Heightening the inference that the bill is intended to discriminate between those presenting supporting views and those presenting opposing views at a funeral, the bill also prohibits activities that "disrupt or are undertaken to disturb a funeral." But in the context of the bill's language, activities that "disrupt" or "disturb" would likely be viewed in light of their content, rather than a neutral standard. "Disrupting" or "disturbing" entails that the activities run contrary to the purpose or plan of the funeral. Loud noises, such as amplified speech or, as has become more common at funerals, the loud revving of motorcycle engines may be viewed as non-disruptive when the expressive conduct accords with the purpose of the funeral, but disruptive when it is not. Favoring certain expressive activity over another in regulating picketing violates the First Amendment. Carey, 447 U.S. at 470. Notably, in one of the only cases upholding such a law, the parties stipulated that the law was content-neutral, rather than contesting the law's neutrality. Phelps-Roper v. Strickland, 539 F.3d 356, 361 (6th Cir. 2008).

C. The Legislative History Suggests Lack of Content-Neutrality

Finally, the legislative history suggests that the bill was not intended to be content-neutral. The Sponsor Statement indicates that the bill "asks anyone within the area of a funeral service to conduct themselves in a respectful manner." Sponsor Statement, HB 234. While most – if not indeed nearly all – of us, can agree that permitting funerals to proceed in a peaceful, quiet environment is a laudable goal, nonetheless the state may not legislate "respectful" behavior on the streets and sidewalks of Alaska, nor in the front yards of its citizens. Olmer v. City of Lincoln, 192 F.3d 1176, 1180-81 (8th Cir. 1999) (holding that an ordinance prohibiting sign-holding outside churches was unconstitutional because it went "beyond the church building and

1. A protest is defined by the Merriam-Webster dictionary as an "act of objecting or a gesture of disapproval." By contrast, the general definition of "picketing" is merely "posting at a particular place."

church property, and seeks to forbid peaceful communication on property belonging to the public, even though the communication may be completely truthful, and even though there is absolutely no physical interference with access to the church"). If "protest activities" that "disrupt" or "disturb" are any activities that are "disrespectful," the law clearly discriminates based on the content of the speech and cannot stand.

D. No Compelling Governmental Interest in Restricting Speech at Funerals

Given that the bill is not content-neutral, the question is then whether "protecting families at funerals during their time of grief" is a compelling state interest justifying a restriction on free speech. The Constitution requires that "to shut off discourse solely to protect others from hearing it is . . . dependent upon a showing that substantial privacy interests are being invaded in an essentially intolerable manner." Snyder, 131 S. Ct. at 1220 (emphasis added). The only cases in which the U.S. Supreme Court has upheld such laws have been content-neutral laws relating to the privacy of one's home. Frisby, 487 U.S. at 487-88 (upholding content-neutral ordinance banning picketing of a single home which made the resident a "prisoner" in his own home); Rowan v. Post Office Dept., 397 U.S. 728, 738 (1970) (upholding statute permitting mail recipient to halt offensive mailings to his residence).

We emphasize that a funeral is a solemn occasion and that families in grief should be accorded the respect that such an occasion deserves. However, funerals are also traditionally public events, frequently held in places of worship or funeral homes that are open to the public. In Anchorage, for instance, numerous cathedrals and churches occupy the downtown area, as does a large cemetery. In Juneau, a Catholic cathedral and a Russian Orthodox church sit three blocks from the State Capitol. Expecting that one will neither see nor hear anything offensive in a heavily-trafficked public space is not reasonably comparable to an expectation that one can retire to one's private home without running a gantlet of protestors.

While the members of the Westboro Baptist Church espouse an abhorrent ideology and express it in the most repulsive terms, this bill would affect all funerals and all protestors. Protesting a funeral, especially that of a public figure, may express an important view opposing an ideology or history of bad acts committed by the person being buried. Funerals are frequently centered around a eulogy, an opportunity to say complimentary things about the deceased. A protest outside a funeral may be an opportunity to present an alternative viewpoint about the deceased and to communicate it to passers-by.

Alternatively, when the death of an individual occurs under circumstances giving rise to matters of public concern, the funeral may be the locus of public debate. Famously, the lynching death of Emmett Till resulted in a dramatic funeral in Chicago which thousands of people attended; a dramatic moment that galvanized the civil rights movement. A municipality could use the bill, for instance, to characterize angry or upset attendees at a funeral for a victim of a police shooting as "protestors" and arrest the attendees for disorderly conduct. A bill that restricts the freedom of speech on the basis of content is available for all kinds of mischief.

E. The Bill Is Not Narrowly Tailored and Does Not Leave Adequate Avenues for Expression

Because the bill extends to 150 feet in every direction from a church, mortuary, funeral home, or cemetery where a funeral may take place, and extends from an hour before to an hour after a funeral, HB 234 unconstitutionally restricts speech in that it is neither narrowly tailored nor does it leave adequate avenues for expression. The only recognized constitutional interest at stake is the right of a listener in a private place to avoid being a captive audience to a message the listener has no desire to hear. Phelps-Roper v. Strickland, 539 F.3d at 364.

Funeral attendees are not a captive audience to a quiet protest, provided the protest does not enter the church or block the entrance to the church. Olmer, 192 F.3d at 1180-81. Funeral attendees may have to walk or drive past protestors holding signs that offend them, and might wish to avert their eyes for the period they would otherwise be exposed to the offensive messages. Clearly, protestors can be excluded from the funeral home, mortuary, cemetery, or church where the service takes place. Thus, the statute is not narrowly tailored to the government interest in avoiding making funeral attendees a captive audience to the protest.

Further, a primary function of a mortuary or funeral home is to serve as a space for funeral services. Some funeral homes may hold more than one funeral in a day. Given the length of services and the one hour window before and after the service when a protest may not take place, HB 234 – as currently drafted – could prohibit even unrelated protests near a funeral home, for potentially many hours out of any given day.

Since some important public buildings – likely sites for protests – are close to funeral homes, this would impose a serious burden. For instance, there is a funeral home across the street from the Atwood Building in Anchorage. An Episcopal church lies across the street from the Dena'ina Convention Center. A labor demonstration against a particular employer lacks the same efficacy if performed offsite. Employees at a business located next door to church, mortuary, funeral home, or cemetery would be unable to mount an effective protest about labor conditions if their protests had to start and stop every time a funeral was taking place. As an example, the Sheraton Hotel in Anchorage lies across the street from the municipal cemetery in the middle of downtown. Employees at similarly situated businesses could be seriously chilled from engaging in meaningful protests and could conduct regular, continuing protests only at the risk that someone would define their protests as "disrupt[ing]" the funeral service.

Last, the bill leaves open little alternative for those who actually wish to protest the church, funeral home, or cemetery in question, by mandating that the protestors stay at least 150 feet away from the property within an hour before or after funerals. Someone may seek to picket a church, such as to bring attention to victims of sexual assault. Someone may seek to picket a funeral home or a cemetery, such as in a labor dispute or a dispute about the policies of the business. While such protests may incidentally impact funeral attendees, the alternative would thwart the free expression of employees or those with legitimate concerns about the church, funeral home, or cemetery. Taken as a whole, the law would leave few alternatives open to those who seek to protest outside public or private buildings that happen to be located near a church, funeral home, or cemetery, as well as those who seek to picket the church, funeral home, or cemetery itself.

The bill is not narrowly tailored to the legitimate state interests because the protestor must engage in picketing with "reckless disregard," rather than knowledge, that the picketing takes place within 150 feet of the site of a funeral and within one hour before or one hour after the funeral. "Recklessness" refers to a criminal law standard that a person consciously disregards a substantial risk of a certain condition being present. AS 11.81.900(a)(3). Presumably, there is a substantial "risk" that a funeral will take place at a church, funeral home, mortuary, or cemetery at any time. This standard unreasonably imposes on a protestor the duty of discovering whether or not a funeral is ongoing, recently took place, or will take place within an hour of a protest. Employees protesting labor conditions at the Sheraton will thus be required to find out if any funerals are taking place in the municipal cemetery on a day when they decide to protest. Protesters should not be burdened with such a duty to discover whether a funeral is taking place at any given time. Imposing the burden on protesters to discover when and whether a nearby church, cemetery, or funeral home is conducting a funeral leaves the law unreasonably ill-tailored to legitimate state interests and imposes an unconstitutional "protest at your own risk" policy.

Drafting Considerations

We suggest the Committee may wish to consider:

The protests staged by the Westboro Baptist Church express abhorrent views, for which the ACLU has no sympathy. Further, the manner in which they protest is deeply offensive. The great maxim of free speech is that for all evil speech, "the remedy to be applied is more speech, not enforced silence." Whitney v. California, 274 U.S. 357, 378 (1927).

Rather than seeking to prohibit fools from saying foolish and hurtful words, we as a community should come together to show our appreciation for our service members and others in our community whose funerals may be subject to these protests. If the protests of a handful of people inspire a thousand people to come out to show their support and respect at a funeral, does that tribute not outweigh the ill words of a few? The true voice of Alaska should come out when a misguided minority threatens their protests, so we may show why their words are folly.

Second, the members of the Westboro Baptist Church thrive on the controversy and attention generated by their activity. They also thrive on the attorneys' fees generated when legislatures and municipal assemblies act hastily to prevent them from protesting. As truly painful as it is to watch such a protest unfold, it will surely be more galling to pay from the state treasury to facilitate more protests and more litigation by a tiny group of hateful individuals whose message has already received too much attention.

Conclusion

We hope that the Military and Veterans' Affairs Special Committee will recognize that these are just some of the constitutional infirmities in House Bill 234.

Thank you again for letting us share our concerns. Please feel free to contact the undersigned if you have any questions or wish additional information.

Re: HB 234 "An Act relating to picketing or protests at a funeral."

I respectfully request that the House Judiciary Committee hear HB 234, at its earliest convenience.

HB 234 brings Alaska in line with the majority of states and adopts the guidelines which govern conduct during a funeral. HB 234 is modeled after the guidelines used by our national cemeteries.

If you have any questions about this bill please contact Aaron Schroeder, in my office, at 465-3732.

Thank you.

Sponsor Statement for HB 253

"An Act classifying certain synthetic cathinones as schedule IIA controlled substances; and providing for an effective date."

HB 253 would classify certain synthetic cathinones, commonly known as synthetic cocaine and marketed as 'bath salts,' as a schedule IIA controlled substance.

Marketed as bath salts or plant food with names like 'Meow-Meow,' Vanilla Sky,' 'Ivory Snow,' and 'Bliss,' synthetic cathinones are inexpensive, accessible, and undetectable in most drug tests. Many users of this drug use them in combination with or as a legal alternative to cocaine, ecstasy or methamphetamines.

Drug effects include impaired perception, reduced motor control, disorientation, extreme paranoia and violent episodes. Synthetic cathinones are abused mainly by snorting and oral ingestion. The U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration, the U.S. Military, and the Municipality of Anchorage have all taken action to control or prohibit use of this drug.

According to the National Council of State Legislatures, as of October 24, 2011 there are 33 states that have adopted laws or have departmental rules banning chemical compounds associated with 'bath salts.' Seven states have legislation pending.

Should HB 253 pass, it would be unlawful throughout the State of Alaska to sell, use, purchase, possess, manufacture, transport or deliver synthetic cathinones, the chemical compounds which are being marketed as 'bath salts' and synthetic cocaine.

FISCAL NOTE

STATE OF ALASKA BILL NO. HB253
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Analysis

This bill classifies certain compounds commonly called "bath salts" as Schedule IIA controlled substances. This classification creates new crimes that can be charged as multiple degrees of misconduct involving a controlled substance.

These crimes range from class C felonies to unclassified felonies, with broad sentencing ranges; fourth-degree misconduct involving a controlled substance is a class C felony and carries a potential sentence of up to 5 years imprisonment; third-degree misconduct involving a controlled substance is a class B felony and carries a sentence of up to 10 years imprisonment, first-degree misconduct involving a controlled substance is an unclassified felony and carries a sentencing range of up to 99 years of imprisonment .

The Agency has no reliable method for determining how many cases will be charged under the new classification or how many individuals charged will require public counsel. Additional felony cases will, however, have a fiscal impact on the Agency. The Agency, therefore, submits and indeterminate fiscal note.

FISCAL NOTE

STATE OF ALASKA BILL NO. HB 253
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Analysis

This legislation classifies certain substances as Schedule IIA controlled substances.

Currently, possession of a schedule IIA is a Class C felony with a possible sentence of 0-2 years. Manufacturing or delivering a schedule IIA controlled substance is a Class B felony with a possible sentence of 0-4 years. The current average daily cost to house an inmate is $134.90. Therefore, housing an offender could cost the department anywhere from $0.0 (no time served) to $196,954.00 (for a 4-year sentence).

DOC analyzed the impacts of similar laws passed in recent years (Example, HB 7 - Synthetic Marijuana), we have found zero convictions and therefore zero offenders being housed in DOC facilities.

The department is currently unable to quantify the fiscal impacts of this bill, as we cannot predict the number of offenses that will occur. Should this legislation pass, the department will closely monitor the potential future fiscal impacts.

FISCAL NOTE

STATE OF ALASKA
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB253

Analysis

This proposed legislation would add certain synthetic substances to the Schedule IIA list of statutorily controlled substances and provide for an effective date.

The Scientific Crime Detection Laboratory (crime lab) provides analysis of suspected controlled substances, issues reports, and provides expert testimony for the State of Alaska. The crime lab currently receives an average of ten submittals each month from law enforcement referencing "suspected bath salts." If these substances become controlled, the Chemistry Section of the lab can expect some change in requests for laboratory service, but is unable to determine how significant that change will be; whether it will remain roughly ten submittals per month or if it will increase.

These substances are unlike most that have been previously criminalized in that they are not "street drugs" but legally contrived and sold online via the internet and locally over-the-counter through tobacco shops. Because actual fiscal impact is unknown and difficult to determine, the crime lab is not requesting any additional funds or positions at this time but also does not wish to leave a matter the crime laboratory cannot fully assess without the reality of possible, though not probable, future fiscal impact.

STATE OF ALASKA BILL NO. HB 253
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Analysis

HB 253 adds new substances to Schedule IIA of Alaska's schedules of controlled substances. These substances are currently not controlled. They are sometimes referred to as synthetic cocaine or bath salts. It is difficult to predict the number of cases that would be filed after these substances are are included in Alaska's schedules of controlled substances but the number should not be great.

Designer drugs like 'plant food' and 'bath salts' exploding across Alaska

Alaska legislation would ban smoke-shop 'incense' OTC drugs K2, Spice

Alaska law banning K2, Spice scheduled to take effect in July

In towns both large and small throughout Alaska a new class of potent designer drugs has established a foothold, sending more and more users to hospital emergency rooms while police wonder how to fight back.

Mephedrone, methylone and MDPV -- drugs commonly known as "plant food," "bath salts" and "air freshener" -- are legal under state law.

While the street names sound benign, the drugs' effects are anything but. The powerful drugs are easy to get and relatively cheap. The three drugs are marketed interchangeably and sometimes referred to as "synthetic cocaine." They are all powerful central nervous system stimulants, designed to mimic the effects of illegal drugs like meth, cocaine and ecstasy -- with some hallucinogenic properties as well.

"We're seeing a psychoactive substance that seems to be more intense than any of the stimulants -- more intense and more robust in some cases than meth, and definitely cocaine and ecstasy," said Patrick Hayes, supervisor of the outpatient substance abuse program at SeaView Community Services in Seward.

The drugs are relatively inexpensive, in part because they have been easy to get. Bath salts and plant food can be found easily on the Internet, where they are marketed under names like "Vanilla Sky," "Ivory Wave," and "Red Dove." They can come in almost banal-looking packages (bath salts are often emblazoned with images of flower petals, angels, birds and women's feet) and marked with a disclaimer that they're not for human consumption.

The drugs have also gained a following as something that won't show up on urinalysis tests. Until recently the compounds were legal -- the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration temporarily banned the substances just last month, but the state of Alaska has yet to address the issue legally.

Hayes said that he first heard about plant food in Seward several years ago. During the last two years, he said, it seems to have caught on.

"It seemed like the people who were moving from cocaine to meth eventually starting moving on to it," Hayes said. "I think that meth is being replaced by plant food."

Effects mimic a schizophrenic breakdown

"I used, what you're calling plant food, for the first time about a year or so ago," said "Sam," a Seward resident in his early 30s who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

Sam sat down to talk at a local restaurant on a chilly evening this fall. He grew up with nice parents in a middle-class family, he said, but fell into substance abuse. It started in his teens with cigarettes and marijuana and progressed to hallucinogens, prescription drugs and cocaine.

Today, Sam is usually homeless. He said he turns to plant food as an alternative to spendier, harder-to-find drugs like heroin. "It's pretty cheap, and you get high for a while," Sam said.

Plant food, bath salts and air freshener can be ingested in a variety of ways. They come in powder or pill form and can be snorted, freebased, mixed with water and injected or atomized.

But while the drugs' effects mimic substances like cocaine or ecstasy, there isn't a lot of information about how mephedrone, methylone and MDPV affect the human body, even as users are landing in hospital emergency rooms.

"It's so new, we don't even know the half life (how long it takes the liver to detoxify half of the drug)," Hayes said. "We don't know long-term effects of chronic use. We're seeing people using it, showing up at the ER with symptoms of psychosis, rapid heart-beat, elevated heart pressure, along with delusional thinking and hallucinations, both auditory and visual."

The hallucinations described by users, Hayes said, are "more along the lines of someone who is experiencing a schizophrenic breakdown."

"I've talked to people who've used plant food -- they say it's the worst acid trip they've been on -- but as soon as they come down they want more."

'Absolutely' dangerous

"There may be users that say they've never had a bad trip. That may be," said Jennifer Messick, a traffic safety resource prosecutor with the Municipality of Anchorage who works with the Anchorage Police Department. Those aren't the users that law enforcement ends up dealing with, she said. "We find many users who say they thought it was safe -- a safe alternative to cocaine, meth or whatever, and land in the hospital."

Messick began researching designer drugs a couple years ago. As her expertise has grown, she's been inundated with requests to visit communities around the state and nation to talk with police officers about designer drugs and how to safely handle people who are on them.

Messick said users on mephedrone tend to be paranoid and delusional. They commonly report a sense of impending death or doom, seeing hallucinations of dead people.

Some drug users enter a state of "excited delirium" -- a condition often associated with cocaine or meth -- where they become extremely aggressive, temporarily insensitive to pain and display incredible strength and endurance. This poses "a huge safety risk for officers," Messick said.

It's becoming a bigger problem because use of plant food, bath salts and their kind is increasing "exponentially" across the state, Messick said. It's hit the Mat-Su Valley and Anchorage hard, but small towns have not been spared either. "I can assure you it's about everywhere in Alaska, even some of the villages," Messick said.

Messick said mephedrone, methylone and MDPV started out as party drugs in Russia and Western Europe. They have since been banned in many European nations, including the United Kingdom, but their popularity spread overseas to the U.S. on the heels of synthetic cannabinoids like "spice" and "K2."

Plant food and bath salt use appears to have exploded in the last couple years. Nationwide, there were a total of 298 calls to the American Association of Poison Control Centers about plant food in 2010. In just the first half of 2011 that number jumped to 4,137 - a 1,400 percent increase. That doesn't even include 911 calls, Messick noted.

"Unfortunately, the general public doesn't understand how absolutely dangerous these things are," Messick said.

Families on alert

"I can say I was shocked when I heard (plant food) was in Seward," said Karen Sturdy, director of the Seward Parks and Recreation Department.

Sturdy said she first heard the drug was being used in Seward last year. In a presentation before City Council, she said plant food was one of the dangers facing Seward's youth. "I think it's way more prevalent than anyone is willing to admit," said Sturdy.

The drugs are scary on their own, Sturdy said, but she's also worried that youth, upon hearing the street names, will try to snort or otherwise ingest real plant food or bath salts, thinking it will get them high. "There are kids in Seward who think they are 10 feet tall and bullet proof," Sturdy said. "So, it's frightening."

Lt. Louis Tiner said Seward police are coming into contact with more and more people who are on plant food and bath salts or admit to using them. "But more than anything we hear from concerned people about their friends and family members," Tiner said. "There are people using it and addicted to it and there are people here distributing it. It is something parents should be aware of and on the lookout for."

Illegal, and not illegal

Last month, mephedrone, methylone and MDPV became illegal under federal law. The DEA took emergency action Oct. 21 to control the substances, making the possession and sale of the chemicals, or products containing them, illegal in the United States. It's a temporary action that will be in effect for a year while the DEA and U.S. Department of Health and Human Services study whether the drugs should be permanently controlled.

Until then, police have few tools with which to battle the use of mephedrone, methylone and MDPV. That's because while the drugs are banned under federal law, the State of Alaska has yet to take action on them. If a police officer in Seward came across someone in possession or selling plant food they could only pass the case along to the DEA for review. While the DEA could prosecute, there's also a chance they wouldn't take action on small-scale, individual cases. "There's a great need for state and local legislation," said Messick.

Anchorage Mayor Dan Sullivan introduced an ordinance last month to criminalize plant food, bath salts and the others. And state Sen. Kevin Meyer announced his intent to introduce legislation in the upcoming session to ban mephedrone and MDPV at the state level.
"What makes these substances even more dangerous is how they are being marketed . . . With names like 'Meow-Meow,' Vanilla Sky,' 'Ivory Snow' and 'Bliss', (they're) obviously aimed at kids and young adults," Meyer said in a press release.

Messick acknowledged the laws may be insufficient. Designer drugs are carefully designed to get around the law. "I tell people to think not just about these drugs, but what drug will come out next year," Messick said. The most important thing to do, he said, is to make sure people know the risks. That can help -- although some people don't care.

"Some chemist will just change the formula a little then it'll be cheap and easy again," said Sam. "I want to get high and if they make it illegal, I still will."

Re: Hearing Request for HB 253- Cathinone Bath Salts

I respectfully request that House Bill 253- Cathinone Bath Salts be scheduled for a hearing in the House Judiciary Committee.

Marketed as bath salts or plant food, synthetic cathinones pose a great threat to the community largely due to the fact they are inexpensive, accessible, and undetectable in most drug tests. Many use this drug as a legal alternative to cocaine, ecstasy, or methamphetamines. Without laws to halt such actions Alaskans could see an escalation in drug abuse.

HB 253 if passed, would make it unlawful throughout Alaska to sell, use, purchase, possess, manufacture, transport or deliver synthetic cathinones, the chemical compounds which are being marketed as "bath salts" and synthetic cocaine.

I appreciate your consideration.

HOUSE BILL NO. 253

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SEVENTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

BY REPRESENTATIVE STOLTZE

Introduced: 1/6/12
Referred: Prefiled

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act classifying certain substances as schedule IIA controlled substances; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 11.71.150(e) is amended to read:

(e) Schedule IIA includes, unless specifically excepted or unless listed in another schedule, any material, compound, mixture, or preparation which contains any quantity of the following substances having a stimulant effect on the nervous system:

(1) amphetamine, its salts, optical isomers, and salts of its optical isomers;

(2) methamphetamine, its salts, isomers, and salts of its isomers;

(3) methylphenidate;

(4) phenmetrazine and its salts;

(5) fenethylline;

(6) N-ethylamphetamine;

(7) 3,4-methylenedioxy-N-ethylamphetamine, also known as N-ethyl-alpha-methyl-3,4(methylenedioxy)phenethylamine, N-ethyl MDA, MDE, and MDEA;

(8) N-hydroxy-3,4-methylenedioxyamphetamine, also known as N-hydroxy-alpha-methyl-3,4-(methylenedioxy)phenethylamine, and N-hydroxy MDA;

(9) 4-methylaminorex, also known as 2-amino-4-methyl-5-phenyl-2-oxazoline;

(10) N,N-dimethylamphetamine, also known as N,N,alpha-trimethylybenzencethaneamine or N,N,alpha-trimethylphenethyline, its salts, optical isomers, and salts of optical isomers;

(11) cathinone;

(12) methcathinone, its salts, optical isomers, and salts of optical isomers;

(13) 4-methylmethcathinone, also known as mephedrone, its salts, isomers, and salts of isomers;

(14) 3,4-methylenedioxypyrovalerone, also known as MDPV, its salts, isomers, and salts of isomers;

(15) substituted cathinones, including any compound, except bupropion or a compound listed in another schedule, structurally derived from 2-amino-1-phenyl-1-propanone by modification in any of the following ways:

(A) by substitution in the phenyl ring to any extent with alkyl, alkoxy, alkylenedioxy, haloalkyl, hydroxyl, or halide substituents, whether or not further substituted in the phenyl ring by one or more other univalent substituents;

(B) by substitution at the 3-position with an alkyl substituent;

(C) by substitution at the nitrogen atom with alkyl or dialkyl groups or by inclusion of the nitrogen atom in a cyclic structure.

'Bath Salts' Drug Trend: Expert Q&A

Why 'bath salts' are dangerous, though not illegal in all states.

ByMatt McMillen
WebMD Feature

Reviewed byLaura J. Martin, MD

Editor's note: On Sept. 7, 2011, the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) invoked its "emergency scheduling authority" to control three synthetic stimulants -- mephedrone, MDPV, and methylone -- commonly called "bath salts" or "plant food" and marketed under such names as "Ivory Wave," "Purple Wave," Vanilla Sky," and "Bliss." The DEA plans to make possessing and selling these chemicals, or products that contain them, illegal in the United States.The emergency action will remain in effect for at least a year, during which time the government is expected to call for permanent control of the drugs.

A new designer drug known as "bath salts" has become increasingly popular and increasingly scary. Poison centers across the U.S. have reported growing numbers of calls about the synthetic stimulant, and more and more states are banning the drug. But as of now, there is no federal law prohibiting their sale.

Make no mistake: These are not bath salts like those you would use in your bath.

WebMD talked to Zane Horowitz, MD, an emergency room physician and medical director of the Oregon Poison Center, about what they are and why you should avoid them.

First of all, what are bath salts?

"The presumption is that most bath salts are MDPV, or methylenedioxypyrovalerone, although newer pyrovalerone derivatives are being made by illegal street chemists. Nobody really knows, because there is no way to test for these substances," Horowitz says.

Why are they called bath salts?

"It's confusing. Is this what we put in our bathtubs, like Epsom salts? No. But by marketing them as bath salts and labeling them 'not for human consumption,' they have been able to avoid them being specifically enumerated as illegal," Horowitz says.

Are bath salts illegal?

"You can find them in mini-marts and smoke shops sold as Ivory Wave, Bolivian Bath, and other names," Horowitz says. "The people who make these things have skirted the laws that make these types of things illegal. While several states have banned the sale of bath salts, ultimately it will have to be a federal law that labels these as a schedule 1 drug, which means it has no medicinal value but a high potential for abuse, and declare them illegal."

What do you experience when you take bath salts?

"Agitation, paranoia, hallucinations, chest pain, suicidality. It's a very scary stimulant that is out there. We get high blood pressure and increased pulse, but there's something more, something different that's causing these other extreme effects. But right now, there's no test to pick up this drug. The only way we know if someone has taken them is if they tell you they have.

The clinical presentation is similar to mephedrone [a chemical found in other designer drugs], with agitation, psychosis, and stimulatory effects. Both of these agents should be of concern, as severe agitated behavior, like an amphetamine overdose, has occurred.

A second concern is the ongoing suicidality in these patients, even after the stimulatory effects of the drugs have worn off. At least for MDPV, there have been a few highly publicized suicides a few days after their use," Horowitz says.

Are bath salts addictive? How are they taken?

"We don't know if they are addictive. We have not had enough long-term experience with it. Acute toxicity is the main problem. But many stimulants do cause a craving. The people who take them are very creative. They snort it, shoot it, mix it with food and drink," Horowitz says.

Bath salts are the latest example of designer drugs. Where do you see this trend going?

"That's right. They are part of a long line of other pills and substances that we call designer drugs. And drug makers will keep creating new combinations at home and in illicit labs," Horowitz says. "It's almost impossible to keep up. And the motivation for buying them is always the same: Drugs like these are new and below the radar, unlike named illegal drugs."

SPONSOR STATEMENT FOR SB 140

"An Act classifying certain synthetic cathinones as schedule IIA controlled substances; and providing for an effective date."

SB 140 would classify certain synthetic cathinones, commonly known as synthetic cocaine and marketed as 'bath salts,' as a schedule IIA controlled substance.

Marketed as bath salts or plant food with names like 'Meow-Meow,' Vanilla Sky,' 'Ivory Snow,' and 'Bliss,' synthetic cathinones are inexpensive, accessible, and undetectable in most drug tests. Many users of this drug use them in combination with or as a legal alternative to cocaine, ecstasy or methamphetamines.

Drug effects include impaired perception, reduced motor control, disorientation, extreme paranoia and violent episodes. Synthetic cathinones are abused mainly by snorting and oral ingestion. The U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration, the U.S. Military, and the Municipality of Anchorage have all taken action to control or prohibit use of this drug.

According to the National Council of State Legislatures, as of October 24, 2011 there are 33 states that have adopted laws or have departmental rules banning chemical compounds associated with 'bath salts.' Seven states have legislation pending.

Should SB 140 pass, it would be unlawful throughout the State of Alaska to sell, use, purchase, possess, manufacture, transport or deliver synthetic cathinones, the chemical compounds which are being marketed as 'bath salts' and synthetic cocaine.

Re: Senate Bill 140

Dear Senator Meyer,

Thank you for introducing Senate Bill 140, "An Act classifying certain substances as schedule IIA controlled substances; and providing for an effective date."

The Municipality of Anchorage fully supports the passage of SB 140. The use of cathinone and its derivatives (commonly referred to as "bath salts") has quickly become a significant health and public safety issue.

Due to the huge range in potency between the various compounds and products, municipal first responders have encountered users of these drugs having severe reactions, including from bizarre and dangerous behavior to unconsciousness. Users who operate machinery, especially motor vehicles, have had significant accidents and present a danger to others that is on par with operating under the influence of alcohol.

In response, the Municipality has enacted its own local code, but does not have the jurisdiction to deal with the influx of the drug on a state-wide basis or impose the kinds of meaningful criminal sentences that are needed to stem the manufacture, distribution, and sale of these drugs.

Thank you again for introducing this important legislation.

Sincerely,

Dan Sullivan

Re: Letter of Support for SB 140

Dear Senator Meyer,

The Advisory Board on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse appreciates your recognition of the need to regulate cathinone and similar substances marketed as "bath salts." These substances pose a serious risk to the health and welfare of Alaskans and should be Schedule IIA controlled substances.

Cathinone, methcathinone, and methylenedioxypyrovalerone (MPDV) produce amphetamine-like effects. Commonly marketed as "bath salts," these drugs can be inhaled, ingested, injected, or smoked. The expected effect is a sort of euphoria, but these chemicals also have dangerous effects. "Bath salts" substances have been reported to cause extreme anxiety and paranoia, delusional thinking, visual and auditory hallucinations leading to violent outbursts, self-mutilation, and suicidal thoughts and actions.

Nationwide, there were 6,072 calls to poison centers about designer drugs labeled as "bath salts" in 2011.[1] In 2010, that number was 303 calls.[2] This reflects the rapid increase in use of these synthetic drugs in the United States. In response, the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration invoked its emergency scheduling powers in September 2011 to make possession and sale of mephedrone, MDPV, and methylone (common "bath salts" substances") illegal. This emergency regulation will expire in September 2012. State and city governments across the country are taking similar action through emergency powers, ordinances, and legislation in an effort to protect health and safety.[3]

The Advisory Board on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse supports SB 140 and we appreciate your work on behalf of Alaskans.

Sincerely,

Robert Coghill, Jr. Chairman
Advisory Board on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse

Alaska lawmakers seek inexpensive crime solutions

By AUSTIN BAIRD
(01/24/12 13:23:29)

Lawmakers, prosecutors and law enforcement officers from around the state gathered Tuesday for a two-day summit that aims to identify cost-effective ways to fight crime and improve public safety across Alaska.

The Senate Judiciary Committee opened the summit with a presentation from Annie Pennucci, a researcher for the Washington State Institute for Public Policy. The institute is nonpartisan and established by the Washington Legislature to study the economic impacts of issues important to the state.

Pennucci told the bipartisan committee that a summary of 66 studies of 3- and 4-year-old low-income children she helped conduct for the Washington Legislature show a direct correlation between preschool for low-income children and lower crime rates.

Everything from high school graduation rates to out-of-home placement rates are also correlated, she said.

"It bends the curve significantly," said the committee's chairman, Sen. Hollis French, D-Anchorage, who has sponsored legislation that would expand education opportunities to pre-elementary aged children. French said early childhood education is not a cure-all but a part of an overall solution.

Other topics of discussion at the summit included how communities of varying sizes, from Anchorage to Palmer to rural villages, have fared as budget cuts have chiseled away resources available to departments.

Anchorage Police Chief Mark Mew asked the state for renewed support of community policing, for which a grant recently expired, and for other programs that he said have been effective at curtailing crime in Anchorage.

Another focus was on so-called "bath salts," which are synthetic drugs legally sold over-the-counter that mimic the highs from cocaine, ecstasy and other illicit substances. Bath salts have become a focus for lawmakers and will be the subject of a hearing before the committee Friday.

The legislature banned synthetic marijuana last year, and that was helpful, Mew said. "We have a misdemeanor ordinance (in Anchorage) for bath salts, but it really needs to be a felony," he said.

It's not clear whether any special initiatives or new legislation will result from the summit, but French has said it's important to bring together criminal justice experts to get a better sense of what is happening in the system as a way of considering catalysts for change.

The summit is scheduled to continue Wednesday, with speakers slated to include Walt Monegan, CEO of the Alaska Native Justice Center, and Nancy Haag of Stand Together Against Rape.

Dangerous new designer drugs are showing up in Alaska

'BATH SALTS': Side effects can include seizures, paranoia, death.

By ROSEMARY SHINOHARA

(11/15/11 22:07:24)

A year after Anchorage led the state in outlawing a new street drug known as Spice, K2 or Spike, another set of new so-called "designer" drugs that are at least as dangerous is appearing in Alaska, a city prosecutor says.

The Spice-type drugs are synthetic marijuana.

The new drugs are chemical stimulants that mimic the effects of cocaine, ecstasy and methamphetamine, and are peddled under names like Pure Ivory, White Rush and Synergy.

The drugs are sometimes sold under the guise of "bath salts" or "plant food." Ingesting the powders and crystals causes side effects such as delusions, seizures, teeth grinding, paranoia, heart palpitations, blue extremities and, in some cases, death, assistant city prosecutor Jennifer Messick told Anchorage Assembly members at a work session earlier this month.

The Assembly last week made it illegal to sell, use or possess the chemical compounds found in the "bath salt" group of drugs in Anchorage. The federal Drug Enforcement Administration in October added the ingredients of the synthetic drugs to a list of controlled substances that are illegal to sell or possess in the United States.

Sen. Kevin Meyer, R-Anchorage, is planning to introduce a proposed state law banning the chemicals used in bath salts too.

A state law will help because the federal government "may not prosecute many of the lower-level cases that we and the state can," said Anchorage city attorney Dennis Wheeler.

But no one thinks these laws will totally erase the threat. The new rules are difficult to enforce and fresh versions of designer drugs can appear at any time.

"In just over a year, we went from five compounds in Spice to 400-something substances out there as of July," Messick said.

ARE THE DRUGS HERE?

So what's the evidence that the bath salt drugs -- synthetic stimulants Mephedrone, Methylone and a third known as MDPV -- are actually in Alaska?

Providence Alaska Medical Center psychiatric nurse practitioner Heather Brock said this year she's seen about one person a month who is sick enough from the bath salt family of drugs to be admitted to the hospital. They've either told her what they've taken or they've brought in the package, she said.

Other users may have just been seen in the emergency room.

Senate committee to consider ban of 'bath salt' intoxicants

JUNEAU -- Alaska legislators today were to take up a bill that would ban a few substances sold over the counter and marketed as bath salts, which are a variety of chemical compounds that mimic effects of popular illicit drugs like cocaine and ecstasy.

The Senate Judiciary Committee was to hear SB140, a bill co-sponsored by Republicans Kevin Meyer and Cathy Giessel, both of Anchorage, and Democrat Donald Olson from Nome.

Long-term side effects of bath salts are relatively unknown because few studies have been conducted.

The Alaska Legislature criminalized the similarly unknown synthetic marijuana last year, which was often packaged as incense and sold over the counter. Anchorage Police Chief Mark Mew said the same is needed for bath salts during this session.

"We have a misdemeanor ordinance (in Anchorage) for bath salts, but it really needs to be a felony," which would be the effect of listing bath salts on the state's schedule of controlled substances, he said.

Legislators in statehouses across the country are pushing for criminalization of the chemical substances that compose bath salts, and a federal bill cleared the U.S. House and is pending in the U.S. Senate Committee on the Judiciary. The Drug Enforcement Agency also exercised emergency scheduling authority last October to control some of the substances in question while federal legislation develops.

Dr. Jeff Baurick, who works in the emergency room at Alaska Regional Hospital, said he's had one bath salt case in the past few months and has heard of a few other patients seen by one of the nine other ER doctors there.

People snort or swallow the drugs or even put them up their rectums, Brock said.

"People are confused, agitated, they have increased heart rates, a couple cases of arrhythmia," she said. "They're very paranoid, like you would see in any kind of stimulant."

The effects only last a few hours, she said. That leads to another problem.

"Because they're fast-on, fast-off, people are more likely to re-dose, which makes it more likely to overdose," Brock said.

There's no antidote, she said. Medical providers simply treat the symptoms: "You address the heart rate, the fever, the anxiety."

In at least one case, a person mixed a bath salt drug with cocaine, causing a bad reaction, she said. She couldn't be more specific due to privacy rules.

Messick said the drugs are appearing locally "quite a bit."

She said between Anchorage police and Valley emergency and law enforcement officials, reports are made just about daily that they're dealing with people showing the symptoms of having used the bath salt compounds.

In her talks in Anchorage schools, Messick has found students are aware of the new variety of drugs. But earlier this month, a School District spokeswoman said the district has had no incidents involving students.

"We may be getting on the front end of it," Anchorage Police Chief Mark Mew said. "We're looking at a situation where the evidence is anecdotal."

WHERE TO GET THEM

Bath salts are accessible through the Internet and are believed to have been available in some tobacco shops, Messick said. When she visited a couple of tobacco shops in East Anchorage after the feds made bath salts illegal last month, though, the store representatives said they didn't have any.

"We could go to jail," one of them told her.

But both shops offered packets of material called Spice, she said. The packets could have been synthetic marijuana, which both the municipality and the state made illegal over the past year.

The fact that Spice is still on the shelves illustrates another problem: enforcement.

Whether stores that are still offering items marketed as Spice are breaking the law is "open for debate," Messick said.

The ingredients on so-called Spice packets aren't listed and it's unclear if they contain the specific ingredients banned under state or city law.

The city law "casts a wide net if you market anything with the same effect," Messick said. "I think the concern is whether it's vague and overbroad."

Another enforcement issue: The city doesn't have a field test kit for either the synthetic marijuana drugs or the latest, so-called bath salt drugs, Chief Mew said. A field test would give officers probable cause to arrest someone for use of the drugs.

Users could still be arrested for driving under the influence under a city law that makes it illegal to drive if a person is impaired by any substance, Messick said.

And test kits might become available before long. Messick said a company in the Netherlands is producing them.

MEMORANDUM February 9, 2012

SUBJECT: Definition of "installed" in CSHB 255(JUD)
(Work Order No. 27-LS1165\X)

TO: Representative Carl Gatto
Chair of the House Judiciary Committee
Attn: Melanie Lesh

FROM: Pamela Finley
Revisor of Statutes

Enclosed is the referenced draft CS. Please note that page 3, line 19 (the definition of "installed") makes no sense. If the definition at page 3, lines 19 - 20 is substituted for "installed" in subsection (d), that subsection would read as follows:

> (d) Subsections (a) and (b) of this section do not apply to devices and equipment equipment in an emergency vehicle, whether permanent or removable [INSTALLED]in an emergency vehicle or to the viewing of authorized screen devices by police, fire, or emergency medical service personnel if the user of the equipment or device reasonably believes the information on the device is necessary to respond to a health, safety, or criminal matter. In this subsection,
> (1) "emergency vehicle" means a police, fire, or emergency medical service vehicle;
> (2) "installed" means equipment in an emergency vehicle, whether permanent or removable.

If the intent is to exempt all devices and equipment in an emergency vehicle, whether permanent or removable, it would be better to say so directly and delete "installed". If you want changes to the CS, please let the drafter, Doug Gardner, know. (I am writing this instead of him only because he is very busy at the moment.)

communicating on a computer, or while [WITH] a screen device is operating if [(1)] the person is driving a motor vehicle, and

(1) [; (2)] the vehicle has a television, video monitor, portable computer, or any other similar means capable of providing a visual display that is in full view of a driver in a normal driving position while the vehicle is in motion, and [; AND (3)] the monitor or visual display is operating while the person is driving; or

(2) the person is reading or typing a text message or other nonvoice message or communication on a cellular telephone, personal data assistant, computer, or any other similar means capable of providing a visual display that is in the view of the driver in a normal driving position while the vehicle is in motion and while the person is driving.

 Sec. 3. AS 28.35.161(b) is amended to read:

(b) A person may not install or alter equipment described in (a) [(a)(2)] of this section that allows the images to be viewed by the driver in a normal driving position while the vehicle is in motion.

 Sec. 4. AS 28.35.161(c) is amended to read:

(c) Subsections (a) and (b) of this section do not apply to

(1) portable cellular telephones or personal data assistants being used for voice [VERBAL] communication or displaying caller identification information;

(2) equipment that is displaying only

(A) audio equipment information, functions, and controls;

(B) vehicle information or controls related to speed, fuel level, battery charge, and other vehicle safety or equipment information;

(C) navigation or global positioning;

(D) maps;

(E) visual information to

(i) enhance or supplement the driver's view forward, behind, or to the sides of the motor vehicle for the purpose of maneuvering the vehicle; or

(ii) allow the driver to monitor vehicle occupants seated behind the driver;

(F) vehicle dispatching and response information for motor vehicles providing emergency road service or roadside assistance;

(G) vehicle dispatching information for passenger transport or freight or package delivery;

(H) information for use in performing highway construction, maintenance, or repair or data acquisition by the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities or a municipality; or

(I) information for use in performing utility construction, maintenance, repair, or data acquisition by a public utility; in this subparagraph, "public utility" has the meaning given in AS 42.05.990.

 Sec. 5. AS 28.35.161(d) is amended to read:

(d) Subsections (a) and (b) of this section do not apply to devices and equipment installed in an emergency vehicle or to the viewing of authorized screen devices by police, fire, or emergency medical service personnel if the user of the equipment or device reasonably believes the information on the device is necessary to respond to a health, safety, or criminal matter. REPRESENTATIVE BILL THOMAS

House Bill 255
Sponsor Statement

Alaska's Ban on Texting, and Other Typing and Reading Words on Video Screens.

In December of 2011 one court ruled that Alaska's current law, which bans looking at video screens and increases the criminal penalties for injuries when they are caused by that conduct, was not worded clearly. Other courts have indicated they may rule similarly. The ruling stated that the current law did not bar texting while driving a moving vehicle.

This bi-partisan legislation reestablishes what the 2008 Legislature intended – that typing or reading messages on a video screen is covered by Alaska law as criminal conduct. It is widely recognized that texting while driving a vehicle can kill or severely injure innocent people, as well as the driver. This bill is crafted to remain consistent with the existing legislation. It exempts certain emergency uses and mapping devices, and simply adds that the law passed in 2008 banning using video screens in a moving vehicle also includes a ban on typing or reading on a computer, cell phone, or other video or computer screen in a moving vehicle. The language is written so that similar activities on social media sites will be covered, and prohibited while people are driving a vehicle.

The bill recognizes that other legislators have filed legislation on a separate subject – talking on and dialing cell phones while driving. Alaska currently has no per se ban on that activity. This bill does not address that issue at all. It leaves the debate on that subject for the bills on that subject that have been filed. The bill is simply aimed at clarifying the law passed in 2008 so that activity such as texting or reading texts is banned.

convicted under (d) of this section. This subsection does not apply to a lessor of a vehicle if the lessor keeps a record of the name and address of the lessee. A violation of this subsection may not result in the loss of a driver's license or privilege to drive and does not constitute grounds for assessment of demerit points under AS 28.15.221 — 28.15.261. This subsection does not prohibit or limit the prosecution of a vehicle driver for violating (a) or (b) of this section. (§ 1 ch 8 SLA 1986; am § 10 ch 76 SLA 1987)

Revisor's notes. — In 2006, in (e) of this section, "AS 28.90.010(d)" was substituted for "AS 28.40.050(d)" to reflect the 2006 renumbering of AS 28.40.050.

Opinions of attorney general. — The 1987 amendment to this section, providing that the owner or lessee of an offending vehicle will now be guilty of an infraction, would be likely to survive constitutional challenge. Although generally a person may not be found guilty of an offense unless he or she acts with a "culpable mental state," AS 11.81.600(b)(2) provides that no culpable mental state need be proven if the legislature intended to "dispense with" such a requirement, and the legislature so intended here. June 11, 1987, Op. Att'y Gen.

Sec. 28.35.150. Unlawful to interfere with or destroy official traffic control device or highway construction; action by state for damages. [Repealed, § 25 ch 144 SLA 1977.]

Sec. 28.35.155. Operation of vehicle with certain tires prohibited. (a) It is unlawful to operate a motor vehicle with studded tires or tires with chains attached on a paved highway or road from May 1 through September 15, inclusive, north of 60 North Latitude and from April 15 through September 30, inclusive, south of 60 North Latitude, except that at any latitude on a paved portion of the Sterling Highway a person may not operate a motor vehicle with studded tires or tires with chains attached from May 1 through September 15, inclusive. The commissioner of public safety shall by emergency order provide for additional lawful operating periods based on unusual seasonal or weather conditions. An emergency order adopted under this section is not subject to AS 44.62 (Administrative Procedure Act). Upon application, a special individual traction permit may be issued by the Department of Administration allowing the operation of a motor vehicle with studded tires or chains at any time at the discretion of the vehicle owner. The fee for the special individual permit is one-third of the biennial registration fee applicable to that class of vehicle under AS 28.10.421. The department may provide an appropriate sticker or other device identifying the vehicle to which the permit applies.

(b) In this section, "studded tire" means a tire with metal studs or spikes imbedded in the periphery of the tire surface, and protruding not more than one-fourth inch from the tire surface. (§ 9 ch 241 SLA 1976; am § 29 ch 94 SLA 1980; am § 1 ch 22 SLA 1996; am § 16 ch 44 SLA 1996; am E.O. No. 99 § 61 (1997))

Sec. 28.35.161. Driving a motor vehicle with a screen device operating; unlawful installation of television, monitor, or similar device. (a) A person commits the crime of driving with a screen device operating if

(1) the person is driving a motor vehicle;

(2) the vehicle has a television, video monitor, portable computer, or any other similar means capable of providing a visual display that is in full view of a driver in a normal driving position while the vehicle is in motion; and

(3) the monitor or visual display is operating while the person is driving.

(b) A person may not install or alter equipment described in (a)(2) of this section that allows the images to be viewed by the driver in a normal driving position while the vehicle is in motion.

(c) Subsections (a) and (b) of this section do not apply to

(1) portable cellular telephones or personal data assistants being used for verbal communication or displaying caller identification information;

(2) equipment that is displaying only

(A) audio equipment information, functions, and controls;

(B) vehicle information or controls related to speed, fuel level, battery charge, and other vehicle safety or equipment information;

(C) navigation or global positioning;

(D) maps;

(E) visual information to

(i) enhance or supplement the driver's view forward, behind, or to the sides of the motor vehicle for the purpose of maneuvering the vehicle; or

(ii) allow the driver to monitor vehicle occupants seated behind the driver;

(F) vehicle dispatching and response information for motor vehicles providing emergency road service or roadside assistance;

(G) vehicle dispatching information for passenger transport or freight or package delivery;

(H) information for use in performing highway construction, maintenance, or repair or data acquisition by the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities or a municipality; or

(I) information for use in performing utility construction, maintenance, repair, or data acquisition by a public utility; in this subparagraph, "public utility" has the meaning given in AS 42.05.990.

(d) Subsections (a) and (b) of this section do not apply to devices and equipment installed in an emergency vehicle. In this subsection, "emergency vehicle" means a police, fire, or emergency medical service vehicle.

(e) It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution under (b) of this section that the equipment installed or altered includes a device that, when the motor vehicle is being driven, disables the equipment for all uses except those described in (c) of this section.

(f) A person who violates (a) of this section is guilty of

(1) a class A misdemeanor, unless any of the circumstances described in (2) — (4) of this subsection apply;

(2) a class C felony if the person's driving causes physical injury to another person;

(3) a class B felony if the person's driving causes serious physical injury to another person;

(4) a class A felony if the person's driving causes the death of another person.

(g) A person who violates (b) of this section is guilty of a class A misdemeanor. (§ 1 ch 99 SLA 2008; am § 1 ch 42 SLA 2009)

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to screen devices in motor vehicles; and prohibiting the driver of a motor vehicle from reading or typing a text message or other nonvoice message or communication on a cellular telephone, computer, or personal data assistant while driving a motor vehicle."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE. The purpose of this Act is expressly to provide that the use of a cellular telephone, computer, personal data assistant, or any other similar means for texting or communicating in a manner proscribed by AS 28.35.161 is prohibited. It is the opinion of the legislature that the use of these devices in a manner proscribed by AS 28.35.161 is currently illegal in the state.

 Sec. 2. AS 28.35.161(a) is amended to read:

(a) A person commits the crime of driving while texting, while

communicating on a computer, or while [WITH] a screen device is operating if [(1)] the person is driving a motor vehicle, and

(1) [; (2)] the vehicle has a television, video monitor, portable computer, or any other similar means capable of providing a visual display that is in full view of a driver in a normal driving position while the vehicle is in motion, and [; AND (3)] the monitor or visual display is operating while the person is driving; or

(2) the person is reading or typing a text message or other nonvoice message or communication on a cellular telephone, personal data assistant, computer, or any other similar means capable of providing a visual display that is in the view of the driver in a normal driving position while the vehicle is in motion and while the person is driving.

 Sec. 3. AS 28.35.161(b) is amended to read:

(b) A person may not install or alter equipment described in (a) [(a)(2)] of this section that allows the images to be viewed by the driver in a normal driving position while the vehicle is in motion.

 Sec. 4. AS 28.35.161(c) is amended to read:

(c) Subsections (a) and (b) of this section do not apply to

(1) portable cellular telephones or personal data assistants being used for voice [VERBAL] communication or displaying caller identification information;

(2) equipment that is displaying only

(A) audio equipment information, functions, and controls;

(B) vehicle information or controls related to speed, fuel level, battery charge, and other vehicle safety or equipment information;

(C) navigation or global positioning;

(D) maps;

(E) visual information to

(i) enhance or supplement the driver's view forward, behind, or to the sides of the motor vehicle for the purpose of maneuvering the vehicle; or

(ii) allow the driver to monitor vehicle occupants seated behind the driver;

(F) vehicle dispatching and response information for motor vehicles providing emergency road service or roadside assistance;

(G) vehicle dispatching information for passenger transport or freight or package delivery;

(H) information for use in performing highway construction, maintenance, or repair or data acquisition by the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities or a municipality; or

(I) information for use in performing utility construction, maintenance, repair, or data acquisition by a public utility; in this subparagraph, "public utility" has the meaning given in AS 42.05.990.

* Sec. 5. AS 28.35.161(d) is amended to read:

(d) Subsections (a) and (b) of this section do not apply to devices and equipment installed in an emergency vehicle or to the viewing of authorized screen devices by police, fire, or emergency medical service personnel if the user of the equipment or device reasonably believes the information on the device is necessary to respond to a health, safety, or criminal matter. In this subsection,

(1) "emergency vehicle" means a police, fire, or emergency medical service vehicle; utility vehicle MEA,

(2) "installed" means equipment in an emergency vehicle, whether permanent or removable.

MEMORANDUM January 17, 2012

SUBJECT: Sectional Analysis of HB 255 (Work Order No. 27-LS1165\I)

TO: Representative Les Gara
Attn: Rose Foley

FROM: Doug Gardner
Director

You have requested a sectional summary of HB 255. As a preliminary matter, note that a sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill and the bill itself is the best statement of its contents. If you would like an interpretation of the bill as it may apply to a particular set of circumstances, please advise.

Section 1. Section one of the bill amends the uncodified law of Alaska by adding a new section providing for a statement of purpose by the legislature regarding the bill. In essence, the statement of purpose reflects that while the legislature is of the opinion that AS 28.35.161 currently prohibits the use of a cellular telephone, computer, personal data assistant or any other similar means for texting or communicating while driving a motor vehicle, that the purpose of the bill is to further clarify that use of these types of devices in the manner currently provided by AS 28.35.161, is prohibited conduct.

Section 2. Section two of the bill adds the phrase "while texting, while communicating on a computer" to AS 28.35.162(a) to clarify that texting or communicating on a computer is included as prohibited conduct by the existing language of the bill." Section two of the bill also splits the offense into two prosecution theories of prohibited conduct. The first theory utilizes the existing language of the statute regarding the prohibited conduct of driving a motor vehicle while the vehicle has a television, video monitor, portable computer, or any other similar means capable of providing a visual display that is in full view of the driver in a normal driving position while the vehicle is in motion and the monitor or visual display is operating while the person is driving. The second prosecution theory added by the bill by adding a new subsection (a)(2) to AS 28.35.161, prohibits the conduct of driving a motor vehicle while the person is reading or typing a text message or other nonvoice communication on a cellular telephone, personal data assistant, computer or any other similar means capable of providing a visual display that is in view of the driver in a normal driving position while the vehicle is in motion and the person is driving.

Section 3. Section three amends the existing language of AS 28.35.161(b) to make the existing language of this subparagraph, which restricts installation of equipment set out in either AS 28.35.161(a)(1) or 28.38.161(a)(2), consistent with the additional language added by section two of the bill.

Section 4. This section of the bill replaces the existing use of the term "verbal" with "voice," to clarify that this bill continues, as AS 28.35.161 does at present, to allow the conduct of for example "voice" communication on a cellular telephone or other device, as distinguished from the existing prohibited conduct as clarified by section two of the bill, which includes texting, typing a text message or reading a text message, watching television etc., while driving.

BILL NO. HB255

Analysis

This bill prohibits the driver of a motor vehicle from reading or typing a text message or other nonvoice message or communication on a cellular telephone, computer, or personal data assistant while driving a motor vehicle.

The agency is not anticipating a significant impact to the current case load or fiscal cost increase with the passage of the legislation. However, the Office of Public Advocacy will monitor for a future potential fiscal impact. Therefore, at this time, the Agency submits a zero impact fiscal note.

FISCAL NOTE

STATE OF ALASKA BILL NO. HB255
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Analysis

This bill amends AS 28.35.161(a) by adding language that specifically prohibits texting or the use of a cellular phone, data assistant, computer or other device for non-voice communication while operating a motor vehicle, unless specifically authorized under this statute. This crime carries a range of penalties from a class A misdemeanor to a class A felony. Under this statute persons convicted of texting while driving face potential penalties of up to one year of imprisonment for a class A misdemeanor, up to five years of imprisonment for a class C felony, up to 10 years of imprisonment for a class B felony and up to 20 years of imprisonment for a class A felony.

The Department of Law presently views the conduct addressed by this bill to be prohibited under the current statute. Accordingly, District Attorneys in various communities have brought charges for texting while driving. Judicial officers across the state, however, are split on whether texting and driving is prohibited by the current statute. In some communities where judicial officers have concluded that texting and driving is not covered by the current statute, District Attorneys are no longer pursuing charges for texting and driving.

Specifically prohibiting texting and driving will result in the prosecution of cases that are not currently prosecuted by the Department of Law. Additionally, the increased prosecution and awareness is expected to increase enforcement across the state. The Public Defender Agency cannot reliably predict how many additional cases will be prosecuted and require public counsel, however. The Agency anticipates that increased prosecution and enforcement will result in a fiscal impact on the Agency. The Agency, therefore, submits an indeterminate fiscal note.

BILL NO. HB 255

Analysis

House Bill 255 amends AS 28.35.161(a) and other statutes to specifically ban texting while driving and communicating on a computer while driving. Because the current law banning driving with a screen device operating has generally be interpreted to include by inference a ban on the behaviors specifically banned in HB 255, the court system does not anticipate any fiscal impact from the passage of this bill.

Ref: Amendment HB255

Representative Gara,

The Anchorage Fire Department fully supports AS 28.35.161, which makes the use of electronic devices unlawful by the operator of a motor vehicle, and the amendments as proposed in HB 255. Specifically, the provision to permit the use of electronic equipment by emergency personnel when needed as part of emergency response is sufficient to continue safe and effective operations by the fire department. Further, the Anchorage Fire Department agrees that operators of emergency apparatus should be restricted to only information that is applicable to the emergency response and no other exclusions should be permitted. The amendments as proposed allowing emergency providers to view necessary information on a wireless screen while driving, but not type back to the sender will provide the ability for the Anchorage Fire Department to continue providing the best possible emergency response using the latest technology, while also reducing risk to the operators of emergency apparatus and other drivers on the roadway.

Re: State Farm Support for HB 255

Dear Representative Gara:

State Farm, the largest insurer of autos in Alaska, strongly supports HB 255, which prohibits drivers from reading or typing a text message or other non-voice message on cell phones, computers or personal data assistants. The bill clarifies this conduct is illegal in Alaska and provides for stiff penalties as a deterrent. Statistics establish without a doubt this bill will immediately begin to reduce accidents, reduce property damage, help to keep insurance costs down and most importantly save lives.

Please include this letter of support in your bill file and in all committee hearings. If we can provide you any further information or assistance, please let me know.

Sincerely,

Sheldon E. Winters

convicted under (d) of this section. This subsection does not apply to a lessor of a vehicle if the lessor keeps a record of the name and address of the lessee. A violation of this subsection may not result in the loss of a driver's license or privilege to drive and does not constitute grounds for assessment of demerit points under AS 28.15.221 — 28.15.261. This subsection does not prohibit or limit the prosecution of a vehicle driver for violating (a) or (b) of this section. (§ 1 ch 8 SLA 1986; am § 10 ch 76 SLA 1987)

Revisor's notes. — In 2006, in (e) of this section, "AS 28.90.010(d)" was substituted for "AS 28.40.050(d)" to reflect the 2006 renumbering of AS 28.40.050.

Opinions of attorney general. — The 1987 amendment to this section, providing that the owner or lessee of an offending vehicle will now be guilty of an infraction, would be likely to survive constitutional challenge. Although generally a person may not be found guilty of an offense unless he or she acts with a "culpable mental state," AS 11.81.600(b)(2) provides that no culpable mental state need be proven if the legislature intended to "dispense with" such a requirement, and the legislature so intended here. June 11, 1987, Op. Att'y Gen.

Sec. 28.35.150. Unlawful to interfere with or destroy official traffic control device or highway construction; action by state for damages. [Repealed, § 25 ch 144 SLA 1977.]

Sec. 28.35.155. Operation of vehicle with certain tires prohibited. (a) It is unlawful to operate a motor vehicle with studded tires or tires with chains attached on a paved highway or road from May 1 through September 15, inclusive, north of 60 North Latitude and from April 15 through September 30, inclusive, south of 60 North Latitude, except that at any latitude on a paved portion of the Sterling Highway a person may not operate a motor vehicle with studded tires or tires with chains attached from May 1 through September 15, inclusive. The commissioner of public safety shall by emergency order provide for additional lawful operating periods based on unusual seasonal or weather conditions. An emergency order adopted under this section is not subject to AS 44.62 (Administrative Procedure Act). Upon application, a special individual traction permit may be issued by the Department of Administration allowing the operation of a motor vehicle with studded tires or chains at any time at the discretion of the vehicle owner. The fee for the special individual permit is one-third of the biennial registration fee applicable to that class of vehicle under AS 28.10.421. The department may provide an appropriate sticker or other device identifying the vehicle to which the permit applies.

(b) In this section, "studded tire" means a tire with metal studs or spikes imbedded in the periphery of the tire surface, and protruding not more than one-fourth inch from the tire surface. Sec. 28.35.160. Unlawful injury to or destruction of traffic regulations or guidance device. [Repealed, § 25 ch 144 SLA 1977.]

Sec. 28.35.161. Driving a motor vehicle with a screen device operating; unlawful installation of television, monitor, or similar device. (a) A person commits the crime of driving with a screen device operating if

(1) the person is driving a motor vehicle;

(2) the vehicle has a television, video monitor, portable computer, or any other similar means capable of providing a visual display that is in full view of a driver in a normal driving position while the vehicle is in motion; and

(3) the monitor or visual display is operating while the person is driving.

(b) A person may not install or alter equipment described in (a)(2) of this section that allows the images to be viewed by the driver in a normal driving position while the vehicle is in motion.

(c) Subsections (a) and (b) of this section do not apply to

(1) portable cellular telephones or personal data assistants being used for verbal communication or displaying caller identification information;

(2) equipment that is displaying only

(A) audio equipment information, functions, and controls;

(B) vehicle information or controls related to speed, fuel level, battery charge, and other vehicle safety or equipment information;

(C) navigation or global positioning;

(D) maps;

(E) visual information to

(i) enhance or supplement the driver's view forward, behind, or to the sides of the motor vehicle for the purpose of maneuvering the vehicle; or

(ii) allow the driver to monitor vehicle occupants seated behind the driver;

(F) vehicle dispatching and response information for motor vehicles providing emergency road service or roadside assistance;

(G) vehicle dispatching information for passenger transport or freight or package delivery;

(H) information for use in performing highway construction, maintenance, or repair or data acquisition by the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities or a municipality; or

(I) information for use in performing utility construction, maintenance, repair, or data acquisition by a public utility; in this subparagraph, "public utility" has the meaning given in AS 42.05.990.

(d) Subsections (a) and (b) of this section do not apply to devices and equipment installed in an emergency vehicle. In this subsection, "emergency vehicle" means a police, fire, or emergency medical service vehicle.

(e) It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution under (b) of this section that the equipment installed or altered includes a device that, when the motor vehicle is being driven, disables the equipment for all uses except those described in (c) of this section.

(f) A person who violates (a) of this section is guilty of

(1) a class A misdemeanor, unless any of the circumstances described in (2) — (4) of this subsection apply;

(2) a class C felony if the person's driving causes physical injury to another person;

(3) a class B felony if the person's driving causes serious physical injury to another person;

(4) a class A felony if the person's driving causes the death of another person.

(g) A person who violates (b) of this section is guilty of a class A misdemeanor. (§ 1 ch 99 SLA 2008; am § 1 ch 42 SLA 2009)

Effect of amendments. — The 2009 amendment, effective September 18, 2009, added (c)(2)(I), and made related stylistic changes.

Texting while driving: Legislature should clear up ambiguous law

12.27.11 - 11:50 pm
Editorial

Texting while driving is foolish.

It's dangerous.

It shows willful disregard for the safety of others.

Alaska's legislators and Gov. Sean Parnell apparently agreed on all of that when they approved a bill in 2008 outlawing texting while driving. At least, that's what they thought they were doing.

It turns out the law, according to a couple of judges, doesn't actually use the words "texting while driving." That led a Kenai judge to dismiss a case brought against a 21-year-old driver who had been charged under the law. And a judge in Fairbanks has advised magistrates to not accept cases brought under the law because of some ambiguity.

No one can possibly argue that texting while driving should be a permissible practice.

The fastest way to clear this up is for the Legislature to quickly approve clear language during its next session, which opens in January. The state is appealing the decision of the Kenai judge, but the judicial process can consume quite a bit of time before an issue is resolved. The Legislature can act quicker.

And it should.

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention found in a 2010 study that 9 percent of U.S. drivers reported they "regularly" or "fairly often" text or email while driving. The agency also noted "Texting while driving is especially dangerous because it combines visual, manual and cognitive distractions."

The Legislature has already had the debate on this topic. There's no need to rehash the issue.

What is needed is a quick fix and some clear language so we can reduce the prevalence of texting while driving.

BRIEFING PAPERS ON THE IMPORTANT ISSUES OF THE DAY

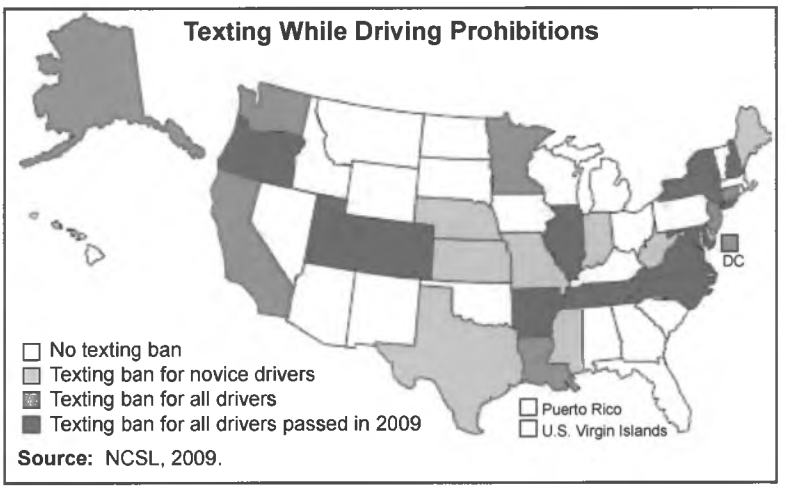
NOVEMBER-DECEMBER 2009 VOL. 17, NO. 48

Addressing Distracted Driving

By Melissa Savage

Driver inattention causes nearly 80 percent of vehicle crashes.

According to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, nearly 80 percent of vehicle crashes and 65 percent of near-crashes involve some form of driver inattention, often caused by tending to children in the back seat, talking with other passengers, or events happening outside the car. Talking on a cell phone and texting while driving have recently gained attention and have been the target of state legislation.



One trillion text messages were sent last year, according to the International Association for the Wireless Telecommunications Industry. That's up about 20 billion over the last three years. Many of these text messages were sent by drivers.

Only 20 states collect cell phone use information at crash scenes.

Tracking the problem can be difficult. Only 25 states collect cell phone use information at crash scenes. The National Occupant Protection Use Survey, conducted at randomly selected intersections by the U.S. Department of Transportation, found that 1 percent of observed drivers were manipulating a hand-held device, and 6 percent of observed drivers were using hand-held cell phones.

Studies using cameras and other tracking devices in personal vehicles found that drivers who send and receive text messages while driving had more than 20 times the risk of a crash or near crash than a driver who was not using a phone. Drivers who text messaged while driving took their eyes off the road for an average of 4.6 seconds during a 6-second interval; this equates to traveling the length of a football field at 55 mph without looking at the road. Talking on a cell phone while driving slightly increased the risk of a crash or near crash, but not to the same degree as text messaging.

No state completely bans phone use for all drivers.

State Action State distracted driving laws frequently are mislabeled as prohibitions on cell phones in the car. In fact, no state completely bans all phones for all drivers. Instead, state legislation usually addresses a range of issues, including particular wireless technologies and specific drivers. California, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Oregon, Washington and the District of Columbia prohibit all drivers from using hand-held phones. Other states have targeted only school bus drivers and teens. In 17 states and the District of Columbia, school bus drivers cannot use a cell phone while operating a bus; in 21 states and the District of Columbia, new drivers cannot use a cell phone while driving.

Every state has considered bills related to distracted driving.

Since 2000, legislatures in every state, the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico have considered bills related to distracted driving or, more specifically, to driver cell phone use. In 2009, legislators in 46 states considered 198 driver distraction bills. Maine's 2009 distracted driving law covers all types of distraction, not just cell phone use. The law defines "operation of a motor vehicle while distracted" as non-vehicle-operation activity by drivers; if they cannot safely operate the vehicle, they are violating the law.

The most common driver distraction measure—prohibiting texting while driving—was debated in 27 legislatures in 2009. As of September, 18 states and the District of Columbia outlaw text messaging while driving for all drivers. Eleven of those states passed laws in 2009.

Federal Action U.S. Transportation Secretary Ray LaHood convened a September 2009 summit to address the dangers of text messaging and other distractions behind the wheel. The summit, organized by the U.S. Department of Transportation's Research and Innovative Technology Administration, convened senior transportation officials; elected officials, including state legislators; safety advocates; law enforcement personnel; and academics to discuss how to combat distracted driving.

President Obama recently released Executive Order 13513, which prohibits federal employees from text messaging while driving vehicles owned, leased or rented by the federal government or privately owned vehicles on official government business. The order also prohibits federal employees from using federal government-supplied electronic equipment while driving. The Department of Transportation will propose three separate rulemakings to: 1) ban the use of cell phones and other electronic devices by rail operators; 2) restrict cell phone use and ban text messaging by truck and interstate bus operators; and 3) revoke the commercial driver's licenses of school bus drivers convicted of texting while driving.

Congress also is considering a federal ban on texting while driving. Legislation introduced in both the U.S. House and Senate (H.R. 3535, S. 1536) would authorize withholding 25 percent of a state's highway funds if it fails to enact a law by a certain date to prohibit text messaging while driving. If passed, the federal legislation—Avoiding Life-Endangering and Reckless Texting by Drivers Act" (ALERT Drivers Act)—could authorize withholding a possible total of $4.4 billion from the states and the District of Columbia, based on 2009 apportionments.

A second bill (S. 1938) introduced in the U.S. Senate would create a new grant program to encourage states to enact legislation that bans texting while driving, requires drivers using a cell phone to use a hands-free device, and prohibits drivers under age 18 from using any cell phone while driving. The grant program would be funded by redirecting unused surpluses from the existing federal grant program to states for encouraging enactment of a primary seat belt law.

Kenai Judge Throws Out Texting-While-Driving Case

0 0 Tweet

KENAI, Alaska — A Kenai judge says the 2008 law intended to make texting-while-driving illegal is not enforceable.

The state's screen device law does not include the word "text." Lawmakers say by not mentioning texting in the part of the bill allowing people to talk on phones means it is an implied illegal action.

However, on Dec. 1 Magistrate Jennifer Wells cited the lack of the word texting as the specific reason for tossing out the case against a man charged with texting-while-driving.

"Whether the 25th Legislature did, indeed, intend the statute to prohibit texting, or whether the statute has gotten the reputation because legislators and law enforcement wish this were true, is perhaps irrelevant," Wells writes. "From the court's perspective, because A.S. 28.35.161 creates misdemeanor and felony penalties, it is particularly important that the statute be clear."

"And we all thought that included texting," says Rep. Les Gara, D-Anchorage. "We intended for that to include texting."

If a state appeal of Wells ruling fails, Gara plans on making a proposal.

"Probably the smartest thing to do is, and the quickest way to fix this for the legislature, is find a criminal bill that's about to pass. Add an amendment to it that clarifies that we meant for texting to be illegal while you're driving."

The amendment, Gara says, would have language specifying all typing while driving is illegal.

For Rep. Mike Doogan, D-Anchorage, that is not good enough.

"All of the evidence we have is letting people talk on the cell phone while driving is a bad idea, Doogan says.

Like the National Transportation Safety Board, Doogan wants an all out ban on drivers using cell phones. His bill, and others like it, have stalled in Juneau.

"The first time there is a four car pileup that kills a bunch of people, that bill's going to pass," Doogan says. "But do I think it's going to pass before that, not really."

Gara says he is just trying to remove politics from the process by focusing on what lawmakers intended to originally accomplish.

"We should not allow people to text while they're driving," Gara says. "That leads to death. That leads to serious injury."

Anchorage Police Spokesperson Marleen Lammers says the department has only issued 10 screen violation tickets for this year.

Department of Law lawyers disagree with the Kenai judge. According to Gara their lawyers say they still intend to continue prosecuting cases, and most state courts will continue to hear them.

House Finance Co-Chair Bill Stolze, R-Chugiak, was one of the few lawmakers who voted against this law back in 2008.

"I voted that way because the law failed to keep up with changing technology," Stolze says. "I don't know if his (Gara) proposal is well thought out because we haven't been effective at trying to define technology."

House Speaker Mike Chenault, R-Nikiski, agrees with Gara, saying the law was intended to stop texting-while-driving and should be revised if there is any lingering confusion.

"I can see that happening, if there's a question in the law," Chenault says. "Rep. Gara's solution would work."

However, when it comes to other cell phone bills stalling in the legislature, Chenault says there are already existing laws protecting drivers.

"We don't need a law outlawing all cell phone use," Chenault says.

It's time to explicitly ban texting while driving in Alaska

By Charles Ward

A rather quirky decision by a Kenai judge last month created some wiggle room for those of us (yes, us, because I've done it too) who stupidly choose to text, email or Facebook while behind the wheel.

Fortunately, one of the first bills prefiled for consideration in the 2012 legislative session aims to tighten up any ambiguity in a law that certainly seemed on the surface to bar all kinds of silly behind-the-wheel activities, including texting.

Currently, Alaska state law prohibits driving if "the vehicle has a television, video monitor, portable computer, or any other similar means capable of providing a visual display that is in full view of a driver in a normal driving position while the vehicle is in motion; and ... the monitor or visual display is operating while the person is driving." While the law does have exemptions — 11 in fact — for screens that provide information like the car's status, GPS information and people making voice calls, texting is not given an express exemption. For most folks, texting without looking at a screen is all but impossible. Siri and other voice recognition software might change that, and perhaps there are some touch typists for tiny keyboards, but those special cases are 1) unusual and 2) don't violate the intent of the law, which is to keep drivers' eyes on the road, not on an electronic device.

Nevertheless, Magistrate Jennifer Wells ruled the law as written wasn't enough to explicitly ban texting while driving, the Associated Press reported on Dec. 25, 2011. Usually, the terms "activist judge" and "legislating from the bench" are code for "the judge ruled against my side," but here, it seems Wells is reading vagueness into the law that just isn't there. The AP reported she believed the law was vague because California wrote two separate laws, one covering distracting screens and the other banning texting. Why Wells decided to be persuaded by California's solution to a problem Alaska's legislators answered for their own state is for her to answer. But it strikes of reaching for a different solution to a problem the Alaska Legislature had already figured out. Simply put, anyone who looks at a screen to text should have run afoul of Alaska's statute, and been subject to a citation if caught.

Regardless of whether the ambiguity is real or imagined, hopefully it will no longer exist come the Legislature's adjournment in April (May? June?). Reps. Les Gara and Bill Thomas have introduced House Bill 255, which explicitly bans texting while driving. Hopefully, it winds its way through the Legislature this term and onto Gov. Sean Parnell's desk for his signature, because texting while driving is a practice I and every other driver needs to end. It creates a great danger — not only to ourselves, but others on the road.

Distracted driving is a contributing factor in half, or 3 million, of the traffic accidents in the U.S. in a given year, according to AAA. Car and Driver magazine conducted a June 2009 test that suggested texting while driving (even just reading the texts) can be more dangerous than drunken driving. There's simply no way to keep both eyes on the road when typing on a tiny keyboard or reading a screen, and the practice needs to not just stop, but be stopped by law enforcement because of the danger created to everyone on the road, not just the texter/driver.

Many driving laws are tradeoffs between safety and convenience, otherwise we'd be required to drive 10-ton roll cages at 5 mph down Egan Drive after a daily inspection by a state trooper. At one extreme, the National Transportation Safety Board recently called for the outright ban of all cell phone usage while driving — talking, texting, hands-free, the works. A complete ban would be overkill and would face incredibly tough sledding in state legislatures. But a ban on texting while driving would get rid of one of the worst road distractions out there, while still leaving the convenience of mobile communication as an option. Texting while driving has been banned once in Alaska, but if it takes different wording in a new law to make the prohibition stick, it's worth the Legislature's time. Let's hope we see quick action on the Gara/Thompson bill this term.

Police say driver in fatal accident was texting

By KYLE HOPKINS
(12/09/11 19:37:30)

The 19-year-old charged in a fatal Anchorage hit-and-run had been texting on her iPhone when her car struck and killed a village man on Easter Sunday, police say.

"OMG OMG OMG," Ashley Nichole Bashore texted to a friend shortly after the crash that knocked pedestrian Hubert Tunuchuk, 28, out of his shoes and into the intersection, according to paperwork filed Thursday by state prosecutors.

Instead of stopping or calling 911, prosecutors say, Bashore drove to a friend's house where she said her SUV had "hit a mangy Rottweiler without a collar."

Arrested Wednesday night following a months-long investigation, Bashore pleaded not guilty Thursday to three felonies: Criminally negligent homicide, leaving the scene of an accident and tampering with evidence.

The tampering charge stems from Bashore's attempt to delete text messages sent in the days after the April 24 collision, prosecutors say.

Bashore entered the courtroom in tears, attempting to hide her face with shackled hands. A bailiff warned a distraught woman in the gallery to stop trying to communicate with Bashore, who sat sobbing at the end of a line of prisoners. She pulled her prison shirt to her face, her fingernails painted a soft green.

Several of Tunuchuk's family members watched from the back of the room.

"Everybody's affected by what happened. Her family. My family. Everyone involved," said his aunt, Esther Stauffer. "I just feel so sorry for her. She's so young. If she had made the right choice when that happened, then perhaps we wouldn't be here today."

Esther's husband, Geoffrey, said he feels sorry for the 19-year-old too. But he's also angry.

"I feel like maybe she's just scared for herself. She tried to hide this and we lived the last six months not knowing if they were ever going to be able to charge the person," Geoffrey Stauffer said.

The village of Chefornak, a Yup'ik community of about 400 people in Western Alaska, sent Tunuchuk to the state vocational-technical school in Seward to study power plant operations. He was in Anchorage on April 24 with friends to celebrate Easter and planned to stay at the Stauffers' house, the couple said.

Early Sunday morning, Tunuchuk was intoxicated and walking behind two friends westbound on the Tudor Road overpass above the Seward Highway, according to a document filed by prosecutors. Had he been driving, his blood-alcohol level would have been above the legal limit, said traffic investigator Michael Busey.

Tunuchuk was in the roadway, near the narrow sidewalk curb of the overpass, according to prosecutors. A Hyundai Sante Fe driven by Bashore approached heading eastbound, prosecutors say.

As Bashore came across the overpass, the front of the SUV struck Tunuchuk on the passenger side, prosecutors say. Tunuchuk was thrown into the intersection where the Seward Highway off-ramp meets Tudor. Busey could not say how far he traveled. At some point before or after the collision, the Sante Fe drove up onto the curb, the investigator said.

Someone called 911 at about 3:15 a.m. to report the incident, police said at the time.

Tunuchuk survived for about three hours, according to police.

"We thought at first he was going to make it. ... Unfortunately he just lost too much blood," said Geoffrey Stauffer, who along with his wife placed a cross at the scene of the crash. It's still there.

Police say Bashore fled the scene, driving to a friend's house and telling the story of hitting a dog. She smelled of marijuana following the accident, according to the police investigation. But Busey said there's no way to determine whether she was high the night of the collision.

Police had few leads at first, prosecutors said, but a piece of trim from the Sante Fe and a Crimestoppers tip soon led police to the vehicle. While Bashore is not the registered owner of the SUV, she drove it on a regular basis, Busey said.

Police seized Bashore's iPhone, finding that all texts sent before April 26, two days after the collision, had been deleted, according to prosecutors and police. A review of her phone records revealed Bashore was "likely texting immediately before or at the time of the collision," according to paperwork filed by prosecutors.

Bashore eventually told a friend that she had hit a person and did so because she was texting, according to the prosecutor's memo.

A profile for Bashore appears on exploretalent.com, a website where hopeful performers post resumes and photos. She wants to be a model and once appeared in a horror movie filmed in the Butte, the profile says. "I enjoy swimming, biking, instant messaging and texting with friends," the profile says.

An Anchorage grand jury handed up the three-count indictment of Bashore on Wednesday -- more than seven months after the hit-and-run. Busey and another traffic investigator arrested Bashore on Wednesday night at her home in West Anchorage, a police spokesman said.

Efforts to establish details of the crash, along with DNA testing, the phone seizure and review by prosecutors all contributed to the length of the investigation, Busey said.

"Putting it all together just takes time, unfortunately," he said.

Before her arrest in the hit-and-run, Bashore had no criminal record as an adult. Three months after the collision that killed Tunuchuk, she was ticketed for speeding more than 20 mph over the speed limit, court records show.

Tunuchuk was about two weeks from graduating from the power plant operations training, his aunt said. He had planned to spend a couple of months fishing in Bristol Bay before returning to the village, she said.

Bashore's bail was set at $2,500 cash with a court-ordered third-party custodian required for release, a police spokesman said. Bashore is also forbidden from driving while on bail, he said.

Fairbanks Head-on Crash is Attributed to Drunken Texting

Originally printed at http://www.ktva.com/news/local/Fairbanks-Head-on-Crash-is-Attributed-to-Drunken-Texting--114660904.html

By Fairbanks Daily News-Miner
January 26, 2011

FAIRBANKS - An early morning head-on collision on Phillips Field Road is being blamed on an untimely text message by a suspected drunken driver.

Roger Dean Ostbloom, 40, was reportedly sending a text message from his phone on Sunday while driving his Ford F-150 pickup westbound and drifted into the oncoming lane of traffic. Ostbloom looked up and realized he was about to collide with a Chevy Avalanche.

Fairbanks Police arrived at 12:29 a.m. to find both vehicles with severe front-end damage.

Adam Strom, the driver of the Avalanche, suffered a broken femur in the accident and was taken to Fairbanks Memorial Hospital for surgery.

Ostbloom told police he was texting and saw the oncoming vehicle immediately before impact. Strom said he slowed in an attempt to avoid a collision.

Ostbloom, who was not hospitalized, also smelled of alcohol and had watery eyes and slurred speech, according to charging documents. A chemical test showed he had a breath-alcohol content of 0.097, slightly more than the legal limit of 0.08.

He was charged with driving a motor vehicle with a screen device operating, a law that makes texting while driving illegal. He was also charged with felony second-degree assault and driving under the influence of alcohol.

It's been illegal to text while driving in Alaska since 2008, but texting arrests remain uncommon in Alaska. Two local people were arrested for the offense last year, but neither was involved in an accident.

Cindy Cashen, administrator for the Alaska Highway Safety Office, said studies show texting while driving is a particularly risky form of "distracted driving." Authorities, however, are rarely in a position to blame texting as the primary cause of an accident.

"Unfortunately, the data doesn't show it's a very serious problem, but that's because it's very difficult to enforce," Cashen said.

Many drivers admit to behavior they say is dangerous

By Ashley Halsey III
The Washington Post

Posted: 01/06/2012 12:00:00 AM PST

WASHINGTON — American drivers once again have identified their enemy as themselves.

When quizzed in an annual survey, they have admitted they often are guilty of the very behaviors they view as a menace on the road.

Almost everyone said that drunken driving was unacceptable, and three-quarters described drunken drivers as a serious threat. Yet 14 percent of them said that within the year, they had driven with an alcohol level probably near or above the legal limit, AAA's Foundation for Traffic Safety reported.

The June survey of 3,147 people used online technology said to create a representative cross-section of the U.S. population. People were asked about their driving habits in the month, or year, preceding that.

Cellphone use and sending text messages were dangerous, 94 percent said, but more than a third said they had read texts or e-mails while driving. A quarter of them also said they had sent messages. Two-thirds said they had talked on their cellphones, and a third said they do so regularly.

"This 'Do as I say, not as I do' attitude that persists among drivers needs to change before we can experience a traffic-safety culture where safe driving is the norm," Peter Kissinger, head of the foundation, said in a statement.

The foundation said that 74 percent of drivers felt it was unacceptable to go more than 15 mph above the speed limit on a freeway, but more than half admitted they had done that.

Although

94 percent said the same excessive speeding was unacceptable on a residential street, a quarter of them admitted they had gone more than 15 mph above the limit.

Nearly all drivers said that when a traffic light turns red, people should stop if they can do so safely, but 37 percent said they had run a red light.

Falling asleep behind the wheel was identified as a serious problem by 96 percent of drivers, but a third of drivers said they had nodded off at least once.

The safety value of a seat belt has been long established, and 86 percent of drivers agreed they should be used, but almost a quarter of drivers said they had not used one at least once in the month before they were surveyed. Nineteen percent said they had failed to do so more than once.

Recent federal data showed that 32,885 people were killed in vehicle crashes in 2010, the lowest number in 60 years. The drop has been attributed to better safety features in vehicles: seat-belt improvements, safer air bags, better vehicle stabilization, advancements in highway design, and high-profile campaigns against drunken and distracted driving.

"We are moving in the right direction when it comes to safety on our roads, but we need to do much more," Kissinger said. "Changing driver behaviors is not rocket science. It's harder."

Alaska State Texting While Driving Bill Advances

By Jason Lamb

1:08 PM AKST, February 10, 2012

JUNEAU, Alaska

The state House Judiciary Committee approved a bill trying to clarify Alaska's driving while texting laws on Friday.

advertisement

According to committee chair Rep. Carl Gatto (R-Palmer), judges in Kenai and Fairbanks are not enforcing the current texting while driving law because it doesn't specifically mention "texting."

The new law includes the phrase "driving while texting."

Bill sponsor Rep. Les Gara (D-Anchorage) has said his new proposal would allow talking on the phone, including dialing a number and answering a call, but it would outlaw texting and associated activities like tweeting.

Texting while the car was stopped, like at a red light, would be allowed, Gara has said.

Rep. Bill Thomas (R-Haines) is also a prime sponsor of the bill.

Rep. Wes Keller (R-Wasilla) said he didn't approve of the bill, and recommended against its final passage in the House.

"Reading a text message is such a miniscule action -- to make it illegal, I just can't go there," Keller said.

He said if the texting while driving law was adopted, it may prompt outlawing other common in-car distractions like eating or adjusting the radio.

"There's just no chance," Gara said Friday in reaction to Keller's comments. He said "someone would be laughed out of the building" if they proposed bills that would ban things outlawing those types of distractions.

While Reps. Lance Pruitt (R-Anchorage) and Bob Lynn (R-Anchorage) expressed other concerns with the bill, they both recommended to pass the bill out of committee.

Reps. Max Gruenberg (D-Anchorage), Lindsey Holmes (D-Anchorage) and Gatto also voted to move the bill on to the Finance Committee.

Subject: Taxting amendments - solved I think.

Max is happy to withdraw his third amendment. That makes things a lot less complex. Thanks, Kaci, for your note. Bill and I had concerns witht hat amendment, as did some committee members. So that problem is gone.

Pam Finley, the revisor of statutes, is going to send us a technical clarification that has to do – not with substance – but how their drafting manual requires bills to be written. It actually relates to the former law's language, and not stuff we've added, but she just caught it.

It is along the lines of a memo she wrote to Rep. Gatto. I just spoke to her. Feel free to call if you want to know about that but, basically, she just wants to move the location of the word "installed" – that's the part of the law where we let emergency personnel use equipment that's been "installed" in a vehicle. We presume that if a first responder department installs equipment, it must be important to their work, so we let them use it.

But Max's bigger amendment is gone.

Hope we're all OK with that. I really don't care about Pam's amendment that much, but it seems proper to follow her advice on drafting style.

Thanks. Les

It seems like it would be VERY difficult to narrow down to encompass the targeted activity. Also, I think Rep. Thomas thought the bill was supposed to be just a clarification of what was already in the books and this amendment seems to create a new crime (taking an affirmative act to check text messages). I think Rep. Pruitt and Rep. Holmes had excellent points in committee.

Rep. Thomas isn't too thrilled with that amendment.

The other amendments seemed very good. Maybe Rep. Gruenberg would be happy with 2 out of 3?

Alaska's Ban on Texting, and Other Typing and Reading Words on Video Screens.

In December of 2011 one court ruled that Alaska's current law, which bans looking at video screens and increases the criminal penalties for injuries when they are caused by that conduct, was not worded clearly. Other courts have indicated they may rule similarly. The ruling stated that the current law did not bar texting while driving a moving vehicle.

This bi-partisan legislation reestablishes what the 2008 Legislature intended – that typing or reading messages on a video screen is covered by Alaska law as criminal conduct. It is widely recognized that texting while driving a vehicle can kill or severely injure innocent people, as well as the driver. This bill is crafted to remain consistent with the existing legislation. It exempts certain emergency uses and mapping devices, and simply adds that the law passed in 2008 banning using video screens in a moving vehicle also includes a ban on typing or reading on a computer, cell phone, or other video or computer screen in a moving vehicle.

The bill recognizes that other legislators have filed legislation on a separate subject – talking on and dialing cell phones while driving. Alaska currently has no per se ban on that activity. This bill does not address that issue at all. It leaves the debate on that subject for the bills on that subject that have been filed. The bill is simply aimed at clarifying the law passed in 2008 so that activity such as texting or reading texts is banned. The language is written so that similar activities on social media sites will be covered, and prohibited while people are driving a vehicle.

Please find enclosed three versions of the bill we've been working on regarding texting while driving. These versions need your review, and you should let us know which version you would like to prefile, and also call to our attention any changes so they can be made as soon as possible. The bill versions are:

1. Texting with SIS version 27-LS1149\M
2. Texting only version without the "stationary vehicle" exclusion 27-LS1165\B
3. Texting only version with the "stationary vehicle" exclusion 27-LS1165\M

As with any multiple version project, please review the drafts enclosed to make sure I've covered all the issues in the bill drafts that you wanted to address. Call if you have questions.

(1) using a cellular telephone for emergency purposes, including an emergency call to a law enforcement agency, fire department, or other emergency services agency or entity; or

(2) 18 years of age or older using a cellular telephone by hands-free mode.

(c) In this section,

(1) "emergency" has the meaning given in AS 42.20.150;

(2) "hands-free mode" means use of a cellular telephone for listening or talking by means of a speaker function, headset, or earpiece without holding the telephone.

(d) A person who violates this section is guilty of an infraction and may be punished as provided under AS 28.90.010.

* Sec. 2. This Act takes effect July 1, 2011.

RE: Explanation of Changes to CS for HB22 (TRA)

The House Transportation Committee adopted an amendment to HB22 which would prohibit the use of cell phones for individuals under the age of 18 (including prohibiting the use of hands-free devices and a speaker function). Committee members stated teen drivers are more at risk for causing a collision due to their inexperience of driving - this has also been sighted in numerous studies. For those 18 years of age and over the use of a hands-free device is still permitted while operating a motor vehicle to accommodate commercial drivers, tour operators and other to allow flexibility.

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to the offense of interference with access to transportation facilities, when a person conditions access to a transportation facility on consent to certain physical contact or to an electronic process that produces an image that exposes or reveals certain physical characteristics of the person."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 11.76 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 11.76.118. Interference with access to transportation facilities. (a) A person commits the offense of interference with access to transportation facilities if the person, as a condition for access to a transportation facility, requires another person to consent or otherwise submit to

(1) physical contact by any person touching directly or through clothing the genitals, buttocks, or female breast of the person seeking access; or

(2) any electronic process that produces an electronic image of the person seeking access that exposes or reveals a physical characteristic that is normally hidden by clothing and is not normally visible to the public.

(b) The defense of justification provided in AS 11.81.420 is not available in a prosecution under this section.

(c) Interference with access to transportation facilities is a class A misdemeanor.

This is language contained in HB 321 that is currently in House Transportation. This amendment essentially pulls that bill from House Trans.

State Privatization of Airport Security Screening

Choice to 'Opt-Out' of TSA Administered Program

In early December of 2012 the U.S. Department of Homeland Security installed and opened the additions of X-Ray scanners to four Alaskan Airports. Concern has been building throughout the United States during the year and a half since the initial installations of invasive scanning machinery and physical examination of passengers by equipment that may give dangerous radiation and physical touch and inspection by medically untrained employees.

During the many months since those airport procedures began, first in the lower United States, and for several months in Alaska -- constituents continue communication to Legislators about personal losses of carry-on items, and inappropriate touch and treatment by personnel.

Alaskans fly eight times more often than the national average. While the TSA has published some data regarding the physical effects of scanners on airline passengers, many questions remain unanswered. We have supplied research written by the Alaskan Legislative Research, for Congress, other reports and articles.

Opt out option: This amendment adds a new section to Alaska's unmodified law to requiring all Alaska airports covered by TSA invasive screening to complete the attached form by December 31, 2013. That gives the Department over a year to complete preparation to complete the form attached. That form requires:

1) Basic Airport information (address, owner, airport authority, alternate contact

2) Indicate if requesting airport or managing authority seeks to be the qualified vender

3) Need clear and substantial advantage for TSA to allow this (these) a clear and substantial advantage to do so. "New and innovative ideas and opportunities to manage TSA's operations more efficiently, while maintaining our high standards and meeting the treats of today and the future. Please explain how private screening at your airport would provide a clear and substantial advantage to TSA's security operations (attach all supporting documentation)."

4) Does the airport have any scheduled activities planned within the next 2 years, such as, major construction, etc? Please elaborate.

5) Does the airport authority have other airports under its jurisdiction or in its region submitting applications for privatized screening?

6) Please provide any additional information to be considered during the evaluation of this application.

7) Authorized representative Signature

Also attached are the airports that would fall within the group of airports in Alaska under the jurisdiction of the TSA oversight of the security process.

HB Opt-Out also requires those the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities apply for the Federal Security Screening opt-out program by December 31, 2013. (b) Requires any airport operated by a municipality in the state that requires TSA coverage apply for the opt-out program by December 31, 2013.

Section 2 of the bill requires the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities to reimburse a municipality the reasonable costs of applying for the opt-out program.

TRANSPORTATION SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

Application to Participate in the Screening Partnership Program

This application notifies the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) of an airport's intent to participate in the Screening Partnership Program (SPP). Airport operators may submit this application at any time.

The SPP was created in part to spur new and innovative ideas and opportunities to manage TSA operations more efficiently. Given the level of participation in the current program, and in order to maximize TSA's effectiveness as a Federal counterterrorism security agency, TSA is not inclined at this time to expand the Screening Partnership Program unless there are clear and substantial advantages to do so. Therefore, your application must explain how private screening at your airport will provide those clear and substantial advantages, while maintaining our high standards and meeting the threats of today and the future.

Acceptance of this application does not guarantee the requesting airport that a contract for private security screening will be awarded. In accordance with the Aviation and Transportation Security Act (ATSA), the decision to award a private security screening contract is at the discretion of the TSA Administrator.

If a requesting airport is seeking to become its own provider of private security screening services, please indicate this on "Question1" of the application. Note, however, that airports interested in providing their own private security screening services must qualify and compete according to criteria determined by the TSA Office of Acquisition.

TSA intends to select private security screening companies through an impartial competitive process. Airports granted privatization must transition to the private security screening company selected.

GENERAL INSTRUCTIONS:

- A separate application must be submitted for each individual airport location.
- An authorized representative of the airport or the airport owner must execute the application.
- The application requisite documentation must be completed in full to be considered for acceptance by TSA. Incomplete applications will delay the process.
- The application must be received at TSA Screening Partnership Program (SPP). (see Application Process Information)
- Please provide a copy of your application to the Federal Security Director for your airport.
- If your application includes Sensitive Security Information or confidential business information, please indicate in writing so that the information will be protected from public disclosure as appropriate. Further information regarding TSA policies and procedures for safeguarding and control of SSI is available at at www.tsa.gov or http://www.tsa.gov.

APPLICATION PROCESS INFORMATION

The application can be submitted at any time, it is open enrollment. To download a copy of the Screening Partnership Program Application from the TSA website, please visit the following link: http://www.tsa.gov.

What impacts? Transportation Security Administration in Alaska

Installation of TSA full-body scanners is imminent at Alaska's key airports.

- Alaskans fly eight times more than the national average;
- TSA screening procedures created in D.C. do not consider the unique Alaskan lifestyles and travel situations;
- Potential dangers from scanners and pat-down searches may occur with new equipment and procedures. Alaska must investigate any risk that occurs for the safety of the traveling public. You, the airline passenger, are invited to give three minutes testimony with your experience, concerns and questions needed to safeguard your constitutional rights.

Wednesday, November 16, 2011
11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.

Legislative Health Caucus

November 16, 2011

Senator Donny Olson and Representative Sharon Cissna, co-Chairs of the Legislative Health Caucus, opened the meeting with a description of the TSA issue and why it impacts Alaskans to a greater extent than the other 48 states, with Hawaii being in a similar situation as Alaska. 'We are different due to the vastness of our state, how very remote parts of the state are, and our separation from the continental United States. These are some of the reasons Alaskans travel an average of eight times more than citizens in other states. We would like to look at the changes that are coming to our airports and what we can and cannot do within the law.'

Anmei Goldsmith, Assistant AG with the Alaska Department of Law, introduced a handout she had prepared (see attachment) and briefly reviewed it for the audience.

- "Procedures" are whatever procedures the TSA decides are necessary. The regulations don't actually specify the procedures. The TSA issues "Standard Operating Procedures" that will apply when you go to the airport. SOPs are not public documents. You only know what the procedure is going to be when you get to the airport and you are subjected to it. These procedures are considered sensitive security information therefore the TSA has made the details of the procedures secret.
- "Enforcement" says you can be fined up to $10,000 for violation of a regulation, but TSA officers don't actually have authority to arrest you for crimes. That's why local police officers are there at the security check points.
- "Challenging" the TSA orders or procedures: There is a review statue that allows a person to apply for review by going to the U.S. Court of Appeals. Many people have filed lawsuits, but all that Ms. Goldsmith has seen have been filed in U.S. Federal District Court and so far they have been thrown out on jurisdictional grounds because the statute says you have to file in the Court of Appeals. One is up on appeal to the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals. That's the case to watch to see if it will be accepted. So far no plaintiff has tried filing with the U.S. Court of Appeals.

Rep. Cissna commented that law abiding citizens run into problems at the airport because the TSA does not make the procedures known. Travelers, therefore, unknowingly, break the rules. 'Couldn't there be signs at the airport?' Ms. Goldsmith explained that, per the TSA's regulations, making the procedures known weakens security.

Rep. Cissna reminded that 'Alaska's constitution says the state has an obligation to provide for the health and welfare of the state. It's very specific about that protection. [Article 7.4. Public Health – The legislature shall provide for the promotion and protection of public health. Article 7.5. Public Welfare – The legislature shall provide for public welfare.] If the state does not like the TSA regulations, what choices do we have?'

Ms. Goldsmith said that the federal government has pre-empted the field of airline travel security. 'They have taken over control of that field of law. If a state were to try to enact a law in that same area, a court would probably strike it down. In the case of Texas, their bill would have made it illegal for anyone (including the TSA) to touch another person in certain ways. The U.S. Attorney in Texas wrote the legislators a letter that said that the TSA would shut down all flights into and out of Texas if they passed the bill before them. That's where the bill ended in Texas. The federal government is very powerful. They have control over airline travel. There is probably not a legal answer the state can do. There may be a political answer.'

Rep. Cissna said, 'part of the legal answer would be the court.' Ms. Goldsmith responded that 'part of the review statute would allow a person who has been injured, or harmed in some way, by an order of the TSA, to sue in court.' Rep. Cissna asked, "Could the state sue?" Ms. Goldsmith said, 'that is a really good question.' "I think it is within the realm of possibilities, but without anyone having done it before, Alaska would be forging new ground."

Ms. Goldsmith suggested, "The political answer is, change the law. We elected the people who enacted this law and we, theoretically we have the power to convenience those people to change it or try to elect different people who we think would do it differently."

Thomas Brown, co-director of Alaskans' Freedom to Travel, asked what would prevent the TSA from coming into Alaska and putting agents in ferry terminals, small airports and our weigh stations on the highways? Ms. Goldsmith answered that 'she doesn't think there is anything to prevent them because they do have authority to oversee security in other modes of transportation so, theoretically, they could come to a ferry terminal. Possibly if the terminal only served intrastate routes, they may not have authority.'

Ms. Goldsmith explained that she paraphrased the law in the handout, but while 'in the text it does focus on air travel, it also provides authority for the TSA to oversee other modes of transportation. They would probably have to adopt regulations and develop other procedures to do so.'

Rep. Cissna said Congress adopts regulations and develops procedures. 'Does the TSA have the right to, independent of any kind of oversight, actually change all regulations?' Ms. Goldsmith said, 'the agency adopts the regulations so congress gives them the authority, by statute, and then the agency adopts regulations within certain parameters. The regulation process is public as required by law, but the TSA has a special ability to adopt secret procedures. They are not regulations and they are not subject to public comment and notice periods. That's because of security. The people who enacted the legislation that allowed the TSA to have that type of power believed it was important, to keep people safe.'

Patricia Anderson, co-director of Alaskans' Freedom to Travel, suggested that, 'basically, the TSA was given carte blanche on any form of transportation as long as they change their SOPs?'

Ms. Goldsmith said, 'the SOPs can be quite broad, but they have to be within the parameters of the regulation. Which is quite broad. This one that I quote says, "No individual may enter a sterile area or board an aircraft without submitting to the screening and inspection of his or her person and accessible property in accordance with the procedures being applied to control access to that area or aircraft under this subchapter." But, what are the procedures that control access? It's whatever the TSA adopts pursuant to the regulation that allows them to keep their procedures secret.'

Cheryl Hummey of Barrow, AK, is speaking for herself though she works in a domestic violence and sexual assault shelter. She is a frequent flier. 'One, you only fly in and out of Barrow.' She also flies more than anyone else she works with. She's very concerned about both the scanners and pat-downs. 'I'm speaking more about scanners today. The procedures are invasive. Are the images saved? I find that to be very suspect. These procedures draw out from a person thoughts, fears, past experiences, trauma that we have no idea of. I question whether the safety that we're supposedly going to get from this, and I say supposedly going to get because I think it's a very fake sense of security, I don't know that that outweighs the damage to my body that is going to happen. I'm also uncomfortable with the notion of "how far can we go", "what can we get away with"? I don't think that is a way we want to live our lives. This goes against protecting the health and welfare of our citizens. It's a false sense of we're going to get more health or welfare, when really we're losing it. I commend the state for standing up to TSA. When more states do so, we'll change the federal government and stop this.'

Virginia Walsh of Barrow, AK, works for Arctic Women in Crisis, a domestic violence shelter, but she is here speaking for herself. 'I feel the pat-downs are implemented poorly and without proper training for their agents. If the pat-downs are not done properly they can be humiliating, uncomfortable and certainly traumatizing, especially for children and adults who have been victims of trauma in the past. For the most part they seem unnecessary when you look at who's receiving a good portion of these hand searches. I'm also very concerned about the possibility of full body scanners which appear to be imminent in Alaska. Little research on the risk of cancer has been conducted in the United States. Studies in Europe have concluded that wide spread use of even low level radiation poses an unacceptable health risk. Especially in Alaska where we fly eight times more than the national average, I'm very concerned about the health risks of the scanners.'

David Levy is with the Alaska Mobility Coalition. 'Moving people in Alaska is a major challenge.
We are very unique. People utilize ferries, buses, vans, snow machines, dogsleds and everything in between to get where they need to go. We also use air carriers. A couple of years ago Gov. Palin signed an administrative order to form a task force on coordinating transportation in the state. The task force came out with their initial report in the spring of 2010 with some recommendations. A new administrative order was signed and they will have follow up recommendations as well. One of the things they discovered is that it is a particular challenge for people coming from remote communities into centers, hub communities, for medical care. Sometimes when they have to travel by small plane and arrive in Anchorage for medical care, there may not be anyone to meet them or they may have a language barrier.'

Rep. Cissna brought up the problems that people have had in being medivaced Outside for emergency medical care, returning on regular airline flights as passengers after critical treatments and having to endure pat-downs of bandages and incisions, removal of bandages, medical equipment taken apart for inspection and returned without being properly reassembled. Mr. Levy said, 'from the prospective of AMC, the TSA is a consequence of a broader issue in our state which is a lack of transportation. If there were more transportation options in our state, if there were more coordinated transportation options in our state, people would have the choice to use air service or ferries or other forms of transportation. I think that is something for this committee to look at as part of an overall plan in dealing with the TSA.'

Rich Sewell is with the Department of Transportation, Division of Statewide Aviation, where he is an aviation policy planner. 'One of my favorite statistics is 82% of our communities in Alaska are off of the road system. When you start thinking about that, it's a staggering number. Their only access is through aviation, for medical services, for dental services, for pretty much all of the urban needs that they have. We have a total of, I think, nineteen rural hub airports such as King Salmon and Bethel that are owned by the state of Alaska and get jet traffic. Of course Fairbanks, Anchorage and Juneau are international airports and then there are a variety of city owned airports such as Kenai and Soldotna. The North Slope Borough may own 5 or 6 airports up there. Overall we have something in the ball park of 400 public airports in Alaska. DOT owns 253 airports now. So the scope of the

Mr. Brown had a question for the DOT representative. 'The AFTT group has concluded that in order to affect change within the TSA this will be a political or judicial process. As such we need to make people aware of these issues, make people aware that there is a process they can go through to change things. That means we have to raise awareness within the public. What are the limits to private citizens going into the airport to hand out pamphlets or things like that?' Rich Sewell said he does not know, but he would do some research to bring to the AFTT meeting.

Rep. Cissna asked Ms. Goldsmith if she recalled how many times the State of Alaska has filed lawsuits against the federal government. Ms. Goldsmith named a few. She said 'it has done so many times. There are stringent restrictions on when, where and how another entity can sue them.'

Thomas Brown commented on the TSA's blog admission that 'neither the AIT machines nor the pat-downs would have caught the 9-11 highjackers, the shoe bomber or the underwear bomber. Considering that the procedures are not effective against the threats for which they were created, would that be a legal challenge to get them to stop what they are doing, or at least get a court order for an internal or independent review of what they're doing?'

Ms. Goldsmith said, "Yes, but to date no court has been willing to do that. Theoretically, the review statute says you would have to file with the U.S. Court of Appeals." 'That doesn't mean that there isn't a creative lawyer who could make the argument that that statute doesn't apply.'
"But, I think you're right, if the search procedures that are in place wouldn't actually have caught any of the known threats to airline security that we've actually experienced, then how can these be an effective means of screening passengers?" 'No court has actually asked and answered that question yet. No court has addressed that question since 2001, since the new procedures have been in place. No court has sat down and looked at the question of whether these new procedures actually screen the bad guys.'

Roberta Leavitt, member and chairman of the North Slope Borough Health Board spoke of her personal experience with the TSA procedures. 'This is hard to talk about, but I'm going to talk about it anyway. Being a victim of sexual abuse and having the TSA people say that you need a pat-down, it triggers the memories, the memories come back for up to four days after the TSA incident happens. They say it's only a pat-down, but it isn't. Having somebody touch you when you're a nine year old child and then you still have these memories when you're a forty year old adult and have the TSA people bring these memories back to life makes you not want to fly, makes you not want to travel. I've been on basketball trips, volleyball trips, gymnastic trips, my children have been on band trips and you know, their parents aren't going to be there when something like this is happening. I was nine years old when I was a victim and it comes back after being patted down. The parents aren't going to be there with that chaperone and it's going to trigger that person. I don't have kids in school any more, but I sure do know how it feels to hide that from an adult and have to go through that in school, during a school trip. It's a scary thing. Even the scanner. I had to go through a scanner in Denver. Putting my hands up and having that thing go through. People can see. They saw my whole body, that x-ray thing. That didn't feel right to me. You know, when you go to the hospital and have a x-ray, nobody can see those, but when you're out at the airport, that line, I stood in that line for almost two hours and I could see. I could see those x-aviation system for Alaska is a quantum leap bigger than any in the Lower 48. We are, by far, the largest owner of airports. I think the closest is Idaho with maybe 35. We're kind of like the 800 lb. gorilla. It was alluded to that the TSA has control of access to the national air space, called NAS and if Fairbanks or Anchorage were not to have the TSA screening they could exclude airplanes from flying into the national air space. It's a very important function, but the DOT is more like a landlord to the TSA. We provide space for the TSA to do the security screening, but the DOT, ourselves, provides law enforcement officers for general security. Those people at Fairbanks and Anchorage are not local police, they are state legal enforcement officers. So the state or DOT is really an observer of this rather than providing any kind of enforcement. It's a complicated issue. The state has intrastate travel. There is no security provided for those flights. They are planes that carry up to 30 passengers.'

Rep. Cissna believes that because of the larger planes that fly intrastate such as Anchorage to Fairbanks passengers will have to go through screening with the new procedures.

Thomas Brown, co-director of Alaskans' Freedom to Travel, presented some questions, the first returning to the possibility of the TSA putting agents in ferry terminals and small airports. Ms. Goldsmith replied that it is possible they might go into areas that service interstate transportation such as some of the ferry terminals and small hub airports. The TSA wouldn't have authority at a rural airport unless there was a flight that originated there and went on to Seattle or outside of the state.

Rich Sewell said that 'the TSA is screening already at most of the hub airports that have jet traffic. The island of Adak has a certificated airport that gets two flights a week and so Alaska Airlines flies out there. They pick up passengers. The TSA officers fly out there on the flight, get off, set up their equipment, screen the passengers, get back on the plane and they fly back to Anchorage.' Ms. Goldsmith commented, 'And we pay for it.' Mr. Sewell added that the agents are paid for their time from the time they leave Anchorage until they return.

Rep. Cissna added that it's also hard to come up with the true cost. She has asked the Commissioner of DOT for the true accounting. 'I want to know what the cost is at the airports that are state property and what is the cost to keep that space out of commercial use and have it used by the TSA. The state flies those agents to Adak. What is the cost? There's more in terms of cost that we're shouldering here. What of the person who is harmed? So many times the state is required to give help to that person who cannot afford it. What are the financial costs and the social costs?'

Mr. Brown's next question had to do with the prohibited items on the TSA list. One is replicas of weapons such as a jeweled belt buckle that looks like a half of a grenade that was confiscated from a woman. He asked when we might 'expect transparency and accountability in the training procedures? The training is secret.' Ms. Goldsmith said 'since none of the SOPs are public, it is really hard to tell.'

Thomas Brown also asked about a recent court decision that stated the TSA did not comply with a public comment period. Ms. Goldsmith responded that 'the court agreed that the SOPs should have gone through the public comment period, but they could have an out because even if the law didn't say that they could be kept confidential, there is another provisional law that would allow them to adopt procedures without going through the comment period. The court didn't offer an opinion as to whether the TSA could use that other legal provision so the court's opinion was a step in the right direction, but it didn't go far enough.'

rays of other people. Even at the airport in Anchorage. There's no private place for a pat-down. They just pat you down in front of everybody and as a victim, that's like, holy cow, that's not good, that's not right. There needs to be more privacy. Another issue, privacy, as a victim you don't want to be put into a room with another man. Even with a lady. A lady can trigger that same touch as the perpetrator and you still have that. You still have that, oh that yuk, for how many days later. Hm. I thank you for hearing other people's cries about this and glad that Linda got ahold of me to come on. It's hard to talk about, because I am a victim of this and I don't, I try to be strong and to be on the health board and try and make things better, but I see these things happening and I don't want to see these things happening to young kids, or to any other victim, to tell you the truth. I'm sorry. I don't mean to cry. This is something true to my heart.'

Senator Olson: "Co-chair Cissna, you can tell by the passion and certainly the upheaval that's going on within, that it's a very hard situation . . . . and we're subject to that because it's the only way we can get in and out of Barrow is by going through a TSA screening."

Rep. Cissna said 'that is one of the hopes that, we have a constitution and that constitution says, in both the state and federal, that freedom is something we have a right to. I was thirteen when a tough experience happened to me and my husband knows how it affected me. So don't apologize. This is happening across the country. It's not any one community, it's nationwide that we're dealing with this. Our state is different in the difficulties we go through and there are so many of us who have to travel a great deal. We don't have a choice. This is a huge problem and it's one you personally are carrying as are many in your community and you're working with those people. What Sen. Olson and I have to do, as elected officials, is, we have to listen to you and we have to do everything in our power to make this right. It's going on across the country and there are enough of us that I think that if we use the laws that exist we can make a difference. That's what I believe. You're giving us working orders. Thank you.'

Roberta Leavitt said, 'It hurts to have to admit it again, but the nightmares have to stop for victims from what they're doing. There's got to be a different way to do it [Security Screening] and it can't be fixed until somebody speaks out. I thank you guys for doing this.'

Sen. Olson said, 'Thanks to people like Roberta, we're starting to see the ill effects of what's happening and we, as legislators, need to take this message to the people we influence and see if we can have it changed. Otherwise there's this whole upheaval that people go through and, as she says, it stays with her for days. This does not do her wellbeing any good.'

Patrick Reinhart, Anchorage, is here to speak from his personal experience with the TSA. He is missing a foot. He does a lot of traveling and has gone through the entire screening process. When they changed the rules, he got tired of it and it just got a little too personal so he now takes his prosthesis, shoe and all, off, puts it on the conveyor belt and walks through on his stump. Once the prosthesis and metal is off his body, he doesn't have to have the additional screening process.

Thomas Brown asked to make a final statement. Mr. Brown said he lived most of his life around terrorist activity abroad. He said he was embarrassed when he went back to Germany this summer. 'You could tell who the Americans were at the airports. They were the ones automatically taking their shoes off and spread eagling so someone could put their hands on them. That's just embarrassing. We're Americans. We should stand for more than that.'

Roberta Leavitt said she had spoken out of personal experience today, they are seeing funding cuts that will take away from the mental health side so they won't be able to address the issues as well as they should. On the personal side, you do have to include the nightmares that come with the touches of those TSA people.'

Rep. Cissna closed the meeting with assurances that this issue will be kept in the forefront.

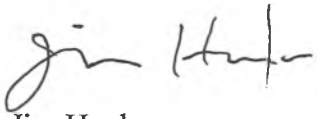
Dear Sir:

Please endorse the bills that Sharon Cissna has proposed to limit TSA. Allow them to be voted on.

Please consider and introduce on your own, hiring a more professional TSA staff for Alaska.

There are alternatives to scanners. What about explosive sniffing dogs? What about training to profile?

Sincerely,



Jim Hanlen

Memorandum

DATE: February 2, 2012
TO: House Judiciary Chair and Committee Members
FROM: Representative Sharon Cissna
RE: Hearing Request for House Bill 262

As the Sponsor of House Bill 262, I would like to respectfully request a hearing in the Judiciary Committee. HB 262 makes it a class A misdemeanor for any person, including a Transportation Security Agent, to condition access to a public building or transportation facility on requiring a person to submit to a physical examination or an electronic process that produces an electronic image of the person that shows body irregularities not normally visible to the public.

In addition to requesting a hearing date for HB 262, I would also request from the Committee a teleconference site and video conferencing equipment in the LIO office in Anchorage. It is anticipated that there will be several representatives from the Alaskans Freedom to Travel, USA group who will be testifying on the many benefits of HB 262.

Thank you for your consideration of this request.

Subject: Support for HB 262 - Passenger Security: Transport Facility

Dear Representative Gatto,

Thank you for scheduling a House Judiciary Committee hearing for HB 262 (Passenger Security: Transport Facility, sponsored by Rep. Sharon Cissna). I strongly support this bill and urge you not only to hear it and pass it to the next committee, but also to co-sponsor it and do whatever you can to ensure it passes during this session.

Please protect Alaskans from being forced to submit to full body scanners that the TSA has refused to have independently tested to document effects on health. Please protect us from being "randomly" or otherwise subjected to a "pat down" that meets the definition of sexual assault under Alaska law, but for the fact that the victim supposedly "consents" to the assault as a condition of boarding a plane. The only way we can protect ourselves from the risks and assaults presented by the TSA is to avoid air travel altogether. This is unrealistic in Alaska where many of us must fly as a condition of our employment, or to get essential medical care, or even to visit our own Legislature. We need you to protect our rights and our bodies from being violated by the TSA by passing HB 262.

Sincerely,

AMENDMENT

OFFERED IN THE HOUSE BY REPRESENTATIVE MUÑOZ

TO: CSHB 267(L&C)

Insert a new bill section to read:

"* Sec. 2. AS 08.88.305 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(b) A person licensed as an associate real estate broker or a real estate salesperson may not be employed to perform activities requiring licensure under this chapter for more than one licensed real estate broker."

Renumber the following bill sections accordingly.

(d) The commission shall mail all notices pertaining to a license or recovery fund action taken under this chapter or a regulation adopted under this chapter to the current address or addresses of a licensee obtained under this section. Proof of notice provided under this subsection satisfies due process notice requirements. (§ 1 ch 95 SLA 1964; am § 14 ch 28 SLA 1974; am § 26 ch 167 SLA 1980; am § 20 ch 45 SLA 1998; am § 7 ch 106 SLA 2004; am §§ 8, 9 ch 113 SLA 2008)

Effect of amendments. — The 2008 amendment, effective March 1, 2010, inserted "in the state" in the last sentence of subsection (a), and substituted "recovery" for "surety" in subsection (d).

Sec. 08.88.300. [Repealed, § 3 ch 95 SLA 1964.]

Sec. 08.88.301. Change of location. Before a real estate broker changes the location of the broker's principal office or of a branch office, the broker shall notify the commission of the new address and any other office changes on a form provided by the commission and pay the applicable fees. (§ 1 ch 95 SLA 1964; am § 15 ch 28 SLA 1974; am § 27 ch 167 SLA 1980; am § 21 ch 45 SLA 1998)

Sec. 08.88.305. Multiple business operations. A person licensed as a real estate broker may own, operate, or be employed by multiple corporations, partnerships, or other business organizations engaging in activities for which a license is required under this chapter, provided that each business organization is registered with the commission, and that the principal offices of all of the business organizations share a single physical address. (§ 7 ch 51 SLA 2007)

Sec. 08.88.310. [Repealed, § 3 ch 95 SLA 1964.]

Sec. 08.88.311. Branch offices. (a) A branch office shall be under the direct supervision of a real estate associate broker whose principal place of business is that office and who is licensed under this chapter. An associate broker may serve in the capacity of direct supervisor at only one office.

(b) A branch office shall bear and be advertised only in the name of the principal office but may also indicate that it is a branch office. (§ 1 ch 95 SLA 1964; am § 8 ch 108 SLA 1970; am § 16 ch 28 SLA 1974; am § 1 ch 174 SLA 1976; am § 22 ch 45 SLA 1998)

Sec. 08.88.320. [Repealed, § 3 ch 95 SLA 1964.]

Sec. 08.88.321. Possession and display of license certificates. (a) The license certificate of a real estate broker shall be displayed in the broker's principal office.

(b) The license certificate of each licensee working in the broker's principal office shall be displayed in that office.

(c) The license certificate of the designated associate broker who is in charge of a branch office and the certificate of each licensee working in a branch office shall be displayed in the branch office indicated as the office of the licensees' employment in the registration required under AS 08.88.291.

(d) Certificates displayed under this section must be displayed where they are available for public clients and customers to verify the current active status of licensees working in the office. (§ 1 ch 95 SLA 1964; am § 23 ch 45 SLA 1998)

Sec. 08.88.330. [Repealed, § 3 ch 95 SLA 1964.]

Sec. 08.88.331. Making of transactions. An active real estate salesperson or associate real estate broker may perform activities for which a real estate license is required only through the real estate broker who employs or contracts with the licensee.

Sec. 08.88.910. Application to independent contractors.

The provisions of this chapter that apply to employment relationships and employees also apply to contracting relationships and independent contractors.

REPRESENTATIVE CATHY MUÑOZ

HB267: Real Estate Sales Licensees

House Bill 267 resolves three areas of concern identified by members of the Alaska Realtors Association. The purpose of the bill is to offer clarity to statutes that regulate real estate activity performed by realtors and the Alaska Real Estate Commission.

First, HB 267 provides the ability for the Alaska Real Estate Commission (AREC) to designate a licensee to administer closing down a real estate brokerage for medical reasons or for violation of law. It allows the AREC to designate a licensed realtor to manage the closing of the brokerage if there is not a licensed broker available to perform the task. State law does not allow the Commission the flexibility to assign this important task to an appropriate, active licensee. As a practical matter and to avoid conflict of interest it is in the best interest of parties involved to allow AREC to designate a licensee to perform these duties.

Next, HB 267 clarifies the intent of the statute that licensed assistants may only work for the brokerage in which they are licensed. This resolves an unintended oversight in current law that could be interpreted to permit a licensed assistant to work in multiple brokerages.

Finally, this bill would allow a licensee to share a portion of their commission with a charity. This would allow a realtor to waive their commission if they are selling property of a charity or to donate a portion of their commission to a charity and not violate AS 08.88.401.

These three changes will help clarify the intent of the law and promote charitable giving.

MEMORANDUM

February 6, 2012

Subject: Change to HB 267 in (H) L&C

There was one change made to HB 267 in the form of an adopted amendment by the House Labor & Commerce Committee on February 6, 2012. This change was due to a drafting oversight. On page 3, line 16: the Alaska Real Estate Commission was incorrectly referred to as a board instead of a commission. The word board was changed to commission.

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to the Real Estate Commission; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 08.88.071(a) is amended to read:

(a) The commission shall

(1) determine whether applicants meet requirements for licenses under this chapter and issue licenses to those who qualify;

(2) prepare and grade examinations;

(3) after hearing, have the authority to suspend or revoke the license of a licensee or impose other disciplinary sanctions authorized under AS 08.01.075 on a licensee who

(A) with respect to a real estate transaction

(i) made a substantial misrepresentation;

(ii) made a false promise likely to influence, persuade, or induce;

(iii) in the case of a real estate broker, pursued a flagrant course of misrepresentation or made a false promise through another real estate licensee;

(iv) has engaged in conduct that is fraudulent or dishonest;

(v) violates AS 08.88.391;

(vi) violates AS 08.88.396;

(B) procures a license by deceiving the commission, or aids another to do so;

(C) has engaged in conduct of which the commission did not have knowledge at the time the licensee was licensed demonstrating the licensee's unfitness to engage in the business for which the licensee is licensed;

(D) knowingly authorizes, directs, connives at, or aids in publishing, distributing, or circulating a material false statement or misrepresentation concerning the licensee's business or concerning real estate offered for sale, rent, or lease, or managed in the course of the licensee's business in this or any other state or concerning the management of an association in the course of a licensee's business in this or another state;

(E) if a real estate broker, wilfully violates AS 08.88.171(d) or 08.88.291;

(F) if an associate real estate broker, claims to be a real estate broker, or, if a real estate salesperson, claims to be a real estate broker or associate real estate broker;

(G) if a real estate broker, employs an unlicensed person to perform activities for which a real estate license is required;

(H) if an employed real estate licensee of a real estate broker, fails immediately to turn money or other property collected in a real estate transaction over to the employing real estate broker; or

(I) fails to carry and maintain errors and omissions insurance with terms and conditions established by the commission under AS 08.88.172;

(4) prosecute, through the Department of Law, violations of the provisions of this chapter or lawful regulations adopted under this chapter;

(5) release for publication in a newspaper of general circulation in the locale of the offending person's principal office registered with the commission notice of disciplinary action taken by the commission against a person licensed under this chapter;

(6) issue a temporary permit to the personal representative of the estate of a deceased real estate broker or to another person designated by the commission with the approval of the personal representative of the estate in order to secure proper administration in concluding the affairs of the decedent broker's real estate business;

(7) issue a temporary permit to a licensee designated by the commission for the purpose of securing proper administration, temporarily managing, or concluding the affairs of the real estate business of a broker if

(A) an investigation produces substantial evidence that the broker has misappropriated trust funds;

(B) the real estate license of the broker is suspended; or

(C) the broker is incapacitated because of a traumatic event or medical condition, as defined in regulations adopted by the commission;

(8) issue a temporary permit to the personal representative of a legally incompetent real estate broker or to another person designated by the commission with the approval of the personal representative of the broker in order to secure proper administration in temporarily managing the real estate business of the broker;

(9) [(8)] establish and periodically revise the form of the seller's property disclosure statement required by AS 34.70.010;

(10) [(9)] have the authority to levy civil fines as established in this chapter;

(11) [(10)] revoke the license of a broker, associate broker, or real estate salesperson who is convicted of a felony or other crime committed while licensed under this chapter that, in the judgment of the commission, affects the ability of that person to practice as a broker, associate broker, or real estate salesperson competently and safely or who is convicted of forgery, theft, extortion, conspiracy to defraud creditors, or fraud; notwithstanding AS 08.88.171, a person whose license is revoked under this paragraph is not qualified to obtain or renew a license under AS 08.88.171(a) - (c) until seven years have elapsed since the person completed the sentence imposed for the conviction.

 Sec. 2. AS 08.88.398 is amended to read:

Sec. 08.88.398. Licensed assistants. A licensed real estate salesperson or licensed associate real estate broker may act as a licensed assistant to another licensed salesperson or associate real estate broker [A REAL ESTATE LICENSEE OTHER THAN THE BROKER WHO EMPLOYS THE SALESPERSON OR ASSOCIATE BROKER] if

(1) the licensed assistant and the salesperson or associate broker are both employed by the same broker;

(2) the employment arrangement between the licensed assistant and the salesperson or associate real estate broker [OTHER LICENSEE] is in writing and conforms to the applicable state and federal regulations regarding employment;

(3) [(2)] the employment of the licensed assistant is approved in writing by the broker who employs both the salesperson or associate real estate broker and [OF THE LICENSEE WHO EMPLOYS] the licensed assistant;

(4) [(3)] the salesperson or associate real estate broker [LICENSEE] who employs the licensed assistant agrees to be responsible for paying the licensed assistant's wages and appropriate taxes and completing the appropriate state and federal tax forms; and

SUBJECT: Sectional Summary for HB 267 (Work Order No. 27-LS1111\M)

TO: Representative Cathy Muñoz
Attn: Terry Harvey

FROM: Hilary Martin
Legislative Counsel

You have requested a sectional summary of the above-described bill.

As a preliminary matter, note that a sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill and the bill itself is the best statement of its contents. If you would like an interpretation of the bill as it may apply to a particular set of circumstances, please advise.

Section 1: Amends AS 08.88.071(a) to require the Real Estate Commission to issue a temporary permit to a licensee designated by the commission to administer, manage, or conclude the affairs of a broker's real estate business if (1) an investigation produces substantial evidence that the broker has misappropriated trust funds, (2) the license of the broker is suspended, or (3) the broker is incapacitated because of a traumatic event or medical condition.

Section 2: Amends AS 08.88.398 to clarify language regarding the role of a licensed real estate salesperson or licensed real estate broker when acting as a licensed assistant to another licensed salesperson or associate real estate broker. It also requires that the licensed assistant and the salesperson or associate broker be employed by the same broker.

Section 3: Allows a licensee to contribute part of a fee, commission, or other compensation received through a real estate transaction to a charitable organization and allows the licensee to advertise the intent to make the charitable donation.

Section 4: Makes the bill effective on July 1, 2012.

FISCAL NOTE

STATE OF ALASKA
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB 267

Analysis

HB 267 allows the Alaska Real Estate Commission to designate a licensee to administer closing down a real estate brokerage for misappropriation of the trust account(s), medical reasons such as broker incapacitation, or suspension of the broker's license. HB 267 clarifies the intent of the statute that licensed assistants may only work for the brokerage in which they are licensed.

This bill has zero fiscal impact on the division.

a licensed. Money is coming from the commissions. The Broker is paid; the commission is dispersed to the non-licensee. Mr. Somers stated that the law whether it's stated clearly or not it implies that the brokerages can receive checks from Title companies as legal entities because it says brokerages can be legal entities. Mr. Somers didn't think that licensees could hold themselves out as legal entities-unless it clears the legal department. Ms. Burke doesn't want to give the impression that the Commission is providing tax advice on legal entities. Ms. Davis and Ms. Swires both stated that they didn't see a problem with paying the licensee's legal entity.

On a motion by DuVal , seconded by Swires, and passed, it was RESOLVED to move for public comment proposed regulation 12 AAC 64.068.

DuVal, Burke, Flyum, Swires, Davis in favor; Mr. Somers opposed. Motion passed.

Brokerage Violations of Outside Brokers. Agenda Item 11(d)
Discuss letter received from Prudential Jack White Vista Broker Gregg Gunnarson conveying his concerns about brokerage offices that are basically "broom closets" but their real office is outside the state and they potentially have never set foot in the state. Mr. DuVal stated that the new language in the proposed regulations may tighten this process and deal with the concern for commerce in the form of commissions leaving the state. Ms. Walsh indicated that she met with Mr. Gunnarson, Mr. Johnson and Mr. Woods who primarily work in commercial real estate. Mr. DuVal thinks that the new regulation that is proposed today will address their concerns. 12 AAC 64.990 defines the term "within the state".

Making of Transactions 08.88.331. Agenda 11(e)
Ms. Jaquie Rosenthal, Broker of ReMax Associates of Fairbanks and North American Properties requested that the Commission consider allowing for her to go back and forth between her two brokerages. Mr. Somers said her question is really can she co-list? Because, person from office A can't walk across the hall to office B and work without co-brokering. Everyone has to have their own files. Chairman Cole said he didn't think she was asking to co-list. He thought Ms. Rosenthal was asking to engage in management contracts with licensees. He indicated that there is language in our regulations (statute) now that you can hire another licensee with a management agreement between that Broker and the licensee and you and that licensee can work for you in your office.

Commission members stopped discussion to address issues with Chief Investigator Quinten Warren.

On a motion by Davis, seconded by Swires, and passed unanimously, it was RESOLVED to go into Executive session Per AS 44.62.310(c) (2).

All in favor; Motion passed.

Into Executive Session: 3:05 p.m.
Out of Executive Session: 4:03 p.m.

On a motion by Davis, seconded by Swires, and passed unanimously, it was

RESOLVED to come out of Executive session

All in favor; motion passed.

Chairman Cole asked the Commission members to look at 08.88.398 Licensed Assistant. He interpreted the statute as allowing for a Broker to hire a licensed person through a contract with that licensee's current Broker. Mr. Somers said maybe it means that, however Mr. Somers indicated that it was put in place by the Legislature to allow for team members to pay a licensee within that team-within that same office. Mr. DuVal said we could go on about this issue for a long time and instead asked that the members look at 08.88.331 Making of a Transaction and answer Ms. Rosenthal's question. Mr. Somers stated that you can't crossover he referenced 08.88.291 that a licensee can do real estate business "only through a principal office or from a branch registered by the broker by whom the licensee is employed." Chairman Cole disagreed with Mr. Somers interpretation of 08.88.398. Mr. DuVal asked the members to focus on Ms. Rosenthal's question and provide her with the answer. Mr. DuVal stated that co-listing was okay. Members said this is acceptable. Brokerages are allowed to co-list. All laws must be followed and consumer pamphlets need to include all licensees involved. Mr. DuVal stated that the lessor would need to agree to both companies involved in leasing the property? Mr. Somers indicated yes and the Broker needs to get the thought out of her head that another licensee from the other company can "go over and help out at the other company". Mr. DuVal stated that there needs to be separate records for each company. Ms. Rosenthal will be advised that brokerages are allowed to co-list properties but their records must be maintained properly and all laws followed by each office. AREC consumer pamphlet will need to list every licensee involved so the seller can see who is representing them. There is no cross-over on maintenance of the files either.

Regulations for Recovery Fund, Agenda Item 11(f)

Commission members reviewed the proposed regulations for approval to continue through the regulation process.

RESOLVED to come out of executive session

All in favor; Motion passed.

Out of executive session 1:10 p.m.

On a motion duly made by Mr. DuVal, seconded by nobody, it was RESOLVED to move into executive session Per AS 44.62.310 (c)(2) to speak with Gayle Horetski, Assistant Attorney General.

Motion was withdrawn.

New Applicants
Kristy Miller
Ms. Horetski introduced herself and thanked the Commission members for taking their time to speak with her. Ms. Wall-Rood gave a quick review of Kristy Miller's application by endorsement regarding the statutes pertaining to that seven years must have lapsed from the date a person completed their sentence imposed upon conviction. Ms. Horetski stated that since the sentence was set aside, in reality there was no sentence. If there is no sentence, the seven years does not apply. Ms. Horetski along with the Commission members reviewed statute 12.55.085 provided by Ms. Wall-Rood which was obtained from the Alaska Legal Resources. Ms. Horetski stated that this is a legal issue and should be researched. She also suggested that the application either should be tabled until the next meeting or grant the application. Ms. Walsh asked if a mail ballot or a teleconference at a later time would be appropriate. Ms. Horetski stated that it is up to the Commission members if they have reviewed the application and came to a decision, the only hesitation is the legal issue that might be okay. Mr. Somers asked if we can throw the seven years issue out or it would be seven years from the conviction if there is no sentence. Ms. Horetski stated that there was no sentence upon the conviction and if the Commission is comfortable with the interpretation that there was no sentence imposed then there is no seven years restriction.

Agenda Item 8a
Statute Review 08.88.398 License Assistant
Ms. Horetski reviewed statute 08.88.398 and House Bill 33 with the Commission regarding a licensed assistant. Ms. Horetski stated that in the statute it doesn't say that there are two different brokers involved. This language was adopted in 1998, in Section 32, Chapter 45. It was originally introduced in 1997 and the language on License Assistant in Section 398 was not in the bill. A series of hearings were held and there was a break in the session. The next version of the bill, which was adopted January 1998 at the next Legislative session, the changes were incorporated over the interim and in that version of the bill the language appeared. In other versions of the bill the language was repeated, it was not altered. Since there is no copy of the memorandum file, all they have to go by is sectional analysis, the bill itself and the statement from the Chair at that time as to what this means. Ms. Horetski apologizes to the Commission that she is not able to provide much assistance regarding this matter.

RE: HB 267 - "An Act relating to the Real Estate Commission; and providing for an effective date."

Dear Representative Munoz,

The Alaska Association of REALTORS® with over 1,600 members statewide would like to express our appreciation for your sponsoring House Bill 267 to address issues of concern to our members. House Bill 267 resolves three problems identified by our members.

First, HB 267 provides the Alaska Real Estate Commission (AREC) to designate a licensee to administer closing down a real estate brokerage for medical reasons or for violation of law. This allows the AREC to designate a licensed Realtor to manage the closing of the brokerage if there is no licensed broker available to perform the task.

Next, HB 267 clarifies the intent of the statute that licensed assistants may only work for the brokerage in which they are licensed. This resolves an untended oversight in current law that could be interpreted to permit a licensed assistant to work in multiple brokerages, which was never intended to be allowed.

Finally, this bill would allow a realtor to share a portion of their commission with a charity. This would allow a realtor to waive their commission if they are selling property of a charity or to donate a portion of their commission to a charity and not violate AS 08.88.401.

We believe these three changes will help clarify the intent of the law and promote charitable giving.

Thank you for your assistance in resolving these issues.

Sincerely,

Joni Schneider

RE: HB 267 - "An Act relating to the Real Estate Commission; and providing for an effective date."

Dear Representative Munoz,

I want to personally thank you for introducing HB 267, which effectively addresses three problem areas as identified by the Alaska Association of Realtors, and the real estate brokerage community.

The bill you introduced allows the Alaska Real Estate Commission the authority to designate a licensee to manage the affairs of a broker who is unable to conduct business either due to medical reasons, or for violation of the statutes and regulations.

It also clearly defines statute, allowing licensed assistants to work only in the brokerage where they are licensed.

Finally, the proposed bill allows licensees to make charitable contributions from their commissions without violating AS 0.88.401.

I know your efforts on behalf of the real estate licensees of the State of Alaska are greatly appreciated. Thank you so much!

Sincerely,

Anita Bates

It was brought to our attention just today by our drafter of 267 that some additional clarifying language could be helpful regarding the licensed assistant only being allowed to work for 1 brokerage at a time. This amendment just came in to us. We would like to offer it on Monday. Terry

MEMORANDUM January 23, 2012

SUBJECT: Sectional Summary for HB 267 (Work Order No. 27-LS1111\M)

TO: Representative Cathy Muñoz
Attn: Terry Harvey

FROM: Hilary Martin
Legislative Counsel

You have requested a sectional summary of the above-described bill.

As a preliminary matter, note that a sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill and the bill itself is the best statement of its contents. If you would like an interpretation of the bill as it may apply to a particular set of circumstances, please advise.

Section 1: Amends AS 08.88.071(a) to require the Real Estate Commission to issue a temporary permit to a licensee designated by the commission to administer, manage, or conclude the affairs of a broker's real estate business if (1) an investigation produces substantial evidence that the broker has misappropriated trust funds, (2) the license of the broker is suspended, or (3) the broker is incapacitated because of a traumatic event or medical condition.

Section 2: Amends AS 08.88.398 to clarify language regarding the role of a licensed real estate salesperson or licensed real estate broker when acting as a licensed assistant to another licensed salesperson or associate real estate broker. It also requires that the licensed assistant and the salesperson or associate broker be employed by the same broker.

Section 3: Allows a licensee to contribute part of a fee, commission, or other compensation received through a real estate transaction to a charitable organization and allows the licensee to advertise the intent to make the charitable donation.

Section 4: Makes the bill effective on July 1, 2012.

MEMORANDUM February 17, 2012

SUBJECT: Legality of restricting real estate agents to one broker (CSHB 267(L&C); Work Order No. 27-LS1111\B)

TO: Representative Carl Gatto
Attn: Melanie Lesh

FROM: Hilary Martin
Legislative Counsel

You have asked me to research the legality of sec. 2 of CSHB 267(L&C), specifically the legality of restricting an agent to one broker. Your request included other questions that are more in the nature of policy decisions (e.g. "too much power?"), and are therefore not addressed in this memo.

Section 2 of CSHB 267(L&C) amends AS 08.88.398, relating to licensed assistants. The amended language allows a licensed real estate salesperson or licensed associate real estate broker to act as a licensed assistant to another licensed salesperson or associate real estate broker if the licensed assistant and the salesperson or associate broker are both employed by the same broker.

Licensing statutes in general restrain a profession, in that certain requirements must be met in order to practice that profession. For example, a dental hygienist may only practice under the supervision of a licensed dentist.[1] The statutes governing electrical and mechanical administrators limit the administrator to working for just one registered contractor.[2]

Assuming that the language of the bill does prohibit a licensee from working for more than one employer, the bill could raise due process concerns. The Alaska Supreme Court has stated that "[a]lthough the right to practice one's profession is protected by the due process clause, it is not 'fundamental,' and it may be regulated so long as those regulations are reasonably related to a legitimate purpose."[3] Therefore, the state would just have to show that the restriction on working just for one broker is reasonably related to a legitimate purpose for the statute to pass a due process analysis.

As a general note for your information, I did discover that at least a few other states restrict the ability of a real estate licensee to work for other brokers. In Minnesota, a "salesperson must be licensed to act on behalf of a licensed broker and may not be licensed to act on behalf of more than one broker in [the] state during the same period of time."[4] In Georgia, a "salesperson or community association manager shall not act as a licensee for any broker other than the broker holding the salesperson's or community association manager's license. . . ."[5] In Nevada, "no real estate broker-salesperson or salesperson may be associated with or employed by more than one broker or owner-developer at the same time."[6]

In a telephone conversation with Melanie on February 16, 2012, she indicated that there was a concern that the bill does not actually restrict a licensed assistant to working for only one broker, and she asked whether the original statutory language is clear that a licensee may only work for one broker at a time.

In my opinion, neither current statutes nor CSHB 267(L&C) is clear about whether a real estate licensee may be employed by more than one broker.

The current language in AS 08.88.398 states: "A licensed real estate salesperson or licensed associate real estate broker may act as a licensed assistant to a real estate licensee other than the broker who employs the salesperson or associate broker. . . ." This language is unclear about who a licensed assistant could work for. The phrase "other than the broker who employs the salesperson or associate broker" could mean a separate broker than the one the licensed assistant currently works for, so that a licensed assistant could work for broker A, and then could work as a licensed assistant for a real estate salesperson who works for broker B, without the licensed assistant being an employee of broker B. The language could also mean that the licensee could work as a licensed assistant for someone in a brokerage that is not the broker. So, a licensed assistant could work for a real estate salesperson and they could both be employees of broker A, but the licensed assistant could not work as a licensed assistant for broker A. The proposed language for this section in CSHB 267(L&C) clarifies that the licensed assistant and the licensed real estate salesperson or associate real estate broker must both work for the same broker. The proposed language would not prevent someone who works for two brokers from working as a licensed assistant to a real estate salesperson or licensed associate real estate broker for each broker. For example, a real estate licensee could work for two brokers, broker A and B. The licensee could be a licensed assistant to a real estate salesperson or associate real estate broker for a person in broker A's office, and then also work as a licensed assistant for someone in broker B's office. The licensed assistant would have to work for both broker A and broker B for this arrangement to comply with the proposed language to AS 08.88.398.

The current perception of some people that there is a prohibition on a licensee working for more than one broker likely comes from the laws and regulations regarding license certificates and the posting of those certificates. In AS 08.88.291(a), a licensed real estate broker must inform the commission of the person's principal office and any real estate licensees employed at that office. Under AS 08.88.321, the license certificate of a real estate broker must be displayed in that broker's principal office, and the license certificate of each licensee working in the broker's principal office shall be displayed in that office. Under AS 08.88.321(d), "certificates displayed under this section must be displayed where they are available for public clients and customers to verify the current active status of licensees working in the office."

Under 12 AAC 64.075(a), a licensee may not be involved in real estate activities until the broker sends a notice of employment to the commission, and the individual's license is delivered to the broker. Under subsection (b), a licensee has to request a license transfer from one broker to another, and the terminating broker must sign and date the front of the license certificate. The licensee has to provide the new employing broker a copy of the signed certificate and complete an application for a license transfer in order to work for the new broker.

The statutes together with the regulations all imply that a licensee may only work for one broker at a time. Although nowhere in statute does it clearly state that a licensee may only work for one broker at a time, current license restrictions, including requiring an application to transfer from one broker to another, strongly imply that a licensee may only work for one broker at a time.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

HENRY S. BARTOS	)	OAH No. 08-0054-REC
	)	Board Case No. 3000-04-012

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Introduction

This is a civil disciplinary proceeding to address alleged misconduct by Henry S. "Hank" Bartos of Fairbanks, Alaska, who holds Real Estate Broker License No. 11409. After a hearing addressing a six-count Accusation, violations of real estate law have been proven with respect to two transactions. The violations support sanctions against Mr. Bartos consisting of a reprimand, a civil fine, and a requirement for remedial training.

A. Procedural History

The Department of Commerce, Community & Economic Development's Division of Corporations, Business and Professional Licensing ("Division") commenced this proceeding by an Accusation issued January 24, 2008. The matter was referred to the Office of Administrative Hearings to conduct a hearing and prepare a recommended decision.

The Chief Administrative Law Judge assigned the case to Administrative Law Judge James T. Stanley. The parties stipulated that the matter would not be heard, nor a recommended decision issued, within the 120-day period normally allowed under AS 44.64.060(d).[1] Mr. Stanley scheduled a hearing in Fairbanks for July of 2008, subsequently delayed at the request of Mr. Bartos to the latter part of August.

Mr. Stanley conducted a four-day hearing, with testimony from sixteen witnesses and approximately 3000 pages of exhibits taken into evidence. Mr. Stanley subsequently resigned from state employment. He was not able to prepare a proposed decision before his employment ended.

[1] As required to make such a stipulation effective (see AS 44.64.060(d)), the Chief Administrative Law Judge concurred.

On January 26, 2009 the Chief Administrative Law Judge assigned the undersigned to complete the case. A telephonic status conference was held on February 13, 2009 to explore with the parties the best way to move forward. Counsel for both sides requested that the undersigned not consult with Mr. Stanley to learn his subjective impressions from the hearing, and this request has been honored.[2]

Counsel for Mr. Bartos requested that all non-telephonic witnesses be heard again in the presence of the new administrative law judge, essentially starting the hearing anew. Counsel for the Division requested that no new testimony be taken and that all credibility judgments be made based on the recorded testimony alone. After listening to the recording and reviewing all of the evidence, I grant the Division's request and deny Mr. Bartos's request.[3]

B. Evidence and Citations

This case encompasses conduct that spans several years. The period straddles significant changes in Alaska's real estate laws. All references in this decision to statutes and regulations, unless otherwise specified, are to the statutes and regulations in effect at the time of the conduct alleged to be illegal in the particular count in question.

All of the proffered exhibits (Division 1-30 and Bartos A-X) were admitted. Objections to Division 5-8, 11, 12, 14-16, 22, and part of 10 were overruled at the hearing; the balance came in without objection.

This is a case governed by the Administrative Procedure Act, AS 44.62.330 – 640.[4] In such cases, relevant hearsay evidence is generally admissible, but it can only be used "to

[2] Apart from casual remarks about the length of the hearing and the fact that the testimony was conflicting, Mr. Stanley did not speak to me about the evidence prior to reassignment nor afterward. I have not seen Mr. Stanley's notes from the hearing. Mr. Stanley left no draft decision.

[3] The recording, while of low quality at times due to electronic interference, is clear enough that I could, with some effort and repeat listening, hear every word of all testimony of all witnesses. I believe the recorded testimony and its relationship to the exhibits gives me a substantial basis on which to make the necessary credibility judgments.

I note that use of a recording by a replacement hearing officer has been deemed sufficient to accord due process to the parties in cases where the person who originally heard the evidence is no longer available. See Chocknok v. State, CFEC, 696 P.2d 669, 676 n.10 (Alaska 1985). Taking further live testimony would impose enormous expense on both sides, and would run the risk of losing accuracy in situations where witnesses would, by virtue of prior rehearsal, be able to better anticipate cross-examination.

I note that it is only Mr. Bartos who desired additional live testimony, and that for the only two allegations on which I am inclined to find against Mr. Bartos I have essentially accepted his testimony, and that of his fact witnesses, at face value. Conversely, while I am inclined to make an important credibility judgment against the Division on the critical Count VI, the Division has made the election not to seek a further opportunity to offer evidence on that count.

supplement or explain direct evidence;" it is "not sufficient by itself to support a finding unless it would be admissible over objection in a civil action."[5] In some cases heard by this office, there is a stipulation or order prior to the hearing that specifies how this restriction will be administered, such as a requirement that hearsay that is not flagged by means of an objection will not be subject to the restriction. There was no arrangement of that kind in this case, and the result is that a number of items in the record, regardless of whether their hearsay nature was addressed in the hearing, are usable only in a supplementary or explanatory role. This is true of the interview transcripts offered by the Division, as well as the expert reports submitted by both sides.

C. Burden of Proof

This is a disciplinary proceeding in which the Division seeks sanctions against an individual who already holds a license. The Administrative Procedure Act places the burden of proof on the Division in such a case.[6] The Division must prove each required element of each violation by a preponderance of the evidence.[7]

II. Overall Factual Background

Henry S. "Hank" Bartos started working in the real estate business in 1987.[8] He passed the examination for a broker's license in 1995 and became a broker shortly thereafter.[9] He remained a licensed broker in good standing at all times through the events at issue in this case.[10]

The events of interest in this case begin in 2002. At that time, Hank Bartos was president and majority shareholder in Hank Bartos Realty, Inc., an Alaska corporation.[11] Lori Schooley, his primary business associate in recent years, was a minority shareholder and the treasurer of that corporation.[12] Hank Bartos Realty, Inc. owned a franchise that did business as Century 21 Gold Rush, which had a main office in central Fairbanks and a branch in North Pole.[13] Mr. Bartos worked from the Fairbanks office and was the broker-in-charge.[14] Ms. Schooley worked in the same office as an associate broker and as franchise-wide office manager. As office manager, her duties included financial management of the overall enterprise.[15]

For a short time beginning in August of 2003, the Century 21 franchise operated a second branch on the west side of Fairbanks.[16] Although there was some testimony about them at the hearing, the North Pole and west side branches are not relevant to any of the counts of the Accusation.

In 2003 Hank Bartos Realty, Inc. acquired a new franchise to open a Coldwell Banker office in Fairbanks. Coldwell Banker is a different real estate brand from Century 21, although both national master franchises were owned at that time by a single entity, Cendant Corporation. There is some precedent in Alaska for a single local entity or person to own two real estate franchises operating under different names.[17] The acquisition of a different brand occurred with knowledge of Cendant Corporation and of the Division (then called the Division of Occupational Licensing).[18] The Coldwell Banker office opened in early January of 2004, with Lee O'Hare as the supervising broker.[19] Its registered name was Coldwell Banker Gold Country.[20]

The Century 21 and Coldwell Banker offices held joint sales meetings. As is the case in MLS (Multiple Listing Service) meetings attended by licensees from many real estate offices, there is a potential for client confidences to be divulged during such multi-office meetings, and some participants were concerned about this possibility.[21] On the other hand, the joint sales meetings had the potential to be of great benefit to clients by getting the word out about properties on the market, and these Century 21-Coldwell Banker meetings began at a time when MLS was not as active as it might be in accomplishing that function.[22]

Financial management of the Coldwell Banker office, such as payment of commission checks and operation of a central trust account, fell under the overall office manager duties of Lori Schooley, the treasurer of the holding company.[23] Coldwell Banker transaction files were duplicated and held both at Coldwell Banker and at a common storage site with Century 21,[24] although there is no evidence that Century 21 licensees had access to Coldwell Banker files or vice versa.

On April 5, 2004 Lee O'Hare resigned as broker at the Coldwell Banker office.[25] Lori Schooley registered as broker of record for Coldwell Banker Gold Country in her stead, remaining in that capacity until 2006.[26]

When he began to contemplate operating a Coldwell Banker franchise, it was Hank Bartos's plan to operate it through a limited liability company called Gold Standard Real Estate Services, LLC. Both he and Schooley seem to have begun to think of Hank Bartos Realty, Inc. as "Gold Standard" by 2004. The actual process of setting up the LLC was unhurried, however, and it was not organized until August of 2005. It apparently took over the franchises of the previous holding company within the next year or two. Ownership percentages in the new holding company were essentially unchanged, with Bartos holding a 70% interest and Schooley the remainder.[27]

III. The Counts of the Accusation

A. Count I (Role of Lori Schooley)

The first count of the accusation is premised on the allegation that Lori Schooley continued to function as Hank Bartos's "licensed assistant" at Century 21 after she became the broker at Coldwell Banker in April of 2004. (As will be discussed in part III-A-2, a "licensed assistant" is a real estate licensee who acts as a subordinate assisting another licensee with transactions by performing duties for which a license is required.) The division contends that such an arrangement would place Bartos, as the broker of the Century 21 office, in violation of five legal requirements.

1. Facts

Lori Schooley registered as broker of the Coldwell Banker Gold Country office on April 7, 2004.[28] She remained in that capacity until late 2006 or early 2007. There is no dispute that, concurrently with her work as broker at Coldwell Banker, she continued as the administrative office manager for all of the offices owned by Hank Bartos Realty, Inc., overseeing the staff support in those offices and writing checks for office disbursements.[29] It is also undisputed that she continued to administer the business of the holding company, Hank Bartos Realty, Inc., of which she was the treasurer.[30] She was paid a salary for this work.[31] The disputed factual question is whether Ms. Schooley also functioned as a "licensed assistant" to Mr. Bartos in connection with the transactions of Century 21 Gold Rush. There were several discrete elements of the Division's case addressed to this issue. They will be numbered so they can be referred to easily in later discussion.

(1) Check and business card, May 2004. The Division proved that on May 3, 2004 (shortly after she had assumed the Coldwell Banker duties), Lori Schooley wrote a check on the general account bearing a Century 21 logo to pay a former Century 21 salesperson for a commission earned on a Century 21 transaction.[32] The Division proved that on that occasion Ms. Schooley included with the check a business card showing herself as a Century 21 "sales associate."[33]

(2) Write up offer, August 2004. The Division proved that on one occasion in August of 2004, Hank Bartos agreed with a Century 21 client upon an offer that the client wished to present, but was unable to get together with the client before going out of town for a short time. He asked Schooley to meet with the client and write up and present the offer on his behalf, and she did so; he then completed the rest of the transaction.[34] Coldwell Banker was already the listing office in the transaction.

(3) Occasional substitute broker. The Division proved that Ms. Schooley infrequently filled in as supervising broker at Century 21 when Bartos was out of town for short periods, primarily on occasional weekends in the summer when Bartos liked to attend dog shows.[35]

(4) Kendrick Court transaction, 2005. The Division proved that Ms. Schooley became involved in a mid-2005 transaction involving 389 Kendrick Court in Fairbanks, even though Coldwell Banker Gold Country was neither the listing nor selling office for the property. She acted on behalf of Century 21 Gold Rush, the listing office. The Kendrick Court property was one that had come into the Century 21 inventory before Schooley went to Coldwell Banker, and so she was familiar with it.[36]

389 Kendrick Court was a Cendant Corporation relocation property. These were properties for which Cendant, then the owner of the master franchises for both Century 21 and Coldwell Banker, had a contractual commitment (typically to an employer such as Alyeska Pipeline) to relocate the owner, market the property, and buy the property if it did not sell.[37] Cendant relocation properties required unique procedures and paperwork, for which Schooley had special training.[38] Cendant knew her and wanted to work with her.[39] 389 Kendrick Court had permafrost problems and seems to have been a difficult property to market, and Cendant appears to have been a disgruntled client.[40]

Schooley was extensively involved in the transaction, working closely with Cendant over a period of several months,[41] making herself available to discuss a pending offer,[42] and even stating on one occasion that "I [Schooley] will be happy to reassign this property to another agent within Century 21 Gold Rush."[43] In correspondence with Cendant, Century 21 staff referred to her as Hank Bartos's "assistant."[44]

(5) Commission sharing. Perhaps the most arresting item of proof offered by the Division on the "licensed assistant" issue was a transcript of sworn testimony Hank Bartos gave in a deposition on September 27, 2005.[45] On that occasion, Bartos testified as follows:

> Q. (by Mr. Wallace) You make any money as a broker for Century 21 Gold Rush?
> A. No.
> Q. Have you ever?
> A. Yes. From time to time.

A. Again, I don't understand the question. You know, the way I get paid is when I do a transaction, I don't pay any cost to the agency. My advertising fees and everything else is paid by the agency.

If a transaction that I'm involved in closes, then I get a – you know, whatever that commission split is, split with Schooley on a 70/30 basis.

Q. Is Lori Schooley a broker?

A. Yes.

Q. . . . Does Lori Schooley get paid, make any money as a broker for Century 21 Gold Rush?

A. She gets paid a 30 percent of transactions that I do, and she gets paid a monthly stipend for the number of hours that she puts in. She's also the supervising broker at Coldwell Banker. And since we couldn't pay her, we gave her 30 percent of the business.

Q. But the business itself doesn't make any money, right?

A. Well, that's – that's – that's the facts. Hopefully, it won't always be that way, but that's – that's the way it is in this competitive market. You'll find that most real estate brokers in this town don't make a lot of money.[46]

Read literally, this testimony seems to indicate that Ms. Schooley shared directly in Hank Bartos's Century 21 commissions in 2005, a year when she was the broker at Coldwell Banker.

At the hearing in this case, Bartos flatly denied that this was so:

Q. (by Mr. Auth) [Quotes deposition testimony] Is that correct?

A. Well it depends on how you're looking at it. As a Century 21 broker, if I had been in a transaction and she assisted on it, she would get paid 30 percent of my transactions. But when she became the broker over at Coldwell Banker, that ceased. She – she was not my assistant anymore and she didn't get paid anything for transactions.

Q. Well this deposition was taken at the time when Schooley was the broker at Coldwell Banker, correct? September 27, 2005, correct?

A. Yes. But, she was not my assistant, and – she got paid a salary for being the broker then. She didn't get 30 percent, you know, of my commissions. She got 30 percent ownership in the company, that was her compensation. But she got the short end of that stick because the company has never made a profit.

Q. But you say in the answer, in the present tense, she gets paid a 30 percent of transactions that I do. That's what you said in the deposition. Correct?

A. When she was -- was my assistant.

[46] Ex. 4 at REC 174-5. As an admission, the deposition testimony is not hearsay and is not subject to the restriction on hearsay in AS 44.62.460(d).

Q. That's not what you say there. You're speaking in the present tense.

A. Well, I think you need to look at the big picture and what the big question was. It – I didn't read it, hear it that way. She got 30 percent of the company because I couldn't pay her what she was worth. She was not my assistant, she was not getting 30 percent of my transactions. I -- I don't know what I need to do to make that any clearer.[47]

The Division did not ask Lori Schooley, the financial person for Hank Bartos Realty, Inc., about whether or in what way she shared in Century 21 commissions after she went to Coldwell Banker. It did not use Commission subpoena power or other means to obtain financial records that would put the question to rest. Although the question is close, I find that the Division did not prove that Lori Schooley shared in Hank Bartos's Century 21 commissions after she became broker at Coldwell Banker, except insofar as she received indirect benefit as a shareholder in the holding company.

2. Analysis

The Division contends that Lori Schooley served as Hank Bartos's "licensed assistant" at Century 21 after she became broker at Coldwell Banker. Alaska real estate law refers to "licensed assistants," but does not define the term.[48] From the context, the term denotes a person who, in a subordinate role, assists another person who also holds a real estate license with transactions by performing duties "for which a license is required."[49]

The Division proved items (1) through (4) above, failing to prove item (5). Items (1) through (3) cannot fairly be said to place Lori Schooley in the role of Hank Bartos's licensed assistant. Item (1) showed only that Schooley, the treasurer of Hank Bartos Realty, Inc., wrote the checks for all of the affiliated entities, including Century 21 Gold Rush—not an activity requiring a license—and that on one occasion only a few weeks after her move, she used an outdated business card. Item (2), although it presented problems that will be addressed in another count, fundamentally put her in the role of a fellow broker filling in for Bartos while he was out of town, not in the role of a licensed assistant. Item (3) placed her in the traditional role of a broker watching another broker's office during a brief absence. There was uncontroverted testimony at the hearing that this is a common arrangement,[50] and it is one that the Commission's regulations appear to contemplate;[51] in any event, the arrangement did not make Schooley a licensed assistant.

Item (4) did place Schooley in the licensed assistant role, albeit in only a single transaction. In the Kendrick Court transaction Schooley functioned as, and was held out as, Hank Bartos's "assistant" as she performed functions, including some requiring licensure, over the course of several months. Bartos was not unavailable during this entire period and she was not serving as his substitute. The remainder of this discussion will focus on the legality of the licensed assistant arrangement proven in item 4.

Violation of AS 08.88.398. This is the only provision of law directly addressing licensed assistants. It allows a salesperson or associate broker to "act as a licensed assistant to a real estate licensee other than the broker who employs the salesperson or associate broker" if four conditions are met, including that the employment arrangement be "in writing" and that it be "approved in writing by the broker of the licensee who employs the assistant."[52] The Division apparently alleges that Schooley's arrangement with Bartos violated AS 08.88.398 because it did not comply with these two of the four conditions.[53]

The problems with this legal theory are several. First, the Division did not inquire whether Schooley and Bartos's employment arrangement, if any, was in writing, and did not prove that it was not. Second, the Division also did not prove that Hank Bartos's broker—who would be Hank Bartos himself—did not approve the arrangement in writing. Third and most fundamentally, AS 08.88.398 only regulates the circumstances under which associate brokers and salespeople can act as licensed assistants; it speaks to the consensual arrangement between supervising brokers that must accompany such an arrangement. Lori Schooley was neither an associate broker nor a salesperson, but rather was a broker in her own right. AS 08.88.398 does not address or regulate the circumstance where a broker acts as licensed assistant to another broker. This does not mean that it is always permissible for brokers to enter into such an arrangement, but any illegality does not flow from AS 08.88.398.

[51] 12 AAC 64.077 refers to "the broker or an associate broker designated by the registered broker to supervise transactions or licensees during the broker of record's absence." This regulation requires notification of the Commission if this designated broker is to "sign for the broker of record on a license application," but it does not otherwise require Commission involvement in such temporary coverage arrangements.

Violation of AS 08.88.291. Closer to the mark is the Division's reliance on the basic requirements found in AS 08.88.291(a). That provision required Hank Bartos, as the registrant of the Century 21 Gold Rush office, to "inform the commission of . . . the names of the real estate licensees who are employed at each office." When Bartos permitted Schooley to function as a licensed assistant with respect to the Kendrick Court transaction, he did not amend his registration to indicate that she was doing the work of the Century 21 office,[54] creating a potential problem with this requirement. However, it has not been established that he employed Lori Schooley in connection with this work, and the reporting requirement in AS 08.88.291(a) relates to licensees "employed" at each office. As used in AS 08.88, "employ" ordinarily seems to denote to hire for compensation.[55] It has only been established that Lori Schooley was compensated for her work as a broker at Coldwell Banker and for her office management duties. Her ad hoc assistance on the troublesome and unusual Kendrick Court transaction may have been uncompensated, and thus may have been performed simply as one broker assisting another as a courtesy. A single transaction conducted on that basis would not violate AS 08.88.291(a).

Violation of AS 08.88.321(b). This statute requires that the "license certificate of each licensee working in the broker's principal office shall be displayed in that office." The Division has specifically alleged that Bartos violated this provision in connection with Schooley's role. However, the Division did not seek, and did not obtain, any testimony about whether Schooley's license was displayed at Century 21.[56] Insofar as we can tell, moreover, Schooley did most or virtually all of the Kendrick Court work from the Coldwell Banker office.[57] The Division made no effort to prove otherwise.

Violation of 12 AAC 64.075(a). This regulation prohibits an individual from being involved in "activities requiring licensure under AS 08.88 until the individual's employing broker signs and delivers to the commission a notice of employment of the individual and the individual's license certificate is delivered to the broker by the licensee or the commission." The

55 No variant on the word "employ" is defined in the chapter, but the word is used in at least one context that clearly involves compensation: AS 08.88.398(3) (licensed assistant may only be employed if person assisted takes responsibility for "wages and appropriate taxes").

56 It might be quite reasonable to speculate that it was not, but in the absence of any evidence, no finding can be made. It is the Division's responsibility to establish each element of every violation it alleges.

prohibition is directed at individuals who have "employing brokers." Thus, if Schooley was indeed employed by Bartos in connection with Kendrick Court, there might conceivably be a violation by Schooley. The regulation is not directed at the employing broker, and therefore there could not be a violation of this particular regulation by Bartos.

Violation of 12 AAC 64.110(e)(6). 12 AAC 64.110(e) requires brokers, "before operating any office or branch office, [to] register the office or branch office with the commission on a form provided by and approved by the commission." Subparagraph (6), the provision the Division alleges that Mr. Bartos violated, requires the broker to place on that form the "name and license number of all licensees employed by the broker at the office." As noted above, the Division did not prove that Ms. Schooley was "employed" at the Century 21 office.

Summary regarding Count I: In connection with the conduct at issue in Count I, the Division has not shown that, in the single proven instance where Lori Schooley acted as Hank Bartos's licensed assistant, her role represented a violation of any existing legal stricture that applied to Hank Bartos.

B. Count II (Role of Noelle Childress)

Count II focuses on an arrangement by which a real estate salesperson at the Coldwell Banker office conducted Century 21's property management business for a time. The Division contends that Hank Bartos's responsibility for this arrangement placed him in violation of six statutes and regulations.

1. Facts

From early 2005 until approximately December of 2006, Noelle Childress was a licensed real estate salesperson who hung her license at Coldwell Banker Gold Country, under the supervision of Lori Schooley. Nonetheless, beginning in December of 2005 and continuing for the ensuing year, she performed all property management duties for the Century 21 franchise.[58] The work included attempting to rent real property and collection of rents from tenants of real property.[59] The Coldwell Banker franchise did no property management work; all property management work Ms. Childress did was Century 21 work.[60]

60 Cross-exam of Schooley; see also Ex. 13 at REC 726 (Century 21 ads for rental properties listing Childress as the contact).

It is undisputed that Ms. Childress physically performed this work at and from the Coldwell Banker office, not at or from the Century 21 office.[61] She began doing the work when Century 21 lost its property manager and no licensees in that office wanted to take over the task, with the expectation that it would be a temporary arrangement.[62] Either before or quite soon after she took over, Bartos and Schooley made a business decision to phase out the property management work. Century 21 divested most of the property management business, retaining about ten properties that either belonged to Hank Bartos or belonged to Stryker Brigade personnel deployed to Iraq, whom Bartos and Schooley did not wish to burden with the task of finding a new property manager.[63] The phase-out was prolonged somewhat by the extension of the Stryker deployment,[64] and was not complete by the end of 2006.[65] During the phase-out period, the work consumed about ten hours per week of Ms. Childress's time.[66]

Although the question was never explored directly at the hearing, one must infer that Ms. Childress did the Century 21 property management work at Hank Bartos's behest. The direct instruction to Ms. Childress to do so came from Lori Schooley and a person named Mike Cooper.[67] However, in his testimony Mr. Bartos referred to the arrangement as something "we did" as a "joint venture" between the brokerages because "I" [Bartos] did not wish to leave a soldier in Iraq without a manager.[68] Moreover, as the broker of the Century 21 office, Mr. Bartos would have had ultimate control over the handling of the Century 21 property management contracts.

2. Analysis

The Division has suggested six legal provisions that, in its view, Bartos violated by his involvement in the property management arrangement. They are addressed one at a time below.

Violation of AS 12.64.550(a). The work Noelle Childress did for Century 21 from December 2005 to December 2006, which included attempting to rent real property and collection of rents from real property for others, involved property management real estate transactions for which a real estate license is required.[69] Since 1994, a Board regulation, 12 AAC 64.550, has required that "[a] licensee engaged in property management shall conduct property management activity in the registered name of the real estate company with which the licensee is affiliated."[70] There are no exceptions to this requirement for short-term assignments, part-time work, winding down a business, or any other circumstance (these circumstances may affect how much discipline, if any, should be imposed, but they do not bear on the underlying legality of the conduct). In 2005-2006, the "registered name" of the real estate company with which Noelle Childress was affiliated was Coldwell Banker Gold Country.[71] Accordingly, Noelle Childress was prohibited by regulation from doing Century 21's property management work—and working in name of Century 21—while she hung her license at Coldwell Banker.

In this discipline case the sole respondent is Hank Bartos, and therefore the question is whether Mr. Bartos's conduct in this arrangement, as opposed to that of Noelle Childress, was contrary to 12 AAC 64.550. The first question is whether that regulation applies to Bartos at all, since he is a broker and would not in common parlance be referred to as a real estate "licensee," and the regulation only restricts "licensees." In the real estate statutes and their implementing regulations, the term "licensee" encompasses brokers "unless the context clearly excludes brokers."[72] The context of 12 AAC 64.550, the regulation requiring licensees to "conduct property management activity in the registered name of the real estate company with which the licensee is affiliated" does not clearly exclude brokers, and therefore Hank Bartos was subject to the regulation's restrictions.

It does not follow, however, that Mr. Bartos violated the regulation. Hank Bartos caused the property management activities contracted to his office, Century 21 Gold Rush, to be managed by Noelle Childress at the Coldwell Banker office. Had Childress managed them in the name of Coldwell Banker, there might be a violation of this regulation by Bartos (and none by Childress). But Childress managed them in the name of Century 21, which was in fact the "registered name of the real estate company with which" Bartos was affiliated. Thus, Bartos did not, directly or indirectly, conduct property management activity in the registered name of any real estate company other than the one with which he was affiliated. Hence, the circumstances proved by the Division do not represent a violation of 12 AAC 64.550 by Mr. Bartos.

Violation of 12 AAC 64.550(b). This subsection provides, in relevant part, that "[a] licensee may not conduct property management activity for another person without a prior written property management contract." No evidence was presented at the hearing to show that any properties were managed without prior written property management contracts.

Violation of 12 AAC 64.075(a). This regulation prohibits an individual from being involved in "activities requiring licensure under AS 08.88 until the individual's employing broker signs and delivers to the commission a notice of employment of the individual and the individual's license certificate is delivered to the broker by the licensee or the commission." The prohibition is directed at individuals who have "employing brokers." Noelle Childress was such an individual, but Hank Bartos was not.

Violation of 12 AAC 64.110(e)(6). 12 AAC 64.110(e) requires brokers, "before operating any office or branch office, [to] register the office or branch office with the commission on a form provided by and approved by the commission." Subparagraph (6), the provision the Division alleges that Mr. Bartos violated, requires the broker to place on that form the "name and license number of all licensees employed by the broker at the office." The Division has not explained how Bartos may have violated this provision. To be sure, in registering the Century 21 office at which he was broker, he did not list Ms. Childress as a licensee employed by him at that office. But Ms. Childress was not a licensee employed by him, nor was she at that office. This circumstance forms part of the reason that her activity was illegal—for her—under 12 AAC 64.550(a), but there was no violation of 12 AAC 64.110(e)(6) by Bartos when he accurately failed to list her as a licensee employed by him at the Century 21 office.

Violation of AS 08.88.321(b). This statute requires that the "license certificate of each licensee working in the broker's principal office shall be displayed in that office." It is undisputed that Ms. Childress, during the relevant period, was working in the Coldwell Banker office. There is no evidence that her license certificate was not displayed there.

Violation of AS 08.88.291(a). The first sentence of AS 08.88.291(a) reads: "A person licensed as a real estate broker shall, by registering with the commission, inform the commission of the person's principal office and of any branch offices of the person's real estate business and include in the information the names of the real estate licensees who are employed at each office." Hank Bartos appears to have done this during the relevant period,[73] or if he did not, any failure was not related to the Childress work at issue in Count II.

The second sentence of AS 08.88.291(a) reads: "A real estate licensee may do real estate business only through a principal office or from a branch office registered by the broker by whom the licensee is employed." By doing real estate business "through" the Century 21 office, Noelle Childress may have violated this provision. The provision is a prohibition that only addresses licensees. Although, as noted above, the term "licensees" in AS 08.88 ordinarily encompasses brokers, it does not encompass brokers if "the context clearly excludes brokers."[74] With respect to this particular sentence of § 291(a), the context clearly excludes brokers because the sentence is about licensees "employed" by a "broker." Thus, the sentence does not apply to Hank Bartos, a broker.

The final sentence of AS 08.88.291(a) reads: "Failure of a real estate broker to maintain a place of business or to inform the commission of its location and the names and addresses of all real estate licensees employed at each location by the broker is grounds for the suspension or revocation of the broker's license." This sentence applies to Bartos, but he appears to have complied with it during the relevant period.[75]

Summary regarding Count II: In connection with the conduct at issue in Count II, the Division appears to have proved impermissible activity by Noelle Childress.[76] It has not, however, shown that any of the conduct represented a violation of any existing legal stricture that applied to Hank Bartos. It may be regrettable that Mr. Bartos would place one of Ms. Schooley's licensees in a position where the licensee would be out of compliance with the laws that applied to the licensee, but there does not seem to have been a statute or regulation on the books in 2005-2006 that would expose Mr. Bartos to discipline for doing so.

C. Count III, First Allegation (Website)

Count III is almost entirely devoted to a 2004 transaction regarding Sprucewood Court No. 13 in Fairbanks. That transaction is addressed in Part III-D below. A sentence early in the count raises a different issue, however: it alleges that "the website for Coldwell Banker at one time identified Bartos as the 'owner/broker,' even though he was the broker of Century 21 only." This is said to be an example of treating Coldwell Banker and Century 21 "as one company with several branches."[77]

1. Facts

At some point prior to May of 2006, the Coldwell Banker Gold Country website listed "Hank Bartos" as "Owner/Broker."[78] It also listed Lori Schooley as "Managing Broker."[79] The site displayed the Coldwell Banker name and logo, but apparently did not contain any reference to Century 21.

There is no evidence regarding how long the website persisted in this form; the evidence establishes only that it appeared this way at one unspecified instant in time. There is no evidence regarding who caused the website to display Mr. Bartos as "Owner/Broker," or regarding whether Mr. Bartos was aware of what was on the website. The Division neither sought nor obtained any testimony on these matters during the hearing.

2. Analysis

A real estate licensee may not "falsely claim to be licensed and authorized to practice under this chapter."[80] Mr. Bartos, though licensed, was not authorized to practice as the broker of the Coldwell Banker office. Therefore, the claim on the Coldwell Banker website was false. The evidence does not establish, however, that it was Mr. Bartos who made the claim.

A real estate licensee may not advertise real estate "without including in the advertisement the broker's business name registered with the department."[81] If the Coldwell Banker website advertised real estate (it seems reasonable to speculate that it did, but there is no evidence of that fact in the record), then it did so without including Mr. Bartos's business name that was registered with the department. The evidence does not establish, however, that Mr. Bartos was responsible for placing this advertisement.

Because of the lack of evidence connecting Mr. Bartos to the appearance of the Coldwell Banker website at the one, perhaps fleeting, moment in time when it displayed his name, no violation has been established.

D. Count III, Second Allegation (Sprucewood Court)

1. Facts

In the summer of 2004, Coldwell Banker Gold Country was the listing office for a condominium unit at Sprucewood Court in Fairbanks. Bill Burrows was the listing agent. The testimony at the hearing gave a detailed history of the listing, but only the following facts are relevant to the violations alleged in the Accusation.

The seller was William St. Pierre. After entertaining prior offers from prospective buyers Nancy Viale and Eric Morman, St. Pierre eventually accepted a second offer from Viale. The executed Purchase Agreement listed Coldwell Banker Gold Country as the listing office and Bill Burrows as listing agent; it listed Century 21 Gold Rush as the selling office and "Lori Schooley/ Hank Bartos" on the line for selling agent.[82] Schooley, of course, was also the associate broker in charge of Mr. Burrows's office.

Ms. Schooley wrote the offer that became the Earnest Money Agreement and Purchase Agreement while she was "filling in" for Mr. Bartos when he was out of town.[83] She did so at Hank Bartos's express request; he asked, "Would you in my stead have this offer signed and presented."[84] Bartos handled the rest of the transaction on his own.[85]

The second page of the Earnest Money Agreement and Purchase Agreement was entitled "Consensual Dual Agency Agreement."[86] It provided that "The Buyer and Seller hereby give their consent to dual agency . . . . One company, C-21 Gold Rush/Coldwellbanker, will be representing the interests of both parties to this agreement." There was a boldface line, "I hereby consent to Consensual Dual Agency as described above," below which Viale signed as buyer and "L Schooley for Hank Bartos" signed as her "agent." No one signed on behalf of the seller on the signature line under the consent language, but St. Pierre entered his initials at the bottom of the document.

Lower down on the page there was a section beginning, "THE FOLLOWING AGENCY IS HEREBY CONFIRMED". It recited:

☒ SELLER AND BUYER (DUAL AGENCY)

Two boxes were marked. As shown above, the marks were machine-made rather than handwritten exes. Viale and "L Schooley for Hank Bartos" signed on the buyer and selling agent lines below this disclosure; the seller and listing agent lines were unsigned. As noted previously, St. Pierre initialed the bottom of the page.

This document was prepared by Ms. Schooley when she was representing the buyer in Hank Bartos's stead.[87] She checked the two boxes deliberately, apparently using the first to capture her view of the role of the Century 21 office and the second because of the "umbrella" (her word) role of the holding company.[88] Coldwell Banker agent Burrows acknowledged at the hearing that the document was confusing.[89] He did not spend much time reviewing it since this was a second offer from Viale and since he would have assumed his broker knew how to fill the form out correctly.[90]

The file did contain a document with St. Pierre's full signature that related to dual agency. This was an "Agency Disclosure" that St. Pierre and Burrows signed at the time of listing.[91] It described three kinds of agency—agent of the seller, agent of the buyer, and dual agency—and then had the following "Acknowledgement of Agency Disclosure:"

_____ of Coldwell Banker Gold Country will be working with me as (check one):

☐ a seller's agent, exclusively

☐ a buyer's agent, exclusively

☒ a dual agent, provided the other principal party agrees in writing.

The blank was not filled in. The ex was handwritten on this document. St. Pierre and Burrows were the only signatories. The signatures were dated April 28, 2004. At that time, the Century 21 office was not involved with the property; its involvement came later, when Viale entered the picture as a potential buyer.

The seller, William St. Pierre, was an experienced buyer and seller of real estate. He expressly discussed with Mr. Burrows the fact that "one company" was representing both buyer and seller in the final transaction, and he can be expected to have understood the dual agency role.[92] The buyer, Nancy Viale, had previously dealt with Ms. Schooley in an express dual agency situation (an earlier offer Viale had submitted on Sprucewood Court without Century 21 involvement) and she understood both Ms. Schooley's position as Burrows' supervisor and the fact that Century 21 and Coldwell Banker were co-owned.[93]

2. Analysis

Count III alleges the following illegal conduct by Bartos regarding the Sprucewood Court transaction:

(i) that Bartos had a conflict of interest because $2100 went to Coldwell Banker and $2100 to Century 21 in the transaction, and they failed to disclose that conflict;

(ii) that Bartos participated in a dual agency relationship with the buyer and seller but failed to disclose the dual agency.

For reasons that will become apparent, these two allegations will be evaluated in reverse order.

Disclosure of dual agency. In the Sprucewood Court transaction, Hank Bartos purported to be representing the buyer, and he delegated the initial stage of the transaction to Lori Schooley. The evidence is uncontroverted that he had given her authority to act and sign on his behalf.[94] Accordingly, he is responsible for her conduct. In so acting in his stead, she was doing more than the ministerial task of simply signing a document Bartos had prepared based on his authorization. She was developing the document herself, meaning that she was performing skilled professional services on behalf of Ms. Viale.

Since Lori Schooley was also Mr. Burrows's supervising broker, and Burrows represented the seller, she was on both sides of the transaction, and a dual agency existed. Alaska Statute 08.88.396 governed such relationships at the time of the Sprucewood Court transaction.[95] That statute permitted a licensee to represent both the prospective seller and prospective buyer "only after the licensee informs both the seller . . . and the buyer . . . of the dual agency representation and obtains written consent to the dual agency representation from both principals."[96]

Ms. Schooley, on Mr. Bartos's behalf, did make a timely written dual agency disclosure at the outset of this transaction. It claimed, however, both that Mr. Bartos was representing "the buyer, exclusively" and "seller and buyer (dual agency)." These are contradictory statements, and they render the disclosure defective. Moreover, Ms. Schooley did not obtain, as the statute requires, "written consent to the dual agency representation from both principals." She obtained a signature only from the buyer. The seller's signature line under the sentence "I hereby consent to Consensual Dual Agency as described above" has been left blank.

Ms. Schooley explains the missing consent from St. Pierre by speculating that "maybe Bill [Burrows] forgot" to get the signature.[97] It was not fundamentally Burrows's responsibility to get the signature, however. The statute requires the licensee who will have the dual agency role to "obtain[]" the needed consent, and it was the Schooley/Bartos combination who were acting in the dual agency role.

Counsel for Mr. Bartos appears to suggest that the April 28, 2004 "Agency Disclosure" that St. Pierre and Burrows signed suffices as a written consent by St. Pierre.[98] That document, though not completely filled out and thus perhaps of no value at all, was at most only a consent for Burrows and Coldwell Banker to assume a dual agency role in certain circumstances. It did nothing to authorize Century 21, Hank Bartos, or Lori Schooley as Hank Bartos's designated representative (and thus acting for Century 21), to assume a dual agency role.

96 AS 08.88.396(c).

98 See Ex. 20 at REC 1128, discussed above.

99 This conclusion and the one regarding AS 08.88.391 that follows immediately below were reached without reliance on the testimony of either side's expert witness at the hearing. The Division's expert provided little analysis of this transaction, and seemed not to have read one of the controlling statutes carefully. Mr. Bartos's expert gave a blanket opinion that Bartos and Schooley had acted correctly in the transaction, and then admitted on cross-examination that he had not reviewed the transaction documents before rendering the opinion. Reviewing the fully-executed Earnest Money Agreement and Purchase Agreement (Ex. 20 at REC 1111 to 1119) on the stand, he vehemently maintained that it was merely the buyer's offer, repeatedly overlooking the seller's initials on every page and the seller's signature on REC 1118. The opinion of such an expert is not helpful in an adjudicative proceeding.

Conflict of interest. Alaska Statute 08.88.391 is the provision the Division alleges Mr. Bartos violated by failing to disclose a conflict of interest. At the time of the transaction, AS 08.88.391(c) defined a "conflict of interest" as follows:

> In this section, "conflict of interest" is when a licensee
> (1) has a present ownership or leasehold interest in the property that is the subject of a transaction;
> (2) is whole or part owner of a business interest in the property being marketed or considered for purchase or lease;
> (3) represents a relative, as defined in AS 08.88.900(a), or a person with whom the licensee has a financial relationship if the relative or person has a present financial interest in the property being marketed or considered for purchase or lease;
> (4) receives compensation from someone other than a party to the contract or another party having a financial interest in the transaction;
> (5) receives compensation for community association management while simultaneously engaged as a property manager for a unit within the community association.

There is no evidence that Hank Bartos had an ownership or leasehold interest in the subject property, so subparagraph (1) does not apply. There is no evidence that he had a business interest in the property, so subparagraph (2) does not apply. It has not been shown that he represented a relative or person with whom he had a financial relationship in the sense contemplated by subparagraph (3). There is no evidence that he received compensation for community association management, so subparagraph (5) does not apply. Insofar as the Division has articulated a theory to make section 391 applicable to Mr. Bartos in this transaction, it seems to rely on subparagraph (4): that he was receiving "compensation from someone other than a party to the contract or another party having a financial interest in the transaction."[100]

Because of ambiguous wording around the disjunctive "or," subparagraph (4) can be read in two alternative ways. It can be read to provide that a conflict of interest occurs when a licensee either (i) receives compensation from someone other than a party to the contract or (ii) receives compensation from another party having a financial interest in the transaction. Alternatively, it can be read to provide that a conflict of interest occurs when a licensee (i) receives compensation from someone other than a party to the contract or (ii) receives compensation from someone other than another party having a financial interest in the transaction.[101] The Real Estate Commission has consistently read this subparagraph (4) by the first interpretation, such that a licensee has a disclosable conflict whenever the licensee receives compensation from a party having a financial interest in the transaction who is different from the licensee's principal.[102] This gives the conflict of interest statute substantial overlap with the dual agency statute, and any dual agency involving compensation to one party's licensee from the other party to the transaction represents a conflict of interest for that licensee. In this case, Bartos/Schooley filled a dual agency role, and they received compensation from St. Pierre through the Coldwell Banker commission, and so they had a conflict with respect to Viale.

Conflicts of interest are not prohibited, but they must be disclosed.[103] At the time of the Sprucewood Court transaction, the statute required that the licensee "disclose that conflict of interest at the time of initial substantive contact with the principals or agents of the principals and confirm the conflict of interest in writing to the principals or agents of the principals involved in the transaction as soon as possible after the initial substantive contact."[104]

Ms. Schooley did make a written disclosure relating to her dual agency contemporaneously with the initial substantive contact, but the disclosure is self-contradictory and therefore defective. Accordingly, she had an undisclosed conflict of interest while acting on behalf of Hank Bartos. Because she was acting as Bartos's delegee in the transaction, the conflict is his conflict as well.[105]

The Sprucewood Court transaction represented a violation of AS 08.88.391 by Mr. Bartos.

E. Count IV (Rex Lane)

Count IV is very similar to the main allegation in Count III. It focuses on a second transaction likewise involving Burrows, Schooley, and Bartos.

101 The Division's expert appeared to acknowledge this ambiguity. Cross-exam of Sandberg.

102 This interpretation is implicit in In re Mehner, No. 3002-02-005 (Alaska Real Estate Commission, adopted March 4, 2004), Amended [Decision] at 35-36 (dual agency created a conflict of interest under § 391); In re Yoon, No. 3004-95-011 (Alaska Real Estate Commission, adopted Sept. 10, 2003), [Decision] at 22; and Moore v. Yoon, No. S97-009 (Alaska Real Estate Commission, adopted June 25, 1998), [Decision] at 55. The 1998 decision is of limited value because it predated the current definition of "conflict of interest" in § 391. It was affirmed in Yoon v. Alaska Real Estate Comm., 17 P.3d 779 (Alaska 2001).

103 The current language of AS 08.88.391(a) limits disclosure to "persons adversely affected by the conflict." The version of § 391(a) in effect in 2004 was not limited in this way.

104 Former AS 08.88.391(a) [1998-2004].

105 Note that the role of a delegee places her in a different capacity from Noelle Childress in Count II, whose violation could not be imputed or transferred to Bartos.

1. Facts

In late 2004, Coldwell Banker Gold Country served as the listing office for a residential property at 722 Rex Lane in Fairbanks. Bill Burrows was again the listing agent. As in the case of Sprucewood Court, the testimony at the hearing gave a detailed history of the listing and an associated commission dispute between Mr. Burrows and Ms. Schooley, but only the following facts are relevant to the violations alleged in the Accusation.

The sellers were Charles and Elizabeth Slocum, and the buyer was Loretta Overway. Ms. Overway came to the transaction represented by Amy Gappa of Century 21 Gold Rush, whose supervising broker was Hank Bartos. The executed Purchase Agreement listed Coldwell Banker Gold Country as the listing office and Bill Burrows as listing agent; it listed Century 21 Gold Rush as the selling office and Amy Gappa as the selling agent.[106]

Ms. Gappa wrote the offer that became the Purchase Agreement. The second page of the Purchase Agreement was entitled "Consensual Dual Agency Agreement."[107] It provided that "The Buyer and Seller hereby give their consent to dual agency . . . . One company, Century 21/Coldwell Banker, will be representing the interests of both parties to this agreement." There was a boldface line, "I hereby consent to Consensual Dual Agency as described above," below which all three principals and both agents signed.

Lower down on the page there was a section beginning, "THE FOLLOWING AGENCY IS HEREBY CONFIRMED". It recited:

> As of 11/16/2004 the agent(s), Amy Gappa/Bill Burrows, of Century 21 Gold Rush is/are the agent(s) of (check one):
> ☐ The SELLER, exclusively
> ☐ The BUYER, exclusively
> ☒ SELLER AND BUYER (DUAL AGENCY)

In contrast to the Sprucewood Court agreement, only one box was marked. As shown above, the marks were machine-made rather than handwritten exes. All principals and both agents signed on the appropriate lines below this disclosure.

Ms. Gappa presented the dual agency agreement to her client, Ms. Overway, because of Hank Bartos's ownership interest in both real estate offices involved in the transaction. Although she does not have a detailed recollection of the surrounding discussions, it is more likely than not that she told the buyers the reason she was asking them to sign the agreement. They signed voluntarily.[108] There was no testimony at the hearing regarding how the agreement was explained to the Slocums.

There was a dispute in connection with the closing of the Rex Lane transaction, the fundamental nature of which is disputed.[109] The dispute was eventually resolved by reducing the Coldwell Banker commission by the amount in dispute, and the reduction was then deducted from Mr. Burrows's share of that commission.[110] Both the buyer and the sellers obtained the deal they expected from the transaction; no financial adjustments were made at their expense.[111]

2. Analysis

Considerable testimony was taken at the hearing to establish or refute the notion that licensee Bill Burrows was treated unfairly by Bartos and Schooley in connection with the Rex Lane commission. Neither in the Accusation nor elsewhere, however, has it been contended that this alleged unfairness, which did not affect any of the principals to the transaction, is a basis for discipline under the real estate statutes and regulations. The Accusation instead alleges, as in the case of Sprucewood Court, that Bartos had an undisclosed dual agency role and an undisclosed conflict of interest in connection with the Rex Lane transaction.

The Rex Lane transaction had no parallel to the situation at Sprucewood Court in which Ms. Schooley, on behalf of Mr. Bartos, wrote an offer for the buyer while simultaneously supervising the seller's agent. The dual agency role allegedly played by Bartos in the Rex Lane transaction related only to the common ownership of the Century 21 and Coldwell Banker offices. Insofar as this circumstance alone created a dual agency, it was disclosed and consented to in a document signed by all three principals. The document did not have the fundamental internal contradiction and missing signatures that the same document had in the Sprucewood Court transaction. Moreover, insofar as the Division elicited testimony on the subject, the disclosure and consent document seems to have been adequately explained to the principals. The 109 Mr. Burrows, a Division witness, alleges that it was a mistake by Ms. Gappa in drafting the contract such that an additional $2400 was due above what had been intended. Other witnesses allege that it was a mistake by Burrows in advertising that the property was in a fire service area when in fact it was not, so that the fire insurance premium due at closing was higher than expected. The eventual resolution involved a commission adjustment. The actual evidence of the amount of the adjustment, Division Exhibit 21 at 1146-7, is illegible. If one accepts the Division's allegations in Count IV, the adjustment appears to have been $2810, a figure that does not perfectly match the Burrows explanation. It is possible that both explanations played a role.

Division has not met its burden of proving that Mr. Bartos had an undisclosed or unconsented dual agency in connection with the Rex Lane transaction.

If there was a dual agency for Rex Lane, it may have created a conflict of interest that would likewise require disclosure. If so, disclosure took place. Because the disclosure occurred "at the time of initial substantive contact with the principals or agents of the principals," it was timely under AS 08.88.391(a). The Division has not met its burden of demonstrating an undisclosed conflict of interest in connection with the Rex Lane transaction.

F. Count V (Constitution Drive--Inadequate Supervision)

Count V is the first of two counts devoted to a 2002 transaction and its aftermath. The distinguishing feature of the transaction was that the files of the real estate offices involved proved not to contain copies of an AS 34.70.010 disclosure statement that ought to have been present.

1. Facts

In 2002, Ed King of Century 21 Gold Rush assisted Dale and Nadia Packard in their search for a home to purchase. The Packards were first-time homebuyers without business sophistication.[112] On September 20, 2002, King wrote and placed an essentially full-price offer on behalf of Dale Packard (only) on a residence at 804 Constitution Drive in Fairbanks, acting as agent for Mr. Packard exclusively.[113] The sellers accepted the offer and it became the fully executed Earnest Money Receipt and Purchase Agreement for the property.[114] The transaction closed in late October of 2002.[115]

Prior to marketing the Constitution Drive property, the sellers prepared an AS 34.70.010 disclosure statement.[116] On the disclosure, the sellers indicated that they were aware of "flooding, drainage, or grading problems," and they included a description of the problems and of the corrective action they had taken.[117] The statement was probably available at the house when the Packards viewed it prior to the submission of Mr. Packard's offer.[118]

There is no direct evidence that Mr. Packard received the disclosure before the transaction closed. He reports that when King showed him the house, King mentioned that the listing packet (which presumably contained the disclosure) was on the kitchen table, but that he did not know what a listing packet was and did not take one.[119] In any event, if Packard received the disclosure at any point prior to closing, his agent (King) did not make him appreciate its significance and Mr. Packard did not retain a copy.[120]

When the transaction closed and thereafter, neither the listing nor selling agent had possession of a copy of the disclosure bearing a signature or initials of the buyer.[121] The Century 21 file was closed out and went to archives lacking any copy at all of the disclosure; not even a copy without the buyer's signature was in the file.[122] Nonetheless, the disclosure was expressly referenced in the Earnest Money Receipt and Purchase Agreement drafted by King and incorporated as part of the agreement.[123] Accordingly, by lacking a copy of the disclosure the Century 21 Gold Rush file lacked the complete Earnest Money Receipt and Purchase Agreement.

If a disclosure form had existed bearing the signature of not only the sellers but the buyer as well, it would ordinarily have become part of the file of both the listing office[124] and the selling office.[125] Because neither the selling nor listing office files contained such a document, I infer that no such document existed.[126]

At the time of the Constitution Drive transaction, it was the practice of Century 21 Gold Rush to place a checklist in each transaction file. The checklist was the front page of the file. The agent conducting the transaction filled out the checklist, marking items off as the file was assembled. The components in a file were supposed to be assembled behind the checklist in a certain order.[127]

There was a system to have brokers check behind the salespeople who completed the checklists and assembled the files, consisting of two components. The first component was review by Hank Bartos, who was the supervising broker, sometimes with supplemental review by a staff person designated by him such as Krystal Richardson, the receptionist. With an experienced agent—King, the agent handling Constitution Drive, was considered an experienced agent—file checking might consist of a periodic "spot check." Bartos admits that he "didn't like checking files," and a review by him, if it occurred, might consist only of seeing if items were checked on the checklist and a "thumb through" of the file. If he found errors in a file, he would fine the salesperson $100. He had an arrangement with Richardson whereby if she was given a file to review and she found an error, she would receive $50 of the $100 fine levied.[128] In 2002, the first component of the broker review process occurred post-closing.[129]

The second component in 2002 was a review by Lori Schooley, then an associate broker. She would review the file at the time of distribution of commissions and would not issue a check without reviewing the file. Her review was also post-closing.[130]

No witness at the hearing could recall what kind of review, if any, the Constitution Drive file received. This is natural in light of the passage of time and the large number of transactions that go through an office such as Century 21 Gold Rush. When it was retrieved in 2004, the file contained the standard checklist, with a check next to "AS 34.70 signed by Buyer and Seller" and another check next to "AS 34.70 State Disclosure,"[131] even though there was no disclosure in the file.

2. Analysis

At the time of the Constitution Drive transaction, the Commission's regulation on broker supervision of licensees, 12 AAC 64.125, read as follows:

(e) A broker or associate broker may use computer, modem, or facsimile communications to review and approve documents of licensees for whom they are responsible. All transaction records must be maintained in the real estate office where the supervised licensee is registered with the commission.[132]

At that time, therefore, a supervising broker was required to review and approve all real estate agreements. In light of the overall purpose of the real estate licensing statutes and regulations to protect consumers, the only reasonable interpretation of this regulation is to infer that the required review and approval must occur while the transaction is active and any problems can readily be rectified, not after the transaction has closed and recorded.

The missing disclosure form was an expressly referenced part of the Earnest Money Receipt and Purchase Agreement for 804 Constitution Drive. Had Hank Bartos, the supervising broker, reviewed that agreement, he would have noted that the disclosure was missing. Since he did not note that the disclosure was missing and let the transaction close, it is likely that he did not review the Earnest Money Receipt and Purchase Agreement. His failure to do so was a violation of 12 AAC 64.125 as it existed in 2002.

G. Count VI (Constitution Drive—Forgery)

Subsequent to the Constitution Drive transaction, serious problems developed with the home, which made the contents of the disclosure important to determining potential liability. The Division alleges that when Century 21 Gold Rush was asked for a copy of the disclosure, Hank Bartos obtained a copy from the listing broker and forged Mr. Packard's signature and initials on the document before giving the document to Mr. Packard.

1. Undisputed Facts

On Easter Sunday of 2004, the Packards had a severe flooding problem at their home. They called their insurance company. An adjuster came to the house and mentioned that the house was sinking. He suggested that they consult an attorney, and they did so shortly thereafter. The attorney asked them for the AS 34.70 disclosure statement. Once they learned what a disclosure statement was, they were not able to find it among their papers. On advice of the attorney, Mr. Packard requested a copy from Century 21 Gold Rush, which had represented him in the purchase.[133]

Ed King had left Century 21 by this time, so the request was handled by Bartos. Century 21 had no copy of the disclosure in its file when the file was initially retrieved from archives.[134] Bartos requested and obtained a copy from the listing broker on April 21, 2004.[135] That copy had only the sellers' signatures and initials. Bartos apparently made efforts to obtain a completely executed copy from other sources—the title company and lender—as well, but without success.[136]

Three days after Packard's request, a copy of the disclosure was supplied to him at Century 21 Gold Rush.[137] Hank Bartos and the Century 21 relocation director, Audra McGhee, were present when he received the document.[138] The document, which was a photocopy, appeared to bear Packard's signature on the last page and his initials on each page.

Audra McGhee was terminated from her relocation director position two days after the document was provided.[139] About three weeks later, in cooperation with an attorney representing Packard, Audra McGhee accused Hank Bartos of forging Packard's signature and initials on the document by using a copier to transfer them from another source.[140] There is presently no dispute that the document was in fact a forgery.[141]

Some background regarding McGhee's role in the office helps to put later events in context. Audra McGhee had met Hank Bartos in the fall of 2003 when she was looking for a house. She wound up renting a house from Bartos. She wanted a part-time job, and he gave her one as a receptionist and relocation director, starting about the first of the year in 2004. Her role in assisting Bartos grew, she began to handle some of his calendaring and providing other assistance, and, eventually, she moved her desk into the same office with him. The expansion of her role took place over the course of only a few months of employment. As her role increased, her relationship with Bartos's longtime business partner, Lori Schooley, deteriorated. Although he does not seem to have done much to prevent this situation from developing, Bartos at all times fundamentally regarded Schooley as his right-hand person; McGhee was simply a promising and hard-working recruit to him.[142]

2. Disputed Facts and Discussion

Century 21 Gold Rush supplied a client with a document on which someone in the real estate office had apparently forged the client's signature. The foreseeable result of doing so, in this instance, would be to mislead the client and undermine the client's potential redress against parties (including Century 21 Gold Rush) who might be liable for his purchasing the Constitution Drive home without knowledge of the disclosure's contents, only to discover later that the house still had problems that had been alluded to in the disclosure. Supplying a forged document in these circumstances would be an extraordinary breach of duty by Century 21 Gold Rush, and would subject any licensee involved to the most severe sanctions available to the Commission.[143]

Mr. Bartos admits that the document has been demonstrated to be a forgery, but denies that he forged it or caused it to be forged. By his account, he was puzzled when Ed King's transaction file did not contain the disclosure, particularly since it was checked off on the file checklist, and he engaged in a search to find it from outside sources, as well as having staff look for it within the office. At some point he told McGhee to "get Lori over here" to search for the missing item. The next time Bartos came in, he says McGhee told him she had the signed disclosure form, and he told her to go ahead and give it to the Packards.[144]

Audra McGhee offered a different account in mid-May of 2004. She reported that on the morning of April 22, 2004, as she was working at her desk in the office she shared with Hank Bartos, she noticed that he was engrossed in an activity that had him repeatedly using her tape dispenser. He was cutting paper with a pocket knife and taping the pieces to other documents. He asked if he could borrow her scissors. She asked him what he was doing and, when he did not answer, asked, "Are you forging documents?" He replied, "Yes, haven't you ever done this before? She answered, "No," and then went to the front desk, borrowed scissors from Krystal Richardson, and brought them to Mr. Bartos. When she returned she happened to notice that the signatures he was taping were those of Dale Packard. She reported that Bartos remarked that Ed King had "screwed up" and failed to get the signatures he should have. She said she asked, "What are you going to do when the original documents are asked for?," to which Bartos replied, "I am going to shred them and say that I don't know what happened to the originals."[145] She said that Bartos then "made a new set of documents for Mr. Packard"—presumably using the copier—and that this was something she "observed."[146]

Two days after this conversation allegedly occurred, Lori Schooley (in her role as office manager for all of the affiliated offices) discharged McGhee from her relocation director position.[147] Schooley attributes this action to problems with job performance, not getting along well in the office, and a desire not to have McGhee do the relocation work once she became licensed because of a possible conflict. She says, however, that the job performance problems were not disqualifying "for Hank," and so McGhee was given the option to continue working for Century 21 in the capacity of an agent.[148] McGhee was unhappy with this turn of events and had a series of telephone conversations with Bartos about her employment situation on April 25 and 26, which she recorded. She admits that the subject of forgery "never came up" in these conversations.[149] However, on May 12, 2004, she wrote to Bartos:

> On April 24th, two days after I confronted you about your forgery of the Packard documents, Lori Schooley terminated my employment as Relocation Director; she said she acted with your authority. The next day, in a telephone conversation with me, you confirmed that I was terminated. You told me the next day, Monday the 26th, that I could return to Century 21 only as a real estate agent . . . .
> I have taken time to consider my situation and the situation in which the Packards find themselves. I have decided that I cannot accept employment as a real estate agent with you and your office. I simply am unwilling to be associated with the standards of the office and of you.[150]

When she wrote the letter, she was already in contact with the Packards and their attorney, and had committed her version of events to an affidavit of the same date.

145 Ex. 3 at REC 063-65 (May 12, 2004 affidavit of Audra McGhee). As will be discussed below, her 2009 testimony was not perfectly consistent with this earlier account.

146 The quotations are from Ex. 3 at REC 064. She has not specifically testified that he used the copier to make the new set of documents, but this is implied in her testimony.

147 Direct exam of Schooley.

148 Direct and cross-exam of Schooley.

150 Ex. 3 at REC 068.

The McGhee account is directly questioned by Krystal Richardson, the receptionist, who likewise claims a specific memory of the day in question.[151] Richardson says it was unusual for people to borrow her scissors and she remembers McGhee doing so. However, she does not recall Bartos being in the office at the time, and believes she would have noticed if Bartos was using the copier, which was right by her desk. She is not sure Bartos would have known how to use the copier, because he "usually" needed help when he wanted to make copies.[152]

More significantly, the account has internal oddities that make it hard (though not impossible) to accept. The letter of May 12 is curious. It refers to a confrontation, and yet by McGhee's more detailed account the confrontation consisted of her fetching the scissors to assist with the task, accompanied by a little conversation. It suggests that her termination was linked to the supposed confrontation about forgery, and yet the forgery had not "come up" in previous, recorded conversations about why she was terminated. Moreover, there are two versions of the account, the one given in 2004 and the one given at the hearing, and while both are highly detailed the details do not match in some respects.[153] It would be natural for McGhee to forget some details over the course of four years, but the fact that she provided the details again (rather than indicating a failure of memory), but related them differently, slightly undermines her credibility.

McGhee seems to have reacted to the termination with some bitterness. It came at a time when she had rapidly been developing a close business relationship with the chief of the organization. That individual then quite suddenly yielded to Schooley's desire to end the close association. Some individuals might bear a grudge and develop a motive to strike back at Bartos in this situation.

As support for McGhee's account, the Division relied on testimony from Colleen Harshman, the listing broker. Ms. Harshman related behavior by Bartos that she judged as odd: After Mr. Packard had called her multiple times about the disclosure, she asked Century 21 for a copy. The Century 21 office faxed over a copy, but it was just the one she had, with no buyer signature. She called Bartos and told him she needed a copy with the buyer's signature. He responded, "Well, would you send me a copy so I know what it looks like?" She sent it, and shortly thereafter got a copy back with the buyer's signature and initials.[154]

Harshman's account would be very troubling with respect to Mr. Bartos, except that it was later established that the entire exchange took place on May 17, 2004.[155] By May 17, Audra McGhee had already sent Bartos the letter alluding to "forgery of the Packard documents."[156] The exchange with Harshman was therefore consistent with Bartos attempting to see if the copy of the disclosure he had been given by his staff was consistent with versions of that document held by others.

Likewise to bolster the McGhee account, the Division offered Mr. Packard's testimony,[157] which implied that he found Bartos's behavior unusual as well. He perceived that he was put off by Bartos when he requested the disclosure statement. While the delay may have seemed to Packard simply a stratagem to provide time to forge a replacement, however, it is consistent with Bartos simply conducting a search of multiple sources to try to locate a document that was oddly missing—which is essentially Bartos's description of how he reacted.

Mr. Bartos's account is not wholly without credibility issues of its own. For example, Bartos (in response to a leading question from his counsel) agreed that McGhee's May 12 letter was to him just "a wingnut letter" and indicted that he neither understood nor paid attention to it. Yet the letter referred to a transaction in which he had just recently been looking for a particular document, and it is hard to believe he would not have surmised that she might be accusing him of forging that document. Indeed, his exchange with Harshman on May 17 suggests that he did have that concern. More broadly, in testimony on other matters in this proceeding (he offered extensive testimony on many topics), Bartos betrayed a tendency to stretch the truth on occasion,

154 Direct exam of Harshman. Ms. Harshman, a telephonic witness, was somewhat credible, but she undermined her overall credibility by flatly denying that she had any concern that her agency might be sued by Packard during this period. Cross-exam of Harshman. Certainly, a listing office that has received a disclosure from its seller, but that cannot show that it delivered the disclosure to the buyer, has potential exposure to liability regarding matters that were in the disclosure but were not communicated to the buyer. Ms. Harshman was an experienced broker and could be expected to understand this exposure.

156 Ex. 3 at REC 068.

157 At times, Packard's testimony was troubling as well. For example, he described with a wealth of detail how he had caught a glimpse of Audra McGhee as an observer behind an obstruction when he met with Bartos to receive the documents, but Bartos had not introduced them. When cross-examined, he had to admit that on a previous occasion he had said they were introduced. Direct and cross-exam of Packard.

or perhaps to lapse into being a raconteur, providing glib answers without being careful about perfect accuracy.[158]

On balance, however, the Division has not carried its burden of convincing me that the core of McGhee's account is more credible than the core of Bartos's. Accordingly, I cannot find that Hank Bartos forged Dale Packard's signature and initials on the Constitution Drive disclosure statement, and therefore no violation by Mr. Bartos has been proven with respect to Count VI.

IV. Sanction

The Division has proven violations in connection with Count III (undisclosed conflict and dual agency for Sprucewood Court) and Count V (inadequate supervision for Constitution Drive). They are wholly independent of one another and will be addressed separately below.

In assessing discipline for violations of the statutes and regulations it administers, the Commission is required to "seek consistency."[159] One prior decision and one prior settlement approval of this Commission involving conduct with some parallels to Count III are discussed in the section relating to that count. So far as the undersigned is aware, this Commission has not considered any other discipline cases involving facts at all similar to those presented here, and neither party has cited any comparable cases.

A. Count III

The two violations found in Count III were failure to properly disclose a dual agency relationship and failure to properly disclose a conflict of interest. The conflict and the dual agency were simply different features of the same error; that is, there was a single wrongful act that was illegal in two ways.

Both violations were violations of provisions of AS 08.88, and therefore for each of them the Commission has authority to impose the sanction of revocation or suspension of the license.[160] The Commission also has authority to impose any other disciplinary sanction or combination of sanctions, including censure or reprimand, license limitations or conditions, requirements for education or peer review, probation, or a fine.[161] Fines are limited to $5000.[162]

The misconduct proved in Count III was at the low end of seriousness for conduct of its type. It presented the following mitigating factors:

- The licensee did not wholly fail to make a written disclosure of dual agency or conflict of interest, but rather made a carelessly inadequate and defective written disclosure.
- Oral disclosure to both the buyer and the seller appears to have been generally adequate.
- There was no fraud and no attempt to gain financial advantage through the nondisclosure.
- There was no harm to the principals in the transaction.
- The misconduct was performed on Mr. Bartos's behalf by a delegee, without his prior knowledge or approval. While Bartos was responsible for what Schooley did as his stand-in, the fact that he did not write the defective disclosure himself slightly lessens concern about his own competence.

In the 2004 discipline case entitled In re Mehner,[163] this Commission addressed a much more serious failure to disclose dual agency and conflict of interest that lacked all of these mitigating factors (except perhaps deliberate fraud) and that was accompanied by substantial misrepresentations that constituted independent violations. There was considerable financial harm to a consumer directly flowing from the misconduct. The Commission imposed a 120-day suspension on account of the "numerous violations,"[164] imposed a year of probation, required remedial education on dual agency and conflict of interest, and levied a fine of $20,000.[165] It is possible to determine that $5,000 of the total fine was levied for the violation of the dual agency disclosure requirement[166] and to infer that the remedial education order sprang from that violation; it is not possible to determine how much, if any, of the suspension or probation related to it.

A counterpoint to Mehner is the Commission's recent action in In re Enoch.[167] Enoch was a memorandum of agreement, or settlement, approved by the Commission, and therefore carries less weight than a contested decision, but such memoranda provide a sense of how the Commission has weighed violations in the past.[168] The misconduct in Enoch was threefold: two instances of failure to disclose a conflict of interest under AS 08.88.391 and one instance of delayed deposit of earnest money. For the three violations in the aggregate, the Commission imposed a fine of $1000 with $750 suspended, a reprimand, one year of probation, and six hours of education on relevant topics.[169] In the formal reprimand language, the Commission noted the following important circumstance: "it is recognized that these violations were technical in nature with no evidence to suggest any intent to misrepresent the facts and/or the terms of the transaction."[170]

The misconduct proven under Count III of this case is quite close to Enoch in severity—as in that case there are two dual agency/conflict disclosure violations—but this instance lacks the additional element, present in Enoch, of mishandling earnest money. In the interest of simplicity and finality,[171] it may be advisable to forego probation but to substitute additional monetary sanction for the lack of probation. An appropriate sanction for Count III would be a civil fine of $1000, a reprimand to be placed in Mr. Bartos's licensing file, and a requirement of at least one-half day (3 hours) of approved continuing education on ethics for real estate professionals that includes significant instruction on the topic of avoidance and disclosure of conflicts of interest.

B. Count V

Count V represented a single instance of inadequate supervision of a subordinate licensee. Mr. Bartos failed to carry out a duty that the Commission had expressly assigned to him by regulation. His failure may well have had real financial consequences to a client of his office, by causing him to proceed with a transaction with insufficient information about a serious 169 A decision from another jurisdiction that is in the same vein is In re Di Censo and Sutton Group Tower Realty Inc. (Real Estate Council of Ontario, Jan. 28, 2004) (licensee fined $3000 in aggregate for five relatively minor violations, three of which related to inadequate disclosure of dual agency, without fraud or apparent harm to clients).

170 Enoch, supra, MOA at 5.

171 The Division has had several years of intensive focus on Mr. Bartos. Probation would prolong that preoccupation, perhaps in a way that would be healthy for neither the staff nor Mr. Bartos. Cf. Ex. 5-8, 11-12, 15-16.

defect in the property he was purchasing.[172] While only one specific failure has been proven, the failure occurred because Century 21 Gold Rush had a practice of deferring broker reviews until after closing, a practice that prevented compliance with 12 AAC 64.125 as it then existed.

The undersigned has found no Commission decisions or settlements in Alaska with facts at all similar to those in Count V. The only out-of-state case found is In re Di Censo and Sutton Group Tower Realty Inc.,[173] a Canadian decision in which a brokerage was fined $2000 for failing to supervise a licensee to prevent errors including inadequate dual agency disclosure and for failing to maintain an adequate transaction file.[174] Di Censo does not seem to have involved any harm to the client.

At the hearing, Mr. Bartos related with some relish and pride his practice of fining licensees for each error found after the fact in their transaction files. In this case, he failed to prevent a very serious error in a transaction file by neglecting the supervisory review assigned to him by law. A substantial monetary penalty to address this omission will serve the same deterrent purpose served by Mr. Bartos's internal fining system.

The broker's share of the selling office commission received on the Constitution Drive transaction appears to have been about $1400.[175] An appropriate sanction for Mr. Bartos's failure to adequately perform the broker role would be (i) a civil fine of double that amount, $2800 and (ii) inclusion of the Count V violation in the reprimand mentioned in the preceding section.

V. Conclusion and Order

The Division proved violations of applicable law in connection with Counts III and V of the Accusation, as detailed above. Upon adoption of this Decision, the Commission imposes the following disciplinary sanctions against licensed broker Henry S. Bartos:

A. CIVIL FINE

Respondent shall pay a fine of $1000 with respect to Count III and a fine of $2800 with respect to Count V, for a total civil penalty of $3800. The payment shall be in cash, certified check, or money order payable to "State of Alaska," delivered to counsel for the Division of Corporations, Business and Professional Licensing within 90 days of adoption of this Decision and Order.

B. REPRIMAND

The following reprimand shall be placed in Respondent's license file in the form of this Decision and Order:

> The Real Estate Commission hereby reprimands you, Henry S. Bartos, for failing to disclose dual agency and conflict of interest as required by law. The Commission recognizes that these violations were technical in nature, without intent to misrepresent the facts or the terms of the transaction. The Commission further reprimands you for failing to provide adequate supervision of a licensee as required by law.

C. ADDITIONAL EDUCATION

In addition to the continuing education/competency requirements under Alaska law for his license, Respondent shall within 12 months of adoption of this Decision and Order attend and satisfactorily complete no less than three hours of education dealing with ethics for real estate professionals that includes significant instruction on the topic of avoidance and disclosure of conflicts of interest. The course curriculum must be approved by the Commission's agent prior to the Respondent registering for the course or courses. After completion of the course or courses, the certificates of satisfactory completion are to be provided to the Commission's agent. All costs are the responsibility of Respondent.

Adoption as Modified

The Real Estate Commission:

in accordance with AS 44.64.060(e)(5), rejects, modifies or amends the interpretation or application of a statute or regulation as set out below; in accordance with AS 44.64.060(e)(3), revises the enforcement action, determination of best interest, order, award, remedy, sanction, penalty, or other disposition of the case as set out below; and in accordance with AS 44.64.060, otherwise adopts the forgoing Decision and Order.

Modifications:

1. Although the Commission recognizes that the word "employed" has several definitions, the Commission interprets the word "employed" in AS 08.88.291(a) and 12 AAC 64.110(e)(6) to mean "to commission or entrust with the performance of certain acts or functions or with the management of one's affairs" (see Black's Law Dictionary, 5th ed.), as the meaning most in keeping with the purpose of that statute and that regulation.

2. In light of item 1, the Commission finds that, with respect to Count I, Mr. Bartos violated AS 08.88.291(a) and 12 AAC 64.110(e)(6) in connection with factual findings (2) and (4) on pages 6-7 of the Decision and Order.

3. In light of item 1, the Commission finds that, with respect to Count II, Mr. Bartos violated AS 08.88.291(a) and 12 AAC 64.110(e)(6) in his use of Noelle Childress to conduct Century 21's property management business.

4. For the misconduct under Count I, the Commission imposes a fine of $1000 and requires 6 hours of education as specified in item 10 below.

5. For the misconduct under Count II, the Commission notes the long duration and the deliberate nature of the improper arrangement, imposes a fine of $2500, and requires 6 hours of education as specified in item 10 below.

6. For the misconduct under Count III, the Commission imposes a fine of $1000 (as recommended by the administrative law judge) and requires 6 hours of education as specified in item 10 below. The sanction is imposed solely for failure to disclose dual agency. No sanction is imposed for failure to disclose conflict of interest.

7. For the misconduct under Count V, the Commission notes the serious consequences of the failure to supervise, imposes a fine of $5000 and requires 12 hours of education as specified in item 10 below.

8. In light of the number, seriousness, and pattern of violations, the Commission imposes (a) a suspension of 60 days to commence on the effective date of this decision as provided in AS 44.62.520, and (b) license probation of one year to commence upon completion of the suspension.

9. All fines are payable in the manner set forth in part V-A of the Decision and Order.

10. The education required in items 4-7 above (a) shall be in addition to the continuing education/competency requirements under Alaska law for Mr. Bartos's license; (b) shall be completed within 12 months of the effective date of this Decision and Order; (c) shall be attended and satisfactorily completed; (d) shall be approved by the Commission's agent prior to the Respondent registering for the course or courses. It shall include no less than six hours of education dealing with ethics for real estate professionals. After completion of the course or courses, the certificates of satisfactory completion are to be provided to the Commission's agent. All costs are the responsibility of Respondent.

11. The following reprimand shall be placed in Respondent's license file in the form of this Decision and Order:

> The Real Estate Commission hereby reprimands you, Henry S. Bartos, for failing to comply with AS 08.88.291(a) and 12 AAC 64.110(e)(6), for failing to disclose dual agency as required by law, and for failing to provide adequate supervision of a licensee as required by law.

Judicial review of this decision may be obtained by filing an appeal in the Alaska Superior Court in accordance with AS 44.62.560 and Alaska R. App. P. 602(a)(2) within 30 days after the date of distribution of this decision.

Subject: Clarification (I hope) on the issue
Attachments: IndustryIssues.pdf

Hi Melanie,
I hope the attached first page gives a little more clarification. If not, please let me know or contact Sandy Eherenman directly. (I left her contact info below.)

Since a licensed assistant must be first and foremost a licensee, the following applies. There can only be one principal broker.

Sec. 08.88.291. Location; contact information.

(a) A person licensed as a real estate broker shall, by registering with the commission, inform the commission of the person's principal office and of any branch offices of the person's real estate business and include in the information the names of the real estate licensees who are employed at each office. A real estate licensee may do real estate business only through a principal office or from a branch office registered by the broker by whom the licensee is employed. Failure of a real estate broker to maintain a place of business in the state or to inform the commission of its location and the names and addresses of all real estate licensees employed at each location by the broker is grounds for the suspension or revocation of the broker's license.

(b) Each licensee under this chapter is responsible for ensuring that the commission has current contact information for the licensee for two years after the lapse, expiration, surrender, suspension, or revocation of the license.

(c) In addition to the information provided under (a) of this section, a licensee shall provide the commission with a current mailing address and, if active, the address of the broker employing the licensee.

(d) The commission shall mail all notices pertaining to a license or recovery fund action taken under this chapter or a regulation adopted under this chapter to the current address or addresses of a licensee obtained under this section. Proof of notice provided under this subsection satisfies due process notice requirements.

The wording for this bill is because Brokers want to permit their licensees to hire their own assistants and pay them on their own instead of through the Broker. The licensed assistant will still have to have their license hanging in the principal Broker's office because the Broker is still ultimately responsible for the actions of the licensed assistant.

Please let me know if there are still questions. Errol Champion, our current Board President will be in on Monday to testify and Ruth Blackwell is also available until tomorrow morning if you have further questions.

All the best,
Mimi

Project: Clarify legislative intent of HB33 from 1998. Employment of licensed assistants.

Proposal: Add language to as 08.88.398 and .401

Rationale: Part of HB 33 addressed the rise in demand of licensed assistants and the fact that AS 08.88.401(b)(2) stated that a licensee could only accept fees and commissions related to licensed activities from their employing broker. Licensees wanted to pay their assistants themselves. HB 33 added .398 to outline how and when this could happen. HB 33 also added a clause to the end of .401(b)(2) that states "except that the wages of a person who is engaged as a licensed assistant under AS 08088.398 may be accepted by the person from the assistant's employer." As license law is very clear elsewhere that it is illegal to perform licensed activities unless they are through the broker where your license hangs , the bill did not restate it. Some licensees are taking this to mean that they can employ a licensed assistant to perform licensed activities who works at a different brokerage, regardless of what the law states elsewhere in statute. Either all the other laws need to be changed or we need to clarify this law.

Proposed Language:

AS 08.88.398 Licensed Assistants. A licensed real estate sales person or licensed associate broker may act as a licensed assistant to a real state licensee other than the broker who employs the sales person or associate broker if Add new section (5): The licensed assistant is licensed under the broker who employs the licensee who employs them.

AS 08.88.401 Prohibited Conduct and Penalties.

Under (b)(2), add a clause at the end (in italics) (Bold clause is from 1998 change) "A person who is an associate broker or a real estate salesperson licensed in this state may accept a fee or commission for performance of an act for which a license is required by this chapter only from the licensee's employing broker, except that the wages of a person who is engaged as a licensed assistant under AS 08.88.398 may be accepted by the person from the person's employer, as long as they are all licensed under the same broker.

SB 92-DENTISTS/DENTAL HYGIENISTS/ASSISTANTS

DRAFT

3:23:48 PM

CHAIR OLSON announced that the first order of business would be CS FOR SENATE BILL NO. 92(FIN), "An Act relating to dental hygienists, dentists, dental assistants, dental hygiene, and dentistry."

CHAIR OLSON stated that this bill was previously heard and public testimony is closed. He reported that the bill had been held in committee to obtain clarification on the repealers in the bill. He said he was satisfied that everything is in order.

DANA OWEN, Staff, introduced himself and said he was available for questions.

REPRESENTATIVE HOLMES asked for clarification that the committee previously adopted two amendments to SB 92.

CHAIR OLSON answered yes.

3:25:35 PM

The committee took an at-ease from 3:25 p.m. to 3:28 p.m.

3:28:20 PM

REPRESENTATIVE HOLMES moved to report CSSB 92(FIN), as amended, out of committee with individual recommendations and the accompanying fiscal notes. There being no objection, the HCSSB 92(L&C) was reported from the House Labor & Commerce Standing Committee.

The committee took an at-ease from 3:28 p.m. to 3:30 p.m.

DRAFT

HB 267-REAL ESTATE SALES LICENSEES

3:30:35 PM

CHAIR OLSON announced that the final order of business would be HOUSE BILL NO. 267, "An Act relating to the Real Estate Commission; and providing for an effective date."

3:30:43 PM

REPRESENTATIVE CATHY MUNOZ, Alaska State Legislature, explained HB 267 would clarify the statutes that pertain to real estate practice. She stated that she has collaborated with the Alaska Association of Realtors in drafting this bill. This bill would accomplish three things. First, Section 1 of the bill would amend AS 08.88.071 (a), to require the Real Estate Commission issue a temporary permit to a licensee designated by the commission to administer, manage, or conclude the affairs of a broker's real estate business if: (1) an investigation produces substantial evidence that the broker has misappropriated trust funds; (2) the license of the broker is suspended; or (3) the broker is incapacitated because of a traumatic event or medical condition. Under current law, the Real Estate Commission (REC) would appoint another broker; however, in some areas of the state, a limited number of brokers practice. This provision would also allow the commission to issue a temporary agreement to a real estate agent to step in and conclude the business affairs. This provision would apply in instances in which only one or two brokers in an area would be called on to step in and conclude the business when the practice is in jeopardy due to health issues or issues that pertain to the actual practice of the specific brokerage.

3:33:04 PM

REPRESENTATIVE MUNOZ stated that second, this bill would clarify language regarding the role of a licensed real estate salesperson or licensed real estate broker. It would limit licensed assistants to only work for one brokerage, which is unclear in current law; however, it is very important to have a licensed assistant be limited to work for only one brokerage to ensure that proprietary information is kept confidential and to ensure that information about a real estate transaction cannot be shared with more than one brokerage. Third, this bill would allow a licensee to use a portion of an agent's commission to donate to a charitable organization. She characterized this as a housekeeping provision.

3:34:16 PM

REPRESENTATIVE HOLMES referred to Section 2 of HB 267, which adds one new subsection. She referred to page 4, line 4, and noted that she did not see an "and" or an "or" between paragraph 4 and 5. She asked whether the list is meant to be inclusive and all five paragraphs would need to be met.

REPRESENTATIVE MUNOZ asked for clarification on the specific language.

REPRESENTATIVE HOLMES referred to Section 2, page 4, line 4, and read, "A licensed real estate salesperson or licensed associate real estate broker may act as a licensed assistant to another licensed salesperson or associate real estate broker if..." She added that the "if" was followed by paragraphs (1),(2),(3),(4),(5). She inquired as to whether the condition would apply to all paragraphs: (1), (2), (3), (4), and (5); or if the condition of only paragraph (1) or (2) or (3) or (4) or (5) needed to be met. She reiterated her question by asking whether the condition of only one paragraph in Section 2 needed to be met or if all five conditions must be met by the licensed real estate salesperson or licensed associate real estate broker.

REPRESENTATIVE MUNOZ offered her belief that all five paragraphs were necessary, but deferred to the Alaska Association of Realtors to confirm.

ERROL CHAMPION, President, Southeast Alaska Board of Realtors; Member, Board of Directors, Alaska Association of Realtors, thanked the chair for sponsoring the bill.

CHAIR OLSON reported that all of his questions had been addressed before he signed on as joint prime sponsor of the bill.

MR. CHAMPION mentioned that he has also submitted written comments to the committee.

CHAIR OLSON asked him to confirm Representative Holmes's question pertaining to Section 2.

MR. CHAMPION responded that Section 2 would require all five paragraphs to be met. He said, "If you don't cross over the threshold of (1), you can't make it to (2), to (3), to (4), to (5)...."

3:38:04 PM

DON HABEGER, Director, Division of Corporations, Business, and Professional Licensing, Department of Commerce, Community, & Economic Development (DCCED), introduced himself.

3:38:40 PM

REPRESENTATIVE CHENAULT referred to the zero fiscal note in members' packets. He asked for the number of incidents for misappropriation of trust accounts or medical reasons that have arisen with brokers.

MR. HABENGER said the current executive administrator of the REC indicated only one incident against a broker has occurred in seven years. Thus, the division felt any necessary work could easily be absorbed in the current work load.

REPRESENTATIVE CHENAULT asked for the average cost of an investigation.

MR. HABENGER recalled a recent incident in Ketchikan, which he characterized as a litmus test. He explained that it was necessary to investigate a broker and licensees paid for the investigation. He related that due to the investigation costs, in part, the division suggested increases in licensee fees for the next renewal period. He offered that the one incident did not represent a huge impact to licensees.

3:40:34 PM

REPRESENTATIVE HOLMES inquired as to whether the department was comfortable with the bill.

MR. HABENGER answered yes.

3:41:34 PM

KONRAD JACKSON, Staff, Representative Kurt Olson, Alaska State Legislature, introduced himself. He referred to an amendment in members' packet. He stated that the proposed amendment would correct a minor drafting error.

3:42:19 PM

REPRESENTATIVE HOLMES moved to adopt Amendment 1, labeled 27-LS1111\M.1, Martin, 1/24/12, which read:

Delete "board"
Insert "commission"

There being no objection, Amendment 1, was adopted.

3:43:01 PM

CHAIR OLSON, after first determining no one else wished to testify, closed public testimony on HB 267.

3:43:12 PM

REPRESENTATIVE HOLMES moved to report HB 267, as amended out of committee with individual recommendations and the accompanying fiscal notes. There being no objection, the CSHB 267(L&C) was reported from the House Labor and Commerce Standing Committee.

House Bill 269 Sponsor Statement
An Act relating to the amendment of a declaration that creates a common interest community.

In 1986 Alaska adopted the Common Interest Ownership Act found in AS 34.08. This law was based on the 1982 version of the Uniform Common Interest Ownership Act ("UCIOA") that served as a model for condominium statutes around the country. Since then, the national UCIOA has been revised more than once, with the most recent version in 2008. However, Alaska's law has not been similarly updated. HB 269 takes one section of the updated UCIOA and incorporates it into Alaska's law.

When a developer begins construction of a common interest community such as a condominium development they have to specify a timeline for the continued development of the project. Under current law, if a developer and the homeowners association of a common interest community want to extend the timeline for these development rights it takes a unanimous vote of the homeowners.

Achieving a unanimous vote, even for a project with overwhelming support is problematic at best. In the 1994 version of the UCIOA this problem was addressed by modifying the threshold to a super-majority of 80% of the homeowners. HB 269 would mirror this change. An 80% threshold for modifying the timeline for development rights will still require extremely strong support, but will not require a prohibitively difficult unanimous vote.

This update to Alaska's law is especially important now due to the recent difficulties in the economy. With the new economics of the housing market, development rights are often the only valuable remaining part of many projects, but without this change communities and developers may be unable to extend the timelines for those development rights, which would decrease the value of these projects and discourage participation by banks as lenders. HB 269 will ensure that those communities and developers will have the necessary tools in statute to address this issue and keep Alaska's economy moving forward.

Please join me in supporting HB 269 to protect and strengthen Alaska's housing industry.

BILL NO. HB 269

Analysis

HB 269 modifies the Common Interest Ownership Act to allow for 80% of the homeowners to vote on development rights versus the current law that requires a unanimous vote. This conforms to the recently updated Federal Uniform Common Interest Ownership Act.

There is no anticipated fiscal impact to the Division as a result of this legislation.

SUBJECT: Support for HB269, common interest community

Dear Representative Holmes:

This letter is to provide a statement of support for House Bill 269, an Act relating to the amendment of a declaration that creates a common interest community.

Following our annual legislative visits in Juneau, the Alaska State Home Building Association (ASHBA) Legislative Committee discussed HB269. The consensus of the Committee was to support the bill, and to provide this letter.

To summarize, we have all reviewed the bill and the sponsor statement. A unanimous vote of a homeowners association is a level of achievement that can amount to an unreasonable impediment for developing a project. HB269 strikes a balance by setting an 80% threshold.

This bill will help both developers and owners in a common interest community to exercise their rights and opportunities, and we hope it will pass the legislature this session.

Sincerely,

Chas Edwardson

SECTION 2-117. AMENDMENT OF DECLARATION.

(a) Except in cases of amendments that may be executed by a declarant under Section 2-109(f) or 2-110, the association under Section 1-107, 2-106(d), 2-108(c), 2-112(a), or 2-113, or certain unit owners under Section 2-108(b), 2-112(a), 2-113(b), or 2-118(b), and except as limited by subsections (d), (f), (g), and (h), the declaration, including any plats and plans, may be amended only by vote or agreement of unit owners of units to which at least [67] percent of the votes in the association are allocated, unless the declaration specifies a different percentage for all amendments or for specific subjects of amendment. If the declaration requires the approval of another person as a condition of its effectiveness, the amendment is not valid without that approval.

(b) No action to challenge the validity of an amendment adopted by the association pursuant to this section may be brought more than one year after the amendment is recorded.

(c) Every amendment to the declaration must be recorded in every [county] in which any portion of the common interest community is located and is effective only upon recordation. An amendment, except an amendment pursuant to Section 2-112(a), must be indexed [in the grantee's index] in the name of the common interest community and the association and [in the grantor's index] in the name of the parties executing the amendment.

(d) Except to the extent expressly permitted or required by other provisions of this [act], no amendment may create or increase special declarant rights, increase the number of units, change the boundaries of any unit, or change the allocated interests of a unit, in the absence of unanimous consent of the unit owners.

(e) Amendments to the declaration required by this [act] to be recorded by the association must be prepared, executed, recorded, and certified on behalf of the association by any officer of the association designated for that purpose or, in the absence of designation, by the president of the association.

(f) An amendment to the declaration may prohibit or materially restrict the permitted uses of or behavior in a unit or the number or other qualifications of persons who may occupy units only by vote or agreement of unit owners of units to which at least 80 percent of the votes in the association are allocated, unless the declaration specifies that a larger percentage of unit owners must vote or agree to that amendment or that such an amendment may be approved by unit owners of units having at least 80 percent of the votes of a specified group of units that would be affected by the amendment . An amendment approved under this subsection must provide reasonable protection for a use or occupancy permitted at the time the amendment was adopted.

(g) The time limits specified in the declaration pursuant to Section 2-105(a)(8) within which reserved development rights must be exercised may be extended, and additional development rights may be created, if persons entitled to cast at least 80 percent of the votes in the association, including 80 percent of the votes allocated to units not owned by the declarant, agree to that action. The agreement is effective 30 days after an amendment to the declaration reflecting the terms of the agreement is recorded unless all the persons holding the affected special declarant rights, or security interests in those rights, record a written objection within the 30-day period, in which case the amendment is void, or consent in writing at the time the amendment is recorded, in which case the amendment is effective when recorded.

(h) A provision in the declaration creating special declarant rights that have not expired may not be amended without the consent of the declarant.

(i) If any provision of this [act] or of the declaration requires the consent of a holder of a security interest in a unit as a condition to the effectiveness of an amendment to the declaration, that consent is deemed granted if a refusal to consent in a record is not received by the association within 60 days after the association delivers notice of the proposed amendment to the holder at an address for notice provided by the holder or mails the notice to the holder by certified mail, return receipt requested, at that address. If the holder has not provided to the association an address for notice, the association shall provide notice to the address in the security interest of record. Notwithstanding this section, an amendment to the declaration that affects the priority of a holder's security interest or the ability of that holder to foreclose its security interest may not be adopted without that holder's consent in a record if the declaration requires that consent as a condition to the effectiveness of the amendment.

(j) If the declaration contains a provision requiring that amendments to the declaration may be adopted only by the vote or agreement of unit owners of units to which more than 80 percent of the votes in the association are allocated, the amendment is approved:

(1) if:

(A) unit owners of units to which at least 80 percent of the votes in the association are allocated vote for or agree to the proposed amendment;

(B) no unit owner votes against the proposed amendment; and

(C) notice of the proposed amendment is delivered to the unit owners holding the votes in the association which have not voted or agreed to the proposed amendment and no written objection to the proposed amendment is received by the association within 60 days after the association delivers notice; or

(2) unit owners of units to which at least 80 per cent of the votes in the association are allocated vote for or agree to the proposed amendment but at least one unit owner objects to the proposed amendment and, pursuant to an action brought by the association in [insert appropriate court] against all objecting unit owners, the court finds that the objecting unit owners do not have an interest, different in kind from the interests of the other unit owners, that the voting requirement of the declaration was intended to protect.

(a) Except for amendments that may be executed by a declarant under AS 34.08.170(b) or 34.08.180, [OR] by the association under AS 34.08.140(d), 34.08.160(c), 34.08.200(a), 34.08.210, or 34.08.740, or by certain unit owners under AS 34.08.160(b), 34.08.200(a), 34.08.210(b), or 34.08.260(b), and except as limited by (d) or required by (f) and (g) of this section, a declaration, including any required plats and plans, may be amended only by vote or agreement of unit owners of units comprising either at least 67 percent of the allocated interests in the association or a larger percentage specified in the declaration. A declaration may not specify a smaller number unless all of the units are restricted exclusively to nonresidential use.

 Sec. 2. AS 34.08.250(d) is amended to read:

(d) Except to the extent expressly permitted or required in [BY OTHER PROVISIONS OF] this chapter, an amendment may not create or increase special declarant rights, increase the number of units, or change the boundaries of a unit, the allocated interests of a unit, or the uses to which a unit is restricted, in the absence of unanimous consent of the unit owners.

 Sec. 3. AS 34.08.250 is amended by adding new subsections to read:

(f) By vote or agreement of unit owners of units to which at least 80 percent of the votes in the association are allocated or a larger percentage specified in the declaration, an amendment to the declaration may prohibit or materially restrict the permitted uses of or behavior in a unit or the number or other qualifications of persons that may occupy units. The amendment must provide reasonable protection for a use or occupancy permitted at the time the amendment was adopted.

(g) The time limits specified in a declaration described under AS 34.08.130(a)(8) may be extended and additional development rights created if persons entitled to cast at least 80 percent of the votes in the association, including 80 percent of the votes allocated to units not owned by the declarant, agree to the extension or additional development rights. The agreement is effective 30 days after an amendment to the declaration reflecting the terms of the agreement is recorded unless all persons holding special declarant rights affected by the amendment or security interests in those rights

(1) record a written objection within the 30-day period, in which case, the amendment is void; or

(2) consent in writing when the amendment is recorded, in which case, the amendment is effective when recorded.

STATE OF ALASKA BILL NO. HB 269
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Analysis

HB 269 modifies the Common Interest Ownership Act to allow for 80% of the homeowners to vote on development rights versus the current law that requires a unanimous vote. This conforms to the recently updated Federal Uniform Common Interest Ownership Act.

There is no anticipated fiscal impact to the Division as a result of this legislation.

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act allowing as a condition of probation for a defendant convicted of certain sex offenses a prohibition against the defendant's residing at a residence where installed outdoor recreational equipment suitable for use by children under 16 years of age is located on the property."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 12.55.100(e) is amended to read:

(e) In addition to other conditions imposed on the defendant, while on probation and as a condition of probation

(1) for a sex offense, as described in AS 12.63.100, the defendant

(A) shall be required to submit to regular periodic polygraph examinations;

(B) may be required to provide each electronic mail address, instant messaging address, and other Internet communication identifier that the defendant uses to the defendant's probation officer; the probation officer shall forward those addresses and identifiers to the Alaska state troopers and to the local law enforcement agency;

(2) if the defendant was convicted of a violation of AS 11.41.434 - 11.41.455, AS 11.61.125 - 11.61.128, or a similar offense in another jurisdiction, the defendant may be required to refrain from

(A) using or creating an Internet site;

(B) communicating with children under 16 years of age;

(C) possessing or using a computer; or

(D) residing within 500 feet of school grounds; in this subparagraph, "school grounds" has the meaning given in AS 11.71.900;

(3) if the probation condition in (e)(2)(B) or (D) of this section is imposed on the defendant, the defendant shall, as a condition of probation, provide notice to the defendant's probation officer before or not later than 24 hours after moving into a residence where installed outdoor recreational equipment designed or intended primarily for use by children under 16 years of age is present on the property.

RE: HB 278 Sex Offender Probation Conditions

During the last hearing, there was concern about the applicability of the law. We have narrowed the language so it is much more specific to individuals who are already required to refrain from living within 500 feet of a school and/or from communicating with an individual under the age of 16. In addition, when looking at AS 12.55.100(e)(2), this law applies to defendants convicted of a violation of AS 11.41.434-11.41.455, AS 11.61.125-11.61.128, or a similar offense in another jurisdiction. AS 11.41.434 defines sexual abuse of a minor in the first degree, second degree, third degree, fourth degree, online enticement of a minor, and unlawful exploitation of a minor. These laws solely deal with individuals who have sexually abused minors. If an individual sexually offends another adult, this bill would not be applicable.

Other questions are addressed below.

What about sex offenders with children? The new language of the bill will simply require the defendant to report. If the defendant has children, and is living in a location where there is installed recreational equipment, they will have to report the equipment's presence to the probation officer. In addition, the committee substitute states that if a defendant has been required to refrain from communicating with children under 16 years of age or residing within 500 feet of school grounds, then they will be required to disclose the fact that there is equipment on the property that would be suitable for children.

Will the defendant have to uninstall equipment? The committee substitute removes this problem. The defendant will not be required to remove the equipment. The defendant will be required to disclose the existence of the equipment on the property of his or her residence to the probation officer. The probation officer will decide the appropriate course of action.

Would the state have to compensate the defendant for the equipment? No. The defendant will not be required to remove the equipment.

What if the defendant moves into a low-income housing unit and there is already a playground installed on the property? Given the new language of the bill, the defendant would be required to report this. Should the probation officer or treatment provider see this as a threat of recidivism, they would follow with the appropriate action.

What about a snowmobile/ATV? The language of the bill talks specifically about equipment that would be suitable for use of children under the age of 16. Snowmobiles are not designed or intended primarily for use by children under the age of 16.

An Act allowing as a condition of probation for a defendant convicted of certain sex offenses a prohibition against the defendant's residing at a residence where outdoor recreational equipment suitable for use by children under 16 years of age is located on the property.

This act will amend the current statute AS 12.55.100(e) to include a provision that will prevent individuals registered as a sex offender to live in a residence where outdoor equipment is located on the property. This act will give judges the opportunity to restrict specific sex offenders from having any item a child would want to play on like a trampoline or a jungle gym. These items can be used to lure children into a situation where a past offender could create a relationship with the child, leading to a repeat offense. Under current law, registered sex offenders may be required to refrain from using or creating a web site, communicating with children less than 16 years of age, possessing or using a computer, and residing within 500 feet of a school.

The state of Alaska does not apply austere residence restrictions to sexual offenders. This act will add a minor residence restriction to prevent sexual recidivism by offenders. This act affects only individuals who have previously committed sexual offenses.

This is an important addition that would increase the safety of children and would reduce initial contact between children and sex offenders. By reducing the chance of an interaction, we reduce the chance of a sexual offender repeating his or her crime. This act will provide the courts with a tool they do not currently have when dealing with sex offenders.

Thank you for your consideration on this issue.

Analysis

Area restrictions are a new condition of probation for sex offenders, therefore the department currently has no data on previous violation/offenses and is unable to estimate the number of future area restriction violations that will occur.

If passed, the Department of Corrections will closely monitor the future fiscal impacts of this legislation.

BILL NO. HB 278

Analysis

The bill gives the sentencing court discretion, when sentencing a defendant convicted of sex offenses against children, to order the defendant, as a condition of probation, not to reside where outdoor recreation equipment for children under 16 is located on the property.

The fiscal impact to Department of Law is zero.

RE: House Bill 278, Sex Offenders

Dear Representative Petersen:

The Board of Directors of Victims for Justice supports House Bill 278.

Victims for Justice is a victim advocacy agency. We advocate for victims of all violent crimes, and we share your concern for the victims and potential victims of pedophile sex offenders.

We believe the addition of paragraph (2) (D), to AS 12.55.100 (e), allowing the court to require that certain felons refrain from residing at a residence where outdoor recreational equipment suitable for use by children under 16 years of age is located on the property, is a reasonable provision. The permissive nature of this language will allow the court to make such requirements when the nature of the offender, and previous offenses, suggests it, but will not overburden law enforcement, probation and parole officers in cases where it doesn't apply.

Understanding Sex Offenders: An Introductory Curriculum

Section 2: The Nature and Scope of Sex Offending

Incidence and Prevalence

- 302,100 women and 92,700 men are forcibly raped in the U.S. each year.
- 1 in 6 women and 1 in 33 men in the U.S. have experienced rape.
- 1 in 4 girls and 1 in 7 boys have been sexually assaulted.

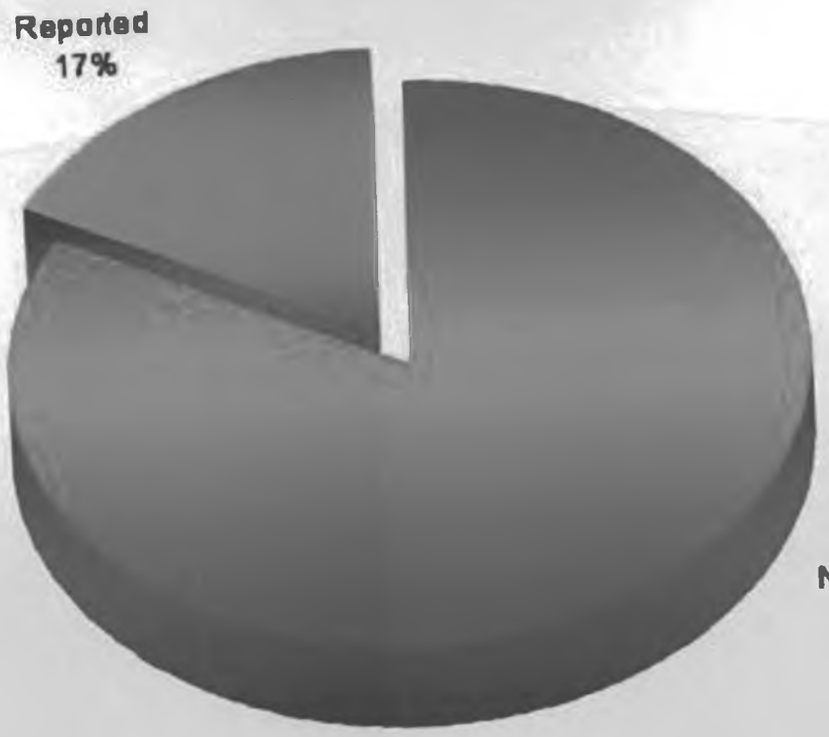
Reporting Rates



(Tjaden & Thoennes, 1998)

Reasons for Not Reporting

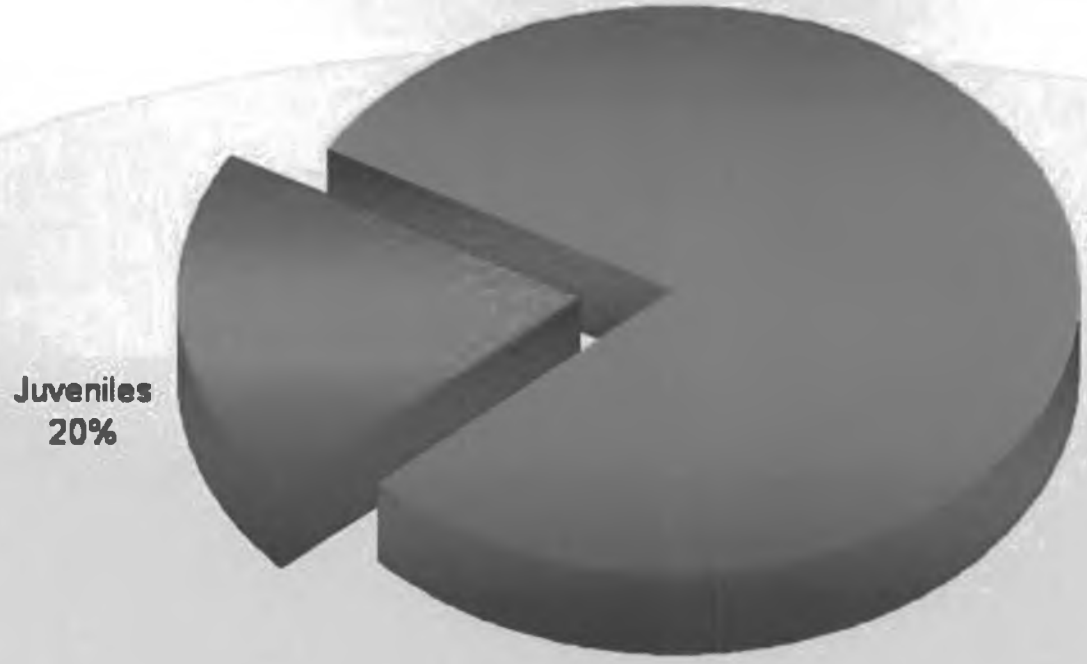
- Belief that nothing can be done
- Fear of or care for the offender
- Consider the assault a private matter
- Self-blame, or worry that others will blame them
- Fear that others will not believe them
- Unsure about what happened

Arrests of Sex Offenders

- 26,066 arrests for forcible rape
- 90,913 for other sex offenses

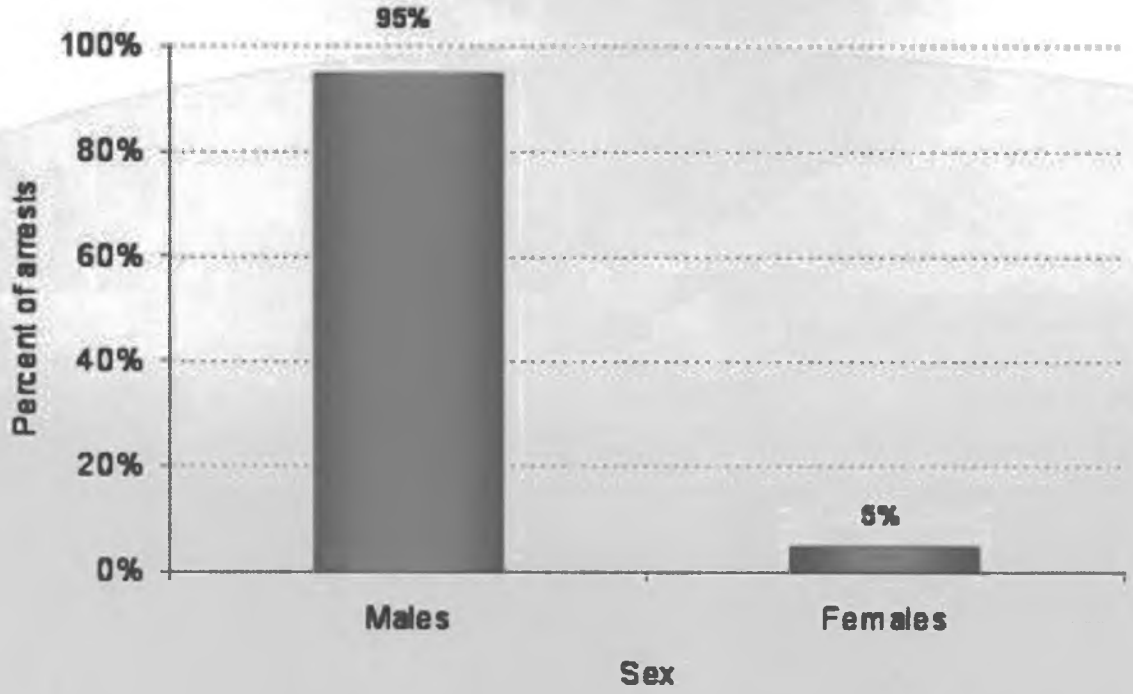
(Federal Bureau of Investigation, 2005)

Arrests by Age



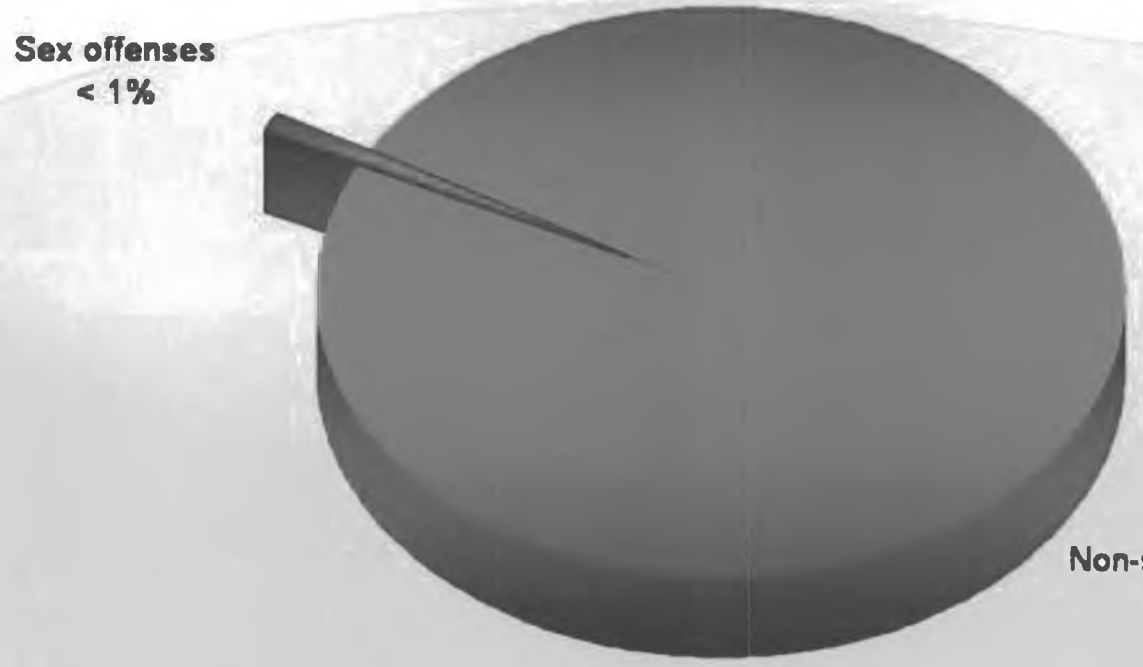
(Federal Bureau of Investigation, 2005)

Arrests by Sex



(Federal Bureau of Investigation, 2005)

Arrests by Offense Type



(Federal Bureau of Investigation, 2005)

Convicted Sex Offenders

- Comprise 10 to 30% of our prison populations
- 150,000 incarcerated throughout the country
- 170,000 are under the authority of correctional agencies

(Bynum, Huebner, & Burgess-Proctor, 2002; Glaze & Palla, 2005; Greenfeld, 1997; Harrison & Beck, 2003, 2006)

Undetected Offenses

- Sex crimes for which offenders are arrested may not be their first or only crime.

- Crossover potential exists also:
  - Some incest offenders may offend outside the family.
  - Some non-incest offenders may offend within the family.
  - Some child molesters may rape adults.
  - Some rapists may molest children.

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act allowing as a condition of probation for a defendant convicted of certain sex offenses a prohibition against the defendant's residing at a residence where outdoor recreational equipment suitable for use by children under 16 years of age is located on the property."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 12.55.100(e) is amended to read:

(e) In addition to other conditions imposed on the defendant, while on probation and as a condition of probation

(1) for a sex offense, as described in AS 12.63.100, the defendant

(A) shall be required to submit to regular periodic polygraph examinations;

(B) may be required to provide each electronic mail address, instant messaging address, and other Internet communication identifier that the defendant uses to the defendant's probation officer; the probation officer shall forward those addresses and identifiers to the Alaska state troopers and to the local law enforcement agency;

(2) if the defendant was convicted of a violation of AS 11.41.434 - 11.41.455, AS 11.61.125 - 11.61.128, or a similar offense in another jurisdiction, the defendant may be required to refrain from

(A) using or creating an Internet site;

(B) communicating with children under 16 years of age;

(C) possessing or using a computer;

(D) installing outdoor recreational equipment suitable for use by children under 16 years of age on the defendant's property or at the defendant's residence; or

(E) [(D)] residing within 500 feet of school grounds; in this subparagraph, "school grounds" has the meaning given in AS 11.71.900.

Re: House Bill 278
ACLU Review of Legal Issues

Chair Gatto, Vice-Chair Thompson:

Thank you for the opportunity to submit written testimony regarding House Bill 278, relating to the conditions of probation.

The American Civil Liberties Union of Alaska represents thousands of members and activists throughout the State of Alaska who seek to preserve and expand individual freedoms and civil liberties guaranteed under the United States and Alaska Constitutions.

HB 278, as proposed, would allow and encourage the imposition of parole and probation conditions prohibiting certain sex offenders from "residing at a residence where outdoor recreational equipment suitable for use by children under 16 years of age is located on the property." We have several concerns with the proposed legislation, outlined in greater detail below, and urge a Do Not Pass vote by Members of the Committee.

Issues Relating to Housing of Sex Offenders

Fundamentally, HB 278 may be counterproductive in achieving the presumed public safety goals intended. In practice, it is extremely difficult for most sex offenders to obtain housing, whether as a result of being listed on the sex offender registry itself, or owing to a variety of regulations prohibiting them from accessing public housing or public subsidies for housing that would act as a safety net for others.[1]

However, when sex offenders cannot find a fixed residence, the whole purpose of the registry is defeated. Public safety is actually decreased by having a transient population of sex offenders living in shelters and parks. In fact, many sex offenders (and far too many recent criminal offenders generally) are released to homeless shelters, or even to living in the woods and parks in and around large cities like Anchorage, Juneau, and Fairbanks.

The preferred solution would support rehabilitation, which includes getting a job, getting a stable home, and avoiding the misconduct and related factors that led to the offense, which may include drugs or alcohol. Without having a stable home, it is difficult to keep a job or stay sober.

Unfortunately, the current bill would force many sex offenders from their homes and disrupt the rehabilitation process.

The Proposed Bill Would Leave Many Renters With No Option But to Move Out of Difficult-to-Obtain Housing

HB 278 would allow parole and probation conditions prohibiting sex offenders from residing at locations with children's recreational equipment on the property. However, a sex offender renting a property may have no control over whether there is recreational equipment on the property. If a sex offender is currently renting a home with a swing set in the backyard, his only option will be to move out, with no guarantee that he will find new housing. Most landlords would not permit a tenant to demolish a fixed part of the property that increases the property's value. This bill will simply be another factor in the continuing cycle of homelessness for sex offenders, a cycle which inhibits rehabilitation and thwarts public safety.

The Bill also would allow prohibitions on sex offenders from living where recreational equipment is "on the property," which on its face could prohibit a sex offender from living in an apartment building or complex where any playground equipment lies, even if the equipment is distant from the offenders actual apartment. In such a circumstance, the offender will again have little choice but to move out of the premises; a large apartment complex is not going to demolish its playground equipment simply for the benefit of one resident.

1. This occurs, despite the fact that sex offenders, relative to other criminal offenders, actually have a lower recidivism rate than other offenders. Alaska Judicial Council, Criminal Recidivism in Alaska, at 4 (2007) (showing that property offenders were rearrested at a 67% rate; violent crime offenders at a 60% rate; drug offenders at a 52% rate; and sex offenders at a 39% rate).

A Balance of Public Safety Interests Would Limit the Scope of the Bill to Recreational Equipment Within the Control of the Sex Offender

The problems outlined above all reflect situations under the proposed bill in which the sex offender's only option would be to move out. A narrower bill that limited its reach only to circumstances where the sex offender has control over the recreational equipment would be more reasonable, and avoid leaving sex offenders with no choice but moving from a home. A bill which allowed probation and parole conditions prohibiting sex offenders from installing recreational equipment on their property would focus, appropriately, on the conduct of the sex offender, rather than punishing those who happen to live at a location where recreational equipment is present.

The Discretionary Nature of the Conditions Will Not Lead to Individualized Enforcement in an Already Overloaded Justice System

The probation and parole conditions are theoretically discretionary and not mandatory. And if case loads allowed, a responsive probation/parole officer could took the time to carefully review each case, and craft specific conditions to the individual probationer or parolee's circumstances to avoid these problems. Unfortunately, parole and probation officers supervise large numbers of parolees and probationers.[2] And some parole and probation officers do not see their function as helping parolees or probationers rehabilitate themselves; some see their function as waiting to "catch" the parolee or probationer to return them to prison. In such an environment, expecting officers to enforce conditions of release in ways narrowly tailored to each instance is unreasonable.

Most likely, this condition will be imposed on most or all of the probationers and parolees falling within its scope and enforced with little consideration of individual circumstances. Such enforcement will lead to increased homelessness, increased instability for probationers and parolees, an increased risk of reoffending, and diminish public safety. No evidence has been put forward as to the frequency by which sex offenders use such equipment to lure children, or how many offenders would be displaced by such a policy.

Conclusion

For the reasons above, the ACLU urges the committee to reject HB 278.

2. Roughly 100 probation and parole agents supervise almost 6,000 probationers and parolees. Alaska Department of Corrections, Offender Profile 2010, at 62 (showing 5797 probationers or parolees in 2010); State of Alaska, FY2013 Governor's Operating Budget, Department of Corrections Statewide Probation and Parole Component Budget Summary at 6 (showing 107 probation/parole agent positions).

Please feel free to contact the undersigned should you require any additional information. We are happy to reply to any questions which Members of the Committee may have.

Thank you again for the opportunity to share our concerns.

Jeffrey Mittman

"An Act providing that an absentee ballot application submitted by a voter or on behalf of a voter is valid through the following two general elections; providing that an absentee ballot application for a voter who submits an absentee ballot application and then votes an absentee ballot is valid through the two general elections following the election at which the ballot is cast; and providing for an effective date."

Sponsor Statement

Currently, most voters must request a ballot each time they vote by mail. Under AS 15.20.081(i) uniformed service members and qualified overseas voters receive a ballot for the following two general elections after they apply for a by mail ballot. This bill will extend the same right to all Alaskans. Under the bill, a vote by mail ballot application from a qualified voter will be valid through the next two general elections. Furthermore, each time the voter casts a ballot by mail, the application will continue to be valid through the next two general elections. If the voter casts a ballot in a manner other than by mail, the vote by mail application will no longer be valid. Additionally, if the by mail ballot is returned to the Division of Elections as "undeliverable," the division need no longer send a ballot to that voter at that address.

(i) An absentee ballot application submitted by an absent uniformed services voter or by an absent overseas voter qualifying under AS 15.05.011 is valid through the next two regularly scheduled general elections for federal office after the date the application is submitted. In this subsection, "absent uniformed services voter" has the meaning given in 42 U.S.C. 1973ff-6.

Sectional Analysis

- Section 1:
  - Repeals and reenacts AS 15.20.081(i) to allow all voters to receive mail ballots for two general election cycles. Should the voter cast a mail ballot, he/she will receive mail ballots through the next two general elections.
- Section 2:
  - Provides an effective date of January 1, 2013

Explanation of Changes from "B" version to "E" version

Section 1 of the "B" version was deleted on the recommendation of the Department of Revenue.

Section 2 of the "B" version (now section 1 of the "E" version) has been modified to allow for the repeal and reenactment of that subsection to remove language that would otherwise be redundant.

Section 2 of the "E" version has been added to provide an effective date of January 1, 2013. This was done on the recommendation of the Division of Elections, so as not to place an undue burden upon the division during the 2012 election cycle.

Additionally, the bill title was made more specific.

Subject: Support for HB 287, Absentee Voting

Dear Chair Gatto & Vice Chair Thompson:

The Alaska Commission on Aging (ACoA) is pleased to offer our support for HB 287 that would allow qualified citizens to have absentee voting status for a period of two elections. Representative Max Gruenberg authored the bill and it is co-sponsored by Representative Petersen.

The right to vote and have a voice is an undeniable right for every United States citizen. Getting to the polls to vote can be a problem for elderly individuals with physical disabilities, the homebound, rural elders with limited access to transportation, or disabled Alaskan adults of any age. HB 287 will help make voting easier by allowing them to qualify for absentee voting status for a period of two elections.

The ACoA supports HB 287 to give absentee voting rights to individuals who have disabilities that prevent them from going to the polls to vote. Thank you for your support of this important legislation. Please feel free to contact Denise Daniello, ACoA's executive director, by phone (465-4879) or email (denise.daniello@alaska.gov) should you have questions or require additional information.

Sincerely,

Sharon Howerton-Clark

Dear Chair Lynn:

RE: HB 287 (Gruenberg)--Support

On behalf of the AARP members in Alaska, we encourage you and your colleagues on the House State Affairs Committee to support HB 287, authored by your Committee colleague Representative Max Gruenberg.

HB 287 would allow qualified citizens to have absentee voting status for a period of two elections. AARP believes the right to vote is the most basic of all political rights.

Normal aging and disabilities often interfere with a citizen's ability to exercise his or her right to vote. If someone has a physical problem that prevents their ability to vote on a regular basis and they qualify for an absentee ballot, it will be much easier if they can be given absentee voting rights for two more elections, if they so choose.

AARP recommends an "AYE" vote on HB 287.

Should you have any questions about our position, please feel free to contact me (586-3637) or Patrick Luby, AARP Advocacy Director (907-762-3314).

Thank you for your consideration.

MEMORANDUM January 23, 2012

SUBJECT: HB 291, relating to the posting of notices at U.S. Post Offices (Work Order No. 27-LS1074\A)

TO: Representative Carl Gatto
Chair of the House Judiciary Committee

FROM: Pamela Finley
Revisor of Statutes

HB 291 has been referred to the House Judiciary Committee. I would appreciate your scheduling the bill for a hearing at your earliest convenience.

The bill amends four statutes to delete a requirement that certain public notices be posted at a post office. The reason for this is that, since at least August 2007, the U.S. Postal Service has prohibited the posting of nongovernmental notices on postal service property. See enclosed postal service bulletin. The statutes amended are AS 03.35.030 (petitions concerning controlled livestock districts), AS 34.35.175(d) (personal property lien sales), AS 34.45.050(b) (consignee and bailee lien sales), and AS 43.20.270(d) (tax lien sales). It is offered as a special revisor's bill---rather than part of the regular revisor's bill---because there are different ways to fix the problem, which involve different policy choices. The bill as drafted simply deletes the requirement that a notice be posted at the post office. In this respect, it follows section 1, ch. 62, SLA 2010, which deleted the requirement from AS 09.35.140 (concerning sales on execution).

If you have any questions, please contact me (465-6656).

Analysis

HB 291 deletes the posting of notices at United States post offices. HB 291 should have no fiscal impact on Department of Law.

Rules and Regulations Governing Conduct on Postal Service Property

Applicability

These rules and regulations apply to all real property under the charge and control of the U.S. Postal Service®, to all tenant agencies, and to all persons entering in or on such property. These rules and regulations must be kept posted at a conspicuous place on all such property. These rules and regulations shall not apply to:

a. Any portions of real property, owned or leased by the Postal Service™, that are leased or subleased by the Postal Service to private tenants for their exclusive use.

b. With respect to restrictions on soliciting, electioneering, collecting debts, vending, and advertising on sidewalks along the street frontage of Postal Service property falling within the property lines of the Postal Service that are not physically distinguishable from adjacent municipal or other public sidewalks and any paved areas adjacent to such sidewalks that are not physically distinguishable from such sidewalks.

Recording Presence

Except as otherwise ordered, properties must be closed to the public after normal business hours. Properties also may be closed to the public in emergency situations and at such times as may be necessary for the orderly conduct of business. Admission to properties when closed to the public may be limited to authorized individuals who may be required to sign the register and display identification when requested by Security Force personnel or other authorized individuals.

General Restrictions

Preservation of Property

Littering, spitting, creating any hazard to persons or things, throwing articles of any kind from a building, climbing upon the roof or any part of the building, or willfully destroying, damaging, or removing any property or any part thereof is prohibited.

Conformity with Signs and Directions

All persons in and on property shall comply with official signs of a prohibitory or directory nature and with the directions of Security Force personnel or other authorized individuals.

Inspection

Purses, briefcases, and other containers brought into, while on, or being removed from the property are subject to inspection. However, items brought directly to a Postal Service facility's customer mailing acceptance area and deposited in the mail are not subject to inspection, except as provided by the Administrative Support Manual, part 274. A person arrested for violation of this part may be searched incident to the arrest. Vehicles and their contents brought into, while on, or being removed from restricted nonpublic areas are subject to inspection. Persons entering these areas who object and refuse to consent to the inspection of the vehicle, its contents, or both may be denied entry. After entering the area without objection, consent to inspection shall be implied. A full search of the person and the vehicle driven or occupied by that person may accompany an arrest.

Specific Restrictions

Disturbances

Disorderly conduct, or conduct that creates loud and unusual noise or obstructs the usual use of entrances, foyers, corridors, offices, elevators, stairways, and parking lots, or that otherwise tends to impede or disturb the public employees in the performance of their duties or otherwise impedes or disturbs the general public in transacting business or obtaining the services provided on Postal Service property is prohibited.

Gambling

Participating in games for money or other personal property, the operation of gambling devices, the conduct of a lottery or pool, or the selling or purchasing of lottery tickets is prohibited on postal premises. This does not apply to state lottery tickets at vending facilities operated by licensed blind persons where such lotteries are authorized by state law.

Alcoholic Beverages, Drugs, and Smoking

Anyone under the influence of alcohol or any drug that has been defined as a "controlled substance" may not enter Postal Service property or operate a motor vehicle on Postal Service property. The possession, sale, or use of any "controlled substance" (except when permitted by law) or the sale or use of any alcoholic beverage (except as authorized by the Postmaster General or designee) on Postal Service premises is prohibited. The term "controlled substance" is defined in Title 21, United States Code section 802. Smoking is prohibited in all Postal Service buildings and office space, including public lobbies.

Soliciting, Electioneering, Collecting Debts, Vending, and Advertising

Soliciting alms and contributions, campaigning for election to any public office, collecting private debts, commercial soliciting and vending, displaying or distributing commercial advertising, soliciting signatures on petitions, polls, or surveys (except as otherwise authorized by Postal Service regulations), and impeding entrance to or departure from Post Offices™ are prohibited on Postal Service property. These prohibitions do not apply to the following:

a. Commercial or nonprofit activities performed under contract with the Postal Service or pursuant to the provisions of the Randolph-Sheppard Act.

b. Posting notices on employee bulletin boards as authorized by Title 39 Code of Federal Regulations (CFR) 243.2.

c. The solicitation of U.S. Postal Service and other federal military or civilian personnel for contributions by recognized agencies as authorized by the Manual on Fund Raising Within Federal Service, issued under Executive Order 12353.

Public Assembly and Public Address

Leafleting, distributing literature, picketing, and demonstrating by members of the public are prohibited in lobbies and other interior areas open to the public. Public assembly and public address, except when conducted or sponsored by the Postal Service, are prohibited in lobbies and other interior areas open to the public.

Depositing Literature

Depositing or posting of handbills, flyers, pamphlets, signs, posters, placards, or other literature (except official Postal Service and other governmental notices and announcements) on the grounds, walks, driveways, parking and maneuvering areas, exteriors of buildings, and other structures, or on the floors, walls, stairs, racks, counters, desks, writing tables, window ledges, or furnishings in interior public areas on Postal Service premises is prohibited. This does not apply to the following:

a. Posting notices on employee bulletin boards as authorized by 39 CFR 243.2.

b. Interior space assigned to tenants for their exclusive use.

Photographs for News, Advertising, or Commercial Purposes

Photographs for news purposes may be taken in entrances, lobbies, foyers, corridors, or auditoriums when used for public meetings except where prohibited by official signs or Security Force personnel or other authorized personnel or a federal court order or rule. Other photographs may be taken only with the permission of the local postmaster or installation head.

Dogs and Other Animals

Dogs and other animals (except those used to assist persons with disabilities) must not be brought onto Postal Service property for other than official purposes.

Vehicular and Pedestrian Traffic

Drivers of all vehicles in or on Postal Service property must be in possession of a current and valid driver's license and vehicle registration, and the vehicle must display all current and valid tags and licenses required by the jurisdiction in which it is registered. Drivers who have had their privilege or license to drive suspended or revoked shall not drive any vehicle in or on Postal Service property during such period of suspension or revocation.

Drivers of all vehicles in or on Postal Service premises shall drive in a careful and safe manner at all times and must comply with signals and directions of Security Force personnel, other authorized individuals, and all posted traffic signs.

Blocking of entrances, driveways, walks, loading platforms, or fire hydrants is prohibited.

Parking without authority, parking in unauthorized locations or in reserved locations, or parking continuously in excess of 18 hours without permission or contrary to the direction of posted signs is prohibited. Supplemental specific traffic directives may be issued by the postmaster or installation head. When issued and posted, such directives shall have the same force and effect as if made a part hereof.

Voter Registration

Voter registration may be conducted on Postal Service property only with the approval of the postmaster or installation head. See 39 CFR 232.1(h)(4) for the conditions that apply to voter registration activities on Postal Service property.

Weapons and Explosives

No person while on Postal Service property may carry firearms, other dangerous or deadly weapons, or explosives, either openly or concealed, or store the same on Postal Service property, except for official purposes.

Nondiscrimination

No person entering on postal property shall be subjected to discrimination on the basis of race, color, sex, religion, national origin, age (40 years of age or older), or disability (physical or mental) in using any of the services offered by the U.S. Postal Service.

Penalties and Other Law

Alleged violations of these rules and regulations are heard, and the penalties prescribed herein are imposed, either in a federal district court or by a federal magistrate in accordance with applicable court rules. Questions regarding such rules must be directed to the managing counsel for the office involved.

Individuals found guilty of violating these rules and regulations are subject to a fine of not more than $50 or imprisonment of not more than 30 days, or both. Nothing contained in these rules and regulations shall be construed to abrogate any other federal laws or regulations or any state or local laws and regulations applicable to any area in which the property is situated.

Enforcement

Security Force personnel will exercise the powers of special police and are responsible for enforcing the regulations in this notice in a manner that will protect U.S. Postal Service property. Postal Inspectors, Office of Inspector General Special Agents, and anyone designated by the Chief Postal Inspector may also enforce these regulations.

Poster 7, August 2007

obstructs the ordinary use of entrances, foyers, corridors, offices, meeting rooms, elevators, stairways, or parking lots, or otherwise tends to impede or disturb the members of the Board in the performance of their duties, or members of the public while attempting to attend or observe a meeting of the Board or of any subdivision, or committee of the Board, is prohibited.

(3) Any person who violates paragraph (n) (1) or (2) of this section may, in addition to being subject to the penalties prescribed in paragraph (p) of this section, be removed from and barred from reentering postal property during the meeting with respect to which the violation occurred.

(4) A copy of the rules of this section governing conduct on postal property, including the rules of this paragraph appropriately highlighted, shall be posted in prominent locations at the public entrances to postal property and outside the meeting room at any meeting of the Board of Governors or of any subdivision or committee of the Board.

(o) Depositing literature. Depositing or posting handbills, flyers, pamphlets, signs, poster, placards, or other literature, except official postal and other Governmental notices and announcements, on the grounds, walks, driveways, parking and maneuvering areas, exteriors of buildings and other structures, or on the floors, walls, stairs, racks, counters, desks, writing tables, window-ledges, or furnishings in interior public areas on postal premises, is prohibited. This prohibition does not apply to:

(1) Posting notices on bulletin boards as authorized in §243.2(a) of this chapter;

(2) Interior space assigned to tenants for their exclusive use;

(3) Posting of notices by U.S. Government-related organizations, such as the Inaugural Committee as defined in 36 U.S.C. 501.

(p) Penalties and other law. (1) Alleged violations of these rules and regulations are heard, and the penalties prescribed herein are imposed, either in a Federal district court or by a Federal magistrate in accordance with applicable court rules. Questions regarding such rules should be directed to the regional counsel for the region involved.

(2) Whoever shall be found guilty of violating the rules and regulations in this section while on property under the charge and control of the Postal Service is subject to a fine as provided in 18 U.S.C. 3571 or imprisonment of not more than 30 days, or both. Nothing contained in these rules and regulations shall be construed to abrogate any other Federal laws or regulations or any State and local laws and regulations applicable to any area in which the property is situated.

(q) Enforcement. (1) Members of the U.S. Postal Service security force shall exercise the powers provided by 18 U.S.C. 3061(c)(2) and shall be responsible for enforcing the regulations in this section in a manner that will protect Postal Service property and persons thereon.

(2) Local postmasters and installation heads may, pursuant to 40 U.S.C. 1315(d)(3) and with the approval of the chief postal inspector or his designee, enter into agreements with State and local enforcement agencies to insure that these rules and regulations are enforced in a manner that will protect Postal Service property.

(3) Postal Inspectors, Office of Inspector General Criminal Investigators, and other persons designated by the Chief Postal Inspector may likewise enforce regulations in this section.

PART 232—CONDUCT ON POSTAL PROPERTY

§ 232.1 Conduct on postal property.

(a) Applicability. This section applies to all real property under the charge and control of the Postal Service, to all tenant agencies, and to all persons entering in or on such property. This section shall be posted and kept posted at a conspicuous place on all such property. This section shall not apply to—

(i) Any portions of real property, owned or leased by the Postal Service, that are leased or subleased by the Postal Service to private tenants for their exclusive use;

(ii) With respect to sections 232.1(h)(1) and 232.1(o), sidewalks along the street frontage of postal property falling within the property lines of the Postal Service that are not physically distinguishable from adjacent municipal or other public sidewalks, and any paved areas adjacent to such sidewalks that are not physically distinguishable from such sidewalks.

(b) Inspection, recording presence. (1) Purses, briefcases, and other containers brought into, while on, or being removed from the property are subject to inspection. However, items brought directly to a postal facility's customer mailing acceptance area and deposited in the mail are not subject to inspection, except as provided by section 274 of the Administrative Support Manual. A person arrested for violation of this section may be searched incident to that arrest.

(2) Vehicles and their contents brought into, while on, or being removed from restricted nonpublic areas are subject to inspection. A prominently displayed sign shall advise in advance that vehicles and their contents are subject to inspection when entering the restricted nonpublic area, while in the confines of the area, or when leaving the area. Persons entering these areas who object and refuse to consent to the inspection of the vehicle, its contents, or both, may be denied entry; after entering the area without objection, consent shall be implied. A full search of a person and any vehicle driven or occupied by the person may accompany an arrest.

(3) Except as otherwise ordered, properties must be closed to the public after normal business hours. Properties also may be closed to the public in emergency situations and at such other times as may be necessary for the orderly conduct of business. Admission to properties during periods when such properties are closed to the public may be limited to authorized individuals who may be required to sign the register and display identification documents when requested by security force personnel or other authorized individuals.

(c) Preservation of property. Improperly disposing of rubbish, spitting, creating any hazard to persons or things, throwing articles of any kind from a building, climbing upon the roof or any part of a building, or willfully destroying, damaging, or removing any property or any part thereof, is prohibited.

(d) Conformity with signs and directions. All persons in and on property shall comply with official signs of a prohibitory or directory nature, and with the directions of security force personnel or other authorized individuals.

(e) Disturbances. Disorderly conduct, or conduct which creates loud and unusual noise, or which impedes ingress to or egress from post offices, or otherwise obstructs the usual use of entrances, foyers, corridors, offices, elevators, stairways, and parking lots, or which otherwise tends to impede or disturb the public employees in the performance of their duties, or which otherwise impedes or disturbs the general public in transacting business or obtaining the services provided on property, is prohibited.

(f) Gambling. Participating in games for money or other personal property, the operation of gambling devices, the conduct of a lottery or pool, or the selling or purchasing of lottery tickets, is prohibited on postal premises. In accordance with 20 U.S.C. 107a(a)(5), this prohibition does not apply to the vending or exchange of State Lottery tickets at vending facilities operated by licensed blind persons where such lotteries are authorized by state law.

(g) Alcoholic beverages, drugs, and smoking. (1) A person under the influence of an alcoholic beverage or any drug that has been defined as a "controlled substance" may not enter postal property or operate a motor vehicle on postal property. The possession, sale, or use of any "controlled substance" (except when permitted by law) or the sale or use of any alcoholic beverage (except as authorized by the Postmaster General or designee) on postal premises is prohibited. The term "controlled substance" is defined in section 802 of title 21 U.S.C.

(2) Smoking (defined as having a lighted cigar, cigarette, pipe, or other smoking material) is prohibited in all postal buildings and office space, including public lobbies.

(h) Soliciting, electioneering, collecting debts, vending, and advertising. (1) Soliciting alms and contributions, campaigning for election to any public office, collecting private debts, soliciting and vending for commercial purposes (including, but not limited to, the vending of newspapers and other publications), displaying or distributing commercial advertising, collecting signatures on petitions, polls, or surveys (except as otherwise authorized by Postal Service regulations), are prohibited. These prohibitions do not apply to:

(i) Commercial or nonprofit activities performed under contract with the Postal Service or pursuant to the provisions of the Randolph-Sheppard Act;

(ii) Posting notices on bulletin boards as authorized in § 243.2(a) of this chapter;

(iii) The solicitation of Postal Service and other Federal military and civilian personnel for contributions by recognized agencies as authorized under Executive Order 12353, of March 23, 1982.

(2) Solicitations and other actions which are prohibited by paragraph (h)(1) of this section when conducted on Postal Service property should not be directed by mail or telephone to postal employees on Postal Service property. The Postal Service will not accept or distribute mail or accept telephone calls directed to its employees which are believed to be contrary to paragraph (h)(1) of this section.

(3) Leafleting, distributing literature, picketing, and demonstrating by members of the public are prohibited in lobbies and other interior areas of postal buildings open to the public. Public assembly and public address, except when conducted or sponsored by the Postal Service, are also prohibited in lobbies and other interior areas of postal building open to the public.

(4) Voter registration. Voter registration may be conducted on postal premises only with the approval of the postmaster or installation head provided that all of the following conditions are met:

(i) The registration must be conducted by government agencies or nonprofit civic leagues or organizations that operate for the promotion of social welfare but do not participate or intervene in any political campaign on behalf of any candidate or political party for any public office.

(ii) Absolutely no partisan or political literature may be available, displayed, or distributed. This includes photographs, cartoons, and other likenesses of elected officials and candidates for public office.

(iii) The registration is permitted only in those areas of the postal premises regularly open to the public.

(iv) The registration must not interfere with the conduct of postal business, postal customers, or postal operations.

(v) The organization conducting the voter registration must provide and be responsible for any equipment and supplies.

(vi) Contributions may not be solicited.

(vii) Access to the workroom floor is prohibited.

(viii) The registration activities are limited to an appropriate period before an election.

(5) Except as part of postal activities or activities associated with those permitted under paragraph (h)(4) of this section, no tables, chairs, freestanding signs or posters, structures, or furniture of any type may be placed in postal lobbies or on postal walkways, steps, plazas, lawns or landscaped areas, driveways, parking lots, or other exterior spaces.

(i) Photographs for news, advertising, or commercial purposes. Except as prohibited by official signs or the directions of security force personnel or other authorized personnel, or a Federal court order or rule, photographs for news purposes may be taken in entrances, lobbies, foyers, corridors, or auditoriums when used for public meetings. Other photographs may be taken only with the permission of the local postmaster or installation head.

(j) Dogs and other animals. Dogs and other animals, except those used to assist persons with disabilities, must not be brought upon postal property for other than official purposes.

(k) Vehicular and pedestrian traffic. (1) Drivers of all vehicles in or on property shall be in possession of a current and valid state or territory issued driver's license and vehicle registration, and the vehicle shall display all current and valid tags and licenses required by the jurisdiction in which it is registered.

(2) Drivers who have had their privilege or license to drive suspended or revoked by any state or territory shall not drive any vehicle in or on property during such period of suspension or revocation.

(3) Drivers of all vehicles in or on property shall drive in a careful and safe manner at all times and shall comply with the signals and directions of security force personnel, other authorized individuals, and all posted traffic signs.

(4) The blocking of entrances, driveways, walks, loading platforms, or fire hydrants in or on property is prohibited.

(5) Parking without authority, parking in unauthorized locations or in locations reserved for other persons, or continuously in excess of 18 hours without permission, or contrary to the direction of posted signs is prohibited. This section may be supplemented by the postmaster or installation head from time to time by the issuance and posting of specific traffic directives as may be required. When so issued and posted such directives shall have the same force and effect as if made a part hereof.

(l) Weapons and explosives. Notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, rule or regulation, no person while on postal property may carry firearms, other dangerous or deadly weapons, or explosives, either openly or concealed, or store the same on postal property, except for official purposes.

(m) Nondiscrimination. There must be no discrimination by segregation or otherwise against any person or persons because of race, color, religion, national origin, sex, or disability, in furnishing, or by refusing to furnish to such person or persons the use of any facility of a public nature, including all services, privileges, accommodations, and activities provided on postal property.

(n) Conduct with regard to meetings of the Board of Governors. (1) Without the permission of the chairman no person may participate in, film, televise, or broadcast any portion of any meeting of the Board or any subdivision or committee of the Board. Any person may electronically record or photograph a meeting, as long as that action does not tend to impede or disturb the members of the Board in the performance of their duties, or members of the public while attempting to attend or observe a meeting.

(2) Disorderly conduct, or conduct which creates loud or unusual noise,

Sponsor Statement

HB292 Uniform Probate Code; Trusts, Wills; Disposition of Human Remains

Alaska first modernized its trust and estate legislation in 1997. Since then, the trust and estate planning community continuously makes recommendations to the legislature for updates and improvements to Alaska's trust and estate laws to ensure that Alaska can continue to provide the best possible planning solutions. Alaska's trust and estate laws have significant impact on our economy, bringing literally millions of dollars to the state and creating jobs within the trust, banking, insurance and legal fields.

House Bill 292 provides for amendments to statute in the following areas:

- Extends protection for retirement plan assets to the beneficiaries of retirement plans (often the surviving spouse).
- Provides means of representation for minors and incapacitated persons in dealing with settlements of accounts or settlement agreements.
- Amends the 2003 Alaska Principal and Income Act to conform to current IRS regulations.
- Provides rules concerning who may control the disposition of decedents' remains.
- Makes conforming amendments to Alaska's laws regarding insurable interests to align with changes to the Uniform Trust Code.
- Provides that IRA interests can be voluntarily transferred to a family member or trust.
- Makes amendments to Alaska's community property provisions to update and clarify the ownership of community property.
- Allows a beneficiary to extend the time funds will be held in a Uniform Transfer to Minors Account.

Passage of HB 292 will ensure that Alaska remains the premier state in which to establish trusts and estates. I urge your support for this important legislation.

MEMORANDUM March 15, 2012

SUBJECT: CSHB 292(L&C) (Work Order No. 27-LS1232\I)

TO: Representative Kurt Olson
Chair of the House Labor and Commerce Committee
Attn: Konrad Jackson

FROM: Terry Bannister
Legislative Counsel

This memo accompanies the bill described above.

1. Single subject issue. It is my opinion that, by combining all of the subjects in the bill, the bill is not confined to one subject, and could be held by a court to violate the constitutional requirement that a bill be confined to one subject.[1]

The Alaska Supreme Court standard is that an "act should embrace some one general subject; and by this is meant, merely, that all matters treated of should fall under some one general idea, be so connected with or related to each other, either logically or in popular understanding, as to be parts of, or germane to, one general subject."[2]

Historically, the Alaska Supreme Court has interpreted Alaska's single subject rule to permit very broad subject matter in one bill without violating the single subject requirement. For example, the Court has held that bills relating to such broad themes as "development of water resources,"[3] "taxation,"[4] "land,"[5] "intoxicating liquor,"[6] and "criminal law"[7] are acceptable.[8] However, there was a strong dissent in one case against allowing broad subject matter in a single bill.[9] And, in 2010, the Alaska Supreme Court found that a proposed initiative violated the single subject requirement.[10] Please be aware that failure to comply with this requirement could jeopardize this bill if it were ever challenged.

2. Applicability (bill section 39). REPRESENTATIVE STEVE THOMPSON
DISTRICT 10

MEMORANDUM

To: Representative Kurt Olson, Chair
House Labor & Commerce Committee

From: Representative Steve Thompson

Date: March 7, 2012

Re: Legal memo on HB292 re: Contract Clause

The question has been raised about whether the applicability of certain provisions of the bill to existing retirement accounts, IRAs, trusts, and Uniform Transfers to Minors Accounts might violate the Contracts Clause of the United States Constitution. Analysis indicates that these provisions do not violate that clause.

The Constitution prohibits the states from "impairing" contractual obligations. See U.S. Const. art. 1, § 10, cl. 1. Thus, unless a contractual obligation is impaired, there can be no violation of the Contracts Clause. The proposed legislation with respect to IRAs does not impair or restrict any contract right. To the contrary, it expands the rights of an IRA participant/owner in that it authorizes the assignment of an interest in the plan. Since the owner/participant could, prior to the proposed legislation, freely withdraw all of the money from the plan, enacting legislation that permits an assignment, as well as maintaining the right of withdrawal, cannot be viewed as an impairment. It is instead a permissible expansion of rights that does not constitute an impairment of rights within the meaning of the constitutional provision.

Similarly, the provision in the proposed legislation that would provide expanded creditor protection for an inherited IRA or retirement interest does not effect an impairment of contract rights. The only people whose rights are constrained by this provision are creditors. But a creditor has no contract right to enforce a claim against the IRA or retirement interest. Thus, the legislation does not effect an impairment of contract rights. So, for example, when Congress amended the Bankruptcy Code in 2005 to provide expanded creditor protection for existing IRAs, no concern was raised about its constitutional validity. See section 522 of the Bankruptcy Code. So, too, here, the expansion of creditor protection does not implicate the Contracts Clause.

The ability of a trustee to modify a trust, pursuant to the amendments provided by sections 6 through 8 of the bill, does not raise Contract Clause issues. Many modifications are to administrative provisions. It is well established that changes that are administrative in nature do not implicate the Contract Clause. With respect to dispositive changes, if the existing trust provides for a limited standard, then the standard and beneficiaries cannot be changed. With respect to the ability of a trustee to "extend" the duration of a trust, it appears that the authority to invade trust principal by paying to another trust of longer duration is provided by common law. In the 1940 case of Phipps, the Supreme Court of Florida held the trustee had such power under common law. It relied on the RESTATEMENT OF PROPERTY. When New York, in 1991, enacted the country's first "decanting" statute (EPTL 10-6.6), the legislature stated it was declaratory of existing common law. Both Florida and New York have recently substantially amended their "decanting" statutes. Both of these states applied their amendments to existing trusts.

The changes to the Uniform Transfers to Minors Accounts provisions which allow for extension of the custodial period do not impair contract obligations of the minor. These changes allow the minor to compel distributions at the present statutory age (18 years or 21 years, depending on the existing provision), or at the beginning of an already extended period. Only if the minor consents, can the age be extended.

In summary, none of the provisions in the bill which apply to existing retirement accounts, IRAs, trusts, and Uniform Transfers to Minors Accounts violate the Contract Clause of the United States Constitution.

FISCAL NOTE

STATE OF ALASKA
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB 292

Analysis

Section 27 amends AS 21.42.020 and provides that a trustee or a trust may procure an insurance contract on the life or body of an individual and the proceeds may be payable to the trustee if the trustee or trust owns the insurance contract, a settler of the trust has an insurable interest in the individual insured, and the proceeds of the contract are primarily for the benefit of a trust beneficiary.

This provision has no anticipated fiscal impact on the Division of Insurance.

SECTIONAL ANALYSIS FOR HOUSE BILL NO. 292 (27-LS1232\I)

Sec. 1. Asset Protection for Inherited Retirement Plans. Alaska Statute 09.38.017(a) protects an individual's interest in a retirement plan from the claims of the individual's creditors. The amendment extends this protection to claims of a beneficiary's creditors (e.g., creditors of an individual's spouse). Arizona, Florida, and Texas have enacted similar provisions.

Sec. 2. This is a conforming amendment for Sec. 28.

Sec. 3. These are definitional changes implementing Sec. 1.

Sec. 4. through Sec. 5. Representation for Settlement Agreements. Alaska Statute 13.06.120 provides that minors, incapacitated persons, and similar persons may be represented by another person who has the same interests in the matter. This type of representation is important in order to simplify and make more efficient proceedings that involve persons who are not legally competent to represent themselves. The existing statute clearly applies to judicial proceedings. However, often it is important to have representation of minors and incapacitated persons with respect to the settlement of accounts of trustees of trusts and with respect to settlement agreements. These amendments clarify that the statute not only applies to court proceedings but also to non-judicial settlement proceedings.

Section 6 through 8. Existing Alaska Statute 13.36.157 provides a trustee with a method to modify an existing trust, commonly referred to as "decanting". Alaska enacted its "decanting" statute in 1998. Alaska copied New York's statute. At the present time, the following states have enacted decanting statutes: Alaska, Arizona, Delaware, Florida, Indiana, Missouri, Nevada, New Hampshire, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, South Dakota, and Tennessee. In addition, decanting statutes are pending before Illinois, Michigan, and Virginia.

New York recently did a thorough revision of its decanting statute and enacted this new revised statute in 2011. The proposed amendment to Alaska's decanting statute closely tracks the changes made by New York with modifications necessary to accommodate Alaska's procedural provisions.

The purposes of a decanting statute are to allow a trustee to modify a trust in order to correct errors and to adjust to changed circumstances and laws. The revised draft distinguishes between trustees who have unlimited discretion and those without unlimited discretion. A trustee without unlimited discretion must maintain the same beneficiaries in the new trust and apply the same standard for distributions. The trustee cannot be a settlor or beneficiary of the trust, and has a fiduciary duty to exercise the power of appointment in the best interests of one or more proper objects of the exercise of the power and as a prudent person would exercise the power under prevailing circumstances. A trustee must exercise the power in writing and must give written notice to the settlor, any person having the right to remove or replace the trustee, and any qualified beneficiary. A beneficiary may object to the exercise if it is an abuse of discretion, or fails to comply with the trustee's duties stated above. Restrictions exist to protect mandatory distribution rights, tax benefits, and to prohibit the trustee from exercising the power to either increase the trustee's compensation or decrease the trustee's liability.

Implementation of irrevocable trusts is best accomplished if the law provides reasonable flexibility to adjust to changed circumstances and to correct errors. The reason why so many states have enacted decanting statutes is because of the need for this flexibility. Amendment to Alaska's decanting statute to include these revised provisions will benefit the residents of the state of Alaska, many of whom use lifetime or testamentary trusts to implement their estate planning purposes.

Sec. 9 through Sec. 25. Amendments to 2003 Alaska Principal and Income Act. This modern act allows a person creating a new trust, or a trustee of an existing trust, to adopt a "unitrust" approach for determining the income of the trust which may be required to be distributed annually. A unitrust distributes a certain percentage of its assets annually to the current beneficiary. The use of this percentage unitrust approach allows the trustee to invest in order to maximize total return for both income and remainder beneficiaries.

Since 2003, the Internal Revenue Service has issued final regulations with respect to unitrusts. The Alaska Principal and Income Act amendments contained in this bill are designed to update Alaska's provisions to take advantage of these new regulations.

In summary, the most important changes contained in the bill expressly allow a trustee to choose a unitrust rate of three to five percent rather than be limited to the four percent amount presently in the law. The changes provide an explicit definition of income for a trust drafted as a unitrust. Language is added to provide the ordering of distributions among types of income and principal. A smoothing period of up to five years is allowed for determining the assets to be used when applying the unitrust percentage. Also, the new provisions clarify how the unitrust rules will apply to retirement benefits. These new changes will facilitate the use of unitrusts under Alaska law and maximize flexibility to take advantage of federal income tax planning.

Sec. 26 through 28. Amendments to Alaska Uniform Transfers to Minors Act. The Alaska Uniform Transfers to Minors Act allows donors, personal representatives, trustees, and obligors, to transfer assets to an account for the benefit of a minor. A custodian is named who may make distributions for the benefit of the minor. Under the existing statutes, the minor is entitled to the property when the minor reaches age 18 years or 21 years, depending on the type of transfer. The statute allows this age of distribution to be extended in certain circumstances to age 25 years.

A number of situations have arisen both in Alaska and in other states where it is undesirable for assets to be distributed later than the ages 18, 21, or 25 years, due to problems the minor may have, including substance abuse problems, immaturity, and the inability to manage assets. Often, the minor himself or herself is willing to have the assets remain in a custodial setting, managed by a competent person who will make distributions for the benefit of the minor. The amendments in this bill would allow for the extension to an age greater than that presently specified in the statute, as long as the minor consents to the extension during the six-month period when the minor attains the age when otherwise the assets would be distributed under the statute.

Sec. 29. Decedents Remains. Alaska does not presently have adequate statutory authority with respect to who may control the disposition of a decedent's remains. This has resulted in arguments and disputes among relatives and friends. Businesses involved in this area need protection concerning who is the person entitled to give them directions. This new act resolves the present uncertainty of the law. It provides authority for a person to provide directions and a form for a disposition document. If a person has not provided directions, then a priority list is provided of the persons who may control the disposition of the decedent's remains. Businesses who follow these directions or priority list are protected from liability.

Sec. 30. Insurable Interests. For many years, individuals have relied on life Insurance in helping to meet their financial, business, and estate planning needs. Often, their needs are best served by having one or more life insurance contracts held in an irrevocable trust, partnership, or limited liability company. In particular, irrevocable life insurance trusts have been widely used throughout the United States to own life insurance policies.

However, a relatively recent federal court case (Chawla, ex rel Giesinger v. Transamerica Occidental Life Ins. Co., 2005 WL 405405 (E.D. Va. 2005)) had the effect of pointing out that while state insurance statutes typically require purchasers of insurance contracts to have an "insurable interest" in the life or body of the insured, the statutory provisions describing who may have an insurable interest did not specifically include trusts and business entities which are commonly used to purchase and own such policies. This case raised sufficient uncertainty about the status of life insurance trusts that in July, 2010, the Uniform Law Commission approved amendments to the Uniform Trust Code to clarify the situation.

Alaska has previously adopted substantial portions of the Uniform Trust Code. The proposed amendment to AS 21.42.020 is based in large part on the recommended amendments to the Uniform Trust Code, and also clarifies that persons with insurable interests may form business entities for the purposes of purchasing, holding, and administering life insurance contracts. Other states, for example Delaware, have already amended their statutes for these reasons, or are considering such amendments.

Sec. 31. Transfers of IRA Interests. Lifetime estate planning often occurs by a participant making gifts, sales or other transfers of property during lifetime to family members or trusts for their benefit. For many individuals, one of their most valuable assets is their individual retirement account (IRA). Alaska law (AS 09.38.017) protects IRAs from claims of creditors. This protection could be construed to even prohibit voluntary transfers of the participant's interest in an IRA, which would prevent lifetime transfers of IRAs for estate planning and other purposes. Although it is important to maintain that creditor protection for IRAs, it would be beneficial to permit voluntary transfers of IRAs. Therefore, this section clarifies that the participant of an IRA may voluntarily transfer his or her IRA during lifetime.

Sec. 32 through Sec. 36. Community Property. In 1998, Alaska enacted an optional community property system. Several amendments have been made to Alaska's act, and this bill proposes further amendments designed to improve the act. Specifically, the amendments accomplish the following:

a. Add references to a community property trust in appropriate provisions.

b. Eliminate language stating a confusing statute of limitations and incorporates by reference a new statute of limitations.

c. Provide clarification that property which spouses agree is community property is owned as community property regardless of the form of title to the property. If title to community property is in a form that provides for survivorship ownership between the spouses then the survivorship ownership is presumed to have been made with the consent of both spouses. If one spouse designates a beneficiary for an interest in property, the designation is only effective for that spouse's one half interest unless the other spouse consents in writing. Various family designations are presumed to have been made with the consent of the other spouse. The testimony of one spouse is sufficient to rebut a presumption.

d. Enact remedies for improper transfers and limitation periods within which those remedies must be pursued.

Sec. 37. Repealed sections.

Sec. 38. Indirect rule change.

Sec. 39. Applicability

Sec. 40. Requirement for two-thirds majority vote of each house.

I. INTRODUCTION

Sponsors of an initiative challenge the lieutenant governor's refusal to certify the initiative for the ballot. The lieutenant governor denied certification because he determined that the initiative violated the single-subject requirement of AS 15.45.040. The sponsors filed suit in the superior court seeking a declaration that the initiative did not violate the single-subject rule. The superior court granted summary judgment in favor of the lieutenant governor and the sponsors appeal. Because the "soft dedication" of funds connecting the two aspects of the initiative is an insufficient link, and because we find no other sufficient connection between the initiative's proposed new oil production tax and the initiative's proposed new "clean elections" program, we agree that the initiative violates the single-subject rule. Accordingly, we affirm the superior court's order entering summary judgment in favor of the lieutenant governor.

II. FACTS AND PROCEEDINGS

On May 29, 2007, Tim June, Steve Cleary, and Joe McKinnon submitted an application for a ballot initiative to Lieutenant Governor Sean Parnell.[1] The initiative proposed a program 371 to provide public campaign funding to candidates for state office on a voluntary, opt-in basis. The initiative also proposed a three-cent tax on each barrel of oil produced in Alaska and stated that "[t]he legislature may appropriate ... the proceeds" of the tax to fund the program. The proposal included a non-binding directive that the legislature transfer excess funds to the Permanent Fund Dividend.

After submitting the initiative application, the sponsors engaged in "informal communications" with the Department of Law that led the sponsors to file a second initiative application. This second initiative application proposed the public campaign funding program but not the additional tax on oil production.

Lieutenant Governor Parnell reviewed the applications as required by AS 15.45.070. This statute directs the lieutenant governor to either certify an application for placement on the ballot or explain why certification is denied.[2] Lieutenant Governor Parnell denied certification of the first initiative proposal, explaining that the initiative "violates the single-subject rule" because "the initiative addresses two subjects that have no fair relation to each other: (1) it creates a voluntary system of public campaign financing, and (2) it imposes a tax on oil production."

Lieutenant Governor Parnell approved the second version of the initiative application. It appeared on the August 2008 ballot but did not pass.

The initiatives' sponsors, Eric Croft and a group called Alaskans for Clean Elections (collectively, "the Sponsors"), filed a complaint in the superior court against Lieutenant Governor Parnell and the State of Alaska (collectively, "Lieutenant Governor") seeking a declaration that the Lieutenant Governor erroneously rejected the first initiative.

The superior court granted summary judgment in favor of the Lieutenant Governor in June 2008. The Sponsors appeal.

III. STANDARD OF REVIEW

1 2 When reviewing a grant of summary judgment, we apply our independent judgment, "affirming if the record presents no genuine issue of material fact and if the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law."[3] In determining whether the prevailing party was entitled to judgment as a matter of law, we "draw [ ] all factual inferences in favor of, and view [ ] the facts in the light most favorable to, the non-prevailing party."[4]

3 We interpret the Alaska Constitution using our independent judgment, "according to reason, practicality, and common sense, taking into account the plain meaning and purpose of the law as well as the intent of the drafters."[5]

IV. DISCUSSION

The parties agree that the only issue in this case is whether the Sponsors' initiative violates the Alaska Constitution's single-subject rule.[6] 372 Article II, section 13 of the Alaska Constitution provides, in part, that "[e]very bill shall be confined to one subject." Our court has ruled on challenges to bills and initiatives under this provision in only seven cases.[7] In each case, we identified a single subject that encompassed all the provisions of the challenged bill or initiative; that is, every provision of the bill or initiative, considered on its own, related to a broader, single subject.[8]

Despite their contrary outcomes, the superior court relied on these cases and ruled in favor of the Lieutenant Governor, explaining that "there is [no] connection between the type of revenue created ... [and] the type of program" proposed by the initiative. On appeal, the Sponsors argue that the trial court improperly interpreted the single-subject rule to require a nexus between a funding source and the funded program beyond the fact of the funding. The Sponsors argue that even when two provisions of a bill are not otherwise related by subject, if one provision creates a program and another imposes a tax calibrated to collect approximately the amount of revenue necessary to fund the program, a non-binding, "soft dedication" of funds from the revenue source is sufficient to unite what would otherwise be two subjects into one, at least for purposes of the single-subject test. The Sponsors also argue, in the alternative, that the initiative's oil tax is thematically related to the campaign finance program. We are not persuaded by either of these arguments.

4 The single-subject rule protects the voters' ability to effectively exercise their right to vote by requiring that different proposals be voted on separately. This approach allows voters to express their will through their votes more precisely, prevents the adoption of policies through stealth or fraud,[9] and prevents the passage of measures lacking popular support by means of log-rolling.[10]

5 6 In ruling on single-subject challenges, we must balance the rule's purpose against the need for efficiency in the legislative process. If the rule were applied too narrowly, "statutes might be restricted unduly in scope and permissible subject matter, thereby multiplying and complicating the number of necessary enactment[s] and their interrelationships."[11] Our solution has been to construe the single-subject "provision ... 373 with considerable breadth."[12] We have consistently articulated the substance of the test to reflect this approach:

> All that is necessary is that [the] act should embrace some one general subject; and by this is meant, merely, that all matters treated of should fall under some one general idea, be so connected with or related to each other, either logically or in popular understanding, as to be parts of, or germane to, one general subject.[13]

In applying this test, we "disregard mere verbal inaccuracies, resolve doubts in favor of validity," and strike down challenged proposals only when the violation is "substantial and plain."[14]

7 In each of the seven cases in which this court has addressed a single-subject challenge, we upheld the challenged bill or initiative by determining that all provisions related to a single general subject, theme, or purpose.[15] But we have never addressed the question, raised by the Sponsors in this case, whether creating a revenue source that might fund an otherwise unrelated program suffices to unite the revenue source with the program as a "single subject."

The Sponsors argue that the creation of a program and the "soft dedication" of funds for that program are "inherently related" provisions "as a matter of both logic and popular understanding." They argue that the Washington Supreme Court's decision in Wash. Ass'n of Neighborhood Stores v. Wash. supports their position.[16] Neighborhood Stores involved an initiative that increased taxes on cigarettes and dedicated the new revenue to existing programs in the areas of "violence reduction and drug enforcement," "health services," and "water quality," with remaining funding allocated to "low-income health care programs and other programs."[17] The court held that the initiative did not violate that state's single-subject rule[18] because the new taxes provided revenue to programs that collectively constituted "a single and rationally unified proposal for improving the health of [Washington's] low-income citizens without imposing a net loss of tax revenue on other preexisting programs."[19]

In this case, the superior court observed that neither Neighborhood Stores nor any other example identified by appellants addressed a single initiative that proposed the creation of an entirely new government program and also proposed the creation of a new and thematically unrelated revenue source. The Neighborhood Stores initiative, which created and dedicated a revenue source, is fundamentally different from the Sponsors' initiative, which proposed the creation and "soft dedication" of a new revenue source, and proposed the creation of an entirely new government program. The latter runs afoul of the single-subject rule because it does not provide the voters with an opportunity to express their approval or disapproval of each distinct proposal.

Neighborhood Stores is also distinguishable because it was decided in the context of Washington's prohibition on the dedication of funds beyond a single biennium,[20] a framework different from the proscription of 374 dedicated funds in Alaska. The Alaska Constitution expressly prohibits the binding dedication of state revenues for specific projects.[21] As the superior court correctly noted, "[t]he additional proceeds generated by the [proposed] oil production tax need not and indeed cannot be appropriate[d] to fund the Alaska Clean Elections Program" without running afoul of Article IX, section 7 of Alaska's Constitution. Because the dedication of funds is not permitted in Alaska, a "soft dedication" cannot be considered for purposes of a single-subject analysis and therefore cannot be used to make two independent provisions of an initiative address one subject. Without the "soft dedication," the Sponsors' proposed initiative will satisfy the requirements of the single-subject analysis only if its two provisions-campaign finance and taxation of the oil industry-otherwise relate to a single subject matter.

The Sponsors argue that even if the "soft dedication" of tax revenue cannot be considered, the proposed oil production tax is still related to the subject of "clean elections" because "the oil industry and the oil field services companies ... exert a tremendous and undue influence on Alaska politics and politicians," and contributions from these groups have been "fueling [electoral] campaigns in Alaska for years." But the oil industry is not the only source of contributions to political campaigns in Alaska, and the proposed tax is on oil production, not the political activities of the oil industry. The support for the Sponsors' argument-two newspaper articles and a listing of the top groups lobbying the Alaska Legislature-is insufficient to demonstrate a clear or established connection between the oil industry and a need for public financing of state electoral campaigns.

The proposed initiative directly implicates one of the main purposes of the single-subject rule-the prevention of log-rolling-in two ways. As noted earlier, the essence of log-rolling is appealing to different constituencies by including distinct provisions calculated to obtain sufficient votes to pass a measure.[22] The superior court observed that "record oil and gas prices, high oil company profits, the Exxon Valdez litigation, and controversy regarding a proposed gas pipeline" make the oil industry a target for some groups whose votes on this initiative could be driven entirely by such concerns. We agree that the events and issues cited by the superior court could influence some voters, but we note that other voters may be equally driven by strong feelings of support for the jobs and tax revenue generated by the oil industry in Alaska. Either way, coupling the approval of a new oil production tax with approval of a program to publicly fund elections deprives the voters of an opportunity to send a clear message on each subject encompassed by the Sponsors' initiative.

The second way the initiative violates the prohibition against log rolling is its inclusion of a non-binding directive that the legislature transfer funds left over from public elections to the Permanent Fund Dividend.[23] The Permanent Fund Dividend is entirely unrelated to the purpose of the clean elections program; offering the chance of increased Permanent Fund Dividend payments runs the risk of garnering support for the clean elections program from voters who are otherwise indifferent-or even unsupportive-of publicly funded campaigns.

V. CONCLUSION

For the reasons addressed above, we AFFIRM the decision of the superior court.

Footnotes

1 The initiative was titled "An Act establishing a program of public funding for campaigns for state elected offices, to be known as the Alaska Clean Elections Act, and amending the oil and gas production tax to levy and collect a surcharge on oil as a source of funding for that program."

2 AS 15.45.070 provides: "Within 60 calendar days after the date the application is received, the lieutenant governor shall review the application and shall either certify it or notify the initiative committee of the grounds for denial."

6 The Sponsors' application was rejected for violating the single-subject provision of AS 15.45.040. Neither party argues that this rule differs from restrictions imposed by article II, section 13 of the Alaska Constitution, which requires that every bill may have only one subject. We have previously explained that, regardless of AS 15.45.040, "the [a]rticle II restriction ... applies to initiatives" under article XII, section 11, which provides that the people may exercise the legislature's law-making powers through the initiative. *Yute Air Alaska Inc. v. SPONSOR STATEMENT

HB 293 – Continuances in Criminal Cases

Article I, section 24 of our constitution is entitled "Rights of Crime Victims." The amendment passed by an overwhelming majority when it was placed before Alaskan voters in 1994. Included in its eight specific provisions is the promise that crime victims will have "the right to timely disposition of the case following the arrest of the accused."

In the eighteen years since the amendment passed, the promise of a timely disposition of the case has often not been kept. Moreover, the breaches of that promise frequently occur in the most serious of cases. Delays in the trial of a case, known as continuances, can go on for years.

HB 293 requires prosecutors and judges to consider a victim's right to a timely disposition of their case when deciding whether to allow continuances. This legislation will also ensure that victims are notified of any requests or motions that could substantially delay speedy prosecution of their case.

Repeated delays prevent victims from reaching emotional, physical, and financial closure from the trauma that they suffered as a result of the crime perpetrated against them. Delays in prosecution can also affect the availability of witnesses, a victim's ability to recall important details, and it can create other impediments to a successful trial.

Currently, Alaska is one of 27 states with constitutional provisions to protect a victim's rights; however, there is no statute in place to implement it. With this important piece of legislation, Alaska will join 15 other states that have enacted a statutory provision recognizing this crucial right.

HB 293 will guarantee a victim's right to a timely resolution in the court system. I urge your support of this legislation.

MEMORANDUM February 6, 2012

SUBJECT: Victims' rights
HB 293 (Work Order No. 27-LS1238\A)

TO: Representative Chris Tuck
Attn: George Ascott

FROM: Dan Wayne
Legislative Counsel

You have requested a sectional summary of the above-described bill.

As a preliminary matter, note that a sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill; the bill itself is the best statement of its contents.

Section 1 adds to the rights of victims, under AS 12.61.100, the right to be notified if there is a request for a continuance that, if granted, may substantially delay a proceeding in either a criminal matter or the adjudication of a minor as provided under AS 47.12.110.

Section 2 requires a prosecuting attorney in a felony or domestic violence case to inform the victim when there is a motion pending that may substantially delay prosecution, and inform the court of the victim's position regarding the motion.

Section 3 would amend Alaska Rule of Criminal Procedure 45(d)(2) to require a court to consider the interests of a victim in a criminal case before granting a continuance or an adjournment requested or consented to by the defense.

Section 4 would amend Alaska Rule of Criminal Procedure 45 by adding a new subsection (h) to require a court to consider, before ruling on a motion for a continuance in a case involving a victim under AS 12.55.185, the victim's position on the motion for a continuance and how the victim might be affected if the continuance is granted.

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to the rights of crime victims; relating to the duties of prosecuting attorneys; and amending Rule 45, Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 12.61.010(a) is amended to read:

(a) Victims of crimes have the following rights:

(1) the right to be present during any proceeding in

(A) the prosecution and sentencing of a defendant if the defendant has the right to be present, including being present during testimony even if the victim is likely to be called as a witness;

(B) the adjudication of a minor as provided under AS 47.12.110;

(2) the right to be notified by the appropriate law enforcement agency or the prosecuting attorney of any request for a continuance that may substantially delay the prosecution and of the date of trial, sentencing, including a proceeding before a three-judge panel under AS 12.55.175, an appeal, and any hearing in which the defendant's release from custody is considered;

(3) the right to be notified that a sentencing hearing or a court proceeding to which the victim has been subpoenaed will not occur as scheduled;

(4) the right to receive protection from harm and threats of harm arising out of cooperation with law enforcement and prosecution efforts and to be provided with information as to the protection available;

(5) the right to be notified of the procedure to be followed to apply for and receive any compensation under AS 18.67;

(6) at the request of the prosecution or a law enforcement agency, the right to cooperate with the criminal justice process without loss of pay and other employee benefits except as authorized by AS 12.61.017 and without interference in any form by the employer of the victim of crime;

(7) the right to obtain access to immediate medical assistance and not to be detained for an unreasonable length of time by a law enforcement agency before having medical assistance administered; however, an employee of the law enforcement agency may, if necessary, accompany the person to a medical facility to question the person about the criminal incident if the questioning does not hinder the administration of medical assistance;

(8) the right to make a written or oral statement for use in preparation of the presentence report of a felony defendant;

(9) the right to appear personally at the defendant's sentencing hearing to present a written statement and to give sworn testimony or an unsworn oral presentation;

(10) the right to be informed by the prosecuting attorney, at any time after the defendant's conviction, about the complete record of the defendant's convictions;

(11) the right to notice under AS 12.47.095 concerning the status of the defendant found not guilty by reason of insanity;

(12) the right to notice under AS 33.16.087 of a hearing concerning special medical parole of the defendant;

(13) the right to notice under AS 33.16.120 of a hearing to consider or review discretionary parole of the defendant;

(14) the right to notice under AS 33.30.013 of the release or escape of the defendant; and

(15) the right to be notified orally and in writing of and receive information about the office of victims' rights from the law enforcement officer initially investigating the crime and from the prosecuting attorney assigned to the offense; at a minimum, the information provided must include the address, telephone number, and Internet address of the office of victims' rights; this paragraph

(A) applies only to victims of felonies and to victims of class A misdemeanors if the class A misdemeanor is a crime involving domestic violence or a crime against a person under AS 11.41; if the victim is an unemancipated minor, the law enforcement officer and the prosecuting attorney shall also provide the notice required by this paragraph to the parent or guardian of the minor;

(B) is satisfied if, at the time of initial contact with the crime victim, the investigating officer and prosecuting attorney each give each crime victim a brochure or other written material prepared by the office of victims' rights and provided to law enforcement agencies for that purpose.

 Sec. 2. AS 12.61.015(a) is amended to read:

(a) If a victim of a felony or a crime involving domestic violence requests, the prosecuting attorney shall make a reasonable effort to

(1) confer with the person against whom the offense has been perpetrated about that person's testimony before the defendant's trial;

(2) in a manner reasonably calculated to give prompt actual notice, notify the victim

(A) of the defendant's conviction and the crimes of which the defendant was convicted;

(B) of the victim's right in a case that is a felony to make a written or oral statement for use in preparation of the defendant's presentence report, and of the victim's right to appear personally at the defendant's sentencing hearing to present a written statement and to give sworn testimony or an unsworn oral presentation;

(C) of the address and telephone number of the office that will prepare the presentence report; and

(D) of the time and place of the sentencing proceeding;

(3) notify the victim in writing of the final disposition of the case within 30 days after final disposition of the case;

(4) confer with the victim of a crime involving domestic violence concerning a proposed plea agreement before entering into an agreement;

(5) inform the victim of a pending motion that may substantially delay the prosecution and inform the court of the victim's position on the motion; in this paragraph a "substantial delay" is

(A) for a misdemeanor, a delay of one month or longer;

(B) for a felony, a delay of two months or longer; and

(C) for an appeal, a delay of six months or longer.

 Sec. 3. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. Rule 45(d)(2), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, is amended to read:

(2) The period of delay resulting from an adjournment or continuance granted at the timely request or with the consent of the defendant and the defendant's counsel. The court shall grant such a continuance only if it is satisfied that the postponement is in the interest of justice, taking into account the public interest in the prompt disposition of criminal offenses, and after consideration of the interests of the crime victim, if known, as provided in (h) of this rule. A defendant without counsel shall not be deemed to have consented to a continuance unless the defendant has been advised by the court of the right to a speedy trial under this rule and of the effect of consent.

 Sec. 4. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. Rule 45, Alaska Rules of Criminal

Procedure, is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(h) Victim's Interest in Ruling on Motion to Continue. Before ruling on a motion for a continuance in a case involving a victim, as defined in AS 12.55.185, the court shall consider the victim's position, if known, on the motion to continue and the effect of a continuance on the victim.

FISCAL NOTE

STATE OF ALASKA BILL NO. HB293
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Analysis

This bill amends AS 12.61.010(a) by requiring that the victim of a crime be notified of any request for a continuance or pending motions that may substantially delay the prosecution, and inform the court of the victim's position on these motions. This bill amends Rule 45 (d)(2) of the Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure by adding language that requires the court to grant continuances only after consideration of the crime victim as provided in a new subsection (h) that this bill would also add to Rule 45. The new subsection (h) requires the court to consider the victim's position on motions to continue.

Courts currently consider the impact of delay on a victim's rights under the state constitution. The Office of Public Advocacy believes that the victim's concerns are already considered by parties in trial cases as a result of constitutional requirements concerning crime victims. The compulsory language in the amendment to Rule 45 may have the collateral effect of causing additional hearings and delay if the victim cannot be located. This will be impacted by how the courts interpret "substantial delay."

Although this bill may increase hearings and delay, the Office of Public Advocacy (OPA) cannot reliably predict whether this will occur and have a fiscal impact on the Agency. Therefore OPA submits an indeterminate fiscal note.

FISCAL NOTE

STATE OF ALASKA
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB 293

Analysis

HB 293 provides that a victim has the right to be notified of a request for a continuance that may substantially delay the prosecution of a case, including the trial, sentencing, appeal, and any hearing addressing the defendant's release from custody. It requires the prosecution to inform the victim of any pending motion that may substantially delay the prosecution and to inform the court of the victim's position on the motion. The term "substantially" is not defined.

It could be argued that the prosecution and the courts are already considering the victim's position before granting a motion to continue a case and that the additional requirements in the bill are unnecessary. To the extent that the position of victims are not already being considered by the court, this bill could add to the cost of a prosecution.

For example Section 1 requires notice of a request for a continuance and applies to both felonies and misdemeanors. In 2011 the state prosecuted 7,561 felonies and 22, 721 misdemeanors. Additional notification could require significant staff time.

Therefore the fiscal impact cannot be accurately determined.

FISCAL NOTE

STATE OF ALASKA BILL NO. HB293
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Analysis

This bill amends AS 12.61.010(a) by requiring that the victim of a crime be notified of any request for a continuance or pending motions that may substantially delay the prosecution, and inform the court of the victim's position on these motions. This bill amends Rule 45 (d)(2) of the Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure by adding language that requires the court to grant continuances only after consideration of the crime victim as provided in a new subsection (h) that this bill would also add to Rule 45. The new subsection (h) requires the court to consider the victim's position on motions to continue.

Courts currently consider the impact of delay on a victim's rights under the state constitution. The Public Defender Agency believes that the victim's concerns are already considered by parties in trial cases as a result of constitutional requirements concerning crime victims. The compulsory language in the amendment to Rule 45 may have the collateral effect of causing additional hearings and delay if the victim cannot be located. This will be impacted by how the courts interpret "substantial delay."

Although this bill may increase hearings and delay, the Public Defender Agency cannot reliably predict whether this will occur and have a fiscal impact on the Agency and therefore submits an indeterminate fiscal note.

Re: HB 293 - Rights of Crime Victims/Continuances

Honorable Members of the Alaska Legislature:

The Alaska Network on Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault strongly supports House Bill 293. It is our understanding that this bill will provide a victim of crime, including domestic violence and sexual assault crime victims, a notice from law enforcement or prosecution when there will be a request for a continuance that would substantially delay a prosecution. All too often in Alaska victims have been disappointed in the process, procedure and outcome of their case. This bill will provide for consideration of the victim's wishes, the impact that continual delays will have on a victim of crime, and provide the victim with information of what to expect or what not to expect, in the nearer future.

Our eighteen member victim service agencies throughout the state witness daily the impact these delays have on the people they serve. Time and time again, our advocates appear in court with victims of both domestic violence and sexual assault, only to have their courage and hopes dashed by yet another delay. It has become a "tactic" which, when employed, disheartens the victim, decreases their sense of safety and decreases their faith in the criminal justice system and the State of Alaska. Hopefully, this bill will strike a balance between the Constitutional right to a speedy trial for both defendants and victims.

RE: House Bill 293, Continuances in Criminal Trials; Victims

Dear Members:

On behalf of the Board of Directors of Victims for Justice, I am writing to support House Bill 293.

Time and time again, we see continuances provided to defendants in criminal cases for reasons that seem insufficient and sometimes disingenuous, with absolutely no consideration given to the challenges this presents to victims in the case.

We have supported victims of violent crimes, and the surviving family members of homicide victims, in cases where so many continuances have been granted that they caused the trial to be delayed more than a decade. This length of delay can work to the benefit of the defendant, when witnesses die or leave the state, memories fade, prosecutors change over and over and it becomes difficult or impossible to win a conviction. And these delays work to the serious disadvantage of victims who only want to see justice done, and to society in general.

We have known victims to travel hundreds or thousands of miles, and incur great expense and inconvenience so that they may exercise their right to attend a trial or hearing, only to have the trial or hearing continued with absolutely no consideration given as to how this impacts the victim.

We recognize that courts want to extend the benefit of the doubt to defendants, who, after all, are the ones whose liberty is at stake. However, we feel the courts often fail to take into consideration the rights afforded by our state Constitution to victims in these situations. Senate Bill 135 puts the victim in the picture, and supports the judge who considers the victim when deciding whether to grant a continuance.

This bill is a very modest change to existing statutes and court rules. It simply describes a means to implement the requirements of our state Constitution and statutes with regard to victims. However, in a very important way, this bill brings balance to our justice system.

The Board of Directors of Victims for Justice strongly support HB 293.

Re: House Bill 293, Continuances in Criminal Trials; Victims

Dear Honorable Members of the Alaska House of Representatives:

I write in support of House Bill 293, Continuances in Criminal Trials; Victims.

The proposed legislation strengthens notification standards for informing crime victims of any request for a continuance that may substantially delay the prosecution, the date of trial, sentencing, an appeal, and any hearing which the defendant's release from custody is considered.

The amendments to Alaska Criminal Rule 45 strengthen a crime victim's right to address the court, and for the court to consider the crime victim's perspective, before issuing an order based on a motion for continuance.

Both components of the proposed legislation fortify a crime victim's statutory rights and Alaska Constitutional rights to be "treated with dignity, respect, and fairness" and "to timely disposition of the case..." (Alaska Constitution, Article 1, Section 24). The proposed legislation also stands to amplify the crime victim's voice before the court and other criminal justice agencies regarding delay in the criminal justice process.

I believe strongly that the administration of justice is improved when a crime victim's voice is heard and considered within the Alaska criminal justice system.

In sum, the proposed legislation wisely aligns with the Alaska Constitutional rights of a crime victim - especially regarding the timely disposition of a criminal case.

I stand ready to testify in support of this legislation.

Respectfully submitted,

D. Victor Kester

D. Victor Kester
Executive Director

Dear Lawmakers,

I am writing to encourage your support for Senator Hollis French's SB 135 dealing with a victim's constitutional right to "timely disposition of their case."

As many of you may recall, my daughter, Bonnie Craig, was murdered in September 1994. Her killer, Kenneth Dion was finally sentenced October 31st, 2011. For 17 years our family, friends and the community waited for justice. Our constitutional right to "timely disposition of our case" was violated again and again. I vowed, when thrown into this horror story, that I would make sure the things that went wrong in our case would be changed for others.

Protecting a victim's right to "timely disposition" is the most important change that needs to come out of this incredible tragedy. It was the most egregious violation that our family had to endure, and that violation was at the hands of the State of Alaska, not the criminal. I need your help to ensure all future victims will have their constitutional rights protected in Alaska. Let's balance the scales of justice and honor the victim's right to "timely disposition."

Do not be mistaken. It is not okay to think "At least the criminal is behind bars and can't hurt anyone else." The pain inflicted on the victims is inexcusable and the prosecution of the case against the defendant weakens daily. Delays are a tactical advantage for defense attorneys to accommodate defense attorneys, rarely the defendant.

Kenneth Dion was identified November 2006. From the time he was identified our family was basically placed under a "gag order." Nothing could be said to the press, our friends, or the community. Our incredible grief - the wounds being ripped wide open, bringing us back to the day we were notified of Bonnie's death - were to be muzzled, and kept deep within us. We weren't allowed to share the news, our private trauma, our personal hell, for four months. As a family, we tried to continue our life as if nothing was happening, pretending this incredible burden and stress didn't exist. It was tearing us apart, eating at the very core of our existence, like a cancer. It destroyed relationships and financially ruined me. It affected our health and my parenting abilities. it could, and can, destroy a whole family.

Finally, May 1st, 2007 the news was released. Although we talked with the press and could finally share the information with friends, the gag was, once again, placed on our family members to avoid all contact with media. The threat of a "change of venue" is not something a victim's family can take lightly. Until a jury is selected, avoiding any media coverage is critical. Our jury was selected more than 4 years later. During that time it became abundantly clear that the defense attorney and the defendant hold all the power and they call all the shots. Victims can only sit back and wait without complaining.

I know that you will never be able to even imagine the pain and suffering a parent, a sister and brothers goes through while awaiting a trial. Our pain and stress and fear was multiplied ten-fold with the memories of Joshua Wade being acquitted. We knew things could go wrong, evidence could get lost, a technicality could cause a mistrial, investigators and witnesses could die or be lost. We know memories fade. We know each day something could come up that could make it impossible to prosecute the man who brutally raped and murdered Bonnie. Our life is in a limbo, teetering on insanity. It is beyond comprehension. Yet, we try to continue our life with a new kind of normalcy.

Our first trial date was set for September, 2008. Please keep in mind that the killer was identified November, 2006. I wept when Judge Patrick MMcKay set the date. It was like having your guts ripped out of your body. He justified it by saying it would give both the prosecution and the defense plenty of time to prepare and that there would be absolutely no reason for any continuance. He vowed that he wanted to make sure both sides would be prepared, so we were going to have pretrial conferences to avoid any surprises or complications from arising. And we did. By the time we got to trial we had 45 pre-trial conferences, status and motion hearings. The judges, both Judge McKay and Judge Jack Smith were trying to make sure the defense was getting all they needed and getting ready for trial. They both failed. If the defense asks for anything, the judge, in fear of an appeal, will always grant the defense more time, even if it meant losing Pat Gullufson, our prosecutor of 3 years who had to retire for medical reasons. (July 15, 2010 a new prosecutor, Paul Miovas, took the case over. He successfully handled the case in less than 10 months.)

More than once, Lee De Grazia, the first public defender, misled the Judge. We all knew it and yet he never called her on it. One month before the trial was to start she claimed she fired her "DNA Expert" and would need more time. We all sat there amazed and wondering if she was lying. Had she even hired one yet? She doesn't need to answer to anyone. There was no accountability She made a mockery of the whole system. When the case was finally handed over to Office of Public Advocacy defense attorney Andrew Lambert (03/23/09) he told Judge McKay that De Grazia had done virtually nothing on the case and the judge responded, "I was afraid of that." 18 months had been wasted on a totally incompetent defense attorney.

Make no mistake, the delays are not about affording the defendant a fair trial, nor protecting the defendant's rights. They are for the benefit of, more times than not, the defense attorney's schedule and needs. The litigation of a case is dictated by the personal life of the defense attorney. Timely disposition is about case management and having efficient and effective counsel. It is about prioritizing cases that have been lingering on for the benefit of the defense attorney's schedules. You can't imagine how disheartening it is to hear your case is going to be delayed, yet again, for 4-5 months because the defense attorney wants to go on their second, one month vacation of the year and he needs about a week to do a divorce case for a buddy of his and he is going to visit some schools for his daughter. Why can't co-counsel take over?

If a builder is building a home he can't tell the client he is going away for a month on vacation and will need 3-4 more months. In just about any profession a project must be completed before those involved can decide to take time off.
If you were diagnosed with cancer and the doctor goes for vacation for a month you have the opportunity to use another doctor. Victims have no choice, but to sit and wait. Prosecutors can't request that we use another defense attorney or that co-counsel handle the scheduled hearing, nor can the judge tell a defense attorney they will need to hold off on their vacation.

Below, I have listed each trial date that was set. I can never describe the sickening feeling a family feels when you are told, once again, that the trial date will be changed. You feel like you are going to vomit. Again, it's like your guts are being ripped out of you. In many cases I was on the verge of tears, knowing we would be given no consideration. And, it is always incredulous reasoning, something that you think may require an extra week or two, delays the trial by 4 months or more.

Preparing for each pretrial hearing is mentally exhausting. You have difficulty functioning and sleeping in fear of what the defense is going to do each time. The tension and anxiety are overwhelming. Getting to court is difficult. We had 45 pretrial hearings. Please consider what that does to families. As a victim, you can't plan life too far in advance; you can't start to rebuild your life.

Refusal to deal with "timely disposition" is a refusal to address the inefficiencies in our justice system. and allowing the "justice system" to re-victimize the victims. Please, support Senator French's SB 135 to honor victim's constitutional right to "timely disposition of their case." Show the victims the respect they deserve and stop the re-victimization of the victims.

Sincerely yours,

Karen Foster

Thank you for scheduling a hearing in the House Judiciary Committee for HB 293, "Rights of Crime Victims/Continuances."

Since my hearing request was granted the Senate companion bill, SB 135, underwent a few technical adjustments in the Senate Judiciary Committee. I have attached a draft Committee Substitute which mirrors those changes along with an explanation of what they are. It is my hope that the committee will adopt this version so that the language in the two bills will remain consistent.

Re: House Bill 293, Continuances in Criminal Cases

Dear Members of the Alaska State Legislature:

Standing Together Against Rape (STAR) strongly supports any bill that affords a victim of crime the opportunity to have their voice and concerns heard by the justice system. House Bill 293 appears to strengthen "the right to a timely disposition of the case following the arrest of the accused" as stated in the Alaska Constitution.

Crime victims, in particular, victims of sexual assault feel a tremendous amount of anxiety when contemplating facing the person who assaulted them in court. The anxiety builds, creating sleepless nights and increased reliance on coping skills. The day arrives, and the trail is continued. This pattern can be repeated over and over and over again. If the offender is incarcerated the victim is afraid they will be released. If the offender is not incarcerated the victim feels they must continue watching over their shoulder at the market, the department store, the movies, etc. The ability of the victim to move about freely may be inhibited.

While I believe it is not the intent of prosecution to re-victimize crime victims, repeated continuances often do. At the same time STAR recognizes the need for the prosecution to put forth a strong case, to increase the possibility of conviction, to hear defense requests and to lessen the likelihood of appeal. Hopefully this bill will allow for a balance to be struck between the two.

Respectfully submitted,

HOUSE BILL 296 ~ Sponsor Statement
House Judiciary Committee

"An Act relating to service of process on prisoners; relating to the crime of escape; relating to the definition of 'correctional facility'; amending Rule 4, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure; and providing for an effective date."

HB 296, addresses ambiguities that have risen from recent court cases involving prisoner issues. It clarifies the permissible method of personally serving process on incarcerated prisoners. It also clarifies the second and fourth degree escape statutes. The bill does three things;

1. For the purpose of service of process on state prisoners HB296 references the definition of "correctional facility" in AS 33.30.901 to clarify the manner in which incarcerated prisoners can be served civilly while incarcerated. The bill also makes it clear that the statute setting for the procedure for personally serving incarcerated persons, AS 09.05.030, is an indirect amendment to Alaska Civil 4. These changes will ensure there is a standardized legal process for serving process on prisoners. It will cure the problem in Hertz v. Carothers 225 P.3d 571 (Alaska 2010), that caused the Alaska Supreme Court to hold that prison officials were not peace officers who could serve legal summons and complaints on incarcerated prisoners.

2. This bill also defines what constitutes the crime of escape in the second degree. The result in Bridge v. State 258 P.3d 923 (Alaska 2011) was suggested for Legislative review from the Legal Services Annual Report (Dec. 2011). Bridge, was charged with driving with a suspended license, a class A misdemeanor. He could not post bail and was therefore held in jail. He was then transferred to a halfway house. He left the facility without permission and was caught. As a result of the escape he was charged with escape in the second degree, a class B felony. The Alaska Court of Appeals found that although Bridge was in the custody of the Department of Corrections, he was not "confined", because the halfway house did not have staff whose duty it was to prevent prisoners from leaving. This bill defines escape in the second degree as being from a "secure correctional facility" while under detention for a misdemeanor. Further, a "secure correctional facility" is defined as using construction or security fixtures or officers or other persons that are authorized to prevent persons under detention from departing such facilities without unlawful authorization. Other escapes by misdemeanants are fourth degree escapes, a class A misdemeanor. This bill will codify the holding in Bridge and will avoid future questions as to what constitutes escape in the second degree.

3. This bill deletes the repeal of provisions passed by the legislature in 2007, AS 12.55.100(f) and AS 33.16.150(g), requiring electronic monitoring as a special condition of probation or parole for offenders whose offense was related to a criminal street gang. Repealing the December 31, 2012 sunset date will continue to provide the court system and the Department of Corrections an important tool to keep neighborhoods safe from gang related crime.

This bill provides clearer guidelines for civil service of process of persons under the custody of the Department of Corrections removing question raised in Hertz v. Carothers 225 P.3d 571 (Alaska 2010). The bill refines escape in the second degree answering questions from Bridge v. State 258 P.3d 923 (Alaska 2011). This bill is necessary to avoid future litigation that may arise involving these issues.

HB 296 - Crime of Escape & Definition of Correctional Facility

Sectional Analysis for CS for HB296 (27-LS1199\E)

Section 1[1] adds a new subsection that defines a correctional facility for the purpose of AS 09.05.050 as a "prison, jail, camp farm, halfway house, group home, or other placement designated by the commissioner for the custody, care and discipline of prisoners (AS 33.30.901(4).

Section 2[2] defines that escape from a "secure correctional facility" while under official detention for a misdemeanor is escape in the second degree, a class B felony.

Section 3[3] adds a new subsection to AS 11.56.310 defining a secure correctional facility.

HOUSE BILL 296 ~ Sponsor Statement
House Judiciary Committee

"An Act relating to service of process on prisoners; relating to the crime of escape; relating to the definition of 'correctional facility'; amending Rule 4, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure; and providing for an effective date."

HB 296 addresses ambiguities that have risen from recent court cases involving prisoner issues. It clarifies the permissible method of personally serving process on incarcerated prisoners. It also clarifies the second and fourth degree escape statutes. The bill does two things;

1. For the purpose of service of process on state prisoners HB 296 references the definition of "correctional facility" in AS 33.30.901 to clarify the manner in which incarcerated prisoners can be served civilly while incarcerated. The bill also makes it clear that the statute relating to the procedure for personally serving incarcerated persons, AS 09.05.030, is an indirect amendment to Alaska Civil Rule 4. These changes will ensure there is a standardized legal process for serving process on prisoners. It will cure the problem in Hertz v. Carothers 225 P.3d 571 (Alaska 2010), where the Alaska Supreme Court held that prison officials were not peace officers who could serve legal summons and complaints on incarcerated prisoners.

2. This bill also defines what constitutes the crime of escape in the second degree. The result in Bridge v. State 258 P.3d 923 (Alaska 2011) was suggested for Legislative review from the Legal Services Annual Report (Dec. 2011). Bridge, was charged with driving with a suspended license, a class A misdemeanor. He could not post bail and was therefore held in jail. He was then transferred to a halfway house. He left the facility without permission and was caught. As a result of the escape he was charged with escape in the second degree, a class B felony. The Alaska Court of Appeals found that although Bridge was in the custody of the Department of Corrections, he was not "confined," because the halfway house did not have staff whose duty it was to prevent prisoners from leaving. This bill defines escape in the second degree as being from a "secure correctional facility" while under detention for a misdemeanor. Further, a "secure correctional facility" is defined as using physical restraints or fixtures to prevent movements or activities of persons under detention or officers or staff that are charged with preventing persons under detention from departing such facilities without unlawful authorization. Other escapes by misdemeanants are fourth degree escapes, a class A misdemeanor. This bill will codify the holding in Bridge and will avoid future questions as to what constitutes escape in the second degree.

This bill provides clearer guidelines for civil service of process of persons under the custody of the Department of Corrections removing question raised in Hertz v. Carothers 225 P.3d 571 (Alaska 2010). The bill refines escape in the second degree answering questions from Bridge v. State 258 P.3d 923 (Alaska 2011). This bill is necessary to avoid future litigation that may arise involving these issues.

Please contact committee aide, Melanie Lesh, at 465-4990; or legislative aide Miles Brookes, at 465-4940 with any questions.

RE: Changes to HB 296 "Crime of Escape and Definition of Correctional Facility"

The House Judiciary Committee adopted two amendments that clarify language for the purposes of this bill. Below is an outline of changes made since the bill was introduced;

- A new subsection under AS 11.56.310 Escape in the second degree, defines "secure correctional facility" as one that can restrict the ability of a person from leaving without lawful authority or has correctional officers to do so.
- A repeal of Section 3, ch. 27, SLA 2007, which sets December 31, 2012 as the repeal date for requiring electronic monitoring as a condition of probation and parole for offenders whose offense was related to a criminal street gang.

If you have any questions about amendments adopted in the committee substitute, please contact the Judiciary committee aide, Melanie Lesh, at 465-3743.

Crime of Escape & Definition of Correctional Facility

Sectional Analysis for HB296 (27-LS1199\D)

Section 1) adds a new subsection that defines a correctional facility for the purpose of AS 09.05.050 as a "prison, jail, camp farm, halfway house, group home, or other placement designated by the commissioner for the custody, care and discipline of prisoners (AS 33.30.901(4).

Section 2) defines that escape from a "secure correctional facility" while under official detention for a misdemeanor is escape in the second degree, a class B felony.

Section 3) adds a new subsection to AS 11.56.310 defining a secure correctional facility.

Section 4) amends 11.81.900(b)(9) to further define a correctional facility as a prison, jail, camp, farm, halfway house, group home, holding facility or other placement used for housing persons under official detention.

Section 5) amends Rule 4, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure to reflect changes indirectly made in section 1 of this act.

Section 6) states that changes to sections 2,3 and 4 apply to offenses on or after the effective date of this act.

Section 7) provides for an immediate effective date.

FISCAL NOTE #1

STATE OF ALASKA BILL NO. CSHB 296(JUD)
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Analysis

This legislation adds language to AS 11.56.301(a) inserting the word secure under (a)(1)(A) in the context of a secure correctional facility while under official detention; and, adds language to the end of (a)(1)(A) for a misdemeanor.

This legislation adds Section 3. AS 11.56.310 (c) "secure correctional facility" means (1) uses construction fixtures or other restraints designed to restrict physically the physical movements and activities of persons under official detention; or (2) employs correctional officers or other facility staff charged with preventing persons under official detention from departing the facility without lawful authorization.

The legislation also adds to the definition of "correctional facility" "a prison, jail, camp, farm, halfway house, group home, holding facility, or other placement [PREMISES, OR A PORTION OF PREMISES] used for housing [THE CONFINEMENT OF] persons under official detention;

If passed, the Department of Corrections does not anticipate a fiscal impact.

FISCAL NOTE #2

STATE OF ALASKA
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. CSHB 296(JUD)

Analysis

Current law allows service of process to be made to a person in a correctional facility on the shift supervisor where the person is housed. HB 296 provides a definition of correctional facility for purpose of this law – the definition of correctional facility in AS 33.30.901. The bill also expands that definition by including camps, farms, halfway houses, and other placements for the housing of persons under official detention.

Under current law it is escape in the fourth degree (AS 11.56.330) for a person to remove oneself from official detention for a misdemeanor. Escape in the fourth degree is a class A misdemeanor.

Under current law it is escape in the second degree (AS 11.56.310) to remove oneself from a correctional facility while under official detention. Escape in the second degree is a class B felony. The Court of Appeals has recently held that a person in a correctional facility in connection with a misdemeanor could not be found guilty of escape in the second degree if the person were held in a facility that did not have locked doors or guards.

HB 296 would provide that a person in a correctional facility that is secure in connection with a misdemeanor commits escape in the second degree – a class B felony. The bill defines secure correctional facility as a correctional facility that has physical restraints or staff that is charged with preventing escape.

There is no anticipated fiscal impact to Department of Law.

FISCAL NOTE #3

STATE OF ALASKA
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. CSHB 296(JUD)

Analysis

This bill amends AS 11.56.310(a) by adding language that changes the definition of escape by including persons who remove themselves, without authority to do so, from a "secure" correctional facility while under official detention for a misdemeanor. Additionally, AS 11.81.900(b)(9) is amended by broadening the definition of a correctional facility. This new definition adds the descriptors prison, jail, camp, farm, halfway house, group home, holding facility or other placement as a correctional facility, when used for housing persons under official detention.

The expanded definition of correction facility and the inclusion of unauthorized exit from official detention in misdemeanor cases will increase the range of conduct that can be charged as escape and may increase the number of escapees charged. Additionally, the expanded definition will impact the number of cases that can be charged under the promoting contraband statutes. The Public Defender Agency has no reliable method for determining how many cases will be charged under the expanded definition, or how many of those charged would qualify for representation by the Public Defender. The Agency submits an indeterminate fiscal note.

Analysis

This bill amends AS 11.56.310(a) by adding language that changes the definition of escape by including persons who remove themselves, without authority to do so, from a "secure" correctional facility while under official detention for a misdemeanor.

This change brings the escape statute into compliance with current case law from the Alaska Court of Appeals. The Agency does not anticipate a fiscal impact and submits a zero note.

RE: Repeal effective dates; Requiring Electronic Monitoring as special condition of Probation and parole for offenders whose offense was related to criminal street gangs

It has come to the attention of the House Judiciary Committee that the following Alaska Statutes (Ch. 27, SLA 2007) are repealed effective on December 31, 2012;

1. AS 12.55.100(f)

 Section 1. AS 12.55.100 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:
(f) While on probation and as a special condition of probation for an offense where the aggravating factor provided in AS 12.55.155(c)(29) has been proven or admitted, the court shall require that the defendant submit to electronic monitoring. Electronic monitoring under this section must provide for monitoring of the defendant's location and movements by Global Positioning System technology. The court shall require a defendant serving a period of probation with electronic monitoring as provided under this section to pay all or a portion of the costs of the electronic monitoring, but only if the defendant has sufficient financial resources to pay the costs or a portion of the costs. A defendant subject to electronic monitoring under this subsection is not entitled to a credit for time served in a correctional facility while the defendant is on probation. In this subsection, "correctional facility" has the meaning given in AS 33.30.901.

2. AS 33.16.150(g)

 Sec. 2. AS 33.16.150 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:
(g) In addition to other conditions of parole imposed under this section for a prisoner serving a sentence for an offense where the aggravating factor provided in AS 12.55.155(c)(29) has been proven or admitted, the board shall impose as a condition of special medical, discretionary, and mandatory parole a requirement that the prisoner submit to electronic monitoring. Electronic monitoring under this subsection must provide for monitoring of the prisoner's location and movements by Global Positioning System technology. The board shall require a prisoner serving a period of probation with electronic monitoring as provided under this section to pay all or a portion of the costs of the electronic monitoring, but only if the prisoner has sufficient financial resources to pay the costs or a portion of the costs. A prisoner subject to electronic monitoring under this subsection is not entitled to a credit for time served in a correctional facility while the defendant is on parole. In this subsection, "correctional facility" has the meaning given in AS 33.30.901.

The simplest way to keep this law in action is to enact language repealing the effective repealing date of December 31, 2012. Such a repeal has been adopted in to CS HB 296 (JUD) which is currently in the House Finance Committee awaiting scheduling. Members of the House Judiciary Committee are interested in your comments, suggestions and concerns regarding the repeal effective date for AS 12.55.100(f) and 33.16.150(g). Please feel free to contact my legislative aide, Miles Brookes at (907) 465-4940 with any information regarding this matter.

HOUSE BILL NO. 296

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SEVENTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

BY THE HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Introduced: 1/25/12
Referred: JUD, FIN

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to service of process on prisoners; relating to the crime of escape; relating to the definition of 'correctional facility'; amending Rule 4, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 09.05.050 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(c) In this section, "correctional facility" has the meaning given in AS 33.30.901.

 Sec. 2. AS 11.56.310(a) is amended to read:

(a) One commits the crime of escape in the second degree if, without lawful authority, one

(1) removes oneself from

(A) a secure correctional facility while under official detention for a misdemeanor;

(B) official detention for a felony or for extradition; or

(C) official detention and, during the escape or at any time before being restored to official detention, one possesses on or about oneself a firearm;

HOUSE BILL 296

"An Act relating to service of process on prisoners; relating to the crime of escape; relating to the definition of 'correctional facility'; amending Rule 4, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure; and providing for an effective date."

HB 296 addresses ambiguities that have risen from recent court cases involving prisoner issues. It clarifies the permissible method of personally serving process on incarcerated prisoners. It also clarifies the second and fourth degree escape statutes. The bill does two things;

1. For the purpose of service of process on state prisoners HB 296 references the definition of "correctional facility" in AS 33.30.901 to clarify the manner in which incarcerated prisoners can be served civilly while incarcerated. The bill also makes it clear that the statute relating to the procedure for personally serving incarcerated persons, AS 09.05.030, is an indirect amendment to Alaska Civil Rule 4. These changes will ensure there is a standardized legal process for serving process on prisoners. It will cure the problem in Hertz v. Carothers 225 P.3d 571 (Alaska 2010), where the Alaska Supreme Court held that prison officials were not peace officers who could serve legal summons and complaints on incarcerated prisoners.

2. This bill also defines what constitutes the crime of escape in the second degree. The result in Bridge v. State 258 P.3d 923 (Alaska 2011) was suggested for Legislative review from the Legal Services Annual Report (Dec. 2011). Bridge, was charged with driving with a suspended license, a class A misdemeanor. He could not post bail and was therefore held in jail. He was then transferred to a halfway house. He left the facility without permission and was caught. As a result of the escape he was charged with escape in the second degree, a class B felony. The Alaska Court of Appeals found that although Bridge was in the custody of the Department of Corrections, he was not "confined," because the halfway house did not have staff whose duty it was to prevent prisoners from leaving. This bill defines escape in the second degree as being from a "secure correctional facility" while under detention for a misdemeanor. Further, a "secure correctional facility" is defined as using physical restraints or fixtures to prevent movements or activities of persons under detention or officers or staff that are charged with preventing persons under detention from departing such facilities without unlawful authorization. Other escapes by misdemeanants are fourth degree escapes, a class A misdemeanor. This bill will codify the holding in Bridge and will avoid future questions as to what constitutes escape in the second degree.

This bill provides clearer guidelines for civil service of process of persons under the custody of the Department of Corrections removing question raised in Hertz v. Carothers 225 P.3d 571 (Alaska 2010). The bill refines escape in the second degree answering questions from Bridge v. State 258 P.3d 923 (Alaska 2011). This bill is necessary to avoid future litigation that may arise involving these issues.

Hi Melanie –

HB 296 is scheduled to be heard in the House Judiciary Committee meeting tomorrow. I wanted to let you know that the court has no position on the bill, but normally I would attend the hearing because it does say that it indirectly amends a court rule. Unfortunately, I have a conflict tomorrow, and need to be in another hearing at the same time. Please feel free to call me or let me know if I can answer any questions about it.

Court of Appeals of Alaska.

Wendell D. BRIDGE, Appellant,
v.
STATE of Alaska, Appellee.

No. A–10176. | Aug. 5, 2011.

Synopsis

Background: Defendant, who left halfway house without permission while awaiting trial on misdemeanor charge, was convicted in the Superior Court, Fourth Judicial District, Fairbanks, Michael A. MacDonald, Randy M. Olsen, JJ., of second-degree felony escape. He appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeals, Mannheimer, J., held that:
1 jury instruction defining term "correctional facility" was improper, and
2 retrial of defendant would not violate double jeopardy.

Reversed.

Bolger, J., filed dissenting opinion.

West Headnotes (2)

1 Escape
⇐Nature and elements of offenses in general

For purposes of interpreting the second-degree escape statute, the term "correctional facility," which is statutorily defined as "premises used for the confinement of persons under official detention," applies only to situations where staff at the facility have a duty to physically prevent inmates from leaving without permission, and not to situations where the facility simply houses defendants who were placed there by the Department of Corrections pending their trial or sentencing. AS 11.56.310, 11.81.900(b)(9).

2 Double Jeopardy
⇐Particular grounds for relief

Retrial of defendant on charge of second-degree escape would not violate double jeopardy based on trial court's failure to properly instruct jury on term "correctional facility," as required to properly convict defendant of second-degree escape; if on retrial, the State were to believe that it would be unable to establish that halfway house defendant left without permission qualified as a "correctional facility," then the State could ask the trial court to enter judgment against defendant on lesser offense of fourth-degree escape under statute which prohibited any act of "remov[ing] oneself from official detention for a misdemeanor." U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5; AS 11.56.310, 11.56.330(a)(1).

Opinion

MANNHEIMER, Judge.

This appeal requires us to clarify the meaning of the term "correctional facility" for purposes of the second-degree escape statute, AS 11.56.310. Under subsection (a)(1)(A) of this statute, a person commits the felony of second-degree escape if they unlawfully remove themselves "from a correctional facility" while they are under official detention for any crime, even a misdemeanor.

The term "correctional facility" is defined in AS 11.81.900(b)(9) as "premises ... used for the confinement of persons under official detention". The question posed in this appeal is whether the word "confinement" is equivalent to "residence" or "placement"—so that the term "correctional facility" would encompass any facility or residence where a prisoner has been ordered to remain by the Department of Corrections. Bridge argues that "confinement" has a narrower meaning—that it applies only when a prisoner's mandated residence at a particular facility is physically enforced by guards and restraints.

For the reasons explained in this opinion, we agree with Bridge that, at least for purposes of interpreting the second-degree escape statute, the phrase "premises used for the confinement of persons under official detention" must be given a narrower meaning than "residence" or "placement"—that it applies only to situations where a prisoner's residence is physically enforced.

Underlying facts

The defendant in this case, Wendell D. Bridge, was charged with a misdemeanor (driving with a suspended license). Because Bridge was unable to make bail, he was remanded to the custody of the Department of Corrections pending his trial.

925 Bridge was initially confined at the Fairbanks Correctional Center. However, when the Department of Corrections conducted their prisoner classification of Bridge, they concluded that he was eligible for placement at the Northstar Center, a halfway house operated by a private corporation in Fairbanks. The Northstar Center has a contract with the Department of Corrections for housing low-security misdemeanor defendants who are awaiting trial or sentencing. Pursuant to this contract, and pursuant to the Department of Corrections' classification decision, Bridge was placed at the Northstar Center.
Because Bridge was charged with a crime, was unable to make bail, and was in the legal custody of the Department of Corrections, he was under "official detention"—and he remained under official detention even after he was transferred to the Northstar Center.[1]

On New Year's Day 2005, Bridge left the Northstar Center without permission. The Northstar staff notified the police, and the district court later issued a warrant for Bridge's arrest. He was arrested some fifteen months later and charged with second-degree escape.

In the superior court, Bridge argued that the Northstar Center was not a "correctional facility", and thus his act of walking away from the Center did not constitute second-degree escape. To help resolve this controversy, the superior court held a hearing at which the parties presented evidence concerning Bridge's status at the Northstar Center and the types of security measures employed at the Center. Based on the evidence presented at this hearing, the superior court concluded that the Northstar Center would qualify as a "correctional facility" for purposes of the escape statute (assuming the jury viewed the evidence in the light most favorable to the State).

Later, at Bridge's trial, in keeping with this pre-trial ruling, the superior court instructed the jury that "a halfway house under contract with the Department of Corrections ... is a correctional facility for ... individuals placed there by [the Department] for purposes of confinement [awaiting trial or sentencing]." Because it was undisputed that Bridge walked away from the Northstar Center without permission and without justification, the jury convicted Bridge of second-degree escape.

In this appeal, Bridge renews his argument that the Northstar Center did not qualify as a "correctional facility" for purposes of the escape statute. If Bridge is correct, then his act of leaving the Northstar Center without permission did not constitute second-degree escape; instead, his action constituted the lesser offense of fourth-degree escape under AS 11.56.330(a)(1). (This statute prohibits any act of "remov[ing] oneself from official detention for a misdemeanor".)

This Court's decision in State v. Crosby

This Court's decision in State v. Crosby, 770 P.2d 1154 (Alaska App.1989), is the primary appellate court decision construing the term "correctional facility" for purposes of Alaska's second-degree escape statute. Both Bridge and the State discuss Crosby at length in their briefs. Accordingly, to meaningfully address the arguments in the parties' briefs, we must examine the Crosby decision in some detail.
The defendant in Crosby was a sentenced prisoner who was released from prison on furlough to a residential drug treatment program, Akeela House.[2] Shortly after Crosby arrived at this residential facility, he walked away.[3] The State charged Crosby with second-degree escape, alleging (in the words of the statute) that he removed himself "from a correctional facility while under official detention."[4] The superior court ruled that Akeela House was not a "correctional facility" 926 for purposes of the escape statute, and the State then appealed.[5]

The term "correctional facility" is defined in AS 11.81.900(b); it means "[any] premises ... used for the confinement of persons under official detention".[6] In Crosby, the State took the position that, under this definition, the term "correctional facility" applied to any facility utilized by the Department of Corrections to house prisoners.[7] But this Court rejected the State's reading of the statutory definition.

This Court's explanation of why we rejected the State's interpretation of the statute is lengthy and somewhat difficult to follow, but the salient point of our analysis was that the statutory definition of "correctional facility" does not encompass any and all premises used for the placement or custody of persons under official detention. Rather, the statute defines "correctional facility" as premises used for the confinement of persons under official detention. Crosby, 770 P.2d at 1155.

Because our criminal code contained no definition of "confinement", we engaged in a lengthy analysis of the potential meanings of this word in the context of an escape statute. We concluded that the concept of "confinement" seemed to focus "not so much [on] the extent to which [a person's] freedom is restrained[, but rather on] the specific manner in which the restraints are imposed and enforced". Id. at 1157 (emphasis added).

We then offered two different explanations of why Crosby's placement at the Akeela House residential treatment center did not constitute "confinement"—and, thus, why Akeela House was not a "correctional facility" for purposes of the second-degree escape statute. Our decision to offer two different explanations appears to stem from the fact that the trial court record did not offer a clear answer as to whether Akeela House employed security guards or utilized physical restraints or barriers to keep residents from leaving the premises without permission.

This Court's first explanation of why Crosby was not in "confinement" at Akeela House was that, even though the conditions of Crosby's furlough from prison required him to remain at Akeela House, this restraint on his liberty was not "imposed or enforced in ways that amount to actual confinement". Ibid. We noted that "there [was] no indication" Akeela House had armed guards, physical restraints or barriers, or other security measures to physically prevent Crosby from leaving. Ibid.

This Court's second explanation of why Crosby was not in "confinement" at Akeela House appears to be based on the alternate possibility that Akeela House did, in fact, use guards or physical restraints to prevent residents from leaving without permission. We declared that "[any such] restrictions that Akeela House [placed] on its residents" were imposed for the purpose of furthering its treatment plan, and not because Akeela House was the agent of the Department of Corrections for the purpose of "maintaining security over its prisoners". Ibid. "Thus," we concluded, "to the extent that Akeela House relies on restrictive measures amounting to actual confinement, [this] confinement is clearly not confinement by the state." Ibid.

This second rationale appears to be squarely predicated on the fact that Crosby was a furloughed prisoner—i.e., someone who had been granted "an authorized leave of absence from actual confinement for a designated purpose and period of time". AS 33.30.901(9) (the definition of "furlough"). In other words, the Department of Corrections had affirmatively decided to relinquish physical custody of Crosby for the purpose of allowing him to participate in the residential drug treatment program at Akeela House. Under the terms of Crosby's furlough, he was obligated to participate in this residential treatment program—but the Department apparently trusted Crosby to do just that, and the Department took no steps (either directly, or through agreement with Akeela 927 House) to physically confine Crosby to the treatment facility. Rather, in the words of AS 33.30.091(9), Crosby was on a "leave of absence from actual confinement".

In sum, our decision in Crosby appears to have been ultimately based on the fact that the defendant was on furlough at the time he engaged in his unauthorized departure from Akeela House. But in our discussion of this issue, we suggested that even when a person is under official detention and living at a residential facility, the person is not "confined" there, for purposes of the escape statute, unless (1) the person is required to reside at the facility, (2) the person's required residency is enforced by guards or by physical restraints on the person's ability to leave, and (3) the guards or physical restraints are used at the behest of, or under the agency of, the Department of Corrections for the purpose of maintaining security over its prisoners, rather than for the private purposes of the corporation or group that runs the facility.

We note that the Alaska Legislature has not enacted a statutory definition of "confinement", nor has the legislature altered the statutory definition of "correctional facility", since we decided Crosby in 1989.

Bridge's argument on appeal

In his brief to this Court, Bridge focuses on the portion of Crosby where we suggested that "confinement" hinges "not so much [on] the extent to which [a person's] freedom is restrained[, but rather on] the specific manner in which the restraints are imposed and enforced".[8]

Bridge devotes the majority of his brief to a discussion of the lack of security measures at the Northstar Center. According to the testimony presented at the evidentiary hearing in this case, the Northstar Center is a "non-secure" facility, in that it does not have guards, or a security fence, or even surveillance cameras. Inmates wear their own clothes, they have their own money, and they are not locked inside the facility. The members of the Northstar staff do not carry weapons, and they are instructed not to try to physically restrain inmates who leave the premises.

Relying on the absence of guards and physical restraints at the Northstar Center, Bridge argues that the Northstar Center is not a "correctional facility" because he was not subjected to "confinement" in the sense of physical restraints on his freedom. The problem with Bridge's argument is that it hinges on a portion of Crosby that appears to be dictum.

As we explained above, the Crosby decision offered two different explanations of why Crosby's residence at Akeela House did not constitute "confinement". The first explanation—i.e., the portion of Crosby that Bridge relies on—dealt with the fact that Akeela House apparently did not utilize guards or physical restraints to keep residents from leaving without permission. But the record was unclear on this point, so this Court offered a second, alternative explanation for why Crosby's residence at Akeela House did not constitute "confinement". And under this second explanation, it was irrelevant whether Akeela House used guards or physical restraints to maintain control of its residents. This Court stated that even if Akeela House did utilize guards or physical restraints to keep residents from leaving, this would not constitute "confinement" for purposes of the escape statute—because these guards and physical restraints were not employed at the behest of the Department of Corrections, but rather were employed for the private purposes of Akeela House.[9]

Under this second rationale, the question of whether (or to what degree) the defendant in Crosby was subjected to physical restraints on his liberty during his residence at Akeela House was moot. The answer to this question made no difference to this Court's decision. Thus, our discussion of what type of restraint might constitute "confinement" for purposes of the escape statute became dictum.

928 *The question of "confinement" revisited

Bridge was not on furlough at the Northstar Center. That is, unlike the defendant in Crosby, no one had authorized Bridge to embark on a "leave of absence from actual confinement". Rather, Bridge was a misdemeanor defendant who was awaiting trial, and who had been remanded to the custody of the Department of Corrections because he was unable to make bail. Because of this, Bridge's case requires us to re-examine the question of what constitutes "confinement" for purposes of the escape statute.

The State's main argument in this appeal is that Bridge should be deemed to have escaped from "confinement" because the Department of Corrections placed Bridge at the Northstar Center in lieu of housing him at the Fairbanks Correctional Center. The State points out that Bridge knew that he was legally obligated to remain at the Northstar Center: Bridge was a prisoner who was being held in custody awaiting his trial, and he remained a prisoner even though he had been granted the benefit of waiting for his trial at a non-prison facility.

The State's description of Bridge's status is correct, but the State's argument is essentially the same one we rejected in Crosby. In Crosby, the State argued that the term "correctional facility" applied to any facility utilized by the Department of Corrections to house prisoners.[10] But as this Court noted in Crosby, the statutory definition of "correctional facility" does not encompass any and all premises used for the placement or custody of persons under official detention. Rather, the statute defines "correctional facility" as premises used for the confinement of persons under official detention. Crosby, 770 P.2d at 1155. Thus, we must decide whether the legislature intended the word "confinement" to mean something more specific or limited than "placement" or "custody".

One basic difficulty in answering this question is the fact that the word "confinement", like the word "convicted", can mean different things, depending on the context.[11]

For example, AS 33.30.065 authorizes the Department of Corrections to allow a prisoner to serve their term of imprisonment, or to serve their period of temporary commitment while awaiting trial, by living at home under electronic monitoring. One might speak of these prisoners as being "confined" to their residence, even though no one is guarding them, and even though they are permitted to leave their home for various authorized purposes.

But as we noted in Crosby, the commentary to the draft provisions of our current escape statutes suggests that the word "confinement" was being used in a more restrictive sense—the sense of actual physical restraints placed on a person's movement, enforced by officers whose duty is to keep the person from leaving without permission:

> [T]he tentative draft commentary to AS 11.56.310 ... suggests that escapes from "correctional facilities" were designated as [a higher degree of crime] because of the heightened danger posed by inmates who seek to remove themselves from secure facilities:
> > The Code classifies all escapes from correctional facilities ... as escape in the second degree, a class B felony. Existing law differentiates between an escapee who has committed a felony and one who has committed a misdemeanor; an escape by a > misdemeanant is classified as a misdemeanor. The [Criminal Code Revision] Subcommission concluded that the danger to society resulting from correctional facility escapes is substantial, regardless of whether the escapee is a felon or misdemeanant. The classification of all correctional facility escapes as serious felonies is consistent with the Code provision on the justifiable use of force in preventing an escape from a correctional facility[.]

929 Crosby, 770 P.2d at 1155, quoting Alaska Criminal Code Revision, Tentative Draft, Vol. 4 (1977), pp. 47–48.

This passage from the commentary to the Tentative Draft suggests that the drafters intended to draw a distinction between (1) all prisoners who unlawfully depart from the premises where they have been placed by the Department of Corrections, and (2) those prisoners who unlawfully depart from a facility where there are restraints or limitations on the prisoners' movement, and where corrections officers or other facility staff, acting as agents of the Department, are charged with the duty of preventing the prisoners from departing without permission. It is in these latter circumstances that an escape or attempted escape from the facility poses a heightened danger.

This was the context in which the Crosby court remarked that the word "confinement", as used in the statutory definition of "correctional facility", and as interpreted in the context of the second-degree escape statute, "seems to deal not so much with the extent to which [a person's] freedom is restrained as with the specific manner in which the restraints are imposed and enforced." Crosby, 770 P.2d at 1157.

In other words, there would be no "confinement" if a prisoner is subject only to legal restraints on their physical liberty, in the form of a Department of Corrections order directing them to reside at a particular facility. Rather, "confinement" would exist only when the prisoner's residence at the facility is forcibly maintained.

We note that the legislature appears to have used the word "confined" in this same narrow sense in AS 33.30.181(a), a statute that deals with prisoners whom the Department of Corrections has placed in a community restitution center. This statute declares that a prisoner who has been placed in one of these centers "shall be confined to the center at all times" except when the person is at work, or is traveling to and from work (or to attend a job interview), or is absent for another purpose specially approved by the commissioner. In this statute, the phrase "confined to the [community restitution] center" clearly means something more narrow than "placed in a community restitution center" or "classified to a community restitution center".

As we noted earlier in this opinion, this is not the only sense in which people use the words "confine" or "confinement". These words can mean different things in different contexts.

For example, when our supreme court declared in Rust v. State that the Commissioner of Corrections has the sole discretion to designate "the prison facility to which the prisoner is to be confined",[12] it is clear that the supreme court was using the word "confined" in the broader sense of "placed".

Similarly, it may make good sense to give the word "confinement" a broader meaning for purposes of interpreting AS 33.30.193, the statute that guarantees prisoners meaningful access to the courts for the purpose of challenging "the conditions of the prisoner's confinement". And it would seem that a broader interpretation of "confinement" might be justified when interpreting AS 33.30.211(b), the statute which provides that copies of a prisoner's pre-sentence report "and any other information ... that may affect the person's rehabilitation" shall be transmitted to the superintendent of the correctional facility in which the prisoner is "confined". For the same reasons, a broader interpretation of "confinement" might be warranted when interpreting AS 33.36.010, the statute which declares that it is the policy of the State of Alaska "not to transfer a resident inmate [to a facility] outside of [this] state" under the Interstate Corrections Compact "if [the] inmate's continued confinement in Alaska will better facilitate [their] rehabilitation or treatment".

In Judge Bolger's dissenting opinion, he asserts that the definition of "confinement" that we adopt in the present case will have manifold unfortunate consequences—because that same definition will apply in all of the contexts we have just mentioned, as well as several other contexts that Judge Bolger lists in his dissent. We disagree.

930 1 The limited question before us is the proper interpretation of "confinement" for purposes of interpreting the scope of the second-degree escape statute. Our definition of "confinement" for this particular purpose does not necessarily govern the meaning of this term for other purposes—because it is possible for the same word or phrase to have different meanings in different contexts. For example, this Court has repeatedly recognized that the word "conviction" can mean different things, depending on the context of the statute or rule being construed. See Larson v. State, 688 P.2d 592, 597–98 (Alaska App.1984); Kelly v. State, 663 P.2d 967, 971–72 (Alaska App.1983).

In the present appeal, our task is to identify the conduct that constitutes an escape from confinement for purposes of the second-degree escape statute. This statute declares that any escape from a "correctional facility" is a class B felony, even when the defendant's underlying criminal conduct (or charged conduct) is only a misdemeanor.

As we explained in Crosby, and as we explained earlier in this opinion, the commentary to the Tentative Draft of our criminal code suggests that the legislature's underlying justification for this decision was the perception that escapes from correctional facilities pose a significantly greater degree of danger than other escapes, even when the defendant's underlying crime or criminal charge is not itself particularly serious.

But this rationale—the greater potential danger posed by an escape from "confinement"—does not appear to apply to situations like the one presented in Bridge's case: situations where a prisoner simply walks away from a residence where they have been directed to stay. Rather, the legislature's rationale appears to apply only when the restrictions on a prisoner's physical liberty are enforced by officers whose duty is to keep the person from leaving without permission.

We agree with the State that a prisoner can be "confined" in a facility, for purposes of the second-degree escape statute, even though that facility does not have "gun tower[s] or a fence topped with barbed wire to keep [prisoners] in place". The paramount distinction between "placement" at a facility and "confinement" at a facility is the presence of corrections officers or other people whose duty is to prevent unauthorized departures from the facility—because the increased danger posed by escapes or attempted escapes from such facilities stems from the conflict or risk of conflict between the prisoner and these officers.

Thus, for instance, a work farm that has no towers and no restraining wall or fence could still be a place of "confinement" if it was staffed by corrections officers whose duty was to prevent prisoners from leaving without permission. But on the other hand, the fact that a halfway house has a wall or fence running around the perimeter of its lawn would not, of itself, convert the halfway house to a place of "confinement" if, as in Bridge's case, no officer or staff member had the duty to stop residents from leaving the halfway house without permission.

For these reasons, we agree with Bridge that the superior court was wrong to instruct Bridge's jury that the Northstar Center was a "correctional facility" simply because it housed defendants who were placed there by the Department of Corrections pending their trial or sentencing. The Northstar Center's status as a "correctional facility" hinged on an additional question of fact: whether prisoners' residence at the Center was forcibly maintained by corrections officers or by other guards or staff members acting as agents of the Department of Corrections (either formally or de facto).

The procedural posture of Bridge's case

During the pre-trial proceedings in Bridge's case, the superior court ruled that it was irrelevant what types of restraints or controls were placed on prisoners at the Northstar Center. Instead, the superior court ruled that any halfway house was a "correctional facility" if, under contract with the Department of Corrections, it housed defendants who were in custody awaiting trial or sentencing.

At Bridge's trial, the jurors were instructed in accordance with the superior court's ruling. That is, the jurors were told: "A 931 halfway house under contract with [the] Department of Corrections ... is a correctional facility for pre-sentenced individuals placed there by [the Department] for purposes of confinement." In addition, the trial judge barred the defense attorney from arguing that the Northstar Center did not qualify as a "correctional facility" because the Center did not impose physical restraints on the freedom of its residents.

As we have explained, this jury instruction and this ruling were wrong. If the staff of the Northstar Center had no duty to physically prevent inmates from leaving without permission, then the Northstar Center was not a "correctional facility"-not a facility where prisoners were "confined".

For this reason, Bridge is entitled to a new trial on the charge of second-degree escape.
2 In a single sentence at the end of his opening brief, Bridge asserts that the double jeopardy clause bars the State from retrying him on this charge. This is incorrect. The flaw in Bridge's trial is that the jurors were misinstructed, in the government's favor, on an element of the offense. The constitution does not bar a retrial under these circumstances.13

If the State believes that it will be unable to establish that the Northstar Center qualifies as a "correctional facility" under the test we have announced here, then the State may ask the superior court to enter judgement against Bridge on the lesser offense of fourth-degree escape under AS 11.56.330(a)(1)—the statute which prohibits any act of "remov[ing] oneself from official detention for a misdemeanor".

The judgement of the superior court is REVERSED.

BOLGER, Judge, dissenting.

We recently held that a prisoner at a halfway house was "confined" in a "correctional facility" for purposes of the good-time credit statute.[1] I believe that the escape statute should be construed the same way. The requirement of armed guards is not mentioned in the text or history of this statute or in the numerous other criminal procedure statutes where these terms are used.

The central issue in this case is whether Northstar Center is a "correctional facility"—that is, a "premises ... used for the confinement of persons under official detention."[2] We considered the meaning of the term "confinement" when we addressed another section of the escape statute in Beckman v. State.[3] We concluded that Beckman was subject to "confinement" when he was allowed to attend residential treatment at Akeela House.[4] But Beckman was not confined "under an order of a court," as required by the definition of "official detention," because he was released to attend Akeela House as a condition of his probation.[5]

The legislature amended the definition of "official detention" in 1991.[6] The amendment was intended to overrule two of our cases that had construed this term narrowly.[7] I believe that the amendment corrected an ambiguity in the term "confinement" as it had been previously construed. The definition of "official detention" now includes "actual or constructive restraint" imposed by a court order.[8] When this definition is inserted into the definition of "correctional facility," that term now includes a facility designated for "confinement" under the constructive restraint of a court order. In other words, the statute now includes facilities where the prisoners are constructively restrained 932 as well as facilities with barbed wire and armed guards.

The terms "confinement" and "correctional facility" are used in many criminal statutes. The definition of "correctional facility" that we construe in this case will also determine the scope of correctional facility litigation,[9] liability for sexual assault,[10] liability for promoting contraband,[11] the responsibility for victim notification in domestic violence cases,[12] the liability for correctional facility surcharges,[13] and the deadline for sex offender registration.[14] None of these applications suggest that this term should be limited to facilities with armed guards.

These terms are also used to define the requirements for criminal punishment. Various statutes require that a person sentenced to imprisonment must report to serve a term of "confinement" at a "correctional facility,"[15] that he will accrue good-time credit if he follows the rules of the "correctional facility" where he is "confined,"[16] that he will be returned to "confinement" in a "correctional facility" if he violates parole,[17] and that he will begin probation upon his release from "confinement in a correctional facility."[18]

My point is that these terms are used throughout the criminal statutes, and they should be construed consistently.[19] I would read the terms that apply to the escape statute in the same way that we have applied those terms to the good-time credit statute. In other words, I agree with the trial judge's instruction in this case—a halfway house is a "correctional facility" for those pretrial detainees who are placed there by the Department of Corrections.

Sidney HERTZ, Appellant,
v.
Dan CAROTHERS, Appellee.

No. S-13245. | Feb. 12, 2010. | Rehearing Denied March 10, 2010.

Synopsis

Background: Prisoner's civil rights action against State was dismissed and Superior Court awarded attorney's fees to the State. State attempted to execute judgment against prisoner trust account. Prisoner objected. The Superior Court, First Judicial District, Juneau, Patricia A. Collins, J., held that prisoner was properly served, trust account was subject to execution, and that State's attorney should not be sanctioned. Prisoner appealed.

Holdings: The Supreme Court, Christen, J., held that:
1 State did not comply with notice requirements, but prisoner was not prejudiced;
2 statutes governing prisoner trust accounts did not conflict with one another;
3 statute allowing disbursement of prisoner trust accounts in order to satisfy judgments was not an ex post facto law;
4 statute did not violate contract clause; and 5 attorney's failure to comply with notice requirements did not warrant sanctions.

Affirmed in part, reversed in part.

I. INTRODUCTION

This is the second time we have addressed Sidney Hertz's objections to the State's attempt to execute a judgment against his prisoner trust account. In Hertz v. Carothers[1] (Hertz I), Hertz challenged the State's right to execute on his prisoner trust account to satisfy a judgment for Alaska Civil Rule 82 attorney's fees entered after Hertz lost a prisoner civil rights lawsuit against the State. There, we affirmed the validity of AS 09.38.030(f) which excludes prisoners from an exemption for low wage earners. Following Hertz I, the State again levied on Hertz's trust account to satisfy the remainder of its judgment. Hertz now challenges the levy on the grounds that (1) he was not served properly; (2) "ambiguities" between AS 09.38.030(f) and AS 33.30.201(d) should be resolved in his favor; (3) AS 09.38.030(f)(5) is an ex post facto law; and (4) AS 09.38.030(f)(5) violates the contract clauses of the Alaska and United States Constitutions. We reverse the court's ruling that Hertz was properly served but affirm the court's rulings that Hertz's prisoner trust account is subject to execution and that the State's attorney should not be sanctioned. We also hold that AS 09.38.030(f) is not an ex post facto law and that it does not violate the contract clause of the Alaska Constitution or the contract clause of the United States Constitution.

II. FACTS AND PROCEEDINGS

Hertz is an inmate at Spring Creek Correctional Center ("SCCC"). In July 2004 he sued the Alaska Department of Corrections 573 and several of its employees for alleged civil rights violations.[2] The superior court dismissed Hertz's civil rights suit and awarded Rule 82 attorney's fees of $3,225 to the State.[3] The fee award was later reduced to a judgment.[4] When the State attempted to execute against Hertz's prisoner trust account to satisfy the judgment, Hertz claimed exemptions under AS 09.38.030(a) and (b).[5] Specifically, he argued that his wages were exempt from execution because they fell below the statutory minimum in AS 09.38.030.[6] Alternatively, he argued that the statute was invalid under several different theories.[7] In our January 2008 decision, Hertz I, we affirmed the superior court's order rejecting Hertz's claims of exemption.[8] We also affirmed the validity of AS 09.38.030(f).[9]

On March 14, 2008, the State again sought to execute against Hertz's prisoner account to satisfy the remaining portion of its judgment. The State's service instructions directed the Alaska State Troopers (Judicial Services) to serve the writ of execution and creditor's affidavit on Superintendent Turnbull at SCCC. The service instruction form contained a separate section entitled "Instructions for Serving Notices on the Debtor," which directed that a copy of the State's creditor's affidavit, notice of levy and sale of property, notice of right to exemptions, claim of exemptions form, and judgment debtor booklet be served on Hertz. On June 12, 2008, a trooper served the writ of execution on Superintendent Turnbull. The trooper did not serve any documents on Hertz.

It is undisputed that Hertz had actual knowledge of the State's attempt to execute against his prisoner trust account by June 17, 2008, when he sent a letter to the superior court challenging the State's "theft" of his money based in part on lack of notice. When the State's counsel realized that Hertz had not been served, she faxed the documents that should have been served on Hertz to SCCC. A prison guard personally delivered them to Hertz on June 19, 2008.

Hertz responded to the faxed documents by filing several claims of exemption in which he argued that (1) improper service voids the levy; (2) "ambiguities" between AS 33.30.201(d)-which provides that the "primary purpose" of the prisoner trust account is to make funds available for prisoners' use at the time of release-and AS 09.38.030(f)(5)-which allows the execution of judgments against prisoner accounts-must be construed against the government; and (3) $185 in his trust account was not subject to execution because he had received it in the form of gifts from family and friends and the money should have been retained by the commissioner pursuant to AS 33.30.201(d).

On August 5, 2008, the superior court denied Hertz's claims of exemption, citing Hertz I. The superior court reasoned that our court "has ruled that a prisoner's trust account may be subject to execution," and noted that there is no exception in the statutory scheme for money acquired by gift. Finally, the court rejected Hertz's argument that the errors in the State's service should negate the writ because "there is no prejudice by [the] delayed service and no showing of a knowing violation of the statute." The superior court rejected Hertz's motion for reconsideration.

Hertz appeals.

III. STANDARDS OF REVIEW

1 2 3 We review issues of statutory interpretation, as well as questions about the constitutionality of statutes, de novo.[10] "Decisions whether to sanction attorneys are reviewed 574 for abuse of discretion."[11] "A judge's refusal to recuse him- or herself is reviewed under the abuse of discretion standard."[12]

IV. DISCUSSION

A. The Execution on Hertz's Prisoner Trust Account Was Invalid Because the State Failed To Properly Serve Him.

4 The State argues that it was in technical compliance with AS 09.38.085(a)(1) because it served Hertz with a notice of levy, a claim of exemptions form, a creditor's affidavit, and a judgment debtor's handbook. But the State misses the crux of Hertz's argument. Hertz's challenge is not to the sufficiency of the documents served; he challenges the State's method of service.

Several statutes and rules describe the notice the State was required to provide Hertz before levying on his trust account. Alaska Statute 09.38.080(c) requires that "[b]efore, at the time of, or within three days after the levy, the creditor shall serve on the individual [debtor] a notice under AS 09.38.085." Alaska Statute 09.38.085 describes the content of the required notices, and AS 09.38.500, the definitions section of the Alaska Exemptions Act, specifies the method for serving the notices. The term "serve notice" in AS 09.38.080(c) means "to give the person to be served a written personal notice in the same manner a summons in a civil action is served, or to mail the notice to the person's last known address by first-class mail and by using a form of mail requiring a signed receipt."[13] Hertz was served personally, not by mail, so we turn to the civil rules.

Civil Rule 4 identifies the permissible methods for serving a summons in a civil action. It requires service to "be made by a peace officer, by a person specially appointed by the Commissioner of Public Safety for that purpose or, where a rule so provides, by registered or certified mail." The rule defines "peace officer" as "any officer of the state police, members of the police of any incorporated city, village or borough, United States Marshals and their deputies, other officers whose duty it is to enforce and preserve the public peace, and ... persons specially appointed." Special appointments "shall only be made by the Commissioner of Public Safety after a thorough investigation of each applicant."[14]

After the State's counsel learned that the trooper had failed to serve Hertz as instructed, she faxed the documents to SCCC. A prison guard delivered them to Hertz on June 19, 2008. But the State did not argue, and the record does not show, that the prison guard who served Hertz was a "peace officer" or a person "specially appointed to serve process" within the meaning of Civil Rule 4. We agree with the superior court that the delay in service was not prejudicial to Hertz, but the State was still required to use an authorized method of service. The record does not show that the State complied with Civil Rule 4.[15]

We are mindful that our ruling regarding service may appear to elevate form over substance because Hertz had actual knowledge of the levy by June 16, 2008. But we are loathe to carve out exceptions to the important rules for service of process. These rules enable courts to verify that service has actually been made; they are vital to ensuring that litigants receive the due process to which they are entitled, and they are broadly applicable. Creating an exception merely to avoid requiring the State to properly serve Hertz is fraught with precedential danger. Such an exception, though seemingly narrow, could be applied in future cases to relax the notice requirements for litigants 575 who might not have received the actual notice Hertz enjoyed. This danger would be especially acute in cases involving requests for entry of default judgment. Given the serious consequences of execution, i.e., the involuntary confiscation of a debtor's property, we must insist on strict compliance with the legislature's statutory scheme and the service requirements of Civil Rule 4.[16]

B. Alaska Statutes 33.30.201(d) and 09.38.030(f)(5) Do Not Conflict and Are Not Ambiguous.

5 Alaska Statute 33.30.201(d) provides for prisoners to be compensated for their work in prison and for their wages to be placed in a trust account for the "primary purpose" of being available to them at the time of release. But AS 09.38.030(f) provides that "[a]ll money in an incarcerated person's account at a correctional facility is available for disbursement under a notice of levy under this subsection ... (5) to satisfy other judgments entered against a prisoner in litigation against the state." Hertz argues that the "primary purpose" language of AS 33.30.201(d) conflicts with the disbursement scheme in AS 09.38.030(f). Citing this "ambiguity" Hertz argues that "[a]mbiguities in criminal statutes must be narrowly read and construe[d] strictly against the government."

In Hertz I, we upheld the state's ability to execute on prisoner accounts despite an exemption for low-wage earners and those who are paid semi-monthly.[17] We noted that AS 09.38.030(f)(5) specifically eliminates the low-wages exemption when low wages are paid to prisoners.[18]

Hertz's present challenge to AS 09.38.030(f)(5) is technically barred by the doctrine of res judicata;[19] he was required to raise all of his challenges to the statute in Hertz I.[20] But Hertz's argument is unavailing even on the merits. Alaska Statute 33.30.201 states that prisoner wages shall be disbursed pursuant to a specified order of priority and that remaining funds are to be given to the prisoner when he or she is released, subject to exceptions. After all disbursements are paid in the statutorily required order of priority, subsection .201(f) states that remaining funds are subject to lien, attachment, garnishment, execution, or similar procedures to encumber money or property. This provision does not conflict with AS 09.38.030(f)(5). Alaska Statutes 33.30.201(c) and (f) identify the priorities for which a prisoner's trust account can be invaded, and AS 09.38.030(f) explains that prisoners do not enjoy the benefit of the exemption for earnings and liquid assets enunciated in AS 09.38.030 generally. Both statutes contemplate and accommodate the execution and garnishment of prisoner trust accounts.

To the extent that Hertz argues that these statutes must be construed against the State because they are "criminal statutes," he is mistaken. The fact that these statutes govern the administration of prisoner trust accounts does not make them "criminal statutes." Hertz has cited no authority and we have found none supporting his assertion that statutes should be strictly construed against the State merely because they apply to convicted felons. Alaska Statutes 09.38.030 and 33.30.201 are civil statutes, they are not ambiguous, and they do not conflict. After all disbursements are made from a prisoner's trust account pursuant to the statute's order of priority, all remaining funds are subject to execution.

576 C. Alaska Statute 09.38.030(f)(5) Is Not an Ex Post Facto Law.

6 Hertz asserts that AS 09.38.030(f)(5) is an ex post facto law. The basis for this argument is that this statute was passed in 1995, after the State entered into a consent decree to resolve litigation challenging the conditions of confinement for Alaska prisoners.[21] Hertz argues that the adoption of AS 09.38.030(f)(5) in the wake of the Cleary consent decree creates the appearance that AS 09.38.030(f)(5) "was enacted solely for the purpose of circumventing the Cleary [Final Settlement Agreement and Order]."

7 We have adopted the United States Supreme Court's view that:

> any statute which punishes as a crime an act previously committed, which was innocent when done; which makes more burdensome the punishment for a crime, after its commission; or which deprives one charged with a crime of any defense available according to law at the time when the act was committed, is prohibited as ex post facto.[22]

Alaska Statute 09.38.030(f)(5) does not criminalize behavior that was previously not criminal and it has no bearing on the defense of any crime; it is not an ex post facto law.

D. Alaska Statute 09.38.030(f)(5) Does Not Violate the Contract Clause.

8 Hertz argues that AS 09.38.030(f)(5) violates the contract clause of the United States Constitution and the contract clause of the Alaska Constitution by "substantial[ly] impair[ing]" his contractual right to allege noncompliance with the Cleary consent decree. He supports this argument by pointing out that "this Court has admitted that AS 09.38.030(f)(5) was to discourage prisoner litigation." Our court has explained:

> Article I, section 15 of the Alaska Constitution provides: "No law impairing the obligation of contracts ... shall be passed." Because the language of the contract clause of the Alaska Constitution is nearly identical to that of the federal Contract Clause, we apply the same two-part analysis to alleged violations of the Alaska and federal contract clauses. We first ask "whether the change in state law has operated as a substantial impairment of a contractual relationship." If there is a substantial impairment, we then examine "whether the impairment is reasonable and necessary to serve an important public purpose."
> ....
> Under the first prong of the contract clause test, we consider: (1) whether there is a contractual relationship, (2) whether the law impairs the contractual relationship, and (3) whether the impairment is substantial.[23]

9 The Cleary consent decree sets minimum standards for conditions of prisoner confinement including food, medical care, and dental care. It also provides procedures for prisoners to file grievances for non-compliance with the decree.[24] After exhausting the "administrative grievance procedure," an inmate may file suit in superior court. In this case, the State does not challenge Hertz's assertion that the Cleary consent decree established a contractual relationship between the State and inmates in the custody of the State of Alaska,[25] arguing instead that even if such a contractual relationship exists, AS 09.38.030(f) does not impair it. We agree; AS 09.38.030(f) does not impair prisoners' ability to seek enforcement of the Cleary consent decree. We do not need to decide 577 whether the Cleary consent decree constitutes a binding contract.

10 11 Civil Rule 82 provides for the award of attorney's fees to the prevailing party of a civil lawsuit. Civil Rule 82 was in effect when the Cleary consent decree was entered, November 1, 1990. The consent decree addresses certain conditions of confinement; it does not immunize prisoners from attorney's fee awards or exempt inmate trust accounts from execution to satisfy fee awards. Alaska Statute 09.38.030(f)(5) allocates some of the State's cost of defending lawsuits to the non-prevailing prisoner, thereby discouraging frivolous claims.[26] "An inmate's right to be free of state interference with his right of access to the court system is not absolute."[27] A statute is constitutional if it "does not impermissibly interfere with, or burden, an inmate's right of access to the court and is sufficiently related to a legitimate government interest."[28] Alaska Statute 09.38.030(f)(5) does not prevent or stifle a prisoner's ability to pursue legitimate claims against the government.

The specter of Rule 82 fees tempers the litigiousness of most civil litigants; we see no reason to make a special exception for inmates. Alaska Statute 09.38.030(f)(5) merely reflects the State's interest in discouraging frivolous prisoner litigation, a legitimate goal we have repeatedly upheld.[29] We are not convinced that permitting the State to collect judgments from prisoner trust accounts impairs the right of prisoners to seek enforcement of the Cleary consent decree,[30] and we hold that AS 09.38.030(f)(5) does not violate the Alaska or federal prohibition against impairment of contracts.

E. There Was No Misconduct by the State's Attorney.

12 Hertz asserts that the superior court erred by failing to sanction the State's counsel under Professional Conduct Rule 95(b) for (1) failing to have him served by a peace officer; and (2) for lying because she "never intended to serve Hertz with the Writ."

The superior court correctly decided that Hertz's claims of attorney misconduct are meritless. There is no evidence that the State's counsel acted inappropriately during the course of her efforts to collect the State's judgment. At most, there is evidence that a mistake was made at the time of service. Ironically, Hertz's allegation of misconduct arises from counsel's rush to arrange for personal delivery of the documents that would notify Hertz of his right to claim exemptions; the State's attorney likely faxed the documents to SCCC for immediate delivery in order to comply with AS 09.38.080(c), which requires the debtor to receive notice "[b]efore, at the time of, or within three days after the levy."

Even though the State failed to comply with Civil Rule 4, there is no evidence that the State's counsel intended to deprive Hertz of his right to notice. Hertz admits that he received the relevant documents by fax just days after he learned of the levy and apparently shortly after the State's attorney discovered the mistake. The superior court appropriately declined to sanction the State's attorney.

F. Hertz Waived His Argument that Judge Collins Should Have Recused Herself Because of Apparent Bias Against Prisoners.

13 Hertz argues that the superior court judge created an appearance of impropriety by ruling on his claim of exemptions before receiving his response to the State's objections. 578 [31] We see no evidence of any bias in the record. And Hertz waived the issue in any event by failing to move for disqualification in the superior court.[32]

IV. CONCLUSION

We REVERSE the court's ruling that Hertz was adequately served, but hold that AS 33.30.201(d) and AS 09.38.030(f)(5) do not conflict and are not ambiguous, that AS 09.38.030(f)(5) is not an ex post facto law, and that AS 09.38.030(f)(5) does not violate the contract clause of the Alaska Constitution or United States Constitution. We AFFIRM the superior court's rulings that Hertz's trust account is subject to execution and that the State's attorney should not be sanctioned.

AN ACT

Relating to requiring electronic monitoring as a special condition of probation and parole for offenders whose offense was related to a criminal street gang.

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

AN ACT

Relating to requiring electronic monitoring as a special condition of probation and parole for offenders whose offense was related to a criminal street gang.

 Section 1. AS 12.55.100 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(f) While on probation and as a special condition of probation for an offense where the aggravating factor provided in AS 12.55.155(c)(29) has been proven or admitted, the court shall require that the defendant submit to electronic monitoring. Electronic monitoring under this subsection must provide for monitoring of the defendant's location and movements by Global Positioning System technology. The court shall require a defendant serving a period of probation with electronic monitoring as provided under this subsection to pay all or a portion of the costs of the electronic monitoring, but only if the defendant has sufficient financial resources to pay the costs or a portion of the costs. A defendant subject to electronic monitoring under this subsection is not entitled to a credit for time served in a correctional facility while the defendant is on probation. In this subsection, "correctional facility" has the meaning given in AS 33.30.901.

 Sec. 2. AS 33.16.150 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(g) In addition to other conditions of parole imposed under this section for a prisoner serving a sentence for an offense where the aggravating factor provided in AS 12.55.155(c)(29) has been proven or admitted, the board shall impose as a condition of special medical, discretionary, and mandatory parole a requirement that the prisoner submit to electronic monitoring. Electronic monitoring under this subsection must provide for monitoring of the prisoner's location and movements by Global Positioning System technology. The board shall require a prisoner serving a period of probation with electronic monitoring as provided under this subsection to pay all or a portion of the costs of the electronic monitoring, but only if the prisoner has sufficient financial resources to pay the costs or a portion of the costs. A prisoner subject to electronic monitoring under this subsection is not entitled to a credit for time served in a correctional facility while the defendant is on parole. In this subsection, "correctional facility" has the meaning given in AS 33.30.901.

 Sec. 3. AS 12.55.100(f) and AS 33.16.150(g) are repealed December 31, 2012.

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to service of process on prisoners; relating to the crime of escape; relating to the definition of 'correctional facility'; amending Rule 4, Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 09.05.050 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(c) In this section, "correctional facility" has the meaning given in AS 33.30.901.

 Sec. 2. AS 11.56.310(a) is amended to read:

(a) One commits the crime of escape in the second degree if, without lawful authority, one

(1) removes oneself from

(A) a secure correctional facility while under official detention for a misdemeanor;

(B) official detention for a felony or for extradition; or

(C) official detention and, during the escape or at any time before being restored to official detention, one possesses on or about oneself a firearm;

(2) violates AS 11.56.335 or 11.56.340 and, during the time of the unlawful evasion or at any time before being restored to official detention, one possesses on or about oneself a firearm; or

(3) removes, tampers with, or disables the electronic monitoring equipment, or leaves one's residence or other place designated by the commissioner of corrections for the service by electronic monitoring of official detention for a felony.

 Sec. 3. AS 11.56.310 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(c) In this section, "secure correctional facility" means a correctional facility that

(1) uses construction fixtures or other restraints designed to restrict physically the physical movements and activities of persons under official detention; or

(2) employs correctional officers or other facility staff charged with preventing persons under official detention from departing the facility without lawful authorization.

 Sec. 4. AS 11.81.900(b)(9) is amended to read:

(9) "correctional facility" means a prison, jail, camp, farm, halfway house, group home, holding facility, or other placement [PREMISES, OR A PORTION OF PREMISES,] used for housing [THE CONFINEMENT OF] persons under official detention;

 Sec. 5. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

Hi Melanie –

HB 296 is scheduled to be heard in the House Judiciary Committee meeting tomorrow. I wanted to let you know that the court has no position on the bill, but normally I would attend the hearing because it does say that it indirectly amends a court rule. Unfortunately, I have a conflict tomorrow, and need to be in another hearing at the same time. Please feel free to call me or let me know if I can answer any questions about it.

Legal Services recommends legislative review of the following eight (8) court cases:

1. Hertz v. Carothers, 225 P. 3d 571 (Alaska 2010)
   Court decision: Service of process on the prisoner was invalid as the trooper delivered the process to the superintendent and the process was later faxed to the prison and delivered to the prisoner.

W.O. 999 2/3 vote to amend Civil Rule

Legal Services recommends legislative review of AS 09.38.080, AS 09.38.085, and Alaska Civil Rule 4 to determine a) if there needs to be specific guidance and procedures for the service of process to inmates in correctional facilities; and b) if prison guards should be included in the definition of "peace officers" for the purpose of service.

09.09.050

2. Planned Parenthood v. Campbell, 232 P. 3d 725 (Alaska 2010)
   Court Decision: The Parental Involvement Initiative summary may be corrected after the petition is signed and is allowed to remain on the ballot.

Legal Services recommends legislative review of AS 15.45.090(a) to revisit and clarify standards for ballot initiatives.

3. West v. State, __ P.3d __ (Alaska 2010)
   Court Decision: Predator control requires adherence to sustained yield principles.

Legal Services recommends legislative review of AS 16.05.255 and Article VIII, section 4 of the Constitution of the State of Alaska to determine whether the Supreme Court correctly applied the Predator Control statute in this case.

4. Mat-Su Valley Medical Center v. Advanced Pain Centers of Alaska, 218 P.3d 698 (Alaska 2010)
   Court Decision: Interpretation of Certificate of Need statute confers standing, even after administrative appeal period, because Mat-Su Valley Medical Center is a member of the public.

Legal Services recommends legislative review of AS 18.07.091(a) to determine whether the Supreme Court correctly applied the CON statute in this case.

5. Shehata v. Salvation Army, 225 P.3d 1106 (Alaska 2010)
   Court Decision: An injured employee has no affirmative duty to disclose information that would affect a right to workers compensation, unlike the affirmative duty required for unemployment benefits.

Legal Services recommends legislative review of AS 23.30.250 to determine if there needs to be disqualification standards for worker's compensation similar to existing standards for unemployment benefits.

6. Osterkamp v. Stiles, 235 P.3d 178 (Alaska 2010)
   Court Decision: Custody and visitation of a former foster child may not include consideration of foster parent status for the purposes of determining "psychological parent" status.

Legal Services recommends legislative review of AS 25.23.130 to determine whether the Supreme Court correctly interpreted the state policy on foster parent status as it relates to custody rights.

7. Bradshaw v. State, 224 P.3d 118 (Alaska 2010)
   Court Decision: The ten-year statute of limitations does not bar the DMV from charging a $100 fee upon reinstatement of a driver's license.

Legal Services recommends legislative review of AS 28.15.211 to determine whether a) the Supreme Court correctly interpreted the driver's license reinstatement fee statute; and b) the reinstatement fee should apply to the specific type of suspension applicable to this case.

8. Weimer v. Continental Care and Truck, LLC, 237 P.3d 610 (Alaska 2010)
   Court Decision: The Consumer Protection Act statute of limitations begins at the time of loss, not at the time of the discovery of the illegal act.

Legal Services recommended legislative review of AS 45.50.471(b) to determine if the Supreme Court correctly interpreted the statute of limitations in the Consumer Protection Act.

Legal Services conditionally recommends legislative review of the following four (4) court cases, if the legislature feels the current statues are not sufficient:

1. Hillstrand v. City of Homer, 218 P.3d 685 (Alaska 2009)
   Court Decision: When taking land by eminent domain for a public building or grounds, land may be taken for subsidiary features provided those features are necessary to accomplish the purpose of the taking.

Legal Services recommends legislative review of AS 09.55.250, if the legislature desires to restrict the Supreme Court's application of this statute through this case.

2. Alexie v. State, 229 P.3d 217 (Alaska App. 2010)

Court Decision: The Court must accept a legislative determination of imposing the same punishment for different crimes.

Legal Services recommends legislative review of AS 11.41.200 and AS 12.55.125(c), if the legislature desires to review the presumptive sentencing ranges for manslaughter and first degree assault.

3. Anderson v. Alyeska Pipeline Service Co., 234 P.3d 1282 (Alaska 2010)
   Court Decision: The Project Owner statute prevents an employee of a subcontractor from suing the owner of the project for injuries received while working on the project.

Legal Services recommends legislative review of AS 23.30.045 and AS 23.30.055, if the legislature desires to address the "difficult" hypothetical examples that came out of this case relating to small business owners as project owners.

4. Alvarez v. State, __ P.3d __ (Alaska 2010)
   Court Decision: Criminal law "speedy trial" requirements do not apply to driver's license suspension or revocation proceedings.

Legal Services recommends legislative review of AS 28.15.165, if the legislature wishes to impose a time limit on continuances in driver's license suspension hearings.

MEMORANDUM January 24, 2012

SUBJECT: Requirement of a Conditional Effect Section for a Bill Indirectly Amending a Court Rule (Work Order No. 27-LS1199\I)

TO: Representative Max Gruenberg

FROM: Doug Gardner
Director

Your question is whether the above-referenced bill draft requires a conditional effect section. The answer is no. I note that there is no question that the proposed bill indirectly amends Civil Rule 4 regarding service of process on persons incarcerated at correctional facilities. I believe that you spoke with Legislative Counsel and Assistant Revisor Jerry Luckhaupt regarding this matter, and that his advice to you was that a conditional effect section is not necessary in this bill given the unique procedural circumstances of AS 09.05.050.

As you requested, this bill utilizes the process already in place in AS 09.05.050, and an indirect rule change to Civil Rule 4, to address the service of process problems that the State confronted in serving Mr. Hertz in Hertz v. Carrothers, 225 P.3d 571 (Alaska 2010). Indirect amendment of a court rule requires a two-thirds vote of each body for passage of the bill and amendment of the court rule at issue, as required by article IV section 15, Alaska Constitution. This issue is discussed in the Manual of Legislative Drafting, pp. 48 - 51 (2011 ed.). In this case, put simply, the cart is before the horse, and no conditional effect section is necessary. Here's why.

In most cases, the statutory provision in a bill that amends a court rule is being presented in the bill at the same time that the legislature desires to indirectly amend the court rule in question. In this case the circumstances are different. AS 09.05.05.050 is already on the books. While section 1 of the bill does amend AS 09.05.050 by adding a definition of "correctional facility," it is section 5 of the bill which expresses the Legislature's intent to indirectly amend the court rule. Section 5 of the bill is the operative section requiring two-thirds vote of each body to achieve the court rule amendment.

The situation confronted by this bill is that when AS 09.05.050 was originally passed it was not presented with a notice of indirect amendment of court rule, or with a conditional effect section. So, AS 09.05.050 passed without a specific two-thirds vote of both houses authorizing an indirect amendment of the court rule. But, without a conditional effect section, AS 09.05.050 became law despite the fact that it did not achieve the entire objective intended of providing a process for serving incarcerated persons recognized as valid by Civil Rule 4. So, the service procedure in the Civil Rule 4 continued to trump the procedure set forth for serving prisoners in AS 09.05.050, and continues to do so.

In this bill, if the process in AS 09.05.050 were included in this bill, then it would be necessary to include a conditional effect section to make clear that unless the indirect court rule provision received a two-thirds vote, AS 09.50.050 would not take effect, and cause AS 09.05.050 to sit on the books having no utility as a means of achieving valid service of process on incarcerated persons. However, since the procedures in AS 09.05.050 are already on the books, there is no need to put a conditional effect section in this bill to prevent the dilemma that already exists: a statute that does not achieve the purpose of providing a service mechanism for incarcerated persons. So, now that the cart has been before the horse since 1989, we recommend that a conditional effect section not be included in this bill.

Press Release

Alaska Judicial Council announces report on Pilot PACE Probation Program

September 16, 2011

The Alaska Judicial Council announced today that it has completed a preliminary evaluation of the Anchorage PACE pilot program that began operation in July 2010. Probation Accountability with Certain Enforcement (PACE) monitored at-risk probationers with drug or alcohol-testing conditions to assure their compliance, through random testing for substance abuse and tracking participants' appointments with their probation officers. An essential part of the program is collaboration among law enforcement, prosecutor, defense attorney, judges and the probation office to assure that probationers who violate the requirements of the program are quickly arrested and brought before a judge, who usually imposes an immediate sanction. The preliminary evaluation found that the data available showed that PACE appeared to be successful at reducing positive drug tests, with nearly two-thirds of the PACE probationers free of any positive drug tests during the three month followup period. In contrast, only one-fifth of those probationers were free of positive drug tests prior to their participation in PACE. Although some results were promising, definitive conclusions about the project's success will require more data and further evaluation.

Alaska's Criminal Justice Working Group, co-chaired by Chief Justice Walter Carpeneti and Attorney General John Burns, endorsed the pilot PACE program. The Criminal Justice Working Group collaborates on ways to improve Alaska criminal justice system. It includes the commissioners of administration, corrections, health and social services, and public safety, other top policymakers from the state, the chief of the Anchorage Police Department, the U.S. Marshall, and the directors of the court system, the Mental Health Trust Authority, and the Judicial Council. The group is staffed by the Judicial Council with funding by the Alaska Legislature. Although the PACE program itself was carried out with the agencies' existing resources, the Mental Health Trust Authority provided some of the funding needed for start-up training.

The PACE project showed that innovations in the criminal justice process can be undertaken through collaboration. The Anchorage Police Department served most of the warrants for arrest when PACE probationers did not comply with the conditions of the program. The court, defense attorneys and prosecutors, and probation department used existing resources to provide additional drug testing, and the attorney, judge and staff time needed for the PACE hearings. The Institute for Social and Economic Research at UAA provided the expertise needed to compile and analyze the data.

In addition to its role on the Working Group, the Judicial Council has a constitutional mandate to conduct studies to improve the administration of justice in Alaska. For more information contact:

Acknowledgments

The impetus to create the PACE program as a pilot project in Anchorage came from the Department of Corrections. In October of 2009, then-Special Assistant to the Commissioner, Carmen Gutierrez, assembled stakeholders from the Division of Probation, the Alaska Court System, the Anchorage Police Department, the Anchorage offices of the district attorneys, public defense and Office of Public Advocacy, and other stakeholders to discuss the possibility of following the HOPE model to reduce the significant problems caused by increasing numbers of petitions to revoke probation. The team researched the HOPE model, considered the feasibility of carrying out a similar program in Anchorage, went to Hawaii for training, and in July of 2010 inducted the first PACE probationers. Since then, they have spent substantial time and effort to make PACE a workable program.

We would like to recognize the contributions of Keith Thayer and Jo Ann Wallace, supervisors in the Anchorage Probation office; Kim (Matt) Matthews and Rebecca Tuominen, the probation officers who have worked with all of the PACE participants; Judges William Morse and John Suddock who have heard the PACE cases; Tiffany Harkleroad and her criminal court clerk staff who have handled the paperwork; Clint Campion and Emma Haddix, Assistant District Attorneys; John Cashion, Assistant Public Defender; Brendan Kelly, Office of Public Advocacy; Sgt. Chris Jones and Lt. Richard Stouff of the Anchorage Police Department who assured the service of arrest warrants; and Judicial Services, the office that handled the PACE probationers when they were in custody. Research interns Leigh Coppola and Katherine Jackstadt invested many hours working with ISER to compile the data for the report.

Judge Steven Alm and the Hawaii HOPE stakeholders provided support, encouragement and training that made the project possible, and Dr. Angela Hawken's work was a model for this evaluation.

Anchorage PACE Pilot Evaluation

Part 1: Background

A. Introduction

On July 12, 2010, Anchorage judges conducted the first warning hearings for the initial group of twenty-nine probationers assigned to the PACE – Probation Accountability with Certain Enforcement – pilot program. Modeled after Project HOPE in Hawaii,[1] Anchorage's PACE added another fifty-one probationers between November 2010 and February 2011.[2] This report describes the progress of the program, and the data on outcomes collected between July 2010 and June 2011.

B. Description of PACE

1. Background

In October 2009, the Department of Corrections, Anchorage judges, attorneys and others began to discuss the increasingly unmanageable number of probation violations filed monthly in the Anchorage superior court.[3] About 25 petitions each week to revoke probation because of technical violations were being filed in the Anchorage court. These required court, probation officer, and defense and prosecuting attorney time. Probation officers believed that the process was not as effective as it could have been.

[2] A total of seventy-nine probationers were assigned to PACE between July 2010 and February 2011 – 29 in July 2010; 18 in November 2010; 18 in January 2011; and 14 in February 2011. Of these, the fourteen in the February group were not included in the analysis because the data were not collected due to a miscommunication. Two of the November probationers moved out of Anchorage after assignment to PACE, and no information was available for them. A total of 63 PACE inductees were available for the analysis.

[3] Alaska has formal probation supervision only for offenders convicted of a felony. Although misdemeanor offenders spend time on probation, there is no formal supervision of their overall activities.

Members of the group decided to try a pilot probation monitoring and enforcement project modeled after Project HOPE in Hawaii.[4] They consulted extensively with Judge Alm,[5] who arranged for an Alaskan team to meet with their counterparts in the Honolulu law enforcement, court, prosecutors, probation and defense attorneys' offices.[6] During the week of July 12 - 16, 2010, Judges Morse and Suddock who had volunteered for the program gave warning hearings to the first twenty-nine offenders. Another 50 probationers were inducted in November 2010, and January and February 2011. The November, January, and February inductees were part of a group whose members were randomly assigned to PACE or probation as usual.[7]

The pilot program was carried out with the cooperation of all of the agencies involved, and without additional resources. The size of the initial group of probationers assigned was based on the capacity of the stakeholders to assume any extra work associated with the program using only existing staff and funds for drug testing. The Alaska Judicial Council (Council) funded the evaluation, monitored the PACE progress and wrote the report. The Institute for Social and Economic Research (ISER) at the University of Alaska Anchorage collected the data and conducted the analysis.

2. Program

Probationers assigned to PACE were required to comply with all probation conditions, including random drug testing and periodic meetings with their probation officers. A positive drug or alcohol test, failure to appear for a scheduled test, or failure to attend a meeting with the probation officer were the three conditions targeted in the PACE program. If offenders failed to comply with any one of these, they were immediately arrested or a warrant was issued for their arrest. A court hearing was scheduled, usually within 72 hours. At the hearing, the judge imposed a sanction of a short jail term, generally two to three days. If the offender violated again, the process was repeated, with another sanction. The essence of the program was that every single violation that was included in the PACE program was dealt with quickly, and a sanction was imposed each time.

[5] Judge Steven Alm of Honolulu, Hawaii, designed and developed the HOPE program. See Managing Drug Involved Probationers, supra, note 1.

[6] The Aalska Mental Health Trust Authority provided much of the funding for the training-related travel.

[7] See Methodology infra for discussion of the difficulties with the control group.

Probationers were not allowed to opt out of the program. If they completed two months without violation, the frequency of testing was usually reduced. One or more additional violations typically resulted in an increased emphasis on treatment, or in other actions by the court. Probationers did not return to court unless they were arrested; there were no scheduled status hearings as are used in the therapeutic courts.

3. Stakeholder roles

Each offender was required to attend a warning hearing set before one of the project judges. After that, the judge only saw the offender if a warrant was issued for the offender's arrest because of violation of a condition. If the offender was arrested for a new offense, the new charges were handled through regular court channels, generally without involving the PACE judges.[8]

Defense attorneys, prosecutors, and probation officers participated in any scheduled sanctioning hearings. The Anchorage Police Department made serving PACE warrants a top priority, and was responsible for most of the warrants served. The Alaska State Troopers and the federal marshals also assisted with the program, as needed. The Department of Corrections supervised all violators and incarcerated all offenders.[9] The Department made handling the pilot PACE program one of its top priorities, and expedited any actions associated with PACE probationers.

4. The PACE process

A stakeholder group that included courts, corrections, defense and prosecution, law enforcement, and the project evaluators met monthly starting in January of 2010 through May of 2011. The team continued to meet as needed to resolve issues of substance or procedure that arose during the project's operations. A wide range of issues – such as probationers moving out of town to avoid the program, court clerk workloads, criteria for assignment to the program – were dealt with by the PACE team. The PACE process was documented with public reports of the meetings. Stakeholders cooperated throughout the project to resolve problems and assure the program's effectiveness.

[8] The judges assigned to PACE normally handled only civil cases.

[9] Alaska has both a unified corrections system with no local or county jails, and a unified court system, with no local or county courts.

C. Evaluation Methodology

1. Outcome measures

To assess the effectiveness of the PACE program, stakeholders agreed to measure change in several outcomes:

- Number of positive or refused drug tests;
- Number of missed drug tests;
- Number of missed appointments with probation officers;
- Number of probation revocations;
- Number of new arrests/charges;
- Number of incarceration days served; and
- Number of positive or failed alcohol tests.

Other purposes of the project were to a) determine the extent to which the Division of Probation electronic databases would be useful for subsequent evaluations of PACE and other evidence-based programs that the Department of Corrections was interested in using to achieve its goals of rehabilitation and protection of public safety;[10] and b) identify any obstacles to a large scale evaluation.

2. Study subjects and controls

a. Pace participants

The criteria for assignment to the program (or control group) were that the probationers be identified by the Anchorage probation office as at risk for a probation revocation for not complying with conditions of probation; that they have drug or alcohol testing as a specific condition of probation;[11] and that they not be on parole.[12] The final evaluation set of 63 PACE

---

[10] Evaluators and the Department of Corrections knew that it would be necessary to use paper files for some aspects of the data collection for this project.

[11] The data showed that 94% of the final PACE evaluation group had a condition of no drug use, and 86% were required by the original probation conditions to subject to drug testing. Ninety-seven percent had a condition of no alcohol use or no use to excess, and 35% had a condition of alcohol testing.

[12] Additional criteria included that the probationers not be on the specialized probation supervision caseloads for sex offenders or offenders with mental health issues, and that they not have any active probation revocation petitions outstanding.

participants included 42 males and 21 females.[13] The mean (average) age was 33.7 years old. Sixty-six percent of the PACE participants were Caucasian, fifteen percent were Alaska Native/American Indian, and the others were Asian-American or Black.

b. Control probationers

The PACE team experimented with identifying and tracking a randomly assigned control group for the project. For each of the PACE groups inducted between November and February, the probation office identified twice as many people as were expected to be PACE participants. ISER randomly assigned one-half of each group to PACE and the other half to the control group. There were no statistically significant differences on the characteristics of age, gender, and ethnicity between the two groups.

One of the more important findings of the pilot project was that the control group was too difficult to track to provide useful data. While the PACE participants all were supervised by two experienced probation officers, the control group members continued with their ten previously assigned probation officers.[14] The PACE officers were meticulous record-keepers while the other officers had varying degrees of ability. Research technicians had greater access to PACE participant files than to control group files, which were in use most of the time, making data collection impractical and sometimes interfering with the work of probation officers.

3. Data

The primary data for the analysis were provided by the Division of Probation. Basic demographic and case-related data came from the Department of Corrections offender management system, ACOMS.[15] Data related to positive or refused drug tests were compiled from ACOMS. Most of the other evaluation-related data were collected from paper case files.

The biggest impediments to the evaluation were (1) lack of electronic data for many of the variables; (2) non-systematic reporting of appointments with probation officers, and of alcohol and drug test results for control group; and (3) omission of the February 2011 PACE participants from the analysis because of a miscommunication between the evaluators and data

[13] Two of the probationers originally in the PACE evaluation set were not in the program long enough to compile data about their experience, because they moved to other communities in the state where PACE supervision and testing were not available.

[14] Starting in about February, the control probationers were reassigned to three experienced probation officers.

[15] Alaska Corrections Offender Management System.

sources. ISER research technicians spent almost 500 hours collecting data for the 63 participants included in the evaluation and the control group probationers in the November and January groups. Some data were electronically available in the ACOMS database but inconsistencies between what was reported in ACOMS and in written documents resulted in the study using paper files as the primary data source for most information. This evaluation did not include alcohol violations, missed appointments, or incarceration days because consistent data were missing for many or all of the participants during the three months prior to their induction into PACE, and for all of the controls. Lack of data and inconsistent reporting also made justification of selection into PACE difficult.

Data compiled about each participant and control group probationer included date of birth, ethnicity, gender, offense of conviction, and relevant probation conditions. To measure outcomes, data – when available – were entered about missed appointments, drug tests, alcohol tests, new charges, new arrests, and new probation violations, during the three months prior to entry into PACE or designation as a control, and during the first three months after entry into PACE.

4. Analysis and report

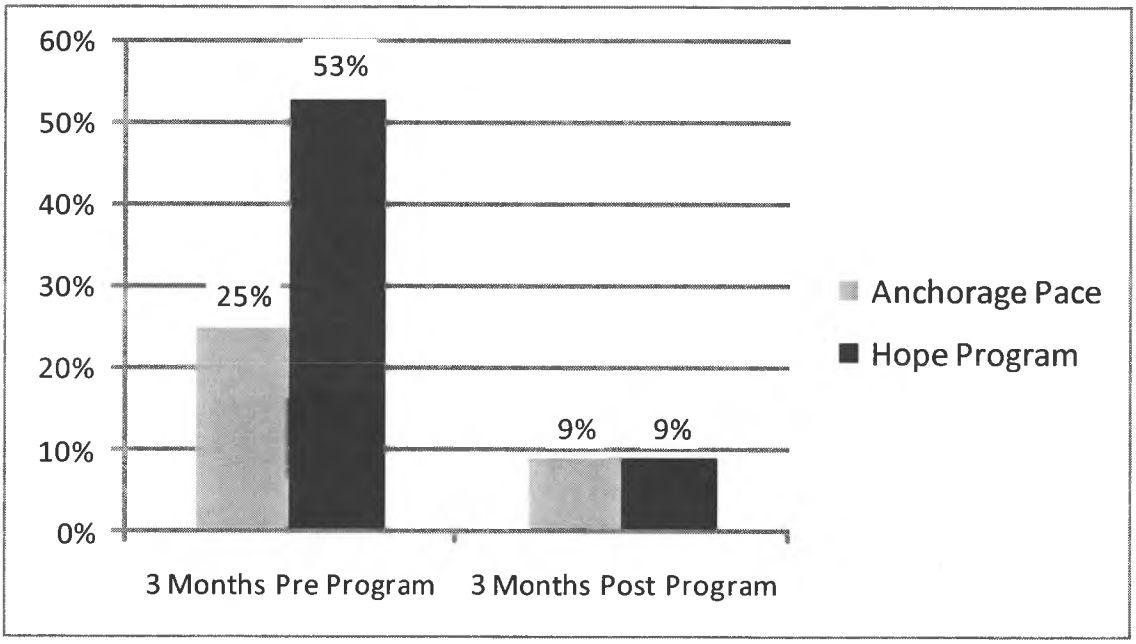
Data were analyzed by ISER, using SPSS programs. The analysis focused on the outcomes for the variables for the PACE participants during the first three months after entry into the program, as well as during the three months prior to their participation with PACE. The analysis also looked at how many violations were accumulated by each probationer. Because of the difficulties in accumulating any information about the control group, the data have been analyzed and reported without reference to controls.

Part 2: Findings

A. Drug use appeared to drop after beginning PACE

- Drug use by PACE participants, as measured by positive tests, appeared to decrease substantially during the three months following induction into PACE. PACE participants failed 25% of the 157 drug tests performed during the three months prior to starting the program. They failed 9% of the 587 tests conducted during the three months after the program.[16]

Figure 1
Anchorage PACE participants positive drug tests compared to HOPE[17] positive drug tests, first three months after starting the program



- The comparable data from the Hawaii HOPE program evaluation showed a similar pattern, with the percentage of the average number of positive drug tests dropping [16] Paired t-test, t=2.833, p=0.006.

[17] Figure 1 compares HOPE and PACE data about drug tests for three months pre-and post starting the respective programs. For purposes of this report on PACE, we have reproduced only the HOPE results for HOPE probationers during the three months prior to beginning HOPE and the three months after beginning HOPE. The original Figure 1 in the Hawken report, supra note 1, has information about the HOPE control group, and information about drug test (urinalysis) results for six months after starting HOPE.

The following note was associated with Hawken, Figure 1, and is replicated here for completeness. "Note: Data are from PROBER. For comparison probationers, data reflect urinalysis results for regularly scheduled UAs. For HOPE probationers UAs include regularly scheduled tests, and random testing. Pre (3m) refers to the average number of positives UAs in the three months before the study state date (baseline). Follow-up (3m) refers to the average number of positive UAs in the three-month period following baseline and Follow-up (6m) refers to the average number of positive UAs in the six-month period following baseline."

substantially after the program started (in HOPE, the drop was from 53% of the probationers with positive tests before to 9% with positive tests after).[18]

- There were insufficient data to evaluate missed drug test appointments for PACE participants. It is possible that probationers missed drug test appointments because they knew that they would have positive results. It is difficult to assess the overall finding of a reduced number of positive drug tests without also having the data about missed drug test appointments.

B. The majority of PACE participants had no drug test failures during the first three months

- Of the 59 probationers in PACE with drug use conditions, 64% (N=38) had no drug test failures at all during the three months after admission to PACE, compared to 20% of the same probationers during the three months prior to PACE with no drug test failures. Of the 36% (N=21) with failed drug tests, 62% (N=13) failed only once.

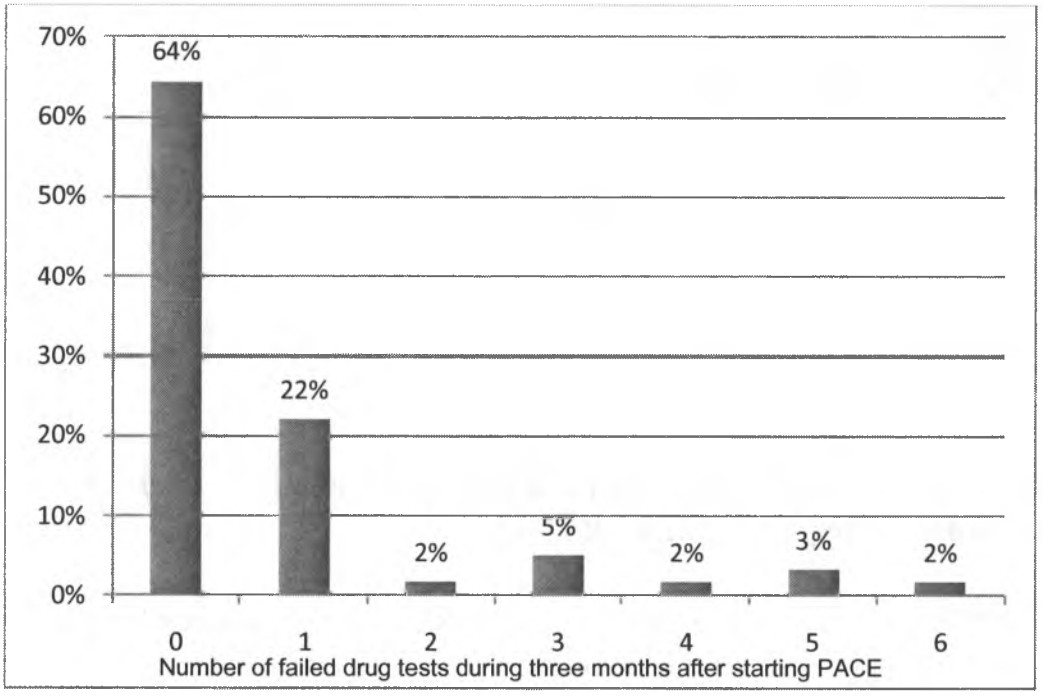
Number of failed drug tests for PACE participants with drug use conditions in three months after PACE



- The comparable data from the Hawaii HOPE program for a 12-month period (Figure 3) show a similar pattern, with the majority of HOPE participants having no failed drug tests, 20% having only one failed drug test, and small numbers having two or more failed drug tests. Although the pattern is similar, it is important to note that the data from PACE are for a three-month period while the HOPE data were recorded over a twelve-month period, four times as long.

HOPE:* Number of failed drug tests in 12 -months

- The lack of sufficient data to measure missed drug test appointments could also have affected this finding.

C. PACE participants had more recorded probation violations after starting the program, an expected result of PACE

- The 63 PACE participants had a total of 40 petitions to revoke probation filed against them during the three months prior to starting PACE, and a total of 67 petitions to revoke probation filed against them during the three months following their induction into PACE.

- A slight majority of the PACE participants did not have any petitions to revoke probation filed during the three months after they started PACE compared to a slight majority who had at least one petition before they started PACE. Otherwise the patterns to revoke probation during the pre- and post- periods were similar, with a few probationers who had several petitions. That a slight majority had no petitions filed after starting PACE suggests that the program was effective, although that cannot be firmly concluded without a more rigorous evaluation. The following figure shows the distribution of petitions to revoke probation during the three months after starting PACE.

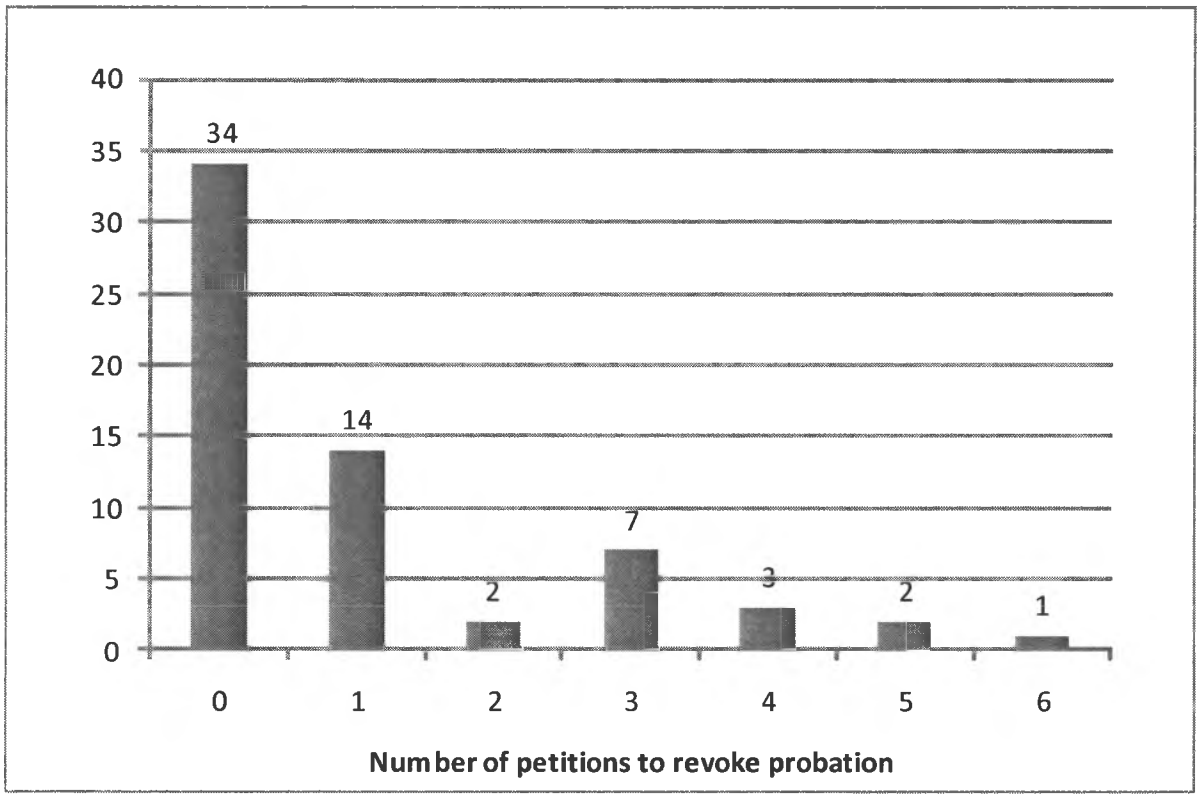
Petitions to revoke probation, during the three months after starting PACE



One of the most important features of PACE was the requirement that probationers be sanctioned for each violation of probation that was targeted in the PACE progam, in contrast to the usual procedure of filing a petition to revoke probation after several violations. The premise on which the program was built, therefore, led to an expectation of an increase in petitions to revoke probation.

D. Three PACE participants were arrested on new charges during the three months after starting the program

One person in the PACE evaluation group was arrested four times for new offenses during the three months following induction into PACE. Two PACE participants were arrested for new charges one time each. Other PACE participants were arrested on new charges after the three-month measurement period had elapsed. Data about arrests during the three-month period prior to entering PACE were not available to determine whether this finding showed improvement.

E. Not enough data were available to measure other outcomes

Several outcomes – missed appointments for drug tests, missed appointments with the probation officers, positive alcohol tests, and incarceration days – could not be measured because of insufficient data. The discussion above, in the Methodology section, outlines some of the reasons for this.

Part 3: Conclusions and Suggestions

PACE appeared to be successful at reducing positive drug tests. Data showed that the PACE group did significantly better during the three months after starting PACE than they did during the three months prior. Data about missed drug test appointments would help verify this finding.

Sixty-four percent of the PACE participants had no drug test failures at all, compared to 20% of the same probationers who had no failed drug tests during the three months prior to starting PACE. About 36% of PACE participants had one failure. About one-quarter of them had only one failure. Only 14% had two or more failures. This pattern tracks closely that found in the study conducted of HOPE participants in Hawaii. Again, including missed drug test appointments in the data would help to assess the importance of this finding.

Fifty-four percent of the PACE participants did not have any petitions to revoke probation filed against them during the test period. Twenty-two percent had only one petition to revoke probation filed against them during the three months after starting PACE. The patterns for the number of petitions filed per probationer were similar during the pre and post periods, with only a few probationers having three or more petitions filed in each period. Although the PACE probationers (as a group) had more petitions filed after beginning PACE than before, this was an expected outcome of the program.

The positive drug tests, new petitions to revoke probation filed, and new arrests were concentrated among a few PACE participants. This followed the HOPE model. In the evaluation of HOPE, the authors stated, "HOPE identified a small minority of probationers who did not desist from drug use under sanctions pressure alone. This 'behavioral triage' function – identifying those in need of treatment by documenting their actual conduct rather than relying on assessment tools – is an independent benefit of HOPE processing."[19] The control group, to the extent that data were collected, also appeared to also have a few offenders who were responsible for most of the violations. However, because those violators were not monitored as closely as the PACE offenders, their violations were not dealt with as quickly.

The data available were insufficient to track many of the other outcome measures that were planned for the pilot evaluation. The data available for the evaluation were not enough, particularly for the randomly assigned control group, to analyze prior criminal history, probation violations that did not result in a revocation, new arrests, and days of incarceration. One of the purposes of the project was to determine what data were available for evaluation. The present evaluation of the pilot project showed that data were inadequate, despite considerable efforts on the part of some of the Division of Probation staff to assist in compiling data. Miscommunications did occur and the data collection process should be carefully monitored in future projects.

Future evaluations of the Anchorage PACE project and similar projects in the state should provide for more rigorous evaluations. Central to the state's ability to adequately evaluate the effectiveness of PACE are:

- Assignment of both participants and controls to a few probation officers with the ability to meticulously record all information needed for the evaluation.

- Limitation of the outcome variables to clearly defined, unambiguous measures.

- Provision of electronic means to record data rather than relying primarily on paper files. This could be done by providing a module in the Department of Corrections ACOMS management information system for entering data for all probationers, with the needed fields for this type of evaluation included.

- An opportunity for a longer-term evaluation that can assess the outcomes for PACE participants during a follow-up period after they have completed probation.

- Inclusion of a unique offender identification number that is common to other state justice information systems so that more data are available for each offender.[20]

[20] State agencies have agreed to use the APSIN ID number as the common identifying number for all defendants, and a project is underway to implement the conceptual agreement.

HOUSE BILL 297

"An Act adopting and relating to the Uniform Real Property Transfer on Death Act."

Sponsor Statement

HB 297, the Uniform Real Property Transfer on Death Act (URPTODA), provides a simple, effective and affordable option for persons wishing to transfer real property upon their death. It will avoid the potentially lengthy and expensive process of probate. Currently, seventeen states have adopted the Act or other similar legislation allowing "Transfer on Death (TOD) deeds. Other non-probate transfers of personal property at death sometimes, known as "will substitutes" or TODs are now common practice.

Under HB 297, real property can pass at death by a transfer on death (TOD) deed. The deed is recorded before death with the district recorder. Upon death the deed automatically becomes effective. TOD deeds are not subject to the statute of wills. They do not operate and are revocable until the transferor's death. They are ineffective if the transferor disposes of the property during his or her lifetime. HB 297 allows the beneficiary to disclaim the transferred property. It does not affect the beneficiary's eligibility for public assistance or subject the property to the beneficiary's creditors. It allows a stepped up basis (favorable tax treatment) upon the transferor's death. HB 297 will provide a valuable option to Alaskans who may not need or cannot afford trusts, etc. and the probate process in passing property upon death. Yet it does not prohibit any other method of passing the property (e.g. gifts, wills, trusts, etc.); it simply provides another cheaper and efficient way of transferring real property upon death.

The bill was suggested by a retired constituent who believes it is an important alternative that should be permitted in Alaska. The legislation is necessary because currently joint tenancy with the right of survivorship in real property is statutorily prohibited, except for tenancy by the entirety allowing surviving spouses to take marital residences upon the other spouse's death. Thus this bill is necessary.

Why States Should Adopt URPTODA

The Uniform Real Property Transfer on Death Act (URPTODA) enables an owner of real property to pass the property simply and directly to a beneficiary on the owner's death without probate. The property passes by operation of law by means of a recorded transfer on death (TOD) deed.During the owner's lifetime, the beneficiary of a TOD deed has no interest in the property and the owner retains full power to transfer or encumber the property or to revoke the deed. On the owner's death, the property passes to the beneficiary, much like the survivorship feature of joint tenancy.

The TOD deed offers a number of advantages over joint tenancy. Because the TOD deed does not convey an immediate interest to the beneficiary, the property is not subject partition or to the beneficiary's creditors. The deed remains revocable, enabling the owner to make a different disposition of the property. It does not trigger an acceleration clause in a mortgage or a property tax reassessment during the transferor's life. Nor does it create adverse Medicaid consequences for either the owner or the beneficiary.

A decedent routinely passes personal property to a named beneficiary outside of probate. Common examples include a beneficiary designation in a life insurance policy or pension plan, registration of securities in TOD form, and a pay on death bank account. But a straightforward, inexpensive, and reliable means of passing real property (which may be the decedent's major asset) directly to a beneficiary is not generally available.

Thirteen states have previously enacted legislation authorizing a TOD deed: Missouri (1989), Kansas, Ohio, New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada, Colorado, Arkansas, Wisconsin, Montana, Oklahoma, Minnesota, and Indiana. The device is popular in those states and experience with it is favorable. The TOD deed has proved to be a useful addition to the tools available to an estate planner.

Introduced: 1/25/12
Referred: L&C, JUD

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act adopting and relating to the Uniform Real Property Transfer on Death Act."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 13 is amended by adding a new chapter to read:

Chapter 48. Uniform Real Property Transfer on Death Act.

Sec. 13.48.010. Transfer on death deed authorized. An individual may transfer property to one or more beneficiaries effective at the transferor's death by a transfer on death deed.

Sec. 13.48.020. Transfer on death deed revocable. A transfer on death deed is revocable even if the deed or another instrument contains a contrary provision.

Sec. 13.48.030. Transfer on death deed nontestamentary. A transfer on death deed is nontestamentary.

Sec. 13.48.040. Capacity of transferor. The capacity required to make or revoke a transfer on death deed is the same as the capacity required to make a will.

Sec. 13.48.050. Requirements. A transfer on death deed

(1) except as otherwise provided in (2) of this section, must contain the essential elements and formalities of a properly recordable inter vivos deed;

(2) must state that the transfer to the designated beneficiary is to occur at the transferor's death; and

(3) must be recorded before the transferor's death in the public records in the office of the recorder in the recording district where the property is located.

Sec. 13.48.060. Notice, delivery, acceptance, consideration not required. A transfer on death deed is effective without

(1) notice or delivery to, or acceptance by, the designated beneficiary during the transferor's life; or

(2) consideration.

Sec. 13.48.070. Revocation by instrument authorized; revocation by act not permitted. (a) Subject to (b) of this section, an instrument is effective to revoke a recorded transfer on death deed, or any part of it, only if the instrument

(1) is one of the following:

(A) a transfer on death deed that revokes the deed or part of the deed expressly or by inconsistency;

(B) an instrument of revocation that expressly revokes the deed or part of the deed; or

(C) an inter vivos deed that expressly revokes the transfer on death deed or part of the deed; and

(2) is acknowledged by the transferor after the acknowledgment of the deed being revoked and recorded before the transferor's death in the recording district where the deed is recorded.

(b) If a transfer on death deed is made by more than one transferor,

(1) revocation by a transferor does not affect the deed as to the interest of another transferor; and

(2) a deed of joint owners is revoked only if it is revoked by all of the living joint owners.

(c) After a transfer on death deed is recorded, it may not be revoked by a revocatory act on the deed.

(d) This section does not limit the effect of an inter vivos transfer of the property.

Sec. 13.48.080. Effect of transfer on death deed during transferor's life. During a transferor's life, a transfer on death deed does not

(1) affect an interest or right of the transferor or any other owner, including the right to transfer or encumber the property;

(2) affect an interest or right of a transferee, even if the transferee has actual or constructive notice of the deed;

(3) affect an interest or right of a secured or unsecured creditor or future creditor of the transferor, even if the creditor has actual or constructive notice of the deed;

(4) affect the transferor's or designated beneficiary's eligibility for any form of public assistance;

(5) create a legal or equitable interest in favor of the designated beneficiary; or

(6) subject the property to claims or process of a creditor of the designated beneficiary.

Sec. 13.48.090. Effect of transfer on death deed at transferor's death. (a) Except as otherwise provided in the transfer on death deed, in this section, or in AS 13.12.203, 13.12.702, 13.12.706, 13.12.707, 13.12.803, or 13.12.804, on the death of the transferor, the following rules apply to property that is the subject of a transfer on death deed and owned by the transferor at death:

(1) subject to (2) of this subsection, the interest in the property is transferred to the designated beneficiary under the deed;

(2) the interest of a designated beneficiary is contingent on the designated beneficiary surviving the transferor; the interest of a designated beneficiary that fails to survive the transferor lapses;

(3) subject to (4) of this subsection, concurrent interests are transferred to the beneficiaries in equal and undivided shares with no right of survivorship;

(4) if the transferor has identified two or more designated beneficiaries to receive concurrent interests in the property, the share of one that lapses or fails for any reason is transferred to the other or to the others in proportion to the interest of each in the remaining part of the property held concurrently.

(b) Subject to AS 40.17, a beneficiary takes the property subject to all conveyances, encumbrances, assignments, contracts, mortgages, liens, and other interests to which the property is subject at the transferor's death. For purposes of this subsection and AS 40.17, the recording of the transfer on death deed is considered to have occurred at the transferor's death.

(c) If a transferor is a joint owner and is

(1) survived by one or more other joint owners, the property that is the subject of a transfer on death deed belongs to the surviving joint owner or owners with right of survivorship; or

(2) the last surviving joint owner, the transfer on death deed is effective.

(d) A transfer on death deed transfers property without covenant or warranty of title even if the deed contains a contrary provision.

Sec. 13.48.100. Disclaimer. A beneficiary may disclaim all or part of the beneficiary's interest as provided by AS 13.70 (Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act).

Sec. 13.48.110. Liability for creditor claims and statutory allowances. (a) To the extent the transferor's probate estate is insufficient to satisfy an allowed claim against the estate or a statutory allowance to a surviving spouse or child, the estate may enforce the liability against property transferred at the transferor's death by a transfer on death deed.

(b) If more than one property is transferred by one or more transfer on death deeds, the liability under (a) of this section is apportioned among the properties in proportion to their net values at the transferor's death.

(c) A proceeding to enforce the liability under this section must be commenced not later than 18 months after the transferor's death.

Sec. 13.48.120. Optional form of transfer on death deed. The following form may be used to create a transfer on death deed. The provisions of this chapter govern the effect of this or any other instrument used to create a transfer on death deed.

COMMON QUESTIONS ABOUT THE USE OF THIS FORM

What does the Transfer on Death (TOD) deed do? When you die, this deed transfers the described property, subject to any liens or mortgages (or other encumbrances) on the property at your death. Probate is not required. The TOD deed has no effect until you die. You can revoke it at any time. You are also free to transfer the property to someone else during your lifetime. If you do not own any interest in the property when you die, this deed will have no effect.

How do I make a TOD deed? Complete this form. Have it acknowledged before a notary public or other individual authorized by law to take acknowledgments. Record the form in each recording district where any part of the property is located. The form has no effect unless it is acknowledged and recorded before your death.

Is the "legal description" of the property necessary? Yes.

How do I find the "legal description" of the property? This information may be on the deed you received when you became an owner of the property. This information may also be available in the office of the recorder in the recording district where the property is located. If you are not absolutely sure, consult a lawyer.

Can I change my mind before I record the TOD deed? Yes. If you have not yet recorded the deed and want to change your mind, simply tear up or otherwise destroy the deed.

How do I "record" the TOD deed? Take the completed and acknowledged form to the office of the recorder in the recording district where the property is located. Follow the instructions given by the recorder to make the form part of the official property records. If the property is in more than one recording district, you should record the deed in each recording district.

Can I later revoke the TOD deed if I change my mind? Yes. You can revoke the TOD deed. No one, including the beneficiaries, can prevent you from revoking the deed.

How do I revoke the TOD deed after it is recorded? There are three ways to revoke a recorded TOD deed: (1) Complete and acknowledge a revocation form, and record it in each recording district where the property is located. (2) Complete and acknowledge a new TOD deed that disposes of the same property, and record it in each recording district where the property is located. (3) Transfer the property to someone else during your lifetime by a recorded deed that expressly revokes the TOD deed. You may not revoke the TOD deed by will.

I am being pressured to complete this form. What should I do? Do not complete this form under pressure. Seek help from a trusted family member, friend, or lawyer.

Do I need to tell the beneficiaries about the TOD deed? No, but it is recommended. Secrecy can cause later complications and might make it easier for others to commit fraud.

I have other questions about this form. What should I do? This form is designed to fit some but not all situations. If you have other questions, you are encouraged to consult a lawyer.

Sec. 13.48.130. Optional form of revocation. The following form may be used to create an instrument of revocation under this chapter. The provisions of this chapter govern the effect of this or any other instrument used to revoke a transfer on death deed.

Sec. 13.48.140. Nonexclusivity. The provisions of this chapter do not affect any method of transferring property otherwise permitted under the law of this state.

Sec. 13.48.150. Uniformity of application and construction. In applying and construing this uniform act, consideration shall be given to the need to promote uniformity of the law with respect to its subject matter among the states that enact it.

Sec. 13.48.160. Relationship to Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act. The provisions of this chapter modify, limit, and supersede 15 U.S.C. 7001 - 7031 (Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act), but do not modify, limit, or supersede 15 U.S.C. 7001(c) or authorize electronic delivery of any of the notices described in 15 U.S.C. 7003(b).

Sec. 13.48.190. Definitions. In this chapter,

(1) "beneficiary" means a person who receives property under a transfer on death deed;

(2) "designated beneficiary" means a person designated to receive property in a transfer on death deed;

(3) "joint owner" means an individual who is a tenant by the entirety, who is an owner of community property with a right of survivorship, or who otherwise owns property concurrently with one or more other individuals with a right of survivorship, but does not include an individual who is a tenant in common or other owner of community property without a right of survivorship or who is a joint tenant, other than an individual who is a tenant by the entirety;

(4) "person" means an individual, corporation, business trust, estate, trust, partnership, limited liability company, association, joint venture, public corporation, government or governmental subdivision, agency, or instrumentality, or any other legal or commercial entity;

(5) "property" means an interest in real property located in this state which is transferable on the death of the owner;

(6) "transfer on death deed" means a deed authorized under this chapter;

(7) "transferor" means an individual who makes a transfer on death deed.

Sec. 13.48.195. Short title. This chapter may be cited as the Uniform Real Property Transfer on Death Act.

 Sec. 2. AS 13.70.100(e) is amended to read:

(e) In the case of an interest created by a beneficiary designation that is disclaimed [MADE] before [THE TIME] the designation becomes irrevocable, the [A] disclaimer shall be delivered to the person making the beneficiary designation.

 Sec. 3. AS 13.70.100(f) is amended to read:

(f) In the case of an interest created by a beneficiary designation that is disclaimed [MADE] after [THE TIME] the designation becomes irrevocable, the [A] disclaimer of an interest in

(1) personal property shall be delivered to the person obligated to distribute the interest; and

(2) real property shall be recorded in the office of the recorder in the recording district where the real property that is the subject of the disclaimer is located.

 Sec. 4. AS 13.70.130 is amended to read:

Sec. 13.70.130. Recording of disclaimer. If an instrument transferring an interest in or power over property subject to a disclaimer is required or permitted by law to be filed, recorded, or registered, the disclaimer may be filed, recorded, or registered as required or permitted by law. Except as otherwise provided in AS 13.70.100(f)(2), failure [FAILURE] to file, record, or register the disclaimer does not affect its validity as between the disclaimant and persons to whom the property interest or power passes by reason of the disclaimer.

 Sec. 5. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

APPLICABILITY. This Act applies to a transfer on death deed made before, on, or after the effective date of this Act by a transferor dying on or after the effective date of this Act. In this section, "transfer on death deed" and "transferor" have the meanings given in AS 13.48.190, enacted by sec. 1 of this Act.

Re: HB 297: Uniform Real Property Transfer on Death Act

Dear Representatives Olson and Gatto:

On January 25, 2012, House Judiciary introduced HB 297, "An Act adopting and relating to the Uniform Real Property Transfer on Death Act." This bill has been referred to House Labor and Commerce and the House Judiciary Committee of which you are the respective chairpersons.

By way of background on January 12, 2010, a law professor who was one of the drafters of this Uniform Act was invited to speak before the Estate Planning and Probate section meeting of the Alaska Bar Association regarding this Act. In all my years as a section chair of the Estate Planning and Probate section of the Alaska Bar Association I have never seen a meeting so well attended, so deep were the concerns of attorneys who practice in this area. There were fully over a hundred attorneys in attendance. Not surprisingly some of the attorneys in attendance were real estate attorneys who represented title companies. It is my distinct memory that this bill was unfavorably received by most of the attendees because of the many issues surrounding the details of this bill. Some, but by no means all, the concerns that were raised included:

1. the payment of creditor claims, particularly because a decedent's real estate is typically the largest asset in the estate;

2. title problems for title insurance companies, who must pass on whether a title is insurable and thus marketable at the time of sale;

3. the defeat of a testator's intentions where the deed contravenes the testator's intentions as evidenced by the testator's will or trust, or the intestate succession laws if the decedent dies without a will;

4. limiting the options that might otherwise be available if the heirs need protection because of their own special needs or creditor issues.

Not surprisingly given the uproar this Uniform Act created back in 2010, this Act was not introduced as a bill at that time.

On Tuesday, February 14, 2012, before members of the Estate Planning and Probate Section, I mentioned the fact that this Act was recently introduced as a bill. There seemed to be a wide divergence of opinion regarding the bill's merits, with 1 or 2 members being in support of the bill but most of the members viewing it negatively and as potential breeding ground for ligation. Although the pros and cons were briefly discussed, I believe I can confidently say there was almost unanimous agreement that we as attorneys, whether initially for or against the Act, needed more time to study the Act, particularly because "the devil is in the details" as is the case with most of the Uniform Acts that come before the legislature.

It would be hoped that this bill would stay in your respective committees to give us time as attorneys to form a study group time to study this bill, and perhaps recommend improvements to the bill instead of being stuck with a bad law where remedial legislation would be necessary to fix problems that could have been averted.

If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to call me.

Kieran -

Thanks for your report. I do not know the identity of the Alaska Bar speaker in 2010. Deborah O'Reagan, exec director of the Assoc, no doubt would. I will try to call her tomorrow and get back with you.

As for the concerns, it is relevant that all the jurisdictions having adopted the Act appear to have had no problems. At least their Acts have not been repealed. Attorneys, title companies, creditors and grantees seem to have had no problem with the Act. Naturally, the Act rightly and economically will eliminate unnecessary attorney and probate fees in those cases where the grantor desires to utilize the benefits it presents. Alaska already allows joint tenancy ownership of personal property, including massive bank accounts, vehicles and other valuable assets.

Why does Alaska restrict joint ownership of real property, with right of survivorship, solely to married couples? It makes no sense! It might even be in violation of the Constitution.

Thanks again for keeping me informed. I'll be back in touch with you tomorrow.

As an aside, attorneys generally need not require the Legislature to compel the public to employ their services. When needed, they are sought voluntarily by the public. It does not surprise me that the Bar's Estate and Probate section would prefer that this Bill not be enacted. However, the same body sees no objection to creating trusts that they maintain are wholly beyond the reach of the decedent's creditors.

Best regards,

Stan Ditus.

Miles,

The ULAs and supplements have not been updated yet to reflect the five enactments in 2011. Manual redlines of each enactment are attached here.

By way of history of the issue and the act, ULC promulgated URPTODA in 2009, and it was available to states for the first time in 2010. Prior to the act's promulgation, thirteen states had pre-existing TOD deed laws – the oldest in Missouri was enacted in 1989. Since URPTODA's availability, it has been considered by Hawaii, Illinois, Nebraska, Nevada, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, and Utah. As discussed above, Hawaii, Illinois, Nevada, North Dakota, and Oregon have all adopted a version of the act and Nebraska appears poised to do so shortly. Of the five enactments so far, all of them have some local tailoring, and Illinois, Nevada, and Oregon are considered "substantially similar" to the uniform act, having some (in some cases significant) departure from form. Nevada was starting from pre-existing law, and trying to conform as much as possible to the uniform act without disrupting what they already do and know; Illinois and Oregon were slightly different cases, in that they started with our model prior to a Bar/Law Revision review and came out with a fair amount of local flavor over a year later. Upon passage, Nebraska would join this group. Oklahoma had a pre-existing statute, and we have no information about why conforming amendments were not completed. In South Dakota and Utah, the questions that were raised were essentially the same as those encountered in other states, and currently being raised in Alaska to some degree. Neither state has reintroduced the bill this session (many states are in short session or budget only session), but we will be working with our Commissioners in those states to see if any problems can be ironed out using lessons from states where it has been successfully enacted.

We look forward to our next discussion with you and Rep. Gruenberg this coming Friday, to discuss your questions and the general issues that we have seen raised around the country.

Thank you,

Kieran

ABOUT ULC

The Uniform Law Commission (ULC), also known as National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws (NCCUSL), now in its 118th year, provides states with non-partisan, well-conceived and well-drafted legislation that brings clarity and stability to critical areas of state statutory law.

ULC members must be lawyers, qualified to practice law. They are practicing lawyers, judges, legislators and legislative staff and law professors, who have been appointed by state governments as well as the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands to research, draft and promote enactment of uniform state laws in areas of state law where uniformity is desirable and practical.

- ULC strengthens the federal system by providing rules and procedures that are consistent from state to state but that also reflect the diverse experience of the states.
- ULC statutes are representative of state experience, because the organization is made up of representatives from each state, appointed by state government.
- ULC keeps state law up-to-date by addressing important and timely legal issues.
- ULC's efforts reduce the need for individuals and businesses to deal with different laws as they move and do business in different states.
- ULC's work facilitates economic development and provides a legal platform for foreign entities to deal with U.S. citizens and businesses.
- Uniform Law Commissioners donate thousands of hours of their time and legal and drafting expertise every year as a public service, and receive no salary or compensation for their work.
- ULC's deliberative and uniquely open drafting process draws on the expertise of commissioners, but also utilizes input from legal experts, and advisors and observers representing the views of other legal organizations or interests that will be subject to the proposed laws.
- ULC is a state-supported organization that represents true value for the states, providing services that most states could not otherwise afford or duplicate.

UNIFORM REAL PROPERTY TRANSFER ON DEATH ACT

Prefatory Note

One of the main innovations in the property law of the twentieth century has been the development of asset-specific will substitutes for the transfer of property at death. By these mechanisms, an owner may designate beneficiaries to receive the property at the owner's death without waiting for probate and without the beneficiary designation needing to comply with the witnessing requirements of wills. Examples of specific assets that today routinely pass outside of probate include the proceeds of life insurance policies and pension plans, securities registered in transfer on death (TOD) form, and funds held in pay on death (POD) bank accounts.

Today, nonprobate transfers are widely accepted. The trend has largely focused on assets that are personal property, such as the assets described in the preceding paragraph. However, long-standing uniform law speaks more broadly. Section 6-101 of the Uniform Probate Code (UPC) provides: "A provision for a nonprobate transfer on death in an insurance policy, contract of employment, bond, mortgage, promissory note, certificated or uncertificated security, account agreement, custodial agreement, deposit agreement, compensation plan, pension plan, individual retirement plan, employee benefit plan, trust, conveyance, deed of gift, marital property agreement, or other written instrument of a similar nature is nontestamentary" (emphasis supplied).

A small but growing number of jurisdictions have implemented the principle of UPC §6-101 by enacting statutes providing an asset-specific mechanism for the nonprobate transfer of land. This is done by permitting owners of interests in real property to execute and record a transfer on death (TOD) deed. By this deed, the owner identifies the beneficiary or beneficiaries who will succeed to the property at the owner's death. During the owner's lifetime, the beneficiaries have no interest in the property, and the owner retains full power to transfer or encumber the property or to revoke the TOD deed.

Thirteen states have enacted statutes authorizing TOD deeds. In the chronological order of the statutes' enactment, the states are: Missouri (1989), Kansas (1997), Ohio (2000), New Mexico (2001), Arizona (2002), Nevada (2003), Colorado (2004), Arkansas (2005), Wisconsin (2006), Montana (2007), Oklahoma (2008), Minnesota (2008), and Indiana (2009).

The time is ripe for a Uniform Act to facilitate this emerging form of nonprobate transfer and to bring uniformity and clarity to its use and operation.

UNIFORM REAL PROPERTY TRANSFER ON DEATH ACT

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE. This [act] may be cited as the Uniform Real Property Transfer on Death Act.

SECTION 2. DEFINITIONS. In this [act]:

(1) "Beneficiary" means a person that receives property under a transfer on death deed.

(2) "Designated beneficiary" means a person designated to receive property in a transfer on death deed.

(3) "Joint owner" means an individual who owns property concurrently with one or more other individuals with a right of survivorship. The term includes a joint tenant[,][and] [owner of community property with a right of survivorship[,][and tenant by the entirety]. The term does not include a tenant in common [or owner of community property without a right of survivorship].

(4) "Person" means an individual, corporation, business trust, estate, trust, partnership, limited liability company, association, joint venture, public corporation, government or governmental subdivision, agency, or instrumentality, or any other legal or commercial entity.

(5) "Property" means an interest in real property located in this state which is transferable on the death of the owner.

(6) "Transfer on death deed" means a deed authorized under this [act].

(7) "Transferor" means an individual who makes a transfer on death deed.

Comment

Paragraph (1) defines a beneficiary as a person that receives property under a transfer on death deed. This links the definition of a "beneficiary" to the definition of a "person." A beneficiary can be any person, including the trustee of a revocable trust.

Paragraph (2) defines a designated beneficiary as a person designated to receive property in a transfer on death deed. This links the definition of a "designated beneficiary" to the definition of a "person." A designated beneficiary can be any person, including a revocable trust.

The distinction between a "beneficiary" and a "designated beneficiary" is easily illustrated. Section 13 provides that, on the transferor's death, the property that is the subject of a transfer on death deed is transferred to the designated beneficiaries who survive the transferor. If X and Y are the designated beneficiaries but only Y survives the transferor, then Y is a beneficiary and X is not. A further illustration comes into play if Section 13 is made subject to the state's antilapse statute. If X fails to survive the transferor but has a descendant, Z, who survives the transferor, the antilapse statute may create a substitute gift in favor of Z. In such a case, the designated beneficiaries are X and Y, but the beneficiaries are Y and Z.

Paragraph (3) provides a definition of a "joint owner" as an individual who owns property with one or more other individuals with a right of survivorship. The term is used in Sections 11 and 13.

Paragraph (4) is the standard Uniform Law Commission definition of a "person."

The effect of paragraph (5) is that the act applies to all interests in real property located in this state that are transferable at the death of the owner.

Paragraph (6) provides that a "transfer on death deed" is a deed authorized under this act. In some states with existing transfer on death deed legislation, the legislation has instead used the term "beneficiary deed." The term "transfer on death deed" is preferred, to be consistent with the transfer on death registration of securities. See Article 6, Part 3, of the Uniform Probate Code, containing the Uniform TOD Security Registration Act.

Paragraph (7) limits the definition of a "transferor" to an individual. The term "transferor" does not include a corporation, business trust, estate, trust, partnership, limited liability company, association, joint venture, public corporation, government or governmental subdivision, agency, or instrumentality, or any legal or commercial entity other than an individual. The term also does not include an agent or other representative. If a transfer on death deed is made by an agent on behalf of a principal or by a conservator, guardian, or judge on behalf of a ward, the principal or ward is the transferor. By way of analogy, see Uniform Trust Code §103(15) (defining "settlor") and the accompanying Comment (excluding an individual "acting as the agent for the person who will be funding the trust"). The power of an agent to make or revoke a transfer on death deed on behalf of a principal is determined by other law, such as the Uniform Power of Attorney Act, as indicated in the Comments to Sections 9 and 11.

SECTION 3. APPLICABILITY. This [act] applies to a transfer on death deed made before, on, or after [the effective date of this [act]] by a transferor dying on or after [the effective date of this [act]].

Comment

This section provides that the act applies to a transfer on death deed made before, on, or after the effective date of the act by a transferor dying on or after the effective date of the act. This section is consistent with the Uniform Probate Code's provisions governing transfer on death registration of securities. Those provisions "appl[y] to registrations of securities in beneficiary form made before or after [effective date], by decedents dying on or after [effective date]." Uniform Probate Code §6-311.

SECTION 4. NONEXCLUSIVITY. This [act] does not affect any method of transferring property otherwise permitted under the law of this state.

Comment

This section provides that the act is nonexclusive. The act does not affect any method of transferring property otherwise permitted under state law.

One such method is a present transfer with a retained legal life estate. Consider the following examples:

Example 1. A conveys Blackacre to B while reserving A's right to remain in possession until A's death. By this conveyance, A has made a present transfer of a future interest to B. The transfer is irrevocable. The future interest will ripen into possession at A's death, even if B fails to survive A.

Example 2. A executes, acknowledges, and records a transfer on death deed for Blackacre, naming B as the designated beneficiary. During A's lifetime, no interest passes to B, and A may revoke the deed. If unrevoked, the deed will transfer possession to B at A's death only if B survives A.

As illustrated in these examples, the two methods of transfer have different effects and are governed by different rules.

SECTION 5. TRANSFER ON DEATH DEED AUTHORIZED. An individual may transfer property to one or more beneficiaries effective at the transferor's death by a transfer on death deed.

Comment

This section authorizes a transfer on death deed and makes it clear that the transfer is not an inter vivos transfer. The transfer occurs at the transferor's death.

The transferor is an individual, but the singular includes the plural. Multiple individuals can readily act together to transfer property by a transfer on death deed, as in the common case of a husband and wife who own the property as joint tenants or as tenants by the entirety. On the effect of a transfer on death deed made by joint owners, see Section 13(c) and the accompanying Comment.

The transferor may select any form of ownership, concurrent or successive, absolute or conditional, contingent or vested, valid under state law. Among many other things, this permits the transferor to reserve interests for his estate (e.g., mineral interests); to specify the nature and extent of the beneficiary's interest; and to designate one or more primary beneficiaries and one or more alternate beneficiaries to take in the event the primary beneficiaries fail to survive the transferor. This freedom to specify the form and terms of the transferee's interest comports with the fundamental principle of American law recognized by the Restatement (Third) of Property (Wills and Other Donative Transfers) §10.1 that the donor's intention should be "given effect to the maximum extent allowed by law." As the Restatement explains in Comment c to §10.1, "American law curtails freedom of disposition only to the extent that the donor attempts to make a disposition or achieve a purpose that is prohibited or restricted by an overriding rule of law."

Notwithstanding this freedom of disposition, transferors are encouraged as a practical matter to avoid formulating dispositions that would complicate title. Dispositions containing conditions or class gifts, for example, may require a court proceeding to sort out the beneficiaries' interests. Other estate planning mechanisms, such as trusts, may be more appropriate in such cases.

SECTION 6. TRANSFER ON DEATH DEED REVOCABLE. A transfer on death deed is revocable even if the deed or another instrument contains a contrary provision.

Comment

A fundamental feature of a transfer on death deed under this Act is that the transferor retains the power to revoke the deed. Section 6 is framed as a mandatory rule, for two reasons. First, the rule prevents an off-record instrument from affecting the revocability of a transfer on death deed. Second, the rule protects the transferor who may wish later to revoke the deed.

If the transferor promises to make the deed irrevocable or not to revoke the deed, the promisee may have a remedy under other law if the promise is broken. The deed remains revocable despite the promise.

SECTION 7. TRANSFER ON DEATH DEED NONTESTAMENTARY. A transfer on death deed is nontestamentary.

Comment

This section is consistent with Uniform Probate Code §6-101(a), which provides: "A provision for a nonprobate transfer on death in an insurance policy, contract of employment, bond, mortgage, promissory note, certificated or uncertificated security, account agreement, custodial agreement, deposit agreement, compensation plan, pension plan, individual retirement plan, employee benefit plan, trust, conveyance, deed of gift, marital property agreement, or other written instrument of a similar nature is nontestamentary."

As the Comment to Uniform Probate Code §6-101 explains, because the mode of transfer is declared to be nontestamentary, the instrument of transfer is not a will and does not have to be executed in compliance with the formalities for wills, nor does the instrument need to be probated.

Whether a document that is ineffective as a transfer on death deed (e.g., because it has not been recorded before the transferor's death) should be given effect as a testamentary instrument will depend on the applicable facts and on the wills law of the jurisdiction. Section 2-503 of the Uniform Probate Code provides in pertinent part: "Although a document ... was not executed in compliance with Section 2-502, the document ... is treated as if it had been executed in compliance with that section if the proponent of the document ... establishes by clear and convincing evidence that the decedent intended the document ... to constitute ... (iii) an addition to or alteration of the [decedent's] will ...."

SECTION 8. CAPACITY OF TRANSFEROR. The capacity required to make or revoke a transfer on death deed is the same as the capacity required to make a will.

Comment

This section provides that the capacity required to make or revoke a transfer on death deed, which is a revocable will substitute, is the same as the capacity required to make a will. It is appropriate that a will and a transfer on death deed require the same level of capacity, for both mechanisms are revocable and ambulatory, the latter term meaning that they do not operate before the grantor's death. This approach is consistent with the Restatement (Third) of Property (Wills and Other Donative Transfers) §8.1(b), which applies the standard of testamentary capacity, and not the standard of capacity for inter vivos gifts, to revocable will substitutes: "If the donative transfer is in the form of a will, a revocable will substitute, or a revocable gift, the testator or donor must be capable of knowing and understanding in a general way the nature and extent of his or her property, the natural objects of his or her bounty, and the disposition that he or she is making of that property, and must also be capable of relating these elements to one another and forming an orderly desire regarding the disposition of the property." This section is also consistent with Uniform Trust Code §601: "The capacity required to create, amend, revoke, or add property to a revocable trust, or to direct the actions of the trustee of a revocable trust, is the same as that required to make a will."

A transfer on death deed is not affected if the transferor subsequently loses capacity. On the ability of an agent under a power of attorney to make or revoke a transfer on death deed, see the Comments to Sections 9 and 11.

SECTION 9. REQUIREMENTS. A transfer on death deed:

(1) except as otherwise provided in paragraph (2), must contain the essential elements and formalities of a properly recordable inter vivos deed;

(2) must state that the transfer to the designated beneficiary is to occur at the transferor's death; and

(3) must be recorded before the transferor's death in the public records in [the office of the county recorder of deeds] of the [county] where the property is located.

Legislative Note: Because a transfer on death deed does not have present effect and is revocable, it may be useful to title searchers and insurers if the recording or indexing of the deed identifies it as a transfer on death deed. Information about how a recorder of deeds should record and index a transfer on death deed is available from the recorders of deeds in states having experience with such deeds. By way of example, the recorder of deeds of Clay County, Missouri, uses a grantor-grantee index that is fully searchable online, at http://recorder.claycogov.com/pages/online_access.asp.

Comment

Paragraph (1) requires a transfer on death deed to contain the same essential elements and formalities, other than a present intention to convey, as are required for a properly recordable inter vivos deed under state law. "Essential elements" is a term with a long usage in the law of deeds of real property. The essential elements of a deed vary from one state to another but commonly include the names of the grantor and grantee, a clause transferring title, a description of the property transferred, and the grantor's signature. In all states, the essential elements of a properly recordable deed include the requirement that the deed be acknowledged by the grantor before a notary public or other individual authorized by law to take acknowledgments. See Thompson on Real Property §92.04(c) (observing that a "certificate of acknowledgment or attestation is universally required to qualify an instrument for recordation"). In the context of transfer on death deeds, the requirement of acknowledgment fulfills at least four functions. First, it cautions a transferor that he or she is performing an act with legal consequences. Such caution is important where, as here, the transferor does not experience the wrench of delivery because the transfer occurs at death. Second, acknowledgment helps to prevent fraud. Third, acknowledgment facilitates the recording of the deed. Fourth, acknowledgment enables the rule in Section 11 that a later acknowledged deed prevails over an earlier acknowledged deed.

Paragraph (2) emphasizes an important distinction between an inter vivos transfer and a transfer on death. An inter vivos transfer reflects an intention to transfer, at the time of the conveyance, an interest in property, either a present interest or a future interest. In contrast, a transfer on death reflects an intention that the transfer occur at the transferor's death. Under no circumstances should a transfer on death be given effect inter vivos; to do so would violate the transferor's intention that the transfer occur at the transferor's death.

Paragraph (3) requires a transfer on death deed to be recorded before the transferor's death in the county (or other appropriate administrative division of a state, such as a parish) where the land is located. If the property described in the deed is in more than one county, the deed is effective only with respect to the property in the county or counties where the deed is recorded. The requirement of recordation before death helps to prevent fraud by ensuring that all steps necessary to the effective transfer on death deed are completed during the transferor's lifetime. The requirement of recordation before death also enables all parties to rely on the recording system. For these reasons, all thirteen states that have already enacted transfer on death deed statutes require the deed to be recorded before the transferor's death.

An individual's agent may execute a transfer on death deed on the individual's behalf to the extent permitted by other law, such as the Uniform Power of Attorney Act. This act does not define, but instead relies on other law to determine, the authority of an agent.

SECTION 10. NOTICE, DELIVERY, ACCEPTANCE, CONSIDERATION NOT REQUIRED. A transfer on death deed is effective without:

(1) notice or delivery to or acceptance by the designated beneficiary during the transferor's life; or

(2) consideration.

Comment

This section makes it clear that a transfer on death deed is effective without notice or delivery to or acceptance by the beneficiary during the transferor's lifetime (paragraph (1)) and without consideration (paragraph (2)).

Paragraph (1) is consistent with the fundamental distinction under this Act between a transfer on death deed and an inter vivos deed. Under the former, but not under the latter, the transfer occurs at the transferor's death. Therefore, there is no requirement of notice, delivery, or acceptance during the transferor's life. This does not mean that the beneficiary is required to accept the property. The beneficiary may disclaim the property, as explained in Section 14 and the accompanying Comment.

Paragraph (2) is consistent with the law of donative transfers. A deed need not be supported by consideration.

SECTION 11. REVOCATION BY INSTRUMENT AUTHORIZED; REVOCATION BY ACT NOT PERMITTED.

(a) Subject to subsection (b), an instrument is effective to revoke a recorded transfer on death deed, or any part of it, only if the instrument:

(1) is one of the following:

(A) a transfer on death deed that revokes the deed or part of the deed expressly or by inconsistency;

(B) an instrument of revocation that expressly revokes the deed or part of the deed; or

(C) an inter vivos deed that expressly revokes the transfer on death deed or part of the deed; and

(2) is acknowledged by the transferor after the acknowledgment of the deed being revoked and recorded before the transferor's death in the public records in [the office of the county recorder of deeds] of the [county] where the deed is recorded.

(b) If a transfer on death deed is made by more than one transferor:

(1) revocation by a transferor does not affect the deed as to the interest of another transferor; and

(2) a deed of joint owners is revoked only if it is revoked by all of the living joint owners.

(c) After a transfer on death deed is recorded, it may not be revoked by a revocatory act on the deed.

(d) This section does not limit the effect of an inter vivos transfer of the property.

Comment

This section concerns revocation by instrument and revocation by act. On revocation by change of circumstances, such as by divorce or homicide, see Section 13 and the accompanying Comment.

Subsection (a) provides the exclusive methods of revoking, in whole or in part, a recorded transfer on death deed by a subsequent instrument. Revocation by an instrument not specified, such as the transferor's will, is not permitted.

The rule that a transfer on death deed may not be revoked by the transferor's subsequent will is a departure from the Restatement (Third) of Property (Wills and Other Donative Transfers) §7.2 comment e (see also the corresponding Reporter's Note), which encourages the revocability of will substitutes by will. However, there is a sound reason for the departure in the specific case of a transfer on death deed. A transfer on death deed operates on real property, for which certainty of title is essential. This certainty would be difficult, and in many cases impossible, to achieve if an off-record instrument, such as the grantor's will, could revoke a recorded transfer on death deed. The rule in this Act against revocation by will is also consistent with the uniform acts governing multiple-party bank accounts. See Uniform Probate Code §6-213(b) ("A right of survivorship arising from the express terms of the account, Section 6-212, or a POD designation, may not be altered by will.")

A recorded transfer on death deed may be revoked by instrument only by (1) a subsequently acknowledged transfer on death deed, (2) a subsequently acknowledged instrument of revocation, such as the form in Section 17, or (3) a subsequently acknowledged inter vivos deed containing an express revocation clause. Consider the following examples:

Example 1. T executes, acknowledges, and records a transfer on death deed for Blackacre. Later, T executes, acknowledges, and records a second transfer on death deed for Blackacre, containing an express revocation clause revoking "all my prior transfer on death deeds concerning this property." The second deed revokes the first deed. The revocation occurs when the second deed is recorded. (For the result if the second deed had not contained the express revocation clause, see Example 5.)

Example 2. T executes, acknowledges, and records two transfer on death deeds for Blackacre. Both deeds expressly revoke "all my prior transfer on death deeds concerning this property." The dates of acknowledgment determine which deed revoked the other. The first deed is acknowledged November 1; the second deed is acknowledged December 15. The second deed is the later acknowledged, so it revokes the first deed. The revocation occurs when the second deed is recorded.

Example 3. T executes and acknowledges a transfer on death deed for Blackacre. T later executes and acknowledges a revocation form. Both instruments are recorded. Because the revocation form is acknowledged later than the deed, the form revokes the deed. The revocation occurs when the form is recorded.

Example 4. T executes and acknowledges a transfer on death deed for Blackacre. T later executes and acknowledges an inter vivos deed conveying Blackacre and expressly revoking the transfer on death deed. Both instruments are recorded. Because the inter vivos deed contains an express revocation provision and is acknowledged later than the transfer on death deed, the inter vivos deed revokes the transfer on death deed. The revocation occurs when the inter vivos deed is recorded. (For the result if the inter vivos deed had not contained an express revocation clause, see the discussion below on "ademption by extinction.")

The same rules apply whether the revocation is total or partial. In the previous examples, suppose instead that the intial transfer on death deed provides for the transfer of two parcels, Blackacre and Whiteacre, and that the subsequent instrument revokes the transfer on death deed as to Blackacre. The subsequent instrument revokes the transfer on death deed in part.

If the property described in the original deed is in more than one county, the revocation is effective only with respect to the property in the county or counties where the revoking deed or instrument is recorded.

Subsection (a)(1)(A) speaks of revocation "expressly or by inconsistency." This provision references the well-established law of revocation by inconsistency of wills. Consider the following examples:

Example 5. T executes, acknowledges, and records a transfer on death deed for Blackacre naming X as the designated beneficiary. Later, T executes, acknowledges, and records a transfer on death deed for the same property, Blackacre, containing no express revocation of the earlier deed but naming Y as the designated beneficiary. Later, T dies. The recording of the deed in favor of Y revokes the deed in favor of X by inconsistency. At T's death, Y is the owner of Blackacre.

Example 6. T, the owner of Blackacre in fee simple absolute, executes, acknowledges, and records a transfer on death deed for Blackacre naming X as the designated beneficiary. Later, T executes, acknowledges, and records a transfer on death deed containing no express revocation of the earlier deed but naming Y as the designated beneficiary of a life estate (or a mineral interest) in Blackacre. Later, T dies. The recording of the deed in favor of Y partially revokes the deed in favor of X by inconsistency. At T's death, Y is the owner of a life estate (or a mineral interest) in Blackacre, and X is the owner of the remainder.

The question is sometimes raised whether a recorded inter vivos deed without an express revocation clause operates as a revocation of an earlier transfer on death deed. The answer highlights the important distinction between "revocation" and "ademption by extinction." See Atkinson on Wills §134. Revocation means that the instrument is rendered void. Ademption by extinction means that the transfer of the property cannot occur because the property is not owned by the transferor at death. The doctrines are different.

In some instances, revocation and ademption have the same practical effect: the designated beneficiary of the property receives nothing. Nothing in this section changes that fact, as indicated in subsection (d). However, there are other instances where the doctrines have differing effects. Consider the following illustration, drawn from the law of wills.

Example 7. T executes a will devising Blackacre to A. Later, T becomes legally incompetent, and G is appointed as T's conservator. G, acting within the scope of his authority, sells Blackacre to B for $100,000. Later, T dies.

The law of wills provides that the devise to A is adeemed rather than revoked. This means that A is not entitled to Blackacre but is entitled to a pecuniary devise in the amount of $100,000. See Atkinson on Wills §134; Wasserman v. Cohen, 606 N.E.2d 901, 903 (Mass. 1993); Uniform Probate Code §2-606(b). The result is designed to effectuate T's presumed intention.

The Joint Editorial Board for Uniform Trust and Estate Acts has begun a conversation on whether the Uniform Probate Code's provisions on ademption should be extended to nonprobate transfers, thus harmonizing the treatment of wills and will substitutes on this aspect of the law. This act accepts the well recognized distinction between revocation and ademption in order to leave the door open for such future harmonization, which would effectuate the presumed intention of nonprobate grantors.

Subsection (b) supplies rules governing revocation by instrument in the event of a transfer on death deed made by multiple owners. Subsection (b)(1) provides that revocation by a transferor does not affect a transfer on death deed as to the interest of another transferor. Subsection (b)(2) provides that a transfer on death deed of joint owners is revoked only if it is revoked by all of the living joint owners. This rule is consistent with Uniform Probate Code §6-306, which provides in pertinent part: "A registration of a security in beneficiary form may be canceled or changed at any time by the sole owner or all then surviving owners without the consent of the beneficiary." Subsection (b)(2) applies only to a deed of joint owners. A joint tenant who severs the joint tenancy, thereby destroying the right of survivorship, is no longer a joint owner.

Subsection (c) provides that a recorded transfer on death deed may not be revoked by a revocatory act performed on the deed. Such an act includes burning, tearing, canceling, obliterating, or destroying the deed or any part of it.

This statute does not define, but instead looks to other law to determine, the authority of an agent. An individual's agent may revoke a transfer on death deed on the individual's behalf to the extent permitted by other law, such as the Uniform Power of Attorney Act.

SECTION 12. EFFECT OF TRANSFER ON DEATH DEED DURING TRANSFEROR'S LIFE. During a transferor's life, a transfer on death deed does not:

(1) affect an interest or right of the transferor or any other owner, including the right to transfer or encumber the property;

(2) affect an interest or right of a transferee, even if the transferee has actual or constructive notice of the deed;

(3) affect an interest or right of a secured or unsecured creditor or future creditor of the transferor, even if the creditor has actual or constructive notice of the deed;

(4) affect the transferor's or designated beneficiary's eligibility for any form of public assistance;

(5) create a legal or equitable interest in favor of the designated beneficiary; or

(6) subject the property to claims or process of a creditor of the designated beneficiary.

Comment

A fundamental feature of a transfer on death deed under this Act is that it does not operate until the transferor's death. The transfer occurs at the transferor's death, not before.

Paragraph (1): A transfer on death deed, during the transferor's lifetime, does not affect the interests or property rights of the transferor or any other owners. Therefore, the deed does not, among many other things: affect the transferor's right to transfer or encumber the property inter vivos; sever a joint tenancy or a joint tenant's right of survivorship; trigger a due-on-sale clause in the transferor's mortgage; trigger the imposition of real estate transfer tax; or affect the transferor's homestead or real estate tax exemptions, if any.

Paragraph (2): A transfer on death deed does not affect transferees, whether or not they have notice of the deed. Like a will, the transfer on death deed is ambulatory. It has no effect on inter vivos transfers.

Paragraph (3): A transfer on death deed, during the transferor's lifetime, does not affect pre-existing or future creditors, secured or unsecured, whether or not they have an interest in the property or notice of the deed.

Paragraph (4): A transfer on death deed, during the transferor's lifetime, does not affect the transferor's or designated beneficiary's eligibility for any form of public assistance, including Medicaid. On this point, the drafting committee specifically disapproves of the contrary approach of Colo. Rev. Stat. §15-15-403.

Paragraph (5): During the transferor's lifetime, a transfer on death deed does not create a legal or equitable interest in the designated beneficiary. The beneficiary does not have an interest that can be assigned or encumbered. Note, however, that this rule would not preclude the doctrine of after-acquired title. A warranty deed from a designated beneficiary to a third party would operate to pass the beneficiary's title to the third party after the transferor's death.

Paragraph (6): A transfer on death deed, during the transferor's lifetime, does not make the property subject to claims or process of the designated beneficiary's creditors. The deed has no more effect than a will.

If a transferor combines an inter vivos transfer of an interest in property (such as a mineral interest) with a transfer on death of the remainder interest, the inter vivos transfer may have present effect even though the transfer on death does not occur until the transferor's death.

SECTION 13. EFFECT OF TRANSFER ON DEATH DEED AT TRANSFEROR'S DEATH.

(a) Except as otherwise provided in the transfer on death deed[,][or] in this section[,][or in [cite state statutes on antilapse, revocation by divorce or homicide, survival and simultaneous death, and elective share, if applicable to nonprobate transfers]], on the death of the transferor, the following rules apply to property that is the subject of a transfer on death deed and owned by the transferor at death:

(1) Subject to paragraph (2), the interest in the property is transferred to the designated beneficiary in accordance with the deed.

(2) The interest of a designated beneficiary is contingent on the designated beneficiary surviving the transferor. The interest of a designated beneficiary that fails to survive the transferor lapses.

(3) Subject to paragraph (4), concurrent interests are transferred to the beneficiaries in equal and undivided shares with no right of survivorship.

(4) If the transferor has identified two or more designated beneficiaries to receive concurrent interests in the property, the share of one which lapses or fails for any reason is transferred to the other, or to the others in proportion to the interest of each in the remaining part of the property held concurrently.

(b) Subject to [cite state recording act], a beneficiary takes the property subject to all conveyances, encumbrances, assignments, contracts, mortgages, liens, and other interests to which the property is subject at the transferor's death. For purposes of this subsection and [cite state recording act], the recording of the transfer on death deed is deemed to have occurred at the transferor's death.

(c) If a transferor is a joint owner and is:

(1) survived by one or more other joint owners, the property that is the subject of a transfer on death deed belongs to the surviving joint owner or owners with right of survivorship; or

(2) the last surviving joint owner, the transfer on death deed is effective.

(d) A transfer on death deed transfers property without covenant or warranty of title even if the deed contains a contrary provision.

Legislative Note: In light of the growing harmonization of the rules governing probate and nonprobate transfers, states enacting this act should consider extending to nonprobate mechanisms, such as transfer on death deeds, the probate rules governing antilapse, revocation by divorce, revocation by homicide, survival and simultaneous death, and the elective share of a surviving spouse.

One of the significant trends in the law of property in the twentieth century has been the growing harmonization of the constructional and substantive rules governing deathtime transfers, whether the transfers occur in or outside of the probate process. Section 7.2 of the Restatement (Third) of Property (Wills and Other Donative Transfers) provides: "Although a will substitute need not be executed in compliance with the statutory formalities required for a will, such an arrangement is, to the extent appropriate, subject to substantive restrictions on testation and to rules of construction and other rules applicable to testamentary dispositions."

The Uniform Probate Code contains statutory provisions treating wills and will substitutes alike for many purposes, including (1) antilapse; (2) revocation by divorce; (3) revocation by homicide (the "slayer rule"); (4) survival and simultaneous death; and (5) the elective share of a surviving spouse.

In some cases, the harmonization is achieved by applying the relevant rule to any "governing instrument," which is defined in Uniform Probate Code §1-201(18) as "a deed, will, trust, insurance or annuity policy, account with POD designation, security registered in beneficiary form (TOD), pension, profitsharing, retirement, or similar benefit plan, instrument creating or exercising a power of appointment or a power of attorney, or a dispositive, appointive, or nominative instrument of any similar type." The Uniform Probate Code's rules on revocation by divorce, revocation by homicide, and survival and simultaneous death apply to any governing instrument. See Uniform Probate Code §§2-702 (survival and simultaneous death), 2-803 (revocation by homicide), 2-804 (revocation by divorce).

For the elective share, the Uniform Probate Code treats wills and will substitutes alike by defining the decedent's "augmented estate" to include both probate and nonprobate transfers. See Uniform Probate Code §2-203(a).

For antilapse, the Uniform Probate Code has separate sections treating wills (§2-603) and will substitutes (§§2-706, 2-707), but the latter are modeled on the former.

Comment

Subsection (a) states four default rules, except as otherwise provided by the transfer on death deed, by this section, or by other provisions of state law governing nonprobate transfers. On this last, and the desirability of extending the probate rules governing antilapse, revocation on divorce or homicide, survival and simultaneous death, and the elective share of the surviving spouse to nonprobate instruments such as transfer on death deeds, see the Legislative Note.

The four default rules established by subsection (a) are these. First, the property that is the subject of an effective transfer on death deed and owned by the transferor at death is transferred at the transferor's death to the designated beneficiaries as provided in the deed. The rule implements the transferor's intention as described in the deed. Consider the following example:

Example 1. A executes, acknowledges, and records a transfer on death deed for Blackacre naming X as the primary beneficiary and Y as the alternate beneficiary if X fails to survive A. Both X and Y survive A. Blackacre is transferred to X at A's death in accordance with the provisions of the deed.

This default rule implements the fundamental principle that the provisions of the deed control the disposition of the property, unless otherwise provided by state law.

The drafting committee approves of the result in In re Estate of Roloff, 143 P.3d 406 (Kan. Ct. App. 2006) (holding that crops should be transferred with the land under a transfer on death deed because this result would be reached on the same facts with any other deed).

The bracketed language at the beginning of subsection (a) enables a state to make the default rules subject to other statutes, such as an antilapse statute or a statute providing for revocation on divorce. Consider the following examples:

Example 2. A executes, acknowledges, and records a transfer on death deed for Blackacre naming X as the primary beneficiary and Y as the alternate beneficiary if X fails to survive A. In fact, X and Y fail to survive A, who is survived only by X's child, Z. Assume that the state's antilapse statute applies to transfer on death deeds and creates a substitute gift in Z. (For such a statute, see Uniform Probate Code §2-706.) Blackacre is transferred to Z at A's death in accordance with the provisions of the deed as modified by the antilapse statute.

Example 3. A executes, acknowledges, and records a transfer on death deed for Blackacre naming her spouse, X, as the primary beneficiary and Y as the alternate beneficiary if X fails to survive A. Later, A and X divorce. Assume that the state's statute on revocation by divorce applies to transfer on death deeds and revokes the designation in favor of X, with the effect that the provisions of the transfer on death deed are given effect as if X had disclaimed. (For such a statute, see Uniform Probate Code §2-804.) Assume further that the effect of the putative disclaimer is that X is treated as having failed to survive A. (See the Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act §6(a)(3)(B).) Blackacre is transferred to Y at A's death in accordance with the provisions of the deed as modified by the revocation on divorce and disclaimer statutes.

Note that the property must be owned by the transferor at death. Property no longer owned by the transferor at death cannot be transferred by a transfer on death deed, just as it cannot be transferred by a will. This is the principle of ademption by extinction, discussed in the Comment to Section 11.

In almost every instance, the transferor will own the property not only at death but also when the transfer on death deed is executed, but the latter is not imperative. Consider the following example. H and W, a married couple, hold Blackacre as tenants by the entirety. H executes, acknowledges, and records a transfer on death deed for Blackacre in favor of X. W later dies, at which point H owns Blackacre in fee simple absolute. Later, H dies. Under the law of some states, there may be a question whether the transfer on death deed is effective, given that H executed it when Blackacre was owned, not by H and W, but by the marital entity. The correct answer is that the transfer on death deed is effective at H's death because Blackacre is owned by H at H's death. See, e.g., Mitchell v. Wilmington Trust Co., 449 A.2d 1055 (Del. Ch. 1982) (mortgage granted by one tenant by the entirety is not void upon execution but remains inchoate during the lives of both spouses, and becomes a valid lien if the spouse who executed the mortgage survives the other spouse or if the spouses get divorced).

The second default rule established by subsection (a) is that the interest of a designated beneficiary is contingent on surviving the transferor. This default rule treats wills and will substitutes alike. The interest of a designated beneficiary who fails to survive the transferor lapses. On the desirability of extending statutory antilapse protection to will substitutes such as transfer on death deeds, see the Legislative Note.

The third default rule established by subsection (a) is that concurrent beneficiaries receive equal and undivided interests with no right of survivorship among them. This default rule is consistent with the general presumption in favor of tenancy in common. See Powell on Real Property §51.02. The rule is also consistent with Uniform Probate Code §6-212 governing multiple-party accounts and §6-307 governing the transfer on death registration of securities.

The fourth and last default rule established by subsection (a) is that, in the event of the lapse or failure of an interest to be held concurrently, the share that lapses or fails passes proportionately to the surviving concurrent beneficiaries. Consider the following example:

Example 4. A executes, acknowledges, and records a transfer on death deed for Blackacre naming X, Y, and Z as the designated beneficiaries. X and Y survive A, but Z fails to survive A. The transfer on death deed is effective and, in the absence of an antilapse statute, transfers Blackacre to X and Y. This default rule is consistent with the transferor's probable intention in the absence of an antilapse statute and also with Uniform Probate Code §2-604(b) on the lapse of a residuary devise. On the desirability of extending statutory antilapse protection to will substitutes such as transfer on death deeds, see the Legislative Note.

Subsection (b) concerns the effect of transactions during the transferor's life. The subsection states an intermediate rule between two extremes. One extreme would provide that transactions during the transferor's life affect the beneficiary only if the transactions are recorded before the transferor's death. This would unfairly disadvantage the transferor's creditors and inter vivos transferees. The other extreme would provide that transactions during the transferor's life always supersede the beneficiary's interest, even if the recording act would provide otherwise. Between these two positions is the rule of subsection (b).

Subsection (b) provides that the beneficiary's interest is subject to all conveyances, encumbrances, assignments, contracts, mortgages, liens, and other interests to which the property is subject at the transferor's death. "Liens" includes liens arising by operation of law, such as state Medicaid liens.

The only exception to this rule arises when the state recording act so provides. The state recording act will so provide only when two conditions are met: (1) the inter vivos conveyance or encumbrance is unrecorded throughout the transferor's life (the legal fiction in this subsection protects persons who transact with the transferor and record any time before the transferor's death); and (2) the beneficiary is protected by the recording act. These two conditions will be met only in rare instances. Most beneficiaries of transfer on death deeds are gratuitious, whereas state recording acts typically protect only purchasers for value. See Powell on Real Property §82.02.

Subsection (c) provides that the survivorship right of a joint owner takes precedence over the transfer on death deed. This rule is consistent with the law of joint tenancy and wills: the right of survivorship takes precedence over a provision in a joint tenant's will.

Subsection (d) states the mandatory rule that a transfer on death deed transfers the property without covenant or warranty of title. The rule is mandatory for two reasons: first, to prevent mishaps by uninformed grantors; and second, to recognize that a transfer on death deed is a will substitute. The rule of this section is consistent with the longstanding law of wills. As stated by Sir Edward Coke, "an express warranty cannot be created by will." Coke on Littleton 386a.

SECTION 14. DISCLAIMER. A beneficiary may disclaim all or part of the beneficiary's interest as provided by [cite state statute or the Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act].

Legislative Note: States should check their disclaimer statutes for any necessary amendments. The following are conforming amendments to the Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act:

SECTION 12. DELIVERY OR FILING.

(a) In this section, "beneficiary designation" means an instrument, other than an instrument creating a trust, naming the beneficiary of:

(1) an annuity or insurance policy;

(2) an account with a designation for payment on death;

(3) a security registered in beneficiary form;

(4) a pension, profit-sharing, retirement, or other employment-related benefit plan; or

(5) any other nonprobate transfer at death.

(b) Subject to subsections (c) through (l), delivery of a disclaimer may be effected by personal delivery, first-class mail, or any other method likely to result in its receipt.

(c) In the case of an interest created under the law of intestate succession or an interest created by will, other than an interest in a testamentary trust:

(1) a disclaimer must be delivered to the personal representative of the decedent's estate; or

(2) if no personal representative is then serving, it must be filed with a court having jurisdiction to appoint the personal representative.

(d) In the case of an interest in a testamentary trust:

(1) a disclaimer must be delivered to the trustee then serving, or if no trustee is then serving, to the personal representative of the decedent's estate; or

(2) if no personal representative is then serving, it must be filed with a court having jurisdiction to enforce the trust.

(e) In the case of an interest in an inter vivos trust :

(1) a disclaimer must be delivered to the trustee then serving;

(2) if no trustee is then serving, it must be filed with a court having jurisdiction to enforce the trust; or

(3) if the disclaimer is made before the time the instrument creating the trust becomes irrevocable, it must be delivered to the settlor of a revocable trust or the transferor of the interest.

(f) In the case of an interest created by a beneficiary designation which is disclaimed ~~made~~ before ~~the time~~ the designation becomes irrevocable, ~~a~~ the disclaimer must be delivered to the person making the beneficiary designation.

(g) In the case of an interest created by a beneficiary designation which is disclaimed ~~made~~ after ~~the time~~ the designation becomes irrevocable~~,~~:

(1) ~~a~~ the disclaimer of an interest in personal property must be delivered to the person obligated to distribute the interest~~.~~; and

(2) the disclaimer of an interest in real property must be recorded in [the office of the county recorder of deeds] of the [county] where the real property that is the subject of the disclaimer is located.

(h) In the case of a disclaimer by a surviving holder of jointly held property, the disclaimer must be delivered to the person to whom the disclaimed interest passes.

(i) In the case of a disclaimer by an object or taker in default of exercise of a power of appointment at any time after the power was created:

(1) the disclaimer must be delivered to the holder of the power or to the fiduciary acting under the instrument that created the power; or

(2) if no fiduciary is then serving, it must be filed with a court having authority to appoint the fiduciary.

(j) In the case of a disclaimer by an appointee of a nonfiduciary power of appointment:

(1) the disclaimer must be delivered to the holder, the personal representative of the holder's estate or to the fiduciary under the instrument that created the power ; or

(2) if no fiduciary is then serving, it must be filed with a court having authority to appoint the fiduciary.

(k) In the case of a disclaimer by a fiduciary of a power over a trust or estate, the disclaimer must be delivered as provided in subsection (c), (d), or (e), as if the power disclaimed were an interest in property.

(l) In the case of a disclaimer of a power by an agent, the disclaimer must be delivered to the principal or the principal's representative.

Comment

The rules set forth in Section 12 are designed ~~so that anyone who has the duty to distribute the disclaimed interest will be notified~~ to provide notice of the disclaimer. For example, a disclaimer of an interest in a decedent's estate must be delivered to the personal representative of the estate. A disclaimer is required to be filed in court only ~~when there is no one person or entity to whom delivery can be made~~ in very limited circumstances.

SECTION 15. RECORDING OF DISCLAIMER. If an instrument transferring an interest in or power over property subject to a disclaimer is required or permitted by law to be filed, recorded, or registered, the disclaimer may be so filed, recorded, or registered. Except as otherwise provided in Section 12(g)(2), ~~F~~failure to file, record, or register the disclaimer does not affect its validity as between the disclaimant and persons to whom the property interest or power passes by reason of the disclaimer.

Comment

This section permits the recordation of a disclaimer of an interest in property ownership of or title to which is the subject of a recording system. This section expands on the corresponding provision of previous Uniform Acts which ~~only~~ referred to permissive recording of a disclaimer of an interest in real property. While local practice may vary, disclaimants should realize that in order to establish the chain of title to real property, and to ward off creditors and bona fide purchasers, the disclaimer may have to be recorded. This section does not change the law of the state governing notice. The reference to Section 12(g)(2) concerns the disclaimer of an interest in real property created by a "beneficiary designation" as that term is defined in Section 12(a). Such a disclaimer must be recorded.

Comment

A beneficiary of a transfer on death deed may disclaim the property interest the deed attempts to transfer. While this section relies on other law, such as the Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act, to govern the disclaimer, two general principles should be noted.

First, there is no need under the law of disclaimers to execute a disclaimer in advance. During the transferor's life, a designated beneficiary has no interest in the property. See Section 12. Nothing passes to the designated beneficiary while the transferor is alive, hence there is no need to execute a disclaimer during that time.

Second, an effective disclaimer executed after the testator's death "relates back" to the moment of the attempted transfer, here the death of the transferor. Because the disclaimer "relates back," the beneficiary is regarded as never having had an interest in the disclaimed property. The Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act (UDPIA) reaches this result, without using the language of relation back, in UDPIA §6(b)(1): "The disclaimer takes effect as of the time the instrument creating the interest becomes irrevocable ...." As the Comment to UDPIA §6 explains, "This Act continues the effect of the relation back doctrine, not by using the specific words, but by directly stating what the relation back doctrine has been interpreted to mean."

SECTION 15. LIABILITY FOR CREDITOR CLAIMS AND STATUTORY ALLOWANCES.

Alternative A

A beneficiary of a transfer on death deed is liable for an allowed claim against the transferor's probate estate and statutory allowances to a surviving spouse and children to the extent provided in [cite state statute or Section 6-102 of the Uniform Probate Code].

Alternative B

(a) To the extent the transferor's probate estate is insufficient to satisfy an allowed claim against the estate or a statutory allowance to a surviving spouse or child, the estate may enforce the liability against property transferred at the transferor's death by a transfer on death deed.

(b) If more than one property is transferred by one or more transfer on death deeds, the liability under subsection (a) is apportioned among the properties in proportion to their net values at the transferor's death.

(c) A proceeding to enforce the liability under this section must be commenced not later than [18 months] after the transferor's death.

End of Alternatives

Legislative Note: Alternative A is for a state with an existing statute governing creditors' rights in nonprobate transfers, such as Uniform Probate Code §6-102. States are encouraged to enact such statutes, thereby treating nonprobate transfers comprehensively. Alternative B is a second-best approach, supplying creditor protection but governing only transfer on death deeds and not other nonprobate mechanisms.

Comment

Alternative A defers to other law, such as Uniform Probate Code §6-102, to establish the liability of a beneficiary of a transfer on death deed for creditor claims and statutory allowances.

Uniform Probate Code (UPC) §6-102 was added in 1998 to establish the principle that recipients of nonprobate transfers can be required to contribute to pay allowed claims and statutory allowances to the extent the probate estate is insufficient. The fundamental rule of liability is contained in UPC §6-102(b): "Except as otherwise provided by statute, a transferee of a nonprobate transfer is subject to liability to any probate estate of the decedent for allowed claims against the decedent's probate estate and stautory allowances to the decedent's spouse and children to the extent the estate is insufficient to satisfy those claims and allowances. The liability of a nonprobate transferee may not exceed the value of nonprobate transfers received or controlled by that transferee." The other provisions of UPC §6-102 implement this liability rule.

For states not favoring the comprehensive approach of UPC §6-102(b) or the equivalent, Alternative B provides an in rem liability rule applying to transfer on death deeds. The property transferred under a transfer on death deed is liable to the transferor's probate estate for properly allowed claims and statutory allowances to the extent the estate is insufficient.

One of the functions of probate is creditor protection. UPC §6-102, referenced in Alternative A, attempts to provide comprehensive creditor protection within the realm of nonprobate transfers. In addition, this Act in Alternative B provides more creditor protection than is typically available under current law. For many transferors, the transfer on death deed will be used in lieu of joint tenancy with right of survivorship. Under the usual law of joint tenancy, the unsecured creditors of a deceased joint tenant have no recourse against the property or against the other joint tenant. Instead, the property passes automatically to the survivor, free of the decedent's debts. See Comment 5 to UPC §6-102. If the debts cannot be paid from the probate estate, the creditor is out of luck. Under Alternative B, in contrast, the property transferred under a transfer on death deed is liable to the probate estate for properly allowed claims and statutory allowances to the extent the estate is insufficient.

COMMON QUESTIONS ABOUT THE USE OF THIS FORM

What does the Transfer on Death (TOD) deed do? When you die, this deed transfers the described property, subject to any liens or mortgages (or other encumbrances) on the property at your death. Probate is not required. The TOD deed has no effect until you die. You can revoke it at any time. You are also free to transfer the property to someone else during your lifetime. If you do not own any interest in the property when you die, this deed will have no effect.

How do I make a TOD deed? Complete this form. Have it acknowledged before a notary public or other individual authorized by law to take acknowledgments. Record the form in each [county] where any part of the property is located. The form has no effect unless it is acknowledged and recorded before your death.

Is the "legal description" of the property necessary? Yes.

How do I find the "legal description" of the property? This information may be on the deed you received when you became an owner of the property. This information may also be available in [the office of the county recorder of deeds] for the [county] where the property is located. If you are not absolutely sure, consult a lawyer.

Can I change my mind before I record the TOD deed? Yes. If you have not yet recorded the deed and want to change your mind, simply tear up or otherwise destroy the deed.

How do I "record" the TOD deed? Take the completed and acknowledged form to [the office of the county recorder of deeds] of the [county] where the property is located. Follow the instructions given by the [county recorder] to make the form part of the official property records. If the property is in more than one [county], you should record the deed in each [county].

Can I later revoke the TOD deed if I change my mind? Yes. You can revoke the TOD deed. No one, including the beneficiaries, can prevent you from revoking the deed.

How do I revoke the TOD deed after it is recorded? There are three ways to revoke a recorded TOD deed: (1) Complete and acknowledge a revocation form, and record it in each [county] where the property is located. (2) Complete and acknowledge a new TOD deed that disposes of the same property, and record it in each [county] where the property is located. (3) Transfer the property to someone else during your lifetime by a recorded deed that expressly revokes the TOD deed. You may not revoke the TOD deed by will.

I am being pressured to complete this form. What should I do? Do not complete this form under pressure. Seek help from a trusted family member, friend, or lawyer.

Do I need to tell the beneficiaries about the TOD deed? No, but it is recommended. Secrecy can cause later complications and might make it easier for others to commit fraud.

I have other questions about this form. What should I do? This form is designed to fit some but not all situations. If you have other questions, you are encouraged to consult a lawyer.]

Legislative Note: This section and the next section are bracketed for states wishing to provide optional statutory forms. An enacting jurisdiction should review its statutory requirements for deeds and for acknowledgments and amend the statutory forms provided in Sections 16 and 17 where necessary for conformity with those requirements. If an enacting jurisdiction changes the act, the jurisdiction should review the answers to the common questions in Sections 16 and 17 to ensure the answers remain accurate.

Comment

The form in this section is optional. The section is based on Section 4 of the Uniform Health-Care Decisions Act.

Ten of the thirteen states with transfer on death deed statutes provide a statutory form. See Ariz. Stat. §33-405(K); Ark. Stat. §18-12-608(h), Colo. Stat. §15-15-404; Kans. Stat. §59-3502; Minn. Stat. §507.071(24); Mont. Stat. §72-6-121(13); Nev. Stat. §111.109(6); N.M. Stat. §45-6-401(C); Ohio Code §5302.22(A); Okla. H.B. 2639 §3.

The transfer on death deed is likely to be used by consumers for whom the preparation of a tailored inter vivos revocable trust is too costly. The form in this section is designed to be understandable and consumer friendly.

For examples of statutory forms containing answers to questions likely to be asked by consumers, see the Illinois statutory forms for powers of attorney. 755 Ill. Comp. Stat. 45/3-3 (power of attorney for property); 755 Ill. Comp. Stat. 45/4-10 (power of attorney for health care).

[SECTION 17. OPTIONAL FORM OF REVOCATION. The following form may be used to create an instrument of revocation under this [act]. The other sections of this [act] govern the effect of this or any other instrument used to revoke a transfer on death deed.

(front of form)

Comment

The form in this section is optional. The section is based on Section 4 of the Uniform Health-Care Decisions Act.

Six of the thirteen states with transfer on death deed statutes provide a statutory form for revocation. See Ariz. Stat. §33-405(L); Ark. Stat. §18-12-608(i), Colo. Stat. §15-15-405; Minn. Stat. §507.071(25); Mont. Stat. §72-6-121(14); Nev. Stat. §111.109(7).

The aim of the form in this section is to be understandable and consumer friendly.

SECTION 18. UNIFORMITY OF APPLICATION AND CONSTRUCTION. In applying and construing this uniform act, consideration must be given to the need to promote uniformity of the law with respect to its subject matter among the states that enact it.

SECTION 19. RELATION TO ELECTRONIC SIGNATURES IN GLOBAL AND NATIONAL COMMERCE ACT. This [act] modifies, limits, and supersedes the federal Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act, 15 U.S.C. Section 7001, et seq., but does not modify, limit, or supersede Section 101(c) of that act, 15 U.S.C. Section 7001(c), or authorize electronic delivery of any of the notices described in Section 103(b) of that act, 15

U.S.C. Section 7003(b).

SECTION 20. REPEALS. The following are repealed:

Legislative Note: This section is for states wishing to replace their transfer on death deed statutes with this Act.

MEMORANDUM January 19, 2012

SUBJECT: Bill adopting and relating to the Uniform Real Property Transfer on Death Act (Work Order No. 27-LS1237\A)

TO: Representative Carl Gatto
Chair of the House Judiciary Committee
Attn: Melanie Lesh

FROM: Terry Bannister
Legislative Counsel

This memo accompanies a draft of the bill described above. The bill is based on 27-LS1092\A.

1. Requested recorder changes. The term, "judicial district," is changed to "recording district" throughout the bill where applicable.

2. Sample form language. A line is added to each of the sections in the sample forms to inform the transferor that there can be more than one primary beneficiary and more than one alternate beneficiary. Although sec. 13.48.090(a) addresses the transfer to multiple beneficiaries, the inclusion of multiple alternate beneficiaries raises the question of how the multiple alternate beneficiaries will share the interests of nonsurviving beneficiaries. Sec. 13.48.090(a) does not seem to address alternate beneficiaries directly and the model form is designed for one alternate beneficiary. If there are multiple alternate beneficiaries, is there a priority among them? Will each replace one beneficiary? Perhaps multiple alternate beneficiaries could be prioritized on the form. It seems as if this matter should be clarified because it is dealing with the distribution of interests in real property. To avoid all problems, I suggest that the form not include a space for an alternate beneficiary, or, if you want to allow for one or more alternate beneficiaries, that the person be advised on the form to contact an attorney in that case.

3. Correction. In sec. 3, a correction has been made to AS 13.70.100(f) to replace "before" with "after."

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

HOUSE BILL NO.

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SEVENTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

BY THE HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Introduced:
Referred:

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act adopting and relating to the Uniform Real Property Transfer on Death Act."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 13 is amended by adding a new chapter to read:

Chapter 48. Uniform Real Property Transfer on Death Act.

Sec. 13.48.010. Transfer on death deed authorized. An individual may transfer property to one or more beneficiaries effective at the transferor's death by a transfer on death deed.

Sec. 13.48.020. Transfer on death deed revocable. A transfer on death deed is revocable even if the deed or another instrument contains a contrary provision.

Sec. 13.48.030. Transfer on death deed nontestamentary. A transfer on death deed is nontestamentary.

Sec. 13.48.040. Capacity of transferor. The capacity required to make or revoke a transfer on death deed is the same as the capacity required to make a will.

Sec. 13.48.050. Requirements. A transfer on death deed

(1) except as otherwise provided in (2) of this section, must contain the essential elements and formalities of a properly recordable inter vivos deed;

(2) must state that the transfer to the designated beneficiary is to occur at the transferor's death; and

(3) must be recorded before the transferor's death in the public records in the office of the recorder in the recording district where the property is located.

Sec. 13.48.060. Notice, delivery, acceptance, consideration not required. A transfer on death deed is effective without

(1) notice or delivery to, or acceptance by, the designated beneficiary during the transferor's life; or

(2) consideration.

Sec. 13.48.070. Revocation by instrument authorized; revocation by act not permitted. (a) Subject to (b) of this section, an instrument is effective to revoke a recorded transfer on death deed, or any part of it, only if the instrument

(1) is one of the following:

(A) a transfer on death deed that revokes the deed or part of the deed expressly or by inconsistency;

(B) an instrument of revocation that expressly revokes the deed or part of the deed; or

(C) an inter vivos deed that expressly revokes the transfer on death deed or part of the deed; and

(2) is acknowledged by the transferor after the acknowledgment of the deed being revoked and recorded before the transferor's death in the recording district where the deed is recorded.

(b) If a transfer on death deed is made by more than one transferor,

(1) revocation by a transferor does not affect the deed as to the interest of another transferor; and

(2) a deed of joint owners is revoked only if it is revoked by all of the living joint owners.

(c) After a transfer on death deed is recorded, it may not be revoked by a revocatory act on the deed.

(d) This section does not limit the effect of an inter vivos transfer of the property.

Sec. 13.48.080. Effect of transfer on death deed during transferor's life. During a transferor's life, a transfer on death deed does not

(1) affect an interest or right of the transferor or any other owner, including the right to transfer or encumber the property;

(2) affect an interest or right of a transferee, even if the transferee has actual or constructive notice of the deed;

(3) affect an interest or right of a secured or unsecured creditor or future creditor of the transferor, even if the creditor has actual or constructive notice of the deed;

(4) affect the transferor's or designated beneficiary's eligibility for any form of public assistance;

(5) create a legal or equitable interest in favor of the designated beneficiary; or

(6) subject the property to claims or process of a creditor of the designated beneficiary.

Sec. 13.48.090. Effect of transfer on death deed at transferor's death. (a) Except as otherwise provided in the transfer on death deed, in this section, or in AS 13.12.203, 13.12.702, 13.12.706, 13.12.707, 13.12.803, or 13.12.804, on the death of the transferor, the following rules apply to property that is the subject of a transfer on death deed and owned by the transferor at death:

(1) subject to (2) of this subsection, the interest in the property is transferred to the designated beneficiary under the deed;

(2) the interest of a designated beneficiary is contingent on the designated beneficiary surviving the transferor; the interest of a designated beneficiary that fails to survive the transferor lapses;

(3) subject to (4) of this subsection, concurrent interests are transferred to the beneficiaries in equal and undivided shares with no right of survivorship;

(4) if the transferor has identified two or more designated beneficiaries to receive concurrent interests in the property, the share of one that lapses or fails for any reason is transferred to the other or to the others in proportion to the interest of each in the remaining part of the property held concurrently.

(b) Subject to AS 40.17, a beneficiary takes the property subject to all conveyances, encumbrances, assignments, contracts, mortgages, liens, and other interests to which the property is subject at the transferor's death. For purposes of this subsection and AS 40.17, the recording of the transfer on death deed is considered to have occurred at the transferor's death.

(c) If a transferor is a joint owner and is

(1) survived by one or more other joint owners, the property that is the subject of a transfer on death deed belongs to the surviving joint owner or owners with right of survivorship; or

(2) the last surviving joint owner, the transfer on death deed is effective.

(d) A transfer on death deed transfers property without covenant or warranty of title even if the deed contains a contrary provision.

Sec. 13.48.100. Disclaimer. A beneficiary may disclaim all or part of the beneficiary's interest as provided by AS 13.70 (Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act).

Sec. 13.48.110. Liability for creditor claims and statutory allowances. (a) To the extent the transferor's probate estate is insufficient to satisfy an allowed claim against the estate or a statutory allowance to a surviving spouse or child, the estate may enforce the liability against property transferred at the transferor's death by a transfer on death deed.

(b) If more than one property is transferred by one or more transfer on death deeds, the liability under (a) of this section is apportioned among the properties in proportion to their net values at the transferor's death.

(c) A proceeding to enforce the liability under this section must be commenced not later than 18 months after the transferor's death.

Sec. 13.48.120. Optional form of transfer on death deed. The following form may be used to create a transfer on death deed. The provisions of this chapter govern the effect of this or any other instrument used to create a transfer on death deed.

COMMON QUESTIONS ABOUT THE USE OF THIS FORM

What does the Transfer on Death (TOD) deed do? When you die, this deed transfers the described property, subject to any liens or mortgages (or other encumbrances) on the property at your death. Probate is not required. The TOD deed has no effect until you die. You can revoke it at any time. You are also free to transfer the property to someone else during your lifetime. If you do not own any interest in the property when you die, this deed will have no effect.

How do I make a TOD deed? Complete this form. Have it acknowledged before a notary public or other individual authorized by law to take acknowledgments. Record the form in each recording district where any part of the property is located. The form has no effect unless it is acknowledged and recorded before your death.

Is the "legal description" of the property necessary? Yes.

How do I find the "legal description" of the property? This information may be on the deed you received when you became an owner of the property. This information may also be available in the office of the recorder in the recording district where the property is located. If you are not absolutely sure, consult a lawyer.

Can I change my mind before I record the TOD deed? Yes. If you have not yet recorded the deed and want to change your mind, simply tear up or otherwise destroy the deed.

How do I "record" the TOD deed? Take the completed and acknowledged form to the office of the recorder in the recording district where the property is located. Follow the instructions given by the recorder to make the form part of the official property records. If the property is in more than one recording district, you should record the deed in each recording district.

Can I later revoke the TOD deed if I change my mind? Yes. You can revoke the TOD deed. No one, including the beneficiaries, can prevent you from revoking the deed.

How do I revoke the TOD deed after it is recorded? There are three ways to revoke a recorded TOD deed: (1) Complete and acknowledge a revocation form, and record it in each recording district where the property is located. (2) Complete and acknowledge a new TOD deed that disposes of the same property, and record it in each recording district where the property is located. (3) Transfer the property to someone else during your lifetime by a recorded deed that expressly revokes the TOD deed. You may not revoke the TOD deed by will.

I am being pressured to complete this form. What should I do? Do not complete this form under pressure. Seek help from a trusted family member, friend, or lawyer.

Do I need to tell the beneficiaries about the TOD deed? No, but it is recommended. Secrecy can cause later complications and might make it easier for others to commit fraud.

I have other questions about this form. What should I do? This form is designed to fit some but not all situations. If you have other questions, you are encouraged to consult a lawyer.

Sec. 13.48.130. Optional form of revocation. The following form may be used to create an instrument of revocation under this chapter. The provisions of this chapter govern the effect of this or any other instrument used to revoke a transfer on death deed.

Sec. 13.48.140. Nonexclusivity. The provisions of this chapter do not affect any method of transferring property otherwise permitted under the law of this state.

Sec. 13.48.150. Uniformity of application and construction. In applying and construing this uniform act, consideration shall be given to the need to promote uniformity of the law with respect to its subject matter among the states that enact it.

Sec. 13.48.160. Relationship to Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act. The provisions of this chapter modify, limit, and supersede 15 U.S.C. 7001 - 7031 (Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act), but do not modify, limit, or supersede 15 U.S.C. 7001(c) or authorize electronic delivery of any of the notices described in 15 U.S.C. 7003(b).

Sec. 13.48.190. Definitions. In this chapter,

(1) "beneficiary" means a person who receives property under a transfer on death deed;

(2) "designated beneficiary" means a person designated to receive property in a transfer on death deed;

(3) "joint owner" means an individual who is a tenant by the entirety, who is an owner of community property with a right of survivorship, or who otherwise owns property concurrently with one or more other individuals with a right of survivorship, but does not include an individual who is a tenant in common or other owner of community property without a right of survivorship or who is a joint tenant, other than an individual who is a tenant by the entirety;

(4) "person" means an individual, corporation, business trust, estate, trust, partnership, limited liability company, association, joint venture, public corporation, government or governmental subdivision, agency, or instrumentality, or any other legal or commercial entity;

(5) "property" means an interest in real property located in this state which is transferable on the death of the owner;

(6) "transfer on death deed" means a deed authorized under this chapter;

(7) "transferor" means an individual who makes a transfer on death deed.

Sec. 13.48.195. Short title. This chapter may be cited as the Uniform Real Property Transfer on Death Act.

* Sec. 2. AS 13.70.100(e) is amended to read:

(e) In the case of an interest created by a beneficiary designation that is disclaimed [MADE] before [THE TIME] the designation becomes irrevocable, the [A] disclaimer shall be delivered to the person making the beneficiary designation.

* Sec. 3. AS 13.70.100(f) is amended to read:

(f) In the case of an interest created by a beneficiary designation that is disclaimed [MADE] after [THE TIME] the designation becomes irrevocable, the [A] disclaimer of an interest in

(1) personal property shall be delivered to the person obligated to distribute the interest; and

(2) real property shall be recorded in the office of the recorder in the recording district where the real property that is the subject of the disclaimer is located.

* Sec. 4. AS 13.70.130 is amended to read:

Sec. 13.70.130. Recording of disclaimer. If an instrument transferring an interest in or power over property subject to a disclaimer is required or permitted by law to be filed, recorded, or registered, the disclaimer may be filed, recorded, or registered as required or permitted by law. Except as otherwise provided in AS 13.70.100(f)(2), failure [FAILURE] to file, record, or register the disclaimer does not affect its validity as between the disclaimant and persons to whom the property interest or power passes by reason of the disclaimer.

 Sec. 5. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

APPLICABILITY. This Act applies to a transfer on death deed made before, on, or after the effective date of this Act by a transferor dying on or after the effective date of this Act. In this section, "transfer on death deed" and "transferor" have the meanings given in AS 13.48.190, enacted by sec. 1 of this Act.

House Bill 297

"An Act adopting and relating to the Uniform Real Property Transfer on Death Act"

Sponsor Statement

HB 297, the Uniform Real Property Transfer on Death Act (URPTODA), provides a simple, effective and affordable option for persons wishing to transfer real property upon their death. It will avoid the potentially lengthy and expensive process of probate.

Currently, seventeen states have adopted the Act or other similar legislation allowing "Transfer on Death (TOD) deeds. Other states are considering such bills. Other non-probate transfers of personal property at death sometimes, known as "will substitutes" or TODs are now common practice.

Under HB 297, real property can pass at death by a transfer on death (TOD) deed. The deed is recorded before death with the district recorder. Upon death the deed automatically becomes effective. TOD deeds are not subject to the statute of wills. They do not operate and are revocable until the transferor's death. They are ineffective if the transferor disposes of the property during his or her lifetime. HB 297 allows the beneficiary to disclaim the transferred property. It does not affect the beneficiary's eligibility for public assistance or subject the property to the beneficiary's creditors. It allows a stepped up basis (favorable tax treatment) upon the transferor's death. HB 297 will provide a valuable option to Alaskans who may not need or cannot afford trusts, etc. and the probate process in passing property upon death. Yet it does not prohibit any other method of passing the property (e.g. gifts, wills, trusts, etc.); it simply provides another cheaper and efficient way of transferring real property upon death.

The bill was suggested by a retired constituent who believes it is an important alternative that should be permitted in Alaska. The legislation is necessary because currently joint tenancy with the right of survivorship in real property is statutorily prohibited, except for tenancy by the entirety allowing surviving spouses to take marital residences upon the other spouse's death. Thus this bill is necessary.

(1) except as otherwise provided in (2) of this section, must contain the essential elements and formalities of a properly recordable inter vivos deed;

(2) must state that the transfer to the designated beneficiary is to occur at the transferor's death; and

(3) must be recorded before the transferor's death in the public records in the office of the recorder located in the judicial district where the property is located.

Sec. 13.48.060. Notice, delivery, acceptance, consideration not required. A transfer on death deed is effective without

(1) notice or delivery to, or acceptance by, the designated beneficiary during the transferor's life; or

(2) consideration.

Sec. 13.48.070. Revocation by instrument authorized; revocation by act not permitted. (a) Subject to (b) of this section, an instrument is effective to revoke a recorded transfer on death deed, or any part of it, only if the instrument

(1) is one of the following:

(A) a transfer on death deed that revokes the deed or part of the deed expressly or by inconsistency;

(B) an instrument of revocation that expressly revokes the deed or part of the deed; or

(C) an inter vivos deed that expressly revokes the transfer on death deed or part of the deed; and

(2) is acknowledged by the transferor after the acknowledgment of the deed being revoked and recorded before the transferor's death in the office of the recorder for the recording district where the deed is recorded.

(b) If a transfer on death deed is made by more than one transferor,

(1) revocation by a transferor does not affect the deed as to the interest of another transferor; and

(2) a deed of joint owners is revoked only if it is revoked by all of the living joint owners.

(c) After a transfer on death deed is recorded, it may not be revoked by a revocatory act on the deed.

(d) This section does not limit the effect of an inter vivos transfer of the property.

Sec. 13.48.080. Effect of transfer on death deed during transferor's life. During a transferor's life, a transfer on death deed does not

(1) affect an interest or right of the transferor or any other owner, including the right to transfer or encumber the property;

(2) affect an interest or right of a transferee, even if the transferee has actual or constructive notice of the deed;

(3) affect an interest or right of a secured or unsecured creditor or future creditor of the transferor, even if the creditor has actual or constructive notice of the deed;

(4) affect the transferor's or designated beneficiary's eligibility for any form of public assistance;

(5) create a legal or equitable interest in favor of the designated beneficiary; or

(6) subject the property to claims or process of a creditor of the designated beneficiary.

Sec. 13.48.090. Effect of transfer on death deed at transferor's death. (a) Except as otherwise provided in the transfer on death deed, in this section, or in AS 13.12.203, 13.12.702, 13.12.706, 13.12.707, 13.12.803, or 13.12.804, on the death of the transferor, the following rules apply to property that is the subject of a transfer on death deed and owned by the transferor at death:

(1) subject to (2) of this subsection, the interest in the property is transferred to the designated beneficiary under the deed;

(2) the interest of a designated beneficiary is contingent on the designated beneficiary surviving the transferor; the interest of a designated beneficiary that fails to survive the transferor lapses;

(3) subject to (4) of this subsection, concurrent interests are transferred to the beneficiaries in equal and undivided shares with no right of survivorship;

(4) if the transferor has identified two or more designated beneficiaries to receive concurrent interests in the property, the share of one that lapses or fails for any reason is transferred to the other or to the others in proportion to the interest of each in the remaining part of the property held concurrently.

(b) Subject to AS 40.17, a beneficiary takes the property subject to all conveyances, encumbrances, assignments, contracts, mortgages, liens, and other interests to which the property is subject at the transferor's death. For purposes of this subsection and AS 40.17, the recording of the transfer on death deed is deemed to have occurred at the transferor's death.

(c) If a transferor is a joint owner and is

(1) survived by one or more other joint owners, the property that is the subject of a transfer on death deed belongs to the surviving joint owner or owners with right of survivorship; or

(2) the last surviving joint owner, the transfer on death deed is effective.

(d) A transfer on death deed transfers property without covenant or warranty of title even if the deed contains a contrary provision.

Sec. 13.48.100. Disclaimer. A beneficiary may disclaim all or part of the beneficiary's interest as provided by AS 13.70 (Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act).

Sec. 13.48.110. Liability for creditor claims and statutory allowances. (a) To the extent the transferor's probate estate is insufficient to satisfy an allowed claim against the estate or a statutory allowance to a surviving spouse or child, the estate may enforce the liability against property transferred at the transferor's death by a transfer on death deed.

(b) If more than one property is transferred by one or more transfer on death deeds, the liability under (a) of this section is apportioned among the properties in proportion to their net values at the transferor's death.

(c) A proceeding to enforce the liability under this section must be commenced not later than 18 months after the transferor's death.

Sec. 13.48.120. Optional form of transfer on death deed. The following form may be used to create a transfer on death deed. The provisions of this chapter govern the effect of this or any other instrument used to create a transfer on death deed.

COMMON QUESTIONS ABOUT THE USE OF THIS FORM

What does the Transfer on Death (TOD) deed do? When you die, this deed transfers the described property, subject to any liens or mortgages (or other encumbrances) on the property at your death. Probate is not required. The TOD deed has no effect until you die. You can revoke it at any time. You are also free to transfer the property to someone else during your lifetime. If you do not own any interest in the property when you die, this deed will have no effect.

How do I make a TOD deed? Complete this form. Have it acknowledged before a notary public or other individual authorized by law to take acknowledgments. Record the form in each judicial district where any part of the property is located. The form has no effect unless it is acknowledged and recorded before your death.

Is the "legal description" of the property necessary? Yes.

How do I find the "legal description" of the property? This information may be on the deed you received when you became an owner of the property. This information may also be available in the office of the recorder in the judicial district where the property is located. If you are not absolutely sure, consult a lawyer.

Can I change my mind before I record the TOD deed? Yes. If you have not yet recorded the deed and want to change your mind, simply tear up or otherwise destroy the deed.

How do I "record" the TOD deed? Take the completed and acknowledged form to the office of recorder in the judicial district where the property is located. Follow the instructions given by the recorder to make the form part of the official property records. If the property is in more than one judicial district, you should record the deed in each judicial district.

Can I later revoke the TOD deed if I change my mind? Yes. You can revoke the TOD deed. No one, including the beneficiaries, can prevent you from revoking the deed.

How do I revoke the TOD deed after it is recorded? There are three ways to revoke a recorded TOD deed: (1) Complete and acknowledge a revocation form, and record it in each judicial district where the property is located. (2) Complete and acknowledge a new TOD deed that disposes of the same property, and record it in each judicial district where the property is located. (3) Transfer the property to someone else during your lifetime by a recorded deed that expressly revokes the TOD deed. You may not revoke the TOD deed by will.

I am being pressured to complete this form. What should I do? Do not complete this form under pressure. Seek help from a trusted family member, friend, or lawyer.

Do I need to tell the beneficiaries about the TOD deed? No, but it is recommended. Secrecy can cause later complications and might make it easier for others to commit fraud.

I have other questions about this form. What should I do? This form is designed to fit some but not all situations. If you have other questions, you are encouraged to consult a lawyer.

Sec. 13.48.130. Optional form of revocation. The following form may be used to create an instrument of revocation under this chapter. The provisions of this chapter govern the effect of this or any other instrument used to revoke a transfer on death deed.

Sec. 13.48.140. Nonexclusivity. The provisions of this chapter do not affect any method of transferring property otherwise permitted under the law of this state.

Sec. 13.48.150. Uniformity of application and construction. In applying and construing this uniform act, consideration shall be given to the need to promote uniformity of the law with respect to its subject matter among the states that enact it.

Sec. 13.48.160. Relationship to Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act. The provisions of this chapter modify, limit, and supersede 15 U.S.C. 7001 - 7031 (Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act), but do not modify, limit, or supersede 15 U.S.C. 7001(c) or authorize electronic delivery of any of the notices described in 15 U.S.C. 7003(b).

Sec. 13.48.190. Definitions. In this chapter,

(1) "beneficiary" means a person who receives property under a transfer on death deed;

(2) "designated beneficiary" means a person designated to receive property in a transfer on death deed;

(3) "joint owner" means an individual who is a tenant by the entirety, who is an owner of community property with a right of survivorship, or who otherwise owns property concurrently with one or more other individuals with a right of survivorship, but does not include an individual who is a tenant in common or other owner of community property without a right of survivorship or who is a joint tenant, other than an individual who is a tenant by the entirety;

(4) "person" means an individual, corporation, business trust, estate, trust, partnership, limited liability company, association, joint venture, public corporation, government or governmental subdivision, agency, or instrumentality, or any other legal or commercial entity;

(5) "property" means an interest in real property located in this state which is transferable on the death of the owner;

(6) "transfer on death deed" means a deed authorized under this chapter;

(7) "transferor" means an individual who makes a transfer on death deed.

Sec. 13.48.195. Short title. This chapter may be cited as the Uniform Real Property Transfer on Death Act.

 Sec. 2. AS 13.70.100(e) is amended to read:

(e) In the case of an interest created by a beneficiary designation that is disclaimed [MADE] before [THE TIME] the designation becomes irrevocable, the [A] disclaimer shall be delivered to the person making the beneficiary designation.

 Sec. 3. AS 13.70.100(f) is amended to read:

(f) In the case of an interest created by a beneficiary designation that is disclaimed before [MADE AFTER THE TIME] the designation becomes irrevocable, the [A] disclaimer of an interest in

(1) personal property shall be delivered to the person obligated to distribute the interest; and

(2) real property shall be recorded in the office of the recorder of the judicial district where the real property that is the subject of the disclaimer is located.

 Sec. 4. AS 13.70.130 is amended to read:

Sec. 13.70.130. Recording of disclaimer. If an instrument transferring an interest in or power over property subject to a disclaimer is required or permitted by law to be filed, recorded, or registered, the disclaimer may be filed, recorded, or registered as required or permitted by law. Except as otherwise provided in AS 13.70.100(f)(2), failure [FAILURE] to file, record, or register the disclaimer does not affect its validity as between the disclaimant and persons to whom the property interest or power passes by reason of the disclaimer.

 Sec. 5. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

APPLICABILITY. This Act applies to a transfer on death deed made before, on, or after the effective date of this Act by a transferor dying on or after the effective date of this Act. In this section, "transfer on death deed" and "transferor" have the meanings given in AS 13.48.190, enacted by sec. 1 of this Act.

Real Property Transfer on Death Act Summary

Asset-specific mechanisms for the non-probate transfer of personal property and funds at death are now common. They are known informally as "will substitutes." The proceeds of life insurance policies and pension plans, securities registered in transfer on death form, and funds held in pay on death bank accounts, are examples of personal property that have benefitted from this trend in modern law to recognize and support the use of will substitutes. However there is no generally available straightforward, inexpensive, and reliable means of passing real property, which may be a decedent's major asset, directly to a beneficiary at death.

The Uniform Real Property Transfer on Death Act (URPTODA), promulgated by the Uniform Law Commission in 2009, enables an owner of real property to pass the property to a beneficiary on the owner's death simply, directly, and without probate.

Under URPTODA, real property passes by means of a recorded transfer on death (TOD) deed. URPTODA establishes the requirements for the creation and revocation of a TOD deed and clarifies the effect of the TOD deed on all parties while the transferor is living and after the transferor dies. URPTODA provides optional forms to create or revoke a TOD deed.

Key elements of URPTODA include:

- The TOD deed is not subject to the statute of wills and passes title directly to the named beneficiary without probate.

- The TOD deed must contain all of the essential elements and formalities of a properly recordable inter vivos deed. The TOD deed must state that the transfer to the beneficiary occurs on the transferor's death and must be properly recorded during the transferor's lifetime in the office of the recorder of deeds where the property is located.

- The capacity required to create a TOD deed is the same as the capacity to make a will.

- A TOD deed does not operate until the transferor's death and remains revocable until then. The transferor may revoke the deed by recording a revocatory instrument such as a direct revocation of the TOD deed or a subsequent TOD deed that names a different beneficiary. If the transferor disposes of the property during lifetime, the TOD deed is ineffective.

- Until the transferor's death, a recorded TOD deed has no effect — it does not affect any right or interest of the transferor or any other person in the property. The TOD deed creates no legal or equitable interest in the designated beneficiary; it does not affect the designated beneficiary's eligibility for public assistance; it does not subject the property to the designated beneficiary's creditors.

- Assuming the transferor dies owning the property and has not revoked the TOD deed and assuming that the designated beneficiary survives the transferor, the TOD deed passes the property to the designated beneficiary on the transferor's death.

- Liability of the beneficiary and property for claims against the transferor's estate is limited to cases where the estate is insolvent.

- A designated beneficiary may disclaim all or part of the transferred interest.

Before promulgation of URPTODA some states enacted legislation to enable a TOD deed of real property. URPTODA builds on these statutes. It provides an uncomplicated, effective, and affordable option to pass this important type of asset at death.

SPONSORS STATEMENT for House Bill 299

"An Act allowing appropriations to the civil legal services fund from court filing fees."

This bill is designed to help fund civil legal services for low-income Alaskans. House Bill 299 will provide a mechanism for funding the Alaska Legal Services Corporation (ALSC), by allowing the legislature to appropriate up to 25 percent of filing fees paid to the Alaska Court System during the previous fiscal year into the Civil Legal Services Fund.
The Alaska Legal Services Corporation was established in 1966 to address the civil legal aid needs of low-income Alaskans. ALSC is not a state agency, but is instead a nonprofit charitable 501(c)(3) whose funding comes from a variety of state, federal, and private sources. Over the last several years ALSC funding has dwindled, from $4.2 million as of 1987 to less than $3.1 million as of 20 1 0, while it struggles to serve a growing number of poverty-level applicants. Appropriations from the State of Alaska that were once as high as $1.2 million in FY84 are currently at $350,000. House Bill 299 aims to correct this lack of funding and helps ensure civil legal representation for Alaska's most needy population.

Analysis

This bill would provide an additional source for the civil legal services fund established in AS 37.05.590: an amount from the general fund that is up to 25 percent of the filing fees received by the Alaska Court System during the previous fiscal year.

There is no anticipated fiscal impact to Department of Law.

FISCAL NOTE

STATE OF ALASKA BILL NO. HB299
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Analysis

The Office of Public Advocacy's enabling statute includes a provision that requires OPA to provide legal representation "to indigent parties in cases involving child custody in which the opposing party is represented by counsel provided by a public agency." AS 44.21.410(a)(4). This portion of OPA's enabling statute was the result of a 1979 Alaska Supreme Court decision, Flores v. Flores, 589 P.2d 893 (Alaska 1979).

In Flores, the Alaska Supreme Court determined that a parent has a constitutional right to counsel in a child custody action where the indigent parent's opponent is represented by a "public agency." Mr. Flores, the indigent parent's opponent, was represented by Alaska Legal Services Corporation (ALSC) in the underlying child custody matter. The majority opinion in Flores identified ALSC as a public agency for purposes of triggering the state's obligation to provide counsel to the other parent.

The Flores court did not define "public agency" or set forth criteria for determining whether an organization is a public agency for these purposes. Likewise, OPA's enabling statute fails to define the term "public agency."

If the Alaska Legal Services Corporation or similar organizations receive additional public funding to represent parties in child custody matters, this will trigger additional obligations by the Office of Public Advocacy to provide representation to indigent parties in those matters. Since the agency cannot determine in how many additional cases it may be appointed, it cannot accurately predict the fiscal impact on the agency. Therefore, the Agency submits an indeterminate fiscal note.

Alaska Legal Services Corporation

Types of Cases

The types of problems ALSC handles fall into one of the following ten areas.

Consumer Education Employment Family Law Juvenile Health Care Housing
Public Benefits
Individual Rights
Miscellaneous

ALSC does not have enough staffing to accept all the applications that come in, and case acceptance decisions are based on priorities set by our governing board.

ALSC generally does not provide service in cases for personal injury, accidents, or wrongful death.

ALSC is prohibited from handling certain types of representation: (1) class actions; (2) criminal defense; (3) representation of prisoners in any type of case; (4) representation of undocumented non-citizens, with an exception if the case involves domestic violence or trafficking.

Consumer - bankruptcy/debtor relief, collections (repossessions, garnishments) contracts/warranties, collection practices/creditor harassment, predatory lending practices, loans/installment purchases, public utilities, unfair sales practices;

Education - discipline (including expulsion/suspension), special education/learning disabilities, access (including bilingual/residency/test), vocation education, student financial aid;

Employment - job discrimination, wage claims, earned income tax credit, taxes, employee rights, agricultural worker issues;

Family - adoption, custody/visitation, divorce/separation/annulment, guardianship/conservatorship, name change, parental rights termination, paternity, domestic abuse, support;

Juvenile - juvenile delinquent, neglected/abused/dependent, emancipation, minor guardian/conservatorship

Health - Medicaid, Medicare, Denali Kidcare, government children's health insurance programs, home and community based care, private health insurance, long term health care facilities, state and local health;

Housing - federally subsidized housing rights, homeownership/real property, landlord/tenant, other public housing, mobile homes, housing discrimination, mortgage foreclosures, mortgage predatory lending practices;

Public Benefits - Temporary Assistance for Needy Families, Social Security, food stamps, Supplementary Security Income, unemployment compensation, veterans benefits, state/local income maintenance;

Individual Rights - mental health, physically disabled rights, civil rights, human trafficking;

Miscellaneous - legal assistance to non-profit organizations/groups, Indian/tribal law, subsistence, Native allotments, license (auto and other), torts, advance directives, wills and estates, power of attorney, municipal legal needs.

Hi Tom –

Our CFO got me the number that you asked for right away: in FY11, the Court System collected and deposited into the general fund $2,666,900 in filing fees. Your bill looks at calculating up to 25% of this, and my math says that would amount to $666,725.

I hope this helps. Thanks.

Dear Representative Gatto,
I don't write to you very often, but I wanted to express my support of HB299. The Alaska Legal Services does an excellent job of service for our low income population with legal services. My youngest daughter was working on some issues with the father of her baby and I was able to see first hand how understanding and helpful the organization can be.
An estimated 88,000 Alaskans live below 125% of the poverty ceiling and this number increases yearly. For most of these people, access to the civil justice system is possible only with the help of a legal services attorney.
Thanks for considering my plea for your support of HB299.

Sincerely,

Subject: Support for HB 299, Civil Legal Services Fund

Dear Chair Gatto & Vice Chair Thompson:

The Alaska Commission on Aging (ACoA) is pleased to offer our support for HB 299, a bill to establish a mechanism to enhance funding for nonprofit organizations that provide free or reduced cost civil legal services for low-income individuals by allowing the Legislature to appropriate up to 25% of filing fees paid annually to the Alaska Court System. This bill is authored by Representative Thompson and co-sponsored by Representatives Gara, Costello, and Gruenberg.

Alaska Legal Services Corporation (ALSC) is a non-profit organization that addresses the civil legal needs of low-income Alaskans by providing no cost legal representation. Currently, there are approximately 88,000 Alaskans who live below 125% of the poverty level who are eligible for these services, including Alaskan seniors.

ALSC provides no-cost or subsidized legal assistance for seniors statewide to assure that seniors, especially those at greatest social and economic risk, have access to the civil justice system. ALSC received 611 new applications from Alaska seniors requesting legal assistance in 2011. Due to insufficient funding, ALSC was forced to turn away 186 seniors. This bill will provide a mechanism to increase funding to ALSC to provide legal assistance to help more seniors and other Alaskans of modest means. Examples of ways ALSC assists seniors with legal matters includes helping with consumer and family law by establishing Miller Trusts, guardianships, conservatorships, and wills; and assisting with housing issues such as resolving renter-landlord disputes, foreclosures, and reverse mortgages. Due to funding limitations, ALSC is able to accept about one in five individuals requesting their help.

The ACoA supports HB 299 to improve access to civil legal representation for Alaska's most needy population. Accessing legal information, advice, and assistance helps older Alaskans preserve financial and personal independence, maintain control of their finance and health care decisions, maintain appropriate family relationships, protect personal assets and enhance their well-being. Thank you for sponsoring this important legislation. Please feel free to contact Denise Daniello, ACoA's executive director, by phone (465-4879) or email (denise.daniello@alaska.gov) should you have questions or require additional information.

Sincerely,

Sharon Howerton-Clark

The Honorable Carl Gatto, Chair
House Judiciary Committee
Alaska Capitol, Room 118
Juneau, AK 99801-1182

Dear Chair Gatto:

HB 299 (Thompson)—Support

On behalf of the AARP members in Alaska, we encourage you and your colleagues on the House Judiciary Committee to support HB 299, authored by your Committee Vice-Chair Steve Thompson and co-sponsored by your Committee colleague Representative Max Gruenberg as well as Representatives Les Gara, Mia Costello, and Beth Kerttula.

HB 299 would provide a mechanism to increase funding for legal services for lower income Alaskans.

Because of their unique health, income and social needs, and because they often depend on services provided by government agencies with complex requirements, older people must have access to competent legal assistance. As Alaska's population ages, the requests for landlord/tenant dispute resolution and other housing matters, quality health care and treatment, public benefits, fraud, and abuse and neglect will only increase for Alaska's seniors. HB 299 will provide additional funds to support the civil legal aid needs of low-income Alaskans, including many older clients.

We receive many calls, as I am sure you do, from older Alaskans with a legal problem or question who simply do not know where to go. There is great concern about the cost of seeking a private attorney and the ability to refer older callers to legal services assistance is of great importance to us as well as to them. AARP supports the good work done by our legal services programs and we hope you will too.

AARP recommends an "AYE" vote on HB 299.

Should you have any questions about our position, please feel free to contact me (586-3637) or Patrick Luby, AARP Advocacy Director (907-762-3314).

Thank you for your consideration.

Alaska Legal Services Corporation

Access to Justice for Alaskans in Need

HB 299

Amending the Civil Legal Service Fund

What is the Fund?

- The Civil Legal Services Fund was created in 2007 with widespread bipartisan support to help ensure civil legal representation for Alaska's most needy population.
- At the discretion of the legislature, deposits to the fund come from Alaska's 50 percent share of civil damage awards. The Legislature is authorized to appropriate these funds to organizations providing civil legal services to low-income Alaskans.

Why the Fund is needed:

- An estimated 88,000 Alaskans live below 125% of the poverty ceiling – this number is increasing yearly. For most of these people, access to the civil justice system is possible only with the help of a legal services attorney.
- Alaska Legal Services (ALSC) is the only statewide comprehensive civil legal services provider. At present, there is only one ALSC attorney for every 4,000 Alaskans living in poverty.
- The May 2000 Alaska Supreme Court Access to Civil Justice Task Force Report recommended that ALSC be fully funded at a minimum of 1982 levels (adjusted for inflation $7.5 million as of 2005). ALSC's current budget is just over $3 million. The Fund was among the Task Force Recommendations to help bridge this gap.
- State appropriations to ALSC steadily declined from a high of $1.2 million in 1984 to nothing by 2004. Appropriations resumed in 2008, but are far below the level needed to meet the demand for services. At current funding levels, ALSC turns away hundreds of families seeking assistance each year due to resource limitations.

How has the Fund been used?

- To date the fund has generated only $110,000 over a 4 year period -- far less than needed to address the critical unmet need for civil legal assistance.

How can the Fund be more effective?

- Support HB 299. If passed House Bill 299 would amend AS 37.05.590 so that 25% of Court system filing fees would be placed into the Civil Legal Services Fund.

I. Executive Summary

The past five years has been marked by massive decreases in funding for social and legal services to low and moderate income Alaskans. This change corresponds to a decline in federal funding of programs assisting these individuals nationwide. The need for these services however has not declined. Indeed, it is greater than ever.

In Alaska, as in many states, the effect of these funding cuts created a crisis for groups charged with providing legal and social assistance to the poor and near-poor. The impact on Alaska Legal Services Corporation (Alaska Legal Services), the primary provider of civil legal services to the poor, was particularly profound. As various groups mobilized individually in response, it rapidly became apparent that a joint effort, examining the legal needs of Alaska's low- and moderate-income population and recommending new ways of meeting those needs, would ensure the most comprehensive and effective approach to the problem.

This movement spurred the creation of the Equal Access to Civil Justice Task Force in November 1997. Its mandate was to explore the unmet legal needs of Alaskans and to suggest ways of meeting those needs. The Task Force included representatives from as many parts of the community and state (urban and rural) as possible, including judges, business leaders, members of the private bar, court officials, and legal services providers. The recommendations formulated by the Task Force are directed to Alaska Legal Services, the private bar, the court system, other legal services providers and the state legislature.

This report presents the Task Force's recommendations. It is divided into three sections. First, a summary of the Task Force's prioritized recommendations is set out. Second, a narrative section provides an overview of the work and history of this Task Force, the legal needs of the poor and Alaska's poverty population, and outlines the history of Alaska Legal Services and it's funding. The third section contains the various subcommittee findings and Steering Committee/Task Force approved recommendations.

This report contains a request to the Alaska Supreme Court to authorize the formation of an Implementation Task Force to put into place the recommendations set forth here.

II. Summary of Recommendations

The Steering Committee approved and presented to the Task Force approximately 60 specific recommendations. Over the course of a two-day meeting, the Task Force reviewed and prioritized those recommendations. The following list represents only these 22 prioritized recommendations. More detailed explanations of these and all the other recommendations appear in the last section of this report with a list of the findings made by each subcommittee to support the recommendations. (The page cite after the prioritized recommendations refers to the page in the report where the more detailed explanation of the recommendation appears). There is no significance to the order of the prioritized recommendations, i.e. Recommendation A has no greater priority than Recommendation V.

A. The Alaska Supreme Court should establish an "Access to Civil Justice Implementation Task Force" to act upon and put into place the recommendations forwarded by this Task Force.

B. The Alaska Bar Association should develop an Alaska "Modest Means Program" to provide moderate-income Alaskans (those who do not qualify for Alaska Legal Services), access to representation by attorneys who have agreed to charge a reduced hourly rate for their services. [p. 20]

C. A "One-Stop Shopping" customer-oriented intake and referral service for low-income clients with potential legal problems should be established. The service would include the development of a mentoring program for volunteer lawyers and would provide information on alternative dispute resolution and other resources. All resources in this "One-Stop Shopping" service would be available in as many different languages and formats as possible in order to assist the greatest number of people. This service would be available on-line and by an 800 number. [p. 26, 35]

D. By the year 2001, secure significant increased funding for Alaska Legal Services, at a minimum to 1982 levels. Even in 1982, the funding level was only minimally adequate funding for Alaska Legal Services. Updated to 2001 dollars that figure would be $5,000,000 that should be raised from traditional and new sources. [p. 24-25]

E. Increase rural Alaska Legal Services staff and open an Alaska Legal Services office with attorneys on staff in every community that maintains an Alaska Superior Court. [p. 25]

F. Alaska Legal Services should increase coordination with other service providers, particularly in rural areas where there already may be a network of providers or staff willing and able to establish an affiliation with Alaska Legal Services. [p. 25]

G. Alaska Legal Services and the Alaska Bar Association should coordinate a request to the American Bar Association regarding law students' externships outside a school's geographical area, to permit law students to come to Alaska (a state with no law school), and work at Alaska Legal Services for the externship period. [p. 26]

H. The concept of an expanded and liberated (free of Congressional restrictions) Pro Bono Program should be explored.[1] [p. 29]

I. A Pro Bono Asylum Project should be created to assist immigrants seeking political asylum in the United States. (A free continuing legal education class was held in March 1999, and is scheduled for March 2000 in Anchorage for attorneys willing to take on a pro bono asylum case. In 1999, thirty attorneys out of 40 attending accepted cases. Follow-up meetings are being held bi-weekly to provide mentoring for these attorneys). [p. 22]

J. A Pro Bono Naturalization Program should be created to work with elderly and disabled immigrants. [p. 22]

K. The Alaska Pro Bono Program should adopt administrative procedures that would allow for attorneys to assist other pro bono attorneys by doing discrete tasks such as research or motion preparation. [p. 30]

L. The Alaska Pro Bono Program should develop a mentoring program. (This has already been implemented). [p. 29]

M. The Alaska Bar Foundation should continue to seek new ways of increasing "Interest On Lawyer Trust Accounts" funding. [p. 30]

N. The Alaska Bar Association should recommend that the Alaska Supreme Court adopt the American Bar Association's Model Rule 6.1 an aspirational guideline that all attorneys should perform 50 hours of pro bono work per year. [p. 29]

O. The Alaska Bar Association should especially encourage public sector attorneys to perform pro bono work. [p. 29]

P. The Alaska Bar Association should provide free continuing legal education classes to pro bono attorneys in poverty law areas, with the condition that the attorneys would then be obligated to take a pro bono case. (This was initiated in [1] Currently, the Alaska Pro Bono Program operates under the same Congressional case restrictions as Alaska Legal Services. This might soon change as Alaska Legal Services has received oral and written confirmation from the national Legal Services Corporation approving a new plan for the Pro Bono Program which would in effect, sever it from Alaska Legal Services, and thus from the restrictions attached to the receipt of federal monies.

2011 ANNUAL CONVENTION

RESOLUTION 11-25

TITLE: SUPPORT FOR ALASKA LEGAL SERVICES CORPORATION

WHEREAS: Alaska Legal Services Corporation's (ALSC's) twenty lawyers serve a poverty population exceeding 80,000 Alaskans, including over 20,000 Native Alaskans, in ten offices around the state; and,

WHEREAS: Although the May 2000, Alaska Supreme Court Access to Civil Justice Task Force Report recommended that ALSC be funded at $5 million annually, ALSC's actual funding has remained at approximately $3 million since that time; and

WHEREAS: That same report estimated that approximately ½ of this population would face a legal need at some point during any given 12-month period; and

WHEREAS: ALSC estimates that it is currently providing assistance to only 10%-20% of those needing such assistance, which figure appears to be consistent with estimate of 20% in the national Legal Services Corporation report from September 2005, "Documenting the Justice Gap in America"; and

WHEREAS: The vast majority of ALSC's cases involve the basic human necessities of shelter, food, access to medical care, income, maintenance, and safety and stability within the family; and,

WHEREAS: Several regional Native nonprofits, including Bristol Bay Native Association, Maniilaq Association, and Kawerak have made significant financial and in-kind contributions over the years for the re-establishment of small ALSC offices which had formerly had to be closed in the communities of Dillingham, Nome, and Kotzebue; and others, including the Central Council of Tlingit-Haida Indian Tribes of Alaska, the Tanana Chiefs Conference, the Inupiaq Community of the Arctic Slope, and the Nome Eskimo Community have otherwise provided support for ALSC; and,

WHEREAS: The State of Alaska, which had for several years been one of only five states making no appropriation for civil legal assistance to its citizens, did make an appropriation to ALSC for FY 2011, approved by Governor Parnell, in the amount of $350,000, but it is unclear whether this will be sustained in future fiscal years; and,

NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED by the Delegates to the 2011 Annual Convention of the Alaska Federation of Natives, Inc., that AFN urges Governor Parnell to retain and increase the appropriation for ALSC in his proposed FY 2012 budget, and urges the Alaska Legislature to appropriate that funding, and urges Congress to award sufficient funding to the federal Legal Services Corporation to support Alaska Legal Services Corporation's mission of providing free legal services on vital issues to low income Alaskans.

On behalf of the AARP members in Alaska, we encourage you and your colleagues on the House Judiciary Committee to support HB 299, authored by your Committee Vice-Chair Steve Thompson and co-sponsored by your Committee colleague Representative Max Gruenberg as well as Representatives Les Gara, Mia Costello, and Beth Kerttula.

HB 299 would provide a mechanism to increase funding for legal services for lower income Alaskans.

Because of their unique health, income and social needs, and because they often depend on services provided by government agencies with complex requirements, older people must have access to competent legal assistance. As Alaska's population ages, the requests for landlord/tenant dispute resolution and other housing matters, quality health care and treatment, public benefits, fraud, and abuse and neglect will only increase for Alaska's seniors. HB 299 will provide additional funds to support the civil legal aid needs of low-income Alaskans, including many older clients.

We receive many calls, as I am sure you do, from older Alaskans with a legal problem or question who simply do not know where to go. There is great concern about the cost of seeking a private attorney and the ability to refer older callers to legal services assistance is of great importance to us as well as to them. HOUSE BILL NO.

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SEVENTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

BY REPRESENTATIVE JOHANSEN

Introduced:
Referred:

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act providing for purging records when a criminal charge is dismissed or a person is acquitted of a crime; and adding Rule 35.3 to the Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

* Section 1. AS 12.62 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 12.62.195. Purging records after dismissal or acquittal. Notwithstanding AS 12.62.190, as soon as practicable following the dismissal of criminal charges against a defendant or arrestee, a judgment or order of acquittal, or other discharge of the proceedings in favor of the defendant or arrestee, the court in which charges were brought shall issue an order to purge, delete, or destroy from all official records in the state so that no trace of the information remains all records relating to the charges brought against the defendant or arrestee, including court records, information collected, stored, processed, or disseminated or records of arrest, complaint, indictment, information, trial, dismissal, or discharge. The effect of the order shall be to restore the person, in the contemplation of the law and in the public record, to the status occupied by the person before charges, arrest, indictment, or information. Upon entry of the order, the arrest or other proceeding shall be considered not to have occurred, and the defendant or arrestee may answer accordingly any questions relating to its occurrence.

 Sec. 2. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. The Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure are amended by adding a new rule to read:

Rule 35.3. Records purged on acquittal or dismissal. As soon as practicable following the dismissal of criminal charges against a defendant or arrestee, a judgment or order of acquittal, or other discharge of the proceedings in favor of the defendant or arrestee, the court in which charges were brought shall issue an order to purge, delete, or destroy from all official records in the state so that no trace of the information remains all records relating to the charges brought against the defendant or arrestee, including court records, information collected, stored, processed, or disseminated or records of arrest, complaint, indictment, information, trial, dismissal, or discharge. The effect of the order shall be to restore the person, in the contemplation of the law and in the public record, to the status occupied by the person before charges, arrest, indictment, or information. Upon entry of the order, the arrest or other proceeding shall be considered not to have occurred, and the defendant or arrestee may answer accordingly any questions relating to its occurrence.

 Sec. 3. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

APPLICABILITY. AS 12.61.195, enacted by sec. 1 of this Act, applies to charges dismissed or judgments of acquittal ordered on or after the effective date of this Act.

 Sec. 4. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

CONDITIONAL EFFECT. AS 12.61.195, enacted by sec. 1 of this Act, takes effect only if sec. 2 of this Act receives the two-thirds majority vote of each house required by art. IV, sec. 15, Constitution of the State of Alaska.

Removing a Discharged Conviction: A Jobs and Fairness Issue

There is currently an anomaly under Alaska law. If you commit a lesser, non-violent, non-sexual crime; otherwise have a clean record; show good evidence that you won't commit another crime; and go through probation cleanly; in rare cases a judge will, under current law, remove your conviction. We don't change that law at all by this legislation.

However, it is unclear under Alaska law whether a person, such as a minor who had one Minor Consuming conviction, can state on a job application that they have never been convicted of a crime. If they say they have, of course, their job prospects are harmed.

HB 303 says that if your conviction is removed, you should be allowed to say you have not been convicted of a crime on things like job applications. This will give people who have done little wrong in life the chance to succeed in school and our economy, by not having to jeopardize employment, or admittance, based on a conviction that does not exist.

Feel free to call with any questions. Thank you.

HOUSE BILL NO. 303

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SEVENTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

BY REPRESENTATIVES GARA, Kerttula

Introduced: 1/27/12
Referred: Judiciary

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to suspended imposition of sentence for certain criminal offences."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

Suspending imposition of sentence

 Section 1. AS 12.55.085(e) is amended to read:

(e) Upon the discharge by the court without imposition of sentence, the court may set aside the conviction and issue to the person a certificate to that effect. As a matter of state law and policy, a person who receives a certificate under this subsection may truthfully answer questions relating to the offense that the person has not been convicted of the offense that was set aside.

MEMORANDUM February 1, 2012

SUBJECT: Suspending Imposition of Sentence Under AS 12.55.085; Excluded Offenses and Exclusions (HB 303; Work Order No. 27-LS1192\M)

TO: Representative Les Gara
Attn: Toby Smith

FROM: Doug Gardner
Director

The question you asked is which crimes qualify for a suspended imposition of sentence (SIS) under AS 12.55.085, and which offenses are excluded.

The answer to your question may be found by reading AS 12.55.085(f), which provides:

> (f) The court may not suspend the imposition of sentence of a person who
> (1) is convicted of a violation of AS 11.41.100 - 11.41.220, 11.41.260 - 11.41.320, 11.41.360 - 11.41.370, 11.41.410 - 11.41.530, AS 11.46.400, or AS 11.61.125 - 11.61.128;
> (2) uses a firearm in the commission of the offense for which the person is convicted; or
> (3) is convicted of a violation of AS 11.41.230 - 11.41.250 or a felony and the person has one or more prior convictions for a misdemeanor violation of AS 11.41 or for a felony or for a violation of a law in this or another jurisdiction having similar elements to an offense defined as a misdemeanor in AS 11.41 or as a felony in this state; for the purposes of this paragraph, a person shall be considered to have a prior conviction even if that conviction has been set aside under (e) of this section or under the equivalent provision of the laws of another jurisdiction.

As you can see from reviewing the statute, policy decisions have been made by the legislature to exclude the granting of an SIS to offenders convicted of all offenses in the range from murder (AS 11.41.100) through assault in the third degree (AS 11.41.220), which is a C felony. Note that assault in the fourth degree (AS 11.41.230) is an offense eligible for an SIS unless otherwise excluded by the statute because it involved a firearm, or the offender's record otherwise precluded the offender from being eligible for an SIS.

Continuing through the list of offenses not eligible for an SIS are stalking, assault on an unborn child, kidnapping and custodial interference in the first degree (AS 11.41.260 - 11.41.320) (note custodial interference in the second degree is an offense eligible for an SIS; AS 11.41.330), and human trafficking (AS 11.41.360 - 11.41.370). The statute continues to exempt all sexual offenses from sexual assault in the first degree (AS 11.41.410) through coercion (AS 11.41.530), arson in the first degree (AS 11.46.400), and distribution of child pornography (AS 11.61.125) through distribution of indecent materials to minors (AS 11.61.128).

You indicated in your request for advice that you intended that only "non-serious" crimes be eligible for an SIS. Previous legislatures have exercised judgment on what offenses should and should not be eligible for an SIS. Please review the offenses discussed above, and referred to in AS 12.55.085(f) the type of conduct the offense involved (using a firearm, etc.), to determine if an SIS only applies to your view of what constitutes a "non-serious" offense.

BILL NO. HB 303

Analysis

HB 303 provides that as a matter of state law a person who receives a certificate stating that his or her conviction has been set aside under the provisions of AS 12.55.085 (suspended imposition of sentence) may truthfully say that the person had not been convicted of the offense.

The fiscal impact to Department of Law is zero.

BILL NO. HB303

Analysis

This bill amends AS 12.55.085 by adding language that specifically allows a person who has a conviction set aside to say they have not been convicted of the offense in response to questions related to the offense. The Office of Public Advocacy does not anticipate any increased costs related to this legislation and therefore submits a zero impact fiscal note.

Sec. 12.55.085. Suspending imposition of sentence. (a) Except as provided in (f) of this section, if it appears that there are circumstances in mitigation of the punishment, or that the ends of justice will be served, the court may, in its discretion, suspend the imposition of sentence and may direct that the suspension continue for a period of time, not exceeding the maximum term of sentence that may be imposed or a period of one year, whichever is greater, and upon the terms and conditions that the court determines, and shall place the person on probation, under the charge and supervision of the probation officer of the court during the suspension.

(b) At any time during the probationary term of the person released on probation, a probation officer may, without warrant or other process, rearrest the person so placed in the officer's care and bring the person before the court, or the court may, in its discretion, issue a warrant for the rearrest of the person. The court may revoke and terminate the probation if the interests of justice require, and if the court, in its judgment, has reason to believe that the person placed upon probation is

(1) violating the conditions of probation;

(2) engaging in criminal practices; or

(3) violating an order of the court to participate in or comply with the treatment plan of a rehabilitation program under AS 12.55.015(a)(10).

(c) Upon the revocation and termination of the probation, the court may pronounce sentence at any time within the maximum probation period authorized by this section, subject to the limitation specified in AS 12.55.086(c).

(d) The court may at any time during the period of probation revoke or modify its order of suspension of imposition of sentence. It may at any time, when the ends of justice will be served, and when the good conduct and reform of the person held on probation warrant it, terminate the period of probation and discharge the person held. If the court has not revoked the order of probation and pronounced sentence, the defendant shall, at the end of the term of probation, be discharged by the court.

(e) Upon the discharge by the court without imposition of sentence, the court may set aside the conviction and issue to the person a certificate to that effect.

(f) The court may not suspend the imposition of sentence of a person who

(1) is convicted of a violation of AS 11.41.100 — 11.41.220, 11.41.260 — 11.41.320, 11.41.360 — 11.41.370, 11.41.410 — 11.41.530, AS 11.46.400, or AS 11.61.125 — 11.61.128;

(2) uses a firearm in the commission of the offense for which the person is convicted; or

(3) is convicted of a violation of AS 11.41.230 — 11.41.250 or a felony and the person has one or more prior convictions for a misdemeanor violation of AS 11.41 or for a felony or for a violation of a law in this or another jurisdiction having similar elements to an offense defined as a misdemeanor in AS 11.41 or as a felony in this state; for the purposes of this paragraph, a person shall be considered to have a prior conviction even if that conviction has been set aside under (e) of this section or under the equivalent provision of the laws of another jurisdiction. Effect of amendments. — The 2010 amendment, effective July 1, 2010, in (f), in the introductory language, added "11.41.360 — 11.41.370" and "or AS 11.61.125 — 11.61.128", and in (f)(3) deleted "substantially" preceding "similar elements to an offense".

Editor's notes. — Section 2, ch. 55, SLA 1996 provides that the amendments to subsection (f) made by § 1, ch. 55, SLA 1996 apply "to offenses committed on or after September 4, 1996," except that references

"to prior convictions refer to convictions occurring before, on, or after September 4, 1996".

Section 21(a), ch. 18, SLA 2010, provides that the 2010 amendment of (f) of this section applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 2010.

NOTES TO DECISIONS

I. General Consideration.
II. Conditions of Probation.
III. Revocation of Probation.
IV. Setting Conviction Aside.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

AS 12.55.080 and subsection (a) now apply to Title 17. Stonefield v. State, 635 P.2d 494 (Alaska Ct. App. 1981).

Application of paragraph (f)(1). — Because the rule of lenity must prevail where legislative intent is ambiguous, and because it could not be said with certainty that the legislature intended to bar courts from imposing a suspended sentence for convictions of conspiracy, the appellate court ruled that this section did not preclude a court from granting a suspended sentence to persons convicted of conspiracy to commit one of the listed crimes. George v. State, 988 P.2d 1116 (Alaska Ct. App. 1999).

Application of paragraph (f)(2). — Defendant's claim that paragraph (f)(2) should be interpreted as applying only to crimes against people, not all crimes, was held not persuasive. Orr-Hickey v. State, 973 P.2d 612 (Alaska Ct. App. 1999).

Disposition should be limited. — A suspended imposition of sentence is primarily meant to be a one-time opportunity for particularly deserving first-offenders. It is a disposition ill-suited for repeated use with a persistent offender. State v. Huletz, 838 P.2d 1257 (Alaska Ct. App. 1992).

State law prohibits city from enacting ordinance providing for mandatory minimum sentence. City of Kodiak v. Jackson, 584 P.2d 1130 (Alaska 1978).

Mandatory minimum sentences created by city ordinances are invalid when in irreconcilable conflict with state law. Wright v. Municipality of Anchorage, 590 P.2d 425 (Alaska 1979).

Municipal enactments consistent with state laws. — Because municipalities are generally authorized to enact traffic laws consistent with state motor vehicle statutes, a municipality does not violate the sentencing provisions of AS 12.55.080 and this section if it follows the lead of the state legislature and enacts mandatory jail sentences and mandatory fines for the offenses of driving while under the influence and breath-test refusal. McCormick v. Municipality of Anchorage, 999 P.2d 155 (Alaska Ct. App. 2000).

Different limitations of probation period. — Under AS 12.55.080, a court may suspend the execution of all or a portion of a sentence and place the defendant on probation "for a period and upon the terms and conditions as the court considers best." That period of probation, however, is specifically limited by AS 12.55.090(c). This differs from probation granted after the court suspends the imposition of any sentence under subsection (a) of this section. Tiedeman v. State, 576 P.2d 114 (Alaska 1978).

Where probation is granted after the court suspends the imposition of any sentence, the legislature has specifically limited the period of probation to a term not to exceed the maximum sentence which could be imposed for the particular offense. Tiedeman v. State, 576 P.2d 114 (Alaska 1978).

Where the court actually imposed sentence and suspended the execution of a portion thereof, the only statutory limitation on the term of probation is that contained in AS 12.55.090(c). Tiedeman v. State, 576 P.2d 114 (Alaska 1978).

Granting credit toward sentence. — This section merely defines the period in which sentencing may be imposed after it has been deferred; it in no sense precludes the granting of credit towards that sentence. Lock v. State, 609 P.2d 539 (Alaska 1980).

Upon revocation of probation, one is entitled to credit against his sentence on the original offense for time spent, as a condition of probation, in a rehabilitation program which imposes substantial restrictions on one's freedom of movement and behavior. Lock v. State, 609 P.2d 539 (Alaska 1980).

The limitation contained in AS 12.55.090(c) applies only to the period of probation to be served after the imposition of a sentence and suspension of all or a portion thereof pursuant to AS 12.55.080. Therefore, in calculating the period of probation allowable under AS 12.55.090(c), the court was not bound to consider the period of probation already served by defendant under its original order suspending the imposition of sentence pursuant to subsection (a). Elstad v. State, 599 P.2d 137 (Alaska 1979); Rice v. State, 603 P.2d 913 (Alaska 1979).

Period of suspension must begin when order entered. — The trial court was not clearly mistaken in imposing a sentence of six years' imprisonment for a forgery count, with three years suspended, and in suspending imposition of sentence for a count of uttering a check with insufficient funds for a stated period of five years the period of suspension to run consecutively to the sentence for forgery, except to the extent that the trial court appeared to have suspended the imposition of sentence for the uttering count for a period of time one year in excess of that permitted by this section. Cochran v. State, 586 P.2d 175 (Alaska 1978).

Since there was no logical way that the trial court could cause the period of suspension to begin several years in the future, i.e., at the end of the six-year term for forgery, and the period of suspension and probationary term had to begin when the trial court's order was entered, the supreme court held that what the judgment meant was that the imposition of sentence on the charge of uttering a check with insufficient funds was suspended, and defendant placed on probation, from the date of its entry until five years after the defendant's six-year term of imprisonment expired. Cochran v. State, 586 P.2d 175 (Alaska 1978).

Discretion of sentencing court. — Whether or not a sentencing court should impose a suspended imposition of sentence in a given case is, by subsection (a), left to the discretion of the sentencing court. Nattrass v. State, 554 P.2d 399 (Alaska 1976).

Subsection (a) of this section reposes discretion in the trial court to suspend imposition of the sentence and place the defendant on probation. Mullins v. State, 573 P.2d 860 (Alaska 1978).

The state legislature has conferred broad discretionary powers on the sentencing court to establish conditions of probation when imposition of sentence is to be deferred. Sprague v. State, 590 P.2d 410 (Alaska 1979).

When sentencing alternative should be considered. — Generally, in the circumstances of youthful first offenders, who have committed nonviolent crimes, serious consideration should be given by Alaska's trial courts to the sentencing alternative offered by subsection (a) of this section. Nattrass v. State, 554 P.2d 399 (Alaska 1976); Wharton v. State, 590 P.2d 427 (Alaska 1979); Troyer v. State, 614 P.2d 313 (Alaska 1980); Burrell v. State, 626 P.2d 1087 (Alaska Ct. App. 1981).

When suspended sentence prohibited. — The prohibition against the granting of a suspended imposition of sentence applies to persons convicted of an attempt to commit one of the sexual offenses defined in the criminal code. Mack v. State, 900 P.2d 1202 (Alaska Ct. App. 1995).

Superior court did not abuse discretion in failing to impose suspended imposition of sentence. — See Nattrass v. State, 554 P.2d 399 (Alaska 1976).

Where at the time of sentencing for the crime of embezzlement by an employee of property worth more than $100, defendant was 22 years old, had been working several years and had spent two semesters in college, and, other than minor traffic violations, he had no previous criminal record, the trial court was not clearly mistaken in failing to order a suspended imposition of sentence, instead of actually imposing a sentence of three years and four months, with the entire period suspended upon the condition that he enter a twelve-month period of public service. Mullins v. State, 573 P.2d 860 (Alaska 1978).

Alaska's trial judges totally barred from engaging in either charge or sentencing bargaining. — See State v. Buckalew, 561 P.2d 289 (Alaska 1977).

Sentence modification. — Where the defendant detrimentally relied on the statement of an assistant district attorney that a plea agreement would not affect the renewal of his hunting license, he was to be provided with the opportunity to request that the sentencing court modify his sentencing conditions, notwithstanding any statute of limitations otherwise imposed on such modification. Boyd v. State, Dep't of Commerce & Economic Dev., 977 P.2d 113 (Alaska 1999).

Applied in Speas v. State, 511 P.2d 130 (Alaska 1973); Call v. State, 511 P.2d 135 (Alaska 1973); White v. State, 523 P.2d 428 (Alaska 1974); Andrews v. State, 552 P.2d 150 (Alaska 1976); Franzen v. State, 573 P.2d 55 (Alaska 1978); Wharton v. State, 590 P.2d 427 (Alaska 1979); Anderson v. State, 621 P.2d 1345 (Alaska 1981); Lowry v. State, 655 P.2d 780 (Alaska Ct. App. 1982); Davis v. Hernandez, 877 P.2d 1309 (Alaska Ct. App. 1994).

Quoted in Fresneda v. State, 458 P.2d 134 (Alaska 1969); Edinger v. State, 598 P.2d 943 (Alaska 1979); Mangold v. State, 613 P.2d 272 (Alaska 1980); Benboe v. State, 738 P.2d 356 (Alaska Ct. App. 1987); Gwalthney v. State, 964 P.2d 1285 (Alaska Ct. App. 1998).

App. 1988); State v. Staael, 807 P.2d 513 (Alaska Ct. App. 1991).

II. CONDITIONS OF PROBATION.

Authority to impose period of incarceration as condition of probation prior to enactment of AS 12.55.086. — See Boyne v. State, 586 P.2d 1250 (Alaska 1978); Sprague v. State, 590 P.2d 410 (Alaska 1979).

Imposition of jail time as condition of probation. — Imposition of jail time as a special condition of probation is not authorized under the Alaska statutes governing probation generally. Alaska law does, however, permit the imposition of jail time as a special condition of probation when the imposition of sentence is suspended under this section, as provided by AS 12.55.086(a). Whittlesey v. State, 626 P.2d 1066 (Alaska 1980).

When it was not imposed in accordance with AS 12.55.086(a), the requirement of jail time as a special condition of probation was illegal, and the sentence must, therefore, be vacated and the case remanded for resentencing. Whittlesey v. State, 626 P.2d 1066 (Alaska 1980).

III. REVOCATION OF PROBATION.

Subsection (b) provides for the revocation of probation for the violation of conditions imposed or engaging in criminal practices. Snyder v. State, 496 P.2d 62 (Alaska 1972).

In order to revoke probation, the state must prove a violation of a specific condition of probation. Holton v. State, 602 P.2d 1228 (Alaska 1979).

This section provides an independent basis for the court's terminating probation at any point during the period of the suspended imposition of sentence if the probationer engages in criminal practices. Burrell v. State, 626 P.2d 1087 (Alaska Ct. App. 1981).

Revocation of probation before the probationary term begins does not impermissibly extend the term in violation of AS 12.55.090(c). Enriquez v. State, 781 P.2d 578 (Alaska Ct. App. 1989).

When the accused has engaged in "criminal practices," the sentencing court has the authority to revoke probation, even when the probationary term has not yet commenced. Enriquez v. State, 781 P.2d 578 (Alaska Ct. App. 1989).

Probation can be revoked on the basis of a conviction which is on appeal and, therefore, not yet final. Alexander v. State, 578 P.2d 591 (Alaska 1978).

Prior notice of charges required. — Constitutional due process does require that a probationer accused of violating a condition of his probation receive prior notice of the charges against him and that he be given an opportunity to meet and refute the charges. Burrell v. State, 626 P.2d 1087 (Alaska Ct. App. 1981).

As well as independent determination of good cause. — The requirement of an independent determination of good cause beyond mere proof of a probation violation for revocation of probation applies to cases involving suspended impositions of sentence under AS 12.55.080 and subsection (a) of this section, as well as to cases involving suspended executions of sentence under AS 12.55.080. Rich v. State, 640 P.2d 159 (Alaska Ct. App. 1982).

State's burden in seeking probation revocation is to establish a probation violation by a preponderance of the evidence. Burrell v. State, 626 P.2d 1087 (Alaska Ct. App. 1981).

Disposition on probation revocation. — The disposition when probation is revoked should be based on consideration of all relevant matters, including the probationer's original crime, his intervening conduct; and the violations of probation. Nix v. State, 624 P.2d 825 (Alaska Ct. App. 1981).

IV. SETTING CONVICTION ASIDE.

When set-aside orders may be entered. — Set-aside orders may be entered only in cases where a sentence has never formally been imposed against the defendant. Richey v. State, 717 P.2d 407 (Alaska Ct. App. 1986); Champion v. State, 908 P.2d 454 (Alaska Ct. App. 1995).

Where the judge had already rescinded defendant's suspended imposition of sentence and had formally imposed sentence and defendant was never discharged from probation under subsection (d), the judge had no authority to set aside his conviction under subsection (e). Richey v. State, 717 P.2d 407 (Alaska Ct. App. 1986).

Granting set-aside as matter of right. — No affirmative showing or finding of rehabilitation need be made before a set-aside is granted; rather, a set-aside should be granted as a matter of right unless some specific reason for denial is established. Wickham v. State, 770 P.2d 757 (Alaska Ct. App. 1989).

Notice of refusal to set aside conviction. — Before a sentencing court may refuse to set aside a conviction under subsection (e), the defendant must be given notice that there is reason to believe a set-aside should not be granted, with a precise statement of the reason or reasons, and must be afforded an opportunity for a hearing on the set-aside issue. Mekiana v. State, 707 P.2d 918 (Alaska Ct. App. 1985), rev'd on other grounds, 726 P.2d 189 (Alaska 1986).

Explanation by court. — By enacting the set-aside language of subsection (e), the legislature clearly intended to provide probationers who received a suspended imposition of sentence with the prospect of a clean slate and the promise of a new beginning upon successful completion of probation; a sentencing court cannot thwart this legislative goal — or, for that matter, hinder appellate review — by denying such relief without explanation. Mekiana v. State, 707 P.2d 918 (Alaska Ct. App. 1985), rev'd on other grounds, 726 P.2d 189 (Alaska 1986).

Correct remedy where defendant discharged from probation and denied set aside without prior notice and hearing was not an automatic set-aside but a delayed hearing on the set aside issue. State v. Mekiana, 726 P.2d 189 (Alaska 1986).

Effect of setting aside conviction on registration requirement. — Applying the Alaska Sex Offender Registration Act, AS 12.63.010 et seq., to a person whose conviction was set aside under this section, before the Act became specifically applicable to convictions that were set aside unconstitutionally interfered with the individual's liberty interests and was not justified by a compelling governmental interest. Doe v. Dep't of Public Safety, 92 P.3d 398 (Alaska 2004).

Effect on professional certification of setting aside conviction. — Nursing board, in denying an application for certification as a nurse aide, did not err in considering the applicant's previous felony forgery conviction, notwithstanding that the conviction had been set aside; setting aside an individual's conviction does not expunge the conviction from the individual's criminal record, and the applicant remained a person who was "convicted" of a criminal offense within the meaning of AS 08.68.334(2). State v. Platt, 169 P.3d 595 (Alaska 2007).

Belated set-aside hearing comporting with due process. — A belated set-aside hearing will not offend due process as long as the trial court (1) considers only those facts existing at the time the probationer was discharged and (2) explains on the record its reasons for denying a set aside. In other words, the court must decide the set-aside question based upon an evaluation of the defendant's conduct and situation as of the date of discharge from probation. State v. Mekiana, 726 P.2d 189 (Alaska 1986).

Belated set-aside hearing related back to date defendant was discharged from probation, where the defendant completed probation on a suspended imposition of sentence and had the conviction set aside in a belated set-aside hearing. Hansen v. State, 824 P.2d 1384 (Alaska Ct. App. 1992).

When expungement authorized. — The inherent authority of courts to expunge criminal records did not extend to a defendant who received a suspended sentence and had his conviction set aside after he completed probation, but who never established his factual innocence nor challenged the conviction or the underlying arrest; nor is there authority to expunge a charge which was dismissed because the state obtained evidence in violation of a warrant, since neither the validity of the substantive information nor fundamental fairness was implicated. Journey v. State, 850 P.2d 663 (Alaska Ct. App. 1993), aff'd, 895 P.2d 955 (Alaska 1995).

Expunction not part of set aside. — Expunction of a defendant's criminal record is not authorized under the set-aside provisions of subsection (e). The district court lacked statutory authority to order the criminal record expunged upon "discharge by the court without imposition of sentence" and the subsequent setting aside of his conviction. Journey v. State, 895 P.2d 955 (Alaska 1995).

Set-aside conviction not to be used for impeachment. — The set-aside provisions of this section "require a substantial showing of rehabilitation," within the meaning of Alaska Rule of Evidence 609 (d)(2). Accordingly, a prior conviction may not be relied on for impeachment purposes after it has been set aside pursuant to this section. Wickham v. State, 844 P.2d 1140 (Alaska Ct. App. 1993).

Set-aside order properly denied. — Trial court properly denied defendant's motion to set aside his prior convictions because, although defendant's three-year probationary term had passed, defendant had made no effort to contact the Department of Corrections or to fulfill his obligations; therefore, defendant did not successfully complete his probation. Hanson v. State, 210 P.3d 1240 (Alaska Ct. App. 2009).

Collateral references. — Propriety of considering acts because of which probation was revoked in imposing sentence for original offense after revocation of probation. 65 ALR3d 1100.

Sec. 12.55.086. Imprisonment as a condition of suspended imposition of sentence. (a) When the imposition of sentence is suspended under AS 12.55.085, the court may require, as a special condition of probation, that the defendant serve a definite term of continuous or periodic imprisonment, not to exceed the maximum term of imprisonment that could have been imposed. The court may recommend that the defendant serve all or part of the term in a correctional restitution center.

(b) A defendant imprisoned under this section is entitled to a deduction from the term of imprisonment for good conduct under AS 33.20.010. Unless otherwise specified in the order of suspension of imposition of sentence, a defendant imprisoned under this section is eligible for parole if the term of imprisonment exceeds one year and is eligible for any work furlough, rehabilitation furlough, or similar program available to other state prisoners.

(c) If probation is revoked and the defendant is sentenced to imprisonment, the defendant shall receive credit for time served under this section. Deductions for good conduct under AS 33.20.010 do not constitute "time served." (§ 1 ch 32 SLA 1979; am § 4 ch 72 SLA 1985)

NOTES TO DECISIONS

For legislative history of this section, see Zurfluh v. State, 620 P.2d 690 (Alaska 1980).

Retroactive application. — This section may be applied retrospectively to the 153-day period between the decision in State v. Boyne, 586 P.2d 1250 (Alaska 1978) and the effective date of this section. Zurfluh v. State, 620 P.2d 690 (Alaska 1980).

Logic used by court in Zurfluh v. State, 620 P.2d 690 (Alaska 1980), to make this section retroactive applies with equal force to cases in which sentencings occurred prior to the decision in Boyne v. State, 586 P.2d 1250 (Alaska 1978), and cases in which sentencing took place after Boyne was decided, but before this section took effect. Whittemore v. State, 650 P.2d 411 (Alaska Ct. App. 1982).

This section has no application to a children's proceeding. M.O.W. v. State, 645 P.2d 1229 (Alaska Ct. App. 1982).

When jail time may be imposed as condition of probation. — Imposition of jail time as a special condition of probation is not authorized under the Alaska statutes governing probation generally. Alaska law does, however, permit the imposition of jail time as a special condition of probation when the imposition of sentence is suspended under AS 12.55.085, as provided by subsection (a) of this section. Whittlesey v. State, 626 P.2d 1066 (Alaska 1980).

When it was not imposed in accordance with subsection (a) of this section, the requirement of jail time as a special condition of probation was illegal, and the sentence must, therefore, be vacated and the case remanded for resentencing. Whittlesey v. State, 626 P.2d 1066 (Alaska 1980).

120-day incarceration requirement for possession of marijuana for sale. — Where the superior court suspended the imposition of sentence for possession of marijuana for purpose of sale and placed defendant on probation for a period of two years but required, as one of the conditions of his probation, that defendant serve 120 days of incarceration, the supreme court held that the incarceration requirement did not amount to an excessive sentence although recently developed sentencing guidelines suggested a sentence of no more than 30 days for a marijuana sale involving the same quantity of the drug, for a first-time felony offender, since the sale of drugs on school premises, as occurred in this case, is particularly objectionable. Anderson v. State, 621 P.2d 1345 (Alaska 1981).

Sentence of six months' incarceration as a condition of receiving a suspended imposition of sentence, upon conviction of one count of selling intoxicating beverages without a license in a local option area, was not clearly mistaken, where defendant had set up a commercial enterprise, although of short duration, and sold a pint of whiskey to a man who murdered a woman shortly after buying the whiskey. Wassillie v. State, 790 P.2d 1385 (Alaska Ct. App. 1990).

Credit against sentence. — Upon revocation of probation, one is entitled to credit against his sentence on the original offense for time spent, as a condition of probation, in a rehabilitation program which imposes substantial restrictions on one's freedom of movement and behavior. Lock v. State, 609 P.2d 539 (Alaska 1980).

Quoted in Mangold v. State, 613 P.2d 272 (Alaska 1980).

Stated in State v. Brueggeman, 24 P.3d 583 (Alaska Ct. App. 2001).

Cited in Schmid v. State, 615 P.2d 565 (Alaska 1980); State v. First Nat'l Bank, 660 P.2d 406 (Alaska 1982); State v. Hernandez, 877 P.2d 1309 (Alaska Ct. App. 1994).

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to disclosure of records of the Department of Health and Social Services pertaining to children in certain circumstances; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 47.10.093(b) is amended to read:

(b) A state or municipal agency or employee shall disclose appropriate confidential information regarding a case to

(1) a guardian ad litem appointed by the court;

(2) a person or an agency requested by the department or the child's legal custodian to provide consultation or services for a child who is subject to the jurisdiction of the court under AS 47.10.010 as necessary to enable the provision of the consultation or services;

(3) an out-of-home care provider as necessary to enable the out-of-home care provider to provide appropriate care to the child, to protect the safety of the child, and to protect the safety and property of family members and visitors of the out-of-home care provider;

(4) a school official as necessary to enable the school to provide appropriate counseling and support services to a child who is the subject of the case, to protect the safety of the child, and to protect the safety of school students and staff;

(5) a governmental agency as necessary to obtain that agency's assistance for the department in its investigation or to obtain physical custody of a child;

(6) a law enforcement agency of this state or another jurisdiction as necessary for the protection of any child or for actions by that agency to protect the public safety;

(7) a member of a multidisciplinary child protection team created under AS 47.14.300 as necessary for the performance of the member's duties;

(8) the state medical examiner under AS 12.65 as necessary for the performance of the duties of the state medical examiner;

(9) a person who has made a report of harm as required by AS 47.17.020 to inform the person that the investigation was completed and of action taken to protect the child who was the subject of the report;

(10) the child support services agency established in AS 25.27.010 as necessary to establish and collect child support for a child who is a child in need of aid under this chapter;

(11) a parent, guardian, or caregiver of a child or an entity responsible for ensuring the safety of children as necessary to protect the safety of a child;

(12) a review panel established by the department for the purpose of reviewing the actions taken by the department in a specific case; [AND]

(13) the University of Alaska under the Alaska higher education savings program for children established under AS 47.14.400, but only to the extent that the information is necessary to support the program and only if the information released is maintained as a confidential record by the University of Alaska;

(14) a child placement agency licensed under AS 47.32 as necessary to provide services for a child who is the subject of the case; and

(15) a state or municipal agency of this state or another jurisdiction that is responsible for delinquent minors, as may be necessary for the administration of services, protection, rehabilitation, or supervision of a child or for actions by the agency to protect the public safety.

* Sec. 2. AS 47.12.310(b) is amended to read:

(b) A state or municipal agency or employee shall disclose

(1) information regarding a case to a federal, state, or municipal law enforcement agency for a specific investigation being conducted by that agency;

(2) appropriate information regarding a case to

(A) a guardian ad litem appointed by the court;

(B) a person or an agency requested by the department or the minor's legal custodian to provide consultation or services for a minor who is subject to the jurisdiction of the court under this chapter as necessary to enable the provision of the consultation or services;

(C) school officials as may be necessary to protect the safety of the minor who is the subject of the case and the safety of school students and staff or to enable the school to provide appropriate counseling and supportive services to meet the needs of a minor about whom information is disclosed;

(D) a governmental agency as may be necessary to obtain that agency's assistance for the department in its investigation or to obtain physical custody of a minor;

(E) a law enforcement agency of this state or another jurisdiction as may be necessary for the protection, rehabilitation, or supervision of any minor or for actions by that agency to protect the public safety;

(F) a victim or to the victim's insurance company as may be necessary to inform the victim or the insurance company about the arrest of the minor, including the minor's name and the names of the minor's parents, copies of reports, or the disposition or resolution of a case involving a minor;

(G) the state medical examiner under AS 12.65 as may be necessary to perform the duties of the state medical examiner;

(H) foster parents or relatives with whom the child is placed by the department as may be necessary to enable the foster parents or relatives to provide appropriate care for the child who is the subject of the case, to protect the safety of the child who is the subject of the case, and to protect the safety and property of family members and visitors of the foster parents or relatives;

(I) the Department of Law or its agent for use and subsequent release if necessary for collection of an order of restitution on behalf of the recipient;

(J) the Violent Crimes Compensation Board established in AS 18.67.020 for use in awarding compensation under AS 18.67.080; [AND]

(K) a state, municipal, or federal agency of this state or another jurisdiction that has the authority to license adult or children's facilities and services;

(L) a child placement agency licensed under AS 47.32 as necessary to provide services for a minor who is subject to the jurisdiction of the court under this chapter; and

(M) a state or municipal agency of this state or another jurisdiction that is responsible for child protection services, as may be necessary for the administration of services, protection, rehabilitation, or supervision of a minor or for actions by the agency to protect the public safety; and

(3) to the University of Alaska under the Alaska higher education savings program for children established under AS 47.14.400 information that is necessary to support the program, but only if the information released is maintained as a confidential record by the University of Alaska.

* Sec. 3. AS 47.12.310(f) is amended to read:

(f) The department may release to a person with a legitimate interest information relating to a minor [MINORS NOT] subject to the jurisdiction of the department [COURT] under this chapter. The department shall adopt regulations under AS 44.62 to implement this subsection, including regulations governing the release of information and standards for identifying a [SUFFICIENT] legitimate interest in the information.

 Sec. 4. AS 47.12.315 is repealed and reenacted to read:

Sec. 47.12.315. Public disclosure of information in department records relating to certain minors. (a) Notwithstanding AS 47.12.310 and except as otherwise provided in this section, the department shall disclose information to the public, on request, concerning a minor subject to this chapter who was at least 13 years of age at the time of commission of

(1) a felony offense against a person under AS 11.41;

(2) arson in the first or second degree;

(3) burglary in the first degree;

(4) distribution of child pornography;

(5) promoting prostitution in the first degree;

(6) misconduct involving a controlled substance in the first, second, or third degrees involving distribution or possession with intent to deliver; or

(7) misconduct involving weapons in the first through fourth degrees.

(b) The department may dis aajnaged rmation authorized in (a) of this section only if the court has ~~entered a finding~~ g adjudicating ~~adjudicating~~ the minor as delinquent.

(c) When required by this section to disclose information, the department may disclose only the name of the minor, the name of each legal parent or guardian, the specific offense alleged to have been committed in the petition, and the final outcome of the court proceedings relating to the offense. Before the disclosure, the department shall delete the information that identifies the victim of the offense.

(d) The department may not disclose the name of an out-of-home care provider with whom the minor was living at the time the minor was alleged to have committed the offense.

(e) If the department or other state or municipal agency maintains the information to be disclosed by electronic means that can be recovered from a computer database, the department or agency may disclose the information in that medium.

(f) The department may not release information under this section after five years from the date the department or other agency is first required or authorized to make the disclosure under this section.

(g) When disclosure is required under this section, the department may petition the court for an order prohibiting the disclosure. The court may grant the petition if, based on information presented in the petition or at an in camera hearing held on the petition, the court finds that

(1) the crime was an isolated incident and the minor does not present any further danger to the public; or

(2) the victim agrees that disclosure is inappropriate.

(h) In this section, unless the context otherwise requires, "out-of-home care provider" means a person, other than the child's legal parents, with whom a child who is in the custody of the state under AS 47.10, AS 47.12, or AS 47.14 is currently placed, including a foster parent, a relative other than a parent, and a person who has petitioned for adoption or guardianship of the child.

 Sec. 5. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

TRANSITION: REGULATIONS. The Department of Health and Social Services may adopt regulations necessary to implement the changes made by this Act. The regulations take effect under AS 44.62 (Administrative Procedure Act), but not before the effective date of secs. 1 - 4 of this Act.

 Sec. 6. Section 5 of this Act takes effect immediately under AS 01.10.070(c).

 Sec. 7. Except as provided in sec. 6 of this Act, this Act takes effect July 1, 2012.

That Alaska CINA R. 16(b) allows a court to order mental and physical examinations of a child's parents at the predisposition phase of a child-in-need-of-aid proceeding does not limit the court's authority under Alaska R. Civ. P. 35(a) to order a mental examination at the adjudication stage. Alyssa B. v. Dep't of Health & Social Servs., Op. No. 5930, 123 P.3d 646 (Alaska 2005).

Rule 9. Evidence.

(a) Applicability of Evidence Rules. The Alaska Rules of Evidence apply to child in need of aid proceedings to the same extent as they govern civil proceedings, except as otherwise provided by these rules.

(b) Privileges Inapplicable.

(1) Husband-Wife Privilege. The husband-wife privilege, Evidence Rule 505, does not apply to the parent, child or custodian in Child in Need of Aid proceedings.

(2) Physician-Patient Privilege. The physician-patient privilege, Evidence Rule 504, does not apply to the parent, child or custodian in Child in Need of Aid proceedings.

(3) Psychotherapist-Patient Privilege.

(A) The psychotherapist-patient privilege, Evidence Rule 504, applies to the parent, child or custodian in Child in Need of Aid proceedings only to the extent described in this rule.

(B) The privilege applies to the child unless the child or the child's guardian ad litem waives the privilege, or the party seeking disclosure shows that the need for the requested disclosure outweighs the child's interest in confidentiality.

(C) The privilege does not apply to the parent unless the parent shows that the parent's interest in confidentiality outweighs the need for the requested disclosure. No disclosure may be made until the parent has an opportunity to make this showing.

(D) When considering a request to disclose or protect a communication, the court shall consider the following:

(i) the content and nature of the communication;

(ii) the purposes of AS 47.10, as expressed by AS 47.05.060, and of Evidence Rule 504;

(iii) whether there is any other effective way to obtain the information; and

(iv) whether the public interest and need for disclosure outweighs the potential injury to the patient and the patient's psychotherapist relationship.

Before ruling on such a request, the court may inspect records in camera. The court may allow, limit, or prohibit disclosure and use of the communication.

(E) If the court grants the request for disclosure of the child's privileged information, the court order must:

(i) limit disclosure to those parts of the child's records which are essential to fulfill the purpose of the disclosure;

(ii) limit disclosure to those persons whose need for the information is the basis for the order; and

(iii) include such other measures as are necessary to limit disclosure for the protection of the child and the psychotherapist-patient relationship.

(F) Evidence Rule 504(c) does not apply in child in need of aid proceedings. Unless otherwise ordered, the child's psychotherapist-patient privilege may only be claimed or waived as follows:

(i) If the child is twelve or older, the privilege may be claimed or waived by the child after consulting with an attorney, if an attorney has been appointed, or with the guardian ad litem.

(ii) If the child is younger than twelve, the privilege may be claimed or waived by the guardian ad litem.

(iii) The person who was the psychotherapist at the time of the communication is presumed to have authority to claim the privilege on behalf of the child.

PART V. PRELIMINARY PROCEEDINGS

Rule 10. Temporary Custody Hearing.

(a) Time of Hearing.

(1) At the request of the petitioner, the court shall schedule a temporary custody hearing:

(A) within 48 hours, including weekends and holidays, of when the court is notified by the filing of a petition that emergency custody was taken pursuant to CINA Rule 6(a) or (b); or

(B) within a reasonable time following the filing of a petition when emergency custody has not been taken.

(2) The court may continue a temporary custody hearing at the request of a parent or guardian upon a showing of good cause for why the parent or guardian is not prepared to respond to the petition. A continuance must be requested before or at the outset of the hearing.

(b) Conduct of Hearing.

(1) Opening Address. The court shall first determine whether the persons specified in CINA Rule 7(b) have received notice of the hearing. The court shall then determine whether all parties have received copies of the petition and understand its contents and shall advise the parties of the nature of the proceedings and possible disposition. In addition, the court shall advise the parties of the possibility of a temporary custody or supervision order pending adjudication and final disposition, and that the parents may be liable for child support payments if the child is placed outside the home at any time during the proceeding.

(2) Advice of Rights. The court shall advise the parties of their right to counsel, including the right to court-appointed counsel if applicable; the child's right to a guardian ad litem; their right to a hearing at which the state is required to present evidence to prove the allegations in its petition; their right to confront and cross-examine witnesses at such a hearing, to present witnesses on their own behalf, and to compulsory process to compel these witnesses to attend; and their privilege against self-incrimination. In cases involving an Indian child, the court shall also advise the parties of an Indian custodian's or tribe's right to intervene. If the hearing is being held because emergency custody was taken pursuant to CINA Rule 6(a) or (b), the court shall also advise the child's parents or guardian, if they are present at the hearing, that they each have the right to request a continuance of the hearing if they are not prepared to respond to the allegation that the child is a child in need of aid.

(3) The court may admit hearsay evidence which would be otherwise inadmissible under the Evidence Rules if the hearsay is probative of a material fact, has circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, and the appearing parties are given a fair opportunity to meet it.

(c) Findings of Fact and Order.

(1) The court shall order the child returned to the home and dismiss the petition if the court does not find probable cause to believe that the child is a child in need of aid under AS 47.10.011.

(2) The court shall order the child placed in the temporary custody of the Department or order the child returned to the home with supervision by the Department if the court finds probable cause to believe that the child is a child in need of aid under AS 47.10.011.

(3) The court may approve the removal of the child from the child's home only if the court finds that continued placement in the home is contrary to the welfare of the child; and, in cases involving an Indian child, either: (A) that removal from the child's parent or Indian custodian is necessary to prevent imminent physical damage or harm to the child; or (B) that there is clear and convincing evidence, including testimony of qualified expert witnesses, that the child is likely to suffer serious emotional or physical damage if left in the custody of the parent or Indian custodian.

(4) In any case in which the court has approved the removal of the child pursuant to the preceding subparagraph, the court shall make the inquiry and findings required by CINA Rule 10.1.

(d) Subsequent Proceedings. If the court orders the child placed in the temporary custody of the Department or orders the child returned to the home with supervision by the Department, the court must set the time for the adjudication hearing and for the pretrial conference and meeting of parties required by CINA Rule 13. The court may also set the time to file motions, complete discovery, exchange witness and exhibit lists, and file pretrial briefs. The court may schedule a disposition hearing in conjunction with the adjudication hearing. In such cases, the order setting the time for adjudication and disposition must also set the time to submit reports in aid of disposition.

(e) Review.

(1) If circumstances relating to the child's placement change pending adjudication or disposition, any party may request that the court review the temporary custody or supervision order.

(2) When a party seeks the return of a child to the child's home pending adjudication or disposition, if the party makes a prima facie showing that removal is no longer necessary, the burden of proof shifts to the Department as described below:

SPONSOR STATEMENT
CSHB 343 (HSS)

"An Act relating to disclosure of records of the Department of Health and Social Services pertaining to children in certain circumstances; and providing for an effective date."

The original version of Committee Substitute for House Bill 343 (Health and Social Services) was introduced at the request of the Alaska Department of Health and Social Services to:

1) Assure that the Division of Juvenile Justice and the Office of Children's Services could exchange information to provide necessary services to children without undue delay.

2) Allow individuals with a legitimate interest – such as former clients who once were children in state custody, their parents, or guardians – to receive information about delinquency history and health records from the Division of Juvenile Justice to help them apply for jobs, obtain student loans, or get health care.

3) Clarify current law regarding public disclosure of juvenile information which state officials say is cumbersome and difficult to interpret. The legislation strives to preserve legislative intent of balancing public safety through disclosing appropriate information on serious offenders with protecting the confidentially of offenders who pose less risk to society.

The House Health and Social Services Committee made one change to the original bill on March 15, 2012. Under Section 4, the public disclosure provision, page 5, line 15, it amended the measure to exclude misconduct involving weapons in the fifth degree. The disclosure provisions of the bill now apply to misconduct involving weapons in the first through fourth degrees.

CSHB 343 (HSS) is supported by the Division of Juvenile Justice and the Office of Children's Services.

Re: Sectional analysis of CSHB 343 (HSS), relating to the disclosure of children's records

Kindly note that a sectional analysis of a bill or resolution should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the measure itself. The legislation itself is the best statement of its contents.

Section 1. Amends AS 47.10.093(b), the state law on the disclosure of agency records that relates to children in need of aid, by adding two new subsections to allow the state Office of Children's Services to:

- Disclose confidential information regarding a child's case to a licensed child placement agency as needed to provide services for that child. See subsection (14), page 2, lines 30-31.
- Exchange current and historical case management records with the state Division of Juvenile Justice and agencies in other jurisdictions that are responsible for delinquent minors. See subsection (15), page 3, lines 1-4.

Section 2. Amends AS 47.12.310(b), the state law on agency records that relates to delinquent minors, by adding two new subsections to allow the state Division of Juvenile Justice to:

- Disclose confidential information regarding a case of a minor, who is subject to the jurisdiction of a court, to a licensed child placement agency as needed to provide services for that child. See subsection (L), page 4, lines 14-16.
- Exchange current and historical case management records with the state Office of Children's Services and agencies in other jurisdictions that are responsible for child protection services. See subsection (M), page 34, lines 17-21.

Section 3. Amends AS 47.12.310(f), the state law on agency records that relates to delinquent minors, by allowing the Division of Juvenile Justice to adopt regulations delineating what information it may release to someone who has a legitimate interest in a minor who is subject to the jurisdiction of the state Department of Health and Social Services. The provision also allows the division to set standards for identifying a legitimate interest in such records. See page 4, lines 26-31, and page 5, line 1.

Current law does not allow the division to release certain information about minors while they were under the jurisdiction of a court. A problem arises when former clients ask the agency for records about their contacts with the department while they were minors. The existing law would allow the agency to release information only if a minor's charges had been adjusted or if the minor had been placed on informal probation. Anything related to adjudications would not be available for release. This restriction can hurt those who need records for legitimate reasons such as applying for a job, obtaining student loans, or getting health care. This proposal is intended to help them as well as parents, guardians, or others who have a legitimate interest in this.

Section 4. Repeals and reenacts AS 47.12.315, the statute on public disclosure of information in agency records relating to certain minors. See page 5, lines 2-31, and page 6, lines 1-18.

This allows the Department of Health and Social Services to disclose information to the public, upon request, concerning a minor who is subject to the law on delinquent minors, AS 47.12. A child is someone who is at least 13 years of age at the time of committing a felony offense such as murder, manslaughter, assault, kidnapping, and other crimes as described under AS 11.41 as well as arson in the first or second degree, burglary in the first degree, distribution of child pornography, promoting prostitution in the first degree, misconduct involving a controlled substance in the first, second, or third degrees involving distribution or possession with intent to deliver, or misconduct involving weapons in the first through fifth degrees.

Current law allows public disclosure on informal adjustments for specified crimes or offenders who were previously adjudicated on any felony and are petitioned again for another felony.

This bill allows public disclosure if the Department of Health and Social Services has filed a petition seeking adjudication of a minor, a court has arraigned the minor on the petition, and the court has entered a finding that probable cause exists that the minor committed a delinquent act.

This new section will ensure that a juvenile's arrest on a charge that was determined by a judge to lack legal sufficiency will not be subject to public disclosure.

Other subsections describe what may be disclosed and prohibit releasing names of victims and out-of-home care providers. They allow the agency to disclose information electronically recovered from a computer database and prohibit the release of records after five years from the date the state is first required or authorized to make a disclosure. They would allow the department to petition a court for an order prohibiting disclosure if the court finds the crime was an isolated incident and the minor does not present any further danger to the public or if the victim agrees disclosure is inappropriate.

The final subsection defines out-of-home provider as someone who is other than a child's legal parents and with whom that minor is in state custody. This includes a foster parent, a child's relative, and a person who seeks to adopt or become a guardian of the minor.

Section 5. Amends uncodified law by adding a new section to allow the Department of Health and Social Services to adopt regulations as necessary to implement the changes made by this legislation.

Section 6. Provides for an immediate effective date for section 5.

Section 7. Provides an effective date for sections 1 through 4 of July 1, 2012.

Dear Representative Muñoz:

Thank you for your sponsorship of House Bill 343. The Division of Juvenile Justice fully supports this bill.

This bill makes several improvements to Alaska law regarding sharing and disclosure of juvenile information. Sections 1 and 2 clarify the authority of the Office of Children's Services (OCS) and the Division of Juvenile Justice (DJJ) to share records with each other to assist clients and to protect the public. Since 1999, when the Department of Health and Social Services split the Division of Family and Youth Services into two divisions (OCS and DJJ), there has been inconsistent understanding of the ability of these two agencies to share case information. The bill would amend AS 47.10.093 and AS 47.12.310 by stating clearly the legal authority for the sister divisions to provide necessary care and services without undue delay.

This bill will also provide clarification in AS 47.12.310 to allow individuals with a legitimate interest (e.g. former clients, parents, guardians) to receive information from the Division of Juvenile Justice to facilitate employment, health care, and other needs. The Division of Juvenile Justice routinely receives inquiries from former clients seeking information about their delinquency history, but statute has not been clear about our ability to provide this information to them. The change provided in the bill would allow the Division to develop regulations that provide this clarity. The changes proposed in Section 3 of the bill also will ensure that the state is in alignment with the federal HIPAA law. These changes are important to make because of the increasing frequency with which agencies and employers use barrier crimes and background checks to determine the fitness of candidates for employment and services, and the increased expectation that individuals have access to their own health care information.

Section 4 of the bill makes changes to AS 47.12.315, which allows public access to information regarding certain juvenile offenders. The original intention of this 1997 law was to increase the availability of some types of juvenile information to the general public. However, the practical application of this law has proved to be challenging. Division staff have found the law difficult to interpret and convey to juvenile offenders and the public. The changes proposed will expedite the ability of division staff to determine whether information on a particular juvenile or offense can be disclosed. The revision to the public disclosure law preserves the legislative intent of balancing public safety and confidentiality of juvenile records by disclosing appropriate information regarding more serious offenders while preserving confidentially of offenders posing less risk to the community.

Thank you for your leadership on these issues. The Division of Juvenile Justice looks forward to providing research and testimony in support of House Bill 343.

Dear Representative Munoz:

Thank you for sponsoring House Bill 343 Disclosure of Children's Records.

The Office of Children's Services supports this bill because it will allow improvements in our ability to exchange necessary, important information with our sister agency, the Division of Juvenile Justice. While throughout most of Alaska it is understood that our agencies can share information regarding our clients to ensure efficient use of resources and the best approaches to working with their families, occasional misunderstanding about this relationship among Departmental staff, attorneys, families, and judges can lead to confusion, withholding of information, and even court action to suppress sharing of information when actually the exchange can lead to better case management and more appropriate services for the child.

Many national organizations, including the Child Welfare League of America, have noted the benefits and importance of improved coordination between juvenile justice and child protection agencies.

The bill also includes provisions recommended by our Office that will facilitate better information sharing between child protection and juvenile justice agencies and Alaska's child placement agencies. These agencies license foster homes and place children in them. Both Juvenile Justice and Children's Services rely on child placement agencies to provide services for youth under our jurisdiction; better coordination with these agencies will only improve our ability to serve them.

Please contact me if I can answer any questions or be of other assistance.

Sincerely,

C. Lawton

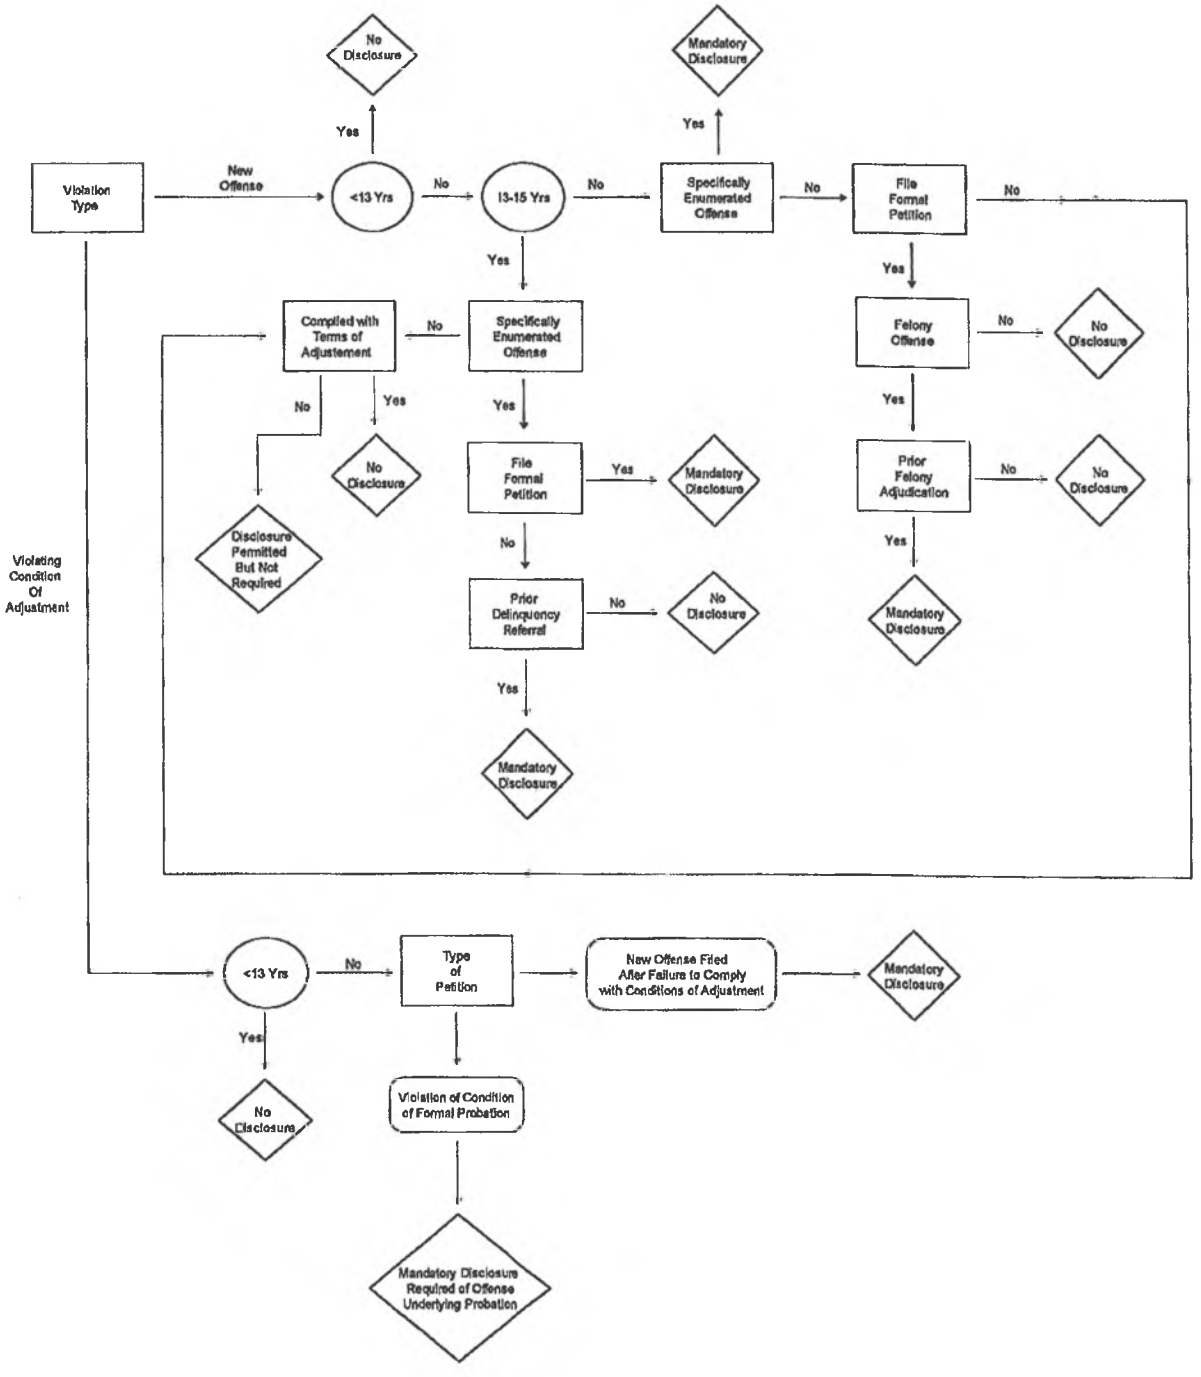
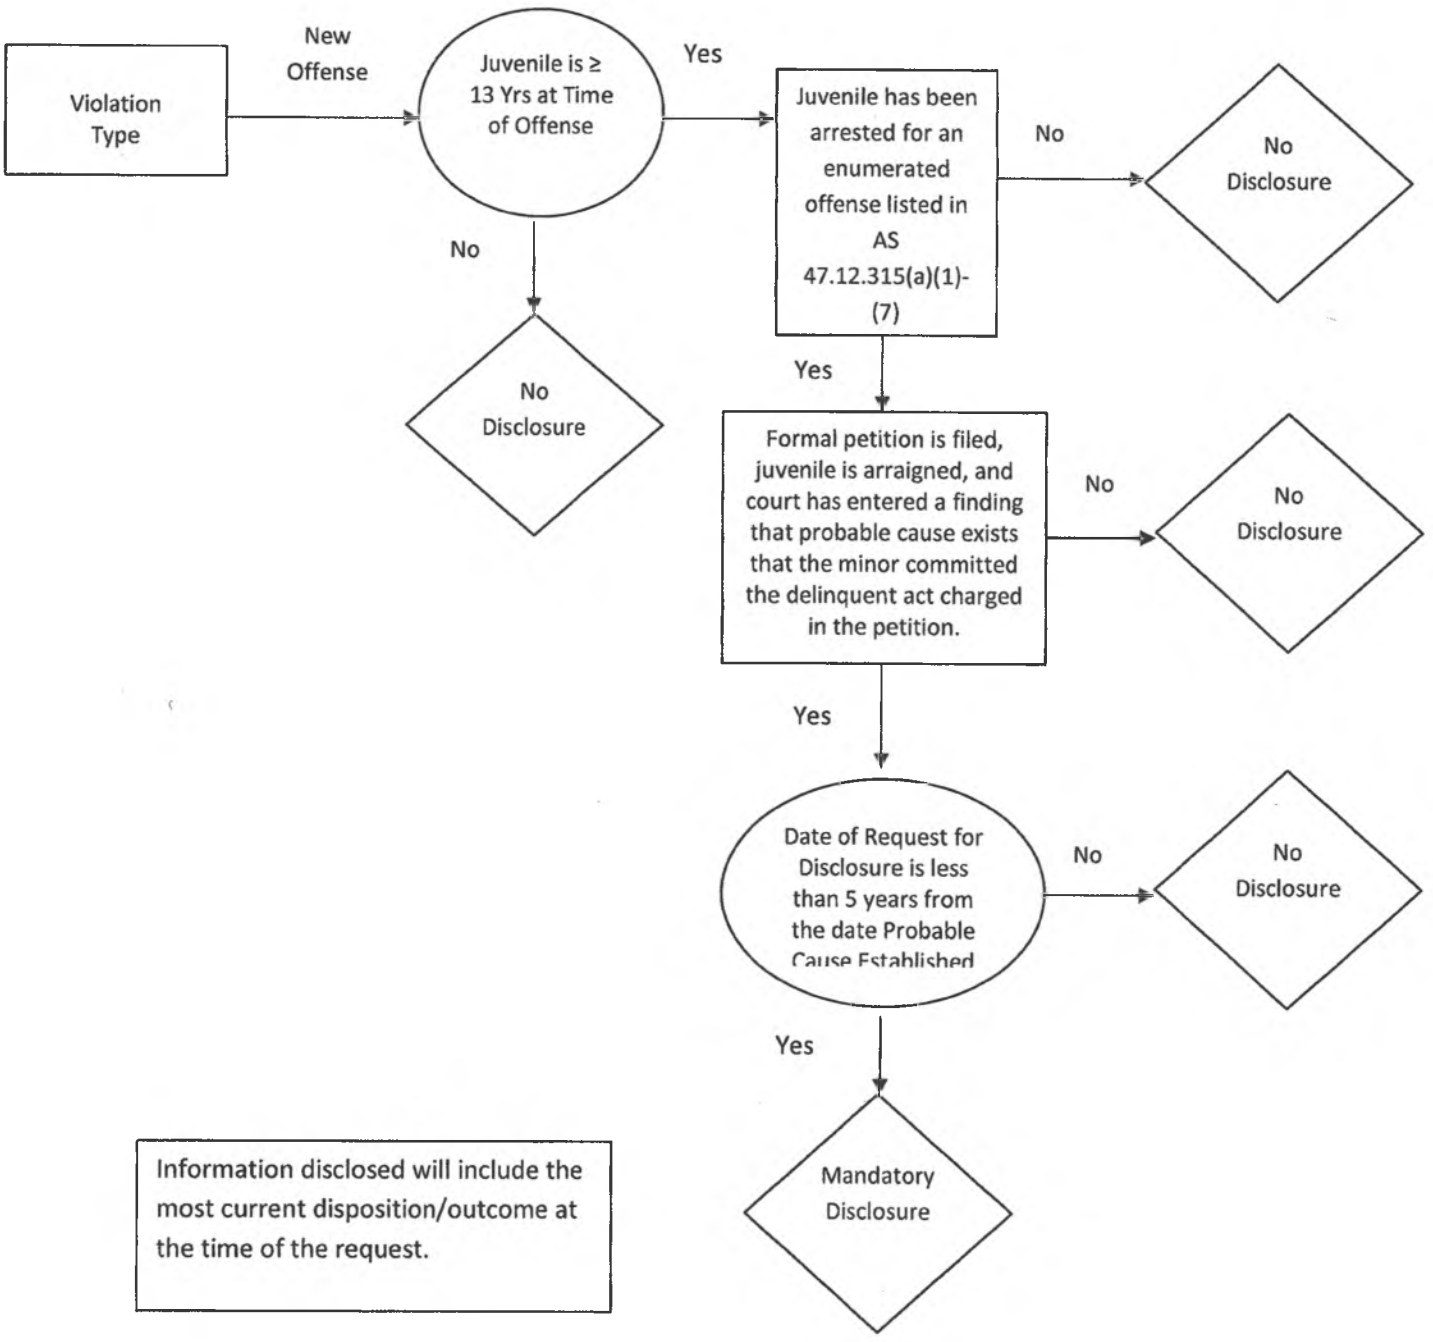
CURRENT DISCLOSURE LAW



PROPOSED JUVENILE DISCLOSURE LAW – 2/6/2012



CSHB 343 (HSS): Disclosure of Children's Information

Side-by-Side Comparison of AS 47.12.315

Public Disclosure of information in department records relating to certain minors

Current Law	How HB 343 Would Change It
Information shall be disclosed for a minor at least 13 years old, who has a history of an informal adjustment action for any offense referred after 9/2/92, and an adjustment plan is being implemented following a current referral for one of the following offenses: 1. A crime against a person punishable as a felony; 2. A crime in which the minor employed a deadly weapon, as that term is defined in AS 11.81.900(b), in committing the crime; 3. Arson under AS 11.46.400 – 11.46.410 4. Burglary under AS 11.46.300 5. Distribution of child pornography under AS 11.61.125; 6. Promoting prostitution in the first degree under AS 11.66.110; or 7. Misconduct Involving a Controlled Substance under AS 11.71 involving the delivery of a controlled substance or the possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver, other than an offense under AS 11.71.040 or 11.71.050.	The proposal requires that the minor alleged to have committed one of the listed offenses be petitioned to a court on the offense, and that the court find probable cause that the offense was committed, for information on the offense to be publicly disclosable. The proposal changes #2 of the enumerated offenses from "a crime in which the minor employed a deadly weapon," to "Misconduct Involving Weapons in the First through Fifth Degrees." NOTE: the H-HSS Committee amended the bill to exclude Misconduct Involving Weapons in the Fifth Degree.
Information MAY be disclosed for a minor at least 13 years of age who knowingly fails to comply with all the terms of an informal adjustment for any offense referred after 9/2/92.	The proposal does not allow for discretionary public disclosure of information when minors fail to comply with terms of an informal adjustment.
Information shall be disclosed for a minor when the Department has filed a petition for adjudication, the minor was at least 13 years old at the time of the offense, and the petition is filed for any offense as a result of the minor's failure to comply with terms of an informal adjustment plan.	The proposal requires that, for information on an offense to be disclosed publicly, a minor must be alleged to have committed one of the "enumerated offenses" above (1-7); the offense must be petitioned to a court; and the court must find probable cause. Previous noncompliance with an informal adjustment plan does not determine whether the information is disclosable.
Information shall be disclosed for a minor when the Department has filed a petition for adjudication, the minor was at least 13 years old at the time of the offense, the offense occurred after 1/1/98, the offense resulted in a court order, and the minor violated a condition of the court order.	The proposal requires that, for information on an offense to be disclosed publicly, a minor must be alleged to have committed one of the "enumerated offenses" above (1-7); the offense must be petitioned to a court; and the court must find probable cause. A violation of a court order connected to the petitioned offense does not determine whether the information is disclosable.

Information shall be disclosed for a minor at least 13 years old and a petition for adjudication is filed for commission of: 1. An offense against a person punishable as a felony 2. An offense in which the minor employed a deadly weapon, as that term is defined in AS 11.81.900(b), in committing the crime; 3. Arson under AS 11.46.400 – 11.46.410 4. Burglary under AS 11.46.300 5. Distribution of child pornography under AS 11.61.125; 6. Promoting prostitution in the first degree under AS 11.66.110; or 7. Misconduct Involving a Controlled Substance under AS 11.71 involving the delivery of a controlled substance or the possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver, other than an offense under AS 11.71.040 or 11.71.050.	The proposal requires that a court must find probable cause on a petition filed on one of these "enumerated offenses (1-7). The proposal also changes #2 of the enumerated offenses from "a crime in which the minor employed a deadly weapon," to "Misconduct Involving Weapons in the First through Fifth Degrees." NOTE: the H-HSS Committee amended the bill to exclude Misconduct Involving Weapons in the Fifth Degree from public disclosure.
Information shall be disclosed for a minor at least 16 years old and a petition is filed for commission of a felony and the minor has previously been adjudicated or convicted of a felony offense.	The proposal requires that, for information on an offense to be disclosed publicly, a minor must be alleged to have committed one of the "enumerated offenses" above (1-7); the offense must be petitioned to a court; and the court must find probable cause that the minor committed the offense. Previous adjudication on a felony offense does not determine whether or not information on one of these offenses is disclosable.
Information to be disclosed shall include the name of the minor, the name or names of the minor's parent or guardian, the alleged offense exclusive of information that identifies the victim, and, when available, the outcomes of the proceeding in the court when a petition is filed or the action required by the Dept.	No change.
If the agency or a court determines that the matter should be dismissed or minor is not delinquent and case dismissed, the minor may request that the department disclose the disposition of the matter.	The Department will release most current outcome information at the time of the request.

CSHB 343 (HSS): Disclosure of Children's Information

Side-by-Side Comparison of AS 47.12.315

Public Disclosure of information in department records relating to certain minors

Current Law	How HB 343 Would Change It
When disclosing information under this statute, the Dept. may not disclose the name of an out-of-home care provider with whom the minor was living at the time the minor was alleged to have committed the offense if the minor had been placed in out-of-home care with that provider on other than a permanent or long-term basis.	No change under the proposal except to move the final phrase: "if the minor had been placed in out-of-home care with that provider on other than a permanent or long-term basis." A new subsection (h) defines the out-of-home care providers who provide care on other than a permanent or long-term basis and their names are not to be disclosed.
If the Dept. maintains the information to be disclosed by electronic means that can be recovered from a computer data base, the Dept. may disclose the info in that medium.	No change under the proposal except to add the phrase "or other state or municipal agency" to this subsection.
The Dept. may not release information about a minor under this section if the offense allegedly committed by the minor occurred before 1/1/98. The authority to release information under this section is limited to 5 years from the date the Dept. is first authorized to make the disclosure. However, the limitation of this section does not apply if the Dept. determines that during the 5-year period the minor knowingly failed to make all restitution payments or committed a felony.	The Dept. may not release information under this section after 5 years from the date the department or other agency is first required or authorized to make the disclosure under this section.
When disclosure of information is dependent on the minor's previous conviction or adjudication as a delinquent, or on the minor's failure to comply with all terms required or imposed, the Dept. shall consider the minor's previous conviction or delinquency adjudication, or a term or condition required or imposed on the minor, that occurred before 9/2/97, but may not consider a conviction or adjudication that occurred, or a term or condition that was required or imposed, earlier than five years before 9/2/97.	Since the proposal does not require a previous adjudication or failure to comply with an adjustment for information to be disclosable, this subsection will not apply.

AS 47.12.315. Public disclosure of information in agency records relating to certain minors.

(a) Notwithstanding AS 47.12.310, when an agency takes action under AS 47.12.040(a)(1) to adjust a matter, or when under AS 47.12.040(a)(2) the court directs the agency to adjust the matter, the agency

(1) shall, for a minor who is at least 13 years of age at the time of commission of the offense, disclose to the public the name of the minor, the name or names of the parent, parents, or guardian of the minor, the action required by the agency to be taken by the minor under AS 47.12.060 to adjust the matter, and information about the offense exclusive of information that identifies the victim of the offense, if the minor was, under AS 47.12.020, previously alleged to be a delinquent minor on the basis of the minor's commission of at least one offense and, on the basis of that allegation, a state agency has, under AS 47.12.040(a), been asked to make a preliminary inquiry to determine if any action on that matter is appropriate, and, if the minor is alleged to be a delinquent minor on the basis of the minor's commission of another offense, exercise of agency jurisdiction is based on the minor's alleged commission of that other offense, and that other offense is one of the following:

(A) a crime against a person that is punishable as a felony;

(B) a crime in which the minor employed a deadly weapon, as that term is defined in AS 11.81.900(b), in committing the crime;

(C) arson under AS 11.46.400 - 11.46.410;

(D) burglary under AS 11.46.300;

(E) distribution of child pornography under AS 11.61.125;

(F) promoting prostitution in the first degree under AS 11.66.110; or

(G) misconduct involving a controlled substance under AS 11.71 involving the delivery of a controlled substance or the possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver, other than an offense under AS 11.71.040 or 11.71.050; and

(2) may, for a minor who is at least 13 years of age at the time of commission of the offense, disclose to the public the name of the minor, the name or names of the parent, parents, or guardian of the minor, the action required by the agency to be taken by the minor under AS 47.12.060 to adjust the matter, and information about the offense exclusive of information that identifies the victim of the offense if the minor has knowingly failed to comply with all terms and conditions required of the minor by the agency to adjust the matter under AS 47.12.060(b).

(b) The department shall publicly disclose the name of a minor, the name or names of the minor's parent, parents, or guardian, and the alleged offense exclusive of information that identifies the victim of the offense, and, when available, the outcome of proceedings before the court if, under AS 47.12.040(a)(1)(B) or AS 47.12.040(a)(2), the department files with the court a petition seeking adjudication of the minor as a delinquent based on

(1) the minor's alleged commission of an offense, the minor was at least 13 years of age at the time of commission of the offense, and the minor has knowingly failed to comply with all the terms and conditions required of the minor by the department or imposed on the minor in a court order entered under AS 47.12.040(a)(2) or 47.12.120;

(2) the minor's alleged commission of an offense set out in this paragraph and the minor was at least 13 years of age at the time of commission of the offense; the provisions of this paragraph apply to the minor's commission of

(A) a crime against a person that is punishable as a felony;

(B) a crime in which the minor employed a deadly weapon, as that term is defined in AS 11.81.900(b), in committing the crime;

(C) arson under AS 11.46.400 - 11.46.410;

(D) burglary under AS 11.46.300;

(E) distribution of child pornography under AS 11.61.125;

(F) promoting prostitution in the first degree under AS 11.66.110; or

(G) misconduct involving a controlled substance under AS 11.71 involving the delivery of a controlled substance or the possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver, other than an offense under AS 11.71.040 or 11.71.050; or

(3) the minor's alleged commission of a felony and the minor was 16 years of age or older at the time of commission of the offense when the minor has previously been convicted or adjudicated a delinquent minor based on the minor's commission of an offense that is a felony.

(c) If, under AS 47.12.060(a), the agency determines that a matter should be dismissed or if, under AS 47.12.120(c), the court finds that a minor is not delinquent and dismisses the case against the minor, the minor may request the department to disclose information about the matter or the case to the public. If the minor makes a request under this subsection, the department shall disclose to the public information about the disposition of the matter or case under AS 47.12.060(a) or 47.12.120(c), as appropriate, exclusive of information that identifies the victim of the alleged offense.

(d) When required by this section to disclose information,

(1) the department or other agency may not disclose the name of an out-of-home care provider with whom the minor was living at the time the minor was alleged to have committed the offense if the minor had been placed in out-of-home care with that provider on other than a permanent or long-term basis; in this paragraph, "out-of-home care provider" means an agency or person, other than the child's legal parents, with whom a child who is in the custody of the state under AS 47.10.080(c)(1) or (3), 47.10.142, or AS 47.14.100(c) is currently placed; "agency or person" includes a foster parent, a relative other than a parent, a person who has petitioned for adoption of the child, and a residential child care facility;

(2) if the department or other agency maintains the information to be disclosed by electronic means that can be recovered from a computer data base, the department or agency may disclose the information in that medium.

(e) The department or an agency may not release information about a minor under this section if the offense allegedly committed by the minor on which the information is based occurred before January 1, 1998. The authority to release information under this section is limited to five years from the date the department or other agency is first required or authorized to make the disclosure. However, the limitation of this section does not apply if the department or other agency determines that during the five-year period the minor

(1) has knowingly failed to make all restitution payments required of the minor by AS 47.12.060(b) or 47.12.120(b)(4); or

(2) has committed a crime punishable as a felony.

(f) When disclosure is required under this section, the department may petition the court for an order prohibiting the disclosure. The court may grant the petition if, on the basis of information presented in the petition or at an in camera hearing held on the petition, the court finds that

(1) the crime was an isolated incident and the minor does not present any further danger to the public; or

(2) the victim agrees that disclosure is inappropriate.

(g) In this section, when disclosure of information is dependent on the minor's previous conviction or adjudication as a delinquent, or on the minor's failure to comply with all terms and conditions required of or imposed on the minor, the department or other agency required to make the disclosure shall consider the minor's previous conviction or delinquency adjudication, or a term or condition required or imposed on the minor, that occurred before September 2, 1997, but may not consider a conviction or adjudication that occurred or a term or condition that was required or imposed earlier than five years before September 2, 1997.

FISCAL NOTE #1

STATE OF ALASKA
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. CSHB 343(HSS)

Analysis

This bill makes changes to the statutes governing the disclosure of information and records of minors involved in Child in Need of Aid or Juvenile Delinquency proceedings. These changes allow for the disclosure of information needed to administer services, rehabilitation and supervision to and from state, municipal, and child placement agencies that are responsible for delinquent minors and child protection services. The Office of Public Advocacy does not anticipate a fiscal impact from these changes and therefore submits a zero impact fiscal note.

BILL NO. CSHB 343(HSS)

Analysis

The proposed bill will:
1. Provide statutory clarification for information sharing between the Office of Children's Services and the Division of Juvenile Justice (DJJ) for the administration of services, protection, rehabilitation, or supervision of any child or for actions by that agency to protect the public safety;
2. Allow individuals with a legitimate interest (such as former clients of DJJ, parents, legal guardians, and others) access to information in agency records; and
3. Streamline the public disclosure law while ensuring appropriate disclosure of certain information to protect the public.

There will be no fiscal impact to DJJ with this bill.

Analysis

HB 344 will repeal Civil Rule 90.3, the court rule that contains the current child support guidelines, and replace it with a new chapter in the statutes setting out the method for calculating child support awards. The formula for calculating the amount to be awarded will change from the current "percentage of income" approach, in which a set percentage of the non-custodial parent's income is presumed to be the appropriate support amount, to an "income shares" approach, in which a set dollar amount that depends on the parents' incomes is the presumptive support obligation. The bill also makes other changes to the current method for establishing the appropriate support amounts.

Under AS 25.14.170(b), the adoption of child support award guidelines or a significant amendment to guidelines is a material change in circumstances such that a party to an existing order would have grounds to seek modification of that order. The Child Support Services Division (CSSD) has estimated that it is enforcing about 20,000 child support orders, and an additional unknown number of court orders are in existence in which the parties opted not to use the CSSD for enforcement. It is estimated that 10,000 modification requests could be made after the bill takes effect; about half of the requests (5,000) are likely to be handled by the CSSD directly without court involvement, and about half (5,000) could come to the court for consideration and resolution.

The Court System estimates that, on average, each of the predicted 5,000 requests for modification of child support orders would require three hours of a judge's time to consider and resolve. The motions are expected to be filed by parties over a two-year period following the effective date of the bill. To handle these motions, the court will hire 3.8 temporary (pro tem) judges (NPP FTE), as well as 3.8 (NPP FTE) court clerks to assist those judges with paperwork and case management during FY 13 and FY 14. The court allocated these positions to the different court locations based on the prior two fiscal years' statistics that show where similar motions have been filed statewide. The personal service costs for these pro tem judges who will be assigned to the courts with the highest predicted number of these motions amounts to $760,000 for each of the two years, as shown on page three.

In addition, the pro tem judges and clerks will be required to travel to other courts locations to handle the motions in the courts in which the parties file them; it is estimated that travel costs would amount to $63,000 for each of the two years.

Finally, the court's Family Law Self-Help Center, which is the court's free statewide service to help people represent themselves in family law cases, anticipates that the number of requests for assistance would rise significantly, requiring two additional full-time temporary facilitators for each year over the two-year period following the effective date of the bill.

FISCAL NOTE

STATE OF ALASKA BILL NO. HB 344
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Analysis

HB 344 will establish Alaska child support guidelines in statute and repeal the court Civil Rule 90.3 child support guidelines. The bill changes child support calculation formulas from the current percentage approach that only takes into account the non-custodial parent's income to an income shares model that considers the income of both parents. Additionally, the bill increases the minimum support amount required of the non-custodial parent and decreases the percentage of time required for a finding of shared custody.

AS 25.24.170(b) and AS 25.27.190(e) consider the adoption, enactment or significant modification to the guidelines a material change of circumstance for the purpose of a modification of the order. This would allow custodial and non-custodial parents to request a modification of their existing order(s). Federal law, 45 CFR 303.8(e), requires the Child Support Services Division (CSSD) to complete modification requests within 180 days from receipt of the request. CSSD could lose significant federal funds if it cannot meet this requirement. CSSD estimates it is enforcing approximately 20,000 child support orders that would be eligible for modification. CSSD conservatively anticipates 10,000 modification requests will be submitted in the first six months, with about ½ of the requests on court orders. The Attorney General's Office, Collections & Support Unit, represents CSSD in court when the agency requests modification of a court-issued child support order. The Collections & Support Section currently processes about 700 modification requests a year with 3.5 attorneys. The anticipated increase in modification requests from 700 to 5,000 in one year will require non-permanent positions of 12.5 attorneys, 2 paralegals, and 5 support positions to meet the anticipated initial demand.

House Bill 347
Sponsor Statement

"An Act prohibiting the use of municipal funds to support or oppose an initiative proposal to circulate a petition for a ballot initiative, or to influence the outcome of an election concerning a ballot initiative, without approval by municipal voters at an election."

Currently municipalities can spend thousands of dollars on consultants and paid signature collectors to influence the outcome of a ballot initiative. Requiring voters to approve the use of funds for special interests keeps the agenda of the municipality aligned with its voters, and prohibits municipalities from spending copious amounts of money to advance their own agendas.

This legislation empowers all citizens of a municipality by giving them the chance to weigh in on important issues. Giving citizens the opportunity to approve or disapprove of spending for a ballot initiative makes them acutely aware of exactly how municipal funds are being spent.

The intent of HB 347 is to keep the ballot initiative process fair, and to ensure that the priorities of the municipality are the same as the priorities of its citizens.

Memorandum

TO: Representative Kurt Olson
FROM: Tim Spengler, Legislative Analyst
DATE: March 9, 2012
RE: State Prohibitions on Spending Municipal Funds on Initiatives without Voter Approval
LRS Report 12.215

You asked if any states prohibit the use of municipal funds to support or oppose an initiative proposal without voter approval.

Briefly, we identified no states with specific statutory provisions prohibiting the use of municipal funds to support or oppose an initiative (or other political or electoral matter) without voter approval.[1] Most of the states we reviewed, however, prohibit municipalities from expending funds for such purposes regardless of whether municipal voters approve of such actions or not.

Fourteen of the 20 states we reviewed prohibit the use of public funds to support or oppose an initiative.[2] Those states are Arizona; California; Georgia; Florida; Idaho; Massachusetts; Montana; Nevada; New Mexico; North Dakota; Oregon; Utah; Washington; and Wyoming.[3] It is interesting to note that none of the 11 Western States that we contacted (where initiatives are more commonly used) allow for the use of municipal funds to support or oppose an initiative. On the other hand, six of the nine states (excluding Florida, Georgia, and Massachusetts) that we contacted in the Northeast and South do not have such prohibitions.[4] > a) An officer, employee, or consultant of a local agency may not expend or authorize the expenditure of any of the funds of the local agency to support or oppose the approval or rejection of a ballot measure, or the election or defeat of a candidate, by the voters. . . "Ballot measure" means an initiative, referendum, or recall measure certified to appear on a regular or special election ballot of the local agency, or other measure submitted to the voters by the governing body at a regular or special election of the local agency.

As previously noted, such state laws do not allow for the use of municipal funds for any political advocacy, not just advocacy pertaining to initiatives. Also, it appears that most or all of these states do allow municipalities to expend funds to provide informational or educational background materials regarding an initiative.

A few years ago, a wide-ranging effort was made in Alaska to prohibit public spending on political advocacy. The "Alaska Anti-Corruption Act," Ballot Measure 1, was on the primary election ballot in August of 2010. The initiative would have banned the

---

[1] For this report, we reviewed numerous state statutes and election websites, communicated with personnel from the National Conference of State Legislatures, the Initiative and Referendum Institute, the Council of State Governments, Ballot Access News, National League of Cities, and spoke with officials from many state municipal leagues.

[2] It is likely that a number of other states also have provisions prohibiting the use of municipal funds to advocate for or against a ballot initiative.

[3] In Idaho, Massachusetts and New Mexico, the prohibition is not codified in law but rather, pursuant to court rulings. (We were unable to identify the court case particulars in New Mexico.) Relevant statutory citations (or case law) are as follows: Arizona (ARS 9-500.14), California (CAL. Gov. Code 54964), Georgia (OCGA 21-5-30.2 and 21-5-3), Florida (FS 106.113), Idaho (pursuant to Ameritel vs. Greater Boise Auditorium District, 141 Idaho 849), Massachusetts (pursuant to Anderson vs. City of Boston, 367 Mass. 178), Montana (MCSA 2-2-121), Nevada (NRS 281A.520), New Mexico (pursuant to court decision), North Dakota (NDCC 16.1-10), Oregon (ORS 260.432), Utah (UCA 20A-11-1203), Washington (RCW 42.17A.555), and Wyoming (WSA 9-13-105(b) and 22-26-116).

[4] The states we identified that do not have laws prohibiting the spending of municipal funds for such purposes are Alabama, Connecticut, Maine, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, and Virginia. Again, there were numerous states that we did not contact and likely a number of those also do not prohibit municipalities from expending funds on initiatives.

use of public funds for political campaigns and lobbying by state and local government agencies and school districts to support or oppose ballot measures, lobby to pass a law, or request public funding. The measure failed as nearly 61 percent of voters cast their ballots against it.

While Ballot Measure 1 had the support of a number of groups such as Alaskans for Open Government and the Committee to Stop Corruption, it was opposed by such entities as the Alaska Chamber of Commerce, the Resource Development Council, the Alaska Municipal League, the Anchorage School Board and Assembly, and the Alaska Democratic Party.

The Fairbanks Daily News-Miner, which also opposed the measure, stated the following in their editorial published on August 20, 2010:

> Proponents of the measure say average voters should bring such troubles to the attention of legislators. The average voter might do so, but why cut out an authoritative source? We elect mayors, assembly members and school board members to represent us. And our local government officers shouldn't have to wait for a call from Juneau before they do that job. Alaskans should vote "no" on Ballot Measure 1.

We hope this is helpful. If you have questions or need additional information, please let us know.

BILL NO. HB 347

Analysis

This bill authorizes municipalities to expend funds to influence the outcome of a statewide ballot initiative, if the expenditure is approved by voters. It also adds a requirement that if a municipality authorizes funds to be spent to influence the outcome of a ballot initiative election, the expenditures must be reported to the Alaska Public Offices Commission.

There is no anticipated fiscal impact to the Division of Community and Regional Affairs.

RE: HB 347 "An Act prohibiting the use of municipal funds to support or oppose an initiative proposal to circulate a petition for a ballot initiative, or to influence the outcome of an election concerning a ballot initiative, without approval by municipal voters at an election."

Dear Chair Gatto,

The City of Homer appreciates the opportunity to comment on HB 347 which is currently before your committee and scheduled to be heard on Monday.

A municipality has the duty to educate and inform constituents about ballot initiatives so the people can make an educated choice when voting on an initiative. I am concerned that HB 347 would restrict a municipality's ability to provide factual information to the voting public. AS.15.13.145(b) already requires that if a municipality is going to take a position or advocate for an initiative they must appropriate any funds spent on such advocacy through an ordinance. This provides for an accountable public process regarding the advocacy action. Requiring a special election before spending any funds on advocacy activity would be expensive and not allow enough time for the meaningful distribution of information.

HB 347 would have a negative impact on informed public discourse and I urge you not to support this legislation in its current form.

Thank you for your time and attention.

Sincerely,

Walt Wrede

4/2/12

Rep. Gruenberg: State cases?

SUBJECT: Questions relating to the constitutionality of HB 347 (Work Order No. 27-LS1396\A)

TO: Representative Kurt Olson
Attn: Anna Latham

FROM: Alpheus Bullard
Legislative Counsel

Anna asked two questions about HB 347. The questions, and my responses are below. Please note that I have paraphrased the questions for clarity.

Does HB 347 raise any issues under either the state or federal constitutions? Do municipalities have a right to "free speech" under the United States' Constitution?

It is my legal opinion that HB 347, which prohibits the use of municipal funds to support or oppose an initiative proposal, to circulate a petition for a ballot initiative, or to influence the outcome of an election concerning a ballot initiative, without approval by municipal voters at an election, is constitutional under the free speech clauses of both the state and federal constitutions, and I do not see any other potential constitutional issues.

You asked whether municipalities have a right to "free speech." This is a broad question involving the complex "government speech doctrine" that itself, exists in a larger body of First Amendment jurisprudence which has been evolving rapidly in the last few years.[1] Accordingly, I've limited my response to the subject of HB 347, a state constraint on certain municipal expenditures.

Under our system of government in which voters' opinions are supposed to shape the policies of government, the expenditure of municipal funds to influence voter opinion

Ct. 876 (January 21, 2010) (government cannot suppress political speech, in the form of independent election campaign expenditures, on the basis of the speaker's corporate identity), Holder v. Humanitarian Law Project, 561 U.S. ____, 130 S. Ct. 2705 (June 21, 2010) (upholding a federal law prohibiting material support to groups designated as terrorists, this is the first time a restriction on political speech has survived the strict scrutiny test) and *Sorrell v. could easily be construed as a threat to democratic electoral processes. The distinctive role played by government as both a possible threat to, and participant in, our system of freedom of expression warrants caution in analyzing municipal speech as a subject of First Amendment protection. However, in application to HB 347, the issue is not complex, because it involves a state statutory limitation on municipal speech.

> Political subdivisions of States--counties, cities, or whatever--never were and never have been considered as sovereign entities." Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533, 575, 84 S. Ct. 1362, 12 L. Ed. 2d 506 (1964). They are instead "subordinate governmental instrumentalities created by the State to assist in the carrying out of state governmental functions." Ibid.; see also Louisiana ex rel. Folsom v. Mayor and Administrators of New Orleans, 109 U.S. 285, 287, 3 S. Ct. 211, 27 L. Ed. 936 (1883) ("Municipal corporations are instrumentalities of the State for the convenient administration of government within their limits"). State political subdivisions are "merely . . . department[s] of the State, and the State may withhold, grant or withdraw powers and privileges as it sees fit." Trenton v. New Jersey, 262 U.S. 182, 187, 43 S. Ct. 534, 67 L. Ed. 937 (1923) . . .

Ysursa v. Pocatello Educ. Ass'n, 555 U.S. 353, 362 (2009).

A municipality, as a political subdivision of the state, is a subordinate unit of government created by the state to carry out delegated governmental functions. Such a political subdivision, "created by a state for the better ordering of government, has no privileges or immunities under the federal constitution which it may invoke in opposition to the will of its creator." Id. at 363 citing Williams v. Mayor of Baltimore, 289 U.S. 36, 40, 53 S. Ct. 431, 77 L. Ed. 1015 (1933). The state is the sovereign body from which any municipal power must flow. Consequently, if the legislature decides to limit the authority of a municipality to "speak" in relation to initiative campaigns, the municipality does not enjoy any First Amendment protection from the statutory limitation on municipal expenditures.

Would it be unconstitutional to prohibit the use of municipal funds to support or oppose an initiative proposal, to circulate a petition for a ballot initiative, or to influence the outcome of an election concerning a ballot initiative?

For the reasons articulated above, the legislature could constitutionally prohibit the use of municipal funds to support or oppose an initiative proposal, to circulate a petition for a ballot initiative, or to influence the outcome of an election concerning a ballot initiative with or without the approval of municipal voters.

If you have further questions, please do not hesitate to contact me.

RE: HB 347

At the State Affairs meeting on March 22, you asked for any legal research related to HB 347.

Originally our office requested that a bill was drafted prohibiting the payment of initiative petition circulators. This draft had constitutional conflicts, but I am enclosing the related memo from Legal Services because it touches on the issue of free speech and first amendment rights.

I have requested that Legal Services look into the constitutionality of HB 347, particularly regarding the free speech rights of municipalities.

Please feel free to contact our office with any additional questions regarding this bill.

(Work Order No. 27-LS1218\A)

TO: Representative Kurt Olson
Attn: Konrad Jackson

FROM: Alpheus Bullard TLAB
Legislative Counsel

This memorandum accompanies the draft bill described above. The bill prohibits the payment of initiative petition circulators.[1] This memorandum is to alert you to constitutional issues raised by the bill.

While the legislature may statutorily regulate the initiative process in order to keep the process open, fair, and free of corruption, the United States Supreme Court has held that a state may not prohibit the payment of initiative petition circulators.

In Meyer v. Grant, 486 U.S. 414 (1988), the Supreme Court found a Colorado statute that prohibited payment for the circulation of initiative petitions unconstitutional because the state could not demonstrate that the statute, which burdened initiative sponsors' ability to communicate their message, was necessary in order to meet the state's concerns. The Court found that initiative petition circulation is "core political speech" entitled to substantial First Amendment protection and that states may not burden the exercise of the right to petition through use of the initiative by prohibiting the payment of petition circulators.

If you have questions, would like a bill drafted that provides limitations on how initiative petition circulators may be paid, or if I can be of further assistance, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Re: House Bill No. 347

Dear Ms. Latham,

You have asked two questions about House Bill No. 347—a bill which will limit a municipality's ability to appropriate public money to support or oppose a ballot initiative or question. Your first question was whether this proposed law infringes on a municipality's free speech rights. The answer is no. Second, you asked whether the law would prohibit a municipal officer from flying to Juneau to testify on issues related to their district during session. The answer is also no. Allow me to elaborate.

First, House Bill No. 347 is constitutional.

Governmental entities—including municipalities—have no independent First Amendment rights.[1] Municipalities are not treated like individual citizens for purposes of constitutional inquiries, and the legislature is allowed to restrict municipal appropriations for speech related activities.[2] Recently, in Associated Students of Univ. of Cal. at Santa Barbara v. Regents of the Univ. of Cal., a federal district court held that a public university's decision to prohibit using public funds for ballot initiative speech was not a violation of a student group's constitutional rights.[3]

1 See, e.g., Demery v. Arpaio, 378 F.3d 1020, 1032-33 (9th Cir. 2004) (affirming that "the Bill of Rights protects the individual from the government, not the other way around").

2 Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 93-108 (1976). See also Regan v. Taxation with Representation of Washington, 461 U.S. 540, 546, 549 (1983) (affirming that First Amendment rights do not require state subsidization of First Amendment speech).

3 Associated Students of Univ. of Cal. at Santa Barbara v. Regents of the Univ. of Cal., 2007 WL 196747, at 4 (N.D. Cal. 2007).

In House Bill No. 347, the legislature proposes to limit a municipality's ability to spend during the ballot initiative process. The new law would allow a municipality to appropriate ballot initiative funds only if, by popular vote, the citizens of the municipality agree to do so. The legislature is also considering whether to eliminate the municipality's ability to fund ballot initiative activities altogether. Either law would be constitutional. If challenged, there would be no genuine issue of fact regarding whether the money appropriated was public money. As such, the legislature's decision to restrict funding is simply a decision not to subsidize free speech; a choice which is always at the discretion of the legislature.[4] And because this law would not restrict an individual's freedom of speech, it is constitutional.

Second, House Bill No. 347 does not prevent a municipal member from representing the district's interests during the legislative session. Municipal officers acting within the scope of their duties are exempt from Alaska's comprehensive lobbying laws.[5] Appropriating funds for a municipal officer to travel to Juneau during session to "lobby" is not implicated by House Bill No. 347.[6]

MICHAEL C. GERAGHTY

5 AS 24.45.161(a)(2) (2010).

6 Under House Bill No. 347, a municipal member could not go to Juneau during session solely for purposes of ballot initiative advocacy. But that is not likely ever the intention of sending a municipal member to Juneau during the session.

House Judiciary ~ Monday, April 2nd, 2012

(GAVEL IN) Let's call this meeting of the House Judiciary Committee to order.

It is ____ p.m. Monday, April 2nd, 2012.

Present are:

___ Representative Thompson

___ Representative Lynn

___ Representative Keller

___ Representative Pruitt

___ Representative Gruenberg

___ Representative Holmes ___ and Myself, Representative Gatto

First – I would like to Thank Rep. Steve Thompson for stepping up to Chair the House Judiciary Committee in my absence. From all reports, and as I personally witnessed, thanks to Gavel to Gavel, he has done an admirable job. Thank you.

Secondly – Let's move on to Housekeeping: Please disable your electronic devices, if they're left on - even on vibrate - they may interfere with the recording system. Thank you.

We have new bill today:

HB 347 USE OF MUNICIPAL FUNDS FOR INITIATIVES

"An Act prohibiting the use of municipal funds to support or oppose an initiative proposal to circulate a petition for a ballot initiative, or to influence the outcome of an election concerning a ballot initiative, without approval by municipal voters at an election."

Here to continue discussing the bill is Rep. Kurt Olson and/Anna Latham, Staff to Rep. Olson

Rep. Olson, please come to the table, put your name on the record and let us take up where we left off on HB 347.

BILL PRESENTATION

Thank you Representative Olson.

Is there anyone online or in the room who would like to provide public testimony?

KO - Paid signature gatherers.
- Kathy Wasserman AML

Public testimony:

- Walt Wrede , City Manager, City of Homer (I believe he will be on the offnet) _____ please put your name and affiliation on the record and begin your testimony.

Does the committee have any questions for _____.

Is there anyone else who would like to provide public testimony on HB 347?

Public comment is now closed.

That brings the bill, HB 347 back before the committee for discussion. Are there any further questions for the sponsor?

Can I have a motion to move HB 347, (27-LS1396/A), with individual recommendations, and with attached fiscal note from committee?

Rep. Thompson: I move to report HB 347, (27-LS1396/A), with committee recommendations, and with attached fiscal note from committee.

Any objection, have Susan call the roll. If not, HB 347 moves from committee.

On Wednesday we will hear:

CS FOR HOUSE BILL NO. 355(JUD)

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SEVENTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

BY THE HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Offered:
Referred:

Sponsor(s): REPRESENTATIVES GUTTENBERG, Miller

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to the membership of, and member qualifications for, the Alaska Public Offices Commission; relating to candidate forums and contributions in state election campaigns; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 15.13.020(a) is amended to read:

(a) There is created in the Department of Administration the Alaska Public Offices Commission consisting of five voting members and two nonvoting advisory members. The governor shall appoint all members of the commission in the manner prescribed in (b) and (c) of this section, subject to confirmation by a majority of the legislature meeting in joint session.

 Sec. 2. AS 15.13.020(a), as amended by sec. 1 of this Act, is amended to read:

(a) There is created in the Department of Administration the Alaska Public Offices Commission consisting of five [VOTING] members [AND TWO NONVOTING ADVISORY MEMBERS]. The governor shall appoint all members of the commission in the manner prescribed in (b) and (c) of this section, subject to confirmation by a majority of the legislature meeting in joint session.

* Sec. 3. AS 15.13.020(b) is amended to read:

(b) The governor shall appoint three [TWO] members of each of the two political parties whose candidate for governor received the highest number of votes in the most recent preceding general election at which a governor was elected. Two appointed members of each political party shall be voting members of the commission, and one appointed member from each political party shall be a nonvoting advisory member with extensive experience in the financing of political campaigns and compliance with disclosure and reporting requirements. The two voting member appointees from each of these two parties shall be chosen from a list of four names to be submitted by the central committee of each party. The nonvoting advisory member appointee from each party shall be chosen from a list of three names submitted by the central committee of each party. All names submitted by the central committee of each party, whether for voting or nonvoting positions, shall be of persons with experience working on political campaigns and the reporting requirements of this chapter.

* Sec. 4. AS 15.13.020(b), as amended by sec. 3 of this Act, is amended to read:

(b) The governor shall appoint two [THREE] members of each of the two political parties whose candidate for governor received the highest number of votes in the most recent preceding general election at which a governor was elected. [TWO APPOINTED MEMBERS OF EACH POLITICAL PARTY SHALL BE VOTING MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION, AND ONE APPOINTED MEMBER FROM EACH POLITICAL PARTY SHALL BE A NONVOTING ADVISORY MEMBER WITH EXTENSIVE EXPERIENCE IN THE FINANCING OF POLITICAL CAMPAIGNS AND COMPLIANCE WITH DISCLOSURE AND REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.] The two [VOTING MEMBER] appointees from each of these two parties shall be chosen from a list of four names to be submitted by the central committee of each party. [THE NONVOTING ADVISORY MEMBER APPOINTEE FROM EACH PARTY SHALL BE CHOSEN FROM A LIST OF THREE NAMES SUBMITTED BY THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE OF EACH PARTY.] All names submitted by the central committee of each party [, WHETHER FOR VOTING OR NONVOTING POSITIONS,] shall be of persons with experience working on political campaigns and the reporting requirements of this chapter.

* Sec. 5. AS 15.13.020(c) is amended to read:

(c) The four voting members selected under (b) of this section shall, by a majority vote, nominate to the governor an individual to serve as the seventh [FIFTH] member of the commission, who shall be a voting member. The governor shall either appoint the nominee to the commission, or shall reject the nominee and request those four members to nominate another individual to serve as the seventh [FIFTH] member of the commission.

* Sec. 6. AS 15.13.020(c), as amended by sec. 5 of this Act, is amended to read:

(c) The four [VOTING] members selected under (b) of this section shall, by a majority vote, nominate to the governor an individual to serve as the fifth [SEVENTH] member of the commission [, WHO SHALL BE A VOTING MEMBER]. The governor shall either appoint the nominee to the commission, or shall reject the nominee and request those four members to nominate another individual to serve as the fifth [SEVENTH] member of the commission.

* Sec. 7. AS 15.13.020(d) is amended to read:

(d) Members of the commission serve staggered terms of five years, or until a successor is appointed and qualifies. The terms of no two voting members who are members of the same political party may expire in consecutive years. A member may not serve more than one term. However, a person appointed to fill the unexpired term of a predecessor may be appointed to a successive full five-year term.

* Sec. 8. AS 15.13.020(d), as amended by sec. 7 of this Act, is amended to read:

(d) Members of the commission serve staggered terms of five years, or until a successor is appointed and qualifies. The terms of no two [VOTING] members who are members of the same political party may expire in consecutive years. A member may not serve more than one term. However, a person appointed to fill the unexpired term of a predecessor may be appointed to a successive full five-year term.

* Sec. 9. AS 15.13.020(g) is amended to read:

(g) The voting members of the commission shall elect a chairperson. Three voting members of the commission constitute a quorum. A vacancy does not impair the powers of the remaining members to exercise all of the powers of the commission.

* Sec. 10. AS 15.13.020(g), as amended by sec. 9 of this Act, is amended to read:

(g) The [VOTING] members [OF THE COMMISSION] shall elect a chairperson. Three [VOTING] members of the commission constitute a quorum. A vacancy does not impair the powers of the remaining members to exercise all of the powers of the commission.

* Sec. 11. AS 15.13.150 is amended to read:

Sec. 15.13.150. Election educational activities not prohibited. This chapter does not prohibit a person from engaging in educational election-related communications and activities, including

(1) the publication of the date and location of an election;

(2) the education of students about voting and elections;

(3) the sponsorship of [OPEN] candidate debate forums open to the public;

(4) participation in get-out-the-vote or voter registration drives that do not favor a particular candidate, political party, or political position;

(5) the dissemination of the views of all candidates running for a particular office.

* Sec. 12. AS 15.13.400(4) is amended to read:

(4) "contribution"

(A) means a purchase, payment, promise or obligation to pay, loan or loan guarantee, deposit or gift of money, goods, or services for which charge is ordinarily made, and includes the payment by a person other than a candidate or political party, or compensation for the personal services of another person, that is rendered to the candidate or political party, and that is made for the purpose of

(i) influencing the nomination or election of a candidate;

(ii) influencing a ballot proposition or question; or

(iii) supporting or opposing an initiative proposal application filed with the lieutenant governor under AS 15.45.020;

(B) does not include

(i) services provided without compensation by individuals volunteering a portion or all of their time on behalf of a political party, candidate, or ballot proposition or question;

(ii) ordinary hospitality in a home;

(iii) two or fewer mass mailings before each election by each political party describing the party's slate of candidates for election, which may include photographs, biographies, and information about the party's candidates;

(iv) the results of a poll limited to issues and not mentioning any candidate, unless the poll was requested by or designed primarily to benefit the candidate;

(v) any communication in the form of a newsletter from a legislator to the legislator's constituents, except a communication expressly advocating the election or defeat of a candidate or a newsletter or material in a newsletter that is clearly only for the private benefit of a legislator or a legislative employee; [OR]

(vi) a fundraising list provided without compensation by one candidate or political party to a candidate or political party; or

(vii) an opportunity to participate in a candidate forum provided to a candidate without compensation to the candidate by another person and for which a candidate is not ordinarily charged;

 Sec. 13. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

MEMBERS OF THE ALASKA PUBLIC OFFICES COMMISSION; TRANSITION; STAGGERED TERMS. Notwithstanding AS 15.13.020, as amended by secs. 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9 of this Act, a member of the commission serving on the effective date of sec. 1 of this Act remains in office for the duration of the term to which appointed and confirmed. Within 90 days after the effective date of sec. 1 of this Act, the central committee of each of the two political parties whose candidates for governor received the highest number of votes in the most recent preceding election at which a governor was elected shall submit to the governor a list of three nominees for the two additional nonvoting seats on the commission. The governor shall appoint one nonvoting member to a three-year term and one nonvoting member to a five-year term. The governor shall specify the term of each of the nonvoting members appointed subject to this section.

* Sec. 14. Sections 2, 4, 6, 8, and 10 of this Act take effect five years from the effective date of sec. 1 of this Act.

HB 355

The primary purpose of the Alaska Public Offices Commission (APOC) is to ensure compliance with campaign donation restrictions, disclose how campaigns are funded, and report how those funds are spent. HB 355 "APOC: Membership," is intended to ensure APOC members have the requisite experience filing disclosures and other reports, to promote compliance, understand the day-to-day idiosyncrasies of modern campaigns, and recognize their real-life consequences. Today, virtually all boards and commissions require at least some members to possess background experience with the issues they govern. Hairdressers, tattoo artists, doctors, and lawyers in Alaska are governed by people who understand their occupations. APOC should be no different.

HB 355 would change the membership of APOC by requiring all the governor's appointees to have extensive campaign experience with APOC filing. Members experienced in maintaining pertinent records, filing campaign disclosures, and managing bank accounts will help APOC better serve its constituency.

The level of campaign experience required of qualified appointees is open to interpretation at three separate points in the appointment process. First, when the party selects the three names it forwards to the governor; second, when the governor makes his or her selection(s); and third, when the legislature confirms the nominee(s).

To facilitate these new requirements, HB 355 recognizes the need for a transition period and allows for a staggered transition period until the new requirements can be met.

I urge your support of HB 355.

The primary purpose of the Alaska Public Offices Commission (APOC) is to ensure compliance with campaign donation restrictions, disclose how campaigns are funded, and report how those funds are spent. HB 355 "APOC: Membership," is intended to ensure APOC members have the requisite experience filing disclosures and other reports, to promote compliance, understand the day-to-day idiosyncrasies of modern campaigns, and recognize their real-life consequences. Today, virtually all boards and commissions require at least some members to possess background experience with the issues they govern. Hairdressers, tattoo artists, doctors, and lawyers in Alaska are governed by people who understand their occupations. APOC should be no different.

HB 355 would change the membership of APOC by requiring all the governor's appointees to have extensive campaign experience with APOC filing. Members experienced in maintaining pertinent records, filing campaign disclosures, and managing bank accounts will help APOC better serve its constituency.

To facilitate these new requirements, HB 355 recognizes the need for a transition period and allows for a staggered transition period until the new requirements can be met.

I urge your support of HB 355.

MEMORANDUM April 10, 2012

SUBJECT: "Contributions" under AS 15.13.400 (Work Order No. 27-LS1493)

TO: Representative Max Gruenberg
Attn: Ted Madsen

FROM: Alpheus Bullard
Legislative Counsel

In response to an April 2, 2012, letter from the Alaska Public Offices Commission ("commission"), you asked about certain candidate forums and the definition of "contribution" under AS 15.13. "Contribution" is defined at AS 15.13.400(4).[1]

---

[1] AS 15.13.400(4) provides:

> "contribution"
> (A) means a purchase, payment, promise or obligation to pay, loan or loan guarantee, deposit or gift of money, goods, or services for which charge is ordinarily made, and includes the payment by a person other than a candidate or political party, or compensation for the personal services of another person, that is rendered to the candidate or political party, and that is made for the purpose of
> (i) influencing the nomination or election of a candidate;
> (ii) influencing a ballot proposition or question; or
> (iii) supporting or opposing an initiative proposal application filed with the lieutenant governor under AS 15.45.020;
> (B) does not include
> (i) services provided without compensation by individuals volunteering a portion or all of their time on behalf of a political party, candidate, or ballot proposition or question;
> (ii) ordinary hospitality in a home;
> (iii) two or fewer mass mailings before each election by each political party describing the party's slate of candidates for election, which may include photographs, biographies, and information about the party's candidates;
> (iv) the results of a poll limited to issues and not mentioning any candidate, unless the poll was requested by or designed primarily to benefit the candidate;

The letter from the commission states that an organization's provision of a "candidate forum" could be a contribution. You asked whether an organization's provision of a candidate forum for which candidates and candidate campaigns are not ordinarily charged could be interpreted as a contribution. While every situation is different, and each will be evaluated by the commission on its facts, a "candidate forum" such as you describe should not be interpreted as a contribution. The definition of "contribution" provides that "contribution . . . means a purchase, payment, promise or obligation to pay, loan or loan guarantee, deposit or gift of money, goods, or services for which charge is ordinarily made*, and includes . . . .*" (Emphasis added)

Accordingly, while not addressed in the commission's letter, if you as a candidate are invited to a candidate forum, even if not all candidates for the office for which you are running have been invited (i.e. fringe party candidates), if the organization's provision of that forum is a service for which a candidate, or a candidate's campaign, is not ordinarily charged, it may not be a "contribution" under AS 15.13.400(4). Again, please note both that each situation will be evaluated on the basis of its own facts and that a court will likely defer to the commission's interpretation of AS 15.13.400(4).

If you have further questions, or a specific scenario in mind, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Dear Legislators,

As time becomes a more precious commodity during the final days of the regular session, you clearly have more important things to do than read a note from APOC. As a result this will be the last letter during this session. The question addressed below is particularly germane to the upcoming campaign season.

Question—Are there any issues regarding candidate forums that a candidate or organization needs to be aware of during the campaign season?

Answer—The biggest issue is that most forums are seen as non-monetary contributions, unless all candidates are invited.

a) A political forum could be a contribution. If an organization provides a forum for all candidates to discuss issues there is no problem. 2AAC 50.990(7)(C)(vii) notes that if the service or facility is made available to all candidates there is no contribution. However, if only some of the candidates are invited then the organization providing the forum is making a contribution to the candidates which must be reported and may be prohibited. AS 15.13.400(4) defines a contribution as "a purchase, payment, promise or obligation to pay, loan or loan guarantee, deposit or gift of money, goods or services for which charge is ordinarily made, and includes, payment by a person other than a candidate or political party, or compensation for the personal services of another person, that is rendered to the candidate or political party, and that is made for the purpose of influencing the nomination or election of a candidate...". Clearly, a political forum does influence the election of a candidate. 2AAC 50.990(7) (B) also notes that "anything of value provided to a candidate" is considered a contribution.

How to avoid this issue. In this case an organization such as a Kiwanas club should invite all of the candidates to a forum to avoid any issues. All of the candidates need not attend, but they need to be invited. The organization should save any documentation that it did invite all candidates to avoid any potential complaints later. It would then be considered an election educational activity under AS 15.13.150 and would not be a contribution.

b) The media. If the media is covering a news story, or providing an editorial or commentary, the news story, editorial or commentary is not considered a contribution and is not covered by APOC regulations (2AAC50.990(7)(C)(i). However, if a forum, such as a debate, is sponsored by a media entity and hosted as an event, all candidates must be invited.

c) What can you do to ensure no one lodges a complaint against you for participating in a forum? The easiest thing to do is ask if all candidates have been invited. If all candidates have not been invited, you can request that the organizer do so. If that doesn't happen, check to see if the potential contribution would be prohibited by calling APOC. Regardless, the venue should be paid for at a commercially reasonable rate.

Yours truly,

Paul Dauphinais

CS FOR HOUSE BILL NO. 355(STA)

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SEVENTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

BY THE HOUSE STATE AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Offered: 4/10/12
Referred: Judiciary

Sponsor(s): REPRESENTATIVES GUTTENBERG, Miller

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to the membership of, and member qualifications for, the Alaska Public Offices Commission; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 15.13.020(a) is amended to read:

(a) There is created in the Department of Administration the Alaska Public Offices Commission consisting of five voting members and two nonvoting advisory members. The governor shall appoint all members of the commission in the manner prescribed in (b) and (c) of this section, subject to confirmation by a majority of the legislature meeting in joint session.

 Sec. 2. AS 15.13.020(a), as amended by sec. 1 of this Act, is amended to read:

(a) There is created in the Department of Administration the Alaska Public Offices Commission consisting of five [VOTING] members [AND TWO NONVOTING ADVISORY MEMBERS]. The governor shall appoint all members of the commission in the manner prescribed in (b) and (c) of this section, subject to confirmation by a majority of the legislature meeting in joint session.

 Sec. 3. AS 15.13.020(b) is amended to read:

(b) The governor shall appoint three [TWO] members of each of the two political parties whose candidate for governor received the highest number of votes in the most recent preceding general election at which a governor was elected. Two appointed members of each political party shall be voting members of the commission, and one appointed member from each political party shall be a nonvoting advisory member with extensive experience in the financing of political campaigns and compliance with disclosure and reporting requirements. The two voting member appointees from each of these two parties shall be chosen from a list of four names to be submitted by the central committee of each party. The nonvoting advisory member appointee from each party shall be chosen from a list of three names submitted by the central committee of each party. All names submitted by the central committee of each party, whether for voting or nonvoting positions, shall be of persons with experience working on political campaigns and the reporting requirements of this chapter.

 Sec. 4. AS 15.13.020(b), as amended by sec. 3 of this Act, is amended to read:

(b) The governor shall appoint two [THREE] members of each of the two political parties whose candidate for governor received the highest number of votes in the most recent preceding general election at which a governor was elected. [TWO APPOINTED MEMBERS OF EACH POLITICAL PARTY SHALL BE VOTING MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION, AND ONE APPOINTED MEMBER FROM EACH POLITICAL PARTY SHALL BE A NONVOTING ADVISORY MEMBER WITH EXTENSIVE EXPERIENCE IN THE FINANCING OF POLITICAL CAMPAIGNS AND COMPLIANCE WITH DISCLOSURE AND REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.] The two [VOTING MEMBER] appointees from each of these two parties shall be chosen from a list of four names to be submitted by the central committee of each party. [THE NONVOTING ADVISORY MEMBER APPOINTEE FROM EACH PARTY SHALL BE CHOSEN FROM A LIST OF THREE NAMES SUBMITTED BY THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE OF EACH PARTY.] All names submitted by the central committee of each party [, WHETHER FOR VOTING OR

NONVOTING POSITIONS,] shall be of persons with experience working on political campaigns and the reporting requirements of this chapter.

 Sec. 5. AS 15.13.020(c) is amended to read:

(c) The four voting members selected under (b) of this section shall, by a majority vote, nominate to the governor an individual to serve as the seventh [FIFTH] member of the commission, who shall be a voting member. The governor shall either appoint the nominee to the commission, or shall reject the nominee and request those four members to nominate another individual to serve as the seventh [FIFTH] member of the commission.

 Sec. 6. AS 15.13.020(c), as amended by sec. 5 of this Act, is amended to read:

(c) The four [VOTING] members selected under (b) of this section shall, by a majority vote, nominate to the governor an individual to serve as the fifth [SEVENTH] member of the commission [, WHO SHALL BE A VOTING MEMBER]. The governor shall either appoint the nominee to the commission, or shall reject the nominee and request those four members to nominate another individual to serve as the fifth [SEVENTH] member of the commission.

 Sec. 7. AS 15.13.020(d) is amended to read:

(d) Members of the commission serve staggered terms of five years, or until a successor is appointed and qualifies. The terms of no two voting members who are members of the same political party may expire in consecutive years. A member may not serve more than one term. However, a person appointed to fill the unexpired term of a predecessor may be appointed to a successive full five-year term.

 Sec. 8. AS 15.13.020(d), as amended by sec. 7 of this Act, is amended to read:

(d) Members of the commission serve staggered terms of five years, or until a successor is appointed and qualifies. The terms of no two [VOTING] members who are members of the same political party may expire in consecutive years. A member may not serve more than one term. However, a person appointed to fill the unexpired term of a predecessor may be appointed to a successive full five-year term.

 Sec. 9. AS 15.13.020(g) is amended to read:

(g) The voting members of the commission shall elect a chairperson. Three voting members of the commission constitute a quorum. A vacancy does not impair the powers of the remaining members to exercise all of the powers of the commission.

 Sec. 10. AS 15.13.020(g), as amended by sec. 9 of this Act, is amended to read:

(g) The [VOTING] members [OF THE COMMISSION] shall elect a chairperson. Three [VOTING] members of the commission constitute a quorum. A vacancy does not impair the powers of the remaining members to exercise all of the powers of the commission.

 Sec. 11. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

MEMBERS OF THE ALASKA PUBLIC OFFICES COMMISSION; TRANSITION; STAGGERED TERMS. Notwithstanding AS 15.13.020, as amended by secs. 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9 of this Act, a member of the commission serving on the effective date of sec. 1 of this Act remains in office for the duration of the term to which appointed and confirmed. Within 90 days after the effective date of sec. 1 of this Act, the central committee of each of the two political parties whose candidates for governor received the highest number of votes in the most recent preceding election at which a governor was elected shall submit to the governor a list of three nominees for the two additional nonvoting seats on the commission. The governor shall appoint one nonvoting member to a three-year term and one nonvoting member to a five-year term. The governor shall specify the term of each of the nonvoting members appointed subject to this section.

 Sec. 12. Sections 2, 4, 6, 8, and 10 of this Act take effect five years from the effective date of sec. 1 of this Act.

FISCAL NOTE

STATE OF ALASKA
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB355

Analysis

Analysis
HB 355 adds two new member positions to the current number of APOC commissioners.

Assumptions
One must assume that any new members to the commission may come from any place in Alaska.

Program Summary
Each new commissioner will receive a stipend at the current level of $50 per day. Each meeting will now cost an additional $50 for each new commissioner attending. Those funds are expended from personnel services.

Assuming that each new commissioner comes from a place other than Anchorage it is anticipated that each new commissioner will require travel, per diem, and other costs required for them to attend meetings. In Fiscal Year 2013 the current schedule is set for 14 meeting days. At $1,000 per trip the increased costs of travel for these two new commissioners is anticipated to be $14,000 per year.

(2) the commission's costs of investigation and adjudication; and

(3) reasonable attorney fees.

(c) The commission's determination under (b) of this section may be appealed to the superior court under AS 44.62 (Administrative Procedure Act).

(d) When an action has been filed in the superior court under AS 15.13.380, upon proof of the violation, the court shall enter a judgment in the amount of the civil penalty authorized to be collected by (a) of this section.

(e) If the commission or superior court finds that the violation was not a repeat violation or was not part of a series or pattern of violations, was inadvertent, was quickly corrected, and had no adverse effect on the campaign of another, the commission or the court may

(1) suspend imposition of the penalties; and

(2) order the penalties set aside if the person does not engage in a similar violation for a period of one year.

(f) A party who has filed a civil action under AS 15.13.380

(1) is not entitled to trial by jury on the civil action;

(2) is not entitled to be represented by legal counsel at public expense. (§ 6 ch 167 SLA 1976; am § 5 ch 126 SLA 1994; am § 3 ch 59 SLA 1995; am §§ 22, 23 ch 48 SLA 1996; am § 7 ch 1 TSSLA 2002)

Revisor's notes. — Formerly AS 15.13.125. Renumbered in 2000, at which time "AS 15.13.380" was substituted for "AS 15.13.120" in subsections (a), (b), (d), and (f) in order to reflect the 2000 renumbering of AS 15.13.120.

Cross references. — For criminal penalties for violations of this chapter, see AS 15.56.012 — 15.56.019.

NOTES TO DECISIONS

Penalty cannot be obviously unreasonable. — The penalty cannot be so severe and oppressive as to be wholly disproportioned to the offense and obviously unreasonable. The standard is one of obvious unreasonableness. VECO Int'l, Inc. v. Alaska Pub. Offices Comm'n, 753 P.2d 703 (Alaska 1988), appeal dismissed, 488 U.S. 919, 109 S. Ct. 298, 102 L. Ed. 2d 317 (1988).

Statement of reasons for maximum penalties. — A statement of reasons should be given by the commission when it imposes the maximum civil penalties under this section. VECO Int'l, Inc. v. Alaska Pub. Offices Comm'n, 753 P.2d 703 (Alaska 1988), appeal dismissed, 488 U.S. 919, 109 S. Ct. 298, 102 L. Ed. 2d 317 (1988).

Stated in State, Alaska Pub. Offices Comm'n v. Marshall, 633 P.2d 227 (Alaska 1981).

Sec. 15.13.400. Definitions. In this chapter,

(1) "candidate"

(A) means an individual who files for election to the state legislature, for governor, for lieutenant governor, for municipal office, for retention in judicial office, or for constitutional convention delegate, or who campaigns as a write-in candidate for any of these offices; and

(B) when used in a provision of this chapter that limits or prohibits the donation, solicitation, or acceptance of campaign contributions, or limits or prohibits an expenditure, includes

(i) a candidate's campaign treasurer and a deputy campaign treasurer;

(ii) a member of the candidate's immediate family;

(iii) a person acting as agent for the candidate;

(iv) the candidate's campaign committee; and

(v) a group that makes expenditures or receives contributions with the authorization or consent, express or implied, or under the control, direct or indirect, of the candidate;

(2) "commission" means the Alaska Public Offices Commission;

(3) "communication" means an announcement or advertisement disseminated through print or broadcast media, including radio, television, cable, and satellite, the Internet, or through a mass mailing, excluding those placed by an individual or nongroup entity and costing $500 or less and those that do not directly or indirectly identify a candidate or proposition, as that term is defined in AS 15.13.065(c);

(4) "contribution"

(A) means a purchase, payment, promise or obligation to pay, loan or loan guarantee, deposit or gift of money, goods, or services for which charge is ordinarily made, and includes the payment by a person other than a candidate or political party, or compensation for the personal services of another person, that is rendered to the candidate or political party, and that is made for the purpose of

(i) influencing the nomination or election of a candidate;

(ii) influencing a ballot proposition or question; or

(iii) supporting or opposing an initiative proposal application filed with the lieutenant governor under AS 15.45.020;

(B) does not include

(i) services provided without compensation by individuals volunteering a portion or all of their time on behalf of a political party, candidate, or ballot proposition or question;

(ii) ordinary hospitality in a home;

(iii) two or fewer mass mailings before each election by each political party describing the party's slate of candidates for election, which may include photographs, biographies, and information about the party's candidates;

(iv) the results of a poll limited to issues and not mentioning any candidate, unless the poll was requested by or designed primarily to benefit the candidate;

(v) any communication in the form of a newsletter from a legislator to the legislator's constituents, except a communication expressly advocating the election or defeat of a candidate or a newsletter or material in a newsletter that is clearly only for the private benefit of a legislator or a legislative employee; or

(vi) a fundraising list provided without compensation by one candidate or political party to a candidate or political party;

(5) "electioneering communication" means a communication that

(A) directly or indirectly identifies a candidate;

(B) addresses an issue of national, state, or local political importance and attributes a position on that issue to the candidate identified; and

(C) occurs within the 30 days preceding a general or municipal election;

(6) "expenditure"

(A) means a purchase or a transfer of money or anything of value, or promise or agreement to purchase or transfer money or anything of value, incurred or made for the purpose of

(i) influencing the nomination or election of a candidate or of any individual who files for nomination at a later date and becomes a candidate;

(ii) use by a political party;

(iii) the payment by a person other than a candidate or political party of compensation for the personal services of another person that are rendered to a candidate or political party;

(§ 24 ch 48 SLA 1996; am § 39 ch 21 SLA 2000; am §§ 25 26 ch 1 SLA 2002; am § 7 ch 3 SLA 2002; am §§ 8, 9 ch 1 TSSLA 2002; am §§ 18, 19 cl 108 SLA 2003; am § 2 ch 90 SLA 2006; am §§ 7 — 9 ch 73 SLA 2010)

Revisor's notes. — Paragraph (13) was enacted as (12) and paragraphs (3), (5), (7), and (12) were enacted as (13)-(16). Renumbered in 2002 to retain alphabetical order. In 2010, in paragraph (15), "AS 15.80.010 was substituted for "AS 15.60.010" to reflect the 201 renumbering of AS 15.60.010.

Effect of amendments. — The 2006 amendment, effective October 11, 2006, added subparagraph (4)(B)(iv) and made related stylistic changes.

The 2010 amendment, effective September 9, 2010, rewrote (4)(A); added (6)(A)(v), and made related changes; added (8)(C), and made related changes.

Editor's notes. — Under § 16, ch. 73, SLA 2010, the 2010 amendments of the provisions of paragraphs (4), (6), and (8) of this section that relate to initiative proposals apply "to an initiative, the application for which is filed with the lieutenant governor under AS 15.45.020 on or after September 9, 2010."

Opinions of attorney general. — The statutory limit under AS 15.13.070(a) is applicable to "control groups" under former AS 15.13.130. Exempting such groups from the contribution limit would seriously undermine the statute's primary purpose of deterring the buying of elections and the undue influence of large contributors. June 15, 1987, Op. Att'y Gen.

NOTES TO DECISIONS

Constitutionality. — Under the First Amendment, former AS 15.13.400(3)(B)(i) was unconstitutional to the extent that it limited the volunteering of professional services by individuals, but the statute was constitutional as to the ban on the provision of volunteer services by corporations. Jacobus v. Alaska, 338 F.3d 1095 (9th Cir. 2003).

Alaska's campaign finance law, AS 15.13.030 et seq., does not violate pro-life association's First Amendment rights because this section's definition of "electioneering communication" is not unconstitutionally vague or overbroad either facially or as applied, and the reporting and disclosure provisions are reasonable and serve a significant state interest. Alaska Right to Life Comm. v. Miles, 441 F.3d 773 (9th Cir. 2006).

Applied in Jacobus v. Alaska, 182 F. Supp. 2d 893 (D. Alaska 2001).

2 AAC 50.990. Definitions

In this chapter, unless the context requires otherwise:

(1) "agent"

(A) means a representative or one who is authorized to act for another;

(B) includes a contractor or subcontractor;

(2) "anything of value"

(A) except as provided in (B) of this paragraph, means any item, property, or services, tangible or intangible, that could reasonably be considered to be a material advantage, or of material worth, use, or service to a person receiving the item, property, or services;

(B) for a legislative branch filer, has the meaning given in AS 24.60.990 ;

(C) includes any facility, equipment, polling information, supplies, advertising service, membership list, mailing list, and the service of distributing information by means of electronic mail, unless the cost of doing so is minimal

(3) except as provided in 2 AAC 50.405, "candidate"

(A) means a candidate for state or municipal elective office;

(B) includes an individual who

(i) submits a letter of intent to the commission under 2 AAC 50.274; or

(ii) has publicly announced an intent to run as a write-in candidate;

(4) "child" has the meaning given in AS 39.50.200 ;

(5) "commission" means the Alaska Public Offices Commission;

(6) "complainant" means a person who files a complaint with the commission under 2 AAC 50.870;

(7) "contribution"

(A) has the meaning given in AS 15.13.400 ;

(B) includes (means "includes, but is not limited to")

(i) a subscription, advance, transfer, forgiveness of all or part of a debt, relaxation of credit, or anything of value made for or provided to a candidate or campaign by a person, group, or nongroup entity for the purpose set out in AS 15.13.400 (4)(A); and

← so it includes the requirement that it must be something "for which charge is ordinarily made"

← In context this does not mean a form (otherwise it would unreasonably expand "for which charge is ordinarily made")

(ii) a personal contribution as provided in 2 AAC 50.254;

(C) does not include

(i) costs that a media organization, including a broadcasting station, newspaper, or periodical of regular publication, incurs in covering or carrying a news story, editorial, or commentary; however, if the media organization is owned or controlled by a political party, group, or candidate, the cost of the news story, editorial, or commentary is a contribution, unless the media organization carries a bona fide news account as part of a general pattern of campaign-related news accounts that gives reasonably equal coverage to all opposing candidates in the circulation or listening area;

(ii) a non-monetary contribution or in-kind donation of a single item with a normal cost of $50 or less;

(iii) a payment by an individual for the individual's own travel expenses, if the payment is voluntary and is made without an understanding that the payment will be directly or indirectly repaid;

(iv) costs that a business, corporation, trade association, labor union, or other organization not organized primarily to influence elections incurs to communicate directly with the organization's members, employees, or the families of members or employees, on any subject, if the communication is in the same format the organization has used in the past for communications on nonpolitical subjects, and does not solicit contributions or any action other than voting for or against a candidate or ballot proposition or question;

(v) a gift, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value made with respect to a recount of a state or municipal election;

(vi) costs incurred to provide necessary administrative services associated with a payroll withholding plan, if the costs do not include expenses associated with soliciting contributions;

(vii) provision of a service or facility to a candidate, group, or nongroup entity if the entity providing the service or facility is paid at a commercially reasonable rate within a commercially reasonable time or makes the service or facility available to all candidates for a particular office;

(viii) provision of an organization's membership or mailing list to the group or nongroup entity affiliated with the organization;

(ix) the use of personal money or credit by a campaign treasurer or deputy treasurer for an expenditure allowable under AS 15.13.112 , if the amount does not exceed $500 and is repaid before the end of the report cycle in which the expenditure was made; or

(x) the use of personal money or credit by a candidate for an authorized campaign expenditure, if the amount is repaid no later than three days after the date of the expenditure;

(8) "creditor" includes a government authority that has a right by law to demand and recover money from a person or a person's family member;

(9) "deferred income" means money or anything of value that is earned in a reporting period, but is to be paid after the end of that reporting period;

(10) "disclosure statement" or "statement" means a disclosure statement required under AS 24.60.200 or AS 39.50.020 ;

(11) "domestic partner" has the meaning given in AS 39.50.200 ;

The Honorable Carl Gatto, Chair
House Judiciary Committee
State Capitol Room 118
Juneau, AK 99801

Re: House Bill 359 – relating to sex crimes and video conferencing

Dear Representative Gatto:

House Bill 359 has been assigned to the House Judiciary Committee for your consideration. The Department of Law respectfully requests a hearing in the Judiciary Committee on the bill at your earliest convenience. HB 359 builds on and refines legislation enacted over the past several years to address serious problems of sexual exploitation of children and other victims.

A sectional analysis that describes each section of the bill is attached. I expect Annie Carpeneti, Legislative Liaison from the Department of Law, Criminal Division and representatives from the Department of Public Safety will testify regarding this legislation. Experienced law enforcement officers will also be available if needed. No teleconference sites are expected.

Thank you for your consideration of this request.

Sincerely

Michael C. Geraghty

HOUSE BILL 359
SEX TRAFFICKING AND HUMAN TRAFFICKING
SECTIONAL ANALYSIS

The increased scrutiny of crimes related to promoting prostitution of children in Alaska has prompted the proposed change in terminology from promoting prostitution to sex trafficking. There are good reasons for this change. First, a child who is put into prostitution by an adult should be considered and described as a victim, not a prostitute. The change in terminology will encourage this change. Second, a majority of law enforcement officers now refer to the crime of promoting prostitution of children as sex trafficking. Changing Alaska law will facilitate better communication and understanding.

Sections 1, 2, 7 -- 11, 14, 17 – 19, and 21 -- 24 change the statutes prohibiting promoting prostitution to prohibiting sex trafficking. The elements of the offenses remain the same. These sections also make conforming amendments to other laws that currently refer to the crime of promoting prostitution so that they cross-reference sex trafficking.

Section 3 adds the crimes of human trafficking in the first degree and sex trafficking in the first degree to the felonies described as "serious felony offenses" in the state's conspiracy law, AS 11.21.120. This change would enable the state to investigate and potentially prosecute offenders who work with other people to plan and engage in human trafficking or sex trafficking.

Section 4 amends the crime of distribution of indecent materials to minors, AS 11.61.128. This proposed amendment is in response to the recent decision by a federal district court judge holding the current version of the statute to be unconstitutional in violation of the first amendment, because it applies to conduct that is constitutionally protected. In response to the decision that the current law is overbroad, the bill would require that the state prove the defendant intentionally distributed, or possessed with intent to distribute, harmful material to another person that the offender knows is under 16 years of age or believes is under 16 years of age.

Sections 5 and 6 raise the penalty for being a patron of a prostitute, if the prostitute is a minor under 18 years of age, from a class B misdemeanor to a class C felony. It also specifies the legislative intent that the age of the prostitute is a circumstance that does not require proof of a culpable mental state.

Section 12: Under current law, no corroboration is required of the testimony of an alleged victim in a prosecution for promoting prostitution (sex trafficking) in the first, second, and third degrees. The bill adds the crime of promoting prostitution (sex trafficking) in the fourth degree to those crimes that do not require corroboration of the testimony of an alleged victim.

Section 13: Under current law property used to facilitate or derived from a crime of promoting prostitution (sex trafficking) is subject to forfeiture. The bill adds the crime of prostitution to these crimes. Under the bill property used to facilitate or derived from the crime of prostitution would be subject to forfeiture.

Section 15 corrects an error in AS 11.81.250(b). Under current law the crime of promoting prostitution (sex trafficking) in the first degree under AS 11.66.110(a)(2) – where the person promoted is a child – is an unclassified felony. The bill adds this offense to the other offenses described as unclassified felonies in Alaska law.

Section 16 allows the testimony of a witness in a hearing addressing the competency of a defendant for being tried for a crime by way of contemporaneous two-way video conference. It allows this testimony if the witness would be required to travel more that 50 miles to attend the hearing in person or if the witness lives in a place where people customarily travel by air to the court site.

Section 19, in addition to conforming the definition of most serious felony to the changes in the sex trafficking provisions, also corrects an omission in the definition of most serious felony by including online enticement of a minor in the definition.

Section 20 adds a new provision to sex offender registration law that requires a person present in Alaska, who is convicted of an offense out of state that requires registration in that jurisdiction, to register in Alaska. This requirement would apply even if Alaska does not have a criminal provision similar to the crime in the other state that requires registration there. A person would be required to register for 15 years if convicted of one offense, and for life if convicted for two or more offenses.

Section 25 adopts Rule 38.3, Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, addressing the use of testimony by contemporaneous two-way video conference. It would allow this testimony if the parties agree to its use. If the parties do not agree, it would allow contemporaneous two-way video conference testimony if the court finds that its use is necessary to further an important public policy, the witness is unavailable, and the testimony is given under oath and is subject to cross-examination.

Section 26 addresses the applicability of the changes described above.

Section 27 is an instruction to the revisor of statutes regarding the heading of AS 11.66.110.

Section 28 provides for an effective date of July 1, 2012.

HOUSE BILL NO. 359

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SEVENTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

BY THE HOUSE RULES COMMITTEE BY REQUEST OF THE GOVERNOR

Introduced: 2/22/12
Referred: Judiciary, Finance

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to conspiracy to commit human trafficking in the first degree or sex trafficking in the first degree; relating to the crime of furnishing indecent material to minors, the crime of online enticement of a minor, the crime of prostitution, and the crime of sex trafficking; relating to forfeiture of property used in prostitution offenses; relating to sex offender registration; relating to testimony by video conference; adding Rule 38.3, Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 04.06.110 is amended to read:

Sec. 04.06.110. Peace officer powers. The director and the persons employed for the administration and enforcement of this title may, with the concurrence of the commissioner of public safety, exercise the powers of peace officers when those powers are specifically granted by the board. Powers granted by the board under this section may be exercised only when necessary for the enforcement of the criminally punishable provisions of this title, regulations of the board, and other criminally punishable laws and regulations, including investigation of violations of laws against prostitution and sex trafficking [PROMOTING PROSTITUTION] described in AS 11.66.100 - 11.66.135 [AS 11.66.100 - 11.66.130] and laws against gambling, promoting gambling, and related offenses described in AS 11.66.200 - 11.66.280.

 Sec. 2. AS 04.11.370(a) is amended to read:

(a) A license or permit shall be suspended or revoked if the board finds

(1) misrepresentation of a material fact on an application made under this title or a regulation adopted under this title;

(2) continuation of the manufacture, sale, or service of alcoholic beverages by the licensee or permittee would be contrary to the best interests of the public;

(3) failure on the part of the licensee to correct a defect that constitutes a violation of this title, a condition or restriction imposed by the board, a regulation adopted under this title, or other laws after receipt of notice issued by the board or its agent;

(4) conviction of a licensee of a violation of this title, a regulation adopted under this title, or an ordinance adopted under AS 04.21.010;

(5) conviction of an agent or employee of a licensee of a violation of this title, a regulation adopted under this title, or an ordinance adopted under AS 04.21.010, if the licensee is found by the board to have either knowingly allowed the violation or to have recklessly or with criminal negligence failed to act in accordance with the duty prescribed under AS 04.21.030 with the result that the agent or employee violates a law, regulation, or ordinance;

(6) failure of the licensee to comply with the public health, fire, or safety laws and regulations in the state;

(7) use of the licensed premises as a resort for illegal possessors or users of narcotics, prostitutes, or sex traffickers [PROMOTERS OF PROSTITUTION]; in addition to any other legally competent evidence, the character of the premises may be proved by the general reputation of the premises in the community as a resort for illegal possessors or users of narcotics, prostitutes, or sex

traffickers [PROMOTERS OF PROSTITUTION];

(8) occurrence of illegal gambling within the limits of the licensed premises;

(9) the licensee permitted a public offense involving moral turpitude to occur on the licensed premises;

(2) may, for a minor who is at least 13 years of age at the time of commission of the offense, disclose to the public the name of the minor, the name or names of the parent, parents, or guardian of the minor, the action required by the agency to be taken by the minor under AS 47.12.060 to adjust the matter, and information about the offense exclusive of information that identifies the victim of the offense if the minor has knowingly failed to comply with all terms and conditions required of the minor by the agency to adjust the matter under AS 47.12.060(b).

 Sec. 25. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. The Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure are amended by adding a new section to read:

Rule 38.3. Video Conference Testimony.

(a) In General. In every trial the testimony of witnesses shall be taken in open court, unless otherwise provided by statute or rule.

(b) Testimony by Video Conference. The parties may agree to take testimony from a witness by contemporaneous two-way video conference presented in open court. Absent the parties' agreement, the court may authorize the amend #12 at its discretion contemporaneous two-way video conference testimony of a witness if

(1) the requesting party establishes that testimony by two-way video conference is necessary to further an important public policy;

(2) the requesting party establishes that the witness is unavailable; and

(3) the testimony is given under oath and subject to cross-examination.

(c) Procedures for Taking Video Conference Testimony. If the trial court authorizes video conference testimony under (b) of this rule, it shall determine the procedures for taking the contemporaneous two-way video conference testimony. The parties, the court, the trier of fact, and the public must be able to see and hear the witness; and the witness must see and hear the courtroom proceedings, including the defendant, as if the witness were sitting in the courtroom's witness stand. The persons who are present with the witness must be identified. The parties may move to exclude any person other than the video conference technician from the witness's presence; the court, in its discretion, may exclude a person other than the video conference technician from the presence of the witness.

(d) Definitions.

(1) Contemporaneous Two-Way Video Conference. Contemporaneous two-way video conference means a conference among people at different places by means of transmitted audio and video signals. It includes all communication technologies that allow two or more places to interact by two-way video and audio transmissions simultaneously.

(2) Unavailable. In this rule, a witness is unavailable if

FISCAL NOTE #1

STATE OF ALASKA
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB 359

Analysis

The bill changes the description of the crime of promoting prostitution under AS 11.66.110 – 11.66.135 from promoting prostitution in the first, second, third, and fourth degrees to sex trafficking in the first, second, third, and fourth degrees.

It adds the crimes of human trafficking in the first degree and sex trafficking in the first degree to the definition of "serious felony offense" under the conspiracy law.

The bill amends the crime of distribution of indecent materials to minors under AS 11.61.128 in response to the judicial decision that the current law is unconstitutional due to over breadth by requiring the prosecution to prove that the offender intentionally distributed, or possessed with the intent to distribute, harmful material to another person that the offender knows is under 16 years of age or believes is under 16 years of age.

It adopts a procedure for contemporaneous two-way videoconference in criminal trials where the court finds that it is necessary to further an important public policy, that the witness is unavailable, and the testimony is given under oath and subject to cross-examination. The bill would also allow contemporaneous two-way videoconference testimony in hearings addressing the competency of a defendant to be tried for criminal charges if the witness resides 50 or more miles away from the place of the hearing or the customary travel to the site of the hearing is by air.

The bill would require a person present in Alaska to register as a sex offender if the person is required to register as a sex offender in another jurisdiction.

BILL NO. HB 359

Analysis

This bill changes the name of the crime of "promoting prostitution" to "sex trafficking" in numerous sections in Alaska Statutes; makes changes to Alaska Statute to address recent court decisions regarding the distribution of indecent material to minors; adds AS 11.61.100 (Prostitution) to AS 11.66.145 (Forfeiture) relating to the forfeiture of property used in prostitution offenses; would define human trafficking and sex trafficking in the first degrees as serious felony offenses for purposes of the state conspiracy law; and requires a person who is required to register as a sex offender or child kidnapper in another jurisdiction to register in Alaska.

This bill will have no fiscal impact on the Division of Alaska State Troopers.

FISCAL NOTE #3

STATE OF ALASKA
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB 359

Analysis

This bill changes the language used to describe conduct "promoting prostitution" to the phrase "sex trafficking," prohibits the intentional distribution of indecent material to persons known or believed to be less than 16 years of age, and prohibits possession with the intention to distribute indecent material to persons known or believed to be less than 16 years of age. This bill elevates the charge of prostitution from a B misdemeanor to an A misdemeanor if the subject person is under the age of 18. This bill includes "online enticement of a minor in the definition of "most serious felony." The bill also creates the crimes of: conspiracy to commit human trafficking, a class B felony which carries a sentence of up to 10 years imprisonment, and conspiracy to commit sex trafficking, a class A felony which carries a sentence of up to 20 years imprisonment. This bill amends the definition of "sex offense" for the purpose of sex offender registration requirements by including any conviction in another state that would require registration as a sex offender in that state.

Additionally, this bill amends Rule 38 of the Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure by adding a new section that allows for testimony using two-way video conferencing. The bill also specifies that video conference testimony is allowed for witnesses whose testimony is used to determine competency of the defendant under this section, where the witness would be required to travel more than 50 miles to court, or where air travel to court is customary.

This bill will result in increases in felony cases and more complex sentencing for certain felonies. The Public Defender Agency does not have a reliable method for determining how many more persons may be charged for failing to register as a sex offender under the new definition or whether those charged would qualify for representation by the Public Defender. The Agency, therefore, submits an indeterminate fiscal note.

FISCAL NOTE #5

STATE OF ALASKA
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB 359

Analysis

This bill adds human trafficking in the first degree and sex trafficking in the first degree to the conspiracy statues (AS 11.31.120). A person convicted of this new crime would be subject to punishment for a Class B felony. The average sentence for a Class B felony is five years. The average daily cost of care in a DOC facility is $134.90. Therefore, one individual convicted of conspiring to commit sex trafficking in the first degree could cost the Department of Corrections $246,192.50 based on a five year average sentence.

In the past five years, DOC has seen an average of 2.4 convictions for promoting prostitution (sex trafficking). However, DOC does not have any historical data on conspiracy to commit sex or human trafficking, as this would be a new crime if this legislation were to pass. Therefore, DOC is currently unable to quanitfy the fiscal impacts of the passage of this legislation.

The Department will closely monitor the potential future fiscal impacts should this legislation pass.

FISCAL NOTE #6

STATE OF ALASKA
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB 359

Analysis

This proposed legislation would require a person who is required to register as a sex offender or child kidnapper in another jurisdiction to register in Alaska even if there is no substantive law in Alaska that is similar to the offense the person was convicted of.

For the department's Records & Identification bureau to continue to accomplish a core service of providing public access to current information regarding sex offenders in Alaska, the determination that a person must register as a sex offender or child kidnapper in Alaska because of their requirement to register in another jurisdiction must be made timely and must be based on information that has been validated.

Considerable research and analysis of the criminal history background of persons with sex offense convictions outside of Alaska would be required to determine whether the offense of conviction is a registerable offense under the current laws of that jurisdiction and whether or not the person is subject to that jurisdiction's registration requirements. Coordination with the jurisdiction's sex offender central registry office would need to occur to obtain source documents and other relevant information on the person.

Additionally, it is anticipated that the department would need to continually monitor the status of registration laws and legal cases affecting sex offender registration in all jurisdictions to ensure a person required to register in Alaska under proposed AS 12.63.100(6)(D) continued to be subject to the registration requirements of the jurisdiction that their offense was committed in.

The department anticipates that these additional efforts will require one new full-time Criminal Justice Planner position. This position would be responsible to review and evaluate offender records with out-of-state sex offense convictions to determine the requirement to register under proposed AS 12.63.100(6)(D), to coordinate with other jurisdictions' sex offender central registry offices, and to monitor sex offender registration laws in other jurisdictions and any changes for possible impact to currently registered offenders.

FISCAL NOTE

STATE OF ALASKA BILL NO. HB359-ACS-TRC-2-28-12
2012 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Analysis

House Bill 359 changes the crimes of prostitution in the first, second, third and fourth degrees to sex trafficking, and adds the crimes of human trafficking and sex trafficking in the first degree to the definition of "serious felony offense" under the conspiracy law. These changes have no fiscal impact on the court system.

The bill also amends the crime of distribution of indecent materials to minors (AS 11.61.128(a)) by requiring intent and knowledge as elements of the crime, it creates new crimes, and it requires persons with a sex offense in another jurisdiction to register as a sex offender in Alaska. These changes could have the effect of changing the number and types of criminal cases that are filed with and handled by the court system. However, the number of cases filed under AS 11.61.128(a) in FY 2011 was low, and the court expects that it would handle any additional cases under this bill in the normal course, without any fiscal impact. The court will monitor the cases filed under the revised statutes to determine whether the bill does cause a significant change, but a fiscal impact from those revisions is not expected.

In addition, Section 25 of House Bill 359 adds a Rule of Criminal Procedure that allows for two-way videoconferencing for witness testimony in criminal trials when the parties agree or when the court authorizes it because it is found to be necessary to further an important public policy, the witness is not available, and the testimony is given under oath and subject to cross-examination. Similarly, Section 16 adds a new subsection to AS 12.47.100 allowing the testimony of witnesses in competency hearings to be presented by two-way videoconferencing in certain circumstances.

The court does not view this bill as requiring installation of high-quality, high-definition videoconferencing cameras, televisions, and speakers in courtrooms, and therefore is not basing its fiscal note on the high cost of that undertaking. Still, the bill may result in the increased costs associated with the increased use of "webcams" for the video testimony of witnesses, such as the costs of software and, possibly, access to increased bandwidth. The court cannot accurately determine how many trials and competency hearings might include testimony by videoconferencing under this bill, and therefore submits an indeterminate fiscal note.

Re: HB 359: Video Testimony and Sex Offender Registration
ACLU Review of Legal Issues

Dear Chair Gatto and Vice-Chair Thompson:

Thank you for the opportunity to provide written testimony with respect to House Bill 359, which – amongst other provisions – permits judicial testimony by video conference and modifies the registration of sex offenders.

The American Civil Liberties Union of Alaska represents thousands of members and activists throughout Alaska who seek to preserve and expand the individual freedoms and civil liberties guaranteed by the United States and Alaska Constitutions. In that context, we wish to advise you of constitutional and policy issues with sections 16, 20, and 25 of this proposed legislation.

Section 16 Unconstitutionally Violates the Confrontation Clauses

If enacted, Section 16 of HB 359 would permit, in the context of determining if a criminal defendant is mentally competent to stand trial, a witness, "including the psychiatrist or psychologist who examined the defendant," who would have to "travel more than 50 miles to the court or lives in a place from which people customarily travel by air to the court," to "testify concerning the competency of the defendant by contemporaneous two-way video conference[.]" A court would likely rule that this provision violates the Confrontation Clauses of the federal and Alaska Constitutions. U.S. Const., Amend. VI ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him"); Alaska Const., Art. I, § 11 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall have the right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him").

The federal Confrontation Clause's "right to confront one's accusers is a concept that dates back to Roman times." Crawford v. Washington, 541 U.S. 36, 43 (2004). It is a "bedrock procedural guarantee" that "applies to both federal and state prosecutions." Id. at 42; see Lemon v. State, 514 P.2d 1151 (Alaska 1973).

This essential right serves four purposes: first, it "insures that the witness will give his statements under oath [by] impressing him with the seriousness of the matter," Maryland v. Craig, 497 U.S. 836, 846 (1990) (internal quotation omitted); second, it "ensur[es] that evidence admitted against an accused is reliable" by "forc[ing] the witness to submit to cross-examination, the greatest legal engine ever invented for the discovery of truth," id. (internal quotation omitted); third, it "permits the jury . . . to observe the demeanor of the witness in making his statement, thus aiding the jury in assessing his credibility," id. (internal quotation omitted); and fourth, it has a "strong symbolic purpose" of assuring everyone that the prosecution is fair, id. at 847. Confrontation "may confound and undo the false accuser, or reveal the child coached by a malevolent adult." Id. at 846–47 (internal quotation omitted).

Face-to-face confrontation is "the core of the values furthered by the Confrontation Clause," id. at 847 (internal quotation omitted) and "[t]he prosecution must produce . . . witnesses . . . against the defendant," Melendez-Diaz v. Massachusetts, 557 U.S. 305, 129 S. Ct. 2527, 2534 (2009) (emphasis in original). The face-to-face confrontation may be denied only if, after a fact-based, "case-specific" inquiry, Craig, 497 U.S. at 855, a court determines that "denial of such confrontation is necessary to further an important public policy and only where the reliability of the testimony is otherwise assured," id. at 850.

The "necessary to further an important public policy" prong is not easily satisfied. While juvenile victims of sexual violence may be exempted from personally confronting the accused, the denial of face-to-face confrontation is only justified if "it is the presence of the defendant that causes the trauma." Id. at 856. But, the desire to have the child witness avoid "courtroom trauma generally" is insufficient to deny face-to-face confrontation "because the child could be permitted to testify in less intimidating surroundings, albeit with the defendant present." Id. And, the court must determine that "the emotional distress . . . is more than de minimis, i.e., more than mere nervousness or excitement or some reluctance to testify." Id. (internal quotation omitted); Blume v. State, 797 P.2d 664, 674 (Alaska Ct. App. 1990). Simple need for a witness's testimony,[1] expediency,[2] efficiency,[3] security,[4] "convenience and cost-saving,"[5] and a desire not to leave a severely ill, elderly spouse's side[6] do not satisfy Craig's important public policy test nor justify avoiding face-to-face in-person confrontation.[7]

While no court has squarely addressed if "the [federal] Confrontation Clause applies to pretrial competency hearings," United States v. Hamilton, 107 F.3d 499, 504 (7th Cir. 1997), such as those in Alaska Stat. § 12.47.100, an Alaska court might hold that the federal and state Confrontation Clauses do. West Virginia holds that a defendant is entitled to face-to-face confrontation in pretrial hearings to determine whether to transfer his case from juvenile to criminal court, State v. Gary F., 432 S.E.2d 793, 800 (W. Va. 1993), and Pennsylvania applies the Confrontation Clauses to pretrial suppression hearings, Commonwealth v. Atkinson, 987 A.2d 743, 746 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2009).

The touchstone of a court's inquiry would be the Confrontation Clauses' purpose in a competency hearing. A competency hearing is "critically important," see Gary F., 432 S.E.2d at 801, and "an adversarial proceeding and a critical stage in a criminal proceeding . . . . at which substantive rights may be preserved or lost," Atkinson, 987 A.2d at 747 (internal quotation omitted). Indeed, the competency hearing is how the court determines if a "defendant is unable to understand the proceedings against [him] or to assist in [his] own defense," and if not, the defendant "may not be tried, convicted, or sentenced for the commission of a crime so long as the incompetency exists." Alaska Stat. § 12.47.100(a). The court decides this issue through an adversarial process and "[t]he party raising the issue of competency bears the burden of proving the defendant is incompetent by a preponderance of the evidence." Id. at § 12.47.100(c).

The court bases its decision on the testimony of "at least one qualified psychiatrist or psychologist," id. at § 12.47.100(b), but the scientific expertise of the witness does not affect the Confrontation Clause analysis. "The prosecution must produce . . . witnesses . . . against the defendant," Melendez-Diaz, 129 S. Ct. at 2534 (emphasis in original), even if the witnesses are scientists offering forensic analysis. "Confrontation is one means of assuring accurate forensic [6] Bush v. State, 193 P.3d 203, 216 (Wyo. 2008).

[7] In Melendez-Diaz, the U.S. Supreme Court directly faced a request to "relax the requirements of the Confrontation Clause to accommodate the 'necessities of trial and the adversary process.'" Melendez-Diaz, 129 S. Ct. at 2540. The Court rejected this proposal because "[i]t is not clear whence we would derive the authority to do so. The Confrontation Clause may make the prosecution of criminals more burdensome, but that is equally true of the right to trial by jury and the privilege against self-incrimination. The Confrontation Clause – like those other constitutional provisions – is binding, and we may not disregard it at our convenience." Id. "It is a truism that constitutional protections have costs." *Coy v. analysis. . . . Confrontation is designed to weed out not only the fraudulent analyst, but the incompetent one as well." Id. at 2536–37. "[T]here is not a third category of witnesses, helpful to the prosecution, but somehow immune from confrontation." Id. at 2534. The importance of a pretrial competency hearing, with an adversarial process to determine critical rights, likely requires the full protections of the Confrontation Clauses.

In conducting its inquiry of Section 16, an Alaska court will rely on the Craig test. Blume, 797 P.2d at 674; Reutter v. State, 886 P.2d 1298, 1307 (Alaska Ct. App. 1994) (using Craig to evaluate Alaska Stat. § 12.45.046, which allows child victims to testify via closed-circuit television).[8] Using the Craig test, the Eight and Eleventh federal circuits determined "[t]he simple truth is that confrontation through a video monitor is not the same as physical face-to-face confrontation. . . . the two are not constitutionally equivalent." United States v. Yates, 438 F.3d 1307, 1315 (11th Cir. 2006) (en banc). The Confrontation Clause "is most certainly compromised when the confrontation occurs though an electronic medium. Indeed, no court that has considered the question has found otherwise[.]" Id. "The virtual 'confrontations' offered by closed-circuit television systems fall short of the face-to-face standard because they do not provide the same truth-inducing effect." United States v. Bordeaux, 400 F.3d 548, 554 (8th Cir. 2005).

Given (1) the criticism of two-way video testimony and (2) that the supposed benefits of Section 16, such as cost-savings, convenience, and efficiency, do not rise to an "important public policy," a court would likely conclude that Section 16 violates the federal and Alaska Confrontation Clauses. This is especially true because the Alaska Supreme Court has expressly reserved its ability to interpret the Alaska Confrontation Clause more broadly than the federal one, Lemon, 514 P.2d at 1154 n.5,[9] and because it has "the authority and, when necessary, duty to construe the provisions of the Alaska Constitution to provide greater protections than those arising out of the identical federal clauses," Doe v. State, 189 P.3d 999, 1005 (Alaska 2008).

This conclusion is even more inexorable given the Alaska Supreme Court's long-standing recognition that one of the "vital interests" of the Confrontation Clauses is to "enable[] the defendant to demonstrate to the jury the witnesses' demeanor when confronted by the defendant so that the inherent veracity of the witness is displayed in the crucible of the courtroom," Lemon, 514 P.2d at 1153, and that testimony via video may alter "impressions of the witness' demeanor and credibility," Stores v. State, 625 P.2d 820, 828 (Alaska 1980).[10] [8] The Sixth, Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, and Eleventh federal circuits apply the Craig test to evaluate two-way video conference testimony. Yates, 438 F.3d at 1313 (listing cases).

[9] The supreme courts of Illinois and Pennsylvania each interpreted their state Confrontation Clause more broadly than the federal one and each concluded that their state Clauses prohibit testimony by closed-circuit television. People v. Fitzpatrick, 633 N.E.2d 685, 688 (Ill. 1994); Commonwealth v. Ludwig, 594 A.2d 281, 281–82 (Pa. 1991).

[10] Video testimony causes the "most serious . . . [e]vidence distortion . . . because the picture conveyed may influence a juror's feelings about guilt or believability. . . . Variations in lens or angle, may result in failure to

Even if a court did not completely overturn Section 16, that Section "must be construed to incorporate the requirements of Craig." Reutter, 886 P.2d at 1307. Craig would require that a court permit video testimony only if it "is necessary to further an important public policy," Craig, 497 U.S. at 850, which, as noted above, does not include efficiency, speed, convenience, or cost-savings. At best, Section 16 would be functionally overturned because it would be the rare situation when the need for video testimony in a competency hearing satisfied Craig.[11]

Section 25 Should Be Improved to Enhance Witnesses' Reliability and to Strengthen Its Constitutionality

Section 25's proposed addition to the Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure tracks Craig and so it is likely secure from federal constitutional challenge.[12] It should, however, be altered to enhance witnesses' reliability and to further buttress its presumed constitutionality.

Craig and other courts note that the Confrontation Clause increases witnesses' reliability by exposing witness coaching. E.g. Craig, 497 U.S. at 847 (face-to-face confrontation may "reveal the child coached by a malevolent adult") (internal quotations omitted). Subpart (c) of Section 25 puts the onus on the parties to "move to exclude any person other than the video conference technician from the witness's presence[.]"

Given that witnesses who testify via video are more able to be coached (because someone in the video room, rather than in the courtroom, with the witness, may more easily coach him) and any coaching is harder to detect, the Committee should amend the Rule and establish a default of having just the video technician in the room with the witness, but permitting the parties to move to allow others to be present with him. To further caution against coaching, the Committee should also add a provision that a second camera should transmit to the courtroom a live feed of what the witness sees.[13] convey subtle nuances, including changes in witness demeanor such as a nervous twitch or paling and blushing in response to an important question . . . Furthermore, the camera itself is selective of what it relates to the viewer. Transmission of valuable first impressions may be impossible, and off-camera evidence is necessarily excluded while the focus is on another part of the body or another witness." Stores, 625 P.2d at 828 n.25.

[11] This analysis focused on Section 16's unconstitutionality, but the Committee should also consider practical problems with video testimony, such as the difficulties of having the witness physically use and interact with exhibits, counsel, and the court.

[12] Alaska courts could conclude, however, that the Rule violates the Alaska Confrontation Clause. Lemon, 514 P.2d at 1154 n.5

[13] Not all coaching is intentional or malicious. Spectators may innocently influence testimony through their facial expressions and body language. Permitting the court, counsel, and the defendant to see what the witness sees enables them to notice and check that behavior.

Section 20 Is Unwise; It Shackles Alaska's Policy to Every Other Jurisdiction

Section 20 adds a requirement that anyone who has been convicted of "a crime in another jurisdiction that requires the person to register as a sex offender or child kidnapper in that jurisdiction" must register with the Alaska sex offender registry. Alaska Stat. § 12.63.100(6) currently ensures that out-of-state offenders register in Alaska if they "committed or attempted to commit" one of Alaska Stat. § 12.63.100(6)'s offenses or "a similar offense [or] law of another jurisdiction." Section 20, then, serves only to unpin the Alaska registry from Alaska crimes and Alaska public policy.

This concern is not academic. Other states require registration for offenses that, if committed in Alaska, would not require the offender to register. In Alaska, for example, while most forms of indecent exposure require offenders to register, not all do: streaking (perhaps done as a prank),[14] is a misdemeanor in Alaska[15] and does not require registration.[16] Other states are more draconian; to continue to use the indecent exposure example, some states require registration for all forms, even those variants that Alaska has omitted from registration.[17] If Section 20 is enacted, it would commit these individuals to register annually for at least 15 years[18] and suffer the ignominy and consequences of registration.

Registration is life-changing. The Department of Public Safety publishes, on an easily accessible website, each registrant's "name, aliases, address, photograph, physical description, description of motor vehicles, license numbers of motor vehicles, and vehicle identification numbers of motor vehicles, place of employment, date of birth, crime for which convicted, date of conviction, place and court of conviction, length and conditions of sentence, and a statement as to whether the offender or kidnapper is in compliance with requirements of AS 12.63 or cannot be located." Alaska Stat. § 18.65.087(b). This "'impose[s] significant affirmative obligations and a severe stigma on every [registrant],'" Doe, 189 P.3d at 1009 (quoting Smith v. Doe, 538 U.S. 84, 111 (Stevens, J., dissenting)) (first alteration in original), and "through aggressive public notification of their crimes," id. (internal quotation omitted), causes registrants to risk "public shunning, picketing, press vigils, ostracism, loss of employment, and eviction, to threats of violence, physical attacks, and arson," id. at 1010 n.80.

If obligated to register, one must register each year for at least 15 years.[19] Once on the registry, there is "no mechanism" through which one "can petition the state or a court for relief from the obligations of continued registration and disclosure." Id. at 1017.

No matter one's feelings about registration as a policy matter, everyone should be able to agree that placement on the registry, because of its significant, irrevocable consequences, should not be done lightly. If Section 20 is enacted, individuals will be forced to register and bear the heavy costs even though they have not committed an offense that Alaska, in its sound policy judgment, has decided warrants registration.

Alaska should not abdicate its sovereignty and wisdom nor should it cede its policymaking to other jurisdictions. The Legislature should continue to exercise its considered judgment in determining what offenses justify registration. Section 20 would make Alaska's registry an appendage to all other jurisdictions and it would carelessly ensnare otherwise anodyne individuals into its life-changing scheme.

Conclusion

We hope that the Judiciary Committee will recognize that these are just some of the problems with House Bill 359, in that it impermissibly deprives Alaskans of their constitutional rights and it outsources the Legislature's policy judgments about the sex offender registry to every other jurisdiction.

In promoting prostitution, no due process violation for statute dispensing with reasonable mistake of age defense

Court of Appeals of Alaska.
Willie B. BELL, Appellant,
v.
STATE of Alaska, Appellee.

No. 5821.
Sept. 9, 1983.

Defendant was convicted in the Superior Court, Third Judicial District, Anchorage, Milton M. Souter, J., of promoting prostitution in the first degree and managing a prostitution enterprise, and he appealed. The Court of Appeals, Bryner, C.J., held that: (1) statute which expressly dispenses with mistake of age as a defense to promoting prostitution in the first degree does not violate due process of law; (2) trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting tape recording of phone conversation between defendant and person he was alleged to have induced to engage in prostitution even though part of tape was inaudible; (3) evidence was sufficient to support finding of existence of probable cause to support issuance of search warrant to record conversations between defendant and women who had worked for him; (4) defendant failed to show prejudice stemming from untimely notification of execution of the warrant; (5) trial court's supplemental instruction, issued in response to inquiry by jury whether inability to agree on one count of indictment constituted a hung jury, was not coercive and did not constitute an abuse of discretion; (6) conviction of the two offenses did not violate double jeopardy; and (7) increase of defendant's sentence by one year was justified by fact that defendant attempted to arrange a romantic involvement with a 14-year-old girl while he was incarcerated for promoting the prostitution of another girl under the age of 16.

Affirmed.

Fact that defendant attempted to arrange a romantic involvement with a 14-year-old girl while he was incarcerated for promoting the prostitution of another girl under the age of 16 indicated a lack of remorse on defendant's part and a greater need for deterrence of defendant himself, and thus justified imposition of a more severe sentence. OPINION

BRYNER, Chief Judge.

Willie B. Bell appeals his convictions for promoting prostitution in the first degree in violation of AS 11.66.110(a)(2) and managing a prostitution enterprise in violation of AS 11.66.120(a)(1). He also appeals the sentence imposed. We affirm.

Bell was a twenty-nine-year-old army sergeant when he procured two sixteen-year-old girls, C.R. and M.J., and one fourteen-year-old girl, D.W., for prostitution. C.R. began living with Bell and engaging in prostitution after Bell promised to marry her and to buy her a new car and new clothing. At Bell's direction, D.W. and M.J. worked as prostitutes in May, 1980. On May 22, 1980, Bell assaulted M.J., claiming that she had been drinking instead of "working." Fearing that Bell would harm them, C.R. and M.J. left him and contacted police, who obtained a search warrant to record conversations between M.J., C.R. and Bell. A telephone conversation between Bell and C.R. and a conversation involving Bell, M.J. and C.R. were recorded pursuant 832 to the warrant and used as evidence against Bell.

The indictment returned against Bell charged two counts of promoting prostitution in the first degree, alleging that he induced D.W. to engage in prostitution when she was under the age of sixteen (Count I) (AS 11.66.110(a)(2)), and that he induced C.R. to engage in prostitution by means of force (Count II) (AS 11.66.110(a)(1)). Count III of the indictment, as it went to the jury, alleged that Bell was guilty of attempted promotion of prostitution in the first degree, AS 11.66.110(a)(1) and AS 11.31.100(a), regarding M.J. The indictment also alleged that Bell managed, supervised, controlled or owned a prostitution enterprise other than a house of prostitution in violation of AS 11.66.120(a)(1) (Count IV). Bell was convicted of Counts I and IV. On Count II, Bell was acquitted of the charge but convicted of the lesser-included offense of promoting prostitution in the third degree, AS 11.66.130. On Count III, Bell was found not guilty of the charge but guilty of the lesser-included offense of attempted promotion of prostitution in the third degree, AS 11.66.130 and 11.31.100(a). Bell was not sentenced on Counts II and III. Superior Court Judge Milton M. Souter sentenced Bell to a five-year term with two years suspended on Count I, and a four-year term with three years suspended on Count IV. The sentences for these offenses were to run concurrently. Subsequently, Judge Souter refused to reduce the sentence.

On appeal, Bell argues that: (1) he should have been allowed to present a reasonable mistake of age defense to the charge contained in Count I; (2) a partially inaudible tape recording should not have been admitted into evidence; (3) the search warrant for recording of conversations was improperly issued and executed; (4) supplemental instructions given to the jury were unduly coercive; (5) the sentences imposed by the trial court violated his double jeopardy rights; and (6) Judge Souter gave improper consideration to a letter Bell wrote, while awaiting sentencing, to the fourteen-year-old daughter of another inmate.

I. MISTAKE OF AGE

© 2012 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

[1] Bell asserts that the trial court erred in refusing to give a proposed jury instruction providing for a reasonable mistake of age defense to the charge of inducing a person under the age of sixteen to engage in prostitution in violation of AS 11.66.110(a)(2).[FN1] Bell argues that AS 11.66.110(b) violates his due process rights under the United States and Alaska constitutions by expressly precluding mistake of age as a defense to the charge of violating AS 11.66.110(a)(2). We find this argument unpersuasive and conclude that the legislature may, consistent with the requirements of constitutional due process, preclude mistake of age from constituting a defense to the 833 crime of promoting prostitution in the first degree.

FN1. AS 11.66.110 provides:

> PROMOTING PROSTITUTION IN THE FIRST DEGREE.
> (a) A person commits the crime of promoting prostitution in the first degree if he
> (1) induces or causes a person to engage in prostitution through the use of force;
> (2) as other than a patron of a prostitute, induces or causes a person under 16 years of age to engage in prostitution; or
> (3) induces or causes a person in his legal custody to engage in prostitution.
> (b) In a prosecution under (a)(2) of this section, it is not a defense that the defendant reasonably believed that the person he induced or caused to engage in prostitution was 16 years of age or older.
> (c) Promoting prostitution in the first degree is a class B felony.

The jury was instructed on the elements of this offense. The court then instructed that:

> It is not a defense to the crime charged in Count I of the Indictment that the defendant reasonably believed that the person he induced or caused to engage in prostitution was 16 years of age or older.

The instruction proposed by Bell stated:

> It is a defense to Count I of the indictment, Inducing a Person Under 16 Years of Age to Engage in Prostitution, that the defendant reasonably and in good faith believed that the female person was of the age of sixteen years or older, even though, in fact, she was under the age of sixteen years. If from all the evidence you have a reasonable doubt as to the question whether defendant reasonably and in good faith believed that she was sixteen years of age or older, you must give the defendant the benefit of that doubt and find him not guilty.

It is apparent that the legislature considered procurement of a person under sixteen to be an aggravated form of promoting prostitution. The commentary to the Revised Criminal Code, 2 Senate Journal, Supplement No. 47, at 109 (1978), states that by denying a defendant the defense of reasonable mistake as to age, creation of strict liability was intended as to the element of the offense involving age of the victim.[FN2] Supporting the validity of the legislature's decision in this regard is the supreme court's opinion in Hentzner v. State, 613 P.2d 821 (Alaska 1980), in which the court held:

FN2. See also Alaska Criminal Code Revision Part 4, at 103 (Tent. Draft 1977) (Commentary to AS 11.66.140).

> Where a crime involved may be said to be malum in se, that is, one which reasoning members of society regard as condemnable, awareness of the commission of the act necessarily carries with it an awareness of wrongdoing. In such a case the requirement of criminal intent is met on proof of conscious action, and it would be entirely acceptable to define the word "wilfully" to mean no more than a consciousness of the conduct in question.

Id. at 826. See also Wheeler v. State, 659 P.2d 1241, 1254 n. 18 (Alaska App.1983).

[2] Bell correctly states the well-recognized rule in this jurisdiction that criminal intent is a necessary ingredient of criminal liability and that one charged with criminal conduct must have an awareness or consciousness of wrongdoing. Speidel v. State, 460 P.2d 77, 78 (Alaska 1969). In Speidel, the awareness of wrongdoing was in the context of a larceny-type crime, for which courts have historically required a specific intent to wrongfully deprive. In Alex v. State, 484 P.2d 677 (Alaska 1971), the supreme court discussed the intent required for non-larceny crimes:

> However, as applied to crimes generally, what is imperative, is that an accused's act be other than simply inadvertent or neglectful. What is essential is not an awareness that a given conduct is a "wrongdoing" in the sense that it is proscribed by law, but rather, an awareness that one is committing the specific acts which are defined by law as a "wrongdoing." It is, however, no defense that one was not aware that his acts were wrong in the sense that they were proscribed by law. So long as one acts intentionally, with cognizance of his behavior, he acts with the requisite awareness of wrongdoing.

Id. at 681–82.[FN3]

> FN3. See also State v. Rice, 626 P.2d 104, 115 (Alaska 1981) (Matthews, J., concurring) (a statute prohibiting the transportation of illegally taken game was overbroad, because it included "within its ambit the conduct of people who have no reason to believe that what they are doing is criminal").

[3][4] We believe this language is applicable to Bell's actions, since he was consciously committing the acts proscribed by law. As an element of this offense, Bell was required to be aware that he was procuring women to engage in acts of prostitution. Indeed, the jurors in this case were instructed that they must be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt > that the defendant engaged in conduct which caused or induced [D.W.] to engage in prostitution; [and] that the defendant engaged in said conduct with the specific intent to cause or induce [D.W.] to engage in prostitution.

Thus, while Bell was not required to know the age of those whom he procured, this is not to say that the offense did not require mens rea or a culpable mental state.

We also note that AS 11.66.110(b) is in accord with the common law view that there should be no exculpation for mistake where, if the facts had been as the actor believed them to be, his conduct would still be illegal or immoral. [FN4] As Bell recognizes 834 on appeal, his conduct would still have been illegal even if D.W. had been sixteen or over. AS 11.66.130(a)(2). [FN5] Moreover, although it might be arguable that the offense of prostitution should be considered a malum prohibitum crime, we think it manifest that promoting prostitution is an offense "which reasoning members of society regard as condemnable," and thus, is malum in se. Hentzner v. State, 613 P.2d at 826. Accordingly, there can be little doubt that Hentzner 's basic requirement of an awareness or consciousness of wrongdoing is satisfied, despite the fact that AS 11.66.110(b) precludes mistake of age as a defense to the offense of promoting prostitution in the first degree.

> FN4. In the landmark case of Regina v. Prince, L.4., 2 Cr.Cas.Res. 154 (1875), the defendant was convicted of taking a girl under sixteen years of age from under the care of her father, even though the defendant reasonably believed she was older. The defense of mistake of age was disallowed on the ground that removal of an unmar> ried girl from the lawful custody of her parents would have been a crime even had she been as old as he believed. Hence, the defendant acted at his peril.

> FN5. AS 11.66.130 provides, in relevant part:
> (a) A person commits the crime of promoting prostitution in the third degree if, with intent to promote prostitution, he ...
> (2) as other than a patron of a prostitute, induces or causes a person 16 years of age or older to engage in prostitution ....
> (b) Promoting prostitution in the third degree is a class A misdemeanor.

In continuing to press his claim that AS 11.66.110(b) imposes an unconstitutional standard, Bell relies upon State v. Guest, 583 P.2d 836 (Alaska 1978), in which the supreme court upheld a trial court's decision to instruct the jury on a defense of reasonable mistake of age in a statutory rape case. Following the reasoning of Speidel and Alex, the court stated that an intent requirement must be read into former AS 11.15.120 to save it from unconstitutionality. To refuse a defense of mistake of age in a statutory rape case, according to the Guest court, would be to impose significant criminal liability without any criminal mental element. Id. at 839.

Bell relies most heavily upon the following language in Guest:

> It has been urged in other jurisdictions that where an offender is aware he is committing an act of fornication he therefore has sufficient criminal intent to justify a conviction for statutory rape because what was done would have been unlawful under the facts as he thought them to be. We reject this view. While it is true that under such circumstances a mistake of fact does not serve as a complete defense, we believe that it should serve to reduce the offense to that which the offender would have been guilty of had he not been mistaken. Thus, if an accused had a reasonable belief that the person with whom he had sexual intercourse was sixteen years of age or older, he may not be convicted of statutory rape. If, however, he did not have a reasonable belief that the victim was eighteen years of age or older, he may still be criminally liable for contribution to the delinquency of a minor.

Id. (citations and footnotes omitted). The court cited in support of its position section 2.04(2) of the Model Penal Code (Proposed Official Draft 1962), which provides:

> Although ignorance or mistake would otherwise afford a defense to the offense charged, the defense is not available if the defendant would be guilty of another offense had the situation been as he supposed. In such case, however, the ignorance or mistake of the defendant shall reduce the grade and degree of the offense of which he may be convicted to those of the offense of which he would be guilty had the situation been as he supposed.

[5] We believe the problem addressed in Guest is distinguishable from the issue at hand. As we have stated, Bell did not lack criminal intent; he intended to promote prostitution. See Hentzner v. State, 613 P.2d at 826; Wheeler v. State, 659 P.2d at 1251. The court in Guest was careful to point out that fornication was not itself a crime, so that it could not have been considered as a lesser-included offense of statutory rape. Also, although the court went on to observe that Guest might still have 835 been guilty of contributing to the delinquency of a minor under former AS 11.40.130 if he did not have a reasonable belief that his partner was under eighteen, it is clear that Bell was necessarily guilty of promoting prostitution in the third degree if the facts were as he supposed them to be.

This distinction is supported by analysis of other authorities. The revised criminal code contains no provision paralleling the second sentence of MPC § 2.04(2), quoted by the Guest court. Instead,

© 2012 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

AS 11.81.600(b)(2) provides:

> (b) A person is not guilty of an offense unless he acts with a culpable mental state with respect to each element of the offense, except that no culpable mental state must be proved
> (2) if an intent to dispense with the culpable mental state requirement for that element clearly appears.

(Emphasis added.) AS 11.66.110(b), by proscribing any defense to AS 11.66.110(a)(2) based upon mistake of age, clearly demonstrates a legislative intent to dispense with knowledge of age.

More importantly, despite the language of MPC § 204(2), the Model Penal Code takes essentially the same approach as the Revised Code to in its treatment of criminal intent for the offense of promoting prostitution. MPC § 251.2(2) (1980) makes the conduct proscribed by AS 11.66.130(a)(2) —promoting prostitution in the third degree—a misdemeanor, while § 251.2(3)(c) provides that the same conduct shall be a felony if "the actor promotes prostitution of a child under 16, whether or not he is aware of the child's age. " Similarly, New York Penal Law § 230.30 (1978), from which AS 11.66.110 appears to be derived, provides that it shall be a felony to "knowingly" advance or profit from the prostitution of a person less than sixteen years old, while New York Penal Law § 15.20(3) (1967) provides that > Notwithstanding the use of the term "knowingly" in any provision of this chapter defining an offense in which the age of a child is an element thereof, knowledge by the defendant of the age of such child is not an element of any such offense and it is not, unless expressly so provided, a defense to a prosecution therefor that the defendant did not know the age of the child or believed such age to be the same as or greater than that specified in the statute.

We find it highly persuasive that these statutory schemes are, when applied to the precise conduct engaged in by Bell, in consonance with the approach taken in the Revised Code.

[6][7] Under the Revised Alaska Criminal Code, it is Bell's intentional procurement of a person under the age of sixteen years for prostitution that renders him liable for first-degree promoting, regardless of his actual awareness of that person's age. The act of procuring another for purposes of prostitution is malum in se, without regard to the age of the person procured, and thus, as we have indicated, in a prosecution for procuring a person under the age of sixteen years, the intent to procure satisfies the minimal constitutional requirement of criminal intent. Hentzner v. State, 613 P.2d at 826. We hold that AS 11.66.110(b), which expressly dispenses with mistake of age as a defense to promoting prostitution in the first degree, does not violate due process of law. We therefore conclude that the trial court did not err in rejecting Bell's challenge to the instruction on mistake of age.

II. PARTIALLY INAUDIBLE TAPE

Bell argues that error occurred when a recording of a telephone conversation between Bell and C.R. was played for the jury. At trial, Bell's attorney objected to admission of the recorded telephone conversation, contending that parts of the tape were substantially inaudible. The tape of another conversation was played without objection. Before this tape was played, the trial judge gave a cautionary instruction 836 admonishing the jury to consider only what it actually heard on both tapes.[FN6]

FN6. The jury was instructed:

> [I] want to admonish the jury that there are portions of these tapes that are impossible to hear .... Consider only what you hear, only what you actually hear on the tapes, together with any other evidence .... But don't speculate what is on the tape where there isn't credible evidence .... The tapes are going to be hard to understand. Don't guess at what's on those tapes.

[8] The trial court's decision to admit the phone tape is reversible error only if it constituted an abuse of discretion. Robinson v. State, 593 P.2d 621, 624 n. 5 (Alaska 1979). In Dana v. State, 623 P.2d 348 (Alaska App.1981), we considered the correctness of the trial court's admission of a tape which had "significant gaps" due to equipment failure. We held that there could be no abuse of discretion in admitting the flawed tape unless its prejudicial impact outweighed its probative value. Id. at 353–54.

[9] In the present case, after weighing the possibility of prejudice against the probative value of the tape, and taking into account the other evidence at trial, the cautionary instruction, and the fact that most of the tape is audible, we conclude that Judge Souter did not abuse his discretion in admitting the tape.

III. ISSUANCE AND EXECUTION OF THE GLASS WARRANT

[10] Bell argues that procedures outlined in the federal electronic surveillance act should supplement the requirements, enumerated in State v. Glass, 583 P.2d 872 (Alaska 1978), that must be met before electronic monitoring of conversations is permitted. We considered and rejected a similar argument in Jones v. State, 646 P.2d 243, 248 (Alaska App.1982). See also Gallagher v. State, 651 P.2d 1185, 1187 (Alaska App.1982). Our holdings in Jones and Gallagher are dispositive of this issue.

Bell also contends that probable cause for the issuance of a Glass warrant did not exist because it was not known whether relevant conversations would occur between Bell, M.J. and C.R., and because M.J. and C.R. were neither reliable nor credible. Bell's motion to suppress on this ground was denied at the omnibus hearing.

[11][12] The judge's determination that probable cause existed is entitled to great deference by this court. Spinelli v. United States, 393 U.S. 410, 419, 89 S.Ct. 584, 590–91, 21 L.Ed.2d 637, 645 (1969). We find ample facts to support issuance of the search warrant. C.R. and M.J. stopped working for Bell less than a week before they testified at the proceeding to issue the Glass warrant. Since C.R. had worked for Bell for nearly six months and given him $5,000 of the money she made by prostitution, it was logical to assume she could contact him and that he would have some interest in talking to her. Although M.J. had worked for Bell for only a few weeks, the same reasoning applies. We believe the court correctly found that sufficient probable cause existed to issue the Glass warrant. United States v. Ventresca, 380 U.S. 102, 108, 85 S.Ct. 741, 745–46, 13 L.Ed.2d 684, 689 (1965); Martel v. State, 511 P.2d 1055, 1055 n. 1 (Alaska 1973); Rosa v. State, 633 P.2d 1027, 1029–30 (Alaska App.1981).

[13] Bell, relying on Spinelli v. United States, and Aguilar v. Texas, 378 U.S. 108, 84 S.Ct. 1509, 12 L.Ed.2d 723 (1964), additionally contends that the search warrant should not have been issued because C.R. and M.J. were neither reliable nor credible. Bell's reliance on the rulings in Aguilar and Spinelli is misplaced, because those cases set forth criteria for ascertaining the reliability and credibility of informants who have provided hearsay information. Neither C.R. nor M.J. was a confidential informant; both testified personally and were under oath at the time. The magistrate thus had ample opportunity to assess their credibility. Accordingly, the Aguilar-Spinelli standards do not apply in this case, and Bell's argument is without merit.

Next, Bell argues that the recordings should have been suppressed because the police failed to comply with Alaska Rule of Criminal Procedure 37(b)(2), and because the police failed to mail a copy of the warrant837 and receipt to Bell in compliance with the provision of the warrant requiring that Criminal Rule 37(b)(1) and (2) be satisfied. [FN7]

FN7. Alaska R.Crim.P. 37 provides, in pertinent part:

> (b) Execution and Return With Inventory. The warrant shall be executed and returned within 10 days after its date. The officer taking property under the warrant
> (1) shall give to the person from whom or from whose premises the property was taken a copy of the warrant, a copy of the supporting affidavits, and receipt for the property taken, or
> (2) shall leave the copies and the receipt at the place from which the property was taken ....

The court ordered that a copy of the warrant and receipt be mailed to Bell within ten days of May 27, 1980, when the warrant was executed. Officer George Novaky stated in an affidavit that, although he did not specifically advise Bell of the recording at the time of Bell's arrest and although Bell was not sent a copy of the search warrant, Novaky included information concerning the recording in police reports made available to Bell on June 16, 1980. Additionally, on June 13, 1980, Bell obtained actual notice of the recording when he appeared at a bail hearing with his attorney. At the bail hearing, Officer Michael Grimes testified that electronic surveillance was used to record Bell's conversation. Bell's attorney then declined to question Grimes, and the tape was played. It is unclear from the record whether Bell received notice of the recording in a copy of Officer Novaky's complaint at the time of his arraignment on May 28, 1980; consequently, we assume that Bell first received notice at the bail hearing on June 13, 1980—slightly more than two weeks after police recorded Bell's conversations.

[14] Under the circumstances, Bell has shown no prejudice stemming from untimely notification of execution of the warrant authorizing his telephone conversation to be monitored and recorded. Nor does it appear that the late notification was the result of bad faith on the part of investigating officers. We hold that the untimely notice to Bell did not justify suppression of the recording made pursuant to the Glass warrant. See Gallagher v. State, 651 P.2d 1185 (Alaska App.1982).

IV. COERCIVE INSTRUCTION DURING DELIBERATIONS

[15] Bell argues that a supplemental instruction issued by Judge Souter was coercive and that it was essentially an " Allen charge." [FN8] We disagree. During deliberations, the jury sent a note to the judge inquiring if inability to agree on one count of the indictment constituted a hung jury. The judge replied:

> FN8. Allen v. United States, 164 U.S. 492, 17 S.Ct. 154, 41 L.Ed. 528 (1896).

> If you were to be unable to agree to a verdict on one Count of the Indictment, you would be a hung jury as to that one Count, but you would not be a hung jury as to the remaining Counts unless you were also unable to agree to your verdicts on them also. In my opinion you have not deliberated long enough yet to be able to validly reach the conclusion that you cannot agree to a verdict on any one or more Counts of the Indictment. [Emphasis added.]
> The jury subsequently returned its verdicts on the four counts, as well as the two lesser-included offenses.

The Alaska Supreme Court proscribed Allen charges in Fields v. State, 487 P.2d 831, 836 (Alaska 1971). In Fields, the jury was instructed, after extensive deliberations and at least two prior communications indicating a deadlock, that it was required to continue deliberations until a unanimous verdict was reached. This instruction was found to be so coercive as to require reversal of the conviction. We find that Judge Souter's instruction lacked the coerciveness proscribed by Fields. We note in this regard that Standard 15–4.4(b) of the ABA Standards Relating to Trial by Jury specifically provides that a court may require continued deliberations if a jury is unable to agree.[FN9] In this case, the jury had not deliberated*838 for an extended time, the communication did not unequivocally indicate a deadlock, and the court's instruction did not imply that the jury would be required to deliberate until unanimity was reached. Under these circumstances the supplemental instruction did not constitute an abuse of discretion and Bell's argument must fail.

> FN9. ABA Standard Relating to Trial by Jury § 15–4.4(b) (1980) provides:
> > If it appears to the court that the jury has been unable to agree, the court may require the jury to continue their deliberations and may give or repeat an instruction as provided in paragraph (a). The court shall not require or threaten to require the jury to deliberate for an unreasonable length of time or for unreasonable intervals.
> > The Commentary to Standard 15–4.4(b) states:
> > This paragraph confirms that a trial judge may send the jury back for further deliberations notwithstanding its indication that it has been unable to agree....
> ....
> > There is no coercion if a court requires jurors to deliberate a reasonable length of time.

V. DOUBLE JEOPARDY

Bell additionally argues that his sentences on Count I [FN10] and Count IV [FN11] violate double jeopardy under Whitton v. State, 479 P.2d 302 (Alaska 1970). The Whitton court adopted the following analysis to determine whether or not a double jeopardy violation had occurred:

> FN10. Bell's conviction on Count I was for inducing or causing a person under 16 years of age [D.W.] to engage in prostitution, AS 11.66.110(a)(2). See supra n. 1.
> FN11. Conviction on count IV was for violating AS 11.66.120(a)(1), a class C felony, which provides:
> > (a) A person commits the crime of promoting prostitution in the second degree if he
> > (1) manages, supervises, controls, or owns, either alone or in association with others, a prostitution enterprise other than a place of prostitution ....
> > AS 11.66.150(2) defines a "prostitution enterprise" as
> > [A]n arrangement in which two or more persons are organized to render sexual conduct in return for a fee.
> > The jury was instructed in the language of both these statutes.

> The trial judge first would compare the different statutes in question, as they apply to the facts of the case, to determine whether there were involved differences in intent or conduct. He would then judge any such differences he found in light of the basic interests of society to be vindicated or protected, and decide whether those differences were substantial or significant enough to warrant multiple punishments ....
> If such differences in intent or conduct are significant or substantial in relation to the social interests involved, multiple sentences may be imposed, and the constitutional prohibition against double jeopardy will not be violated. But if there are no such differences, or if they are insignificant or insubstantial, then only one sentence may be imposed under double jeopardy.
> Id. at 312 (footnotes omitted).

We must therefore compare AS 11.66.110(a)(2) and AS 11.66.120(a)(1) as applied to the facts of Bell's case, to determine whether differences in intent or conduct were involved in this case. Then, if there are differences, we must decide whether, in light of the societal interests to be protected, the differences were so substantial as to warrant multiple punishment.

[16] AS 11.66.110(a)(2) proscribes the conduct of inducing or causing a person under the age of sixteen to engage in prostitution. AS 11.66.120(a)(1) prohibits managing, supervising, controlling or owning a prostitution enterprise. We believe that, under the Whitton analysis, the offenses proscribed by the two statutes in question involve different intents and different conducts. Bell's conviction on Count I was based squarely upon his inducement of D.W. Bell's conviction under AS 11.66.120(a)(1), on the other hand, required proof of management of a prostitution enterprise. No showing of inducement is necessary to establish the offense, since a prostitution enterprise can be comprised entirely of persons who willingly take part in the business, without inducement or promotion. Clearly Bell's conduct in arranging for two or more people to provide sexual services for a fee, a part of which would accrue to him, goes beyond the act of inducing a single person under the age of sixteen to engage in prostitution.839 The finding that Bell managed a prostitution business with at least two women working for him involved the element of management and required proof of an enterprise, neither of which were involved in the inducement charge. We thus conclude that Bell's intent and conduct clearly differed on the two charges.

We must also determine whether such differences in intent or conduct are substantial in relation to the societal interests involved. As we have stated in connection with Bell's mistake of age claim, AS 11.66.110(a)(2) imposes criminal liability for nonforcible inducement of individuals under sixteen to engage in acts of prostitution with others. This liability is imposed without regard to any pecuniary gain on the part of the offender. We believe that the primary aim of this provision is to protect individuals, particularly those who are young and therefore more vulnerable, from being led into committing acts of prostitution by the efforts of others. By contrast, AS 11.66.120(a)(1) seeks to prevent and punish the commercial aspects of ongoing organized prostitution by subjecting persons who manage prostitution-related activities as business enterprises to sanctions greater than those applicable to persons who commit individual acts of prostitution, without regard to age of the persons managed. We therefore conclude that multiple punishment was appropriate in this case because of the differences in intent and conduct and because of the differing societal interests furthered by the two statutes in question.

VI. REFUSAL TO REDUCE SENTENCE

Finally, Bell contends that denial of the motion to reduce his sentence was error. While incarcerated prior to sentencing, Bell wrote a letter to L.S., the fourteen-year-old daughter of a fellow inmate. The letter was produced at the sentencing hearing, and the father of L.S. was called to testify. He stated that Bell had threatened him with violence if he did not testify favorably to Bell. Judge Souter stated that the threats convinced him to increase Bell's sentence by one year. The judge stated that, although the letter could easily be interpreted as an attempt "to strike a sexual relationship" with L.S., he would give Bell the "benefit of the doubt" and not consider it in sentencing him. Later, Bell moved for reconsideration of the sentence, based on discovery of a letter from the father of L.S. to Bell; the letter indicated that the father had committed perjury at Bell's sentencing. [FN12] A hearing was subsequently held on Bell's motion to reconsider the sentence.

> FN12. The letter from L.S.'s father, written to Bell prior to his sentencing, contained a postscript which stated, "Tell [L.S.] I love her and when I write I'll tighten it for you. I'll get you a picture 'a pose'."

Judge Souter refused to reduce Bell's sentence, reasoning that, in writing to L.S., Bell had been "attempting to arrange for [L.S.] to become a prostitute for him or to be involved with him in a sexual relationship." The original sentence was based on Judge Souter's belief that Bell had threatened L.S.'s father; at that point Judge Souter did not believe that Bell had "propositioned" L.S. On resentencing, Judge Souter changed his reasoning for Bell's sentence; he was persuaded that L.S.'s father had lied, but he was also persuaded that Bell had been trying to establish a sexual relationship with the fourteen-year-old L.S.[FN13]

© 2012 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

FN13. Judge Souter stated:

> The court was not persuaded of this fact when the presentation of evidence concluded at the sentencing hearing, but the contents of the postscript [on the letter from L.S.'s father to Bell] have caused the court to re-examine this question and to resolve it contrary to the way it was resolved at the sentencing hearing.

[17] Bell now claims that, because the trial court did not reduce his sentence after finding that Bell had not threatened L.S.'s father, double jeopardy was violated. However, he fails to cite any authority supporting his theory that failure to reduce a sentence may violate double jeopardy. Judge Souter's reinterpretation of Bell's letter to L.S. in light of the letter from 840 L.S.'s father to Bell was not unreasonable. Nor can we find that Judge Souter abused his discretion in refusing to reduce the original sentence, based on his reinterpretation of the letter. Since there was no increase in the original sentence, no violation of double jeopardy is involved.

[18] Bell also contends that the effective increase in the period of incarceration based upon the letter was not justified under the sentencing goals set forth in State v. Chaney, 477 P.2d 441, 442 (Alaska 1970). The fact that Bell attempted to arrange a romantic involvement with a fourteen-year-old girl while he was incarcerated for promoting the prostitution of another girl under the age of sixteen indicates a lack of remorse on Bell's part and a greater need for deterrence of Bell himself; it therefore justifies imposition of a more severe sentence. We conclude that Bell's sentence was not clearly mistaken.

The conviction and sentence are AFFIRMED.

Supreme Court of the United States
MARYLAND, Petitioner
v.
Sandra Ann CRAIG.

No. 89-478.
Argued April 18, 1990.
Decided June 27, 1990.

Defendant was convicted in the Maryland Circuit Court, Howard County, Raymond J. Kane, Jr., J., of sexual offenses and assault and battery arising from her operation of preschool and abuse of preschool students, and defendant appealed. The Court of Special Appeals, affirmed, 76 Md.App. 250, 544 A.2d 784,. Defendant petitioned for writ of certiorari. The Court of Appeals, 316 Md. 551, 560 A.2d 1120, reversed and remanded. Certiorari was granted. The Supreme Court, Justice O'Connor, held that: (1) confrontation clause did not categorically prohibit child witness in child abuse case from testifying against defendant at trial, outside defendant's physical presence, by one-way closed circuit television; (2) finding of necessity for use of one-way closed circuit television procedure had to be made on case specific basis; but (3) observation of child's behavior in defendant's presence and exploration of less restrictive alternatives to use of one-way closed circuit television procedure were not categorical prerequisites to use of one-way television procedure as a matter of federal constitutional law.

Vacated and remanded.

Justice Scalia filed a dissenting opinion, in which Justices Brennan, Marshall and Stevens joined.

Opinion on remand, 322 Md. 418, 588 A.2d 328.

836 Respondent Craig was tried in a Maryland court on several charges related to her alleged sexual abuse of a 6-year-old child. Before the trial began, the State sought to invoke a state statutory procedure permitting a judge to receive, by one-way closed circuit television, the testimony of an alleged child abuse victim upon determining that the child's courtroom testimony would result in the child suffering serious emotional distress, such that he or she could not reasonably communicate. If the procedure is invoked, the child, prosecutor, and defense counsel withdraw to another room, where the child is examined and cross-examined; the judge, jury, and defendant remain in the courtroom, where the testimony is displayed. Although *3159 the child cannot see the defendant, the defendant remains in electronic communication with counsel, and objections may be made and ruled on as if the witness were in the courtroom. The court rejected Craig's objection that the procedure's use violates the Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment, ruling that Craig retained the essence of the right to confrontation. Based on expert testimony, the court also found that the alleged victim and other allegedly abused children who were witnesses would suffer serious emotional distress if they were required to testify in the courtroom, such that each would be unable to communicate. Finding that the children were competent to testify, the court permitted testimony under the procedure, and Craig was convicted. The State Court of Special Appeals affirmed, but the State Court of Appeals reversed. Although it rejected Craig's argument that the Clause requires in all cases a face-to-face courtroom encounter between the accused and accusers, it found that the State's showing was insufficient to reach the high threshold required by Coy v. Iowa, 487 U.S. 1012, 108 S.Ct. 2798, 101 L.Ed.2d 857 before the procedure could be invoked. The court held that the procedure usually cannot be invoked unless the child initially is questioned in the defendant's presence and that, before using the one-way television procedure, the trial court must determine whether a child would suffer severe emotional distress if he or she were to testify by two-way television.

Held:

1. The Confrontation Clause does not guarantee criminal defendants an absolute right to a face-to-face meeting with the witnesses against 837 them at trial. The Clause's central purpose, to ensure the reliability of the evidence against a defendant by subjecting it to rigorous testing in an adversary proceeding before the trier of fact, is served by the combined effects of the elements of confrontation: physical presence, oath, cross-examination, and observation of demeanor by the trier of fact. Although face-to-face confrontation forms the core of the Clause's values, it is not an indispensable element of the confrontation right. If it were, the Clause would abrogate virtually every hearsay exception, a result long rejected as unintended and too extreme, Ohio v. Roberts, 448 U.S. 56, 63, 100 S.Ct. 2531, 2537, 65 L.Ed.2d 597. Accordingly, the Clause must be interpreted in a manner sensitive to its purpose and to the necessities of trial and the adversary process. See, e.g., Kirby v. United States, 174 U.S. 47, 19 S.Ct. 574, 43 L.Ed. 890. Nonetheless, the right to confront accusatory witnesses may be satisfied absent a physical, face-to-face confrontation at trial only where denial of such confrontation is necessary to further an important public policy and only where the testimony's reliability is otherwise assured. Coy, supra, at 1021. Pp. 3162-3166.

2. Maryland's interest in protecting child witnesses from the trauma of testifying in a child abuse case is sufficiently important to justify the use of its special procedure, provided that the State makes an adequate showing of necessity in an individual case. Pp. 3166-3170.

(a) While Maryland's procedure prevents the child from seeing the defendant, it preserves the other elements of confrontation and, thus, adequately ensures that the testimony is both reliable and subject to rigorous adversarial testing in a manner functionally equivalent to that accorded live, in-person testimony. These assurances are far greater than those required for the admission of hearsay statements. Thus, the use of the one-way closed circuit television procedure, where it is necessary to further an important state interest, does not impinge upon the Confrontation Clause's truth-seeking or symbolic purposes. Pp. 3166-3167.

(b) A State's interest in the physical and psychological well-being of child abuse victims may be sufficiently important to outweigh, at least in some cases, a defendant's right to face his or her accusers in court. The fact that most States have enacted similar*3160 statutes attests to widespread belief in such a public policy's importance, and this Court has previously recognized that States have a compelling interest in protecting minor victims of sex crimes from further trauma and embarrassment, see, e.g., Globe Newspaper Co. v. Superior Court of Norfolk County, 457 U.S. 596, 607, 102 S.Ct. 2613, 2620, 73 L.Ed.2d 248. The Maryland Legislature's considered judgment regarding the importance of its interest will not be second-guessed, given the State's traditional and transcendent interest in protecting the welfare of children and the growing body of academic literature 838 documenting the psychological trauma suffered by child abuse victims who must testify in court. Pp. 3167-3169.

(c) The requisite necessity finding must be case specific. The trial court must hear evidence and determine whether the procedure's use is necessary to protect the particular child witness' welfare; find that the child would be traumatized, not by the courtroom generally, but by the defendant's presence; and find that the emotional distress suffered by the child in the defendant's presence is more than de minimis. Without determining the minimum showing of emotional trauma required for the use of a special procedure, the Maryland statute, which requires a determination that the child will suffer serious emotional distress such that the child cannot reasonably communicate, clearly suffices to meet constitutional standards. Pp. 3169-3170.

(d) Since there is no dispute that, here, the children testified under oath, were subject to full cross-examination, and were able to be observed by the judge, jury, and defendant as they testified, admitting their testimony is consonant with the Confrontation Clause, provided that a proper necessity finding has been made. P. 3170.

3. The Court of Appeals erred to the extent that it may have rested its conclusion that the trial court did not make the requisite necessity finding on the lower court's failure to observe the children's behavior in the defendant's presence and its failure to explore less restrictive alternatives to the one-way television procedure. While such evidentiary requirements could strengthen the grounds for the use of protective measures, only a case-specific necessity finding is required. This Court will not establish, as a matter of federal constitutional law, such categorical evidentiary prerequisites for the use of the one-way procedure. Pp. 3170-3171.

840 Justice O'CONNOR delivered the opinion of the Court.

This case requires us to decide whether the Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment categorically prohibits a child witness in a child abuse case from testifying against a defendant at trial, outside the defendant's physical presence, by one-way closed circuit television.

I

In October 1986, a Howard County grand jury charged respondent, Sandra Ann Craig, with child abuse, first and second degree sexual offenses, perverted sexual practice, assault, and battery. The named victim in each count was a 6-year-old girl who, from August 1984 to June 1986, had attended a kindergarten and prekindergarten center owned and operated by Craig.

In March 1987, before the case went to trial, the State sought to invoke a Maryland *3161 statutory procedure that permits a judge to receive, by one-way closed circuit television, the testimony of a child witness who is alleged to be a victim of child abuse.[FN1] To invoke the procedure, the 841 trial judge must first "determin[e] that testimony by the child victim in the courtroom will result in the child suffering serious emotional distress such that the child cannot reasonably communicate." Md.Cts. & Jud.Proc.Code Ann. § 9-102(a)(1)(ii) (1989). Once the procedure is invoked, the child witness, prosecutor, and defense counsel withdraw to a separate room; the judge, jury, and defendant remain in the courtroom. The child witness is then examined and cross-examined in the separate room, while a video monitor records and displays the witness' testimony to those in the courtroom. During this time the witness cannot see the defendant.842 The defendant remains in electronic communication with defense counsel, and objections may be made and ruled on as if the witness were testifying in the courtroom.

FN1. Maryland Cts. & Jud.Proc.Code Ann. § 9-102 of the Courts and Judicial Proceedings Article of the Annotated Code of Maryland (1989) provides in full:

"(a)(1) In a case of abuse of a child as defined in § 5-701 of the Family Law Article or Article 27, § 35A of the Code, a court may order that the testimony of a child victim be taken outside the courtroom and shown in the courtroom by means of a closed circuit television if:

"(i) The testimony is taken during the proceeding; and

"(ii) The judge determines that testimony by the child victim in the courtroom will result in the child suffering serious emotional distress such that the child cannot reasonably communic- ate.

"(2) Only the prosecuting attorney, the attorney for the defendant, and the judge may question the child.

"(3) The operators of the closed circuit television shall make every effort to be unobtrusive.

"(b)(1) Only the following persons may be in the room with the child when the child testifies by closed circuit televi- sion:

"(i) The prosecuting attorney;

"(ii) The attorney for the defendant;

"(iii) The operators of the closed circuit television equipment; and

"(iv) Unless the defendant objects, any person whose presence, in the opinion of the court, contributes to the well-being of the child, including a person who has dealt with the child in a therapeutic setting concerning the abuse.

"(2) During the child's testimony by closed circuit television, the judge and the defendant shall be in the courtroom.

"(3) The judge and the defendant shall be allowed to communicate with the persons in the room where the child is testifying by any appropriate electronic method.

"(c) The provisions of this section do not apply if the defendant is an attorney pro se.

"(d) This section may not be interpreted to preclude, for purposes of identification of a defendant, the presence of both the victim and the defendant in the courtroom at the same time."

For a detailed description of the § 9-102 procedure, see Wildermuth v. State, 310 Md. 496, 503-504, 530 A.2d 275, 278-279 (1987).

In support of its motion invoking the one-way closed circuit television procedure, the State presented expert testimony that the named victim as well as a number of other children who were alleged to have been sexually abused by Craig, would suffer "serious emotional distress such that [they could not] reasonably communicate," § 9-102 (a)(1)(ii), if required to testify in the courtroom. App. 7-59. The Maryland Court of Appeals characterized the evidence as follows:

© 2012 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

"The expert testimony in each case suggested that each child would have some or considerable difficulty in testifying in Craig's presence. For example, as to one child, the expert said that what 'would cause him the most anxiety would be to testify in front of Mrs. Craig....' The child 'wouldn't be able to communicate effectively.' As to another, an expert said she 'would probably stop talking and she would withdraw and curl up.' With respect to two others, the testimony was that one would 'become highly agitated, that he may refuse to talk or if he did talk, that he would choose his subject regardless of the questions' while the other would 'become extremely timid and unwilling to talk.' " 316 Md. 551, 568-569, 560 A.2d 1120, 1128-1129 (1989).

Craig objected to the use of the procedure on Confrontation Clause grounds, but the trial *3162 court rejected that contention, concluding that although the statute "take[s] away the right of the defendant to be face to face with his or her accuser," the defendant retains the "essence of the right of confrontation," including the right to observe, cross-examine, and have the jury view the demeanor of the witness. App. 65-66. The trial court further found that, "based upon the evidence presented ... the testimony of each of these children in a courtroom will result in each child suffering serious emotional distress ... such that each of these children cannot reasonably843 communicate." Id., at 66. The trial court then found the named victim and three other children competent to testify and accordingly permitted them to testify against Craig via the one-way closed circuit television procedure. The jury convicted Craig on all counts, and the Maryland Court of Special Appeals affirmed the convictions, 76 Md.App. 250, 544 A.2d 784 (1988).

The Court of Appeals of Maryland reversed and remanded for a new trial. 316 Md. 551, 560 A.2d 1120 (1989). The Court of Appeals rejected Craig's argument that the Confrontation Clause requires in all cases a face-to-face courtroom encounter between the accused and his accusers, id., at 556-562, 560 A.2d, at 1122-1125, but concluded:

"[U]nder § 9-102(a)(1)(ii), the operative 'serious emotional distress' which renders a child victim unable to 'reasonably communicate' must be determined to arise, at least primarily, from face-to-face confrontation with the defendant. Thus, we construe the phrase 'in the courtroom' as meaning, for sixth amendment and [state constitution] confrontation purposes, 'in the courtroom in the presence of the defendant.' Unless prevention of 'eyeball-to-eyeball' confrontation is necessary to obtain the trial testimony of the child, the defendant cannot be denied that right." Id., at 566, 560 A.2d, at 1127.

Reviewing the trial court's finding and the evidence presented in support of the § 9-102 procedure, the Court of Appeals held that, "as [it] read Coy [v. Iowa, 487 U.S. 1012, 108 S.Ct. 2798, 101 L.Ed.2d 857 (1988)], the showing made by the State was insufficient to reach the high threshold required by that case before § 9-102 may be invoked." Id. 316 Md., at 554-555, 560 A.2d, at 1121 (footnote omitted).

We granted certiorari to resolve the important Confrontation Clause issues raised by this case. 493 U.S. 1041, 110 S.Ct. 834, 107 L.Ed.2d 830 (1990).

844 II

The Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment, made applicable to the States through the Fourteenth Amendment, provides: "In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right ... to be confronted with the witnesses against him."

We observed in Coy v. Iowa that "the Confrontation Clause guarantees the defendant a face-to-face meeting with witnesses appearing before the trier of fact." 487 U.S., at 1016, 108 S.Ct., at 2801 (citing Kentucky v. Stincer, 482 U.S. 730, 748, 749-750, 107 S.Ct. 2658, 2669, 2669, 2670, 96 L.Ed.2d 631 (1987) (MARSHALL, J., dissenting)); see also *Pennsylvania v. opinion); California v. Green, 399 U.S. 149, 157, 90 S.Ct. 1930, 1934, 26 L.Ed.2d 489 (1970); Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U.S. 97, 106, 54 S.Ct. 330, 332, 78 L.Ed. 674 (1934); Dowdell v. United States, 221 U.S. 325, 330, 31 S.Ct. 590, 592, 55 L.Ed. 753 (1911); Kirby v. United States, 174 U.S. 47, 55, 19 S.Ct. 574, 577, 43 L.Ed. 890 (1899); Mattox v. United States, 156 U.S. 237, 244, 15 S.Ct. 337, 340, 39 L.Ed. 409 (1895). This interpretation derives not only from the literal text of the Clause, but also from our understanding of its historical roots. See Coy, supra, 487 U.S., at 1015-1016, 108 S.Ct., at 2800; Mattox, supra, 156 U.S., at 242, 15 S.Ct. at 339 (Confrontation Clause intended to prevent conviction by affidavit); Green, supra, 399 U.S., at 156, 90 S.Ct., at 1934 *3163 (same); cf. 3 J. Story, Commentaries on the Constitution § 1785, p. 662 (1833).

We have never held, however, that the Confrontation Clause guarantees criminal defendants the absolute right to a face-to-face meeting with witnesses against them at trial. Indeed, in Coy v. Iowa, we expressly "le[ft] for another day ... the question whether any exceptions exist" to the "irreducible literal meaning of the Clause: 'a right to meet face to face all those who appear and give evidence at trial. ' " 487 U.S., at 1021, 108 S.Ct., at 2803 (quoting Green, supra, 399 U.S., at 175, 90 S.Ct., at 1943 (Harlan, J., concurring)). The procedure challenged in Coy involved the placement of a screen that prevented two child witnesses in a child abuse case from seeing the defendant as they testified against him at trial. See 487 U.S., at 1014-1015, 108 S.Ct., at 2799-2800. In holding that the use of this procedure violated the defendant's right to confront witnesses against him, we suggested that 845 any exception to the right "would surely be allowed only when necessary to further an important public policy"-i.e., only upon a showing of something more than the generalized, "legislatively imposed presumption of trauma" underlying the statute at issue in that case. Id., at 1021, 108 S.Ct., at 2803; see also id., at 1025, 108 S.Ct., at 2805 (O'Connor, J., concurring). We concluded that "[s]ince there ha[d] been no individualized findings that these particular witnesses needed special protection, the judgment [in the case before us] could not be sustained by any conceivable exception." Id., at 1021, 108 S.Ct., at 2803. Because the trial court in this case made individualized findings that each of the child witnesses needed special protection, this case requires us to decide the question reserved in Coy.

[1] The central concern of the Confrontation Clause is to ensure the reliability of the evidence against a criminal defendant by subjecting it to rigorous testing in the context of an adversary proceeding before the trier of fact. The word "confront," after all, also means a clashing of forces or ideas, thus carrying with it the notion of adversariness. As we noted in our earliest case interpreting the Clause:

> "The primary object of the constitutional provision in question was to prevent depositions or ex parte affidavits, such as were sometimes admitted in civil cases, being used against the prisoner in lieu of a personal examination and cross-examination of the witness in which the accused has an opportunity, not only of testing the recollection and sifting the conscience of the witness, but of compelling him to stand face to face with the jury in order that they may look at him, and judge by his demeanor upon the stand and the manner in which he gives his testimony whether he is worthy of belief." Mattox, supra, 156 U.S., at 242-243, 15 S.Ct., at 339-340.

As this description indicates, the right guaranteed by the Confrontation Clause includes not only a "personal examination," 156 U.S., at 242, 15 S.Ct., at 339, but also "(1) insures that the witness will give his statements under oath-thus impressing him with 846 the seriousness of the matter and guarding against the lie by the possibility of a penalty for perjury; (2) forces the witness to submit to cross-examination, the 'greatest legal engine ever invented for the discovery of truth'; [and] (3) permits the jury that is to decide the defendant's fate to observe the demeanor of the witness in making his statement, thus aiding the jury in assessing his credibility." Green, supra, 399 U.S., at 158, 90 S.Ct., at 1935 (footnote omitted).

The combined effect of these elements of confrontation-physical presence, oath, cross-examination, and observation of demeanor by the trier of fact-serves the purposes of the Confrontation Clause by ensuring that evidence admitted against an accused is reliable and subject to the rigorous adversarial testing that is the norm of Anglo-American criminal proceedings. See Stincer, supra, 482 U.S., at 739, 107 S.Ct., at 2664 ("[T]he right to confrontation is a functional*3164 one for the purpose of promoting reliability in a criminal trial"); Dutton v. Evans, 400 U.S. 74, 89, 91 S.Ct. 210, 219, 27 L.Ed.2d 213 (1970) (plurality opinion) ("[T]he mission of the Confrontation Clause is to advance a practical concern for the accuracy of the truth-determining process in criminal trials by assuring that 'the trier of fact [has] a satisfactory basis for evaluating the truth of the [testimony]' "); Lee v. Illinois, 476 U.S. 530, 540, 106 S.Ct. 2056, 2061, 90 L.Ed.2d 514 (1986) (confrontation guarantee serves "symbolic goals" and "promotes reliability"); see also Faretta v. California, 422 U.S. 806, 818, 95 S.Ct. 2525, 2532, 45 L.Ed.2d 562 (1975) (Sixth Amendment "constitutionalizes the right in an adversary criminal trial to make a defense as we know it"); Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 684-685, 104 S.Ct. 2052, 2062-2063, 80 L.Ed.2d 674 (1984).

[2] We have recognized, for example, that face-to-face confrontation enhances the accuracy of fact-finding by reducing the risk that a witness will wrongfully implicate an innocent person. See Coy, supra, 487 U.S., at 1019-1020, 108 S.Ct., at 2802 ("It is always more difficult to tell a lie about a person 'to his face' than 'behind his back.' ... That face-to-face presence may, unfortunately, upset the truthful rape victim or abused child; but by the same token it may confound and undo the false accuser, or 847 reveal the child coached by a malevolent adult"); Ohio v. Roberts, 448 U.S. 56, 63, n. 6, 100 S.Ct. 2531, 2537 n. 6, 65 L.Ed.2d 597 (1980); see also 3 W. Blackstone, Commentaries * 373-* 374. We have also noted the strong symbolic purpose served by requiring adverse witnesses at trial to testify in the accused's presence. See Coy, 487 U.S., at 1017, 108 S.Ct., at 2801 ("[T]here is something deep in human nature that regards face-to-face confrontation between accused and accuser as 'essential to a fair trial in a criminal prosecution' ") (quoting Pointer v. Texas, 380 U.S. 400, 404, 85 S.Ct. 1065, 1068, 13 L.Ed.2d 923 (1965)).

Although face-to-face confrontation forms "the core of the values furthered by the Confrontation Clause," Green, 399 U.S., at 157, 90 S.Ct., at 1934, we have nevertheless recognized that it is not the sine qua non of the confrontation right. See Delaware v. Fensterer, 474 U.S. 15, 22, 106 S.Ct. 292, 295, 88 L.Ed.2d 15 (1985) (per curiam) ("[T]he Confrontation Clause is generally satisfied when the defense is given a full and fair opportunity to probe and expose [testimonial] infirmities [such as forgetfulness, confusion, or evasion] through cross-examination, thereby calling to the attention of the factfinder the reasons for giving scant weight to the witness' testimony"); Roberts, supra, 448 U.S., at 69, 100 S.Ct., at 2540 (oath, cross-examination, and demeanor provide "all that the Sixth Amendment demands: 'substantial compliance with the purposes behind the confrontation requirement' ") (quoting Green, supra, 399 U.S., at 166, 90 S.Ct., at 1939); see also Stincer, 482 U.S. at 739-744, 107 S.Ct., at 2664-2667 (confrontation right not violated by exclusion of defendant from competency hearing of child witnesses, where defendant had opportunity for full and effective cross-examination at trial); Davis v. Alaska, 415 U.S. 308, 315-316, 94 S.Ct. 1105, 1109-1110, 39 L.Ed.2d 347 (1974); *Douglas v. [3] For this reason, we have never insisted on an actual face-to-face encounter at trial in every instance in which testimony is admitted against a defendant. Instead, we have repeatedly held that the Clause permits, where necessary, the admission of certain hearsay statements against a defendant despite848 the defendant's inability to confront the declarant at trial. See, e.g., Mattox, 156 U.S., at 243, 15 S.Ct., at 339 ("[T]here could be nothing more directly contrary to the letter of the provision in question than the admission of dying declarations"); *3165 Pointer, supra, 380 U.S., at 407, 85 S.Ct., at 1069 (noting exceptions to the confrontation right for dying declarations and "other analogous situations"). In Mattox, for example, we held that the testimony of a Government witness at a former trial against the defendant, where the witness was fully cross-examined but had died after the first trial, was admissible in evidence against the defendant at his second trial. See 156 U.S., at 240-244, 15 S.Ct., at 338-340. We explained:

> "There is doubtless reason for saying that ... if notes of [the witness'] testimony are permitted to be read, [the defendant] is deprived of the advantage of that personal presence of the witness before the jury which the law has designed for his protection. But general rules of law of this kind, however beneficent in their operation and valuable to the accused, must occasionally give way to considerations of public policy and the necessities of the case. To say that a criminal, after having once been convicted by the testimony of a certain witness, should go scot free simply because death has closed the mouth of that witness, would be carrying his constitutional protection to an unwarrantable extent. The law in its wisdom declares that the rights of the public shall not be wholly sacrificed in order that an incidental benefit may be preserved to the accused." Id., at 243, 15 S.Ct., at 339-340.

We have accordingly stated that a literal reading of the Confrontation Clause would "abrogate virtually every hearsay exception, a result long rejected as unintended and too extreme." Roberts, 448 U.S., at 63, 100 S.Ct., at 2537. Thus, in certain narrow circumstances, "competing interests, if 'closely examined,' may warrant dispensing with confrontation at trial." Id., at 64, 100 S.Ct., at 2538 (quoting Chambers v. Mississippi, 410 U.S. 284, 295, 93 S.Ct. 1038, 1045, 35 L.Ed.2d 297 (1973), and citing Mattox, supra). We have recently held, 849 for example, that hearsay statements of nontestifying co-conspirators may be admitted against a defendant despite the lack of any face-to-face encounter with the accused. See Bourjaily v. United States, 483 U.S. 171, 107 S.Ct. 2775, 97 L.Ed.2d 144 (1987); United States v. Inadi, 475 U.S. 387, 106 S.Ct. 1121, 89 L.Ed.2d 390 (1986). Given our hearsay cases, the word "confronted," as used in the Confrontation Clause, cannot simply mean face-to-face confrontation, for the Clause would then, contrary to our cases, prohibit the admission of any accusatory hearsay statement made by an absent declarant-a declarant who is undoubtedly as much a "witness against" a defendant as one who actually testifies at trial.

[4] In sum, our precedents establish that "the Confrontation Clause reflects a preference for face-to-face confrontation at trial," Roberts, supra, 448 U.S., at 63, 100 S.Ct., at 2537 (emphasis added; footnote omitted), a preference that "must occasionally give way to considerations of public policy and the necessities of the case," Mattox, supra, 156 U.S., at 243, 15 S.Ct., at 339-340. "[W]e have attempted to harmonize the goal of the Clause-placing limits on the kind of evidence that may be received against a defendant-with a societal interest in accurate factfinding, which may require consideration of out-of-court statements." Bourjaily, supra, 483 U.S., at 182, 107 S.Ct., at 2782. We have accordingly interpreted the Confrontation Clause in a manner sensitive to its purposes and sensitive to the necessities of trial and the adversary process. See, e.g., Kirby, 174 U.S., at 61, 19 S.Ct., at 578 ("It is scarcely necessary to say that to the rule that an accused is entitled to be confronted with witnesses against him the admission of dying declarations is an exception which arises from the necessity of the case"); Chambers, supra, 410 U.S., at 295, 93 S.Ct., at 1045 ("Of course, the right to confront and to cross-examine is not absolute and may, in appropriate cases, bow to accommodate other legitimate interests in the criminal trial process"). Thus, though we reaffirm the importance of face-to-face confrontation with witnesses*3166 appearing at trial, we cannot say that such confrontation is an indispensable element of the Sixth Amendment's guarantee 850 of the right to confront one's accusers. Indeed, one commentator has noted that "[i]t is all but universally assumed that there are circumstances that excuse compliance with the right of confrontation." Graham, The Right of Confrontation and the Hearsay Rule: Sir Walter Raleigh Loses Another One, 8 Crim.L.Bull. 99, 107-108 (1972).

This interpretation of the Confrontation Clause is consistent with our cases holding that other Sixth Amendment rights must also be interpreted in the context of the necessities of trial and the adversary process. See, e.g., Illinois v. Allen, 397 U.S. 337, 342-343, 90 S.Ct. 1057, 1060, 25 L.Ed.2d 353 (1970) (right to be present at trial not violated where trial judge removed defendant for disruptive behavior); Ritchie, 480 U.S., at 51-54, 107 S.Ct., at 998-1000 (plurality opinion) (right to cross-examination not violated where State denied defendant access to investigative files); Taylor v. Illinois, 484 U.S. 400, 410-416, 108 S.Ct. 646, 653-657, 98 L.Ed.2d 798 (1988) (right to compulsory process not violated where trial judge precluded testimony of a surprise defense witness); Perry v. Leeke, 488 U.S. 272, 280-285, 109 S.Ct. 594, 599-602, 102 L.Ed.2d 624 (1989) (right to effective assistance of counsel not violated where trial judge prevented testifying defendant from conferring with counsel during a short break in testimony). We see no reason to treat the face-to-face component of the confrontation right any differently, and indeed we think it would be anomalous to do so.

That the face-to-face confrontation requirement is not absolute does not, of course, mean that it may easily be dispensed with. As we suggested in Coy, our precedents confirm that a defendant's right to confront accusatory witnesses may be satisfied absent a physical, face-to-face confrontation at trial only where denial of such confrontation is necessary to further an important public policy and only where the reliability of the testimony is otherwise assured. See 487 U.S., at 1021, 108 S.Ct., at 2803 (citing Roberts, supra, 448 U.S. at 64, 100 S.Ct., at 2538; Chambers, supra, 410 U.S. at 295, 93 S.Ct., at 1045); Coy, supra, 487 U.S., at 1025, 108 S.Ct., at 2805 (O'Connor, J., concurring).

[5] Maryland's statutory procedure, when invoked, prevents a child witness from seeing the defendant as he or she testifies against the defendant at trial. We find it significant, however, that Maryland's procedure preserves all of the other elements of the confrontation right: The child witness must be competent to testify and must testify under oath; the defendant retains full opportunity for contemporaneous cross-examination; and the judge, jury, and defendant are able to view (albeit by video monitor) the demeanor (and body) of the witness as he or she testifies. Although we are mindful of the many subtle effects face-to-face confrontation may have on an adversary criminal proceeding, the presence of these other elements of confrontation-oath, cross-examination, and observation of the witness' demeanor-adequately ensures that the testimony is both reliable and subject to rigorous adversarial testing in a manner functionally equivalent to that accorded live, in-person testimony. These safeguards of reliability and adversariness render the use of such a procedure a far cry from the undisputed prohibition of the Confrontation Clause: trial by ex parte affidavit or inquisition, see Mattox, 156 U.S., at 242, 15 S.Ct., at 389; see also Green, 399 U.S., at 179, 90 S.Ct., at 1946 (Harlan, J., concurring) ("[T]he Confrontation Clause was meant to constitutionalize a barrier against flagrant abuses, trials by anonymous accusers, and absentee witnesses"). Rather, we think these elements of effective confrontation not only permit a defendant to "confound and undo the false accuser, or reveal the child coached by a malevolent adult," 3167Coy, supra, 487 U.S., at 1020, 108 S.Ct., at 2802, but may well aid a defendant in eliciting favorable testimony from the child witness. Indeed, to the extent the child witness' testimony may be said to be technically given out of court (though we do not so hold), these assurances of reliability and adversariness are far greater than those required for admission of hearsay testimony under the Confrontation Clause. See Roberts, 448 852 U.S., at 66, 100 S.Ct., at 2539. We are therefore confident that use of the one-way closed circuit television procedure, where necessary to further an important state interest, does not impinge upon the truth-seeking or symbolic purposes of the Confrontation Clause.

The critical inquiry in this case, therefore, is whether use of the procedure is necessary to further an important state interest. The State contends that it has a substantial interest in protecting children who are allegedly victims of child abuse from the trauma of testifying against the alleged perpetrator and that its statutory procedure for receiving testimony from such witnesses is necessary to further that interest.

We have of course recognized that a State's interest in "the protection of minor victims of sex crimes from further trauma and embarrassment" is a "compelling" one. Globe Newspaper Co. v. Superior Court of Norfolk County, 457 U.S. 596, 607, 102 S.Ct. 2613, 2620, 73 L.Ed.2d 248 (1982); see also New York v. Ferber, 458 U.S. 747, 756-757, 102 S.Ct. 3348, 3354, 73 L.Ed.2d 1113 (1982); FCC v. Pacifica Foundation, 438 U.S. 726, 749-750, 98 S.Ct. 3026, 3040-3041, 57 L.Ed.2d 1073 (1978); Ginsberg v. New York, 390 U.S. 629, 640, 88 S.Ct. 1274, 1281, 20 L.Ed.2d 195 (1968); Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 168, 64 S.Ct. 438, 443, 88 L.Ed. 645 (1944). "[W]e have sustained legislation aimed at protecting the physical and emotional well-being of youth even when the laws have operated in the sensitive area of constitutionally protected rights." Ferber, supra, 458 U.S., at 757, 102 S.Ct., at 3354. In Globe Newspaper, for example, we held that a State's interest in the physical and psychological well-being of a minor victim was sufficiently weighty to justify depriving the press and public of their constitutional right to attend criminal trials, where the trial court makes a case-specific finding that closure of the trial is necessary to protect the welfare of the minor. See 457 U.S., at 608-609, 102 S.Ct., at 2620-21. This Term, in Osborne v. Ohio, 495 U.S. 103, 110 S.Ct. 1691, 109 L.Ed.2d 98 (1990), we upheld a state statute that proscribed the possession and viewing of child pornography, reaffirming that " '[i]t is evident beyond the need for elaboration that a State's interest in "safeguarding the physical and 853 psychological well-being of a minor" is "compelling." ' " Id., at 109, 110 S.Ct. at 1696 (quoting Ferber, supra, 458 U.S., at 756-757, 102 S.Ct., at 3354-55).

[6] We likewise conclude today that a State's interest in the physical and psychological well-being of child abuse victims may be sufficiently important to outweigh, at least in some cases, a defendant's right to face his or her accusers in court. That a significant majority of States have enacted statutes to protect child witnesses from the trauma of giving testimony in child abuse cases attests to the widespread belief in the importance of such a public policy. See Coy, 487 U.S., at 1022-1023, 108 S.Ct., at 2803-2804 (O'Connor, J., concurring) ("Many States have determined that a child victim may suffer trauma from exposure to the harsh atmosphere of the typical courtroom and have undertaken to shield the child through a variety of ameliorative measures"). Thirty-seven States, for example, permit the use of videotaped testimony of sexually abused children; [FN2] 24 States have authorized the use of *3168 one-way 854 closed circuit television testimony in child abuse cases; [FN3] and 8 States authorize the use of a two-way system in which the child witness is permitted to see the courtroom and the defendant on a video monitor and in which the jury and judge are permitted to view the child during the testimony.[FN4]

The statute at issue in this case, for example, was specifically intended "to safeguard the physical and psychological well-being of child victims by avoiding, or at least minimizing, the emotional trauma produced by testifying." Wildermuth v. State, 310 Md. 496, 518, 530 A.2d 275, 286 (1987). The Wildermuth court noted:

> "In Maryland, the Governor's Task Force on Child Abuse in its Interim Report (Nov.1984) documented the existence of the [child abuse] problem in our State. Interim Report at 1. It brought the picture up to date in its Final Report (Dec.1985). In the first six months of 1985, investigations of child abuse were 12 percent more numerous than during the same period of 1984. In 1979, 4,615 cases of child abuse were investigated; in 1984, 855 8,321. Final Report at iii. In its Interim Report at 2, the Commission proposed legislation that, with some changes, became § 9-102. The proposal was 'aimed at alleviating the trauma to a child victim in the courtroom atmosphere by allowing the child's testimony to be obtained outside of the courtroom.' Id., at 2. This would both protect the child and enhance the public interest by encouraging effective prosecution of the alleged abuser." Id., at 517, 530 A.2d, at 285.

Given the State's traditional and " 'transcendent interest in protecting the welfare of children,' " Ginsberg, 390 U.S., at 640, 88 S.Ct., at 1281 (citation omitted), and buttressed by the growing body of academic literature documenting the psychological trauma suffered by child abuse victims who must testify in court, see Brief for American Psychological Association as Amicus Curiae 7-13; G. Goodman et al., Emotional Effects of Criminal Court Testimony on Child Sexual *3169 Assault Victims, Final Report to the National Institute of Justice (presented as conference paper at annual convention of American Psychological Assn., Aug.1989), we will not second-guess the considered judgment of the Maryland Legislature regarding the importance of its interest in protecting child abuse victims from the emotional trauma of testifying. Accordingly, we hold that, if the State makes an adequate showing of necessity, the state interest in protecting child witnesses from the trauma of testifying in a child abuse case is sufficiently important to justify the use of a special procedure that permits a child witness in such cases to testify at trial against a defendant in the absence of face-to-face confrontation with the defendant.

[7] The requisite finding of necessity must of course be a case-specific one: The trial court must hear evidence and determine whether use of the one-way closed circuit television procedure is necessary to protect the welfare of the particular child witness who seeks to testify. See Globe Newspaper Co., 457 U.S., at 608-609, 102 S.Ct., at 2621 (compelling interest in protecting 856 child victims does not justify a mandatory trial closure rule); Coy, 487 U.S., at 1021, 108 S.Ct., at 2803; id., at 1025, 108 S.Ct., at 2805 (O'Connor, J., concurring); see also Hochheiser v. Superior Court, 161 Cal.App.3d 777, 793, 208 Cal.Rptr. 273, 283 (1984). The trial court must also find that the child witness would be traumatized, not by the courtroom generally, but by the presence of the defendant. See, e.g., State v. Wilhite, 160 Ariz. 228, 772 P.2d 582 (1989); State v. Bonello, 210 Conn. 51, 554 A.2d 277 (1989); State v. Davidson, 764 S.W.2d 731 (Mo.App.1989); Commonwealth v. Ludwig, 366 Pa.Super. 361, 531 A.2d 459 (1987). Denial of face-to-face confrontation is not needed to further the state interest in protecting the child witness from trauma unless it is the presence of the defendant that causes the trauma. In other words, if the state interest were merely the interest in protecting child witnesses from courtroom trauma generally, denial of face-to-face confrontation would be unnecessary because the child could be permitted to testify in less intimidating surroundings, albeit with the defendant present. Finally, the trial court must find that the emotional distress suffered by the child witness in the presence of the defendant is more than de minimis, i.e., more than "mere nervousness or excitement or some reluctance to testify," Wildermuth, supra, 310 Md., at 524, 530 A.2d, at 289; see also State v. Mannion, 19 Utah 505, 511-512, 57 P. 542, 543-544 (1899). We need not decide the minimum showing of emotional trauma required for use of the special procedure, however, because the Maryland statute, which requires a determination that the child witness will suffer "serious emotional distress such that the child cannot reasonably communicate," § 9-102(a)(1)(ii), clearly suffices to meet constitutional standards.

To be sure, face-to-face confrontation may be said to cause trauma for the very purpose of eliciting truth, cf. Coy, supra, 487 U.S., at 1019-1020, 108 S.Ct., at 2802-03, but we think that the use of Maryland's special procedure, where necessary to further the important state interest in preventing trauma to child witnesses in child 857 abuse cases, adequately ensures the accuracy of the testimony and preserves the adversary nature of the trial. See supra, at 3166-3167. Indeed, where face-to-face confrontation causes significant emotional distress in a child witness, there is evidence that such confrontation would in fact disserve the Confrontation Clause's truth-seeking goal. See, e.g., Coy, supra, 487 U.S., at 1032, 108 S.Ct., at 2809 (BLACKMUN, J., dissenting) (face-to-face confrontation "may so overwhelm the child as to prevent the possibility of effective testimony, thereby undermining the truth-finding function of the trial itself"); Brief for American Psychological Association as Amicus Curiae 18-24; State v. Sheppard, 197 N.J.Super. 411, 416, 484 A.2d 1330, 1332 (1984); Goodman & Helgeson, *3170Child Sexual Assault: Children's Memory and the Law, 40 U. Miami L.Rev. 181, 203-204 (1985); Note, Videotaping Children's Testimony: An Empirical View, 85 Mich.L.Rev. 809, 813-820 (1987).

[8] In sum, we conclude that where necessary to protect a child witness from trauma that would be caused by testifying in the physical presence of the defendant, at least where such trauma would impair the child's ability to communicate, the Confrontation Clause does not prohibit use of a procedure that, despite the absence of face-to-face confrontation, ensures the reliability of the evidence by subjecting it to rigorous adversarial testing and thereby preserves the essence of effective confrontation. Because there is no dispute that the child witnesses in this case testified under oath, were subject to full cross-examination, and were able to be observed by the judge, jury, and defendant as they testified, we conclude that, to the extent that a proper finding of necessity has been made, the admission of such testimony would be consonant with the Confrontation Clause.

IV

[9] The Maryland Court of Appeals held, as we do today, that although face-to-face confrontation is not an absolute constitutional requirement, it may be abridged only where there 858 is a " 'case-specific finding of necessity.' " 316 Md., at 564, 560 A.2d, at 1126 (quoting Coy, supra, 487 U.S., at 1025, 108 S.Ct., at 2805 (O'Connor, J., concurring)). Given this latter requirement, the Court of Appeals reasoned that "[t]he question of whether a child is unavailable to testify ... should not be asked in terms of inability to testify in the ordinary courtroom setting, but in the much narrower terms of the witness's inability to testify in the presence of the accused." 316 Md., at 564, 560 A.2d, at 1126 (footnote omitted). "[T]he determinative inquiry required to preclude face-to-face confrontation is the effect of the presence of the defendant on the witness or the witness's testimony." Id., at 565, 560 A.2d, at 1127. The Court of Appeals accordingly concluded that, as a prerequisite to use of the § 9-102 procedure, the Confrontation Clause requires the trial court to make a specific finding that testimony by the child in the courtroom in the presence of the defendant would result in the child suffering serious emotional distress such that the child could not reasonably communicate. Id., at 566, 560 A.2d, at 1127. This conclusion, of course, is consistent with our holding today.

In addition, however, the Court of Appeals interpreted our decision in Coy to impose two subsidiary requirements. First, the court held that " § 9-102 ordinarily cannot be invoked unless the child witness initially is questioned (either in or outside the courtroom) in the defendant's presence." Id., at 566, 560 A.2d, at 1127; see also Wildermuth, 310 Md., at 523-524, 530 A.2d, at 289 (personal observation by the judge should be the rule rather than the exception). Second, the court asserted that, before using the one-way television procedure, a trial judge must determine whether a child would suffer "severe emotional distress" if he or she were to testify by two-way closed circuit television. 316 Md., at 567, 560 A.2d, at 1128.

Reviewing the evidence presented to the trial court in support of the finding required under § 9-102(a)(1)(ii), the Court of Appeals determined that "the finding of necessity required 859 to limit the defendant's right of confrontation through invocation of § 9-102 ... was not made here." Id., at 570-571, 560 A.2d, at 1129. The Court of Appeals noted that the trial judge "had the benefit only of expert testimony on the ability of the children to communicate; he did not question any of the children himself, nor did he observe any child's behavior on the witness stand before making his ruling. He did not explore any alternatives to the use of one-way closed-circuit television." Id., at 568, 560 A.2d, at 1128 (footnote omitted). The Court of Appeals also observed that "the testimony in this case was not sharply focused on the effect of the defendant's presence*3171 on the child witnesses." Id., at 569, 560 A.2d, at 1129. Thus, the Court of Appeals concluded:

> "Unable to supplement the expert testimony by responses to questions put by him, or by his own observations of the children's behavior in Craig's presence, the judge made his § 9-102 finding in terms of what the experts had said. He ruled that 'the testimony of each of these children in a courtroom will [result] in each child suffering serious emotional distress ... such that each of these children cannot reasonably communicate.' He failed to find-indeed, on the evidence before him, could not have found-that this result would be the product of testimony in a courtroom in the defendant's presence or outside the courtroom but in the defendant's televised presence. That, however, is the finding of necessity required to limit the defendant's right of confrontation through invocation of § 9-102. Since that finding was not made here, and since the procedures we deem requisite to the valid use of § 9-102 were not followed, the judgment of the Court of Special Appeals must be reversed and the case remanded for a new trial." Id., at 570-571, 560 A.2d, at 1129 (emphasis added).

The Court of Appeals appears to have rested its conclusion at least in part on the trial court's failure to observe the children's behavior in the defendant's presence and its failure to 860 explore less restrictive alternatives to the use of the one-way closed circuit television procedure. See id., at 568-571, 560 A.2d, at 1128-1129. Although we think such evidentiary requirements could strengthen the grounds for use of protective measures, we decline to establish, as a matter of federal constitutional law, any such categorical evidentiary prerequisites for the use of the one-way television procedure. The trial court in this case, for example, could well have found, on the basis of the expert testimony before it, that testimony by the child witnesses in the courtroom in the defendant's presence "will result in [each] child suffering serious emotional distress such that the child cannot reasonably communicate," § 9-102(a)(1)(ii). See id., at 568-569, 560 A.2d, at 1128-1129; see also App. 22-25, 39, 41, 43, 44-45, 54-57. So long as a trial court makes such a case-specific finding of necessity, the Confrontation Clause does not prohibit a State from using a one-way closed circuit television procedure for the receipt of testimony by a child witness in a child abuse case. Because the Court of Appeals held that the trial court had not made the requisite finding of necessity under its interpretation of "the high threshold required by [Coy] before § 9-102 may be invoked," 316 Md., at 554-555, 560 A.2d, at 1121 (footnote omitted), we cannot be certain whether the Court of Appeals would reach the same conclusion in light of the legal standard we establish today. We therefore vacate the judgment of the Court of Appeals of Maryland and remand the case for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

tion against the tide of prevailing current opinion. The Sixth Amendment provides, with unmistakable clarity, that "[i]n all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right ... to be confronted 861 with the witnesses against him." The purpose of enshrining this protection in the Constitution was to assure that none of the many policy interests from time to time pursued by statutory law could overcome a defendant's right to face his or her accusers in court. The Court, however, says:

> "We ... conclude today that a State's interest in the physical and psychological well-being of child abuse victims may be sufficiently important to outweigh, at least in some cases, a defendant's right to face *3172 his or her accusers in court. That a significant majority of States have enacted statutes to protect child witnesses from the trauma of giving testimony in child abuse cases attests to the widespread belief in the importance of such a public policy." Ante, at 3167.

Because of this subordination of explicit constitutional text to currently favored public policy, the following scene can be played out in an American courtroom for the first time in two centuries: A father whose young daughter has been given over to the exclusive custody of his estranged wife, or a mother whose young son has been taken into custody by the State's child welfare department, is sentenced to prison for sexual abuse on the basis of testimony by a child the parent has not seen or spoken to for many months; and the guilty verdict is rendered without giving the parent so much as the opportunity to sit in the presence of the child, and to ask, personally or through counsel, "it is really not true, is it, that I-your father (or mother) whom you see before you-did these terrible things?" Perhaps that is a procedure today's society desires; perhaps (though I doubt it) it is even a fair procedure; but it is assuredly not a procedure permitted by the Constitution.

Because the text of the Sixth Amendment is clear, and because the Constitution is meant to protect against, rather than conform to, current "widespread belief," I respectfully dissent.

862 I

According to the Court, "we cannot say that [face-to-face] confrontation [with witnesses appearing at trial] is an indispensable element of the Sixth Amendment's guarantee of the right to confront one's accusers." Ante, at 3166. That is rather like saying "we cannot say that being tried before a jury is an indispensable element of the Sixth Amendment's guarantee of the right to jury trial." The Court makes the impossible plausible by recharacterizing the Confrontation Clause, so that confrontation (redesignated "face-to-face confrontation") becomes only one of many "elements of confrontation." Ante, at 3163-3164. The reasoning is as follows: The Confrontation Clause guarantees not only what it explicitly provides for-"face-to-face" confrontation-but also implied and collateral rights such as cross-examination, oath, and observation of demeanor (TRUE); the purpose of this entire cluster of rights is to ensure the reliability of evidence (TRUE); the Maryland procedure preserves the implied and collateral rights (TRUE), which adequately ensure the reliability of evidence (perhaps TRUE); therefore the Confrontation Clause is not violated by denying what it explicitly provides for-"face-to-face" confrontation (unquestionably FALSE). This reasoning abstracts from the right to its purposes, and then eliminates the right. It is wrong because the Confrontation Clause does not guarantee reliable evidence; it guarantees specific trial procedures that were thought to assure reliable evidence, undeniably among which was "face-to-face" confrontation. Whatever else it may mean in addition, the defendant's constitutional right "to be confronted with the witnesses against him" means, always and everywhere, at least what it explicitly says: the " 'right to meet face to face all those who appear and give evidence at trial.' " Coy v. Iowa, 487 U.S. 1012, 1016, 108 S.Ct. 2798, 2800, 101 L.Ed.2d 857 (1988), quoting California v. Green, 399 U.S. 149, 175, 90 S.Ct. 1930, 1943-44, 26 L.Ed.2d 489 (1970) (Harlan, J., concurring).

863 The Court supports its antitextual conclusion by cobbling together scraps of dicta from various cases that have no bearing here. It will suffice to discuss one of them, since they are all of a kind: Quoting Ohio v. Roberts, 448 U.S. 56, 63, 100 S.Ct. 2531, 2537, 65 L.Ed.2d 597 (1980), the Court says that "[i]n sum, our precedents establish that 'the Confrontation Clause reflects a preference for face-to-face confrontation at trial,' " ante, at 3165. (emphasis added by the Court). But Roberts, and all the other "precedents" the Court enlists to prove the implausible, *3173 dealt with the implications of the Confrontation Clause, and not its literal, unavoidable text. When Roberts said that the Clause merely "reflects a preference for face-to-face confrontation at trial," what it had in mind as the nonpreferred alternative was not (as the Court implies) the appearance of a witness at trial without confronting the defendant. That has been, until today, not merely "nonpreferred" but utterly unheard-of. What Roberts had in mind was the receipt of other-than-first-hand testimony from witnesses at trial-that is, witnesses' recounting of hearsay statements by absent parties who, since they did not appear at trial, did not have to endure face-to-face confrontation. Rejecting that, I agree, was merely giving effect to an evident constitutional preference; there are, after all, many exceptions to the Confrontation Clause's hearsay rule. But that the defendant should be confronted by the witnesses who appear at trial is not a preference "reflected" by the Confrontation Clause; it is a constitutional right unqualifiedly guaranteed.

The Court claims that its interpretation of the Confrontation Clause "is consistent with our cases holding that other Sixth Amendment rights must also be interpreted in the context of the necessities of trial and the adversary process." Ante, at 3166. I disagree. It is true enough that the "necessities of trial and the adversary process" limit the manner in which Sixth Amendment rights may be exercised, and limit the scope of Sixth Amendment guarantees to the extent that scope is textually indeterminate. Thus (to 864 describe the cases the Court cites): The right to confront is not the right to confront in a manner that disrupts the trial. Illinois v. Allen, 397 U.S. 337, 90 S.Ct. 1057, 25 L.Ed.2d 353 (1970). The right "to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses" is not the right to call witnesses in a manner that violates fair and orderly procedures. Taylor v. Illinois, 484 U.S. 400, 108 S.Ct. 646, 98 L.Ed.2d 798 (1988). The scope of the right "to have the assistance of counsel" does not include consultation with counsel at all times during the trial. Perry v. Leeke, 488 U.S. 272, 109 S.Ct. 594, 102 L.Ed.2d 624 (1989). The scope of the right to cross-examine does not include access to the State's investigative files. Pennsylvania v. Ritchie, 480 U.S. 39, 107 S.Ct. 989, 94 L.Ed.2d 40 (1987). But we are not talking here about denying expansive scope to a Sixth Amendment provision whose scope for the purpose at issue is textually unclear; "to confront" plainly means to encounter face-to-face, whatever else it may mean in addition. And we are not talking about the manner of arranging that face-to-face encounter, but about whether it shall occur at all. The "necessities of trial and the adversary process" are irrelevant here, since they cannot alter the constitutional text.

II

Much of the Court's opinion consists of applying to this case the mode of analysis we have used in the admission of hearsay evidence. The Sixth Amendment does not literally contain a prohibition upon such evidence, since it guarantees the defendant only the right to confront "the witnesses against him." As applied in the Sixth Amendment's context of a prosecution, the noun "witness"-in 1791 as today-could mean either (a) one "who knows or sees any thing; one personally present" or (b) "one who gives testimony" or who "testifies," i.e., "[i]n judicial proceedings, [one who] make[s] a solemn declaration under oath, for the purpose of establishing or making proof of some fact to a court." 2 N. Webster, An American Dictionary of the English Language (1828) (emphasis added). See also J. Buchanan, Linguae Britannicae Vera Pronunciatio (1757). The former meaning (one "who 865 knows or sees") would cover hearsay evidence, but is excluded in the Sixth Amendment by the words following the noun: "witnesses against him. " The phrase obviously refers to those who give testimony against the defendant at trial. We have nonetheless found implicit in the Confrontation3174 Clause some limitation upon hearsay evidence, since otherwise the government could subvert the confrontation right by putting on witnesses who know nothing except what an absent declarant said. And in determining the scope of that implicit limitation, we have focused upon whether the reliability of the hearsay statements (which are not expressly excluded by the Confrontation Clause) "is otherwise assured." Ante, at 3166. The same test cannot be applied, however, to permit what is explicitly forbidden by the constitutional text; there is simply no room for interpretation with regard to "the irreducible literal meaning of the Clause." Coy, supra, 487 U.S., at 1020-1021, 108 S.Ct., at 2803.

Some of the Court's analysis seems to suggest that the children's testimony here was itself hearsay of the sort permissible under our Confrontation Clause cases. See ante, at 3166-3167. That cannot be. Our Confrontation Clause conditions for the admission of hearsay have long included a "general requirement of unavailability" of the declarant. Idaho v. Wright, 497 U.S. 805, 815, 110 S.Ct. 3139, 3146, 111 L.Ed.2d 638. "In the usual case ..., the prosecution must either produce, or demonstrate the unavailability of, the declarant whose statement it wishes to use against the defendant." Ohio v. Roberts, 448 U.S., at 65, 100 S.Ct., at 2538. We have permitted a few exceptions to this general rule-e.g., for co-conspirators' statements, whose effect cannot be replicated by live testimony because they "derive [their] significance from the circumstances in which [they were] made," United States v. Inadi, 475 U.S. 387, 395, 106 S.Ct. 1121, 1126, 89 L.Ed.2d 390 (1986). "Live" closed-circuit television testimony, however-if it can be called hearsay at all-is surely an example of hearsay as "a weaker substitute for live testimony," id., at 394, 106 S.Ct., at 1126, which can be employed only when the genuine article is unavailable. "When 866 two versions of the same evidence are available, long-standing principles of the law of hearsay, applicable as well to Confrontation Clause analysis, favor the better evidence." Ibid. See also Roberts, supra (requiring unavailability as precondition for admission of prior testimony); Barber v. Page, 390 U.S. 719, 88 S.Ct. 1318, 20 L.Ed.2d 255 (1968) (same).

The Court's test today requires unavailability only in the sense that the child is unable to testify in the presence of the defendant.[FN1] That cannot possibly be the relevant sense. If unconfronted testimony is admissible hearsay when the witness is unable to confront the defendant, then presumably there are other categories of admissible hearsay consisting of unsworn testimony when the witness is unable to risk perjury, un-cross-examined testimony when the witness is unable to undergo hostile questioning, etc. California v. Green, 399 U.S. 149, 90 S.Ct. 1930, 26 L.Ed.2d 489 (1970), is not precedent for such a silly system. That case held that the Confrontation Clause does not bar admission of prior testimony when the declarant is sworn as a witness but refuses to answer. But in Green, as in most cases of refusal, we could not know why the declarant refused to testify. Here, by contrast, we know that it is precisely because the child is unwilling to testify in the presence of the defendant. That unwillingness cannot be a valid excuse under the Confrontation Clause, whose very object is to place the witness under the sometimes hostile glare of the defendant. "That face-to-face presence may, unfortunately, upset the truthful rape victim or abused child; but by the same token it may confound and undo the false accuser, or reveal the child coached by a malevolent adult." Coy, 487 867 U.S., at 1020, 108 S.Ct., at 2802. To say *3175 that a defendant loses his right to confront a witness when that would cause the witness not to testify is rather like saying that the defendant loses his right to counsel when counsel would save him, or his right to subpoena witnesses when they would exculpate him, or his right not to give testimony against himself when that would prove him guilty.

FN1. I presume that when the Court says "trauma would impair the child's ability to communicate," ante, at 3170, it means that trauma would make it impossible for the child to communicate. That is the requirement of the Maryland law at issue here: "serious emotional distress such that the child cannot reasonably communicate." Md.Cts. & Jud.Proc.Code Ann. § 9-102 (a)(1)(ii) (1989). Any implication beyond that would in any event be dictum.

III

The Court characterizes the State's interest which "outweigh[s]" the explicit text of the Constitution as an "interest in the physical and psychological well-being of child abuse victims," ante, at 3167, an "interest in protecting" such victims "from the emotional trauma of testifying," ante, at 3169. That is not so. A child who meets the Maryland statute's requirement of suffering such "serious emotional distress" from confrontation that he "cannot reasonably communicate" would seem entirely safe. Why would a prosecutor want to call a witness who cannot reasonably communicate? And if he did, it would be the State's own fault. Protection of the child's interest-as far as the Confrontation Clause is concerned [FN2]-is entirely within Maryland's control. The State's interest here is in fact no more and no less than what the State's interest always is when it seeks to get a class of evidence admitted in criminal proceedings: more convictions of guilty defendants. That is not an unworthy interest, but it should not be dressed up as a humanitarian one.

FN2. A different situation would be presented if the defendant sought to call the child. In that event, the State's refusal to compel the child to appear, or its insistence upon a procedure such as that set forth in the Maryland statute as a condition of its compelling him to do so, would call into question-initially, at least, and perhaps exclusively-the scope of the defendant's Sixth Amendment right "to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor."

And the interest on the other side is also what it usually is when the State seeks to get a new class of evidence admitted: fewer convictions of innocent defendants-specifically, in the 868 present context, innocent defendants accused of particularly heinous crimes. The "special" reasons that exist for suspending one of the usual guarantees of reliability in the case of children's testimony are perhaps matched by "special" reasons for being particularly insistent upon it in the case of children's testimony. Some studies show that children are substantially more vulnerable to suggestion than adults, and often unable to separate recollected fantasy (or suggestion) from reality. See Lindsay & Johnson, Reality Monitoring and Suggestibility: Children's Ability to Discriminate Among Memories From Different Sources, in Children's Eyewitness Memory 92 (S. Ceci, M. Toglia, & D. Ross eds. 1987); Feher, The Alleged Molestation Victim, The Rules of Evidence, and the Constitution: Should Children Really Be Seen and Not Heard?, 14 Am.J.Crim.L. 227, 230-233 (1987); Christiansen, The Testimony of Child Witnesses: Fact, Fantasy, and the Influence of Pretrial Interviews, 62 Wash.L.Rev. 705, 708-711 (1987). The injustice their erroneous testimony can produce is evidenced by the tragic Scott County investigations of 1983-1984, which disrupted the lives of many (as far as we know) innocent people in the small town of Jordan, Minnesota. At one stage those investigations were pursuing allegations by at least eight children of multiple murders, but the prosecutions actually initiated charged only sexual abuse. Specifically, 24 adults were charged with molesting 37 children. In the course of the investigations, 25 children were placed in foster homes. Of the 24 indicted defendants, one pleaded guilty, two were acquitted at trial, and the charges against the remaining 21 were voluntarily dismissed. See Feher, supra, at 239-240. There is no doubt that some sexual abuse took place in Jordan; but there is no reason to believe it was as widespread as charged. A report by the Minnesota attorney general's office, based on inquiries conducted by the Minnesota Bureau of Criminal Apprehension and the Federal Bureau of Investigation, *3176 concluded that there was an "absence of credible testimony and [a] lack of 869 significant corroboration" to support reinstitution of sex-abuse charges, and "no credible evidence of murders." H. Humphrey, Report on Scott County Investigation 8, 7 (1985). The report describes an investigation full of well-intentioned techniques employed by the prosecution team, police, child protection workers, and foster parents, that distorted and in some cases even coerced the children's recollection. Children were interrogated repeatedly, in some cases as many as 50 times, id., at 9; answers were suggested by telling the children what other witnesses had said, id., at 11; and children (even some who did not at first complain of abuse) were separated from their parents for months, id., at 9. The report describes the consequences as follows:

> "As children continued to be interviewed the list of accused citizens grew. In a number of cases, it was only after weeks or months of questioning that children would 'admit' their parents abused them.
> . . . . .
> "In some instances, over a period of time, the allegations of sexual abuse turned to stories of mutilations, and eventually homicide." Id., at 10-11.

The value of the confrontation right in guarding against a child's distorted or coerced recollections is dramatically evident with respect to one of the misguided investigative techniques the report cited: some children were told by their foster parents that reunion with their real parents would be hastened by "admission" of their parents' abuse. Id., at 9. Is it difficult to imagine how unconvincing such a testimonial admission might be to a jury that witnessed the child's delight at seeing his parents in the courtroom? Or how devastating it might be if, pursuant to a psychiatric evaluation that "trauma would impair the child's ability to communicate" in front of his parents, the child were permitted to tell his story to the jury on closed-circuit television?

In the last analysis, however, this debate is not an appropriate one. I have no need to defend the value of confrontation,870 because the Court has no authority to question it. It is not within our charge to speculate that, "where face-to-face confrontation causes significant emotional distress in a child witness," confrontation might "in fact disserve the Confrontation Clause's truth-seeking goal." Ante, at 3169. If so, that is a defect in the Constitution-which should be amended by the procedures provided for such an eventuality, but cannot be corrected by judicial pronouncement that it is archaic, contrary to "widespread belief," and thus null and void. For good or bad, the Sixth Amendment requires confrontation, and we are not at liberty to ignore it. To quote the document one last time (for it plainly says all that need be said): "In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right ... to be confronted with the witnesses against him" (emphasis added).

The Court today has applied "interest-balancing" analysis where the text of the Constitution simply does not permit it. We are not free to conduct a cost-benefit analysis of clear and explicit constitutional guarantees, and then to adjust their meaning to comport with our findings. The Court has convincingly proved that the Maryland procedure serves a valid interest, and gives the defendant virtually everything the Confrontation Clause guarantees (everything, that is, except confrontation). I am persuaded, therefore, that the Maryland procedure is virtually constitutional. Since it is not, however, actually constitutional I would affirm the judgment of the Maryland Court of Appeals reversing the judgment of conviction.

United States District Court,
D. Maine.
UNITED STATES of America
v.
William C. BURHOE, Defendant.

No. CR-06-57-B-W.
Feb. 27, 2008.

Background: Defendant was indicted by a federal grand jury for the alleged possession of a firearm by a person previously involuntarily committed to a mental institution. Defendant moved for hospitalization proceeding. Thereafter, defendant requested to be present during competency hearing, and requested that the court rescind its hospitalization extension.

Holdings: The District Court, John A. Woodcock, Jr., J., held that:
(1) skipping a competency hearing and initiating a hospitalization proceeding was not an appropriate sanction for failure to maintain active order of custody over defendant, and
(2) defendant was entitled to be present during competency hearing in District of Maine.

Ordered accordingly.

JOHN A. WOODCOCK, JR., District Judge.

Under 18 U.S.C. § 4241, a defendant whose competence is at issue is entitled to 177 a hearing to determine his competence, and under 18 U.S.C. § 4246, a defendant who has been found incompetent and unlikely to improve is entitled to a hearing to determine whether he should be hospitalized. Over the Defendant's objection, the Court concludes that skipping a § 4241 hearing and initiating a § 4246 proceeding in its place would not be an appropriate sanction for the Government's failure to maintain an active order of custody while a § 4241 determination is being resolved. The Court grants Defendant's request to be present at the 18 U.S.C. § 4247(d) hearing held pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 4241, and orders that Mr. Burhoe be brought to Maine for the hearing. Finally, over Mr. Burhoe's objection, the Court declines to rescind its prior Order, which authorized the Attorney General to retain him for hospitalization until the Court rules on the § 4241 issue or until April 30, 2008, whichever is earlier.

I. STATEMENT OF FACTS

On September 7, 2006, a federal grand jury indicted William C. Burhoe for an alleged violation of 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(4), possession of a firearm by a person previously involuntarily committed to a mental institution. Indictment (Docket # 1). On October 6, 2006, the Government moved for detention and for a psychiatric examination. Mot. for Psychiatric or Psychological Evaluation (Docket # 8); Mot. for Detention (Docket # 9). On the same day, the Court ordered Mr. Burhoe committed to the custody of the Attorney General to undergo a psychiatric examination to determine his competency to stand trial.[FN1] Order (Docket # 10). Following the receipt of a psychological report, the Court held a competency hearing on June 15, 2007 pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 4246(d). By written order dated June 20, 2007, the Court found that "the defendant is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect that renders him unable to understand the nature and consequences of the proceedings against him and unable to assist properly in his defense." Order at 1 (Docket # 42). The Court committed Mr. Burhoe to the custody of the Attorney General to hospitalize him for treatment

FN1. The Defendant later moved for reconsideration based on his contention that he had established a rapport with a particular treating psychologist and would likely deteriorate if moved out of state to a federal facility for the evaluation. Def.'s Mot. to Recon. Order for Competency Evaluation (Docket # 12). The Court denied the motion. Order (Docket # 22).

> for such reasonable period of time, not to exceed four months, as is necessary to determine whether there is a substantial probability that in the foreseeable future the defendant will attain the capacity to permit the proceedings to go forward; and for an additional reasonable period of time until-(A) his mental condition is so improved that trial may proceed, if the Court finds that there is a substantial probability that within such additional period of time he will attain the capacity to permit the proceeding to go forward; or (B) the pending charges against him are disposed of according to law; whichever is earlier.
> Id. at 2.

On October 29, 2007, the Court received a psychiatric report from the Bureau of Prisons. The report concluded that Mr. Burhoe remained not competent to proceed to trial and recommended antipsychotic medication, opining that there is a substantial probability that Mr. Burhoe can be restored to competency if he receives antipsychotic medication. At the same time, however, the report noted that Mr. Burhoe had refused to voluntarily undergo the recommended therapy. The report recommended that the Court require 178 Mr. Burhoe to undergo involuntary prescriptive treatment.

The October report left unanswered certain questions relevant to the analysis dictated by Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166, 123 S.Ct. 2174, 156 L.Ed.2d 197 (2003). Accordingly, on November 13, 2007, after a conference with counsel, the Court ordered that the Federal Medical Center prepare a supplemental report, addressing the Sell concerns. Order (Docket # 62). On November 20, 2007, the Government moved to extend Mr. Burhoe's hospitalization to January 11, 2008, and on November 21, 2007, the Court granted the motion without objection by the Defendant. Mot. to Extend Period of Hospitalization (Docket # 66); Order (Docket # 68). The Court received a faxed copy of a supplemental report on February 8, 2008, and a hard copy on February 19, 2008. On February 14, 2008, Mr. Burhoe moved for a § 4246 hospitalization proceeding and the same day, the Court held a conference of counsel. Def.'s Mot. for a § 4246 Hospitalization Proceeding (Docket # 69) (Def.'s Mot.). At the conference, it was agreed that an evidentiary hearing will be necessary, whether it is a Sell hearing or a § 4246 hospitalization hearing. On February 15, 2008, the Court granted the Government's motion, without objection, to extend the hospitalization period to April 30, 2008. Order on Government's Second Mot. to Extend Period of Hospitalization (Docket # 74). On February 25, 2008, Mr. Burhoe filed another motion, requesting to be present during the hearing, and asking the Court to rescind its second hospitalization extension. Def.'s Mot. to be Present During § 4241(d) Hearing (Docket # 78) (Def.'s Mot. to be Present).

II. DISCUSSION

A. THE DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR A § 4246 PROCEEDING

[1] Mr. Burhoe first contends that the lapse of the custodial order on January 11 requires that the case be treated as a § 4246 hospitalization proceeding. Def.'s Mot. He asserts that "January 11, 2008 [was] the 'end of the time period' authorized by this Court pursuant to § 4241(d)(2)(A) " and the Court is required "to determine whether 'the defendant's mental condition has not so improved as to permit the trial to proceed.' " Id. at 2. He goes on to state that "[i]f the defendant's mental condition has not so improved, then § 4246 hospitalization proceedings must commence immediately." Id. He cites § 4241(d) as support. Id.

The Court disagrees with Mr. Burhoe on a number of bases. First, the statute contemplates a resort to § 4246 only if the court has made a determination that "the defendant's mental condition has not so improved as to permit proceedings to go forward." 18 U.S.C. § 4241(d). The Court has made no such determination. Second, a § 4246 proceeding is not a procedural default provision for § 4241. If the Government fails to comply with the custodial timing requirements of § 4241, the statute does not contemplate that § 4246 proceedings must be commenced as a sanction for the Government's miscue. [FN2] 179 Third, the Defendant's position improperly conflates custody with a § 4241 determination. The remedy for the Government's failure to obtain an ongoing custodial order is to resolve the custody issue, not to make assumptions about the defendant's mental condition and to proceed with a hospitalization hearing.

> FN2. This is particularly true here, where the Government's failure to move for an extension of Mr. Burhoe's custody while the mental health professionals completed the supplemental Sell report was apparently inadvertent, lasted approximately one month, and has been remedied by a subsequent order. Further, the parties agreed both before and after the lapse in the custodial extension that it is in Mr. Burhoe's best interest to remain at Butner while the Sell determination is resolved. Order at 1 ("[t]he parties agree that it is in the best interest of the defendant for him to remain at the medical center pending the determination of whether the involuntary administration of medication is appropriate under Sell. "); Order on Government's Mot. to Extend Period of Hospitalization (Docket # 68) ("The parties agree that an extension of the defendant's hospitalization is necessary in order to allow the doctors at the Butner facility to issue a supplemental order and they agree that an extension for that purpose is in the best interest of the defendant.").

© 2012 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

> Mr. Burhoe now contends that remaining at Butner until the Sell issue is decided is not in his best interest. Def.'s Mot. to be Present at 2. He asks that the Court rescind its Order on Government's Second Motion to Extend Period of Hospitalization based upon his current position. In the circumstances of this case, there is no reason to alter the Court's Order dated February 15, 2008, which extended his hospitalization period "until the Court rules on the pending request to involuntarily medicate the defendant ... or no later than April 30, 2008, unless further extended by the Court." Order on Government's Second Mot. to Extend Period of Hospitalization at 2 (Docket # 74). As the § 4241 hearing will be held forthwith, the current custodial order merely maintains the status quo. To rescind its custodial order makes little sense. An immediate recission would likely result in Mr. Burhoe's transportation to a jail, not a medical center, and it seems apparent as the parties earlier agreed that Mr. Burhoe's best interests are served for the time being by the availability of greater not fewer mental health services.

But, the Court disagrees on a more fundamental level with the Defendant. Mr. Burhoe's motion contains the implicit view that the § 4241 procedure under which the court determines competency is a matter to be avoided and that he would be better protected by a § 4246 proceeding. The Court takes serious exception to Mr. Burhoe's premise. By safeguarding the rights of a defendant whose competency to stand trial is in doubt, the § 4241 procedure is designed to protect, not to punish defendants. The combined statutory protections under § 4241 and its companion provisions include the right to a mental competency evaluation by mental health professionals, the right to challenge their determinations by separate evaluation, and the right to a hearing. These statutory protections have been judicially enhanced by the Sell restrictions against involuntary treatment.

Moreover, if the Court concludes that the defendant's mental condition has not so improved as to permit proceedings to go forward, the additional protections of § 4246 may become effective. Thus, a defendant has the possibility of dual protections, both a § 4241 hearing and a § 4246 hearing. To sanction the Government's failure to obtain currently effective custodial orders by ordering that the matter proceed directly to § 4246 would be to sanction the defendant for the Government's lapse, depriving him of his statutory right to have his competency to stand trial judicially evaluated and determined.

B. THE DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR PHYSICAL PRESENCE AT THE § 4247(d) HEARING OR THE PHYSICAL PRESENCE OF HIS ATTORNEY WITH HIM AT A VIDEO CONFERENCE HEARING

[2] Mr. Burhoe requests that he "be transported from FMC Butner to the District of Maine to enable him to participate, in person, at all hearings in this matter." Def.'s Mot. to be Present at 1. Whether a defendant is entitled to the full panoply of constitutional rights at a § 4247(d) hearing to determine competency under § 4241 is not settled. United States v. Hamilton, 107 F.3d 499, 504 (7th Cir.1997) ("And it is unclear whether the Confrontation Clause applies to pretrial competency hearings."); United States v. Algere, 457 F.Supp.2d 695, 702 (E.D.La.2005) (concluding that conducting a Sell hearing by videoconference180 in which the Court appears by video teleconference and all other participants and witnesses are present in the same place as the defendant does not violate any rule or constitutional provision). Mr. Burhoe's presence in Maine will satisfy his right to counsel, such as it is, and will have the added benefit of the defendant's physical presence before the Court. Expert witnesses from North Carolina will be free to testify by video conference.[FN3]

FN3. The Court had tentatively scheduled the § 4241 hearing for March 5, 2008 at 3:00 p.m. In view of the fact that Mr. Burhoe will now have to be brought to Maine for the hearing, the Court will schedule a conference with counsel and the United States Marshal to determine how quickly Mr. Burhoe can be brought here and, if his physical presence cannot be secured in Maine by March 5, the Court will reset the hearing for an earliest possible date.

III. CONCLUSION

The Court:

1) DENIES the Defendant's Motion for a § 4246 Hospitalization Proceeding (Docket # 69);

2) GRANTS IN PART the Defendant's Motion to be Present during the hearing, by ORDERING the Defendant brought to Maine for the § 4247(d) hearing under § 4241 (Docket # 78); and

3) DENIES the Defendant's motion to rescind the Court's February 15, 2008 Order on Government's Second Motion to Extend Period of Hospitalization (Docket # 78).

SO ORDERED.

United States Court of Appeals,
Ninth Circuit.
HUU THANH NGUYEN, Petitioner–Appellant,
v.
Silvia GARCIA, Warden; Edward S. Alameida, Jr., Director, Director of Corrections, California State Department of Corrections, Respondents–Appellees.

No. 05–56596.
Argued and Submitted Oct. 24, 2006.
Filed Feb. 9, 2007.

Background: State prisoner convicted of attempted murder filed petition for writ of habeas corpus, challenging admission during mental competency hearing of his post-Miranda invocation of right to counsel. The United States District Court for the Central District of California, James V. Selna, J., denied petition. Prisoner appealed.

Holding: The Court of Appeals, Bea, Circuit Judge, held that admission during pre-trial mental competency of invocation of right to counsel did not violate Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination.

Affirmed.

In Wainwright v. Greenfield, 474 U.S. 284, 295, 106 S.Ct. 634, 88 L.Ed.2d 623 (1986), the Supreme Court held that prosecution evidence the defendant maintained silence after his arrest, offered to show he wasn't all that crazy, and to rebut defendant's insanity defense in the guilt phase of trial, constituted a violation of due process. Here, we consider whether Wainwright, or other applicable federal law, prohibits the prosecutor's mention that defendant requested counsel to show he was able to cooperate in his own defense—not at the guilt phase of trial but during a hearing to determine whether the defendant was mentally competent to stand trial. We conclude that the state court decision finding Wainwright inapplicable to a state court competency hearing is not "contrary to" clearly established federal law and therefore affirm the denial of appellant's petition for writ of habeas corpus brought pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2254.

I.

In the early morning of November 15, 1997, a fight broke out at a billiard hall in Stanton, California. The fight continued in the parking lot of the billiard hall and shots were fired. Two of the shots fired struck the outer wall of the billiard hall and one shot pierced the front window and struck an interior wall. No one was killed or hit, but probably not for lack of trying. The owner of the billiard hall saw someone firing a weapon out of the passenger window of a Nissan Maxima. After hearing the shots, Deputy Albert Macias observed a beige Nissan Maxima automobile speed away from the billiard hall parking lot. A brief pursuit ended when the Maxima spun out of control. Appellant Huu Thanh 719 Nguyen ("Nguyen") was the sole occupant of the vehicle.

Deputy Macias ordered Nguyen out of the car and then handcuffed Nguyen and placed him in the back of the patrol car. Macias read Nguyen his Miranda rights after arresting him, and Nguyen responded that he understood each of his rights. Nguyen then stated he wanted to tell Macias what had happened. Nguyen told Macias that a friend had fired the shots. Nguyen stated he drove off to allow his friend to escape, and that Nguyen had tossed the gun out of his window because it was not his. After telling Deputy Macias these details, Nguyen stated he wanted to talk with a lawyer. Macias stopped his interrogation.

The gun used to fire the shots was found 30 to 50 feet from where the Maxima came to rest. Gunshot residue was found on Nguyen's left hand, on the interior and exterior of the passenger door, and on the windshield.

In January 1998, Nguyen was charged with attempted first degree murder, Cal.Penal Code §§

187(a), 664, assault with the personal use of a firearm, id. § 245(a)(2), shooting at an occupied building, id. § 246, and being a felon in possession of a firearm, id. § 12021(a)(1).[FN1] He was charged to have committed the attempted murder willfully, deliberately, and with premeditation. Before the jury trial, the proceedings in the criminal prosecution were suspended pursuant to California Penal Code §§ 1367 – 69 for a hearing to determine whether Nguyen was competent to stand trial. [FN2]

FN1. Nguyen stood twice convicted, once in 1992 and once in 1993, of felony burglary offenses. Cal.Penal Code §§ 459–60.

FN2. Under California law,

> [a] person cannot be tried or adjudged to punishment while that person is mentally incompetent. A defendant is mentally incompetent for purposes of this chapter if, as a result of mental disorder or developmental disability, the defendant is unable to understand the nature of the criminal proceedings or to assist counsel in the conduct of a defense in a rational man- ner.

Cal.Penal Code § 1367(a).

The competency hearing was held in March 1999 before a jury impaneled solely to decide whether Nguyen was competent to stand trial on the charges lodged against him.[FN3] At this competency hearing, Dr. Paul Blair testified for the defense. He testified that he had evaluated Nguyen twice, once in September 1992 (at the request of a public defender who was defending Nguyen for the 1992 burglary charge) and again in January 1999. Dr. Blair opined that Nguyen "is not competent to participate in his own defense at this point in time, nor is he competent to discuss with you in a legitimate, forthright manner...." During cross examination of Dr. Blair, the prosecutor mentioned Nguyen's 720 request for an attorney on the night of the billiard hall shooting:

FN3. In California, competency hearings are distinct from the criminal prosecution: "when an order for a hearing into the present mental competence of the defendant has been issued, all proceedings in the criminal prosecution shall be suspended until the question of the present mental competence of the defendant has been determined." Cal.Penal Code § 1368(c). If a jury has been impaneled to decide the guilt of the defendant, the jury is "retained on call" pending resolution of the defendant's competency unless such retention would cause "undue hardship." Id. A separate jury may be impaneled to determine the sole issue of the defendant's competency. See id. §§ 1368(c), 1369(e), (f); People v. Turner, 34 Cal.4th 406, 424, 20 Cal.Rptr.3d 182, 99 P.3d 505 (2004). Defendant has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that he is mentally incompetent. Id. § 1369(f).

> Here, of course, the competency hearing preceded the guilt phase trial; the composition of the competency jury was totally different from that of the eventual guilt phase jury.

Q: Let me ask you this, Dr. Blair. If Mr. Nguyen on the day of his arrest in November of 1997 gave a police officer a rational, apparently cogent statement, even—even a defense to what he was suspected of doing, saying he may not have been involved, telling him that he didn't want to speak to him any longer, wanted a lawyer, would that mean that he's competent to stand trial today? [FN4]

FN4. There was neither an objection to this question nor a motion to strike the answer.

A: No.
(emphasis added).

The prosecution's psychiatric expert, Dr.

© 2012 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

Kaushal Sharma, testified about his interview with Nguyen. Sharma explained that Nguyen described in detail the charges against him and explained his defenses. Nguyen's request for an attorney on the night of the shooting was not mentioned during Sharma's testimony. But Sharma testified that Nguyen's statement that he understood his Miranda rights demonstrated "mental intact functioning."

Deputy Macias, the arresting officer, testified as to the arrest, his recitation of the Miranda rights, and Nguyen's acknowledgment of the rights (including his request for an attorney) and explanation of the events of the crime. Finally, during closing arguments of the competency hearing, the prosecution mentioned Nguyen's acknowledgment of his Miranda rights as evidence of his competency:

> When [Macias] says, "You have the right to an attorney. Do you understand that? One will be appointed to you free of charge before speaking to me." "Yes," he understands that.
> That tends to show circumstantially that he's aware of at least the element that he's involved in a criminal court proceeding. He's aware of going to court, things that he says to the deputy could be used against him, he has a right to a lawyer free of charge before talking to the sheriff's deputy. So circumstantially, that tends to show to a reasonable person he's aware of things.

SER 435–36. Following closing arguments, the jury empaneled only for the competency hearing found Nguyen mentally competent to stand trial.

On November 16, 1999, a jury composed totally of persons who had not served on the jury which determined competency convicted Nguyen of the charged offenses and found true the allegations that Nguyen had acted willfully, deliberately, and with premeditation and that he personally used the firearm in committing the attempted murder. Nguyen makes no assertion that his invocation of his right to counsel was at all mentioned during the criminal phase of trial. On January 21, 2000, Nguyen was sentenced to state prison for 25 years to life pursuant to California's Three Strikes Law.

[1] Nguyen appealed the judgment, asserting, inter alia, that his due process rights were violated when his request to talk to an attorney was used against him during the competency hearing. Nguyen relied on Wainwright v. Greenfield, 474 U.S. 284, 106 S.Ct. 634, 88 L.Ed.2d 623 (1986) as support for this contention. On direct appeal, the California Court of Appeal rejected Nguyen's application of Wainwright on the ground that evidence of a defendant's invocation of Miranda rights as an indicum of competency during a competency hearing is distinguishable from the use of post-Miranda silence to overcome a plea of insanity during the criminal phase of trial. Specifically, the court stated that whereas the criminal phase of trial involves a penalty—a potential721 guilty verdict—a "mental competency hearing does not involve any penalty...." Therefore, "what applies to a criminal case does not necessarily apply to a competency proceeding." On these grounds, the state appellate court held that it was not a violation of due process to use Nguyen's invocation of his right to counsel as evidence during the competency hearing. Without comment, the California Supreme Court denied Nguyen's petition for review.[FN5]

> FN5. California law does not allow the separate appeal of a competency determination: "A determination of mental competency is a nonappealable interlocutory ruling and may be reviewed only on an appeal from a final judgment in the underlying criminal proceeding." 5 Witkin, California Criminal Law, Criminal Trial § 716 (3d ed.); see also People v. Mickle, 54 Cal.3d 140, 180, 284 Cal.Rptr. 511, 814 P.2d 290 (1991) ("We conclude that the verdict finding defendant competent is a nonappealable, interlocutory ruling. It may be reviewed on appeal only from a final judgment in the underlying criminal proceeding.").

© 2012 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

Nguyen then filed a petition for writ of habeas corpus with the United States District Court for the Central District of California. Nguyen raised only one claim in his petition: "[Nguyen's] constitutional right to due process was violated when his post-Miranda warning invocation of his right to counsel was admitted, over defense objections,[FN6] as evidence of his mental competency at a hearing under California Penal Code section 1368."

> FN6. The record does not contain any defense objection, much less "objections," to the question in answer to which Deputy Macias stated Nguyen requested an attorney. See supra page 719–20. However, in view of the basis of our decision, the case does not turn on whether a claimed evidentiary error was properly preserved below or whether any error meets the standard for plain error.

The district court adopted its magistrate's Report, denied Nguyen's habeas petition, and dismissed Nguyen's habeas petition with prejudice. The district court held the California Court of Appeal's decision was not an objectively unreasonable application of either Wainwright, 474 U.S. 284, 106 S.Ct. 634, 88 L.Ed.2d 623, or Doyle v. Ohio, 426 U.S. 610, 96 S.Ct. 2240, 49 L.Ed.2d 91 (1976) (holding that it is a violation of due process to use a defendant's invocation of his right to remain silent to impeach defendant's testimony at trial, where such claim of right to remain silent follows a Miranda warning).

Here, a certificate of appealability was granted on one issue: "[w]hether the state court's decision—that Petitioner had suffered no violation of his Miranda rights when his invocation of his right to counsel was brought out at his competency hearing—was contrary to, or an unreasonable application of, clearly established federal law as determined by the Supreme Court...." [FN7] Accordingly, Nguyen appeals the district court's denial of his federal habeas petition and claims the state court's decision holding Wainwright is inapplicable to competency hearings is contrary to federal law. The holding in Wainwright, Nguyen posits, extended Doyle from silence to the request for an attorney and is not limited to issues of guilt or non-guilt.

> FN7. We note that Nguyen's Notice of Appeal was timely under Fed. R.App. P. 4(a)(6) because Nguyen received no notice of the entry of Judgment.

[2] The district court's decision to deny Nguyen's petition for writ of habeas corpus is reviewed de novo, and its factual findings are reviewed for clear error. Rios v. Garcia, 390 F.3d 1082, 1084 (9th Cir.2004).

722 [3][4] The Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996, Pub.L. No. 104–132, 110 Stat. 1214, ("AEDPA") applies to this case because Nguyen's petition for writ of habeas corpus was filed after April 24, 1996. Under AEDPA, habeas relief is proper only if the state court's adjudication of the merits of a habeas claim "resulted in a decision that was contrary to, or involved an unreasonable application of, clearly established Federal law, as determined by the Supreme Court of the United States." 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1).[FN8] We will "defer to the state court's determination of the federal issues unless that determination is 'contrary to, or involved an unreasonable application of, clearly established Federal law.' >
> (1) resulted in a decision that was contrary to, or involved an unreasonable application of, clearly established Federal law, as determined by the Supreme Court of the United States; or > 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d).

B.

[5][6] Because resolution of this case turns on whether the state court's decision is contrary to the holdings in Wainwright, 474 U.S. 284, 106 S.Ct. 634, 88 L.Ed.2d 623, and Doyle, 426 U.S. 610, 96 S.Ct. 2240, 49 L.Ed.2d 91, we begin by examining these holdings.[FN9] First, in Doyle, defendants charged with selling marijuana testified at trial that they had not sold marijuana but been set up by law enforcement in an effort to buy marijuana. Id. at 612–13, 96 S.Ct. 2240. To impeach the 723 veracity of the defendants' exculpatory story, the prosecutor on cross-examination questioned each defendant why they had not told this story at the time of their arrest. Id. at 613–14, 96 S.Ct. 2240. On these facts, the Supreme Court considered whether the prosecutor's use of post-Miranda silence to impeach a defendant's exculpatory testimony given at trial violates due process. The Court held that it did and thereby proscribed the use of an arrestee's post-Miranda silence to impeach trial testimony: "while it is true that the Miranda warnings contain no express assurance that silence will carry no penalty, such assurance is implicit to any person who receives the warnings." Doyle, 426 U.S. at 618, 96 S.Ct. 2240; see also United States v. Hale, 422 U.S. 171, 182–83, 95 S.Ct. 2133, 45 L.Ed.2d 99 (1975) (White, J., concurring). Hence, "it would be fundamentally unfair and a deprivation of due process to allow the arrested persons's silence to be used to impeach an explanation subsequently offered at trial." Doyle, 426 U.S. at 619, 96 S.Ct. 2240.

FN9. The "contrary to" clause is the correct clause for analysis in this case. We have explained that a state court decision is contrary to federal law if the court either " 'applies a rule that contradicts the governing law set forth' by the Supreme Court or arrives at a different result in a case, that is 'materially indistinguishable from a [Supreme Court] decision.' " Luna v. Cambra, 306 F.3d 954, 960 (alteration in the original) (quoting Penry v. Johnson, 532 U.S. 782, 792, 121 S.Ct. 1910, 150 L.Ed.2d 9 (2001), as amended 311 F.3d 928 (9th Cir.2002)). The state court did not apply the holdings of Wainwright and Doyle to the facts of Nguyen's case; rather, it distinguished Wainwright and Doyle on the basis that errors in those cases occurred during the guilt phase of a trial, not during a hearing to determine competency to stand trial. The state court thus found Wainwright and Doyle inapplicable to a competency hearing. Whether Nguyen is entitled to habeas relief depends on whether this decision is contrary to federal law. That the district court applied the "unreasonable application" clause in its analysis is immaterial to our analysis. Our review of the district court's decision is de novo, and we may "affirm on any ground supported by the record, even if it differs from the rationale of the district court." Pollard v. White, 119 F.3d 1430, 1433 (9th Cir.1997).

Wainwright presented the Court with a variation on the theme of Doyle. The question in Wainwright was whether post-Miranda silence could be used as evidence to prove a defendant's sanity, following a defendant's plea of insanity, during the criminal phase of trial. 474 U.S. at 285, 106 S.Ct. 634. Pursuant to the state law applicable in Wainwright, "when a defendant pleads not guilty by reason of insanity and when his evidence is sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt about his sanity, the State has the burden of proving sanity beyond a reasonable doubt." Id. at 286, 106 S.Ct. 634. If the State were unable to meet this burden, the defendant would be entitled to an acquittal. Id. at 286 n. 1, 106 S.Ct. 634 (citing cases). The Court found Doyle analogous:

> The point of the Doyle holding is that it is fundamentally unfair to promise an arrested person that his silence will not be used against him and thereafter to breach that promise by using the silence to impeach his trial testimony. It is equally unfair to breach that promise by using silence to overcome a defendant's plea of insanity. In both situations, the State gives warnings to protect constitutional rights and implicitly promises that any exercise of those rights will not be penalized. In both situations, the State then seeks to make use of the defendant's exercise of those rights in obtaining his conviction. The implicit promise, the breach, and the consequent penalty are identical in both situations.

Id. at 284–85, 106 S.Ct. 634 (emphasis added). The Court ruled the use of post-Miranda silence to disprove insanity unfairly penalized the defendant in contravention of the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Id. at 293–95, 106 S.Ct. 634.

In sum, the due process violations found in these decisions are a result of the fundamental unfairness of the prosecution's use of post-Miranda silence to infer the defendant's guilt and thereby aid in persuading a jury to convict. Such use amounts to "penalizing" the defendant for invocation of their rights. Compare Doyle, 426 U.S. at 617–18, 96 S.Ct. 2240, with Wainwright, 474 U.S. at 295, 106 S.Ct. 634. After all, that the defendant will not be penalized is implicit in the opening line of the Miranda warnings: "You have the right to remain silent...." See Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 444, 86 S.Ct. 1602, 16 L.Ed.2d 694 (1966). It would not be much of a "right" if its use penalizes the user.

C.

[7] We now consider whether reference to a defendant's post-Miranda invocation of his right to counsel during a 724 pretrial competency hearing causes the same penalty at issue in Wainwright and Doyle. A review of the nature of competency hearings demonstrates that the penalty contemplated in Wainwright and Doyle simply does not occur in the context of competency hearings.

1.

It has long been a principle of our law that one who becomes "mad" after committing an offense should not be tried for the offense "for how can he make his defense?" William Blackstone, 4 Commentaries 24; see also Drope v. Missouri, 420 U.S. 162, 171, 95 S.Ct. 896, 43 L.Ed.2d 103 (1975) ("It has long been accepted that a person whose mental condition is such that he lacks the capacity to understand the nature and object of the proceedings against him, to consult with counsel, and to assist in preparing his defense may not be subjected to a trial."). The Supreme Court has held that failure "to protect a defendant's right not to be tried or convicted while incompetent to stand trial deprives him of his due process right to a fair trial." Id. at 172, 95 S.Ct. 896 (citing Pate v. Robinson, 383 U.S. 375, 385, 86 S.Ct. 836, 15 L.Ed.2d 815 (1966)).

[8] To protect against the improper trial of mentally incompetent defendants, California has established a competency hearing procedure to determine a defendant's competency prior to a criminal trial. See Cal.Penal Code §§ 1367 – 69. The goal of the competency hearing is not to examine the defendant's sanity at the time of the commission of the offense (the issue in Wainwright); rather, the goal is to determine whether "the defendant is unable to understand the nature of the criminal proceedings or to assist counsel in the conduct of a defense in a rational manner." Id. § 1367(a); see also Godinez v. Moran, 509 U.S. 389, 401 n. 12, 113 S.Ct. 2680, 125 L.Ed.2d 321 (1993) ("The focus of a competency hearing is the defendant's mental capacity; the question is whether he has the ability to understand the proceedings."); People v. Masterson, 8 Cal.4th 965, 971, 35 Cal.Rptr.2d 679, 884 P.2d 136 (1994) ("The sole purpose of a competency proceeding is to determine the defendant's present mental competence, i.e., whether the defendant is able to understand the nature of the criminal proceedings and to assist counsel in a rational manner." (emphasis added)). California law "presume[s] that the defendant is mentally competent unless it is proved by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant is mentally incompetent." Cal.Penal Code § 1369(f) . The California Supreme Court explained that "[a]lthough it arises in the context of a criminal trial, a competency hearing is a special proceeding, governed generally by the rules applicable to civil proceedings." People v. Lawley, 27 Cal.4th 102, 131, 115 Cal.Rptr.2d 614, 38 P.3d 461 (2002).

[9][10][11] The effect of being found competent in no way affects the determination of the defendant's guilt; it merely removes a procedural barrier to the commencement of trial. See Jackson v. Indiana, 406 U.S. 715, 739, 92 S.Ct. 1845, 32 L.Ed.2d 435 (1972) ("[C]riminal responsibility at the time of the alleged offenses, however, is a distinct issue from [one's] competency to stand trial."). Indeed, the Supreme Court has carefully distinguished a pretrial competency determination from a guilt/innocence determination: "In a competency hearing, the 'emphasis is on [the defendant's] capacity to consult with counsel and to comprehend the proceedings, and ... this is by no means the same test as those which determine criminal responsibility at the time of the crime.' " Medina v. California, 505 U.S. 437, 448, 112 S.Ct. 2572, 120 L.Ed.2d 353 (1992), (alteration and omission725 in the original) (quoting Pate v. Robinson, 383 U.S. 375, 388–89, 86 S.Ct. 836, 15 L.Ed.2d 815 (1966) (Harlan, J., dissenting)). Regarding California's competency procedure, California state courts have explained:

> The purpose of [a competency hearing] is not to determine guilt or innocence. It has no relation to the plea of not guilty by reason of insanity. Rather, the sole purpose of [the competency hearing] is the humanitarian desire to assure that one who is mentally unable to defend himself not be tried upon a criminal charge.
> Tarantino v. Superior Court, 48 Cal.App.3d 465, 469, 122 Cal.Rptr. 61 (1975).

The effect of being found incompetent is the "suspension of the criminal trial until such time, if any, that the defendant regains the capacity to participate in his defense and understand the proceedings against him." Medina, 505 U.S. at 448, 112 S.Ct. 2572; see also Dusky v. United States, 362 U.S. 402, 402–03, 80 S.Ct. 788, 4 L.Ed.2d 824 (1960) (per curiam). The effect of being found competent is the continuation of criminal proceedings to the guilt phase of trial. [FN10]

> FN10. We acknowledge that using a defendant's post-Miranda invocation of the right to counsel to establish competency to stand trial may help to remove a procedural barrier to trial and eliminates the tactical advantage of indefinite pretrial delay, during which time witnesses die and evidence deteriorates. The removal of a procedural barrier to trial and the loss of a tactical advantage, however, do not raise the same constitutional concern at issue in Wainwright. One has a constitutional right not to have one's silence be used to prove guilt. No one has a constitutional right to stall trial until evidence is lost and witnesses expire.

Likewise, the use of a defendant's invoc> ation of Miranda rights at a suppression or evidentiary hearing does not raise the same constitutional concern at issue in Wainwright. Thus, use of evidence procured in violation of Miranda warnings has never been barred in such non-jury, non-guilt phase proceedings. For example, in United States v. Lemon, 550 F.2d 467, 473 (9th Cir.1977), we held that although "[s]tatements taken in violation of Miranda may not be used to prove the prosecution's case at trial," such statements "elicited prior to the giving of Miranda warnings may be used during a motion to suppress to show defendant's consent to a search." We relied on Lemon in United States v. Patterson, 812 F.2d 1188, 1193 (9th Cir.1987), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 922, 108 S.Ct. 1093, 99 L.Ed.2d 255 (1988), where we held that statements taken in violation of Miranda may be used in an affidavit to establish probable cause for a search warrant.

[12] Not only are competency hearings entirely distinct in purpose from the guilt phase of trial, but competency hearings do not invoke the same concerns of self-incrimination—the right Miranda is designed to protect—that are relevant during the guilt and penalty phases of trial. The Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination exists to prohibit the government from forcing the defendant to talk and then using the defendant's own statements to satisfy its burden of establishing guilt. See Oregon v. Elstad, 470 U.S. 298, 304–05, 105 S.Ct. 1285, 84 L.Ed.2d 222 (1985) (explaining that use of voluntary statements does not violate the Fifth Amendment); Estelle v. Smith, 451 U.S. 454, 462, 101 S.Ct. 1866, 68 L.Ed.2d 359 (1981). These concerns have no place at a competency hearing.

[13] In California, the court may order a competency hearing and compel a defendant to submit to psychiatric evaluation as part of the competency determination. Cal.Penal Code § 1369. Accordingly, California state courts have expressly held there is no Fifth Amendment right against self incrimination during competency hearing proceedings so long as statements 726 made during a competency hearing are immune from later use by the prosecution to establish guilt. Tarantino, 48 Cal.App.3d at 469–70, 122 Cal.Rptr. 61. Immunity for competency hearing statements "is necessary to ensure that an accused is not convicted by use of his own statements made at a court-compelled examination.... Hence, the rule protects both an accused's privilege against self-incrimination and the public policy of not trying persons who are mentally incompetent." People v. Arcega, 32 Cal.3d 504, 522, 186 Cal.Rptr. 94, 651 P.2d 338 (1982).

This judicially-created immunity is buttressed by the Supreme Court's holding in Estelle, 451 U.S. 454, 101 S.Ct. 1866, 68 L.Ed.2d 359. There, in holding that the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination extends to psychiatric examinations that are later used in the penalty phase of trial, [FN11] the Court declared that "[t]he essence" of the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination "is 'the requirement that the State which proposes to convict and punish an individual produce the evidence against him by the independent labor of its officers, not by the simple, cruel expedient of forcing it from his own lips.' " Id. at 462, 101 S.Ct. 1866 (emphasis omitted) (quoting Culombe v. Connecticut, 367 U.S. 568, 581–82, 81 S.Ct. 1860, 6 L.Ed.2d 1037 (1961)). Since neither conviction nor punishment are the result of a competency hearing, the rationale underlying Estelle's holding simply does not extend to statements used solely at such a hearing.[FN12]

> FN11. In Estelle, a psychiatrist spoke with the defendant during competency proceedings to determine whether he was competent to stand trial. Estelle, 451 U.S. at 456–57, 101 S.Ct. 1866. Later, during the penalty phase of trial, the psychiatrist testified against the defendant—on the basis of their discussions during the competency hearing—to establish that the defendant posed great risk to society. Id. at 459–60, 101 S.Ct. 1866.

FN12. In dicta, the Court expressed as much in Estelle: "Indeed, if the application of [the psychiatrist's] findings had been confined to [a competency hearing], no Fifth Amendment issue would have arisen." Estelle, 451 U.S. at 465, 101 S.Ct. 1866.

[14] Unlike guilt or punishment, incompetency can rarely be determined without the participation of the person claimed to be incompetent. Furthermore, because under California law the defendant bears the burden to establish incompetence by a preponderance of the evidence, the use of a defendant's own statements during a competency hearing in no way affects the government's evidentiary burden. Cal.Penal Code § 1369(f). In short, a defendant seeking to establish incompetence can be compelled to talk: a defendant may be required to be a witness to his own competency, if not his own crime.[FN13]

FN13. This conclusion is in line with previous holdings regarding the right against self-incrimination at analogous pretrial hearings. For example, in United States v. Mitchell H., 182 F.3d 1034, 1035–36 (9th Cir.1999), we held that the privilege against self-incrimination does not apply to a juvenile transfer hearing because the hearing is not a criminal hearing, and statements during the hearing, like statements made during a competency hearing, cannot be used at a later criminal trial. We noted that "a juvenile transfer hearing is a close cousin of a competency hearing" because both hearings " 'deal with whether a defendant should be exempted from criminal prosecution because he falls within a category of persons who, in the eyes of the law, are not viewed as fully responsible for their acts.' " Id. at 1035 n. 3 (quoting United States v. A.R., 38 F.3d 699, 703 (3d. Cir.1994)).

Miranda exists to provide "procedural safeguards effective to secure the privilege against self-incrimination." Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 444, 86 S.Ct. 1602, 16 L.Ed.2d 694 (1966). The privilege 727 against self-incrimination, in turn, exists to protect the defendant from being forced to be a witness against himself. Estelle, 451 U.S. at 462, 101 S.Ct. 1866; see also United States v. Patane, 542 U.S. 630, 637, 124 S.Ct. 2620, 159 L.Ed.2d 667 (2004) (noting "that the core protection afforded by the Self–Incrimination Clause is a prohibition on compelling a criminal defendant to testify against himself at trial" in lieu of producing other evidence). We fail to see how Wainwright and Doyle, which hold that a defendant shall not be penalized for invoking Miranda rights, should apply to a hearing at which the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination is inapplicable. Here, reference to Nguyen's post-arrest invocation at the competency hearing was not used to satisfy the prosecutorial burden of proof of guilt; it was used, rather, to show cognition.

III.

On these bases, we hold that the California Court of Appeal's decision not to apply Wainwright and Doyle to Nguyen's competency hearing was not "contrary to" federal law. The court correctly explained that "the nature of the proceeding in this case distinguishes it from Wainwright, " and that "[a] mental competency hearing does not involve any penalty...." [FN14] Absent a holding by the Supreme Court to apply the principles of Wainwright and Doyle to competency hearings, we are bound by the strictures of AEDPA to defer to the state court's determination. See Carey v. Musladin, 549U.S. 70, —— – ——, 127 S.Ct. 649, 652–54, 166 L.Ed.2d 482 (2006). [FN15]

FN14. Having determined that the state court's decision was not contrary to established federal law, we need not address Nguyen's contention that reference to his post-Miranda invocation of his right to counsel during the competency hearing was not harmless error under Brecht v. Abrahamson, 507 U.S. 619, 113 S.Ct. 1710, 123 L.Ed.2d 353 (1993).

FN15. We reject Nguyen's contention that Medina v. California, 505 U.S. 437, 112 S.Ct. 2572, 120 L.Ed.2d 353 (1992), extended Wainwright to competency hearings. In Medina, the sole issue before the Court was whether the Due Process Clause permitted California to place the burden of establishing incompetence on the defendant. Id. at 439, 112 S.Ct. 2572. The Court held that California's competency determination framework did not violate due process. Id. at 448–53, 112 S.Ct. 2572. Nothing in the decision suggests the principles of Wainwright and Doyle should apply in the context of competency hearings.

Court of Appeals of Alaska.
David C. REUTTER, Appellant,
v.
STATE of Alaska, Appellee.

No. A-4889.
Dec. 9, 1994.

Defendant was convicted in the Superior Court, First Judicial District, Sitka, Larry C. Zervos, J., of sexual abuse of minor in first and second degree. Defendant appealed. The Court of Appeals, Bryner, C.J., held that: (1) statute permitting child sexual abuse victim to testify via one-way closed circuit television was constitutional; (2) finding that qualifications of witnesses were sufficient to allow them to testify as experts was not abuse of discretion; and (3) determination that child's inability to testify at trial would be caused by defendant's presence was supported by evidence.

Affirmed.

Determination that child sexual abuse victim's inability to testify at trial would be caused by defendant's presence, rather than by general courtroom setting, and that, therefore, child could testify via one-way closed circuit television, was supported by evidence regarding child's chronological age, her developmental level, and degree of emotional and psychological injury that she had already suffered and would likely suffer if forced to testify in court. OPINION

BRYNER, Chief Judge.

David C. Reutter was convicted by a jury of one count of sexual abuse of a minor in the first degree, AS 11.41.434(a)(1), and one count of sexual abuse of a minor in the second degree, AS 11.41.436(a)(2). The convictions stemmed from Reutter's sexual abuse of his nine-year-old daughter, A.R. At trial, over Reutter's objection, Superior Court Judge Larry C. Zervos permitted A.R. to testify via one-way closed-circuit television from a room adjacent to the courtroom. Reutter appeals, contending that this arrangement violated his constitutional right to confrontation. We affirm.

FACTS

1. Background Facts

On February 15, 1992, Reutter locked A.R. out of their house in Sitka. The Division of Family and Youth Services (DFYS) became involved and placed A.R. and her mother, Patti Reutter, in a local women's shelter operated by Sitkans Against Family Violence (SAFV). Patti eventually returned home to Reutter. DFYS removed A.R. from the shelter and placed her in a foster home.

While A.R. was staying at the shelter, and afterwards while staying at the foster home, she attended support-group sessions at the SAFV shelter for child victims of domestic violence. During one of the support-group sessions, A.R. told Elizabeth Willis,[FN1] the children's program coordinator and A.R.'s "child advocate," about Reutter's sexual abuse. Willis immediately notified DFYS. A.R.'s case was assigned to DFYS social worker Sandra Beare-Spencer, who reported the allegations of sexual abuse to the Sitka police and arranged for A.R. to be physically examined by Sitka family practitioner Dr. Debra Pohlman. Pohlman found that A.R. had a larger than normal vaginal opening and that she had scarring in the area, both signs of 1300 sexual abuse. The state then filed a Child In Need of Aid (CINA) petition to determine the most appropriate custodial placement for A.R.

> FN1. Throughout the proceedings Willis was also referred to by her former married name, Elizabeth Sayer or Elizabeth Willis Sayer.

2. The CINA Hearing

A.R. was placed with relatives in Chevak pending the CINA determination. She returned to Sitka in May to testify at the CINA hearing. When A.R. first entered the courtroom to testify, she appeared confident and very happy to see her parents. However, during her testimony, she became anxious and distracted by stares and smiles from her parents and by the whispering and conferring between her parents and their attorneys. Soon, A.R. simply "shut down." The court was forced to recess, and A.R. had to be taken from the courtroom. According to Beare-Spencer, A.R. became "[v]ery, very upset. Her face contorted[,] ... her eyebrows were together and ... her arms were tight in front of her, and she was leaning against a wall and just shaking. She ... was extremely upset." A.R. told Beare-Spencer that "she couldn't talk about what happened, that her mom was going to be hurt, that her dad would hurt her mom."

Later, the court attempted to take A.R.'s testimony by placing her in the district attorney's office with just Willis and her guardian ad litem, Mary Hughes; the assistant attorney general who was handling the CINA proceeding questioned her by telephone from the courtroom. However, the electronic equipment in the district attorney's office malfunctioned, causing A.R. to become even more upset. The hearing was postponed for several days. When it reconvened, A.R. was placed in a grand jury room, again with just Willis and Hughes present in the same room. From there, she was able to answer some questions over the speakerphone, but she still refused to testify regarding the sexual abuse.

3. Pretrial Hearing

On May 8, 1992, the same day the CINA hearing began, Reutter was indicted for sexually abusing A.R. Prior to trial, the state moved, pursuant to AS 12.45.046(a)(2), to have A.R. be allowed to testify via one-way closed-circuit television or through one-way mirrors. Reutter opposed on confrontation clause grounds. Judge Zervos conducted a two-day evidentiary hearing to determine whether A.R. should be permitted to testify without actually confronting Reutter. At the hearing, the state presented testimony from Beare-Spencer, Willis, Jan Rutherdale (the assistant attorney general who had handled the CINA proceeding), and Martha Ann Lyman (the mental health clinician who treated A.R. while she was staying in Chevak). In addition, Judge Zervos considered a psychological evaluation of A.R. that had been written by Dr. Christiane Brems of the Yukon-Kuskokwim Mental Health Center.

In the course of the hearing, Reutter questioned the qualifications of each of the state's witnesses to testify as experts on the issue of whether A.R. should be allowed to testify without confronting Reutter. Judge Zervos overruled the objections and allowed the witnesses to testify.

Beare-Spencer, the DFYS social worker assigned to A.R.'s case, indicated that she had worked as a social worker for DFYS in Sitka for five years. She had a bachelor's degree in sociology and was only eighteen hours away from receiving a master's degree from Boise State University. She testified that her primary responsibility at DFYS was "protecting children from physical or emotional harm" and that, when making decisions regarding when to intervene, she relied primarily on the on-the-job training and experience that she received, first in Idaho, and then in Sitka.

Beare-Spencer testified that she had spent "[q]uite a bit" of time with A.R. and had talked to her often on the telephone in the previous six months and that she had even spent "four solid days with her" while they traveled to Chevak together. She testified that she knew "a lot of who [A.R.] is," but that there was a part of A.R. that she did not know because A.R. "closes down" when she 1301 becomes upset. When asked whether she believed A.R. could testify in the presence of Reutter, she answered: "She can't do it." Beare-Spencer based her answer on her observations of A.R.'s emotional condition during and after the CINA proceeding and on A.R.'s statement to Beare-Spencer regarding her desire to protect her mother by remaining silent. Reutter objected, on hearsay grounds, to Beare-Spencer's testimony concerning A.R.'s statement. Judge Zervos overruled the objection.

The prosecution also asked Beare-Spencer whether, in her opinion, "Reutter's presence would significantly impair the substance of [A.R.'s] testimony if she were forced to testify." Reutter objected, arguing that the witness did not have the psychological expertise to testify regarding "this child's psyche." Judge Zervos overruled the objection, and Beare-Spencer testified that she did not believe that A.R. could testify in an open courtroom.

Next, Elizabeth Willis, A.R.'s child advocate, testified. Willis testified that, prior to becoming a child advocate in Sitka, she completed "early childhood trainings" and had taken many classes and workshops in psychology. In addition, she testified that she operated a day-care business for five years in Anchorage before she moved to Sitka. She testified that she and A.R. developed a trusting relationship soon after A.R. arrived at the SAFV shelter and that they thereafter exchanged letters. Willis had accompanied A.R. at the previous CINA hearing.

Willis was asked whether, in her opinion, A.R. would be able to testify in the presence of her father. Reutter again objected for lack of expert qualification. The court again overruled the objection. Willis stated that she believed that A.R.'s ability to effectively communicate would be affected by Reutter's presence in the courtroom. She based her opinion on A.R.'s statements after the CINA hearing that she was unable to talk because Reutter had been staring and smiling at her and whispering about her. Again, Reutter objected on hearsay grounds, but was overruled.

Jan Rutherdale, the state's CINA counsel, testified next. Rutherdale stated that, for the previous three and one-half years, she had been employed by the attorney general's office in Juneau, exclusively handling child-in-need-of-aid and juvenile-delinquency matters. Prior to becoming an assistant attorney general, she had worked as an assistant public defender in Juneau. In the years of her practice, she testified, she had interviewed roughly twenty children. Over Reutter's objection, the trial court found Rutherdale to have substantial expertise in the behavior of witnesses; the court also indicated that Rutherdale was qualified to testify about A.R.'s conduct at the CINA hearing-"what happened on the days in question."

Rutherdale testified that she first met A.R. the evening before the CINA hearing. On the morning of the CINA hearing, A.R. seemed to be "friendly" and "bouncy," but a little immature. Rutherdale recalled that A.R. did not appear to be too shy to testify, that she was happy to see her parents, and that she was able to answer some preliminary questions. She testified that A.R. soon became distracted by her parents and was unable to continue. The first question that A.R. was unable to answer was "[Do you] remember the night that you were removed from your house?" Again over Reutter's objection, Rutherdale testified that, based on her previous experience with and observations of A.R. in the courtroom and on questions that A.R. asked her about the conduct of her parents during the proceeding, Rutherdale did not think that A.R. would testify in Reutter's presence: "[S]he was just so affected by his presence. I mean, ... it was like her attention to me evaporated and-and all she could think about or ... react to was her father." She testified that A.R. asked her in a whispered voice why her parents were talking to each other during her testimony.

Rutherdale further testified that A.R. had been a very isolated child, that the Reutters had restricted her movement considerably, and that the particular dynamics of her family "may make it impossible for her to testify." 1302 She stated that she did not know whether A.R. would ever be able to testify to the sexual abuse under any circumstances. When asked by the trial court whether A.R. would be able to testify in the presence of Reutter if the testimony occurred outside a formal courtroom setting, Rutherdale responded: "[T]he problem with getting Mr. Reutter and her in a small room, I think that might almost be worse."

Next, the trial court requested that Martha Ann Lyman be called to testify telephonically. She testified that, as a mental health clinician in the Yukon-Kuskokwim delta region, she treated A.R. for three sessions during A.R.'s stay in Chevak. She testified that A.R. was very bright, but guarded and distrustful. She stated that she thought A.R. should not be forced to testify in the presence of Reutter because she would not feel safe doing so, she would suffer emotional harm, and she would not "be able to give a real open testimony in front of her father."

In addition to the foregoing testimony, Judge Zervos considered the psychological evaluation of A.R. that had been submitted by Dr. Brems. Brems' report stated that A.R. "currently functions in the low average range of intelligence," but that this level of function "may be largely explained by her academic deprivation." Brems concluded that A.R. exhibited "strong traits of a borderline personality disorder "; and Brems summarized the results of her evaluation as follows:

> [T]his is a child who has been severely traumatized and whose sexual trauma has resulted in clear implications for all areas of functioning. Specifically it is likely that her social, academic, and psychological deprivation have interfered with her cognitive and perceptual-motor development. With regard to intrapsychic functioning, her coping is impaired and she has difficulty controlling affect and behavior. She tends to isolate herself from others to avoid being overwhelmed by her own needs which would result in acting out. Hence, she initiates a vicious cycle of isolation and lack of nurturance in her own life. Her view of the world is largely hostile and unpredictable, leaving her in a conflict, as she also has very strong dependency and security needs.

Finally, prior to issuing his written decision on the state's motion to allow A.R. to testify by closed-circuit television, Judge Zervos reviewed a tape recording of the previous CINA proceeding.

Judge Zervos ultimately granted the state's motion to take A.R.'s testimony via closed-circuit television. In a written order issued on August 11, 1992, the judge set out specific findings and conclusions in support of the decision. Specifically, in conclusion number six of the decision, Judge Zervos stated:

> It is clear that [A.R.] will not testify because of fear, guilt or severe psychological distress. It is also clear that [A.R.'s] failure to testify is due, in large part, to the presence of her father. Therefore, under the statutes and the case law the confrontation clause must give way in the most minimal way possible. Allowing the child's testimony to be taken outside of the defendant's presence may facilitate the child's ability to testify. Denying the request to take the testimony outside the defendant's presence, based in [sic] past attempts, guarantees the child's silence.

4. Trial

At the time of trial, Judge Zervos finalized the arrangements for A.R.'s testimony. A.R. testified from a separate room adjacent to the courtroom. In the room with A.R. were the videocamera operator, the prosecutor, Reutter's counsel, and A.R.'s guardian ad litem, Mary Hughes; Hughes, who was to provide moral support for A.R., remained out of the camera's focus. Reutter was given the option of observing A.R. from a third room, outside the presence of both A.R. and the jury. He elected instead to remain in the courtroom, so that the jury could observe his reaction to A.R.'s testimony. Reutter had continuous access to his attorney by a telephone connected to the room from which 1303 A.R. testified.[FN2]

> FN2. The trial court indicated that it would declare a recess any time Reutter wished to confer with his attorney. Objections by either attorney would be handled in the same way; the court would declare a recess and discuss the objection outside the presence of the jury. The trial court instructed the attorneys not to make objections and arguments while the videotape was running, but to request an immediate hearing.

Although Reutter preserved a general, continuing objection to the taking of A.R.'s testimony via one-way closed-circuit television, he indicated that he did not object to the specific procedure outlined above.

The state called A.R. to testify as its first witness. Before A.R. testified, the trial court instructed the jury as follows:

> Ladies and gentlemen, what we're going to do next is a little unusual. As you'll see for the rest of the trial, most all witnesses will always testify in this chair here. But the parties have decided, both the prosecution and the defense, that because of the age of [A.R.] and of twelve strangers and me sitting up here in this black robe, it may be less disconcerting to her to take the testimony in another room in a closed circuit kind of TV arrangement.
> She will be testifying live and we'll be able to witness everything. Of course, you can watch her as she testifies on these monitors. [The attorneys] will be in the room asking questions of her.

On direct examination, A.R. testified that her father had touched her "in [her] privates" on several occasions and that he "made [her] touch his private part." She testified that, in February, her father had "pulled up" on her "privates," making them bleed. She testified that her father had told her, "Don't tell no one" and that he would "hurt" her if she did tell someone. A.R. testified that, although she did not tell anyone, her father hurt her anyway.

During a break between direct and cross-examination, Reutter encountered A.R. in the hallway and said, "Hi, [A.R.], hi, honey, I love you." Since such direct contact had been forbidden by the court under the previously issued CINA order, Judge Zervos admonished Reutter not to let it happen again. Cross-examination was eventually postponed until the day after direct examination was completed, since only fifteen minutes remained in the trial day and Reutter decided that he would rather start fresh the next morning.

Before proceedings commenced the next morning, the prosecutor reported that Patti Reutter had intercepted A.R. after trial the previous day and had whispered, "Don't say nothing," and "Daddy loves you, Daddy loves you." The trial court admonished Patti Reutter not to interfere with A.R.'s testimony and not to have any contact with her inside the courthouse building. Then, after a short recess, the prosecutor reported:

> [A.R. is] in my office, basically in tears, refuses to come forward. She's basically locked in the office at this point so she just doesn't run away.
> The reason being as they-she arrived this morning with Ms. Willis, I mean, essentially she was a little nervous as we expected her to be. As Mr. and Mrs. Reutter took a seat in the hallway they saw each other, they were waving back and forth. And as Ms. [Willis] and Ms. Hughes would actually testify to, you could just see her just, the term is shut down. And now she is basically sitting on the floor, refuses to budge, period.

A.R. nevertheless eventually did testify on cross-examination.

DISCUSSION

In moving for an order allowing A.R. to testify by closed-circuit television outside Reutter's physical presence, the state relied on AS 12.45.046. This statute permits the trial court to order the testimony of a child to be communicated to the jury and the defendant by closed-circuit television, but only in exceptional cases, and only upon a case-specific 1304 showing of actual necessity.[FN3] For such testimony to be received, the accused must be charged with an assault under chapter 41 of the Alaska Revised Criminal Code. AS 12.45.046(a). The crime charged must involve a victim or witness who is under the age of thirteen; the proposed witness must be either the alleged child-victim or the child-witness. Id. In such cases, the court may order testimony to be taken by closed-circuit television, "if the court determines that the testimony by the child victim or witness under normal court procedures would result in the child's inability to effectively communicate." AS 12.45.046(a)(2).

FN3. The full text of AS 12.45.046 is as follows:

> Testimony of children in criminal proceedings. (a) In a criminal proceeding under AS 11.41 involving the prosecution of an offense committed against a child under the age of 13, or witnessed by a child under the age of 13, the court
> (1) may appoint a guardian ad litem for the child;
> (2) on its own motion or on the motion of the party presenting the witness or the guardian ad litem of the child, may order that the testimony of the child be taken by closed circuit television or through one-way mirrors if the court determines that the testimony by the child victim or witness under normal court procedures would result in the child's inability to effectively communicate.
> (b) In making a determination under (a)(2) of this section, the court shall consider factors it considers relevant, including
> (1) the child's chronological age;
> (2) the child's level of development;
> (3) the child's general physical health;
> (4) any physical, emotional or psychological injury experienced by the child; and
> (5) the mental or emotional strain that will be caused by requiring the child to testify under normal courtroom procedures.
> (c) If the court determines under (a)(2) of this section that the testimony by the child victim or witness under normal court procedures would result in the child's inability to effectively communicate, the court may order that the testimony of the child be taken in a room other than the courtroom and be televised by closed circuit equipment in the courtroom to be viewed by the defendant, the court, and the finder of fact in the proceeding. If the court authorizes use of closed circuit televised testimony under this subsection,
> (1) each of the following may be in the room with the child when the child testifies:
> (A) the prosecuting attorney;
> (B) the attorney for the defendant; and
> (C) operators of the closed circuit television equipment;
> (2) the court may, in addition to persons specified in (1) of this subsection, admit a person whose presence, in the opinion of the court, contributes to the well-being of the child.

(d) When a child is to testify under (c) of this section, only the court and counsel may question the child. The persons operating the equipment shall do so in as unobtrusive a manner as possible. If the defendant requests, the court shall excuse the defendant from the courtroom, shall permit the defendant to attend in another location, and shall afford the defendant a means of viewing the child's testimony and of communicating with the defendant's attorney throughout the proceedings. Upon request of the defendant or the defendant's attorney, the court shall permit a recess to allow them to confer. The court shall provide a means of communicating with the attorneys during the questioning of the child. Objections made by the attorneys to questions of a child witness may be resolved in the courtroom if the court finds it necessary.

(e) If the court determines under (a)(2) of this section that the testimony by the child victim or witness under normal court procedures would result in the child's inability to effectively communicate, the court may authorize the use of one-way mirrors in conjunction with the taking of the child's testimony. The attorneys may pose questions to the child and have visual contact with the child during questioning, but the mirrors shall be placed to provide a physical shield so that the child does not have visual contact with the defendant and jurors.

(f) If the court does not find under (a)(2) of this section that the testimony by the child victim or witness under normal court procedures will result in the child's inability to effectively communicate, the court may, after taking into consideration the factors specified in (b) of this section, supervise the spatial arrangements of the courtroom and the location, movement, and deportment of all persons in attendance so as to safeguard the child from emotional harm or stress. In addition to other procedures it finds appropriate, the court may

(1) allow the child to testify while sitting on the floor or on an appropriately sized chair;

(2) schedule the procedure in a room that provides adequate privacy, freedom from distractions, informality, and comfort appropriate to the child's developmental age; and

(3) order a recess when the energy, comfort, or attention span of the child warrants.

On appeal, Reutter contends that, on its face, AS 12.45.046 violates the confrontation clauses of the federal and Alaska constitutions. Alternatively, Reutter maintains that the application of this statute in his case resulted in a violation of his right to confrontation under both constitutions. Reutter lastly claims that the manner in which the 1305 questioning of A.R. occurred separately violated his constitutional right to due process.

1. Constitutionality of AS 12.45.046

A. Applicable Constitutional Standard

The confrontation clause of the sixth amendment to the United States Constitution guarantees that "In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right ... to be confronted with the witnesses against him." [FN4] In Coy v. Iowa, 487 U.S. 1012, 108 S.Ct. 2798, 101 L.Ed.2d 857 (1988), the United States Supreme Court held that the federal constitution's confrontation clause protects not only the right to effective cross-examination but also the right to a face-to-face confrontation between the accuser and the accused. Coy left open the question of whether the right of face-to-face confrontation was absolute. Id. at 1021, 108 S.Ct. at 2803.

> FN4. The Alaska Constitution uses similar language to secure the right to confrontation. The Alaska Constitution, article I, section 11, provides, in relevant part: "In all criminal prosecutions, the accused.... is entitled ... to be confronted with the witnesses against him."

The Court answered this question two years later in Maryland v. Craig, 497 U.S. 836, 110 S.Ct. 3157, 111 L.Ed.2d 666 (1990). Craig holds that the right to literal confrontation is not absolute. Rather, in exceptional cases, the right may be required to yield in order to protect the state's vital interest in protecting the physical and psychological well-being of child abuse victims:

> In sum, we conclude that where necessary to protect a child witness from trauma that would be caused by testifying in the physical presence of the defendant, at least where such trauma would impair the child's ability to communicate, the Confrontation Clause does not prohibit use of a procedure that, despite the absence of face-to-face confrontation, ensures the reliability of the evidence by subjecting it to rigorous adversarial testing and thereby preserves the essence of effective confrontation.

Id. at 857, 110 S.Ct. at 3170.

In reaching this conclusion, the Court in Craig set out the factors that trial courts must consider before finding it necessary to subordinate the accused's right of face-to-face confrontation to a child victim's need for protection:

> The requisite finding of necessity must of course be a case-specific one: the trial court must hear evidence and determine whether use of the one-way closed circuit television procedure is necessary to protect the welfare of the particular child witness who seeks to testify. The trial court must also find that the child witness would be traumatized, not by the courtroom generally, but by the presence of the defendant. Denial of face-to-face confrontation is not needed to further the state interest in protecting the child witness from trauma unless it is the presence of the defendant that causes the trauma. In other words, if the state interest were merely the interest in protecting child witnesses from courtroom trauma generally, denial of face-to-face confrontation would be unnecessary because the child could be permitted to testify in less intimidating surroundings, albeit with the defendant present. Finally, the trial court must find that the emotional distress suffered by the child witness in the presence of the defendant is more than de minimis, i.e., more than "mere nervousness or excitement or some reluctance to testify[.]"

Id. at 855-56, 110 S.Ct. at 3169 (citations omitted) (quoting Wildermuth v. State, 310 Md. 496, 530 A.2d 275, 289 (1987)).

The Craig Court did not specify the minimum level of emotional trauma that would justify a denial of confrontation. Instead, the Court found the Maryland statute that was at issue in the case to be clearly sufficient to meet constitutional standards. That statute required the trial court to determine that "testimony by the child victim in the courtroom will result in the child suffering serious emotional distress such that the child cannot reasonably communicate." See Md.Cts. & Jud.Proc.Code Ann. § 9-102(a)(1)(ii) 1306 (1989) (quoted in Craig, 497 U.S. at 841 n. 1, 110 S.Ct. at 3161 n. 1).

This court has read Craig to establish a rule premised on actual necessity:

> We are convinced that, at a minimum, the constitution forbids denying the accused face-to-face confrontation with an accuser in a criminal trial absent specific evidence and an express finding that the probable effect of the defendant's presence on the witness would significantly impair the substance of the witness's testimony. A mere finding of some general, or de minim[i]s effect will not suffice. Likewise, generalized, subjective impressions or assumptions will not substitute for case-specific evidence.

Blume v. State, 797 P.2d 664, 674 (Alaska App.1990) (footnotes omitted).

B. AS 12.45.046's Compliance with the Constitutional Standard

[1] In the present case, Reutter correctly notes that AS 12.45.046 does not, on its face, comport with the minimal requirements of Craig. Although the statute does incorporate procedures aimed at maintaining the rigorously adversarial atmosphere that Craig demands in order to ensure effective cross-examination, it does not explicitly require a finding of necessity based on the likelihood of serious emotional distress. Nor does it explicitly address another Craig requirement: a finding that the child witness' emotional distress will be caused specifically by the presence of the defendant, rather than the general courtroom atmosphere.

In our view, however, although these requirements are not explicitly stated in AS 12.45.046, they should be deemed an implicit part of the statutory provision. Nothing in AS 12.45.046 is incompatible with or otherwise bars a reading of the provision to be consistent with Craig. Such a reading is in keeping with the legislature's intent to promote the state's vital interest in protecting the emotional well-being of child victims and witnesses. [FN5] Such a reading is also in keeping with the traditional preference for interpreting statutes in a manner that avoids constitutional problems.

FN5. The legislative intent behind AS 12.45.046 was stated as follows:

> It is the purpose of this Act that, in providing alternative methods for taking the testimony of a child in certain criminal proceedings in which that child was the victim or is to be a witness, the legislature is acting (1) to balance the need for the victim's or witness's testimony against the right of the defendant to confront witnesses; (2) to mitigate the mental and emotional distress that may arise as the child is required to testify; and (3) to minimize possible victim harassment by limiting the opportunities for unnecessary examination of the child by the parties' counsel.
> CS for House Bill No. 323, section 1, ch. 92 SLA 1988 (Judiciary).

We have previously found AS 12.45.046 to be in "substantial accord" with Craig "as to the minimal requirements of the confrontation clause." Blume, 797 P.2d at 674. See also Brandon v. State, 839 P.2d 400, 409 & n. 6 (Alaska App.1992); Renkel v. State, 807 P.2d 1087, 1094 & n. 7 (Alaska App.1991). We have similarly found AS 12.45.046 in substantial accord with the Maryland statute that Craig upheld. Blume, 797 P.2d at 674. Like Alaska's statute, the Maryland provision upheld in Craig did not expressly require a finding that the child witness would suffer "serious emotional distress" as a result of the presence of the defendant. [FN6] Rather, the Maryland Court of Appeals had interpreted1307 its statute to include this requirement, and the Craig Court ratified the Maryland court's interpretation. See Craig, 497 U.S. at 858, 110 S.Ct. at 3170. Other states have shown little reluctance to construe similar statutory provisions as being consistent with Craig 's requirements.[FN7]

FN6. See Section 9-102 of the Courts and Judicial Proceedings Article of the Annotated Code of Maryland (1989):

> (a)(1) In a case of abuse of a child as defined in § 5-701 of the Family Law Article or Article 27, § 35A of the Code, a court may order that the testimony of a child victim be taken outside the courtroom and shown in the courtroom by means of a closed circuit television if:

(2) Only the prosecuting attorney, the attorney for the defendant, and the judge may question the child.

(3) The operators of the closed circuit television shall make every effort to be unobtrusive.

(b)(1) Only the following persons may be in the room with the child when the child testifies by closed circuit televi- sion:

(i) The prosecuting attorney;

(ii) The attorney for the defendant;

(iii) The operators of the closed circuit television equipment; and

(iv) Unless the defendant objects, any person whose presence, in the opinion of the court, contributes to the well-being of the child, including a person who has dealt with the child in a therapeutic setting concerning the abuse.

(2) During the child's testimony by closed circuit television, the judge and the defendant shall be in the courtroom.

(3) The judge and the defendant shall be allowed to communicate with the persons in the room where the child is testifying by any appropriate electronic method.

(c) The provisions of this section do not apply if the defendant is an attorney pro se.

(d) This section may not be interpreted to preclude, for purposes of identification of a defendant, the presence of both the victim and the defendant in the courtroom at the same time.

[2] In short, we conclude that AS 12.45.046 must be construed to incorporate the requirements of Craig. In order to comply with Craig, a determination of "the child's inability to effectively communicate" under AS 12.45.046(a)(2) must be based on case-specific evidence establishing that (1) "the child witness would be traumatized, not by the courtroom generally, but by the presence of the defendant," Craig, 497 U.S. at 856, 110 S.Ct. at 3169; (2) confrontation would pose a threat of serious emotional harm to the child-in other words, "that the emotional distress suffered by the child witness in the presence of the defendant is more than de minimis, "; and (3) the use of the special procedure authorized under AS 12.45.046 is therefore

© 2012 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

"necessary to protect the welfare of the particular child witness who seeks to testify." Id. at 855, 110 S.Ct. at 3169.

One additional problem of interpretation remains. Craig did not determine the standard of proof governing these requirements. In Blume v. State, this court similarly found it unnecessary to decide the standard of proof required under Craig. We did acknowledge, however, that a finding of necessity under Craig would, at a minimum, have to be based on proof by a preponderance of the evidence. Blume, 797 P.2d at 674. The issue of standard of proof is squarely presented in Reutter's case and may no longer be avoided. Our decision on this point must be guided by the due process analysis specified in Santosky v. Kramer, 455 U.S. 745, 755, 102 S.Ct. 1388, 1395-96, 71 L.Ed.2d 599 (1982), which ties the applicable standard of proof to a consideration and balancing of three factors: "the private interests affected, the public interests, and a societal judgment about how the risk of error should be distributed between the litigants." See W.M.F. v. State, 723 P.2d 1298, 1300 (Alaska App.1986).

Given the constitution's express protection of confrontation as an individual right of the accused, and given further the traditional significance of that right, the private interest affected by AS 12.45.046 is of utmost significance. On the other side of the balance, however, the public unquestionably has a vital interest in promoting the well-being of children who are victims of or witnesses to acts of assault and sexual abuse. Yet the public also has a vital and undeniable interest 1308 in protecting the innocent against conviction. Because of the integral role confrontation plays in the adjudication of innocence and guilt, and its direct bearing on the integrity of fact-finding at trial, see Coy, 487 U.S. at 1017-20, 108 S.Ct. at 2801-03, it would be difficult to maintain that the public's interest in securing the right of confrontation against unnecessary incursion should be deemed any less significant than its interest in protection of the child victim or witness of abuse.

[3] These considerations counsel that any risk of error in balancing the individual right against the countervailing public interest must fall on the side of protecting the innocent from an unjust conviction. In our view, the preponderance of the evidence standard cannot provide such protection, and no dilution of the right to confrontation should be permitted without an express finding that the requirements of AS 12.45.046, including the Craig requirements that are implicit therein, have been met by clear and convincing evidence. So construed, AS 12.45.046 is not constitutionally infirm. FN8

FN8. Reutter argues that we should construe the Alaska Constitution's confrontation clause to provide broader protections than those provided for by the federal constitution, as interpreted by the United States Supreme Court in Craig. However, Reutter points to nothing in the text, context, or history of the Alaska Constitution that would justify construing article I, section 11 more broadly than the sixth amendment under the circumstances presented here; nor has Reutter advanced any cogent argument to support the conclusion that we should reject, as unpersuasive, the United States Supreme Court's interpretation of the federal constitution's confrontation clause. See Mitchell v. State, 818 P.2d 1163, 1165 (Alaska App.1991) (broader interpretation of the Alaska Constitution justified only if United States Supreme Court's interpretation of the federal constitution is unpersuasive or if the text, context, or history of the Alaska Constitution justify departure). Under the circumstances presented here, we decline to construe article I, section 11, of the Alaska Constitution more broadly than the United States Supreme Court has interpreted the federal constitution.

2. Constitutionality of AS 12.45.046 as Applied to this Case

In applying AS 12.45.046 to the circumstances of Reutter's case, Judge Zervos interpreted the statute to incorporate the Craig requirements and found the clear and convincing evidence standard of proof to be applicable. Reutter nonetheless argues that the application of AS 12.45.046 to his case violated his right to confrontation. Reutter advances this argument in three prongs: (1) he contends that the trial court erred in allowing unqualified expert witnesses to testify and in admitting hearsay statements through their testimony; (2) he argues that the trial court's findings and conclusions are erroneous; and (3) he maintains that insufficient evidence was presented to support the conclusion that the applicable constitutional standards were met. We address each facet of Reutter's argument in turn.

A. Expert Qualifications and Hearsay

[4][5] Reutter argues that the trial court erroneously received expert testimony from three of the four witnesses who testified at the evidentiary hearing: DFYS Social Worker Sandra Beare-Spencer, child advocate Betsy Willis, and Assistant Attorney General Jan Rutherdale. He contends that the witnesses were asked questions that called for psychological education and expertise beyond their qualifications.

Reutter relies on Alaska Rule of Evidence 702(a):

> If scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue, a witness qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education, may testify thereto in the form of an opinion or otherwise.

This rule, however, gives the trial court broad latitude to allow a witness to testify as an expert when the court finds that the testimony will be helpful to the factfinder. There is no requirement that a witness possess a particular license or academic degree, provided that the factfinder can receive appreciable help from the witness' testimony. 1309 Handley v. State, 615 P.2d 627, 630-31 (Alaska 1980); Dymenstein v. State, 720 P.2d 42, 45 (Alaska App.1986). The trial court's decision to allow a witness to testify as an expert is reviewable only for an abuse of discretion. Handley, 615 P.2d at 630; New v. State, 714 P.2d 378, 380 (Alaska App.1986).

[6] In the present case, all of the challenged witnesses had professional experiences that made their opinions helpful to the trial court, and all had considerable contact with A.R. While these witnesses did not possess expertise in the field of psychology, neither did they pretend to address deep psychological issues. The trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding the qualifications of these witnesses sufficient to allow them to testify as experts. See, e.g., Kosbruk v. State, 820 P.2d 1082, 1086-87 (Alaska App.1991); see also Hilburn v. State, 765 P.2d 1382, 1386 (Alaska App.1988).

[7] Moreover, although the testimony of the challenged witnesses was necessarily informed by their educational and professional backgrounds, their opinions were almost wholly based on reasonable inferences drawn from their own recent observations of A.R. In this regard, Alaska Rule of Evidence 701 provides:

> If the witness is not testifying as an expert, his testimony in the form of opinions or inferences is limited to those opinions or inferences which are (a) rationally based on the perception of the witness and (b) helpful to a clear understanding of his testimony or the determination of a fact in issue.

Hence, even if the expertise of Beare-Spencer, Willis, and Rutherdale to some degree fell short of meeting the standard established for experts under Alaska Rule of Evidence 702, their opinions were properly admitted under Alaska Rule of Evidence 701's more permissive standard governing opinion testimony by lay witnesses. See, e.g., In re D.J.A.,

793 P.2d 1033, 1036 (Alaska 1990); see also Callahan v. State, 769 P.2d 444, 446 (Alaska App.1989). FN9

FN9. To the extent Reutter means to suggest that the testimony of a qualified psychologist or psychiatrist should be a prerequisite to a finding of necessity under AS 12.45.046, the suggestion is unwarranted under the peculiar circumstances of this case. Although there is much to be said for the proposition that psychological evidence will normally be necessary to meet the requirements of AS 12.45.046, cf. Craig v. State, 322 Md. 418, 588 A.2d 328, 335-36 (1991), Reutter disregards the fact that Judge Zervos had available and did consider the extensive written evaluation of A.R. submitted by Dr. Brems, a clinical psychologist. While Brems did not expressly address the Craig requirements, her evaluation of A.R. provided perspective for the court's assessment of the opinions of Beare-Spencer, Willis, and Rutherdale.

An even more significant flaw in Reutter's argument is his disregard of Judge Zervos' reliance on evidence of A.R.'s "shutdown" at the CINA proceeding-a virtual dry run of the situation that could have arisen had A.R. been called upon to testify in Reutter's presence at the criminal trial. Judge Zervos was able to review the tape recording of the CINA hearing, and the bulk of the testimony presented by the challenged witnesses was devoted to describing in greater detail the recorded events that Judge Zervos heard on the tape. The availability of this experiential base for predicting A.R.'s probable reaction to Reutter's presence at trial adds a unique dimension to Reutter's case and significantly reduces the need for speculation based on psychological prediction.

[8] Reutter also advances a conclusory argument that the state's witnesses were improperly allowed to introduce inadmissible hearsay. Reutter's claim pertains to testimony of the witnesses relating various statements made by A.R., primarily those in connection with her inability to testify at the CINA hearing.FN10 "Hearsay is a statement, other than one made by the declarant while testifying at the trial or hearing, offered in 1310 evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted." Alaska Rule of Evidence 801(c). As correctly recognized by Judge Zervos, the bulk of the contested testimony was not introduced to prove the truth of the matter asserted and was therefore not hearsay; the limited statements arguably admitted to prove the truth of the matter they asserted were properly received under the hearsay exceptions governing present sense impression, excited utterance, and existing mental or emotional condition. Alaska Rule of Evidence 803(1), (2), & (3). We find no abuse of discretion. Hawley v. State, 614 P.2d 1349, 1361 (Alaska 1980); Lipscomb v. State, 700 P.2d 1298, 1306 (Alaska App.1985).FN11

FN10. The hearsay statements that Reutter contends were improperly admitted are as follows: (1) Beare-Spencer's recapitulation, in response to the prosecutor's inquiry into the basis of her opinion that A.R. would not be able to communicate effectively in Reutter's presence, of A.R.'s concern that her father would hurt her mother if she talked about what happened to her; (2) Willis' testimony, in response to the prosecutor's inquiry into the nature of her relationship with A.R., that A.R. had first disclosed to her that she had been sexually abused by Reutter; (3) Willis' testimony that some of the bases for her opinion that A.R. would not be able to communicate effectively in Reutter's presence were A.R.'s statements, "I can't talk when he's smiling at me[, h]e's staring at me [, h]e's whispering about me"; and (4) Rutherdale's testimony that one of the bases for her opinion that A.R. would not be able to communicate effectively in Reutter's presence was A.R.'s whispered concern about her parents' talking to each other during her testimony.

FN11. Both parties have assumed, without discussing the issue, that the formal rules of evidence should apply to a finding of necessity under AS 12.45.046. The assumption is questionable. See A.R.E. 101(c)(1). Our conclusion that no hearsay violations occurred makes it unnecessary for us to decide the point.

B. Errors in Factual Findings and Legal Conclusions

[9] Reutter argues that the trial court made several erroneous factual findings in its written order that affected its decision to allow A.R. to testify via one-way closed-circuit television. This court will reverse factual findings only when they are clearly erroneous. Matter of R.K., 851 P.2d 62, 66 (Alaska 1993). "Findings are clearly erroneous when the reviewing court is left with a definite and firm conviction after reviewing the entire record that a mistake has been made." Id. Having carefully reviewed the record, we conclude that Reutter's claims of erroneous fact findings are either unfounded or involve facts that were clearly inconsequential to the resolution of the disputed legal issues. The trial court's findings and conclusions are not clearly erroneous.

C. Sufficiency of the Evidence

[10] Reutter further contends that, even if no other error occurred, Judge Zervos could not have properly concluded, based on the evidence presented, that A.R.'s inability to testify at trial would be caused by Reutter's presence, rather than by the general courtroom setting. He argues that, while the witnesses at the evidentiary hearing all testified that A.R. would not be able to testify in front of her father, they also indicated that A.R. would likely not testify even if Reutter were not present. In effect, Reutter challenges the trial court's conclusions number five and six, which read:

5. The court recognizes that it may be that [A.R.] also has difficulty testifying in front of a room full of people. However, it is very clear, based on the CINA hearing, that [A.R.] does have great difficulty in testifying in front of her parents. The court concludes, based on what has gone on before, that if the child were brought into the courtroom in an attempt to have her testify in front of her father, that she would "shut down" as she did in the CINA hearing and not testify under any other circumstances after that.

6. It is clear that [A.R.] will not testify because of fear, guilt or severe psychological distress. It is also clear that [A.R.'s] failure to testify is due, in large part, to the presence of her father. Therefore, under the statutes and the case law the confrontation clause must give way in the most minimal way possible. Allowing the child's testimony to be taken outside of the defendant's presence may facilitate the child's ability to testify. Denying the request to take the testimony outside the defendant's presence, based in [sic] past attempts, guarantees the child's silence.

Reutter makes the mistake of viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to his case, rather than in light of the factual findings made by the trial court. Judge Zervos' findings were based on a careful consideration of the factors specified in AS 12.45.046(b). As directed by the statute, the judge considered A.R.'s chronological age, her developmental level, and the degree of 1311 emotional and psychological injury that she had already suffered and would likely suffer if forced to testify in court. As we have already determined, Judge Zervos' factual findings are not clearly erroneous. In our view, these findings amply support the court's ultimate conclusions that "[A.R.] will not testify because of fear, guilt or severe psychological distress," and that requiring her to testify in Reutter's presence would virtually guarantee her silence.

Reutter's argument also overlooks the unique significance of A.R.'s "shut down" at the prior CINA hearing and the central role of that event in Judge Zervos' determination. As Judge Zervos concluded, "Denying the request to take the testimony outside the defendant's presence, based in [sic] past attempts, guarantees the child's silence." (Emphasis added.) Even if the opinions expressed by the witnesses at the evidentiary hearing were fully discounted, their compelling testimony concerning A.R.'s demeanor and conduct at the CINA hearing provided strong support for the court's conclusion that A.R.'s inability to testify stemmed from Reutter's presence, not the generally stressful atmosphere prevailing in the courtroom.

© 2012 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

We conclude that the evidence presented below was sufficient to support the trial court's finding of necessity under AS 12.45.046 and that application of the statute to Reutter's case did not result in a violation of his constitutional right to confrontation. FN12

FN12. Reutter separately alleges a violation of his right to procedural due process occasioned by the specific manner in which the court implemented A.R.'s questioning outside Reutter's presence. In particular, Reutter asserts that (1) A.R. refused to respond during the cross-examination; (2) his attorney was not able to gauge the reaction of the jury while he cross-examined A.R.; and (3) the jury was not able to view his interaction with A.R. during her testimony. However, Reutter did not complain to the trial court that he was unable to effectively cross-examine A.R.; from the record as a whole, it appears that Reutter's attorney did cross-examine A.R. effectively. Moreover, any difficulty that Reutter experienced in attempting to cross-examine appears to have been brought on, not by the closed-circuit television procedure, but by the inappropriate encounters between A.R. and her parents. Cf. Brandon v. State, 778 P.2d 221, 227-28 (Alaska App.1989) (no violation of defendant's right of confrontation when witness' absence results from conduct of the accused). With respect to the remaining assertions, it is sufficient to observe that, although Reutter continued throughout the trial to object to the taking of A.R.'s testimony by closed-circuit television generally, he specifically stated that he did not object to the procedure that the trial court implemented. Reutter's claims of interference with the jury's view of his interaction with A.R. are wholly unsubstantiated by the record.

The convictions are AFFIRMED.

United States Court of Appeals,
Second Circuit.
UNITED STATES of America, Appellee,
v.
Vincent GIGANTE, also known as "Chin," Defendant–Appellant.

Docket No. 98–1001.
Argued Oct. 20, 1998.
Decided Jan. 22, 1999.

Following jury trial, defendant was convicted in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, Jack B. Weinstein, J., of violation of Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), RICO conspiracy, conspiracy to murder, extortion conspiracy, and a labor payoff conspiracy, based on evidence including testimony of one witness via closed-circuit television, which District Court permitted, 971 F.Supp. 755. The District Court, 982 F.Supp. 140, later dismissed one count of conspiracy to murder. Defendant appealed. The Court of Appeals, John M. Walker, Jr., Circuit Judge, held that: (1) admission of ill witness's testimony via two-way, closed-circuit television from a remote location did not violate defendant's right of confrontation; (2) any errors in admitting statements under coconspirator exception to hearsay definition were harmless; and (3) finding that defendant was competent to stand trial was not clearly erroneous.

Affirmed.

JOHN M. WALKER, JR., Circuit Judge:

Defendant-appellant Vincent Gigante appeals from a judgment of conviction entered December 18, 1997, after a jury trial in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York (Jack B. Weinstein, Judge), convicting Gigante of racketeering in violation of the RICO statute, 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c); RICO conspiracy in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962(d); conspiracy to murder in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1959(a)(5); an extortion conspiracy in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1951; and a labor payoff conspiracy in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 371.

Gigante raises three challenges to his conviction. First, he contends that the district court violated his confrontation rights under the Sixth Amendment by allowing a government witness to testify via two-way closed-circuit television from a remote location. Second, he argues that the trial court improperly allowed testimony under the co-conspirator exception to the hearsay definition. Finally, Gigante argues that the district court erred in finding that he was competent to stand trial. For the reasons set forth below, we reject each of Gigante's arguments and affirm his conviction.

BACKGROUND

This case arises from the government's continuing efforts to thwart the criminal activity of La Cosa Nostra, also known as the Mafia. The New York Mafia is comprised of five organized crime families: the Bonnano, Colombo, Gambino, Lucchese and Genovese families, each spearheaded by a boss. See United States v. Orena, 32 F.3d 704, 708 (2d Cir.1994). The government asserted that Vincent Gigante was the boss of the Genovese family and supervised its criminal activity.

Gigante was charged with two major categories of crimes: murder and labor racketeering. The government alleged that Gigante was the ultimate authority behind the murders of many fellow members of the Mafia, which were generally intended to enforce the rules of the organization or to prevent cooperation with the authorities. The government also charged Gigante with conspiring to use extortion and kickbacks to effect the criminal infiltration of the window replacement industry in and around New York City. He followed a long line of other organized crime figures whom the government had already convicted for their participation in this "Windows" scheme. See, e.g., United States v. Amuso, 21 F.3d 1251, 1254 (2d Cir.1994) (describing progression of Windows prosecutions).

The government presented its case against Gigante in large part through the testimony of six former members of the Mafia who had become cooperating witnesses: Alphonso D'Arco, once the acting boss of the Lucchese 79 family; Salvatore Gravano, the former Gambino family underboss; Peter Chiodo, who was a Lucchese captain; Phillip Leonetti and Gino Milano, past members of La Cosa Nostra in Philadelphia; and Peter Savino, a former associate of the Genovese family. The government also introduced a wealth of tapes recorded over many years of surveillance of Gigante and other Mafia figures, and supported this evidence with the testimony of law enforcement officers.

© 2012 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. US Gov. Works.

The cooperating witnesses testified at length about the structure and rules of La Cosa Nostra, described Gigante's place in the Mafia hierarchy, and detailed his efforts to hide his complicity through continuous public demonstrations of mental instability. The tapes and witnesses revealed Gigante's complicity in planning and approving murders within the Mafia and in assisting in the direction of the Windows extortion scheme.

The jury acquitted Gigante or failed to reach a verdict on all charges surrounding the murders of Jerry Pappa, Anthony Capongiro, Fred Salerno, John "Keys" Simone, Frank Sindone, Frank "Chickie" Narducci, Rocco "Rocky" Marinucci, and Enrico "Eddie" Carini. The jury found Gigante guilty of the more recent conspiracies to murder Peter Savino and John Gotti, although the court later dismissed the charge of conspiracy to murder Gotti as time-barred. See United States v. Gigante, 982 F.Supp. 140, 159 (E.D.N.Y.1997). Gigante was also convicted on all the extortion and labor payoff counts related to the Windows scheme. See id. at 177–81 (reprinting completed jury verdict sheet). Gigante was sentenced to twelve years in prison, five years of supervised release, and a fine of $1,250,000. This appeal followed.

DISCUSSION

I. The Use of Two–Way Closed–Circuit Television Testimony

[1] Gigante argues that the admission of Peter Savino's testimony via two-way, closed-circuit television testimony from a remote location violated his Sixth Amendment right "to be confronted with the witnesses against him." U.S. Const. amend. VI. Gigante maintains that no compelling government interest justified the deprivation of his constitutional right to a face-to-face confrontation with Savino.

Preliminarily, we note the government's argument that Gigante waived his right to confront Savino. The government asserts that by refusing to attend a deposition of Savino pursuant to Rule 15, Fed.R.Crim.P., Gigante waived his right to a face-to-face confrontation. More fundamentally, the government argues that Gigante waived his confrontation rights through his own misconduct, with protracted attempts to delay his own trial by feigning incompetence. We need not resolve these questions relating to possible waiver, however, because Gigante's claim fails on the merits: under the circumstances of this case, the procedures by which Savino testified did not violate Gigante's confrontation rights.

Peter Savino, a former associate of the Genovese crime family, was a crucial witness against Gigante, providing direct testimony of his involvement in the Windows scheme. As a cooperator with the government since 1987, Savino was a participant in the Federal Witness Protection Program. At the time of Gigante's trial in 1997, Savino was in the final stages of an inoperable, fatal cancer, and was under medical supervision at an undisclosed location.

The government made an application for an order allowing Savino to testify via closed-circuit television due to his illness and concomitant infirmity. Judge Weinstein held a hearing to determine whether Savino was able to travel to New York to testify at Gigante's trial. At this hearing, an emergency medicine physician employed by the Federal Witness Protection Program testified that he had examined Savino and that "it would be medically unsafe for [Savino] to travel to New York for testimony." Defense counsel cross-examined the government physician and then presented an oncologist of their own who testified that "it would not be life-threatening" for Savino to travel to New York.

[2] Judge Weinstein held in a published opinion that "[m]edical reports and testimony 80 for the government and defendant fully supported the government's contention, by clear and convincing proof, that the witness could not appear in court." United States v. Gigante, 971 F.Supp. 755, 756 (E.D.N.Y.1997). Although Gigante attacks this determination, we review this factual finding for clear error. Judge Weinstein's holding was supported by evidence in the record and was not clearly erroneous.

Because of Savino's illness, Judge Weinstein permitted him to testify via two-way, closed-circuit television, basing his decision upon his "inherent power" under Fed.R.Crim.P. 2 and 57(b) to structure a criminal trial in a just manner. Gigante, 971 F.Supp. at 758–59. During his testimony, Savino was visible on video screens in the courtroom to the jury, defense counsel, Judge Weinstein and Gigante. Savino could see and hear defense counsel and other courtroom participants on a video screen at his remote location.

Gigante's argument that this procedure deprived him of his right to confront Savino amounts to the argument that his Sixth Amendment right could only be preserved by a face-to-face confrontation with Savino in the same room. We disagree. While the use of remote, closed-circuit television testimony must be carefully circumscribed, Judge Weinstein's order in this case adequately protected Gigante's confrontation rights.

[3] The Supreme Court has declared that "the Confrontation Clause guarantees the defendant a face-to-face meeting with witnesses appearing before the trier of fact." Coy v. Iowa, 487 U.S. 1012, 1016, 108 S.Ct. 2798, 101 L.Ed.2d 857 (1988). In Coy, the Court reversed the defendant's conviction for sexual assault after a 13–year–old alleged victim was permitted to testify out of sight of the defendant. See id. at 1022, 108 S.Ct. 2798. However, the right to face-to-face confrontation is not absolute; in Maryland v. Craig, 497 U.S. 836, 110 S.Ct. 3157, 111 L.Ed.2d 666 (1990), the Court held that one-way closed-circuit television testimony by a child witness in an abuse case may be permissible upon a case-specific finding of necessity. See id. at 857, 110 S.Ct. 3157.

The Supreme Court explained that "[t]he central concern of the Confrontation Clause is to ensure the reliability of the evidence against a criminal defendant by subjecting it to rigorous testing in the context of an adversary proceeding before the trier of fact." Id. at 845, 110 S.Ct. 3157. The salutary effects of face-to-face confrontation include 1) the giving of testimony under oath; 2) the opportunity for cross-examination; 3) the ability of the fact-finder to observe demeanor evidence; and 4) the reduced risk that a witness will wrongfully implicate an innocent defendant when testifying in his presence. See id. at 845–46, 110 S.Ct. 3157.

[4] The closed-circuit television procedure utilized for Savino's testimony preserved all of these characteristics of in-court testimony: Savino was sworn; he was subject to full cross-examination; he testified in full view of the jury, court, and defense counsel; and Savino gave this testimony under the eye of Gigante himself.[FN1] Gigante forfeited none of the constitutional protections of confrontation.

> FN1. There is some dispute over whether Savino could see Gigante himself in the background of his monitor. However, it is clear that Judge Weinstein afforded defense counsel the opportunity to place Gigante's televised visage squarely before Savino (Mr. Culleton was to cross-examine Savino):

deprivation.

In Craig, the Supreme Court indicated that confrontation rights "may be satisfied absent a physical, face-to-face confrontation at trial only where denial of such confrontation is necessary to further an important public policy and only where the reliability of the testimony is otherwise assured." Craig, 497 U.S. at 850, 110 S.Ct. 3157. Gigante 81 seeks to hold the government to this standard, and challenges the government to articulate the important public policy that was furthered by Savino's testimony. However, the Supreme Court crafted this standard to constrain the use of one-way closed-circuit television, whereby the witness could not possibly view the defendant. Because Judge Weinstein employed a two-way system that preserved the face-to-face confrontation celebrated by Coy, it is not necessary to enforce the Craig standard in this case.

A more profitable comparison can be made to the Rule 15 deposition, which under the Federal Rules may be employed "[w]henever due to exceptional circumstances of the case it is in the interest of justice that the testimony of a prospective witness of a party be taken and preserved for use at trial." Fed.R.Crim.P. 15(a). That testimony may then be used at trial "as substantive evidence if the witness is unavailable." Fed.R.Crim.P. 15(e). Unavailability is defined by reference to Rule 804(a) of the Federal Rules of Evidence, which includes situations in which a witness "is unable to be present or to testify at the hearing because of ... physical or mental illness or infirmity." Fed.R.Evid. 804(a)(4).

[5][6] The decision to permit a deposition under Rule 15 "rests within the sound discretion of the trial court, and will not be disturbed absent clear abuse of discretion." United States v. Johnpoll, 739 F.2d 702, 708 (2d Cir.1984) (internal citations omitted). "It is well-settled that the 'exceptional circumstances' required to justify the deposition of a prospective witness are present if that witness's testimony is material to the case and if the witness is unavailable to appear at trial." Id. at 709. Under the circumstances of this case, Judge Weinstein could have admitted Savino's testimony pursuant to Rule 15 without offending the confrontation clause. See United States v. Salim, 855 F.2d 944, 954–55 (2d Cir.1988); Johnpoll, 739 F.2d at 710.

Judge Weinstein considered the utility of a Rule 15 deposition for preserving Savino's testimony, and noted that the government was "able to make the threshold showing entitling it to a [Rule 15] deposition." Gigante, 971 F.Supp. at 758. Had Judge Weinstein allowed a deposition, this would not have been an abuse of discretion, given the medical evidence of Savino's poor health. However, due to the joint exigencies of Savino's secret location and Gigante's own ill health and inability to travel, Judge Weinstein concluded that "deposing the witness is not appropriate," and that "contemporaneous testimony via closed circuit televising affords greater protection of [Gigante's] confrontation rights than would a deposition." Id. at 758–59.

We agree that the closed-circuit presentation of Savino's testimony afforded greater protection of Gigante's confrontation rights than would have been provided by a Rule 15 deposition. It forced Savino to testify before the jury, and allowed them to judge his credibility through his demeanor and comportment; under Rule 15 practice, the bare transcript of Savino's deposition could have been admitted, which would have precluded any visual assessment of his demeanor. Closed-circuit testimony also allowed Gigante's attorney to weigh the impact of Savino's direct testimony on the jury as he crafted a cross-examination.

[7] Closed-circuit television should not be considered a commonplace substitute for in-court testimony by a witness. There may well be intangible elements of the ordeal of testifying in a courtroom that are reduced or even eliminated by remote testimony. However, two-way closed-circuit television testimony does not necessarily violate the Sixth Amendment. Because this procedure may provide at least as great protection of confrontation rights as Rule 15, we decline to adopt a stricter standard for its use than the standard articulated by Rule 15. Upon a finding of exceptional circumstances, such as were found in this case, a trial court may allow a witness to testify via two-way closed-circuit television when this furthers the interest of justice.

The facts of Savino's fatal illness and participation in the Federal Witness Protection Program, coupled with Gigante's own inability to participate in a distant deposition, satisfy this exceptional circumstances requirement,82 and Judge Weinstein did not abuse his discretion by allowing Savino to testify in this manner. Savino's testimony did not deprive Gigante of his right to confront his accuser under the Sixth Amendment.

II. The Admission of Coconspirator Testimony

[8] Gigante contends that Judge Weinstein admitted substantial prejudicial testimony by misconstruing the proper scope of Fed.R.Evid. 801(d)(2)(E), which provides that "a statement is not hearsay if ... [it] is offered against a party and is ... a statement by a coconspirator of a party during the course and in furtherance of the conspiracy." Gigante argues that these evidentiary rulings constituted reversible error.

[9][10] To admit a statement under the coconspirator exception to the hearsay definition, a district court must find two factors by a preponderance of the evidence: first, that a conspiracy existed that included the defendant and the declarant; and second, that the statement was made during the course of and in furtherance of that conspiracy. See Orena, 32 F.3d at 711; United States v. Maldonado–Rivera, 922 F.2d 934, 958 (2d Cir.1990) (citing Bourjaily v. United States, 483 U.S. 171, 175, 107 S.Ct. 2775, 97 L.Ed.2d 144 (1987)). We will not disturb a district court's findings on these issues unless they are clearly erroneous. Moreover, any improper admission of coconspirator testimony is subject to harmless error analysis. See Orena, 32 F.3d at 711.

[11][12][13] The conspiracy between the declarant and the defendant need not be identical to any conspiracy that is specifically charged in the indictment. See id. at 713. In addition, while the hearsay statement itself may be considered in establishing the existence of the conspiracy, "there must be some independent corroborating evidence of the defendant's participation in the conspiracy." United States v. Tellier, 83 F.3d 578, 580 (2d Cir.1996); see also Fed.R.Evid. 801(d)(2). The identities of both the declarant and the witness who heard the hearsay evidence, however, are non-hearsay evidence that may be considered in assessing the reliability of the statement and finding the existence of a conspiracy. See Tellier, 83 F.3d at 580 n. 2; Fed.R.Evid. 801(d)(2) advisory committee's note to 1997 Amendment.

[14][15] As to the second requirement, statements made during the course and in furtherance of a conspiracy "must be such as to prompt the listener ... to respond in a way that promotes or facilitates the carrying out of a criminal activity." Maldonado–Rivera, 922 F.2d at 958. This can include those statements "that provide reassurance, or seek to induce a coconspirator's assistance, or serve to foster trust and cohesiveness, or inform each other as to the progress or status of the conspiracy." Id. at 959. In addition, while idle chatter among conspirators does not satisfy the "in furtherance" requirement of Rule 801(d)(2)(E), often these statements are admissible as declarations against penal interest or under the state of mind hearsay exception. See United States v. Paone, 782 F.2d 386, 390–91 (2d Cir.1986).

[16] A conspiracy may involve only two or three individuals. In the context of a RICO prosecution of organized criminals, however, the relevant conspiracy may grow quite large. For example, the Windows conspiracy, of which Gigante was a part, was a sprawling criminal enterprise involving both the Genovese and Colombo crime families and enveloping an entire industry. See United States v. Gigante, 39 F.3d 42, 44 (2d Cir.1994) (describing Windows scheme). The conspiratorial ingenuity of La Cosa Nostra expands the normal boundaries of a criminal enterprise, and Rule 801(d)(2)(E) must expand accordingly to encompass the full extent of the conspiracy.

[17][18] However, even in the context of organized crime, there is a limit to the proper use of Rule 801(d)(2)(E) to admit coconspirator testimony. The district court in each instance must find the existence of a specific criminal conspiracy beyond the general existence of the Mafia. And when a RICO conspiracy is charged, the defendant must be linked to an individual predicate act by more than hearsay alone before a statement related to that act is admissible against 83 the defendant under Rule 801(d)(2)(E). See Tellier, 83 F.3d at 581.

Early in Gigante's trial, Judge Weinstein announced his finding that "there is a general overriding conspiracy among all of these alleged Mafia groups." He then admitted some evidence under Rule 801(d)(2)(E) based solely on this finding of a general conspiracy. This was error. The district court's rationale would allow the admission of any statement by any member of the Mafia regarding any criminal behavior of any other member of the Mafia. This is not to say that there can never be a conspiracy comprising many different Mafia families; however, it must be a conspiracy with some specific criminal goal in addition to a general conspiracy to be members of the Mafia. It is the unity of interests stemming from a specific shared criminal task that justifies Rule 801(d)(2)(E) in the first place—organized crime membership alone does not suffice.

Although we find that Judge Weinstein construed Rule 801(d)(2)(E) too broadly, many of the statements contested by Gigante were properly admitted. For example, Gigante contends that it was error to admit Alphonse D'Arco's testimony that Jimmy Ida (of the Genovese Family) told D'Arco that Gigante wanted him to help locate and murder Savino in Hawaii. Similarly, Gigante contests the district court's admission of D'Arco's testimony that Vittorio Amuso (his boss in the Lucchese family) told D'Arco that Gigante was aware of and approved of the plot to murder John Gotti. Gigante argues that there was no independent corroborating evidence of his involvement in a conspiracy to murder either Savino or Gotti. However, there was substantial corroborating evidence that could support findings by Judge Weinstein that Gigante was boss of the Genovese family, that the Genovese family was involved in the conspiracies to murder Savino and Gotti, and that Gigante, as boss, was necessarily involved in these conspiracies. The admission of these statements was not clearly erroneous.

[19] On other occasions, the district court erred in admitting evidence under Rule 801(d)(2)(E). Gigante argues that Judge Weinstein improperly admitted a tape recording of Gotti, Gravano and John D'Amato (street boss of a New Jersey family) discussing a conspiracy to murder Corky Vastola, and stating that they needed to secure Gigante's permission to utilize a particular person to kill Vastola. The evidence indicated that Gigante refused this permission. The discussions between Gotti, Gravano and D'Amato should have been excluded, because there was no evidence that Gigante ever joined in a conspiracy with those figures to murder Vastola. The government argues that these discussions reveal Gigante's role in a general process and network of criminal conspiracy and activity. However, these discussions were not "in furtherance of" a specific criminal purpose, and the fact that Gigante might have conspired with Gotti and Gravano to commit other crimes on other occasions is irrelevant.

Nonetheless, to the extent that these or any other statements were erroneously admitted under Rule 801(d)(2)(E), they did not "effect actual prejudice resulting in 'substantial and injurious effect or influence in determining the jury's verdict.' " Ayala v. Leonardo, 20 F.3d 83, 92 (2d Cir.1994) (quoting Kotteakos v. United States, 328 U.S. 750, 776, 66 S.Ct. 1239, 90 L.Ed. 1557 (1946)). Several admitted statements would have been properly admissible either as declarations against penal interest or under the state of mind exception to the hearsay rule. The jury acquitted Gigante on some of the charges against him, convicted him on other charges, and were unable to reach a verdict on still other allegations. This demonstrates that the jury was able to distinguish among the charges against Gigante and weigh the evidence on each separate count. There was substantial direct and circumstantial evidence connecting Gigante to each of the crimes for which he was convicted. Having considered all of Gigante's evidentiary arguments, we hold that any errors by the district court were harmless.

III. Competency to Stand Trial

[20] Gigante also challenges the trial court's determination that he was competent to stand trial. We uphold a district court's finding of competence unless that finding is 84 clearly erroneous. See United States v. Morrison, 153 F.3d 34, 46 (2d Cir.1998). Under this highly deferential standard, " '[w]here there are two permissible views of the evidence as to competency, the court's choice between them cannot be deemed clearly erroneous.' " United States v. Nichols, 56 F.3d 403, 411 (2d Cir.1995) (quoting United States v. Villegas, 899 F.2d 1324, 1341 (2d Cir.1990)).

[21] Judge Weinstein was not the first judge to make a finding regarding Gigante's competency. Gigante's trial had been previously assigned to Judge Eugene Nickerson, who conducted the first hearings to determine whether Gigante was competent to stand trial. Four separate psychiatrists testified that Gigante was incompetent, although reservations were expressed that he might be malingering. See United States v. Gigante, 925 F.Supp. 967, 968 (E.D.N.Y.1996).

Judge Nickerson then received testimony from former members of the Mafia (many of whom later testified at Gigante's trial), and made the factual findings that "Gigante was a forceful and active leader of the Genovese family from at least 1970 on" and that Gigante had put on a "crazy act" for many years in order "to avoid apprehension by law enforcement." Id. at 976. After being presented with these findings, two of the examining psychiatrists changed their opinion, indicating that they now thought Gigante was malingering; one said Gigante was competent to stand trial, and the other said it was quite possible that Gigante was competent. The remaining psychiatrists held to their earlier findings of incompetence. See United States v. Gigante, 987 F.Supp. 143, 146 (E.D.N.Y.1996). Judge Nickerson found "the weight of medical opinion to show that Gigante is mentally competent to stand trial." Id. at 147.

When Gigante renewed his claim of incompetence due to Alzheimer's disease, Judge Nickerson recused himself, and the case was reassigned to Judge Weinstein. See Gigante, 982 F.Supp. at 146. Gigante presented new evidence of incompetence in the form of a Positron Emission Tomography (PET) scan of Gigante's brain and the results of a battery of tests designed to identify malingering. The defense experts who presented this evidence testified that Gigante was incompetent to be tried. The government then presented a witness who testified that it was possible that the results of these tests were due to the drugs Gigante was receiving. See id. at 147. Judge Weinstein held that Gigante was competent and ordered that the trial proceed. See id. at 148.

Judge Nickerson and Judge Weinstein, after conducting separate hearings, reached the identical conclusion that Gigante was malingering, and that he was competent to stand trial. This was a permissible conclusion in light of the expert testimony and extensive evidence of Gigante's attempts to elude prosecution, and we do not find it to be clearly erroneous.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the district court is affirmed.

MEMORANDUM March 18, 2012

SUBJECT: Online Enticement and Prostitution Provisions in CSHB 359(JUD)
(Work Order No. 27-GH2627\M)

TO: Representative Carl Gatto
Chair of the House Judiciary Committee
Attn: Melanie Lesh

FROM: Doug Gardner
Director

There are two matters that I want to bring to your attention regarding the CS for HB 359 you requested.

1. Section 19. The way the bill is currently drafted with regard to online enticement in the first degree in section 19 of the bill, online enticement that is B felony conduct and online enticement that is A felony conduct would both be serious felonies. It would appear that the intention of the committee is for the A felony offense of online enticement provided for in AS 11.41.452(e) to be a serious felony, but not online enticement that is a B felony (online enticement is an A felony when the offender is a registered sex offender). Given that in other situations, such as sexual assault in the second degree, which is a B felony, the legislature has not included a class B felony as a serious felony, I suggest that citation to AS 11.41.452(e) should be included to clarify this situation.

2. Section 6. The language as currently drafted in (c)(1) of this section uses the term "patronizes" to refer to the conduct of the defendant who commits the offense of prostitution under AS 11.66.100(a). While some might describe this as "nit-picking," patronizes may include conduct that is not necessarily criminal, and read literally, has a vague meaning in describing the conduct in AS 11.66.100(a). The use of the term "patron" is the correct term to use in this context to describe the relationship the statute intends to cover, and the term "patron" is also consistent with AS 11.66.130(a)(2), where the same type of relationship between a prostitute and a "patron" is being described. Given that time was of the essence, we made this change and included it in the draft you were sent to try and assist in expediting this matter. Please confer with the committee and determine if this change is acceptable.

MEMORANDUM March 20, 2012

SUBJECT: Approved Change to Final of CSHB 359(JUD)
(Work Order No. 27-GH2627\B)

TO: Representative Carl Gatto
Chair of the House Judiciary Committee
Attn: Melanie Lesh

FROM: Doug Gardner
Director

During final review of Amendment M.3 to CSHB 359(JUD), in preparation for creating a final of the bill passed out of committee on March 19, 2012, an error was discovered on page 7, line 5. The amendment should have been drafted as an "or" and not "and." The draft that you are receiving, with Ms. Lesh's permission, was drafted with an "or" in place of "and" so that forfeiture of property under AS 11.66.145 can be ordered if a defendant is found to have violated AS 11.66.100(c) or 11.66.110 - 11.66.135. Please review this change to make sure that this change conforms to the intent of the committee.

CS FOR HOUSE BILL NO. 359(JUD)

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SEVENTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

BY THE HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Offered:
Referred:

Sponsor(s): HOUSE RULES COMMITTEE BY REQUEST OF THE GOVERNOR

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to conspiracy to commit human trafficking in the first degree or sex trafficking in the first degree; relating to the crime of distribution of indecent material to minors, the crime of online enticement of a minor, the crime of prostitution, and the crime of sex trafficking; relating to forfeiture of property used in prostitution offenses; relating to testimony by video conference; adding Rule 38.3, Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 04.06.110 is amended to read:

Sec. 04.06.110. Peace officer powers. The director and the persons employed for the administration and enforcement of this title may, with the concurrence of the commissioner of public safety, exercise the powers of peace officers when those powers are specifically granted by the board. Powers granted by the board under this section may be exercised only when necessary for the enforcement of the criminally punishable provisions of this title, regulations of the board, and other criminally punishable laws and regulations, including investigation of violations of laws against prostitution and sex trafficking [PROMOTING PROSTITUTION] described in AS 11.66.100 - 11.66.135 [AS 11.66.100 - 11.66.130] and laws against gambling, promoting gambling, and related offenses described in AS 11.66.200 - 11.66.280.

 Sec. 2. AS 04.11.370(a) is amended to read:

(a) A license or permit shall be suspended or revoked if the board finds

(1) misrepresentation of a material fact on an application made under this title or a regulation adopted under this title;

(2) continuation of the manufacture, sale, or service of alcoholic beverages by the licensee or permittee would be contrary to the best interests of the public;

(3) failure on the part of the licensee to correct a defect that constitutes a violation of this title, a condition or restriction imposed by the board, a regulation adopted under this title, or other laws after receipt of notice issued by the board or its agent;

(4) conviction of a licensee of a violation of this title, a regulation adopted under this title, or an ordinance adopted under AS 04.21.010;

(5) conviction of an agent or employee of a licensee of a violation of this title, a regulation adopted under this title, or an ordinance adopted under AS 04.21.010, if the licensee is found by the board to have either knowingly allowed the violation or to have recklessly or with criminal negligence failed to act in accordance with the duty prescribed under AS 04.21.030 with the result that the agent or employee violates a law, regulation, or ordinance;

(6) failure of the licensee to comply with the public health, fire, or safety laws and regulations in the state;

(7) use of the licensed premises as a resort for illegal possessors or users of narcotics, prostitutes, or sex traffickers [PROMOTERS OF PROSTITUTION]; in addition to any other legally competent evidence, the character of the premises may be proved by the general reputation of the premises in the community as a resort for illegal possessors or users of narcotics, prostitutes, or sex

traffickers [PROMOTERS OF PROSTITUTION];

(8) occurrence of illegal gambling within the limits of the licensed premises;

(9) the licensee permitted a public offense involving moral turpitude to occur on the licensed premises;

(10) violation by a licensee of this title, a condition or restriction imposed by the board, a regulation adopted under this title, or an ordinance adopted under AS 04.21.010; or

(11) violation by an agent or employee of a licensee of a provision of this title, a condition or restriction imposed by the board, a regulation adopted under this title, or an ordinance adopted under AS 04.21.010, if the licensee is found by the board to have either knowingly allowed the violation or to have recklessly or with criminal negligence failed to act in accordance with the duty prescribed under AS 04.21.030 with the result that the agent or employee violates the law, condition or restriction, regulation, or ordinance.

* Sec. 3. AS 11.31.120(h)(2) is amended to read:

(2) "serious felony offense" means an offense

(A) against the person under AS 11.41, punishable as an unclassified or class A felony;

(B) involving controlled substances under AS 11.71, punishable as an unclassified, class A, or class B felony;

(C) that is criminal mischief in the first degree under AS 11.46.475; [OR]

(D) that is terroristic threatening in the first degree under AS 11.56.807;

(E) that is human trafficking in the first degree under AS 11.41.360; or

(F) that is sex trafficking in the first degree under AS 11.66.110.

* Sec. 4. AS 11.61.128(a) is amended to read:

(a) A person commits the crime of distribution of indecent material to minors

if

(1) the person, being 18 years of age or older, intentionally [KNOWINGLY] distributes or possesses with intent to distribute any material described in (2) and (3) of this subsection to either

(A) a child that the person knows is under 16 years of age; or

(B) another person that the person believes is a child under 16 years of age;

(2) the material is [TO ANOTHER PERSON ANY] material that the person knows depicts the following actual or simulated conduct:

(A) sexual penetration;

(B) the lewd touching of a person's genitals, anus, or female breast;

(C) masturbation;

(D) bestiality;

(E) the lewd exhibition of a person's genitals, anus, or female breast; or

(F) sexual masochism or sadism; and

(3) [(2)] the material is harmful to minors [; AND

(3) EITHER

(A) THE OTHER PERSON IS A CHILD UNDER 16 YEARS OF AGE; OR

(B) THE PERSON BELIEVES THAT THE OTHER PERSON IS A CHILD UNDER 16 YEARS OF AGE].

 Sec. 5. AS 11.66.100(b) is amended to read:

(b) Except as provided in (c) of this section, prostitution [PROSTITUTION] is a class B misdemeanor.

 Sec. 6. AS 11.66.100 is amended by adding new subsections to read:

(c) Prostitution is a class C felony if

(1) the defendant violates (a) of this section as a patron of a prostitute;

(2) the prostitute is under 18 years of age; and

(3) the defendant is over 18 years of age and at least three years older than the prostitute.

(d) In a prosecution under (c) of this section, it is an affirmative defense that, at the time of the alleged offense, the defendant

(1) reasonably believed the prostitute to be 18 years of age or older; and

(2) undertook reasonable measures to verify that the prostitute was 18 years of age or older.

 Sec. 7. AS 11.66.110(a) is amended to read:

(a) A person commits the crime of sex trafficking [PROMOTING PROSTITUTION] in the first degree if the person

(1) induces or causes a person to engage in prostitution through the use of force;

(2) as other than a patron of a prostitute, induces or causes a person under 18 years of age to engage in prostitution; or

(3) induces or causes a person in that person's legal custody to engage in prostitution.

 Sec. 8. AS 11.66.110(c) is amended to read:

(c) Except as provided in (d) of this section, sex trafficking [PROMOTING PROSTITUTION] in the first degree is a class A felony.

 Sec. 9. AS 11.66.120 is amended to read:

Sec. 11.66.120. Sex trafficking [PROMOTING PROSTITUTION] in the second degree. (a) A person commits the crime of sex trafficking [PROMOTING PROSTITUTION] in the second degree if the person

(1) manages, supervises, controls, or owns, either alone or in association with others, a prostitution enterprise other than a place of prostitution;

(2) procures or solicits a patron for a prostitute; or

(3) offers, sells, advertises, promotes, or facilitates travel that includes commercial sexual conduct as enticement for the travel; in this paragraph, "commercial sexual conduct" means sexual conduct for which anything of value is given or received by any person.

(b) Sex trafficking [PROMOTING PROSTITUTION] in the second degree is a class B felony.

* Sec. 10. AS 11.66.130 is amended to read:

Sec. 11.66.130. Sex trafficking [PROMOTING PROSTITUTION] in the third degree. (a) A person commits the crime of sex trafficking [PROMOTING PROSTITUTION] in the third degree if, with intent to promote prostitution, the person

(1) manages, supervises, controls, or owns, either alone or in association with others, a place of prostitution;

(2) as other than a patron of a prostitute, induces or causes a person 18 years of age or older to engage in prostitution;

(3) as other than a prostitute receiving compensation for personally rendered prostitution services, receives or agrees to receive money or other property under [PURSUANT] to an agreement or understanding that the money or other property is derived from prostitution; or

(4) engages in conduct that institutes, aids, or facilitates a prostitution enterprise.

(b) Sex trafficking [PROMOTING PROSTITUTION] in the third degree is a class C felony.

* Sec. 11. AS 11.66.135 is amended to read:

Sec. 11.66.135. Sex trafficking [PROMOTING PROSTITUTION] in the fourth degree. (a) A person commits the crime of sex trafficking [PROMOTING PROSTITUTION] in the fourth degree if the person engages in conduct that institutes, aids, or facilitates prostitution under circumstances not proscribed under AS 11.66.130(a)(4).

(b) Sex trafficking [PROMOTING PROSTITUTION] in the fourth degree is a class A misdemeanor.

* Sec. 12. AS 11.66.140 is amended to read:

Sec. 11.66.140. Corroboration of certain testimony not required. In a prosecution under AS 11.66.110 - 11.66.135 [AS 11.66.110 - 11.66.130], it is not necessary that the testimony of the person whose prostitution is alleged to have been compelled or promoted be corroborated by the testimony of any other witness or by documentary or other types of evidence.

* Sec. 13. AS 11.66.145 is amended to read:

Sec. 11.66.145. Forfeiture. Property used to institute, aid, or facilitate, or received or derived from, a violation of AS 11.66.100 - 11.66.135 [AS 11.66.110 - 11.66.135] shall be forfeited.

* Sec. 14. AS 11.81.250(a) is amended to read:

(a) For purposes of sentencing under AS 12.55, all offenses defined in this title, except murder in the first and second degree, attempted murder in the first degree, solicitation to commit murder in the first degree, conspiracy to commit murder in the first degree, murder of an unborn child, sexual assault in the first degree, sexual abuse of a minor in the first degree, misconduct involving a controlled substance in the first degree, sex trafficking [PROMOTING PROSTITUTION] in the first degree under AS 11.66.110(a)(2), and kidnapping, are classified on the basis of their seriousness, according to the type of injury characteristically caused or risked by commission of the offense and the culpability of the offender. Except for murder in the first and second degree, attempted murder in the first degree, solicitation to commit murder in the first degree, conspiracy to commit murder in the first degree, murder of an unborn child, sexual assault in the first degree, sexual abuse of a minor in the first degree, misconduct involving a controlled substance in the first degree, sex trafficking [PROMOTING PROSTITUTION] in the first degree under AS 11.66.110(a)(2), and kidnapping, the offenses in this title are classified into the following categories:

(1) class A felonies, which characteristically involve conduct resulting in serious physical injury or a substantial risk of serious physical injury to a person;

(2) class B felonies, which characteristically involve conduct resulting in less severe violence against a person than class A felonies, aggravated offenses against property interests, or aggravated offenses against public administration or order;

(3) class C felonies, which characteristically involve conduct serious enough to deserve felony classification but not serious enough to be classified as A or

B felonies;

(4) class A misdemeanors, which characteristically involve less severe violence against a person, less serious offenses against property interests, less serious offenses against public administration or order, or less serious offenses against public health and decency than felonies;

(5) class B misdemeanors, which characteristically involve a minor risk of physical injury to a person, minor offenses against property interests, minor offenses against public administration or order, or minor offenses against public health and decency;

(6) violations, which characteristically involve conduct inappropriate to an orderly society but which do not denote criminality in their commission.

* Sec. 15. AS 11.81.250(b) is amended to read:

(b) The classification of each felony defined in this title, except murder in the first and second degree, attempted murder in the first degree, solicitation to commit murder in the first degree, conspiracy to commit murder in the first degree, murder of an unborn child, sexual assault in the first degree, sexual abuse of a minor in the first degree, misconduct involving a controlled substance in the first degree, sex trafficking in the first degree under AS 11.66.110(a)(2), and kidnapping, is designated in the section defining it. A felony under the [ALASKA] law of this state defined outside this title for which no penalty is specifically provided is a class C felony.

* Sec. 16. AS 12.47.100 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(h) In a hearing to determine competency under this section, the court may, at the court's discretion, allow a witness, including a psychiatrist or psychologist who examined the defendant, to testify concerning the competency of the defendant by contemporaneous two-way video conference if the witness is in a place from which people customarily travel by air to the court and the procedure allows the parties a fair opportunity to examine the witness. The video conference technician shall be the only person in the presence of the witness unless the court, at the court's discretion, determines that another person may be present. Any person present with the witness must be identified on the record. In this subsection, "contemporaneous two-way video conference"

(1) means a conference among people at different places by means of transmitted audio and video signals;

(2) includes all communication technologies that allow people at two or more places to interact by two-way video and audio transmissions simultaneously.

 Sec. 17. AS 12.55.035(b) is amended to read:

(b) Upon conviction of an offense, a defendant who is not an organization may be sentenced to pay, unless otherwise specified in the provision of law defining the offense, a fine of not [NO] more than

(1) $500,000 for murder in the first or second degree, attempted murder in the first degree, murder of an unborn child, sexual assault in the first degree, sexual abuse of a minor in the first degree, kidnapping, sex trafficking [PROMOTING PROSTITUTION] in the first degree under AS 11.66.110(a)(2), or misconduct involving a controlled substance in the first degree;

(2) $250,000 for a class A felony;

(3) $100,000 for a class B felony;

(4) $50,000 for a class C felony;

(5) $10,000 for a class A misdemeanor;

(6) $2,000 for a class B misdemeanor;

(7) $500 for a violation.

 Sec. 18. AS 12.55.125(i) is amended to read:

(i) A defendant convicted of

(1) sexual assault in the first degree, sexual abuse of a minor in the first degree, or sex trafficking [PROMOTING PROSTITUTION] in the first degree under AS 11.66.110(a)(2) may be sentenced to a definite term of imprisonment of not more than 99 years and shall be sentenced to a definite term within the following presumptive ranges, subject to adjustment as provided in AS 12.55.155 - 12.55.175:

(A) if the offense is a first felony conviction, the offense does not involve circumstances described in (B) of this paragraph, and the victim was

(i) less than 13 years of age, 25 to 35 years;

(ii) 13 years of age or older, 20 to 30 years;

(B) if the offense is a first felony conviction and the defendant possessed a firearm, used a dangerous instrument, or caused serious physical injury during the commission of the offense, 25 to 35 years;

(C) if the offense is a second felony conviction and does not involve circumstances described in (D) of this paragraph, 30 to 40 years;

(D) if the offense is a second felony conviction and the defendant has a prior conviction for a sexual felony, 35 to 45 years;

(E) if the offense is a third felony conviction and the defendant is not subject to sentencing under (F) of this paragraph or (l) of this section, 40 to 60 years;

(F) if the offense is a third felony conviction, the defendant is not subject to sentencing under (l) of this section, and the defendant has two prior convictions for sexual felonies, 99 years;

(2) unlawful exploitation of a minor under AS 11.41.455(c)(2), online enticement of a minor under AS 11.41.452(e), or attempt, conspiracy, or solicitation to commit sexual assault in the first degree, sexual abuse of a minor in the first degree, or sex trafficking [PROMOTING PROSTITUTION] in the first degree under AS 11.66.110(a)(2) may be sentenced to a definite term of imprisonment of not more than 99 years and shall be sentenced to a definite term within the following presumptive ranges, subject to adjustment as provided in AS 12.55.155 - 12.55.175:

(A) if the offense is a first felony conviction, the offense does not involve circumstances described in (B) of this paragraph, and the victim was

(i) under 13 years of age, 20 to 30 years;

(ii) 13 years of age or older, 15 to 30 years;

(B) if the offense is a first felony conviction and the defendant possessed a firearm, used a dangerous instrument, or caused serious physical injury during the commission of the offense, 25 to 35 years;

(C) if the offense is a second felony conviction and does not involve circumstances described in (D) of this paragraph, 25 to 35 years;

(D) if the offense is a second felony conviction and the defendant has a prior conviction for a sexual felony, 30 to 40 years;

(E) if the offense is a third felony conviction, the offense does not involve circumstances described in (F) of this paragraph, and the defendant is not subject to sentencing under (l) of this section, 35 to 50 years;

(F) if the offense is a third felony conviction, the defendant is not subject to sentencing under (l) of this section, and the defendant has two prior convictions for sexual felonies, 99 years;

(3) sexual assault in the second degree, sexual abuse of a minor in the second degree, online enticement of a minor under AS 11.41.452(d), unlawful exploitation of a minor under AS 11.41.455(c)(1), or distribution of child pornography under AS 11.61.125(e)(2) may be sentenced to a definite term of imprisonment of not more than 99 years and shall be sentenced to a definite term within the following presumptive ranges, subject to adjustment as provided in AS 12.55.155 - 12.55.175:

(A) if the offense is a first felony conviction, five to 15 years;

(B) if the offense is a second felony conviction and does not involve circumstances described in (C) of this paragraph, 10 to 25 years;

(C) if the offense is a second felony conviction and the defendant has a prior conviction for a sexual felony, 15 to 30 years;

(D) if the offense is a third felony conviction and does not involve circumstances described in (E) of this paragraph, 20 to 35 years;

(E) if the offense is a third felony conviction and the defendant has two prior convictions for sexual felonies, 99 years;

DIRECT COURT RULE AMENDMENT. The Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure are amended by adding a new section to read:

Rule 38.3. Video Conference Testimony. (a) In General. In every trial, the testimony of witnesses shall be taken in open court, unless otherwise provided by statute or rule.

(b) Testimony by Video Conference. The parties may agree to take testimony from a witness by contemporaneous two-way video conference presented in open court. Absent the parties' agreement, the court may, at the court's discretion, authorize the contemporaneous two-way video conference testimony at trial of a witness only if

(1) the requesting party establishes that testimony by two-way video conference is necessary to further an important public policy;

(2) the requesting party establishes that the witness is unavailable; and

(3) the testimony is given under oath and subject to cross-examination.

(c) Procedures for Taking Video Conference Testimony. If the trial court authorizes video conference testimony under (b) of this rule, it shall determine the procedures for taking the contemporaneous two-way video conference testimony. The parties, the court, the trier of fact, and the public must be able to see and hear the witness; and the witness must see and hear the courtroom proceedings, including the defendant, as if the witness were sitting in the courtroom's witness stand. The video conference technician shall be the only person in the presence of the witness unless the court, at the court's discretion, determines that another person may be present. Any person present with the witness must be identified.

(d) Definitions.

(1) Contemporaneous Two-Way Video Conference. Contemporaneous two-way video conference means a conference among people at different places by means of transmitted audio and video signals. It includes all communication technologies that allow two or more places to interact by two-way video and audio transmissions simultaneously.

(2) Unavailable. In this rule, a witness is unavailable if

(A) by clear and convincing evidence the court finds under Rule 804(a)(4) or (5), Alaska Rules of Evidence, or Rule 15(e)(4), Alaska Rules of Criminal Procedure, that the witness is unavailable;

(B) by clear and convincing evidence the court finds that under the circumstances the witness is unavailable; or

(C) the parties agree that the witness is unavailable.

 Sec. 25. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

APPLICABILITY. (a) Sections 1, 2, 7 - 11, 14, and 17 - 23 of this Act apply to offenses committed before, on, or after the effective date of the Act.

(b) Sections 3 - 6, 12, 13, 16, and 24 of this Act apply to offenses committed on or after the effective date of this Act.

 Sec. 26. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

REVISOR'S INSTRUCTION. The revisor of statutes is instructed to change the heading of AS 11.66.110 from "Promoting prostitution in the first degree" to "Sex trafficking in the first degree."

MEMORANDUM March 19, 2012

SUBJECT: Confrontation Clause Issues Regarding Video Testimony in Mental Competency Hearings; U.S. and Alaska Constitutions (HB 359; Work Order No. 27-GH2627\A)

- Nguyen
- Burhoe

TO: Representative Lindsey Holmes
Attn: James Waldo

FROM: Doug Gardner
Director

The question you asked is whether the following provision in HB 359 violates the Confrontation Clause of the United States Constitution, Amendment VI, and Alaska Constitution, article I, § 11 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall have the right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him"):

>  Sec. 16. AS 12.47.100 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:
> (h) In a hearing to determine competency under this section, the court may allow the testimony of a witness, including the psychiatrist or psychologist who examined the defendant, to testify concerning the competency of the defendant by contemporaneous two-way video conference if the witness would be required to travel more than 50 miles to the court or lives in a place from which people customarily travel by air to the court. In this subsection, "contemporaneous two-way video conference"
> (1) means a conference among people at different places by means of transmitted audio and video signals;
> (2) includes all communication technologies that allow two or more places to interact by two-way video and audio transmissions simultaneously.

The U.S. Supreme Court, in Crawford v. Washington, 541 U.S. 36, 43 (2004), held that the Confrontation Clause is essentially a trial right, and not a right of the accused during pre-trial hearings. The Alaska Supreme Court has held that, while the Confrontation Clause in the Sixth Amendment applies to the states, the court is not bound by the United States Supreme Court's interpretation of the Confrontation Clause, suggesting that the Alaska Supreme Court may be more protective of a defendant's right to confrontation as provided in article I, § 11 of the Alaska Constitution, and require a face-to-face confrontation during a competency hearing. So, there is some risk that the above-proposed legislation will be challenged as violative of the defendant's right to confrontation.

With the limited time available to respond to your opinion request, the purpose of this memorandum is to spot issues regarding application of the Confrontation Clause to a pre-trial mental competency evaluation under AS 12.47.100, in a criminal case. I did not have time to evaluate whether video teleconferencing might be considered by a court as a constitutionally acceptable procedure in place of a "face-to-face" hearing, under a Confrontation Clause analysis.

Comparison to Grand Jury Rule; Criminal Rule 6(u)

Proposed section 16 of HB 359 provides for video, rather than merely telephonic participation by witnesses at a competency hearing under AS 12.47.100. My understanding from you is that a suggestion was made that the bill is similar to Criminal Rule 6(u), which allows telephonic participation, and does not require video teleconferencing at a grand jury proceeding, if the conditions of the rule are met, primarily that the witness would be required to travel more than 50 miles to testify. As a practical matter, there may be some similarity between HB 359 and Criminal Rule 6(u). However, from a constitutional perspective, grand jury proceedings have long been recognized as ex parte proceedings, where the defendant does not have a right to be present and confront witnesses. Cassell v. State, 645 P.2d 219 (1982). It is likely that the comparison of section 16 of the bill to Criminal Rule 6(u) was a practical one only, since the confrontation clause issues at grand jury are different from a competency hearing in accordance with proposed section 6 of the bill.

Confrontation Clause Does Not Apply to "Pre-trial" Proceedings

The United States Supreme Court in Crawford v. Washington, supra, made clear that the right of confrontation was a trial right, not a pre-trial right. Crawford, 541 U.S. at 68. The following passage from State v. Rivera, 192 P.3d 1213 (N.M. 2008), does a good job of summarizing the vast majority of state courts that have analyzed whether the right to confrontation applies to a pretrial hearing regarding suppression of evidence:

> The distinction follows from the difference in focus between pretrial hearings and trials on the merits. A trial focuses on the ultimate issue of an accused's guilt or innocence, whereas in a pretrial hearing the focus is generally on the admissibility of evidence. Thus, "the interests at stake in a suppression hearing are of a lesser magnitude than those in the criminal trial itself. At a suppression hearing, the court may rely on hearsay and other evidence, even though that evidence would not be admissible at trial." United States v. Raddatz, 447 U.S. 667, 679, 100 S.Ct. 2406, 65 L.Ed.2d 424 (1980); Brinegar v. United States, 338 U.S. 160, 173, 69 S.Ct. 1302, 93 L.Ed. 1879 (1949) ("There is a large difference between the > two things to be proved, as well as between the tribunals which determine them, and therefore a like difference in the quanta and modes of proof required to establish them.").

> Nothing in the Supreme Court's recent pronouncements suggests that the Court has changed its interpretation of the Confrontation Clause. Instead, recent cases continue to focus on the protections afforded a defendant at trial. For example, in Giles v. California, 554 U.S. 353, ——, 128 S.Ct. 2678, 2682, 171 L.Ed.2d 488 (2008), the Court noted that "[t]he [Sixth] Amendment contemplates that a witness who makes testimonial statements admitted against a defendant will ordinarily be present at trial for cross-examination, and that if the witness is unavailable, his prior testimony will be introduced only if the defendant had a prior opportunity to cross-examine him." (Emphasis added.) Similarly, in Crawford v. Washington, 541 U.S. 36, 124 S.Ct. 1354, 158 L.Ed.2d 177 (2004), the Court emphasized a defendant's right to confront a witness against him at trial. The Court concluded that, "[w]here testimonial evidence is at issue [at trial], the Sixth Amendment demands what the common law required: unavailability and a prior opportunity for cross-examination." Id. at 68, 124 S.Ct. 1354.
> Recently, other states have rejected an interpretation of Crawford that would require confrontation of witnesses at pre-trial hearings. See, e.g., People v. Felder, 129 P.3d 1072, 1073 (Colo.Ct.App. 2005) ("Nothing in Crawford suggests that the Supreme Court intended to alter its prior rulings allowing hearsay at pretrial proceedings, such as a hearing on a suppression motion challenging the sufficiency of a search warrant."); Sheriff v. Witzenburg, 122 Nev. 1056, 145 P.3d 1002, 1006 (2006) ("We conclude that the Sixth Amendment Confrontation Clause and Crawford do not apply to a preliminary examination."); State v. Wolnarowicz, 720 N.W.2d 635, 641 (N.D. 2006) ("In Crawford, the United States Supreme Court did not indicate it intended to change the law and apply the Confrontation Clause to pretrial hearings. . . . . The Sixth Amendment right to confrontation is a trial right, which does not apply to pretrial suppression hearings."); State v. Rhinehart, 153 P.3d 830, 834–35 (Utah Ct.App. 2006) ("The Confrontation Clause pertains to a criminal defendant's right to confront and cross-examine the witnesses against the defendant at trial; it does not afford the right to confront and cross-examine witnesses at a preliminary hearing, and Crawford does not alter the Court's previous holdings with respect to this matter.").

Most of the case law interpreting Crawford has developed in the context of pretrial evidentiary suppression hearings, as can be seen from the above passage, which is fairly typical of courts considering confrontation clause issues, and represents the majority opinion in this area. However, as Mr. Mittman noted in the March 4, 2012, memorandum submitted by the ACLU to the committee regarding confrontation clause concerns with section 16 of HB 359, while no court has ruled that the Confrontation Clause applies to a mental competency hearing, there may be reasons why the Alaska Supreme Court might do so.

Mr. Mittman referred the committee to the holding in State v. Gary F., 432 S.E.2d 793, 800 (W.Va. 1993), where the court ruled that the Confrontation Clause applied to a pre-trial hearing involving a decision about whether a case should be transferred from juvenile to adult court. Reference to this decision should not be minimized, as the same issues present in State v. Gary F. are very similar to the inquiry under AS 12.47.100, where a court must determine whether a defendant is mentally competent to stand trial. Like the inquiry in Gary F., the inquiry under AS 12.47.100 regarding the competency of a witness to stand trial is an issue that once decided in a pre-trial context, is not an issue that will be later litigated at trial.

Unlike the issues discussed by Crawford, and the other cases interpreting Crawford in the context of application of the Confrontation Clause to suppression hearings, where the defendant will ultimately have the right to confront the evidence at trial in front of a jury, mental competency to stand trial under AS 12.47.100 is not an issue that will be litigated before a jury. In other words, once a finding is made under AS 12.47.100, the defendant doesn't have a subsequent opportunity to confront, in person, the witnesses the court relied on at the pre-trial hearing since the issue will not be before the jury.

The considerations of application of the Confrontation Clause to pre-trial suppression hearings in Crawford, where the Court was aware that, after a pre-trial hearing, the defendant would have a confrontation right at trial to confront essentially the same evidence, may be distinguishable in the context of AS 12.47.100. In the context of a hearing under AS 12.47.100, the Alaska Supreme Court may extend the Confrontation Clause to a hearing conducted pursuant to AS 12.47.100, as a narrow exception to Crawford, and heightened protection for a criminal defendant in a competency hearing for the reasons discussed above. Please note, I did not have time to address the sufficiency of video teleconferencing to preserve a defendant's Confrontation Clause right. I would note, as Mr. Mittman has in the ACLU's memorandum, that video teleconferencing may be subject to close scrutiny in this context in a criminal case. See Melendez-Diaz v. Massachusetts, 557 U.S. 305 (2009); Blume v. State, 797 P.2d 664, 674 (Alaska App. 1990).

"(c) Prostitution is a class C felony if

(1) the defendant is a patron of a prostitute;

(2) the prostitute is under 18 years of age;

(3) the defendant is over 18 years of age and at least three years older than the prostitute.

(d) In a prosecution for a felony under this section that provides that the prostitute be under 18 years of age, it is an affirmative defense that, at the time of the alleged offense, the defendant

(1) reasonably believed the prostitute to be 18 years of age or older; and

(2) undertook reasonable measures to verify that the prostitute was that age or older."

Article 7. Definitions.

Section
900. Definitions

Sec. 11.81.900. Definitions. (a) For purposes of this title, unless the context requires otherwise,

(1) a person acts "intentionally" with respect to a result described by a provision of law defining an offense when the person's conscious objective is to cause that result; when intentionally causing a particular result is an element of an offense, that intent need not be the person's only objective;

(2) a person acts "knowingly" with respect to conduct or to a circumstance described by a provision of law defining an offense when the person is aware that the conduct is of that nature or that the circumstance exists; when knowledge of the existence of a particular fact is an element of an offense, that knowledge is established if a person is aware of a substantial probability of its existence, unless the person actually believes it does not exist; a person who is unaware of conduct or a circumstance of which the person would have been aware had that person not been intoxicated acts knowingly with respect to that conduct or circumstance;

(3) a person acts "recklessly" with respect to a result or to a circumstance described by a provision of law defining an offense when the person is aware of and consciously disregards a substantial and unjustifiable risk that the result will occur or that the circumstance exists; the risk must be of such a nature and degree that disregard of it constitutes a gross deviation from the standard of conduct that a reasonable person would observe in the situation; a person who is unaware of a risk of which the person would have been aware had that person not been intoxicated acts recklessly with respect to that risk;

(4) a person acts with "criminal negligence" with respect to a result or to a circumstance described by a provision of law defining an offense when the person fails to perceive a substantial and unjustifiable risk that the result will occur or that the circumstance exists; the risk must be of such a nature and degree that the failure to perceive it constitutes a gross deviation from the standard of care that a reasonable person would observe in the situation.

(b) In this title, unless otherwise specified or unless the context requires otherwise,

(1) "access device" means a card, credit card, plate, code, account number, algorithm, or identification number, including a social security number, electronic serial number, or password, that is capable of being used, alone or in conjunction with another access device or identification document, to obtain property or services, or that can be used to initiate a transfer of property;

Sponsor Statement for HB 367

"An Act relating to mitigation at sentencing in a criminal case for a defendant found by the court to have been affected by a fetal alcohol spectrum disorder."

HB 367 would include Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders (FASD) as a mitigating factor in sentencing. This would allow some flexibility in sentencing if the defendant is found by the court to be affected by FASD and this condition substantially impaired the defendant's judgment, behavior, and capacity to recognize reality or ability to cope with the ordinary demands of life.

Individuals diagnosed with a fetal alcohol spectrum disorder (FASD) are disproportionately represented within Alaska's criminal justice system. HB 367 does not require a judge to use the mitigating factor and it DOES NOT automatically adjust a presumptive sentence. The defense would have to provide clear and convincing evidence that the defendant's disability significantly affected the defendant's conduct and substantially impaired judgment, behavior, and capacity to recognize reality in order to apply the mitigating factor.

Evidence shows that directing people with mental illness and other brain disorders to supported services, both inside and outside of Corrections, significantly reduces the high financial and social costs associated with re-incarceration and recidivism. Felons and repeat offenders with FASD are more likely to stop committing crimes when they are given the same supports that benefit people with mental illness and other disabilities, which can include Therapeutic Court, housing and employment assistance, case management, counseling and rehabilitation.

BILL NO. CSHB367-ACS-TRC-4-04-12

Analysis

House Bill 367 adds a new factor to the list of mitigating factors in AS 12.55.155(d) that the court shall consider at sentencing if proven. If proven, the court may then impose a sentence below the presumptive range for certain crimes. Specifically, except for defendants convicted of offenses against persons and first degree arson, a defendant may show that he or she committed the offense while suffering from a diagnosed fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, that the disorder substantially impaired the defendant's judgment (or behavior, capacity to recognize reality, or ability to cope with the ordinary demands of life), and that the disorder significantly affected his or her conduct.

The court cannot predict the number of cases in which defendants will attempt to prove this factor as a mitigator at sentencing, but believes the sentencing hearings will be held and handled in the normal course without a fiscal impact. The Alaska Court System therefore submits a zero fiscal note.

Re: Request for Hearing on HB367 pending referral

Please consider this as a request for you to schedule HB367 "Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder as Mitagator" before the House Judiciary Committee. Included with the formal request please find a packet of information and documents in pdf format.

HB367 would include Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder (FASD) as impaired brain function under the state's existing definition of mental disease or defect. FASD could apply as a mitigating factor in sentencing. This would allow some flexibility in sentencing those who are affected by FASD when there is clear and convincing evidence that the defendant has an impaired brain as defined under the mental disease or defect.

Thank you for your consideration your consideration of this request.

"An Act relating to inclusion of fetal alcohol spectrum disorders, traumatic and acquired brain injury and intellectual disability in the definition of 'mental disease or defect'; and relating to mitigation at sentencing in a criminal case for a defendant affected by a mental disease or defect."

HB 367 would include Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders (FASD) as impaired brain function under the state's existing definition of mental disease or defect. If HB 367 passed, FASD could apply as a mitigating factor in sentencing. IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SEVENTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

BY

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to mitigation at sentencing in a criminal case for a defendant found by the court to have been affected by a fetal alcohol spectrum disorder."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 12.55.155(d) is amended to read:

(d) The following factors shall be considered by the sentencing court if proven in accordance with this section, and may allow imposition of a sentence below the presumptive range set out in AS 12.55.125:

(1) the offense was principally accomplished by another person, and the defendant manifested extreme caution or sincere concern for the safety or well-being of the victim;

(2) the defendant, although an accomplice, played only a minor role in the commission of the offense;

(3) the defendant committed the offense under some degree of duress, coercion, threat, or compulsion insufficient to constitute a complete defense, but that significantly affected the defendant's conduct;

(4) the conduct of a youthful defendant was substantially influenced by another person more mature than the defendant;

(5) the conduct of an aged defendant was substantially a product of physical or mental infirmities resulting from the defendant's age;

(6) in a conviction for assault under AS 11.41.200 - 11.41.220, the defendant acted with serious provocation from the victim;

(7) except in the case of a crime defined by AS 11.41.410 - 11.41.470, the victim provoked the crime to a significant degree;

(8) before the defendant knew that the criminal conduct had been discovered, the defendant fully compensated or made a good faith effort to fully compensate the victim of the defendant's criminal conduct for any damage or injury sustained;

(9) the conduct constituting the offense was among the least serious conduct included in the definition of the offense;

(10) the defendant was motivated to commit the offense solely by an overwhelming compulsion to provide for emergency necessities for the defendant's immediate family;

(11) after commission of the offense for which the defendant is being sentenced, the defendant assisted authorities to detect, apprehend, or prosecute other persons who committed an offense;

(12) the facts surrounding the commission of the offense and any previous offenses by the defendant establish that the harm caused by the defendant's conduct is consistently minor and inconsistent with the imposition of a substantial period of imprisonment;

(13) the defendant is convicted of an offense specified in AS 11.71 and the offense involved small quantities of a controlled substance;

(14) the defendant is convicted of an offense specified in AS 11.71 and the offense involved the distribution of a controlled substance, other than a schedule IA controlled substance, to a personal acquaintance who is 19 years of age or older for no profit;

(15) the defendant is convicted of an offense specified in AS 11.71 and the offense involved the possession of a small amount of a controlled substance for personal use in the defendant's home;

(16) in a conviction for assault or attempted assault or for homicide or attempted homicide, the defendant acted in response to domestic violence perpetrated by the victim against the defendant and the domestic violence consisted of aggravated or repeated instances of assaultive behavior;

(17) except in the case of an offense defined by AS 11.41 or AS 11.46.400, the defendant has been convicted of a class B or C felony, and, at the time of sentencing, has successfully completed a court-ordered treatment program as defined in AS 28.35.028 that was begun after the offense was committed;

(18) except in the case of an offense defined under AS 11.41 or AS 11.46.400 or a defendant who has previously been convicted of a felony, the defendant committed the offense while suffering from a mental disease or defect as defined in AS 12.47.130 that was insufficient to constitute a complete defense but that significantly affected the defendant's conduct;

(19) the defendant is convicted of an offense under AS 11.71, and the defendant sought medical assistance for another person who was experiencing a drug overdose contemporaneously with the commission of the offense;

(20) except in the case of an offense defined under AS 11.41 or AS 11.46.400, the defendant committed the offense while suffering from a condition diagnosed as a fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, the fetal alcohol spectrum disorder substantially impaired the defendant's judgment, behavior, capacity to recognize reality, or ability to cope with the ordinary demands of life, and the fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, though insufficient to constitute a complete defense, significantly affected the defendant's conduct; in this paragraph, "fetal alcohol spectrum disorder" means a condition of impaired brain function in the range of permanent birth defects caused by maternal consumption of alcohol during pregnancy.

BILL NO. HB 367

Analysis

HB 367 would add a mitigating factor at sentencing. It would allow a new mitigator if the defendant was affected by a fetal alcohol spectrum disorder that significantly affected the defendant's behavior. If proven, the court would have discretion to reduce the term of imprisonment to below the presumptive range.

The fiscal impact for the Department of Law is indeterminate because it will require expert testimony on the issue of whether the person suffers from such a disorder and if so, did it significantly affect his or her behavior.

SB 151/HB 367 - Inclusion of FASD as a Mitigating Factor

The Need for SB 151/HB 367

Individuals diagnosed with a fetal alcohol spectrum disorder (FASD) are disproportionately represented within Alaska's criminal justice system. The intent underlying Alaska's sentencing structure – that people will modify their behaviors based on the criminal justice system's response to their crimes – is not met when applied to individuals with FASD. These disabilities manifest as deficits in executive function, resulting in impaired adaptive behavior, memory difficulties, an inability to plan, and a failure to recognize the consequences of actions. In the interest of justice, it is important to take these deficits into account during sentencing. Neither the offender nor society benefits from holding individuals with FASD to community standards that they cannot possibly attain given their impairments.

SB 151/HB 367 fulfills a recommendation adopted by the Alaska Criminal Justice Assessment Commission: "The legislature should create a statutory mitigating factor for use at criminal sentencing, recognizing when the wrongful conduct was substantially affected by an organic brain disorder." [1]

A draft resolution being proposed by the Commission on Youth At Risk of the American Bar Association for consideration at this year's annual ABA meeting states: "... the American Bar Association urges lawyers and judges, as well as bar associations and law school clinical programs, to support training that includes law school law enforcement, and legal/judicial education curricula on enhanced awareness of the child and adult disability of Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders (FASD) and its impact on individuals in the child welfare, juvenile justice, and adult criminal justice systems, and that they work with medical, mental health, and FASD disability experts to promote: ... (d) applying FASD as a mitigating factor in the mitigation of juvenile justice and criminal sentencing ... and consideration of alternatives to incarceration that reduce recidivism."

Overview of the changes proposed in SB 151/HB 367

SB 151/HB 367 proposes to allow FASD as a mitigating factor for sentencing in certain cases where there is clear and convincing evidence that a "defendant committed [an] offense while suffering from a condition diagnosed as a fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, the fetal alcohol spectrum disorder substantially impaired the defendant's judgment, behavior, capacity to recognize reality, or ability to cope with the ordinary demands of life, and the fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, though insufficient to constitute a complete defense, significantly affected the defendant's conduct."

SB 151/HB 367 would, for the purposes of the subsection on mitigating factors, define fetal alcohol spectrum disorder as any "a condition of impaired brain function in the range of permanent birth defects caused by maternal consumption of alcohol during pregnancy."

[1] Alaska Criminal Justice Assessment Commission (2000). Final Report. Retrieved October 12, 2010 from www.hss.ajc.state.ak.us/reports/CJAC Final 2004.pdf, at p.71.

The legislation DOES NOT:

1) require a judge to use the mitigating factor;
2) automatically adjust a presumptive sentence; the defendant would have to prove by clear and convincing evidence 1) that he or she has a fetal alcohol spectrum disorder and 2) that the condition "significantly affected the defendant's conduct" before the judicial officer can consider the possibility of adjusting the presumptive sentence; or
3) the goal is not a "get out of jail free" card, but an attempt to be "smarter" within the justice system to better direct people who have impaired brain function to services both within and after release from the criminal justice system.

What are mitigating factors?

The Legislature has decided in the presumptive sentencing law that judges should give jail time within certain ranges in all felonies (with the exception of "class C felonies" where the minimum presumptive term is 0 years). The amount of the presumptive term depends on the severity of the crime and whether or not a defendant has prior felonies. There are 34 statutory aggravating factors that could result in a sentence above the presumptive range, if proved by clear and convincing evidence. A judge must sentence a person to at least the minimum presumptive term unless a "mitigating factor" is shown by clear and convincing evidence. There are 19 statutory mitigating factors. With the current mental disease or defect mitigating factor, the defendant must also show by clear and convincing evidence that the condition "significantly affected the defendant's conduct." The proposed fetal alcohol spectrum disorder mitigating factor also requires proof by clear and convincing evidence that the condition "significantly affected the defendant's conduct" before a judge could consider it. If the required showing has been made for any mitigating factor, it is legally possible for the judge to sentence below the minimum term (but if the minimum term is more than 4 years, the lower limit is half the minimum presumptive term).

There are special rules when there is a factor in a case that does not fit within the statutory list but which is so important in a case that it would be manifestly unjust to sentence a person without considering the factor. If the sentencing judge finds that such a "non statutory mitigating factor" exists, then the judge must refer the case to a three judge sentencing panel. If at least two judges on the panel agree, the panel can sentence with the same lower limits applicable to a statutory mitigating factor. If the panel does not agree, the case is referred back to the original judge to impose at least the minimum presumptive term. The "three judge panel" method is very cumbersome, time consuming and expensive. SB 151/HB 367 is a "statutory mitigating factor" and would not require any referral to a three judge sentencing panel.

What are Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders?

FASD is not a medical diagnosis, but an umbrella term for the range of diagnoses associated with damage caused by maternal alcohol consumption during pregnancy. These medical diagnoses can include Fetal Alcohol Syndrome (FAS), Partial Fetal Alcohol Syndrome (PFAS), Alcohol-Related Birth Defects (ARBD), and Alcohol-Related Neurodevelopmental Disorder (ARND). Note that the term, Fetal Alcohol Effects (FAE), is no longer commonly used, having been replaced by the PFAS, ARBD and ARND diagnoses.

Each diagnosis has its own symptoms and attributes, but common among all the diagnoses is permanent, life-long brain damage – often affecting decision-making, judgment and impulse control.

FASD is a brain-based disorder, similar to autism, traumatic and acquired brain injury, and other cognitive impairments.

FASDs appear in individuals differently. Some alcohol-exposed individuals may exhibit impulsivity, hyperactivity and risky behaviors. Some have difficulties with memory, while others have very good memories. Some have low IQs, while others have normal IQs.

Experts report that the different presentations are influenced by many variables, including when the mother drank, how much she drank, the genetic makeup (or genotype) of the baby, and the genotype of the mother.

Primary behavior characteristics of people with impaired brain function include: impulsiveness, memory difficulties, anger and frustration, difficulty pairing actions to consequences. Secondary behaviors that develop in reaction to or as a result of the primary disability, include substance abuse and mental health problems, anger and aggression, homelessness, involvement with the criminal justice system, and more.

Neurologist Dr. Susan Hunter-Joerns, a member of the Juneau FASD Diagnostic Team, wrote that structural brain damage "often significantly impair[s] cognitive behavior, common sense, the ability to understand right from wrong, cause-and-effect, consider consequences, ability to recognize social norm ... even though defendants may verbally seem able to talk about the issues. Making long term goals, planning appropriate actions, delaying gratification, and understanding the legal system, are often significant problems."

Who in Alaska is qualified to give a diagnosis of FAS/FASD?

Though some physicians may be qualified to diagnose all the disorders on the FASD spectrum, the preferred method of diagnosis, according to Susan Astley, Professor of Epidemiology and Pediatrics at the University of Washington and director of the Washington State FASD Diagnostic and Prevention Network, is by an interdisciplinary diagnostic team using current, rigorous FASD diagnostic guidelines. This preferred method is also advocated for nationally by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Each diagnosis on the spectrum requires evaluation and testing related to the Central Nervous System (CNS) to detect damage that cannot be measured alone by physical attributes. Interdisciplinary diagnostic teams using the 4-Digit Diagnostic Code include evaluations by a medical professional, psychologist, occupational therapist, and speech-language pathologist. These evaluations can detect the nuances of the disability.

How many diagnostic teams and/or physicians are available to give FASD diagnoses in Alaska?

Currently, through the Division of Behavioral Health FASD Diagnostic Team Provider Agreement, Alaska has eight active FASD diagnostic teams – in Bethel, Fairbanks, Mat-Su, Kenai, Juneau, Sitka, and two in Anchorage (Southcentral Foundation and ASSETS). Alaska also has a trained diagnostic team at Alaska Psychiatric Institute (API) for children who enter the service system through that door. In the past there were teams in Dillingham and Kodiak — both locations that are interested in reviving their teams at some point, but do not have the resources to do it at this time. Alaska also has had team in Nome, Copper Center, and Ketchikan. The majority of FASD diagnoses in Alaska are determined by the diagnostic teams overseen by DHSS.

How many people are diagnosed with FAS/FASD in Alaska annually?

In 2011, Alaska's FASD diagnostic teams diagnosed 179 individuals. The average per year number is around 153 per year, according to the Alaska Department of Health & Social Services.

What is Alaska's diagnostic standard based on?

In 1999, the DHSS Office of FAS, in conjunction with the statewide FASD Steering Committee, agreed to use the 4-Digit Diagnostic Code as the standard diagnostic system for Alaska's developing Diagnostic Team Network. The 4-Digit Diagnostic Code was developed at the University of Washington's FASD Diagnostic and Prevention Network by Drs. Susan Astley and Sterling Clarren. The 4-Digit Diagnostic Code measures: 1) facial features, 2) growth deficiency, 3) central nervous system damage/dysfunction, and 4) prenatal alcohol exposure. The client's diagnosis is derived after a thorough evaluation by an interdisciplinary team of professionals, which generally includes a physician (or nurse practitioner), psychologist, occupational therapist, speech-language pathologist, social worker, and family advocate. For more information on the FASD 4-Digit Code, visit: http://depts.washington.edu/fasdpn/htmls/4-digit-code.htm.

The 4-Digit Diagnostic Code is considered the "gold standard" for FASD diagnosis and provides a reliable, evidence-based diagnostic process that gives detailed information about the individual client and how best to help that person work with their disability to reach their full potential. All team members are required to complete the University of Washington FASD 4-Digit Diagnostic Code Training Course.

The economic benefits of SB 151/HB 367

The cost of incarceration in Alaska's prison is about $136 per day. Over the course of five to ten years in an Alaskan prison, an inmate is expected to cost the state close to $250,000-$500,000 (not including medical, mental health or other specialized treatment while incarcerated).

The cost of intensive case management, including electronic monitoring and probation/parole, is about $76 per day ($48 for intensive case management, $21 for electronic monitoring, $7 for probation/ parole) – for a savings of $21,900 per person, per year.[2]

According to the 2009 ISER Study, The Cost of Crime: Could the State Reduce Future Crime and Save Money by Expanding Education and Treatment Programs?, the cost of providing services is less than the cost of incarceration. With appropriate supports, clients with FASD, T/ABI and other brain-based disabilities can live successfully in the community as contributing citizens, and provide jobs for Alaskan case workers, clinicians, assisted living providers, mental health and substance abuse counselors, psychologists and psychiatrists. Not only does SB 151/HB 367 further the cause of justice for a vulnerable population, it represents a better investment of our state's resources.

FASD in other jurisdictions

Judges nationwide are experiencing repeat offenders diagnosed with these disorders who, as a direct result of their disabilities, are effectively unable to understand the charges against them, or comply with the conditions of their sentence. There is a growing body of research affirming that FASDs are brain disorders effectively impairing "judgment, behavior, capacity to recognize reality, or ability to cope with the ordinary demands of life."

[2] Source for Prison, Community Residential Centers, Electronic Monitoring & Probation and Parole: http://www.ahfc.us/iceimages/homeless/102211_ach_doc_discharge_stats.pdf . Note: Intensive Case Management estimated costs are based on the most intensive case management with a high level of education and supervision for workers. Actual costs, depending on the case mix, may be lower.

Kate Burkhart, attorney and executive director of the Alaska Advisory Board on Alcoholism and Drug abuse, wrote that the language in SB 151/HB 367 "is commensurate with the federal sentencing guidelines and other western state laws that provide for such a mitigating factor. While none of the western states surveyed expressly include FASD in their definitions of mental defect, Utah includes a broad definition that would include FASD. The other states and federal guidelines would permit but do not mandate consideration of FASDs in sentencing unless they impair comprehension or ability to form intent."

Burkhart noted that Utah defines "mental illness" as "a mental disease or defect that substantially impairs a person's mental, emotional, or behavioral functioning. A mental defect may be a congenital condition, the result of an injury, or residual effect of a physical or mental disease that includes, but is not limited to, mental retardation" which is further defined to mean "significant sub-average general intellectual functioning, existing concurrently with deficits in adaptive behavior."

Idaho permits consideration of mental condition creating an "inability to appreciate the wrongfulness" of conduct or to conform to legal requirements at sentencing."

Washington permits the courts to consider "the defendant's capacity to appreciate the wrongfulness of his or her conduct, or to conform his or her conduct to the requirements of the law, was significantly impaired."

Nationally, advocates within the American Bar Association are proposing a resolution urging lawyers, judges, bar associations and law school clinical programs to promote "applying FASD as a factor in the mitigation of juvenile and criminal sentencing ... and consideration of alternatives to incarceration that reduce recidivism." The resolution also asks, "that state and federal laws and policies reflect the serious effects of prenatal alcohol exposure by a) including persons diagnosed with FASD, or suffering from the affects of prenatal alcohol exposure, within the statutory definition of developmental disabilities ... and b) enhancing identification and diagnosis of ... persons with FASD." Their intent is that this resolution would be approved by the ABA House of Delegates at the annual meeting in Chicago in August 2012.

Internationally, Alaska is among the forerunners in awareness, diagnosis, and prevention of fetal alcohol spectrum disorders, both nationally and internationally. However, Canada and parts of Australia are leading the world in establishing laws and practices that address FASD as a brain-based disability with specific interventions and solutions.

The Canadian Bar Association passed a resolution in 2010 acknowledging that FASDs involve a range of neurological and behavioral challenges that can include "impaired mental functioning, poor executive functioning, memory problems, impaired judgment, inability to control impulse behavior, inability to understand the consequences of their actions, and inability to internally modify behavior control."

The resolution also acknowledged that "the criminal justice system is based on normative assumptions that a person acts in a voluntary manner, makes informed choices with respect to the decision to commit crimes, and learns from their own behavior and the behavior of others" and " these normative assumptions and sentencing principals such as specific and general deterrence, are not valid for those with FASDs.

Following are other highlights addressed in the CBA's resolution:

- sentencing options available to courts are often ineffective in changing the behavior of those with FASD and those with FASD are frequently repeat offenders

- some courts have ruled that absolutely no rehabilitative or deterrent purpose is served by incarceration of those with FASD;
- laws, programs or activities could ameliorate the disadvantages experienced by those with FASD whose behavior is judged on a standard that they are incapable of meeting because of their disability;
- the Canadian bar is resolved to urge the federal government to amend criminal sentencing laws to accommodate the disability of those with FASD.

In Heather Douglas' article, The sentencing response to defendants with fetal alcohol spectrum disorder (2010) published by Thomas Reuters in Australia, the author notes that "as a result of deficits in executive function resulting in memory difficulties, inability to plan and failure to recognize the consequences of actions, many of those with FASD are likely to fail to pay fines and to breach probation orders ... Suspended sentences will not be useful in a context where cause and effect is not understood. In prison, highly suggestible FASD sufferers are likely to be victimized. While FASD clients cannot be cured of all their symptoms, techniques and approaches have been identified that can be employed by professionals to help the person reach his or her potential."

Conclusion

The state's movement toward "Smart Justice" aims to promote reduced public costs, fewer crimes, and a greater rehabilitative effect on offenders. While some offenders are clearly dangerous enough and need long-term incarceration, the research behind "Smart Justice" suggests that for certain non-violent offenders, treatment programs inside the prison, combined with adequate transition and case management services, will result in lower costs, less recidivism and a safer general public.

Chasnoff, M.D., an international expert on FASD, wrote in an article "Is Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders a Mitigating Factor in Criminal Litigation and Sentencing?" in Psychology Today (2011), "We are in an ethical conundrum. Children, youth and young adults with FASD are more likely than not to end up before the court on criminal or civil charges, but the legal system has not come close to resolving how their cases should be treated. Most individuals with FASD have normal IQs, and most can relate a story as to how they ended up before the judge. Most can even state they understand the charges against them. But the truth is that neurocognitive damage that inhibits executive functioning, decision-making, and emotional and behavioral regulation has tremendous bearing on the capacity of these individuals to understand the ramifications of their actions. These people look normal, they speak normally, but they often have only a superficial understanding of the charges against them."

As noted by Canadian Judge Barry Stuart in R. v. Sam (1993), FASD takes away someone's "... ability to act within the norms expected by society." It is "manifestly unfair to make an individual pay for their disability with their freedom. Society is failed because a sentence calculated for a 'normal' offender cannot serve the same ends when imposed on an offender with FASD," he said. "Not only can traditionally calculated sentences be hopelessly ineffective when applied to FASD offenders, but the punishment itself, calibrated for a non-disabled individual, can have a substantially more severe effect on someone with the impairments associated with FASD," Judge Stuart concluded.

Dear Representative Keller,

It is with great pleasure that the Alaska FASD Partnership supports HB 367 to include FASD as a mitigating factor in sentencing.

The intent underlying Alaska's sentencing structure – that people will modify their behaviors based on the criminal justice system's response to their crimes – is not met when applied to individuals with FASD. These disabilities manifest as deficits in executive function, resulting in impaired adaptive behavior, memory difficulties, an inability to plan, and a failure to recognize the consequences of actions. In the interest of justice, it is important to take these deficits into account during sentencing. Neither the offender nor society benefits from holding individuals with FASD to community standards that they cannot possibly attain given their impairments.

The cost of incarceration in Alaska's prison is about $136 per day. Over the course of five to ten years in an Alaskan prison, an inmate is expected to cost the state close to $250,000-$500,000 (not including medical, mental health or other specialized treatment while incarcerated).

Re: Letter of Support for HB 367

Dear Representative Keller,

The Alaska Mental Health Board and Advisory Board on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse support HB 367 recognizing the special needs presented by Alaskans experiencing fetal alcohol spectrum disorders (FASD) in the justice system.

Alaska's judges, prosecutors, defenders, and court staff work to ensure that everyone who appears in court is treated fairly and with respect. However, Alaskans experiencing FASD often present with special needs and situations that impede the course of justice. Low cognitive functioning, inability to understand and stay within accepted social norms, limited short term memory, impulsivity, and impaired judgment can all result in a person experiencing FASD not being able to explain his or her actions, understand why they resulted in a criminal charge, or understand the criminal justice process. Usually, these impairments do not rise to the level of legal incompetence – but they often make it hard for judges and juries to make decisions that serve our notions of fairness and justice.

Based on research in other jurisdictions, an estimated 60% of inmates experience an FASD, brain injury, or similar organic cognitive impairment. The cost of incarceration is very high and usually does not result in restoration or rehabilitation. In fact, according to a 2009 ISER Study,[1] the cost of prison far exceeds the cost of services. CSSD 151 allows judges – at their discretion – to modify presumptive sentences to take into account the defendant's disabilities and to provide the sort of sentence needed to prevent recidivism and ensure a just outcome for victims, defendants, and our communities.

We thank you for your work on behalf of all Alaskans.

Sincerely,

J. Kate Burkhart

Dear Representative Keller:

The Disability Law Center of Alaska supports the objective of HB 367, which is to allow the courts to take into consideration during sentencing whether the defendant was diagnosed with a fetal alcohol spectrum disorder. If these conditions cannot be considered as mitigating factors, then as one jurist observed, these individuals are paying for their disability with their freedom.

Thank you for your efforts in correcting this manifest injustice.

From: Representative Peggy Wilson PW

Re: HJR 4 - Constitutional Amendment:Transportation Fund

I would like to request the House Judiciary Committee schedule a hearing on HJR4.

HJR 4 will put a constitutional amendment before voters to change the Alaska constitution to allow a dedicated fund for Capital Transportation Projects.

Alaska is geographically the largest state in the country, and the future of the economic and social well being of its citizens is critically dependent on a reliable transportation system. This change to the State Constitution, allowing a dedicated transportation fund, is needed to create and maintain a modern, reliable transportation system for Alaska.

Thank you for your consideration.

House Joint Resolution 4

"Proposing amendments to the constitution of the State of Alaska creating a transportation infrastructure fund"

HJR 4 will put a constitutional amendment before voters to amend the Alaska constitution to reinstate a dedicated fund for Transportation Projects.

The crafters of the constitution allowed for 3 dedicated funds at the time of statehood. They realized that some funds would be needed no matter the economic or political climate. Transportation, one for land and one for sea, were two of the funds that predated the constitution. They lasted for several years until they were eliminated. HJR 4 will reinstate a transportation fund.

In FY10, 87% of our transportation budget came from the federal government. There have been several major deposits to the Federal Highway Fund to keep the expired federal transportation reauthorization program going. After 2 years we are still operating under the old reauthorization guidelines. All indicators show that the new reauthorization bill will be unfavorable for states with small populations due to an emphasis on mass transit and green transportation. It favors toll roads and bridges and other transportation that pays for itself or that can be supported with a public private partnership. Our own DC delegation have told the legislature that Alaska needs to rely less on the federal government and start shouldering some of the burden of improving our transportation infrastructure.

The roads, bridges, airports, ferries and transit systems that make up our state's transportation system are essential to mobility, commerce and economic development. This system enhances economic competitiveness, increases safety and enhances quality of life. There is a growing imbalance between system use and capacity as well as the need for new infrastructure to access our valuable resources. To insure Alaska has the infrastructure necessary to develop our resources as well as providing a quality of life for our citizens we must commit to funding transportation. Having a dependable revenue stream from year to year will allow Alaska to tackle today's congestion and maintenance projects as well as developing the needed access to resources and energy.

Version I has removed one of the revenue streams, airport leases and airspace leases, because federal grants requirements state that the revenue from those leases be used directly on the airports they were collected from.

Analysis

This resolution provides for a Transportation Infrastructure Fund which is assumed to be established in the amount of $1 billion with additional recurring funding from state fuel taxes, registration and driver's license fees, identification card fees, studded tire taxes, state airport lease and space fees, and other designated fees and funds. It is anticipated the fund will be managed with an asset allocation of 38% fixed income, 10% international equity, and 52% domestic equity. Costs of the fund include investment management fees, audit, accounting and custody fees and are projected based on the assumptions provided by the division's investment advisor and the division's cost allocation plan.

FISCAL NOTE

STATE OF ALASKA
2011 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HJR 4

Passage of this resolution would require the constitutional amendment to appear on the 2012 general election ballot. The cost of providing information about the constitutional amendment in the Official Election Pamphlet, as required by AS 15.58, is $1.5. Should the addition of this question require printing an 8-1/2 by 18 inch ballot, the cost will increase to $22.0.

MEMORANDUM February 25, 2011

SUBJECT: Effect of federal laws regarding aviation fuel tax changes in CSHB 30( ) (Work Order No. 27-LS0198\D)

TO: Representative Peggy Wilson
Attn: Becky Rooney

FROM: Brian J. Kane BJK
Legislative Counsel

You have asked the following regarding CSHB 30( ): Is there a problem with sec. 7 of the bill placing a portion of the aviation fuel tax into the transportation infrastructure fund in that it violates 49 U.S.C. 47133?

The pertinent part of sec. 7 of the bill reads as follows:

> All other proceeds of the taxes on aviation fuel shall be paid into the transportation infrastructure fund established in art. IX, sec. 18, Constitution of the State of Alaska [A SPECIAL AVIATION FUEL TAX ACCOUNT IN THE STATE GENERAL FUND. THE LEGISLATURE MAY APPROPRIATE FUNDS FROM THIS ACCOUNT FOR AVIATION FACILITIES].

The concern that has been brought to your attention involves a federal statute dealing with aviation fuel, 49 U.S.C. 47133, which, in part, reads as follows:

> (a) Prohibition. - Local taxes on aviation fuel (except taxes in effect on December 30, 1987) or the revenues generated by an airport that is the subject of Federal assistance may not be expended for any purpose other than the capital or operating costs of -
> (1) the airport;
> (2) the local airport system; or
> (3) any other local facility that is owned or operated by the person or entity that owns or operates the airport that is directly and substantially related to the air transportation of passengers or property.

The state tax on aviation fuel was in place well before December 30, 1987, so it would seem that the state aviation tax is exempted from the requirements of this federal statute. Thus, the money can be used in any manner the state chooses, not just on airport-related projects. Under the current AS 43.40.010(e), money in the special aviation fuel tax account may be appropriated by the legislature for aviation facilities. Thus, even in current statute there is no requirement for the money to be spent on airport-related projects. The change being made in sec. 7 of the bill is simply replacing the "special aviation fuel tax account" with the transportation infrastructure fund as the place where the tax revenue will be deposited.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

MATANUSKA-SUSITNA BOROUGH
TRANSPORTATION ADVISORY BOARD
RESOLUTION SERIAL NO. 11-06

A RESOLUTION OF THE MATANUSKA-SUSITNA BOROUGH TRANSPORTATION ADVISORY BOARD SUPPORTING HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 4, A CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT TO REINSTATE A TRANSPORTATION INFRASTRUCTURE FUND; SENATE BILL 37, HOUSE BILL 30 AND 31, THE CREATION AND FUNDING OF AN ALASKA STATE TRANSPORTATION INFRASTRUCTURE FUND.

WHEREAS, The roads, bridges, airports, ferries and transit systems that make up our state's transportation system are essential to mobility, commerce and economic development; and

WHEREAS, These systems increase safety, enhance economic competitiveness, and lead to a better quality of life; and

WHEREAS, To ensure Alaska has the infrastructure necessary to develop our resources as well as improve the living conditions for our citizens, we must commit to funding transportation; and

WHEREAS, Having a dependable revenue stream from year to year will allow Alaska to manage current congestion and maintenance projects as well as develop access to needed resources and energy; and

WHEREAS, The use of state funds for construction means we will have greater control and funding will go towards completing projects as opposed to the expensive and lengthy federal process; and

WHEREAS, The Matanuska-Susitna Borough has benefited from the use of state funds and has seen projects such as the Bogard Road Extension, Machen Road, and Museum Drive Extensions get done faster and cheaper than they would have using the federal guidelines; and

WHEREAS, In FY10, 87 percent of Alaska's transportation budget came from the federal government; and

WHEREAS, There have been several major deposits to the Federal Highway Fund to keep the expired federal transportation reauthorization program afloat; and

WHEREAS, After two years we are still operating under the old reauthorization guidelines; and

WHEREAS, All indicators show that the new reauthorization bill will be unfavorable for states with small populations such as Alaska due to an emphasis on mass transit and green transportation; and

WHEREAS, Alaska's own Washington D.C. delegation have told the legislature that Alaska needs to rely less on the federal government and start shouldering some of the burden of improving our transportation infrastructure; and

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, that the Matanuska-Susitna Borough Transportation Advisory Board supports HJR 4 which will place a constitutional amendment before voters to change the Alaska Constitution to reinstate a dedicated fund for Transportation Projects.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that the Matanuska-Susitna Borough Transportation Advisory Board supports SB 37, HB 30 and HB 31 creating and funding a State of Alaska Transportation Infrastructure Fund.

ADOPTED by the Matanuska-Susitna Borough Transportation Advisory Board this 23rd day of February, 2011.

ATTEST:

Mary Brodigan
MARY BRODIGAN, CLERK

February 9, 2011

The Honorable Peggy Wilson
Alaska State House
State Capitol Room 408
Juneau, AK 99801

Dear Representative Wilson:

The undersigned business associations, working together under the banner of the Business Advocacy Committee, represent hundreds of firms and tens of thousands of employees from every major industry in Alaska. Our organizations share a common vision for Alaska's future – one in which a thriving private-sector economy creates good jobs for Alaskans and attractive economic opportunities for investors. State government, focused on the right issues, can help make this vision a reality.

Our organizations have identified five priority areas to be dealt with during this legislative session. Progress on each of these priorities will make Alaska a better place for business by encouraging private-sector investment and job creation. We urge you and your colleagues to address these issues.

OIL TAX REFORM

Taxes on the oil industry account for nearly nine out of every ten dollars in revenue the state collects. While current oil prices are exceedingly high relative to historic standards, North Slope oil production is only one-third the level of its peak. Alaska's taxation policy should encourage more investment to reverse this dramatic, continuing production decline. We support meaningful reform of Alaska's oil production tax system that reduces the state's tax burden on all Alaska oil and gas exploration and development activities and encourages increased production.

REGULATIONS

The Alaska Coastal Zone Management Program (ACMP) is due to sunset in 2011. We are comfortable renewing the program in its current form. However, we oppose any changes to the ACMP that diminish the program's ability to provide concise, streamlined, and predictable permitting in Alaska's coastal zone.

LITIGATION REFORM

Alaska's resource industries are ongoing targets of anti-development groups utilizing the court system and the state and federal appeals processes to stop and delay responsible resource development. Other businesses, local governments and community development projects can also be subject to frivolous lawsuits. Meanwhile, state agencies are forced to spend inordinate amounts of staff and financial resources dealing with third-party lawsuits at the expense of their mission to serve the public at-large. We support efforts to bring more accountability to the appeals and litigation processes for community and resource development projects.

FISCAL RESPONSIBILITY

Unrestricted general fund spending within the state's operating budget has increased from $3.1 billion in fiscal year 2006 to $4.8 billion in fiscal year 2011. We do not believe such spending growth is sustainable especially in light of the continuing decline in North Slope oil production. The Legislature and Governor must do more to control growth in the operating budget. We recommend the Legislature hold unrestricted general fund spending in the operating budget to $3.5 billion – a level of spending equal to fiscal year 2010. With regard to the capital budget, we encourage the state to focus on strategic investments that help generate new private sector investment.

STRATEGIC TRANSPORTATION INFRASTRUCTURE

There is strong agreement the long-term economic benefits derived from investment in Alaska's transportation infrastructure far exceed the cost of the initial investment. Considering the vastness of Alaska, the state's current transportation infrastructure is inadequate and requires continued planning, upgrades, and expenditures to assure Alaska citizens are provided with essential services. We support a state funded transportation program that is adequately and predictably funded, provides continuity between succeeding administrations, and addresses all modes of transportation.

Working together we can improve Alaska's business climate. We request an opportunity to meet with you to discuss these matters in more detail. A representative from the Business Advocacy Committee will be in touch with your office to schedule a meeting.

ALASKA MUNICIPAL LEAGUE
2011 STATEWIDE PRIORITIES

- REVENUE SHARING:
  We recommend the Governor include in his budget recommendation, a one-time COLA to Revenue Sharing, based on the cumulative Anchorage CPI for 2007 through 2010, with appropriation of said funds.

- UNFUNDED MANDATES:
  We believe that any state or federal legislation, or rule, that requires an implementation or operation cost, shall be fully funded by the implementing agency. This includes "optional" exemptions handed down to local governments that will diminish the local tax base.

- ENERGY:
  We believe the Legislature must aggressively facilitate affordable energy for all Alaskans through:
  1. The support of oil and gas, as it remains the primary source of energy for most of Alaska;
  2. The encouragement of connectivity between communities, as well as incentives for energy project funding;
  3. An actual time certain process that selects and prioritizes projects;
  4. Full funding of the PCE (Power Cost Equalization) Endowment fund through joint congressional and state appropriations;

- PERS:
  We support a sustainable salary base to pay off the PERS unfunded obligations. AS 39.35.625, and any other similar statutes or regulations that require termination studies, should be repealed. Simply following AS 39.35.255(a)(2), amended with inflation adjustment language, will provide a more efficient, cost effective and equitable method of ensuring that the required PERS salary base is maintained.

- TRANSPORTATION:
  We believe the Legislature should implement:
  1. The dedication of funds for the Alaska Transportation Infrastructure Fund;
  2. A matching grant component for acquiring federal funds and to help local governments to develop otherwise financially difficult projects;
  3. A local government seat at the table during allocation considerations of the Transportation Infrastructure Fund.

ALASKA MUNICIPAL LEAGUE
2011 FEDERAL PRIORITIES

- PAYMENT IN LIEU OF TAXES (PILT):
  We support full funding of the PILT program, to the authorized levels of P.L. 103-379 (over 300 million nationwide).

- SECURE RURAL SCHOOLS AND COMMUNITY SELF-DETERMINATION ACT (SRS/ TIMBER RECEIPTS):
  We support the reauthorization and enhancement of the Secure Rural Schools program (PL 110-343). Reauthorization should maintain coupling between payments to boroughs and active natural resource management; and the connection between sustainable natural resource management and the stability and well being of forest boroughs and communities.

- CLEAN WATER ACT:
  While supporting Clean Water Act provisions that protect wetland habitats and rivers and streams of Alaska, we do not support federal efforts to change the definition of the Clean Water Act from navigable waters to "waters of the United States," and also oppose federal efforts to further expand the authority and responsibilities of the federal agencies in regard to these waters.

- ARCTIC ISSUES:
  We support ratification of the United Nation's Convention on the Law of the Sea. Until that ratification takes place, the US cannot participate in deliberations which affect the national security; environmental concerns relating to the use of the seas; and to economic development for Alaska's coastal communities.

- LAND USE DESIGNATIONS:
  We oppose decisions on land use designations that are not completely reviewed through the proper Congressional system already in place.

- ENERGY EFFICIENCY GRANTS:
  We support full funding of the Energy Efficiency and Conservation Block Grant (EECBG) Program to state and local governments.

- DENALI COMMISSION:
  We support reauthorization and appropriation of the Denali Commission to further construct and improve much-needed infrastructure throughout the State, especially in rural areas.

Legislative Priorities

The Alaska State Chamber of Commerce has adopted three state legislative priorities for the 2011 legislative session. The three statewide legislative priorities are:

Review and Reform Oil Tax Policy to Encourage New Oil Production
Concise and Predictable Permitting in Alaska's Coastal Zone
Create an Alaska Transportation Infrastructure (ATIF) That Will Invest in Alaska's Economy, Safety and Mobility

More than 70 State Chamber members considered over 33 proposals to develop the state and federal positions and priorities. In addition to these priorities, the State Chamber developed positions on a number of other critical issues facing the State of Alaska. The board ratified both the priorities and positions at a meeting Thursday, October 28, in Anchorage.

The legislative priorities will be delivered to the Governor and all sixty members of the State Legislature. "Legislative priorities brought forward are aimed at advocating for a competitive and attractive business climate in Alaska to spur investment and business growth," said Kip Knudson, Chair of the State Chamber. "More than ever, the State Chamber will take a lead role in advocating for a competitive business climate in Alaska and economic growth," Knudson said.

State Chamber members employ the vast majority of private sector workers. The State Chamber established its priorities and positions supported by concise action items needed to achieve each position. Alaska businesses are increasingly challenged by rising energy and logistics costs, burdensome state and federal regulations, lack of sufficient workforce, infrastructure deficiencies, and domestic and global competition. "The Alaska State Chamber is Determined to Improve our 'Dead Last Business Ranking' for Alaska," said Knudson.

The Alaska State Chamber is gravely concerned about the ability of the State of Alaska to continue to grow programs and services at a time when oil supply is dwindling dramatically. Our Legislative positions speak to the need to limit the growth of government programs. These positions and priorities encourage the State to find new streams of revenue to pay for any future expansion of government programs. Government services are an important source of funding for Alaskans businesses, as such a statewide sales and income tax would negatively affect all Alaskan businesses. However, as government growth continues, Alaskans must prioritize the services they receive or be willing to fund them into the future.

The Honorable Peggy Wilson

Dear Representative Wilson:

The Alaska Association of Harbormasters and Port Administrators (AAHPA) is a statewide professional organization comprised of senior managers from 31 municipal harbor systems. Our members operate and maintain the majority of the harbors in the State of Alaska.

The AAHPA strongly supports House Bill No. 30, which among other things provides a funding source for the State's Municipal Harbor Matching Grant Program (AS 29.60.800). This grant program was developed with substantial input and support from the AAHPA in 2006; however, it has received funding in only three of the State budgets enacted since then.

The primary target of this grant program is the small boat harbors constructed by the State of Alaska in the 1960s and 1970s, which have been transferred to local municipalities during the past several years. Most of these facilities were in less than stellar condition at the time ownership was transferred and are in need of major repairs or replacement.

These harbors play a critical economic role by enabling trade, transportation, commercial fisheries, tourism, and recreational opportunities across the State. Providing a stable funding source for the Municipal Harbor Matching Grant Program, as HB 30 will do, is a significant step in ensuring that we are able to adequately repair and maintain these valuable facilities throughout the State of Alaska.

Please contact me at (907) 228-6049 if you have any questions regarding AAHPA's support of HB 30.

Sincerely,

Steven R. Corporon, President

Juneau, AK 99801-1182

Dear Representative Wilson:

On behalf of the Alaska Mobility Coalition (AMC), we strongly support HJR4 (a constitution amendment creating a transportation infrastructure fund) and HB30 (transportation infrastructure fund).

The AMC is a private, non-profit membership organization that represents and advocates for public and community transportation in Alaska. The AMC has ninety seven members across the state from Bethel to Prince of Wales Island. The AMC membership provides over seven million rides annually for Alaskans to get to work, school, shopping trips, recreational opportunities and medical appointments. For more information on the AMC, I have attached a link to our website for your review (http://www.alaskamobility.org)

Alaska is one of just three states that do not provide general operating support for transit service. In addition, there are road maintenance, ferry operation and urban and rural trails that are neglected around the state because of the lack of infrastructure support. The federal government will be reducing its investment in transportation in Alaska in the next few years and it is time for legislature to dedicate its gas taxes and other transportation-related user fees for transportation infrastructure.

The Alaska Mobility Coalition would be honored to serve on the Transportation Infrastructure Fund Advisory Council as proposed in HB 30.

Thank you for your efforts in supporting transit in Alaska. I look forward to working with you and the Alaska legislature on your legislation during the current session.

Sincerely,

David M. Levy

Issues of Concern for the Alaska Mining Industry for 2011

Actions needed by the Administration and/or the Legislature: January 2011

CRITICAL ITEMS: PERMITTING INTEGRITY – LITIGATION REFORM – ENERGY – INFRASTRUCTURE

Integrity of Permitting System - Ensure the integrity of the current, very rigorous, science-based state permitting process and fund it at a level that will ensure its integrity.

- Provide sufficient staff and funding for permitting functions of the Departments of Natural Resources, Fish & Game and Environmental Conservation.
- Establish public confidence in the permitting system.

Alaska Coastal Management Program (ACMP) – Ensure reforms made in 2003 are not compromised.

Litigation Reform – Support efforts to bring more accountability to the appeals and litigation processes for community and resource development projects.

Infrastructure - Advocate for and fund infrastructure that will provide access to remote areas of Alaska so natural resource projects can be developed.

- Settle on a route from the Parks Hwy to Nome and begin development of it.
- Establish an effective standard for pioneer roads.
- Fund roads between communities.

Energy - Advocate and adopt a state energy plan and fund interties, pipelines, hydroelectric, etc. to provide energy for resource development and communities.

- Ensure that Healy Plant #2 comes on line at the earliest possible date.
- Rationalize the management and control of the railbelt electrical intertie system.
- Fund and construct an intertie between the railbelt intertie and Bethel.
- Develop and implement a strategy to provide stable sources of energy to the railbelt.

PERMITTING PROCESS

Water Quality Standards - Continue to revise water quality standards to ensure standards are scientifically supportable and developed using Alaska-specific criteria. Also, ensure continued availability of mixing zones and adoption of anti-degradation regulations.

Non-Profit Foundation Money - Enact legislation to require public disclosure whenever funds from 501(c)(3) non-profit foundations are used to affect public policy; disclosure to include name of the source, amounts and purpose for which the moneys are given.

Financial Assurance - Ensure that financial assurance (bonding) requirements for environmental compliance are managed exclusively by the State. Aggressively oppose federal takeover.

Endangered Species Act/Essential Fish Habitat – Continue to aggressively oppose ESA listings in the courts to ensure decisions are based on sound science.

FISCAL ISSUES

Taxation - Maintain an equitable and stable tax structure at state and local government levels to ensure Alaska industry remains competitive.

State Fiscal Policy - Adopt a long range fiscal plan.

Annual Airborne Geophysical Mapping Program - Increase funding for the extremely effective airborne geophysical mapping program; initiate statewide baseline water quality mapping.

Mineral Education & Training - Continue to support mining engineering and geological engineering, geology, the Mining and Petroleum Training Service (MAPTS), and the Delta Mine

Subject: HJR 4 and HB 30

Key to Alaska's vitality is its transportation system. I vigorously support HJR 4 – the constitutional amendment to re-instate a dedicated transportation fund and HB 30 - the enabling statutes for the fund. This is long overdue and is sorely needed legislation and will greatly benefit interior Alaska. The Senate needs to get on board and proactively support this legislation.

Sincere Regards,

Steve Sorensen P.E.

RE: HJR4

Dear Representative Wilson:

On behalf of the Associated General Contractors of Alaska, a construction industry trade association of 675 business members, I offer support for HJR4.

HJR4 would put an initiative on the ballot for a constitutional amendment to dedicate certain revenue for a state funded transportation program.

A state funded transportation program has been a legislative priority of the AGC for many years, and dedication of funds is the most certain way to insure that a state funded program is maintained. HJR4 is companion legislation to HB30, the enabling legislation for a state funded program, which is also supported by AGC.

Like ballot initiatives of the recent past: the $315 million transportation bond issue in 2008 and the $397 million education facility bond issue in 2010, the AGC and other organizations put considerable effort into their public promotion, and eventual passage. The initiative in HJR4 will elicit even more support from stakeholders.

In closing, Alaska needs a state funded transportation program to begin to address our many transportation needs, and dedication of funds for such a program is an essential element.

Sincerely,

John MacKinnon
Executive Director

House Joint Resolution 14:
Constitutional Amendment:
Secretary of State References
Sponsor Statement

In 1970 Alaska voters approved amendments to the state constitution changing the name of "Secretary of State" to Lieutenant Governor." At that time, however, the drafting attorneys did not catch all of the references to "Secretary of State." HJR 14 corrects the two remaining references to "Secretary of State" in the state constitution. The proposed amendments, if approved by the legislature, would be placed before the voters in the next general election.

MEMORANDUM March 10, 2008

SUBJECT: HJR 37, correcting obsolete references in the state constitution to "secretary of state" (Work Order No. 25-LS1527\C)

TO: Representative Max F. Gruenberg, Jr.

FROM: Jack Chenoweth
Assistant Revisor

The joint resolution has been scheduled for a House State Affairs Committee hearing.

For whatever use you may choose to make of the material, set out below is a replication of my notes shared with the joint resolution's sponsor when this matter was last before the legislature in 2005.

In 1970, the legislature proposed and the voters, by a margin of 71% - 29% (yes = 46,102; no = 18,781), approved a series of amendments to the state constitution that changed the name of the constitutional office of "secretary of state" to the office of "lieutenant governor." In the 1970 joint resolution that proposed the amendments, SJR 2, a copy of which accompanies this memo, the drafting attorneys of the time did not catch all the references to "secretary of state." They missed the two that appear in article II, section 5 and article III, section 25. By proposing amendments to delete in those two sections the obsolete references to secretary of state and substituting references to lieutenant governor, this House joint resolution would correct the oversight.

Unlike statutes, corrections of errors and omissions in the state constitution cannot be completed editorially. Under article XIII, section 1, > Amendments. Amendments to this constitution may be proposed by a two-thirds vote of each house of the legislature. The lieutenant governor shall prepare a ballot title and proposition summarizing each proposed amendment, and shall place them on the ballot for the next general election. If a majority of the votes cast on the proposition favor the amendment, it shall be adopted. Unless otherwise provided in the amendment, it becomes effective thirty days after the certification of the election returns by the lieutenant governor.

Corrective changes of this kind might have been proposed by a constitutional convention called to make changes to the state constitution. However, when, at ten-year intervals since 1970, the proposals have been presented to the voters as referenda under article XIII, section 3, the voters have repeatedly failed to approve calls for state constitutional conventions. The voters defeated the calls for constitutional conventions in each of the 1972, 1982, 1992, and 2002 general elections.

17. Bills Not Signed
18. Effective Date
19. Local or Special Acts
20. Impeachment
21. Suits Against the State

§ 1. Legislative Power; Membership ~ The legislative power of the State is vested in a legislature consisting of a senate with a membership of twenty and a house of representatives with a membership of forty.

§ 2. Members: Qualifications ~ A member of the legislature shall be a qualified voter who has been a resident of Alaska for at least three years and of the district from which elected for at least one year, immediately preceding his filing for office. A senator shall be at least twenty-five years of age and a representative at least twenty-one years of age.

§ 3. Election and Terms ~ Legislators shall be elected at general elections. Their terms begin on the fourth Monday of the January following election unless otherwise provided by law. The term of representatives shall be two years, and the term of senators, four years. One-half of the senators shall be elected every two years.

Editor's Note. The legislature has provided that the terms of legislators begin on the second Monday in January following a presidential election year and on the third Tuesday in January following a gubernatorial election year. See AS 24.05.080.

§ 4. Vacancies ~ A vacancy in the legislature shall be filled for the unexpired term as provided by law. If no provision is made, the governor shall fill the vacancy by appointment.

§ 5. Disqualifications ~ No legislator may hold any other office or position of profit under the United States or the State. During the term for which elected and for one year thereafter, no legislator may be nominated, elected, or appointed to any other office or position of profit which has been created, or the salary or emoluments of which have been increased, while he was a member. This section shall not prevent any person from seeking or holding the office of governor, secretary of state, or member of Congress. This section shall not apply to employment by or election to a constitutional convention.

Editor's Note. Senate Joint Resolution No. 2, "changing the name of the secretary of state to lieutenant governor" in 16 sections of the Alaska Constitution, approved by the voters August 25, 1970, inadvertently omitted express amendment of this section.

§ 6. Immunities ~ Legislators may not be held to answer before any other tribunal for any statement made in the exercise of their legislative duties while the legislature is in session. Members attending, going to, or returning from legislative sessions are not subject to civil process and are privileged from arrest except for felony or breach of the peace.

§ 7. Salary and Expenses ~ Legislators shall receive annual salaries. They may receive a per diem allowance for expenses while in session and are entitled to travel expenses going to and from sessions. Presiding officers may receive additional compensation.

§ 8. Regular Sessions ~ The legislature shall convene in regular session each year on the fourth Monday in January, but the month and day may be changed by law. The legislature shall adjourn from regular session no later than one hundred twenty consecutive calendar days from the date it convenes except that a regular session may be extended once for up to ten consecutive calendar days. An extension of the regular session requires the affirmative vote of at least two-thirds of the membership of each house of the legislature. The legislature shall adopt as part of the uniform rules of procedure deadlines for scheduling session work not inconsistent with provisions controlling the length of the session. [Amended 1984]

§ 9. Special Sessions ~ Special sessions may be called by the governor or by vote of two-thirds of the legislators. The vote may be conducted by the legislative council or as prescribed by law. At special sessions called by the governor, legislation shall be limited to subjects designated in his proclamation calling the session, to subjects presented by him, and the reconsideration of bills vetoed by him after adjournment of the last regular session. Special sessions are limited to thirty days. [Amended 1976]

§ 10. Adjournment ~ Neither house may adjourn or recess for longer than three days unless the other concurs. If the two houses cannot agree on the time of adjournment and either house certifies the disagreement to the governor, he may adjourn the legislature.

§ 11. Interim Committees ~ There shall be a legislative council, and the legislature may establish other interim committees. The council and other interim committees may meet between legislative sessions. They may perform duties and employ personnel as provided by the legislature. Their members may receive an allowance for expenses while performing their duties.

§ 12. Rules ~ The houses of each legislature shall adopt uniform rules of procedure. Each house may choose its officers and employees. Each is the judge of the election and qualifications of its members and may expel a member with the concurrence of two-thirds of its members. Each shall keep a journal of its § 17. Convening Legislature ~ Whenever the governor considers it in the public interest, he may convene the legislature, either house, or the two houses in joint session.

§ 18. Messages to Legislature ~ The governor shall, at the beginning of each session, and may at other times, give the legislature information concerning the affairs of the State and recommend the measures he considers necessary.

§ 19. Military Authority ~ The governor is commander-in-chief of the armed forces of the State. He may call out these forces to execute the laws, suppress or prevent insurrection or lawless violence, or repel invasion. The governor, as provided by law, shall appoint all general and flag officers of the armed forces of the State, subject to confirmation by a majority of the members of the legislature in joint session. He shall appoint and commission all other officers.

§ 20. Martial Law ~ The governor may proclaim martial law when the public safety requires it in case of rebellion or actual or imminent invasion. Martial law shall not continue for longer than twenty days without the approval of a majority of the members of the legislature in joint session.

§ 21. Executive Clemency ~ Subject to procedure prescribed by law, the governor may grant pardons, commutations, and reprieves, and may suspend and remit fines and forfeitures. This power shall not extend to impeachment. A parole system shall be provided by law.

§ 22. Executive Branch ~ All executive and administrative offices, departments, and agencies of the state government and their respective functions, powers, and duties shall be allocated by law among and within not more than twenty principal departments, so as to group them as far as practicable according to major purposes. Regulatory, quasi-judicial, and temporary agencies may be established by law and need not be allocated within a principal department.

§ 23. Reorganization ~ The governor may make changes in the organization of the executive branch or in the assignment of functions among its units which he considers necessary for efficient administration. Where these changes require the force of law, they shall be set forth in executive orders. The legislature shall have sixty days of a regular session, or a full session if of shorter duration, to disapprove these executive orders. Unless disapproved by resolution concurred in by a majority of the members in joint session, these orders become effective at a date thereafter to be designated by the governor.

§ 24. Supervision ~ Each principal department shall be under the supervision of the governor.

§ 25. Department Heads ~ The head of each principal department shall be a single executive unless otherwise provided by law. He shall be appointed by the governor, subject to confirmation by a majority of the members of the legislature in joint session, and shall serve at the pleasure of the governor, except as otherwise provided in this article with respect to the secretary of state. The heads of all principal departments shall be citizens of the United States.

Editor's Note. Senate Joint Resolution No. 2, "changing the name of the secretary of state to lieutenant governor" in 16 sections of the Alaska Constitution, approved by the voters August 25, 1970, inadvertently omitted express amendment of this section.

§ 26. Boards and Commissions ~ When a board or commission is at the head of a principal department or a regulatory or quasi-judicial agency, its members shall be appointed by the governor, subject to confirmation by a majority of the members of the legislature in joint session, and may be removed as provided by law. They shall be citizens of the United States. The board or commission may appoint a principal executive officer when authorized by law, but the appointment shall be subject to the approval of the governor.

§ 27. Recess Appointments ~ The governor may make appointments to fill vacancies occurring during a recess of the legislature, in offices requiring confirmation by the legislature. The duration of such appointments shall be prescribed by law.

§ 1. Executive Power ~ The executive power of the State is vested in the governor.

§ 2. Governor: Qualifications ~ The governor shall be at least thirty years of age and a qualified voter of the State. He shall have been a resident of Alaska at least seven years immediately preceding his filing for office, and he shall have been a citizen of the United States for at least seven years.

§ 3. Election ~ The governor shall be chosen by the qualified voters of the State at a general election. The candidate receiving the greatest number of votes shall be governor.

§ 4. Term of Office ~ The term of office of the governor is four years, beginning at noon on the first Monday in December following his election and ending at noon on the first Monday in December four years later.

§ 5. Limit on Tenure ~ No person who has been elected governor for two full successive terms shall be again eligible to hold that office until one full term has intervened.

§ 6. Dual Office Holding ~ The governor shall not hold any other office or position of profit under the United States, the State, or its political subdivisions.

§ 7. Lieutenant Governor Duties ~ There shall be a lieutenant governor. He shall have the same qualifications as the governor and serve for the same term. He shall perform such duties as may be prescribed by law and as may be delegated to him by the governor. [Amended 1970]

§ 8. Election ~ The lieutenant governor shall be nominated in the manner provided by law for nominating candidates for other elective offices. In the general election the votes cast for a candidate for governor shall be considered as cast also for the candidate for lieutenant governor running jointly with him. The candidate whose name appears on the ballot jointly with that of the successful candidate for governor shall be elected lieutenant governor. [Amended 1970]

§ 9. Acting Governor ~ In case of the temporary absence of the governor from office, the lieutenant governor shall serve as acting governor. [Amended 1970]

§ 10. Succession: Failure to Qualify ~ If the governor-elect dies, resigns, or is disqualified, the lieutenant governor elected with him shall succeed to the office of governor for the full term. If the governor-elect fails to assume office for any other reason, the lieutenant governor elected with him shall serve as acting governor, and shall succeed to the office if the governor-elect does not assume his office within six months of the beginning of the term. [Amended 1970]

§ 11. Vacancy ~ In case of a vacancy in the office of governor for any reason, the lieutenant governor shall succeed to the office for the remainder of the term. [Amended 1970]

§ 12. Absence ~ Whenever for a period of six months, a governor has been continuously absent from office or has been unable to discharge the duties of his office by reason of mental or physical disability, the office shall be deemed vacant. The procedure for determining absence and disability shall be prescribed by law.

§ 13. Further Succession ~ Provision shall be made by law for succession to the office of governor and for an acting governor in the event that the lieutenant governor is unable to succeed to the office or act as governor. No election of a lieutenant governor shall be held except at the time of electing a governor. [Amended 1970]

§ 14. Title and Authority ~ When the lieutenant governor succeeds to the office of governor, he shall have the title, powers, duties and emoluments of that office. [Amended 1970]

§ 15. Compensation ~ The compensation of the governor and the lieutenant governor shall be prescribed by law and shall not be diminished during their term of office, unless by general law applying to all salaried officers of the State. [Amended 1970]

§ 16. Governor's Authority ~ The governor shall be responsible for the faithful execution of the laws. He may, by appropriate court action or proceeding brought in the name of the State, enforce compliance with any constitutional or legislative mandate, or restrain violation of any constitutional or legislative power, duty, or right by any officer, department, or agency of the State or any of its political subdivisions. This authority shall not be construed to authorize any action or proceeding against the legislature.

SPONSOR STATEMENT

HJR 16

"Proposing amendments to the Constitution of the State of Alaska relating to state aid for education."

For 50 years the State of Alaska has grow from a vast frontier into an important player in the nation and the world. While this is a fair assessment of ourselves, it does not address a growing need for quality higher education in the state. We have and continue to do everything possible for our university system, but that has, to a point, been at the expense of other private institutions of higher learning.

HJR 16 opens some of these doors for both public and private education by allowing the release of funds to more than just public schools. This Constitutional Amendment allows those students seeking to excel in secondary and post secondary education to attend a school that meets their needs.

This resolution is on the table with HB 145, but the language in this resolution goes far beyond this bill. It takes into account state sponsored scholarships for all students regardless of financial position. It says we support higher education for our youth at the best possible college, university or vocational program. Alaska has a wealth of educational opportunities that need our support. We do not need another Sheldon Jackson disaster.

HJR 16 is language that needs to be placed in front of the Alaska voters so they may decide on the future of higher education in the state.

AS 14.17.410. Public School Funding.

(a) A district is eligible for public school funding in an amount equal to the sum calculated under (b) and (c) of this section.

(b) Public school funding consists of state aid, a required local contribution, and eligible federal impact aid determined as follows:

(1) state aid equals basic need minus a required local contribution and 90 percent of eligible federal impact aid for that fiscal year; basic need equals the sum obtained under (D) of this paragraph, multiplied by the base student allocation set out in AS 14.17.470 ; district adjusted ADM is calculated as follows:

(A) the ADM of each school in the district is calculated by applying the school size factor to the student count as set out in AS 14.17.450 ;

(B) the number obtained under (A) of this paragraph is multiplied by the district cost factor described in AS 14.17.460 ;

(C) the ADMs of each school in a district, as adjusted according to (A) and (B) of this paragraph, are added; the sum is then multiplied by the special needs factor set out in AS 14.17.420 (a)(1);

(D) the number obtained for intensive services under AS 14.17.420(a)(2) and the number obtained for correspondence study under AS 14.17.430 are added to the number obtained under (C) of this paragraph;

(2) the required local contribution of a city or borough school district is the equivalent of a four mill tax levy on the full and true value of the taxable real and personal property in the district as of January 1 of the second preceding fiscal year, as determined by the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development under AS 14.17.510 and AS 29.45.110 , not to exceed 45 percent of a district's basic need for the preceding fiscal year as determined under (1) of this subsection.

(c) In addition to the local contribution required under (b)(2) of this section, a city or borough school district in a fiscal year may make a local contribution of not more than the greater of

(1) the equivalent of a two mill tax levy on the full and true value of the taxable real and personal property in the district as of January 1 of the second preceding fiscal year, as determined by the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development under AS 14.17.510 and AS 29.45.110 ; or

(2) 23 percent of the district's basic need for the fiscal year under (b)(1) of this section.

(d) State aid may not be provided to a city or borough school district if the local contributions required under (b)(2) of this section have not been made.

(e) If a city or borough school district is established after July 1, 1998, for the first three fiscal years in which the city or borough school district operates schools, local contributions may be less than the amount that would otherwise be required under (b)(2) of this section, except that

(1) in the second fiscal year of operations, local contributions must be at least the greater of

(A) the local contributions, excluding federal impact aid, for the previous fiscal year; or

(B) the sum of 10 percent of the district's eligible federal impact aid for that year and the equivalent of a two mill tax levy on the full and true value of the taxable real and personal property in the city or borough school district as of January 1 of the second preceding fiscal year, as determined by the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development under AS 14.17.510 and AS 29.45.110 ; and

(2) in the third year of operation, local contributions must be at least the greater of

(A) the local contributions, excluding federal impact aid, for the previous fiscal year; or

(B) the sum of 10 percent of the district's eligible federal impact aid for that year and the equivalent of a three mill tax levy on the full and true value of the taxable real and personal property in the district as of January 1 of the second preceding fiscal year, as determined by the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development under AS 14.17.510 and AS 29.45.110 .

(f) A school district is eligible for additional state aid in the amount by which the local contributions that would otherwise have been required under (b)(2) of this section exceed the district's actual local contributions under (e) of this section.

BILL NO. HJR 16

Passage of this resolution would require the constitutional amendment to appear on the 2012 general election ballot. The cost of providing information about the constitutional amendment in the Official Election Pamphlet, as required by AS 15.58, is $1.5. Should the addition of this question require printing an 8-1/2 by 18 inch ballot, the cost will increase to $22.0.

HOUSE BILL NO. 145

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SEVENTH LEGISLATURE - FIRST SESSION

BY REPRESENTATIVE KELLER

Introduced: 2/9/11
Referred: Education, Finance

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act establishing the parental choice scholarship program to be administered by school districts for the purpose of paying the cost of attending grades kindergarten through 12 at public and private schools; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 14 is amended by adding a new chapter to read:

Chapter 31. Parental Choice Scholarship Program.

Sec. 14.31.010. Parental choice scholarship program established. The parental choice scholarship program is established for the purpose of providing public funding of the cost of attending grades kindergarten through 12 at a public or private school selected by the student's parent or legal guardian. Each school district shall administer the program under the provisions of this chapter.

Sec. 14.31.020. Scholarship amount and eligibility. (a) A public school in the state may receive a scholarship under the parental choice scholarship program on behalf of a student who attends the school, regardless of the attendance area in the school district in which the student resides.

(b) A private school qualifies to receive funding under the parental choice scholarship program if the school

(1) submits an application to the district in which the school is located on a form approved by the district indicating that the school intends to participate in the program;

(2) meets the accountability and enrollment standards under AS 14.31.025; and

(3) complies with AS 14.45.030 or 14.45.110 - 14.45.130 and academic accountability standards that include nondiscriminatory practices and regular reports to each student's parent or legal guardian on the student's progress.

(c) Notwithstanding the calculations required under AS 14.17, the district shall pay to a qualified school attended by the student under this section a parental choice scholarship that is equal to the lesser of

(1) the amount the school district in which the student resides would receive under AS 14.17 for a similarly situated student to attend a public school in the district, except that the amount may not exceed 100 percent of the funding the school receives and expends from all state and local sources for the student; or

(2) the actual annual cost to the school of educating the student, including prorated facility and operating expenses.

(d) If a parent or legal guardian has selected a public school outside of the attendance area in which the student resides for a scholarship under this section, the school district in which the student resides may contribute to the reasonable costs of transporting the student to the scholarship recipient school the state aid available under AS 14.09.010 for transportation of the student.

(e) A scholarship received for the benefit of a student under this section must be used for educational purposes. A scholarship is transferable among participating schools.

(f) A participating school shall include students who are enrolled under this section in the student count for purposes of calculating state aid under AS 14.17.610.

Sec. 14.31.025. Accountability and enrollment standards for a participating school. (a) A district shall approve a school for participation in the parental choice scholarship program if the school

(1) operates in compliance with all applicable federal and state laws pertaining to health and safety;

(2) does not discriminate in its admission and hiring practices as prohibited under AS 14.18.010 - 14.18.100;

(3) admits students based on a random selection process, except that the school may apply a preference for siblings;

(4) requires criminal history background checks as provided under AS 12.62.400 for all individuals who are employed in or otherwise work in the school;

(5) if a private school, meets the following financial accountability standards:

(A) submits to the district an annual financial report that complies with uniform financial accounting standards approved by the district;

(B) submits to the district an annual auditor's report that the financial report provided under (A) of this paragraph is

(i) free of material misstatements;

(ii) fairly represents the actual annual per pupil costs claimed under the program; and

(iii) limited to records considered necessary to provide the report;

(C) demonstrates the school's financial ability to repay to the district any overpaid scholarship funds.

(b) A participating school is autonomous and may not be subject to additional regulation by the state unless authorized under AS 14.31.010 - 14.31.090.

Sec. 14.31.035. District duties. (a) In implementing the parental choice scholarship program, the district shall

(1) make scholarship payments directly to the school quarterly after receiving proof satisfactory to the district that the student claimed under a scholarship attends the school on a full-time basis;

(2) make available to students and students' parents or guardians a list of schools that have been approved to participate in the program; and

(3) provide a standard application for use by a school to enroll a student under the program; a school may, however, supplement the application.

(b) If the district denies an application or revokes approval of a school to participate in the program, the district shall, after administrative and judicial appeal periods have lapsed, immediately notify the affected students and the students' parents or guardians.

Sec. 14.31.040. Regulations. The department shall adopt regulations necessary to carry out the program, including

(1) timelines that will result in the highest number of student and school participation;

(2) procedures for calculating for and distributing scholarships;

(3) procedures for application, renewal, and appeal for participating schools and students; and

(4) standards for approval, revocation, and denial for participating schools.

Sec. 14.31.045. Appropriations for scholarships. The legislature may appropriate parental choice scholarship program funds to the department for distribution to the districts. If the appropriation for the program is insufficient in a given fiscal year, the department shall distribute the available funds to the districts prorated by the number of participating students in the program.

Sec. 14.31.090. Definitions. In this chapter,

(1) "district" has the meaning given in AS 14.17.990;

(2) "private school" means a school located in the state that provides education to students attending grades kindergarten through 12, or any combination of those grades, and that does not receive direct state, local, or federal funding, except parental choice scholarship funding;

(3) "program" means the parent choice scholarship program;

(4) "student" means a person residing in the state who is at least five years of age but not more than 21 years of age.

* Sec. 2. This Act takes effect July 1, 2012.

Court's ruling won't end all voucher issues

Apr 6, 2011|

The U.S. Supreme Court decision issued Monday gives us a glimpse into how school voucher programs in Indiana -- and other states -- might one day look.

Tax-credited contributions made to an Arizona scholarship organization that provides tuition scholarships to secular and religious schools can not be sued for violating the establishment clause, the court ruled Monday.

The court ruled in 2002 that school vouchers, even those that went to religious schools, do not violate the First Amendment clause often referred to as separation of church and state.

So as far as the U.S. law is concerned, school vouchers for parochial schools and tax-credited scholarship contributions that might fund students' tuition at religious-based schools are kosher.

But state laws are a different matter, and one shouldn't expect school voucher issues to be settled or go unchallenged in Indiana or in other states grappling with education reforms.

House Democrats' six-week walkout failed to stop House Bill 1003, the school voucher bill, which continues to wind its way through the General Assembly.

Proponents and opponents of House Bill 1003 speculate how it will change Indiana public and private schools for the better or worse. But in reality, House Bill 1003 is not likely the panacea proponents tout it to be, and it's not the nail in public education's coffin that opponents claim. But it is a potential game changer for both public and private institutions.

If it becomes law, school vouchers will influence how Hoosier children are educated. And since no bill is perfect, the voucher system would likely need tweaking in years to come.

While acknowledging Indiana's education system needs reform, we've not been quick to jump on the school voucher bandwagon -- nor are we doing that today. There are too many questions left unanswered. But it appears the Republican-controlled General Assembly is bent on making school vouchers the law.

If school vouchers are approved, Hoosiers should expect lengthy legal challenges, including whether vouchers comply with Indiana's Constitution. If the U.S. Supreme Court is any indicator, it is likely school vouchers are not the constitutional aberration some paint them to be. If this is the case, the question is whether they are as effective as some claim they are. That remains unknown as of now.

When these cases are inevitably filed, people are likely to barricade themselves behind tired arguments. In the rush to defend their positions, we hope both sides remember that the status quo in education is not working in Indiana -- or anywhere else. To find what might work requires change, and change is never easy to entrenched institutions.

Court ruling on school money stirs voucher bill debate

By: MIKEL LIVINGSTON mlivingston@jconline.com 8:30 PM, Apr. 5, 2011|

U.S. Supreme Court ruling this week is already stirring debate on possible ramifications of controversial legislation that would create a school voucher program in Indiana.

On Monday the Supreme Court ruled 5-4 that ordinary taxpayers cannot challenge government programs that use tax breaks to direct money to religious activities. The ruling was directed at an Arizona scholarship program that has mainly benefited religious schools through tax breaks.

Opponents of private school vouchers, including those promoted by Indiana House Bill 1003, fear the ruling will make it more difficult to use federal courts to claim violations of the Constitution's prohibition on direct government aid to religion.

Chris McGrew, a former consultant for the Indiana Department of Education and former board member for the Indiana Coalition for Public Education, said the ruling will "embolden" and "empower" voucher supporters.

Arizona's program has allowed residents to send up to $500 to a tuition scholarship organization that they would have otherwise paid the state in taxes on their incomes, the bulk of which has gone to private religious schools.

Justice Anthony Kennedy wrote the Supreme Court's majority opinion, saying that because the program operates as a tax credit, instead of a direct appropriation of government money, "contributions result from the decisions of private taxpayers regarding their own funds."

Justice Elena Kagan, who voted against the ruling, predicted lawmakers elsewhere would adopt the "road map" Kennedy provided to subsidize religion without facing judicial review.

But McGrew said differing details in the bill will give some legal leverage.

"Constitutionally the ruling in Arizona is different enough, (the Indiana program) will come before the courts," McGrew said. "I just hate that taxpayers and our schools and students are going to have to pay for it."

Last week, Indiana House Democrats failed with an amendment that would have limited the vouchers to only students attending failing schools.

That amendment was defeated and the bill passed, moving to the Senate. The bill will be discussed by the Senate Education and Career Development Committee later today.

If passed in its current form, Indiana's scholarship program would not be limited to lower-income families, special need students or students in failing schools, making it the broadest voucher program in the nation. The program would be open for families earning up to $60,000 a year and within three years there would be no limit on the number of children who could enroll.

William McLauchlan, a Purdue University associate professor, has written extensively on the Indiana state constitution and the judicial behavior of Supreme Court justices. He said he believes Indiana's voucher bill violates both the state and federal constitutions.

McLauchlan said it's a near guarantee the voucher bill will be protested in court if passed, and he anticipates the Indiana Supreme Court would rule against it.

"I can't imagine, if it is a raw use of public funds for a system that supports private educational institutions, that it will stand the test, but there's no telling for sure," McLauchlan said.

Some private school leaders have also expressed reservations about the plan, but for different reasons.

Lafayette Christian School Principal Ken Goff said he and his staff are waiting for more specifics on the proposal before forming an opinion.

"We are still mixed on it," Goff said. "There are still a lot of details not specified yet. We want to make sure we can remain a private Christian school as we are."

Goff said maintaining the independence of a private school remains paramount.

"We're accredited by the state, so we take ISTEPs and we're accountable with that, but we do have some freedom as we are a private school," Goff said. "We just want to be sure if we accept (vouchers) we can keep that autonomy."

Monday's ruling and a 2002 decision that upheld the use of vouchers "should give state legislatures wide discretion in adopting school choice programs," said Tim Keller, executive director of the Arizona chapter of the Institute for Justice. The group represented both religious and secular scholarship organizations that receive the tax money.

"School choice programs are not about aiding religion," Keller said. "They're aimed at helping individual families."

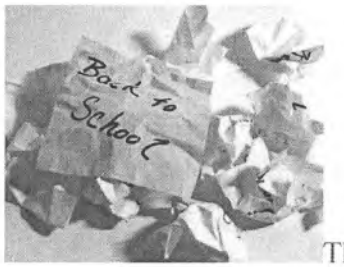
The Proving Grounds: School "Reform" in Washington, D.C.

by Leigh Dingerson

Washington, D.C., is leading the transformation of urban public education across the country—at least according to Time magazine, which featured D.C. Schools Chancellor Michelle Rhee on its cover, wearing black and holding a broom. Or perhaps you read it in Newsweek or heard it from Oprah, who named Rhee to her "power list" of "remarkable visionaries."



The model of school reform that's being implemented here is popping up around the country, heavily promoted by the same network of conservative think tanks and philanthropists like Bill Gates, Eli Broad, and the Walton Family Foundation that has been driving the school reform debate for the past decade. It is reform based on the corporate practices of Wall Street, not on education research or theory. (photo by Flickr user Avolore)

But there's nothing remarkably visionary going on in Washington. The model of school reform that's being implemented here is popping up around the country, heavily promoted by the same network of conservative think tanks and philanthropists like Bill Gates, Eli Broad, and the Walton Family Foundation that has been driving the school reform debate for the past decade. It is reform based on the corporate practices of Wall Street, not on education research or theory. Indications so far are that, on top of the upheaval and distress Rhee leaves in her wake, the persistent racial gaps that plague D.C. student outcomes are only increasing.

Chancellor Rhee helicoptered into Washington in 2007 promising to change the culture of the District of Columbia Public Schools (DCPS). Everyone cheered. But we weren't counting on the new culture coming straight out of Goldman Sachs. Suddenly, decisions were being made at the top and carried out with atomic force. Parents have been treated like consumers—informed about options and outcomes but denied a seat at the table. The district's teachers have been insulted in the national media, fired or laid off in record numbers, and replaced by less credentialed and less experienced newcomers. The model views teachers as a delivery system, not as professionals. High turnover is not just the result—it's the goal. Principals, too, are isolated and expendable. The district lauds the educational mavericks—principals whose "crusades" are described as "relentless" and "methodical"—those who see themselves as an army of one. We are becoming a district where the frontline workers are demoralized, people are looking out for themselves, and trust is all but gone.

Chancellor Rhee is the army of one at the top of the district's lurching reform. An articulate and supremely confident 39-year-old, Rhee is, for now, the movement's national poster child. Pundits debate her occasionally tactless comments in the media, but there has been little analysis of the reform model itself and how its "my way or the highway" culture affects students, parents, and teachers. Adopting the rhetoric for just one moment, in a cost-benefit analysis, are D.C. students gaining the benefits, or are we all paying the price?

The Proving Grounds

DCPS has a reputation as one of the worst school systems in the nation. But it has not always been so troubled.

Washington, with its gleaming white facades and manicured parks, is home to a complicated mix of people and politics. Long a majority African American city, D.C. has only been self-governing since 1973, when a 100-year-long fight for home rule forced Congress to hold elections for the city's mayor and city council. Congress still reviews all legislation passed by the council before it becomes law and retains authority over the District budget.

The vast public sector employment created by the federal government helped establish a significant black middle class that supported its public schools. Many African American parents and grandparents remember their schools as neighborhood institutions and gateways to success. But many of D.C.'s middle-class blacks have left for suburban counties in Maryland and Virginia. What remains is a city with stark divisions—some of the most affluent neighborhoods in the nation, and some of the poorest.

Most of D.C.'s public schools are intensely segregated—like the city's neighborhoods. Though DCPS uses a traditional neighborhood boundary system, students from anywhere in the city may enter a lottery for available seats in any school after neighborhood enrollment is complete. At the elementary level, most schools reflect the demographics of their communities. But in the city's more affluent western wards, white parents begin pulling their children out of DCPS before middle school, sending them to one of the city's boutique charters or elite private schools. The availability of "out-of-boundary" slots increases, making middle and high schools in these neighborhoods the most integrated in the city. Every D.C. high school is majority students of color.

Many of the District's African American and Latino children are from economically isolated and badly neglected communities. For decades, there have been too few resources and too much infighting to support those communities and help their children succeed. Rather than digging deep to address the social, economic, and educational issues involved, however, District leadership has focused on attracting young white professionals back to the urban core. In the late '90s and early 2000s, construction cranes towered over the skyline as block after city block became home to yet another luxury condominium complex. These "urban pioneers"—mostly young, white professionals—have begun to staunch the city's declining population numbers. As they've settled in, they've also become players in school politics.

The current wave of education reform began with Adrian Fenty, a young and energetic city council member, born and raised in D.C. Elected in 2000 at the age of 30, Fenty proved to be a charismatic and effective politician, and was reelected without opposition in 2004. In September 2006 he easily won the Democratic primary for mayor. In hugely Democratic D.C., the primary is, for all intents and purposes, the general election. It was only after his September victory that Fenty announced his plan to take over the District's schools.

Day One:
Teachers Feel the Heat

The day after he took office in January 2007, Fenty introduced legislation to eliminate the city's elected school board and consolidate control of the schools in the mayor's office. The council passed the bill in April, and submitted it for congressional approval. Both the House and Senate approved the bill in May, and it was signed into law by then-President Bush on June 1. Twelve days later, Fenty held a press conference to introduce his new chancellor, Michelle Rhee.

Rhee had just three years of teaching experience, through Teach for America, and no experience running a school, let alone a school system. After dipping her toes in teaching, Rhee had gone on to found and lead the New Teacher Project, an organization that collaborates with school districts to recruit, train, and develop teachers for high-needs schools.

Rhee lost no time proclaiming what was wrong in D.C.: "I know what the obstacles are in these systems that are not conducive to effecting change," Rhee said at the press conference.

The implications of her pronouncement were not lost on those who had been following the national education debate. Over the past decade, research funded by conservative foundations has systematically built a case for transforming teaching as a profession. It began with research connecting "high-quality" teachers to student academic gains. Therefore, pundits began to surmise, low-performing students must just have lazy or incompetent teachers. Once teachers were to blame, it was a hop, skip, and a jump to find the culprit—teachers' unions and collectively bargained contracts that guarantee teachers due process before dismissal. The rhetorical attack on teachers has been shrill enough to stifle what the rest of the decade's research has shown: that teachers generally get better with experience and support; that meaningful parent engagement, strong school leadership, and student-centered learning climates must also be present for schools to succeed; and that no single component by itself can carry a school and its students to their full potential.

Amidst the clamor of teacher bashing, some D.C. teachers experienced Rhee's comments as a bull's-eye drawn on their backs. "We were troubled by her remarks," recalls Kerry Sylvia, a veteran teacher at the city's Cardozo High School. It seemed clear that the "obstacles" that Rhee was referring to were district teachers.

Sweeping Change

In her first months, Rhee demonstrated the frenetic pace of activity that has become her trademark. In the southern heat and humidity of a D.C summer, Rhee crisscrossed the city, meeting with principals and cutting through the district's legendary red tape. Warehouses full of textbooks were emancipated, classrooms stocked. Checks were cut, paint was slapped on, and creaky gears started turning. Many—including principals and parents—were impressed. By the time school started, there was a palpable feeling of forward motion.

At the same time, Rhee was meeting privately with officials from the Gates and Broad foundations, the California-based NewSchools Venture Fund, the American Enterprise Institute, and other key players in the school reform movement. Adrian Fenty and Chancellor Rhee were their new darlings.

That spring, Rhee began firing principals. Sixty-one principals and assistant principals were fired at the end of the school year. Next came the teachers. By July of 2008, according to some reports (neither DCPS nor the Washington Teachers' Union will release actual numbers), Rhee had fired 250 teachers and 500 teachers aides, avoiding union due-process rules by utilizing the "highly qualified" certification requirements of the federal No Child Left Behind Act.

In October, stymied by her inability to negotiate a contract with the union (she wanted, among other things, new provisions in the contract to make it easier for her to fire teachers), Rhee announced that she would implement a little-used procedure allowing principals to place teachers on a 90-day "improvement plan," with the ability to fire them immediately after that.

All the Blame, Not Enough Support

It is worth noting that, as a so-called "education reformer," Rhee has not focused on content or pedagogy. There have been no initiatives to improve teacher induction or strengthen instructional practice. The focus has remained on management and staffing, and the tone has been judgmental rather than supportive.

One of Rhee's early priorities was to establish a new teacher evaluation system that would, in part, make it easier to fire teachers based on their students' performance on standardized tests. It's the latest Wall Street concept embraced by the reformers. Indeed, U.S. Secretary of Education Arne Duncan has proposed that federal funding be contingent upon states developing teacher evaluations directly linked to student test scores. Rhee hoped to set the standard.

Her "director of human capital strategy" took the lead in designing the new system, called IMPACT. It was launched in the 2009–10 school year and again put Rhee into the national spotlight.

IMPACT is a complicated web of more than 20 separate evaluation processes. For teachers unlucky enough to teach subjects and grade levels with test data, 50 percent of their evaluation is based on a patently preposterous calculation of their effect on student scores. Teachers also undergo five short observations by their principal or a "master teacher," based on an extensive "teaching and learning framework" with dozens of indicators. One of the biggest concerns has been that IMPACT will snare some of the district's best teachers in its web—those who refuse to teach to the tests or conform to a checklist of specific practices. The Washington Teachers' Union was worried enough to demand a working group to monitor IMPACT's implementation and results.

Meanwhile, after three years of contentious negotiation, the union and the chancellor announced agreement on a new contract in the spring of 2010. The contract attached bonus money to teacher evaluations and included a significant increase in salaries (ratification of the new contract was stalled briefly when it was revealed that the salary increases were being funded with $64.5 million in one-time grants from the Broad and Walton foundations, among others, and that the grants were predicated on Rhee continuing as chancellor).

Throughout contract negotiations and the roll out of the IMPACT system, Rhee continued to target career teachers, in action and words. In the spring and summer of 2009 the district hired more than 900 new teachers—three times the usual number of summer hires. Then, in October, Rhee announced that a newly discovered budget shortfall required that 266 teachers be laid off. Because the layoffs were budget related, principals were free to ignore the "last hired-first fired" rules in the union contract. According to the union, a substantial number of the laid-off teachers were older, more senior teachers, rather than those who had been hired the previous spring and summer. Students and parents protested as beloved teachers and counselors were yanked out of buildings.

The layoffs created a firestorm of protest as classes were disrupted just weeks into the school year. The crisis got hotter when Rhee's budget shortfall could not be verified and to some appeared contrived. But the final straw for many teachers was when the chancellor, in an interview with Fast Company magazine, justified the layoffs by saying, "I got rid of teachers who had hit children, who had had sex with children, who had missed 78 days of school." Rhee was excoriated for the remark, which proved to be a gross overstatement, but the ousted teachers remained on the curb.

It was just one more in a series of what veteran teachers saw not only as personal attacks, but also as an indication that Rhee had no understanding of the challenges that they and their students face each day.

"It creates a very individualized and isolating feeling in the school," says Sylvia, whose school population includes almost 100 homeless teens. "Our kids come in with a host of real problems. . . . Teachers in the community need to be part of the process, not the object of it. . . . Feeling under attack all the time isn't conducive to collaboration."

Chris Bergfalk, a teacher at H.D. Cooke Elementary School, is convinced that the attacks on teachers spill over into the consciousness of parents as well. "You can feel it," he says. "Parents come into the classroom thinking that teachers are the enemy. . . . It takes more than one meeting, sometimes, before the parents decide that you're OK and basically competent. . . . I've never felt this level of suspicion and mistrust from my students' parents."

Crystal Sylvia, Kerry's sister and a social worker at a struggling but improving elementary school, has a different way of putting it. "We get the message: If we were here, working in the schools before the chancellor arrived, we are part of the problem."

In a fall 2009 survey of teachers conducted by DC VOICE, an education advocacy group, 80 percent of teachers, when asked whether they liked the way the school system was run, said "no." Many of those said their chief complaint was the lack of respect and the blame cast upon teachers. It is difficult to imagine any CEO who has so severely alienated her own workforce being dubbed a "remarkable visionary" in the national press.

But Rhee wasn't done. On July 23, 2010, she announced 165 additional teacher firings. Of those, 76 were dismissed as a result of poor evaluations under IMPACT. And, as feared, some of the fired teachers were among the most experienced, dynamic, and beloved educators in the system. Rhee boasted that more than 700 additional teachers had been judged "minimally effective" through IMPACT, and that a significant number of them would no doubt be fired after the next school year. The union's working group had not even met.

Even before the most recent dismissals, Rhee's transformation of the D.C. teacher workforce has been significant. Almost 40 percent of the teachers now working in DCPS entered the workforce since the chancellor arrived. In the recently completed school year, 120 of those teachers were placed through Teach for America—virtually guaranteeing continued high teacher turnover in district classrooms.

The Living Room Approach to Community Engagement

Chancellor Rhee's approach to parents and communities has been nearly as tone deaf as her dealings with teachers. "She creates lots of opportunities for people to learn what's going on," reflects Jill Weiler, a DCPS parent and community organizer. "I think she really does listen. But it doesn't seem to influence her." For example, in December 2007, Rhee announced the closing or consolidation of two dozen schools. Parents, teachers, and students were frustrated at Rhee's failure to inform, much less involve the impacted communities before the announcement. As required by district rules, Rhee subsequently held a series of community hearings at the affected schools, but made few changes to the plan.

Then, in April 2008, Rhee announced that as many as 10 high schools would undergo federally mandated "restructuring," and that several would be placed under external management. Rhee promised school communities a voice in selecting from among six "partner" organizations she had chosen. But at Anacostia High School, the parents' choice of outside partner was rejected. Instead, Rhee chose Friendship Public Charter School—a charter management organization with five D.C. charter schools—to take over operations at Anacostia. Marvin Tucker, a DCPS parent and assistant football coach at Anacostia, was frustrated by the process: "DCPS doesn't want parent participation. Neither does Friendship." The new management group fired 85 percent of Anacostia's teachers and disbanded the school's Local School Restructuring Team (LSRT)—a DCPS advisory council of teachers and parents at each school.

Rhee isn't deaf to all voices. Her inconsistency exploded into the media in December 2009 when she announced the replacement of the principal at Hardy Middle School—one of the top performing schools in the city, and also one of the most racially mixed. Hardy's art-centered curriculum draws students from across the city to fill seats not taken by students from the surrounding affluent Georgetown community. When a $48 million renovation at the school was completed in 2009, it became at least a more physically attractive option for neighborhood parents. But apparently there was still concern. After the chancellor abruptly announced that she was removing the popular (and by all measures, successful) principal, it was revealed that she had met in a private living room with a dozen Georgetown parents. The group had complained that they didn't feel "welcome" at Hardy.

The announcement set off a firestorm at Hardy, where teachers and parents—even the school's LSRT—had not been consulted or informed of the chancellor's decision. At a subsequent community meeting at the school, emotions were raw. The racial implications of the move were unavoidable, as Rhee tried to explain why she had met privately with a small group of white parents but failed to discuss the move with the school's mostly African American parent leadership. Jeffrey Watson, a parent of two Hardy students, charged that Georgetown neighborhood parents stayed away because they were not comfortable with the racial composition of the school, reported the Washington Post. "Don't play games with people in here. We're not stupid," Watson said at the school hearing. "Rather than having private meetings with them, tell them to walk on over." Despite impassioned pleas from teachers, parents, and students to reinstate the principal, Rhee refused to budge.

Her decisions at Hardy and elsewhere are clear nods to the District's changing demographics. Since 2000—with the proliferation of luxury condominiums and the boom in the housing market—the District has gained 16,000 residents. The city's white population has increased from 30 percent to 40 percent of the total, and the African American population has decreased from 60 percent to 54 percent. Per capita income (adjusted for inflation) has increased from $28,659 to more than $41,000.

The effort to bring middle-class whites back to the city's public schools may be a laudable one, Rhee's process notwithstanding. But for the district's high-profile reform efforts, there is another advantage, whether the chancellor intends it or not.

D.C.'s Education Miracle a Chimera?

Despite glowing reports from the adoring media, D.C.'s education miracle is a chimera at best. There have been dramatic drops in standardized assessment scores, and, on closer analysis, the highly touted increases in D.C. National Assessment of Educational Progress (NAEP) scores are a reflection of the changing demographics of the schools, not the result of any real improvement in the quality of education provided to D.C.'s poorest and neediest students.

Bergfalk has taught in the district for seven years, and was a finalist for D.C. Teacher of the Year in 2010. As a teacher, he is focused and energetic.He is also deeply skeptical. In March 2009, the district announced that the new NAEP scores showed dramatic student increases and progress in closing D.C.'s persistent achievement gap. Bergfalk decided to check it out for himself. Using NAEP's own interactive website, Bergfalk deconstructed the data.

"These test scores are not the result of an increase in student achievement. Instead, they are a result of a change in who was tested," says Bergfalk. He found that for the 4th-grade test, the percentage of African American kids in DCPS (the lowest scoring racial/ethnic group in D.C.) taking the test dropped from 67 percent of test takers to 53 percent of test takers between 2007 and 2009, while the percentage of Hispanic students (with average test scores 12 points higher) rose from 6 percent to 9 percent of test takers, and white students rose from 6 percent to 7 percent of test takers. Where aggregate scores appear to show improvement among DCPS students, the disaggregated data tell a different story. The district continues to have one of the highest achievement gaps among major U.S. cities.

Bergfalk found the same pattern on the 8th-grade NAEP reading test. The percentage of African American kids in DCPS taking the test dropped from 59 percent of test takers to 43 percent of test takers, which is why there was a statistically significant four-point increase overall from 2007 to 2009, but no statistically significant increase for any racial/ethnic subgroup. The overall increase, like that on the 4th-grade test, was again the result of a change in demographics rather than an increase in student achievement.

When DCPS released the results of local assessments in July 2010, the district touted what it called "unparalleled progress" in secondary school results. But at the elementary level, scores took a hit—in some schools dropping by more than 30 percent the past two years. Students in half of all D.C. public schools performed worse in the 2010 assessments than they did in 2009.

The Price of Autocratic Reform

In a Feb. 1, 2010, article, the Washington Post reported that approval ratings for Mayor Fenty and his schools chief had dropped precipitously. The poll showed Chancellor Rhee's approval rating had sunk from 59 percent of residents in January 2008 to 43 percent in early 2010.

The numbers are crucial for Fenty: The mayor is up for reelection this fall, and the race is being cast as hinging on public support for his school reform agenda. Fenty's challenger, Vincent Gray, the current chair of the city council, has been a critic of Rhee's leadership: "We need a mayor who understands that the best way to achieve real and lasting school reform is to involve the community. The best way to help every community in the district is to engage teachers, engage parents, engage principals, and engage students in the decision-making."

Mary Filardo, director of the 21st Century School Fund, agrees. "School change should be about students, families, and communities taking ownership of their schools. "Although there is the illusion that parents may have more access—that Michelle Rhee will answer their emails—there is meager civic life around the public schools."

Cathy Reilly, who leads the Senior High School Alliance of Parents, Principals, and Educators, notes: "It's not an empowering model. . . . The players in the system—parents, teachers, and principals—are supposed to understand that things are being 'fixed' and to get with the program, or get out."

For many parents and teachers, the problem with Rhee's approach was best summed up by Diane Ravitch, former undersecretary at the Department of Education under President George H.W. Bush. Ravitch, speaking at a reception in D.C. last spring, was asked what she thought of D.C. school reform. Ravitch responded with the timeless adage, "It's difficult to win a war when you're firing on your own troops."

Michelle Rhee on D.C. Kids' 'Crappy Education'

Firebrand Schools Chancellor Michelle Rhee, the National Face for Education Reform, Could Lose Her Job

By Z. BYRON WOLF and LEE FERRAN

Sept. 16, 2010

"They are getting a crappy education," Rhee said while discussing the district's schoolchildren in an interview with ABC News. "I mean, you could try to sugar coat it all you want. Subpar, or whatever. But what it is in terms that everyone can understand -- they are getting a crappy education."

It could be comments like that, not to mention aggressive and controversial education policies, landed Rhee in the spotlight of a new documentary "Waiting for Superman," and could also cost her her job.

Rhee, who has become the national face of education reform, could end up jobless after D.C. voters ousted Mayor Adrian Fenty.

Under Rhee's three-year watch, more than 200 teachers have been fired, nearly 20 schools closed and pay has been tied to merit evaluations. But test scores have shot up for elementary and secondary school students, and teachers' salaries were raised.

"The situation we inherited three years ago in Washington, D.C., was absolutely deplorable," Rhee said. "People need to understand that and if that makes people uncomfortable, then so be it."

The victor in Tuesday's Democratic primary -- and therefore almost a sure winner come November in this overwhelmingly Democratic city -- is City Council Chairman Vincent Gray, a chief Rhee antagonist at oversight hearings.

Gray has not said he would fire Rhee, but he hasn't said he would keep her on either.

"I have said on many occasions that after this election is over, I'd like to sit down with Michelle Rhee and let us walk and talk through it, you know, how we might work together," Gray said on CNN Tuesday.

Rhee had campaigned for Fenty. The Washington Teacher's Union campaigned for Gray.

"This has been a significant change in direction and it's going to require me sitting down with Mayor Fenty, the chairman and other people to see what's in the best interests of our kids," Rhee said Wednesday in an interview with MSNBC.

Rhee Feels Guilty About Fenty Loss

"I do feel sort of bad and guilty," she said. "This man, Adrian Fenty, is truly the best leader I've ever worked for. We need more leaders like him who are willing to stake everything to make sure our kids are getting a good education."

Obviously, D.C. voters disagree. And so do the leaders of local and national teachers unions.

An op-ed Wednesday morning by George Parker, president of the Washington Teacher's Union, and Randi Weingarten, president of the American Federation of Teachers, made no mention of Rhee. The article was titled "No Turning Back for D.C. Kids." and it suggested that the teachers would be happier and work more collaboratively with Gray.

"Public education is a marathon, not a sprint. Yes, there's urgency to fixing our schools, but we have to set ourselves on a long-term path toward constant and sustainable progress," wrote the union leaders.

President Obama stayed out of the race, but Secretary of Education Arne Duncan appeared at an event with Fenty and Rhee in the closing days of the election. It was not a campaign event, but Duncan announced the award of $75 million in new federal funding for D.C. schools. He was noticeably absent from any event with Gray.

Rhee Tackles Classroom Challenge

By Amanda Ripley / Washington

In 11th grade, Allante Rhodes spent 50 minutes a day in a Microsoft Word class at Anacostia Senior High School in Washington. He was determined to go to college, and he figured that knowing Word was a prerequisite. But on a good day, only six of the school's 14 computers worked. He never knew which ones until he sat down and searched for a flicker of life on the screen. "It was like Russian roulette," says Rhodes, a tall young man with an older man's steady gaze. If he picked the wrong computer, the teacher would give him a handout. He would spend the rest of the period learning to use Microsoft Word with a pencil and paper.

One day last fall, tired of this absurdity, Rhodes e-mailed Michelle Rhee, the new, bold-talking chancellor running the District of Columbia Public Schools system. His teacher had given him the address, which was on the chancellor's home page. He was nervous when he hit SEND, but the words were reasonable. "Computers are slowly becoming something that we use every day," he wrote. "And learning how to use them is a major factor in our lives. So I'm just bringing this to your attention." He didn't expect to hear back. Rhee answered the same day. It was the beginning of an unusual relationship.

The U.S. spends more per pupil on elementary and high school education than most developed nations. Yet it is behind most of them in the math and science abilities of its children. Young Americans today are less likely than their parents were to finish high school. This is an issue that is warping the nation's economy and security, and the causes are not as mysterious as they seem. The biggest problem with U.S. public schools is ineffective teaching, according to decades of research. And Washington, which spends more money per pupil than the vast majority of large districts, is the problem writ extreme, a laboratory that failure made. (See pictures of a diverse group of American teens.)

Rhee took over Anacostia High and the district's 143 other schools in June 2007, when Mayor Adrian Fenty named her chancellor. Her appointment stunned the city. Rhee, then 37, had no experience running a school, let alone a district with 46,000 students that ranks last in math among 11 urban school systems. When Fenty called her, she was running a nonprofit called the New Teacher Project, which helps schools recruit good teachers. Most problematic of all, Rhee is not from Washington. She is from Ohio, and she is Korean American in a majority-African-American city. "I was," she says now, "the worst pick on the face of the earth."

But Rhee came highly recommended by another prominent school reformer: Joel Klein, chancellor of New York City's schools. And Rhee was once a teacher--in a Baltimore elementary school with Teach for America--and the experience convinced her that good teachers could alter the lives of kids like Rhodes.

Anacostia High has a 24% graduation rate, and only 21% of its students read at grade level. Rhodes is well aware of the miserable statistics, and when he first saw his new chancellor from afar, he thought she looked petite, foreign and underqualified. "I was like, She doesn't look ready for urban kids." But after they exchanged e-mails, he agreed to meet her downtown. He realized almost at once that he had underestimated her. "She actually sat with me," he says, "and talked eye to eye, like I was one of her co-workers." They decided to meet again, this time at Anacostia High. Rhodes began to talk about Rhee to his classmates, and they started writing an agenda for the meeting, detailing all the things that were wrong with the D.C. school system. They had much to tell.

Rhee has promised to make Washington the highest-performing urban school district in the nation, a prospect that, if realized, could transform the way schools across the country are run. She is attempting to do this through a relentless focus on finding--and rewarding--strong teachers, purging incompetent ones and weakening the tenure system that keeps bad teachers in the classroom. This fall, Rhee was asked to meet with both presidential campaigns to discuss school reform. In the last debate, each candidate tried to claim her as his own, with Barack Obama calling her a "wonderful new superintendent."

Hard as it is to imagine Washington schools ranking among the best in the country, the city does have some things working in its favor. The system is relatively small, making it easier to redirect. As in New York City, the board of education was recently dissolved, which means changes can be made without waiting for the blessing of a fractious body of overseers. And now that a third of Washington's kids are in charter schools, there is intense pressure on the public system to keep the students it still has. If they keep fleeing the system at the current rate, enrollment will drop 50% every 10 years.

Each week, Rhee gets e-mails from superintendents in other cities. They understand that if she succeeds, Rhee could do something no one has done before: she could prove that low-income urban kids can catch up with kids in the suburbs. The radicalism of this idea cannot be overstated. Now, without proof that cities can revolutionize their worst schools, there is always a fine excuse. Superintendents, parents and teachers in urban school districts lament systemic problems they cannot control: poverty, hunger, violence and negligent parents. They bicker over small improvements such as class size and curriculum, like diplomats touring a refugee camp and talking about the need for nicer curtains. To the extent they intervene at all, politicians respond by either throwing more money at the problem (if they're on the left) or making it easier for some parents to send their kids to private schools (if they're on the right).

A Teacher from Toledo

ONE DAY IN AUGUST, I SPENT THE MORNING with Rhee as she made surprise visits to Washington public schools. She emerged from her chauffeured black SUV with two BlackBerrys and a cell phone and began walking--fast--toward the front door of the first school. She wore a black pencil skirt, a delicate cream blouse and strappy high heels. When we got inside, she walked into the first classroom she could find and stood to the side, frowning like a specter. When a teacher stopped lecturing to greet her, she motioned for the teacher to continue. Rhee smiled only when students smiled at her first. Within two minutes, she had seen enough, and she stalked out to the next classroom.

In the hallway, she muttered about teachers who spend too much time cutting out elaborate bulletin-board decorations or chitchatting at "morning meetings" with their third-graders before the real work begins. "We're in Washington, D.C., in the nation's capital," she said later. "And yet the children of this city receive an education that every single citizen in this country should be embarrassed by." (See pictures of teens and how they would vote.)

In the year and a half she's been on the job, Rhee has made more changes than most school leaders--even reform-minded ones--make in five years. She has shut 21 schools--15% of the city's total--and fired more than 100 workers from the district's famously bloated 900-person central bureaucracy. She has dismissed 270 teachers. And last spring she removed 36 principals, including the head of the elementary school her two daughters attend in an affluent northwest-D.C. neighborhood.

Rhee is convinced that the answer to the U.S.'s education catastrophe is talent, in the form of outstanding teachers and principals. She wants to make Washington teachers the highest paid in the country, and in exchange she wants to get rid of the weakest teachers. Where she and the teachers' union disagree most is on her ability to measure the quality of teachers. Like about half the states, Washington is now tracking whether students' test scores improve over time under a given teacher. Rhee wants to use that data to decide who gets paid more--and, in combination with classroom evaluation, who keeps the job. But many teachers do not trust her to do this fairly, and the union bristles at the idea of giving up tenure, the exceptional job security that teachers enjoy.

Rhee grew up in a nice neighborhood in Toledo, Ohio, a middle child, between two brothers. Her parents immigrated from South Korea several years before she was born so that her father could study medicine at the University of Michigan. He became a specialist in rehabilitation and pain medicine, and her mother owned a women's clothing store. Education was highly valued in the family, as was independence. After Rhee finished sixth grade, her parents sent her to South Korea to live with an aunt and attend a Korean school, a harrowing experience for a child in a strange land with limited skills in its language. When she returned a year later, her parents sent her to a private school because they found the public schools lacking.

After Rhee graduated from Cornell University in 1992, she joined Teach for America. She spent three years teaching at Harlem Park Elementary, one of the lowest-performing schools in Baltimore. Her parents visited and were stunned by the conditions of the neighborhood. "The area where the kids lived reminded me of a scene after the Korean War," says her father Shang Rhee.

Rhee suffered during that first year, and so did her students. She could not control the class. Her father remembers her returning home to visit and telling him she didn't want to go back. She had hives on her face from the stress.

The second year, Rhee got better. She and another teacher started out with second-graders who were scoring in the bottom percentile on standardized tests. They held on to those kids for two years, and by the end of third grade, the majority were at or above grade level, she says. (Baltimore does not have good test data going back that far, a problem that plagues many districts, so this assertion cannot be checked. But Rhee's principal at the time has confirmed the claim.) The experience gave Rhee faith in the power of good teaching. Yet what happened afterward broke her heart. "What was most disappointing was to watch these kids go off into the fourth grade and just lose everything," Rhee says, "because they were in classrooms with teachers who weren't engaging them."

The summer after her second year of teaching, Rhee met Kevin Huffman, a fellow Teach for America member. They married two years later and had two daughters, Starr and Olivia, now 9 and 6. They moved to Colorado to be closer to Rhee's parents, but the marriage faltered. Huffman and Rhee separated, agreeing to joint custody of the kids. And then Rhee got the offer to run Washington's schools. Huffman, now head of public affairs for Teach for America, had no illusions about the challenges Rhee would face. But when he heard about the job offer, he decided to follow her to D.C. "Even though moving didn't sound like a whole lot of fun," he says, "the reality is that I genuinely believed that she had the potential to be the best superintendent in the country. Most people think about their own longevity, about political considerations." He adds, "Very few people genuinely don't care about anything other than the end result for kids. Michelle will compromise with no one when it comes to making sure kids get what they deserve."

Scorched Earth

WHEN THEY ARRIVED IN WASHINGTON, Huffman and Rhee anted up. They enrolled Starr and Olivia in Oyster-Adams, a public elementary school. Although the school is considered among the best in the city, Rhee quickly concluded that it was inferior to the Colorado public school her daughters had been attending. Among other things, the homework was sporadic and unchallenging, she says. Rhee dismissed the principal before the school year was out, a move that sparked outrage across the city and in her own home. "That," she says, "was probably the decision I got the most grief about."

Rhee is, as a rule, far nicer to students than to most adults. In many private encounters with officials, bureaucrats and even fundraisers--who have committed millions of dollars to help her reform the schools--she doesn't smile or nod or do any of the things most people do to put others at ease. She reads her BlackBerry when people talk to her. I have seen her walk out of small meetings held for her benefit without a word of explanation. She says things most superintendents would not. "The thing that kills me about education is that it's so touchy-feely," she tells me one afternoon in her office. Then she raises her chin and does what I come to recognize as her standard imitation of people she doesn't respect. Sometimes she uses this voice to imitate teachers; other times, politicians or parents. Never students. "People say, 'Well, you know, test scores don't take into account creativity and the love of learning,'" she says with a drippy, grating voice, lowering her eyelids halfway. Then she snaps back to herself. "I'm like, 'You know what? I don't give a crap.' Don't get me wrong. Creativity is good and whatever. But if the children don't know how to read, I don't care how creative you are. You're not doing your job."

Rhee's ferocity has alienated many people--even those who support her ideas and could be helpful to her. This summer the chair of the Washington city council called dealing with Rhee a "nightmare." There has been talk of passing legislation to rein her in. "Michelle Rhee believes in scorched earth," says Randi Weingarten, president of the American Federation of Teachers, a national union that has become unusually involved in local matters in Washington. "I am not saying that D.C.'s school system doesn't need a lot of help. But I have been part of a lot of reforms, and the one thing I have never seen work is a hierarchical, top-down model."

Rhee is aware of the criticism, but she suggests that a certain ruthlessness is required. "Have I rubbed some people the wrong way? Definitely. If I changed my style, I might make people a little more comfortable," she says. "But I think there's real danger in acting in a way that makes adults feel better. Because where does that stop?"

The Data

ON RHEE'S TOUR OF SCHOOLS DURING the first week of classes this year, a parent stopped her to praise her accomplishments so far. Rhee listened with a small smile while systematically cracking each of her knuckles with the thumb of the same hand. Then she got back into her SUV and began furiously e-mailing. When she calls her staff, she does not say hello; she just starts talking. She answered 95,000 e-mails last year, according to her office.

She frequently sounds exasperated. "People come to me all the time and say, 'Why did you fire this person?'" she says. The whiny voice is back. "'She's a good person. She's a nice person.' I'm like, 'O.K., go tell her to work at the post office.' Just because you're a nice person and you mean well does not mean you have a right to a job in this district."

The data back up Rhee's obsession with teaching. If two average 8-year-olds are assigned to different teachers, one who is strong and one who is weak, the children's lives can diverge in just a few years, according to research pioneered by Eric Hanushek at Stanford. The child with the effective teacher, the kind who ranks among the top 15% of all teachers, will be scoring well above grade level on standardized tests by the time she is 11. The other child will be a year and a half below grade level--and by then it will take a teacher who works with the child after school and on weekends to undo the compounded damage. In other words, the child will probably never catch up.

The ability to improve test scores is clearly not the only sign of a good teacher. But it is a relatively objective measure in an industry with precious few. And in schools where kids are struggling to read and subtract, it is a prerequisite for getting anything else done. In their defense, Washington teachers and principals, like educators in many of the country's worst school districts, talk about trying to teach a seventh-grader who is eight months pregnant; about being assaulted by students; about holding meetings for parents, replete with free food, and no one showing up. Washington Teachers' Union leader George Parker worries that test-score data cannot take all this into account: "I don't think our teachers are afraid of demonstrating student growth, but you have to look at the dynamics of the children you're dealing with. If I'm teaching children who have computers at home, who have educated parents, those students can move a lot faster than kids whose parents can't read."

Rhee says she does not expect all kids to move up the charts at the same rate; the important thing is to demand that most do move up. "This is a cultural shift," says Kaya Henderson, Rhee's deputy. "For years, there were no data, and you were a good teacher because the parents or your principal told you so. And so this is a scary thing."

The most glaring example of the backward logic of schools is the way most teachers receive lifetime job security after one or two years of work. As Larry Rosenstock, CEO of eight California charter schools, noted at an education panel last spring, we don't give that kind of job security to pilots or doctors--or any others who hold our children's fate in their hands: "What is it that is so exceptional about teachers that they should have this unique right?"

Teachers got tenure rights in the early 20th century to protect them against meddling politicians and school-board members who treated their jobs as patronage pawns. But the rationale is plainly antiquated. Today dozens of federal and state laws protect teachers (and other people) from arbitrary firing. But most teachers still receive tenure almost automatically. In fact, even before they get tenure, they are rarely let go. Schools spend millions of dollars evaluating teachers, but principals have little incentive to shake up their staffs, and so most teachers end up scoring near the top. "What I'm finding is that our principals are ridiculously--like ridiculously--conflict-averse," Rhee says. "They know someone is not so good, and they want to give him a 'Meets expectations' anyway because they don't want to deal with the person coming into the office and yelling and getting the parents riled up."

Right now, schools assess teachers before they teach--filtering for candidates who are certified, who have a master's degree, who have other pieces of paper that do not predict good teaching. And we pay them the same regardless of their effectiveness.

By comparison, if we wanted to have truly great teachers in our schools, we would assess them after their second year of teaching, when we could identify very strong and very weak performers, according to years of research. Great teachers are in total control. They have clear expectations and rules, and they are consistent with rewards and punishments. Most of all, they are in a hurry. They never feel that there is enough time in the day. They quiz kids on their multiplication tables while they walk to lunch. And they don't give up on their worst students, even when any normal person would.

See pictures of teens and how they would vote.

See pictures of college mascots.

Students know this instinctively. Acquirra Carter, 14, attends Washington's Cardozo High School, where, she complains, kids walk out of classes when they get bored and certain teachers talk on their cell phones when they are supposed to be teaching. But there are exceptions, and Carter knows them when she sees them. "Some teachers find a way. Mrs. Brown, they would not dare walk out of her class. She has total control. Mrs. Lawton, nobody leaves her class. This boy whispered, and she knew it!"

Minefields in the Schoolyard

IN THE VIEW OF RHEE AND REFORMERS like her, the struggle to fix America's failing school system comes down to a simple question: How do you get the best teachers and principals to work in the worst schools? In her quest to figure this out, Rhee has already suffered a major setback. Earlier this year, she proposed a revolutionary new model to let teachers choose between two pay scales. They could make up to $130,000 in merit pay on the basis of their effectiveness--in exchange for giving up tenure for one year. Or they could keep tenure and accept a smaller raise. (Currently, the average teacher's salary in Washington is $65,902.) The proposal divided the city's teachers into raging, blogging factions. This fall, the union declined to put Rhee's proposal to a vote, and its relationship with her has become increasingly hostile.

In October, Rhee vowed to purge incompetent teachers through any means necessary. She has brought on extra staff to help principals navigate the byzantine termination process and says an unprecedented number of teachers have already been put on notice. But she cannot give teachers the huge raises she proposed unless the union agrees to a new contract. So this approach will be slower, more litigious and less inspiring. In other words, it will be all stick and no carrot. It's hard to say if anyone else would have been able to persuade the union to trade away tenure for cash bonuses, but Rhee's sometimes dismissive attitude made it harder for some teachers to trust her.

For now, Mayor Fenty says he still has full confidence in Rhee, and he claims that Washington residents share his enthusiasm. "Regular people love the fact that for once someone is making tough decisions for D.C. schools," says Fenty, who attended the district's public schools. But the disconnect between Rhee's confident, sweeping rhetoric and the tortured reality is sizable, and it is most apparent at ground level, in the schools she is trying to save.

Rhee likes to tell the story of how Rhodes got in touch with her. She recounted it on TV on The Charlie Rose Show in July: "A student sent me this e-mail and said, basically, If you really want to know what's wrong with our schools, you should come and talk to the kids because I'm afraid that by talking to the adults, you might not be getting the real story."

Rhodes has a more nuanced version of the story. After their initial meeting, they met for a second time at Anacostia High, in a room off the library. Rhodes had invited eight fellow students, and they gave Rhee their typed agenda. They talked about the need for better teachers, as Rhee emphasizes when she tells the story. But Rhodes says he also told her about the holes in the floors, the lack of supplies and the fact that most classes did not have enough books for the students to take home. Rhee listened but did not offer many specific solutions. "She was vague," Rhodes says. "I got the sense she didn't want to make promises she couldn't keep."

Then one day last May, Rhee dismissed Anacostia's principal. Rhodes was devastated. He sent Rhee a furious e-mail. "My principal is a mother, mentor and a teacher to us all," he wrote. "I refuse, NO! we refuse the students of Anacostia to let her go." Rhee wrote him back. "She told me not to worry about it," Rhodes says quietly.

One of the things that make school reform so wrenching and slow is that schools become embedded in people's hearts. This is true in rich neighborhoods and poor ones, with good schools and bad. Rhodes talks about his school as if it were an extension of himself. He talks about "my teachers" and "my staff," and he refers to other students as "my colleagues." "I love Anacostia High School," he says. At the same time, he is dismayed by his school. He walks through his halls, pointing out the litter on the floor and the broken lockers. Rhodes is 6 ft. 8 in. (2 m) tall, so he has to look down to talk to almost everyone. He wears white tube socks under his black Nike flip-flops and carries his large frame deliberately, like a gentle overseer. "You see all these lockers? None of them work," he says. "This classroom over here is supposed to be for home economics, but it's never been fixed up."

Rhodes did not contact Rhee again. This year Anacostia has a new principal, and Rhodes admits that the school is functioning better. "All the children are wearing their uniforms," he says. "No kids are in the hallways." If you come to school without your uniform on, a security guard or an assistant principal will "snatch you up and just send you home." All the computers in his Microsoft Word classroom now work.

But on Nov. 19, Rhodes had to evacuate his school when fights broke out in the hallways and three students were stabbed. And he still doesn't use the school bathrooms, which are filthy and sometimes unsafe. He waits until he returns to his grandmother's house, where he lives.

Now that he is a senior, Rhodes spends much of his time worrying about getting into college. As we stand on the front steps of the school one autumn evening after class, I ask him what he wants to study. He answers quickly: "Public administration, with a minor in English." I ask him how he can be so sure. "Because someone told me that's what I have to do to take Chancellor Rhee's job," he says matter-of-factly, watching his drum corps practice and his baton twirlers twirl in the twilight.

CASE SUMMARY

PROCEDURAL POSTURE: Appellant private universities challenged a decision of the Superior Court of the State of Alaska, First Judicial District, Juneau, which granted summary judgment in favor of appellee, the State of Alaska, and held that Alaska's tuition grant program, Alaska Stat. 14.40.751-.806, violated Alaska Const. art. VII, 1. The private universities had filed an action challenging the termination of the program.Tuition grant program that awarded students at private colleges difference between tuition at private and public colleges violated Alaska Constitution, which prohibited payment of public funds for direct benefit of a private educational institution.

OVERVIEW: The grant program awarded Alaska residents attending private colleges in Alaska an amount generally equal to the difference between the tuition charged by the student's private college and that charged by a public college in the same area, not to exceed $ 2,500 annually. The attorney general found that the grants violated Alaska Const. art. VII, 1, which prohibited the payment of money from public funds for the direct benefit of any religious or other private educational institution. The trial court granted summary judgment for the State. On appeal, the court affirmed, holding that the grant program clearly violated 1 because (1) the class primarily benefitted by the tuition grant program consisted only of private colleges and their students; (2) the public funds expended under Alaska Stat. 14.40.776 constituted nothing less than a subsidy of the education received by the student at his private college and thus implicated fully the core concern of the direct benefit provision; (3) the magnitude of benefits bestowed under the program was substantial; and (4) the students to whom benefits were paid were merely conduits for the transmission of state funds to private colleges.

OUTCOME: The summary judgment in favor of the State was affirmed.

Opinion

{599 P.2d 128} The final sentence of article VII, section 1 of our state constitution prohibits the payment of money from public funds "for the direct benefit of any religious or other private educational institution." 1 The question in this case is whether Alaska's tuition grant program, AS 14.40.751-.806, violates this provision.

The tuition grant program awards Alaska residents attending private colleges in Alaska an amount generally equal to the difference between the tuition charged by the student's private college and the tuition charged by a public college in the same area, not to exceed $2,500.00 annually. The student is required to apply the entire amount of the grant towards his or her tuition. AS 14.40.776 (a).

In May of 1976 the attorney general issued an opinion declaring tuition grants to be invalid as a direct benefit to private schools in violation of article VII, section 1. The Department of Administration then stopped paying tuition grants. Appellant Sheldon Jackson College, a private educational institution, filed suit to enjoin the department's termination order, but agreed to dismiss the suit without prejudice when a proposition to amend article VII, section 1, to permit tuition grants was placed on the ballot to be voted on in the general election of November, 1976. 2

The ballot proposition was rejected by the voters 64,211 to 54,636. Sheldon Jackson then renewed its lawsuit and another private university, Inupiat University of the Arctic, filed a complaint in intervention. The superior court concluded that the tuition grant program provides direct benefits to private educational institutions and thus violates article VII, section 1. Summary judgment was thereupon granted in favor of the state. We affirm.

{599 P.2d 129} I

The minutes of the Alaska Constitutional Convention show that an unsuccessful motion was made to delete entirely the direct benefit prohibition of article VII, section 1. 3 The proponent of the motion argued that the state constitutional provisions prohibiting the establishment of religion 4 and prohibiting spending public funds for private purposes, 5 were sufficient to accomplish the objectives of the direct benefit clause. By rejecting this proposal the convention made it clear that it wished the constitution to support and protect a strong system of public schools. 6 Other authorities have also suggested that a constitutional provision barring aid to all private schools serves to enforce the separation of church and state without requiring executive or judicial inquiry into the sectarian affiliation of particular schools, 7 and furthermore disengages the state from the undesirable task of withholding benefits solely on the basis of religious affiliation. 8

At the same time, in expressly rejecting alternative language that would have prohibited "direct or indirect benefits," 9 the delegates to Alaska's Constitutional Convention made it abundantly clear that they did not wish to prevent the state from providing for the health and welfare of private school students, 10 or from focusing on the special needs of individual residents. 11 Article VII, section 1 was thus designed to commit Alaska to the pursuit of public, not private education, without requiring absolute governmental indifference to any student choosing to be educated outside the public school system.

The Alaska Constitution is apparently unique in its express ban only on "direct" benefits. However, in construing state constitutional provisions that prohibit "support" for private schools, 12 or state and federal proscriptions against the establishment of religion, 13 the courts have frequently resorted to a distinction between "direct" and "incidental" benefits. 14 Though the distinction may at times appear more "metaphysical" {599 P.2d 130} than precise, 15 the analyses found in these decisions are helpful in determining generally the type of government action intended to be prohibited by article VII's direct benefit clause. The following generalizations can be drawn from these authorities.

First, constitutional provisions governing aid to private schools have generally been perceived as requiring neutrality rather than hostility from the state; 16 thus the breadth of the class to which statutory benefits are directed is a critical area of judicial scrutiny. 17 For example, though the police and fire protection afforded a private school may provide the school with quite direct benefits, as when a campus fire is extinguished, such benefits are provided without regard to status and affiliation, and have universally been presumed to be constitutional. 18 Conversely, a benefit flowing only to private institutions, or to those served by them, does not reflect the same neutrality and non-selectivity. 19

A second central criterion in determining the constitutionality of a state aid program, is the nature of the use to which the public funds are to be put. As is apparent from the convention debate, the core of the concern expressed in the direct benefit prohibition involves government aid to Education conducted outside the public schools. Though any state assistance that relieves the burden on a private school to provide for the health and welfare of its students will free the school to concentrate its funds on its private educational mission, numerous delegates voiced their understanding that the direct benefit clause would not bar such incidental support. 20 An analogous distinction has frequently been drawn in establishment clause cases, where the pertinent inquiry is whether a statute impacts "essentially secular educational functions" that are separable from the school's religious instruction. 21

Third, in determining whether a school is directly benefitted by public funds, a court must consider, though not in isolation, the magnitude of the benefit conferred. A trivial, though direct, benefit may not rise to the level of a constitutional violation, whereas a substantial, though arguably indirect, benefit may. 22

Finally, while a direct transfer of funds from the state to a private school will of course render a program constitutionally suspect, 23 merely channeling the funds through an intermediary will not save an otherwise improper expenditure of public monies. The courts have expressly noted {599 P.2d 131} that the superficial form of a benefit will not suffice to define its substantive character. 24

II

The foregoing observations are readily applicable to the present case. First, the class primarily benefitted by the tuition grant program consists only of private colleges and their students. Though the appellants characterize the statute as merely equalizing the positions of private and public university students, effectively the chief beneficiaries are the private colleges themselves. Unlike a statute that provides comparable dollar subsidies to all students, 25 Alaska's tuition grant program is not neutral, inasmuch as the only incentive it creates is the incentive to enroll in a private college. Subsidy programs suffering from similar deficiencies have been repeatedly struck down under a variety of state constitutional provisions, 26 as well as under the Federal Constitution. 27

Second, the public funds expended under AS 14.40.776 constitute nothing less than a subsidy of the education received by the student at his or her private college, and thus implicate fully the core concern of the direct benefit provision. While the program may be motivated, as was stated in the preface to the statute as it was originally passed, by the desire to "help retain qualified students in Alaska," 28 such a laudable purpose cannot escape article VII's mandate that Alaska pursue its educational objectives through public educational institutions.

Furthermore, the magnitude of benefits bestowed under the tuition grant program is quite substantial. For the last year in which the tuition grants were paid, 1975-76, Sheldon Jackson received approximately six hundred thousand dollars from the program. The grants were then $1,850 for each eligible student, 29 and for the 1976-77 school year the grants were to be $2,500. 30 According to Sheldon Jackson it has suffered {599 P.2d 132} "a substantially diminished capacity" to function as an educational institution as a result of the termination of the tuition grant program, as reflected in a reduction of students, faculty, income and curriculum offerings. Inupiat University claims a similar impairment of function.

Finally, though the tuition grants are nominally paid from the public treasury directly to the student, the student here is merely a conduit for the transmission of state funds to private colleges. Before the state will deliver a check to the student, the latter must certify under oath and under penalty of perjury that he or she will pay it over to the college. AS 14.40.786. Simply interposing an intermediary "does not have a cleansing effect and somehow cause the funds to lose their identity as public funds. While the ingenuity of man is apparently limitless, the court has held with unvarying regularity that one may not do by indirection what is forbidden directly." Wolman v. Essex, 342 F. Supp. 399, 415 (S.D. Ohio), aff'd mem., 409 U.S. 808, 93 S. Ct. 61, 34 L. Ed. 2d 69 (1972).

Based on the foregoing we have no difficulty in concluding that the tuition grant program is in its effect a direct benefit to private educational institutions and therefore violates article VII, section 1 of our constitution. Though Sheldon Jackson points out that several courts have upheld tuition grant programs involving college students, 31 and that aid programs involving colleges have more readily been found constitutional than similar programs involving elementary and secondary schools, 32 the cited decisions rely on the de minimis degree of church control in the benefitted sectarian colleges. Such reasoning obviously has no application with respect to article VII's direct benefit prohibition, which bans aid to all private educational institutions, including those with no religious affiliation.

Sheldon Jackson also argues that the direct benefit clause was not meant to apply to colleges and universities, but only to primary and secondary private educational institutions. We see no basis for this contention. Both the plain language of the constitution and the minutes of the constitutional debate 33 indicate that all private educational institutions were meant to be included. The judgment is AFFIRMED.

1 Art. VII, 1 of the Alaska Const. provides:

Public Education. The legislature shall by general law establish and maintain a system of public schools open to all children of the State, and may provide for other public educational institutions. Schools and institutions so established shall be free from sectarian control. No money shall be paid from public funds for the direct benefit of any religious or other private educational institution.

2 The proposition would have appended the following language to art. VII, 1: "however nothing in this section shall prevent direct aid to students in accordance with the law." 1976 House Joint Resolution 73 am S. In addition an explanation of the amendment appeared on the ballot as follows:

This is a proposal to amend Article VII, Section 1 of the Constitution of the State of Alaska to allow public funds to be used to provide direct aid such as scholarships and tuition equalization grants to students attending private educational institutions. The Attorney General of the State of Alaska has interpreted Article VII, Section 1 of the constitution as it now reads, to prohibit the state from giving tuition equalization grants to students attending private colleges or universities in the state.

MEMORANDUM December 1, 2010

SUBJECT: Education Vouchers as Scholarships
(Work Order No. 27-LS0223\A)

TO: Representative Wes Keller
Attn: Jim Pound

FROM: Jean M. Mischel
Legislative Counsel

I have enclosed a draft version of an education voucher system based generally on the material provided, accommodating your desire to avoid a significant rewrite of the current funding system for public education and to base the draft on the "mission statement" rather than the model legislation provided. I tried to condense the proposal to that end but received no specific staff direction in doing so. The time allotted in your request does not allow for rewrites.

Although this proposal is unlike your previous education voucher request this session in that this draft attempts to provide vouchers as scholarships for use at both public and private schools, it is my opinion that the draft will not survive Alaska's express constitutional prohibition against providing public funds for the benefit of a private school under article VII, section 1. That section provides, in part:

> No money shall be paid from public funds for the direct benefit of any religious or other private educational institution.

The Alaska Supreme Court has interpreted that section to mean that a tuition assistance program awarding students attending private colleges an amount equal to the difference between public and private college tuition is unconstitutional. Sheldon Jackson College v. State, 599 P.2d 127 (Alaska 1979).

Sheldon Jackson is directly relevant to the proposed scholarship system. In that case, the Court established a three part test for determining the validity of public programs that provide economic benefit to private schools. First, the Court looks at the breadth of the class to which the economic benefits are directed. Second, the Court looks at how the public money is to be used; i.e., whether the benefit to the private school is incidental to education (as with fire and police protection) or whether it amounts to direct aid to education (as with tuition and books). Third, the Court looks at the magnitude of the benefit to private education. Significantly, the Court noted that channeling funds to a private school through an intermediary (such as the student or parent) will not save an otherwise unconstitutional program providing aid to private schools.

In the Sheldon Jackson case, the Court struck down the state's tuition assistance program as violative of all three parts of the test. The class which the tuition assistance program benefitted consisted almost entirely of private schools, the funds were to be used directly for educational purposes (tuition), the benefit conferred on these schools was quite substantial, and the fact that the money was actually paid directly to the students, not the schools, did not mitigate the fact that the students were required to turn the money directly over to the private schools.

The proposed "scholarship" system (which appears to be a voucher system) suffers some of the same infirmities as the tuition assistance program did despite the inclusion of public schools. The money would go to private schools or public schools for the cost of education and facilities. A large part of the class benefitted would be private schools since the public schools currently receive public funding.

The second part of the test would also be violated because the vouchers would be used as a direct benefit to private education rather than an incidental benefit.

The third part of the test, the magnitude of the benefit, also presents a problem. The vouchers are to cover the entire cost of tuition or the cost of tuition plus the facilities spending. Obviously, the benefit to private schools would be substantial and, consequently, unconstitutional.

The proposed scholarship system is also potentially in violation of the "establishment" and "freedom of religion" clauses of article I, section 4 of the Constitution of the State of Alaska. I am aware that voucher systems in Wisconsin and Ohio have survived constitutional challenge under the U.S. First Amendment. See Zelman v. Simmon - Harris 536 U.S. 639 (2002). However, that does not mean scholarships would be upheld under art. I, section 4 of the state constitution. In addition, the Court in Sheldon Jackson noted that First Amendment cases upholding limited forms of assistance to religious schools have no relevance to the preceding analysis of article VII, section 1 of the state constitution. The prohibition against state aid to any private school is much broader than the prohibition under the First Amendment which relates only to religious schools. For example, the United States Supreme Court case upholding a Minnesota program of tax credits for public and private school expenses against a First Amendment challenge (Mueller v. Allen, 463 U.S. 388 (1983)) is not relevant to the analysis of the proposed voucher system in Alaska. Not only did that case involve a tax credit system rather than a voucher system, but it was challenged under the First Amendment. The case did not consider the kind of prohibition against direct aid to private schools found in the Alaska constitution. In other words, even if the scholarship system could survive scrutiny under the First Amendment, it would still violate article VII, section 1 of the state constitution.

In order to survive constitutional scrutiny under the state constitution, a voucher system, such as the proposed parental choice scholarship system, would have to satisfy all three parts of the Sheldon Jackson test and scrutiny under the First Amendment. It is difficult to imagine a voucher system, as I understand the voucher system to work, that would not violate the constitution. The system would have to benefit students in public as well as private schools without giving any substantial direct benefit to education in the private schools. By its nature, the voucher system seems to work against this.

The problem could be circumvented by amending article VII, section 1 of the state constitution as you have proposed in a separate draft resolution.

In addition to constitutional considerations, this draft leaves many unanswered and potentially very expensive questions. For example, do you really intend to make a home district pay transportation costs? How is the student count and scholarship funding affected if a student transfers midyear? How does a public school district which is paid under the existing formula (AS 14.17) account for direct scholarship payments to schools? The material provides no direction on these and other questions that arise under Alaska law.

If I may be of further assistance, please feel free to contact me.

REPRESENTATIVE LES GARA

MEMORANDUM

DATE: February 23, 2012

TO: Representative Carl Gatto

FROM: Representative Les Gara

RE: Hearing Request for CSHJR 33: Limiting Independent Expenditures

On behalf of the eight co-sponsors, we respectfully request that the Committee Substitute for House Joint Resolution 33, relating to the limiting of corporate and union independent expenditures to candidates for office, be scheduled for a hearing in the House Judiciary Committee. Please feel free to contact me, or my aide Toby Smith, with questions at 465-2647.

Attached you will find a background packet for CSHJR 33, including the Committee Substitute version of the bill which was moved out of the State Affairs Committee, a sponsor statement, and backup materials. Please note that included in this packet is a memo to the State Affairs Committee which outlines the changes that were made to the original version of the bill and which are now included in the Committee Substitute version.

We will let you know which witnesses will be testifying once the resolution has been scheduled.

Thank you for your consideration.

CSHJR 33: Resolution Relating to Limiting Campaign Expenditures

Many Americans recognize that the ability of large contributions from corporations, wealthy individuals and organizations to political candidates harms the ability of average citizens to have a voice in their own government. Prior to the landmark United States Supreme Court ruling of Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, 130 S. Ct. 876 (2010), unlimited independent expenditures from corporations and unions was prohibited. Now, corporations and unions can make unlimited independent expenditures supporting or opposing a candidate for public office.

Additionally, a prior ruling, Buckely v. Vallejo, allowed individuals to make unlimited independent expenditures, the effects of which we are now seeing in the flood of Super PAC ads that are, this political season, distorting the political process.

Unless the United States Supreme Court reverses these rulings, the only way to reverse the harmful effects of these decisions is to amend the Constitution of the United States.

Therefore, this resolution calls upon the Alaska State Legislature to urge the United States Congress and the President of the United States to work across party lines and propose a constitutional amendment to prohibit corporations, wealthy individuals and unions from making unlimited independent expenditures.

Please feel free to contact our office if you have any questions.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Chair Lynn and State Affairs Committee Members

FROM: Representative Les Gara

DATE: February 17, 2012

RE: HJR 33

Dear Chair Lynn and Committee Members:

We have crafted a proposed Committee Substitute to HJR 33 to make the following changes requested by Reps. Seaton and Johansen.

We have deleted the reference to limiting contributions by "individuals" as Reps. Johansen and Seaton have requested.

We have added the word "union" to the first whereas, as requested by Rep. Johansen, and deleted the "narrow five to four" reference to the Supreme Court Citizens United decision.

We have deleted the final whereas which referenced distortion of the political process.

We have made clear in the "Be It Resolved" section that we are only addressing "independent expenditures supporting or opposing candidates for public office" per the discussion between Reps. Seaton and Gruenberg.

I cannot speak for the committee members, or how they will vote, but these seemed to be the proposals the committee showed substantial support for during the last hearing.

Please let me know if you have any questions.

Thank you.

CS FOR HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 33( )

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SEVENTH LEGISLATURE - SECOND SESSION

BY

Offered:

A RESOLUTION

Urging the United States Congress and the President of the United States to work to amend the Constitution of the United States to prohibit corporations, unions, and other organizations from making unlimited independent expenditures supporting or opposing candidates for public office.

BE IT RESOLVED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

WHEREAS a vast majority of Americans recognize that the influence of large contributions by corporations, unions, and other organizations harms the ability of average citizens to have a voice in their own government; and

WHEREAS the decision of the United States Supreme Court in Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, 130 S. Ct. 876 (2010), allows corporations, unions, and other organizations to make unlimited independent expenditures supporting or opposing a candidate for public office; and

WHEREAS states and the United States Congress were permitted to ban unlimited independent expenditures from corporations, unions, and other organizations until the ruling of the United States Supreme Court in Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission; and

WHEREAS much of the hundreds of millions of dollars being spent by corporations, unions, and other organizations since the ruling of the United States Supreme Court in Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission is going to negative ads, which often misinform voters rather than lead to a productive discussion of the states' and nation's most important issues; and

WHEREAS, unless the United States Supreme Court reverses its ruling, the only way to reverse the harmful effects of the Citizens United ruling is to amend the Constitution of the United States;

BE IT RESOLVED that the Alaska State Legislature urges the United States Congress and the President of the United States to work across party lines to propose a constitutional amendment to prohibit corporations, unions, and other organizations from making unlimited independent expenditures supporting or opposing candidates for public office.

COPIES of this resolution shall be sent to the Honorable Barack Obama, President of the United States; the Honorable Lisa Murkowski and the Honorable Mark Begich, U.S. Senators, and the Honorable Don Young, U.S. Representative, members of the Alaska delegation in Congress; all other members of the 112th United States Congress; and the presiding officers of the legislatures of each of the other 49 states.

MEMORANDUM January 21, 2012

SUBJECT: Resolution relating to Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, 130 S.Ct. 876 (2010)
(Work Order No. 27-LS1231\A)

TO: Representative Les Gara
Attn: Toby Smith

FROM: Alpheus Bullard
Legislative Counsel

This memorandum accompanies the resolution described above.

Your draft resolution related to "contributions" in addition to "independent expenditures." As I discussed with Toby, Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, 130 S.Ct. 876 (2010), does not address campaign contributions made to candidates.

Citizens United concerned independent election campaign expenditures made by corporations. The Court held that the government cannot suppress political speech, in the form of independent election campaign expenditures, on the basis of the speaker's corporate identity. Because one of the statutes involved in the case and considered by the Court concerned labor unions, it was also, arguably, a case about independent election campaign expenditures made by labor unions, though that is not made explicit in the opinion. Laws regulating corporate and union contributions to candidates, party committees, and political action committees, whether direct or in-kind, were not directly affected by the ruling.

While I modified the resolution to address only independent expenditures and redrafted the language of the resolution to conform with the Manual of Legislative Drafting (2011), you may wish to further amend the content and language of the resolution. Please review the draft to ensure that it remains consistent with your intent.

Please also note that the Lieutenant Governor's office will not e-mail resolutions and has asked our office not to draft resolutions requiring this.

If you have questions, would like a summary of the Citizens United decision, or if I can be of further assistance, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Dear Representative Datto,

Please bring up for debate House Joint Resolution 33 and Senate Joint Resolution 13 to constitutionally limit and prohibit corporate contributions from corporations, unions and other organizations. A corporation should not be able to have more sway over our government than the people our government should represent. It seems we have become an oligarchy rather than a democracy. Please bring this resolution to the floor. One person should equal one vote.

Thank you for your service to our State.

Subject: HJR 33 Hearing?

Hi Melanie. We've substantially narrowed down our resolution seeking a federal constitutional amendment banning unlimited union and corporate "independent expenditures" – those are expenditures that are not connected to a campaign and spent independently of a candidate's control. I've spoken to committee members and it seems we have the support to pass it. I just spoke to Steve Thompson. I know it's not Carl's favorite bill – but can we get a hearing and get it out of committee?

The original resolution also sought to ban unlimited expenditures by individuals, and that was taken out – which is fine. I don't want to bug Carl – texted him this am just to check up on him.

Dear House Judiciary Committee Members:

I serve as an Assembly member here in Juneau, but am writing to you only as an individual. I have never heard a single individual say they support the Citizens United decision or unlimited corporate and union political contributions. The current situation concentrates too much money with a focused decision maker. Corporate and union funds come from their shareholders and union members and the initiatives they these entities choose to support do not represent the majority decision of the stakeholders.

Please hear HJR 33 and keep it moving.

Thank you for your consideration and for your service.

Dear Alaska House Judiciary Members,

I am writing to request that you schedule a hearing on HJR 33 sponsored by Rep. Les Gara. This resolution would send a unified message to Congress and the President to "work to amend the Constitution of the United States to prohibit corporations, unions, and other organizations from making unlimited independent expenditures supporting or opposing candidates for public office." This is not a Republican nor a Democrat issue.The very fabric of representative government was ripped away from all Americans with the US Supreme Court Citizens United decision. I hope you not only allow for a hearing of HJR 33 but support it as well.

Thank you,

Legislators Tell Murkowski Their Concerns

By Dave Donaldson, APRN - Juneau | February 23, 2012 - 5:35 pm

Content blocked by your organization

Near the end of her presentation, Senator Murkowski asked legislators to communicate with the federal government and with her office about any concerns they might have.

She was quickly asked about two messages to the federal government that are pending action in the legislature this session.

A resolution by Anchorage Republican Charisse Millett asks the Department of the Interior and the Bureau of Land Management to clean up 137 abandoned oil wells drilled by the federal government within the National Petroleum Reserve. The wells were part of government-sponsored NPR-A exploration between 1942 and 1982 and have never been plugged or subject to remediation. Leaving them as they are is a violation of state and federal law. Murkowski said that is "Offensive."

> You want an action plan, let's raise hell. This is just wrong. It's just wrong and they can't handle the fact that they have turned their head to the responsibility. And yet, they won't let you walk anywhere up there without sixteen permits – and yet they have failed in their environmental stewardship in a way that is so egregious.

She told Millett that seven of the wells have been cleaned. The next thirty seven wells on the federal list would cost only $50-million to close – but the Interior Department refuses to work on more than one per year.

Another resolution pending in the House is by Anchorage Democrat Les Gara that calls for a Constitutional Amendment to prevent corporations or unions from being able to make unlimited, secret contributions to political campaigns. That was the result of the U-S Supreme Court's now-famous Citizens United decision that allows private money into the process without having the source of that money identified.

Murkowski said the decision has led to a phenomenal impact on this year's elections and is counter to the idea of transparent government.

> For lots of different reasons, people don't like to disclose. For lots of good reasons, we need to disclose. So here's where I am on Citizens United. If we can figure out a way that legislatively that we can require greater disclosure and we need to do it soon.

Murkowski pointed out that she was the beneficiary of a SuperPAC's support in the 2010 election. However, she said the principle supporters or all such groups should be made public – however, she doesn't expect any federal action until after this year's campaigns are over.

Millett's resolution on what's called the Legacy Wells is in the Rules Committee and could be on the House floor at any time. Gara's resolution on Citizens United is in the House Judiciary Committee.

Poll: Large majority opposes Supreme Court's decision on campaign financing

Advertisement

By Dan Eggen
Washington Post Staff Writer
Wednesday, February 17, 2010; 4:38 PM

Americans of both parties overwhelmingly oppose a Supreme Court ruling that allows corporations and unions to spend as much as they want on political campaigns, and most favor new limits on such spending, according to a new Washington Post-ABC News poll.

Eight in 10 poll respondents say they oppose the high court's Jan. 21 decision to allow unfettered corporate political spending, with 65 percent "strongly" opposed. Nearly as many backed congressional action to curb the ruling, with 72 percent in favor of reinstating limits.

The poll reveals relatively little difference of opinion on the issue among Democrats (85 percent opposed to the ruling), Republicans (76 percent) and independents (81 percent).

The results suggest a strong reservoir of bipartisan support on the issue for President Obama and congressional Democrats, who are in the midst of crafting legislation aimed at limiting the impact of the high court's decision.

"If there's one thing that Americans from the left, right and center can all agree on, it's that they don't want more special interests in our politics," Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.), who is spearheading the legislative effort, said in a statement after the poll was released Wednesday.

"We hope we can get strong and quick bipartisan support for our legislation, which passes constitutional muster but will still effectively limit the influence of special interests."

Under legislation being drafted by Schumer and Rep. Chris Van Hollen (D-Md.), companies with foreign ownership or federal contracting ties would be limited in their ability to spend corporate money on elections.

The lawmakers also want to require companies to inform shareholders about political spending; to mandate special "political activities" accounts for corporations, unions and advocacy groups; and to require that corporate executives appear in political advertising funded by their companies.

Other likely proposals include banning participation in U.S. elections by bank bailout recipients.

Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell (Ky.) and other Republican lawmakers have praised the high court ruling as a victory for free speech, however, and have signaled their intent to oppose any legislation intended to blunt the impact of the court's decision.

In Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, the high court ruled 5-4 that corporations have the same rights as individuals when it comes to political speech and can therefore use their profits to support or oppose individual candidates. The decision appears to open the door to unlimited spending by corporations, trade groups and unions in the weeks leading up to an election, which has been explicitly banned for decades.

Democrats have seized on the ruling as an example of judicial overreach and vowed to enact new limits on political spending by corporations, which have traditionally favored Republicans in their contribution patterns. Obama said in his State of the Union address that the ruling will "open the floodgates for special interests, including foreign corporations, to spend without limit in our elections."

Republicans and business groups have rallied around the ruling, arguing that the decision merely levels the playing field with free-spending unions and other liberal interest groups.

Jeff Patch, communications director for the Center for Competitive Politics, which supports the court's decision, said the ruling's potential impact has been distorted by Obama and other Democratic critics.

"Campaign finance is an incredibly complex legal framework, and most Americans have an incentive to remain rationally ignorant about the laws and regulations at issue," Patch wrote in a news release.

The poll, however, suggests there may be political risks for the GOP in opposing limits that appear to be favored by the party's base.

Nearly three-quarters of self-identified conservative Republicans say they oppose the Supreme Court ruling, with most of them strongly opposed. Some two-thirds of conservative Republicans favor congressional efforts to limit corporate and union spending, though with less enthusiasm than liberal Democrats.

Indeed, the poll shows remarkably strong agreement about the ruling across all demographic groups, and big majorities of those with household incomes above and below $50,000 alike oppose the decision. Age, race and education levels also appeared to have little relative bearing on the answers.

The questions on corporate political spending were included as part of a poll conducted Feb. 4 to 8 by conventional and cellular telephone. The margin of sampling error for the for the full poll of 1,004 randomly selected adults is plus or minus three percentage points.

Polling director Jon Cohen contributed to this report.

Outside Spending

Campaign contributions and lobbying expenditures are not the only ways that money is used influence public policy decisions.

Thus far, outside groups (parties, super PACs, corporations, unions, other groups, etc.) have spent $55,573,113 during the 2012 election cycle to run ads, make phone calls, distribute literature and engage in other activities to sway the electorate about candidates and issues.

Organizations not directly affiliated with political parties accounted for $51,794,091 of that amount, of which $45,012,210 was spent by 305 super PACs.

A January 2010 Supreme Court decision (Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission) now permits corporations and unions to make such expenditures from their treasuries directly and through other organizations. The decision allows such activity to take place without complete or immediate disclosure of who funds such communications, preventing voters from understanding who is truly behind many political messages.

As Primary Looms in N.H., Donor Gives Lift to Gingrich

By MICHAEL D. SHEAR and NICHOLAS CONFESSORE

MANCHESTER, N.H. — As candidates spent the weekend trying to catch up to Mitt Romney in New Hampshire, with the primary just two days away, a longtime supporter of Newt Gingrich donated $5 million to a "super PAC" backing his presidential bid, providing a major boost to Mr. Gingrich's ailing campaign.

The donation by Sheldon Adelson was reported Saturday night by The Washington Post. He has long been a generous patron of Mr. Gingrich's political career. The super PAC, Winning Our Future, was formed last month by Becky Burkett, who served until earlier last year as chief development officer for American Solutions, a political action committee that Mr. Gingrich founded. The cash infusion from Mr. Adelson instantly catapults Winning Our Future into the top ranks of candidate super PACs, groups that can raise unlimited amounts of money from donors and spend it all on advertisements and other efforts to back a specific candidate, so long as they do not coordinate with the campaign.

Ms. Burkett declined to comment on the donation on Saturday.

Restore Our Future, a super PAC backing Mr. Romney, the former Massachusetts governor, and run by his former aides, spent millions of dollars in Iowa on advertisements attacking Mr. Gingrich. The withering barrage was widely credited with torpedoing Mr. Gingrich's standing in the state and opening the door for Mr. Romney to narrowly win last Tuesday's caucuses.

The group is already running ads in Florida and South Carolina attacking Mr. Gingrich, and had spent roughly $3.7 million by the beginning of last week.

Rick Santorum, who has emerged as the leading rival to Mr. Romney, began the weekend looking past Tuesday's primary to the 11-day battle in South Carolina that will follow.

Mr. Santorum, a former United States senator from Pennsylvania, picked up support from an important social conservative on Saturday, and his campaign completed the purchase of time for television commercials that will run in South Carolina from Tuesday through Jan. 17, according to Republicans who have been tracking the television market. He planned to head south to Greenville, S.C., as soon as Sunday morning's debate was over.

"We feel great about South Carolina," Mr. Santorum said.

The new commercials would be the Santorum campaign's largest commitment yet in South Carolina, which will hold its primary on Jan. 21. Mr. Santorum was already getting support from his "super PAC," the Red, White and Blue Fund. It began running a 30-second commercial titled "Pride" on Saturday, which emphasizes what his advisers believe is his best appeal to South Carolina voters who remain wary of supporting Mr. Romney: his deeply conservative record.

"He's the principled conservative," the announcer says. Then, taking an implicit shot at Mr. Romney, who has been attacked for reversing some of the more liberal positions he advocated as the governor of Massachusetts, the announcer adds, "Rick Santorum, the conservative we can trust."

Mr. Santorum was set to receive the support of Gary Bauer, the chairman of the conservative group Campaign for Working Families, who said he planned to endorse Mr. Santorum officially when he arrives in South Carolina. Mr. Bauer, who declared in an interview last week that he would not take part in a concerted effort "to try and stop Mitt Romney," said he had concluded that Mr. Santorum's middle-class background made him a stronger general election candidate against President Obama.

"It's going to be a particularly bitter, nasty general election. That's what the White House is signaling with the class warfare rhetoric," Mr. Bauer said in an interview on Saturday. "In an election like that, you want the base of your party to be on fire for the candidate."

With just three days left before voting in the New Hampshire primary, Mr. Santorum made his closing argument the one that candidates have been leveling against Mr. Romney for months — that Mr. Romney is not conservative enough to be the party's standard-bearer.

Standing on the bench of a picnic table here on a balmy afternoon outside a small delicatessen, Mr. Santorum used his sharpest language yet, saying that Mr. Romney was the candidate of the "establishment" and would only perpetuate "the status quo."

"The leader in this race fashions himself as, 'I'm a C.E.O., I'm a good manager,' " Mr. Santorum said in a near shout as he spoke without a microphone. But, he said, the country did not need a manager. "It needs someone with a bold vision to transform Washington to limit government, not to manage the problems that are in that city," he said.

Mr. Gingrich and Ron Paul both echoed Mr. Santorum's attack against Mr. Romney.

Mr. Gingrich released a flier called "Not Romney!" that hammers the message that "Romney is not a conservative" and "Romney is not electable." Mr. Paul has said that Mr. Romney "won't stand firm" for conservative principles.

Mr. Romney continued to largely ignore his rivals. Campaigning at a rally in Derry on Saturday morning, Mr. Romney hammered away at President Obama's leadership.

"What frightens me today is we have a president I don't think who understands the nature of America, the power of opportunity and freedom," Mr. Romney said. "He said he was going to bring big things to America. Well, he did, but they came with great big price tags and they didn't work out so well. Big things, bad things, expensive things."

Polls show that Mr. Romney leads the field by a wide margin in New Hampshire. But he and his allies spent the day trying to lower expectations, even as they sought to keep his supporters motivated.

"Let me tell you: don't get too confident with those poll numbers. I've watched polls come and go," Mr. Romney said at a breakfast rally on Saturday. "Things change very quickly. It's very fluid. I need to make sure you guys get your friends to go out and vote, and you vote as well."

Also on Saturday, five former United States ambassadors to the Vatican endorsed Mr. Romney, choosing a Mormon over two Roman Catholic rivals in the race for the Republican presidential nomination.

In a statement showcased by Mr. Romney's campaign, the ambassadors said they "are united in our wholehearted support for the candidacy of Mitt Romney for the presidency of the United States because of his commitment to and support of the values that we feel are critical in a national leader."

Jon M. Huntsman Jr., a former governor of Utah, continued to campaign across New Hampshire. At stops on Saturday morning, he beseeched voters to be serious about their choice.

"The pundits come into New Hampshire, as they are now, and say, 'Here's how it's going to happen folks,' " Mr. Huntsman said at a town-hall-style meeting in North Haverhill, where about 100 people turned out. "Then the people of New Hampshire step in and it's a different reality. You always, always upend conventional wisdom, and I think you're going to do it again."

Mr. Paul had said he planned to support his party's eventual nominee, even though most of the other Republican candidates, he believed, would hew close to the status quo.

"I will support the Republican nominee, because I think they will be better" than President Obama, he said. "But I think it will be marginally better."

Gov. Rick Perry of Texas, who is not competing in New Hampshire but will appear in the debates here, planned to go to South Carolina on Sunday for a last effort to save his candidacy.

Reporting was contributed by Katharine Q. Seelye from Amherst, N.H.; Trip Gabriel and Richard A. Oppel Jr. from Concord, N.H.; Abby Goodnough from North Haverhill, N.H.; and Jeff Zeleny from Manchester.

Casino mogul Sheldon Adelson's family is bankrolling Gingrich Super PAC

By James V. Grimaldi, Updated: Wednesday, February 1, 11:51 AM

Family members of Las Vegas Sands casino magnate Sheldon Adelson donated $1 million last year to the independent committee behind presidential hopeful Newt Gingrich, in addition to the $10 million that Adelson and his wife, Miriam, have given the super PAC this year.

Newly released federal reports show that the Winning Our Future political action committee, which backs Gingrich's campaign, is more closely tied to the Adelson family than previously known. Of the $2 million in donations reported by the super PAC through the end of 2011, half of the money came from the daughters and son-in-law of Miriam Adelson, according to filings made to the Federal Election Commission late Tuesday.

After Gingrich's overwhelming loss to Mitt Romney in Tuesday's Florida GOP primary, Winning Our Future will likely need another infusion of cash if it plans to stay active in upcoming contests, particularly Super Tuesday, March 6, when 10 states hold primaries and caucuses. The super PAC may again turn to the Adelson family, which has single-handedly kept Gingrich's presidential bid alive with handsome donations to the group. The Adelsons are strong backers of Gingrich's views on Israel, where Miriam Adelson was born.

The large donations from the Adelson family members, who had maxed out in making individual contributions to Gingrich's campaign, helped Winning our Future launch a barrage of negative advertising against Romney. Sheldon Adelson is chairman of the Las Vegas Sands Corp., operator of casino resorts worldwide, and one of the richest men in America. Miriam Adelson is a physician.

The new reported donations come from Miriam Adelson's oldest daughter, Yasmin Lukatz, and Yasmin's husband, Oren Lukatz, who gave $250,000 each. Miriam Adelson's second daughter, Sivan Oschorn, gave $500,000. Miriam Adelson has four children; the two daughters who donated to the PAC are from her first marriage, to a Tel Aviv physician.

The Adelsons declined to comment, but friends of the couple said that they expect them to remain loyal to Gingrich. "He will stick with Newt until Newt drops out of the race," said an associate of Adelson who spoke on condition that he not be named so he could comment frankly about his longtime friend. "I think he'll do whatever he needs to do to support Newt and do whatever he needs to do to beat Barack Obama."

Winning Our Future, whose spokesman Rick Tyler declined to comment, has spent about $12 million to promote Gingrich's candidacy so far, according to reports. It is unclear exactly how much the PAC has raised because the FEC has required the group to report those funds only through the end of December. The Adelsons gave $10 million in January.

The only other major donors to the PAC listed in the report were from Texas billionaire Harold Simmons, who is a major backer of Texas Gov. Rick Perry, and Alabama commercial real estate investor W. S. Propst. Each gave $500,000 each in December.

Super PACs, under recent court rulings, can accept unlimited amounts of donations as long as the committees do not coordinate with a campaign. Winning Our Future is run by former Gingrich associates who had previously worked for Gingrich's campaign and his similarly named 527 nonprofit organization.

Winning Our Future reported to the FEC as the address for Miriam Adelson's daughters and son-in-law — Ochshorn and the Lukatzes — as being the Venetian hotel in Las Vegas owned by Sheldon Adelson's Las Vegas Sands Corp.

Yasmin Lukatz serves on the board of trustees of the Dr. Miriam and Sheldon G. Adelson Educational Campus, a school in Las Vegas. A 2008 story from the Israeli news site Haaretz.com referred to Lukatz as a high-ranking Las Vegas Sands Corp. executive, and her biography on the campus Web site states that she is special assistant to Sheldon Adelson, chairman and CEO of Las Vegas Sands. But a company spokesman said Lukatz is no longer an employee of her stepfather's firm.

Little is known about Lukatz, who began making contributions to Republicans in 2007 and is listed in federal reports by campaigns as a homemaker or an executive at the Venetian. According to Haaretz.com, Yasmin Lukatz returned to Israel "to do military service as an officer in the Israel Air Force. Afterward she stayed on, concluding cum laude a first degree in law and business administration at Tel Aviv University. "

Before Oren Lukatz married Yasmin Oschorn in 2009, he had not made a campaign contribution to a candidate to federal office, records show. Since late 2010, he has made nearly $400,000 in donations, including the recent PAC gift.

His Twitter bio says that he was "born and raised in Israel, educated in Europe and in the United States." A graduate of the San Francisco Art Institute, Oren Lukatz's photography has been shown in U.S. galleries, according to his Web site. One recent show, "Road Closed Ahead," features "dead-end alleys, old motels, neglected buildings, empty pools and filthy streets" near the Las Vegas Strip, the Web site said.

Sivan Oschorn studied astrophysics and business administration, according to Haaretz.com, and she is married to attorney Patrick Dumont, a vice president of Las Vegas Sands, according to FEC filings. Dumont also is a major GOP contributor.

INDEPENDENT SPENDING IN ALASKA, 2006-2010

OVERVIEW

OVERVIEW

The U.S. Supreme Court's January 2010 Citizens United v. FEC ruling permitted corporations and unions to spend unlimited amounts of money from their general treasuries to advocate for or against candidates. After the Citizens United ruling, the Alaska State Legislature passed a bill allowing corporations and unions to use their treasury funds to pay for independent expenditures that targeted candidates. Prior, those entities were only allowed to fund independent expenditures targeting ballot measures.

From 2006 through 2010, entities and individuals spent $2.6 million targeting ballot measures and nearly $1 million targeting candidates. Although no appreciable increase in spending was observed in 2010 when compared to previous elections, the targets shifted radically, from ballot measures to candidates. Nearly $1 million of the $1.2 million spent in 2010 targeted candidates, while all but $158 of the $2.5 million spent during the three previous elections targeted ballot measures.

TABLE 1: INDEPENDENT SPENDING COMPARED TO DIRECT CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS IN ALASKA, 2006–2010

ELECTION	TOTAL INDEPENDENT SPENDING FOR OR AGAINST CANDIDATES AND MEASURES	TOTAL DIRECT CONTRIBUTIONS TO CANDIDATES AND MEASURES	INDEPENDENT SPENDING COMPARED TO DIRECT CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS
2006	$1,930,767	$14,257,313	14%
2007	$166	$172,586	>1%
2008	$582,432	$16,994,996	3%
2010	$1,238,923	$10,276,910	12%
TOTAL	$3,752,288	$41,701,805

The type of spender changed over the study period as well. Whereas the top spending sector in 2006 was business ($1.8 million), and tribal governments (nearly $397,000) in 2008, after the law changed in 2010, policy organizations led the spending with more than $810,000.

Despite being legally allowed to do so in 2010, corporations reported no independent expenditures, though we cannot know if they gave to policy organizations that do not have to publicly disclose their donors. Conservative policy organizations were among the top spenders in 2010, led by the Republican Governors Association with $705,807. Unions, spending for the first time in 2010, kicked out the next-largest amount at $279,068.

Advertising commanded most of the independent spending dollars in the study period 2006–2010, taking 71 percent, or $2.7 million. Candidate support activities such as phone banks and mailings took up another 24 percent, or $888,910.

METHODOLOGY

The National Institute on Money in State Politics collects independent spending reports in states that provide robust disclosure. These states define "independent expenditure" and "electioneering communication" in statute at least as thoroughly as the federal definition. In Alaska, electioneering communications are reported as expenditures on the 15-6 form if independent, and on the candidate's form if for self. (For example, a candidate can make what Alaska defines as an electioneering communication in support of his or her own candidacy). Therefore, only the expenditures reported on the 15-6 form were collected by the Institute.

The Institute used the information provided on disclosure reports filed by individuals and committees to assign an occupation code to the filers. When that information was not provided, staff conducted additional research to determine a filer's economic interest, where possible. The occupation codes are based on the Standard Industrial Classification system used by the federal government.

If an expenditure lists multiple targets, and the amount paid does not specify how much was attributable to each target, the target amount is left blank. Therefore, the total spent on each target may be under-reported.

The Institute does not equate money spent in opposition to one candidate with money spent in support of that candidate's opponent, and instead discusses money spent by race. Only expenditures made with the purpose of influencing state elections were reported.

STATE OF DISCLOSURE IN ALASKA

Alaska stands out among the 50 states as a leader in disclosing independent expenditures. The state requires meaningful reporting about who makes the expenditures, who the expenditures supported or opposed, what the expenditures paid for, and when they were made. The expenditures are reported on a form created specifically for that purpose, making them easy to find. Alaska requires timely filing for reports and then takes the important next step of making that information readily available to the public via an easily navigable online system. Alaska allows organizations and people to make independent expenditures on candidates and ballot measures. One unique feature of reporting in Alaska is that funders can take a neutral position on issues and candidates that draw their spending.

Alaska separately defines independent expenditures from other types of political communications:

- Independent expenditures are defined as "an expenditure that is made without the direct or indirect consultation or cooperation with, or at the suggestion or the request of, or with the prior consent of, a candidate, a candidate's campaign treasurer or deputy campaign treasurer, or another person acting as a principal or agent of the candidate;"

- Electioneering communications are defined as those that "(A) directly or indirectly identifies a candidate; (B) addresses an issue of national, state, or local political importance and attributes a position on that issue to the candidate identified; and (C) occurs within the 30 days preceding a general or municipal election;"

- Express communications are defined as "a communication that, when read as a whole and with limited reference to outside events, is susceptible of no other reasonable interpretation but as an exhortation to vote for or against a specific candidate;"

- Issue communications are those that "(A) directly or indirectly identifies a candidate; and (B) addresses an issue of national, state, or local political importance and does not support or oppose a candidate for election to public office."

Political communications "include advertisements in any media, billboards, handbills, websites, and other communications intended to influence the election outcome."[1]

Electioneering communications are generally reported as independent expenditures. Whether or not express communications and issue communications are reported depends on specific circumstances (Alaska Statute 15.13.110).

TOP INDEPENDENT SPENDERS & FUNDERS IN ALASKA, 2006–2010

At nearly $1.5 million, ConocoPhillips was the largest independent spender between 2006 and 2010, all of it opposing Measure 2 in 2006. The measure, had it passed, would have imposed a new, temporary, tax on natural gas leases.

TABLE 2: TOP INDEPENDENT SPENDERS IN ALASKA, 2006–2010

SPENDER	ELECTION	TOTAL
ConocoPhillips	2006	$1,473,182
Republican Governors Association	2010	$705,807
NANA Regional Corporation	2008	$380,993
Robert Gillam	2008	$178,808
Northwest & Canada Cruise Association	2006	$151,135
TOTAL		$2,889,925

The Republican Governors Association was the largest spender targeting a candidate, putting $705,807 on TV ads and direct mail opposing Democrat Ethan Berkowitz's 2010 gubernatorial run. No money was spent targeting Republican Governor Sean Parnell, and only $32,106 was spent supporting Berkowitz. Berkowitz raised 81 percent as much money as Parnell did, and lost the race by a significant margin.

Overall, the third-largest spender was NANA Regional Corporation—a corporation owned and operated by the Iñupiat—which spent $380,993 opposing Primary Measure 4 in 2008. The measure would have created two new water quality standards, specifically regulating the disposal of mining waste. The measure failed by a margin of roughly 24,600 votes of 192,000 cast.

Robert Gillam was the largest individual source of independent expenditures. He spent $178,808 to support Primary Measure 4 in 2008. Gillam is the founder of McKinley Capital Management, a hedge fund managing funds for institutional investors.

Rounding out the top spenders is the North West & Canada Cruise Association, which spent $151,135 against Measure 2 in 2006.[2]

2010 ELECTIONS IN ALASKA

In all, 24 entities made $1.2 million in independent expenditures in 2010. Most of that money —$977,585— targeted candidates. In comparison, candidates raised nearly $8.5 million in direct contributions.

Prior to 2010, when corporations and unions could not use their treasury funds on independent expenditures that targeted candidates, the 2006 gubernatorial race saw exactly $157 in independent expenditures. Four years and one U.S. Supreme Court ruling later, the 2010 gubernatorial race between Republican incumbent Gov. Sean Parnell and Democratic challenger Ethan Berkowitz attracted $737,913 in independent spending for and against—more than any other contest that election.

Berkowitz's campaign raised 81 percent of the amount Parnell raised—$690,282 for Berkowitz compared to $851,126 for Parnell. However, independent spending against Berkowitz actually exceeded the amount his campaign raised in contributions. The Republican Governors Association (RGA), which did not contribute directly to Parnell, spent $705,807 on TV ads and direct mail attacking Berkowitz.

Two unions spent money supporting Berkowitz. The Alaska Public Employees Association spent $8,655 and the National Education Association Alaska spent $23,451. Their PACs also contributed to Berkowitz's campaign:

$1,000 from the National Education Association Alaska and $2,000 from the Alaska Public Employees Association (the maximum allowed by law). Berkowitz lost the race by a significant margin.

TABLE 3: ALASKA'S 2010 GUBERNATORIAL RACE

CANDIDATE	DIRECT CONTRIBUTIONS TO CAMPAIGN	INDEPENDENT EXPENDITURES FOR	INDEPENDENT EXPENDITURES AGAINST	TOTAL
Berkowitz	$690,282	$32,106	$705,807	$1,428,195
Parnell	$851,125	$0	$0	$851,125
TOTAL	$1,541,407	$32,106	$705,807	$2,279,320

Other notable races included:

- House District 7: Several labor unions and labor coalitions independently spent $72,781 to oppose incumbent Republican Mike Kelly and support Democratic challenger Bob Miller. Miller unseated Kelly.
- Senate District P: This race drew $55,820 in independent spending. The majority of that went to two women battling for the open seat. Labor organizations spent $39,180 in support of Democrat Janet Reiser. Planned Parenthood and the Putting Alaska First Committee spent $14,538 in opposition of Republican Cathy Giessel. Giessel won the seat. As an interesting aside, a third contender with no party affiliation, Phillip Dziubinski, drew $2,002 in support from the Senate Democratic Campaign Committee. Reiser got no direct support from that group.
- Justice Fabe Retention Election: Alaska Family Action independently spent $42,392 to oppose Supreme Court Justice Dana Fabe's retention. Fabe raised no campaign funds in that election, but won retention.

2008 ELECTIONS IN ALASKA

Six entities made a total of $582,432 in independent expenditures in 2008.

The NANA Regional Corporation, a Regional Alaska Native corporation with 12,500 Iñupiat shareholders, spent $380,993 to craft an independent campaign against Primary Measure 4. That measure, which failed, sought to place water quality standards on new metal mining operations; the NANA Regional Corporation feared its Red Dog Mine would be adversely affected. The NANA Corp did not contribute to Alaskans Against the Mining Shutdown, the ballot measure committee formed to oppose the measure. Independent spending, however, paled in comparison to the money raised directly by the committees. Committees in favor of the measure raised $2.9 million; the committee opposed to it raised $8.9 million.

2007 ELECTIONS IN ALASKA

Two entities made just $166 in independent expenditures in 2007.

Special Advisory Vote in April, which prompted the legislature to seek a constitutional amendment to prohibit the state from offering benefits to same-sex partners of employees, garnered only $354 in independent spending. The Juneau National Organization for Women spent $166 in opposition to the measure, and Focus on the Family spent $188 in support of it. The measure narrowly passed with 53 percent of the vote, though proponent committees raised significantly less than opponent committees in direct contributions.

2006 ELECTIONS IN ALASKA

Twenty-one entities made a total of $1.9 million in independent expenditures in 2006.

Two ballot measures garnered 98 percent of the independent expenditures in 2006; all of that money was spent opposing the measures.

TABLE 4: INDEPENDENT EXPENDITURES TARGETING BALLOT MEASURES IN ALASKA, 2006

TARGETED MEASURE	SUBJECT	INDEPENDENT SPENDING TOTAL
General Measure 2	Gasoline Tax	$1,742,670
Primary Measure 2	Cruise Ship Tax	$151,135
	TOTAL	$1,893,805

General Measure 2, vetted by former Governor Wally Hickel and other state politicians as a means of forcing gas companies to build a gas pipeline to transport natural gas to market, was the target of the lion's share of the money, $1.7 million. The measure, soundly rejected by 65 percent of the voters, sought to "levy a new state tax on certain oil and gas leases overlying large deposits of natural gas."[3] The tax would have been repealed once the pipeline was built and would have provided for a partial tax credit for any taxes paid while the measure was in effect.Oil companies spent nearly as much money in independent expenditures opposing the measure—$1.6 million—as they contributed to committees running campaigns against it—$1.7 million. ConocoPhillips Alaska spent $1.5 million of the oil industry's total independent expenditures, or 85 percent of the overall total spent opposing Measure 2. ConocoPhillips gave $252,000 to two committees in addition to the money it spent itself. BP Alaska gave $457,000 to three ballot measure committees in addition to the $58,219 it spent itself.There were three ballot measure committees opposing Measure 2, and one supporting it. That committee took in a total of $500. Measure 2 failed by a two-thirds margin.The North West & Canada Cruise Association spent $151,135 in opposition to Primary Measure 2, which sought to impose a tax on cruise ships. The association's independent expenditures were in addition to providing all but $13,700 of the $1.4 million raised by Alaskans Protecting Our Economy, which formed to oppose the measure. The measure passed.

CONCLUSION

Although the amount of reported independent spending did not appreciably increase in Alaska after the Citizens United ruling, both the spenders and the targets changed. In 2010, the majority of independent expenditure money was spent on candidates, rather than on ballot measures as in the past.

The spenders changed from mostly corporations to mostly policy organizations. Corporations reported no independent expenditures themselves, though it is unknown if they gave to policy organizations that do not have to publicly disclose their donors. Labor organizations,[4] however, began spending directly for the first time in 2010, ponying up $279,068, which is 23 percent of the total spent.

HJR 40 RS 2477 Rights of Way

CS FOR HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 40(RES)

Commending the governor and the administration for aggressively working to enforce the rights of the state in R.S. 2477 rights-of-way; urging the governor and the attorney general to develop a working alliance with other western states to protect and enforce the states' interests in ensuring access using rights-of-way authorized by R.S. 2477; urging the governor and the attorney general to support the State of Utah and the southern counties of Utah in a lawsuit against the federal government concerning R.S. 2477 rights-of-way, including filing an amicus brief in support of Utah; urging the governor to dedicate state resources to establish, protect, and enforce the state's interests in R.S. 2477 rights-of-way and to preserve state rights-of-way against encroachment by the federal government; urging the governor to reestablish a federalism section in the Department of Law and sections in the Department of Natural Resources and the Department of Fish and Game to support the preservation of the state's rights and powers in compact cases; and urging the governor to prepare an appropriation request to fund an aggressive effort by the state to resolve issues relating to R.S. 2477 rights-of-way, including possible litigation, and to continue to work to preserve the rights of the state in regard to R.S. 2477 rights-of-way.

"RS 2477 RIGHTS-OF-WAY"

House Joint Resolution 40 is the next step in moving transportation corridors forward in Alaska. All across the state there are hundreds of traditional trails and routes that have been used for centuries. Theses corridors are a critical part of how we will transport goods and services in the future.

Even Congress recognized that when it enacted and repealed Revised Statute 2477's that these trails have the tradition and need to be continued and even expanded to improve commerce. In several states across the west, including Alaska the repeal included language allowing the identification of existing potential RS 2477's as they have become to be called.

So far Alaska has identified 670 right-of ways that clearly qualify. These are part of the more than 20,000 R.S. 2477s already identified in the West. The problem now is convincing the federal government to release these to the states.

This resistance by Federal departments has resulted in the state's having to take the issue to court. Presently the lead suit is Utah and Alaska needs to join in that effort with a minimum of an amicus brief.

This resolution commends the administration for its efforts so far and also directs it to continue its efforts by supporting Utah's lawsuit. It also raises the current Alaska bar by asking the Governor to provide a request to the next legislature for specific funding to continue the RS 2477 efforts.

Without this effort commerce in Alaska will continue to be expensive and nearly impossible. RS 2477s are a critical key that cannot be ignored.

A RESOLUTION

Commending the governor and the administration for aggressively working to protect the interests of the state in rights-of-way under R.S. 2477; urging the governor and the attorney general to develop a working alliance with the governors, attorneys general, and legislatures in other western states to protect and enforce the states' interests in ensuring access using rights-of-way authorized by R.S. 2477; urging the governor and the attorney general to support the interests of the State of Utah and southern counties of Utah in R.S. 2477 rights-of-way by actively seeking confirmation of R.S. 2477 rights-of-way through various means, including initiating litigation in this state; urging the governor and the attorney general to develop a strategy for resolving the dispute over the right to continued access using R.S. 2477 rights-of-way in the state, including the possibility of bringing lawsuits against the federal government to preserve the state's interest in rights-of-way; urging the governor to further strengthen the resources of the state for protecting the state's rights by continuing to focus the efforts of the Department of Law, the Department of Natural Resources, the Department of Fish and Game, and other departments on defending the state's rights and powers with regard to access and federalism issues; and urging the United States Congress to enact legislation requiring federal agencies with land management authority to establish a process to recognize valid R.S. 2477 rights-of-way claims expeditiously after a notice of intent to claim an R.S. 2477 right-of-way has been filed without the need to dispute those claims in court and to participate in good faith in the process.

BE IT RESOLVED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

WHEREAS, in 1866, R.S. 2477 granted rights-of-way across unappropriated federal land to encourage the development of western land; and

WHEREAS R.S. 2477 rights-of-way were perfected by simple use or development; and

WHEREAS R.S. 2477 rights-of-way were established in the state through use or development until virtually all federal land in the state was withdrawn in 1969; and

WHEREAS, when R.S. 2477 was repealed in 1976 under the Federal Land Policy Management Act (43 U.S.C. 1701), valid existing rights under R.S. 2477 were expressly protected; and

WHEREAS the Alaska State Legislature has recognized 602 rights-of-way in statute, and the Department of Natural Resources has identified at least 67 additional valid R.S. 2477 rights-of-way; and

WHEREAS historic R.S. 2477 rights-of-way represent a key component of the mandate in art. VIII, sec. 1, of the Constitution of the State of Alaska to encourage the settlement of the state's land and the development of the state's land and resources; and

WHEREAS the United States Department of the Interior and the United States Forest Service refuse to recognize an R.S. 2477 right-of-way unless adjudicated and validated in a decision by a court of competent jurisdiction; and

WHEREAS unilateral resistance by the federal government to the existence of the state's rights-of-way causes great harm to the ability of the state to execute its duty to manage state resources by making them accessible and available for maximum use consistent with the public interest, as required in art. VIII, sec. 1, of the Constitution of the State of Alaska; and

WHEREAS the State of Utah recently filed notices of intent to sue to enforce its interests in more than 18,000 R.S. 2477 rights-of-way in that state; and

WHEREAS the State of Alaska and the State of Utah share similar objections to the large withdrawals of Federal Conservation Units that are managed by the United States Department of the Interior and the United States Forest Service, agencies that both unilaterally deny the existence of valid state easements; ~~and~~

WHEREAS virtually all of the state's natural resource development projects are unnecessarily burdened by numerous federal laws, including the Endangered Species Act, the Clean Water Act, and myriad arbitrary federal regulators and policies implementing and enforcing those and other federal laws;

BE IT RESOLVED that the Alaska State Legislature commends the governor and the administration for aggressively working to protect the interests of the state in rights-of-way under R.S. 2477 and urges the governor and the attorney general to develop a working alliance with the governors, attorneys general, and legislatures in other western states to protect and enforce the states' interests in ensuring access using rights-of-way authorized by R.S. 2477; and be it

FURTHER RESOLVED that the Alaska State Legislature urges the governor and the attorney general to support the interests of the State of Utah and southern counties of Utah in R.S. 2477 rights-of-way by actively seeking confirmation of R.S. 2477 rights-of-way through various means, including initiating litigation in this state; and be it

FURTHER RESOLVED that the Alaska State Legislature urges the governor and the attorney general to develop a strategy for resolving the dispute over the right to continued access using R.S. 2477 rights-of-way in the state, including the possibility of bringing lawsuits against the federal government to preserve the state's interest in rights-of-way; and be it

FURTHER RESOLVED that the Alaska State Legislature urges the governor further to strengthen the resources of the state for protecting the state's rights by continuing to focus the efforts of the Department of Law, the Department of Natural Resources, the Department of Fish and Game, and other departments on defending the state's rights and powers with regard to access and federalism issues; and be it

FURTHER RESOLVED that the Alaska State Legislature urges the United States Congress to enact legislation requiring federal agencies with land management authority to establish a process to recognize valid R.S. 2477 rights-of-way claims expeditiously after a notice of intent to claim an R.S. 2477 right-of-way has been filed without the need to dispute those claims in court and to participate in good faith in the process.

COPIES of this resolution shall be sent to the Honorable Barack Obama, President of the United States; the Honorable Joseph R. Biden, Jr., Vice-President of the United States and President of the U.S. Senate; the Honorable Ken Salazar, United States Secretary of the Interior; the Honorable John Boehner, Speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives; the Honorable Nancy Pelosi, Minority Leader of the U.S. House of Representatives; the Honorable Harry Reid, Majority Leader of the U.S. Senate; the Honorable Mitch McConnell, Minority Leader of the U.S. Senate; the Honorable Jeff Bingaman, Chair of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee of the U.S. Senate; the Honorable Gary R. Herbert, Governor of Utah; Kathy Davis, Assistant Attorney General, State of Utah, Office of the Attorney General, Division of Public Lands; the Honorable Lisa Murkowski and the Honorable Mark Begich, U.S. Senators, and the Honorable Don Young, U.S. Representative, members of the Alaska delegation in Congress; and all other members of the 112th United States Congress.

Re: HJR 40

Dear Representatives Seaton and Feige:

On Monday the House Resources Committee heard HJR 40, addressing RS 2477 rights-of-way and other matters. Included in the resolution is language encouraging the Governor to re-establish federalism sections within the Departments of Law, Natural Resources, and Fish and Game. I am informed that the Committee would like to know whether the Department of Law supports creation of a federalism sub-section.

While the Department welcomes the Legislature's strong support and encouragement to defend State title to RS 2477 rights-of-way and to pursue other challenges to federal overreach, creation of a federalism section is unnecessary.

The Department established a statehood defense subunit within its Natural Resources Section during the Hickel administration to initiate several state's rights cases against the federal government. Although the functions of this subunit were later integrated into other sections, the focus of the former subunit has continued. The Department emphasizes federalism issues, which pervade many of the areas in which our sections work, including Natural Resources, Environmental, and Oil, Gas & Mining Sections. The attorneys in these sections have the specialized backgrounds necessary to address the issues that arise from state/federal jurisdictional disputes. Maintaining the Department's existing administrative structure gives the flexibility to assign federalism matters to the attorneys with the most expertise in the particular contexts in which they arise. It is a priority of mine to continually coordinate Law's staff so that each of the issues raised in our cases are addressed by the most capable and experienced attorneys.

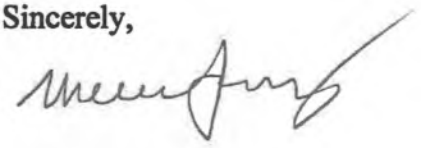
Under the Parnell administration, Law and all State agencies are closely monitoring federal actions that could impact the State. Law is working with other agencies to pointedly comment on federal land management plans, environmental impact statements, and regulatory proposals; to assure the State is proactively conducting scientific studies; and to litigate where necessary to enforce the State's right to access and develop natural resources. We also actively team with other Western states to oppose unnecessary federal action. For example, nine other states joined an amicus brief that Alaska drafted for the recent Sackett v. EPA case in U.S. Supreme Court, to urge the Court to overturn an EPA action that threatened the property rights of an Idaho couple. We have dedicated an attorney to RS 2477 cases and assigned others to assert the State's navigability claims, challenge the application of the Forest Service 2001 Roadless Area Conservation Rule to the Tongass and Chugach National Forests, resist unwarranted listings under the Endangered Species Act, oppose the EPA's extraordinary assertions of federal jurisdiction under the Clean Water Act, and pursue the development of oil and gas resources on the Outer Continental Shelf.

I assure you that the Department's focus on defending Alaska's statehood rights will continue under my leadership.

Sincerely,



Michael C. Geraghty
Attorney General

AMENDMENT

Reported by Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Public Lands, to the act (H. R. 365) granting the right of way to ditch and canal owners over the public lands in the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada, viz: Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert as follows:

That the mineral lands of the public domain, both surveyed and unsurveyed, are hereby declared to be free and open to exploration and occupation by all citizens of the United States, and those who have declared their intention to become citizens, subject to such regulations as may be prescribed by law, and subject also to the local custom or rules of miners in the several mining districts, so far as the same may not be in conflict with the laws of the United States.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That whenever any person or association of persons claim a vein or lode of quartz, or other rock in place, bearing gold, silver, cinnabar, or copper, having previously occupied and improved the same according to the local custom or rules of miners in the district where the same is situated, and having expended in actual labor and improvements thereon an amount of not less than one thousand dollars, and in regard to whose possession there is no controversy or opposing claim, it shall and may be lawful for said claimant or association of claimants to file in the local land office a diagram of the same, so extended laterally or otherwise as to conform to the local laws, customs, and rules of miners, and to enter such tract and receive a patent therefor, granting such mine, together with the right to follow such vein or lode with its dips, angles, and variations, to any depth, although it may enter the land adjoining, which land adjoining shall be sold subject to this condition.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That upon the filing of the diagram as provided in the second section of this act, and posting the same in a conspicuous place on the claim, together with a notice of intention to apply for a patent, the register of the land office shall publish a notice of the same in a newspaper published nearest to the location of said claim, and shall also post such notice in his office for the period of ninety days; and after the expiration of said period, if no adverse claim shall have been filed, it shall be the duty of the surveyor general, upon application of the party, to survey the premises and make a plat thereof, indorsed with his approval, designating the number and description of the location, the value of the labor and improvements, and the character of the vein exposed; and upon the payment to the proper officer of five dollars per acre, together with the cost of such survey, plat, and notice, and giving satisfactory evidence that said diagram and notice have been posted on the claim during said period of ninety days, the register of the land office shall transmit to the General Land Office said plat, survey, and description; and a patent shall issue for the same thereupon. But said plat, survey, or description shall in no case cover more than one vein or lode, and no patent shall issue for more than one vein or lode, which shall be expressed in the patent issued.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That when such location and entry of a mine shall be upon unsurveyed lands, it shall and may be lawful, after the extension thereto of the public surveys, to adjust the surveys to the limits of the premises according to the location and possession and plat aforesaid, and the surveyor general may, in extending the surveys, vary the same from a rectangular form to suit the circumstances of the country and the local rules, laws, and customs of miners: Provided, That no location hereafter made shall exceed two hundred feet in length along the vein for each locator, with an additional claim for discovery to the discoverer of the lode, with the right to follow such vein to any depth, with all its dips, variations, and angles, together with a reasonable quantity of surface for the convenient working of the same as fixed by local rules: And provided further, That no person may make more than one location on the same lode, and not more than three thousand feet shall be taken in any one claim by any association of persons.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That as a further condition of sale, in the absence of necessary legislation by Congress, the local legislature of any State or Territory may provide rules for working mines involving easements, drainage, and other necessary means to their complete development; and those conditions shall be fully expressed in the patent.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That whenever any adverse claimants to any mine located and claimed as aforesaid, shall appear before the approval of the survey, as provided in the third section of this act, all proceedings shall be stayed until a final settlement and adjudication in the courts of competent jurisdiction of the rights of possession to such claim, when a patent may issue as in other cases.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to establish additional land districts and to appoint the necessary officers under existing laws, wherever he may deem the same necessary for the public convenience in executing the provisions of this act.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That the right of way for the construction of highways over public lands, not reserved for public uses, is hereby granted.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That whenever, by priority of possession, rights to the use of water for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes, have vested and accrued, and the same are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws, and the decisions of courts, the possessors and owners of such vested rights, shall be maintained and protected in the same; and the right of way for the construction of ditches and canals for the purposes aforesaid is hereby acknowledged and confirmed: Provided, however, That whenever, after the passage of this act, any person or persons shall, in the construction of any ditch or canal, injure or damage the possession of any settler on the public domain, the party committing such injury or damage shall be liable to the party injured for such injury or damage.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That wherever, prior to the passage of this act, upon the lands heretofore designated as mineral lands, which have been excluded from survey and sale, there have been homesteads made by citizens of the United States, or persons who have declared their intention to become citizens, which homesteads have been made, improved, and used for agricultural purposes, and upon which there have been no valuable mines of gold, silver, cinnabar or copper discovered, and which are properly agricultural lands, the said settlers or owners of such homesteads shall have a right of pre-emption thereto, and shall be entitled to purchase the same at the price of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, and in quantity not to exceed one hundred and sixty-acres; or said parties may avail themselves of the provisions of the act of Congress approved May twenty, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, entitled "An act to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain," and acts amendatory thereof.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That upon the survey of the lands aforesaid, the Secretary of the Interior may designate and set apart such portions of the said lands as are clearly agricultural lands, which lands shall thereafter be subject to pre-emption and sale as other public lands of the United States, and subject to all the laws and regulations applicable to the same.

Fact Sheet

Title: R.S. 2477 Rights-of-Way

Alaska Department of NATURAL RESOURCES
Division of Mining, Land & Water
September 2001

This fact sheet explains the origin of a century-old mining law that has broad implications for Alaska's future. It is intended to illustrate the potential this law has in helping preserve Alaska's public access options for the future.

What is R.S. 2477?
Revised Statute 2477 is found in section 8 of the Mining Law of 1866. It granted states and territories unrestricted rights-of-way over federal lands that had no existing reservations or private entries. The law remained in effect until Congress repealed it in 1976. In Alaska, the opportunity to establish new R.S. 2477 rights-of-way generally ended December 14, 1968, when the federal government issued PLO 4582—the "land freeze"—to prepare for settlement of Alaska Native land claims. Though no new rights-of-way could be established after federal land was reserved or appropriated, or after the law was repealed in 1976, these actions did not extinguish pre-existing rights.

Revised Statute 2477 states: "The right of way for the construction of highways over public lands, not reserved for public uses, is hereby granted."

What did Congress mean by "highways"?
It's important to distinguish the historical meaning of "highways" from the modern. The word "highway" was historically used to refer to foot trails, pack trails, sled dog trails, crudely built wagon roads, and other corridors for transportation. R.S. 2477 was included in the first comprehensive mining law and was used initially by miners and homesteaders on federal land. The broad wording of the law does not limit the type of right-of-way to which it applies.

Alaska Statute 19.45.001(9) defines a highway to include "a highway (whether included in primary or secondary systems), road, street, trail, walk, bridge, tunnel, drainage structure and other similar or related structure or facility, and right-of-way thereof...."

What does this mean for Alaskans?
R.S. 2477 rights-of-way could be established in Alaska from 1884 (the Organic Act, which extended general land laws to the new territory), to 1968 (PLO 4582). From its territorial origins to today, Alaska has consisted mainly of federally owned land. During its 84 years of application in this state, many rural mail routes, mining trails, and other transportation routes became R.S. 2477's through construction and/or use. The State of Alaska, Department of Natural Resources has documented hundreds of historic routes that qualify as R.S. 2477 rights-of-way. Surface transportation between Alaska's hundreds of rural communities and other resource destinations still relies heavily on our cross-country trails, primarily used in the winter by snowmachines, dogsled teams, and four-wheel all-terrain vehicles.

What are some examples of R.S. 2477's?
Some examples include DeBarr Road in Anchorage and Farmer's Loop Road in Fairbanks. Other routes that the State believes to qualify as R.S. 2477's include the Stampede Trail in Denali National Park and Preserve, the Nabesna-Chisana Trail in Wrangell-St. Elias National Park, the Dalton Trail in the vicinity of Haines, the Eureka-Rampart Trail in the Interior, and the Chilkoot Trail near Skagway.

How many R.S. 2477 rights-of-way have been asserted?
While hundreds of R.S. 2477's have been validated within the western states, only a handful of routes have been cooperatively validated in Alaska with BLM. During 1993-1995, the Department of Natural Resources' R.S. 2477 Project researched more than one thousand trails. The project found that some 600 of these qualified as R.S. 2477 rights-of-way under state standards. In 1998 the Legislature listed these trails in AS 19.30.400, stating that they had been accepted as R.S. 2477 rights-of-way. That same legislation requires the department to continue researching trails and to prepare an annual report identifying those found to qualify as R.S. 2477's. Many additional trails have been reported to the Legislature since then.

What if land has been conveyed without specifying that there is a valid R.S. 2477 right-of-way across it?
In Alaska, millions of acres once controlled by the federal government have been transferred to Native corporations or into other private ownership. Land conveyances are always subject to "valid existing rights." Courts have ruled that where an R.S. 2477 right-of-way exists, the new landowner's title is subject to the right-of-way, which must still be honored. There are many Alaskan land owners who want the assurance that their rights and interests will not be adversely affected in the process of R.S. 2477 identification and platting. The Alaska Legislature instructed in its 1998 law that, while providing for the public's right to use these historic access easements, "every effort should be made to minimize the effect on the affected private property owners."

What is some of the R.S. 2477 case law?

One of the most frequently quoted cases affecting R.S. 2477 is Hamerly v. Denton, decided in 1961. The court clearly explained that R.S. 2477 was one-half of a grant—an offer to dedicate an easement across unreserved, unappropriated federal land. That offer of a right-of-way grant could be accepted by either of two methods:

a) By "some positive act on the part of the appropriate public authorities of the state, clearly manifesting an intention" to accept it; or

b) By "public user for such a period of time and under such conditions as to prove that the grant has been accepted."

Additionally, Girves v. Kenai Peninsula Borough, 1975, established that some section-line easements are R.S. 2477's. Shultz v. Army, 1993, concerning a right-of-way claim across Fort Wainwright, established that the public right-of-way between the origin and termini of the route need not be absolutely fixed, and upheld the broad definition of a highway found in state law. On rehearing, the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals reversed its original ruling in the Shultz case. However, the legal reasoning that produced that original decision has been used to support other cases.

What are the rules for using R.S. 2477 rights-of-way?

Some rights-of-way will likely be improved for access to valuable state resources, communities, and land. Others will be used as they have been in the past. Some might not be used at all, or might be developed only as foot trails. If you are not sure whether a trail you want to use is an R.S. 2477 right-of-way, check public land records and consult with each land owner or managing agency before crossing the property. Typically R.S. 2477 rights-of-way are available for public use under DNR's regulations. DNR's management rules can be found in DNR's recently revised chapter of public easement regulations, 11 AAC 51. However, the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities' regulations apply to R.S. 2477 rights-of-way that are part of the Alaska Highway System or that DNR has otherwise transferred to that department. In some cases, the State might transfer management of an R.S. 2477 right-of-way to a city or borough, but without giving it the right to "vacate" or officially erase the right-of-way. That is because municipalities are prohibited by law from vacating R.S. 2477 rights-of-way.

For additional information:

An R.S. 2477 Atlas is available for purchase at the DNR Public Information Offices in Anchorage, Fairbanks, and Juneau. The Atlas lists approximately 560 routes, identified and located on map inserts. The department has also made documentation on many qualifying R.S. 2477 routes available at the State and University Archives.

Another source is DNR's website on R.S. 2477 rights-of-way, http://www.dnr.state.ak.us/mlw/trails/rs2477/ From that site you can reach a map of Alaska that links to descriptions of many R.S. 2477 trails. In addition, if you know the official "RST" number of any R.S. 2477 right-of-way, you can find its complete casefile documentation and description in DNR's public land records at https://nutmeg.state.ak.us/ixpress/dnr/case/RequestRpt.dml These two websites provide the most up-to-date R.S. 2477 information available. You can find RST numbers of more than 600 routes, cross-referenced by trail name, in AS 19.30.400. For RST numbers of additional routes that DNR has documented since that law was passed in 1998, check DNR's annual reports to the legislature. All of the sources mentioned here are public documents that everyone has a right to see.

ALASKA RS 2477 TRAILS

The State of Alaska has achieved Quiet Title to the Harrison Creek - Portage Creek Trail (RST 8) in the Circle Mining District. Because the original trail has been moved many times to accommodate active mining since 1976, (the deadline for identification of existing rights-of-way), the State has entered into a consent decree accepting a mutually agreeable 60-foot right-of-way to substitute for abandonment of portions of the existing trail. This was one of 11 of the 620 "Qualified" trails that was "Certified" as a test case, and was selected for litigation because it had the broadest potential for setting precedent. The Department of Law and the Division of Mining, Land & Water require funds for this legal effort to file "quiet title" actions in court to determine the validity of the routes.
