged, held, released on bail, prosecuted, sentenced, and incarcerated in the same manner as an adult. If the minor is convicted of an offense other than an offense specified in this subsection, the minor may attempt to prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the minor is amenable to treatment under this chapter. If the court finds that the minor is amenable to treatment under this chapter, the minor shall be treated as though the charges had been heard under this chapter, and the court shall order disposition of the charges of which the minor is convicted under AS 47.12.120(b). The provisions of this subsection apply when the minor is charged by complaint, information, or indictment with an offense

(1) that is an unclassified felony or a class A felony and the felony is a crime against a person, other than a violation of AS 11.41.455;

(2) of arson in the first degree;

(3) that is a class B felony and the felony is a crime against a person in which the minor is alleged to have used a deadly weapon in the commission of the offense and the minor was previously adjudicated as a delinquent or convicted as an adult, in this or another jurisdiction, as a result of an offense that involved use of a deadly weapon in the commission of a crime against a person or an offense in another jurisdiction having elements substantially identical to those of a crime against a person, and the previous offense was punishable as a felony; in this paragraph, "deadly weapon" has the meaning given in AS 11.81.900(b); or

(4) that is misconduct involving weapons in the first degree under

(A) AS 11.61.190(a)(1); or

(B) AS 11.61.190(a)(2) when the firearm was discharged under circumstances manifesting substantial and unjustifiable risk of physical injury to a person.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Representative Carl Gatto, Chair
House Judiciary Committee

FROM: Gretchen Staft, Legislative Aide
Representative Max Gruenberg

DATE: March 10, 2011

RE: Amendment to Section 7 of CSHB 127(JUD), Version M

The attached amendment would eliminate the provision on page 4, line 2 of CSHB 127(JUD) which sets the penalty for distribution of an explicit image of a minor to one or two people as a violation. This is because it came to our attention that the penalty under this provision for distributing a nude picture of a minor is a lesser offense than distributing a nude picture of an adult, which is a class B misdemeanor under AS 11.61.120(a)(6). It seems that it was not the intention of the Department of Law or the members of the committee that we treat the distribution of nude pictures of minors as a lesser offense than the distribution of the same types of photos of adults. This amendment would simply make sending an explicit image of a minor to "another person" a class B misdemeanor, which is on par with the penalty for distributing explicit pictures of an adult under AS 11.61.120(a)(6). Distributing an explicit image of a minor to a publicly-accessible website would remain a class A misdemeanor.

Dear Representative Gatto:

As the House Judiciary Committee considers amendments to House Bill 127 it may be helpful to recognize how the new offense created in Section 7 of the bill ("Sending An Explicit Image of a Minor") would be managed in the juvenile justice system.

Law enforcement officers refer minors to the Division of Juvenile Justice when the minors are alleged to have violated criminal laws. The Division assesses each minor and may provide any of a range of responses and services to the minor and victims depending on the seriousness of the offense, the risks for future offending, the needs of the victims, and the social and personal needs presented by the minor. For example, a youth who is referred to the Division for a misdemeanor and who has involved parents, a strong academic record, remorse for his behavior, no prior involvement with us, and other protective factors will likely have their offense handled outside of the formal court process. This youth might be given the opportunity to repair the harm he has done by writing a letter of apology to the victim, paying restitution, or participating in counseling. If he meets these expectations, the referral will be closed. On the other hand, a youth who is referred to the Division for the same misdemeanor, but whose parents show little concern for his behavior, who is failing in school, or has a history of disruptive behavior or substance abuse, would be more likely to have his offense petitioned to court. If adjudicated delinquent by a court, the youth may be placed under probation supervision or in the department's custody so the Division can be more assertive in ensuring that he is held accountable and receiving the services he needs.

In managing youth who would be referred to us on the new offense, "Sending An Explicit Image of a Minor," the Division would use a similar intake assessment process to determine the most appropriate response.

Some of the discussion about this bill has included a suggestion to classify "Sending an Explicit Image of a Minor" as a violation when the individual distributes an explicit image of a minor to one or two people. Note that because violations are non-criminal offenses they are not referred to the Division of Juvenile Justice, but are instead managed through District Courts. District Court management of a violation typically would entail a court appearance or payment of a fine, and the court records about the offense would be publicly available. In contrast, if the offense of sending an explicit image of a minor to one or two people is classified as a misdemeanor, the offense would be referred to the Division of Juvenile Justice, which would seek to tailor its response to the needs of both the offender and the victim. Juvenile delinquency court records are sealed after a youth turns 18, and Division of Juvenile Justice agency records are not disclosable except under the specific conditions provided in AS 47.12.310, AS 47.12.315, and AS 47.12.320.

Please let me know if I can provide further information.

Tony Newman

Re: Memo in Opposition to Section 9 of House Bill 127 and proposed amendments

Dear Chairman Gatto and Vice Chairman Thompson,

The members of Media Coalition have asked me to communicate their concerns regarding H.B. 127 sec. 9. The trade associations and other organizations that comprise Media Coalition have many members throughout the country, including Alaska: publishers, booksellers and librarians as well as manufacturers and retailers of recordings, films, videos and video games and their consumers. Some of our members are plaintiffs in American Booksellers Foundation for Free Expression (ABFFE) v. Burns, a First Amendment challenge to 11.61.128(a). (D. Alaska 3:10-CV-193 Oct. 20, 2010). A preliminary injunction was granted October 20, 2010 barring enforcement of the law as enacted last spring.

Section 9 of H.B. 127 would narrow AS 11.61.128(a) to only criminalize the distribution of material "harmful to minors" by an adult if the recipient is under 16 years old and the adult is reckless regarding the recipients age or the adult believes the recipient is less than 16 years old. The legislation would also add a knowledge requirement as to the content being sent to the minor.

This bill is an improvement on AS 11.61.128(a), but even with these changes the law would still violate the First Amendment. We welcome the opportunity to work with the Committee to amend Section 9 to make it constitutionally sound. We believe that small changes to the bill would cure the constitutional problems in Section 9 while still providing law enforcement with the means to protect minors from adults looking to prey on them. I have attached to this letter our proposed changes to the bill which we ask the Committee to consider.

In addition to ABFFE v. Burns, there is a substantial body of case law striking down similar state and federal legislation that restricted such content on the Internet. The U.S. Supreme Court has already declared unconstitutional two federal laws that restricted the availability of sexual matter inappropriate for minors on the Internet. Reno v. ACLU, 117 S.Ct. 2329 (1997); Ashcroft v. ACLU, 534 F.2d 181 (3d Cir 2008), cert. den. 129 Sup. Ct. 1032

Executive Director: David Horowitz Chair: Judith Platt, Association of American Publishers
Immediate past Chair: Chris Finan, American Booksellers Foundation for Free Expression Treasurer: Vans Stevenson, Motion Picture Association of America
General Counsel: Michael A. Bamberger, SNR Denton US LLP

(2009). In addition to the ruling in the Third Circuit Court of Appeals, four other U.S. Courts of Appeal have struck down laws banning material harmful to minors on the Internet. See, PSINet v. Chapman, 63 F.3d 227 (4th Cir. 2004); American Booksellers Foundation for Free Expression v. Dean, 342 F.3d 96 (2d Cir 2003); Cyberspace Communications, Inc. v. Engler, 238 F.3d 420 (6th Cir. 2000); ACLU v. Johnson, 194 F.3d 1149 (10th Cir. 1999). Three more state laws have been struck down by U.S. District Courts. See, Southeast Booksellers v. McMasters 282 F. Supp 2d 1180 (D. S.C. 2003); ACLU v. Goddard, Civ No. 00-0505 TUC AM (D. Ariz. 2002); American Libraries Ass'n v. Pataki 969 F. Supp. 160 (S.D. 1997). Most recently, Massachusetts enacted a law very similar to AS 11.61.128(a). A legal challenge to the law was brought by some of the same plaintiffs as challenged Alaska's law and a preliminary injunction has been granted barring the statute's enforcement. American Booksellers Foundation for Free Expression v. Coakley, 2010 WL 4273802 (D. Mass. 2010). The legislature is considering a bill supported by the Attorney General, similar to what we are proposing to this Committee, that the communication must directed to specific which the sender has actual knowledge or believes is a minor. If passed, this bill will resolve this case.

The reckless standard does not overcome the First Amendment case law cited above. It is an inadequate knowledge requirement for criminalizing distribution of harmful to minors material, particularly on the Internet. Unlike a brick and mortar store, there is no way to know whether a particular person receiving sexually frank material is a minor or an adult. So there is no reasonable way to restrict access to such material solely to adults. As the Supreme Court found, anyone who makes material available on the Internet through a website, listserve or chat room knows that there is a reasonable likelihood that there are minors accessing their content. With hundreds or thousands of people accessing a website or chat room, it is inevitable that a minor is among the visitors. To assume there are no minors accessing a site would be reckless regarding a minor's presence. Thus, the effect of banning the dissemination on the Internet of material "harmful to minors" is to force a provider of such material to deny access to both minors and adults, depriving adults of their First Amendment rights or to risk being prosecuted.

We appreciate the chance to share our concerns with the Judiciary Committee. If you would like to discuss further our position on this bill, please contact me at 212-587-4025 #3 or at horowitz@mediacoalition.org.

Respectfully submitted,

/s/ David Horowitz

(a) The commissioner shall appoint and make available to the superior court, when ordered under AS 12.55.015(a), a qualified probation officer for the active supervision of a person placed on probation for a felony offense. The commissioner may provide active supervision to a person placed on probation for a misdemeanor offense.

* Sec. 13. AS 44.23.080 is repealed and reenacted to read:

Sec. 44.23.080. Subpoena power of attorney general in cases involving use of an Internet service account. (a) If there is reasonable cause to believe that an Internet service account has been used in connection with a violation of AS 11.41.452, 11.41.455, or AS 11.61.125 - 11.61.128, and that the identity, address, and other information about the account owner will assist in obtaining evidence that is relevant to the offense, a law enforcement officer may apply to the attorney general or the attorney general's designee for an administrative subpoena to obtain the business records of the Internet service provider located inside or outside of the state.

(b) If an application meets the requirements of (a) of this section, the attorney general or the attorney general's designee may issue an administrative subpoena to the Internet service provider requiring the production of the following records:

(1) the name and other identifying information of the account holder;

(2) the address and physical location associated with the account;

(3) a description of the length of service, service start date, and types of service associated with the account.

(c) A subpoena issued under (b) of this section must prescribe a reasonable time after service for the production of the information.

(d) Service of a subpoena issued under (b) of this section may be by any method authorized by law or acceptable to the Internet service provider. At any time before the return date specified on the subpoena, the Internet service provider may petition a court of competent jurisdiction for the judicial district in which the provider resides or does business for an order modifying or quashing the subpoena or for an order sealing the court record.

(e) If the Internet service provider refuses to obey a subpoena issued under (b) of this section, the superior court may, upon application of the attorney general or the attorney general's designee, issue an order requiring the Internet service provider to appear at the office of the attorney general with the information described in the subpoena.

(f) An Internet service provider who knowingly fails to produce the information required to be produced by the subpoena or court order is guilty of contempt under AS 09.50.010.

(g) Nothing in this section limits the authority of law enforcement from obtaining process from the court or through a grand jury subpoena to obtain the information described in (b) of this section.

The minor shall be charged, held, released on bail, prosecuted, sentenced, and incarcerated in the same manner as an adult. If the minor is convicted of an offense other than an offense specified in this subsection, the minor may attempt to prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the minor is amenable to treatment under this chapter. If the court finds that the minor is amenable to treatment under this chapter, the minor shall be treated as though the charges had been heard under this chapter, and the court shall order disposition of the charges of which the minor is convicted under AS 47.12.120(b). The provisions of this subsection apply when the minor is charged by complaint, information, or indictment with an offense

(1) that is an unclassified felony or a class A felony and the felony is a crime against a person, other than a violation of AS 11.41.455;

(2) of arson in the first degree;

(3) that is a class B felony and the felony is a crime against a person in which the minor is alleged to have used a deadly weapon in the commission of the offense and the minor was previously adjudicated as a delinquent or convicted as an adult, in this or another jurisdiction, as a result of an offense that involved use of a deadly weapon in the commission of a crime against a person or an offense in another jurisdiction having elements substantially identical to those of a crime against a person, and the previous offense was punishable as a felony; in this paragraph, "deadly weapon" has the meaning given in AS 11.81.900(b); or

(4) that is misconduct involving weapons in the first degree under

(A) AS 11.61.190(a)(1); or

(b) Sections 12 and 13 of this Act apply to offenses occurring before, on, or after the effective date of this Act.

MEMORANDUM February 25, 2011

SUBJECT: Bill Section 10 -- Provision Disclaiming Limitation on Civil Relief (CSHB 127(JUD) - Work Order No. 27-GH1840\M)

TO: Representative Carl Gatto
Chair of the House Judiciary Committee
Attn: Sarah Munson

FROM: Doug Gardner
Director

Enclosed is the draft CS(JUD) you requested. I have a concern with sec. 10 of the draft. Section 10 creates two new crimes dealing with ~~misconduct involving~~ confidential information, AS 11.76.113 and 11.76.115. Both sections contain a subsection -- subsection (b) in AS 11.76.113, and subsection (c) in AS 11.76.115 -- that provides:

> Conviction under this section does not limit a person's ability to obtain civil relief from another person.

As drafted, the goal of these subsections is unclear.

If the goal of these subsections is to clarify that the existence of this new crime does not interfere with a person's right to seek damages or another civil remedy from another person then neither subsection is needed. AS 11.81.210 provides:

> Sec. 11.81.210. Limitation on applicability. This title does not bar, suspend, or otherwise affect any right to or liability for damages, penalty, forfeiture, or other remedy authorized by law to be recovered or enforced in a civil action, regardless of whether the conduct involved in the proceeding constitutes an offense defined in this title.

Providing a special statement that just applies to these two new crimes could eventually lead a court to conclude that this general civil remedy savings clause does not actually do what we think it does and possibly limit the authority of a victim of a crime proscribed by another law from seeking civil relief.[1]

[1] The reasoning would be:

> If AS 11.81.210 means what it says why would the legislature adopt these new subsections? Obviously AS 11.81.210 must not mean what it says hence the need to adopt subsection (b) type language for every crime in Title 11.

The language of these new subsections can also be interpreted in a way that may not have been intended. The subsections may mean that a person who is convicted under these two new crimes is not limited in seeking civil relief from another person. That is, the defendant convicted of one of these new crimes is not prevented from defending in a civil suit and denying that the offense occurred or from suing the victim or another person and asserting that the other person is liable in the civil action. This would amount to a major change in the law. Normally, a defendant who is convicted of a crime is estopped from denying that the offense occurred or that the defendant committed the crime. See, e.g., Pomeroy v. Rizzo, 182 P.3d 1185 (Alaska 2008); Lamb v. Anderson, 147 P.3d 736 (Alaska 2006); Burcina v. City of Ketchikan, 902 P.2d 817 (Alaska 1995). Subsection (b) of these two new crimes appears to abrogate this line of case law in Alaska.

The other issue that the committee may want to address, is placement of proposed AS 11.76.113 and 11.76.115 in statute. AS 11.76 contains statutes that contain offenses that may not fit well with the subject matter of other chapters. In the case of AS 11.76.113 and 11.76.115, there is an argument that these proposed sections fit better in AS 11.56, Article 6. In fact, given the similarity between AS 11.56.860 (misuse of confidential information) and proposed AS 11.76.113 and 11.76.115, it would not be a difficult drafting assignment to combine existing AS 11.56.860 with AS 11.76.113 and 11.76.115 into a first and second degree offense if the committee chose to do so by way of a conceptual amendment.

"An Act relating to prohibiting the use of cellular telephones by minors when driving a motor vehicle; and providing for an effective date."

Our automobile insurance rates illustrate the well-established fact that younger and less experience drivers have more vehicle accidents than older drivers. Today, a growing body of evidence shows that use of cell phones increases risk of accident for all drivers, but especially for younger ones.

Each year, Alaska sees an increase in the number of motor vehicle accidents involving the use of cellular phones by drivers. Between 2002 and 2008 there were 399 traffic accidents involving cell phones in Alaska. The largest group, about 36 percent, involved drivers between 16 and 20 years old, although they make up only about 7.4% of Alaskan drivers.

Additionally, people between 16 and 24 are the most frequent cell phone users. While drivers age 21 or older with cell phones are about equally likely to use their cell phones for outgoing calls as they are to take incoming calls, cell phone-using drivers age 16-20 are more likely to use their cell phones to take incoming calls than they are to make outgoing calls while driving.

Other statistics show:

- 16 and 17 year old drivers have the highest fatality rate in car crashes.
- For the 16-to-20 age group, the crash fatality rate in 2004 was nearly twice as high as other age groups
- Motor vehicle crashes are number 1 cause of death among teenagers

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) has gathered data that nearly 25% of all vehicle accidents directly involve the use of cell phones. By limiting a minor's use of a cell phone while driving, we can make our roads safer for everyone.

STATE OF ALASKA
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. CSHB 128(TRA)

Analysis

HB 128 prohibits a person under 18 years of age from driving on a highway or vehicular way while using a cell phone. It is an infraction. A law enforcement officer may not stop a minor solely for using a cell phone, but only if the peace officer is otherwise authorized to stop the vehicle may the person be cited.

Passage of this legislation would have no foreseeable fiscal impact on the Department of Law.

STATE OF ALASKA
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. CSHB 128(TRA)

Analysis

This legislation would amend AS 28.35 by adding a new section that would prohibit the use of cellular telephones by those under 18 years of age when driving a motor vehicle. Violation of this legislation would be an infraction and considered a secondary traffic offense.

It is not estimated that this bill will significantly increase the workload of the division of Alaska State Troopers. There is no fiscal impact to the AST as a result of this legislation.

Alaska Bill Bans Teens on Cellphones While Driving

By the Associated Press

Austin Baird

6:59 AM AKDT, March 15, 2012

JUNEAU, Alaska

A divided House committee has advanced a bill that would prohibit teens from talking on the phone while driving.

advertisement

Anchorage Democratic Rep. Berta Gardner's HB128 would allow police to give citations only after someone has been pulled over for another violation.

The bill made it through the House Transportation Committee unopposed two weeks ago, but it narrowly cleared the House Judiciary Committee on Wednesday on a 4-3 vote.

Republican Reps. Wes Keller, Bob Lynn and Lance Pruitt opposed moving the bill, saying it goes too far.

Keller said his vote was mainly because he believes the bill would help future prohibitions of cellphone use while driving, which has been a point of contention among legislators this year. Lynn said he opposed the bill because he feels that teens need to be treated like adults.

Gardner said both criticisms ignore the overwhelming safety concerns caused by distracted teen drivers. She said she fought a law requiring adults to wear seat belts, because she believes the risk is theirs to take.

"But it's a different story when you're putting other people at risk," Gardner said, adding that she doubts broader bans of cellphone use while driving will find much support this session.

Judiciary Chair Carl Gatto supported the bill's advancement through his committee, but he voiced reservations.

"We're nibbling at the apple," Gatto said "I hope we can come to agreement on the larger issue."

The bill is ready for a floor vote.

Committee acts to bar minors from using cell phones while driving

Concerns expressed about impulsive teens and 'emotional' girls

Posted: March 15, 2012 - 12:10am

By Pat Forgey

JUNEAU EMPIRE

Worried about sometimes-emotional teenage girls and other minors driving while talking on cell phones, a legislative committee Wednesday took steps to stop it.

A divided House Judiciary Committee passed House Bill 128, which would bar 16- and 17-year-olds from using cell phones while driving.

The action comes after the failure last year of a bill sponsored by Rep. Cathy Muñoz, R-Juneau, which would have banned anyone from using cell phones while driving.

HB 128's sponsor, Rep. Berta Gardner, told the Judiciary Committee the leading cause of traffic accidents for young people was inexperience and distractions, and that those under 18 should wait until they were more seasoned to combine phone usage with driving.

"They're most likely to be impulsive, and most easily distracted," Gardner said.

Drivers can also see their judgment impaired when they're emotionally upset, she said.

Committee chairman Carl Gatto, R-Palmer, said that teens often get emotionally upset.

"Probably the girls," agreed Gardner, the parent of two children, including a girl.

Not everybody agreed teens were most at risk.

"I don't think teenagers as a group need to be coddled," said Rep. Bob Lynn, R-Anchorage.

Teens may be inexperienced at driving, but they also have excellent reflexes, which can make up for that, he said.

Teens are easy to go after because they don't have lobbyists and don't vote, he said.

Lynn called limiting what teenagers can do "the camel's nose under the tent" for other limits.

Passage of HB 128 may lead to the state targeting other groups that have higher rates of accidents, he said.

"If we pass this, who's the next group that has a high rate of accidents, would it be senior citizens?" asked the 79-year-old Lynn.

Gardner said she understood the civil liberty argument, and that she personally didn't like seat belt laws.

People should have a right to be foolish if they want to be, she said.

The difference with cell phone usage, she said, was that distracted drivers impact everyone else on the road.

Gardner said that she, like many parents, had barred their children from using cell phones while driving.

"As a parent I unilaterally banned it for my house, but I think some parents would like to have some backup," she said.

Rep. Mike Hawker, R-Anchorage, said banning cell phones for teen drivers conflicted with his libertarian view that the government shouldn't be legislating common sense.

However, he said his legislative survey shows nearly 80 percent support for a ban and he'd be supporting it.

"I represent my constituents, and I respect the counsel they've given me," Hawker said.

Gatto, who had led opposition to Muñoz' bill last year, voted in favor of Gardner's more limited ban.

Muñoz' failed bill would have allowed use of hands-free cell phones, however, something that Gardner's bill doesn't allow. Muñoz is co-sponsor of Gardner's bill.

Gardner's cell phone ban for minor drivers makes usage a secondary offense, meaning it can be enforced along with something else, but a police officer can't stop a teen driver for cell phone use alone.

Gatto told Gardner he'd support the measure, but no further restrictions on drivers' rights.

Those wanting to restrict cell phone usage will get no more bites of the apple, he said.

"No more nibbling at the apple, this is the last and final nibble," he said.

Muñoz, though, said she'd still like to see a broader ban on drivers using cell phones, but praised the passage of Garner's bill.

"This is a good first step," she said.

House Rules Committee Chairman Craig Johnson, R-Anchorage, now decides when the bill goes to the House floor for a final vote. He opposed the ban in the Transportation Committee earlier in the process.

JUNEAU, Alaska— A divided House committee has advanced a bill that would prohibit teens from talking on the phone while driving.

Topics

- Justice System
- U.S. House Committee on the Judiciary

Maps

- Juneau, AK, USA

Anchorage Democratic Rep. Berta Gardner's HB128 would allow police to give citations only after someone has been pulled over for another violation.

The bill made it through the House Transportation Committee unopposed two weeks ago, but it narrowly cleared the House Judiciary Committee on Wednesday on a 4-3 vote.

Republican Reps. Wes Keller, Bob Lynn and Lance Pruitt opposed moving the bill, saying it goes too far.

Keller said his vote was mainly because he believes the bill would help future prohibitions of cellphone use while driving, which has been a point of contention among legislators this year. Lynn said he opposed the bill because he feels that teens need to be treated like adults.

Gardner said both criticisms ignore the overwhelming safety concerns caused by distracted teen drivers. She said she fought a law requiring adults to wear seat belts, because she believes the risk is theirs to take.

"But it's a different story when you're putting other people at risk," Gardner said, adding that she doubts broader bans of cellphone use while driving will find much support this session.

Judiciary Chair Carl Gatto supported the bill's advancement through his committee, but he voiced reservations.

"We're nibbling at the apple," Gatto said "I hope we can come to agreement on the larger issue."

The bill is ready for a floor vote.

Cellphone ban cuts traffic deaths in California

By Bruce Newman
San Jose Mercury News

SAN JOSE, Calif. — California drivers squawked, they talked, and one or two even balked at having cellphones ripped from their hands when the state law forbidding the use of handheld phones on the road went into effect in 2008. But according to a study announced Monday by the state Office of Traffic Safety, since that time the total number of traffic deaths in California declined by 22 percent. With fewer drivers yakking into handheld phones, the death-by-cellphone rate dropped an even more stunning 47 percent.

"Those are huge numbers," said state Sen. Joe Simitian, D-Palo Alto, author of the bill whose outcome the study tracked, while taking a (hands-free) victory lap after the announcement. Simitian submitted a version of the bill for five consecutive years and was rebuffed each time, before the Legislature finally relented in 2006.

The year after the law was implemented, the CHP reported 700 fewer fatal accidents, and that there were 75,000 to 100,000 fewer collisions. "The drop in collisions was the biggest single year-to-year drop in the history of the state since the CHP began keeping the data," Simitian said.

The report examined state crash records two years before and two years after the handheld ban went into effect.

Though the base fine for being caught driving with a phone in your hand is still only $20 — Gov. Jerry Brown vetoed Simitian's attempt to have it increased last year — the law here is viewed as more effective than other states' because it is strictly enforced.

"California is one of the few states that has been very aggressively enforcing its cellphone law," said Barbara Harsha, executive director of the Governors Highway Safety Association in Washington, D.C. "That's a big drop. We were surprised by the numbers. It shows that enforcement works, that other states should look at what California has done and follow its lead."

The study used a statewide census of police-reported traffic crashes, crunching the numbers and the fenders to produce the first analysis of its kind in the nation. Its findings were restricted to accidents caused specifically by drivers using handheld cellphones, and came to conclusions that were less grandiose than Simitian's — only 70-80 lives saved and about 5,000 injuries prevented in the first two years of the law.

Critics of the law also point to distractions other than talking on the phone — eating a sandwich, applying makeup, changing the radio station — as the cause of accidents. Asked if the 22 percent decline in traffic deaths traced to implementation of the hands-free phone law was too specific, David Ragland, the study's author, said, "It is."

The state agency that produced the study is already at work on expanding the distracted driver data. "The subject of distracted driving and cellphone use is so new that there hasn't been a lot of statistical studying done," said Chris Cochran, spokesman for Office of Traffic Safety. "We're in favor of not talking at all — handheld, hands-free, nothing. Because it's actually the talking that's more of a problem than the holding. Even though the law only covers half of the problem, it's affecting both holding and hands-free. It's doing good overall. But the whole realm is in need of a lot more research."

For once, Simitian sounded satisfied.

"What's particularly heartening is the clear indication that the public gets it," he said. "The driving public understands that this is risky behavior, and most people are complying. I think we've had very good results the first couple of years, but we're talking about changing a culture. Just as it took a great many years for people to buckle up routinely, and a great many years to change attitudes about drinking and driving, this is a behavior change that will take a little time."

Dear Rep. Gardner:

Thank you for your support of HB 128. Allstate applauds your efforts to keep our teens and all of us safe by removing distractions from the road.

Mounting research indicates – and common sense supports – that that the use of cell phones while driving, especially among young drivers, is highly dangerous. A study published in the British Medical Journal found that cell phone use while driving resulted in a four-fold increase in crashes. Young drivers not only have the least experience but drivers between ages 16 and 24 also display the highest rates of cell phone use while driving, according to a study by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA).

In 2005, The Allstate Foundation conducted a national survey of teen driving attitudes and behaviors. In the survey, 56 percent of teens said they make and answer cell phone calls while driving, and 13 percent write and/or read text messages. With 12.5 million teen drivers in the U.S., that's 1.62 million drivers writing and/or reading text messages while operating their vehicle.

This is truly an issue where you can make a lifesaving difference for families in Alaska. We look forward to the opportunity to work with you.

Sincerely,

Elizabeth Moceri

Dear Representative Gardner:

On behalf of the Alaska Peace Officers Association (APOA), I would like to thank you for introducing HB 15, an act prohibiting the use of cellular telephones by minors when driving a motor vehicle; and providing for an effective date.

The APOA State Board's Legislative Committee recently reviewed this proposed legislation and unanimously decided to offer conditional support of this bill. We'd ask that it be amended to include all drivers and not be restricted to just minors. There is now empirical data showing that cell phone conversations (whether handheld or not) put the driver and other motorists at significant risk. A number of other states have now passed legislation outlawing the practice for all drivers, regardless of age.

We thank you for addressing this issue and urge you to consider expanding the bill to include all drivers. Please contact the APOA office in Anchorage at 277-0515, if there is anything our organization can do to assist in the passage of this bill.

Sincerely,

Angella Long

Members of the Alaska State Legislature:

The Anchorage Police Department Employees Association (APDEA) represents over 500 rank and file employees of the Anchorage Police Department. As President of the APDEA, I am writing in support of HB 128, which would ban the use of cell phones by minors operating a motor vehicle.

APDEA members see firsthand the fatalities, injury, and property damage resulting from vehicular cell phone use by minors. Minors not only have the highest crash rates of any drivers, they are also involved in a disproportionate number of fatal accidents. When you add to the mix that minors are the most frequent cell phone users, a dangerous combination is created.

There is now a huge body of research on cell phones and driving. Studies both in this country and from places such as Canada and Australia consistently show that talking on cell phones quadruples a driver's chances of being involved in an accident. A recent study in Utah demonstrated that individuals talking on cell phones performed about as well at driving as individuals with a blood alcohol level of .08 percent. Major corporations and other large organizations have become so concerned about safety and liability that they banned on-road use of cell phones by their employees during work hours. The Harvard Center for Risk Analysis estimates that 2,600 deaths and 12,000 serious injuries occur each year in highway crashes caused by cell phone use.

Inexperienced drivers using cell phones only heightens the risk. APDEA members would love to never again respond to a serious accident involving a teenage driver talking on a cell phone. HB 128 would help achieve that goal.

Sincerely,

Derek Hsieh
President
APDEA

Re: State Farm Support for HB 128 - Ban on Cell Phone Use by Minors While Driving

Dear Representative Gardner:

State Farm strongly supports a ban on cell phone use by minors while driving. There is no doubt this bill will in fact immediately begin to save lives and prevent injuries. Drivers between the ages 16 - 19 are four times more likely to be involved in a crash as other drivers. One in five of all auto deaths is attributed to teen driving. The leading causes of teen accidents include inexperience and distraction. A recent Research Report by the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia and State Farm determined that 9 out of 10 teenagers reported teen use of cell phones while driving was common, and 7 out of 10 said they have observed teens driving while being emotionally upset using a cell phone. That same survey indicated legal prohibitions and restrictions were the top motivations teens said would keep them from using a cell phone while driving.

As the insurance industry representative on the Alaska Highway Safety Improvement Program, State Farm thanks you for sponsoring this bill. Through an alliance with Children's Hospital of Philadelphia, State Farm has access to a wealth of information and resources should you or other members of the Legislature desire. If we can provide you any information or assistance, please let me know.

Sincerely,

Sheldon E. Winters
Lobbyist for State Farm Insurance Companies

June 29, 2006 -- Three years after the preliminary results first were presented at a scientific meeting and drew wide attention, University of Utah psychologists have published a study showing that motorists who talk on handheld or hands-free cellular phones are as impaired as drunken drivers.

"We found that people are as impaired when they drive and talk on a cell phone as they are when they drive intoxicated at the legal blood-alcohol limit" of 0.08 percent, which is the minimum level that defines illegal drunken driving in most U.S. states, says study co-author Frank Drews, an assistant professor of psychology. "If legislators really want to address driver distraction, then they should consider outlawing cell phone use while driving."

Psychology Professor David Strayer, the study's lead author, adds: "Just like you put yourself and other people at risk when you drive drunk, you put yourself and others at risk when you use a cell phone and drive. The level of impairment is very similar."

"Clearly the safest course of action is to not use a cell phone while driving," concludes the study by Strayer, Drews and Dennis Crouch, a research associate professor of pharmacology and toxicology. The study was set for publication June 29 in the summer 2006 issue of Human Factors: The Journal of the Human Factors and Ergonomics Society.

The study reinforced earlier research by Strayer and Drews showing that hands-free cell phones are just as distracting as handheld cell phones because the conversation itself – not just manipulation of a handheld phone – distracts drivers from road conditions.

Human Factors Editor Nancy J. Cooke praised the study: "Although we all have our suspicions about the dangers of cell phone use while driving, human factors research on driver safety helps us move beyond mere suspicions to scientific observations of driver behavior."

The study first gained public notice after Strayer presented preliminary results in July 2003 in Park City, Utah, during the Second International Driving Symposium on Human Factors in Driver Assessment, Training and Vehicle Design. It took until now for the study to be completed, undergo review by other researchers and finally be published.

Key Findings: Different Driving Styles, Similar Impairment

Each of the study"s 40 participants "drove" a PatrolSim driving simulator four times: once each while undistracted, using a handheld cell phone, using a hands-free cell phone and while intoxicated to the 0.08 percent blood-alcohol level after drinking vodka and orange juice. Participants followed a simulated pace car that braked intermittently.

Both handheld and hands-free cell phones impaired driving, with no significant difference in the degree of impairment. That "calls into question driving regulations that prohibited handheld cell phones and permit hands-free cell phones," the researchers write.

The study found that compared with undistracted drivers:

- Motorists who talked on either handheld or hands-free cell phones drove slightly slower, were 9 percent slower to hit the brakes, displayed 24 percent more variation in following distance as their attention switched between driving and conversing, were 19 percent slower to resume normal speed after braking and were more likely to crash. Three study participants rear-ended the pace car. All were talking on cell phones. None were drunk.

- Drivers drunk at the 0.08 percent blood-alcohol level drove a bit more slowly than both undistracted drivers and drivers using cell phones, yet more aggressively. They followed the pace car more closely, were twice as likely to brake only four seconds before a collision would have occurred, and hit their brakes with 23 percent more force. "Neither accident rates, nor reaction times to vehicles braking in front of the participant, nor recovery of lost speed following braking differed significantly" from undistracted drivers, the researchers write.

"Impairments associated with using a cell phone while driving can be as profound as those associated with driving while drunk," they conclude.

Are Drunken Drivers Really Less Accident-Prone than Cell Phone Users?

Drews says the lack of accidents among the study's drunken drivers was surprising. He and Strayer speculate that because simulated drives were conducted during mornings, participants who got drunk were well-rested and in the "up" phase of intoxication. In reality, 80 percent of all fatal alcohol-related accidents occur between 6 p.m. and 6 a.m. when drunken drivers tend to be fatigued. Average blood-alcohol levels in those accidents are twice 0.08 percent. Forty percent of the roughly 42,000 annual U.S. traffic fatalities involve alcohol.

While none of the study's intoxicated drivers crashed, their hard, late braking is "predictive of increased accident rates over the long run," the researchers wrote.

One statistical analysis of the new and previous Utah studies showed cell phone users were 5.36 times more likely to get in an accident than undistracted drivers. Other studies have shown the risk is about the same as for drivers with a 0.08 blood-alcohol level.

Strayer says he expects criticism "suggesting that we are trivializing drunken-driving impairment, but it is anything but the case. We don't think people should drive while drunk, nor should they talk on their cell phone while driving."

Drews says he and Strayer compared the impairment of motorists using cell phones to drivers with a 0.08 percent blood-alcohol level because they wanted to determine if the risk of driving while phoning was comparable to the drunken driving risk considered unacceptable.

"This study does not mean people should start driving drunk," says Drews. "It means that driving while talking on a cell phone is as bad as or maybe worse than driving drunk, which is completely unacceptable and cannot be tolerated by society."

University of Utah Cell Phone Research

Previous research by Strayer, Drews and colleagues include:

- A 2001 study showing that hands-free cell phones are just as distracting as handheld cell phones.
- A 2003 study showing that the reason is "inattention blindness," in which motorists look directly at road conditions but don't really see them because they are distracted by a cell phone conversation. And such drivers aren't aware they are impaired.
- A 2005 study suggesting that when teenagers and young adults talk on cell phones while driving, their reaction times are as slow as those of elderly drivers.

The University of Utah psychologists conducted the alcohol study because a 1997 study by other researchers evaluated the cell phone records of 699 people involved in motor vehicle accidents and found one-fourth of them had used their phone in the 10 minutes before their accident – a four-fold increase in accidents compared with undistracted motorists.

Those researchers speculated there was a comparable risk from drunken driving and cell phone use while driving. So Strayer and Drews conducted a controlled laboratory study.

The study included 25 men and 15 women ages 22 to 34 who were social drinkers (three to five drinks per week) recruited via newspaper advertisements. Two-thirds used a cell phone while driving. Each participant was paid $100 for 10 hours in the study.

The driving simulator has a steering wheel, dashboard instruments and brake and gas pedals from a Ford Crown Victoria sedan. The driver is surrounded by three screens showing freeway scenes. Each simulated daylight freeway drive lasted 15 minutes. The pace car intermittently braked to mimic stop-and-go traffic. Drivers who fail to hit their brakes eventually rear-end the pace car. Other simulated vehicles occasionally passed in the left lane, giving the impression of steady traffic flow.

Each study participant drove the simulator during three sessions – undistracted, drunk or talking to a research assistant on a cell phone – each on a different day.

The simulator recorded driving speed, following distance, braking time and how long it would take to collide with the pace car if brakes were not used.

The study was funded by a $25,000 grant from the Federal Aviation Administration – which is interested in impaired attention among pilots -- and by Strayer's and Drews' salaries. The Utah Highway Patrol loaned the researchers a device to measure blood-alcohol levels.

Driving while Distracted: A Growing Problem

The researchers cited figures from the Cellular Telecommunications Industry Association indicating that more than 100 million U.S. motorists use cell phones while driving. The National Highway Transportation Safety Administration estimates that at any given moment during daylight hours, 8 percent of all drivers are talking on a cell phone.

"Fortunately, the percentage of drunk drivers at any time is much lower," Drews says. "So it means the risk of talking on a cell phone and driving is probably much higher than driving intoxicated because more people are talking on cell phones while driving than are driving drunk." The main reason there are not more accidents is that "92 percent of drivers are not on a cell phone and are compensating for drivers on cell phones," he adds.

Cell phone use is far from the only distraction for motorists. The researchers cite talking to passengers, eating, drinking, lighting cigarettes, applying makeup and listening to the radio as the "old standards" of driver distraction.

"However, over the last decade many new electronic devices have been developed, and they are making their way into the vehicle," the researchers write. "Drivers can now surf the Internet, send and receive e-mail or faxes, communicate via a cellular device and even watch television. There is good reason to believe that some of these new multitasking activities may be substantially more distracting than the old standards because they are more cognitively engaging and because they are performed over longer periods of time."

Q&As: Cellphones, texting, and driving

More information on cellphones

Hide all answers

1 | How many people use cellphones?

Cellphone use in the United States has grown quickly during the past decade. There were about 293 million wireless cellphone subscribers as of June 2010, according to CTIA – The Wireless Association, an industry trade group.[1] That's up 51 percent from 194 million in June 2005 and 3 times the 97 million wireless subscribers in June 2000. Minutes of use have surged to about 2.3 trillion in June 2010 from 195 billion in June 2000.

2 | Do drivers frequently use phones behind the wheel?

Yes, though it's hard to determine accurately just how many drivers use phones. Combining observational and self-reported data on phone use, the federal government estimated that drivers using phones nearly tripled during 2000-08, from 4 to 11 percent, and then declined to 9 percent in 2009. Federal observational data indicate that 5 percent of drivers in 2009 were talking on hand-held phones at any moment during the day. This means about 672,000 passenger vehicles on the road at any moment during the day were driven by people talking on hand-held phones.[2]

A 2009 Institute telephone survey of 1,219 drivers 18 and older indicates phone use may be somewhat lower than government estimates. Drivers on average reported spending about an hour in the car each day, with about 4 minutes of that time on the phone. This translates into roughly 7 percent of time behind the wheel on the phone.[3] The discrepancy between the two estimates may be a result of drivers in the Institute survey understating how much phoning while driving they do because the practice has negative connotations. It also could reflect different methodologies. Government researchers observed hand-held phone use among drivers waiting at intersections during the daytime, then adjusted this for self-reported hands-free use. The Institute's survey estimates self-reported driver phone use on all kinds of roads during all hours.

3 | Who is most likely to talk on a cellphone while driving?

Young drivers ages 16-24 are more likely than other drivers to talk on hand-held cellphones according to daytime observational surveys of drivers the federal government conducted nationwide in 2009. Eight percent of drivers ages 16-24 were observed talking on hand-held phones, compared with 5 percent of those ages 25-69 and 1 percent of drivers 70 and older.[2] In the Institute's 2009 survey of drivers' self-reported phone use, people younger than 30 spent 16 percent of driving time on the phone, compared with 7 percent for drivers 30-59 years old, and just 2.5 percent for drivers 60 and older.[4]

Men in the Institute's survey reported spending slightly more time on the phone than women (7 percent versus 6 percent). This differs from the government's and other observations that female drivers use cellphones more. Drivers reported using phones more on weekdays and during afternoons and evenings. Use rates were 8 percent during these times.[3] This is in line with government observations that use is higher on weekdays.[2]

4 | Does using a cellphone while driving increase crash risk?

Yes. Two controlled studies link talking on a cellphone directly to increased crash risk. A 2005 Institute study of drivers in Western Australia found cellphone users four times as likely to get into crashes serious enough to injure themselves.[5] The study used cellphone billing records to verify phone use of crash-involved drivers. Increased risk was similar for males and females, drivers younger than 30 and those 30 and older, and hands-free and hand-held phones. The findings were consistent with 1997 research that showed phone use among Canadian drivers was associated with a fourfold increase in the risk of a property damage crash. The Canadian study also used cellphone billing records to verify phone use of drivers.[6]

5 | How many crashes have been caused by drivers using cellphones?

The federal government estimates that in 2009, 5,474 people were killed and an additional 448,000 were injured in motor vehicle crashes that were reported by police to have involved distracted driving. The government estimates that 18 percent of these deaths and 5 percent of these injuries involved cellphones.[7] However, these estimates are imprecise and likely underestimate distraction's role in crashes, as many police reports don't have information on distracting events. Police crash reports aren't a reliable way to count cellphone-related collisions because drivers often don't volunteer that they were on the phone.

It is possible to estimate the expected number of crashes linked to phoning while driving. An Institute analysis suggests this practice could account for 22 percent of all crashes, or about 1.3 million in 2008, based on how much phoning while driving motorists admitted to researchers and the estimated risk of driver phone use.[3] However, there is a disconnect between estimated crashes and real-world data, which indicate that crashes have been holding steady in recent years, even as cellphone use in general and driver use of phones in particular have proliferated.

About 5.5 million police-reported motor vehicle crashes occurred during 2009, the latest year for which federal data are available. This count doesn't differ much from the approximately 6 million crashes recorded annually during the early 1990s, when cellphones started getting popular, and it is lower than the 6.4 million crashes in 2000, when federal researchers began documenting the increase in phone use while driving.

An increase in cellphone-related crashes isn't showing up in insurance claims either. An analysis by the Highway Loss Data Institute indicates that the frequency of insurance claims for crash damage filed under collision coverage during 1998-2008 hasn't increased, even though driver phone use has escalated.[8]

A 2006 Virginia Tech Transportation Institute study used video cameras to monitor drivers in about 100 vehicles for about a year. Four percent of crashes or near-crashes were attributable to talking on a cellphone, researchers estimated.[9]

6 | Are hands-free cellphones safer?

No, at least not after the conversation begins. Two studies of crashes using cellphone billing records to verify phone use found about a fourfold increase in crash risk with conversing on both hands-free and hand-held phones.[5,6] The studies were unable to estimate crash risk from different types of hands-free devices. They also were unable to determine whether there was any benefit associated with hands-free devices while placing the call. Experimental research using driving simulators indicates that phone conversation tasks, whether using hand-held or hands-free devices, affect some measures of driving performance.[10,11] Hands-free phones may eliminate some of the physical distraction of handling phones, but the cognitive distraction from phone conversations remains.

7 | How does cellphone use affect driving performance?

An Institute review of more than 120 cellphone studies, about half of which were experimental studies using driving simulators or vehicles instrumented with video cameras, sensors, and other equipment, found that nearly all reported that some measures of driver performance were affected by the cognitive distractions associated with cellphone tasks.[11] Phone conversation tasks typically increased reaction times and travel speeds and increased lane deviations and steering wheel movements. Statistical analyses that aggregated the results of 33 studies and 23 studies, respectively, reported similar findings.[10,12] Some studies have found that older drivers' performance is more affected by cellphone tasks, particularly their reaction time. Few studies included drivers younger than 18, and evidence is mixed on the effects of phone use for teenage drivers compared with adult drivers. Findings also are mixed on whether driving performance while talking on a cellphone improves with practice. Some simulator studies suggest that the negative impact of phone use on driving performance may lessen with experience.[13,14] Other simulator research has found no change in performance with practice.[15]

Using functional magnetic resonance imaging, researchers at Carnegie Mellon University found a 37 percent reduction in brain activity associated with driving when research subjects listened via a headset to spoken sentences that they judged as true or false while steering in a driving simulator. Researchers concluded that listening and processing information from a phone conversation can draw mental resources away from driving, worsening driving performance, even when drivers are not holding or dialing a phone.[16]

Further evidence comes from a few studies of small samples of people observed during their everyday driving. One study included drivers of 100 vehicles instrumented with video cameras and other monitoring technologies. Only a few serious crashes occurred, but researchers calculated the odds of being in a near-crash or crash were 2.8 times higher when dialing a hand-held phone than when phones weren't being used. The odds of a near-crash or crash were 1.3 times higher when talking on a hand-held phone, although this was not statistically significant. But because drivers spend more time talking on a hand-held phone than dialing, the percentage of crashes and near-crashes estimated to be attributable to talking and dialing on hand-held phones were both about 4 percent.[9]

8 | Do bans on hand-held phones work to reduce driver phone use?

Institute research has documented that all-driver bans on hand-held phoning can have large and lasting effects on phone use. In November 2001, New York became the first state to implement a universal ban on hand-held cellphones. Observed driver hand-held cellphone use declined by an estimated 47 percent immediately after the ban. Use then began going back up, but when measured more than 7 years after the ban, use was 24 percent lower than would have been expected without the ban. Soon after a ban was passed in the District of Columbia in 2004, observed driver hand-held phone use dropped by 41 percent. Nearly five years after the ban, the rate of phone use was 43 percent lower than would have been expected without a ban. Connecticut's ban took effect in 2005. Observed hand-held phone use declined an estimated 76 percent immediately after a ban; more than 3 years later, use was 65 percent lower than would be expected without a ban.[17]

In the Institute's telephone survey of cellphone use, drivers in states with hand-held bans were less likely to say they talk on phones while driving. Forty-four percent of drivers in states with bans reported they don't use phones when driving, compared with 30 percent in states without such laws. The percent of drivers who talk on phones and always talk hands-free was 22 in states with all-driver bans on hand-held phones, and 13 in states without all-driver bans.[4]

9 | Do hand-held phone bans reduce crashes?

There is no evidence so far that banning hand-held phone use reduces crashes, even though Institute research demonstrates that bans on hand-held phoning while driving can have big and long-term effects in curbing phone use. A 2009 analysis by the Highway Loss Data Institute found that hand-held bans had no effect on insurance claims. Researchers compared claims for crash damage in 4 jurisdictions before and after hand-held phone use bans, finding steady claim rates before and after laws went into effect.[8]

Many drivers still use hand-held phones where use is banned, and others may simply switch to hands-free phones. Given that crash risk increases substantially with drivers' use of either hand-held or hands-free phones, bans on hand-held cellphones won't eliminate the problem entirely. Laws prohibiting hands-free phones are difficult to enforce, plus drivers may be unfamiliar with restrictions in their state. In the Institute telephone survey, 18 percent of drivers in states with a universal ban on hand-held phone use either believed there was no law or were unsure. The proportion was even higher (48 percent) among drivers in states with a universal texting ban. Many drivers don't believe police pay much attention to them. Only 29 percent of drivers in states with universal hand-held phone bans who knew about the bans and 22 percent of drivers in states with universal texting bans who were aware of the restrictions felt they were strongly enforced.[4]

10 | How common are bans on hand-held cellphones and texting?

Bans are widespread in other countries and are becoming more common in the U.S. Nine states (California, Connecticut, Delaware, Maryland, New Jersey, New York, Oregon, Utah, and Washington) and the District of Columbia have enacted laws that ban drivers of all ages from using hand-held cellphones.

More common in the US are laws that restrict young drivers from using any type of cellphone. Teenage drivers in 28 states and the District of Columbia have such laws. School bus drivers in 19 states and the District of Columbia are restricted from using all cellphones while driving a bus.

In Australia, drivers in Victoria and Tasmania are banned from using all phones, except ones secured in a commercially designed holder fixed to the vehicle that can be operated without touching any part of the phone.

Text messaging is banned for all drivers in 30 states and the District of Columbia. In addition, novice drivers are banned from texting in 8 states (Alabama, Indiana, Maine, Mississippi, Missouri, Oklahoma, Texas, and West Virginia), and school bus drivers are banned from text messaging in 2 states (Oklahoma and Texas).

Cellphone laws in the US

11 | Why do more laws cover only teenage drivers?

Cellphone bans for young drivers are becoming more common amid concerns about the role distractions play in teenagers' elevated crash risk. Distractions of any type are a common factor in crashes of newly licensed 16-year-old drivers.[18] Some research also shows teenage drivers tend to use cellphones and other emerging technologies more than adult drivers.[19] States increasingly have graduated licensing laws that place restrictions on newly licensed drivers, e.g., limiting nighttime driving and the number of passengers a novice driver can carry. Cellphone bans are being added to those restrictions.

See Q&A: Teenagers — graduated driver licensing

More about the licensing law in your state, or any state

12 | Do teenagers comply with cellphone bans?

Young drivers often ignore cellphone restrictions, according to an Institute study of North Carolina's cellphone ban for young beginning drivers. The state bans the use of any telecommunications device by drivers younger than 18 under its graduated licensing system. Observed cellphone use by teenagers leaving high schools in the afternoon changed little from 1-2 months before to 5 months after the restriction took effect on Dec. 1, 2006.[20] About 11 percent of teenage drivers were seen using phones before the law. That percentage rose slightly to 12 percent in the postlaw survey. Cellphone use remained steady at about 13 percent at comparison sites in South Carolina, which doesn't restrict teenage drivers' phone use. When observed postlaw, less than 1 percent of teenage drivers in North Carolina were using hands-free phones. About 2 percent were observed dialing or texting and about 9 percent were holding a phone to their ear.

The study coupled driver observations with telephone surveys of North Carolina parents and their teenagers. In postlaw surveys, about two-thirds of teenagers said they knew about their state's law, compared with 39 percent of parents. Three-quarters of teenagers and 95 percent of parents said they approved of the law. The proportion of teenagers who reported using phones while driving declined somewhat following the law. However, of those who owned a phone and admitted to ever talking on the phone while driving, about half admitted they used their phones, if they had driven, on the day prior to the interview. There was no evidence of focused enforcement or publicity of the law. Only 22 percent of teenagers and 13 percent of parents believed the ban was being enforced fairly often or a lot.[20]

13 | Is cellphone use more distracting to drivers than other tasks?

Evidence is mixed. For example, some experimental studies found that phone conversations are more disruptive than conversations with passengers or adjusting a radio.[11] However, two statistical analyses combining the results of multiple experimental studies found similar decrements in reaction time for conversation tasks with passengers and with hand-held or hands-free phones.[10,12] Two studies reported that talking on cellphones or having a 0.08 percent blood alcohol concentration (BAC) — the legal threshold for impairment — has a comparable effect on some simulated driving tasks.[21,22] However, the risks associated with alcohol impairment accumulate over the entire duration of a trip, whereas the risks of cellphone use generally apply for only a portion of a trip. In addition, crash risk increases substantially at very high BACs, and the implications of the experimental studies for drivers in their own vehicles is unknown.

14 | Is texting while driving a problem?

Texting in general is on the increase. Annualized text messages soared to about 1.8 trillion in June 2010 from 57 billion in June 2005.[1] Many people report that they text while driving. A 2009 Institute survey found that 13 percent of drivers of all ages have texted while driving, and this jumps to 43 percent among 18-24-year-old drivers.[4] Similar results were found in other studies.[23,24]

There hasn't been a lot of research on the safety effects of texting and driving, but three studies of young drivers using driving simulators all found that receiving, and especially sending, text messages impeded drivers' reaction times and lane-keeping ability.[25,26,27] In a study involving large trucks instrumented with video cameras and other monitoring technology, the odds of a traffic conflict, lane drift, near-crash, or crash were 23 times higher when a truck driver was texting. A limitation is that less than 1 percent of the incidents involved crashes; most were lane drifts or other driver errors. It's unknown how such incidents relate to actual crashes. It also is unclear whether the results generalize to passenger vehicle drivers.[28]

15 | Do drivers comply with text messaging bans?

So far it appears that drivers, especially young adults, largely shrug off texting bans. An Institute study found that among 18-24 year-olds — the group most likely to text — 45 percent reported texting while driving in states that bar the practice, just shy of the 48 percent of drivers who reported texting in states without bans.[4] Among drivers 25-29, 40 percent reported texting in states with bans, compared with 55 percent in states without bans.

Many drivers are unclear about the laws in their state. Forty-eight percent of drivers in states with universal texting bans believed there was no law or were unsure. Plus, only 22 percent of drivers who were aware of the restrictions felt they were strongly enforced.[4]

16 | Do bans on driver text messaging reduce crashes?

Not according to research by the Highway Loss Data Institute. A 2010 study examined insurance claims filed for damage to vehicles before and after driver texting bans were enacted in four states. There was no reduction in claim rates relative to comparison states. Rather, there was a significant increase of 7-9 percent in the frequency of claims in 3 of the 4 study states. Increases in the frequency of claims also were found for rated drivers 25 and younger in these 3 states.[29]

17 | Can technology be used to prevent crashes caused by distracted driving?

Automakers are rolling out crash avoidance systems that warn drivers when they are not paying attention. Some systems may intervene if the system judges that a crash is imminent. Systems like lane -departure warning and forward-collision warning promise to prevent many kinds of distracted driving crashes, not just those that result from cellphone use (see Status Report, April 17, 2008). But this isn't a quick fix. Most new vehicles don't have crash avoidance features, and it will take some time before the systems are in wide use as newer vehicles supplant older ones. Plus, the effects of these technologies on real-world crashes have not yet been established.

NEWS RELEASE

July 12, 2005

1ST EVIDENCE OF EFFECTS OF CELL PHONE USE ON INJURY CRASHES:
CRASH RISK IS FOUR TIMES HIGHER WHEN DRIVER IS USING A HAND-HELD CELL PHONE

ARLINGTON, VA — Common sense as well as experience tell us that handling and dialing cell phones while driving compromise safety, and evidence is accumulating that phone conversations also increase crash risk. New Institute research quantifies the added risk — drivers using phones are four times as likely to get into crashes serious enough to injure themselves. The increased risk was estimated by comparing phone use within 10 minutes before an actual crash occurred with use by the same driver during the prior week. Subjects were drivers treated in hospital emergency rooms for injuries suffered in crashes from April 2002 to July 2004.

The study, "Role of cellular phones in motor vehicle crashes resulting in hospital attendance" by S. McEvoy et al. is published in the British Medical Journal, available at bmj.com.

"The main finding of a fourfold increase in injury crash risk was consistent across groups of drivers," says Anne McCartt, Institute vice president for research and an author of the study. "Male and female drivers experienced about the same increase in risk from using a phone. So did drivers older and younger than 30 and drivers using hand-held and hands-free phones."

Weather wasn't a factor in the crashes, almost 75 percent of which occurred in clear conditions. Eighty-nine percent of the crashes involved other vehicles. More than half of the injured drivers reported that their crashes occurred within 10 minutes of the start of the trip.

The study was conducted in the Western Australian city of Perth. The Institute first tried to conduct this research in the United States, but U.S. phone companies were unwilling to make customers' billing records available, even with permission from the drivers. Phone records could be obtained in Australia, and the researchers got a high rate of cooperation among drivers who had been in crashes.

Another reason for conducting the study in Australia was to estimate crash risk in a jurisdiction where hand-held phone use is banned. It has been illegal while driving in Western Australia since July 2001. Still one-third of the drivers said their calls had been placed on hand-held phones.

Hands-free versus hand-held: The results suggest that banning hand-held phone use won't necessarily enhance safety if drivers simply switch to hands-free phones. Injury crash risk didn't differ from one type of reported phone use to the other.

"This isn't intuitive. You'd think using a hands-free phone would be less distracting, so it wouldn't increase crash risk as much as using a hand-held phone. But we found that either phone type increased the risk," McCartt says. "This could be because the so-called hands-free phones that are in common use today aren't really hands-free. We didn't have sufficient data to compare the different types of hands-free phones, such as those that are fully voice activated."

Evidence of risk is mounting: The findings of the Institute study, based on the experience of about 500 drivers, are consistent with 1997 research that showed phone use was associated with a fourfold increase in the risk of a property damage crash. This Canadian study also used cell phone billing records to establish the increase in risk. The Institute's new study is the second to use phone records and the first to estimate whether and how much phone use increases the risk of an injury crash.

— MORE —

Taken together, the two studies confirm that the distractions associated with phone use contribute significantly to crashes. Other studies have been published about cell phone use while driving, but most have been small-scale and have involved simulated or instrumented driving, not the actual experience of drivers on the road. When researchers have tried to assess the effects of phone use on real-world crashes, they usually have relied on police reports for information. But such reports aren't reliable because, without witnesses, police cannot determine whether a crash-involved driver was using a phone.

State considers cell phone ban

State considers cell phone ban
Bill would prohibit virtually all phone use for all Alaska drivers

By Jeremy Hsieh | The Associated Press

Lawmakers in the nation's most inaccessible state capital are considering the most aggressive statewide ban in the United States on the use of cell phones while driving.

Six states and Washington, D.C., ban handheld cell phone use while driving and 21 states and D.C. ban all cell phone use for novice drivers, according to the Governors Highway Safety Association. But the bill sponsored by Alaska state Rep. Mike Doogan, D-Anchorage, would ban virtually all cell phone use for all drivers.

"We haven't endorsed that approach as an association, but it's clearly where the debate is going," said Jonathan Adkins, a spokesman for the Governors Safety group based in D.C. "The hang up is convincing the public. It's probably too bold of a step for some people."

Doogan introduced his stringent bill this year after Rep. Berta Gardner, a fellow Anchorage Democrat, proposed specifically banning use of cell phones by drivers under 18. Both bills would make driving while using a cell phone an infraction punishable by a fine of up to $300 and points toward suspension or revocation of a driver's license.

It would be a primary offense under Doogan's version, meaning law enforcement could make a stop and ticket a driver specifically to enforce the rule. Gardner's version makes it a secondary offense, meaning some other violation must trigger the stop.

The only exception in Doogan's bill is for emergency calls. Neither bill makes exceptions for handsfree cell phone use. Both sponsors cite research that indicates the main risk comes from the brain drain that comes with the act of communicating, rather than the physical act of holding a phone. A study from the University of Utah found that cell phone use, whether handheld or handsfree, can cause driver reaction delays comparable to the legal limit of alcohol.

Out of 78,145 traffic accidents in Alaska from 2002 to 2007, 335 - less than half a percent - were cell phone-related, according to state Department of Transportation and Public Facilities spokesman Roger Wetherell. More than a third of the cell phone-related accidents are attributable to drivers age 16 to 20.

Amber Burton, 22, of Valdez, said it's natural for her to answer her phone while she drives.

"I think I have more issues with changing a CD or picking up something that dropped than using a phone," she said.

She only has a 3-mile commute to work ("Everything's relatively close in Valdez," she says) but thinks a ban is a good idea.

"I probably would feel safer. Even though I'm probably one of those people" that scares other drivers, she said. "Just because I'm comfortable with it, doesn't mean everyone else is."

Part of Rick Burchell's job as a partner and instructor of AA Drivers Educational School Inc. in Anchorage is teaching his students to watch out for distracted drivers, especially cell phone users.

National cell phone-specific accident data is unavailable, though the ratio of "distracted drivers" in fatal crashes is on the rise, from 8 percent in 2004 to 11 percent in 2008, according to data compiled by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

Meanwhile, an insurance industry study released Friday by the Highway Loss Data Institute found that state laws banning the use of handheld devices to make calls or send text messages while driving have not resulted in fewer vehicle crashes. It examined insurance claims from crashes before and after such bans took effect in California, New York, Connecticut and Washington, D.C.

Driving instructor Burchell sees merit in both bills, but admits he's slightly off-task when he's driving because of his own phone use, albeit through a handsfree system. Part of Burchell's rationale for limiting the risk through a handsfree system rather than abstaining entirely stems from parallels he sees with the safety fight decades ago against radios in cars. Like cell phones, radios introduced new distractions, but neither technology is going away, he said.

When Burchell's son, now 18, got his license, Burchell made him agree to never answer his phone behind the wheel.

"And then - all the kids think this is really despicable - dad made calls to the cell phone to make sure he wasn't answering," Burchell said. "He knew that his automobile would be lost forever if he picked up the phone."

Gardner said she'd like a ban for all drivers, but that the teens approach would meet less opposition. However, Gardner doesn't expect a hearing to be scheduled in the House Finance Committee, where her bill has sat since March despite a zero budget-impact statement from the Department of Public Safety.

"For all intents and purposes, the bill is dead," Gardner said.

That hasn't discouraged Doogan.

"I don't worry about that," he said, noting co-sponsor Peggy Wilson's role as chair of the House Transportation Committee, where his bill is awaiting a hearing date. Wilson is a Republican from Wrangell.

Key lawmakers in gatekeeper roles beyond Wilson's committee have declined to comment or said they don't know what the prospects are for Doogan's bill.

Alaska's big three cell phone service providers have different views on the proposal. AT&T supports restricting phone use by teen drivers, except in emergencies, said spokesman Kerry Hibbs. It recently launched an education campaign on the dangers of texting while driving.

Alaska Communications Systems advocates for laws requiring drivers to use handsfree devices, said spokeswoman Heather Cavanaugh.

And General Communication Inc., Alaska's largest telecommunications company, is neutral on the bills, but is generally opposed to legislation that curbs customer choice on handsets, said spokesman Curtiss Clifton.

The effort follows a state ban on drivers texting and watching videos that took effect in 2008 and a national ban on texting for truck and bus drivers that took effect Jan. 26.

Dear Representative Gardner:

We are pleased to offer the National Safety Council's support of HB15, an Act prohibiting the use of cellular telephones by minors while driving a motor vehicle, to be considered by the Alaska Legislature during its 2009 session.

The National Safety Council applauds the Alaska Legislature for considering HB15. This Act's prohibition of cellular telephone use by teens while driving in Alaska would be a major step toward improving the safety of its citizens. As "novice" drivers, teens lack driving experience and tend to ignore risks; consequently, they are proportionately involved in twice as many fatal crashes as drivers 35-74 years of age. This is why the NSC and many other transportation safety leaders advocate that Graduated Driver Licensing (GDL) laws include a ban on teen driver cell phone and text messaging use while driving. At present sixteen states have a similar provision in their teen driver licensing law.

It is estimated that 80% of preventable motor vehicle crashes are caused in part by some form of driver inattention. Scientific research has determined that talking on a cell phone increases a driver's risk of a crash by four times. One study has reported that text messaging while driving increased the odds of a crash by six times. We invite the Alaska legislature to consider further action restricting the use of cell phones for all drivers and offer you the following links to scientifically reliable information for your reference should you wish to consider such action.

Chair, House Judiciary Committee
Alaska State Legislature
State Capitol
Juneau, Alaska 99801-1182

Dear Representative Gatto:

The Alaska Supreme Court respectfully requests that the House Judiciary Committee schedule HB 133 for a committee hearing. The bill creates two new superior court judge positions in Anchorage. The judges will handle civil cases.

Additional judges are needed because Anchorage superior court judges are the busiest in the state and a combination of more time being devoted to Child in Need of Aid cases and an ever-increasing number of unrepresented litigants has created a workload that is unsustainable.

Adding two new judges will not completely solve this problem, but it will provide some relief as the court works to develop alternative ways to manage the workload.

A fiscal note and sponsor statement are attached. Thank you for considering this request.

Sincerely,

Doug Wooliver

Sponsor Statement
HB 133

The Alaska Supreme Court is asking for two new superior court judges in Anchorage. The judges will be assigned to civil cases.

Additional judges are needed because Anchorage superior court judges have the highest caseloads in the state and a combination of devoting more time to Child in Need of Aid (CINA) cases and an ever-increasing number of domestic relations cases where the parties choose to litigate their case without the assistance of attorneys has created a workload that is unsustainable.

Although some of the additional work comes from an increase in case filings, much is the result of improved practices that better meet the needs of those who come to court. This is particularly true with CINA cases.

One change that has impacted workload involves how CINA cases are assigned to judges. Prior practice was to have standing masters (specialists who hear cases and make recommendations to judges) preside over all phases of a case with the exception of contested hearings. If a hearing was contested it would be assigned to an available superior court judge who would resolve the contested issue and then return the case to the standing master. Although that practice saved superior court time, it led to other problems as the family was shuffled back and forth between judges.

The new practice begins the same as the old; a CINA case starts with a master until there is a contested issue. However, once that occurs the case is permanently assigned to a superior court judge; it does not return to the master. This eliminates the judge-shuffling and allows the judge and the family to get to know each other. All parties agree that familiarity improves both the process and the outcome for the families. However, this model results in superior court judges spending more of their time on these cases.

In addition to CINA cases, another prime driver behind the current workload is the prevalence of unrepresented litigants in domestic relations cases. Although we do not have historical statistics that track these cases, Alaska judges, like judges from across the country, have seen a significant increase over the past several years.

Judges cite a list of time-consuming challenges that arise when counsel is absent from one side or both sides. Frequent motion practice, arguments unrelated to the relevant legal issues, delays stemming from the failure to submit needed information and judicial time spent calculating child support awards are some of those challenges. However, even though these litigants take more time, their cases are as important as those where the parties have lawyers and the judiciary is committed to ensuring that they too can meaningfully access the court.

Adding two new judges will not significantly reduce the workload of the Anchorage superior court (Anchorage superior court judges will still be the busiest superior court judges in the state), but it will provide some relief as the court works to develop alternative ways to manage that workload. Thank you for considering this request.

House Bill 133 adds two new superior court judges to the Anchorage Bench. The Judges will be assigned civil caseloads. This fiscal note reflects the cost of the new judges along with their accompanying staff and one-time office-related expenses. This note also reflects the capital remodel costs necessary to accommodate two new superior court judges in the Nesbett Courthouse. These remodel costs are also included in the Alaska Court System's capital budget request as part of the court's long-term capital goals. Should the court's capital budget request be fully funded those costs would be removed from this note.

FISCAL NOTE
Alaska Judicial Council

Analysis

STATE OF ALASKA BILL NO. HB 133
2011 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

HB 133 adds two new superior court judges in the Third Judicial District. This fiscal note assumes that these positions will be filled separately, either because they will be in different venues or because the court may not have the facilities to proceed immediately on two new positions in a single venue. The Judicial Council's initial costs of filling these vacancies include funds needed to solicit applicants, to conduct investigations into their qualifications, and to convene a meeting to interview applicants and nominate the most qualified to the governor for appointment. A breakdown of costs is as follows:

Travel	Council members' travel to two meetings		9,000
Contractual	Printing, mailing, survey hosting, data analysis, advertising, miscellaneous		14,100
Commodities	Paper		100
		Total	23,200

If the Alaska Court System is able and willing to fill the two new positions simultaneously, and if the positions are in the same venue, the Judicial Council will coordinate its solicitation and screening of judicial applicants to achieve lower costs. In that case, the Council's funding request would be as follows:

Travel	Council members' travel to one meeting		5,500
Contractual	Printing, mailing, survey hosting, data analysis, advertising, miscellaneous		7,900
Commodities	Paper		100

FISCAL NOTE
Alaska Judicial Council

Analysis

STATE OF ALASKA BILL NO. HB 133
2011 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

HB 133 adds two new superior court judges in the Third Judicial District. This fiscal note assumes that these positions will be filled separately, either because they will be in different venues or because the court may not have the facilities to proceed immediately on two new positions in a single venue. The Judicial Council's initial costs of filling these vacancies include funds needed to solicit applicants, to conduct investigations into their qualifications, and to convene a meeting to interview applicants and nominate the most qualified to the governor for appointment. A breakdown of costs is as follows:

Travel	Council members' travel to two meetings		9,000
Contractual	Printing, mailing, survey hosting, data analysis, advertising, miscellaneous		14,100
Commodities	Paper		100
		Total	23,200

If the Alaska Court System is able and willing to fill the two new positions simultaneously, and if the positions are in the same venue, the Judicial Council will coordinate its solicitation and screening of judicial applicants to achieve lower costs. In that case, the Council's funding request would be as follows:

Travel	Council members' travel to one meeting		5,500
Contractual	Printing, mailing, survey hosting, data analysis, advertising, miscellaneous		7,900
Commodities	Paper		100
		Total	13,500

An average superior court judge serves for twelve years. Costs associated with filling these positions in the future are amortized over the next twelve years.

FISCAL NOTE

STATE OF ALASKA BILL NO. HB 133
2011 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Analysis

This bill will create two new Superior Court judge positions in the Third Judicial District. These two new judges will be handling Anchorage Child in Need of Aid matters. Currently, there are ten Anchorage Superior Court judges handling CINA matters. The addition of two new Superior Court judges will considerably increase the number of CINA cases heard on a weekly basis.

The Office of Public Advocacy currently has five (full time equivalent) staff attorneys in Anchorage who represent parents in CINA matters. The addition of two more judges will greatly increase the demands on these attorneys and their support staff to prepare for and appear in court for CINA matters. In order to adequately address the increased demands on the agency, the agency will need one additional attorney and one additional law office assistant.

BILL NO. HB 133

Analysis

This bill provides for two new superior court judges in Anchorage. These positions are expected to handle a civil caseload of Child in Need of Aid (CINA) matters. The additional judicial positions are expected to increase weekly court room appearances and will increase the workload associated with all civil cases as the Agency attempts to prepare its cases in a timely manner to meet the demand of increased court hearings.

The civil division has six attorneys who are required to appear before the current ten superior court judges handling CINA matters. The Agency anticipates the need for two additional positions, one attorney position in the civil division and one law office assistant to meet the anticipated workload increase.

BILL NO. HB 133

Analysis

The legislation adds two new superior court judges to the third judicial district. The fiscal impact to the department primarily will be in the Division of Probation & Parole, due to the increased workload surrounding felony pre-sentence investigations (PSI) and pre-sentence report (PSR) production for the superior court.

Should this legislation pass the Department of Corrections will require the addition of one full-time Adult Probation Officer II to handle up to 12 reports each month.

BILL NO. HB133

Analysis

This bill amends AS 22.10.120 by increasing superior court judges by two to a new total of 42. The new positions are to be located in Anchorage to handle Child in Need of Aid (CINA) cases and domestic relations cases. It is the department's understanding that there will be an additional two court rooms added in Anchorage.

Passage of this legislation will require one additional Court Service Officer (CSO).

Court Service Officers are responsible for the transportation of prisoners from correctional facilities to court appearances, medical care, other transportation centers and to communities within the State of Alaska. In addition, Court Services Officers serve documents in accordance with instructions from the courts and agency standard operating procedures, to include subpoenas, summons, writs, orders, complaints and other notices.

BILL NO. HB133

Analysis

This bill adds two new civil judges in Anchorage. Currently a significant portion of cases before the Anchorage judges are CINA (child in need of aid) cases. The addition of two new judges would increase the capacity of the court system to handle CINA cases, but would require an additional attorney in the Anchorage Child Protection Section to utilize the improved capacity to reduce delays inherent in the current system. To the extent the judges increase the capacity of the court system to process criminal cases, the criminal division of the department would similarly experience increased workloads. The Child Protection Section would need at least 1 FTE attorney position and a .5 support position to meet the increased demand on time and resources.

The Honorable Carl Gatto, Chair
House Judiciary Committee
State Capitol Room 118
Juneau, AK 99801

Dear Representative Gatto:

The Department of Health and Social Services respectfully requests a hearing in the House Judiciary Committee on House Bill 150, "An Act relating to the protection of property of persons under disability and minors; relating to the crime of violating a protective order concerning certain vulnerable persons; relating to aggravating factors at sentencing for offenses concerning a victim 65 years or older; relating to the protection of vulnerable adults; amending Rule 12(h), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure; amending Rule 45(a), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure; amending Rule 65, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure; amending Rule 17, Alaska Rules of Probate Procedure; amending Rule 9, Alaska Rules of Administration; and providing for an effective date."

The bill strengthens the laws against financial exploitation and enhances the ability to obtain emergency protection orders for seniors. It improves the ability of those investigating reports of harm to obtain vital information in a timely manner, and will lead to better services and safety for vulnerable adults who are abused, neglected or exploited and unable to protect their own interests.

A copy of Governor Parnell's transmittal letter providing additional information on the bill and the associated fiscal note should be on file with the committee.

Your favorable consideration of this request will be appreciated.

Sincerely,

William J. Streur

SECTIONAL ANALYSIS

HB 150, "An Act relating to the protection of property of persons under disability and minor; relating to the crime of violating a protective order concerning certain vulnerable persons; relating to aggravating factors at sentencing for offenses concerning a victim 65 years or older; relating to the protection of vulnerable adults; amending Rule 12(h), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure; amending Rule 45(a), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure; amending Rule 65, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure; amending Rule 17, Alaska Rules of Probate Procedure; amending Rule 9, Alaska Rules of Administration; and providing for an effective date."

Section 1 makes the knowing violation or attempted violation of a financial protective order (introduced in section 7 of this legislation to protect vulnerable adults and elders) a crime.

Section 2 amends the definition of protective orders found in AS 11.56.740 to include financial protective orders being introduced with this legislation to protect the financial security of vulnerable adults and elders.

Section 3 makes the fact that a defendant knowingly directed criminal conduct at a person 65 years of age or older an aggravating factor at sentencing.

Section 4 adds being a victim of fraud as a basis for appointing a conservator by amending AS 13.26.165(2)(a). This will allow courts to protect individuals who may not be suffering from any mental deficiency but are victims of financial abuse.

Section 5 adds attorneys, caregivers, and the Department of Health and Social Services as entities who may petition for conservatorship for an individual. These additions widen the net of individuals who can help protect victims to include entities who likely have first-hand knowledge of the abuse.

Section 6 creates a procedure for requesting the appointment of a temporary conservator in a conservatorship petition by adding a new subsection to AS 13.26.180. Currently, there is no statutory basis for appointing a conservator on a temporary basis. Under this section, a temporary conservator may be requested if it appears that the respondent's property will be wasted or dissipated during the pendency of the conservatorship proceedings.

Section 7 adds two new statutes. The first provides the statutory basis for temporary conservators to protect the victims of fraud and financial abuse and to ensure that funds are obtained to meet the needs of the respondent and respondent's dependents. Procedurally, this proposed statute parallels the existing statute AS 13.26.140 which deals with temporary guardians. The second statute creates a process for obtaining financial protective orders to immediately stop suspected financial abuse of the elderly and vulnerable adults. An initial 20-day protective order may be obtained ex parte, without notice to the respondent. The protective order may be extended for up to six months, after notice and a hearing at which the respondent may be heard.

Section 8 adds a definition of fraud (which is already found in the statutes creating the Office of Elder Fraud and Assistance) to conservatorship statutes.

Section 9 excludes the crime of violating a financial protective order from the crimes subject to warrantless arrest.

Sections 10 and 11 add financial protective order to the registry of protective orders maintained by the Department of Public Safety and updated by law enforcement officers.

Section 12 adds the concept of undue influence to the list of reportable harms to a vulnerable adult. Employees of nursing homes, residential care or health care facilities and the staff of educational institutions are added to the list of mandated reporters.

Section 13 clarifies information that may be contained in a report of harm to include contact information regarding the vulnerable adult and information regarding any undue influence.

Section 14 adds "undue influence" to the list of reportable harms.

Section 15 adds "undue influence" to the list of reportable harms and clarifies that a mandatory reporter is not prohibited from reporting harm in their non-occupational capacity. It also clarifies that no person is prohibited from making a report of harm.

Section 16 requires mandated reporters to contact law enforcement in situations where they believe the vulnerable adult is at imminent risk of serious physical harm and it is not possible to contact the department. "Undue influence" is added as one of the reportable harms. Law enforcement is required to contact the department within 24 hours of receiving the report.

Section 17 adds "undue influence" and "abandonment" to the list of harms that can be reported regarding a vulnerable adult residing in an out-of-home care facility.

Section 18 adds two new subsections. The first subsection states that a mandatory reporter is not relieved of the obligation to report to the department by reporting to their supervisor or another employee. The second subsection makes an individual who willfully or recklessly makes a false report liable for civil damages.

Section 19 adds" undue influence" to the list of reportable harms regarding vulnerable adults 60 years of age or older residing in an out-of-home care facility. The department is required to transfer these reports to the long term care ombudsman.

Section 20 adds "undue influence" to the list of reportable harms the department is required to investigate regarding individuals under 60 years of age living in out-of-home facilities.

Section 21 clarifies that the department and the long term care ombudsman must provide the results of their actions or investigations to the office of the department that handles adult protective services.

Section 22 adds "undue influence" to the list of reportable harms included in the reports sent to the department by the long term care ombudsman. It is clarified that these reports are sent to the office of the department that handles adult protective services.

Section 23 adds "undue influence" to the list of reportable harms the department is required to investigate.

Section 24 adds "undue influence" to the list of reported harm that applies to an alleged perpetrator.

Section 25 adds seven new subsections. These subsections

- Require individuals and entities to provide the department access to health and financial records of a vulnerable adult as part of its investigation;
- Prohibit anyone from interfering in an investigation;
- Allow the department to file an ex parte order for access to records if necessary if no petition for guardianship or conservatorship has been filed;
- Allow adult protective services access to any departmental information necessary to assist in the case;
- Allow the department to audio or video tape an interview of a vulnerable adult with their consent;
- Require the department to provide training to investigators and
- Define "financial records".

Section 26 adds an attorney-in-fact, a surrogate for health care decisions and a trustee as individuals who may serve as a surrogate decision maker for the purpose of consenting to the receipt of protective services for a vulnerable adult. It also deletes the requirement that in order for a spouse to be a surrogate decision maker, the spouse and vulnerable adult may not be living in separate domiciles.

Section 27 adds an allegation of "undue influence" to the allegations that would disqualify an individual from being selected as a surrogate decision maker.

Section 28 requires the department to discontinue protective services if a vulnerable adult who has regained the cognitive ability to make their own decisions refuses services. Services may be continued only if the adult consents.

Section 29 adds attorney-in-fact, surrogate for health care decisions and a trustee as individuals who may consent to the provision of protective services to a vulnerable adult and adds undue influence to the list of potential reports of harm.

Section 30 adds family members, trustees and conservators to the list of individuals who may be restrained by a court injunction from interfering with the provision of protective services to a vulnerable adult.

Section 31 adds "undue influence" to the types of harm contained in confidential reports and adds trustee to the list of individuals who may consent to release a confidential report.

Section 32 clarifies that a person is not considered to be unduly influenced if they choose to consent to treatment by spiritual means only.

Section 33 redefines "abuse" to include the infliction of emotional distress or fear, including coercion and intimidation.

Section 34 redefines "caregiver" to include someone who is an employee of a business that provides care in an adult's home.

Section 35 defines "informed decision" as a decision made free from undue influence.

Section 36 redefines "exploitation" to include acts by a person in a position of trust with a vulnerable adult who obtains profit or advantage through undue influence, deception, intimidation or breach of fiduciary duty.

Section 37 redefines neglect to include the willful or reckless failure by a caregiver to provide access to services or to carry out a treatment plan necessary to the health of a recipient. "Essential care or services are defined as food, clothing, shelter, medical care and supervision.

Section 38 expands the definition of protective services to include services that obtain basic health care needs, financial assistance services, and protection from abuse, obtaining basic food, shelter and clothing, among others. Undue influence is added to the list of types of harm.

Section 39 amends the definition of "unable to consent" by adding the concept of "undue influence" and that the inability to consent includes a person's inability to perceive a loss of income or assets, eviction, and physical or mental harm.

Section 40 amends the definition of a vulnerable adult by more clearly defining what constitutes a physical or mental impairment.

Section 41 adds definitions for the following terms:

- Deception
- Fiduciary duty
- Financial institution
- Person who stands in a position of trust or confidence
- Undue influence

Section 42 amends the uncodified law. Under Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, the court, when considering a motion for continuance of a trial date, will be required to consider whether the victim is vulnerable due to advanced age and what effect the delay would have on the victim. In addition, trials in which the victim is vulnerable due to advanced age will be added to cases that will be given preference for scheduling.

Section 43 amends Indirect Court Rules in three areas. First, amending Rule 17, Alaska Rules of Probate Procedure, to allow ex parte orders to be issued to protect persons from financial exploitation. Second, amending Rule 9, Alaska Rules of Administration, by not requiring filing fees for an ex parte protective order. Third, amending Rule 65, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure, by allowing ex parte orders to be issued to access records related to the investigation of a report of harm.

Section 44 amends the uncodified law by indicating that Section 1, 2, 3, and 42 apply to offenses committed on or after the effective date of the Act.

Section 45 amends the uncodified law regarding the number of votes required to enact Sections 7 and 25 of this bill.

Section 46 amends the uncodified law by adding revisor's instructions.

Section 47 provides for an effective date.

FISCAL NOTE

STATE OF ALASKA BILL NO. HB 150
2011 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Analysis

House Bill 150 makes several changes to the statutes that govern guardianships. Two of those changes will likely impact the court system, though the extent of the impact is too speculative to support a fiscal note and, in any event, may not be felt immediately.

Sections 6 and 7 allow for temporary conservators to be appointed within 72 hours of the filing of the petition and section 7 allows for ex parte protective orders when a person believes that an order is necessary to protect a vulnerable person from fraud.

The court's current experience with temporary guardianships (AS 13.26.140), and ex parte protective orders issued in other contexts suggests that the passage of this bill will result in more cases being filed that must be heard on short notice. If that increase becomes significant, and it likely will in the future, the court system may need to return to the legislature for additional funding. At this point, however, the number of conservatorship peitions filed each year is not great enough to warrant a fiscal note.

STATE OF ALASKA
2011 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB 150

Analysis

This bill will enhance the legal protections against fraud and financial abuse available to elders and vulnerable adults. The Office of Public Advocacy wishes to highlight two portions of the bill that will provide new emergency procedures to protect vulnerable adults who may be served by the agency's Elder Fraud or Probate practices.

In section 7, this bill creates two emergency judicial proceedings to stop and prevent financial exploitation of vulnerable adults. The first is a process for the appointment of temporary conservators. This will allow the court to impose emergency conservatorships to assist vulnerable individuals with their financial affairs to prevent imminent waste or fraudulent dissipation of their estates.

The second creates a process for the imposition of financial protective orders. Individual victims and other concerned parties will be able to apply for the protections of 20 day ex parte protective orders to stop or prevent financial exploitation. The initial ex parte order may be extended for up to six months after notice and a hearing at which the respondent may be heard.

The bill also provides for expanded reporting of financial abuse and enhanced penalties in criminal cases when there is an elderly victim. Additionally, the bill criminalizes violations of the financial protective orders.

The agency does not believe that this will result in significant cost increases to the agency.

BILL NO. HB 150

Analysis

This legislation creates a new crime of violating protective orders and adds aggravating factors at sentencing for a crime against a victim 65 years or older. Violation of this law could result in incarceration. However, the Department of Corrections is unable to determine the number of future offenders and therefore is unable to determine the fiscal impact of the passage of this legislation.

BILL NO. HB 150

Analysis

This bill makes several changes to AS 13.26 and AS 47.24 concerning vulnerable adults. It adds fraud as a reason that might necessitate a conservatorship, and as a basis for seeking an ex parte financial protective order. This bill also adds the concept of undue influence to the list of reportable harms and adds certain individuals as mandatory reporters of harm to vulnerable adults. Finally, this bill expands the investigatory authority of the Adult Protective Services Office.

Passage of this legislation will have no fiscal impact on the division.

BILL NO. HB 150

Analysis

This bill treats AS 13 protective orders in the same manner as stalking, sexual assault, and domestic violence protective orders under AS 18 and will require the development of new protective order forms with substantial collaboration between DPS, the Alaska Court System, DHSS, the Office of Public Advocacy, and the Department of Revenue. The findings and orders for these new AS 13 protective orders will differ from the AS 18 orders in the existing protection order registry, which address violence and domestic situations.

Once the forms are developed, APSIN programming changes will be required to accommodate new fields and types of information required. A separate version of the APSIN central registry must be developed to accommodate these new orders. Note: these new orders do not meet the necessary criteria for entry into the national registry of protection, stalking and sexual assault orders (NCIC) because they do not necessarily involve physical violence.

Programming and analysis for APSIN changes will require 280 hours of contractual work @ $100/hr to evaluate and make recommendations regarding statewide implementation of new processes and procedures for entering and maintaining these new orders into existing APSIN . Additionally, 40 hours of contractual work (at $100/hr) will be required to integrate these new orders in new APSIN.

Statewide training will then be required on the new forms and APSIN procedures. Statewide training costs are included.

BILL NO. HB 150

Analysis

This bill adds a 20-day and six-month ex parte process for financial fraud, and a temporary conservatorship process when the need exists during the pendency of a regular petition for conservatorship. The bill also expands the list of mandatory reporters of harm to a vulnerable adult, adds the harm of undue influence, and expands the investigative powers of the Office of Adult Protective Services, including the authority to seek an ex parte order for access to a vulnerable adult or records regarding an adult. The bill also amends the crime of violating a protective order by adding the crime of violating a protective order issued to protect a vulnerable adult under AS 13.26.180 or 13.26.209. Violating a protective order is a class A misdemeanor.

There is no anticipated fiscal impact to Department of Law.

Enclosed is the referenced CS with the changes you requested. In addition to minor editorial changes, we have changed "and" to "or" in the amendment to AS 18.65.530 in sec. 11. We also renumbered the new section added by sec. 10 as AS 13.26.324 because AS 13.26.325 is a number that has already been used. Finally, it appears to us that the 72 hour rule in the last sentence of AS 13.26.207(a), added in sec. 9, may be an attempt to change a court rule, specifically Civil Rule 77. If so, the court rule change should be noted. Since this is a governor's bill, perhaps the Department of Law should be consulted on the last point. I am writing this memo because Jean Mischel is temporarily out of the office. Please contact her if you want additional work on this bill.

Sec. 13.26.165. Protective proceedings. Upon petition and after notice and hearing in accordance with the provisions of AS 13.26.165 - 13.26.315, the court may appoint a conservator or issue another [MAKE OTHER] protective order for cause as follows:

(1) appointment of a conservator or other protective order may be made in relation to the estate and affairs of a minor if the court determines that

(A) a minor owns money or property that requires management or protection that [WHICH] cannot otherwise be provided;[,]

(B) the minor has or may have business affairs that [WHICH] may be jeopardized or prevented by the status of being a minor;[,] or

(C) [THAT] funds are needed for the minor's support and education and [THAT] protection is necessary or desirable to obtain or provide funds;

(2) appointment of a conservator or other protective order may be made in relation to the estate and affairs of a person if the court determines that

(A) the person is unable to manage the person's property and affairs effectively for reasons such as mental illness, mental deficiency, physical illness or disability, advanced age, chronic use of drugs, chronic intoxication, fraud, confinement, detention by a foreign power, or disappearance; and

(B) the person has property that [WHICH] will be wasted or dissipated unless proper management is provided, or that funds are needed for the support, care, and welfare of the person or those entitled to be supported by the person and [THAT] protection is necessary or desirable to obtain or provide funds.

 Sec. 7. AS 13.26.180(a) is amended to read:

(a) The person to be protected, a person's attorney or other legal representative, any person who is interested in the estate, affairs, or welfare of the person to be protected, including a parent, guardian, [OR] custodian, or caregiver, the Department of Health and Social Services, or any person who would be adversely affected by lack of effective management of the property and affairs of the person to be protected, may petition for the appointment of a conservator or for other appropriate protective order.

 Sec. 8. AS 13.26.180 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(c) The petition may include a request for temporary conservatorship as provided in AS 13.26.207 if it appears that the respondent's property is likely to be wasted or dissipated during the pendency of the conservatorship proceeding. A request for temporary conservatorship must specify the facts that cause the petitioner to believe that a temporary conservatorship is necessary.

* Sec. 9. AS 13.26 is amended by adding new sections to read:

Sec. 13.26.207. Temporary conservators. (a) If, during the pendency of an initial petition for conservatorship, it appears that the respondent is in need of a protective order to protect the respondent against waste or dissipation of funds or property, or to obtain funds that are needed for the immediate support, care, and welfare of the respondent or persons entitled to be supported by the respondent, and the respondent is not capable of protecting the respondent's funds or property or obtaining the funds that are needed to support the respondent or persons whom the respondent is required to support, the petitioner may request the appointment of a temporary conservator to authorize the protection or to obtain the necessary funds. The request must state the reasons and factual basis for the request. The petitioner shall immediately file the request with the court and serve copies on the respondent and the respondent's attorney. The court shall conduct a hearing within 72 hours after the filing.

(b) If the court determines that a temporary conservator should be appointed, it shall make the appointment and grant to the temporary conservator only the authority that is least restrictive upon the liberty of the respondent and that enables the temporary conservator to provide the protection or authority necessary to protect the respondent from waste or dissipation of funds or property or to obtain the funds necessary for support.

(c) The temporary conservatorship expires at the time of the appointment of a full or partial conservator or on the dismissal of the petition for conservatorship.

Sec. 13.26.209. Ex parte protective orders; forms for petitions and orders; fees. (a) A person who is allowed to file a petition for a protective order under AS 13.26.180(a) may file a petition for an ex parte protective order against another person. If the court finds that the petition establishes probable cause that the respondent is financially defrauding the petitioner or a person for whose benefit the petitioner filed the petition and that, because of the fraud, there has been or is an immediate threat of a waste or dissipation of the proposed protected person's funds or other property, the court shall ex parte and without notice to the respondent issue a protective order. The petitioner shall certify to the court in writing any effort that the petitioner made to provide notice to the respondent. The court shall cause a copy of the protective order to be served on the respondent.

(b) An ex parte protective order under this section may

(1) grant any protection described in AS 13.26.200;

(2) supersede an existing power of attorney;

(3) prohibit the respondent from having any direct or indirect contact with the petitioner or other person for whose benefit the petitioner filed the petition; and

(4) prohibit the respondent from taking any act with respect to the funds or other property of the petitioner or other person for whose benefit the petitioner filed the petition.

(c) An ex parte protective order expires 20 days after it is issued, at the end of a six-month extension if granted by the court under (d) of this section, or on the appointment of a temporary or permanent conservator or dismissal of the petition for the ex parte order.

(d) On application filed with the court before the expiration of the 20-day ex parte protective order, the court shall schedule a hearing on whether to extend the protective order for up to six months. The court shall provide to the respondent at least 10 days' notice of the hearing and the respondent's right to appear and be heard. If the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the respondent has committed fraud against the petitioner or the person for whose benefit the petition was filed, regardless of whether the respondent appears at the hearing, the court may extend the ex parte protective order for up to six months.

(e) A protective order issued under this section is in addition to any other civil or criminal remedy.

(f) A third party shall comply with a protective order issued under this section. A third party who does not comply with a protective order granted under this section may be liable in a civil action to the protected person or the protected person's heirs, assigns, or estate for a civil penalty not to exceed $1,000, plus the actual damages, costs, and fees associated with the failure to comply with the protective order. A third party who does not comply with a protective order granted under this section may also be criminally liable under AS 11.56.740 for violating a protective order.

(g) The Alaska Court System, after consulting with the Department of Health and Social Services, the office of public advocacy, the office of elder fraud and assistance, the long term care ombudsman, and other interested persons and organizations, shall prepare forms for petitions and protective orders and instructions for use of the forms by a person seeking a protective order under this section. The forms must conform to the Alaska Rules of Probate Procedure and Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure, except that information on the forms may be filled in by legible handwriting. The office of the clerk of each superior and district court shall make available to the public the forms a person seeking a protective order under this section may need and instructions for the use of the forms. The clerk shall provide assistance in completing and filing the forms.

(h) Filing fees may not be charged for a petition under this section.

(c) The department or its designees shall report to the Department of Law any person required by (a) of this section to report who fails to comply with this section. A person listed in (a) of this section who, because of the circumstances, should have had reasonable cause to believe that a vulnerable adult suffers from undue influence, abandonment, exploitation, abuse, neglect, or self-neglect but who knowingly fails to comply with this section is guilty of a class B misdemeanor. If a person convicted under this section is a member of a profession or occupation that is licensed, certified, or regulated by the state, the court shall notify the appropriate licensing, certifying, or regulating entity of the conviction.

The police officer or village public safety officer shall take immediate action to protect the vulnerable adult and shall [,] at the earliest opportunity within 24 hours after receiving the report of harm [,] notify the department. A person may not bring an action for damages against a police officer, a village public safety officer, the state, or a political subdivision of the state based on a decision under this subsection to take or not to take immediate action to protect a vulnerable adult. If a decision is made under this subsection to take immediate action to protect a vulnerable adult, a person may not bring an action for damages based on the protective actions taken unless the protective actions were performed with gross negligence or intentional misconduct; damages awarded in the action may include only direct economic compensatory damages for personal injury.

* Sec. 19. AS 47.24.010(f) is amended to read:

(f) A person listed in (a) of this section who reports to the long term care ombudsman under AS 47.62.015, or to the Department of Health and Social Services, that a vulnerable adult has been unduly influenced, abandoned, exploited, abused, or neglected in an out-of-home care facility is considered to have met the duty to report under (a) of this section.

* Sec. 20. AS 47.24.010 is amended by adding new subsections to read:

(i) A person required to report under this section who makes the report to the person's job supervisor or to another individual working for the entity that employs the person is not relieved of the obligation to make the report to the department as required under (a) of this section.

(j) A person who recklessly makes a false report under this section is civilly liable for actual damages suffered by the person who is the subject of the report.

* Sec. 21. AS 47.24.013(a) is amended to read:

(a) If a report received under AS 47.24.010 pertains to [REGARDS] the undue influence, abandonment, exploitation, abuse, neglect, or self-neglect of a vulnerable adult who is 60 years of age or older that is alleged to have been committed by or to have resulted from the negligence of the staff or a volunteer of an out-of-home care facility, including a facility licensed under AS 47.32, in which the vulnerable adult resides, the department shall transfer the report for investigation to the long term care ombudsman under AS 47.62.015.

* Sec. 22. AS 47.24.013(b) is amended to read:

(b) The department shall investigate a report received under AS 47.24.010 regarding the undue influence, abandonment, exploitation, abuse, neglect, or self-neglect of a vulnerable adult who is less than 60 years of age that is alleged to have been committed by or to have resulted from the negligence of the staff or a volunteer of an out-of-home care facility in which the vulnerable adult resides.

* Sec. 23. AS 47.24.013(c) is amended to read:

(c) Upon receipt of a report under (a) or (b) of this section, the long term care ombudsman and the department shall

(1) conduct an investigation as appropriate under AS 47.62.015 or this title, respectively;

(2) coordinate and cooperate in their responses to and investigations of the report if their jurisdictions overlap;

(3) provide the results of their actions or investigations to the central information and referral service of the office of the department that handles adult protective services within 60 days after the receipt of the report.

 Sec. 24. AS 47.24.013(d) is amended to read:

(d) If the long term care ombudsman receives directly a report regarding the undue influence, abandonment, exploitation, abuse, neglect, or self-neglect of a vulnerable adult in an out-of-home care facility, the ombudsman shall provide the report, and the results of the ombudsman's actions or investigations regarding the report, to the central information and referral service of the office of the department that handles adult protective services. The department may investigate the report as described in AS 47.24.015 if the department determines that action is appropriate.

 Sec. 25. AS 47.24.015(a) is amended to read:

(a) Upon the department's receipt of a report under AS 47.24.010 that is not transferred under AS 47.24.013, the department, or its designee, shall promptly initiate an investigation to determine whether the vulnerable adult who is the subject of the report suffers from undue influence, abandonment, exploitation, abuse, neglect, or self-neglect. The department, or its designee, shall conduct a face-to-face interview with the subject of the report unless that person is unconscious or the department, or its designee, has determined that a face-to-face interview could further endanger the vulnerable adult.

 Sec. 26. AS 47.24.015(c) is amended to read:

(c) The department[,] or its designee[,] shall immediately terminate an investigation under this section upon the request of the vulnerable adult who is the subject of the report made under AS 47.24.010. However, the department or its designee may not terminate the investigation if the investigation to that point has resulted in probable cause to believe that the vulnerable adult is in need of protective services and the request is made personally by the vulnerable adult and the vulnerable adult is not competent to make the request on the adult's own behalf, or the request is made by the vulnerable adult's guardian, attorney-in-fact, or surrogate decision maker and that person is the alleged perpetrator of the undue influence, abandonment, exploitation, abuse, or neglect of the vulnerable adult and is being investigated under this chapter. If the department has probable cause to believe that the vulnerable adult is in need of protective services,

(1) the department may petition the court as set out in AS 47.24.019;

(2) the department or its designee may refer the report made to the department under AS 47.24.010 to a police officer for criminal investigation; or

(3) in cases involving fraud, the department or its designee may refer the report made to the department under AS 47.24.010 to the office of public advocacy for investigation; in this paragraph, "fraud" has the meaning given in AS 13.26.324 [AS 44.21.415].

 Sec. 27. AS 47.24.015 is amended by adding new subsections to read:

(h) An individual or entity shall cooperate with an investigation initiated by the department under this section. The individual or entity shall permit representatives of the department to obtain and review any health care or financial records related to a vulnerable adult and to interview staff who have had contact with, treated, or observed the vulnerable adult.

(i) A person may not interfere with the department in the performance of its investigation under this section, including interfering with the department's access to the vulnerable adult.

MEMORANDUM March 16, 2011

SUBJECT: Due process notice (CSHB 150(JUD)
(Work order No. 27-GH1722\B))

TO: Representative Carl Gatto
Chair of the House Judiciary Committee
Attn: Sarah Munson

FROM: Jean M. Mischel
Legislative Counsel

The new work draft that incorporates the changes you requested is enclosed. With regard to the changes requested pertaining to service of a protective order under AS 13.26.209(e), added by sec. 9 of the bill, I did not understand the requested change that provided

> "Actual and legal notice of a protective order issued under this section is also effective upon all persons upon that order being recorded with the State Recorder."

In order to attempt to avoid a due process challenge resulting from this provision and to clarify what is meant by "State Recorder," I have modified that language and included that with the requirement of delivery of the notice on the affected person. Did you intend to include these orders in the state registry for sexual assault, stalking, and domestic violence protective orders under AS 18.65.540?

Even with this modification, I do not know whether the changes made to AS 13.26.209(a) and (e) pertaining to service of process and mailed or faxed notices will meet due process standards.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

Sec. 13.26.165. Protective proceedings. Upon petition and after notice and hearing in accordance with the provisions of AS 13.26.165 - 13.26.315, the court may appoint a conservator or issue another [MAKE OTHER] protective order for cause as follows:

(1) appointment of a conservator or other protective order may be made in relation to the estate and affairs of a minor if the court determines that

(A) a minor owns money or property that requires management or protection that [WHICH] cannot otherwise be provided;

(B) the minor[,] has or may have business affairs that [WHICH] may be jeopardized or prevented by the status of being a minor; [,] or

(C) [THAT] funds are needed for the minor's support and education and [THAT] protection is necessary or desirable to obtain or provide funds;

(2) appointment of a conservator or other protective order may be made in relation to the estate and affairs of a person if the court determines that

(A) the person is unable to manage the person's property and affairs effectively for reasons such as mental illness, mental deficiency, physical illness or disability, advanced age, chronic use of drugs, chronic intoxication, fraud, confinement, detention by a foreign power, or disappearance; and

(B) the person has property that [WHICH] will be wasted or dissipated unless proper management is provided, or that funds are needed for the support, care, and welfare of the person or those entitled to be supported by the person and [THAT] protection is necessary or desirable to obtain or provide funds.

 Sec. 7. AS 13.26.180(a) is amended to read:

(a) The person to be protected, a person's attorney or other legal representative, any person who is interested in the estate, affairs, or welfare of the person to be protected, including a parent, guardian, [OR] custodian, or caregiver, the Department of Health and Social Services, or any person who would be adversely affected by lack of effective management of the property and affairs of the person to be protected, may petition for the appointment of a conservator or for other appropriate protective order.

 Sec. 8. AS 13.26.180 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(c) The petition may include a request for temporary conservatorship as provided in AS 13.26.207 if it appears that the respondent's property is likely to be wasted or dissipated during the pendency of the conservatorship proceeding. A request for temporary conservatorship must specify the facts that cause the petitioner to believe that a temporary conservatorship is necessary.

* Sec. 9. AS 13.26 is amended by adding new sections to read:

Sec. 13.26.207. Temporary conservators. (a) If, during the pendency of an initial petition for conservatorship, it appears that the respondent is in need of a protective order to protect the respondent against waste or dissipation of funds or property, or to obtain funds that are needed for the immediate support, care, and welfare of the respondent or persons entitled to be supported by the respondent, and the respondent is not capable of protecting the respondent's funds or property or obtaining the funds that are needed to support the respondent or persons whom the respondent is required to support, the petitioner may request the appointment of a temporary conservator to authorize the protection or to obtain the necessary funds. The request must state the reasons and factual basis for the request. The petitioner shall immediately file the request with the court and serve copies on the respondent and the respondent's attorney and other persons as ordered by the court. The court shall conduct a hearing within 72 hours after the filing.

(b) If the court determines that a temporary conservator should be appointed, it shall make the appointment and grant to the temporary conservator only the authority that is least restrictive upon the liberty of the respondent and that enables the temporary conservator to provide the protection or authority necessary to protect the respondent from waste or dissipation of funds or property or to obtain the funds necessary for support.

(c) The temporary conservatorship expires at the time of the appointment of a full or partial conservator or on the dismissal of the petition for conservatorship.

Sec. 13.26.209. Ex parte protective orders; forms for petitions and orders; fees. (a) A person who is allowed to file a petition for a protective order under AS 13.26.180(a) may file a petition for an ex parte protective order against another person. A petition filed on behalf of a protected person by another person must be accompanied by proof of service of the petition on the protected person or the person's attorney unless service would cause an immediate threat of harm to the best interests of the protected person and the petition includes a written explanation of the harm. If the court finds that the petition establishes probable cause that the respondent is financially defrauding the petitioner or a person for whose benefit the petitioner filed the petition and that, because of the fraud, there has been or is an immediate threat of a waste or dissipation of the proposed protected person's funds or other property, the court shall ex parte and without notice to the respondent issue a protective order. The petitioner shall certify to the court in writing any effort that the petitioner made to provide notice to the respondent. The court shall cause a copy of the protective order, any related orders, and a scheduling order, if any, to be served on the respondent and the protected person.

(b) An ex parte protective order under this section may

(1) grant any protection described in AS 13.26.200;

(2) supersede an existing power of attorney;

(3) prohibit the respondent from having any direct or indirect contact with the petitioner or other person for whose benefit the petitioner filed the petition; and

(4) prohibit the respondent from taking any act with respect to the funds or other property of the petitioner or other person for whose benefit the petitioner filed the petition.

(c) An ex parte protective order expires 20 days after it is issued, at the end of a six-month extension if granted by the court under (d) of this section, or on the appointment of a temporary or permanent conservator or dismissal of the petition for the ex parte order.

(d) On application filed with the court before the expiration of the 20-day ex parte protective order, the court shall schedule a hearing on whether to extend the protective order for up to six months. The court shall provide to the protected person and the respondent at least 10 days' notice of the hearing and the respondent's right to appear and be heard. If the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the respondent has committed fraud against the petitioner or the person for whose benefit the petition was filed, regardless of whether the respondent appears at the hearing, the court may extend the ex parte protective order for up to six months.

(e) A protective order issued under this section is in addition to any other civil or criminal remedy.

(f) A third party that has received actual or legal notice of a protective order issued under this section shall comply with the order. A third party who does not comply with a protective order granted under this section may be liable in a civil action to the protected person or the protected person's heirs, assigns, or estate for a civil penalty not to exceed $1,000, plus the actual damages, costs, and fees associated with the failure to comply with the protective order. A third party who does not comply with a protective order granted under this section may also be criminally liable under AS 11.56.740 for violating a protective order. As used in this section, "actual or legal notice" means delivery by mail or facsimile at the most recently known place of residence or business of the third party or recording with the Department of Public Safety.

(g) The Alaska Court System, after consulting with the Department of Health and Social Services, the office of public advocacy, the office of elder fraud and assistance, the long term care ombudsman, and other interested persons and organizations, shall prepare forms for petitions and protective orders and instructions for use of the forms by a person seeking a protective order under this section. The forms must conform to the Alaska Rules of Probate Procedure and Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure, except that information on the forms may be filled in by legible handwriting. The office of the clerk of each superior and district court shall make available to the public the forms a person seeking a protective order under this section may need and instructions for the use of the forms. The clerk shall provide assistance in completing and filing the forms.

(h) Filing fees may not be charged for a petition under this section.

 Sec. 10. AS 13.26 is amended by adding a new section to article 4 to read:

Sec. 13.26.324. Definitions. In AS 13.26.165 - 13.26.324, unless the context requires otherwise, "fraud" means

The petitioner shall immediately file the request with the court and serve copies on the respondent and the respondent's attorney and other persons as ordered by the court. The court shall conduct a hearing within 72 hours after the filing.

(b) If the court determines that a temporary conservator should be appointed, it shall make the appointment and grant to the temporary conservator only the authority that is least restrictive upon the liberty of the respondent and that enables the temporary conservator to provide the protection or authority necessary to protect the respondent from waste or dissipation of funds or property or to obtain the funds necessary for support.

(c) The temporary conservatorship expires at the time of the appointment of a full or partial conservator or on the dismissal of the petition for conservatorship.

Sec. 13.26.209. Ex parte protective orders; forms for petitions and orders; fees. (a) A person who is allowed to file a petition for a protective order under AS 13.26.180(a) may file a petition for an ex parte protective order against another person. A petition filed on behalf of a protected person by another person must be accompanied by proof of service of the petition on the protected person or the person's attorney unless service would cause an immediate threat of harm to the best interests of the protected person and the petition includes a written explanation of the harm. If the court finds that the petition establishes probable cause that the respondent is financially defrauding the petitioner or a person for whose benefit the petitioner filed the petition and that, because of the fraud, there has been or is an immediate threat of a waste or dissipation of the proposed protected person's funds or other property, the court shall ex parte and without notice to the respondent issue a protective order. The petitioner shall certify to the court in writing any effort that the petitioner made to provide notice to the respondent. The court shall cause a copy of the protective order, any related orders, and a scheduling order, if any, to be served on the respondent and the protected person.

(b) An ex parte protective order under this section may

(1) grant any protection described in AS 13.26.200;

(2) supersede an existing power of attorney;

(3) prohibit the respondent from having any direct or indirect contact with the petitioner or other person for whose benefit the petitioner filed the petition; and

(4) prohibit the respondent from taking any act with respect to the funds or other property of the petitioner or other person for whose benefit the petitioner filed the petition.

(c) An ex parte protective order expires 20 days after it is issued, at the end of a six-month extension if granted by the court under (d) of this section, or on the appointment of a temporary or permanent conservator or dismissal of the petition for the ex parte order.

(d) On application filed with the court before the expiration of the 20-day ex parte protective order, the court shall schedule a hearing on whether to extend the protective order for up to six months. The court shall provide to the protected person and the respondent at least 10 days' notice of the hearing and the respondent's right to appear and be heard. If the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the respondent has committed fraud against the petitioner or the person for whose benefit the petition was filed, regardless of whether the respondent appears at the hearing, the court may extend the ex parte protective order for up to six months.

(e) A protective order issued under this section is in addition to any other civil or criminal remedy.

(f) A third party that has received actual or legal notice of a protective order issued under this section shall comply with the order. A third party who does not comply with a protective order granted under this section may be liable in a civil action to the protected person or the protected person's heirs, assigns, or estate for a civil penalty not to exceed $1,000, plus the actual damages, costs, and fees associated with the failure to comply with the protective order. A third party who does not comply with a protective order granted under this section may also be criminally liable under AS 11.56.740 for violating a protective order. As used in this section, "actual or legal notice" means delivery by mail or facsimile at the most recently known place of residence or business of the third party or registering with the Department of Public Safety.

(g) The Alaska Court System, after consulting with the Department of Health and Social Services, the office of public advocacy, the office of elder fraud and assistance, the long term care ombudsman, and other interested persons and organizations, shall prepare forms for petitions and protective orders and instructions for use of the forms by a person seeking a protective order under this section. The forms must conform to the Alaska Rules of Probate Procedure and Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure, except that information on the forms may be filled in by legible handwriting. The office of the clerk of each superior and district court shall make available to the public the forms a person seeking a protective order under this section may need and instructions for the use of the forms. The clerk shall provide assistance in completing and filing the forms.

(h) Filing fees may not be charged for a petition under this section.

Where none of several witnesses testifying on testamentary capacity testified before lower court, trial judge had no greater opportunity than reviewing court to judge their credibility, since his only contact with such witnesses was through typed transcript of their testimony before probate master, and in such situation reviewing court was in as good a position as trial judge to make a determination of fact based upon such testimony.

This is a dispute among three parties over a dead man's property.

Thomas Paskvan, Jr. claims the property as sole beneficiary under a will executed by decedent, Pete Mesich, on September 18, 1946. The probate master, after a hearing, found that this will was a product of undue influence exercised by Paskvan and was not entitled to probate, a finding which was concurred in by the superior court on appeal from the master's findings. Paskvan has appealed to this court from the superior court's order rejecting the 1946 will.

Paul Drazenovich claims the property as sole beneficiary under a will executed by decedent on August 25, 1952. The probate master found that decedent was incompetent at the time of the execution of this will and that it was not entitled to probate as decedent's last will and testament. The master's findings were rejected by the superior court. After a hearing at which evidence was introduced, the superior court found that decedent was competent to make the 1952 will, that there was no proof of undue influence in connection with its execution, and that it was entitled to be admitted to probate.

Certain relatives of decedent, consisting of five nieces and two grandnephews, claim the property as decedent's heirs, such claim being based on the contention that neither of the two wills was valid and that decedent died intestate. The heirs, Drago Mesich, et al, have appealed from the superior court's judgment recognizing as valid and admitting to probate the will of August 25, 1952.

The Paskvan Will.

The probate master found that a confidential relationship existed between Paskvan and Mesich, that the evidence raised an inference that Mesich's will of September 18, 1946 leaving all his property to Paskvan was a product of undue influence exercised by the latter, and that Paskvan had not produced evidence sufficient to overcome that inference. The superior court accepted and adopted these findings of the master.[FN1]

> FN1. Civ.R. 53(d)(2) provides in part:

of the one imposing the confidence.[FN5]

FN5. Twelve Hundred 'L' St. Corp. v. Inlet Co., 438 P.2d 708, 709 (Alaska 1968); Swenson v. Wintercorn, 92 Ill.App.2d 88, 234 N.E.2d 91, 97 (1968).

Mesich was the owner of the Arctic Hotel in Fairbanks. In the spring of 1946 he and Paskvan formed a partnership for the operation of the hotel, with Paskvan to get 50 percent of the revenue from the hotel. There is no evidence that Paskvan invested any money in this enterprise. On the same day the will was executed September 18, 1946, Mesich executed a general power of attorney in favor of Paskvan. Paskvan testified that the purpose of the power of attorney was to enable him to handle Mesich's affairs as to the Arctic Hotel-to 'act for him' and 'to speak for him and everything'. Paskvan was the managing partner.

Also in the spring of 1946 Paskvan and Mesich decided to develop some property on Second Avenue in Fairbanks where they built a combination restaurant and bar called the Elbow Room. Paskvan invested $10,000 in the venture which he had obtained as a loan from the Veteran's Administration. Mesich worked on the project and invested several thousand dollars in it. Mesich's contribution came in part from his share of the revenues from the operation of the Arctic Hotel.

Mesich's will, leaving all his estate to Paskvan, was executed in September 1946. Paskvan testified that the will was executed 'so that we could go ahead and develop this property (the Elbow Room property on Second Avenue) so that there would be * * * some basis for starting the the (sic) business partnership.' The property belonged to Mesich. Paskvan used the will as evidence of his interest in the property when he attempted to secure a veteran's loan with respect to the property, but he was told that the will was not the answer to being able to borrow money. He was told that he had to be a part owner of the property in order to borrow money on it. Paskvan then went to Mesich and had him convey to Paskvan a half interest in the property by deed. After this conveyance, Paskvan obtained a veteran's loan on the property.

[3] In the light of these facts we cannot say that the probate master was mistaken in finding that a confidential relationship existed between Mesich and Paskvan. Mesich's actions in making Paskvan the managing partner in the Arctic Hotel enterprise, in giving Paskvan his power of attorney so that Paskvan could act and speak for Mesich, in executing his will in favor of Paskvan so that there would be a basis for their partnership venture, and in conveying to Paskvan a one-half interest in the Elbow Room property shows quite clearly that Mesich trusted Paskvan and reposed confidence in him-that he relied upon Paskvan to act in Mesich's best interests in handling his affairs.

[4][5] The remaining question is whether the probate master was clearly mistakenin*233 finding that, because of the confidential relationship and other factors, the will was a product of undue influence exercised by Paskvan. The initial burden is on the contestant of a will to establish undue influence, and the existence of a confidential relationship alone does not suffice to raise a presumption that undue influence was present.[FN6] But when the principal or sole beneficiary under a will, who had a confidential relationship with the testator, participated in the drafting of the will, then a presumption of undue influence arises. It requires the beneficiary to come forward with a satisfactory explanation for his actions. He must show that he did not take advantage of the confidential relationship in influencing the testator to execute the will in his favor.[FN7]

FN6. Yribar v. Fitzpatrick, 91 Idaho 105, 416 P.2d 164, 166 (1966).

FN7. Cline v. Larson, 234 Or. 384, 383 P.2d 74, 85 (1963); Hummer v. Betenbough, 75 N.M. 274, 404 P.2d 110, 115 (1965).

Such a presumption arises in this case. A fiduciary or confidential relationship existed between Mesich and Paskvan, and the evidence shows that Paskvan participated in the execution of the will. Paskvan testified that the will was prepared by an attorney, the it took about three days conferring with the attorney to get the will prepared, that at several meetings in the attorney's office Paskvan was present with Mesich, and that Paskvan was present when the will was executed. Paskvan indicated his interest in having the will made at one point by saying, in answer to the question of why he had gone to the attorney's office with Mesich: 'Well, Pete (Mesich) was the one that uh wanted to draw this thing up, because we had planned on developing this property * * *.' (Emphasis added.) At another point in his testimony Paskvan said:

Well, I suppose we uh-I know we both went up there and uh told him exactly what uh we wanted, and Mr. Hurley took his notes down in-in longhand * * *. (Emphasis added.)

The presumption that undue influence existed is strengthened by other factors. Mesich was a Croatian who emigrated to the United States in 1902. At the time he executed the Paskvan will in 1946 he was 65 years old. He was unable to read or write the English language and spoke English with a heavy Slavic accent. In 1942 he was attacked by an unknown assailant who hit him on the head with a heavy instrument, inflicting serious wounds. He was required to be hospitalized for 42 days during much of which time he was unconscious or semiconscious. There was considerable testimony that after this blow to his head Mesich deteriorated mentally, had difficulty communicating with people, did not seem aware of what was going on around him, and was not competent to handle his business affairs.

Paskvan did not carry his burden of overcoming the presumption of undue influence. It is true that he testified that Mesich had made the will in his favor as a reward for Paskvan's willingness to help Mesich-because Mesich was happy with the way Paskvan did things and thought Paskvan was worthy of his consideration. But this was not enough. The presumption of undue influence was a strong one because of the age and mental condition of Mesich, the fiduciary or confidential relationship that existed between Mesich and Paskvan, Paskvan's opportunity to exercise undue influence because of his partner', the fact that Paskvan appeared to be the dominant party in their partner', the fact that Paskvan appeared relationship, Paskvan's participation in the procurement of the will, the fact that Paskvan became the sole beneficiary under the will, [FN8] Paskvan's possession of the will after its execution, and the fact that the will seemed to have been executed so that Paskvan could utilize it in order to obtain a real estate loan.

FN8. See Dean v. Jordan, 194 Wash. 661, 79 P.2d 331, 336 (1938).

234 [6] The totality of these circumstances points to a situation where Paskvan took advantage of a trust and confidence that Mesich had in him in order to acquire all of Mesich's property upon his death. Paskvan had no satisfactory explanation for his actions in this regard. He did not show that in regard to the confidential relationship between him and Mesich he had acted with entire good faith and with due regard to the interests of Mesich. In the absence of such a showing, the presumption of undue influence prevails, and therefore the probate master and the superior court were not clearly erroneous in finding that the 1946 will was a product of undue influence.

The only other time we have had occasion to consider the subject of undue influence as it pertains to the execution of a will was in 1962 when we decided the case of In re Estate of Kraft.[FN9] We said there:

FN9. 374 P.2d 413, 417 (Alaska 1962).

Appellant has failed to sustain her burden of proving that by reason of influence exercised by another, the testator was virtually compelled to make a will which he would not have made had he been left to the free exercise of his own judgment and wishes.

In that case we approached that problem from the standpoint of the testator's freedom of will. We thought in terms of coercion and duress which would act as a dominating power over the mind and act of a testator, because in that case it had been argued that the testator had been induced to execute a last will and testament which in reality was not his will but another person's will substituted for that of the testator. Here we are not concerned with whether there have been acts to overbear the will of a testator. Unlike the situation in Kraft, we are concerned here with whether the beneficiary under a will has by his conduct and his relationship with the testator taken advantage of the latter by means which reasonable and moral men would regard as improper, in order to obtain some benefit or profit.[FN10] If he has, the will is a product of undue influence even in the absence of coercion and duress acting as a dominating power over the mind and act of the testator.

FN10. In re Estate of Reddaway, 214 Or. 410, 329 P.2d 886, 890 (1958).

The Drazenovich Will.

On August 25, 1952 Mesich executed a will leaving all his property to Paul Drazenovich. The probate master found that Mesich was not competent to make this will. He based this holding on what he determined to be a presumption of incompetency arising from the appointment of a guardian of the estate and property of Mesich on April 9, 1951, which presumption the probate master held was not rebutted. The superior court rejected the master's findings and heard testimony regarding Mesich's competency to execute the 1952 will. The court found that at the time of execution Mesich knew the nature and extent of his property, was aware of the natural objects of his bounty, knew that he was making a will, and was aware of the nature and consequences of his act. The court also found that the will was executed voluntarily and was not the product of undue influence, and that it was entitled to probate.

[7][8] In the case of In re Estate of Kraft[FN11] we spoke on the subject of testamentary capacity as follows:

FN11. Id. at 415-416.

Disease, great weakness, the use of alcohol and drugs, and approaching death do not alone render a testator incompetent to make a will. The question is always whether, in spite of these things, he had sufficient mental capacity to understand the nature and extent of his property, the natural or proper objects of his bounty, and the nature of his testamentary act.

We also said in that case that the trial court's decision as to testamentary capacity would not be reversed unless we found it 235 to be clearly erroneous. [FN12] That is the question here-whether the superior court's finding that Mesich possessed testamentary capacity when he executed the 1952 will was or was not clearly erroneous. In order to make this determination, we must consider the evidence that touches upon the testamentary capacity of Mesich in 1952.

FN12. Id. at 416.

Mrs. Dorothy Clark, one of the two subscribing witnesses to the 1952 will, testified that she never had any difficulty communicating with Mesich before, at or after the witnessing of the will, that Mesich appeared to know what he was doing, and that she never had any reason to think that Mesich was not of sound mind. On the other hand, when Mrs. Clark was asked whether she could say that she had any reason to believe that Mesich was of sound mind in her limited relations with him, she answered: 'Well, I don't know why I should say whether he's sane or insane. I mean, who am I to judge?' Mrs. Clark described her relationship with Mesich as a casual acquaintance.

The other subscribing witness to the will, Charles Burtchin, who was then Mrs. Clark's husband, did not testify in person. In answer to interrogatories he said: 'The testator, Pete Mesich, as far as my recollection goes was quite normal and appeared to know what he was doing in signing the will.' Drazenovich owned the property where Mrs. Clark and Burtchin were living at the time.

Other witnesses who appeared on behalf of Drazenovich, most of whom had had business contacts with Mesich from time to time, testified varyingly that Mesich was 'probably as normal as most of us', that there was no trouble in understanding Mesich and that he appeared to be rational, that it was no more difficult to understand Mesich after 1942, the year he suffered the blow to his head, than it was before that year, that Mesich seemed rational, not abnormal and capable of carrying on his business, that there was no noticeable change in his personality, that in conversations with Mesich he appeared to understand what the other person was talking about, that Mesich engaged in conversations with people and recognized them, and that Mesich never performed any antisocial acts.

Of these witnesses for Drazenvoich, eight in number, one testified that he had 'very limited contact' with Mesich and that his memories were 'quite vague' about the business relationships he had had with Mesich. Another testified that she did not recall Mesich very clearly, and that her relationship with Mesich ended in 1948-four years prior to the execution of the Drazenovich will. Another testified that he never saw Mesich after 1951. Another testified that she saw Mesich only once or twice a year and that the conversations with him were very casual. Another witness admitted that her acquaintance with Mesich was a very casual one, and another said that she really could not have a conversation with Mesich because of his broken English.

Dr. Jack Petajan, a neurologist, testified on behalf of Drazenovich. He had not examined Mesich. But he testified, on the basis of certain assumptions posed in a hypothetical question, that recent memory loss alone would not be a sufficient basis to say that judgment was impaired, that he thought that Mesich would know his relatives and whom he wished to favor, that Mesich could probably have remembered what property he had owned for a long time prior to his memory loss, and that Mesich probably would have had at least an understanding that a will conveyed away property.

However, Dr. Petajan did not have an opinion to a reasonable medical certainty as to whether Mesich had been competent at the time he executed the will. In addition, it is questionable as to whether all of the assumptions in the hypothetical question were supported by the evidence. For example, one of the assumptions made in the hypothetical question was that in 1951 a 236 guardian had been appointed for Mesich on the ground that he could not read and write the English language. There is nothing in the record to show whether a guardian had been appointed for that reason or because Mesich simply was not competent to handle his own affairs. Another assumption was that Mesich had properly executed the 1952 will 'before witnesses of his own choice.' The evidence shows that the witnesses to the execution of his will were chosen by Drazenovich. Another assumption was that Mesich had had no record of unusual social responses or an unsteady course of behavior. There was evidence, which we shall refer to in more detail, from witnesses who appeared on behalf of Mesich's heirs who were contesting the will, that Mesich's course of behavior may well have been unsteady and his social responses unusual. Finally, although Dr. Petajan testified that Mesich would have been able to remember property he had owned for a long time prior to his memory loss, he probably would not be able to give a detailed account of property he had acquired recently after the memory loss.

There was other evidence relating to Mesich's competency to make the 1952 will. Blazo Bigovich was appointed guardian of Mesich's estate in 1951. Bigovich testified that Mesich could not talk about any business matters, that he 'didn't understand' even when Bigovich spoke to Mesich in his own Slavic language, that Mesich did not know what property he had 'deeded away', that 'he would sign his own death certificate, he didn't know any different', that Bigovich tried to explain business matters to Mesich but he could not figure out how things had happened, that Mesich seemed to have very little understanding about things if any, that during a law suit where Mesich was involved 'he didn't know what was happening any more than the man in the moon', and that this was Mesich's condition from the time Bigovich was appointed his guardian until about 1953 when Mesich had a stroke.

A Fairbanks attorney, Warren Taylor, had done legal work for Mesich from 1945 up to the 1950's. Taylor testified that he never could get a lucid story out of Mesich at an interview or on the witness stand in court, that during most of the time he knew Mesich his mind was so confused that he could not grasp the significance of questions even when put to him in his native language, and that in a law suit involving some of Mesich's property, Mesich was almost of no help in determining how much property he owned.

Andrew Miscovich testified that after the 1942 blow to Mesich's head, he could not remember present things, could not carry on a conversation, was unable to carry on his business, and was easily influenced. However, Miscovich on cross-examination stated that his conclusions about Mesich being easily influenced were based on things he had been told. In addition, Miscovich said that he had only seen Mesich during the winters about once a month.

George Bojanich testified that he first met Mesich in 1912 and maintained contact until 1915, and then did not renew the acquaintance again until 1941. He said that in 1945 he was called to be an interpreter in a law suit where Mesich was the defendant. Bojanich attempted to speak Slav to Mesich but was unable to even make Mesich understand the questions. This witness was not cross-examined.

Arthur Nerland testified that he knew Mesich because he supplied paint and other materials for him. He described Mesich as being a quiet kind of man prior to 1942. He said that after 1942 Mesich became even more quiet, impossible to communicate with, and he seemed to get worse over the years. Nerland testified that he did not think that Mesich was competent to handle his business affairs, and based his testimony on seeing Mesich about once a month over the years.

Everett Russell testified that he first met Mesich in 1937, saw him until 1941, and that after he had come back from the service in 1947 he saw Mesich occasionally until 1951. Russell said that after 1947 Mesich appeared irrational, that he did not recognize Russell, and that Russell 237 had been unable to conduct a conversation with Mesich. Russell also testified that in May or June of 1952 he saw Mesich six or eight times, and that Mesich was not aware of what was transpiring in the conversations around him. Russell also said that Mesich would always say 'hello' if anyone else said 'hello', but in Russell's opinion Mesich did not recognize anybody.

John Butrovich testified that he first met Mesich in 1941. He said that after the 1942 blow to Mesich's head he slowed down and that he shuffled around after that time. Butrovich said that he was unable to communicate with Mesich after he had suffered the blow to his head and he described Mesich as a 'vegetable'. Butrovich did not feel that Mesich was competent to handle his business after 1942. Finally Butrovich testified that he felt that Mesich did not know what was going on when he spoke to him in English after that time. The cross-examination of Butrovich was very brief.

Robert Lavery first met Mesich in the late 1930's when Mesich came into his grocery and meat market. Lavery testified that after 1942 he did not think that Mesich recognized anybody, and that he just said 'hello', 'hi', or made a grunting sound. Lavery did not think that Mesich was capable of handling his business affairs after 1942. He said that he made many attempts to engage Mesich in conversation from the period 1943 to 1954 but was unable to do so.

Louis Krize said that he first met Mesich in 1940 and that at that time Mesich was asked many questions which he handled very well. Krize contacted Mesich again in 1943 and described him then as changed, unable to carry on a conversation, and unable to recognize Krize. Krize stressed the fact that from 1940 to 1943 the mental condition of Mesich continued to get worse. Krize was asked only one question on cross-examination.

Dr. Arthur Schaible treated Mesich for the 1942 blow to his head. Dr. Schaible described Mesich's injury and condition. He said that he had opportunities to observe Mesich over a 10 year period from 1942 to 1953, and that he thought that Mesich's mental condition deteriorated during that time. He noticed disorientation and lapse of memory at times. It was Dr. Schaible's impression that Mesich was incompetent and that he would have a hard time taking care of his daily affairs. He said that by 'certain standards' Mesich was not mentally competent.

Dr. Paul Haggland also treated Mesich for the 1942 injury. Dr. Haggland said he saw Mesich again in 1951 when he was brought in to have his competency determined. The doctor read into evidence the report he made at the time. In this report he stated that Mesich could not supply him with a satisfactory history of himself, that he had a definite pathology in his brain, resulting from the 1942 injury to his head, and that his memory for old events was good but for recent events was poor. Dr. Haggland testified that it was his belief at the time he examined Mesich that he should have a guardian.

Paul Drazenovich, the proponent of and beneficiary under the 1952 will, testified at the master's hearing but not at the hearing held by the superior court. On the issue of testamentary capacity Drazenovich said that Mesich knew what he was doing when he executed the will, that Mesich was 'all right in (the) mind', that there was never a time when Mesich did not recognize Drazenovich, that Mesich's '(m)ind was perfect', and that when he and Mesich went to see an attorney to have the will drawn up Mesich did most of the talking.

Drazenovich's testimony is of questionable value. Under cross-examination it was brought out that in 1953 Drazenovich had appeared as a witness in the suit brought in the Territorial District Court by Mesich, through his guardian, against the father of Thomas Paskvan, Jr. Drazenovich had testified as a witness for the plaintiff, Mesich. It is apparent from 238 the following excerpts from Drazenovich's 1953 testimony in the district court that he did not at that time believe that Mesich was mentally competent. He was asked for his opinion of Mesich's condition after he had suffered the blow to his head in 1942:

Q. How was Pete's condition after he got out of the hospital? How has it been since then?

A. Sometimes he don't hardly recognize me. Sometimes he comes to see me at my cabin and sometimes when I go to see him in the cabin he said, 'Get out.' I say, 'What is the matter, Pete?' Then he comes and starts kissing me. 'I am sorry,' he said. 'I thought it was somebody else.' He does that right along, so far as I know.

Q. How does he talk?

© 2011 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

A. Talk, sometimes tells what was happening most in childhood. He can stay all night telling me the same story over and over, but whatever is happening now he can tell me nothing.

Q. Do you know whether he is mentally competent?

A. I know he isn't.

Q. You know he isn't?

A. Sure.

Q. Did you see Pete in the summer or fall of 1949?

A. I seen him, sure.

Q. Did he know what he was talking about then? Did he act rationally in 1949?

A. He didn't act right no time since he got hurt. So far as I know, he didn't act right.

Q. Didn't you say sometimes his mind is clear and sometimes it isn't? Isn't that the way it is?

A. No, so far as I can see I would ask him something and he can't remember nothing and then he tries to tell me old story over and over what happened in childhood.

Q. Don't ramble. Isn't it true that sometimes his mind is working all right and sometimes it isn't?

A. Not very much of the time.

Q. Not very much?

A. So far as I can see, no. I feel so because I know him pretty well, before he talk nice to me, advice and everything, but now it is different entirely.

Q. He give you advice?

A. Before he got hurt he gave me advice but now he doesn't know nothing * * *.

In that case the district court made a specific finding that at all time since the 1942 injury to Mesich's head he was mentally incompetent to attend to his business affairs.[FN13]

FN13. The district court entered judgment in favor of Mesich and against Paskvan, Sr. which judgment was affirmed on peal. Paskvan v. Mesich, 227 F.2d 646, 16 Alaska 1, (9th Cir. 1955).

[9] Finally, on the issue of testamentary capacity, there was the appointment of a guardian for Mesich in 1951. Since the proceedings relating to the appointment of the guardian were not included in the record on appeal, we do not know specifically on what basis the guardian was appointed. But we do know, from the statute relating to the appointment of guardians, that at least it must have been found that Mesich was 'incapable of conducting his affairs.' [FN14] We recognize the rule that incompetency to make a will is not necessarily established by the fact that one has been adjudged an incompetent in 239 a guardianship proceeding.[FN15] But this fact is evidence to be considered, along with other evidence, on the issue of testamentary capacity. [FN16]

FN14. AS 20.05.080 provides:

The court may appoint a guardian to take care, custody, and management of the estate of an insane person and any other person who is incapable of conducting his affairs and maintaining his family and the education of his children.

[10] As to the burden of proof on testamentary capacity there is divergence of authority. Some courts hold that the proponent of the will has the burden of establishing that the testator possessed testamentary capacity at the time he executed his will.[FN17] Other courts, and apparently the majority, hold that the contestant of a will has the burden of showing lack of testamentary capacity.[FN18] We adopt this latter view.

FN17. In re Estate of Andersen, 192 Or. 441, 235 P.2d 869, 871 (1951); Houghton v. Jones, 418 S.W.2d 32, 39 (Mo.1967).

FN18. [11] Along with the petition for probate of the 1952 will Drazenovich filed the affidavit of Mrs. Clark, one of the subscribing witnesses to the will. This witness stated under oath that the will was signed by Mesich in her presence and the presence of the other subscribing witness, the Mesich then declared that the instrument was his last will and testament, and that at the time of execution of the will Mesich was of sound and disposing mind and was not acting under duress, menace, fraud, undue influence or misrepresentation. This was evidence that established a prima facie case of testamentary capacity; the burden was then cast upon the contestants of the will to show that testamentary capacity was lacking.[FN19] The question here is whether Mesich's heirs, as contestants of the 1952 will, met that burden.

FN19. In re Estate of Lacy, 431 P.2d 366, 368 (Okl.1967). See cases cited in note 18 supra.

[12] Most of the witnesses testifying both for and against testamentary capacity, who were seen and heard by the superior court, had only casual contacts with Mesich and had not been associated with him on any sustained basis. If the testimony of these witnesses were all that had to be considered, we would not reverse the court's determination that Mesich possessed testamentary capacity because of our duty to give due regard to the court's function in determining the credibility of witnesses. As we said in In re Estate of Kraft:[FN20]

FN20. 374 P.2d 413, 416 (Alaska 1962).

A decision of the issue as to testamentary capacity depended largely, if not entirely, on oral testimony given by witnesses seen and heard by the trial judge. It was his province to judge their credibility, and we may not reverse his decision unless we find it to be clearly erroneous.

But there were other witnesses, not seen and heard by the trial judge, whose testimony on the issue of testamentary capacity was of greater value because of the nature and extent of their association with Mesich. Attorney Taylor, who had done legal work for Mesich from 1945 up to the 1950's, testified that he never could get a lucid story out of Mesich at an interview or on the witness stand in court, that during most of the time he knew Mesich the latter's mind was so confused that he could not grasp the significance of questions even when put to him in his native language, and that in a law suit involving 240 some of Mesich's property, Mesich was almost of no help in determining how much property he owned.

Blazo Bigovich, who was appointed guardian of Mesich's estate in 1951, testified that Mesich could not talk about any business matters, that he did not understand even when Bigovich spoke to him in his own Slavic language, the Mesich did not know what property he had deeded away, that Mesich could not figure out how things had happened, that he seemed to have very little understanding about things, that during a law suit where Mesich was involved Mesich 'didn't know what was happening any more than the man in the moon', and that this was Mesich's condition from the time Bigovich was appointed guardian in 1951 until about 1953 when Mesich had a stroke.

Dr. Schaible, who had treated Mesich for the 1942 injury to his head, and who had observed Misich over a 10 year period from 1942 to 1953, said that he thought that Mesich's mental condition deteriorated during that time, that he had lapses of memory and was disoriented, and that he was not mentally competent.

George Bojanich, who was called to be an interpreter for Mesich in a law suit where Mesich was the defendant, said that he attempted to speak the Slavic language to Mesich, but was unable to make Mesich understand the questions.

Finally, there was the testimony of Drazenovich in the 1953 suit in the Territorial District Court, which we have already referred to, where Drazenovich made it clear that in his opinion Mesich was mentally incompetent after he suffered the 1942 injury to his head.

[13] None of these witnesses were seen or heard by the trial judge. They had testified only before the probate master and not at the hearing held by the superior court. The superior court judge had no greater opportunity than we to judge their credibility, since his only contacts with these witnesses was through the typed transcript of their testimony before the probate master. In this situation we are in as good a position as the trial judge to make a determination of fact based upon such testimony.[FN21]

FN21. Fairbanks Publishing Co. v. Pitka, 445 P.2d 685, 687-688 (Alaska 1968).

[14] We consider this evidence more important than the testimony of the other witnesses that the trial judge did see and hear. From such evidence in particular, and along with other evidence in the record, we are left with the definite and firm conviction that the trial judge was mistaken in finding that Mesich possessed testamentary capacity at the time of the execution of the 1952 will. It is our determination that at that time Mesich did not have sufficient mental capacity to understand the nature and expent of his property, the natural or proper objects of his bounty, and the nature of his testamentary act.[FN22] Our conviction that such a mistake has been made means that the trial judge's finding that the testamentary capacity existed in 1952 is clearly erroneous.[FN23] In view of this determination it is unnecessary for us to pass upon the court's finding that this will was not the product of undue influence.

FN23. Fairbanks Publishing Co. v. Pitka, 445 P.2d 685, 687-688 (Alaska 1968); Perkins v. Willacy, 431 P.2d 141, 142 (Alaska 1967).

The judgment of the superior court rejecting and denying probate of the Paskvan will of September 18, 1946 is affirmed. The judgment admitting to probate the Drazenovich will of August 25, 1952 is reversed. The case is remanded to the superior court for further proceedings not inconsistent with the views expressed in this opinion.

RE: HB 150 (Governor Parnell)--Support

Dear Chair Gatto:

On behalf of the members of AARP in Alaska, we encourage you and your colleagues on the House Judiciary Committee to support HB 150, sponsored by the House Rules Committee at the request of Governor Parnell.

The aging of Alaska's population, particularly the growth in the numbers of our citizens over age 75, presents unique challenges for our criminal justice system.

The National Center on Elder Abuse indicates that 23.4% of substantiated reports of mistreatment of older adults were financial exploitation, another 17% was physical abuse, and 32.5% was caregiver neglect. Emotional/verbal/psychological abuse accounted for 23.6% of the substantiated reports and sexual abuse/other accounted for 3.6%.

Elder abuse occurs without reference to race, religion, income, education, place of residence, or living arrangement. It is real and, unfortunately, all too common.

Detecting and preventing elder abuse involves increasing awareness among the general public and professionals.

Although HB 150 addresses the problems of abuse and exploitation on minors, we will focus on the benefits that we perceive will help older Alaskans.

The bill identifies "mandated reporters." This is very significant and will undoubtedly stop people from "looking the other way" and will also protect them from reporting incidents that might involve supervisory staff over them.

HB 150 also creates vehicles for new emergency procedures to allow courts to immediately protect individuals from financial abuse with temporary conservators and financial protective orders.

Unfortunately there are incidents of trusted advisors like guardians, agents under durable power of attorney, and other fiduciaries who have also committed elder abuse. Adding the concept of "undue influence" should help address this issue.

HB 150 also requires cooperation with Adult Protective Services, DHSS training of investigators, and mandates release of relevant financial and health records necessary for an investigation.

Will HB 150 prevent all elder abuse? No. But it will go a long way in preventing it and punishing those who commit it. It's a strong bill that will help vulnerable older Alaskans, younger Alaskans with disabilities, and minors.

AARP requests an "AYE" vote on HB 150.

Should you have any questions about our position, please feel free to contact me (586-3637) or Patrick Luby, AARP Advocacy Director (907-762-3314).

Thank you for your consideration.

HB 153 – "An Act relating to the scheduling and rescheduling of certain substances as controlled substances."

HB 153 updates and strengthens Alaska's anti-drug laws. Specifically, this legislation adds Salvia divinorum (Salvinorin A) to the list of Schedule IIA drugs, and moves buprenorphine from a Schedule VA up to a Schedule IIIA drug.

Salvia is a psychoactive plant which can induce dissociative effects and is a potent producer of "visions" and other hallucinatory experiences. It is banned in several countries and 24 states as of September 2010. The classification of Salvia as a Schedule IIA drug places it in the same group as other hallucinogens.

Buprenorphine is a semi-synthetic opioid that, like methadone, is used to treat opioid addiction in higher dosages and to control moderate pain in non-opioid tolerant individuals in lower dosages. Like methadone and other opioids, its use as a recreational drug can lead to dependence. The reclassification of this drug as a Schedule IIIA will place it in a group that has a higher potential for abuse and will increase enforceability against violators.

These proposed changes to statute make these substances harder to obtain and abuse for recreational purposes. The reclassification creates or increases the penalties for their abuse, creating additional deterrents.

STATE OF ALASKA
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB153

Analysis

This legislation would amend AS 11.71.150 through the addition of Salvia Divinorum and Salvia A (Divinorin A) to the Schedule IIA list of controlled substances.

Passage of the bill could expand the responsibilities of the Alaska Scientific Crime Detection Laboratory through an increase in submissions to the controlled substance section of the crime lab.

The laboratory does not estimate the increase would cause fiscal impact.

LRS Report 10.201

You asked for information on state regulation of salvia divinorum. According to a recent compilation by the National Conference of State Legislatures (NCSL), at least 17 states criminalize some aspect of the use, possession, or distribution of this substance. We include this document as Attachment A.

Attachment B is a copy of "The Legal Status of Salvia Divinorum," by Daniel Siebert, an independent researcher who closely follows this issue. Mr. Siebert's article, last updated on March 4, 2010, identifies 19 states with laws addressing the legality of salvia divinorum. This article also provides further discussion of pending bills and passed legislation in states as well as in 20 countries that prohibit some aspect of the possession, sale, or use of the substance. For your convenience, we insert a table from Mr. Siebert's article here:

State Laws on Salvia Divinorum

In recent years, the drug Salvia Divinorum, or Salvia, has gained the attention of state legislators. Since 2006, at least 17 states have passed laws regulating or controlling the drug.

Salvia is an herb related to mint that is known for its psychoactive effects. The plant is native to parts of Mexico, where historically it has been used as part of indigenous religious rituals. Common methods of ingestion include infusing leaves into a tea; smoking dried herbs; and chewing. In the United States, use of Salvia is most common among 18-25 year olds and to a much lesser extent among adolescents (see chart below).

Effects of Salvia

Salvia originally became popular as a legal alternative to marijuana. However, the effects are markedly different. The effects of Salvia are hallucinogenic and vary based on method of ingestion. For example, smoking Salvia can lead to strong, instantaneous effects, whereas chewing or drinking tea can lead to longer lasting scenarios, but less intense. Some common effects include uncontrollable laughter, visions, dysphoria, experiencing multiple realities, and loss of physical coordination. So far, there has been limited study into the long-term effects of Salvia or its potential for addiction or abuse or its potential medicinal benefits. Initial studies have found that since Salvia increases dopamine levels in the brain, it contains potential as an addictive substance. Other studies, though, have found that Salvia could have potential as a treatment for gastrointestinal disorders.

Legal Status

No Federal statutes control or regulate distribution of Salvia. So far, at least 17 states have felt the need to act, passing laws ranging from banning possession or sale for minors to outright bans. Some states have classified Salvia as a Schedule 1 substance, modeled after the federal Controlled Substances Act, where Schedule 1 substances are considered to have a high potential for dependency and no accepted

THE LEGAL STATUS OF SALVIA DIVINORUM

(This page was last updated on March 4, 2010)

is created and maintained by Daniel Siebert

Legal Status

Salvia divinorum is a valuable medicinal herb. Because it produces profoundly introspective states of awareness, it is intrinsically unsuitable for recreational use (i.e., it is not a "party drug"). It is not habit-forming, not addictive, and does not present a significant risk to public health or safety. Because it is a powerful consciousness-altering herb, some regulation of sales is sensible and appropriate. It is reasonable to require that vendors provide detailed safety information and guidelines for responsible use. It also makes sense to limit the salvinorin A content of extracts sold in bulk form—extremely potent extracts should only be sold in pre-measured individual doses. It is appropriate to prohibit delivery to minors. It is also appropriate to prohibit reckless use, such as driving a vehicle while inebriated. There are many already-existing non-drug-specific laws that can be enforced against reckless salvia users (e.g., laws that prohibit public endangerment, public intoxication, reckless driving, etc.). Legislation should only penalize irresponsible use, not all use. Legislation that imposes punishment for possession of Salvia divinorum is neither useful nor humane. The idea of making any species illegal is absurd—after all, every species is a precious and irreplaceable part of our natural heritage. A sensible approach would be to regulate Salvia divinorum in a similar manner as alcohol and tobacco. Another sensible option would be to regulate it as a prescription medication, as some US states have done with cannabis. Certainly, physicians and psychiatrists should be able to prescribe salvia to patients who might benefit from it. It should also remain available for use in psychotherapy.

Decisions regarding the regulation of Salvia divinorum (or any substance) should always be based on science. The evidence shows that this herb is relatively safe and non-addictive. The pharmacology of its primary active constituent, salvinorin A, is unique and shows great promise as a lead compound for the development of useful medications. Excessively restrictive regulation would seriously impede further scientific research. For a well-reasoned, scientifically informed, perspective on the relative safety of Salvia divinorum and its importance in medical research, I encourage you to read by Dr. Roland Griffiths and Dr. Matthew Johnson of Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine, which were presented as testimony opposing efforts to make salvia a Schedule I controlled substance in the state of Maryland. I also encourage you to read my which I have sent to legislators in several states.

Unfortunately, several countries have enacted laws that prohibit possession and/or sale of Salvia divinorum. In some cases, the penalties for violating these laws are quite severe. There are some countries that do not prohibit possession or sale, but do prohibit importation. The following listing describes all of the laws, regulations, and proposed legislation pertaining to Salvia divinorum that I am currently aware of. Because of the controversial nature of vision-inducing substances in general, it is probable that the legal status of Salvia divinorum will continue to change in the future. To stay abreast of changes in the legal status of Salvia divinorum, I encourage you to subscribe to my free email newsletter.

If you are aware of any attempts to prohibit Salvia divinorum in countries or states not listed below, please to send me an email.

Australia

Australia was the first country to prohibit Salvia divinorum and salvinorin A. The committee responsible for the ban has admitted that there is "no evidence of a major public health hazard." The ban went into effect June 1, 2002. Anyone living in Australia or its territories who is considering being involved with this plant is urged to first obtain professional legal advice. Readers are urged not to ship Salvia divinorum, or products made from it, to Australia or its territories because the person who receives the shipment could face severe criminal penalties. Please go [illegible] for more details on this recent action by Australia's government and to learn what you can do to fight it.

Denmark

Salvia divinorum and salvinorin A have been placed in category B of the Danish list of controlled substances. Category B includes psilocybin mushrooms, cocaine, amphetamine, and several others substances that are only legal for medicinal and scientific purposes. Possession of Salvia divinorum in Denmark now carries a penalty of up to 2 years in prison. The law

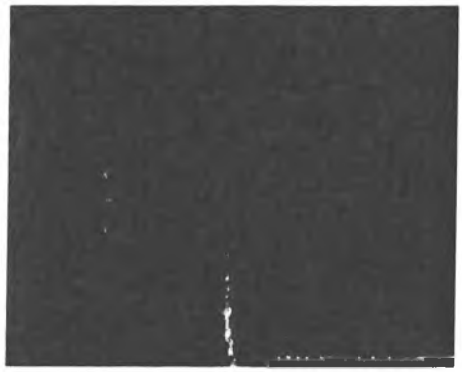
Salvia Divinorum



Overview

Salvia Divinorum is a perennial herb in the mint family that is abused for its hallucinogenic effects.

Street names

Maria Pastora, Sally-D, Salvia

Looks like

Spade-shaped variegated green leaves that look similar to mint. The plants themselves grow to more than 3 feet high, have large green leaves, hollow square stems, and white flowers with purple calyces.

Methods of abuse

Chewed or smoked.

Affect on mind

Psychic effects include perceptions of bright lights, vivid colors, shapes, and body movement, as well as body or object distortions. Salvia divinorum may also cause fear and panic, uncontrollable laughter, a sense of overlapping realities, and hallucinations. Salvinorin A, also called Divinorin A, is believed to be the ingredient responsible for the psychoactive effects of Salvia divinorum.

Affect on body

Adverse physical effects may include loss of coordination, dizziness, and slurred speech.

Drugs causing similar effects

When Salvia divinorum is chewed or smoked, the hallucinogenic effects elicited are similar to those induced by ketamine, mescaline, and psilocybin.

Overdose effects

It is not possible to overdose from Salvia divinorum.

Legal status in the United States

Neither Salvia Divinorum or Salvinorin A has an approved medical use in the United States, but neither are controlled under the Controlled Substances Act (CSA). Salvia divinorum is, however, controlled by a number of states. Click here to find which states have controlled Salvia, and where legislation is pending <http://www.deadiversion.usdoj.gov/drugs_concern/salvia_d/salvia_d.htm>. Since Salvia is not controlled by the CSA, some online botanical companies and drug promotional sites have advertised Salvia as a legal alternative to other plant hallucinogens, like mescaline.

Common places of origin

Salvia is native to certain areas of the Sierra Mazaleca region of Oaxaca, Mexico. It is one of several plants that are used by Mazatec Indians for rituals and healing. Salvia Divinorum plants can be grown successfully outside of this region. They can be grown indoors and outdoors, especially in humid semitropical climates.

Intelligence Bulletin:
Buprenorphine: Potential for Abuse

Publication Date: September 2004

Document ID: 2004-L0424-013

Archived on: July 1, 2009. This document may contain dated information. It remains available to provide access to historical materials.

This bulletin addresses the use of buprenorphine, a drug recently approved for use in opiate addiction therapy. It examines the drug's effects, advantages of traditional treatment options, and vulnerability to diversion and abuse.

Diversion

Buprenorphine is a synthetic opiate and produces the euphoric effects sought by opiate abusers; therefore, it is susceptible to abuse in both of the forms approved for treating opiate addiction. Subutex, the form that does not contain naloxone, is more vulnerable to abuse because it can be crushed and injected or snorted without causing withdrawal symptoms in the abuser. The FDA recommends that physicians limit the use of Subutex to supervised administration sessions; however, physicians are not required to do so, creating opportunities for Subutex diversion. Subutex has been prescribed legally for years in some foreign countries, where its diversion for illicit use is common. There are lucrative black markets for diverted Subutex in Germany, New Zealand, and the United Kingdom. In France, India, and Scotland, where buprenorphine is far more common in opiate addiction therapy than methadone, many individuals are addicted to Subutex. Suboxone is not available in these countries.

Suboxone also can be diverted and abused; however, it is more likely to be abused by individuals who are addicted to low doses of opiates since it can precipitate withdrawal symptoms in high doses. The naloxone in Suboxone guards against abuse by causing withdrawal symptoms in abusers who crush and either inject or snort the drug; however, law enforcement and pharmacist reporting indicates that Suboxone is being abused successfully when snorted.

Using buprenorphine and heroin in combination does not produce increased effects, but if buprenorphine and methadone are abused together, the effects of both drugs are enhanced.

Consequently, diverted buprenorphine may be attractive to patients currently using methadone for opiate addiction therapy.

Despite controls designed to make buprenorphine diversion-proof, there have been reports of buprenorphine diversion throughout the United States, primarily in the Northeast region.

- Chittenden County, Vermont. A pharmacist in this area reports that Suboxone is being diverted and sold for $25 per 8-milligram tablet. Abusers are grinding the tablets and snorting them.

- Washington County, Maine. The Washington County Sheriff's Office reports that buprenorphine is being diverted in that area and sold for $50 per tablet. The size of the tablet is unknown, and it is unclear whether Subutex or Suboxone tablets are being diverted in this case.

- Pennsylvania. The Pennsylvania Department of Health reports that diverted Subutex and Suboxone are being illegally distributed on the street. Specific locations have not been identified.

Outlook

It is unlikely that buprenorphine will render methadone therapy obsolete because it is not as effective in patients who require large doses of opiates in maintenance therapy. However, buprenorphine can provide opiate addiction therapy to individuals addicted to lower doses of opiates, to those in rural areas with inadequate access to treatment, and to those in areas where methadone clinics have reached full capacity. With more physicians obtaining certification to prescribe buprenorphine every day, this form of therapy has the potential to become as common as methadone therapy.

Because of its ceiling effect and ability to precipitate withdrawal symptoms if taken in high doses, buprenorphine is more susceptible to abuse by individuals who are addicted to low doses of opiates or individuals in the early stages of opiate addiction. The drug also can be abused in combination with methadone, making buprenorphine diversion more problematic in areas where heroin abuse and methadone therapy are common, such as the Northeast region. As buprenorphine therapy becomes more widespread, the potential for increased diversion of Subutex and Suboxone should be closely monitored.

This drug is a semi-synthetic narcotic derived from thebaine and is currently being investigated for the treatment of narcotic addiction. Like methadone and LAAM, buprenorphine is potent (30 to 50 times the analgesic potency of morphine), has a long duration of action, and does not need to be injected. The buprenorphine products under development are sublingual tablets. Unlike the other treatment drugs, buprenorphine produces far less respiratory depression and is thought to be safer in overdose. Buprenorphine is currently available in the United States as an injectable Schedule III narcotic analgesic (Buprenex®) for human and veterinary use.

proposed judgment, is harmless error. Jefferson v. Greater Anchorage Area Borough, Op. No. 536, 451 P2d 730 (Alaska 1969).

It is not the intent of this rule to delegate to counsel for the successful party the trial judge's primary duty of finding the facts under Rule 52. Fairbanks Builders, Inc. v. Morton DeLima, Inc., Op. No. 682, 483 P2d 194 (Alaska 1971).

Where a defendant's motion for relief from judgment alleges they were denied the opportunity to object to the judgment, such motion is not based on an error of law. It therefore need not be brought within 30 days from entry of the judgment. Alaska Placer Co. v. Lee, Op. No. 840, 502 P2d 128 (Alaska 1972).

A judgment is not illegal if it is signed in chambers rather than rendered in open court. Jefferson v. City of Anchorage, Op. No. 930, 513 P2d 1099 (Alaska 1973).

Where the court announces its decision regarding the main issue in a case on June 8th, where the plaintiff submits on June 27th proposed findings, which the defendant objects to where the proposed partial judgment is entered on August 1st, and where findings of fact, conclusions of law, and final judgment are entered on January 12th, the defendant is not denied the five-day period within which to object to the proposed findings, even though he receives the findings of fact and conclusions of law with respect to the final judgment on January 9th. The court is merely acting within its authority to modify documents which had earlier been submitted to it. Moran v. Kenai Towing and Salvage, Inc., Op. No. 1056, 523 P2d 1237 (Alaska 1974).

The trial court's failure to hold a hearing on appellant's objections to appellee's proposed findings and conclusions is not error; such a hearing is discretionary. Urban Development Co. v. Dekreon, Op. No. 1083, 526 P2d 325 (Alaska 1974).

Provision in this rule for written objections to findings of fact is discretionary. Frontier Saloon, Inc. v. Short, Op. No. 1345, 557 P2d 779 (Alaska 1976).

Defendant did not waive right to challenge judgment where it did not object under Civil Rule 78(b) but filed timely Rule 59(f) motion to amend judgment. Beech Aircraft Corp. v. Harvey, Op. No. 1338, 558 P2d 879 (Alaska 1976).

A trial court is entitled to adopt findings and conclusions prepared by counsel so long as they reflect the court's independent view of the weight of the evidence. Industrial Indemnity Co. v. Wick Const. Co., Op. No. 2791, 680 P2d 1100 (Alaska 1984).

When judgment is entered on a secured note, the note merges with judgment, and any further proceedings will be to enforce the judgment rather than the note. Moening v. Alaska Mut. Bank, Op. No. 3274, 751 P2d 5 (Alaska 1988).

A judgment recovered upon a promissory note secured by a deed of trust did not merge the deed of trust nor operate as a discharge, abandonment, or release of the deed of trust; in essence, the judgment creditor ended up with a secured judgment. Moening v. Alaska Mut. Bank, Op. No. 3274, 751 P2d 5 (Alaska 1988).

Although trial court could have canceled promissory note after entering judgment on the note, conditionally canceling the note was not an abuse of discretion. Moening v. Alaska Mut. Bank, Op. No. 3274, 751 P2d 5 (Alaska 1988).

Rule 79. Costs—Taxation and Review.

(a) Allowance to Prevailing Party. Unless the court otherwise directs, the prevailing party is entitled to recover costs allowable under paragraph (f) that were necessarily incurred in the action. The amount awarded for each item will be the amount specified in this rule or, if no amount is specified, the cost actually incurred by the party to the extent this cost is reasonable.

(b) Cost Bill. To recover costs, the prevailing party must file and serve an itemized and verified cost bill, showing the date costs were incurred, within 10 days after the date shown in the clerk's certificate of distribution on the judgment. Failure of a party to file and serve a cost bill within 10 days, or such additional time as the court may allow, will be construed as a waiver of the party's right to recover costs. The prevailing party must have receipts, invoices, or other supporting documentation for each item claimed. This documentation must be available to other parties for inspection and copying upon request and must be presented to the clerk upon request. Documentation may be filed only if requested by the clerk or in response to an objection.

(c) Objection and Reply. A party may object to a cost bill by filing and serving an objection within 7 days after service of the cost bill. The prevailing party may respond to an objection by filing and serving a reply within 5 days after service of the objection.

(d) Taxing of Costs by Clerk. Promptly upon expiration of the time for filing objections, or if an objection is filed, the time for filing a reply, the clerk shall issue an itemized award of costs allowable under this rule. No cost bill hearing will be held unless requested by the clerk. If a hearing is held, it will be limited to issues identified by the clerk in the notice of hearing. The clerk may deny costs requested by the prevailing party on grounds that

(1) the cost is not allowed under paragraph (f);

(2) the party failed to provide an adequate description or adequate supporting documentation following a request by the clerk or another party; or

(3) the amount claimed by the prevailing party is unreasonable.

The clerk may not deny costs on grounds that the costs were not necessarily incurred in the action. If a party objects on this basis, the party must seek review under paragraph (e) of the clerk's action in awarding the cost.

(e) Review by Court. A party aggrieved by the clerk's action in awarding costs may file a motion for review of the clerk's award. The motion must be filed and served within five days after the date shown on the clerk's certificate of distribution on the award. The motion must particularly designate each ruling of the clerk to which objection is made. Matters not so designated will not be considered by the court. Costs awarded by the clerk are presumed to be reasonable.

(f) Allowable Costs. The following items are the only items that will be allowed as costs:

(1) the filing fee;

(2) fees for service of process allowable under Administrative Rule 11 or postage when process is served by mail;

(3) other process server fees allowable under Administrative Rule 11;

(4) the cost of publishing notices required by law or by these rules;

(5) premiums paid on undertakings, bonds, or security stipulations where required by law, ordered by the court, or necessary to secure some right accorded in the action;

(6) the cost of taking and transcribing a deposition allowed by Civil Rule 30(a) or 31(a) (including a deposition that is ordered by the court or agreed to by the parties under those rules), as follows:

(A) the court reporter's fee and travel expenses to communities where a local court reporter is not available;

(B) expenses allowed by Civil Rule 30.1(e) for recording, editing, or using an audio or audio-visual deposition; and

(C) the cost of the original plus one copy of the transcript;

(7) witness fees allowed under Administrative Rule 7;

(8) the fee of an interpreter or translator for a witness when that witness is entitled to a fee under Administrative Rule 7;

(9) travel costs allowed under paragraph (g) of this rule;

(10) long distance telephone charges for telephonic participation by an attorney or party at court proceedings, depositions, the meeting of the parties required by Civil Rule 26(f), and interviews of witnesses other than the party;

(11) charges paid by the prevailing party's attorney for computerized legal research;

(12) copying costs for paper copies, photographs, and microfilm, the cost of scanning, imaging, coding, and creating electronic media files, such as computer diskettes or tapes, and the cost of duplicating text files or otherwise copying documents or data in an electronic medium, as follows:

(A) for copies from the court, a copy center, or a person or entity other than the prevailing party's attorney, the amount charged for the copies; and

(B) for copies from the prevailing party's attorney, the amount charged by the attorney or $.15 per copy, whichever is less;

(13) exhibit preparation costs;

(14) the cost of transcripts ordered by the court;

(15) other costs allowed by statute; and

(16) any sales or other taxes necessarily incurred by the party in connection with a cost allowed in this subsection.

(g) Travel Costs.

(1) Travel costs will be allowed for

(A) one attorney to attend trial, hearings on dispositive motions, settlement conferences, and the meeting of the parties required by Civil Rule 26(f), but only if no local attorney is present; if more than one out-of-town attorney attends a proceeding at which no local attorney is present, travel costs will be allowed for the attorney who traveled the shortest distance to the trial site;

(B) one attorney to attend depositions, interviews of witnesses who are not deposed, and meetings to review documents produced in the course of discovery;

(C) one legal assistant or investigator to interview witnesses who are not deposed or to review documents produced in the course of discovery; and

(D) witnesses to the extent permitted by Administrative Rule 7.

(2) Travel costs are subject to the following limitations:

(A) air fare is allowed at the coach class fare or the actual fare, whichever is less;

(B) ground transportation, including car rental, is allowed outside the traveler's home city; and

(C) food and lodging is allowed at the same per diem rate allowed for court employees.

(3) In unusually complex cases, the court may allow a prevailing party to recover travel costs for more than one attorney to participate in the activities described in section (g)(1)(A) of this rule. To request travel costs for more than one attorney, the prevailing party must file a motion for court review of the clerk's award as provided in paragraph (e) and must include supporting documentation for each item claimed. These costs should not be included in the cost bill filed with the clerk.

(4) To recover travel costs, the prevailing party must include the following information for each trip: the name of the traveler, whether the traveler is an attorney, legal assistant, or investigator, the reasons for the travel, and the travel dates.

(h) Equitable Apportionment Under AS 09.17.080. In a case in which damages are apportioned among the parties under AS 09.17.080, costs must be apportioned and awarded according to the provisions of Civil Rule 82(e).

(Adopted by SCO 5 October 9, 1959; amended by SCO 56 effective November 1, 1963; by SCO 258 effective November 15, 1976; by SCO 554 effective April 4, 1983; by SCO 1085 effective January 15, 1992; by SCO 1118 effective July 15, 1993; by SCO 1153 effective July 15, 1994; by SCO 1200 effective July 15, 1995; by SCO 1246 effective July 15, 1996; and by SCO 1279 effective July 31, 1997; rescinded and readopted by SCO 1306 effective January 15, 1998; amended by SCO 1340 effective January 15, 1999; and by SCO 1631 effective April 16, 2007.)

Note: AS 25.25.313(c), added by § 6 of ch. 57 SLA 1995 (the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act), has the effect of amending Civil Rule 79 by requiring the court to award costs and fees against a party who requests a hearing primarily for delay in a support proceeding listed in AS 25.25.301.

Note: In 1997 the legislature enacted AS 18.16.030(m), which provides that a filing fee may not be required of, and court costs may not be assessed against, a minor in a proceeding to bypass parental consent to an abortion. According to ch. 14, § 10 SLA 1997, AS 18.16.030(m) has the effect of amending Administrative Rule 9, Civil Rule 79, and Appellate Rule 508 by prohibiting filing fees and assessment of court costs in certain actions. Instead of amending individual rules to implement AS 18.16.030, the supreme court has adopted a separate rule on judicial bypass proceedings in the superior court and a separate rule on judicial bypass appeals. See Probate Rule 20 & Appellate Rule 220.

Note: Chapter 94 SLA 1998 adopts AS 46.03.761, which allows the Department of Environmental Conservation to impose administrative penalties against an entity that fails to construct or operate a public water supply system in compliance with state law or a term or condition imposed by the department. According to section 5 of the act, subsection (j) of this statute has the effect of amending Civil Rules 79 and 82 by allowing the recovery of full reasonable attorney fees and costs in an action to collect administrative penalties assessed under AS 46.03.761.

Note: Chapter 136 SLA 03 (HB 151) amends Chapters 10 and 45 of Title 9 of the Alaska Statutes relating to claims and court actions for defects in the design, construction, and remodeling of certain dwellings and limits on when certain court actions may be brought. According to Section 4(2) of the Act, AS 09.45.889(b) has the effect of amending Civil Rule 79 by allowing the court to deny costs to a claimant in the situation described in AS 09.45.889(b), even if the claimant is the prevailing party.

Rule 82. Attorney's Fees.

(a) Allowance to Prevailing Party. Except as otherwise provided by law or agreed to by the parties, the prevailing party in a civil case shall be awarded attorney's fees calculated under this rule.

(b) Amount of Award.

(1) The court shall adhere to the following schedule in fixing the award of attorney's fees to a party recovering a money judgment in a case:

Judgment and, If Awarded, Prejudgment Interest		Contested With Trial	Contested Without Trial	Non-Contested
First	$25,000	20%	18%	10%
Next	$75,000	10%	8%	3%
Next	$400,000	10%	6%	2%
Over	$500,000	10%	2%	1%

(2) In cases in which the prevailing party recovers no money judgment, the court shall award the prevailing party in a case which goes to trial 30 percent of the prevailing party's reasonable actual attorney's fees which were necessarily incurred, and shall award the prevailing party in a case resolved without trial 20 percent of its actual attorney's fees which were necessarily incurred. The actual fees shall include fees for legal work customarily performed by an attorney but which was delegated to and performed by an investigator, paralegal or law clerk.

(3) The court may vary an attorney's fee award calculated under subparagraph (b)(1) or (2) of this rule if, upon consideration of the factors listed below, the court determines a variation is warranted:

(A) the complexity of the litigation;

(B) the length of trial;

(C) the reasonableness of the attorneys' hourly rates and the number of hours expended;

(D) the reasonableness of the number of attorneys used;

(E) the attorneys' efforts to minimize fees;

(F) the reasonableness of the claims and defenses pursued by each side;

(G) vexatious or bad faith conduct;

(H) the relationship between the amount of work performed and the significance of the matters at stake;

(I) the extent to which a given fee award may be so onerous to the non-prevailing party that it would deter similarly situated litigants from the voluntary use of the courts;

(J) the extent to which the fees incurred by the prevailing party suggest that they had been influenced by considerations apart from the case at bar, such as a desire to discourage claims by others against the prevailing party or its insurer; and

(K) other equitable factors deemed relevant.

If the court varies an award, the court shall explain the reasons for the variation.

(4) Upon entry of judgment by default, the plaintiff may recover an award calculated under subparagraph (b)(1) or in reasonable actual fees which were necessarily incurred, whichever is less. Actual fees include fees for legal work performed by an investigator, paralegal, or law clerk, as provided in subparagraph (b)(2).

(c) Motions for Attorney's Fees. A motion is required for an award of attorney's fees under this rule or pursuant to contract, statute, regulation, or law. The motion must be filed within 10 days after the date shown in the clerk's certificate of distribution on the judgment as defined by Civil Rule 58.1. Failure to move for attorney's fees within 10 days, or such additional time as the court may allow, shall be construed as a waiver of the party's right to recover attorney's fees. A motion for attorney's fees in a default case must specify actual fees.

(d) Determination of Award. Attorney's fees upon entry of judgment by default may be determined by the clerk. In all other matters the court shall determine attorney's fees.

(e) Equitable Apportionment Under AS 09.17.080. In a case in which damages are apportioned among the parties under AS 09.17.080, the fees awarded to the plaintiff under (b)(1) of this rule must also be apportioned among the parties according to their respective percentages of fault. If the plaintiff did not assert a direct claim against a third-party defendant brought into the action under Civil Rule 14(c), then

(1) the plaintiff is not entitled to recover the portion of the fee award apportioned to that party; and

(2) the court shall award attorney's fees between the third-party plaintiff and the third-party defendant as follows:

(A) if no fault was apportioned to the third-party defendant, the third-party defendant is entitled to recover attorney's fees calculated under (b)(2) of this rule;

(B) if fault was apportioned to the third-party defendant, the third-party plaintiff is entitled to recover under (b)(2) of this rule 30 or 20 percent of that party's actual attorney's fees incurred in asserting the claim against the third-party defendant.

(f) Effect of Rule. The allowance of attorney's fees by the court in conformance with this rule shall not be construed as fixing the fees between attorney and client.

(Adopted by SCO 5 October 9, 1959; amended by SCO 497 effective January 18, 1982; by SCO 712 effective September 15, 1986; by SCO 921 effective January 15, 1989; by SCO 1006 effective January 15, 1990; by SCO 1066 effective July 15, 1991; repealed and reenacted by SCO 1118am effective July 15, 1993; amended by SCO 1195 effective July 15, 1995; by SCO 1200 effective July 15, 1995; by SCO 1241 effective July 15, 1996; by SCO 1246 effective July 15, 1996; by SCO 1281 effective August 7, 1997; by SCO 1340 effective January 15, 1999; by SCO 1455 effective July 15, 1993; and by SCO 1670 effective July 1, 2009)

Note to SCO 1118am: By adopting these amendments to Civil Rule 82, the court intends no change in existing Alaska law regarding the award of attorney's fees for or against a public interest litigant, see, e.g., Anchorage Daily News v. Anchorage School Dist., 803 P.2d 402, 404 (Alaska 1990); City of Anchorage v. McCabe, 568 P.2d 986, 993-94 (Alaska 1977); Gilbert v. State, 526 P.2d 1131, 1136 (Alaska 1974), or in the law that an award of full attorney's fees is manifestly unreasonable in the absence of bad faith or vexatious conduct by the non-prevailing party. See, e.g., Malvo v. J.C. Penney Co., 512 P.2d 575, 588 (Alaska 1973); Demoski v. New, 737 P.2d 780, 788 (Alaska 1987).

Note: AS 25.25.313(c), added by § 6 of ch. 57 SLA 1995 (the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act), has the effect of amending Civil Rule 82 by requiring the court to award costs and fees against a party who requests a hearing primarily for delay in a support proceeding listed in AS 25.25.301.

RABINOWITZ, Justice dissenting.

I dissent from the court's adoption of the amendments to Civil Rule 82 called for in [SCO 1118am.] In my view no compelling case has been made demonstrating the need for these changes. 1 Further, my judicial hunch is that these amendments to Civil Rule 82, in particular the new provisions reflected in (b)(3)(A) through (K), will unnecessarily and dramatically increase litigation over attorney's fees awards both in our trial courts as well as in this court. 2

1 In this regard I note that the Alaska Judicial Council is scheduled to conduct an in depth empirical study of the workings of Civil Rule 82. My preference is to await the results of the Council's study before deciding whether any of the current provisions of Rule 82 should be amended. Such a study should position this court to make a more informed assessment as to whether the current rule operates in a fashion which unjustly denies access to our courts. I further note that our Civil Rules Committee recently surveyed the Alaska Bar membership on discrete aspects of Civil Rule 82. A clear majority of those responding to the committee's questionnaire indicated: that Civil Rule 82 does not deter people of moderate means from filing valid claims; that the rule does not put excessive pressure on moderate income people to settle valid claims; and that the rule is needed to discourage frivolous litigation.

2 Any attorney worth his or her salt will, pursuant to the expansive provisions of (b)(3)(A) through (K), request variations from the attorney's fees awards called for under either the monetary recovery schedule provisions of (b)(1), or the provisions of (b)(2) which apply where no money judgment is recovered by the prevailing party.

Note to SCO 1281: In 1997 the legislature amended AS 09.30.065 concerning offers of judgment. According to ch. 26, sec. 52, SLA 1997, the amendment to AS 09.30.065 has the effect of amending Civil Rules 68 and 82 by requiring the offeree to pay costs and reasonable actual attorney fees on a sliding scale of percentages in certain cases, by eliminating provisions relating to interest, and by changing provisions relating to attorney fee awards. According to sec. 55 of the session law, the amendment to AS 09.30.065 applies "to all causes of action accruing on or after the effective date of this Act." However, the amendments to Civil Rule 68 adopted by paragraph 5 of this order are applicable to all cases filed on or after August 7, 1997. See paragraph 17 of this order.

Note: Chapter 94 SLA 1998 adopts AS 46.03.761, which allows the Department of Environmental Conservation to impose administrative penalties against an entity that fails to construct or operate a public water supply system in compliance with state law or a term or condition imposed by the department. According to section 5 of the act, subsection (j) of this statute has the effect of amending Civil Rules 79 and 82 by allowing the recovery of full reasonable attorney fees and costs in an action to collect administrative penalties assessed under AS 46.03.761.

Note: Chapter 136 SLA 03 (HB 151) amends Chapters 10 and 45 of Title 9 of the Alaska Statutes relating to claims and court actions for defects in the design, construction, and remodeling of certain dwellings and limits on when certain court actions may be brought. According to Section 4(1) of the Act, AS 09.45.889(b) has the effect of amending Civil Rule 82 by allowing the court to deny attorney fees to a claimant in the situation described in AS 09.45.889(b), even if the claimant is the prevailing party.

Note (effective July 1, 2009): Chapter 92 SLA 2008 (HB 65) added a new chapter to AS 45 relating to security of personal information, effective July 1, 2009. According to section 6(b) of the Act, AS 45.48.200(a), 45.48.480(b), 45.48.560, and 45.48.750(d), enacted by section 4, have the effect of changing Civil Rule 82 by changing the criteria for determining the amount of attorney fees to be awarded to a party in an action under AS 45.48.200(a), 45.48.480(b), 45.48.560, or 45.48.750(d).

Sponsor Statement
HB 161
"An Act requiring that all information in a declaration of candidacy, letter of intent, or nominating petition…is open to public inspection."

HB 161 makes the information on Division of Elections filing forms for partisan, "no-party," and write-in candidates a matter of public record. If voters are going to evaluate candidates and make an informed choice, they must be allowed to confirm the candidate's name, physical address, and other personal information on the declaration of candidacy. HB 161 makes this information public for all candidates for public office, regardless of the confidentiality preferences they indicated when registering to vote.

The Division of Elections testified on this bill that "there is no authority for the division to treat a candidate differently from any other voter in regard to having the right to make a residential address confidential." Voters should enjoy any and all confidentiality afforded them by the law. Nothing in HB 161 would change that. Candidates for office, however, should be held to a higher standard of public scrutiny than the average voter.

Candidates for office are already required to disclose personal information above and beyond the average voter. HB 161 takes the common-sense next step and makes this personal information available to the public. I respectfully ask that you join me in supporting this change.

COMMITTEE CALENDAR

OVERVIEW(S): DIVISION OF ELECTIONS

WITNESS REGISTER

GAIL FENUMIAI, Executive Director
Division of Elections
Office of the Lieutenant Governor
Juneau, Alaska
POSITION STATEMENT: Presented an overview of the Division of Elections.

SARAH FELIX, Assistant Attorney General
Labor and State Affairs Section
Civil Division (Juneau)
Department of Law
Juneau, Alaska

POSITION STATEMENT: Answered questions during the Division of Elections overview.

9:38:37 AM

MS. FENUMIAI, in response to Chair Lynn, confirmed that voters have the right to keep their residence address confidential, as long as they are able to provide the division with a different mailing address. In response to a follow-up question, she stated her assumption that people who have been victims of domestic violence and police officers may not want others to know where they live.

9:42:30 AM

MS. FELIX noted that AS 15.07.195 gives the right to keep ones residential address confidential. In response to Representative Seaton, she said currently there is no authority for the division to treat a candidate differently from any other voter in regard to having the right to make a residential address confidential.

9:44:15 AM

MS. FELIX, in response to Representative Seaton, stated that the subject of a voter's residential address was not an issue that arose during Edgmon v. Moses.

Sponsor Statement
HB 161
"An Act requiring that all information in a declaration of candidacy, letter of intent, or nominating petition…is open to public inspection."

HB 161 makes the information on Division of Elections filing forms for partisan, "no-party," and write-in candidates a matter of public record. If voters are going to evaluate candidates and make an informed choice, they must be allowed to confirm the candidate's name, physical address, and other personal information on the declaration of candidacy. HB 161 makes this information public for all candidates for public office, regardless of the confidentiality preferences they indicated when registering to vote.

In a recent House State Affairs Committee hearing, the Division of Elections testified that "there is no authority for the division to treat a candidate differently from any other voter in regard to having the right to make a residential address confidential." Voters should enjoy any and all confidentiality afforded them by the law. Nothing in HB 161 would change that. Candidates for office, however, should be held to a higher standard of public scrutiny than the average voter.

Candidates for office are already required to disclose personal information above and beyond the average voter. HB 161 takes the common-sense next step and makes this personal information available to the public. I respectfully ask that you join me in supporting this change.

HB 167 - "An Act relating to the sale of products containing dextromethorphan."

HB 167 makes the sale of products containing dextromethorphan (DXM or DM) to persons under the age of 18 or without a prescription illegal. It also requires retailers to mark the product as for sale to persons 18 or older or by prescription or limit the access of the public to the product by its placement behind the counter or similar means.

Dextropethorphan is an antitussive (cough suppressant) medication; it is one of the active ingredients in many over-the-counter cold and cough medicines. DXM is safe when taken in recommended doses. However, when taken at doses higher than medically recommended, DXM acts as a dissociative psychedelic drug. Effects of a high dose of DXM include distortions of the visual field and bodily perception, feelings of dissociation, euphoria or excitement, as well as a loss of comprehension of time.

Over-the-counter products that contain DXM often also contain other ingredients such as acetaminophen and chlorpheniramine. Large doses of acetaminophren can cause liver damage and large doses of chlorpheniramine can cause increased heart rate and seizures.

Adolescents are the primary abusers of DXM, likely because it is inexpensive and relatively easy to obtain. Compounding the problem is that few parents know about the potential for abuse of the drug.

Memorandum

TO: Representative Kyle Johansen
FROM: Daniel Lesh, Legislative Analyst DDL
RE: Regulation of Over-The-Counter Medications Containing Dextromethorphan
LRS Report 10.073

You asked about state regulations limiting the sale of commonly-abused over-the-counter medications containing the chemical dextromethorphan. Specifically, you wanted to know if any such limitations have been proposed in Alaska, or in other states. You also wanted to know of any over-the-counter medical products that the state of Alaska does not allow to be sold to minors or does not allow to be sold in large quantities.

As you may know, dextromethorphan is a drug included in many common cough medications, including cough syrups and cough pills. Individuals sometime abuse these medications by consuming many times the recommended dose, with dissociative, psychedelic effects. Dextromethorphan abuse has numerous negative side effects, but is not generally considered addictive or lethal. The most serious side effects, which can include death, are caused by consuming medications with other active ingredients besides dextromethorphan, such as acetaminophen, according to information we reviewed.

Alaska

It appears that no limitations on the sale of products containing dextromethorphan have been proposed in Alaska. No bills or resolutions introduced between 1983 and 2009—years for which electronic records are available—mention the word dextromethorphan. In addition, J. Kate Burkhart, executive director, Advisory Board on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse, Department of Health and Social Services, is not familiar with any such proposals, nor is she aware of any chronic misuse of these types of products in Alaska.[1]

According to Ms. Burkhart, the only over-the-counter medications with limitations on their sale in Alaska are those containing pseudoephedrine, ephedrine, and phenylpropanolamine—three drugs that are commonly used in the manufacture of methamphetamine.[2] These limitations are the result of federal and state law. The relevant federal law, the Combat Methamphetamine Epidemic Act of 2005, requires that retail establishments limit access to products containing these drugs; verify purchaser identity; keep a log of all purchases of products containing these drugs; and enforce daily and 30-day limits on the sale of these products to any one individual, among other requirements. A state law (AS 17.30.090) passed shortly after the Combat Methamphetamine Epidemic Act of 2005 mirrors and references that federal law. No other over-the-counter medical products in Alaska are limited in their sale by volume or by age of purchaser, according to Ms. Burkhart.

[2] An example of an over-the-counter product containing pseudoephedrine is Sudafed.

Other States

It appears that no state regulates the sale of over-the-counter medications containing dextromethorphan, though proposals to do so have been introduced in a number of states. Similarly, proposals have been introduced in Congress, but never passed. However, one state (Illinois; 720 ILCS 570/218) does regulate the sale of pure, unfinished dextromethorphan.[3] Please see Table 1 for a list of relevant state and federal legislation located via lexis.com and thomas.gov searches.

It is important to note that many major pharmacies have voluntarily installed restrictions of the type you asked about. We were unable to locate a comprehensive list of which stores in which locations have imposed which restrictions. However, a list posted on a website that appears targeted at drug users provides a description of how easy it is to buy dextromethorphan-containing medications in 23 states.[4] The list suggests that in 19 of those states, "some stores" or "large chain stores" do not allow sales of dextromethorphan-containing medications to those less than 18 years of age.[5] The list also names three states (Arkansas, Colorado, and Iowa) where no stores are allowed to sell dextromethorphan to those under 18; however, a search of those states' statutes and regulations did not reveal any such laws.

[3] Unfinished dextromethorphan is already illegal to distribute under general FDA laws regarding packaging and labeling requirements, but state and federal laws have been introduced—and passed in Illinois—to clarify that distribution of unfinished dextromethorphan is illegal.

[4] This list was found on a website called Vaults of Erowid, located at http://www.erowid.org/chemicals/dxm/dxm_law.shtml.

[5] Names of stores listed as requiring purchasers to be at least 18 years of age include Wal-Mart, Dillons, Target, Walgreens, Meijers, and Rite-Aid.

The DAWN Report
Issue 32, 2006R
DRUG ABUSE WARNING NETWORK

Emergency Department Visits Involving Dextromethorphan

In Brief

According to the Drug Abuse Warning Network (DAWN) for 2004:

- An estimated 16,858 emergency department (ED) visits involved pharmaceuticals containing dextromethorphan (DXM). This was just under 1 percent of all drug-related ED visits.
- The rate of ED visits resulting from nonmedical use of DXM for those aged 12 to 20 was 8.0 visits per 100,000 population, compared with 2.5 visits or fewer per 100,000 for other age groups.
- ED patients aged 12 to 20 accounted for about half (51%) of the ED visits resulting from nonmedical use of DXM, compared with 33 percent of DXM-related ED visits overall.
- The rate of ED visits resulting from any type of use of DXM among those aged 12 to 20 was 14.7 per 100,000 population, compared with 5.7 visits per 100,000 for the population overall.
- Alcohol was implicated in 41 percent of ED visits involving nonmedical use of DXM for those aged 18 to 20 and in 13 percent of visits for those aged 12 to 17.

Dextromethorphan (DXM) is a cough suppressant approved by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) that is found in many over-the-counter cough and cold remedies.[1] It is generally safe when taken at recommended doses. When taken in large amounts, though, DXM can produce hallucinations and a "high" similar to psychotropic drugs, such as phencyclidine (PCP). Dangerous side effects may include blurred vision, loss of physical coordination, abdominal pain, and rapid heartbeat. Side effects may be worsened if the ingested product also contains other pharmaceutical ingredients— such as acetaminophen, pseudoephedrine, antihistamines, or expectorants, which are commonly found in cough and cold medicines—or alcohol.[2]

In recent years DXM has become available, primarily over the Internet, in bulk powdered form, and concern has grown over the nonmedical use of DXM by teenagers. In May 2005, the FDA issued a warning about the dangers of DXM abuse involving over-the-counter products and DXM obtained from illicit sources.[3]

The Drug Abuse Warning Network (DAWN) collects data from a national sample of short-term, general, non-Federal hospitals[4] and publishes estimates of emergency department (ED) visits involving illicit drugs and nonmedical use of pharmaceuticals. This issue of The DAWN Report examines the characteristics of ED visits that involve DXM and products containing DXM.

The DAWN Report is published periodically by the Office of Applied Studies (OAS), Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA). This issue was written by Judy K. Ball, Ph.D., M.P.A., and David Skellan (SAMHSA/OAS). All material in this report is in the public domain and may be reproduced or copied without permission from SAMHSA. Citation of the source is appreciated.

Included are findings on the age of ED patients who used DXM and the reason for their visit to the ED. Also provided are the rates of DXM-related ED visits per 100,000 population for different age groups and the frequency with which DXM products are found in combination with alcohol. The ED visits considered here exclude the small number of patients who go to the ED to obtain admission to the hospital's detoxification or substance abuse treatment unit.

Overview

During 2004, there were about 106 million ED visits to short-term, general, non-Federal hospitals in the United States.[5] Of those, DAWN estimates that just over 2.5 million were drug related, with just under a half million involving nonmedical use of pharmaceuticals. Nearly 17,000, or just under 1 percent, of all drug-related ED visits in 2004 involved DXM or products containing DXM.

Reasons for ED visits

Nonmedical use of DXM products accounted for 5,962 (35%) of the estimated 16,858 DXM-related ED visits in 2004, and about half (51%) of these nonmedical visits involved patients aged 12 to 20 (Table 1).[6] The rate of ED visits resulting from nonmedical use of DXM products was 8.0 visits per 100,000 population for those aged 12 to 20, while the rate for other age groups was 2.5 or less (Table 1 and Figure 1).

Medical use of DXM included ED visits attributed to adverse reactions that occured when DXM products were used as prescribed (or according to directions for over-the-counter products). About 31 percent of all DXM-related ED visits in 2004 were a result of adverse reactions. Children aged 0 to 11 are the most likely to experience adverse reactions to DXM. Their rate of ED visits was higher than that for any other age group (3.9 per 100,000 population), and they constitute 36 percent of all ED visits involving adverse reactions to DXM.

About 16 percent of DXM-related ED visits involve accidental ingestion. As with adverse reactions, children aged 0 to 11 are also the most likely to accidentally ingest DXM or DXM-containing products. The rate of ED visits for accidental ingestion of DXM is 5.2 visits per 100,000 population, and over 95 percent of ED visits for accidental ingestion of DXM involve children in this age range.

Suicide attempts involving DXM products accounted for 17 percent of DXM-related ED visits. Patients aged 12 to 20 are more likely than patients in other age groups to use DXM products in a suicide attempt. This group has a rate of 4.3 DXM-related ED visits per 100,000 population, compared with rates of 0.0 for those aged 0 to 11 and less than 1.0 for those aged 21 or older.

Alcohol involvement

Alcohol was involved in about 13 percent of ED visits resulting from nonmedical use of DXM products for those aged 12 to 17 and in 41 percent of such visits for those aged 18 to 20 (Figure 2). Patients aged 35 to 54 had the highest involvement of alcohol (61%). For the youngest (aged 0 to 11) and oldest (aged 55 or older) patients, alcohol involvement was lower (0% and 2%, respectively).

Alcohol is also an ingredient in some cough medications. Some common products (e.g., NyQuil®) contain a mixture of DXM and up to 10 percent alcohol. In these cases, alcohol may play a role in the ED visit without being specifically documented in the ED medical record. Therefore, these findings may understate the involvement of alcohol and its contribution to the side effects leading to ED visits.

The DAWN Report — Emergency Department Visits Involving Dextromethorphan

In Brief

According to the Drug Abuse Warning Network (DAWN) for 2004:

- An estimated 16,858 emergency department (ED) visits involved pharmaceuticals containing dextromethorphan (DXM). This was just under 1 percent of all drug-related ED visits.
- The rate of ED visits resulting from nonmedical use of DXM for those aged 12 to 20 was 8.0 visits per 100,000 population, compared with 2.5 visits or fewer per 100,000 for other age groups.
- ED patients aged 12 to 20 accounted for about half (51%) of the ED visits resulting from nonmedical use of DXM, compared with 33 percent of DXM-related ED visits overall.
- The rate of ED visits resulting from any type of use of DXM among those aged 12 to 20 was 14.7 per 100,000 population, compared with 5.7 visits per 100,000 for the population overall.
- Alcohol was implicated in 41 percent of ED visits involving nonmedical use of DXM for those aged 18 to 20 and in 13 percent of visits for those aged 12 to 17.

The Drug Abuse Warning Network (DAWN) is a public health surveillance system that monitors drug-related morbidity and mortality. DAWN uses a probability sample of hospitals to produce estimates of drug-related emergency department (ED) visits for the United States and selected metropolitan areas annually. DAWN also produces annual profiles of drug-related deaths reviewed by medical examiners or coroners in selected metropolitan areas and States.

Any ED visit or death related to recent drug use is included in DAWN. All types of drugs—licit and illicit—are covered. Alcohol is included for adults when it occurs with another drug. Alcohol is always included for minors. DAWN's method of classifying drugs was derived from the Multum Lexicon, Copyright © 2008, Multum Information Services, Inc. The Multum Licensing Agreement can be found in DAWN annual publications and at http://www.multum.com/license.htm.

DAWN is one of three major surveys conducted by the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration's Office of Applied Studies (SAMHSA/OAS). SAMHSA has contracts with Westat (Rockville, MD) and RTI International (Research Triangle Park, NC) to operate the DAWN system and produce publications.

FDA looks to curb abuse of cough medicine

Misuse of Robitussin, NyQuil and others sends 8,000 to the ER each year

By MATTHEW PERRONE

Associated Press

updated

WASHINGTON— Federal health regulators are weighing restrictions on Robitussin, NyQuil and other cough suppressants to curb cases of abuse that send thousands of people to the hospital each year.

The Food and Drug Administration on Tuesday posted its review of dextromethorphan, an ingredient found in more than 100 over-the-counter medications that is sometimes abused for its euphoric effects. The practice, dubbed "robotripping," involves taking more than 25 times the recommended dose of a cold medicine and is mainly associated with teenagers.

At high doses the drug causes increased blood pressure, heart rate and fever. Abusers can also suffer side effects from other ingredients mixed in cough medicines, such as acetaminophen, which can cause liver damage.

"Because of the drug's perceived safety, ease of availability, and desired psychoactive effects, it is sought after by those seeking to alter their mental state," states the FDA review.

Misuse tied to 8,000 ER visits a year

According to the FDA, inappropriate use of the ingredient was linked to nearly 8,000 emergency room visits in 2008. That was up more than 70 percent from reports in 2004.

An FDA analysis concluded that dextromethorphan is abused less often than the popular painkiller codeine but more often than pseudophedrine, a cold medicine ingredient that can be processed into methamphetamine.

The FDA has agreed to reconsider how it regulates the drug at the behest of the Drug Enforcement Agency, which has raised concerns about increasing abuse among adolescents.

Later this month the FDA will ask a panel of outside experts whether dextromethorphan should be available only as a prescription. The agency is not required to follow the group's advice, though it often does.

Mandating a prescription for the drug would deal a major blow to over-the-counter drug makers, which use the drug in dozens of combination cold medicines. Popular brands containing dextromethorphan include Wyeth's Dimetapp, Bayer's Alka Seltzer Flu Plus and Procter & Gamble's Vicks cough medicines. The drug is available in pills, gel caps, liquids and other forms.

Most industry observers don't expect the FDA to mandate a prescription on those products due to the enormous workload it would create for doctors and pharmacists.

Drugs could be placed behind counter

One alternative could involve placing the drugs behind the counter, though the FDA's review did not discuss specific proposals.

The over-the-counter medicine industry supports prohibiting sales of the medicines to people under age 18. Such age restrictions require legal changes, and the industry's trade association has lobbied on the issue at the state and federal levels.

A spokeswoman for the Consumer Healthcare Products Association said the group has been working since 2003 to reduce abuse through educational campaigns targeting parents, teenagers and school nurses.

"It's really about trying to take this multifaceted approach to inform parents that while these medicines are safe and effective, they are also vulnerable to abuse," said spokeswoman Elizabeth Funderburk. The group represents Pfizer, Johnson & Johnson and most other over-the-counter drug companies.

Sponsor Statement for HB 168

"An Act requiring the amount of the security given by a party seeking an injunction or order vacating or staying the operation of a permit affecting an industrial operation to include an amount for the payment of wages and benefits for employees and payments to contractors and subcontractors that may be lost if the industrial operation is wrongfully enjoined."

Over the past years there have been several cases where courts have issued injunctions or stays against companies engaged in the development of resource extraction and other construction projects. These court actions have had the effect of delaying worthwhile projects and curtailing employment within the state of Alaska. Thousands of jobs have not come to fruition and economic development of the states resources have been hindered. More often than not, the litigation has failed or had an extremely limited effect in hand with the stated objectives of the original suit. The overall objective is not often what is stated in the suit but merely to delay a project or prevent it from coming to fruition.

HB 168 seeks to impose a penalty on frivolous suits. By requiring a bond to be posted in the event of a stay or injunction, the cost to the party bringing the suit is increased. Under current law the cost to bring a public litigant lawsuit against a project is in effect zero. There is very little risk in bringing a suit. All the risk currently is borne by the defendants. This bill seeks to level the legal playing field without infringing on any parties right to bring a legitimate issue to court.

You have requested a sectional summary of the above-described bill.

As a preliminary matter, note that a sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill and the bill itself is the best statement of its contents.

Section 1. Applies to a court considering the amount of security that must be provided by a person seeking an injunction or order vacating or staying the operation of a permit that affects an industrial operation. The court's consideration of the costs that an industrial operation may incur if the operation is wrongly enjoined must include an amount for payment of wages and benefits for employees, and payment to contractors and subcontractors of the industrial operation.

Defines an industrial operation to include a construction, energy, or timber activity and oil, gas, and mineral exploration, development and production.

Does not prohibit a person who is wrongly enjoined from other relief or otherwise limit the amount that a person may recover in the action.

'Firebrand ways'

by Tony Davis 12/21/2009 Issue

Twenty years ago, they were Earth Firsters, living in tepees, trying to save spotted owls and grafting together a shoestring budget from their unemployment checks. Today, the Center for Biological Diversity has a budget of $7 million, 62 full-time staffers and 15 offices nationally, in locations from Washington, D.C., to Silver City, N.M. By filing 600 lawsuits and countless petitions against the federal government, the center has won the listing of 380 species as threatened or endangered. It also says it has secured 110 million acres of critical habitat and proposed another 130 million acres. CBD has won a reputation as the country's most militant large environmental group, one that seldom shrinks from controversy.

From its Tucson headquarters, it's expanded its species-saving tactics to protect rivers, stop sprawl, battle overgrazing and even tackle climate change. Last year, the group helped get the polar bear listed as a threatened species. Here, one of CBD's founders, 45-year-old director Kieran (pronounced Keer-Onh) Suckling, looks back at how the group got where it is and explains how it differs from the "Big 10" green groups.

HIGH COUNTRY NEWS How did your group get its start? What were your roots?

KIERAN SUCKLING I was in grad school at SUNY Stonybrook, working on a Ph.D. in philosophy, with my dissertation on the relationship between species extinction and language extinction. I came out West for the 1989 Earth First! Rendezvous in northern New Mexico.

There, I chained myself across a road, blocking access to a timber sale. The timber industry in the Southwest was about to make a radical change in its practices. It had logged off the mesas and now they planned to go in and log steep slope canyons.

I got arrested in the process, along with a woman named Sherie. We fell in love while in jail, and she said, "I'm working for this guy, Peter Galvin, doing Mexican spotted owl surveys on the Gila National Forest (in southwest New Mexico) for the Forest Service. Why don't I see if I can get you a job?" Peter hired me, out of a VW van. One day, one of our survey crew got lost and wandered into Water Canyon, where a timber sale was going on, and found a spotted owl.

HCN The Mexican spotted owl at that point was on the Forest Service's "sensitive species" list. (It was federally listed as threatened in 1993.) What happened after your surveyor found the owl?

SUCKLING First, the Forest Service stopped the sale, then let it resume, saying the company had a contract. We had signed contracts saying we wouldn't divulge owl locations, but we went the next day to the Silver City Daily Press, with a map that told our story. We were fired within seconds. That was the start of us becoming full-time activists, starting as the Greater Gila Biodiversity Project.

HCN What made you decide to found your own group?

SUCKLING We were riled up. The government wasn't playing by the rules. The best way to save endangered species wasn't going to work inside the government. I was studying endangered species as part of my Ph.D. research. I realized, Oh my God, this owl species is going extinct. I couldn't keep studying patterns of extinction while letting extinction go on.

HCN What was your first major victory?

SUCKLING A Mexican wolf reintroduction lawsuit in 1990, our first. The Fish and Wildlife Service had formally declared the Mexican wolf unrecoverable. The Audubon Society and the Defenders of Wildlife had formed a wolf coalition to fight this. But they had no legal strategy beyond telling the government, "Pretty please." A study had been done showing a viable wolf recovery population could be introduced at White Sands Missile Range. They spoke to the general in charge of the range and he had no interest in wolves -- he shut them down. The strategy of the wolf coalition was to wait for the general to retire. We decided, let's just sue instead. It got settled with the Service agreeing to do a wolf study, which led to reintroduction.

That was the moment when we looked at it and said, "Wow." The environmental movement spent a decade going to meetings and demanding action and getting nothing done. They were asking powerful people for something from a position of no power. We realized that we can bypass the officials and sue, and that we can get things done in court.

HCN What role do lawsuits play in your strategy to list endangered species?

SUCKLING They are one tool in a larger campaign, but we use lawsuits to help shift the balance of power from industry and government agencies, toward protecting endangered species. That plays out on many levels. At its simplest, by obtaining an injunction to shut down logging or prevent the filling of a dam, the power shifts to our hands. The Forest Service needs our agreement to get back to work, and we are in the position of being able to powerfully negotiate the terms of releasing the injunction.

New injunctions, new species listings and new bad press take a terrible toll on agency morale. When we stop the same timber sale three or four times running, the timber planners want to tear their hair out. They feel like their careers are being mocked and destroyed -- and they are. So they become much more willing to play by our rules and at least get something done. Psychological warfare is a very underappreciated aspect of environmental campaigning.

HCN Were you hindered by not having science degrees?

SUCKLING No. It was a key to our success. I think the professionalization of the environmental movement has injured it greatly. These kids get degrees in environmental conservation and wildlife management and come looking for jobs in the environmental movement. They've bought into resource management values and multiple use by the time they graduate. I'm more interested in hiring philosophers, linguists and poets. The core talent of a successful environmental activist is not science and law. It's campaigning instinct. That's not only not taught in the universities, it's discouraged.

HCN How democratic is your group? Does the buck stop with you or is there a collective?

SUCKLING The buck stops with our leadership team: Me, Peter Galvin, our conservation director, and Sarah Bergman, our assistant director. Over our 20 years, we have gone through agonizing debates and battles over consensus decision-making and about a hierarchical organization and social structure. Ten years ago, it settled into this structure of strong leadership, where we give tremendous deference and latitude to our activists to pick battles, tactics and strategy. It's extremely non-hierarchical, but not consensus-based.

HCN Did you plan all along to become a national group?

SUCKLING Not at all. Our initial vision was to protect the Greater Gila Ecosystem -- the Gila, Apache and part of the Cibola national forests, about 10 million acres. We got dragged onto the national stage against our will. It didn't take us long to realize that power politics that determine species protection do not occur in the Gila: They happen in Phoenix, Albuquerque and Washington, D.C. We decided first to be the Southwest Center for Biological Diversity, and deal with the whole Southwest. Then, other, grassroots environmental groups started calling us from around the country and asking, "How do I replicate this?" At their request, we started opening offices around the country.

HCN Has your mission changed since you went national?

SUCKLING It's still the same. Our national status came to clarify what drove us. Before, we focused on that 10 million acres, and we were doing that through timber sales, listing petitions, etc., all based in these species. As we've grown, the species focus continues to be the case. Our attachment is to species, not to the particular place.

HCN What about your global warming campaign -- what does that have to do with species protection?

SUCKLING It's driven by the need to protect plants and animals. Our global warming goals must be enough to save the polar bear. We need to cut emissions to 40 to 50 percent of 1990 levels by 2020. We need a net negative emissions policy by 2050 -- less than zero.

HCN How would you deal with conflicts between renewable energy projects and endangered species? After all, solar panels in the desert can harm sensitive species like the desert tortoise.

SUCKLING We strongly support a rapid ramp-up of solar energy and have mapped out 100,000 acres of degraded public and private lands in the Mojave Desert where solar development would not conflict with endangered species or wilderness. We've also advocated placing solar developments in burned-out state, private and federal lands along Interstate 10 between Tucson and Phoenix. With so many highly degraded, biologically fragmented lands available, good planning should be able to avoid conflicts between solar energy and endangered species. It's a no-brainer. But unfortunately, many developers have proven to have less than no brain.

HCN Contrast yourself with the "Big 10" environmental groups. What do you see as their strengths and weaknesses?

SUCKLING The environmental movement is strongest when it has a clear vision and is willing to be way out in front of political leaders, and is willing to cause controversy, which is absolutely necessary to change the status quo. I think it's weakest when it too closely follows the Democratic party instead of playing an aggressive nonpartisan position.

Climate change is a really great example. The national environmental movement has articulated no bottom line on climate reductions. It has let the Democratic leadership completely define climate solutions, so every climate bill has been weak. That's why Copenhagen collapsed. National environmental groups did not ask Congress to do anything creative. They waited for Pelosi and Reid to take the lead.

HCN In 10 years, would you like the Center for Biological Diversity to be as big as the Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC) and other mainstream national groups?

SUCKLING Yes. At one point we thought we could do our jobs here in the West at a moderate size and rely on the big nationals' political muscle to carry our message in D.C. Now, after years of seeing the built-up political power of so many groups being squandered in D.C., we decided we need to have that political power ourselves.

Plus, there are endangered species in all 50 states, and we feel a responsibility to keep growing and reaching out until all of them are fully protected. We are in the midst of the sixth and possibly the greatest mass extinction crisis in the planet's 4 billion-year history. We have to do everything in our power, and increase our power, to stop it.

HCN Can you do that without growing corpulent?

SUCKLING I'm more than aware of the risks, but I do have confidence that we can be as big as big nationals and retain our firebrand ways. We have to. Otherwise, what's the point? There already is an NRDC. There's no need for another one.

27-19-306. Security for damages. (1) Subject to 25-1-402, on granting an injunction or restraining order, the judge shall require a written undertaking to be given by the applicant for the payment of the costs and damages that may be incurred or suffered by any party who is found to have been wrongfully enjoined or restrained. Except as provided in subsection (2), the undertaking:

(a) must be fixed at a sum that the judge considers proper; and

(b) may be waived:

(i) in domestic disputes; or

(ii) in the interest of justice.

(2) (a) If a party seeks an injunction or restraining order against an industrial operation or activity, the judge shall require a written undertaking to be filed by the applicant. The amount of the written undertaking must be set in an amount that includes all of the wages, salaries, and benefits of the employees of the party enjoined or restrained during the anticipated time that the injunction or restraining order will be in effect. The amount of the written undertaking may not exceed $50,000 unless the interests of justice require. The written undertaking must be conditioned to indemnify the employees of the party enjoined or restrained against lost wages, salaries, and benefits sustained by reason of the injunction or restraining order.

(b) As used in subsection (2)(a), "industrial operation or activity" includes but is not limited to construction, mining, timber, and grazing operations.

(3) Within 30 days after the service of the injunction, the party enjoined may object to the sufficiency of the sureties. If the party enjoined fails to object, all objections to the sufficiency of the sureties are waived. When objected to, the applicant's sureties, upon notice to the party enjoined of not less than 2 or more than 5 days, shall justify before a judge or clerk in the same manner as upon bail on arrest. If the sureties fail to justify or if others in their place fail to justify at the time and place appointed, the order granting the injunction must be dissolved.

(4) This section does not prohibit a person who is wrongfully enjoined from filing an action for any claim for relief otherwise available to that person in law or equity and does not limit the recovery that may be obtained in that action.

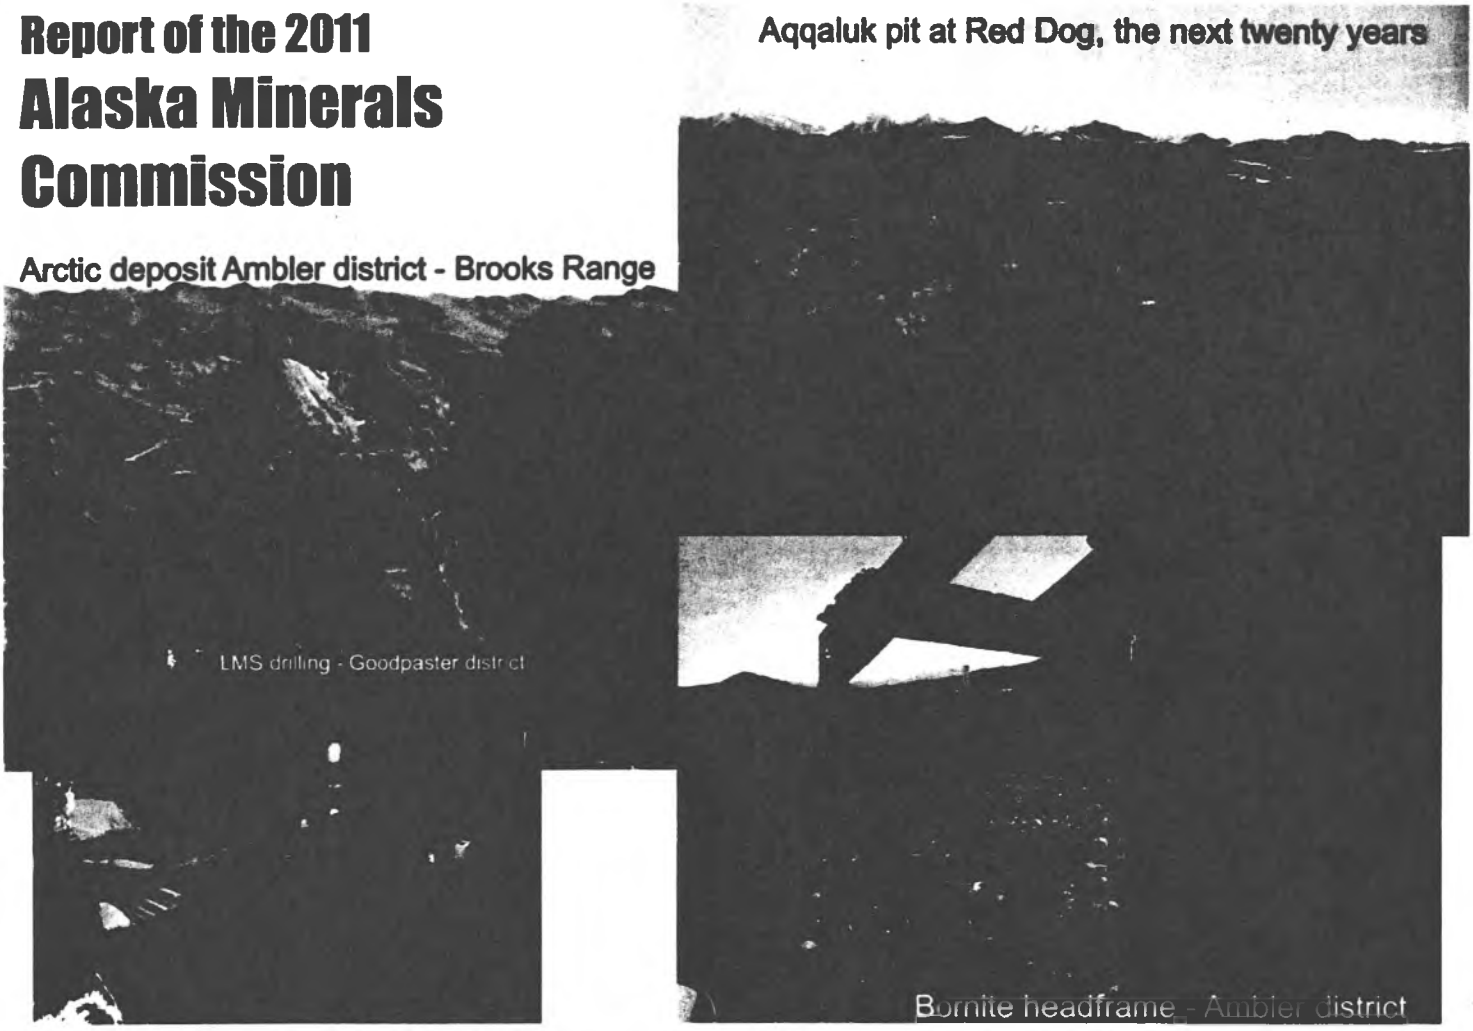
Report of the 2011 Alaska Minerals Commission



ACTION ITEMS

1. Provide support for permitting agencies instead of wasting state resources on an ill-timed Pebble study.
2. Implement reforms to prevent public litigant and third-party lawsuits from stifling development.
3. Build a road to Western Alaska that includes access to Brooks Range mineral deposits.
4. Support efforts to communicate the benefits that mining brings to Alaska and its communities.
5. Bring energy infrastructure to western Alaska to support communities and mining projects in the region.

Mining provides the necessary building blocks of our society. The mining industry has demonstrated its ability to help diversify Alaska's economy and to provide wide-ranging employment opportunities in both rural and urban areas, all while operating to the highest environmental standards. In an industry controlled by global economic conditions, Alaska mineral development must be competitive while developing a sustainable industry. To this end, there are actions that the Governor and Legislature should take now in order for the mining industry to be able to grow and to continue to contribute to our society in the future for the prosperity of Alaska.

The Alaska Minerals Commission presents this 2011 report with the 5 specific action items identified above, thereby fulfilling the Commission's statutory mandate to make recommendations annually to the Governor and Legislature on ways to mitigate constraints on the development of minerals in Alaska.

CRITICAL SUPPORT FOR PERMITTING AGENCIES

Spending $750,000 on a poorly timed and misguided "study" aimed at Pebble is a waste of State resources. Alaska's interest would be better served by spending the money to augment the State's technical review of the project if and when one is proposed.

Funding a study of Pebble now would be a waste of State resources because there is no specific project to evaluate and the study lacks a specific scope or objective. Such a study could only be a sham, with the appearance of a predetermined outcome, as it would have no choice but to conjecture about potential project configurations and would have no way to evaluate what actually might be proposed by the company, including any mitigative measures that might be included. Such a small sum of money could never hope to improve upon the years of field work and the over one hundred million dollars that have been spent to understand the environment in the region. With no specific project to review and no way to better understand the local environment, such a study is doomed to irrelevancy compared to the multi-year, multi-million dollar environmental review process that surely awaits the actual project.

Spending this sum now would also impair the investment climate for the entire mining industry in Alaska, as unfortunately it would demonstrate that the project review process in Alaska is political rather than science based.

RECOMMENDATION

A better use of limited public funds would be to invest in technical support for the State Large Mine Permitting team. These funds could augment the team with experienced staff and third party technical experts to critically evaluate the project once a definitive proposal that warrants review is received. In fact, the State should critically review its financial support for all regulatory agencies to ensure that a core of competent staff are available to timely review all development projects in Alaska, not just at Pebble.

An alternative use of the funds would be for the legislature to study the entire permitting process to see if there are ways to make the process more efficient while still maintaining Alaska's high environmental standards.

LITIGATION REFORM

Resource development in Alaska must comply with one of the most stringent environmental jurisdictions in North America, yet public litigant and third-party lawsuits are further delaying and stifling development. Beyond the adverse impact on industries and investment in Alaska, the information requests for "discovery purposes" are further paralyzing the agencies by consuming their budgets and diverting limited staff from completing their constitutionally and legislatively assigned tasks. The following administrative and legislative support is required to limit the negative impact from this obstructionist legal maneuvering:

RECOMMENDATION

- Require bonds from organizations initiating legal actions;
- Continue to enjoin suits as an affected party in other states if an adverse decision in that case will become a precedent that may be applied in Alaska;
- Continue to enjoin suits filed in Alaska if an adverse decision in that case will adversely affect the state's ability to financially benefit from its natural resources;
- Support budgets to hire legal expertise needed in natural resource development cases;
- Require plaintiffs to pay legal fees for all portions of the rulings against their position;
- Support budgets that will enable the Attorney General to evaluate previous litigation reform in court rulings to develop a game plan for meaningful reform; and Work with other states to petition U.S. Congress to remove the "Tax Exempt" status from these litigious organizations.

TRANSPORTATION INFRASTRUCTURE

The Commission would like to thank the Governor's office and the legislature for support for the Western Alaska Access Project and for the Ambler Mining District Access studies. We encourage ongoing support to complete these critical projects.

RECOMMENDATION

- Build a road from Fairbanks to Nome that includes access to the Brooks Range mineral deposits in the Ambler Mining District through the Roads to Resources program.
- Investigate transportation corridors in southwest Alaska that would facilitate mineral development and also lower the cost of living and provide more affordable energy.

FINDINGS

- Transportation infrastructure related to mineral development has played a critical role in rural areas of the state, supporting lower cost energy and a lower cost of living. With the current upswing in commodity prices and interest in minerals development, Alaska can capitalize on leveraging private sector development with statewide goals and rural needs in public-private partnerships.
- The increase in activity in the Arctic for shipping, energy, and mineral development is necessitating an increased presence by the U.S. Coast Guard in the Arctic. The need for deep water ports in the Arctic associated with this increased presence provides an opportunity to coordinate roads to potential ports with mineral development projects.
- We also recommend that any transportation plan grow from the regional and project need in concert with statewide planning. Local support will be key for any projects to advance, hence the need for local support. Again a good example is the growing interest in roads in Northwest Alaska from the local levels and the coordination of the Department of Transportation working with industry and the communities for viable projects with local support.

MARKETING AND EDUCATION

The State of Alaska must very actively market itself to the rest of the world and demonstrate that it is open for business in resource development. Legislators and Alaskans in general need to understand the great benefits that mining brings to the State and its communities.

RECOMMENDATION

- Expand budget for marketing presence domestically and in foreign countries
- Encourage elected officials to participate in mine tours provided through the Council of Alaska Producers
- Increase funding for Alaska Resource Education (ARE) to $150,000 annually
- Provide funding for a statewide Minerals Education & Promotion Program
- Provide funding to make the UAF College of Engineering and Mines the premier mining and geology program in the United States
- Support state and federal programs to train and educate workers for the mining industry

ENERGY

Invest in low-cost energy capacity on the existing grid. On a regional basis, expand energy distribution infrastructure and generation capacity using the least costly, most available resource whether that is coal, wind, solar, hydro, geothermal, or small scale nuclear.

RECOMMENDATION

- Bring energy infrastructure to western and southwestern Alaska to support communities and mining projects in the region.
- Expand low-cost base load energy on the existing electrical grid.

The Alaska Minerals Commission was created by the 14th Legislature and signed into law on June 6, 1986. The enabling legislation instructs the Commission to make recommendations to the Governor and Legislature on ways to mitigate constraints, including governmental constraints, on the development of minerals, including coal, in the state.

This publication was released by the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development. Its purpose is to report the findings and recommendations of the Alaska Minerals Commission to the Governor and to the Legislature of Alaska. It was produced at a cost of $1.13 per copy and printed in Anchorage, Alaska. This publication is required by Chapter 98, Session Laws of Alaska, as amended by Chapter 4, Session Laws of Alaska, 1993.

rules after the trial or hearing of the action has commenced, then any other judge of the court, assigned by the presiding judge of the judicial district where the action is pending or by the chief justice of the supreme court, may perform those duties, as if such other judge had been present and presiding from the commencement of such trial or hearing; provided, however, that from the beginning of the taking of testimony at such trial or hearing a stenographic or electronic recording of the proceedings shall have been made so that the judge so continuing may become familiar with the previous proceedings.

(c) After Verdict, etc. If by reason of death, sickness or other disability, a judge before whom an action has been tried is unable to perform the duties to be performed by the court under these rules after a verdict is returned or findings of fact and conclusions of law are filed, then any other judge of the court, assigned by the presiding judge of the judicial district where the action has been tried or by the chief justice of the supreme court, may perform those duties; but if that judge is satisfied that that judge cannot perform those duties because the judge did not preside at the trial or for any other reason, that judge may grant a new trial.

Filing of transcript of the trial judge's oral opinion satisfied the requirements of filed findings of fact and conclusions of law under Civ. R. 63(c), and a successor judge had authority to enter a final decree. Pollastrine v. Severance, Op. No. 108, 375 P2d 528 (Alaska 1962).

Although a judge should do so only for the most compelling reasons, a superior court judge may sua sponte disqualify himself from hearing any matter that may come before him. Nelson v. Fitzgerald, Op. No. 293, 403 P2d 677 (Alaska 1965).

Unless the trial judge becomes disabled, he should be the person who makes all fact based rulings concerning the case that he tried. United Bank Alaska v. Dischner, Op. No. 2835, 685 P2d 90 (Alaska 1984).

Absent compelling circumstances, a case should normally be assigned on remand to the same judge who conducted the original trial. United Bank Alaska v. Dischner, Op. No. 2835, 685 P2d 90 (Alaska 1984).

If a party acquiesces to the authority of a successor judge by failing to make a timely objection to that judge's authority, the party has waived any objection he or she may have to challenge that authority. Moffitt v. Moffitt, Op. No. 3261, 749 P2d 343 (Alaska 1988).

The record clearly established that husband in divorce action waived any objection to successor judge's authority to enter new findings of fact and conclusions of law which differed from those initially entered but not finalized by the preceding judge. Moffitt v. PART X. PROVISIONAL AND FINAL REMEDIES AND SPECIAL PROCEEDINGS

Rule 64. Seizure of Person or Property.

At the commencement of and during the course of an action, all remedies providing for seizure of person or property for the purpose of securing satisfaction of the judgment ultimately to be entered in the action are available under the circumstances and in the manner provided by law existing at the time the remedy is sought. The remedies thus available include arrest, attachment, garnishment, replevin, sequestration, and other corresponding or equivalent remedies, however designated and regardless of whether by law the remedy is ancillary to an action or must be obtained by an independent action.

Cases

This rule does not create any remedy. Aleut Corp. v. Arctic Slope Regional Corp., 424 FS 397 (USDC Alaska 1976).

Rule 65. Injunctions.

(a) Preliminary Injunction.

(1) Notice. No preliminary injunction shall be issued without notice to the adverse party.

(2) Consolidation of Hearing with Trial on Merits. Before or after the commencement of the hearing of an application for a preliminary injunction, the court may order the trial of the action on the merits to be advanced and consolidated with the hearing of the application. Even when this consolidation is not ordered, any evidence received upon an application for a preliminary injunction which would be admissible upon the trial on the merits becomes part of the record on the trial and need not be repeated upon the trial. This subdivision (a) (2) shall be so construed and applied as to save the parties any rights they may have to trial by jury.

(b) Temporary Restraining Order—Notice—Hearing—Duration. A temporary restraining order may be granted without written or oral notice to the adverse party or that party's attorney only if (1) it clearly appears from specific facts shown by affidavit or by the verified complaint that immediate and irreparable injury, loss, or damage will result to the applicant before the adverse party or that party's attorney can be heard in opposition, and (2) the applicant's attorney certifies to the court in writing the efforts, if any, which have been made to give the notice and the reasons supporting the claim that notice should not be required. Every temporary restraining order granted without notice shall be endorsed with the date and hour of issuance; shall be filed forthwith in the clerk's office and entered of record; shall define the injury and state why it is irreparable and why the order was granted without notice; and shall expire by its terms within such time after entry, not to exceed 10 days, as the court fixes, the method for obtaining, and the timing of, temporary restraining orders.

Cases

Consent of a party to an extension of a temporary restraining order does not deprive the consenting party of his right to seek review of the issuance of the restraining order in the first instance. Miller v. Atkinson, Op. No. 49, 365 P2d 550 (Alaska 1961).

Where the state had already appropriated private property for a public purpose in mistaken reliance on an invalid patent reservation and property owner had brought an action inaccurately framed as "trespass action" for damages whereupon the state counterclaimed on the ground of "inverse condemnation," the issue then remaining before the court was the award of a just compensation, and a permanent injunction prohibiting the state from entering upon or appropriating the property, meaning that the state must first initiate a condemnation before utilizing the property, was unrealistic and unnecessary and was dissolved. State v. Crosby, Op. No. 322, 410 P2d 724 (Alaska 1966).

This rule, dealing with injunctions, is inapplicable to proceedings before the district judge court, but where in connection with a garnishee proceeding the district judge restrained an employer from applying wages to other obligations, the district judge did not proceed under Rule 65 but exercised an authority conferred to him by Civil Rule 89 (f)(6). Anchorage Helicop. Serv., Inc. v. Anchorage W. Hotel, Op. No. 361, 417 P2d 903 (Alaska 1966).

The requirement of this rule that an order granting an injunction set forth reasons for its issuance applies to every type of preliminary injunction. Department of Fish & Game v. Pinnell, Op. No. 586, 461 P2d 429 (Alaska 1969).

A preliminary injunction which is granted without setting forth the reasons for the issuance of the injunction and without findings of fact and conclusions of law which articulate grounds for the issuance of the preliminary injunction as required by this rule is procedurally defective and will be vacated. Department of Fish & Game v. Pinnell, Op. No. 586, 461 P2d 429 (Alaska 1969).

Strict compliance with provisions of this rule requiring findings of fact and conclusions of law and setting out reasons for the issuance of a preliminary injunction is required particularly in circumstances where the trial court is enjoining enforcement of an administrative regulation or statute. Department of Fish & Game v. Pinnell, Op. No. 586, 461 P2d 429 (Alaska 1969).

MEMORANDUM March 21, 2011

SUBJECT: Constitutionality of HB 168 relating to security for injunction (Work Order No. 27-LS0395\B)

TO: Representative Max Gruenberg
Attn: Gretchen Staft

FROM: Dennis C. Bailey DCB
Legislative Counsel

You have asked me to review constitutional considerations with respect to HB 168 in light of two decisions, Patrick v. Lynden Transport., 765 P.2d 1375 (Alaska 1988) and Ware v. City of Anchorage, 439 P.2d 793 (Alaska 1968).

HB 168 amends AS 09.40.230 by adding a new subsection that requires a party seeking a restraining order, preliminary injunction, or order vacating or staying the operation of a permit that affects an industrial operation to give security in an amount determined by a court for costs and damages that may be incurred by an industrial operation that has been wrongfully enjoined or restrained. It also requires that the amount determined by the court "must include an amount for the payment of wages and benefits for the employees of an industrial operation and the contractors and subcontractors of the operation."

The new subsection added by HB 168 parallels the requirements of Alaska Civil Rule 65(c), which requires a court to require a person seeking an injunction to provide security to protect a person who may be wrongfully restrained or enjoined. Civil Rule 65(c) reads:

> (c) Security. No restraining order or preliminary injunction shall issue except upon the giving of security by the applicant, in such sum as the court deems proper, for the payment of such costs and damages as may be incurred or suffered by any party who is found to have been wrongfully enjoined or restrained. No such security shall be required of the state or a municipality or of an officer or agency thereof, or unless otherwise ordered by the court, in domestic relations actions or proceedings. A surety upon a bond or undertaking under this rule submits to the jurisdiction of the court and irrevocably appoints the clerk of the court as the surety's agent upon whom any papers affecting the surety's liability on the bond or undertaking may be served. The surety's liability may be enforced on motion without the necessity of an independent action. The > motion and such notice of the motion as the court prescribes may be served on the clerk of the court who shall forthwith mail copies to the persons giving the security if their addresses are known.

Civil Rule 65(c) exists to protect the interests of a party who is the subject of a temporary restraining order or a preliminary injunction. The analysis used by a court issuing a preliminary injunction is set out as follows:

> The showing required to obtain a preliminary injunction depends on the nature of the threatened injury. If the plaintiff faces the danger of "irreparable harm" and if the opposing party is adequately protected, then we apply a "balance of hardships" approach in which the plaintiff "must raise 'serious' and substantial questions going to the merits of the case; that is, the issues raised cannot be 'frivolous or obviously without merit.'" [State v. Kluti Kaah Native Vill. of Copper Ctr., 831 P.2d 1270, 1273 (Alaska 1992) (citations omitted).] If, however, the plaintiff's threatened harm is less than irreparable or if the opposing party cannot be adequately protected, then we demand of the plaintiff the heightened standard of a "clear showing of probable success on the merits." [Id. at 1272 (quoting A.J. Indus., Inc. v. Alaska Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 470 P.2d 537, 540 (Alaska 1970)), modified in other respects, 483 P.2d 198 (Alaska 1971).]

HB 168 differs from Civil Rule 65(c) because under HB 168, (1) the security requirement applies not only to a temporary restraining order or a preliminary injunction, but also includes "an order vacating or staying the operation of a permit that affects an industrial operation"; and (2) requires that the amount of the security determined by the court must include "an amount for the payment of wages and benefits for employees and payment to contractors and subcontractors of the industrial operation."

Arguably, the change proposed by HB 168 applying the security requirement to a stay of the operation of a permit, could be in the form of an injunction, although the issue is less clear with an order vacating the operation of a permit, which seems more likely to be the result of litigation rather than the subject of a preliminary injunction. On the other hand, application for injunctive relief and the associated security under Civil Rule 65(c) may be interpreted not to apply to an "order" that is not in the form of an injunction.

With respect to the requirement that the court include an amount for wages and contract payments, the bill does not specify an amount that is required, and does not affect the discretion of the judge to determine the amount. The bill does not explicitly say that the amount of security is the amount of the payments for wages and contract payments. However, an argument could be made that HB 168 was intended to impose a requirement that the full amount of the wages and contracts must be included in the amount of the security.

Whether HB 168 actually changes the application of Civil Rule 65(c) may determine whether a two-thirds vote is required. An argument can be made that the court has the same authority both before and after enactment of HB 168. Under this argument, the court could apply the new provisions under HB 168 and require security for a preliminary injunction relating to the vacation or stay of a permit using existing law, and, also under existing law, the court could consider and include an amount for wages, benefits and contract payments. Under this interpretation, the bill does not enact a change to a court rule. If, however, HB 168 is interpreted to require wages, benefits, and contract payments to be covered by security, then HB 168 may be interpreted to change a court rule.

In Ware v. City of Anchorage, 439 P.2d 793 (Alaska 1968), the court addressed the issue of whether the statute that required a nonresident to post security for litigation costs and attorney fees was invalid based on the argument that the legislature may not make a court rule relating to practice and procedure, it may only change a court rule under art. IV, sec. 15 of the Alaska Constitution. Article IV, sec. 15 provides:

> Section 15. Rule-Making Power. The supreme court shall make and promulgate rules governing the administration of all courts. It shall make and promulgate rules governing practice and procedure in civil and criminal cases in all courts. These rules may be changed by the legislature by two-thirds vote of the members elected to each house.

Rule 39(e) of the Uniform Rules requires:

> (e) If a bill or portion of a bill contains matter changing a supreme court rule governing practice and procedure in civil or criminal cases, the bill must contain a section expressly citing the rule and noting what change is being proposed. The section containing the change in a court rule must be approved by an affirmative vote of two-thirds of the full membership of each house. If the section effecting a change in the court rule fails to receive the required two-thirds vote, the section is void and without effect and is deleted from the bill. The fact that a bill contains a section which changes a court rule shall also be noted in the title of the bill.

In order to decide whether a court rule change requires a two-thirds vote, a determination must be made whether the change to the court rules is

(1) a substantive change to court rules, e.g., limitations of actions, burden of proof, presumption, creation of courts, and matters of jurisdiction, which may be changed without special voting requirements;

(2) a matter of practice or procedure of the courts, e.g., forms of action, how an action is commenced, the manner of notice, pleading and motion practice, joinder, pre-trial practice, discovery, the conduct of trial, stay of proceedings, enforcement procedures, post-trial procedures, appeal, venue evidence and special proceedings such as adoption and probate; or

(3) a rule of administration which is protected from legislative modification based on principles of separation of power.[1]

Whether the measure creates a substantive court rule change requiring no special voting requirements or a change to a matter of practice and procedures, which would require a two-thirds vote, is a close question. The problems created by this distinction are readily acknowledged by the court.

> We then turned to the definitions of the terms "procedural" and "substantive." . . . But while this distinction claims venerable origins, it has been recognized that the definition falls far short of drawing an unequivocal line. Decisions on the method of enforcing a right often affect substantive rights, and the regulation of substantive rights may have an impact upon judicial procedure.

State v. Native Village of Nunapitchuk, 156 P.3d 389, 397 (Alaska 2007) (citations omitted).

An argument could be made that the proposed change offered by HB 168, even if it limits the court's discretion in determining the amount of security required, would be considered a matter of procedure. The Alaska Supreme Court found that AS 09.60.060, which allowed the Court to require security for costs and attorneys fees, to be a substantive matter. Ware v. Anchorage, 439 P.2d 793, 794 (Alaska 1968). The Court said, "The authorities generally agree that substantive law creates, defines and regulates rights, while procedural law prescribes the method of enforcing the rights." The Court acknowledged differing decisions on similar facts in both state and federal courts, but concluded that AS 09.60.060 enacted a substantive change to the court rules. The Court reasoned that the act created a new right in the resident defendant and a new liability in the nonresident plaintiff which are separate and apart from, and go beyond, the procedure of computing and assessing costs and attorney's fees. Ware, at 795.

In the more recent case, Nunapitchuk, supra, the court concluded that changes to Civil Rule 82, which relates to attorneys fees, is a rule of practice and procedure that would require a two-thirds vote, but the change to the public interest litigant exception to the attorney fees rules was a rule of substantive law which could be changed by the legislature without a two-thirds vote. Further, the court concluded that when deciding whether the changes to the public interest litigant attorney fees provisions impede access to the courts, the court would not strike the statute down entirely but would determine whether application of the statute would impede access to the courts on a case-by-case basis.

A court considering whether a court rule change and a two-thirds vote is required for HB 168 could take a position similar to Ware and conclude that the changes relating to posting security creates a new liability and is, therefore, a substantive change. Or, a court could conclude that the changes are a procedural change which would require a two-thirds vote. How the issue would be decided cannot be predicted with any certainty.

The current bill draft takes the approach that the change is a substantive change. Taking this approach presumes that a two-thirds vote is not required but runs the risk that a court could conclude that the measure makes a procedural change so a court rule change had actually occurred, and because a two-thirds vote was required, but not obtained, the change is invalid. With respect to the voting requirement, the safest procedure would be to treat the measure as requiring a rule change and obtain the two-thirds vote required to approve a rule change.

You also asked about the constitutionality of HB 168 in light of the holding in Patrick v. Lynden Transport., 765 P.2d 1375 (Alaska 1988). That case involved a statute that required payment of security for court costs and attorney fees when the plaintiff is a nonresident as a condition for maintaining the lawsuit in Alaska. The court found that access to the courts is a fundamental right, analyzed the case on equal protection grounds under the Alaska Constitution, and relied heavily on the residency versus non-residency issues presented by the case to reach the conclusion that the statute was unconstitutional.

HB 168 differs from the issue present in Patrick v. Lynden. In Patrick v. Lynden the plaintiff could not maintain the action without filing security for costs and fees. In contrast, HB 168 does not explicitly deny access to the courts, although, arguably it may have the same effect by denying access to restraining order or preliminary injunction. Another important difference is that HB 168 does not involve residency issues comparable to those in Patrick v. Lynden Transport and that were used by the court as the basis for the court's decision.

In short, the precedent established in Patrick v. Lynden does not determine whether HB 168 is constitutional, although it does establish that access to the courts is a fundamental right. Whether the requirements of HB 168 infringe on that right is an open question.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

Sent to Sen. Wielechowski 4/12/12

HB169 fixes a loop-hole in the law of two minor problems with Legislative review of agency regulations.

Currently, those who can request a review of regulations from Legal Services and those whom Legal Services is allowed to notify of the results of the review are NOT the same.

- HB 169 allows those who request a review to receive the results.

Additionally, Legal Services can only notify if the regulations FAIL TO MEET the statutory standards.

- HB 169 allows Legal Services to notify the requester that the regulations MEET the statutory standards (A "no problems" phone call).

Finally, if regulations implement newly enacted legislation, HB 169 allows Legal Services to consult with and notify the Prime Sponsor (if still in the legislature).

RE: Request for scheduling of HB 169

Enclosed is the packet for HB 169, "an Act relating to the review of proposed regulations by the Legislative Affairs Agency; and providing for an effective date" also called "LAA Review of Proposed Regulations." This bill has made it through both bodies unamended. I have included a sponsor statement, the original version of the bill, and a memo from Legal Services. Senator Wielechowski will carry the bill for Rep. Gatto.

I would appreciate if you would schedule this bill, pending referral from the Senate State Affairs Committee, (the Senate Judiciary Committee waived the bill hearing), for a hearing in Senate Floor at your earliest convenience. I appreciate your time and look forward to passage.

Please contact my staff member, Melanie Lesh at 465-4990, with any questions or comments regarding this request.

HB 169
Sponsor Statement

"An Act relating to the review of proposed regulations by the Legislative Affairs Agency; and providing for an effective date."

HB 169 closes gaps in the regulation review statutes. The Legislative Affairs Agency (LAA) attorneys review proposed regulations, including those from newly enacted legislation and at the request of a standing committee, the Administrative Regulations Review Committee, and the Legislative Council. However, if the attorney finds that the proposed regulations fail to meet statutory standards, the only legislative entities they are allowed to notify are the Administrative Regulation Review Committee, the Speaker of the House, and the President of the Senate. Additionally, LAA cannot currently notify anyone if the regulation meets statutory standards.

HB 169 allows LAA to notify the committee or council that requested the review that the regulations do not meet statutory standards. In addition, if the proposed regulation implements newly passed legislation, LAA would be able to consult with and notify the prime sponsor of that legislation, if the prime sponsor is still a sitting legislator. Finally, HB 169 allows LAA to notify the requester of the review if the attorney determines that the regulations meet statutory standards.

HB 169 is a simple fix to two minor problems in an otherwise functioning review system. It will give the benefits of the review process to those who need it most. If you have any questions, please contact Melanie Lesh, Judiciary Committee Aide, at 465-4990.

MEMORANDUM February 18, 2011

SUBJECT: Review of Proposed Regulations by the Legislative Affairs Agency (Work Order No. 27-LS0559\A)

TO: Representative Carl Gatto
Chair of the House Judiciary Committee

FROM: Terri Lauterbach
Legislative Counsel

Enclosed is a draft of a bill you requested to "fix some flaws" in AS 24.20.105, as we discussed after the meeting of the Administrative Regulation Review Committee (ARRC) on Tuesday.[1]

Section 1. This section of the bill accomplishes several things:

(1) The new language on page 1 allows the reviewing attorney in LAA to consult with the prime sponsor of the relevant bill if the attorney is reviewing proposed regulations that implement newly enacted legislation. You only asked specifically for the prime sponsor to get copies of memos denoting possible legal flaws determined in these kinds of reviews, but I thought it was probably in keeping with your goal to also add this consultation aspect as well. Let me know if I erred in this regard and I can remove the language. Also, please note that I have limited this consultation requirement to situations when the prime sponsor is still a member of the legislature. In addition to the logistics that may be difficult when the prime sponsor is no longer a member, it seems to me in keeping with the confidential nature of these reviews that only sitting legislators be included in the review process under AS 24.20.105.

(2) The first two lines on page 2 allow LAA review memos to be sent to a standing committee or to the Legislative Council if they have requested a review of some proposed regulations because of their "major policy implications." Under current law,

[1] Although I drafted the enclosed bill, Lisa Kirsch's name appears in the upper right-hand corner of page 1. This has been done so that, if you introduce the bill, legislators and staff will have a full-time attorney to call with questions or amendments related to the bill. As I mentioned at the ARRC meeting, I am only half-time. Lisa Kirsch reviewed proposed regulations under AS 24.20.105 for most of the past three years, and is knowledgeable about the issues addressed in this bill draft. Feel free to call either one of us about the draft.

these entities can request a review and that request is given priority status under AS 24.20.105(b)(2), but the law, through an oversight in the original legislation, does not allow them to get the memo that could result from the review. Current law allows these memos to go only to the Department of Law, the state agency proposing the regulations, the ARRC, the senate president, and the speaker of the house. (See AS 24.20.105(e) and the restriction on LAA's disclosure under AS 24.20.105(g).)

(3) Lines 3 - 7 on page 2 allow LAA review memos to be sent to the prime sponsor of the relevant legislation if a review of proposed regulations that implement newly enacted legislation shows legal problems of the type described in AS 24.20.105(d). As with the consultation requirement for prime sponsors described above in (1), I have limited this memo-sharing requirement to prime sponsors who are still sitting legislators.

(4) Lines 7 - 10 on page 2 require LAA to communicate to a standing committee or the Legislative Council the results of a review that was requested by either of them in situations where the reviewer has not found legal flaws. Currently, AS 24.20.105 only allows LAA to communicate with respect to reviews where legal flaws are perceived, and that makes sense with respect to the vast number of reviews, as the relevant entities would normally be interested only if the reviewing attorney sees problems. However, with respect to a review requested under AS 24.20.105(b)(2), it seems to me that it would make sense for LAA to be able to respond that a review has been completed but that no problems were found. I have deliberately not required this communication to be in writing so that a phone call could suffice; the requester, of course, could always request that the "no problems" response be in writing.

Sec. 2. This section clarifies that the new provisions of section 1 apply to any reviews ongoing in LAA at the time the bill takes effect even if the notice of proposed regulations was issued before the effective date of the bill.

Sec. 3. This section gives the bill an immediate effective date. There are no impediments I can think of that would keep LAA from immediately being able to implement any of the new provisions of section 1.

Enclosure

Sec. 24.20.105. Review of proposed regulations.

(a) The Legislative Affairs Agency may review each proposed regulation that is subject to AS 44.62.010 - 44.62.300 (Administrative Procedure Act). A review of proposed regulations under this section must be conducted by an attorney employed by that agency.

(b) Reviews shall be conducted under (a) of this section in the following order of priority:

(1) proposed regulations that would implement newly enacted legislation;

(2) proposed regulations requested in writing to be reviewed by a standing committee, the Administrative Regulation Review Committee, or the legislative council as implicating major policy development.

(c) Under AS 44.62.190(a)(7), the notice of proposed action, along with a copy of the proposed regulation, shall be furnished electronically by the state agency to the

(1) Legislative Affairs Agency;

(2) chairs of the standing committees with jurisdiction over the subject of the proposed regulation;

(3) Administrative Regulation Review Committee;

(4) legislative council.

(d) Within available staff resources and priorities set by the legislative council, the Legislative Affairs Agency shall assign one or more attorneys to conduct a review of proposed regulations. The review shall evaluate

(1) the legality and constitutionality of the proposed regulation;

(2) whether the state agency has statutory authority to adopt the proposed regulation to implement, interpret, make specific, or otherwise carry out a statute; and

(3) whether the proposed regulation is consistent with the applicable statutes.

(e) In conducting its review under this section, the assigned attorney may consult with the Department of Law, the committee or council that requests the review under (b)(2) of this section, and the state agency proposing the regulation change. If the assigned attorney determines that the proposed action fails to meet the standards set out in (d) of this section, the assigned attorney shall notify, in writing, the Department of Law, the state agency, the Administrative Regulation Review Committee, the president of the senate, and the speaker of the house of representatives.

(f) In addition to the review specified in (d) of this section, the assigned attorney shall notify the Administrative Regulation Review Committee, the president of the senate, and the speaker of the house of representatives of any provision of the proposed regulation that may be inconsistent with legislative intent and appropriate for additional legislative oversight as a result.

(g) Except as provided in this section, the Legislative Affairs Agency may not release any information regarding its review of a proposed regulation under this section.

Analysis

This fiscal note has zero impact on the Legislative Affairs Agency.

For the record, HB169 presented by Rep Gattis, Chair Rep Costello

To contrast with your last bill — HB169 is unopposed and not controversial

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, thank you for hearing this bill today. This bill is a simple fix to two minor problems in an otherwise functioning review system. We have ~~Terry Lauterbach and/or~~ Lisa Kirsch, from Legal Services, online to answer the more technical questions. ~~Let me give you an~~ Here is a quick overview of the bill:

- Statutes covering Legislative Legal Services' review of proposed agency regulations - AS 24.20.105 (e) ((those subject to the Administrative Procedures Act AS 44.62)) currently lists those who can request a review of regulations from Legal Services:
  - A standing committee
  - The Administrative Regulation Review Committee
  - Legislative Council
- Same statute also limits those who Legal Services is allowed to notify of the results of the review:
  - The Administrative Regulation Review Committee
  - President of the Senate
  - Speaker of the House
- These lists do not match.
- Additionally, Legal Services can only notify if the regulations FAIL TO MEET the statutory standards.

SSTA 4/3/12 had to leave early

What this bill does:

1. HB 169 adds "the committee or council that requested the review" to the list of those who can receive notice.
2. If the regulation implements newly enacted legislation, Legal Services may consult with and notify the Prime Sponsor (if still in the legislature)
3. Finally, it allows Legal Services to notify the requester that the regulations MEET the statutory standards.

Sec. 24.20.010. Legislative council established. The Alaska Legislative Council is established as a permanent interim committee and service agency of the legislature. The establishment of the council recognizes the need of the legislature for full-time technical assistance in accomplishing the research, reporting, bill drafting, and examination and revision of statutes, and general administrative services essential to the development of sound legislation in the public interest. (§ 1 ch 17 SLA 1960)

NOTES TO DECISIONS

Named defendants. — Where neither the original nor the amended complaint gave any indication that the governor named the legislative council as a defendant in its limited capacity as a service agency, and where the complaints asserted no particular service-related acts or functions as a basis for proceeding against the council or its individual legislator-members, the action came within the originally intended scope of Alaska Const., Art. 3, § 16's prohibition. Sec. 24.20.020. Membership. The legislative council is composed of the president of the senate and six other senators appointed by the president, and the speaker of the house of representatives and six other representatives appointed by the speaker. The membership from each house shall include at least one member from each of the two major political parties. The appointing authority in each house shall make and announce the appointment or reappointment of members of the council within 15 days after the convening of the first regular session of each legislature. (§ 2 ch 17 SLA 1960; am § 57 ch 69 SLA 1970; am § 1 ch 1 SLA 1973; am § 1 ch 1 SLA 1975)

Sec. 24.20.030. Term of membership. (a) Members serve for the duration of the legislature during which they are appointed.

(b) When a member of the council files a declaration of candidacy for an elective office other than that of member of either house of the legislature, and the member has not resigned from membership on the council, the member's council membership terminates on the date of filing. (§ 3 ch 17 SLA 1960; am § 1 ch 11 SLA 1975; am § 1 ch 146 SLA 1984)

Sec. 24.20.040. Vacancies. When a vacancy occurs in the statutory or appointive membership of the council, the presiding officer of the house incurring the vacancy shall fill the vacancy within 30 days. If the office of the president of the senate or speaker of the house of representatives becomes vacant and a vacancy occurs among the appointed members of the council, the remaining council members from the house incurring the vacancy shall appoint a new member. A legislator appointed to fill a vacancy shall be a member of the same political party as the member vacating the seat, when possible. (§ 4 ch 17 SLA 1960; am § 36 ch 53 SLA 1973; am § 2 ch 11 SLA 1975)

Sec. 24.20.065. Examination of regulations and opinions. (a) The legislative council shall annually examine administrative regulations, published opinions of state and federal courts and of the Department of Law, and final decisions adopted under AS 44.62 (Administrative Procedure Act) that rely on state statutes or the common law of the state to determine if

(1) the courts and agencies are properly implementing legislative purposes;

(2) there are court or agency expressions of dissatisfaction with state statutes or the common law of the state;

(3) the opinions, decisions, or regulations indicate unclear or ambiguous statutes;

(4) the courts have modified or revised the common law of the state.

(b) The legislative council shall prepare a comprehensive report of the annual examination with recommendations and, at the start of each regular session, notify the legislature that the report is available. (§ 1 ch 72 SLA 1963; am § 1 ch 19 SLA 1989; am § 46 ch 21 SLA 1995)

Sec. 24.20.070. Revision of statutes. (a) The legislature may direct the council to revise the laws of the state in the form of a bulk formal revision. At the direction of the legislature and within the limit of appropriations made, the council may enter into contracts for the printing, annotating, indexing, and distribution of a revision of the laws of the state. The council receives sufficient copies of a revision for exchange with other states and jurisdictions. A revision prepared by the council under authority of this section shall be referred to the legislature for enactment or adoption.

(b) Statute revision is a continuing responsibility of the council. The general and permanent acts of each regular and special session of the legislature shall be integrated with and published as annual supplements to or replacement pamphlets for the Alaska Statutes. If the assigned attorney determines that the proposed action fails to meet the standards set out in (d) of this section, the assigned attorney shall notify, in writing, the Department of Law, the state agency, the Administrative Regulation Review Committee, the president of the senate, and the speaker of the house of representatives.

(f) In addition to the review specified in (d) of this section, the assigned attorney shall notify the Administrative Regulation Review Committee, the president of the senate, and the speaker of the house of representatives of any provision of the proposed regulation that may be inconsistent with legislative intent and appropriate for additional legislative oversight as a result.

(g) Except as provided in this section, the Legislative Affairs Agency may not release any information regarding its review of a proposed regulation under this section.

Sponsor Statement
HB 169

"An Act relating to the review of proposed regulations by the Legislative Affairs Agency; and providing for an effective date."

HB 169 closes gaps in the regulation review statutes. The Legislative Affairs Agency (LAA) attorneys review proposed regulations, including those from newly enacted legislation and at the request of a standing committee, the Administrative Regulations Review Committee, and the Legislative Council. However, if the attorney finds that the proposed regulations fail to meet statutory standards, the only legislative entities they are allowed to notify are the Administrative Regulation Review Committee, the Speaker of the House, and the President of the Senate. Additionally, LAA cannot currently notify anyone if the regulation meets statutory standards.

HB 169 allows LAA to notify the committee or council that requested the review that the regulations do not meet statutory standards. In addition, if the proposed regulation implements newly passed legislation, LAA would be able to consult with and notify the prime sponsor of that legislation, if the prime sponsor is still a sitting legislator. Finally, HB 169 allows LAA to notify the requester of the review if the attorney determines that the regulations meet statutory standards.

HB 169 is a simple fix to two minor problems in an otherwise functioning review system. It will give the benefits of the review process to those who need it most.

MEMORANDUM March 23, 2011

SUBJECT: Confidential memos and the Alaska Rules of Professional Conduct (HB 169; Work Order No. 27-LS0559\A)

TO: Representative Max Gruenberg

FROM: Lisa Moritz Kirsch
Legislative Counsel

At the hearing in the House State Affairs Committee yesterday, you requested a legal opinion on the effect of the changes proposed in HB 169 on attorney-client confidentiality required by the Alaska Rules of Court. After reviewing the Rules of Professional Conduct contained in the Alaska Rules of Court, I continue to hold the opinion I expressed at the hearing, that the passage of HB 169 would not require a court rule change.

HB 169 adds new recipients to the list of legislators who may receive certain confidential written analyses of proposed regulations from legislative legal. This list currently appears in AS 24.20.105(e), the existing statute governing review of proposed regulations by legislative counsel.[1] The new recipients would be legislators who sponsored recently enacted legislation being implemented by the proposed regulations or members of a standing committee or the Legislative Council if that committee or council requested a review of proposed regulations.[2] In the bill, the amended subsection AS 24.20.105(e) reads:

> (e) In conducting its review under this section, the assigned attorney may consult with the Department of Law, the committee or

[1] The legislators and executive agencies currently on the list of recipients for these regulation review memos are: the Department of Law, the agency that proposed the regulations, the members of the Administrative Regulations Review Committee, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House.

[2] These new recipients would only receive a memo if the review was conducted under AS 24.20.105. In the situation Representative Johansen raised yesterday, where an individual legislator made a request for an opinion on proposed regulations under AS 24.20.100, the resulting opinion would only go to the legislator who requested it, and the fact that a particular legislator requested an opinion would remain confidential and legislative legal could not alert the sponsor of any newly enacted statute.

council that requests the review under (b)(2) of this section, and the state agency proposing the regulation change. With respect to proposed regulations that implement newly enacted legislation as described in (b)(1) of this section, the assigned attorney may also consult with the prime sponsor of the legislation if the prime sponsor is a member of the legislature at the time of the review. If the assigned attorney determines that the proposed regulations fail [ACTION FAILS] to meet the standards set out in (d) of this section, the assigned attorney shall notify, in writing, the Department of Law, the state agency, the Administrative Regulation Review Committee, the president of the senate, [AND] the speaker of the house of representatives, and the committee or council, if any, that requested the review under (b)(2) of this section. If the review involves proposed regulations that implement newly enacted legislation as described in (b)(1) of this section and the prime sponsor of that legislation is a member of the legislature at the time of the review, the assigned attorney shall also notify the prime sponsor, in writing, if the proposed regulations fail to meet the standards set out in (d) of this section. If, after performing a review requested under (b)(2) of this section, the assigned attorney determines that the proposed regulations meet the standards set out in (d) of this section, the assigned attorney shall communicate that determination to the requester.

The applicable court rule that applies to the keeping of confidences by attorneys appears in the Rules of Professional Conduct. It reads:

Rule 1.6. Confidentiality of Information.
(a) A lawyer shall not reveal a client's confidence or secret unless the client gives informed consent, except for disclosures that are impliedly authorized in order to carry out the representation and disclosures permitted by paragraph (b) below or Rule 3.3. For purposes of this rule, "confidence" means information protected by the attorney-client privilege under applicable law, and "secret" means other information gained in the professional relationship if the client has requested it be held confidential or if it is reasonably foreseeable that disclosure of the information would be embarrassing or detrimental to the client. In determining whether information relating to representation of a client is protected from disclosure under this rule, the lawyer shall resolve any uncertainty about whether such information can be revealed against revealing the information.
(b) A lawyer may reveal a client's confidence or secret to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary:
(1) to prevent reasonably certain:
(A) death;
(B) substantial bodily harm; or

> (C) wrongful execution or incarceration of another;
> (2) to prevent the client from committing a crime or fraud that is reasonably certain to result in substantial injury to the financial interests or property of another and in furtherance of which the client has used or is using the lawyer's services;
> (3) to prevent, mitigate, or rectify substantial injury to the financial interests or property of another that is reasonably certain to result or has resulted from the client's commission of a crime or fraud in furtherance of which the client has used the lawyer's services;
> (4) to secure legal advice about the lawyer's compliance with these Rules;
> (5) to establish a claim or defense on behalf of the lawyer in a controversy between the lawyer and the client, to establish a defense to a criminal charge or civil claim against the lawyer based upon conduct in which the client was involved, or to respond to allegations in any proceeding concerning the lawyer's representation of the client; or
> (6) to comply with other law or a court order.
> (c) A lawyer must act competently to safeguard a client's confidences and secrets against inadvertent or unauthorized disclosure by the lawyer, by other persons who are participating in the representation of the client, or by any other persons who are subject to the lawyer's supervision. See Rules 1.1, 5.1, and 5.3. When transmitting a communication that includes a client's confidence or secret, the lawyer must take reasonable precautions to prevent this information from coming into the hands of unintended recipients.

Under existing AS 24.20.105(g), legislative legal is generally required to keep review information confidential. It reads:

> (g) Except as provided in this section, the Legislative Affairs Agency may not release any information regarding its review of a proposed regulation under this section.

The specific exceptions to this general rule of confidentiality in the existing and proposed statute do two things. First, the exceptions in AS 24.20.105(e) trigger the exception in Rule 1.6 of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Under Rule 1.6(b)(6), an attorney may release a document to comply with other law or a court order. Second, the exceptions of AS 24.20.105(e) act as a narrowly defined waiver of the attorney-client confidentiality between legislative legal counsel and the legislators. For these reasons, HB 169 does not conflict with the Rules of Professional Conduct in the Alaska Rules of Court, and the bill will not necessitate a court rule change.

I contacted Steve Van Goor, Bar Counsel at the Alaska Bar Association, and he concurred with my analysis of this issue. He added that the rule on organizations as clients, Rule 1.13 of the Rules of Professional Responsibility, also supports this position. He argued that the legislature is analogous to an organization, and legislators could be considered the duly authorized officers of the legislative body with authority to waive confidentiality by legislation.

streamlining — NOTIFICATIONS—

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, thank you for hearing this bill today. This bill is a simple fix to two minor problems in an otherwise functioning review system. We have Lisa Kirsch, from Legal Services, here to answer the more technical questions. Let me give you an overview of the bill:

- The statute currently enumerates those who can request a review of regulations from Legal Services:
  - A standing committee
  - The Administrative Regulation Review Committee
  - Legislative Council
- The statute also enumerates those whom Legal Services is allowed to notify of the results of the review:
  - The Administrative Regulation Review Committee
  - President of the Senate
  - Speaker of the House
- These lists do not match.
- Additionally, Legal Services can only notify if the regulations FAIL TO MEET the statutory standards.

What this bill does:

1. HB 169 adds "the committee or council that requested the review" to the list of those who can receive notice.
2. If the regulation implements newly enacted legislation, Legal Services may consult with and notify the Prime Sponsor (if still in the legislature)
3. Finally, it allows Legal Services to notify the requester that the regulations MEET the statutory standards.

HB171: Misdemeanor Arrest

Alaska law allows a peace officer to arrest for a felony without a warrant and to make mandatory arrests in any circumstance involving domestic violence, violation of a protective order and violations of conditions of release. However, not all criminal actions fit into these categories in which quick actions by peace officers are allowed.

Many scenarios surrounding criminal acts against a person, listed under AS 11.41 including assault and sexual assault, do not happen within sight of a peace officer. In the circumstance of a misdemeanor assault committed outside of the peace officer's presence where probable cause for an arrest is determined, an officer may not arrest without first obtaining a warrant from the district attorney. We trust peace officers to protect and serve the community, and in certain circumstances barriers are put forth which do not allow peace officers to remove individuals from the scene who bring immediate harm to others.

This legislation was brought to my attention at the request of the Juneau Police Department and has received support from police departments across the state. HB171 will expand the protections for individuals by allowing a peace officer to arrest for misdemeanor crimes against a person not committed in their presence if probable cause can be determined.

Analysis

This legislation would amend AS 12.25.030(b) by allowing a peace officer to arrest for a misdemeanor crime against a person listed under AS 11.41; not committed in their presence.

While this legislation will likely result in more arrests, it will not increase the number of reports generated, and / or referrals made to the department of law. Additionally, the increase in arrests may be offset by a decrease in the number of subpoenas and warrants served.

It is not estimated that this bill will significantly increase the workload of the division of Alaska State Troopers. There is no fiscal cost to the AST as a result of this legislation.

Analysis

This bill amends A.S. 12.25.030 to permit a warrantless arrest for all misdemeanor cases under A.S. 11.41. This bill is expected to impact the review and investigation preceding arrest decisions in these cases. It is anticipated that this will impact the number of arrests , though it is not possible to reliably predict the fiscal impact. The Agency, therefore, submits an indeterminate fiscal note.

Analysis

HB 171 amends AS 12.25.030(b) by allowing a peace officer to make an arrest for misdemeanor offenses against persons listed under AS 11.41; not committed in the presence of the peace officer.

Passage of this legislation would result in an increase in arrests and therefore an increase in booking and housing of individuals at Dept of Corrections pretrial facilities, community and regional jails.

Department of Corrections is unable to determine the fiscal impacts of the passage of this legislation, as we cannot estimate the total number of actual violations that will occur.

BILL NO. HB171 \B

Analysis

HB 171 allows law enforcement officers to arrest persons with probable cause but without an arrest warrant for offenses against a person occurring outside their presence that are misdemeanors. For most misdemeanors, law enforcement must obtain an arrest warrant if the offense occurred outside their presence or summons the person to court. More debatable cases will proceed to court without being screened out by the court through the warrant process or by the DA through the summons process.

Thus, the fiscal impact is indeterminate to Department of Law.

Representative Cathy Muñoz
State Capitol, Room 409
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Representative Muñoz:

I am writing in response to your request for "feedback" on a proposal to change Alaska statute AS 12.25.030 to allow police officers to arrest a person for a misdemeanor offense not occurring in an officer's presence. I am also writing to make a suggestion for an alternative approach that may answer your concerns without making a fundamental change in Alaska law. Such a change, without additional limitations, would be a modification of the law existing in Alaska since the United States took legal jurisdiction over the territory of Alaska.

You request that the Department of Law comment on two scenarios – first, allowing peace officers in Alaska to make a warrantless arrest for the misdemeanor offense of disorderly conduct, when the conduct is not committed in the presence of the peace officer. The second scenario would allow peace officers to make a warrantless arrest for any misdemeanor not committed in the officer's presence. Both scenarios assume that the peace officer believes that there is probable cause that the person to be arrested committed the misdemeanor. To address these scenarios it is necessary to review some principals of arrest law.

The Alaska and Federal Constitutions are the first places to look for arrest authority. Article I, Section 14 of the Alaska Constitution says:

> The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses and other property, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated. No warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

The Fourth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States reads exactly the same as Article I, Section 14 of the Alaska Constitution. The key words for the purpose of this analysis are "unreasonable … seizures" and "no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause…" A "seizure" is an arrest. An arrest occurs when the police use a show of official authority such that a reasonable person would have believed he or she is not free to leave. United States v. Edwards, 242 F. 3d 928, 934 (10 Cir. 2001).

At first look, the language of the Fourth Amendment suggests there must be a warrant for an arrest for all criminal offenses without exception. However, the common law allows police officers to arrest a person for a felony offense without first obtaining a warrant if the officer had "reasonable grounds to believe" that a felony had been committed and that the person being arrested committed the felony. This "reasonable grounds" standard is the constitutional equivalent of the "probable cause" language from the constitution. Henry v. United States, 361 U.S. 98 (1959). The United States Supreme Court has said the common law rule of allowing felony arrests without a warrant based on "reasonable grounds" is essentially the same as what is needed for the issuance of an arrest warrant under the Fourth Amendment. The Supreme Court therefore concluded there need not be a warrant for a felony arrest based on probable cause, whether or not the felony occurred in the officer's presence.

The common law, as it relates to misdemeanors, is different. A warrant is required before a person can be arrested on a misdemeanor unless the 1) misdemeanor occurred in the presence of a police officer; 2) the police officer had probable cause to believe a misdemeanor occurred; 3) the police officer had probable cause to believe the person being arrested committed the offense; and 4) the misdemeanor was a breach of the peace. "A breach of the peace" means in essence an act of violence. Over the years this rule has been changed by statutes in all the states including Alaska, by eliminating the requirement of a breach of the peace. Put another way, all states allow a police officer to arrest a person without a warrant for a misdemeanor where there is probable cause and the crime occurred in the officer's presence. Several states have eliminated the "in the presence of the officer" requirement for special crimes or circumstances and five states have eliminated the distinction between felony and misdemeanor arrests.[1]

[1] Connecticut Conn. Gen State § 54-1f(a), Illinois, Comp Stat. Ch 725 § (1)(c), Louisiana, La. Code Crim. Proc. Ann Art 213 (3), Montana Mont. Code Ann § 46-6-311(1) (1997), Wisconsin Wis. Stat. § 968.07 (1)(d). In your letter Oregon statute ORS 133.310 is quoted in a way that suggests Oregon has eliminated the distinction between felony and misdemeanors. Actually ORS 133.310 reads: Authority of peace officer to arrest without warrant (1) a peace officer may arrest a person without a warrant if the officer has probable cause to believe that the person has committed any of the following: (a) a felony, (b) an A misdemeanor (c) an unclassified offense for which the maximum penalty allowed by law is equal to or greater than the maximum penalty allowed for a Class C misdemeanor, (d) any other crime committed in the officer's presence. This

The United States Supreme Court has not given a definitive answer to the question of whether the Fourth Amendment requirement of an arrest warrant has the same exception for misdemeanors as for felonies. It is generally believed that the court will find the same exception when and if it decides this issue. Atwater v. City of Lago Vista, 532 U.S. 318 (2001), is a case where the misdemeanor of driving with children not using seatbelts occurred in the officer's presence and the mother was arrested. There were two issues before the court. The first issue was whether the "breach of the peace" element of arrest for misdemeanors at common law was required by the Fourth Amendment. The answer to this question is "no". The "no" answer was based on research which showed this element was probably not the common law at the time of the drafting of the Fourth Amendment and hence the authors of the Fourth Amendment would not have understood the "breach of the peace" requirement to be the law in the colonies. The court did not do the historical analysis of the "in the presence" requirement. However, it went out of its way to disclaim any "speculat[ion] whether the Fourth Amendment entails an 'in the presence' requirement for purposes of misdemeanor arrests". On the other hand the court also quoted Justice Whites' dissenting opinion in Welsh v. Wisconsin, 466 U.S. 756 (1984), for the proposition that "the requirement that a misdemeanor must have occurred in the officer's presence to justify a warrantless arrest is not grounded in the Fourth Amendment". Put-another way, the court suggested it could go either way on this issue. We can speculate that if directly addressed the U.S. Supreme Court will follow the dissent in the Welsh case. However, there is no case law on this issue by the Alaska courts so it is difficult to predict how our courts would rule.

This brings up the second issue in Atwater: that is, whether the arrest was "reasonable". In a five to four decision the answer to this question was "yes" because the misdemeanor clearly occurred "in the officer's presence." Like for felonies, "reasonableness" was equated to probable case. This issue has never been addressed by an Alaska appellate court.

However, Alaska courts have not hesitated to suppress evidence when a search warrant under the Fourth Amendment or Article I, Section 14 of the Alaska Constitution has been found to be unreasonable. Additionally, the Alaska Constitution has a right of privacy, Article I, section 22, which the U.S. Constitution does not contain. Most people would think that the right to be left alone is more important than a property right and hence, the Alaska courts could conceivably require a broader showing of reasonableness than federal courts. If this were to happen, the proposed law change to allow arrests for means that B misdemeanors like Disorderly Conduct require that the offense occur "in the officers presence" before there can be an arrest without a warrant.

misdemeanors as now exists for felonies, may result in hearings on whether officers acted "reasonably". For example, the question of how much time it would have taken to get a misdemeanor warrant may become a common evidentiary issue to determine "reasonableness". This would mean officers would be required to come to court on an issue that is not litigated today, taking time off the streets, there by, lessening public protection. Likewise, this would entail an increase in the budgets of all parts of the criminal justice system to litigate these issues.

In Alaska, a peace officer may arrest a person for a misdemeanor committed outside the officer's presence without a warrant if there is statutory authority to do so. The legislature has authorized peace officers to make warrantless misdemeanor arrests for conduct outside their presence for several offenses. These include when an officer has probable cause to believe a person is driving under the influence of alcohol (AS 12.25.033); in circumstances where there is no judicial officer within 25 miles and personal or property damage is likely to occur if the arrest is not made immediately (AS 12.25.035); and in minor consuming alcohol cases (AS 12.25.030). In cases involving domestic violence the legislature mandates arrest (AS 18.65.530). These examples generally share a quality of urgency – either that the evidence will dissipate without an immediate arrest or a person is in immediate danger of further injury if an arrest is not made. In adopting these exceptions, the legislature has made a decision that it is "reasonable" to make an arrest because of particular circumstances connected with the offense. If a decision is made to change AS 12.25.030 along the lines of scenario one, the Department of Law strongly recommends that there be legislative findings as to how arrests for disorderly conduct have the same compelling necessity as are presented by other misdemeanors where statutes authorize warrantless arrest.

The second scenario that you describe would allow a peace officer to arrest for any misdemeanor with probable cause but without an arrest warrant. A small minority of states allow this. The vast majority of states, however, are like Alaska in that they allow warrantless arrests in circumstances set out in statute. In general, there are good reasons for the age-old requirement that for misdemeanors, a peace officer should obtain a warrant from a judicial officer before making an arrest for a crime committed outside the officer's presence. These include the following:

- The warrant requirement encourages peace officers to conduct a more thorough investigation of the case before obtaining the warrant. This is important for several reasons. First, it acts as a screening mechanism to weed out weak cases. This screening saves the entire judicial, prosecution and corrections systems from gearing up for a case that will not be prosecuted. Second, and no disparagement of peace officers is intended, it is simply human nature that an officer who arrests a person for a misdemeanor and takes the person to jail will have less incentive to interview witnesses and make other inquiries that are a part of a thorough investigation. And there are good reasons for this – an officer will likely have more serious felonies to investigate. A felony investigation by its very nature will take priority and it is understandable that a misdemeanor investigation where the defendant has been arrested would be placed nearer to the bottom of the priority list.

- An arrest in Alaska generally starts the running of the speedy trial rule. Criminal Rule 45 requires, with exceptions, that a person be brought to trial within 120 days of a charging document being served upon the defendant. A change in the arrest law may have three unintended consequences: 1) police will need to do more of their own charging documents; 2) there will be more dismissals of cases because of premature arrests; 3) more cases will be lost under the speedy trial rule. The state would strongly urge an amendment to Criminal Rule 45 which would allow a dismissal by the state of a charge until a police investigation is complete without time running against the 120 day rule to get the person to trial.

- Authorizing a warrantless arrest for all misdemeanors would significantly increase the cost every participant in the justice system. Bypassing judicial screening will guarantee that more cases will be screened out by the prosecuting authority, the courts, and ultimately juries. The costs of booking a person into jail and transporting them to an arraignment alone are significant and will increase.

- Other significant costs would result from making an arrest for a charge that the parties later resolve themselves. In is not uncommon for misdemeanors to be settled by the parties. When tempers fade people often conclude the matter informally, by civil means, or decide that the problem no longer justifies any response. For example, there are often civil compromises in cases where people fail to pay cab drivers their fare or a restaurant for a meal that did not come in the time expected. These civil resolutions will be less likely if a person is arrested.

- There would likely be an increase in lawsuits claiming damages from police agencies alleging unlawful arrest.

- Losses will result that are not related to the prosecution itself. For example, a defendant's family will suffer financial loss at least for the time the defendant is in custody and may result in the loss of a job. If an arrest occurs the Office of Children's Services may need to step in to taking temporary custody of children. This is what occurred in the Atwater case where the mother was arrested for driving without seatbelts being buckled for the children. There will be social, as well as financial costs if this change occurs.

- Of major concern is the financial implication of a change in the arrest law for misdemeanors. Last fiscal year there were 31,713 misdemeanors offenses filed in Alaska state courts. Studies show that approximately 45% of all cases result in an immediate arrest.[2] This means that 55% of 31,713 misdemeanors can potentially be new arrests. The worst case would be 17,442 new arrests. Corrections estimate a cost of over $100 for simply the booking process to enter a person into a correctional facility. This is an additional potential cost of $1.74 million just for booking. Of greater concern to the Department of Law is whether the criminal prosecutions conducted by the municipalities of Anchorage and Juneau will be discontinued because of the additional costs of incarceration for these communities. Both Anchorage and Juneau have been responsible for prosecution under their city ordinances. However, the state has experienced the withdrawal of communities from the prosecution of criminal cases because of the cost of incarceration. For example, Fairbanks simply repealed all their criminal ordinances in order to save money. Both Anchorage and Juneau have considered ways of reducing correction costs. The City and Borough of Juneau removed from the police department's budget the cost of incarceration and placed the budget item in the municipal attorney's office. Concurrent with the movement of this budget item was the reduction from one million dollars to $500,000

[2] The 45% arrest rate is from a 10 year old national study. Hence, its implications may not apply to Alaska. Also it is noted that there were 75,552 minor offenses filed in FY 2010. It is unknown how many of the minor offenses are violations compared to misdemeanors.

for the cost of incarceration. The police department had difficulty in operating within its budget. The municipal attorney's office through managing its caseload has kept within the reduced budget. If with this proposed change the city's budget again goes to one million dollars the city may consider repealing ordinances as was done by Fairbanks. This means a choice between no law enforcement or the state picking up the cost. Anchorage and the state have also have had disputes over paying for cost of incarceration. This ended in litigation. If Anchorage and Juneau remove themselves from criminal prosecutions and the state picks up those cases there would need to be an increase in the Department of Law's budget of at least 15 attorneys, five law office assistants, and five paralegals given current municipal staffing. This would be a cost of $3.5 million.

- The Department of Correction will bear the major increase in cost under these proposals and should be contacted for a cost estimate.

The first scenario you describe would allow a peace officer to make a warrantless arrest for disorderly conduct (AS 11.61.110). That statute covers a reasonably broad range of prohibited conduct – from fighting not in self-defense to making an unreasonably loud noise. The department assumes you are mainly concerned with fighting not in self-defense. We agree that there may be some urgency to make an arrest. and you might consider making a statutory change to allow an officer to make an arrest without a warrant for fighting not in self-defense. This could be justified to a certain extent by the urgency of protecting the victim. However, it is important for law enforcement to remember that before a warrantless arrest for this offense, there must be probable cause that the person to be arrested was not acting in self-defense.

There are other considerations that would weigh on the side of waiting to obtain a warrant. The state is concerned that an "arrest them and sort it out later" attitude will grow with amending Alaska's misdemeanor arrest law, resulting in an increase in false arrest and civil litigation. We believe that unless there are special circumstances not described in your letter, on balance it would be better to require the peace officer to investigate the situation and then obtain a warrant from a judicial officer before making an arrest for fighting in violation of AS 11.61.110(a)(6). If a court has made a probable cause finding, officers will be absolved of civil liability. [3]

[3] A simple hypothetical may be of help: The police are dispatched to a bar; they see two people fighting. They arrest both fighters. They remove the fighters from the bar and put them in separate patrol cars. Officers return to the bar to interview witnesses to

The other provisions of AS 11.61.110 also would, without other circumstances not described in your letter, be better served with an investigation and then a judicial warrant before an arrest – or possibly a citation rather than an arrest at all. For example, AS 12.61.110(a)(1) prohibits making an unreasonably loud noise with the intent to disturb the peace and privacy another person. It is probably better public policy to interview the victim and then either obtain an arrest warrant or cite the perpetrator. There is no urgency at that point that would justify an immediate arrest.

For all the reasons discussed above, the Department of Law has both legal and practical concerns in changing the law for either scenario.

We have, however, some suggestions for legislation that would help law enforcement officers perform their duties in a more efficient manner. The first is to consider the possibility of authorizing a law enforcement officer to obtain an arrest warrant from a judicial officer over the telephone, or by facsimile or over the Internet. This procedure was adopted in 2008 for search warrants (AS 12.35.015), and allows a peace officer to avoid a trip to the court house to obtain a search warrant. Another suggestion is to consider looking at specific misdemeanor offenses or circumstances that may pose an urgent need for an immediate arrest, and propose statutory authority for a peace officer to make an arrest without a warrant for that specific misdemeanor or under particular circumstances.

Another suggestion, although unrelated to the issue of arrest warrants, addresses a serious concern of the Department of Law, that is, the safety of law enforcement officers and other participants in the criminal justice system. It is to protect the personal information of these participants from being placed on the Internet. Arizona has a statute (A.R.S. §13-2401) that addresses this concern, and in pertinent part provides: find that either no one is willing to speak or claim to have seen nothing. Unfortunately this is a common occurrence. Both fighters were arrested so they need to be provided their rights under Miranda. Both choose not to speak. What is the officer to do? There is no legal principal that allows for the two people to be un-arrested. There was no probable cause for this arrest because probable cause consists of two parts; did a crime occur- here it probably did. But the second part of the equation is not present, that is, did each person commit the crime. Here the officers have no idea. Was the fight in self-defense, if so, then only one of the two arrestees committed a crime while the other was a victim. Which one? If they were not fighting in self-defense, there is no evidence of this element.

> A. It is unlawful for a person to knowingly make available on the world wide web the personal information of a peace officer, justice, judge, commissioner, public defender or prosecutor if the dissemination of the personal information poses an imminent and serious threat to the peace officer's, justice's, judge's, commissioner's, public defender's or prosecutor's safety or the safety of that person's immediate family and the threat is reasonably apparent to the person making the information available to the world wide web to be serious and imminent.

> D.5 "Personal information" means a peace officer's, justice's, judge's, commissioner's, public defender's or prosecutor's home address, home telephone number, pager number, personal photograph, directions to the person's home or photographs of the person's home or vehicle.

I look forward to discussing your ideas and these suggestions with you. I hope this information is helpful to you.

RE: Warrantless Arrests: Misdemeanors Committed Outside the Presence of Law Enforcement
LRS Report 11.051

You asked about warrantless arrests for misdemeanor crimes. Specifically, you wanted to know the misdemeanor offenses in other states for which an offender can be arrested without a warrant even when the crime is committed outside the presence of a law enforcement officer.

As you know, the 4th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution protects citizens from "unreasonable searches and seizures," and requires that "probable cause" must be shown by law enforcement and recognized by a judicial officer through the issuance of warrant before an arrest can be made. Courts have recognized a number of exceptions to this requirement, including when a crime is being committed in the presence of a law enforcement officer, when there is a risk that not making an arrest will result in danger or damage to people or property, or when there is a substantial likelihood that an offender will escape arrest entirely unless action is taken immediately.

We identified 42 states that have relied on these exceptions to craft a variety of statutory exclusions to the requirement for an arrest warrant for misdemeanor offenses committed outside the presence of law enforcement.[1] Most commonly, states narrowly craft these statutes to be directed at crimes—particularly domestic violence of the violation or protective orders—where the risk of violence in the absence of an arrest is relatively high. However, a number of states have laws specifying that warrants are not required for shoplifting and other kinds of theft, when a driver in an accident is suspected of having been driving under the influence of alcohol or a controlled substance, and various other non-violent offenses. At least four states—Nevada, New York, Ohio, and South Dakota—allow warrantless arrests for the most serious misdemeanors. Three others—Colorado, Missouri, and New York—allow such arrests for any misdemeanor violation. Rhode Island statute permits warrantless arrests for any misdemeanor if the arresting officer has reason to believe that the offender poses a continued danger or could not be arrested at a later time.

The attached table provides statutory citations and summarizes the misdemeanors for which warrantless arrest are permitted in the 42 states with applicable statutes. We include copies of all of the statutes cited in the table as Attachment A.

We hope this information is helpful. If you have questions or need additional information, please let us know.

[1] We performed key-word searches of the Lexis database of state statutes to identify applicable laws. Our research did not include reviews of regulations or case law, which may significantly impact how these statutes are applied. Although we believe our research to be thorough, there are likely other statute sections on the topic that we did not locate due to variations in wording and construction. As a result, this report should not be viewed as exhaustive of all relevant statutes.

Office of the Attorney General
State of Texas

Opinion No. JM-751

A number of states have enacted statutes authorizing peace officers to make warrantless arrests for misdemeanors committed outside their presence. See, e.g., D.C.Code Ann. s 23-581; Fla.Stat. s 901.15(6) (warrantless arrest if there is probable cause to believe the person has committed an act of domestic violence in violation of injunction); Kan.Code Crim.Proc. s 22-2401; Md.Code Ann. s 27.594(B); Ohio Code Ann. s 2935.03; Wash.Rev.Code Ann. 10.31.100. The courts of some states have dealt with the validity of a warrantless arrest of an individual by a peace officer for a misdemeanor committed outside of his presence. See, e.g., State v. Presley, 458 So.2d 847 (Fla.Dist.Ct.App.1984) (test for warrantless arrest in misdemeanor is whether the officer has a substantial reason to believe arrestee is guilty of a crime); LeBlanc v. State, 382 So.2d 299 (Fla.1980) (provision for warrantless arrest for battery committed upon spouse does not violate equal protection clause); Wilson v. Hunk, 367 N.E.2d 478 (Ill.App.Ct.1977) (warrantless arrest for misdemeanor not committed in officer's presence is not illegal arrest); Lurie v. District Attorney of Kings County, 288 N.Y.S.2d 256 (Sup.Ct.Special Term 1968) (arrest for a misdemeanor not committed in officer's presence violates no state or federal constitutional standard); City of Columbus v. Herrell, 247 N.E.2d 770 (Ohio Ct.App.1969) (statute authorizing peace officer to arrest without a warrant any person he has reasonable cause to believe is guilty of assault and battery, a misdemeanor, does not violate Fourth Amendment); State v. Bryant, 678 S.W.2d 480 (Tenn.Crim.App.1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1192 (1985) (the rule that a police officer has no authority to make misdemeanor arrest for offense committed outside his presence is a common law rule and not constitutionally required). In Kelley v. State, 676 S.W.2d 646 (Tex.App.--Houston [1st Dist.] 1984, pet. ref'd) the court determined that a search was invalid because it was made pursuant to an invalid arrest for a felony. The court stated that the Fourth Amendment of the United States Constitution requires the police to have probable cause to arrest a suspect, and since there was probable cause the federal constitution was not violated in this case. 676 S.W.2d at 648. However, since Texas has imposed greater restraints on police conduct than the federal constitution requires, the arrest was invalid because it violated Texas law. The court reviewed statutes authorizing warrantless arrest, including the provision now codified as article 14.03(a)(2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, but did not comment on its validity. 676 S.W.2d at 649.

Finally, in Gonzales v. City of Peoria, 722 F.2d 468 (9th Cir.1983), the court determined that Arizona law enforcement officers could arrest for violations of the Immigration and Nationality Act under the following state provision:

A peace officer may, without a warrant, arrest a person:

4. When he has probable cause to believe a misdemeanor has been committed and probable cause to believe the person to be arrested has committed the offense....

Ariz.Rev.Stat.Ann. s 13-3883 (1978).

Thus, there is federal and state case law, as well as legal scholarship, which supports the constitutionality of the arrest provisions you inquire about. We should moreover presume that this legislation is constitutional. See United States v. Watson, supra. We therefore do not believe subsections (a)(2) or (a)(3) of article 14.03 are facially unconstitutional.

Dear Representative Muñoz:

I would like to take this opportunity to pledge my support for a bill you are sponsoring. The bill, which amends an Act relating to arrests without warrants by peace officers for certain misdemeanors, will greatly assist law enforcement agencies across our State. Having the ability to arrest an individual, who has committed a misdemeanor crime against a person as enumerated under Alaska Statute 11.41 without a warrant, greatly assists peace officers in their mission to protect the public. It has been my experience, in over twenty-three years as a police officer, that an on-scene arrest drastically reduces the chance that officers will respond multiple times to the same address and greatly reduces the likelihood that the victim will suffer any further injury.

I appreciate your willingness to help make our jobs in law enforcement easier. If there is any way I can assist you with the passage of this bill, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Sincerely,

RE: An Act relating to arrests without warrants by peace officer for certain misdemeanors

Dear Representative Muñoz,

For several years the membership of the Alaska Association of Chiefs of Police (AACOP) has been concerned with state statues that severely limit the ability of a law enforcement officer (LEO) investigating a misdemeanor crime to make a 'probable cause' arrest. The restrictions have been demonstrated to place undue responsibility upon crime victims; cause officers, agencies, and prosecutors additional work and; result in inefficiencies in the administration of justice and the protection of our communities.

With the exception of the three incidents that current law allows, or mandates, LEOs to make a misdemeanor arrest based on probable cause, LEOs in Alaska have the same arrest power as citizens have. Here are some specific examples of how this impacts LEOs and their communities:

- If no punches are being thrown when officers arrive at a reported bar fight, they are not able to arrest anyone even though it may be advisable in order to temporarily keep the peace.
- We may respond to an assault in which the victim is uncooperative and the suspect runs from the scene. The responding officer(s) pursue and catch the suspect. However, any force they use to subdue and arrest the suspect will be subjected to serious legal review, as no immediate arrest can be made for the assault. In some communities officers are applying Tasers™ to fleeing suspects in this kind of scenario, only to remove the barbs, get the suspect's name, dust him off, and tell him he'll be hearing from a prosecutor if a complaint is issued.
- Officers respond to a report of a prowler and find a man peeking into a bathroom window of a residence, masturbating. Unless there is a person under the age of 16 who is watching him, we cannot arrest him.

AACOP has reviewed the 11/24/10 Work Draft of your proposed legislation. We support the proposed change, as it would help resolve the three scenarios described above. However, because it will only expand arrest powers to the seven misdemeanors that are violations of AS 11.41, other restrictions will continue to hamper LEOs in protecting their communities. For example:

- Arrest of shoplifters

185 E Nelson Ave, Wasilla, AK 99654 (907) 376-2747

- A burglar is caught in the act by a citizen, just prior to actually making entry or completing a theft or other crime, the offense is now an A Misdemeanor. Once again, we dust off the burglar, take his name and send him on his way.

AACOP members would prefer that arrest powers also be extended to misdemeanors under AS 11.46 as well as AS 11.41. However, we will support your draft legislation and make members available to testify on its behalf.

Please feel free to contact me if you would like additional information or we can assist you in any way.

Respectfully,

Chief Tom Clemons

The Honorable Representative Cathy Muñoz
Alaska State Capitol Building, Room 409
Juneau, AK 99801

Dear Representative Muñoz,

I am writing this letter in support to your proposed legislation entitled "An act relating to arrests without warrants by peace officers for certain misdemeanors". It is an important step toward improving the abilities of police to expeditiously apprehend persons they have reason to believe have committed crimes. I would however, like to also ask that you consider strengthening the bill even more by not limiting the new arrest authority to crimes against persons, but rather to include all misdemeanor crimes. It seems unfair to make crimes against persons more important than other misconduct.

The legislation you propose will be of benefit to the police and citizens alike. It will serve to simplify the criminal code, and help police protect innocent victims by accelerating the process of misdemeanor arrest in cases where probable cause exists. Thank you for working to assist law enforcement in Alaska. We very much appreciate your efforts in that regard.

Respectfully,

John H. Lucking, Jr.

A police officer may make an arrest without a warrant if the officer witnesses a crime being committed. Police may also make an arrest without a warrant if there is probable cause that an offense occurred and that the person who would be taken into custody committed the crime. Unless it is an emergency, however, a police officer cannot enter a person's home without a warrant to make an arrest. When a person is arrested, he or she is not necessarily charged with a crime. Some people who are arrested are taken into custody, questioned, possibly put into a lineup, and then released without being charged with an offense.

Michigan

764.9c Arrest without warrant for misdemeanor or ordinance violation; issuance and service of appearance ticket by police officer or specially authorized public servant; exceptions.

Sec. 9c.

(1) Except as provided in subsection (3), if a police officer has arrested a person without a warrant for a misdemeanor or ordinance violation for which the maximum permissible penalty does not exceed 93 days in jail or a fine, or both, instead of taking the person before a magistrate and promptly filing a complaint as provided in section 13 of this chapter, the officer may issue to and serve upon the person an appearance ticket as defined in section 9f of this chapter and release the person from custody.

(2) A public servant other than a police officer, who is specially authorized by law or ordinance to issue and serve appearance tickets with respect to a particular class of offenses of less than felony grade, may issue and serve upon a person an appearance ticket if the public servant has reasonable cause to believe that the person has committed an offense.

(3) An appearance ticket shall not be issued to any of the following:

(a) A person arrested for a violation of section 81 or 81a of the Michigan penal code, 1931 PA 328, MCL 750.81 and 750.81a, or a local ordinance substantially corresponding to section 81 of the Michigan penal code, 1931 PA 328, MCL 750.81, if the victim of the assault is the offender's spouse, former spouse, an individual who has had a child in common with the offender, an individual who has or has had a dating relationship with the offender, or an individual residing or having resided in the same household as the offender. As used in this subdivision, "dating relationship" means frequent, intimate associations primarily characterized by the expectation of affectional involvement. This term does not include a casual relationship or an ordinary fraternization between 2 individuals in a business or social context.

(b) A person subject to detainment for violating a personal protection order.

(c) A person subject to a mandatory period of confinement, condition of bond, or other condition of release until he or she has served that period of confinement or meets that requirement of bond or other condition of release.

STATE OF ALASKA BILL NO. HB175
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Analysis

This legislation would do the following:

Amends AS 12.25.150(a) by changing the requirement to bring arrested persons before a judge or magistrate from the current 24 hours to 48 hours.

Amends AS 28.15.131 (License to be carried and exhibited on demand) by adding a new subsection stating that violation of this section is an infraction.

Amends AS 28.22.019(c) (Proof of insurance) by reducing violation of this section to an infraction and requiring a mandatory fine of $500.

Amends AS 41.23.220 by defining penalties; except for conduct that is a violation of AS 11.46.420 (Arson in the third degree).

Amends the Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedures, Rule 5(s)(1), regarding appearance before a judge or magistrate.

Amends the Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedures, Sec. 7, regarding the disposition of violations, and Sec. 8 regarding the applicability of this Act.

It is not estimated that this bill will significantly increase the workload of the division of Alaska State Troopers. There is no fiscal cost to the AST as a result of this legislation.

Re: House Bill 175 – relating to criminal procedures following an arrest

Dear Representative Gatto:

The Department of Law respectfully requests a hearing in the House Judiciary Committee on HB 175, at your earliest convenience. HB 175 is a bill that makes important updates to the existing criminal process that occurs following a person's arrest.

Last year the legislature adopted a major revision to the bail law in our state. One of the important revisions was to change from 24 to 48 hours the deadline for bringing a person who is arrested before a judicial officer. The change last year included the court rule change, but neglected to change the statute. HB 175 corrects this. The bill also corrects inconsistencies in the bail schedules and the statutes for several offenses, including operating a motor vehicle without possessing proof of insurance or possessing a driver's license, and for certain arson offenses.

A sectional analysis is attached that describes each section of the bill. I expect Annie Carpeneti, Legislative Liaison from the Department of Law, Criminal Division and Sue Stancliff, Legislative Liaison from the Department of Public Safety to testify regarding this legislation.

Thank you for your consideration of this request.

Sincerely,

JOHN J. BURNS

HOUSE BILL 175 – BAIL CLEANUP
Sectional Analysis

Section 1 amends AS 12.25.150(a) (relating to arrest) to conform to the provision in the bail reform legislation last year that changed the deadline for bringing a person arrested before a judicial officer from 24 hours to 48 hours of arrest.

Section 2 amends AS 12.70.130 (relating to extraditions) to conform to the provision in the bail reform legislation last year that changed the deadline for bringing a person arrested before a judicial officer from 24 to 48 hours of arrest.

Section 3 changes the penalty for the offense of failure to possess and present upon request to a peace officer a person's driver's license when driving from a misdemeanor, similar to a class B misdemeanor, to an infraction. The offense currently is correctible, and would continue to be correctible. This offense is also currently on the bail schedule (Rule 43.1, Alaska Rules of Administration) at a $50 bail. It is not consistent to have an offense at the same time a misdemeanor, which generally requires a court appearance, and at the same time disposable under the bail schedule for a $50 bail amount. The bill removes this inconsistency.

Section 4 changes the penalty for the crime of failure to carry and present upon request to a peace officer proof of automobile insurance when driving from a class B misdemeanor to an infraction. Current law in statute requires a mandatory fine for this offense of at least $500; at the same time the offense is on the bail schedule for a bail amount of $500. It is correctible under current law and would continue to be correctible under this bill. Again, it is inconsistent to have a class B misdemeanor on the bail schedule for disposition without court appearance. The bill removes the inconsistency, and at the same time retains the bail amount of $500.

Section 5 resolves a similar inconsistency in the penalty for burning a vehicle on the Knik River Public Use Area. In 2006 the legislature created the Knik River Public Use Area. The law authorizes the Department of Natural Resources to adopt regulations governing conduct in the area. AS 41.23.220(a) provides that a person who violates the new law or a regulation under the new law commits a violation. AS 41.23.220(b) requires the Alaska Supreme Court to establish a bail schedule for violations of the statutes and regulations. The law specifically requires that the violations be disposed of without court appearance. One of the regulations adopted prohibits burning a vehicle in the area; the bail was adopted in Supreme Court Order 1711 at $50.

In 2008 the legislature enacted AS 11.46.420, which adopted a new crime, arson in the third degree. This prohibits burning a vehicle on state or municipal land. The penalty for this crime is a class C felony.

These sections correct this inconsistency by excluding burning a vehicle on state land from the prohibitions that are effective in the Knik River Public Use Area.

Section 6 redrafts Rule 5(a)(1), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, to correct a drafting error and to make the rule more readable. The rule was changed last year to extend the deadline from 24 to 48 hours for bringing an arrested person before a judicial officer. This change corrects the drafting error, which currently defines a term that is not used in the rule.

Section 7 notes that the changes included in Section 5 of the bill have the effect of changing Rule 43.10, Alaska Rules of Administration (the bail schedule) by prohibiting the disposition of cases involving burning a vehicle on state land without a court appearance by mailing to the court a bail amount of $50.

Sections 8 and 9 include applicability and effective date sections.

BILL NO. HB 175

Analysis

HB 175 makes two corrections in the law to conform to the changes in the bail statutes adopted last year. It also makes conforming amendments to statutes that are in conflict with the bail schedules in the court rules.

Passage of this legislation would have no foreseeable fiscal impact on the Department of Law.

STATE OF ALASKA BILL NO. HB175
2011 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Analysis

This legislation would do the following:

Amend AS 12.25.150(a) by changing the requirement to bring arrested persons before a judge or magistrate from the current 24 hours, to 48 hours.

Amends AS 28.15.131 (License to be carried and exhibited on demand) by adding a new subsection stating that violation of this section is an infraction.

Amends AS 28.22.019(c) (Proof of insurance) by reducing violation of this section to an infraction and requiring a mandatory fine of $500.

Amends AS 41.23.220 by defining penalties; except for conduct that is a violation of AS 11.46.420 (Arson Third Degree).

Amends the Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedures, Rule 5(s)(1) regarding appearance before a judge or magistrate.

Amends the Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedures, Sec 7. regarding the disposition of violations, and Sec. 8 regarding applicability of this act.

It is not estimated that this bill will significantly increase the workload of the division of Alaska State Troopers. There is no fiscal cost to the AST as a result of this legislation.

Rule 43.1. Traffic Bail Forfeiture Schedule.

Pursuant to AS 28.05.151, the following vehicle and traffic offenses are amenable to disposition without court appearance upon payment and forfeiture of the bail amounts listed. If a person charged with one of these offenses appears in court and is found guilty, the penalty imposed for the offense may not exceed the bail amount for that offense listed below. An offense for which a bail forfeiture amount has been established shall be charged on a citation which meets the requirements of District Court Criminal Rule 8(c) and shall not be filed, numbered, or processed as a criminal case.

Effective April 30, 1999, the bail amounts listed below are doubled for violations of AS 28 and regulations adopted under AS 28 committed within a highway work zone, as that term is defined in AS 28.90.990 and 13 AAC 40.010(b). Effective May 27, 2006, the bail amounts listed below are doubled for violations of AS 28 and regulations adopted under AS 28 committed within a traffic safety corridor, as that term is defined in AS 28.90.990.

Pursuant to AS 28.15.131 and 13 AAC 04.008, a citation for an offense listed as "Corr" must be dismissed (or voided) if proof of correction is presented to an inspection official within the time allowed. If the required repair is not made, the offense may be disposed of without court appearance upon payment and forfeiture of the bail amount listed.

Effective August 27, 1998, as a condition of the disposition of an offense without appearance, the defendant shall pay the surcharge prescribed in AS 12.55.039 in addition to the bail forfeiture amount listed below. A court may allow a defendant who is unable to pay the surcharge to perform community work under AS 12.55.055(e) in lieu of the surcharge. The surcharge must be deposited into the general fund in a separate account designated for such surcharges.

Effective September 1, 2003, pursuant to AS 28.05.151(e), an offense listed on this schedule may not be disposed of without court appearance if the offense is an

Rule 43. Bail Forfeiture Schedules.

(a) Procedure for Adopting Bail Forfeiture Schedule. The supreme court will consider adopting a bail forfeiture schedule only when so authorized by statute. The agency charged with enforcement under a statute for which a bail forfeiture schedule has been authorized shall forward to the administrative director its recommendations for a proposed schedule, listing offenses by number, describing the offenses, and proposing a bail forfeiture amount. The proposed schedule shall be accompanied by commentary explaining the basis for the agency's recommendation, and by a copy of the proposed citation form. The supreme court shall consider the recommendation, and shall determine whether to adopt a bail forfeiture schedule, and if so, shall determine which offenses are amenable to disposition by bail forfeiture and whether the bail forfeiture amounts are appropriate. The administrative director shall notify the agency when an order adopting the schedule is issued.

(b) Procedures for Amending Bail Forfeiture Schedules.

(1) By July 1 of each year, each agency charged with enforcement under a statute for which a bail forfeiture schedule has been authorized shall forward to the administrative director of the Alaska Court System its written recommendation concerning whether the schedule must be amended to reflect any legislative and regulatory changes, or whether policy considerations warrant revisions. Any proposed amendments shall be accompanied by commentary. The supreme court shall consider the agency's recommendations and determine by October 1 whether to adopt them. If it will be impractical for the court to respond by that date, the administrative director will inform the agency of the date by which the response can be expected. The administrative director shall notify the agency when an order amending the schedule is issued.

(2) In addition to the provisions of paragraph (b)(1), an agency may request a bail forfeiture schedule amendment whenever the need arises.

(3) Any person or agency may request a bail forfeiture schedule amendment at any time by proposing an amendment in writing to the chief justice or to the administrative director.

(Adopted by SCO 651 effective July 1, 1985; amended by SCO 1180 effective July 15, 1995)

Rule 43.1. Traffic Bail Forfeiture Schedule.

Pursuant to AS 28.05.151, the following vehicle and traffic offenses are amenable to disposition without court appearance upon payment and forfeiture of the bail amounts listed. If a person charged with one of these offenses appears in court and is found guilty, the penalty imposed for the offense may not exceed the bail amount for that offense listed below. An offense for which a bail forfeiture amount has been established shall be charged on a citation which meets the requirements of District Court Criminal Rule 8(c) and shall not be filed, numbered, or processed as a criminal case.

Effective April 30, 1999, the bail amounts listed below are doubled for violations of AS 28 and regulations adopted under AS 28 committed within a highway work zone, as that term is defined in AS 28.90.990 and 13 AAC 40.010(b). Effective May 27, 2006, the bail amounts listed below are doubled for violations of AS 28 and regulations adopted under AS 28 committed within a traffic safety corridor, as that term is defined in AS 28.90.990.

Pursuant to AS 28.15.131 and 13 AAC 04.008, a citation for an offense listed as "Corr" must be dismissed (or voided) if proof of correction is presented to an inspection official within the time allowed. If the required repair is not made, the offense may be disposed of without court appearance upon payment and forfeiture of the bail amount listed.

Effective August 27, 1998, as a condition of the disposition of an offense without appearance, the defendant shall pay the surcharge prescribed in AS 12.55.039 in addition to the bail forfeiture amount listed below. A court may allow a defendant who is unable to pay the surcharge to perform community work under AS 12.55.055(c) in lieu of the surcharge. The surcharge must be deposited into the general fund in a separate account designated for such surcharges.

Effective September 1, 2003, pursuant to AS 28.05.151(e), an offense listed on this schedule may not be disposed of without court appearance if the offense is in property that is damaged must be a building, while under the first degree provision any property can be damaged. However, while the first degree provision requires that a person be placed in danger of injury, a similar requirement does not exist under the second degree statute.

An affirmative defense to arson in the second degree is provided in subsection (b). The defense recognizes that in some instances the most economical method of removing a building is to burn it. Such conduct is exempted from the coverage of the statute if the defendant establishes that no other person had an interest in the property, or if they did, that they consented to the burning, and that the burning was for a lawful purpose. Burning a building to defraud an insurance company would not be a burning for a lawful purpose. Note that a similar defense does not apply to the first degree statute. If the burning recklessly places another person in danger of serious physical injury, the defendant has committed first degree arson even if he acted for a lawful propose.

From 1983 House Journal at 1250 & 1699 (May 10 & June 13, 1983) and 1983 Senate Journal at 106-107 (February 1, 1983):

The [House Judiciary] Committee does not intend that the mere presence at the scene of a fire of a firefighter or other emergency responder would be sufficient in all cases to constitute danger of serious physical injury necessary to establish the crime of arson in the first degree. The existence of the necessary danger will be an issue of fact which must be determined by the trier of fact in each individual case.

COMMENTARY

From Senate Journal Supp. No. 47, at 47 (June 12, 1978):

The crime of criminally negligent burning, a class A misdemeanor, covers the criminally negligent damaging of the property of another by fire or explosion. The person who falls asleep in a hotel bed with a cigarette in his hand, for example, would violate the statute if the bed caught on fire. If physical injury or death results, prosecution would be brought under the Code's homicide or assault statutes.

Re: House Bill 175
ACLU Review of Legal Issues

Chair Gatto, Vice-Chair Thompson:

Thank you for the opportunity to submit written testimony with respect to House Bill 175.

The American Civil Liberties Union of Alaska represents thousands of members and activists throughout the State of Alaska who seek to preserve and expand individual freedoms and civil liberties guaranteed under the United States and Alaska Constitutions. In that respect, we wish to advise you of constitutional issues with the Bill.

Last year, HB 324 was passed (26th Legislature, Chapter No. 19, SLA 2010, Effective Date: July 1, 2010), amending Alaska Rule of Criminal Procedure 5 to permit a new arrestee to be held for up to 48 hours before the initial appearance before a judge or magistrate, rather than the 24 hour period which had long been the law. HB 175 would create consistency between the amended rule and the statute relating to pretrial detention.

Requirement for Hearing Without Unreasonable Delay

Under Gerstein v. Pugh, a probable cause hearing must be held without unreasonable delay. 420 U.S. 103 (1975). After Gerstein, a standard of 24 hours was adopted by most states and most circuits. Years later, a narrowly divided US Supreme Court stated that the initial appearance must be made only within 48 hours. Riverside v. McLaughlin, 500 U.S. 44 (1991). However, Riverside does not bind the states in their interpretation of their own constitutions.

In one accounting of state responses to Gerstein, most states had concluded that 24 hours was the appropriate term of detention before appearing before a magistrate or judge, and only seven states explicitly permitted more than 24 hours prior to an initial hearing. Jenkins v. Chief Justice of Dist. Court Dept., 619 N.E.2d 324, 333-34 (Mass. 1993).

Since Alaska had guaranteed a 24-hour window for initial appearances for 18 years since the Riverside decision, the state courts may be hard pressed to see why a 48-hour window would not likely permit "unreasonable delay." The Alaska courts have not yet had a chance to rule on the dimensions of the "speedy trial" provision of Article I, section 11 as it relates to initial appearances, since Rule 5 has long guaranteed a 24-hour window of appearance. The Alaska Supreme Court could very well decide that the state constitutional provisions relating to speedy trial and due process require no more than a 24-hour window prior to initial appearance, just as the Massachusetts Supreme Court did in Jenkins.

Given that the currently existing rules of criminal procedure already provide an exception for defendants arrested far from urban centers and allow the prosecution to request a delay to gather more information where necessary for a bail hearing, the state's success over the last 18 years in providing an initial appearance within 24 hours strongly suggests that a delay of more than 24 hours would represent unnecessary delay, making the statute unconstitutional.

Contribution to Prison Over-Crowding, Increased Costs

The Legislature should also take note of the fact that almost half of all Alaska prisoners are being held pretrial, typically constituting 46 to 48% of all prisoners in Alaskan institutions. The high rate of pre-trial detention contributes substantially to the state of overcrowding in Alaska prisons and the need to build more of the prisons that cost our state dearly. Consider that the Department of Law reports that almost 27,000 new criminal cases were filed last year – roughly 6,000 felony cases and roughly 21,000 misdemeanor cases. If every one of those 27,000 arrests results in a single extra day in custody, that increase of 27,000 prisoner-days would impose a similar burden in on the correctional system as 74 prisoners spending a year in prison.

Every prisoner-year in custody costs roughly $45,000. The cost of additional incarceration from such the policy change contemplated in HB 175 could cost up to $3.3 million in increased costs every year, just by adding a single day of initial incarceration for each arrest.

Extension of the post-arrest time that a prisoner can be kept in custody without any bail will merely serve to increase our prison population unnecessarily, mostly by increased incarceration of prisoners accused only of misdemeanors.

The Legislature should reverse course and return to the 24-hour window Alaska observed for decades. We are not aware of any evidence of a single incident in which a prisoner was released wrongfully because of any limitation imposed by the 24-hour window before the initial appearance. Locking up thousands of people accused of misdemeanors for longer periods of time and spending millions of dollars to keep our prisons crowded is not good public policy.

Please feel free to contact the undersigned should you require any additional information. We are happy to reply to any questions that may arise, or to answer informally any questions which Members of the Committee may have.

Subject: Other State Rules - First Appearance After Arrest

General Considerations

The Fourth Amendment requires that a person must be released from custody after 48 hours if a court has not determined that there is probable cause for the arrest. County of Riverside v. McLaughlin, 500 U.S. 44, 57-59, 111 S.Ct. 1661, 1670-1671 (1991). Violation of the rule is but one factor to consider in determining whether to suppress a defendant's in-custody statements.

- Since probable cause (and the amount of bail) must be determined before an arrest warrant issues, a probable cause determination only applies to warrantless arrests.
- Since probable cause may be determined on the basis of affidavits and sworn testimony after a warrantless arrest, the defendant's presence is not required at a probable cause hearing.
- Many states require appearance before a magistrate without unnecessary delay, but most courts have not defined "without unnecessary delay" as a specific amount of time, and determine meaning on a case by case basis.

Only 3 of the 24 states which set specific time limits mandate appearance within 24 actual hours of arrest.

Summary - First Appearance Following Warrantless Arrest, By Total Number of States

3 states - 24 hours, calculated including weekends and holidays (AK, FL, MD)
1 state - 24 hours, weekends and holidays may be included or excluded (WA)
6 states - 24 hours, calculated excluding weekends and holidays (AZ, CT, DE, ID, MA, NH)

1 state - 36 hours, calculated excluding day of arrest, Sundays and holidays (MN)

7 states- 48 hours, including weekends and holidays (AL, AR, GA, HI, MS, NE, TX)
1 state - 48 hours, excluding Sunday, holiday, and days when court not in session (CA)
1 state - 48 hours, excluding Saturday, Sunday and holidays (ME)
1 state - 48 hours if 1st appearance is combined w/prob. cause hearing (court decision) (WI)

2 states - 72 hours, including weekends and holidays (NJ, WY)
1 state - 72 hours, excluding Saturday, Sunday and holidays (LA)
1 state - 72 hours is "without delay", if probable cause w/in 48 hours (court decision) (TN)
21 states - "without unnecessary delay" (CO, IL, IA, KS, KY, MI, MT, NV, NM, NY, NC, ND, OH, OK, OR, PA, RI, SD, UT, VT, WV)

2 states - "forthwith" (SC, VA)

1 state - "promptly" (repealed a 24- hour rule in 1995) (IN)

1 state - person must be released if not "charged" within 20 hours, but no provision for first appearance (MO)

Analysis

This legislation would do the following:

Amends AS 12.25.150(a) by changing the requirement to bring arrested persons before a judge or magistrate from the current 24 hours to 48 hours.

Amends AS 28.15.131 (License to be carried and exhibited on demand) by adding a new subsection stating that violation of this section is an infraction.

Amends AS 28.22.019(c) (Proof of insurance) by reducing violation of this section to an infraction and requiring a mandatory fine of $500.

Amends AS 41.23.220 by defining penalties; except for conduct that is a violation of AS 11.46.420 (Arson in the third degree).

Amends the Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedures, Rule 5(s)(1), regarding appearance before a judge or magistrate.

Amends the Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedures, Sec. 7, regarding the disposition of violations, and Sec. 8 regarding the applicability of this Act.

It is not estimated that this bill will significantly increase the workload of the division of Alaska State Troopers. There is no fiscal cost to the AST as a result of this legislation.

Re: House Bill 175 – relating to criminal procedures following an arrest

Dear Representative Gatto:

The Department of Law respectfully requests a hearing in the House Judiciary Committee on HB 175, at your earliest convenience. HB 175 is a bill that makes important updates to the existing criminal process that occurs following a person's arrest.

Last year the legislature adopted a major revision to the bail law in our state. One of the important revisions was to change from 24 to 48 hours the deadline for bringing a person who is arrested before a judicial officer. The change last year included the court rule change, but neglected to change the statute. HB 175 corrects this. The bill also corrects inconsistencies in the bail schedules and the statutes for several offenses, including operating a motor vehicle without possessing proof of insurance or possessing a driver's license, and for certain arson offenses.

A sectional analysis is attached that describes each section of the bill. I expect Annie Carpeneti, Legislative Liaison from the Department of Law, Criminal Division and Sue Stancliff, Legislative Liaison from the Department of Public Safety to testify regarding this legislation.

Thank you for your consideration of this request.

Sincerely,

JOHN J. BURNS

HOUSE BILL 175 – BAIL CLEANUP
Sectional Analysis

Section 1 amends AS 12.25.150(a) (relating to arrest) to conform to the provision in the bail reform legislation last year that changed the deadline for bringing a person arrested before a judicial officer from 24 hours to 48 hours of arrest.

Section 2 amends AS 12.70.130 (relating to extraditions) to conform to the provision in the bail reform legislation last year that changed the deadline for bringing a person arrested before a judicial officer from 24 to 48 hours of arrest.

Section 3 changes the penalty for the offense of failure to possess and present upon request to a peace officer a person's driver's license when driving from a misdemeanor, similar to a class B misdemeanor, to an infraction. The offense currently is correctible, and would continue to be correctible. This offense is also currently on the bail schedule (Rule 43.1, Alaska Rules of Administration) at a $50 bail. It is not consistent to have an offense at the same time a misdemeanor, which generally requires a court appearance, and at the same time disposable under the bail schedule for a $50 bail amount. The bill removes this inconsistency.

Section 4 changes the penalty for the crime of failure to carry and present upon request to a peace officer proof of automobile insurance when driving from a class B misdemeanor to an infraction. Current law in statute requires a mandatory fine for this offense of at least $500; at the same time the offense is on the bail schedule for a bail amount of $500. It is correctible under current law and would continue to be correctible under this bill. Again, it is inconsistent to have a class B misdemeanor on the bail schedule for disposition without court appearance. The bill removes the inconsistency, and at the same time retains the bail amount of $500.

Section 5 resolves a similar inconsistency in the penalty for burning a vehicle on the Knik River Public Use Area. In 2006 the legislature created the Knik River Public Use Area. The law authorizes the Department of Natural Resources to adopt regulations governing conduct in the area. AS 41.23.220(a) provides that a person who violates the new law or a regulation under the new law commits a violation. AS 41.23.220(b) requires the Alaska Supreme Court to establish a bail schedule for violations of the statutes and regulations. The law specifically requires that the violations be disposed of without court appearance. One of the regulations adopted prohibits burning a vehicle in the area; the bail was adopted in Supreme Court Order 1711 at $50.

In 2008 the legislature enacted AS 11.46.420, which adopted a new crime, arson in the third degree. This prohibits burning a vehicle on state or municipal land. The penalty for this crime is a class C felony.

These sections correct this inconsistency by excluding burning a vehicle on state land from the prohibitions that are effective in the Knik River Public Use Area.

Section 6 redrafts Rule 5(a)(1), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, to correct a drafting error and to make the rule more readable. The rule was changed last year to extend the deadline from 24 to 48 hours for bringing an arrested person before a judicial officer. This change corrects the drafting error, which currently defines a term that is not used in the rule.

Section 7 notes that the changes included in Section 5 of the bill have the effect of changing Rule 43.10, Alaska Rules of Administration (the bail schedule) by prohibiting the disposition of cases involving burning a vehicle on state land without a court appearance by mailing to the court a bail amount of $50.

Sections 8 and 9 include applicability and effective date sections.

property that is damaged must be a building, while under the first degree provision any property can be damaged. However, while the first degree provision requires that a person be placed in danger of injury, a similar requirement does not exist under the second degree statute.

An affirmative defense to arson in the second degree is provided in subsection (b). The defense recognizes that in some instances the most economical method of removing a building is to burn it. Such conduct is exempted from the coverage of the statute if the defendant establishes that no other person had an interest in the property, or if they did, that they consented to the burning, and that the burning was for a lawful purpose. Burning a building to defraud an insurance company would not be a burning for a lawful purpose. Note that a similar defense does not apply to the first degree statute. If the burning recklessly places another person in danger of serious physical injury, the defendant has committed first degree arson even if he acted for a lawful propose.

From 1983 House Journal at 1250 & 1699 (May 10 & June 13, 1983) and 1983 Senate Journal at 106-107 (February 1, 1983):

The [House Judiciary] Committee does not intend that the mere presence at the scene of a fire of a firefighter or other emergency responder would be sufficient in all cases to constitute danger of serious physical injury necessary to establish the crime of arson in the first degree. The existence of the necessary danger will be an issue of fact which must be determined by the trier of fact in each individual case.

COMMENTARY

From Senate Journal Supp. No. 47, at 47 (June 12, 1978):

The crime of criminally negligent burning, a class A misdemeanor, covers the criminally negligent damaging of the property of another by fire or explosion. The person who falls asleep in a hotel bed with a cigarette in his hand, for example, would violate the statute if the bed caught on fire. If physical injury or death results, prosecution would be brought under the Code's homicide or assault statutes.

COMMENTARY

From Senate Journal Supp. No. 47, at 47-48 (June 12, 1978):

Existing AS 41.15.110(a) creates an affirmative duty on a person to exercise due care to prevent the uncontrolled spread of a fire when he knows of a fire or sets a fire on forest lands, owned, possessed or controlled by him.

Re: House Bill 175
ACLU Review of Legal Issues

Chair Gatto, Vice-Chair Thompson:

Thank you for the opportunity to submit written testimony with respect to House Bill 175.

The American Civil Liberties Union of Alaska represents thousands of members and activists throughout the State of Alaska who seek to preserve and expand individual freedoms and civil liberties guaranteed under the United States and Alaska Constitutions. In that respect, we wish to advise you of constitutional issues with the Bill.

Last year, HB 324 was passed (26th Legislature, Chapter No. 19, SLA 2010, Effective Date: July 1, 2010), amending Alaska Rule of Criminal Procedure 5 to permit a new arrestee to be held for up to 48 hours before the initial appearance before a judge or magistrate, rather than the 24 hour period which had long been the law. HB 175 would create consistency between the amended rule and the statute relating to pretrial detention.

Requirement for Hearing Without Unreasonable Delay

Under Gerstein v. Pugh, a probable cause hearing must be held without unreasonable delay. 420 U.S. 103 (1975). After Gerstein, a standard of 24 hours was adopted by most states and most circuits. Years later, a narrowly divided US Supreme Court stated that the initial appearance must be made only within 48 hours. Riverside v. McLaughlin, 500 U.S. 44 (1991). However, Riverside does not bind the states in their interpretation of their own constitutions.

In one accounting of state responses to Gerstein, most states had concluded that 24 hours was the appropriate term of detention before appearing before a magistrate or judge, and only seven states explicitly permitted more than 24 hours prior to an initial hearing. Jenkins v. Chief Justice of Dist. Court Dept., 619 N.E.2d 324, 333-34 (Mass. 1993).

Since Alaska had guaranteed a 24-hour window for initial appearances for 18 years since the Riverside decision, the state courts may be hard pressed to see why a 48-hour window would not likely permit "unreasonable delay." The Alaska courts have not yet had a chance to rule on the dimensions of the "speedy trial" provision of Article I, section 11 as it relates to initial appearances, since Rule 5 has long guaranteed a 24-hour window of appearance. The Alaska Supreme Court could very well decide that the state constitutional provisions relating to speedy trial and due process require no more than a 24-hour window prior to initial appearance, just as the Massachusetts Supreme Court did in Jenkins.

Given that the currently existing rules of criminal procedure already provide an exception for defendants arrested far from urban centers and allow the prosecution to request a delay to gather more information where necessary for a bail hearing, the state's success over the last 18 years in providing an initial appearance within 24 hours strongly suggests that a delay of more than 24 hours would represent unnecessary delay, making the statute unconstitutional.

Contribution to Prison Over-Crowding, Increased Costs

The Legislature should also take note of the fact that almost half of all Alaska prisoners are being held pretrial, typically constituting 46 to 48% of all prisoners in Alaskan institutions. The high rate of pre-trial detention contributes substantially to the state of overcrowding in Alaska prisons and the need to build more of the prisons that cost our state dearly. Consider that the Department of Law reports that almost 27,000 new criminal cases were filed last year – roughly 6,000 felony cases and roughly 21,000 misdemeanor cases. If every one of those 27,000 arrests results in a single extra day in custody, that increase of 27,000 prisoner-days would impose a similar burden in on the correctional system as 74 prisoners spending a year in prison.

Every prisoner-year in custody costs roughly $45,000. The cost of additional incarceration from such the policy change contemplated in HB 175 could cost up to $3.3 million in increased costs every year, just by adding a single day of initial incarceration for each arrest.

Extension of the post-arrest time that a prisoner can be kept in custody without any bail will merely serve to increase our prison population unnecessarily, mostly by increased incarceration of prisoners accused only of misdemeanors.

The Legislature should reverse course and return to the 24-hour window Alaska observed for decades. We are not aware of any evidence of a single incident in which a prisoner was released wrongfully because of any limitation imposed by the 24-hour window before the initial appearance. Locking up thousands of people accused of misdemeanors for longer periods of time and spending millions of dollars to keep our prisons crowded is not good public policy.

Please feel free to contact the undersigned should you require any additional information. We are happy to reply to any questions that may arise, or to answer informally any questions which Members of the Committee may have.

Sincerely,

Jeffrey Mittman

MEMORANDUM

STATE OF ALASKA

Department of Law - Criminal Division

To: Senate Judiciary Committee Date: March 1, 2010

Thru: Richard Svobodny, Deputy Attorney General
Anne Carpeneti, Assistant Attorney General

From: Susan S. McLean SMc
Director, Criminal Division

Subject: Other State Rules - First Appearance After Arrest

General Considerations

The Fourth Amendment requires that a person must be released from custody after 48 hours if a court has not determined that there is probable cause for the arrest. County of Riverside v. McLaughlin, 500 U.S. 44, 57-59, 111 S.Ct. 1661, 1670-1671 (1991). Violation of the rule is but one factor to consider in determining whether to suppress a defendant's in-custody statements.

- Since probable cause (and the amount of bail) must be determined before an arrest warrant issues, a probable cause determination only applies to warrantless arrests.
- Since probable cause may be determined on the basis of affidavits and sworn testimony after a warrantless arrest, the defendant's presence is not required at a probable cause hearing.
- Many states require appearance before a magistrate without unnecessary delay, but most courts have not defined "without unnecessary delay" as a specific amount of time, and determine meaning on a case by case basis.

Only 3 of the 24 states which set specific time limits mandate appearance within 24 actual hours of arrest.

Summary - First Appearance Following Warrantless Arrest, By Total Number of States

3 states - 24 hours, calculated including weekends and holidays (AK, FL, MD)
1 state - 24 hours, weekends and holidays may be included or excluded (WA)
6 states - 24 hours, calculated excluding weekends and holidays (AZ, CT, DE, ID, MA, NH)

1 state - 36 hours, calculated excluding day of arrest, Sundays and holidays (MN)

7 states- 48 hours, including weekends and holidays (AL, AR, GA, HI, MS, NE, TX)
1 state - 48 hours, excluding Sunday, holiday, and days when court not in session (CA)
1 state - 48 hours, excluding Saturday, Sunday and holidays (ME)
1 state - 48 hours if 1st appearance is combined w/prob. cause hearing (court decision) (WI)

2 states - 72 hours, including weekends and holidays (NJ, WY)
1 state - 72 hours, excluding Saturday, Sunday and holidays (LA)
1 state - 72 hours is "without delay", if probable cause w/in 48 hours (court decision) (TN)
21 states - "without unnecessary delay" (CO, IL, IA, KS, KY, MI, MT, NV, NM, NY, NC, ND, OH, OK, OR, PA, RI, SD, UT, VT, WV)

2 states - "forthwith" (SC, VA)

1 state - "promptly" (repealed a 24- hour rule in 1995) (IN)

1 state - person must be released if not "charged" within 20 hours, but no provision for first appearance (MO)

Willis,* 831 N.E.2d, 531, 538 (Ill., 2005) Ill Court cites McLaughlin as requiring 48 hours, but delay is only one factor to be examined in deciding whether confession is voluntary. Court has not otherwise defined "unnecessary delay".

Indiana	" promptly" 24 hr. rule repealed, 1995 Ct. decision implies that more than 48 hours can pass before initial appearance before magistrate	Ind. Code § 35-33-7-1	*See, State v. Sponsor Statement
HB 179
"An Act relating to cruelty to animals..."

Under current law, each neglected animal constitutes a separate offense, but these offenses are only misdemeanors. I would like the gravity of the charge to reflect the gravity of the situation. As such, HB 179 makes it a Class C felony to criminally neglect five or more animals at the same time.

We have seen several cases throughout the state where people take on tens, sometimes hundreds, of animals with no reasonable expectation that they can adequately care for them all. People should be allowed to have as many pets as they like, but they should also be expected to care for these animals. Each time our authorities have to remove multiple animals, it shocks our collective conscience and overwhelms our animal rescue capabilities. We must strengthen our laws to discourage this type of behavior. As such, I respectfully request your support for HB 179.

BILL NO. HB179\A

Analysis

This bill amends the crime of cruelty to animals to include failing to care for five or more animals and causing death, severe physical pain, or prolonged suffering to the animals. The Office of Public Advocacy cannot reliably predict how many new cases will be charged under this expanded definition ,and therefore, the agency has submitted an indeterminate fiscal note.

BILL NO. HB179 \A

Analysis

HB 179 would adopt a class C felony for animal cruelty if a person, acting with criminal negligence, contemporaneously fails to care for five or more animals, and causes the death or severe pain or prolonged suffering to five or more animals.

This bill would have an indeterminate fiscal impact to the Department of Law.

Mat-Su dog breeder faces 50 counts of animal cruelty

WILLOW: Officials pick up 110 animals, but also find 22 that died.

Anchorage Daily News/adn.com

(01/11/11 07:46:29)

A Mat-Su man faces 50 counts of cruelty to animals after state troopers and borough officials found 22 dead dogs and 110 other dogs that were ailing, troopers said.

Frank Rich, 53, of Willow was arrested and taken to the Mat-Su Pretrial Facility, troopers said.

Animal-care staff with the Matanuska-Susitna Borough were working late into Monday evening to remove about 110 dogs from Rich's property in the Montana Creek area, the borough said.

Most of the dogs being rescued are malnourished and dehydrated, troopers said.

Another 22 dogs already had died from exposure, starvation and dehydration, troopers said.

Richard Stockdale, the borough's Animal Care & Regulation manager, said most of the dogs are huskies, a few are malamutes.

The borough said Rich is a dog breeder.

150 dogs seized from breeder's home

MONTANA CREEK, Alaska — Animal care staff in the Mat-Su Valley worked through the night Monday to remove more than 150 dogs from a breeder's home.

Alaska State Troopers arrived Monday evening at the Montana Creek home of 53-year-old Frank Rich of Willow, near Mile 92 of the Parks Highway, to investigate a report of animal neglect.

Troopers say when they arrived at the house on Kashwitna Drive, there was no food or water for the dogs. There were about 150 dogs on the property.

Troopers say nearly all the dogs were malnourished and dehydrated. The animals were shivering and eating snow and their own feces. An additional 22 dogs that had already died were found on the properly, apparently dead from exposure, starvation and dehydration. They say there could be more dead dogs on the property.

About 30 of the dogs are puppies. Some are just a few weeks old.

Troopers arrested Rich for 50 counts of cruelty to animals and remanded him to to the Mat-Su Pretrial Facility. He was arraigned Tuesday morning on the Class A misdemeanors, and a judge entered a plea of not guilty.

Rich is held on $5,000 bail. If he posts bail, he cannot own dogs.

Rich told troopers he lost his job in October and was having a tough time supporting the dogs for his breeding operation.

Mat-Su Borough Animal Care & Regulation Manager Richard Stockdale said Animal Care removed the dogs from Rich because of the lack of care. There were 157 of his dogs at the shelter Tuesday morning.

How You Can Help

He said most of the dogs were huskies. "Most animals are emaciated and dehydrated," Stockdale said.

Animal Care is asking the community for donations of money and the dogs' current brand of food, Hills Science Diet Advanced Fitness. The shelter needs the specific brand of dog food, money, zip ties, tarps, outside kennels, blankets and metal food bowls to help with the influx of dogs.

Supplies to help out can be dropped off at the Willow Fire Statoin and the Anchorage Animal Shelter.

Officials are also asking the public to come in and adopt other dogs -- not the dogs removed from Rich's house -- to alleviate pressure on the facility and let workers treat the incoming dogs. The facility is offering a discount on adopting the dogs that were already there.

Officials say Rich's dogs will not be up for adoption any time soon -- it depends on the outcome of the trial, or if Rich signs over control.

Seized dogs finding new homes

PALMER — In the wake of a ruling ordering dozens of abused dogs be turned over to the Mat-Su Borough, some of the more than 150 animals seized early this year have started to find homes.

But if you're looking to adopt a husky mix, be patient.

"We have a few that are out for adoption just because of their health," said Animal Care and Regulation Manager Richard Stockdale. But most dogs still have a way to go, he said. "They're doing OK, but they're not quite ready to do the adoption thing."

Some of the dogs are headed to the correctional farm at Point MacKenzie, where inmates will care for them. Stockdale said he likes that arrangement because the farm has more manpower than he does and the dogs will get more attention.

But while having the dogs at the farm will relieve some of the burden on his staff, some of the challenges are going to get worse. One dog has already had a litter of puppies. Another is very close. Stockdale said several of the female dogs arrived at the shelter pregnant.

The dogs, most of which were emaciated and dehydrated — and some of which had already died — were seized Jan. 10 from the Willow-area home of Frank Rich. As in most dog seizure cases, the borough said it could not adopt the dogs out immediately. The borough set to work on seizing the dogs permanently. Rich appealed a forfeiture notice the borough filed, which sent the case to borough administrative hearing officer, Karen Jennings. On Feb. 10, Jennings ruled in the borough's favor.

However, that might not be the final word on who owns the dogs. Rich has 30 days to appeal and send the case to state Superior Court. Borough Attorney Lisa Thomas said Thursday that she has received no notice that Rich has taken this route.

But while that uncertainty remains, Stockdale said he's proceeding with the process of rehabilitating the dogs and getting them adopted. He said that is the right move.

"The forfeiture was upheld," he said. "They're now the borough's dogs."

Thomas backed him up on that point. The case's status, she said, is that right now the dogs are the borough's property.

Running parallel to the borough's process is a criminal case filed at the Palmer Courthouse — set for a hearing today — in which Rich is charged with 50 counts of animal cruelty.

Jennings' ruling contains hints of what a potential jury in Rich's criminal trial might see.

According to borough staff, Rich first showed up on their radar in October 2002 when he applied for and received a kennel license, which subsequently expired in 2005.

In April 2006, the borough received a complaint of 20 puppies running loose on Kashwitna Road. Rich was warned about the loose dogs and told to apply to renew his kennel license. In 2007, the borough got another complaint, this time about aggressive dogs getting loose from his property. An animal control officer sent to investigate "observed unsanitary conditions in the dog lot," a borough report says. Rich was cited for those unsanitary conditions and for having an unlicensed kennel in August

A week later, Rich applied for a license. The borough agreed to put down 24 of his dogs to reduce the numbers in the kennel. Even with the reduced numbers, Rich failed the inspection necessary for the license. His kennel was inspected again in September 2007.

"While the dogs were no longer standing in mud and water, the conditions were still unsanitary," Jennings wrote.

Finally, in October 2007, Rich passed an inspection and got a license, which expired in October 2010. He didn't stay on the right side of the law for more than a year, though. In late 2009, the number of dogs on his lot had swelled to 155, which was above the 127 allowed by his license. He was issued a warning.

In April of last year he applied to renew his license. The borough hasn't ruled on that application yet.

The ruling also contains a few snippets of how Rich tried to explain himself when animal care officers came to seize his dogs. He told them that the dead dogs had looked healthy and "suddenly died." He said he'd quit his job two months prior to their arrival and that money had been tight. He'd sold a vehicle and other things to pay for dog food. He said he prioritized feeding the puppies because he could sell them and use the money to feed the adults. He said there was no water for the dogs because it would freeze when he put it out, "so the dogs eat snow." He said he didn't call the borough because he worried all his dogs would be put down, and anyway he said he "did not want to burden the borough."

Jennings takes particular notice of testimony that Rich could have gotten water for the dogs at a nearby spring and that some of the dogs were found in a heated cabin on the property.

"Rich had a free source of water available and in addition, since the cabin was heated, could have kept the water from freezing so it could be provided to the dogs in his lot. Rich's failure to provide the most basic of needs, water, when he had the capacity to do so is evidence that he cannot be relied on to care for the dogs if they are returned to him," Jennings wrote.

Woman sentenced to probation in animal-cruelty case

September 24, 2010|by Ashton Goodell

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — She's been called a cat hoarder, but an Anchorage woman convicted on several counts of animal cruelty says she tried to give stray animals a better life. District Court Judge Alex Swiderski sentenced 54-year-old Deborah Allen Thursday for mistreating several dozen cats and dogs.

Allen won't be spending any time in jail, but will be on probation for 10 years. Animal-rights activists say Allen's good intentions to adopt strays almost killed her animals.

The city removed 32 animals from Allen's home last October. On Thursday, Swiderski ordered at least another 50 pets to be turned over to Animal Control as part of her sentencing.

The prosecutor, Herbert Viergutz, says Allen took on too many animals and couldn't take care of those she was trying to save. Several of them were skinny and sick, with lung congestion and coughs.

The animals have been kept as evidence for nearly a year at Animal Control -- but Allen claims the animals were in better condition under her care than they are now.

Both sides want the animals to find health, happy homes.

"Ms. Allen's rights to all of her animal victims should be forfeited immediately, thereby allowing all the animals at Animal Control a chance to find a new and loving home," Viergutz said.

"I tell you, Judge, if nothing else, if you don't have any respect for me or if you are going to give me jail time fine -- but please, please, please do not send my animals to Animal Control," Allen said.

Swiderski told Allen she could no longer care for or own animals. He said with a mental evaluation and a recommendation from a psychologist, he might consider allowing Allen a few personal pets.

Homes sought for animals from cruelty case

October 01, 2010|by Ashton Goodell

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — Anchorage Animal Care and Control plans to remove dozens of animals from an Anchorage woman's home and animal shelter this weekend. A judge ordered Deborah Allen to turn over all of her animals after she was found guilty of animal cruelty.

At least 50 cats are waiting to be removed from Allen's home -- more than Animal Control can usually take on at once. Several shelters have stepped forward to help adopt out the animals, but even with the extra help, 50 cats and a handful of dogs is a lot to handle.

When Vickie Young with Polar Pug Rescue and Friends first saw her dog, Nym, she didn't even know she was a poodle. Her hair was matted down and covered in feces. Young adopted all the dogs removed from Allen's home.

"A far cry from when we first got them -- they were scared to death of people," Young said.

Several of the dogs had skin infections and eye problems from poor living conditions and a lack of medical care.

"They were in pretty rough shape: they had several inches of matting, which then causes them to have bacteria on the skin, and then the skin starts rotting away," Young said.

The dogs are doing a lot better now; most are healthy and ready to adopt, and Young has no doubt they'll find homes quickly. The problem is the cats -- Animal Control already has 11, and is expecting at least 50 more.

"We've had multiple calls about the dogs, but we have yet to receive a single phone call about the cats," said Animal Control's Brooke Taylor.

"We are very, very up-front with people when we have special-needs animals, and we have a lot," said Sally Clampitt with the Alaska Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. "Really healthy, talented, fabulous animals don't always end up in Animal Control."

Animal Control removed more than 23 cats from Allen's house last year, but didn't have the space to take in all the animals. It's still trying to make room and find other organizations to take on the rest of the animals staying at Allen's animal shelter, Chateau Pampered Purr.

Allen didn't want to talk on camera, but it's still possible she might pursue a civil case against Animal Control. She claimed in court that the shelter didn't adequately take care of the animals they took away from her, and she wants a third party to adopt the animals out.

Animal Control is ready to start adopting out the healthier animals, and will keep a waiting list of those interested in any of the animals still recovering.

HB 179
"An Act relating to cruelty to animals..."

Under current law, each neglected animal constitutes a separate offense, but these offenses are only misdemeanors. I would like the gravity of the charge to reflect the gravity of the situation. As such, HB 179 makes it a Class C felony to criminally neglect five or more animals at the same time.

We have seen several cases throughout the state where people take on tens, sometimes hundreds, of animals with no reasonable expectation that they can adequately care for them all. People should be allowed to have as many pets as they like, but they should also be expected to care for these animals. Each time our authorities have to remove multiple animals, it shocks our collective conscience and overwhelms our animal rescue capabilities. We must strengthen our laws to discourage this type of behavior. As such, I respectfully request your support for HB 179.

BILL NO. HB179 \A

Analysis

HB 179 would adopt a class C felony for animal cruelty if a person, acting with criminal negligence, contemporaneously fails to care for five or more animals, and causes the death or severe pain or prolonged suffering to five or more animals.

This bill would have an indeterminate fiscal impact to the Department of Law.

Mat-Su dog breeder faces 50 counts of animal cruelty

WILLOW: Officials pick up 110 animals, but also find 22 that died.

Anchorage Daily News/adn.com

(01/11/11 07:46:29)

A Mat-Su man faces 50 counts of cruelty to animals after state troopers and borough officials found 22 dead dogs and 110 other dogs that were ailing, troopers said.

Frank Rich, 53, of Willow was arrested and taken to the Mat-Su Pretrial Facility, troopers said.

Animal-care staff with the Matanuska-Susitna Borough were working late into Monday evening to remove about 110 dogs from Rich's property in the Montana Creek area, the borough said.

Most of the dogs being rescued are malnourished and dehydrated, troopers said.

Another 22 dogs already had died from exposure, starvation and dehydration, troopers said.

Richard Stockdale, the borough's Animal Care & Regulation manager, said most of the dogs are huskies, a few are malamutes.

The borough said Rich is a dog breeder.

MONTANA CREEK, Alaska — Animal care staff in the Mat-Su Valley worked through the night Monday to remove more than 150 dogs from a breeder's home.

Alaska State Troopers arrived Monday evening at the Montana Creek home of 53-year-old Frank Rich of Willow, near Mile 92 of the Parks Highway, to investigate a report of animal neglect.

Troopers say when they arrived at the house on Kashwitna Drive, there was no food or water for the dogs. There were about 150 dogs on the property.

Troopers say nearly all the dogs were malnourished and dehydrated. The animals were shivering and eating snow and their own feces. An additional 22 dogs that had already died were found on the properly, apparently dead from exposure, starvation and dehydration. They say there could be more dead dogs on the property.

About 30 of the dogs are puppies. Some are just a few weeks old.

Rich is held on $5,000 bail. If he posts bail, he cannot own dogs.

Rich told troopers he lost his job in October and was having a tough time supporting the dogs for his breeding operation.

Mat-Su Borough Animal Care & Regulation Manager Richard Stockdale said Animal Care removed the dogs from Rich because of the lack of care. There were 157 of his dogs at the shelter Tuesday morning.

He said most of the dogs were huskies. "Most animals are emaciated and dehydrated," Stockdale said.

Animal Care is asking the community for donations of money and the dogs' current brand of food, Hills Science Diet Advanced Fitness. The shelter needs the specific brand of dog food, money, zip ties, tarps, outside kennels, blankets and metal food bowls to help with the influx of dogs.

Supplies to help out can be dropped off at the Willow Fire Statoin and the Anchorage Animal Shelter.

Officials are also asking the public to come in and adopt other dogs -- not the dogs removed from Rich's house -- to alleviate pressure on the facility and let workers treat the incoming dogs. The facility is offering a discount on adopting the dogs that were already there.

Officials say Rich's dogs will not be up for adoption any time soon -- it depends on the outcome of the trial, or if Rich signs over control.

Seized dogs finding new homes

PALMER — In the wake of a ruling ordering dozens of abused dogs be turned over to the Mat-Su Borough, some of the more than 150 animals seized early this year have started to find homes.

But if you're looking to adopt a husky mix, be patient.

"We have a few that are out for adoption just because of their health," said Animal Care and Regulation Manager Richard Stockdale. But most dogs still have a way to go, he said. "They're doing OK, but they're not quite ready to do the adoption thing."

Some of the dogs are headed to the correctional farm at Point MacKenzie, where inmates will care for them. Stockdale said he likes that arrangement because the farm has more manpower than he does and the dogs will get more attention.

But while having the dogs at the farm will relieve some of the burden on his staff, some of the challenges are going to get worse. One dog has already had a litter of puppies. Another is very close. Stockdale said several of the female dogs arrived at the shelter pregnant.

The dogs, most of which were emaciated and dehydrated — and some of which had already died — were seized Jan. 10 from the Willow-area home of Frank Rich. As in most dog seizure cases, the borough said it could not adopt the dogs out immediately. The borough set to work on seizing the dogs permanently. Rich appealed a forfeiture notice the borough filed, which sent the case to borough administrative hearing officer, Karen Jennings. On Feb. 10, Jennings ruled in the borough's favor.

However, that might not be the final word on who owns the dogs. Rich has 30 days to appeal and send the case to state Superior Court. Borough Attorney Lisa Thomas said Thursday that she has received no notice that Rich has taken this route.

But while that uncertainty remains, Stockdale said he's proceeding with the process of rehabilitating the dogs and getting them adopted. He said that is the right move.

"The forfeiture was upheld," he said. "They're now the borough's dogs."

Thomas backed him up on that point. The case's status, she said, is that right now the dogs are the borough's property.

Running parallel to the borough's process is a criminal case filed at the Palmer Courthouse — set for a hearing today — in which Rich is charged with 50 counts of animal cruelty.

Jennings' ruling contains hints of what a potential jury in Rich's criminal trial might see.

According to borough staff, Rich first showed up on their radar in October 2002 when he applied for and received a kennel license, which subsequently expired in 2005.

In April 2006, the borough received a complaint of 20 puppies running loose on Kashwitna Road. Rich was warned about the loose dogs and told to apply to renew his kennel license. In 2007, the borough got another complaint, this time about aggressive dogs getting loose from his property. An animal control officer sent to investigate "observed unsanitary conditions in the dog lot," a borough report says. Rich was cited for those unsanitary conditions and for having an unlicensed kennel in August 2007.

A week later, Rich applied for a license. The borough agreed to put down 24 of his dogs to reduce the numbers in the kennel. Even with the reduced numbers, Rich failed the inspection necessary for the license. His kennel was inspected again in September 2007.

"While the dogs were no longer standing in mud and water, the conditions were still unsanitary," Jennings wrote.

Finally, in October 2007, Rich passed an inspection and got a license, which expired in October 2010. He didn't stay on the right side of the law for more than a year, though. In late 2009, the number of dogs on his lot had swelled to 155, which was above the 127 allowed by his license. He was issued a warning.

In April of last year he applied to renew his license. The borough hasn't ruled on that application yet.

The ruling also contains a few snippets of how Rich tried to explain himself when animal care officers came to seize his dogs. He told them that the dead dogs had looked healthy and "suddenly died." He said he'd quit his job two months prior to their arrival and that money had been tight. He'd sold a vehicle and other things to pay for dog food. He said he prioritized feeding the puppies because he could sell them and use the money to feed the adults. He said there was no water for the dogs because it would freeze when he put it out, "so the dogs eat snow." He said he didn't call the borough because he worried all his dogs would be put down, and anyway he said he "did not want to burden the borough."

Jennings takes particular notice of testimony that Rich could have gotten water for the dogs at a nearby spring and that some of the dogs were found in a heated cabin on the property.

"Rich had a free source of water available and in addition, since the cabin was heated, could have kept the water from freezing so it could be provided to the dogs in his lot. Rich's failure to provide the most basic of needs, water, when he had the capacity to do so is evidence that he cannot be relied on to care for the dogs if they are returned to him," Jennings wrote.

Woman sentenced to probation in animal-cruelty case

September 24, 2010|by Ashton Goodell

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — She's been called a cat hoarder, but an Anchorage woman convicted on several counts of animal cruelty says she tried to give stray animals a better life. District Court Judge Alex Swiderski sentenced 54-year-old Deborah Allen Thursday for mistreating several dozen cats and dogs.

Allen won't be spending any time in jail, but will be on probation for 10 years. Animal-rights activists say Allen's good intentions to adopt strays almost killed her animals.

The city removed 32 animals from Allen's home last October. On Thursday, Swiderski ordered at least another 50 pets to be turned over to Animal Control as part of her sentencing.

The prosecutor, Herbert Viergutz, says Allen took on too many animals and couldn't take care of those she was trying to save. Several of them were skinny and sick, with lung congestion and coughs.

The animals have been kept as evidence for nearly a year at Animal Control -- but Allen claims the animals were in better condition under her care than they are now.

Both sides want the animals to find health, happy homes.

"Ms. Allen's rights to all of her animal victims should be forfeited immediately, thereby allowing all the animals at Animal Control a chance to find a new and loving home," Viergutz said.

"I tell you, Judge, if nothing else, if you don't have any respect for me or if you are going to give me jail time fine -- but please, please, please do not send my animals to Animal Control," Allen said.

Swiderski told Allen she could no longer care for or own animals. He said with a mental evaluation and a recommendation from a psychologist, he might consider allowing Allen a few personal pets.

Homes sought for animals from cruelty case

October 01, 2010|by Ashton Goodell

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — Anchorage Animal Care and Control plans to remove dozens of animals from an Anchorage woman's home and animal shelter this weekend. A judge ordered Deborah Allen to turn over all of her animals after she was found guilty of animal cruelty.

At least 50 cats are waiting to be removed from Allen's home -- more than Animal Control can usually take on at once. Several shelters have stepped forward to help adopt out the animals, but even with the extra help, 50 cats and a handful of dogs is a lot to handle.

When Vickie Young with Polar Pug Rescue and Friends first saw her dog, Nym, she didn't even know she was a poodle. Her hair was matted down and covered in feces. Young adopted all the dogs removed from Allen's home.

"A far cry from when we first got them -- they were scared to death of people," Young said.

Several of the dogs had skin infections and eye problems from poor living conditions and a lack of medical care.

"They were in pretty rough shape: they had several inches of matting, which then causes them to have bacteria on the skin, and then the skin starts rotting away," Young said.

The dogs are doing a lot better now; most are healthy and ready to adopt, and Young has no doubt they'll find homes quickly. The problem is the cats -- Animal Control already has 11, and is expecting at least 50 more.

"We've had multiple calls about the dogs, but we have yet to receive a single phone call about the cats," said Animal Control's Brooke Taylor.

"We are very, very up-front with people when we have special-needs animals, and we have a lot," said Sally Clampitt with the Alaska Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. "Really healthy, talented, fabulous animals don't always end up in Animal Control."

Animal Control removed more than 23 cats from Allen's house last year, but didn't have the space to take in all the animals. It's still trying to make room and find other organizations to take on the rest of the animals staying at Allen's animal shelter, Chateau Pampered Purr.

Allen didn't want to talk on camera, but it's still possible she might pursue a civil case against Animal Control. She claimed in court that the shelter didn't adequately take care of the animals they took away from her, and she wants a third party to adopt the animals out.

Animal Control is ready to start adopting out the healthier animals, and will keep a waiting list of those interested in any of the animals still recovering.

SPONSOR STATEMENT
HOUSE BILL 215
"An Act relating to judicial review of a right-of-lease or the development or construction of an oil or gas pipeline on state land."

The objective of House Bill 215 is to prohibit the filing of lawsuits that have the potential to delay construction of in-state gaslines. The provisions under House Bill 215 modify current statute and the provisions only apply to state land rights-of-way. Claims may be filed only by an applicant, a competing applicant or a person who has a direct financial interest affected by the lease of a right-of-way. The requests for judicial review must be filed within 60 days of the publication of notice for a right-of-way lease application. Judicial review may only be granted for claims challenging the validity of the statute or challenging a denial of rights under the state constitution. Any claim will be barred unless it is filed within the 60 day time frame.

All claims are to be filed in Alaska Superior Court which will have exclusive jurisdiction to determine the proceeding. The court will not have the jurisdiction to grant any injunctive relief with the exception of an issuance of a final judgment.

This legislation is modeled after the Trans-Alaska Pipeline legislation, 43 USC, Chapter 34, that was adopted by Congress in 1973 (43 USC, Chapter 43, Sec. 1652 (d).) Similar legislation to House Bill 215 was passed by the Alaska State Legislature in 1973, Senate Bill 3, related to the TAPS line.

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to the judicial review of a right-of-way lease or the development or construction of an oil or gas pipeline on state land; and relating to the lease of a right-of-way by the Alaska Housing Finance Corporation for a gas pipeline transportation corridor."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

* Section 1. AS 38.34.050(c) is amended to read:

(c) Notwithstanding any contrary provision of law, the Department of Natural Resources shall grant the Alaska Housing Finance Corporation a right-of-way lease under AS 38.35 for the gas pipeline transportation corridor if

(1) the corporation submits a complete right-of-way lease application under AS 38.35.050;

(2) the lease application is made the subject of notice and other reasonable and appropriate publication requirements under AS 38.35.070; and

(3) except for the covenants in AS 38.35.120(a)(1), (2), and (5), the corporation agrees to be bound by the right-of-way lease covenants set out in AS 38.35.120; notwithstanding AS 38.35.120(b), a right-of-way lease subject to this paragraph is valid and of legal effect.

 Sec. 2. AS 38.35.100(d) is amended to read:

(d) The commissioner shall include in a conditional lease each requirement and condition of the covenants established under AS 38.35.120, except for covenants that do not apply to a lease entered into under AS 38.34.050(c). The commissioner may also require that the lessee agree to additional conditions that the commissioner finds to be in the public interest. In place of the covenant established under AS 38.35.120(a)(9), the commissioner shall require the lessee to agree that it will not transfer, assign, pledge, or dispose of in any manner, directly or indirectly, its interest in a conditional right-of-way lease or a pipeline subject to the conditional lease, unless the commissioner, after considering the public interest and issuing written findings to substantiate a decision to allow the transfer, authorizes the transfer. The commissioner shall also require the lessee to agree not to allow the transfer of control of the lessee without the approval of the commissioner; as used in this subsection, "transfer of control of the lessee" means the transfer of 30 percent or more, in the aggregate, of ownership interest in the lessee in one or more transactions to one or more persons by one or more persons.

 Sec. 3. AS 38.35.120(a) is amended to read:

(a) Except as provided in AS 38.34.050(c), a [A] noncompetitive lease of state land for a right-of-way for an oil or natural gas pipeline valued at $1,000,000 or more may be granted only upon the condition that the lessee expressly covenants in the lease, in consideration of the rights acquired by it under the lease, that

(1) it assumes the status of and will perform all of its functions undertaken under the lease as a common carrier and will accept, convey, and transport without discrimination crude oil or natural gas, depending on the kind of pipeline involved, delivered to it for transportation from fields in the vicinity of the pipeline subject to the lease throughout its route both on state land obtained under the lease and on the other land; it will accept, convey, and transport crude oil or natural gas without unjust or unreasonable discrimination in favor of one producer or person, including

itself, as against another but will take the crude oil or natural gas, depending on the kind of pipeline involved, delivered or offered, without unreasonable discrimination, that the Regulatory Commission of Alaska shall, after a full hearing with due notice to the interested parties and a proper finding of facts, determine to be reasonable in the performance of its duties as a common carrier; however, a lessee that owns or operates a natural gas pipeline

(A) subject to regulation either under the Natural Gas Act (15 U.S.C. 717 et seq.) of the United States or by the state or political subdivisions with respect to rates and charges for the sale of natural gas, is, to the extent of that regulation, exempt from the common carrier requirement in this paragraph;

(B) that is a North Slope natural gas pipeline (i) is required to operate as a common carrier only with respect to the intrastate transportation of North Slope natural gas, as that term is defined in AS 42.06.630, and (ii) is not required to operate as a common carrier as to a liquefied natural gas facility or a marine terminal facility associated with the pipeline, and is not otherwise required to perform its functions under the lease as a common carrier; for purposes of this subparagraph, "North Slope natural gas pipeline" means all the facilities of a total system of pipe, whether owned or operated under a contract, agreement, or lease, used by a carrier for transportation of North Slope natural gas, as defined by AS 42.06.630, for delivery, for storage, or for further transportation, and including all pipe, pump, or compressor stations, station equipment, tanks, valves, access roads, bridges, airfields, terminals and terminal facilities, including docks and tanker loading facilities, operations control centers for both the upstream part of the pipeline and the terminal, tanker ballast treatment facilities, fire protection system, communication system, and all other facilities used or necessary for an integral line of pipe, taken as a whole, to carry out transportation, including an extension or enlargement of the line;

(2) it will interchange crude oil or natural gas, depending on the kind of pipeline involved, with each like common carrier and provide connections and facilities for the interchange of crude oil or natural gas at every locality reached by both pipelines when the necessity exists, subject to rates and regulations made by the appropriate state or federal regulatory agency;

(3) it will maintain and preserve books, accounts, and records and will make those reports that the state may prescribe by regulation or law as necessary and appropriate for purposes of administration of this chapter;

(4) it will accord at all reasonable times to the state and its authorized agents and auditors the right of access to its property and records, of inspection of its property, and of examination and copying of records;

(5) it will provide connections, as determined by the Regulatory Commission of Alaska under AS 42.06.340, to facilities on the pipeline subject to the lease, both on state land and other land in the state, for the purpose of delivering crude oil or natural gas, depending on the kind of pipeline involved, to persons (including the state and its political subdivisions) contracting for the purchase at wholesale of crude oil or natural gas transported by the pipeline when required by the public interest;

(6) it shall, notwithstanding any other provision, provide connections and interchange facilities at state expense at such places the state considers necessary if the state determines to take a portion of its royalty or taxes in oil or natural gas;

(7) it will construct and operate the pipeline in accordance with applicable state laws and lawful regulations and orders of the Regulatory Commission of Alaska;

(8) it will, at its own expense, during the term of the lease,

(A) maintain the leasehold and pipeline in good repair;

(B) promptly repair or remedy any damage to the leasehold;

(C) promptly compensate for any damage to or destruction of property for which the lessee is liable resulting from damage to or destruction of the leasehold or pipeline;

(9) it will not transfer, assign, or dispose of in any manner, directly or indirectly, or by transfer of control of the carrier corporation, its interest in a right-of-way lease, or any rights under the lease or any pipeline subject to the lease to any person other than another owner of the pipeline (including subsidiaries, parents, and affiliates of the owners), except to the extent that the commissioner, after consideration of the protection of the public interest (including whether the proposed transferee is fit, willing, and able to perform the transportation or other acts proposed in a manner that will reasonably protect the lives, property, and general welfare of the people of Alaska), authorizes; the commissioner shall not unreasonably withhold consent to the transfer, assignment, or disposal;

(10) it will file with the commissioner a written appointment of a named permanent resident of the state to be its registered agent in the state and to receive service of notices, regulations, decisions, and orders of the commissioner; if it fails to appoint an agent for service, service may be made by posting a copy in the office of the commissioner, filing a copy in the office of the lieutenant governor, and mailing a copy to the lessee's last known address;

(11) the applicable law of this state will be used in resolving questions of interpretation of the lease;

(12) the granting of the right-of-way lease is subject to the express condition that the exercise of the rights and privileges granted under the lease will not unduly interfere with the management, administration, or disposal by the state of the land affected by the lease, and that the lessee agrees and consents to the occupancy and use by the state, its grantees, permittees, or other lessees of any part of the right-of-way not actually occupied or required by the pipeline for the full and safe utilization of the pipeline, for necessary operations incident to land management, administration, or disposal;

(13) it will be liable to the state for damages or injury incurred by the state caused by the construction, operation, or maintenance of the pipeline and it will indemnify the state for the liabilities or damages;

(14) it will procure and furnish liability and property damage insurance from a company licensed to do business in the state or furnish other security or undertaking upon the terms and conditions the commissioner considers necessary if the commissioner finds that the net assets of the lessee are insufficient to protect the public from damage for which the lessee may be liable arising out of the construction or operation of the pipeline.

 Sec. 4. AS 38.35.120(b) is amended to read:

(b) Except as provided in AS 38.34.050(c), for [FOR] a right-of-way lease granted under this chapter for an oil or natural gas pipeline valued at $1,000,000 or more to be valid and of legal effect, it must contain the terms required to be inserted under the provisions of AS 38.35.110 - 38.35.140. Except as provided in AS 38.34.050(c), an [AN] oil or natural gas pipeline right-of-way lease granted under this chapter that does not contain the required terms is null and void and without legal effect and does not vest any interest in state land or any authority in the carrier granted the lease.

 Sec. 5. AS 38.35.200(a) is amended to read:

(a) A person that is a [AN APPLICANT OR] competing applicant or that [A PERSON WHO] has a direct financial interest affected by the lease of a right-of-way under this chapter that [WHO] raises an objection [OBJECTIONS] within the later of 60 days after the effective date of this Act or [OF] the publication of notice under AS 38.35.070 and a person that is an applicant are the only persons with standing to seek judicial review of

(1) a decision of the commissioner under AS 38.35.100; or

(2) an action described in (b) of this section.

 Sec. 6. AS 38.35.200(b) is repealed and reenacted to read:

(b) Notwithstanding any contrary provision of law, an action or decision of the commissioner or other state officer or agency concerning the issuance or approval of a necessary right-of-way, permit, lease, certificate, license, or other authorization for the development, construction, or initial operation of a natural gas pipeline that uses a right-of-way subject to this chapter may not be subject to judicial review, except that a claim alleging the invalidity of this section must brought within 60 days after the effective date of this Act, and a claim alleging that an action will deny rights under the Constitution of the State of Alaska must be brought within 60 days following the date of that action. A claim that is not filed within the limitations established in this subsection is barred. A complaint under this subsection must be filed in superior court, and the superior court has exclusive jurisdiction. Notwithstanding AS 22.10.020(c), except in conjunction with a final judgment on a claim filed under this subsection, the superior court may not grant injunctive relief, including a temporary restraining order, preliminary injunction, permanent injunction, or stay against the issuance of a right-of-way, permit, lease, certificate, license, or other authorization. In this section, "natural gas pipeline" has the meaning given in AS 42.06.630.

 Sec. 7. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

REVISOR'S INSTRUCTION. The revisor of statutes shall change the catch line of AS 38.35.200 from "Judicial review of decisions of commissioner on application" to "Judicial review."

Sec. 38.35.070. Notice of application.

Upon receiving an application under AS 38.35.050, the commissioner shall

(1) cause notice of it to appear in a daily newspaper of general circulation published in the vicinity of the location of the proposed pipeline, the notice to include:

(A) a general description of the land involved;

(B) a summary of the substance of the application;

(2) file copies of the application with each coordinate agency;

(3) furnish at cost copies of a notice or application to persons requesting them; and

(4) provide other publication and notice the commissioner considers reasonable and appropriate to inform the public of the application.

History -

(Sec. 1 ch 72 SLA 1972; am Sec. 7 ch 3 FSSLA 1973)

Sec. 38.35.100. Decision on application.

(a) The commissioner shall promptly determine, in a written finding, on an application filed under AS 38.35.050, whether the applicant is fit, willing, and able to perform the transportation or other acts proposed in a manner that will be required by the present or future public interest. In making a determination the commissioner shall consider whether or not

(1) the proposed use of the right-of-way will unreasonably conflict with existing uses of the land involving a superior public interest;

(2) the applicant has the technical and financial capability to protect state and private property interests;

(3) the applicant has the technical and financial capability to take action to the extent reasonably practical to

(A) prevent any significant adverse environmental impact, including but not limited to erosion of the surface of the land and damage to fish and wildlife and their habitat;

(B) undertake any necessary restoration or revegetation; and

(C) protect the interests of individuals living in the general area of the right-of-way who rely on fish, wildlife, and biotic resources of the area for subsistence purposes;

(4) the applicant has the financial capability to pay reasonably foreseeable damages for which the applicant may become liable on claims arising from the construction, operation, maintenance, or termination of the pipeline;

(5) the applicant has agreed that in the construction and operation of a pipeline within the right-of-way the applicant will comply with, and require contractors and their subcontractors to comply with, applicable and valid laws and regulations regarding the hiring of residents of the state then in effect or that take effect subsequently.

(b) If the commissioner makes the determinations under (a) of this section favorably to the applicant, then the commissioner may grant the whole or part of the application. If the commissioner makes the determinations under (a)(1) - (5) of this section favorably to the applicant but determines that the applicant is not then fit, willing, and able to perform under the application, the commissioner may grant the application under a conditional lease subject to conditions established by the commissioner that will ensure that the applicant will, within a prescribed period of time not exceeding 10 years, establish that the applicant is fit, willing, and able, under (a) of this section, to perform the transportation or other acts that will be required by the present or future public interest. An applicant is not entitled to a notice or authorization to proceed to construction, or its equivalent, under a conditional lease until the commissioner determines in writing that the applicant has satisfactorily established that the applicant is then fit, willing, and able to perform under (a) of this section. Otherwise, the commissioner shall deny the application.

(c) The commissioner may offer the applicant a lease or a conditional lease under this section. If the applicant does not accept a lease offered under this section within 30 days, the lease offered is withdrawn.

(d) The commissioner shall include in a conditional lease each requirement and condition of the covenants established under AS 38.35.120. The commissioner may also require that the lessee agree to additional conditions that the commissioner finds to be in the public interest. In place of the covenant established under AS 38.35.120(a)(9), the commissioner shall require the lessee to agree that it will not transfer, assign, pledge, or dispose of in any manner, directly or indirectly, its interest in a conditional right-of-way lease or a pipeline subject to the conditional lease, unless the commissioner, after considering the public interest and issuing written findings to substantiate a decision to allow the transfer, authorizes the transfer. The commissioner shall also require the lessee to agree not to allow the transfer of control of the lessee without the approval of the commissioner; as used in this subsection, "transfer of control of the lessee" means the transfer of 30 percent or more, in the aggregate, of ownership interest in the lessee in one or more transactions to one or more persons by one or more persons.

(e) The commissioner shall require a conditional lessee to agree that

(1) in the absence of the approval of the commissioner, a transfer may not relieve the lessee of an obligation assumed under the lease;

(2) a transfer, including the transfer of lessee, that occurs without the approval of the commissioner is ineffective to transfer interests in and obligations under the lease; and

(3) a transfer constitutes a default under the lease.

(f) In an application for the approval under (d) of this section of a transfer of an interest, the commissioner shall consider whether the proposed transferee will be fit, willing, and able to perform the transportation or other acts proposed under the conditions established in the conditional lease and whether the transfer is in the public interest. In approving the transfer of an interest under (d) of this section and this subsection, the commissioner may impose any condition on the transfer that the commissioner considers in the public interest.

(g) If, during the term of a conditional lease, the commissioner determines under (a) of this section that the applicant is fit, willing, and able to perform the transportation or other acts proposed in a manner that will be required by the present or future public interest, the commissioner may amend the conditional right-of-way lease to insert the covenant established in AS 38.35.120(a)(9) in place of the covenant against a transfer established under (d) and (e) of this section.

(h) The issuance of a conditional lease does not prevent the commissioner from issuing other conditional or unconditional leases for the same right-of-way. A conditional lease may be revoked at any time that the commissioner determines that the applicant or conditional lessee will not be fit, willing, and able to perform during the term of the lease or when another applicant or conditional lessee is determined to be fit, willing, and able to perform under an application or lease for all or part of the right-of-way. An applicant or conditional lessee accrues no rights, including preference or priority rights, to a particular right-of-way until the commissioner makes a determination that the applicant or conditional lessee is then fit, willing, and able to perform the transportation or other acts proposed under (a) of this section.

(i) The commissioner shall insert a provision implementing the requirements of (a)(5) of this section into each agreement entered into by the commissioner for the construction and operation of a pipeline within the state.

Sec. 38.35.200. Judicial review of decisions of commissioner on application.

(a) An applicant or competing applicant or a person who has a direct financial interest affected by the lease who raises objections within 60 days of the publication of notice under AS 38.35.070 are the only persons with standing to seek judicial review of a decision of the commissioner under AS 38.35.100.

(b) The only grounds for judicial review of a decision of the commissioner are

(1) failure to follow the procedures set out in this chapter; or

(2) abuse of discretion so capricious, arbitrary, or confiscatory as to constitute a denial of due process.

(7) "gas" includes all natural gas and hydrocarbons produced at the wellhead and not defined as oil;

(8) "interruptible transportation service" means service by a natural gas pipeline carrier in which the carrier's pipeline system capacity may be subject to a prior claim by another shipper or another class of service; a service constitutes "interruptible transportation service" if the service is given a lower priority than another class of service, resulting in noncontinuous service to a shipper of natural gas;

(9) "intrastate," as applied to the transportation of North Slope natural gas, means the transportation of North Slope natural gas between any point within the state and another point within the state, for ultimate consumption of the North Slope natural gas within the state;

(10) "natural gas pipeline" or "natural gas pipeline facility" means all the facilities of a total system of pipe, whether owned or operated by a natural gas pipeline carrier under a contract, agreement, or lease in this state used by a natural gas pipeline carrier for transportation of natural gas for delivery, storage, or further transportation, and including all pipe, pump and compressor stations, station equipment, and all other facilities used or necessary for an integral line of pipe to effectuate the transportation from point to point, excluding, however, gas processing plants, treaters, and separators;

separators, and all other facilities used or necessary for an integral line of pipe to carry out the transportation from point to point, but excluding marine terminal facilities and the integrated plant, facilities, and equipment, including pollution control equipment, used for conditioning, storage, handling, or processing of North Slope natural gas into liquefied natural gas;

(14) "North Slope natural gas pipeline carrier" means the owner, including a corporation, company, or other entity organized under the laws of the United States or of a state, of a North Slope natural gas pipeline, or an interest in it, or a person, including a corporation, company, or other entity, organized under the laws of the United States or of a state, authorized to construct, operate, or extend North Slope natural gas pipeline facilities under this chapter;

(17) "pipeline carrier" means the owner, including corporations organized under the laws of the United States or of any state, of any pipeline, as the term is defined in this section, or any interest in it, or any person, including corporations organized under the laws of the United States or of any state, authorized to construct or extend pipeline facilities under AS 42.06.240(a);

(18) "regulation" includes rules;

(19) "tariff" means a rate, charge, toll, rule, or regulation of an oil or gas pipeline facility relating to services furnished by the facility to the general public or other users for compensation.

Revisors Notes -

Reorganized in 1983, 1998, and 2000 to alphabetize the defined terms.

Paragraphs (10) and (11) were enacted as (18) and (19). Renumbered in 2003, at which time paragraphs (10) - (17) were renumbered as (12) - (19).

Decisions -

"Its products" construed. - The legislature intended the phrase "its products" in paragraph (7) [now (15)] to include refined oil. Tesoro Alaska Petro. Co. v. Kenai Pipe Line Co., 746 P.2d 896 (Alaska 1987).

"Pipeline facility" construed. - A marine terminal facility which was physically connected to the remainder of a carrier's pipeline system logically was within the definition of "pipeline facility" in paragraph (8) [now (16)] for the outward movement of crude oil, and thus was subject to the Alaska Public Utilities Commission's regulatory authority. Tesoro Alaska Petro. Co. v. Kenai Pipe Line Co., 746 P.2d 896 (Alaska 1987).

"Transportation from point to point" construed. - It is not necessary that for "transportation from point to point" to fall within paragraph (8) [now (16)] one of the "points" must be a wellhead. Where incoming crude oil is "transported" from a tanker docked at the carrier's wharf, through marine terminal lines, to the terminal storage tanks, this qualifies as "transportation from point to point." Tesoro Alaska Petro. Co. v. Kenai Pipe Line Co., 746 P.2d 896 (Alaska 1987).

BILL NO. HB215

Analysis

Current Alaska statutes limit challenges of pipeline right-of-way leasing decisions to lease applicants, competing applicants and persons with a direct financial interest who raise an objection within 60 days a right-of-way lease application is noticed; and restrict the grounds for judicial review to procedural errors. HB 215 would amend existing statutes to impose the same limits on judicial review, including the requirement to raise an objection within 60 days of notice of the initial lease application, to all permitting and licensing decisions associated with development and construction of a pipeline that uses a state right-of-way.

There would be no fiscal impact on the Department of Natural Resources.

Chapter No.

AN ACT

Relating to pipelines; and providing for an effective date.

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

* Section 1. AS 38.35.010 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(b) The State of Alaska reserves unto itself all rights, powers, privileges and immunities not preempted by federal interstate commerce laws and regulations in the right-of-way leasing of any state lands for pipeline construction, transmission, or operation within its boundaries.

* Sec. 2. AS 38.35.020 is amended to read:

Sec. 38.35.020. GRANT OF RIGHT-OF-WAY LEASE. (a) Rights-of-way on state land including rights-of-way over, under, along, across, or upon the right-of-way of a public road or highway or the right-of-way of a railroad or other public utility, or across, upon, over, or under a river or other body of water or land belonging to or administered by the state may be granted by noncompetitive lease by the commissioner for pipeline purposes for the transportation of oil, products or natural gas under those conditions prescribed by law or by administrative regulation. Except to the extent authorized by an oil and gas lease or unit agreement approved by the state, no person may engage in any construction or operation of any part of an oil, products, or natural gas pipeline, which in whole or in part is or is proposed to be on state land unless that person has obtained from the commissioner a right-of-way lease of the land under this chapter.

(b) The commissioner may by regulation exempt the construction or operation of field gathering lines or any reasonable classification of them from the requirement of a right-of-way lease under this chapter.

* Sec. 3. AS 38.35.030 is amended to read:

Sec. 38.35.030. ABANDONMENT, REDUCTION OR IMPAIRMENT OF SERVICE OF PIPELINE. No lessee may abandon any portion of a pipeline that is subject to a lease granted under this chapter, or operation or transportation, service, or sale by it, or reduce or impair service, except in accordance with the terms of the lease or sec. 40 of this chapter.

* Sec. 4. AS 38.35.040 is amended to read:

Sec. 38.35.040. TEMPORARY OR EMERGENCY SERVICE OR TEMPORARY ABANDONMENT, REDUCTION OR IMPAIRMENT OF SERVICE BY LESSEE. The commissioner may, either upon a request made in the form he shall by regulation require, or upon his own motion without request, authorize or require temporary or emergency rendering of service or temporary or emergency abandonment, reduction or impairment of service by a pipeline of a lessee without compliance with secs. 50 - 100 of this chapter. Nothing in this section prevents a carrier from temporarily suspending operations in the event of an emergency which threatens public health or safety; however, notice shall be given the commissioner as soon as possible.

* Sec. 5. AS 38.35.050 is repealed and re-enacted to read:

Sec. 38.35.050. APPLICATIONS FOR RIGHT-OF-WAY LEASES. (a) A person or persons desiring to own a pipeline which is proposed to be located in whole or in part on state land, shall apply for a noncompetitive right-of-way lease of the state land.

(b) Applications under (a) of this section shall be made in a form and manner prescribed by regulation, and shall include any and all data, information, plans and exhibits which the commissioner determines are necessary to prepare the analysis required by sec. 80 of this chapter and to make a decision under sec. 100 of this chapter.

(c) Any amendment to an application filed under this section which constitutes a substantial change in the application is subject to all provisions of this chapter applying to an original application.

(d) All persons owning or planning to own an interest in a pipeline or proposed pipeline subject to a lease must join in the application under (a) of this section. Any person employed by the lessee in operating the pipeline is bound by the covenants of the lease applicable to functions within the scope of his employment as if he were an applicant under the lease and the state may enforce any breach of a covenant directly against an operator who is not in compliance with the covenant.

* Sec. 6. AS 38.35.060 is repealed.

* Sec. 7. AS 38.35.070 is amended to read:

Sec. 38.35.070. NOTICE OF APPLICATION. Upon receiving an application under sec. 50 of this chapter, the commissioner shall

(1) cause notice of it to appear in a daily newspaper of general circulation published in the vicinity of the location of the proposed pipeline, the notice to include:

(A) a general description of the land involved;

(B) a summary of the substance of the application;

(2) file copies of the application with each coordinate agency;

(3) furnish at cost copies of a notice or application to persons requesting them; and

(4) provide other publication and notice he considers reasonable and appropriate to inform the public of the application.

* Sec. 8. AS 38.35.080 is amended to read:

Sec. 38.35.080. ANALYSIS AND PUBLIC HEARING. (a) The commissioner shall, within a reasonable time after receiving the application, prepare an analysis of the application or of the matter of which he was notified, including a proposal for action if feasible; a proposed lease and a general statement of his basis and purpose, if favorable action is proposed; or, when a proposal for action is not feasible before a hearing, a description of the subjects and issues involved.

(b) Upon completion of the analysis but not less than 30 days before the date set for hearing an application or a substantial amendment to an application, the commissioner shall publish notice, and make copies available as provided in sec. 70 of this chapter.

(c) The commissioner shall set all applications for public hearing as soon as practicable, if a public hearing on an application is requested by any person within 30 days of publication of notice under sec. 70(a) of this chapter or if the proposed action being considered involves a substantial public interest. The commissioner shall set the application for public hearing and publish notice of the time and place of the public hearing at least 30 days before the hearing.

(d) Except to the extent specified in sec. 190(b) of this chapter, the provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act (AS 44.62) do not apply to hearings held under this section.

* Sec. 9. AS 38.35.100 is repealed and re-enacted to read:

Sec. 38.35.100. DECISION ON APPLICATION. (a) The commissioner shall promptly determine, on an application filed with him under sec. 50 of this chapter, whether the applicant is fit, willing and able to perform the transportation or other acts proposed in a manner that will be required by the present or future public interest. In making a determination the commissioner shall consider whether or not

(1) the proposed use of the right-of-way will unreasonably conflict with existing uses of the land involving a superior public interest;

(2) the applicant has the technical and financial capability to protect state and private property interests;

(3) the applicant has the technical and financial capability to take action to the extent reasonably practical to

(A) prevent any significant adverse environmental impact, including but not limited to, erosion of the surface of the land and damage to fish and wildlife and their habitat;

(B) undertake any necessary restoration or revegetation; and

(C) protect the interests of individuals living in the general area of the right-of-way who rely on fish, wildlife and biotic resources of the area for subsistence purposes;

(4) the applicant has the financial capability to pay reasonably foreseeable damages for which he may become liable on claims arising from the construction, operation, maintenance or termination of the pipeline.

(b) If the commissioner makes these determinations favorably to the applicant, then he may grant the whole or part of the application. Otherwise, he shall deny the application. In order to grant the whole or part of the application the commissioner shall offer a lease to the applicant for its acceptance through signing of the lease and agreeing to comply with its terms, conditions, and obligations. Only upon proper acceptance of offered lease by the applicant within 30 days after its having been presented is the grant of the application consummated.

* Sec. 10. AS 38.35.110 is amended to read:

Sec. 38.35.110. TERM OF LEASE. Each lease of state land for pipeline right-of-way purposes shall contain a provision that the lease shall run for a specified term of not greater than 30 years, and shall be renewable for additional periods of up to 10 years each, so long as the lessee is in commercial operation and is in full compliance with all state law, including but not limited to state law pertaining to regulation and taxation of the pipeline facility, and is in compliance with all terms of the lease. In making this determination he shall take into consideration the cost of the proposed pipeline, its useful life, and the probable financing requirement for the proposed pipeline.

* Sec. 11. AS 38.35.120 is repealed and re-enacted to read:

Sec. 38.35.120. COVENANTS REQUIRED TO BE INCLUDED IN LEASE. (a) A noncompetitive lease of state land for a right-of-way for an oil or natural gas pipeline valued at $1,000,000 or more may be granted only upon the condition that the lessee expressly covenants in the lease, in consideration of the rights acquired by it under the lease, that

(1) it assumes the status of and will perform all of its functions undertaken under the lease as a common carrier and will accept, convey, and transport without discrimination crude oil or natural gas, depending on the kind of pipeline involved, delivered to it for transportation from fields in the vicinity of the pipeline subject to the lease throughout its route both on state land obtained under the lease and on other land; however, a lessee who owns or operates a natural gas pipeline subject to regulation either (A) under the Natural Gas Act (15 U.S.C. 717 et. seq.) of the United States, or (B) by the state or political subdivisions with respect to rates and charges for the sale of natural gas, is, to the extent of that regulation, exempt from the common carrier requirement in this paragraph; it will accept, convey, and transport crude oil or natural gas without unjust or unreasonable discrimination in favor of one producer or person, including itself, as against another but will take the crude oil or natural gas, depending on the kind of pipeline involved, delivered or offered, without unreasonable discrimination, that the Alaska Pipeline Commission shall, after a full hearing with due notice to the interested parties and a proper finding of facts, determine to be reasonable in the performance of its duties as a common carrier;

(2) it will interchange crude oil or natural gas, depending on the kind of pipeline involved, with each like common carrier and provide connections and facilities for the interchange of crude oil or natural gas at every locality reached by both pipelines when the necessity exists, subject to rates and regulations made by the appropriate state or federal regulatory agency;

(3) it will maintain and preserve books, accounts, and records and will make those reports that the state may prescribe by regulation or law as necessary and appropriate for purposes of administration of this chapter;

(4) it will accord at all reasonable times to the state and its authorized agents and auditors the right of access to its property and records, of inspection of its property, and of examination and copying of records;

(5) it will provide connections, as determined by the Alaska Pipeline Commission under AS 42.06.340, to facilities on the pipeline subject to the lease, both on state land and other land in the state, for the purpose of delivering crude oil or natural gas, depending on the kind of pipeline involved, to persons (including the state and its political subdivisions) contracting for the purchase at wholesale of crude oil or natural gas transported by the pipeline when required by the public interest;

(6) it shall, notwithstanding any other provision, provide connections and interchange facilities at state expense at such places the state considers necessary if the state determines to take a portion of its royalty or taxes in oil or natural gas;

(7) it will construct and operate the pipeline in accordance with applicable state laws and lawful regulations and orders of the Alaska Pipeline Commission;

(8) it will, at its own expense, during the term of the lease

(A) maintain the leasehold and pipeline in good repair;

(B) promptly repair or remedy any damage to the leasehold;

(C) promptly compensate for any damage to or destruction of property for which the lessee is liable resulting from damage to or destruction of the leasehold or pipeline;

(9) it will not transfer, assign, or dispose of in any manner, directly or indirectly, or by transfer of control of the carrier corporation, its interest in a right-of-way lease, or any rights under the lease or any pipeline subject to the lease to any person other than another owner of the pipeline (including subsidiaries, parents and affiliates of the owners), except to the extent that the commissioner, after consideration of the protection of the public interest (including whether the proposed transferee is fit, willing and able to perform the transportation or other acts proposed in a manner that will reasonably protect the lives, property and general welfare of the people of Alaska), authorizes; the commissioner shall not unreasonably withhold his consent to the transfer, assignment or disposal;

(10) it will file with the commissioner a written appointment of a named permanent resident of the state to be its registered agent in the state and to receive service of notices, regulations, decisions and orders of the commissioner; if it fails to appoint an agent for service, service may be made by posting a copy in the office of the commissioner and filing a copy of it in the office of the lieutenant governor and by mailing a copy to the lessee's last known address;

(11) the applicable law of this state will be used in resolving questions of interpretation of the lease;

(12) the granting of the right-of-way lease is subject to the express condition that the exercise of the rights and privileges granted under the lease will not unduly interfere with the management, administration, or disposal by the state of the land affected by the lease, and that the lessee agrees and consents to the occupancy and use by the state, its grantees, permittees, or other lessees of any part of the right-of-way not actually occupied or required by the pipeline for the full and safe utilization of the pipeline, for necessary operations incident to land management, administration, or disposal;

(13) it will be liable to the state for damages or injury incurred by the state caused by the construction, operation or maintenance of the pipeline and it will indemnify the state for the liabilities or damages;

(14) it will procure and furnish liability and property damage insurance from a company licensed to do business in the state or furnish other security or undertaking upon the terms and conditions the commissioner considers necessary if the commissioner finds that the net assets of the lessee are insufficient to protect the public from damage for which the lessee may be liable arising out of the construction or operation of the pipeline.

(b) For a right-of-way lease granted under this chapter for an oil or natural gas pipeline valued at $1,000,000 or more to be valid and of legal effect, it must contain the terms required to be inserted under the provisions of secs. 110 - 140 of this chapter. An oil or natural gas pipeline right-of-way lease granted under this chapter that does not contain the required terms is null and void and without legal effect and does not vest any interest in state land or any authority in the carrier granted the lease.

(c) The commissioner may insert in any right-of-way lease other reasonable provisions and conditions that he determines the public interest requires.

(d) The lease will also contain terms and conditions that are reasonably necessary to obligate the lessee, to the extent reasonably practicable, to

(1) prevent conflicts with other existing uses of the land involving a superior public interest;

(2) protect state and private property interests;

(3) prevent any significant adverse environmental impact, including but not limited to the erosion of the surface of the land, and damage to fish and wildlife and their habitat;

(4) restore and revegetate during the term and at termination of the lease; and

(5) protect the interests of individuals living in the general area of the right-of-way who rely on the fish, wildlife, and biotic resources of the area for subsistence purposes.

(e) In the event the commissioner proposes to offer a lease or leases to two or more lessees for the same pipeline, the commissioner may include terms in the lease or leases which establish the limit of the obligations and liabilities of each lessee arising under this chapter or under the lease or leases.

(f) The commissioner may, at his discretion, include any or all of the terms set out in this section in leases of state land for products pipeline right-of-way purposes.

* Sec. 12. AS 38.35.130 is amended to read:

Sec. 38.35.130. RIGHT-OF-WAY EASEMENTS OR LEASES ACQUIRED FROM OTHERS. (a) The lessee may, if the commissioner delegates the function to it, condemn, by declaration of taking, under AS 09.55.420 - 09.55.450, real property and acquire leases of or easements or rights-of-way on lands in the state required for right-of-way purposes for a pipeline subject to the lease on behalf of and as agent for the state in which title to or interest in the land shall vest.

(b) The lease shall contain a covenant that the land, right-of-way, or easement acquired under this section is or will form part of the land leased to the lessee.

* Sec. 13. AS 38.35.140 is repealed and re-enacted to read:

Sec. 38.35.140. PAYMENT OF RENTAL AND COSTS. (a) The lease price for a right-of-way lease shall be the annual fair market rental of the state lands included in the right-of-way based on the appraised fair market value of the land. The lease price is payable annually in advance on or before the anniversary of the lease. The appraised fair market rental value shall be adjusted periodically under the provisions of AS 38.05.105. Rental may not be charged for any land acquired by the lessee under sec. 130(b) of this chapter and conveyed without cost to the state.

(b) The lessee shall reimburse the state for all reasonable costs incurred in monitoring the construction of the pipeline on the right-of-way.

* Sec. 14. AS 38.35.150 is repealed.

* Sec. 15. AS 38.35.160 is repealed.

* Sec. 16. AS 38.35.170 is repealed and re-enacted to read:

Sec. 38.35.170. FORFEITURE OF LEASE. Failure to begin construction of the pipeline facility within a reasonable time of the granting of a right-of-way lease under this chapter for reasons within the control of the lessee or failure of an owner of an interest in the granted right-of-way substantially to comply with the terms of the right-of-way shall be grounds for forfeiture of the right-of-way interest of the lessee or owner in an action brought by the commissioner in the superior court. Before the commencement of any action for forfeiture of an interest in a right-of-way under this section, the commissioner shall give the lessee or owner of the interest notice in writing of the alleged default and shall not commence the proceeding unless the lessee or owner of the interest has failed to initiate good faith efforts to cure the default within 60 days of the notice of the alleged default.

* Sec. 17. AS 38.35.180(c) is amended to read:

(c) Neither this section nor the state's obtaining an injunction or recovering penalties extinguishes any civil cause of action arising out of a violation of this chapter or the provisions of a right-of-way lease.

* Sec. 18. AS 38.35.190(b), (c) and (d) are repealed.

* Sec. 19. AS 38.35.200 is repealed and re-enacted to read:

Sec. 38.35.200. JUDICIAL REVIEW OF DECISIONS OF COMMISSIONER ON APPLICATION. (a) An applicant or competing applicant or a person who has a direct financial interest affected by the lease who raises objections within 60 days of the publication of notice under sec. 70 of this chapter are the only persons with standing to seek judicial review of a decision of the commissioner under sec. 100 of this chapter.

(b) The only grounds for judicial review of a decision of the commissioner are

(1) failure to follow the procedures set out in this chapter; or

(2) abuse of discretion so capricious, arbitrary or confiscatory as to constitute a denial of due process.

* Sec. 20. AS 38.35.210 is amended to read:

Sec. 38.35.210. DELEGATION OF COMMISSIONER'S AUTHORITY. The commissioner may delegate to an employee of the Department of Natural Resources or the Department of Law the authority granted under this chapter, except for the authority to execute leases.

* Sec. 21. AS 38.35.220(d) is repealed.

* Sec. 22. AS 38.35.230 is repealed and re-enacted to read:

Sec. 1651. Congressional findings and declaration

-STATUTE-

The Congress finds and declares that:

(a) The early development and delivery of oil and gas from Alaska's North Slope to domestic markets is in the national interest because of growing domestic shortages and increasing dependence upon insecure foreign sources.

(b) The Department of the Interior and other Federal agencies, have, over a long period of time, conducted extensive studies of the technical aspects and of the environmental, social, and economic impacts of the proposed trans-Alaska oil pipeline, including consideration of a trans-Canada pipeline.

(c) The earliest possible construction of a trans-Alaska oil pipeline from the North Slope of Alaska to Port Valdez in that State will make the extensive proven and potential reserves of low-sulfur oil available for domestic use and will best serve the national interest.

(d) A supplemental pipeline to connect the North Slope with a trans-Canada pipeline may be needed later and it should be studied now, but it should not be regarded as an alternative for a trans-Alaska pipeline that does not traverse a foreign country.

Pub. L. 101-380, title VIII, Sec. 8103, Aug. 18, 1990, 104 Stat. 567, established a Presidential Task Force on the Trans-Alaska Pipeline System, to conduct an audit of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline System and make recommendations to the President, Congress, and the Governor of Alaska, authorized appropriations for the Task Force, and required it to transmit its final report to the President, Congress, and the Governor no later than 2 years after the date on which funding was made available.

NORTH SLOPE CRUDE OIL; REPORT ON EQUITABLE ALLOCATION

Pub. L. 94-586, Sec. 18, Oct. 22, 1976, 90 Stat. 2916, directed that the President, within 6 months of Oct. 22, 1976, determine special expediting procedures necessary to insure the equitable allocation of North Slope crude oil to the Northern Tier States of Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, Illinois, Indiana, and Idaho to carry out the provisions of section 410 of Pub. L. 93-153 [set out below], and to report his findings to Congress, such report to include a statement demonstrating the impact that the delivery system would have on reducing the dependency of New England and the Middle Atlantic States on foreign oil imports.

TRANS-CANADA PIPELINE; NEGOTIATIONS WITH CANADA; FEASIBILITY STUDY

Title III (Secs. 301-303) of Pub. L. 93-153 authorized the President to enter into negotiations with the Government of Canada to determine Canadian willingness to permit construction of pipelines or other transportation systems across its territory to bring gas and oil from Alaska's North Slope to the United States; the need for intergovernmental agreements to protect interests of any parties involved with construction, operation, and maintenance of such natural gas or oil transportation systems; terms and conditions for construction across Canadian territory; desirability of joint studies to insure environmental protection, reduce regulatory uncertainty, and insure meeting energy requirements; quantity of oil and gas for which Canada would guarantee transit; and acquisition of other energy sources so as to make unnecessary the shipment of oil from the Alaska pipeline by tanker into the Puget Sound area. The President was to report to Congress on actions taken and recommendations for further action. In addition, the Secretary of the Interior was to investigate, and to report to Congress within 2 years of Nov. 16, 1973, as to the feasibility of oil or gas pipelines from the North Slope of Alaska to connect with a pipeline through Canada that would deliver oil or gas to United States markets. Nothing in title III was to limit the authority of the Secretary or any other Federal official to grant a gas or oil pipeline right-of-way or permit, which that official was otherwise authorized by law to grant.

EXCLUSION OF PERSONS FROM TRANS-ALASKA PIPELINE ACTIVITIES ON BASIS OF RACE, CREED, COLOR, NATIONAL ORIGIN, OR SEX PROHIBITED

Section 403 of Pub. L. 93-153 provided that: "The Secretary of the Interior shall take such affirmative action as he deems necessary to assure that no person shall, on the grounds of race, creed, color, national origin, or sex, be excluded from receiving, or participating in any activity conducted under, any permit, right-of-way, public land order, or other Federal authorization granted or issued under title II [this chapter]. The Secretary of the Interior shall promulgate such rules as he deems necessary to carry out the purposes of this subsection and may enforce this subsection, and any rules promulgated under this subsection, through agency and department provisions and rules which shall be similar to those established and in effect under title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 [section 2000d et seq. of Title 42, The Public Health and Welfare]."

EQUITABLE ALLOCATION OF NORTH SLOPE CRUDE OIL

Section 410 of Pub. L. 93-153 provided that: "The Congress declares that the crude oil on the North Slope of Alaska is an important part of the Nation's oil resources, and that the benefits of such crude oil should be equitably shared, directly or indirectly, by all regions of the country. The President shall use any authority he may have to insure an equitable allocation of available North Slope and other crude oil resources and petroleum products among all regions and all of the several States."

TITLE 43 - PUBLIC LANDS
CHAPTER 34 - TRANS-ALASKA PIPELINE

-HEAD-
Sec. 1652. Authorizations for construction

-STATUTE-
(a) Congressional declaration of purpose

The purpose of this chapter is to insure that, because of the extensive governmental studies already made of this project and the national interest in early delivery of North Slope oil to domestic markets, the trans-Alaska oil pipeline be constructed promptly without further administrative or judicial delay or impediment. To accomplish this purpose it is the intent of the Congress to exercise its constitutional powers to the fullest extent in the authorizations and directions herein made and in limiting judicial review of the actions taken pursuant thereto.

(b) Issuance, administration, and enforcement of rights-of-way, permits, leases, and other authorizations

The Congress hereby authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior and other appropriate Federal officers and agencies to issue and take all necessary action to administer and enforce rights-of-way, permits, leases, and other authorizations that are necessary for or related to the construction, operation, and maintenance of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline system, including roads and airstrips, as that system is generally described in the Final Environmental Impact Statement issued by the Department of the Interior on March 20, 1972. The route of the pipeline may be modified by the Secretary to provide during construction greater environmental protection.

(c) Applicability of statutes governing rights-of-way for pipelines through Federal lands; other statutory terms and conditions; waiver of procedural requirements; supersedure of administrative authorizations for construction

Rights-of-way, permits, leases, and other authorizations issued pursuant to this chapter by the Secretary shall be subject to the provisions of section 185 of title 30, as amended by Pub. L. 93-153 (except the provisions of subsections (h)(1), (k), (q), (w)(2), and (x)); all authorizations issued by the Secretary and other Federal officers and agencies pursuant to this chapter shall include the terms and conditions required, and may include the terms and conditions permitted, by the provisions of law that would otherwise be applicable if this chapter had not been enacted, and they may waive any procedural requirements of law or regulation which they deem desirable to waive in order to accomplish the purposes of this chapter. The direction contained in subsection (b) of this section shall supersede the provisions of any law or regulation relating to an administrative determination as to whether the authorizations for construction of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline shall be issued.

(d) National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 bypassed; issuance of authorizations for construction and operation not to be subject to judicial review; time limits on charges of invalidity or unconstitutionality; jurisdiction; hearings; review

The actions taken pursuant to this chapter which relate to the construction and completion of the pipeline system, and to the applications filed in connection therewith necessary to the pipeline's operation at full capacity, as described in the Final

Environmental Impact Statement of the Department of the Interior, shall be taken without further action under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 [42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.]; and the actions of the Federal officers concerning the issuance of the necessary rights-of-way, permits, leases, and other authorizations for construction and initial operation at full capacity of said pipeline system shall not be subject to judicial review under any law except that claims alleging the invalidity of this section may be brought within sixty days following November 16, 1973, and claims alleging that an action will deny rights under the Constitution of the United States, or that the action is beyond the scope of authority conferred by this chapter, may be brought within sixty days following the date of such action. A claim shall be barred unless a complaint is filed within the time specified. Any such complaint shall be filed in a United States district court, and such court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to determine such proceeding in accordance with the procedures hereinafter provided, and no other court of the United States, of any State, territory, or possession of the United States, or of the District of Columbia, shall have jurisdiction of any such claim whether in a proceeding instituted prior to or on or after November 16, 1973. Such court shall not have jurisdiction to grant any injunctive relief against the issuance of any right-of-way, permit, lease, or other authorization pursuant to this section except in conjunction with a final judgment entered in a case involving a claim filed pursuant to this section. An interlocutory or final judgment, decree, or order of such district court may be reviewed only upon petition for a writ of certiorari to the Supreme Court of the United States.

(e) Amendment or modification of rights-of-way, permits, leases, or other authorizations

TITLE 43 - PUBLIC LANDS
CHAPTER 34 - TRANS-ALASKA PIPELINE

-HEAD-

Sec. 1653. Liability for damages

-STATUTE-

(a) Activities along or in vicinity of pipeline right-of-way; strict liability; limitation on liability; subrogation; emergency subsistence and other aid; exemption for State of Alaska

(1) Except when the holder of the pipeline right-of-way granted pursuant to this chapter can prove that damages in connection with or resulting from activities along or in the vicinity of the proposed trans-Alaskan pipeline right-of-way were caused solely by an act of war or negligence of the United States, other government entity, or the damaged party, such holder shall be strictly liable to all damaged parties, public or private, without regard to fault for such damages, and without regard to ownership of any affected lands, structures, fish, wildlife, or biotic or other natural resources relied upon by Alaska Natives, Native organizations, or others for subsistence or economic purposes. Claims for such injury or damages may be determined by arbitration or judicial proceedings.

(2) Liability under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be limited to $350,000,000 for any one incident, and the holders of the right-of-way or permit shall be liable for any claim allowed in proportion to their ownership interest in the right-of-way or permit. Liability of such holders for damages in excess of $350,000,000 shall be in accord with ordinary rules of negligence.

(3) In any case where liability without fault is imposed pursuant to this subsection and the damages involved were caused by the negligence of a third party, the rules of subrogation shall apply in accordance with the law of the jurisdiction where the damage occurred.

(4) Upon order of the Secretary, the holder of a right-of-way or permit shall provide emergency subsistence and other aid to an affected Alaska Native, Native organization, or other person pending expeditious filing of, and determination of, a claim under this subsection.

(5) Where the State of Alaska is the holder of a right-of-way or permit under this chapter, the State shall not be subject to the provisions of this subsection, but the holder of the permit or right-of-way for the trans-Alaska pipeline shall be subject to this subsection with respect to facilities constructed or activities conducted under rights-of-way or permits issued to the State to the extent that such holder engages in the construction, operation, maintenance, and termination of facilities, or in other activities under rights-of-way or permits issued to the State.

(b) Control and removal of pollutants at expense of right-of-way holder

If any area in the State of Alaska within or without the right-of-way or permit area granted under this chapter is polluted by any activities related to the Trans-Alaska Pipeline System, including operation of the terminal, conducted by or on behalf of the holder to whom such right-of-way or permit was granted, and such pollution damages or threatens to damage aquatic life, wildlife, or public or private property, the control and total removal of the pollutant shall be at the expense of such holder, including any administrative and other costs incurred by the Secretary or any other Federal or State officer or agency. Upon failure of such holder to adequately control and remove such pollutant, the Secretary, in cooperation with other Federal, State, or local agencies, or in cooperation with such holder, or both, shall have the right to accomplish the control and removal at the expense of such holder.

Sec. 1656. Civil penalties

-STATUTE-
(a) Penalty
Except as provided in subsection (c)(4) of this section, the Secretary of the Interior may assess and collect a civil penalty under this section with respect to any discharge of oil -
(1) in transit from fields or reservoirs supplying oil to the trans-Alaska pipeline; or

(2) during transportation through the trans-Alaska pipeline or handling at the terminal facilities, that causes damage to, or threatens to damage, natural resources or public or private property.

(b) Persons liable

In addition to the person causing or permitting the discharge, the owner or owners of the oil at the time the discharge occurs shall be jointly, severally, and strictly liable for the full amount of penalties assessed pursuant to this section, except that the United States and the several States, and political subdivisions thereof, shall not be liable under this section.

(c) Amount

(1) The amount of the civil penalty shall not exceed $1,000 per barrel of oil discharged.

(2) In determining the amount of civil penalty under this section, the Secretary shall consider the seriousness of the damages from the discharge, the cause of the discharge, any history of prior violations of applicable rules and laws, and the degree of success of any efforts by the violator to minimize or mitigate the effects of such discharge.

(3) The Secretary may reduce or waive the penalty imposed under this section if the discharge was solely caused by an act of war, act of God, or third party action beyond the control of the persons liable under this section.

(4) No civil penalty assessed by the Secretary pursuant to this section shall be in addition to a penalty assessed pursuant to section 1321(b) of title 33.

(d) Procedures

A civil penalty may be assessed and collected under this section only after notice and opportunity for a hearing on the record in accordance with section 554 of title 5. In any proceeding for the assessment of a civil penalty under this section, the Secretary may issue subpoenas for the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of relevant papers, books, and documents and may promulgate rules for discovery procedures. Any person who requested a hearing with respect to a civil penalty under this subsection and who is aggrieved by an order assessing the civil penalty may file a petition for judicial review of such order with the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia circuit or for any other circuit in which such person resides or transacts business. Such a petition may only be filed within the 30-day period beginning on the date the order making such assessment was issued.

(e) State law

(1) Nothing in this section shall be construed or interpreted as preempting any State or political subdivision thereof from imposing any additional liability or requirements with respect to the discharge, or threat of discharge, of oil or other pollution by oil.

(2) Nothing in this section shall affect or modify in any way the obligations or liabilities of any person under other Federal or State law, including common law, with respect to discharges of oil.

REPRESENTATIVE MIKE CHENAULT
SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE
SECTIONAL ANALYSIS

HOUSE BILL 215: "An Act relating to the judicial review of a right-of-way lease or the development or construction of an oil or gas pipeline on state land; and relating to the lease of a right-of-way by the Alaska Housing finance Corporation for a gas pipeline transportation corridor."

Section 1: Amends AS 38.34.050(c), Cooperation and access to information. Adds language that excludes covenants found in AS 38.35.120(a) (1), (2) and (5) from the covenants required to be included in the lease. These covenants refer to a common carrier pipeline which is not applicable to the AGDC (Alaska Gasline Development Corporation) proposal. The AGDC gas pipeline proposal is to be that of a contract carrier. Without the removal of the specific covenants, AGDC will be impacted in its ability to finance the project.

Also adds language that a right-of-way lease is valid and of legal effect notwithstanding AS 38.35.120(b). This allows AGDC to continue its work through the summer under the assumption that AGDC has the ability to operate under this take or pay approach.

Section 2: Amends AS 38.35.100(d), Decision on application. Conforming language to note the changes found in Section 1.

Section 3: Amends AS 38.35.120(a), Covenants required to be included in lease. Conforming language to note the changes found in Section 1.

Section 4: Amends AS 38.35.120(b), Covenants required to be included in lease. Conforming language to note the changes found in Section 1.

Section 5: Amends AS 38.35.200(a), Judicial review of decisions of commissioner on application. Adds language that is intended to limit the ability of those with objections to natural gas pipeline construction to stop necessary projects. Allows a competing applicant or a person with a direct financial interest affected by the lease of a right-of-way to raise an objection within 60 days of the application or 60 days after the effective date of this legislation. Allows an applicant standing to seek judicial review anytime in the process.

Representative_Mike_Chenault@legis.state.ak.us

Section 6: Adds a new subsection to AS 38.35.200, Judicial review of decisions of commissioner on application. This subsection (c) is modeled after the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act provision to foreclose lawsuits against any phase of development and/or construction. This subsection only allows those who have standing to bring about an action alleging that an action will deny rights under the state Constitution or challenging the invalidity of this section. The complaint must be filed in a state Superior Court and the court may not grant injunctive relief with the exception of a final judgment.

Section 7: Amends uncodified law by adding a new section for Revisor's Instructions. Changes the catch line of AS 38.35.200 from "Judicial review of decisions of commissioner on application" to "Judicial review."

April 8, 2011

TO: Representative Gatto

Chairman of Alaska House Judiciary Committee

Dear Chairman Gatto:

This note is in follow-up to my brief testimony on Wednesday (April 6, 2011) before the House Judiciary Committee concerning the original version of HB 215 (available thru BASIS).

Version I of HB 215 that was introduced at the Committee hearing (still not available on the Bill Status portion of BASIS) is different then the Bill package I was asked to review. In addition to the earlier provisions that modify the judicial review restrictions, the bill would exempt the AHFC gas pipeline from the rights-of-way covenants addressing common carriage, pipeline interconnection, and availability of delivery points.

I myself and ANGDA are not involved with, nor do we have any information on, the in-state bullet line project ("ASAP") of AHFC's subsidiary AGDC. Since the Committee Substitute Bill focuses entirely on and affects only the AHFC in-state gas pipeline, I don't believe I have any comments to offer to supplement Mr. Fauske's testimony.

As I indicated to you ANGDA obtained a "conditional" State Rights-Of-Way for a gas spur pipeline between Glennallen and Palmer. Our experience under the ROW Leasing Act was a positive one, and in particular, the public process involved improved several aspects of the pipeline design and alignment.

In 2006 ANGDA worked with the RCA to draft revisions of the Alaska Pipeline Act's (AS 42.06) open season provisions. The "unworkable" nature of this detailed portion of AS 42.06.240(f) was first highlighted in the remarks of former Alaska Attorney Generals Charlie Cole before the July 28, 2004, LB&A hearing on stranded gas. A summary of the issues and history is contained in the RCA letter to then Governor Murkowski dated February 28, 2006. Ultimately, the framework for conducting a gas pipeline open season is the decisive element in providing open access and consumer benefits. Initially ANGDA proposed that rather than repeal the problematic sections, that public corporations be exempted from the provisions, in reliance on the fact that public corporations of the State act in the public interest by their very nature. To my knowledge no change in statute has been made.

I do not wish to testify at the hearing this afternoon, but I can be available for questions if the Committee wishes.

MEMORANDUM April 7, 2011

SUBJECT: Judicial review of a right-of-way lease in HB 215 (Work Order No. 27-LS0741\M)

TO: Representative Beth Kerttula
Attn: Hannah McCarty

FROM: Donald M. Bullock Jr.
Legislative Counsel

You asked whether the limitations on the judicial review of a right-of-way lease under AS 38.35 by the amendment to AS 38.35.200 in HB 215 are constitutional under art. VIII, sec. 2, Constitution of the State of Alaska, with respect to the disposal of public land.

You also asked whether the bill compromises the Alaska Pollutant Discharge Elimination System (APDES) primacy under the Clean Water Act. You wrote that the Clean Water Act (CWA) requires states to have judicial review of water permits in order to qualify for primacy in handling CWA permits.

As a preliminary note, the statute that is amended in HB 215 was enacted in 1973 and apparently has never been the subject of litigation or addressed in an opinion by the attorney general.

In its current form, AS 38.35.200(a) limits standing to object to a right-of-way lease application decision by the commissioner of natural resources (commissioner) to an applicant, competing applicant, or a person that has a financial interest affected by the lease. The subsection also limits the period for raising the objection to 60 days after the commissioner files the notice stating that an application for a right-of-way lease has been received. In its current form, AS 38.35.200(b) limits the grounds for judicial review to the failure to follow the procedures in AS 38.35 or "abuse of discretion so capricious, arbitrary, or confiscatory as to constitute a denial of due process."

Applicability of art. VIII, sec. 10 of the Alaska constitution

The amendment to AS 38.35.200(a) in sec. 1 of HB 215 makes editorial changes, but not substantive changes to the designation of the persons that may raise an objection. The 60-day period following publication of the notice under AS 38.05.070 for raising an objection to a right-of-way application decision continues for a notice published after the effective date of the Act. However, the language "within the later of 60 days after the effective date of this Act or [OF] the publication of notice" could be interpreted to extend a 60-day period that began before the effective date of the Act until 60 days after the effective date, or to add a 60-day period to a period that expired before the effective date. I do not know from the language of the bill what the intent is. Perhaps the "the later of" language may have been intended to be "the earlier of." You may wish to clarify the intent of the timing provision with the sponsor.

Article VIII, sec. 10, Constitution of the State of Alaska, prohibits leases of state lands "without prior public notice and other safeguards of the public interest as may be prescribed by law." AS 38.35.020 authorizes the commissioner to grant a noncompetitive right-of-way lease. The requirements that must be met to be eligible for a right-of-way lease are within AS 38.35, as well as the process for applying. A person seeking a right-of-way lease begins the process by filing an application[1] that is followed by the publication of a notice stating that an application has been received.[2] It is the publication of this notice that starts the 60-day period for raising an objection.

Consistent with the requirements in art. VIII, sec. 10 of the constitution, the legislature required prior public notice before the approval of a lease application. However, although the notice is public, only a person that applied for the lease, a competing applicant, or a person with financial interest affected by the lease has standing to object. I do not know whether a court would find that adequate safeguards of the public interest are present in this process. However, considering the narrow scope of AS 38.35, the legislative declaration of policy in AS 38.35.010, the limited number of persons that qualify to apply and be granted a lease, and the policy to encourage the development of the state's resources in art. VIII, sec. 1, Constitution of the State of Alaska, I expect the court would defer to the legislature and the discretion of the commissioner so far as the amendment to AS 38.35.200 in HB 215 applies to the grant of a right-of-way.

The limitations applicable to the challenge of an approval, permit, license, certificate, or other authority

The issues raised by the limitation on the judicial review of an approval, lease, license, or other authority in AS 38.35.200(a)(2), as added by HB 215, are different from the land issues. AS 38.35 addresses rights-of-way on state land for construction of an oil or gas pipeline and the policy expressed in that chapter, as noted above, is to encourage the development of the state's resources. There is a certain logic when considering the impact of a right-of-way application to limit objections to those raised by the persons identified in AS 38.35.200(a), both in current law and as amended in HB 215. The persons identified have a direct interest in the grant of a lease, either because each is attempting to receive a lease or because the person has a financial interest directly affected by the lease. However, the impacts of the authorizations in AS 38.35.200(a)(2) that are added by HB 215 are broader. Whereas the policy decision to limit objections to the right-of-way may be limited because of the policy to develop resources, the environmental impacts are broader and may directly affect many more persons.

[1] AS 38.35.050.
[2] AS 38.35.070.

You expressed concern that limiting the review of approvals, leases, licenses, or other authorizations to those identified in AS 38.35.200(a) as it currently reads and as amended by HB 215 may compromise the state's primacy under the Clean Water Act to administer the APDES. Under 40 C.F.R. 123.27, a state must have remedies available for violations of state program requirements related to water programs. The requirements in 40 C.F.R. 123.27 relevant to AS 38.35.200 as amended in HB 215 are as follows:

> (a) Any State agency administering a program shall have available the following remedies for violations of State program requirements:
> (1) To restrain immediately and effectively any person by order or by suit in State court from engaging in any unauthorized activity which is endangering or causing damage to public health or the environment;
> Note: Paragraph (a)(1) requires that States have a mechanism (e.g., an administrative cease and desist order or the ability to seek a temporary restraining order) to stop any unauthorized activity endangering public health or the environment.
> (2) To sue in courts of competent jurisdiction to enjoin any threatened or continuing violation of any program requirement, including permit conditions, without the necessity of a prior revocation of the permit[.]
> . . .
> (d) Any State administering a program shall provide for public participation in the State enforcement process by providing either:
> (1) Authority which allows intervention as of right in any civil or administrative action to obtain remedies specified in paragraphs (a)(1), (2) or (3) of this section by any citizen having an interest which is or may be adversely affected; or
> (2) Assurance that the State agency or enforcement authority will:
> (i) Investigate and provide written responses to all citizen complaints submitted pursuant to the procedures specified in § 123.26(b)(4);
> (ii) Not oppose intervention by any citizen when permissive intervention may be authorized by statute, rule, or regulation; and

> (iii) Publish notice of and provide at least 30 days for public comment on any proposed settlement of a State enforcement action.

(Emphasis added.)

Based on the federal requirements for a state National Pollutant Discharge Elimination System (NPDES) program, such the APDES, it is likely that the amendment to AS 38.35.200 in HB 215 would be in conflict with the requirements for a state program because of the limitations on who may bring an action under AS 38.35.200 and the limited subject matter of that language. In other words, the standing and other limitations in the amendments to AS 28.35.200 in HB 215 could compromise APDES primacy to the extent they are inconsistent with the federal requirements for a state program.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

House Bill 216

"An Act relating to deadlines in bills directing the adoption of regulations and to the informative summary required for the proposed adoption, amendment, or repeal of a regulation."

HB 216 will accomplish two goals relating to changes to state regulations; increasing the speed with which regulations are written, and describing in plain, easy-to-understand language all regulations that are adopted, amended or repealed.

Legislators and the public have often been frustrated by the fact that months, or even years, sometimes pass between the time that a bill is passed by the legislature and the time the regulation is implemented. The result is, Alaska residents, businesses and legislators are confused about what the change means. As an example: as we were looking at the governor's House Bill 110, on oil taxes, we didn't have proof of what regulations were currently being enforced because the ACES regulations hadn't even been written - three years after we passed the legislation. The same confusion can impact individuals who are unclear about when, or if, new regulations concerning their business or recreational activities take effect. HB 216 states that any bill requiring creation or modification of any regulation must include a regulation completion deadline.

The other problem addressed by this bill is the confusion and lack of understanding of many proposed regulation changes or new additions. This confusion is caused by the legalese used to describe proposed regulations. This language, while accurately and legally describing proposed regulations, is difficult to understand by the average individual. HB 216 will require that all proposed regulation changes include descriptions, in plain English, of what the original regulation does and what the proposed change will do.

Passage of this legislation will encourage public participation in the regulation review process, as people find it easier to understand what the regulations mean to them. It will also help speed passed legislation to implementation when regulations are completed in a set, scheduled timeframe.

The State Affairs committee passed the bill with two amendments that clarified the informative summary language.

MEMORANDUM

Date: February 3, 2012

To: Representative Carl Gatto, Chair, Judiciary Committee

From: Representative Peggy Wilson

RE: HB 216 "Regulations: Informative Summary/Bills"
February 3, 2012 meeting

Changes for HB216 from Version E to Version T for

House Judiciary Committee Meeting on February 3, 2012

Sponsor, Representative Peggy Wilson ~ Staff, Sheila Finkenbinder, 465-6887

Version T incorporates new language that responds to the issues that were brought up in this committee last Monday and subsequently by the Department of Law. Here is a summary of the changes.

The first thing you'll notice is that the long title of the bill has been changed to reflect that it is now about "Fiscal Notes for bills directing or resulting in the adoption, amendment or repeal of regulations".

Next, you will notice that Section 1 now amends AS 24.08.035 - Fiscal notes on bills rather than adding a section to AS 24.08 - Enactments

- Rep. Gruenberg – You had several questions and comments, which we have addressed in this new CS.
    - I agree with you that this bill should state that the timeline should be noted in the fiscal note. As stated earlier, this has been fixed with the changes noted above. In addition to that:

- In Section 1, (f), on line 6, you will notice it now states "if a bill directs an agency in the executive branch of state government to adopt, amend, or repeal a regulation or will result in an agency adopting, amending, or repealing a regulation, the fiscal note must"

- You asked about the advisability of requiring agencies to set a new deadline if they don't meet the first one. Section 1 now takes care of that in: (f) (1) on line 12.

- Rep. Holmes – You also had several questions.

  - You asked if we wanted to keep the word "must" in Section 1 or if it could be changed to "may". I believe the answer is Yes, we want to use the word 'must'. If we don't say that agencies 'must' set deadlines and provide descriptive summaries of their regulations, some of them will do nothing, and we will see no improvements in this frustrating process. You will now find that 'must' on line 9.

  - Your suggestion to use the term "cross-referencing" in Section 2, on page 2, rather than "following Internet links", has ~~been implemented~~. You'll find that change on page 2, line16.

- After much consideration, I have decided to include some boards and commissions in the requirements of Section 1. On page 2, lines 4-6, you will see that "state boards and commissions" does not include the Alaska Housing Finance Corporation, the Alaska Industrial Development and Export Authority, the Alaska Public Offices Commission or the Alaska Oil and Gas Conservation Commission.

  - I am still open to adding the names of other boards and commissions that should also be expected to meet deadlines when adopting regulations or making changes.

- The Department of Law Attorney General's office has made some suggestions for changes that respond to committee members' concerns. I believe that all of them have been integrated into this CS.

  - Section 2, on page 2 now includes the words "brief description" several times, clarifying that this new subsection about 'posted notices' will not be confused as the formal 'notice' requirement.

  - Their other concern was the way in which the bill referred to the deadline for adopting regulations, amendments or repeals. The language now indicates that the agency is required to report if a deadline is not met, but this will not be stated in the fiscal note.

FISCAL NOTE

STATE OF ALASKA
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB 216

Analysis

HB 216 sets out to accomplish two objectives.

1. Requires bills to include language that establishes a date when regulations must be implemented;

2. Requires that all proposed regulation changes include descriptions in plain English that is easily understood by the public, of what the existing regulation does and what the proposed change will do.

Based on the language of the bill, the extent of the fiscal impact cannot be quantified for every agency, but we do believe the impact would be extensive, and that it would be statewide. With regards to objective 1, fiscal notes for bills introduced will need to consider the cost associated with the time required to implement regulations. Depending on the nature and the complexity of the bill, the fiscal impact could include the need for additional staff or a consultant to assist with implementing the regulations within the time allowed. Departments such as Health & Social Services, Environmental Conservation, Fish & Game, Commerce Community and Economic Development, and Natural Resources have historically had more complex legislation than other departments and as such, could be impacted to a higher degree. Quantifying this impact is not possible.

The second objective of this bill will raise the amount departments need to pay for public notices as they would be required to print a summary of the existing regulation as well as a summary of the proposed change. This will need to be written in clear, easily readable language that can be understood by those without a legal background. The additional amount of information that will need to be written will have a fiscal impact, and the cost of framing the regulation without legal language could also have an immediate fiscal impact and a long term fiscal impact if the language needs legal interpretation in the future.

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

* Section 1. AS 24.08.035 is amended by adding new subsections to read:

(f) In addition to the other requirements of this section, if a bill directs an agency in the executive branch of state government to adopt, amend, or repeal a regulation or will result in an agency's adopting, amending, or repealing a regulation, ~~the fiscal note for the bill must~~ set a specific time by which the regulation must be adopted, amended, or repealed. If the agency is not able to meet the deadline set in the fiscal note, the agency shall

In this subsection, "state board or commission" does not include the Alaska Housing Finance Corporation, the Alaska Industrial Development and Export Authority, the Alaska Public Offices Commission, or the Alaska Oil and Gas Conservation Commission.

 Sec. 2. AS 44.62.200 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

Dear Representative Wilson,

I am writing to express the Alaska Municipal League's support for HB216, particularly the amendments to Section 2, Chapter 3 of AS 44.62.045.

It makes perfect sense to require the agencies to provide an informative summary of proposed regulations which describe how the amendments will change existing regulation "in clear, easily readable language that a person without a legal background is able to understand."

AML was forced to hire legal counsel (at a cost of over $8,000) to analyze sections of the new regulations proposed by APOC dealing with comprehensive revisions to Public Official and Legislative Finance Disclosure and Campaign Disclosure. It is AML's job to keep local elected officials and their municipal employees current on legislation, regulations and statutes that affect their local governments. When the agencies are unwilling to help us understand these regulations, we must do what we can to obtain the information.

In late 2010, the Alaska Public Offices Commission (APOC) published proposed revisions for public review and comment. AML requested from APOC, some explanation of what changes were encompassed in the new proposed regulations, as the document was approximately 125 pages long. APOC refused to provide any detailed explanation of the changes; in fact, the staff told us they had been instructed not to answer any questions about the proposed regulations. Without clarification of the new regulations, it makes it much more difficult to comment. We then hired legal counsel to perform a side-by-side examination of the old regulations and the new regulations. Only after enlisting the support from the Governor's office and many legislators were we able to secure additional information from APOC.

Most municipalities have numerous boards and commissions made up of community volunteers who are subject to APOC financial disclosure regulations. These private citizens are not equipped by training, nor do they have the time to understand and translate new regulations without the help from APOC. A plain, clear, easily readable explanation of the changes would have helped local officials understand and comment on the new regulations. It appears to me that APOC, while drafting changes, could have done computerized "track" changes as the drafting process was taking place.

The opportunity for public comment on new regulations will not result in any substantive input if the adopting agency does not assist the public in understanding new regulatory changes. It also is quite ironic that the agency tasked with keeping government more transparent refuses to help the public understand proposed regulations.

It should not be difficult for an agency to comply with HB216, as they presumably understand what changes they are proposing and how they will affect the public. It is unreasonable to expect members of the public to read, translate, cross-reference and understand new regulation without some explanation from the authors.

Again, AML supports the adoption of HB216, as it will assist elected and volunteer municipal officials better understand how they are regulated by state agencies.

Thank you for the opportunity to comment.

Sincerely,

Kathie Wasserman

MEMORANDUM

Date: February 3, 2012

To: Representative Carl Gatto, Chair, Judiciary Committee

From: Representative Peggy Wilson

RE: HB 216 "Regulations: Informative Summary/Bills"
February 3, 2012 meeting

Changes for HB216 from Version E to Version T for

House Judiciary Committee Meeting on February 3, 2012

Sponsor, Representative Peggy Wilson ~ Staff, Sheila Finkenbinder, 465-6887

Version T incorporates new language that responds to the issues that were brought up in this committee last Monday and subsequently by the Department of Law. Here is a summary of the changes.

The first thing you'll notice is that the long title of the bill has been changed to reflect that it is now about "Fiscal Notes for bills directing or resulting in the adoption, amendment or repeal of regulations".

Next, you will notice that Section 1 now amends AS 24.08.035 - Fiscal notes on bills rather than adding a section to AS 24.08 - Enactments

- Rep. Gruenberg – You had several questions and comments, which we have addressed in this new CS.
    - I agree with you that this bill should state that the timeline should be noted in the fiscal note. As stated earlier, this has been fixed with the changes noted above. In addition to that:

- In Section 1, (f), on line 6, you will notice it now states "if a bill directs an agency in the executive branch of state government to adopt, amend, or repeal a regulation or will result in an agency adopting, amending, or repealing a regulation, the fiscal note must"

- You asked about the advisability of requiring agencies to set a new deadline if they don't meet the first one. Section 1 now takes care of that in: (f) (1) on line 12.

- Rep. Holmes – You also had several questions.

  - You asked if we wanted to keep the word "must" in Section 1 or if it could be changed to "may". I believe the answer is Yes, we want to use the word 'must'. If we don't say that agencies 'must' set deadlines and provide descriptive summaries of their regulations, some of them will do nothing, and we will see no improvements in this frustrating process. You will now find that 'must' on line 9.

  - Your suggestion to use the term "cross-referencing" in Section 2, on page 2, rather than "following Internet links", has been implemented. You'll find that change on page 2, line16.

- After much consideration, I have decided to include some boards and commissions in the requirements of Section 1. On page 2, lines 4-6, you will see that "state boards and commissions" does not include the Alaska Housing Finance Corporation, the Alaska Industrial Development and Export Authority, the Alaska Public Offices Commission or the Alaska Oil and Gas Conservation Commission.

  - I am still open to adding the names of other boards and commissions that should also be expected to meet deadlines when adopting regulations or making changes.

- The Department of Law Attorney General's office has made some suggestions for changes that respond to committee members' concerns. I believe that all of them have been integrated into this CS.

  - Section 2, on page 2 now includes the words "brief description" several times, clarifying that this new subsection about 'posted notices' will not be confused as the formal 'notice' requirement.

  - Their other concern was the way in which the bill referred to the deadline for adopting regulations, amendments or repeals. The language now indicates that the agency is required to report if a deadline is not met, but this will not be stated in the fiscal note.

Subject: RE: Commission decision not to provide info

Patty and Jerry:

I received a report yesterday's commission meeting wherein it decide not to respond to the request for more information about the proposed regulations.

It is difficult to fathom why the APOC doesn't feel some obligation to fully disclose what new material is being added in the proposed regulations.
The discussion about disadvantaging some folks misses the point. Simply providing a marked up or highlighted version showing the changes and giving it the same distribution as the original draft would solve the perceived problem.

The more information provide the public the better. APOC seems to be saying the "less information provided the public the better". This position is entirely inconsistent with the mission of the APOC to seek full disclosure on public policy matters.

The net result of the decision is that the citizen has to hire an attorney to find the changes or they have to possess the time and skills to conduct their own line by line review of the 126 pages of new regulations. The APOC attorney admitted in the Commission hearing that it would take 6 hours to do a comparison of the old and new regulations. How likely is it that a layperson such as a local elected or volunteer board member is going to find the time to do this independently? APOC has an obligation to HELP the public understand rather than frustrating that objective.

It certainly can't be too much to ask that the drafter of the new regulations bracket the deletions and underline the additions similar to what the legislature does with new legislation. Helping the public understand what the agency is doing rather than hiding it ought to be the goal.

Will you be responding to the question about whether or not you will enforce the new "ethics" code using the Commission regulatory authority?

This is not intended as a criticism of any staff or individual employed at the Commission. This is directed at the unfortunate process employed by the Commission in adopting new regulations.

Regards,
Ray Gillespie

SPONSOR STATEMENT
House Bill 216

"An Act relating to deadlines in bills directing the adoption of regulations and to the informative summary required for the proposed adoption, amendment, or repeal of a regulation."

HB 216 will accomplish two goals relating to changes to state regulations; increasing the speed with which regulations are written, and describing in plain, easy-to-understand language all regulations that are adopted, amended or repealed.

Legislators and the public have often been frustrated by the fact that months, or even years, sometimes pass between the time that a bill is passed by the legislature and the time the regulation is implemented. The result is, Alaska residents, businesses and legislators are confused about what the change means. As an example: as we were looking at the governor's House Bill 110, on oil taxes, we didn't have proof of what regulations were currently being enforced because the ACES regulations hadn't even been written - three years after we passed the legislation. The same confusion can impact individuals who are unclear about when, or if, new regulations concerning their business or recreational activities take effect. HB 216 states that any bill requiring creation or modification of any regulation must include a regulation completion deadline.

time frame

The other problem addressed by this bill is the confusion and lack of understanding of many proposed regulation changes or new additions. This confusion is caused by the legalese used to describe proposed regulations. This language, while accurately and legally describing proposed regulations, is difficult to understand by the average individual. HB 216 will require that all proposed regulation changes include descriptions, in plain English, of what the original regulation does and what the proposed change will do.

Passage of this legislation will encourage public participation in the regulation review process, as people find it easier to understand what the regulations mean to them. It will also help speed passed legislation to implementation when regulations are completed in a set, scheduled timeframe.

The State Affairs committee passed the bill with two amendments that clarified the informative summary language.

STATE OF ALASKA
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB221-ACS-TRC-02-24-12

Analysis

HB 221 includes a direct rule amendment that will impact the way the Court System determines whether a criminal defendant who requests it is eligible for a court-appointed counsel at public expense. Currently, appointments of public counsel may be made after an oral inquiry on the record with the defendant under oath. The judge asks questions about the defendant's financial resources, and determines from the responses whether public counsel is justified, or whether additional information is needed. If additional information is needed, the defendant is often asked to complete a financial statement., usually with the assistance of a court employee. The revision will require the court or its designee to require each defendant who requests public counsel to complete a signed sworn financial statement. A majority of current public counsel appointments are completed after the oral inquiry only; the bill's change to also require a signed sworn financial statement from each defendant will require changes in processing procedures at all criminal initial appearance hearings.

In FY 2011, the court opened 38,798 felony and misdemeanor cases statewide; the defendant in each of those cases is entitled to court-appointed counsel if he or she cannot afford a private attorney. Of that total number of criminal defendants, the court estimates, based on statistics about how many defendants actually receive appointed counsel in existing cases, that 80% request court-appointed counsel. Each of these defendants will need to fill out the sworn financial statement, for a total of 31,038 statements.

The court will incur costs in implementing this change because it will need to provide assistance to all defendants who request public counsel in filling out the financial statement. The court's actual experience with the many defendants who currently do fill out a financial statement (rather than receiving an appointment after an oral inquiry by a judge) is that each statement takes an average of 15 minutes of time for a member of the court staff, who assists the defendant with answering and explaining questions. This time varies depending on the defendant's level of literacy, proficiency with English, and other individual factors. To provide this assistance in a way that is minimally disruptive to the court's arraignment hearings, the court would need six additional staff positions (two full-time and four part-time), at a Range 10, to assist the defendants who request court-appointed counsel.

The number of additional staff needed varies by court location; in some courts, the numbers of defendants seeking counsel would not justify adding a new position, but would cause an existing employee to add a number of overtime hours. As shown on page three, the cost of the six new positions is $362,500. As also shown on page 3, the new staff members would require office equipment and supplies. The court would also need interview stations and physical space in the five busiest courts for the staff members to work with the defendant, at an estimated cost of $24,000.

Finally, it is anticipated that the financial statement would need to be translated into other languages at a cost of $5,400 (a four-page form with 847 words, plus an informational booklet, with 2,023 words , at .30 per word), and that the court would need to provide language interpreter services to non-English-speaking defendants at a cost $15,000 ($75/hour for on-site interpreting or use of the language line as appropriate).

HB 221's total fiscal impact on the court system in FY 2013 will be $466,900.

REPRESENTATIVE MIKE CHENAULT
SPEAKER OF THE ALASKA STATE HOUSE

SECTIONAL ANALYSIS
HOUSE BILL 221

"An act relating to the appointment of counsel for persons accused of crimes; and amending Rule 39.1, Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure"

Section 1: Amends AS 18.85.120(b), Determination of indigency; repayment. Allows for material factors relative to the defendants financial resources and the ability to pay to be considered for Court appointed counsel.

Section 2: Amends Court Rule 39.1(e), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, Determining Eligibility. Adds the word AND removes the word or. This change will allow the Court or its designee to ask about the defendant's financial status AND requiring the defendant to complete a signed sworn financial statement. Adds the phrase SUBJECT TO PENALTIES OF PERJURY.

The main purpose of House Bill 221 is to allow for the prosecution of a defendant who lies or misrepresents their financial status to gain Court appointed legal representation by committing perjury.

Representative_Mike_Chenault@legis.state.ak.us

Sec. 18.85.120. Determination of indigency; repayment.

(a) The determination of a person's indigency shall be made by the court in which an action against the person is pending. The determination shall be made by the court and shall set out the basis for the finding that the person is indigent.

(b) In determining whether a person is indigent and in determining the extent of the person's inability to pay, the court shall consider such factors as income, property owned, outstanding obligations, and the number and ages of dependents. Release on bail does not preclude a finding that a person is indigent. In each case, the person, subject to the penalties for perjury, shall certify under oath, and in writing or by other record, material factors relative to the person's ability to pay that the court prescribes.

(c) Upon the person's conviction, the court may enter a judgment that a person for whom counsel is appointed pay for services of representation and court costs. Enforcement of a judgment under this subsection may be stayed by the trial court or the appellate court during the pendency of an appeal of the person's conviction. Upon a showing of financial hardship, the court (1) shall allow a person subject to a judgment entered under this subsection to make payments under a payment schedule; (2) shall allow a person subject to a judgment entered under this subsection to petition the court at any time for remission, reduction, or deferral of the unpaid portion of the judgment; and (3) may remit or reduce the balance owing on the judgment or change the method of payment if the payment would impose manifest hardship on the person or the person's immediate family. Payments made under this subsection shall be paid into the state general fund.

(d) Except as provided in AS 18.85.100(e), as a condition of receiving services under this chapter, a person shall affirm indigency under oath to the court and execute a general waiver authorizing the release to the court of income information regarding any income source the person has had for a period of three years immediately preceding the person's first court appearance in connection with each cause. At the conclusion of all services by the public defender to the person, the court shall upon request release to the attorney general all information received under this subsection except information that might incriminate or tend to incriminate the person.

all other facts essential to a broad understanding of the whole matter. Gregory v. State, Op. No. 1269, 550 P2d 374 (Alaska 1976).

Magistrate must ascertain whether defendant understands benefits of counsel by recorded colloquy with defendant before right to counsel may be waived. Gregory v. State, Op. No. 1269, 550 P2d 374 (Alaska 1976).

When defendant is unable to make an intelligent choice as to waiver of right to counsel it is the duty of the court to assign counsel. Gregory v. State, Op. No. 1269, 550 P2d 374 (Alaska 1976).

When defendant pleads guilty without the assistance of counsel, the plea is invalid unless defendant waived his right to counsel. Gregory v. State, Op. No. 1269, 550 P2d 374 (Alaska 1976).

Failure of arraignment or trial record to demonstrate that defendant understood what he was giving up by declining the assistance of counsel was cause for reversal even though record showed that defendant had been advised of his right to counsel. O'Dell v. Municipality of Anchorage, Op. No. 1588, 576 P2d 104 (Alaska 1978).

Failure of court to ask questions of defendant to assure that he understood precisely what rights he was giving up by declining legal representation at sentencing hearing required vacation of sentence. Smith v. State, Op. No. 134, 651 P2d 1191 (Alaska App. 1982).

Trial judge committed reversible error in not allowing defendant, charged with drunk driving in 1984, to have a 1975 drunk driving conviction set aside on the ground that, although informed by the magistrate taking his guilty plea in 1975 of his right to an attorney, he was not informed of what an attorney could do for him. Petranovich v. State, Op. No. 547, 709 P2d 867 (Alaska App. 1985).

Failure of the trial court to assure by an on-the-record inquiry that the accused understood the benefits of counsel and the dangers of self-representation prior to waiving his right to counsel was reversible error notwithstanding the accused's previous contacts with the criminal justice system. James v. State, Op. No. 669, 730 P2d 811 (Alaska App. 1987).

Defendant's waiver of his right to counsel prior to pleading guilty to a DWI charge was valid where the magistrate advised him of the maximum and minimum penalties for the offense and after he responded affirmatively to the question: "Do you know what a lawyer is?." Tobuk v. State, Op. No. 683, 732 P2d 1099 (Alaska App. 1987).

III. Effective Assistance of Counsel.

A defense counsel must perform at least as well as a lawyer with ordinary training and skill in the criminal law and must conscientiously protect his client's interest, undeflected by conflicting considerations. Risher v. State, Op. No. 1053, 523 P2d 421 (Alaska 1974).

All that is required of counsel in rendering effective assistance of counsel is that his decisions, when viewed in the framework of trial pressures, be within the range of reasonable actions which might have been taken by an attorney skilled in the criminal law, regardless of the outcome of such decisions. Risher v. State, Op. No. 1053, 523 P2d 421 (Alaska 1974).

A defendant does not suffer an unconstitutional deprivation of effective assistance of counsel because of an error committed by his attorney which in no manner contributes to the conviction. Risher v. State, Op. No. 1053, 523 P2d 421 (Alaska 1974).

A defendant who has not demonstrated that he understands the benefits of counsel cannot be said to have waived counsel. Gregory v. State, Op. No. 1269, 550 P2d 374 (Alaska 1976).

Rule 39.1. Determining Eligibility for Court-Appointed Counsel.

(a) Scope of Application. This rule specifies the procedure courts shall follow to assess whether a defendant is eligible for court-appointed counsel in a criminal case.

(b) Eligibility for Appointment.[1]

(1) Standard. A defendant is eligible for court-appointed counsel if the court finds that the total financial resources available to the defendant are not sufficient to pay allowable household expenses and the likely cost of private representation through trial.

(2) Exception. The court may determine that a defendant is ineligible for court-appointed counsel under AS 18.85.170(4) if the defendant has disposed of assets in order to qualify for appointed counsel.

(c) Financial Resources Defined.

(1) Resources to be Considered. In assessing the defendant's ability to pay the likely cost of private representation through trial, the court shall consider all resources available to the defendant, including all sources of expected income, cash, the value of assets readily convertible to cash, and credit or borrowing ability.

(2) Parents' Resources. If the defendant is a minor or an adult who cannot live independently, the court shall consider the resources of both the defendant and the defendant's parents, unless the parents were victims of the alleged offense or the court finds other good cause to treat their resources as being unavailable to the defendant.

(3) Income. Income includes all categories of income listed in Section II, Parts A and B of the Commentary to Civil Rule 90.3, including permanent fund dividends.

(4) Cash. Cash includes cash on hand and accounts in financial institutions. All savings should be considered, except where the use of the savings would deprive the defendant or the defendant's family of food, clothing, shelter, or necessary medical care.

(5) Assets. The court shall consider the value of all assets that are readily convertible to cash, other than health aids, clothing, and ordinary household furnishings. With the following exceptions, in valuing an asset, the court shall consider either the amount the defendant would realize if the asset were sold or the amount the defendant could borrow using the asset as collateral, whichever is greater.

(A) The court shall consider the loan value of tools and equipment essential to employment or to subsistence activity. Tools and equipment are essential only if the defendant could not earn a living or provide basic necessities without them. If the defendant cannot borrow against these assets while continuing to have use of them, the court shall disregard their value in calculating the defendant's available resources.

(B) In valuing the defendant's principal residence, the court shall consider the entire loan value or the amount of the sale value that exceeds the homestead exemption allowed under the Alaska Exemptions Act.[2] If the defendant cannot borrow against the residence and would realize less than the homestead exemption amount if the residence were sold, the court shall disregard the value of the residence in calculating the defendant's available resources.

(C) In assessing the loan value of essential tools and equipment and the principal residence, the court shall consider only the amount the defendant can realistically afford to repay.

(6) Credit. Available credit includes amounts available on credit cards and amounts that can be borrowed against life insurance policies or from pension or savings plans. In assessing available credit, the court shall consider only the amount the defendant can realistically afford to repay.

(d) Likely Cost of Private Representation.

(1) For purposes of this rule, the following amounts represent the likely cost of private representation through trial:

	Estimated Total Cost of Representation
Misdemeanor	$ 2,000
C Felony	5,000
B Felony	7,500
A or Unclassified Felony	20,000

(2) The court may adjust these amounts under the following circumstances:

(A) If the court finds that the scheduled amount differs from the amount charged by local attorneys, the court may use the amount charged locally.

(B) If the court finds that no local attorneys are available to handle the case, the court may adjust the scheduled amount to include the additional fees and travel costs that an out-of-town attorney would charge.

(C) If the court finds that the case has special characteristics that are likely to increase the cost of private representation, such as the need for expert witnesses, special investigations, or expensive tests, the court may adjust the scheduled amount to include this additional expense.

(3) In assessing a defendant's ability to pay the likely cost of private representation, the court should assume that at least 50 percent of the likely fee must be paid immediately and that the total fee must be paid within four months.

(e) Determining Eligibility. The court or its designee shall determine whether a defendant is eligible for court-appointed counsel by placing the defendant under oath and asking about the defendant's financial status, or by requiring the defendant to complete a signed sworn financial statement. A defendant who requests appointed counsel must execute a general waiver authorizing the release of financial information to the court as required by AS 18.85.120.

(f) Presumptive Eligibility. The court may appoint counsel without further inquiry if:

(1) the defendant currently receives public assistance benefits through a state or federal program for indigent persons, such as Aid to Families with Dependent Children, the Alaska Temporary Assistance Program, Adult Public Assistance, General Relief, Food Stamps, Medicaid, or Supplemental Security Income (SSI);

(2) counsel was appointed for the defendant within the past twelve months based on an examination of the defendant's financial circumstances, and the defendant's financial condition has not significantly improved; or

(3) the gross annual income available to the defendant is less than the adjusted federal poverty guidelines amount for the defendant's household size, and other financial resources (cash, assets, and credit) available to the defendant are worth less than 50 percent of the amount shown in (d)(1) (the likely cost of private representation through trial).

(g) Other Eligibility. If the court does not find that the defendant is presumptively eligible under paragraph (f), the court shall conduct an inquiry sufficient to determine whether the defendant is eligible for court-appointed counsel under the standard stated in paragraph (b). The court may make this determination based on the information then available to the court or, when appropriate, may

(1) require the defendant to submit a completed financial resources affidavit with supporting documentation of income;

(2) require the defendant to submit information or documentation concerning particular assets or expenses;

(3) require the defendant to appear at a representation hearing or a pretrial services interview; or

(4) require the defendant to make reasonable efforts to retain private counsel and to report these efforts to the court orally or in writing.

(h) Allowable Household Expenses.

(1) Allowable Expenses. The following household expenses are allowable to the extent they are reasonable:

(A) housing;

(B) utilities;

(C) food;

(D) health care;

(E) child care;

(F) insurance;

(G) transportation (for one vehicle for each person whose income is considered);

(H) minimum loan and credit card payments; and

(I) mandatory child support and other court-imposed obligations; and

(J) other expenses that the court deems essential.

(2) Alternative to Calculating Actual Expenses. As an alternative to calculating actual household expenses, the court may assume that these expenses are approximately equal to the adjusted federal poverty guidelines amount for the defendant's household size.

(3) Expenses Paid by Other Persons. The expenses described in (h)(1) and (h)(2) are allowable only to the extent they are paid (or were supposed to be paid) by the defendant. If another person, such as a spouse, relative, or roommate, pays some or all of the household expenses, the court shall disregard the portion of the expenses paid by that person. If the defendant is married, the court should assume, absent a showing of good cause, that each spouse pays an amount proportionate to that spouse's relative income.

(i) Adjusted Federal Poverty Guidelines. The "adjusted federal poverty guidelines amount" is the federal poverty guidelines amount for Alaska increased by the geographic cost-of-living adjustment established in AS 39.27.020 for the court location nearest the defendant's residence.

(j) Responsibilities of Administrative Director. The administrative director shall

(1) publish annually an administrative bulletin specifying the adjusted federal poverty guidelines amount for each court location;[3] and

(2) periodically review the efficacy of the appointment procedure established by this rule.

(Adopted by SCO 1351 effective May 15, 1999.)

Editor's notes.

Notes

[1] AS 18.85.170(4) defines "indigent person" for purposes of public defender appointments as "a person who, at the time need is determined, does not have sufficient assets, credit, or other means to provide for payment of an attorney and all other necessary expenses of representation without depriving the party or the party's dependents of food, clothing, or shelter and who has not disposed of any assets since the commission of the offense with the intent or for the purpose of establishing eligibility for assistance under this chapter."

[2] For the current homestead exemption amount, See 8 AAC 95.030. This Department of Labor regulation, rather than AS 09.38.010, establishes the amount of the homestead exemption. See AS 09.38.115.

Rule 40. Time.

(a) Computation. Except as otherwise specifically provided in these rules, in computing any period of time, the day of the act or event from which the designated period of time begins to run is not to be included. The last day of the period is to be included, unless it is a Saturday, Sunday, or a legal holiday, in which event the period runs until the end of the next day which is not a Saturday, Sunday, or legal holiday. When a period of time prescribed or allowed is less than seven days, not counting any period for mailing added under subsection (d) of this rule, intermediate Saturdays, Sundays and legal holidays shall be excluded in the computation. A half holiday shall be considered as other days and not as a holiday.

(b) Enlargement. When an act is required or allowed to be done at or within a specified time, the court for cause shown may at any time in its discretion:

(1) With or without motion or notice, order the period enlarged if application therefor is made before the expiration of the period originally prescribed or as extended by a previous order; or

(2) Upon motion permit the act to be done after the expiration of the specified period if the failure to act was the result of excusable neglect; but the court may not enlarge the period for taking any action under Rules 33, 34 and 35 except as otherwise provided in those rules, or the period for taking an appeal.

(c) Unaffected by Expiration of Term. The period of time provided for the doing of any act or the taking of any proceeding is not affected or limited by the expiration of a term of court. The expiration of a term of court in no way affects the power of a court to do any act in a criminal proceeding.

(d) Additional Time After Service or Distribution by Mail. Whenever a party has the right or is required to act within a prescribed period after the service or distribution of a document, and the document is served or distributed by mail, three calendar days shall be added to the prescribed period. However, no additional time shall be added if a court order specifies a particular calendar date by which an act must occur.

According to Section 9 of the Act, AS 06.26.760(b)(2) has the effect of amending Criminal Rule 40 by postponing the deadlines set in the Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure for the filing of documents by a trust company in a criminal action when the Department of Community and Economic Development has taken possession of the trust company.

BILL NO. HB221

Analysis

This bill amends AS 18.85.120(b) by requiring that persons requesting the services of the Public Defender submit the factors relative to both their ability to pay and their financial resources in writing and under oath. Rule 39.1(e) of the Rules of Criminal Procedure is also amended to require the defendant to submit to inquiry regarding their eligibility for services by the court or the court's designee and to complete a signed sworn financial statement, subject to penalties of perjury.

It is not possible to reliably predict whether or not this bill will have a fiscal impact. It will, however, allow for the appointment process to be more easily audited. The Agency, therefore, submits a zero fiscal note.

Analysis

House Bill 221 requires an applicant for the services of court-appointed counsel to provide information about the financial resources of the person.

The bill also requires an applicant for court-appointed counsel to swear both orally and in writing that the information the person is giving the court is accurate, and provides that the person who gives the information does so under penalty of perjury.

The fiscal impact to the Department of Law is zero.

TO: Representative Mike Chenault

This memo accompanies the requested amendment. Please be aware of the following issues that have become apparent during drafting.

The proposed definition of "parent" refers to an "unwed father," which raises a question -- to whom is the father "unwed"? The draft now uses the phrase "putative father" whose paternity has not been established. "Putative" means reputed or supposed. Is this OK?

Also, please be aware that the definitions have been moved to the paragraph, sec. 44.21.410(a)(4)(A), that describes of the duty of the Office of Public Advocacy (OPA) to represent indigent parties in cases involving custody when the opposing party is represented by a public agency. The new location is appropriate because that paragraph is the one involved in the Alaska Network case. Because of the new location, the new definitions only apply to the OPA activities listed in the paragraph rather than the entire section. However, in either location, the new definition of "parent" would also apply to the duty of OPA to represent "indigent parents of a minor respondent in a commitment proceeding concerning the minor under AS 47.30.775." Is that what you intend?

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

FINDINGS AND INTENT. (a) The legislature finds that

(1) the ruling in In the Matter of Alaska Network on Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault, 264 P.3d 835 (Alaska 2011), substantially expanded the doctrine established in Flores v. Flores, 598 P.2d 893 (Alaska 1979), which held that public representation must be provided to an indigent party in a child custody case where the opposing party is represented by a public agency, and substantially expanded the duty of the office of public advocacy to represent indigent persons in civil cases;

(2) there is no authoritative precedent, state or federal, to support an extension of due process rights to an indigent parent who is proceeding without counsel in a child custody case only because the other parent is represented by counsel provided by a private, nonprofit organization;

Sponsor Statement HB 224
Banning the Sale of Products Containing Nicotine to a Minor

Faced with lagging sales given the unpopularity and banning of smoking in many public places, tobacco companies are investing in new and innovative ways to deliver their product. Some of the newest items on the market, called "dissolvable products" are mints, lozenges, strips and toothpicks containing nicotine. These products slowly dissolve in the mouth and deliver a nicotine hit between 0.6 and 3.0 mg per item while a cigarette contains 1 mg of nicotine (Brandweek, 2008). Some have legitimate uses for promoting smoking cessation and providing smokers relief when they are in situations where they cannot smoke. However, the opportunity for abuse is wide with the over the counter availably of dissolvable products containing nicotine.

HB 224 makes it illegal to sell or give a product containing nicotine to a minor. Under this bill an individual is fined $300 if convicted of selling or giving a product contacting nicotine to a individual under 19. HB 224 addresses the need for minors to access products that are regulated and marked for smoking cessation, such as nicotine gum, by allowing a minor to purchase products containing nicotine with the prescription of a health care provider or to be given the product by an adult parent or guardian.

There is a very real risk that increased nicotine use in youth and adolescents promotes addiction to nicotine at a young age and could encourage future tobacco use and addiction (Science Daily, 2003). A recent Harvard School of Public Health study found dissolvable nicotine products to be toxic if ingested by children (Harvard School of Public Health, 2010). A 14-year old boy in England was hospitalized after overdosing on nicotine gum (Vapure News, 2009).

Many of the products containing nicotine that are entering the market now look and taste like candy. A study conducted by student volunteers in Virginia surveyed 1400 teens and 42% identified Camel Orbs as a candy based on their packaging (Virginia Foundation for Healthy Youth, 2010). According to Brandweek, a professional publication on brand identity marketing, "camel dissolvable will not be positioned as a smoking cessation or reduced risk product, per the company" (Brandweek, 2008). Products containing nicotine are not subject to FDCA Chapter IX , the regulations that govern tobacco (Chicago Breaking News, 2011).

Without the regulation of products containing nicotine by the state there is an increased chance of children becoming addicted to nicotine, and tobacco later in life. Many of these products are new to the market and have not yet been introduced in Alaska. HB 224 takes a proactive approach to encouraging the responsible use of dissolvable nicotine products.

FISCAL NOTE

STATE OF ALASKA BILL NO. HB224
2011 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Analysis:

This bill will have no significant fiscal impact on Behavioral Health. HB224 will broaden AS 11.76.100, which currently prohibits selling or giving tobacco products to persons under 19, to encompass all nicotine products, with an exception for tobacco cessation products provided by the minor's parent or prescribed by a licensed physician.

If enacted, this bill would not impact our Synar Tobacco Enforcement requirements, but will have some limited impact on our general compliance and enforcement activities that occur outside of Synar. We do not believe it will impact us to the extent that additional funds or a change in our practices will occur.

BILL NO. HB224 \ A

Analysis

HB 224 amends the minor offense criminal statute AS 11.76.100 ("Selling or giving tobacco to a minor," defined in the statute as anyone under 19). The bill broadens the statute and its title to include the negligent sale to a minor of any product containing nicotine, not just tobacco, adding an exception for nicotine products approved by the FDA for, and marketed solely as, tobacco cessation uses (e.g., nicotine gum, patches, lozenges) if prescribed by a physician or given to the minor by a parent or guardian.

There is no anticipated fiscal impact to Department of Law.

"The Washington County Health Partners Inc. created the backpack of non-tobacco items and their tobacco product look-alikes to show schools and legislators what the very ingenious tobacco people are doing to market to our youth," said Clara Hinton, Somerset County tobacco educator. She is also on the executive coalition of the Washington County Health Partners Inc.

There is Camel Snus, a spitless tobacco product, that comes in flavors. The package looks like a cell phone or a container of mints. Skoal cut tobacco's package also looks like mints or beef jerky. Ariva and Stonewall dissolvable tobacco products look like breath mints. White Owl Blunts in flavors including grape and strawberry look like the marking pen. Revved Up, a caffeinated energy dip, looks like mints. NicLite, a nicotine water sold as a homeopathic product, looks like a small bottle of regular water.

"This is one you won't guess," Hinton said. "It looks like a single packaged alcohol wipe. It blew me away. It is Nicogel. A kid could sit in class and the teacher would think he's using a sanitizing gel and he is getting a fix in class."

The dissolvable tobacco products contain two milligrams of nicotine, which is slightly higher than a cigarette.

"Little kids can overdose on just 10 milligrams," she said. "This is serious stuff."

The "What's in Your Child's Backpack" educational tool kit was developed as a regional effort across 10 counties.

"Most of these products are under $3, easy to hide, and look, taste and smell like candy," Lee Rutledge-Falcione, director of Washington County Health Partners Inc., said in a written statement. "Aggressive marketing and development of these new products is promoting the use of smokeless products and putting our youth at risk. It is very important that tobacco use prevention education continues, even in this tight budget year."

Tobacco companies spend $534 million to market their products in Pennsylvania, according to the Washington County Health Partners. Each year 18,500 Pennsylvania young people become new daily smokers.

Adults are also using the products, which cost much less than cigarettes, Hinton said. She teaches a smoking cessation class at Somerset Hospital and many of the adults in the class had already seen all the tobacco products.

"Pennsylvania is sadly the only state that does not have a tax or user-fee on other tobacco products," she said. "Thirty percent of all teens who try nicotine products get addicted. It is a drug. It works on the brain. It has a permanent effect on the structure of the brain. We know kids are buying it — it's affordable and it's available and more products are coming out. Parents and teachers need to be aware because they may think something's harmless and it's not. Young people already know about it."

Anti-Smokers Give Nicotine Gum to 14 year old, Child Overdoses

Posted by vapor in Buzz, News, Other Topics on 07 21st, 2009 | no responses

A 14-year-old boy was hospitalised after overdosing on nicotine gum handed out at school, it emerged today. Share

Aiden Williams is thought to have chewed up to 45 sticks of the gum before collapsing in the playground at Menzies High School Science College in West Bromwich, West Midlands.

Anti-smoking advisers from Sandwell Council's Drug Education, Counselling and Confidential Advice (Decca) gave the gum to another boy after the school raised concerns about that pupil's smoking habit.

But the boy, a friend of Aiden, passed it on and Aiden was taken to Sandwell General Hospital with stomach pains on July 8 after bingeing on the gum.

He was kept in overnight for observation and discharged the following day.

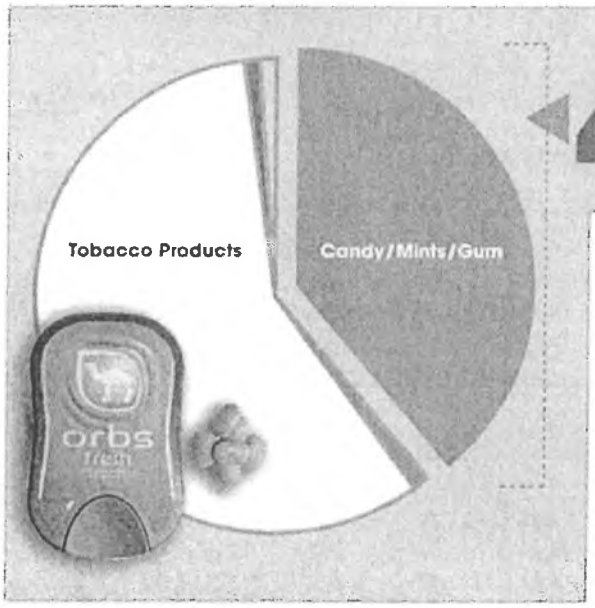
Virginia Survey on New Tobacco Products

Virginia youth collected 2,433 surveys from the general public from May 2009 to June 2010. These opinion surveys assessed whether the new smokeless and spitless tobacco products are mistakenly perceived as candy or mints because of their packaging and flavoring. The facts featured below are major findings from the survey. Please visit meltdownva.com for more survey findings.



42% OF TEENS THOUGHT CAMEL ORBS WERE CANDY, MINTS OR GUM BASED ON ITS PACKAGING.

81% OF RESPONDENTS BELIEVED THAT WINTERGREEN, A SMOKELESS TOBACCO PRODUCT FLAVOR, WAS ASSOCIATED WITH CANDY, GUM OR MINTS.

53% OF RESPONDENTS BELIEVED THAT FROST, A SMOKELESS TOBACCO PRODUCT FLAVOR, WAS ASSOCIATED WITH CANDY, GUM OR MINTS.

28% OF TEENS WHO DO NOT CURRENTLY USE TOBACCO SAID THEY WOULD TRY CAMEL ORBS FRESH BASED ON ITS PACKAGING.

Many teens mistook smokeless tobacco products for candy

One out of three teenagers younger than 18 mistakenly identified a new type of smokeless tobacco product as candy or gum in a survey conducted by a Virginia tobacco-prevention group.

Conducted last year by student volunteers with the Virginia Foundation for Healthy Youth, the survey asked about 1,400 people, including 728 younger than 18, to identify package images for several types of novel, smokeless tobacco products, along with package images of conventional mints and gums.

About 39 percent of survey participants younger than 18 identified Camel Orbs as mints or gum.

About 39 percent of the people younger than 18 identified Camel Orbs as mints or gum.

Camel Orbs are a pelletlike type of oral tobacco that dissolves in the mouth, delivering a dose of nicotine to the user.

Developed by R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., the nation's second-largest cigarette maker, Camel Orbs are part a wider trend in the tobacco industry to introduce new smokeless products to the market as cigarette sales have declined and as indoor smoking bans become more common.

The smokeless products have been criticized by health officials and tobacco-control advocates, who say they appear too much like candy and pose a poison risk to young children.

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration is planning to review dissolvable tobacco products, and U.S. Sen. Frank R. Lautenberg, D-N.J., last month urged the agency to pull the products from stores pending more study.

The results of the survey indicate that packaging of the products alone may appeal to youth, said Danny Saggese, director of marketing for the Virginia Foundation for Healthy Youth.

"It poses a significant risk to youth and raises the possibility of them not only using these products, but using them in places where smoking is now prohibited, and potentially becoming nicotine addicts," he said.

Of the teenagers younger than 18 surveyed, 28 percent said they would try Camel Orbs based on packaging alone.

Camel Orbs are not available in Virginia, said David Howard, a spokesman for Winston-Salem, N.C.-based Reynolds. The company is test-marketing the product in Columbus, Ohio; Indianapolis; and Portland, Ore.

Howard said Camel Orbs are sold behind the shelf along with other tobacco products.

"They are clearly tobacco products," he said. "Their sale is age-restricted. It is illegal to sell them to minors. The packages carry the same warnings as other smokeless tobacco products." Starting late next month, the FDA will require smokeless tobacco products to have warning labels that cover one-third of the front and back of the packages, Howard said.

Christine Hou, a senior at the Maggie L. Walker Governor's School, said she thinks the novel smokeless products are not widely known among teens, "but it is something [tobacco companies] are putting out there, which is scary."

FDA ruling clears tobacco lozenges for sale

By Associated Press
Posted March 23 at 1:31 p.m.

Tobacco maker Star Scientific Inc. said Wednesday that the Food and Drug Administration has informed it that two of its dissolvable tobacco lozenges aren't covered by the law regulating tobacco, clearing the way for them to be marketed.

The small Virginia company, which has sold tobacco products that dissolve in the user's mouth since 2001, said the FDA's Center for Tobacco Products say that its Ariva-BDL and Stonewall-BDL products aren't subject to regulation.

The news drove Star's stock up 33 cents, or 9 percent, to $3.95.

Star Scientific had asked the FDA to certify the lozenges as "modified risk" tobacco products under a 2009 law, making itself the test case for a big issue of whether the agency would allow certain products to be marketed as less harmful than cigarettes.

The company says the lozenges contain "below detectable levels" of certain cancer-causing chemicals found in tobacco and its smoke. The tablets contain tobacco's addictive component, nicotine. Star Scientific has said its method of tobacco cultivation and preparation creates tobacco leaves with low levels of some carcinogens.

How the FDA handles "modified-risk" products is being closely watched by the public health community and bigger tobacco companies, which are looking for new products to sell as they face declining cigarette demand.

But Star Scientific said the agency's notices from Dr. Lawrence Deyton, the center's director said, "At this time, only cigarettes, cigarette tobacco, smokeless tobacco and roll-your-own tobacco are subject" to the law and that based on the company's submissions, the products are not subject to regulation.

In a statement Wednesday, the FDA said it recognizes there are uncertainties whether nicotine-containing products derived from tobacco should be regulated as drugs or tobacco products. The agency added that it is considering its legal and regulatory options regarding these products.

Star Scientific had believed the products fell under the jurisdiction of the Center for Tobacco Products, and the company was somewhat surprised by the agency's determination, spokeswoman Sara Troy Machir said in an interview with The Associated Press.

However, the distinction may come in how the product is made.

"Yes they are absolutely tobacco products under the definition, but when we get into the manufacturing process that's where we are hamstrung because it's absolutely proprietary information," Machir said.

The FDA still must address the issue of dissolvable tobacco. By next March, its scientific advisory panel must complete a report and recommendations on the products being sold by Star and other tobacco companies. The agency also has expressed concerns that dissolvable products contain a lot of nicotine and could be particularly appealing to kids and young adults.

R.J. Reynolds, which is owned by Reynolds American Inc. in Winston-Salem, N.C., is test-marketing dissolvable, finely milled tobacco tablets, strips and a toothpick shape under the names Camel Orbs, Camel Strips and Camel Sticks. Richmond-based Altria Group Inc., owner of the nation's largest tobacco company, Philip Morris USA, is test marketing wooden sticks coated with finely milled tobacco under the top-selling Marlboro brand in Kansas.

Tobacco Company's New, Dissolvable Nicotine Products Could Lead to Accidental Poisoning in Infants and Youth

Content blocked by your organization

For immediate release: Monday, April 19, 2010

Boston, MA—A tobacco company's new, dissolvable nicotine pellet--which is being sold as a tobacco product, but which in some cases resembles popular candies--could lead to accidental nicotine poisoning in children, according to a new study from the Harvard School of Public Health (HSPH), the Northern Ohio Poison Control Center, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and the Food and Drug Administration (FDA). The researchers also say the candy-like products could appeal to young people and lead to nicotine addiction as well.

The study appears in an advance online edition of the journal Pediatrics on April 19, 2010 and will appear in a later print issue.

In 2009, the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company launched a dissolvable nicotine product called Camel Orbs, which according to the company's promotional literature contains 1 mg nicotine per pellet and is flavored with cinnamon or mint. The company also introduced Camel Strips (to contain 0.6 mg nicotine per strip) and Sticks (to contain 3.1 mg nicotine per strip).

It appears that the product is intended as a temporary form of nicotine for smokers in settings where smoking is banned. However, the potential public health effect could be disastrous, particularly for infants and adolescents, said Professor Gregory N. Connolly, lead author of the study and director of the Tobacco Control Research Program at HSPH.

Ingestion of tobacco products by infants and children is a major reason for calls to poison control centers nationwide. In 2007, 6,724 tobacco-related poisoning cases were reported among children five years of age and under. Small children can experience nausea and vomiting from as little as 1 mg of nicotine.

"This product is called a 'tobacco' product, but in the eyes of a 4-year-old, the pellets look more like candy than a regular cigarette. Nicotine is a highly addictive drug and to make it look like a piece of candy is recklessly playing with the health of children," said Connolly.

The researchers computed, based on median body weight, how much nicotine ingestion would lead to symptoms of poisoning in children: A one-year-old infant could suffer mild to moderate symptoms of nicotine poisoning by ingesting 8 to 14 Orbs, 14 Strips or 3 Sticks; ingesting 10 to 17 Orbs, 17 Strips or 3 to 4 Sticks could result in severe toxicity or death. A four-year-old child could have moderate symptoms by ingesting 13 to 21 Orbs, 14 Strips or 4 Sticks and could suffer severe toxicity or death by consuming 16 to 27 Orbs, 27 Strips or 5 Sticks. The researchers report that a poison control center in Portland, Oregon, a test market for Orbs, reported a case in which a three-year old ingested an Orbs pellet.

R.J. Reynolds claims that Orbs packaging is "child resistant," but the researchers say adults could unknowingly leave the pellets out in the open where children could easily access them. The researchers also say that the candy-like appearance and flavoring and ease-of-use of the product could appeal to children.

"Unintentional Childhood Poisonings Through Ingestion of Conventional and Novel Tobacco Products," Gregory N. Connolly, Patricia Richter, Alfred Aleguas Jr., Terry F. Pechacek, Stephen B. Stanfill, Hillel R. Alpert, Pediatrics, online April 19, 2010.

R.J. Reynolds Preps Dissolvable Tobacco

Oct 8, 2008

- Mike Beirne

R.J. Reynolds Tobacco will dive deeper into the smokeless category next year by nationally distributing Camel Snus and introducing in test markets dissolvable alternatives to cigarettes called Camel Sticks, Camel Orbs and Camel Strips.

The new products, grouped under the Camel Dissolvables banner, are smokeless and spit-free; they are made from finely milled tobacco and held together with food grade binders. The products will launch in the first quarter in Columbus, Ohio, Portland, Ore., and Indianapolis. The Camel Dissolvables Sticks can be placed in the mouth like a toothpick or broken into a piece that is placed between the upper lip and gum, where it dissolves after 10 minutes. RJR recommends the same usage for Orbs, which is a pellet that lasts about 15 minutes, and Strips, which dissolve after about 3 minutes.

The three forms of smokeless tobacco will be packed in plastic, child-resistant packaging. Strips will come in Fresh mint flavor and Sticks in Mellow; Orbs will be available in both flavors. Camel Dissolvables deliver between 0.6 to 3.1 milligrams of nicotine, while cigarette smokers typically inhale about 1 mg per cigarette.

Advertising is still being developed, but a company rep said print ads, direct marketing, sampling (at bars and nightclubs) and POP will support. The Reynolds American unit currently has a company policy that restricts advertising cigarettes in consumer publications. That self-imposed ban does not apply to other tobacco products and trade publications. Gyro, Philadelphia, and Agent 16, New York, are the lead agencies.

By introducing the products in select test markets, RJR hopes to find out which forms of Camel Dissolvables are the most popular, and how demographics or usage determines preferences. The product concept partly evolved from consumer feedback, following a test of Camel Snus in 2006. Camel Snus is also spitless, but some smokers said they didn't care for loose tobacco or pouched smokeless products, particularly ones they had to remove from their mouth after use.

The smokeless category has been a magnet for cigarette makers with sales averaging 5% to 7% annually, per various estimates. Although there is a growing body of literature contending that smokeless tobacco is less harmful than smoking cigarettes, a 2007 study by the American Cancer Society found that male smokers who switched to smokeless had higher death rates than men who quit or never smoked. Camel Dissolvables will not be positioned as a smoking cessation or reduced risk product, per the company.

"The consumer should be aware of the information available about the potential risks of each tobacco product. There are none that are safe and there are none that are without risks," said RJR rep David Howard.

In addition to introducing the new dissolvable alternatives, RJR will expand distribution for Camel Snus (pronounced snooze) by offering retailers countertop and under the counter refrigerator units to keep the product cold.

In 2006, Reynolds American acquired Conwood, the second largest maker of smokeless products in the U.S. Philip Morris USA's smokeless products include Marlboro Snus and Marlboro Snuff. Altria, Philip Morris' parent company, expects to close by January on its purchase of UST, the holding company for U.S. Smokeless Tobacco, the largest smokeless product company and maker of Skoal and Copenhagen.

Early Nicotine Use May Lead To Lasting Addiction, Study Finds

ScienceDaily (Sep. 10, 2003) — Durham, N.C. -- People who begin smoking in their teens may be particularly vulnerable to long-term nicotine addiction, according to an animal study conducted by Duke University Medical Center pharmacologists. The study emphasizes that the age at which individuals begin using nicotine can have a major physiological impact to encourage later use of the drug.

In their study, the researchers compared the amount of nicotine self-administered by adolescent rats to the amount used by animals first exposed during adulthood. Young rats showed nearly double the rate of nicotine use compared with those initially exposed as adults, the study found.

The adolescents' heavier nicotine use persisted into adulthood, the team reports in the September 2003 issue of the journal Psychopharmacology.

"The results indicate that early nicotine exposure can leave a lasting imprint on the brain," said Edward Levin, Ph.D., professor in the psychiatry and behavioral sciences department at Duke University Medical Center and a researcher at Duke's Nicotine Research Center. The study was supported by grants from the National Institute on Drug Abuse and the National Institute of Mental Health.

Most tobacco use begins during adolescence, Levin pointed out. Among smokers in the United States, 88 percent smoked their first cigarette before the age of 18 and 60 percent before age 14. Adolescence is also a crucial period for the brain, he said, in which the final phase of neuron development occurs.

"The great majority of tobacco addiction begins during adolescence, yet little is known about differential effects of nicotine in adolescents versus adults," Levin said.

Other studies have suggested that smokers who take up the habit at a young age are more likely to continue to smoke, Levin said. However, researchers find it difficult to assess the underlying cause of an association between age and addiction in humans, he added, because the same factors that make people prone to nicotine addiction may also encourage them to begin using the drug at a young age.

To clarify the basis of early nicotine addiction, Levin and colleagues tested for a link between the age of initial nicotine use and addiction in female rats in the laboratory. The researchers provided some rats with nicotine at 40 to 46 days of age, while others were provided nicotine only after 70 to 76 days, once they had reached adulthood. Rats could self-administer a dose of nicotine by pressing a lever.

The adolescent rats self-administered significantly more nicotine than did adults, the researchers found. In a test for chronic nicotine use in the rats during a period of four weeks, animals that began using nicotine during adolescence continued to use more of the drug even after they became adults.

The results suggest that people who begin using nicotine during adolescence may be at greater risk for long-lasting addiction, the team reports.

MEMORANDUM April 13, 2011

SUBJECT: Changing the Age in AS 11.76.109 from 19 to 18 Years of Age
CSHB 224(JUD) (Work Order No. 27-LS0466\D)

TO: Representative Carl Gatto
Chair of the House Judiciary Committee
Attn: Sarah Munson

FROM: Doug Gardner
Director

Enclosed is CSHB 224(JUD), bill draft 27-LS0466\D, which makes two changes to section 1 of the bill, replacing 19 with 18 on page 1, line 13, and making the same change on page 2, line 6 of the bill. I saw some of the testimony on television, and the brief part that I saw, was a representative of DHSS discussing the fact that they provide tobacco cessation products to persons 18 years of age or older on a call-in help line. The change that was made, presumably, was to assure DHSS that dispensation of tobacco cessation products legal in DHSS' program is legal.

The changes that were made leave a gap in proposed AS 11.76.109, for persons who are 18 - 19 years of age. Before the changes, tobacco cessation products that met the criteria in AS 11.76.109(b) could be provided to persons under 19 years of age. By lowering the age in AS 11.76.109(b), the criminal liability created in AS 11.76.109(a), for providing a product containing nicotine to anyone under 19 years of age, will make it an offense for anyone that provides a product containing nicotine to a person who is 18 years of age. The way the bill was drafted, proposed AS 11.76.109 made it legal to provide a product containing nicotine to a person under 19 years of age if it was non-combustible, approved by the FDA, and prescribed by a health care professional, or given by a parent or legal guardian. With the amendments, as I read them, tobacco cessation products can be provided to persons under 18 years of age, but not persons who are 18. The way to have achieved the result that DHSS was advocating would have been to add language to proposed AS 11.76.109(b) similar to:

> (3) is either
> (A) prescribed by a health care professional or given to a person under 19 years of age by the person's parent or legal guardian; or
> (B) provided to a person through a smoking cessation program sponsored by the Department of Health and Social Services.

Or if the committee intended the exception for smoking cessation programs to apply only to those 18 years of age or older the committee could have added the following to (b)(3) following the word "professional":

> ", given to a person at least 18 years of age through a smoking cessation program administered by the Department of Health and Social Services,"[1]

Changing the age to 18 in AS 11.76.109(b), creates criminal liability for anyone who provides a product containing nicotine, including smoking cessation products, to a person 18 years of age. Please call if you have questions. I made the changes the committee asked for, but wanted to warn you of what appears to be an unintended consequence. Sectional Analysis – HB 229 Version I

Sec. 1: Provides additional authority to the Big Game Commercial Services Board to create regulations to administer the regulation of big game guides. Under current statute, the board is limited to regulations that are "required" under statute.

Sec. 2: Creates a provision in statute for a retired master guide-outfitter license that recognizes those that have earned a master guide-outfitter license. No privileges are granted under the license to provide guiding services.

Sec. 3: Clarifies language to specify that a guide-outfitter may provide the services of a class-A assistant guide under the control of a contracting guide-outfitter anywhere the contracting guide-outfitter is licensed to contract hunts.

Sec. 4: Changes the requirements for a registered guide-outfitter to require them to be in the field supervising, participating in, and conducting a hunt as defined under regulation by the board, unless a class-A assistant guide is conducting the hunt.

Sec. 5: Provides the board with the power to suspend or revoke a license of someone engaged in conduct involving unprofessionalism, moral turpitude, or gross immorality.

Sec. 6: Changes penalties for certain violations to allow a court to order the board to suspend a license instead of requiring a court to order the board to suspend a license.

Sec. 7: Authorizes the department to set a fee for the new retired master guide-outfitter license.

Sec. 8: Conforming language to specify the holder of a retired master guide-outfitter license may not guide.

Dear Senator Menard and Representative Feige,

The Big Game Commercial Serves Board supports House Bill 229 and Senate Bill 190 for improving the guide industry in Alaska. The Board was reinstated 7 years ago and has worked on these concerns during the meetings. These changes are housekeeping measures the board feels are needed for a healthy industry. The Board was unanimous in the vote in support of submitting this Bill and its contents. We respectfully ask for the passage of this legislation.

Sincerely,

Dear Representative Feige,

I'm writing thank you for sponsoring HB 229 and affirm the support of the Alaska Professional Hunters Association for this important bill. As the sitting president of the APHA and a lifelong Alaskan and second generation Registered Guide I know firsthand how burdensome unclear and, or, contradictory statutes and regulations can be. HB 229 will alleviate some of this burden by clarifying the relationship between Registered Guides when they work for each other and, at the same time, protecting the value of the Class A Assistant Guide license. The APHA also appreciates the creation of a retired, non-active, license so that respected, retired guides can stay licensed and not cut into fixed, retirement incomes. This is essential to maintaining the social continuity, of an industry that respects its elders and provides a career path that includes substantial time as an apprentice.

The APHA has always pushed for greater professional competency and accountability. For this reason we vigorously support giving the Big Game and Commercial services board the ability to suspend or revoke guide or transporter licensed for unprofessional behavior, moral turpitude and gross immorality. Having operators, representing themselves as guides, who are amoral or chronically immoral or unprofessional hurts our membership in a business that relies on reputation and word of mouth business. Alaska deserves to have the best and most ethical guides harvesting its big game resource.

In closing I want to once again thank the honored members or the legislature that have taken the time to consider HB 229 and carry it through the process on the behalf of me and my organizations livelihoods! I also want to state that many APHA members have spent their personal time advising and working on drafting HB 229 as recognition of the collaborated effort between your office and our membership. For the sake of brevity I have only used a few examples of the positive aspects of HB 229 but we do support the bill in its entirety.

Thank You,

Gary LaRose

Gary LaRose, President Alaska Professional Hunters Association

Dear Representative Feige,

Thank you for your sponsorship and support of HB229 which will provide for a retired status master guide-outfitter license. I initially proposed this provision some 2-3 years ago and had about given up hope for the possibility of passage. While it has not yet passed, hope springs eternal?
I will support passage of the combined HB 229 / SB 190 in any manner possible. Please call on me if I can help.

Subject: SB 190 and HB 229

Senator Menard and Senator Huggins,

Thank you for Sponsoring SB190. I've lived in Wasilla since 1984, got my registered guide license in 1986, started our family run business – Alaska Remote Guide Service in 1987, and upgraded my registered guide-outfitter license to master guide-outfitter status a few years back. To my knowledge, there have been no changes to the Big Game Commercial Service Board Statutes since 1994 or before. I think your bill and Representative Feige's HB229 help address some key issues in bringing the statutes current with several changes that have taken place since then in the guide industry. Most of us in the industry want to do what is right, but it is very hard to understand what that is, even after reading the statutes and regulations several times. In fact I was in a working group at the BGCSB meeting in Fairbanks two years ago, when we were discussing supervision and participation issues. Several guides were present along with some top level enforcement personnel. I think it's fair to say that all of us were at least some what confused about what was expected by us in the statutes.

I've been in attendance at every commercial service board meeting for the past several years, and worked in and led several committees that dealt with several issues in this bill. The key concerns that most interested me personally were 08.54.610 (d) and (e). The current requirement in 08.54.610 (e) (1) that the bill asks to delete, works fine for large operations that are lucky enough to have a lodge or main camp in the same Guide Use Area where they hunt. Everybody gets flown to the lodge to start with and then head out hunting from there. By so doing, this requirement has been met. In operations where the main camp or lodge is in a different guide use area or in many smaller operations, meeting this requirement can be a lot more complicated, and requiring the guide to do so can actually impact the quality of the client's hunt and the service that the guide is able to provide.

While the above mentioned points in the bill are my main focus, I fully agree with and support every provision that your bill deals with. I have spent a lot of personal time and effort to help get these issues put forward. As this bill moves forward, feel free to contact me concerning any questions or concerns that may arise, and let me know how I can help. Thank you again for you help!

Analysis

HB 229 makes changes in statute recommended by members of the Big Game Commercial Services Board addressing changes to rules regarding the administration and licensing of guides. The proposed changes provide more flexibility in where guides can work when contracting another guide, allows a registered guide-outfitter more flexibility in the use of class-A guides, and changes penalties for minor procedural violations by guides.

The CS for HB 229 adds a new section to include a new type of license category: Retired Master Guide-Outfitter.

There is no anticipated fiscal impact to the Division as a result of this legislation.

Revisors Notes -

In 1999, "Department of Commerce and Economic Development" was changed to "Department of Community and Economic Development" in this section in accordance with Sec. 88, ch. 58, SLA 1999.

In 2004, "Department of Community and Economic Development" was changed to "Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development" in (a) of this section, in accordance with Sec. 3, ch. 47, SLA 2004.

Amendment Notes -

The 2005 amendment, effective December 5, 2005, substituted "guide-outfitter" for "guide" throughout subsections (a) and (b) and otherwise rewrote those subsections; and added subsection (c).

Sec. 08.54.605. Eligibility for licenses.

(a) Notwithstanding AS 08.54.610, 08.54.620, 08.54.630, 08.54.650, and 08.54.660, a person may not receive or renew a registered guide-outfitter license, master guide-outfitter license, class-A assistant guide license, assistant guide license, or transporter license if

(1) the person has been convicted of

(A) a violation of a state or federal hunting, guiding, or transportation services statute or regulation for which

(i) the person was imprisoned for more than five days within the previous five years;

(ii) an unsuspended fine of more than $2,000 was imposed in the previous 12 months;

(iii) an unsuspended fine of more than $3,000 was imposed in the previous 36 months; or

(iv) an unsuspended fine of more than $5,000 was imposed in the previous 60 months;

(B) a felony within the last five years; or

(C) a felony offense against the person under AS 11.41 within the last 10 years; or

(2) the person's right to obtain, or exercise the privileges granted by, a hunting, guiding, outfitting, or transportation services license is suspended or revoked in this state or another state or in Canada.

(b) Notwithstanding (a) of this section, (a)(1)(B) and (C) of this section are not applicable to offenses committed by a person who receives or received any class of guide license or a transporter license under sec. 13, ch. 33, SLA 1996, if the offense was committed before May 23, 1996. This subsection does not apply when a person applies for a license that is different from the class of guide license or the transporter license received under sec. 13, ch. 33, SLA 1996.

(c) A person may not receive a certification for a game management unit if the person is prohibited by (a) of this section from receiving or renewing a registered guide-outfitter license or master guide-outfitter license.

History -

(Sec. 3 ch 33 SLA 1996; am Sec. 2, 3 ch 61 SLA 1997; am Sec. 1 ch 33 SLA 1999; am Sec. 6, 7 ch 84 SLA 2005)

Amendment Notes -

The 2005 amendment, effective December 5, 2005, substituted "guide-outfitter" for "guide" in two places each in the introductory language of subsection (a) and in subsection (c) and rewrote subparagraph (a)(1)(A).

Decisions -

Constitutionality. - It is not a violation of equal protection to deny license renewals to those convicted of violating state, but not federal, hunting and guiding statutes, since those who are convicted of violating state laws have committed a different crime from those convicted of parallel federal offenses. Boyd v. State, Dep't of Commerce & Economic Dev., 977 P.2d 113 (Alaska 1999).

Construction with other statutes. - Where an assistant district attorney erroneously informed the defendant that a payment was not a fine under this section, referring to AS 12.55.035 rather than AS 12.55.100, his statement was not technically inconsistent with the licensing commission's rejection of the defendant's license renewal application. Boyd v. State, Dep't of Commerce & Economic Dev., 977 P.2d 113 (Alaska 1999).

Effect of violating fish and game statutes. - For case discussing connection between competence to continue as a guide and violation of fish and game regulations and statutes designed to conserve these state resources, see Herscher v. State, Dep't of Commerce, 568 P.2d 996 (Alaska 1977) (decided under former AS 08.54.350).

Notice and hearing required for license suspension. - In the suspension of a hunting guide license, adequate notice and opportunity for a hearing were required. Herscher v. State, Dep't of Commerce, 568 P.2d 996 (Alaska 1977) (decided under former AS 08.54.350).

Payment of fines. - Since AS 12.55.100 specifically authorizes fines as conditions of probation, and since the defendant's own counsel and the assistant district attorney acknowledged at a sentencing hearing their understanding that a payment constituted a fine, these facts, coupled with the fact that the supreme court has treated such payments as "fines," regardless of the particular language used by the sentencing court, led to the conclusion that the defendant's payment constituted a fine. Boyd v. State, Dep't of Commerce & Economic Dev., 977 P.2d 113 (Alaska 1999).

Since an assistant district attorney did not have the authority to change the laws of the state as written, his written assurances to the defendant that a payment was not a "fine" within the meaning of this statute did not alter the fact that the defendant's payment was a fine. Boyd v. State, Dep't of Commerce & Economic Dev., 977 P.2d 113 (Alaska 1999).

(4) applies for a master guide-outfitter license on a form provided by the department and pays the application fee, if any.

(c) A registered guide-outfitter may contract to guide or outfit hunts for big game and may provide transportation services, personally or through an assistant, to big game hunters who are clients of the registered guide-outfitter.

(d) A person who is licensed as a registered guide-outfitter may be employed by another registered guide-outfitter to perform the functions of a registered guide-outfitter or class-A assistant guide in the game management unit for which the person is certified under AS 08.54.600 or of an assistant guide in any game management unit.

(e) A registered guide-outfitter who contracts for a guided hunt shall be

(1) physically present in the field with the client at least once during the contracted hunt; and

(2) in the field and participating in the contracted hunt, unless the hunt is being conducted by a class-A assistant guide or a registered guide-outfitter employed by the contracting registered guide-outfitter.

Sec. 08.54.710. Discipline of guides and transporters.

(a) The board may impose a disciplinary sanction in a timely manner under (c) of this section if the board finds that a licensee

(1) is convicted of a violation of any state or federal statute or regulation relating to hunting or to provision of big game hunting services or transportation services;

(2) has failed to file records or reports required under this chapter;

(3) has negligently misrepresented or omitted a material fact on an application for any class of guide license or a transporter license; or

(4) has breached a contract to provide big game hunting services or transportation services to a client.

(b) [Repealed, Sec. 4 ch 49 SLA 2008].

(c) The board may impose the following disciplinary sanctions, singly or in combination:

(1) permanently revoke a license;

(2) suspend a license for a specified period;

(3) censure or reprimand a licensee;

(4) impose limitations or conditions on the professional practice of a licensee;

(5) impose requirements for remedial professional education to correct deficiencies in the education, training, and skill of the licensee;

(6) impose probation requiring a licensee to report regularly to the board on matters related to the grounds for probation;

(7) impose a civil fine not to exceed $5,000.

(d) The board shall permanently revoke a transporter license or any class of guide license if the board finds after a hearing that the license was obtained through fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation.

(e) The board shall suspend or permanently revoke a transporter license or any class of guide license without a hearing if the court orders the board to suspend or permanently revoke the license as a penalty for conviction of an unlawful act. If the board suspends or permanently revokes a license under this subsection, the board may not also impose an administrative disciplinary sanction of suspension or permanent revocation of the same license for the same offense for which the court ordered the suspension or permanent revocation under AS 08.54.720.

(f) A certified copy of a judgment of conviction of a licensee for an offense is conclusive evidence of the commission of that offense in a disciplinary proceeding instituted against the licensee under this section based on that conviction, regardless of whether the conviction resulted from a plea of nolo contendere or the conviction is under appeal, unless the conviction is overturned on appeal.

(g) A person whose license is suspended or revoked under this section may not engage in the provision of big game hunting services or transportation services during the period of license suspension or revocation.

(h) If the board revokes a license under this section, the person whose license has been revoked shall immediately surrender the license to the department.

(A) big game while accompanying a client in the field; or

(B) a species of big game if the registered guide-outfitter is under contract with a client to provide a guided hunt for that species of big game and the client is in the field;

History -

(Sec. 3 ch 33 SLA 1996; am Sec. 5 - 7 ch 61 SLA 1997; am Sec. 25, 26 ch 84 SLA 2005)

Amendment Notes -

The 2005 amendment, effective December 5, 2005, in subsection (a), substituted "guide-outfitter" for "guide" and inserted "or federal wildlife or" throughout, in paragraph (1) inserted ", unless a reasonable means of communication is not reasonably available," and deleted "Division of Fish and Wildlife Protection" following "Department of Public Safety", in paragraph (4) inserted "or transporter license", "state, or federal", and "or transportation services", in paragraph (6) inserted "a valid Alaska", in paragraph (11) inserted "provide outfitting services", and in paragraph (19) substituted "a registered guide-outfitter license" for "any class of guide license" and added "when the person has a contract to provide guiding services for the client" at the end of the paragraph; and substituted "board" for "department" in three places in subsection (f).

Decisions -

Constitutionality of former provisions punishing guiding without valid license as felony. - See Maeckle v. State, 792 P.2d 686 (Alaska Ct. App. 1990) (decided under former AS 08.54.520).

Application of former statute to person guiding with expired license. - See Romero v. State, 792 P.2d 679 (Alaska Ct. App. 1990) (decided under former AS 08.54.520).

Forfeiture of airplane. - Forfeiture of an airplane worth $40,000 was not grossly disproportionate to defendant's offense of possessing and transporting illegally taken game, because under this section when a licensed guide violates a hunting statute or regulation, or aids another person in doing so, the penalty for a first offense includes a fine of not more than $30,000, while the penalty for a second or subsequent offense includes a fine of up to $50,000. Baum v. State, 24 P.3d 577 (Alaska Ct. App. 2001).

Sentence not excessive. - It was not excessive where the judge placed defendant on probation for 10 years and, as a condition of his probation, ordered defendant not to apply for a hunting or guiding license, because a sentencing court has the power to impose a condition of probation that prohibits a defendant from pursuing a licensed activity for longer than the maximum period of license suspension or revocation that might be imposed as a direct term of the defendant's sentence. Baum v. State, 24 P.3d 577 (Alaska Ct. App. 2001).

Sec. 08.54.730. Injunction against unlawful action.

When, in the judgment of the board, a person has engaged in an act in violation of AS 08.54.620(b), 08.54.630(b), 08.54.650(b), 08.54.710(g), or 08.54.720(a) or the regulations adopted under these statutes, the board may apply to the appropriate court for an order enjoining the action. Upon a showing by the board that the person is engaging in the act, the court shall grant injunctive relief or other appropriate order without bond.

Amendment Notes -

The 2005 amendment, effective December 5, 2005, substituted "board" for "department" in three places.

Sec. 08.54.740. Responsibility of guide or transporter for violations.

(a) A registered guide-outfitter who contracts to guide or outfit a big game hunt is equally responsible under AS 08.54.710 for a violation of a state or federal wildlife or game or guiding statute or regulation committed by a person while in the course of the person's employment for the registered guide-outfitter.

(b) A transporter who provides transportation services is equally responsible under AS 08.54.710 for a violation of a state or federal wildlife or game, guiding, or transportation services statute or regulation committed by a person while in the course of the person's employment for the transporter.

History -

(Sec. 3 ch 33 SLA 1996; am Sec. 28 ch 84 SLA 2005)

Amendment Notes -

The 2005 amendment, effective December 5, 2005, substituted "guide-outfitter" for "guide" in two places in subsection (a); inserted "or federal wildlife or" in subsections (a) and (b); and deleted ", or transportation services" following "guiding" in subsection (a).

Sec. 08.54.750. Use area registration.

(a) At least 30 days before conducting big game hunting services within a guide use area, a registered guide-outfitter shall inform the department, in person or by registered mail on a registration form provided by the department, that the guide-outfitter will be conducting big game hunting services in the use area. A registered guide-outfitter may not withdraw or amend a guide use area registration during the calendar year in which the registration was submitted to the department.

(b) A registered guide-outfitter may not register for, or conduct big game hunting services in,

(1) more than three guide use areas during a calendar year; or

(2) a guide use area that is outside of a game management unit for which the registered guide-outfitter is certified under AS 08.54.600.

(c) Notwithstanding (a) and (b) of this section, a registered guide-outfitter may register to conduct big game hunting services within a guide use area at any time before beginning operations in the guide use area and may conduct big game hunting services in a guide use area, or for a big game species in a guide use area, that is not one of the three guide use areas for which the registered guide-outfitter has registered under (b) of this section if the Department of Fish and Game has determined by regulation that it is in the public interest to suspend the registration requirements for that guide use area or for all guide use areas in a game management unit or game management subunit for a big game species within those guide use areas.

(d) Notwithstanding (b) of this section, a registered guide-outfitter who is registered in three guide use areas may also register for and conduct big game hunting services in a portion of one additional guide use area on federal land adjacent to a guide use area in which the registered guide-outfitter is already registered if the board finds that the portion of the adjacent guide use area for which the registered guide-outfitter is seeking to be registered would otherwise remain unused by a registered guide-outfitter because the boundaries of guide use areas do not coincide with boundaries of federal big game guide concession or permit areas.

(e) Notwithstanding (b) of this section, a registered guide-outfitter who is registered in three guide use areas may also register for and conduct big game hunting services for wolf, black bear, brown bear, or grizzly bear in guide use areas within a game management unit or portion of a game management unit where the Board of Game has identified predation by wolf, black bear, brown bear, or grizzly bear as a cause of the depletion of a big game prey population or a reduction of the productivity of a big game prey population that is the basis for the establishment of an intensive management program in the game management unit or portion of the game management unit or for the declaration of the biological emergency in the game management unit or portion of the game management unit. A registered guide-outfitter may only conduct hunts in a guide use area under this subsection for the big game species identified by the Board of Game as the cause of the depletion or reduction of productivity of a big game prey population.

(f) At least 60 days before providing transportation services to, from, or in an area as may be determined by the board, a transporter shall inform the department, in person or by registered mail on a registration form provided by the department, that the transporter will be providing transportation services to, from, or in the use area. The board may establish transporter use areas and adopt regulations to implement this subsection as the board considers necessary.

(g) In this section, "guide use area" means a geographic area of the state identified as a guide-outfitter use area by the former Big Game Commercial Services Board established under former AS 08.54.300 and described on a set of maps titled Guide-Outfitter Use Area Maps, dated June 22, 1994, as amended by the board as the board considers necessary.

Sec. 08.54.760. Hunt records; confidentiality of hunt records and activity reports.

(a) The department shall collect and maintain hunt records provided by a registered guide-outfitter. A registered guide-outfitter shall submit to the department a hunt record for each contracted hunt within 60 days after the completion of the hunt. A hunt record must include a list of all big game hunters who used the guiding or outfitting services of the registered guide-outfitter, the number of each big game species taken, and other information required by the board. The department shall provide forms for reporting hunt records.

(b) The department shall make hunt records received under this section, and activity reports received under AS 08.54.650, available to state agencies, federal law enforcement agencies, and other law enforcement agencies if requested. Aggregated data compiled from hunt records and activity reports may be included in reports by the department. For all other purposes, the hunt records and activity reports are confidential and are not subject to inspection or copying under AS 40.25.110 - 40.25.125.

Revisors Notes -

In 2000, "AS 40.25.110 - 40.25.125" was substituted for "AS 09.25.110 - 09.25.125" to reflect the 2000 renumbering of AS 09.25.110 - 09.25.125.

Amendment Notes -

The 2005 amendment, effective December 5, 2005, in subsection (a) substituted "guide-outfitter" for "guide" in three places, "60 days" for "30 days", and "board" for "department"; in subsection (b) rewrote the first sentence; and added subsection (c).

(1) registered guide-outfitter license;

(2) class-A assistant guide license;

(3) assistant guide license;

(4) transporter license;

(5) license application fee.

(b) The license fee for the registered guide-outfitter, class-A assistant guide, or assistant guide license is in addition to the fee required for a hunting license issued by the Department of Fish and Game under AS 16.05.340.

(c) An applicant for a qualifying examination for a registered guide-outfitter license shall pay a fee established by regulations adopted under AS 08.01.065.

(d) The fee for the transporter license must be equal to the fee for the registered guide-outfitter license.

(e) The amount of the license fee for a nonresident shall be two times the amount of the license fee for a resident.

History -

(Sec. 3 ch 33 SLA 1996; am Sec. 33 ch 84 SLA 2005)

Amendment Notes -

The 2005 amendment, effective December 5, 2005, substituted "guide-outfitter" for "guide" in subsections (a)-(d); added "issued by the Department of Fish and Game under AS 16.05.340" at the end of subsection (b); and deleted "For licenses issued under this chapter for 1997 and subsequent years" from the beginning of subsection (e).

Decisions -

Higher rates for nonresidents. - Interstate fee differentials which were not predicated on movement of articles of interstate commerce across state lines, but rather upon the residency status of those applying for permits, were to be analyzed under the privileges and immunities or the equal protection clauses, not under the commerce clause. Carlson v. State, Com. Fisheries Entry Comm'n, 919 P.2d 1337 (Alaska 1996).

Case challenging validity of higher nonresident rates for nonresident commercial fishermen was remanded for application of the "per capita formula" in determining whether the higher fees charged to nonresidents are equivalent to the burden borne by residents as measured by the residents' pro rata shares of state revenues to which nonresidents make no contribution. Carlson v. State, Com. Fisheries Entry Comm'n, 919 P.2d 1337 (Alaska 1996).

Sec. 08.54.785. Chapter not applicable.

Sponsor Statement HB 234
"An Act relating to picketing or protests at a funeral."

The death of a loved one is one of life's most tragic events. More than 46 states across the country have enacted laws protecting families at funerals during their time of grief. These laws establish standards of conduct which respect the family's need for respect and privacy during this difficult time while also allowing others to express their viewpoints.

HB 234 brings Alaska in line with the majority of states and adopts the guidelines which govern conduct during a funeral. HB 234 is modeled after the guidelines used by our national cemeteries and requires that:

- Picketing not take place within 150 feet of the boundary of the cemetery, church, or other facility where the funeral services are occurring, and
- Picketing not take place one hour before or one hour after the service.

This bill asks anyone within the area of a funeral service to conduct themselves in a respectful manner for the duration of the service. HB 234 looks out for the interests of the grieving families while preserving the rights of others to voice their opinions.

I strongly urge your support of HB 234.

HOUSE BILL NO. 234

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SEVENTH LEGISLATURE - FIRST SESSION

BY REPRESENTATIVES THOMAS, Herron, Olson, Thompson, Miller, Feige, Chenault, Johnson, Peggy Wilson, Dick, Lynn, Saddler

Introduced: 4/9/11
Referred: House Special Committee on Military and Veterans' Affairs, Judiciary

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to picketing or protests at a funeral."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

* Section 1. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

FINDINGS AND LEGISLATIVE INTENT. (a) The legislature finds that families have a legitimate and legally cognizable interest in organizing and attending funerals for deceased relatives, and that the rights of families to mourn the deaths of relatives peacefully and privately are violated when funerals are targeted for picketing or other protest activities. The legislature also finds that family members attending a funeral service are a captive audience, and that it is very difficult for grieving family members to avoid picketing and protest activities within 150 feet of the boundary of a cemetery, mortuary, church, or other facility where a funeral is being held up to an hour before the beginning of a funeral and until an hour after the conclusion of a funeral.

(b) The legislature also recognizes that individuals have a constitutional right to free speech, and that, in the context of funeral ceremonies, the competing interests of picketers or protesters and grieving family members must be balanced. Therefore, the legislature finds and intends that the purpose of AS 11.61.110(a)(8), as enacted by sec. 2 of this Act, is to protect the privacy of grieving families and to preserve the peaceful character of a cemetery, mortuary, church, or other facility designated as the scheduled location for the funeral of a deceased family member, while still providing picketers and protesters the opportunity to communicate their message at a time and place that minimizes interference with the rights of grieving family members of the deceased.

* Sec. 2. AS 11.61.110(a) is amended to read:

(a) A person commits the crime of disorderly conduct if,

(1) with intent to disturb the peace and privacy of another not physically on the same premises or with reckless disregard that the conduct is having that effect after being informed that it is having that effect, the person makes unreasonably loud noise;

(2) in a public place or in a private place of another without consent, and with intent to disturb the peace and privacy of another or with reckless disregard that the conduct is having that effect after being informed that it is having that effect, the person makes unreasonably loud noise;

(3) in a public place, when a crime has occurred, the person refuses to comply with a lawful order of a peace officer to disperse;

(4) in a private place, the person refuses to comply with an order of a peace officer to leave premises in which the person has neither a right of possession nor the express invitation to remain of a person having a right of possession;

(5) in a public or private place, the person challenges another to fight or engages in fighting other than in self-defense;

(6) the person recklessly creates a hazardous condition for others by an act which has no legal justification or excuse; [OR]

(7) the offender intentionally exposes the offender's buttock or anus to another with reckless disregard for the offensive or insulting effect the act may have on that person; or

(8) the person knowingly engages in picketing with reckless disregard that the picketing occurs

(A) within 150 feet of the boundary of a cemetery, mortuary, church, or other facility; and

(B) while a funeral is occurring at the cemetery, mortuary, church, or other facility or during the 60-minute period

(i) before the start of the funeral; or

(ii) after the conclusion of the funeral.

* Sec. 3. AS 11.61.110(b) is amended to read:

(b) In [AS USED IN] this section,

(1) "funeral" means a ceremony or memorial service held in connection with the burial or cremation of a deceased person, but does not include a funeral procession on a public street or highway;

(2) "noise" is "unreasonably loud" if, considering the nature and purpose of the defendant's conduct and the circumstances known to the defendant, including the nature of the location and the time of day or night, the conduct involves a gross deviation from the standard of conduct that a reasonable person would follow in the same situation; "noise" [. "NOISE"] does not include speech that is constitutionally protected;

(3) "picketing" means protest activities, engaged in by a person, that disrupt or are undertaken to disturb a funeral.

MEMORANDUM March 10, 2011

SUBJECT: Amendment to AS 11.61.110 (disorderly conduct) adding picketing or protesting at a funeral as an offense (Work Order No. 27-LS0627\A)

TO: Representative Bob Herron
Attn: Rob Earl
Representative Bill Thomas
Attn: Kaci Schroeder

FROM: Doug Gardner
Director

You asked for a bill that would limit picketing and protests at a funeral, and requested a criminal law solution as a way to achieve this limitation. I chose to amend AS 11.61.110, to add picketing or protesting at a funeral to the offense of Disorderly Conduct. Enclosed is a draft that I believe accomplishes your request. Given the extensive constitutional issues presented by this bill, I have briefly outlined the issues that may come up if this bill is introduced. If you would like more detail, please advise, and I can provide it.

Overview

At present, in excess of 45 states have passed laws that in one way or another, are very similar to the attached draft bill. Much of the litigation involving various state funeral protest laws has been concentrated in the states that comprise the Sixth Circuit (KY., MI., OH., and TN.), and the Eighth Circuit (AR., IA., MN., MO., NE., S.D.) federal courts. An observation about this trend is that the Westboro Baptist Church, which is a party to or involved in virtually all of these cases is based in Topeka, Kansas, and engages in protest activities with more frequency in areas near the church's home town. Given the volume of litigation in the Sixth and Eighth Circuit courts, and eventually at the appellate level, I chose to draft this bill based on lessons learned in litigation in these circuits, and to base this bill on state statutes that have passed constitutional muster. However, it is important to observe, that the U. S. Supreme Court has yet to address a criminal law involving funeral picketing or protests. The recent high profile decision in Snyder v. Phelps, 2011 WL 709517 (U.S.), was a decision that involved civil litigation for money damages, and not a criminal law, so the decision, while instructive, does not resolve some of the issues that are unique to criminal law in the context of free speech.

Snyder v. Phelps

With that backdrop, I want to briefly address and summarize the recent decision in Snyder v. Phelps issued by the Supreme Court last week. Mr. Snyder sued Westboro Church leader Albert Phelps in a civil action based on the theory that picketing, and the content of that picketing by Westboro Church at his son's funeral (Snyder's son was a Lance Corporal in the United States Marine Corps, and died as a result of injuries sustained in Iraq in the line of duty), was done in a way that intentionally caused him emotional distress. Some of the slogans on the pickets that Mr. Snyder acknowledged in court proceedings that he could briefly see the tops of from his position in the motorcade to the funeral, included "Thank God for Dead Soldiers," "Fags Doom Nations," "America is Doomed," "Priests Rape Boys," and "You're Going to Hell."

The first question for the Snyder Court was whether the highest protection afforded speech by the First Amendment of the U. S. Constitution applied to Westboro's speech. The Court concluded, that while offensive to many, the issues raised by Westboro's picket signs were public speech entitled to the "highest rung" of protection in the hierarchy of First Amendment protections. As a consequence, the Court decided that the jury verdict for over $10 million returned at trial in the lower district court had to be set aside because the public speech of Westboro was protected by the First Amendment, and as a consequence was not actionable in a claim for money damages by Mr. Snyder.

In Snyder, Chief Justice Roberts, writing for the majority of the Court, observed that after the protest in 2006 by Westboro church at Mr. Snyder's son's funeral, the Maryland Legislature passed a law that prohibits picketing within 100 feet of a funeral service or procession, and noted that Westboro's picketing would have complied with that law. The Court clearly wanted to point out that its decision in Snyder did not address Maryland's picketing law, and that "to the extent [law's like Maryland's] are content neutral, they raise very different questions from the tort verdict at issue in [Snyder]." However, Chief Justice Roberts noted that the Supreme Court has, in past cases where a law was content neutral, allowed time, place, and manner restrictions and regulation of public speech. These situations were noted by the Chief Justice as picketing around a home and a buffer zone between protesters and an abortion clinic entrance. Snyder v. Phelps, 2011 WL 709517 p.17-18 (U.S.), citing Frisby v. Schultz, 487 U.S. 474, 479 (1988) (holding that a state has a significant interest in banning targeted picketing in front of private residences where individuals are captive audiences); Madsen v. Women's Health Center, Inc., 512 U.S. 753, 768 (1994) (court rejected a 300 foot buffer zone around an abortion clinic as overly broad restriction, but court approved a 36 foot buffer zone around clinic entrance).

Eighth Circuit Cases

The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals, in Olmer v. Lincoln, 192 F.3d 1176 (8th Cir. 1999), decided in the context of an ordinance that restricted picketing of churches and other religious premises 30 minutes before during and after a funeral service, that while the state has a significant interest in banning targeted speech in front of a person's home where individuals are captive audiences, that churches are distinguishable, and that the state's interest regarding a church is not as great. As a consequence, the Eighth Circuit cases where funeral protest ordinances or statutes have been litigated have been found unconstitutional, because the state interest in regulating public speech has not been significant enough to justify the state-imposed time, place, and manner restrictions. So, when addressing a content neutral restriction on speech, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals has not found funeral protest statutes constitutional, based on the state's failure to meet the first of the three-part test that the court applied in Olmer: (1) does the statute regulating speech serve a significant state interest; (2) is the statute narrowly tailored; and (3) does it leave open ample alternative channels of communication.

Despite the Olmer decision, a recent decision by a trial court in the Eighth Circuit regarding a Nebraska state criminal statute banning funeral protests within 300 feet of a cemetery, etc., and one hour before until one hour after a funeral, was upheld as constitutional. Phelps-Roper v. Heineman, 720 F.Supp.2d 1090 (D. Nebraska 2010). In Heineman, the trial court distinguished the Olmer decision, finding that the Nebraska statute, which included findings articulating the state's interest in protecting families of the deceased, demonstrated a significant state interest. The trial court also held, that despite the Olmer, decision, that it considered grieving family members a captive audience at a funeral, who may be under stress and may suffer emotional harm under circumstances at a funeral where they are unable to avoid pickets and protests. The Heineman case is on appeal to the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals. In summary, the Heineman court found that in the case of the content neutral Nebraska statute: (1) the state demonstrated a significant state interest in protecting family members; (2) the statute was narrowly tailored both in time restrictions (hour before until an hour after the funeral with a 300 foot buffer); and that (3) alternate means of speech to communicate Westboro's messages exist (buffer zone is limited to an hour before until an hour after funeral and protesting outside the buffer zone is not restricted in any way at any time).

Sixth Circuit Cases

For purposes of this brief summary, it is not necessary to go into too much detail regarding funeral protests case law in the Sixth Circuit. In Phelps-Roper v. Bob Taft, 523 F.Supp.2d 612 (N.D. Ohio 2007), the trial court judge considered an Ohio statute essentially the same as the Nebraska statute in Heineman, which created a "fixed" buffer zone of 300 feet[1] around a church or other place where a funeral was being held. The

[1] Most of the state funeral protest statutes I reviewed provided for a 300 foot buffer zone between protesters and funeral attendees. I would note, that while the Heineman court and the Taft court found 300 foot buffer zones narrowly tailored and allowing alternative channels for speech, other courts have found 300 foot buffer zones overly broad, burdening substantially more speech than necessary to further the government's interest. See Phelps-Roper v. County of St. Charles, 2011 WL 227561 (E.D. MO.). I drafted this bill consistent with a 200 foot buffer, which is more conservative than the buffer found in Ohio statute also imposed a "floating" buffer zone of 300 feet around a funeral procession. The court found the floating buffer unconstitutional, as has every court that I am aware of that has considered the "floating" buffer zone. I would note that on appeal, the Ohio attorney general's office made the decision not to cross-appeal or litigate the part of the trial court's decision involving the floating buffer zone, so I will not address that issue further. With regard to the "fixed" buffer zone, both the trial court and the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals found the Ohio funeral protest statute content neutral, and constitutional for essentially the same reasons that the Heineman trial court did in Nebraska. Phelps-Roper v. Strickland, 539 F.3d 356 (6th Cir. 2008).

Alaska Law and Summary of Drafting Issues

In drafting the enclosed bill amending AS 11.61.110, to add a funeral picketing and protest provision to the offenses comprising disorderly conduct in Alaska, I tried to track both the legislative finding language in Revised Statute of Nebraska § 28-1320.01 to 28-1320.03 (2008), and the language of the statute itself. By tracking the Nebraska language and legislative findings and intent, the draft bill focuses on: (1) a statute that has already been found to be content-neutral; (2) a judicial finding of a strong state interest in protecting family members of the deceased, as opposed to a broader group of funeral attendees; (3) statutory language that only restricts picketing focused on a funeral, similar to the language of the ordinance in Frisby, 487 U.S. at 482; and (4) a statute that has been held to allow alternative channels for communication.

In Alaska, if the proposed amendments to AS 11.61.110 are scrutinized by the courts as time, place, and manner, content neutral restrictions on speech, the state will have to demonstrate that these restrictions are narrowly tailored, supported by a significant state interest, and leave open ample alternative channels for expression. Prentzel v. State, 1988 WL 1511365 (Alaska App.), quoting Clark v. Community for Creative Non-Violence, 468 U.S. 288 (1984). As with any constitutional challenge, the outcome of litigation is always difficult to predict, based on the facts and circumstances of each case, and based on the different outcomes observed in the analysis by the Sixth and Eighth Circuit Courts of Appeal. Please review the enclosed draft, and let me know how you would like to proceed. As you requested, I am also sending a copy of this draft to Representative Thomas's office.

most state statutes, but you may wish to narrow this buffer zone, perhaps to 150 feet as was done by Congress in 18 U.S.C.S 1388 (prohibition on disruption of funerals at Arlington National Cemetery) or to 100 feet as adopted by the State of Maryland in MD. BILL NO. HB 234

HB 234 amends the crime of disorderly conduct by adding the prohibition of engaging in picketing within 150 feet of a cemetery, church, and so on and within 60 minutes of the beginning or end of the funeral.

Disorderly conduct is a class B misdemeanor with a maximum term of imprisonment of 10 days.

The estimated fiscal impact of the bill is zero. The estimate does not include costs related to any legal challenges to the legislation, if it is enacted into law.

High Court Rules For Anti-Gay Protesters At Funerals

by NINA TOTENBERG

Members of the Westboro Baptist Church of Topeka, Kan., staged a protest across the street from a high school in Hyattsville, Md., a day before the Supreme Court ruling.

March 2, 2011

text size A A A

The U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that protesters at military funerals cannot be sued for inflicting emotional distress on the family of a dead soldier. The vote was 8 to 1.

When Marine Lance Cpl. Matthew Snyder was killed in Iraq, his funeral in Westminster, Md., drew thousands to pay their respects. But it also drew a protest from the Rev. Fred Phelps and six other members of the Westboro Baptist Church, based in Topeka, Kan.

Phelps and other church members have traveled the country for years, picketing hundreds of military funerals to communicate their belief that "God hates the USA" for its tolerance of homosexuality, particularly in the military.

The picketers did not contend that Snyder was gay. Rather, their message, as Phelps puts it, was that "the whole country is given over to sodomy and to sodomite enablers."

The picketers followed their usual practice at the Snyder funeral. They alerted police in advance and followed instructions to set up their protest on public property, at a site 1,000 feet away from the church, near the vehicle entrance.

Speech is powerful. It can stir people to action, move them to tears of both joy and sorrow, and ... inflict great pain. On the facts before us, we cannot react to that pain by punishing the speaker.

Though the protest was peaceful and ended before the funeral began, the picketers carried signs with messages offensive to many, including "Thank God for Dead Soldiers," "Fags Doom Nations" and "America Is Doomed."

- Chief Justice John Roberts, in the majority opinion

Albert Snyder, the father of the dead Marine, did not see the signs until later when he viewed TV coverage. He says the picketers turned his son's funeral into a circus, taking away his "last moment" with his son.

"This was a funeral. This wasn't a parade going down the street. I shouldn't have to look away from anything at my own child's funeral," Snyder says. "That's absurd."

Snyder sued Phelps and his church for intentional infliction of emotional distress.

"These people targeted me and my family, and they have done this to over 200 other military men and women's families," Snyder says, his voice rising. "I want to know how you would feel if somebody stood 30 feet away from the main vehicle entrance of a church where you're trying to bury your mother, with a sign that says, 'Thank God for dead sluts.' You tell me that shouldn't be illegal. Is 'fag' any worse than 'slut'?"

A jury agreed with Snyder and awarded him $5 million in damages. But the Supreme Court set aside that verdict Wednesday.

Writing for the court majority, Chief Justice John Roberts said that as repugnant as many of the signs were, they were still plainly related to public, rather than private, matters. They focused on "the political and moral conduct of the United States and its citizens," he said, and speech of such public concern is protected by the First Amendment.

Although Westboro may have chosen to protest the funeral to gain publicity for its views, said the chief justice, and although those views may be particularly hurtful to the dead soldier's father, that does not mean the church members' right of free speech can be curtailed or punished. And a jury award amounts to punishment, Roberts contended, by imposing a penalty for expressing an unpopular viewpoint.

Our profound national commitment to free and open debate is not a license for the vicious verbal assault that occurred in this case.

- Justice Samuel Alito, who cast the lone dissenting vote

"Speech is powerful," Roberts said in conclusion. "It can stir people to action, move them to tears of both joy and sorrow, and — as it did here — inflict great pain. On the facts before us, we cannot react to that pain by punishing the speaker. As a nation we have chosen a different course — to protect even hurtful speech on public issues to ensure that we do not stifle public debate."

Reaction to the decision was markedly muted, given the outrage voiced by veterans groups and politicians at the time the case was argued in the Supreme Court.

The Democratic and Republican leaders of the Senate, along with 40 other members of Congress, filed a brief on Snyder's side. But on Wednesday, reaction on Capitol Hill was nowhere to be found, except in a couple of written statements.

Lawyer Gene Schaerr, who filed a brief in the case for the American Legion, said he was heartened by the fact that the court specifically mentioned that 43 states have enacted laws that put a buffer zone of 100 feet or more around funeral sites. Such laws would not have affected the protest in this case, since protesters were 1,000 feet away.

Nonetheless, says Schaerr, the decision "sends a clear signal to the lower courts that they should not interpret anything in this opinion as casting any doubt about those statutes." The court, however, specifically left open that question, noting that restrictions on the time, place and manner of protests are appropriate in some circumstances.

Wednesday's 8-to-1 ruling came as no surprise to First Amendment scholars, both right and left. They note that the decision is in line with many court decisions protecting the rights of fringe groups — from Nazis marching in Skokie, Ill., to flag burners at a Republican convention in Texas.

University of Chicago law professor Geoffrey Stone notes that Wednesday's ruling fits neatly into that tradition, calling it a "classic case." The only surprise, maintained Stone, was that anyone dissented.

Justice Samuel Alito was the lone dissenter. He viewed the protesters' speech as targeting a private person — the father of the dead soldier — and said that the First Amendment does not give license to such outrageous conduct.

"In order to have a society in which public issues can be openly and vigorously debated," wrote Alito, "it is not necessary to allow the brutalization of innocent victims."

FUNERAL PROTEST LAWS IN OTHER STATES

CHALLENGED AND UNCONSTITUTIONAL STATE FUNERAL PROTEST LAWS 3

LIST OF ATTACHMENTS 5

You asked for information on funeral protest laws. Specifically, you wished to know how many states currently have a law regulating funeral protests and what each state law stipulates. You also wanted to know for each state that currently has a funeral protest law if violating the restriction is considered a felony or misdemeanor offense. In addition, you asked if any of the state laws have been challenged and if any have been found unconstitutional.

SUMMARY

As you may know, for a number of years the Westboro Baptist Church of Topeka, Kansas has been protesting, among other events, military funerals. These protests have garnered the Church a great deal of national attention.[1] The Church's primary message at these protests is that God hates the United States for its tolerance of homosexuality. As punishment for its tolerance, God is killing soldiers "in righteous judgment against an evil nation."

As a result of these protests, state and local governments have adopted measures that create "buffer zones" that ban protests of funerals within a certain distance of the services and that establish time restrictions as to when protests can occur in relation to a funeral service. Additionally, the federal government has passed similar bans on protests at military funerals in federally controlled cemeteries.

STATE LAWS PERTAINING TO FUNERAL PROTESTS

According to the National Conference of State Legislatures (NCSL), 46 states currently have some form of a funeral protest law. In Table 1, we provide a summary of these state laws; we include a more detailed summary of each state's law in Attachment A.

Of the 31 states identified in Table 1 that impose a restriction on the time in which a protest may take place in relation to the funeral service, 22 specify that a protest may not occur any time one hour prior to, during, or one hour after the conclusion of the funeral or memorial service. The remaining nine states specify a time restriction range from 30 minutes to 120 minutes before and after the service.

As you can see from Table 1, 39 states create a "buffer zone" that restricts protests of funerals within a certain distance of the service. These buffer zones range from 150 feet to 1,500 feet. The most typical distance, used by 15 states, is 500 feet.

Seven states—California, Florida, Idaho, Louisiana, Maine, Rhode Island, and Virginia—chose not to create time or distance buffer zones but instead appear to have amended their disorderly conduct or disturbing the peace statues to include protests at funeral or memorial services.

Thirty-six states classify the first violation of these funeral protest laws as misdemeanors. Although several states classify the second offense as a felony, two states—Indiana and Michigan—classify the first offense as a felony.

Notes: (1) Michigan law authorizes local governments to create laws that restrict funeral protests from one hour immediately before, or during, or two hours immediately following a service.

In Attachment B, we provide a sample of funeral protest laws from ten states—Alabama, Colorado, Connecticut, Idaho, Minnesota, Montana, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Rhode Island, and Washington.

According to the NCSL, all four of the states that do not currently have a funeral protest law—Alaska, Hawaii, Nevada, and Oregon—considered such a measure during the last legislative session. Measures in Alaska and Hawaii are still active, while the measures in Nevada and Oregon have failed. Additionally, many states sought to amend their existing laws. We include, as Attachment C, a NCSL summary of all state legislation considered during the last legislative session that pertains to funeral protests.

Re: HB 234: Funeral Picketing and Protests
ACLU Review of Constitutional Issues

Dear Co-Chairs Saddler & Thompson:

Thank you for the opportunity to provide written testimony with respect to House Bill 234.

The American Civil Liberties Union of Alaska represents thousands of members and activists throughout Alaska who seek to preserve and expand the individual freedoms and civil liberties guaranteed by the United States and Alaska Constitutions. From that perspective, we wish to advise the Committee of our concern that the proposed bill, if enacted, would violate the rights of free speech and free assembly under the Alaska Constitution and the United States Constitution.

Bill Overview

The current draft of HB 234 proposes to amend the existing disorderly conduct statute, to criminalize the act of "knowingly engag[ing] in picketing with reckless disregard" that the picketing occurs within 150 feet of the boundaries of a "cemetery, mortuary, church, or other facility" and either during a funeral at that location or within an hour of the start or end of the funeral.

The bill goes on to define the term "funeral," excluding a funeral procession from that definition. The bill also defines "picketing" as "protest activities . . . that disrupt or are undertaken to disturb a funeral."

Freedom of Speech

Under the First Amendment to the United States Constitution, people have the freedom to speak without government interference. The freedom of speech is not absolute, but government regulation of speech imposes a heavy burden on the government to justify the nature of its regulation and to show that alternative means of vindicating the government interests were inadequate.

A. The Bill Would Regulate Speech on Sidewalks, a Traditional Public Forum

The present bill directly regulates speech on its face. "[P]rotest activities" are expressive activity, by the very basic meaning of the word "protest." "Picketing" has long been recognized as expressive activity. See, e.g., Carey v. Brown, 447 U.S. 455 (1980).

Based on the broad scope of the bill and the real world context of the activities regulated, the bill would criminalize certain expressive activity both on one's own private property – assuming the private property lay within 150 feet of a cemetery or church – as well as on a sidewalk or public park, which are recognized as "traditional public forums" for public speech. Hill v. Colorado, 530 U.S. 703, 716 (2000).

Given that the bill directly regulates speech on one's own property and in traditional public forums, the bill will be subject to the most careful scrutiny by a court, demanding that the restriction be "necessary to serve a compelling state interest and that it is narrowly drawn to achieve that end." Frisby v. Schultz, 487 U.S. 474, 481 (1988) (citation omitted).

B. The Bill is Not Content-Neutral, But Only Regulates Protest Activities

"The right to free speech . . . may not be curtailed simply because the speaker's message may be offensive to his audience." Hill, 530 U.S. at 716. For that reason, most restrictions on speech must be content-neutral, meaning that the regulation of speech may not refer to the content of the speech. Madsen v. Women's Health Center, Inc., 512 U.S. 753, 763 (1994). By contrast, content-neutral restrictions on speech in a public forum describe the time, place, and manner in which speech may be made, and must be narrowly tailored to serve a substantial government interest. Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 799 (1989). Examples of a content-neutral regulation would include an ordinance against using a loudspeaker over a particular volume or after a certain hour.

In the recent funeral picketing case, the United States Supreme Court did admit that some state laws establishing a buffer zone would be analyzed differently (which does not necessarily mean that they would be constitutional), but only to "the extent [such state] laws are content neutral." Snyder v. Phelps, 131 S. Ct. 1207, 1218 (2011).

HB 234 appears to refer to the content of speech, and is thus not content-neutral. The term "protest activities" suggests that only the speech of those presenting a negative viewpoint would be affected by the regulation. Under the bill, a person loudly stating that the US military is contributing to the decline of moral values would presumably be engaged in "protest activities," while a person loudly stating that we must honor our veterans would not be engaged in "protest activities."[1] Frisby, 487 U.S. at 482. Therefore, the conduct prohibited is not merely traditional picketing, but protesting, oppositional speech. Snyder, 131 S. Ct. at 1219 (noting that the claims of the offended plaintiffs "turned on the content and viewpoint of the message conveyed, rather than any interference with the funeral itself").
