Susan is doing the recording so speak your name clearly.

Today's Agenda includes the overview of six court decisions, which can be found in the Legislative Legal Services report dated December 2011 (the yellow book):

1. Williams v. Barbee -- pg. 18
2. Christoffersen v. State -- pg. 24
3. State v. Alyeska -- pg. 14
4. Calvert v. State -- pg. 15

5. Monzulla v. Voorhees -- pg. 17

6. Marathon Oil v. State -- pg. 22

We will devote fifteen minutes to each case. If the committee's business with a case cannot be completed in the allotted time, we will table the discussion until our next meeting. I will also entertain motions to send letters to the committees of jurisdiction on these issues if we determine that it would be more appropriate to have the discussion in those venues.

We have Legal Services attorneys here to explain the history/reason for the report and to answer questions about specific cases.

Representative Kurt Olson
Chairman, House Labor and Commerce Committee
Capitol, Room 24
Juneau, Alaska 99811

Dear Chairman Olson,

The House Judiciary Committee met January 25, 2012 to discuss the 2011 Oversight Report examining court decisions and Opinions of the Attorney General construing Alaska Statutes' assembled by Legislative Legal Services. We discussed six cases from the report, three of which the Judiciary committee agreed fall within the jurisdiction of the Labor and Commerce committee. These cases: State of Alaska v. Alyeska Pipeline Service Co.; Calvert v. State; Monzulla v. Voorhees; (all attached) also received recommendations by Legislative Legal Services for further legislative review.

The Alyeska case revealed that the Legislature may want to review whether AS 21.36.475 was intended to, or otherwise should, apply to an owner controlled insurance program (OCIP) for maintenance or another activity other than "working on a construction project" or whether on OCIP for non-construction purposes should be regulated in another manner. Calvert v. State analysis by Legislative Legal Services recommended legislative review to determine whether the department's benefit policy manual – for unemployment insurance compensation – correctly interprets legislative concepts of suitability and good cause. In Monzulla review is similarly recommended to determine whether the court properly interpreted legislative intent to include that the Workers' Compensation Appeals Commission has the authority to review non-final decisions of the board.

As a courtesy to you and your members, I have attached relevant materials from our meeting and discussion of these cases. Please contact my office if you have any questions or concerns.

Dear Chairmen,

The House Judiciary Committee met January 25, 2012 to discuss the 2011 Oversight Report examining court decisions and opinions of the attorney general construing Alaska Statutes' compiled by Legislative Legal Services. We discussed six cases from the report, one of which the Judiciary Committee agreed falls within the jurisdiction of the House Resources committee. The case: Marathon Oil v State of Alaska (attached) received recommendations by Legislative Legal Services for further legislative review.

The Marathon case revealed that the Legislature may want to review to determine whether the court's interpretation of the statute disallowing retroactive application is consistent with the legislative intent. As a courtesy to you and your members, I have attached relevant materials from our meeting and discussion of this case. Please contact my office if you have any questions or concerns.

A REPORT TO THE TWENTY-SEVENTH STATE LEGISLATURE

Listing Alaska Statutes with Delayed Repeals or Delayed Amendments and Examining Court Decisions and Opinions of the Attorney General Construing Alaska Statutes

The report lists Alaska Statutes that will be amended or repealed between February 29, 2012, and March 1, 2013, according to laws enacted before the 2012 legislative session.

The report also examines published cases construing Alaska Statutes that were decided by the courts and reported between October 1, 2010, and September 30, 2011,

and

Opinions of the Attorney General that were made available through Internet distribution between October 1, 2010, and September 30, 2011.

INTRODUCTION

AS 24.20.065(a) requires that the Legislative Council annually examine administrative regulations, published opinions of state and federal courts and of the Department of Law that rely on state statutes, and final decisions adopted under the Administrative Procedure Act (AS 44.62) to determine whether or not

(1) the courts and agencies are properly implementing legislative purposes;
(2) there are court or agency expressions of dissatisfaction with state statutes or the common law of the state;
(3) the opinions, decisions, or regulations indicate unclear or ambiguous statutes;
(4) the courts have modified or revised the common law of the state.

Under AS 24.20.065(b) the Council is to make a comprehensive report of its findings and recommendations to the members of the Legislature at the start of each regular session.

This edition of the review by the attorneys of the Legislative Affairs Agency examines the opinions of the Alaska Supreme Court, the Alaska Court of Appeals, the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, and the United States District Court for the District of Alaska. As in the past, those cases where the court construes or interprets a section of the Alaska Statutes are analyzed. Those cases where no statute is construed or interpreted or where a statute is involved but it is applied without particular examination by the court are not reviewed. In addition, those major cases that have already received legislative scrutiny are not analyzed. However, cases that reject well-established common law principles or reverse previously established case law that might be of special interest to the legislature are analyzed. Because the purpose of the report is to advise members of the legislature on defects in existing law, we have generally not analyzed those cases where the law, though it may have been criticized, has been changed since the decision or opinion was published.

The review also covers formal and informal opinions of the Attorney General. As with court opinions, we have only analyzed those opinions where a provision of the Alaska Statutes is construed or interpreted, or which might otherwise be of special interest to the legislature.

The review of administrative regulations is the responsibility of the Administrative Regulation Review Committee under AS 24.20.460 and is not included in this report.

This report also includes a list of Alaska Statutes that, absent any action by the 2012 Legislature, will be repealed or amended before March 1, 2013, because of repealers or amendments enacted by previous legislatures with delayed effective dates.

Reviews of state court decisions were prepared by Jean Mischel, Don Bullock, and Dan Wayne, Legislative Counsel, and Jerry Luckhaupt, Assistant Revisor of Statutes. Dennis Bailey, Legislative Counsel, reviewed federal court decisions and opinions of the Attorney General. Kathryn Kurtz, Assistant Revisor of Statutes, prepared the list of delayed repeals and amendments.

ANALYSIS OF COURT CASES AND OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

FRAUDULENT CONCEALMENT OF EVIDENCE, AS DISTINGUISHED FROM SPOLIATION, IS AVAILABLE CAUSE OF ACTION FOR INTENTIONALLY CONCEALED EVIDENCE.

A construction worker was injured on a homeowner's staircase that had no railing and was icy. The insurer investigated and made photographs available during discovery without the investigator's notes on them about the condition of the staircase, believing the notes to be privileged. The homeowner's testimony about the condition of the staircase contradicted the investigator's notes. The insurer later realized that the notes were not privileged and produced them and offered to pay for a new deposition of the homeowner. The court sanctioned the insurer. The construction worker then filed a separate lawsuit alleging spoliation of evidence by the insurer. The Alaska Supreme Court for the first time defined the tort of spoliation as a destruction of evidence. In cases where evidence is not actually destroyed the court recognized the alternative common law tort of fraudulent concealment as a separate cause of action in Alaska.

Legislative review is not recommended unless the legislature disagrees with the court's definitions of the torts.

IT IS FOR TRIAL JUDGES TO DECIDE CORPUS DELICTI AND CRIMINAL DEFENDANTS ARE ONLY ENTITLED TO A NEW TRIAL FOR A VIOLATION OF THE CORPUS DELICTI RULE.

Police officers were called to Jerry Langevin's apartment to investigate a domestic dispute. Langevin was visibly intoxicated and told officers he was "three sheets to the wind." Langevin stated he had been drinking at a Fairbanks bar and had either driven all the way home or part of the way home. Langevin was arrested and subsequently convicted of drunk driving based solely upon his statements to the police. On appeal, Langevin argued his conviction violated the corpus delicti rule and he was therefore entitled to an acquittal. The corpus delicti rule provides that a criminal conviction can not be based solely on a defendant's uncorroborated confession. The Alaska Court of Appeals found that Alaska follows the evidentiary foundation approach to corpus delicti, thereby requiring the trial judge to determine if the state has introduced independent evidence that substantially corroborates the confession. The court found that the state had not, reversed Langevin's conviction, and determined that, under corpus delicti, the proper remedy is a new trial.

Langevin v. State, __ P.3d __ (Alaska App. 2011), Ct. App. No. A-10510, decided June 3, 2011. 2011 Alas. App. LEXIS 49.

Legislative review is not recommended.

Art. I, sec. 24, Constitution of the State of Alaska
AS 12.61.010 - AS 12.61.900

WHEN A CRIMINAL DEFENDANT CHALLENGES A CONVICTION AND DIES WHILE THE CHALLENGE IS PENDING THE CONVICTION MAY STAND.

The Alaska Supreme Court consolidated two otherwise unrelated criminal cases to resolve the question: under Alaska law, what is the effect of the death of a criminal defendant while an appeal is pending in that defendant's case? The court held that when a criminal defendant dies after filing an appeal, or a petition for hearing which has been granted, the defendant's conviction will stand unless the defendant's personal representative elects to continue the appeal. In doing so the court expressly overruled its own prior holding, Hartwell v. State, 423 P.2d 282 (Alaska 1967), that the death of a criminal defendant while a conviction is on appeal permanently abates all proceedings in the defendant's case and nullifies the conviction. The court explained that overruling Hartwell was necessary because many other state courts have since reconsidered the propriety of abatement and because abatement is inconsistent with the various victims' rights provisions that have been enacted in the last 30 years in Alaska.

Legislative review is not recommended unless the legislature wishes to examine the issue and adopt a different result. The court noted that no statute or court rule divests the appellate courts of jurisdiction upon the death of a party.

Art. VII, sec. 10, Constitution of the State of Alaska
AS 38.05.035(f)

PREFERENCE FOR PURCHASE OF STATE LAND REQUIRES LESSOR TO ENTER LAND TO QUALIFY.

The Alaska Constitution, art. VIII, sec. 10, provides for the selection, management, and disposal of state lands. In 1984, the legislature provided for a preference right without competitive bid to purchase or lease state land to an individual who has erected a building on the land and used it for a bona fide purpose before and after selection by the state from federal lands. A regulation, 11 AAC 67.053(a)(1) and (2), required written proof of entering the land, and of erecting and using a building there while under federal ownership. In 1989, the plaintiff leased state land and built a sport hunting lodge and business there. In 2005, the state conveyed that land to the borough. The plaintiff challenged the requirement that he had to have entered the land while it was under federal ownership as contrary to the plain meaning of the statutory preference right. The Alaska Supreme Court disagreed and held that the plain meaning of AS 38.05.035(f) required the entry while under federal ownership. The court explained that all land available for selection by the state was under federal ownership, so that the use by the legislature of the phrase "after selection by the state" could only apply to pre-selection use of federal land.

Legislative review is not recommended since it appears that the court's interpretation is consistent with the statutory construction of the purchase preference.

STATUTE AUTHORIZING RECENT LAW SCHOOL GRADUATES TO PRACTICE LAW FOR A LIMITED PERIOD OF TIME DOES NOT CONFLICT WITH RULES GOVERNING THE PRACTICE OF LAW.

AS 08.08.210(d) authorizes recently graduated law students to be employed by and practice law for the Alaska Public Defender Agency for up to 10 months before they are licensed in Alaska as lawyers. Grove was represented in court by an employee of the Alaska Public Defender Agency, as permitted under AS 08.08.210(d), when he was convicted of assault and eluding a police officer. Grove filed a petition for post-conviction relief arguing that he had been provided ineffective assistance of counsel because his counsel, like others representing clients under AS 08.08.210(d), was subject to a requirement under Alaska Bar Rule 44 that employees be supervised in-person by a licensed attorney when appearing in a courtroom on a client's behalf. Grove further argued that the Alaska Supreme Court has sole constitutional authority to regulate the practice of law in Alaska, the Alaska Supreme Court adopted Rule 44 for that purpose, and AS 08.08.210(d) is unconstitutional because it conflicts with Rule 44. The Alaska Court of Appeals found that AS 08.08.210(d) does not conflict with Rule 44 but merely creates an alternative method for law school graduates to practice law temporarily before becoming licensed. The court found it significant that the Alaska Bar Association considers AS 08.08.210(d) and Rule 44 alternatives to each other, and that Rule 44 has been subsequently amended to specifically exempt employees practicing law under AS 08.08.210(d).

Alaska R. App. P. 508

THE EPA DECISION TO ALLOW ALASKA TO ADMINISTER PORTIONS OF THE NATIONAL POLLUTANT DISCHARGE ELIMINATION SYSTEM UNDER THE CLEAN WATER ACT WAS NOT ARBITRARY OR CAPRICIOUS.

Petitioners challenged the Environmental Protection Agency's (EPA) approval of the state's assumption of responsibility for administering parts of the National Pollutant Discharge Elimination System (NPDES) under the Clean Water Act (CWA), arguing that the EPA did not ensure that (1) state law will provide the same opportunities for judicial review of permitting decisions, (2) the state has the necessary enforcement tools to abate permit violations, and (3) the subsistence resources will be protected as mandated by the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act (ANILCA). NPDES allows the EPA to approve state administration of portions of NPDES (subject to EPA oversight) pursuant to CWA if certain criteria are met. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals found that the EPA's approval was not arbitrary or capricious and denied the petition for review based on the following:

(1) CWA mandates that the EPA encourage public participation in the development, revision, and enforcement of regulations; NPDES regulations require that states that administer the program shall provide for judicial review of permit approval or denial that is the same as that available to obtain judicial review in federal court; the petitioner questioned whether Alaska law on the award of attorney's fees, including the abrogation of the public interest exception enacted in 2003, interfered with appropriate judicial review; the court compared the effect of the federal "dual standard" for the award of attorney's fees with Alaska law on the award of attorney's fees; the court recognized some uncertainty about the possibility of future attorney's fees awards, but decided that the EPA decision to allow administration of NPDES was not arbitrary or capricious even in light of the attorney's fees issue and concluded that the state provides an opportunity for judicial review of the approval or denial of permits that is sufficient to assist with public participation in the permitting process;

(2) the court also reviewed the state's authority to abate violations of the permit or permit program and other means of enforcement in the context of the EPA's approval of state administration of the program; the EPA has administrative enforcement options while the state must initiate a legal proceeding to impose a civil penalty; the court concluded that the state has adequate enforcement remedies;

(3) finally, the court concluded that the EPA's transfer of the NPDES program to the state did not trigger the requirement of a subsistence evaluation under sec. 810 of ANILCA; the court concluded that a subsistence evaluation is not required because (a) doing so would amend CWA by implication, by adding additional criteria, (b) the more specific provisions of CWA control the general application of ANILCA, and (c) the EPA was not required to conduct subsistence evaluations before it transferred its authority to the state because the EPA does not directly manage public lands and is not a federal land management agency.

DISCLOSURE OF CORPORATE RECORDS TO A SHAREHOLDER DOES NOT REQUIRE DELIVERY TO THE SHAREHOLDER.

Former directors of a corporation who sought re-election sued the corporation for excluding their names on corporate proxy materials for holding a board election and for failure to provide shareholder e-mail information as requested. The board had rejected the former directors' applications for re-election as board-approved candidates. The board informed them of the decision before the election and that they could provide their own proxy materials and run independently. In response, the former directors requested the corporation electronically send them the shareholder list containing the numbers of shares held by each, the shareholders' e-mail addresses, telephone numbers, and addresses in order to mail election materials separately to the shareholders in a subsequent election. The corporation provided all information electronically except e-mail and telephone information. The former directors did not seek to inspect the records as provided for under AS 10.06.430 and 10.06.450 but sued for failure to provide the records electronically. In a case of first impression, the court held that the statute unambiguously provided a right to inspect, not a right to delivery of, corporate records.

Legislative review is not recommended unless the legislature would like to provide a right to electronic delivery of specified corporate records such as e-mail contact information of shareholders.

AS 11.56.310

PRISONER DOES NOT COMMIT ESCAPE IN THE SECOND DEGREE IF THE PRISONER MERELY LEAVES AN UNSECURED CORRECTIONAL FACILITY.

Bridge, charged with a misdemeanor and unable to make bail, was confined at the Fairbanks Correctional Center and after classification was transferred to a halfway house to await trial. Bridge left the facility without permission and was eventually caught 15 months later and charged with a violation of AS 11.56.310(a)(1)(A), escape in the second degree. Escape in the second degree is committed when a person removes oneself from a correctional facility while under official detention. Bridge argued that the halfway house was not a correctional facility. The Alaska Court of Appeals found that while Bridge was at the halfway house and in the custody of the commissioner of corrections awaiting trial, Bridge was not confined at the halfway house because the halfway house did not have staff whose duty is to prevent prisoners from leaving the facility. The court concluded that, under AS 11.56.310(a)(1)(A), a person may only be convicted of escape from a correctional facility if the correctional facility has guards or other staff who have a duty to prevent prisoners from leaving the correctional facility.

Legislative review is recommended. The decision appears to disregard that the legislature has defined "official detention" to include "actual or constructive restraint" and seems to always require that a prisoner be actually restrained at a correctional facility to be convicted under AS 11.56.310(a)(1)(A).

AS 11.61.128

AMENDMENTS TO CRIMINAL STATUTE PROSCRIBING DISTRIBUTION OF INDECENT MATERIAL TO MINOR UNCONSTITUTIONAL UNDER FIRST AMENDMENT.

Plaintiffs challenged the constitutionality of AS 11.61.128 as modified in SB 222, secs. 9 - 12, enacted by the 26th Alaska State Legislature. SB 222 amended the elements of the crime of distribution of indecent material to minors by adding "material harmful to a minor" to the existing "censorship law" and defining "harmful to minors."

The court analyzed the amended statute using the strict scrutiny standard applicable to free speech issues, which requires that the statute must (1) serve a compelling governmental interest, (2) be narrowly tailored to achieve that interest, and (3) be the least restrictive means of advancing that interest. The court acknowledged the compelling governmental interest in protecting minor children but questioned the compliance with the additional tests under the strict scrutiny standard. The court said that if the legislature intends the statute to only criminalize the grooming of children for sexual abuse, as argued by the state, the legislature could do so without violating the constitutional rights of the average citizen. The court noted that AS 11.61.125 applies the "harmful to minors" test approved by the U.S. Supreme Court.

But the court also stated that the language of the statute in other areas, particularly in regard to Internet communications, lacked the precision the First Amendment requires when a statute regulates the content of speech. The court concluded that the statute violates the First Amendment to the United States Constitution because it is not narrowly tailored to achieve the state's compelling interest.

AS 11.71.020(a)

MULTIPLE FELONY COUNTS OF POSSESSION OF INGREDIENTS INTENDED FOR THE MANUFACTURE OF METHAMPHETAMINE IN A SINGLE CONTINUING EFFORT CONSTITUTE A SINGLE CRIME FOR SENTENCING.

Wiglesworth was convicted of six separate counts of misconduct involving a controlled substance in the second degree (MICS2) (AS 11.71.020(a)(2) - (6)). Wiglesworth's convictions related to his possession of various listed chemicals important to the manufacture of methamphetamine and immediate precursors of methamphetamine, with the intent to manufacture methamphetamine. Wiglesworth argued that his six counts of misconduct involving a controlled substance actually was a continuing attempt to manufacture methamphetamine and his separate counts should merge for sentencing as a single count. After examining the various forms of MICS2, the Alaska Court of Appeals agreed, and found that a defendant that violates two or more provisions of AS 11.71.020(a)(2) - (6) during the course of a single, continuing effort to manufacture methamphetamine is guilty of only one act of MICS2 for purposes of conviction and punishment. The court noted that the legislature: "did not perceive a separate societal interest in the defendant's possession of each separate chemical, or in the defendant's accomplishment of each separate state in the manufacturing process. Rather, the societal interest at stake is to prevent the illicit manufacturing of methamphetamine."

The court noted that separate convictions and punishments would be proper when there are separate discrete attempts to manufacture methamphetamine and when the requisite facts have been expressly pleaded by the state and found by the jury.

Wiglesworth v. State, 249 P.3d 321 (Alaska App. 2011).

The decision seems reasonable. Legislative review is not recommended unless the legislature perceives that there is a different societal interest involved in the different forms of misconduct involving a controlled substance in the second degree discussed here and wants to ensure separate punishments for these different forms.

COURT NOT LIMITED TO SENTENCE AGREED TO IN PLEA BARGAIN AFTER SUBSEQUENT PROBATION VIOLATION.

In separate prosecutions, two defendants entered into plea bargains with the state for resolution of criminal charges against them. Each defendant served a period of incarceration and a subsequent period of probation for a suspended term of imprisonment. Each violated probation and at a revocation hearing each asked to be sentenced to a term of imprisonment (that is, neither wanted to be put back on probation). In each case the judge sentenced the defendant to a term of imprisonment less than the period of suspended imprisonment agreed to in the plea bargain. The state appealed, arguing that the plea bargain was a contract and that the new lesser sentences were a violation of that contract (the plea bargain). The Alaska Court of Appeals disagreed and found the new sentences proper and within the sentencing court's discretion. The court noted the plea bargains did not contain provisions "requiring the defendants to relinquish their right under Alaska law to reject further probation. Nor do the plea agreements contain any express provision requiring the defendants to relinquish their accompanying right . . . to have the superior court assess their sentences of imprisonment . . . rather than automatically imposing the full amount of the defendants' remaining suspended jail time."

It appears that the issue presented by this case could be resolved by the Department of Law by including, when warranted, some additional express terms in the department's plea agreements. Legislative review is still recommended to determine if the department has amended their agreements and whether the issue has been resolved.

ABBREVIATIONS, MISSPELLINGS, AND OTHER MINOR VARIATIONS IN THE NAME ON A BALLOT CAST FOR A WRITE-IN CANDIDATE MUST BE COUNTED IF VOTER INTENT CAN BE DISCERNED.

Lisa Murkowski ran for the United States Senate on a write-in campaign. Joe Miller, one of her opponents, challenged the decision of the state elections division to count ballots cast for Murkowski that contained misspellings or other minor errors. The Alaska Supreme Court interpreted AS 15.15.360's requirement that the write-in ballot include the "name, as it appears on the write-in declaration of candidacy . . . or the last name of the candidate," as allowing minor misspellings and pseudonyms. The court held that voter intent is paramount and that the legislative purpose was not to require perfection but to ensure that ballots are counted and not excluded.

Legislative review is recommended to determine whether the court correctly interpreted legislative intent.

LIMITED ENTRY PERMIT IS NOT A PROPERTY RIGHT FOR PURPOSES OF COMPENSATION FOR GOVERNMENTAL TAKING.

After the state adopted regulations shortening the fishing year and limiting the number of salmon that commercial fishers could harvest, plaintiffs sued, asking the United States district court to declare those regulations an unconstitutional taking of property without just compensation and as a violation of due process rights. The court held that an entry permit to fish commercially for salmon is not "property" for the purpose of requiring compensation when its value decreases due to state regulation. The court also held that the state's decision to enact a system of licenses or use privileges is not unreasonable, arbitrary, or capricious, and AS 16.43.150(e) bears a substantial and reasonable relationship to Alaska's goals of salmon conservation and maintenance of a sustainable fishery.

Therefore, AS 16.43.150(e) does not violate permit holders' substantive due process rights.

Vandevere v. Lloyd, 644 F.3d 957 (9th Cir. 2011).

Legislative review is not recommended.

AS 18.65.240

PUBLIC POLICY EXCEPTION APPLIES TO ENFORCEMENT OF ARBITRATION AWARDS.

A police officer was terminated for lying about performing a burnout during motorcycle training and an arbitrator reinstated the officer. The state argued that the reinstatement decision was unenforceable as a violation of state policy of not employing dishonest peace officers. The Alaska Supreme Court recognized that a public policy exception applies to arbitration decisions but held that, because there was no explicit, well-defined, and dominant public policy in Alaska against the reinstatement of a law enforcement officer who had engaged in relatively minor dishonesty, the arbitrator's award was not unenforceable as a violation of public policy. None of the sources of law the state cited clearly set out a public policy pertaining to the minimal consequences that had to follow when law enforcement officers committed minor acts of dishonesty that were not directly related to their duties to the public, that were not directed toward superiors in their chain of command, and that did not arise in the context of a formal investigation. The court further held that the arbitrator did not commit gross error in determining that the state lacked just cause to terminate the trooper because: (1) the trooper was not convicted of a crime; (2) a more experienced trooper who was also found to be deceptive, misleading, or evasive received only a reprimand; and (3) the state did not make it clear how the decision constituted an obvious mistake.

State v. Public Safety Employees' Association, ___ P.3d ___ (Alaska 2011).

Legislative review is recommended to determine whether the court correctly recognized a public policy exception to enforcing an arbitration decision, whether the court correctly failed to apply that exception in the present case involving dishonesty by a law enforcement officer, and whether the policy is or should be explicit.

THE TERM "CRIME INVOLVING DOMESTIC VIOLENCE" AS DEFINED BY AS 18.66.990 AND INCORPORATED BY ALASKA RULE OF EVIDENCE 404(b)(4) IS NOT UNCONSTITUTIONALLY VAGUE.

Bates was convicted of attempted murder for an attack upon his former girlfriend. At his trial, evidence was presented of Bates' prior assault on his former girlfriend and on another former girlfriend. The evidence was admitted under Alaska Rule of Evidence 404(b)(4), which allows, in a domestic violence case, the introduction of a defendant's other crimes of domestic violence. Rule 404(b)(4) incorporates the definition of "household member" contained in AS 18.66.990(3) to determine what is a crime of domestic violence. Bates asserted that the definition of "household member" is unconstitutionally vague as it includes persons who are "dating" or in a "sexual relationship" without defining those terms. The Alaska Court of Appeals found "sexual relationship" to be sufficiently descriptive. The court had a harder time determining what the legislature meant by "dating" and finally determined that it should be interpreted to mean: "a relationship that either is marked by emotional intimacy or whose purpose is to allow two people to evaluate each other's suitability as a partner in an intimate relationship or in marriage." When interpreted in this manner, the court concluded that Rule 404(b)(4) was constitutional.

Bates v. State, __ P.3d __ (Alaska App. 2011), Ct. App. No. A-10350, decided June 3, 2011. Alas. App. LEXIS 48

Legislative review is not recommended unless the legislature determines that the court determined meaning of "dating," as used in the definition of the term "household member" found in AS 18.66.990(3), is incorrect or insufficient.

AS 21.36.475

STATUTORY LIMITATIONS APPLICABLE TO AN OWNER CONTROLLED INSURANCE PROGRAM FOR A CONSTRUCTION PROJECT DO NOT APPLY TO WORKERS' COMPENSATION AND GENERAL LIABILITY COVERAGES FOR WORK CHARACTERIZED AS MAINTENANCE.

The division of insurance issued a cease and desist order to Liberty Mutual Group (Liberty) because the owner controlled insurance program (OCIP) written by Liberty was designed to cover ongoing maintenance and was not restricted to a large construction project. The division contended that an OCIP for anything other than a large construction project was prohibited by AS 21.36.475 (originally enacted as AS 21.36.065 and renumbered in 2010). The Alaska Supreme Court rejected the division's position that the OCIP for ongoing maintenance was prohibited by the definition of "an owner controlled insurance program" in AS 21.36.475. The court stated that AS 21.36.475(c)(4) defines "owner controlled insurance program," in relevant part, as "an insurance program where one or more insurance policies are procured on behalf of a project owner," and "project owner" is defined in AS 21.36.475(c)(5) as "a person who, in the course of the person's business, engages the service of a contractor for the purpose of working on a construction project." The court declined to look beyond the plain meaning of the statute and held that an OCIP written for ongoing maintenance, such as the one written by Liberty, is not prohibited by AS 21.36.475 and is therefore unregulated.

State v. Alyeska Pipeline Service Co., __ P.3d __ (Alaska 2011).

Legislative review is recommended to consider whether AS 21.36.475 was intended to, or otherwise should, apply to an owner controlled insurance program (OCIP) for maintenance or another activity other than "working on a construction project" or whether an OCIP for non-construction purposes should be regulated in another manner.

SUITABILITY OF WORK AND GOOD CAUSE FOR QUITTING INTERPRETED FOR PURPOSES OF UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFITS.

An employee quit her job voluntarily and applied for unemployment benefits claiming reasons for quitting that included transportation difficulties and personality conflicts with coworkers. She also expressed concern about workplace safety and described one incident of unsafe practices. When the hearing officer asked the claimant what efforts she had made to keep her job, the claimant replied that she had tried to use public transportation but that her work schedule had been too unpredictable. The claimant acknowledged that she had not discussed the personality conflicts or her transportation difficulties with management and had not asked for an adjustment to her work schedule that would have enabled her to use the transit system and continue working. The court held that the claimant failed to show good cause for quitting under AS 23.20.379(a). That section disqualifies an employee from receiving unemployment benefits if the employee leaves "suitable work voluntarily without good cause." As a separate inquiry, the court found that the employee did not show that the work was unsuitable under AS 23.20.385 because the workplace hostility and safety concerns she described did not provide evidence of significant health and safety risks. Because she did not exhaust all reasonable alternatives with regard to her transportation problems and workplace hostility, she did not show good cause for leaving work. The court relied heavily on the Department of Labor and Workforce Development's benefit policy manual for interpretations of the concepts of suitability and good cause, including a finding that reductions in work hours and pay did not constitute good cause for quitting.

Legislative review is recommended to determine whether the department's benefit policy manual correctly interprets legislative concepts of suitability and good cause.

"SUCCESSFUL CLAIMANT" INTERPRETED FOR PURPOSES OF AWARDING ATTORNEY'S FEES IN WORKERS' COMPENSATION APPEAL.

A successful workers' compensation claimant requested attorney's fees. The Alaska Workers' Compensation Board reduced the claimant's attorney's fees request by 30 percent. The claimant disagreed with this reduction and appealed to the Workers' Compensation Appeals Commission. The commission reversed the board's decision and ordered the board to reconsider the award of attorney's fees to the claimant. The claimant then sought attorney's fees for the successful appeal from the commission but the commission refused, finding that the claimant was not a "successful" party under AS 23.30.008. The Alaska Supreme Court reversed, interpreting the statutory concept of "successful claimant" in workers' compensation appeals for the first time. The court found that the legislature intended for attorney's fees awards under AS 23.30.008 to follow the same rules as appellate court attorney's fees awards. See Rule 508, Alaska Rules of Appellate Procedure. Therefore, the claimant was entitled to an award of attorney's fees as the claimant prevailed on a significant issue in the appeal.

The decision appears reasonable. Legislative review is recommended if the legislature wishes to reexamine the standard for awarding attorney's fees in workers' compensation appeals.

WORKERS' COMPENSATION APPEALS COMMISSION HAS AUTHORITY TO REVIEW NON-FINAL ORDERS OF THE WORKERS' COMPENSATION BOARD.

An employer asked the Workers' Compensation Appeals Commission to review and to stay the Workers' Compensation Board's non-final order denying a change of venue from Fairbanks. The commission issued an order preventing the hearing from being held in Fairbanks and later reversed the board's denial of a change of venue. The employee challenged the commission's authority to review a non-final decision. The Alaska Supreme Court interpreted the various statutes that established the commission's jurisdiction to hear board appeals "according to reason, practicality, and common sense, taking into account the plain meaning and purpose of the law as well as the intent of the drafters." Although nothing in the statutes explicitly gave the commission jurisdiction over discretionary review of non-final board decisions, the court held that such authority was implied based on its quasi-judicial function and the effect of delay of some decisions until a final order is issued. The court relied upon the legislative purpose in establishing the commission to increase efficiency and flexibility and to reduce costs.

Legislative review is recommended to determine whether the court properly interpreted legislative intent to include that the Workers' Compensation Appeals Commission has the authority to review non-final decisions of the board.

PRESUMPTION AGAINST CUSTODY FOR DOMESTIC VIOLENCE APPLIES TO MODIFICATIONS OF CUSTODY.

Parents of a child entered a negotiated agreement to share physical and legal custody of their child despite a 2007 arrest and other alleged incidents involving domestic violence perpetrated by a father. The agreement was included in a 2009 divorce decree. Two weeks after the divorce decree was entered, the father pleaded guilty to third-degree assault from the 2007 charge of domestic violence and agreed to attend a domestic violence intervention program and to have no contact with his former wife. Four months after the guilty plea, the ex-wife filed a motion to modify the custody agreement based on two changed circumstances: (1) the domestic violence offense made the father ineligible for joint custody based on the statutory presumption against awarding custody to a person with a history of perpetrating domestic violence and the no contact order made co-parenting impossible; and (2) the ex-wife intended to move out of state to remarry. The Alaska Supreme Court held that the rebuttable presumption for domestic violence applied in modification proceedings after reviewing the legislative history for the presumption. The court also found that applying the statutory presumption in a modification proceeding was appropriate where the presumption was not addressed in the initial custody determination.

Legislative review is recommended to clarify that the applicability of the rebuttable presumption against the award of child custody in domestic violence circumstances applies in custody modification proceedings.

A father refused to pay child support to a legal guardian for the benefit of his 18-year-old son, who was in high school, on the basis that the legal custody under the guardianship order had expired at the age of majority. In a case of first impression, the court held that child support is not linked to the legal custody of the child and that the support obligation continued through high school.

Legislative review is not recommended since the court's interpretation of the statute appears to be consistent with the statutory purpose of providing for support through high school.

AS 29.45.110(d)

PROPERTY ASSESSMENT ON FULL AND TRUE VALUE MAY INCLUDE EFFECT OF LOW INCOME RENTAL RESTRICTION WITHOUT CONSIDERATION OF FEDERAL TAX CREDITS.

The federal low income housing tax credit (LIHTC) program provides a 10-year amortized tax credit for a commitment to restrict rental rates for not less than 30 years. AS 29.45.110(a) provides that property shall be assessed at its "full and true value," defined as "the estimated price that the property would bring in an open market and under the then prevailing market conditions in a sale between a willing seller and a willing buyer both conversant with the property and with prevailing general price levels." Subsection (d)(1) of the statute provides for consideration of actual income derived from the property and excludes consideration of federal tax credits for the property before 2001. After January 1, 2001, subsection (d)(2) directs local governments to choose whether to apply (d)(1)'s mandatory income approach or to provide for a parcel-by-parcel appraisal method. Kenai Peninsula Borough chose the parcel-by-parcel option. The owner of a 30-unit apartment complex that qualified in 2003 for LIHTC requested the application of the mandatory income approach and was denied, resulting in a much higher tax assessment than for an appraisal based on mandatory income. The owner appealed the assessment and the local board reduced the assessment by 40 percent because the original approach resulted in an assessment that was "overvalued and was grossly disproportionate as compared to similar projects." States are split on the question of whether and how the LIHTC commitment is accounted for in tax assessments on the property affected by a rental restriction. The Alaska Supreme Court held that state law and the local assembly decision do not prohibit a taxing authority from considering restricted rental rates, without the commensurate tax credit, in another valuation method if it is reasonable to do so.

Legislative review is recommended to clarify the statutory choice available to a taxing authority when considering rental restrictions and tax credits.

PRISONERS ON MANDATORY PAROLE ARE ENTITLED TO GOOD TIME REDUCTIONS OF THEIR SENTENCES WHEN RELEASED TO CORRECTIONAL RESTITUTION CENTERS OR HALFWAY HOUSES AND WHEN CONFINED PENDING REVOCATION OF THEIR PAROLE.

The legislature has authorized the Department of Corrections to award a prisoner a good time reduction of the prisoner's sentence when confined in a correctional facility. The Alaska Court of Appeals has noted that "the legislative purpose of this statute is 'to reward prisoners for good behavior during their terms of confinement . . . [and to] give [correctional officials] a means of enforcing discipline within correctional facilities.'" Valencia v. State, 91 P.3d 983, 984 (Alaska App. 2004). The amount of good time earned is deducted from the prisoner's sentence and the prisoner is released on mandatory parole for the period of the good time deduction. In this case, the Alaska Court of Appeals determined that a prisoner who has been released on mandatory parole is entitled to an additional good time deduction when the prisoner (1) is serving some or all of that period of mandatory parole in a correctional restitution center or a halfway house, and (2) has been arrested for violation of terms of mandatory parole and is incarcerated in a correctional restitution center or halfway house pending revocation of parole.

State v. Shetters, 246 P.3d 332 (Alaska App. 2010), on rehearing at, reaffirmed 246 P.3d 338 (Alaska App. 2010).

Legislative review is recommended to determine if the awarding of good time mandated by the court in these two situations is consistent with the overall legislative intent for the awarding of good time in AS 33.20.010.

AS 33.30.028

PRISONER'S LIABILITY FOR COSTS OF MEDICAL CARE.

AS 33.30.028 provides that "liability for payment of the costs of medical, psychological, and psychiatric care provided or made available to a prisoner . . . is the responsibility of the prisoner and" certain other persons. A superior court judge ruled that this statute only imposed liability for payment on a prisoner while the prisoner was incarcerated and that the liability for payment and the state's ability to seek reimbursement ends when the prisoner is released. The Alaska Supreme Court reversed, finding that the statute imposed liability for payment on a prisoner who has had health care provided or made available to the prisoner regardless of whether the prisoner is still incarcerated when reimbursement is sought. The plaintiff (the prisoner's estate) also argued that the state can only seek reimbursement from a prisoner under AS 33.30.028 for health care that has been "provided to them by the department." The plaintiff argued that "provided to them by the department" means only in-house prison medical care and that the state cannot seek payment for medical care that was made available to the prisoner through outside providers (regardless of whether the state paid the outside providers for the care). The court found that AS 33.30.028 "may be ambiguous" as it pertains to outside providers and remanded the case to the superior court.

Legislative review is recommended. The Alaska Supreme Court's decision that liability for the costs of health care provided to a prisoner continue after the prisoner's release is correct. The confusion regarding reimbursement seems misplaced. In AS 33.30.028(a), it appears that the legislature was making a clear statement that a prisoner (and certain other people and entities) is responsible for the costs of health care provided to the prisoner (that is, paid for by the department) or made available to the prisoner (that is, facilitated by the department but not provided at department expense). In AS 33.30.028(b), the legislature required the commissioner of corrections to require a prisoner who is provided health care by the department (that is, paid for by the department) to pay for the costs of that health care, if the department did not pay for the health care then there is no need for the prisoner to reimburse the department. The legislature could add language that clarifies that the prisoner is liable and must pay the costs incurred by the department in providing or making available health care to the prisoner.

AS 38.05.180(aa)

AGREEMENT TO ACCEPT A CONTRACT PRICE AS THE VALUE OF THE STATE'S ROYALTY SHARE OF GAS PRODUCTION MAY NOT BE APPLIED RETROACTIVELY.

Gas lessees must pay a royalty to the state. AS 38.05.180 sets the value of the gas at the highest of four possible prices but allows lessees to request of the Department of Natural Resources (DNR) to instead use or accept the price for gas established in a contract with a gas or electric utility as the basis for determining the value of the state's royalty share of gas production. Marathon requested contract pricing and further requested that DNR apply the contract pricing retroactively as well as prospectively. DNR entered into the agreement to accept contract pricing under AS 38.05.180(aa), but denied its retroactive application based on DNR's longstanding interpretation that retroactive application was prohibited because of the use of the word "prospective" in the statute and the Alaska Land Act's purpose of maximizing revenue. Although the Alaska Supreme Court found the statute to be ambiguous, the court upheld DNR's interpretation on the basis that DNR's determination was longstanding, was within the department's area of jurisdiction, and had a reasonable basis in the statute. The court also decided that DNR was not required to promulgate its interpretation as a regulation.

Legislative review is recommended to determine whether the court's interpretation of the statute disallowing retroactive application is consistent with the intent of the legislature.

AS 39.52.170

PUBLIC EMPLOYEE NOT REQUIRED TO REPORT UNION RELATED SERVICES AS CONFLICTING OUTSIDE EMPLOYMENT UNDER ETHICS ACT.

The Alaska Executive Branch Ethics Act, AS 39.52.170(a), prohibits a public employee from rendering services or accepting employment outside of the employee's agency if the outside employment is incompatible or in conflict with the proper discharge of the employee's official duties. AS 39.52.170(b) requires an employee to report outside employment annually for review and approval. The attorney general opined that union activities (1) are associated with and are a right of state employment, (2) are not outside services or employment under AS 39.52.170(a), and (3) need not be reported under AS 39.52.170(b).

2011 Op. Alaska Att'y Gen. (July 26, 2011).

Legislative review is not recommended.

AS 42.30.020

THE FEDERAL MARITIME COMMISSION HAS PRIMARY JURISDICTION OF THE REGULATION OF WHARFAGE AND DOCKING FEES IN THE SHIPPING INDUSTRY UNDER THE SHIPPING ACT.

Minto, a British Columbia mining company that ships ore concentrate through Skagway, Alaska, sued Pacific and Arctic Railway and Navigation Company (PARN), the owner of a shipping dock where ore is loaded on ships, claiming that the wharfage and docking fees being charged to Minto by PARN were higher and different than those charged other shippers and were discriminatory under AS 42.30.020 and under the federal Shipping Act, 46 U.S.C. 41106. The federal district court held that, as the parties were engaged in shipping, the discrimination claim is governed by the Shipping Act. The court determined that Minto must first bring its claim of discrimination to the Federal Maritime Commission and that AS 42.30.020 does not apply.

Legislative review is not recommended.

AS 45.50.471

UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES ACT DOES NOT APPLY TO RESIDENTIAL LEASES.

A tenant challenged late fees due under her residential lease agreement as a violation of the Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Act (UTPA). The court held that the UTPA was not intended to apply to residential leases for two reasons: (1) the legislature has not extended the Act to include real estate transactions, including residential leases; and (2) another Act, the Uniform Residential Landlord and Tenant Act, AS 34.03.010 - 34.03.380, regulates residential leases.

Legislative review is not recommended unless the legislature desires to extend the application of the UTPA to real estate transactions.

AS 47.17.050

ABSOLUTE QUASI-JUDICIAL IMMUNITY EXTENDED TO COURT-APPOINTED INVESTIGATORS ACTING WITHIN THE SCOPE OF APPOINTMENT.

A child custody investigator appointed by a court failed to report to the child's parents or the Office of Children's Services an allegation of sexual misconduct by the child contained in a police report reviewed as part of the investigation. The investigator included the allegation in her report to the court but in the meantime, the child had assaulted a half-sibling with whom the child had been placed. The parents asserted that the investigator had a duty to warn them regarding the allegation of sexual misconduct. The Alaska Supreme Court held that court-appointed child custody investigators are entitled to absolute quasi-judicial immunity from suits arising from the performance of their duties and further that the immunity extended to the state as the employer.

Legislative review is recommended to determine whether immunity may be extended vicariously to the state or other employer.

AS 47.30.735

EVIDENCE OF MENTAL ILLNESS RELEVANT IF SYMPTOMS EXIST AT THE TIME OF AN INVOLUNTARY COMMITMENT HEARING, NOT ON ADMISSION, AND COURT MAY CONSIDER RECENT SYMPTOMS.

A woman was admitted involuntarily to a psychiatric facility based, in part, on her symptoms on the day of and prior to admission to the facility. At the commitment hearing the woman argued that her symptoms were diminished, that she was compliant with her treatment plan, and that a court could only consider symptoms that existed on the day of the commitment hearing, not when she was admitted to the hospital. The Alaska Supreme Court disagreed. The Court found that while AS 47.30.735 provides a court may grant an involuntary commitment petition only if the court finds the person mentally ill and likely to harm herself or others or is gravely disabled at the time of the commitment hearing, in making this determination a court may consider recent behavior and conditions, as well as the patient's symptoms on the day of the hearing.

The court's interpretation of the statute appears correct, therefore legislative review is not recommended.

No. S-13604. | Dec. 8, 2010.

Synopsis

Background: Mother, who had separated from father, requested change in shared custody on grounds that she planned to move to Washington with child and because father had pleaded guilty to an assault involving an act of domestic violence toward mother. The Superior Court, Third Judicial District, Anchorage, Craig Stowers, J., continued shared custody but awarded primary physical custody to mother if and when child relocated out of state. Mother appealed.

Holdings: The Supreme Court held that:
1 rebuttable presumption against awarding custody to a parent who has a history of perpetrating domestic violence applies in custody modification proceedings;
2 was required to make explicit findings on whether choking incident, standing alone, amounted to a history of domestic violence; and
3 mother was entitled to present evidence and testimony regarding individual domestic violence incidents as alleged in motion.

Reversed and remanded.

1 Child Custody ⇐ Discretion
Child Custody ⇐ Discretion
Child Custody ⇐ Questions of Fact and Findings of Court

A superior court has broad discretion in determining child custody matters, and the Supreme Court will not reverse a superior court's custody determination unless convinced that the trial court abused its discretion or that its controlling factual findings are clearly erroneous.

2 Child Custody ⇐ Discretion

A superior court abuses its discretion in the child custody context when it fails to consider statutorily mandated factors, weighs factors improperly, or includes improper factors in its decision. AS 25.24.150(c).

3 Appeal and Error ⇐ Clearly erroneous findings

A factual finding is "clearly erroneous" when a review of the entire record leaves the reviewing court with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been made.

4 Child Custody ⇐ Credibility of witnesses

The Supreme Court does not readily second-guess a trial court's child custody determination because it is the function of the trial court, not of the Supreme Court, to judge witnesses' credibility and to weigh conflicting evidence.

6 Child Custody ⇐ Grounds and Factors

Child Custody ⇐ Parent or custodian's relocation of home

As a matter of law, both the occurrence of a crime involving domestic violence and one parent's relocation out of state constitute significant changes in circumstances for child custody purposes. AS 25.20.110(c).

7 Child Custody ⇐ Decision and findings by court

Once a party seeking a change in child custody demonstrates a qualifying change in circumstances, the court will determine whether modification is in the best interests of the child. AS 25.20.110.

8 Child Custody ⇐ Parent or custodian's relocation of home

In child custody modification cases involving a parent's relocation out of state, as long as the relocating parent's reasons for moving are legitimate, the trial court must examine the best interests of the child. AS 25.20.110.

9 Child Custody ⇐ Presumptions

The rebuttable presumption against awarding custody to a parent who has a history of perpetrating domestic violence applies in custody modification proceedings. AS 25.24.150(g, h).

10 Child Custody ⇐ Misconduct or status affecting presumption

The primary purpose of statute creating a rebuttable presumption against awarding custody to a parent who has a history of perpetrating domestic violence is to protect children from potentially adverse custody determinations in response to growing evidence that domestic violence has severe and long-lasting effects on children. AS 25.24.150(g).

11 Child Custody ⇐ Decision and findings by court

Trial court considering mother's request for change in shared custody, which was based in part on fact that father had pleaded guilty to an assault involving an act of domestic violence toward mother, was required to make explicit findings on whether choking incident, standing alone, amounted to a history of domestic violence for purposes of rebuttable presumption against awarding custody to a parent who has a history of perpetrating domestic violence. AS 25.24.150(g, h).

2 Cases that cite this headnote

12 Child Custody ⇐ Decision and findings by court

Where a superior court considering a child custody modification request finds that domestic violence occurred, it must make express findings regarding whether the incident or incidents of domestic violence constitutes a statutory history of perpetrating domestic violence. AS 25.24.150(g, h).

2 Cases that cite this headnote

13 Child Custody ⇐ Hearing and Determination

Mother, who alleged as part of child custody modification request that father had a history of domestic violence, was entitled to present evidence and testimony regarding individual incidents as alleged in her motion to modify custody in order to allow court to determine whether the alleged events were acts of domestic violence which created rebuttable presumption against awarding custody to father. AS 25.24.150(g).

14 Child Custody ⇐ Welfare and best interest of child

Child Custody ⇐ Decision and findings by court

In making a custody decision based on the best interests of the child, a superior court must consider each statutory factor and must discuss the factors that it deems relevant to the case before it. AS 25.24.150(c).

1 Cases that cite this headnote

15 Child Custody ⇐ Welfare and best interest of child

Though a trial court, when considering the best interests of the child for custody purposes, cannot assign disproportionate weight to particular statutory factors while ignoring others, it has considerable discretion in determining the importance of each statutory factor in the context of a specific case and is not required to weigh the factors equally. AS 25.24.150(c).

1 Cases that cite this headnote

16 Child Custody ⇐ Parent or custodian's relocation of home

The interest in stability and continuity, as a statutory factor when considering the best interests of the child in a custody modification proceeding, cannot categorically favor the non-relocating party purely due to geographic stability. AS 25.24.150(c)(5).

17 Child Custody ⇐ Presentation and reservation of grounds of review

Mother failed to argue in Superior Court that it was inappropriate to allow father to have unsupervised visitation with child, and thus Supreme Court would decline to decide that issue on appeal in child custody modification action.

OPINION

PER CURIAM.

I. INTRODUCTION

Jomell Barbee and Shayla Williams both seek primary physical custody of their young son De'Shawn. Barbee and Williams have shared custody of De'Shawn since their separation in February 2008. In April 2009 Williams requested a change in custody because she planned to move to Washington 997 and because Barbee had pleaded guilty to an assault involving an act of domestic violence toward Williams. After a hearing in June 2009, the superior court concluded that it was in De'Shawn's best interests to continue the shared custody arrangement as long as both parents remained in Anchorage but awarded primary physical custody to Barbee if and when Williams relocated out of state. Williams appeals the superior court's custody award, arguing primarily that the court should not have granted custody to Barbee because Barbee had a "history of domestic violence" that raised a rebuttable statutory presumption against custody and he had not overcome the presumption.

Because the trial court was presented with multiple allegations of abuse and found that at least one incident of domestic violence had been perpetrated by Barbee, it was required to make an express finding as to whether Barbee had a "history of perpetrating domestic violence" under AS 25.24.150(h). Failure to make this finding was plain error. We thus reverse and remand for the superior court to make an express determination whether there is a "history of perpetrating domestic violence." If the superior court finds that Barbee has this history, it must address the statutory presumption against awarding custody to Barbee under AS 25.24.150(g) before awarding any custody to Barbee. [1]

II. FACTS AND PROCEEDINGS

A. Barbee And Williams's Relationship And Divorce

Jomell Barbee and Shayla Williams (f/k/a Shayla Barbee) are the parents of De'Shawn Barbee. De'Shawn was born on November 30, 2005. Barbee and Williams married on April 14, 2006 in Anchorage.

Williams alleges that Barbee was abusive during the parties' marriage; she claims that Barbee had "anger issues" and that arguments would "always turn into something bigger than expected and would eventually end with him abusing [her]." According to Williams, Barbee would "choke ... hit ... kick ... [and] throw [her] on the ground" and several times she called the police.

On the night of December 17, 2007, Barbee allegedly "tackled [Williams] from behind and put her in a headlock." Williams stated that Barbee "used both arms and strangled [Williams] to the point she thought that she would lose consciousness" and after Barbee "let go" Williams experienced vomiting, difficulty breathing, and trouble swallowing. Williams later alleged that she had to fight for her life and thought that she was going to die. Williams called the police the next morning; when the police arrived they observed that Williams had "pet[e]chia [2] on her neck and behind both ears" and "what appeared to be blood pooled behind both of her lower eyelids and red marks on her right arm and wrist." Barbee was arrested and charged with assault in the second degree on December 20.

On February 15, 2008, while the criminal charge against him was pending, Barbee filed for divorce. Barbee and Williams, acting pro se, came to an agreement regarding custody and property division at a December 10, 2008 status hearing. On February 11, 2009, the superior court entered a decree of divorce stating that Barbee and Williams had been able to negotiate a settlement regarding property and child custody. Barbee and Williams agreed to have joint legal custody and shared physical custody of De'Shawn; De'Shawn would spend Friday afternoon through Monday morning with Barbee and Monday morning through Friday afternoon with Williams, with alternating holiday arrangements.

On February 27, 2009, Barbee pleaded guilty to the third-degree assault charge that 998 arose from the December 2007 incident. He was sentenced to 24 months imprisonment with 23 months suspended and three years probation. As part of his probation, Barbee agreed to enroll in and complete a 24-week state-approved Domestic Violence Intervention Program and not to have any contact with Williams.

B. Williams's Request For Custody Modification

On April 27, 2009, Williams filed a motion to modify the custody arrangement based on two distinct changed circumstances. She first argued that Barbee's guilty plea to a felony assault charge stemming from an act of domestic violence warranted a change in custody. Specifically citing AS 25.24.150(g) and (h), Williams contended that Barbee's plea proved that he had engaged in domestic violence, making him ineligible for a physical custody award unless he overcame the statutory presumption against custody. Williams added that co-parenting was no longer an option because Barbee was prohibited from having contact with Williams and because Williams did not "feel comfortable or safe sharing custody" with Barbee.

Williams also argued for custody modification because she planned to move to Washington with her soon-to-be husband. She stated that it would be in De'Shawn's best interests to move with her. Williams allowed that De'Shawn had always lived in Alaska and had ties to Barbee's family in the state, but argued that because De'Shawn was only three years old, he would easily be able to adapt to a new environment.

Barbee opposed Williams's motion, arguing that pleading guilty to a single act of domestic violence did not constitute a "history of perpetrating domestic violence." Barbee stated that it would be "mentally and emotionally devastating" to De'Shawn to leave Barbee's extended family in Alaska. Barbee then asked for full legal and physical custody of De'Shawn.

C. The Modification Hearing And The Superior Court's Custody Award

On June 24, 2009, the superior court held a hearing on Williams's motion to modify custody. The court initially found that Williams's reasons for leaving the state were "a legitimate change in circumstances" such that the court would determine what custody arrangement would be in De'Shawn's best interests if and when Williams moved out of state.

The court heard testimony from both parties. Barbee argued that it would be best for De'Shawn to stay in Alaska because De'Shawn had been born and raised in Anchorage and Barbee's extended family members in Anchorage provided care and support to both Barbee and De'Shawn. Barbee explained how he provides for De'Shawn's financial, physical, and mental needs. He also testified that De'Shawn had been in a "stable" environment and that despite the parties' divorce he had encouraged the relationship between De'Shawn and Williams. When asked about the assault, Barbee admitted that he "choked" Williams, calling it "a terrible mistake." He disputed that he ever "beat" Williams as she alleged. Barbee testified that he was taking domestic violence classes and planned to complete them within the month.

Williams also testified that she provides for De'Shawn's needs. She agreed that De'Shawn was in a "stable" environment in Anchorage, but explained that he was "still pretty young" and "very adaptable to changes." She also detailed how she would make sure that De'Shawn stayed in touch with Barbee if she moved out of state. Williams believed that it would be best for De'Shawn to move with her to Washington because she and her husband could provide a "family structure" including future siblings and financial security, and neither of them had any type of criminal or domestic violence background.

After Barbee and Williams testified, the superior court observed that this was "a close case" and summarized the best interests factors under AS 25.24.150(c). The superior court found that De'Shawn had the typical needs of any child of his age, that both Barbee and Williams were capable of meeting those needs, that the child's preference was not a factor because of De'Shawn's 999 young age, and that there was love and affection between De'Shawn and both of his parents.[3] These factors weighed evenly between Barbee and Williams.

The superior court then turned to the fifth statutory factor, the desire to maintain continuity,[4] and found that De'Shawn had "been in a stable, satisfactory environment" and that Barbee's extended family in Anchorage was "an important factor." The court determined that it would be in De'Shawn's best interests to "continue the stability" and weighed the fifth factor in favor of Barbee.

Examining the sixth factor, willingness and ability to foster a relationship between the other parent and the child,[5] the court first noted that the factor might not apply to the case in light of the domestic violence between the parties,[6] but ultimately concluded that the factor did not favor either party.

Finally, the superior court touched on the seventh factor, evidence of domestic violence,[7] and found that the factor weighed in favor of Williams because of Barbee's felony assault conviction. The superior court acknowledged that Williams had alleged other instances of abuse and filed other domestic violence petitions that were denied but suggested that none of the additional incidents had been proved. Thus, the court evaluated the seventh factor based on "this one really big deal incident here where you choked her terribly" and found that the seventh factor weighed against Barbee.

Summarizing its best interests analysis, the superior court found "one factor favoring [Williams] fairly strongly [and] one factor favoring [Barbee] somewhat strongly, and the rest of the factors [ ] equally balanced." The court concluded that "the factor of stability and the existence of the extended family on Mr. Barbee's side ... suggest that De'Shawn's best interest would be best served by having Mr. Barbee exercise what would probably be called the custodial period." The court ruled that it would maintain the current custody arrangement if Williams remained in Alaska, but Barbee would be awarded primary physical custody if Williams moved to Washington.

On July 22, 2009, the superior court entered a written order memorializing its decision:

1. Shayla Williams'[s] Motion to Modify Custody is denied.

2. If and when Shayla Williams relocates out of state, Jomell Barbee shall exercise primary physical custody of the parties' child De'Shawn....

3. As long as Ms. Williams continues to reside in Anchorage, the parties shall exercise shared physical custody under the current (previously ordered) schedule.

4. The parents shall continue to exercise shared legal custody. However, if Ms. Williams relocates out of Anchorage, Mr. Barbee may make all decisions regarding De'Shawn's education.

1000 Williams asked the superior court to reconsider the custody ruling on July 6, 2009; her motion was denied on July 22. Williams appealed the superior court's decision.

III. STANDARD OF REVIEW

1 2 3 4 A superior court has broad discretion in determining child custody matters.[8] We will not reverse a superior court's custody determination unless we are "convinced that the trial court abused its discretion or that its controlling factual findings are clearly erroneous."[9] A superior court abuses its discretion in the custody context when it "fails to consider statutorily mandated factors, weighs factors improperly, or includes improper factors in its decision."[10] A factual finding is clearly erroneous when a review of the entire record leaves us with the "definite and firm conviction" that a mistake has been made. [11] We do not "readily second guess a trial court's custody determination because it is the function of the trial court, not of this court, to judge witnesses' credibility and to weigh conflicting evidence." [12]

IV. DISCUSSION

5 6 7 Alaska Statute 25.20.110 provides that the superior court may modify child custody or visitation "if the court determines that a change in circumstances requires the modification of the award and the modification is in the best interests of the child." [13] The parent seeking modification must first establish that there has been a "significant change in circumstances affecting the child's best interests." [14] As a matter of law, both the occurrence of a crime involving domestic violence and one parent's relocation out of state constitute significant changes in circumstances. [15] Once a party demonstrates a qualifying change in circumstances, the court will determine whether modification is in the best interests of the child. [16]

8 In cases involving a parent's relocation out of state, as long as the relocating parent's reasons for moving are legitimate, the trial court must examine the best interests of the child. [17] Here, the superior court found that Williams's reasons for relocating were "totally legitimate" and proceeded to analyze De'Shawn's best interests.

A. Domestic Violence And The Presumption Against Custody

Alaska Statute 25.24.150(g), enacted by the legislature in 2004, directs that "[t]here is a rebuttable presumption that a parent who has a history of perpetrating domestic violence against the other parent, a child, or a domestic living partner may not be awarded sole legal custody, sole physical custody, joint legal custody, or joint physical custody of a child." [18] The statute provides that a person has a "history of perpetrating domestic violence ... if the court finds that, during one incident of domestic violence, the parent caused serious physical injury or the court finds that the parent has engaged in more than one incident of domestic violence." 1001 [19] We define "serious physical injury" under subsection (h) as "physical injury caused by an act performed under circumstances that create a substantial risk of death; or physical injury that causes serious and protracted disfigurement, protracted impairment of health, protracted loss or impairment of the function of a body member or organ, or that unlawfully terminates a pregnancy." [20] We have held that once the trial court determines that a party has a "history of perpetrating domestic violence" as defined by subsection .150(h), "the path charted in subsection .150(g)-(i) must be followed," i.e., the rebuttable presumption against custody applies. [21]

At the June 24, 2009 hearing and in its July 22, 2009 order the superior court granted primary physical and shared legal custody to Barbee should Williams relocate out of state. Williams's main argument on appeal is that it was error for the superior court to award custody to Barbee because Barbee has a history of domestic violence and failed to rebut the statutory presumption against custody. Specifically, Williams asserts that "despite recognizing that Mr. Barbee had engaged in serious domestic violence the court failed to make a specific finding or clearly address the presumption that Mr. Barbee could not be awarded physical or legal custody of the child pursuant to AS 25.24.150(g)." Barbee responds that the superior court found that he did not have a history of domestic violence and so did not have to address the presumption of AS 25.24.150(g).

1. The statutory presumption against custody applies in modification proceedings.

9 As a threshold matter, we must determine whether the rebuttable presumption against awarding custody to a parent who has "a history of perpetrating domestic violence" applies in custody modification proceedings. [22] We have held that the "ultimate focus" in the custody modification context "is the best interests of the children." [23] We conclude that applying the statutory presumption against custody is appropriate and necessary in light of this focus.

10 First, the legislative history behind AS 25.24.150(g) strongly indicates that the legislature intended for the presumption to apply in modification proceedings. Alaska Statute 25.24.150(g) was enacted in 2004 by House Bill 385. [24] The primary purpose of H.B. 385 was to protect children from potentially adverse custody determinations in response to growing evidence that domestic violence has severe and long-lasting effects on children. [25] The bill sought to decrease the likelihood that children would be placed in the custodial household where domestic violence exists by ensuring that domestic violence was adequately and specifically included when courts analyzed a child's best interests. [26] This purpose is equally valid at a 1002 modification hearing where, just as in making an initial custody determination, a court should fully address any existence of domestic violence and avoid making a custody determination that will place a child in the custody of an abusive parent.

To accomplish its goal, H.B. 385 refined the best interests analysis by requiring that courts consider the existence of domestic violence not only as part of the traditional "best interests" factors laid out in AS 25.24.150(c) but also as triggering a rebuttable presumption against custody where a history of domestic violence exists. [27] It follows that the presumption is properly a part of the "best interests" analysis in modification proceedings just as it is in initial custody determinations. [28]

Adding support to our conclusion that the presumption applies in modification cases, we observe that AS 25.20.110 does not limit a superior court to consideration of only the factors under subsection (c) when determining whether modification is warranted. [29] Nor have we so limited courts making any custody determinations-our guiding concern has long been the best interests of the child and not strict adherence to the factors enumerated in the statute. [30] In addition, we recently assumed that the statutory presumption applies to a proceeding to modify visitation; there is no reason why it should not similarly apply to a proceeding to modify custody. [31] And employing the presumption where one party seeks modification is a logical extension of our cases applying the other subsections of AS 25.24.150 to modification proceedings. [32] Moreover, given that a finding that a crime involving domestic violence has occurred since the last custody determination is, as a matter of law, a changed circumstance that warrants a modification proceeding, it would make little sense to exclude the presumption against custody in modification cases. [33] The statutory purpose of protecting children would be completely unfulfilled if, in a modification hearing triggered by the occurrence of a crime involving domestic violence, the court could ignore the statutory presumption against awarding custody to the perpetrator of domestic violence.

Finally, we believe that applying the statutory presumption against custody is undoubtedly 1003 appropriate in a case such as this one, where the presumption was not addressed at the initial custody determination because the custody award was made pursuant to an agreement of the parties. [34] Applying the presumption is especially necessary where the settlement agreement awarding custody was made by parties with a history of domestic violence during the marriage. [35]

2. The superior court must make express findings regarding whether Barbee has a "history of perpetrating domestic violence."

11 Williams maintains on appeal that Barbee "has a history of domestic violence as evidenced by his conviction and his own testimony" and that the trial court "recognized that Mr. Barbee has a history of domestic violence." Citing to the same page of the transcript as Williams, Barbee responds that the superior court found that he did not have a history of domestic violence, and so did not have to address the statutory presumption against custody. The transcript suggests that neither party is entirely correct-the superior court did not make any express finding regarding a "history of perpetrating domestic violence" under AS 25.24.150(h). While the trial court's dialogue did include the phrase "history of domestic violence," read in context, it appears that the term "history of domestic violence" referred to the best interests of the child criteria found at AS 25.24.150(c)(7) rather than a separate analysis under subsection .150(h). [36]

We have held that "when the record shows that domestic violence has occurred and the trial court so finds, it is plain error for the court not to make findings as to whether the domestic violence amounted to a history of perpetrating domestic violence." [37] In Puddicombe v. Dreka, we concluded that it was error for the superior court to fail to evaluate whether there was a history under AS 25.24.150(h) after the court found when discussing the seventh best interests factor that both parties had engaged in domestic violence. [38] The evidence of domestic violence in Puddicombe consisted of plaintiff's allegations (presented without witness testimony) that defendant punched, sexually assaulted, choked, and threatened to kill her along with extensive testimony about several altercations that occurred between the parties, though "most of the evidence regarding physical violence was from the parties themselves and was highly contested."[39] Even so, because the superior court found that domestic violence had occurred, it was required to "explicitly address whether it was serious enough to be a history of perpetrating 1004 domestic violence under the definition set out in subsection .150(h)."[40]

12 Addressing this same issue, we recently concluded that a trial court must determine whether domestic violence amounted to a history under AS 25.24.150(h) even when evidence of domestic violence is less "overwhelming" than in Puddicombe.[41] In Michele M. v. Richard R. the superior court did not find any relevant, recent domestic violence incidents and "may have implicitly determined that [defendant's] past acts of domestic violence were neither numerous nor significant and so did not amount to a 'history of perpetrating domestic violence.' "[42] Still, we remanded, stating that "it was plain error for the court not to further determine whether [defendant's] previous acts of domestic violence constituted" a history under the statute.[43] We hold today that where a superior court finds that domestic violence occurred, it must make express findings regarding whether the incident or incidents of domestic violence constitute a "history of perpetrating domestic violence" under AS 25.24.150(h).

At the June 24, 2009 hearing, the superior court made some comments about both the single substantiated incident and Williams's other alleged incidents but did not expressly state whether they amounted to a statutorily defined history of abuse. First, the court referred to the incident that resulted in Barbee's assault conviction and recognized that it was "one really big deal incident here where you choked her terribly." Crucially, however, the superior court did not explain whether "chok[ing] her terribly" amounted to causing a "serious physical injury" such that the single incident constituted a history under subsection .150(h).

"Serious physical injury" in the context of the presumption against awarding custody means "physical injury caused by an act performed under circumstances that create a substantial risk of death; or physical injury that causes serious and protracted disfigurement, protracted impairment of health, protracted loss or impairment of the function of a body member or organ, or that unlawfully terminates a pregnancy."[44] The absence of a finding in this case is especially problematic because Williams claimed that she feared for her life during the incident, and the charging document, which was "based upon a review of [the] police report" indicates:

> [Williams] reported that her husband tackled her from behind and put her in a headlock. She said that he used both arms and strangled her to the point she thought she would lose consciousness. She stated that after he let go, she began vomiting and had difficulty breathing. She stated that her voice was hoarse and continued to have trouble swallowing on the morning of the 18th when she called the police. The officer observed that she had pet[e]chia on her neck and behind both ears. The officer noted what appeared to be blood pooled behind both of her lower eyelids and red marks on her right arm and wrist.
> On remand the superior court must make an explicit finding whether this choking incident, standing alone, amounts to a history of domestic violence under AS 25.24.150(h).

We next turn to Williams's many additional allegations of domestic violence in her pleadings to the superior court. Even if the superior court determines on remand that the single choking incident did not amount to a history of domestic violence, if Williams's evidence warrants a finding that there were additional incidents of domestic violence, then there was a "history of perpetrating domestic violence," and the superior court must address the rebuttable presumption against custody.

3. If pro se parties make allegations of domestic violence the superior court must inquire into the allegations and allow the parties to present evidence regarding the allegations.

13 In Parks v. Parks, we concluded that AS 25.24.150(g) "requires trial courts to 1005 consider alleged incidents of domestic violence" and that it is appropriate to "question the pro se litigants about facts relevant to the issue" to determine whether an alleged event was an incident of domestic violence.[45] We reaffirm this position here and conclude that it was error not to give Williams an opportunity to put forth evidence to support her allegations.

In Parks, a husband admitted during a custody hearing that he had thrown water in his wife's face; the trial court found that this was not an incident of domestic violence for purposes of triggering the statutory presumption against custody because there was no evidence that the wife was afraid. [46] We clarified on appeal that the water-throwing would constitute domestic violence if the husband was attempting to place his wife in fear of imminent physical injury. [47] We then remanded to the superior court for additional findings, explaining:

> Alaska Statute 25.24.150(g) requires trial courts to consider alleged incidents of domestic violence, and here the trial court was in a position to question the pro se litigants about facts relevant to the issue. On remand, the trial court should solicit from the parties the information it needs to determine whether the water-throwing incident was an act of domestic violence. [[[[48]]

In this case, Williams's pleadings to the superior court contained numerous allegations of domestic abuse. Williams detailed in her motion to modify custody that during their marriage Barbee had "anger issues" and that arguments would end with Barbee "abusing" Williams, including choking, hitting, kicking, and throwing Williams to the ground. Yet, the superior court did not take testimony from Williams about the individual incidents alleged in her motion to modify custody. [49] Nor did the trial court ask Williams to provide additional information that would have allowed the court to determine whether the alleged events were acts of domestic violence. [50] The superior court should have inquired into the details of the events and provided an opportunity for Williams to present evidence in support of her allegations of abuse in order to determine whether the events were acts of domestic violence. We remand for the superior court to allow and evaluate such evidence.

B. The Best Interests Factors Under AS 25.24.150(c)

14 15 In making a custody decision based on the best interests of the child, a superior court must consider each statutory factor in subsection .150(c) and must discuss the factors that it deems relevant to the case before it. [51] Though a trial court cannot "assign[ ] disproportionate weight to particular factors while ignoring others," it has "considerable discretion in determining the importance of each statutory factor in the context of a specific case" and is not required to weigh the factors equally. [52]

Here, the superior court specifically discussed each factor under AS 25.24.150(c). The court determined that most of the factors did not favor either party, but that two factors affected its analysis-the interest in maintaining stability and continuity weighed in favor of Barbee under AS 25.24.150(c)(5), [53] 1006 while the incident of domestic violence weighed in favor of awarding custody to Williams under AS 25.24.150(c)(7). [54]

Williams argues that the superior court improperly weighed the stability and continuity factor equally against the existence of domestic violence. Barbee replies that the superior court properly discussed and weighed the best interests factors, and that it was appropriate for the trial court to focus on the stability and continuity factor in light of Williams's planned move to Washington.

16 Because the superior court will have to reevaluate on remand the relative weights of the continuity and stability factor and the domestic violence factor in light of its findings regarding the alleged domestic violence, we do not reach the issue of whether the superior court properly analyzed the factors. We note, however, that several of our recent decisions addressing custody modification where one parent relocates out of state emphasize that the interest in stability and continuity described in AS 25.24.150(c)(5) cannot categorically favor the non-relocating party purely due to geographic stability. [55] In Blanton v. Yourkowski, we explained our reasoning:

> A continuity test centered entirely on the child's geographical stability would always favor placing the child with the non-moving parent. Yet our decisions recognize that courts may properly award primary custody to the relocating parent when that parent offers superior emotional stability. Thus, the continuity and stability factor does not preordain the result in such cases; instead, it commands a comprehensive inquiry into each parent's respective ability to maintain stable and satisfactory relations between themselves and the child. [[56]]

We have concluded that stability and continuity "can encompass a multitude of factors, including, but not limited to, the relationship with the custodial parent, the home provided by the custodial parent, the children's school, the community of friends and family, the cultural community, ... the children's relationship with the non-custodial parent ... [and] stability of place." [57] It is the trial court's task "to examine all of these factors and determine, in each case, which predominate." [58]

C. Unsupervised Visitation

17 On appeal, Williams argues that it was inappropriate for the superior court to allow Barbee to have unsupervised visitation. Barbee urges us not to reach this issue because Williams did not brief the argument. While Williams's briefing on appeal is likely sufficient under our more liberal standards for pro se litigant pleadings, [59] we will not decide this issue because Williams did not raise it in the superior court.

V. CONCLUSION

We REVERSE the award of primary physical and shared legal custody to Barbee 1007 and REMAND for the superior court to make an express finding regarding whether Barbee has a "history of perpetrating domestic violence" pursuant to AS 25.24.150(h). If the superior court finds that Barbee does have a history of domestic violence, it must address the rebuttable presumption against custody under AS 25.24.150(g) before awarding any custody to Barbee.

28 In addition, the amendments and additions to AS 25.24.150 were based on a model statute, which directed that "[i]n every proceeding where there is at issue a dispute as to the custody of the child" the presumption against custody should apply. Bolotin, supra note 19, at 273 (quoting the MODEL CODE ON DOMESTIC AND FAMILY VIOLENCE § 401 (Nat'l Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges 1994)) (emphasis added). Dusty CHRISTOFFERSEN, Appellant, v.
STATE of Alaska, COURT CUSTODY INVESTIGATOR'S OFFICE, Appellee.

No. S-13539. | Nov. 5, 2010.

Synopsis

Background: Father and stepmother of child who was subject of a custody investigation brought action against the state, seeking damages for court-appointed custody investigator's failure to immediately report that the child had engaged in sexual misconduct with a younger child in the past, and after child thereafter engaged in sexual misconduct with his half-sister. The Superior Court, Third Judicial District, Anchorage, John Suddock, J., entered summary judgment in favor of investigator. Step-mother appealed.

Holdings: The Supreme Court, Winfree, J., held that:
1 court-appointed custody investigator was entitled to absolute quasi-judicial immunity, and
2 that immunity extended to the state, precluding claim of vicarious liability.

Affirmed.

I. INTRODUCTION

In the course of performing her duties, a court-appointed custody investigator received a police report regarding an allegation that the child whose custody was being investigated had engaged in sexual misconduct. The investigator later included this information in her custody report, but did not notify the child's parents or the Office of Children's Services at the time she received the police report. During a period of time that apparently began before the custody investigator received the police report and perhaps continued until the custody investigator issued her report, the child committed further sexual misconduct, this time against his half-sister. The child's father and stepmother filed suit against the State of Alaska for damages, arguing that the custody investigator had a duty to warn them upon learning of the child's previous misconduct. The superior court dismissed the suit on summary judgment. Because court-appointed custody investigators are entitled to absolute quasi-judicial immunity from suits arising from the performance of their duties and because that immunity extends to the State, we affirm.

II. FACTS AND PROCEEDINGS

Mark Christoffersen married Brandi Martin and they had a son, M.C., in 1992. When the couple divorced in 1999, Brandi was awarded primary custody of M.C. and Mark was granted visitation rights. In 2001 Brandi and M.C. moved to Florida and Mark lost contact with them for several years. In March 2006 Mark filed a motion to modify the custody order, seeking primary physical custody of M.C. After the court served Mark's motion on Brandi, the two resumed contact with each other, and Mark resumed visitation with M.C. shortly thereafter. By the time Mark and M.C. were reunited, Mark had married Dusty and the couple had two young daughters.

In May 2006 Master Andrew Brown responded to Mark's motion to modify M.C.'s custody order by directing the Alaska Court System's Custody Investigator's Office (the State) to conduct an investigation and prepare a custody report. The State assigned the case to a custody investigator. The custody investigator interviewed a number of people over the course of her investigation and requested information from collateral resources, including the Anchorage Police Department (APD).

In late June 2006 APD responded to the custody investigator's information request. Included in APD's response was a report concerning an April 2006 incident in which M.C. had inappropriately touched a two-year-old girl. According to the report, M.C. admitted he had touched the child, but the child's mother did not pursue criminal charges.

The custody investigator distributed her completed report to the court, Mark, and Brandi in late October 2006. The custody report addressed a number of custodial issues, including the allegation that M.C. had inappropriately touched the young child. From this report the Christoffersens apparently learned for the first time about M.C.'s inappropriate contact with the young child.

A few days after the custody report was distributed, the Christoffersens contacted the police and told them that M.C. had sexually abused their five-year-old daughter-M.C.'s half-sister-beginning soon after he resumed visitation with Mark. During an interview with police, M.C. admitted perpetrating sexual misconduct against the girl. M.C. was subsequently adjudicated on a charge of sexual assault of a minor in the fourth degree.

In April 2008 the Christoffersens filed suit against the State, seeking ten million dollars in damages. They alleged the custody investigator violated her duty to protect their children by not warning the Christoffersens about the allegations of M.C.'s prior sexual misconduct immediately after she received the APD report. They also alleged the custody investigator violated AS 47.17.020's mandated reporting requirements by not forwarding the APD report about M.C. to the Office of Children's Services (OCS).[1] After 1034 the State filed its answer to the complaint, the Christoffersens filed a response adding their belief that by not notifying them or OCS as soon as she received the APD report concerning M.C.'s March 2006 misconduct, the custody investigator violated several additional statutes contained in Titles 9 and 47.[2]

The State filed two motions for summary judgment. In its first motion the State argued that (1) custody investigators are entitled to absolute quasi-judicial immunity from civil suits arising out of the performance of their duties, and (2) this immunity bars the Christoffersens's vicarious liability claim against the State. In its second motion the State argued that the custody investigator had no actionable tort duty to warn about or control M.C.'s conduct under the statutes cited by the Christoffersens, Alaska case law, or public policy. The Christoffersens filed a cross-motion for summary judgment, asserting that the custody investigator violated mandated reporting requirements.

In November 2008 the superior court granted both of the State's summary judgment motions, disposing of the Christoffersens's complaint in its entirety and denying their cross-motion for summary judgment sub silentio. Dusty appealed the superior court's decision; Mark did not.

III. STANDARD OF REVIEW

1 2 We review de novo both a grant of summary judgment[3] and the legal question of whether immunity exists as a defense to a claim.[4]

IV. DISCUSSION

A. Overview

This case requires us to determine whether the superior court correctly granted summary judgment to the State on the basis of either (1) absolute quasi-judicial immunity or (2) lack of an actionable tort duty. "We usually consider whether there is a tort duty before deciding sovereign immunity questions, [though] this is not always our practice."[5] We have analyzed immunity first when "doing so clarifies the public policy considerations that also bear on our duty analysis,"[6] and we do so here for that reason. We conclude that (1) a court-appointed custody investigator is entitled to absolute quasi-judicial immunity from civil suits arising from the performance of an investigation, and (2) when a custody investigator is an employee or contractor of the State, that immunity extends to the State. We therefore do not need to address the superior court's ruling on duty.

B. Court-Appointed Custody Investigators Are Protected Under The Doctrine Of Absolute Quasi-Judicial Immunity.

3 4 5 Judges are absolutely immune from liability for damages for acts performed in the exercise of their judicial functions.[7] This 1035 absolute judicial immunity applies "no matter how erroneous the act may have been, how injurious its consequences, how informal the proceeding, or how malicious the motive. Only judicial actions taken in the clear absence of all jurisdiction will deprive a judge of absolute immunity."[8]

6 7 The doctrine of absolute judicial immunity extends not only to judges but to others who perform duties sufficiently related to the judicial process.[9] We have previously stated that the "clearest case for quasi-judicial immunity is presented in instances where some aspect of the court's adjudicative responsibility is delegated to another official such as a master or referee. And in Alaska, as well as in almost all other jurisdictions, neutral court-appointed experts are also shielded by absolute quasi-judicial immunity."[10]

In Lythgoe v. Guinn[11] we held that quasi-judicial immunity bars suit against a court-appointed custody investigator.[12] Dr. Janet Guinn, a psychologist, had been appointed in that case "to act as an independent custody investigator" and to make a custody recommendation to the court.[13] A party to the underlying child custody dispute subsequently sued Dr. Guinn, alleging that she committed negligent and intentional torts during her investigation and during the preparation of her report.[14] We held that Dr. Guinn served as an "arm of the court" and performed a function "integral to the judicial process" in her capacity as a court-appointed custody investigator,[15] qualifying her for immunity under relevant case law. We further held that policy considerations supported granting her absolute quasi-judicial immunity. [16]

We explained that "[e]xposure to liability could deter [court-appointed experts'] acceptance of court appointments" [17] and "may affect the manner in which such court-appointed experts perform their jobs." [18] We noted that individuals appointed by the court to conduct custody investigations exercise discretionary judgment in rendering their evaluations, and that "the sine qua non of the exercise of such discretion is the freedom to act in an objective and independent manner." [19] If faced with the threat of personal liability for exercising that discretion, court-appointed experts would be less likely to offer "the disinterested objective opinion the court seeks." [20] Therefore we concluded that extending absolute judicial immunity to quasi-judicial officers is appropriate to prevent a professional who is delegated judicial duties to aid the court from becoming a "lightning rod for harassing litigation." [21]

Nothing distinguishes Lythgoe from this case. Custody investigators performing duties pursuant to their employment by or contract with the Alaska Court System's Custody Investigator's Office are quasi-judicial officers. [22] As such they are entitled to absolute quasi-judicial immunity from suits arising out of the performance of those duties. [23] Dusty nonetheless appears to contend that the custody investigator here is not immune from suit because she is not entitled 1036 to the immunity described in AS 47.17.050, which protects persons who make good-faith reports of suspected child abuse from civil or criminal liability. Although Dusty may be correct in contending that AS 47.17.050 would not immunize the custody investigator from suit in this case, the investigator is nevertheless protected by common-law quasi-judicial immunity. [24] Dusty's contention is therefore without merit.

C. The State May Not Be Held Liable For The Conduct Of Custody Investigators Who Are Acting Through The Custody Investigator's Office And Are Shielded By Absolute Quasi-Judicial Immunity.

8 The Christoffersens named the State as the defendant in their suit, not the custody investigator herself. The Christoffersens have not alleged any separate negligence by the State. Instead they imply that the State is vicariously liable for the court-appointed custody investigator's actions.

We have not previously addressed vicarious liability within the context of absolute quasi-judicial immunity. But we have held that a government employee's official immunity from suit bars vicarious liability claims against government entities for the same conduct. [25] Other courts addressing this issue have consistently held that an employee's quasi-judicial immunity bars any vicarious liability claims brought against the employer. [26] We support this view. The policy considerations that support extending absolute quasi-judicial immunity to court-appointed investigators acting within the scope and capacity of their appointment also support extending that same immunity to their principal, here, the State. To conclude otherwise would merely shift the threat of liability from the agent to the principal and would stifle the "disinterested objective opinion that the court seeks." [27]

We therefore hold that because the court-appointed custody investigator is absolutely immune from suits for actions performed within that capacity, the State cannot be held liable for her conduct.

V. CONCLUSION

We AFFIRM the superior court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the State on the ground that it is shielded by the custody investigator's absolute quasi-judicial immunity.

I. INTRODUCTION

Alyeska Pipeline Service Company (Alyeska) contracted with the Liberty Mutual Group (Liberty Mutual) to write an owner-controlled insurance program (OCIP). The State of Alaska, Department of Commerce, Community and Economic Development, Division of Insurance (Division), issued a cease and desist order stating that Alyeska's OCIP was prohibited by statute. An administrative law judge determined that "the Liberty Mutual program does not fit within the definition of an 'owner controlled insurance program' that the statute supplies." The Division's deputy director, acting as the final agency decision-maker, reversed the administrative law judge's decision. On appeal the superior court reversed the deputy director's decision. Because the superior court correctly ascertained the statute's limits, we affirm the superior court's decision.

II. FACTS AND PROCEEDINGS

A. Facts

1. Alyeska's Non–Construction OCIP

Alyeska transports crude oil through the Trans–Alaska Pipeline System. Alyeska contracted with Liberty Mutual to write an OCIP to "include[ ] workers compensation and general liability coverages" for Alyeska and several contractors,[1] effective for three years beginning January 2002. Alyeska renewed the program for another three years effective January 2005.

Six contractors enrolled in Alyeska's program. These contractors provided a variety of services for Alyeska, including warehousing, mineral mining, security, medical and emergency response, catering, oil spill prevention, and surveying. It is undisputed that the contractors' work is properly characterized as maintenance and support—not construction. For this reason, we refer to Alyeska's OCIP as a "non-construction OCIP."

2. Alaska Statute 21.36.065

In 2005 the legislature enacted AS 21.36.065 which, in subsection (a), states that "[a]n owner controlled insurance program or a contractor controlled insurance program ... shall be allowed only for a major construction project."[2] The statute defines "owner controlled insurance program" in relevant part as "an insurance program where one or more insurance policies are procured on behalf of a project owner,"[3] and in turn defines "project owner" as "a person who, in the course of the person's business, engages the service of a contractor for the purpose of working on a construction project."[4] The statute became effective on June 25, 2005.[5]

The legislative history of AS 21.36.065 is undisputed. In March 2005 the House Labor and Commerce Committee met to discuss House Bill 147, a bill generally relating to insurance regulation.[6] Mike Combs, a representative of Alaska Independent Agents and Brokers, Inc., suggested that the Committee adopt his trade group's proposed amendment "to clarify its position regarding [OCIPs]."[7] According to the Committee Minutes, Combs testified that "there are several problems with using [the OCIP] insurance method for maintenance and repair programs" and that "[t]he [proposed] amendment would limit 595 [OCIPs] to construction projects in excess of $50 million only and not include any repair or maintenance operations."[8] Representative Tom Anderson, Committee Chair, stated the Committee would consult with the Division's director and consider Combs's proposal.[9]

When the House Labor and Commerce Committee met again, Chairperson Anderson introduced a committee substitute for House Bill 147 containing the amendment language Combs proposed.[10] After explaining that the Division "is ultimately the bill's sponsor" he asked the Division's director to "give ... a closing with this amendment, what it does and the change to the bill...."[11] The Division's director testified with respect to OCIPs:

> There have been times when that ability [to have an OCIP] has been attempted to expand into other than construction projects, for example, maintenance projects, ongoing things that in our mind OCIPs were never intended to do, and our concern with the ability to do that for things other than large, one-time construction projects is that it takes one premium out of an already fragile marketplace.[12]

The Committee approved the committee substitute.[13]

The Division's director also testified before the House Finance Committee.[14] The director stated that OCIPs "are designed for major construction projects" and that the proposed amendment "is a prohibition against expanding them into other types of things than large construction projects."[15] The amendment was adopted and the bill was moved out of committee.[16]

The Division's director made additional statements about OCIPs before two Senate committees. The director expressed concern to the Senate Labor and Commerce Committee about OCIPs expanding into non-construction projects.[17] Similarly at the Senate Finance Committee meeting the director testified that OCIPs were appropriate only for large construction projects and not for non-construction projects.[18] Senator Lyda Green, the Committee co-chairperson, understood the director's testimony to mean that an OCIP " 'should not morph' into an ongoing insurance program."[19]

The legislative history includes neither committee reports nor statements by non-committee-member legislators indicating the full legislature's intent in passing the final bill.

B. Proceedings

In November 2006 the Division issued Liberty Mutual a cease and desist order listing seven compliance issues. Count One stated that Alyeska's OCIP was prohibited under Alaska law because "[i]n its present form, the OCIP is designed to cover on-going maintenance and is not restricted to a large construction project in violation of AS 21.36.065." Liberty Mutual requested an administrative hearing. The administrative law judge granted Alyeska's request to intervene.[20]

596 Alyeska filed a motion for partial summary adjudication arguing that (1) by its express language AS 21.36.065 applies only to construction OCIPs and therefore does not apply to its non-construction OCIP, and (2) even if AS 21.36.065 did govern non-construction OCIPs, Alyeska's OCIP falls within a statutory exception.[21]

The administrative law judge granted Alyeska's motion, determining "the Liberty Mutual program does not fit within the definition of an 'owner controlled insurance program' that the statute supplies." Based on the statute's plain language, the administrative law judge concluded AS 21.36.065 "addresses only construction OCIPs," and therefore does not govern Alyeska's non-construction OCIP. The administrative law judge was not persuaded that the statute's legislative history compelled a different conclusion. According to the administrative law judge, the legislation proposed by the trade group "was misdrafted. While the surrounding documentation makes perfectly clear the group's intent to 'prohibit[ ] the use of OCIP[s] ... outside the construction industry,' the group's private attorney wrote language that instead defined non-construction OCIPs out of the scope of the legislation, leaving them unregulated."

After the Division and Alyeska filed proposals for agency action,[22] the Division's deputy director, acting as the final agency decision-maker, issued a decision and final order in October 2007. Determining that the statute is ambiguous and that the legislative history supported the Division's position, the deputy director found that Alyeska's OCIP is governed by and in violation of AS 21.36.065. The deputy director reversed the administrative law judge's decision with respect to AS 21.36.065 and affirmed Count One of the cease and desist order.

Alyeska then appealed to the superior court, which determined the deputy director's decision was "contrary to the plain language of the statute." The superior court reasoned that notwithstanding the legislative history, AS 21.36.065 restricts only construction OCIPs. It stated that:

> It [is] one thing to use legislative history to correct a drafting error when that error is obvious or the error imposes a restriction on the persons subject to the legislation that was never intended by the legislature. It is another to expand a restriction to persons plainly excluded by language of the statute. In these instances, the remedy must lie with the legislature, not the court.

The superior court also rejected Alyeska's argument that its OCIP falls within two exceptions under AS 21.36.065(b).

The Division appeals regarding the application of AS 21.36.065(a). Alyeska cross-appeals regarding the application of an exception under AS 21.36.065(b).

III. STANDARD OF REVIEW

1 2 When a superior court acts as an intermediate appellate court in an administrative matter, we review the merits of the agency's decision.[23] The proper interpretation of a statute presents a question of law that we review de novo, "adopting the rule of law most persuasive in light of precedent, reason, and policy."[24]

IV. DISCUSSION

3 The Division claims the superior court erred because AS 21.36.065 applies to non-construction OCIPs. The Division makes three arguments in support of its position. First, the Division contends the court failed to interpret AS 21.36.065 in conjunction with AS 21.36.190(f).[25] Second, the 597 Division claims the court failed to interpret AS 21.36.065 in a manner consistent with the legislature's intent, as evidenced by the statute's legislative history. Third, the Division argues the court's interpretation does not comply with the maxim expressio unius est exclusio alterius.[26]

4 5 6 In interpreting a statute we "look to the plain meaning of the statute, the legislative purpose, and the intent of the statute."[27] We have declined to mechanically apply the plain meaning rule when interpreting statutes, adopting instead a sliding scale approach: "The plainer the statutory language is, the more convincing the evidence of contrary legislative purpose or intent must be."[28] We apply this sliding scale approach even if a statute is facially unambiguous.[29] Canons of interpretation can also provide useful aids in our efforts to interpret a statute.[30]

Based on its plain language, AS 21.36.065 does not govern non-construction OCIPs such as Alyeska's. When the statutory definitions provided in AS 21.36.065(c) are substituted for the relevant terms in AS 21.36.065(a), the statute provides:

> An insurance program [where one or more insurance policies are procured on behalf of a person who, in the course of the person's business, engages the service of a contractor for the purpose of working on a construction project ... for the purpose of insuring that person] ... shall be allowed only for a major construction project.

Through its incorporation of specifically defined terms, the statute simply was not drafted to govern non-construction OCIPs.[31] The Division argues that extratextual sources or canons of interpretation reveal a legislative intent requiring us to disregard the statute's plain language. Alyeska argues that the Division seeks to reform the statute, not interpret it. We agree with Alyeska. Taking into account AS 21.36.190(f) and expressio unius, AS 21.36.065 remains unsusceptible to the Division's interpretation.[32] On the record before us, including the limited legislative committee history, we must conclude that the statute was either (1) intended by the full legislature to govern only construction OCIPs,[33] or (2) misdrafted through reliance 598 on the industry trade group's proposal. Even if the latter, we will not invade the legislature's province by extending the plain language of AS 21.36.065 to govern non-construction OCIPs.[34] The Division's remedy lies with the legislature, not this court.[35]

V. CONCLUSION

We AFFIRM the superior court's decision.[36]

By purchasing coverage collectively, Alyeska achieves cost savings."

32 We note that AS 21.36.190(f) states " 'owner controlled insurance program' ... ha[s] the meaning[ ] given in AS 21.36.065." Because AS 21.36.190(f) incorporates the meaning given in AS 21.36.065 generally, and therefore incorporates all of the definitions in subsections .065(c)(1)–(6) and not merely subsections .065(c)(2) and (4), we reject the Division's argument that "[t]he definition of OCIP ... do[es] not include any reference to 'construction.' " Nor does expressio unius support the Division's position; that maxim "expresses the concept that when people say one thing they do not mean something else." 2A NORMAN J. SINGER & J.D. SHAMBIE SINGER, STATUTES AND STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION § 47:25 (7th ed. 2007). For the reasons stated, the language expressly adopted by the legislature does not support the Division's interpretation.

Supreme Court of Alaska.

Carol CALVERT, Appellant,
v.
STATE of Alaska, DEPARTMENT OF LABOR & WORKFORCE DEVELOPMENT, EMPLOYMENT SECURITY DIVISION, Appellee.

No. S–13721. | April 15, 2011.

Synopsis

Background: Claimant quit her job and filed for unemployment benefits. The Department of Labor's unemployment insurance claim center determined that claimant was statutorily ineligible for unemployment benefits, and she appealed. The Department of Labor's Appeal Tribunal affirmed the claim center's determination, and claimant appealed. The Commissioner of the Department of Labor affirmed, and claimant appealed. The Superior Court, Third Judicial District, Anchorage, Stephanie E. Joannides, J., affirmed, and claimant appealed.

Holdings: The Supreme Court, Christen, J., held that:
1 claimant did not show that her job was unsuitable;
2 because claimant did not discuss her transportation problems with employer, she did not exhaust all reasonable alternatives prior to quitting and, therefore, left without good cause;
3 claimant did not show good cause for leaving work on basis of personality conflicts; and 4 Department of Labor did not neglect legal duty or deny claimant due process by not informing her of its policies more directly.

Affirmed.

In applying the substantial evidence test to question of fact, appellate court, when reviewing administrative decision, must determine whether there exists such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion; appellate court does not reweigh the evidence or choose between competing inferences.

7 Unemployment Compensation
⇐Good cause in general
Unemployment Compensation
⇐Suitability of work in general

Unemployment compensation claimant who voluntarily leaves unsuitable work leaves with good cause and need not make a separate showing of good cause to quit. AS 23.20.379(a).

8 Unemployment Compensation
⇐Good cause in general
Unemployment Compensation
⇐Suitability of work in general

Factors relevant to suitability are distinguishable from those affecting good cause, in that "suitability" is based on circumstances surrounding the job, and usually involves a comparison of the offered work with other similar work in the locality, whereas "good cause" is based on personal circumstances surrounding unemployment compensation claimant and not directly related to the conditions of the work. AS 23.20.379(a).

9 Unemployment Compensation
⇐Good cause in general
Unemployment Compensation
⇐Suitability of work in general

While unemployment compensation claimant may leave unsuitable work without further efforts to remedy the situation, establishing good cause for leaving work that is otherwise suitable requires a two-step showing: not only must the underlying reason for leaving work be compelling, but claimant must exhaust all reasonable alternatives before leaving the work. AS 23.20.379(a).

10 Unemployment Compensation
⇐Compensation and payment thereof
Unemployment Compensation
⇐Working Conditions or Assignments
Unemployment Compensation
⇐Suitability of work in general
Unemployment Compensation
⇐Voluntary abandonment of employment

Although suitability of work may not be presumed, it need not be analyzed in all unemployment compensation cases, and instead, suitability of work must be examined if: (1) claimant objects to the suitability of wages, hours, or other conditions of work; (2) claimant specifically raises the issue of suitability of work; or (3) facts appear during investigation of claimant's claim that put the Department of Labor on notice that wages or other conditions of work may be substantially less favorable than prevailing conditions for similar work in the locality. AS 23.20.385.

11 Unemployment Compensation
⇐Good cause in general
Unemployment Compensation
⇐Suitability of work in general

Good cause for leaving work depends on the precipitating event and the other reasons for unemployment compensation claimant's quitting are irrelevant, and by contrast, the determination of whether work is unsuitable is a separate inquiry that is not similarly limited. AS 23.20.379(a).

12 Unemployment Compensation

Suitability of work in general

The fact that a circumstance did or did not precipitate unemployment compensation claimant's decision to quit is not relevant to whether the circumstance may render work unsuitable. AS 23.20.379(a), 23.20.385.

13 Unemployment Compensation
Length of commute in general

Unemployment compensation claimant's transportation issues did not give rise to a question of suitability of work; claimant's ten-mile commute was not unreasonably distant by any objective measure, she had easily made the commute by bike during the previous summer and would have had no problem getting to work at other times of year if her means of transportation had been less limited, employer had not asked claimant to relocate or done anything else to change the distance she had to travel to get to work, and claimant's difficulties stemmed from personal circumstances and not from an inherent characteristic of her job. AS 23.20.379(a), 23.20.385.

14 Unemployment Compensation
Problems with co-workers
Unemployment Compensation
Dangerousness of work; safety issues

Workplace hostility and safety breaches that unemployment compensation claimant described in her Voluntary Leaving Statement and brief could be considered circumstances surrounding the job, rather than merely personal circumstances surrounding claimant, and thus, hearing officer was obligated to analyze the suitability of claimant's job before determining that she had failed to show good cause for quitting. AS 23.20.379(a), 23.20.385.

15 Unemployment Compensation
Criticism by or problems with supervisor
Unemployment Compensation
Problems with co-workers
Unemployment Compensation
Dangerousness of work; safety issues

Unemployment compensation claimant did not show that her job was unsuitable; the level of hostility claimant described, while no doubt uncomfortable, did not rise to the level of unsuitability, claimant's personality conflicts with manager did not pose a risk to her health, safety, and morals, claimant described tensions of the type that commonly develop in a workplace as a result of poor communication and the suspicion that coworkers are receiving preferential treatment, and single incident of unsafe practices did not indicate health and safety risks sufficient to demonstrate unsafe conditions rendering work unsuitable. AS 23.20.379(a), 23.20.385.

16 Unemployment Compensation
Good cause in general
Unemployment Compensation
Good cause

If the work that unemployment compensation claimant has left is determined to be suitable, then claimant's eligibility for unemployment benefits depends on whether she left for good cause, and to show good cause, a claimant must demonstrate that the underlying reason for leaving work was compelling, and that claimant exhausted all reasonable alternatives before leaving the work, and burden of demonstrating both elements of good cause is on claimant. AS 23.20.379(a).

17 Unemployment Compensation
Voluntary Abandonment of Employment

In order to exhaust all reasonable alternatives to quitting, unemployment compensation claimant must notify the employer of the problem and request adjustment.

18 Unemployment Compensation
⇐Voluntary Abandonment of Employment
Unemployment Compensation
⇐Good cause in general

In order to exhaust all reasonable alternatives to quitting, unemployment compensation claimant must bring the problem to the attention of someone with the authority to make the necessary adjustments, describe the problem in sufficient detail to allow for resolution, and give the employer enough time to correct the problem, and at the same time, claimant is not expected to do something futile or useless in order to establish good cause for leaving employment.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

19 Unemployment Compensation
⇐Good cause in general

Whether unemployment compensation claimant has shown good cause for quitting is to be analyzed in reference only to the event that directly led claimant to quit and not to any other events or circumstances.

20 Unemployment Compensation
⇐Good cause in general

First element of good cause requires that unemployment compensation have a compelling reason for leaving work, and in contrast to the requirements for determining suitability, there is no requirement that claimant's reasons for leaving work be connected with the work; either work-connected or personal factors may present sufficiently compelling reasons. AS 23.20.379(a).

21 Unemployment Compensation
⇐Transportation Issues

Unemployment compensation claimant's transportation problems provided a compelling reason to quit; actual mileage from claimant's home to work was not unusual, but the time and expense involved in her commute were significant, claimant's bike was gradually breaking down to the point where her commute took an hour and a half each way, and taxi fare was prohibitively expensive. AS 23.20.379(a).

22 Unemployment Compensation
⇐Transportation Issues

Because unemployment compensation claimant did not discuss her transportation problems with her employer or request an adjustment to her work schedule, she did not exhaust all reasonable alternatives prior to quitting and, therefore, left without good cause. AS 23.20.379(a).

23 Unemployment Compensation
⇐Voluntary Abandonment of Employment
Unemployment Compensation
⇐Working Conditions or Assignments

Employer's limited authority or expressed refusal to accommodate unemployment compensation claimant can establish that requesting an adjustment to work conditions would be futile; if the employer has already made it known that the matter will not be adjusted to claimant's satisfaction, or if the matter is one which is beyond the power of the employer to adjust, then claimant is not expected to perform a futile act.

24 Unemployment Compensation
⇐Raising contentions below; preservation of claim; exhaustion

Employee's claim that unemployment compensation hearing officer relied on "hearsay" to find that she had not exhausted her alternatives to quitting work was waived, for purposes of appeal, since employee raised this argument for the first time in the superior court.

25 Unemployment Compensation
⇐Hearsay

In the absence of a hearsay objection, hearsay evidence is competent evidence which may be considered in unemployment compensation proceedings.

26 Administrative Law and Procedure
⇐Judicial procedure; applicability of rules of evidence
Administrative Law and Procedure
⇐Admissibility
Administrative Law and Procedure
⇐Particular Questions, Review of

The strict rules of evidence governing admissibility of hearsay in judicial proceedings do not apply to administrative hearings, and appellate court will not reverse an administrative judgment based on hearsay unless the hearsay was inherently unreliable or jeopardized the fairness of the proceedings.

27 Unemployment Compensation
⇐Harmless error

Any error in unemployment compensation hearing officer's admitting witness's hearsay testimony that manager had reported attempting to call claimant after she quit was harmless; hearing officer relied on witness's testimony primarily in support of the general finding that claimant never informed her employers of her transportation problems, a finding that was amply supported by other evidence in the record, including claimant's own testimony, rather than as evidence of manager's willingness to accommodate claimant.

28 Unemployment Compensation
⇐Change in time of employment, shift, or days worked

To the extent that the change in unemployment compensation claimant's work schedule motivated her decision to quit, it did not constitute a compelling reason.

29 Unemployment Compensation
⇐Change in time of employment, shift, or days worked

Change in unemployment compensation claimant's hours, shifts, or days of work initiated by the employer is seldom a sufficient breach of the contract of hire to give a compelling reason to quit.

30 Unemployment Compensation
⇐Reduction or increase in number of hours worked in general

Unemployment compensation claimant who leaves work merely because the work is less than full-time has voluntarily left work without good cause, and a reduction in hours is not good cause for voluntarily leaving work, even where that reduction results in reduced earnings.

31 Unemployment Compensation
⇐Problems with co-workers

Unemployment compensation claimant's dislike for co-worker did not constitute good cause for leaving work; co-worker's behavior toward claimant did not endanger her health and, if anything, decreased the amount of work demanded of her, and it did not rise to the level of abuse.

32 Unemployment Compensation
⇐Problems with co-workers

Even if unemployment compensation claimant's personality conflicts with co-workers qualified as "abuse," she made only limited efforts to remedy the situation, and because claimant was required to take more active steps to exhaust her alternatives before quitting and she failed to do so, claimant did not show good cause for leaving work on basis of personality conflicts; claimant spoke to manager about reducing her hours but never directly asked him to address the issue of personality conflicts and never described the full extent of her conflicts with co-worker, and by her own admission, claimant never explicitly sought a remedy for her problem.

⇐Raising contentions below; preservation of claim; exhaustion

Because unemployment compensation claimant's due process arguments were raised for the first time in her appeal to the superior court, rather than in her initial post-hearing appeal to the Commissioner of the Department of Labor, they were waived for purposes of appeal, and similarly, claimant's argument that the hearing officer improperly admitted hearsay evidence was waived, for purposes of appeal, because she raised it for the first time on appeal to the superior court. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

34 Unemployment Compensation
⇐Bias of ALJ

To show the bias of unemployment compensation hearing officer, a party must demonstrate that the hearing officer had a predisposition to find against a party or that the hearing officer interfered with the orderly presentation of the evidence.

35 Unemployment Compensation
⇐Matters related to compensation proceedings

Unemployment compensation claimant failed to demonstrate bias sufficient to overcome the presumption of the hearing officer's impartiality; claimant did not show that the hearing officer was predisposed to find against her, claimant's assertion that hearing officer selected evidence to support her findings was insufficient to show actual bias, hearing transcript did not suggest that hearing officer interfered in any way with the presentation of evidence, and hearing officer's questions were thorough and objective.

36 Administrative Law and Procedure
⇐Substantial evidence
Administrative Law and Procedure
⇐Weight of evidence

In applying the substantial evidence test to review an administrative determination, a reviewing court may not reweigh evidence.

37 Unemployment Compensation
⇐Voluntary abandonment of employment

Superior court did not reweigh the evidence when it relied on the hearing officer's findings for its conclusion that there was no evidence that the work was inconsistent with unemployment compensation claimant's physical capability, training, experience, earning capacity, or skill and that the work was therefore suitable.

⇐Proceedings

Unemployment compensation had notice of the Department of Labor's basic eligibility requirements and directions for accessing additional information, both prior to her Appeal Tribunal Hearing and throughout the appeals process; Department's Wage and Hour Information brochure included detailed information about the relevant statutes and regulations, as well as directions for accessing past unemployment insurance appeals decisions online, and the "Voluntary Leaving Statement" that claimant filled out and submitted after she filed for unemployment benefits gave notice to claimants that they had to show reasons for quitting so compelling as to leave no reasonable alternative.

Department of Labor did not neglect a legal duty or deny unemployment compensation claimant due process by not informing her of its policies more directly; all of the statutes, regulations, and internal policy documents governing eligibility for unemployment insurance benefits were publicly available documents that were easily accessible and identified in Department-published materials, and claimants would be presumed to be familiar with the provisions of those documents. I. INTRODUCTION

Carol Calvert quit her job at a seafood processing plant and filed for unemployment insurance benefits. Her reasons for quitting included difficulties with transportation to work and personality conflicts with coworkers. The Department of Labor's unemployment insurance claim center determined that Calvert voluntarily left work without good cause; as a result, she was statutorily ineligible for unemployment benefits for the first six weeks of her unemployment, and her maximum potential benefits were reduced by three times the weekly benefit amount.

Calvert appealed to the Department of Labor's Appeal Tribunal where the assigned Hearing Officer found that transportation problems were the "precipitating event" in Calvert's decision to quit. The Hearing Officer concluded that, although Calvert's transportation problems may have provided a compelling reason to quit, Calvert had not "exhaust[ed] all reasonable alternatives prior to quitting," as is required in order to show good cause. The Hearing Officer affirmed the claim center's determination.

The Commissioner of the Department of Labor affirmed the Hearing Officer's decisions, as did the superior court. For the reasons explained below, we affirm.

II. FACTS AND PROCEEDINGS

Carol Calvert was a seasonal employee of Snug Harbor Seafoods in Kenai. She worked there for the first time during the summer of 2007. She was rehired on March 10, 2008, and quit on April 6, 2008. She filed for unemployment benefits on April 6.

The Department of Labor's (Department) unemployment insurance claim center sent Calvert a "Voluntary Leaving Statement" to complete and return in order to provide additional information about her separation from employment. Calvert returned the Voluntary Leaving Statement on May 9. In her explanation of why she quit, she cited conflicts that had begun during the 2007 season with a supervisor, Mike, and his girlfriend, 995 Hope (also a Snug Harbor employee). Calvert alleged that the conflict began when the plant manager asked Calvert to run the "gear department" and planned to move Hope out of her position in that department. Calvert also described her disappointment at the March 2008 departure of Brandi O'Reagan, who was the plant manager during the 2007 season and who had encouraged Calvert to return for the 2008 season. Calvert reported that Mike cut her hours immediately after O'Reagan left, allegedly in retaliation for Calvert's conflicts with Hope. Calvert was also concerned that Richard King, the plant manager who replaced O'Reagan, was aligned with Mike and Hope, and shared their hostility toward her.

Calvert also described transportation difficulties. She biked ten miles each way to get to Snug Harbor, so she required ample notice of the start times for her shifts. Work shifts were announced via a "hotline." In 2007, shifts were posted so there was typically a three-hour lead time. According to Calvert, in 2008 the hotline was updated less frequently, later in the day, and sometimes as little as half an hour in advance. Calvert argued, "[i]t became a cruel guessing game whether [she] should start for work on [her] bike." She found the local public transit agency to be "relentlessly uncooperative" in arranging transportation, her bike broke, and she anticipated increased difficulties associated with springtime road construction on her route to work.

In addition, Calvert expressed concern on her Voluntary Leaving Statement about the new plant manager's attitude toward workplace safety. During the 2007 season, a co-worker standing next to Calvert was "badly shocked" after water hit an electric box. When Calvert was asked later that season to coil an extension cord lying in several inches of water, she expressed her safety concerns in King's presence. According to Calvert, King "looked at [her], turned his back on [her], and has not spoken to [her] since," except when she approached him about her hours.

The Department's claim center contacted Calvert on May 13 to ask what "final incident" caused her to quit. Calvert reiterated the reasons cited in her Voluntary Leaving Statement:

> There was really no final incident, just a compilation of everything that happened, the old branch manager quitting without telling me, and then problems with the new manager. I quit because my hours week [sic] being cut, and problems with co-workers, and transportation problems.... I talked to the owner my last day about them cutting my hours, and he didn't seem like he wanted to do anything about it.... I don't know if it was any one thing, just everything piled together.

On May 14, the claim center issued a notice of determination finding that Calvert "quit work at Snug Harbor Seafoods because [she was] unhappy with the new manager's supervisory style and apportionment of work." The claim center reasoned that because Calvert had not provided information demonstrating that the manager's actions were "hostile or discriminatory," she had not established "good cause for leaving." As a result, Calvert was denied waiting-week credit for the first week of employment and benefits for the next five weeks,[1] and her maximum potential benefits were reduced by three times the weekly benefit amount.[2]

On June 16, Calvert filed a Notice of Unemployment Insurance Appeal with the Department of Labor's Anchorage Appeal Tribunal. In her appeal, she argued: (1) the claim center did not establish that the work she left was "sufficient and suitable," and she was therefore not required to show good 996 cause for leaving it; (2) "good cause" for leaving the job existed in any case based on Calvert's insufficient work hours, transportation issues, lack of notice by the employer regarding work hours, and the patterns of "[w]orkplace violence" she experienced; and (3) the Department of Labor has a duty to better inform employees on the rules and requirements for unemployment insurance benefits. In addition to her brief, Calvert submitted a request for subpoenas to the Appeal Tribunal.

Hearing Officer Kathy A. Thorstad conducted the Appeal Tribunal hearing telephonically on July 29, 2008. The Hearing Officer observed that, under AS 23.20.379, a person who quits a job without good cause is ineligible for full unemployment insurance benefits. She also explained that the burden of showing good cause is on the employee seeking benefits and that a worker has "good cause" when she has a compelling reason for leaving work and has exhausted all reasonable alternatives to quitting.

During the hearing, the Hearing Officer heard testimony from Calvert, Snug Harbor plant manager King, and the president of Snug Harbor, Paul Dale. Calvert testified that she quit her job on April 6 because she was "upset all day long" and made her decision "based on the amount of stress ... [and] based on the problems [she] was having with transportation." In response to the Hearing Officer's questions about her transportation difficulties, Calvert stated that she had not realized that biking to work "would be much more difficult" during March than it had been when she worked at Snug Harbor the previous summer. She noted that her bike broke down and weather conditions were bad in March and April, forcing her to rely on the Central Area Rural Transit System (CARTS). CARTS requires its passengers to book trips hours in advance, which was difficult for Calvert given her unpredictable work schedule and King's habit of posting the hours for the following day after 6:00 p.m., when CARTS had stopped answering its phones for the evening. According to Calvert, her only other transportation option was to take a taxi, which she stated would not be cost-effective given the amount of money she was making at her job.

The Hearing Officer also questioned Calvert about her work-related stress. Calvert stated that Mike cut her hours after O'Reagan's departure and told her that the decision had been sanctioned by Dale. Calvert noted that she had not asked Mike why her hours were being cut but later asked King, the plant manager, who told her he would "see that the work got done." She also recounted a subsequent conversation with Dale, who told her he had not authorized Mike to cut her hours. Calvert told the Hearing Officer that she did not directly ask Dale to address the situation with Mike, explaining that she "didn't feel that it was necessary" because she assumed someone in Dale's position would "look into it and ... find out exactly what happened." Calvert also stated that she did not directly confront Mike after learning that Dale had not authorized the reduction in her hours.

When the Hearing Officer asked Calvert what efforts she made to keep her job, Calvert responded that she tried to get CARTS to provide her with transportation to work and that she asked King and Dale about the reduction to her hours, "and that's about it." The Hearing Officer asked Calvert whether she explicitly informed King or Dale that Mike's "messing with [her] hours was creating enough of a hardship that [she] would not be able to continue to work if it wasn't corrected"; Calvert confirmed that she did not. The Hearing Officer then asked Calvert whether it was her transportation difficulties or her problems with Mike that caused her to quit. Calvert answered, "It's both of them.... I don't know if one ... had been taken away, if the other one could have been solved and vice versa." The Hearing Officer rephrased her question and asked, "If CARTS had not been giving you any difficulty on that day, would you still have quit your job?" Calvert replied, "I think I would have gone to work, yes. I think I would have given it another week.... I might have complained harder."

Plant manager King testified that he became aware of Calvert's problems with Mike after Mike reported having had a confrontation 997 with Calvert about her hours. He claimed that Calvert's impression that she was being singled out for reduced hours was incorrect, and that the company was trying to "keep hours at a minimum" based on its "limited product" in April. He also stated that he had not known why Calvert quit her job until he saw the exhibits she presented at the hearing.

Dale testified that he did not recall the conversation Calvert reported having had with him about whether Mike had been authorized to cut her hours, but that he "wouldn't dispute it" and it "sound[ed] plausible." Dale added that, after Calvert quit, he asked King "on at least four occasions" if he had contacted her "to discuss her concerns regarding employment"; King reportedly told Dale that he had left messages for Calvert but had not heard back from her. In subsequent appeals, Calvert denied receiving any calls or messages, but she did not raise this point before the Hearing Officer.

The Hearing Officer affirmed the claim center's determination. Because she found that Calvert's transportation problems were the "precipitating event" in her decision to quit, the Hearing Officer did not address Calvert's conflicts with supervisors and co-workers.[3] The Hearing Officer determined that, although the loss of transportation can create a compelling reason for a worker to quit a job, Calvert had not "exhaust[ed] all reasonable alternatives prior to quitting." She found that "[t]he claimant did not discuss her transportation problems with the employer nor did she request a possible adjustment to her work schedule which would have enabled her to use the transit system and continue working." The Hearing Officer concluded that Calvert had not established that she had "good cause for quitting suitable work." The Hearing Officer ruled that Calvert was not entitled to waiting-week benefits under AS 23.20.379.

Calvert appealed the Hearing Officer's decision to the Commissioner of the Department of Labor. In her appeal, she argued that the Hearing Officer had confused the facts; that her phone bills contradicted King's claim that he had attempted to call her after she quit; that the Hearing Officer's reliance on Calvert's testimony about her decision to quit on April 6 was "sleight of hand"; and that there had been no reason to believe talking to her employer about her transportation problems would lead to an adjustment of hours or other resolution. On October 3, 2008, the Commissioner affirmed the Hearing Officer's decision, finding that any factual errors in the decision were not prejudicial and adopting the Hearing Officer's finding that Calvert did not give Snug Harbor a chance to adjust "by making known her problems in getting to work." The Commissioner upheld the Hearing Officer's conclusion that Calvert failed to show good cause for quitting.

Calvert subsequently appealed to the superior court, which held that "[t]here was substantial evidence to support the Hearing Officer's ... conclusion that Calvert did not exhaust all reasonable alternatives before voluntarily quitting, a requirement for finding good cause." The superior court decision also found that the Department had adequately informed Calvert of the law regarding unemployment benefit eligibility. Calvert appeals.

III. STANDARD OF REVIEW

Calvert appeals the decision of the superior court, which affirmed the decisions of the Commissioner of the Department of Labor and the Appeal Tribunal for the Department of Labor. As we have noted, "when the superior court acts as an intermediate court of appeal, no deference is given to the lower court's decision"; rather, we "independently scrutinize directly the merits of the administrative determination."[4] In this case, our 998 independent review has led us to substantial agreement with the superior court's carefully considered decision.

1 2 3 We apply four standards of review to administrative decisions. The "substantial evidence" test applies to questions of fact.[5] The "reasonable basis" test is used for questions of law involving agency expertise.[6] Where no expertise is involved, questions of law are reviewed under the "substitution of judgment" test.[7] Finally, the "reasonable and not arbitrary" test applies to review of administrative regulations.[8]

4 5 We have held that the question of whether a person was dismissed from her job for "misconduct" (one of the grounds for disqualification for waiting-week credits under AS 23.20.379(a)(2)) is a question of fact to be reviewed under the "substantial evidence" test.[9] Consistent with that holding, whether Calvert voluntarily quit suitable work for good cause is reviewed here as a question of fact.[10] In applying this test, we must determine whether there exists "such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion"[11]; the court "does not reweigh the evidence or choose between competing inferences."[12]

6 "[D]ue process and evidentiary arguments raise questions of law which we will review de novo."[13]

IV. DISCUSSION

A. The Unemployment Insurance Benefits Eligibility Framework

7 8 9 Under AS 23.20.379(a), a worker may be partially disqualified from receiving benefits if she "left ... suitable work voluntarily without good cause" or was "discharged for misconduct." These rules are further detailed in the Department's Benefit Policy Manual.[14] The BPM clarifies that suitability and good cause are independent inquiries. "A worker who voluntarily leaves unsuitable work leaves with good cause"[15] and need not make a separate showing of good cause to quit.[16] The factors relevant to 999 suitability are distinguishable from those affecting good cause: "[s]uitability is based on circumstances surrounding the job, and usually involves a comparison of the offered work with other similar work in the locality.... Good cause is based on personal circumstances surrounding the claimant ... and not directly related to the conditions of the work."[17] And while a worker may leave unsuitable work without further efforts to remedy the situation, establishing good cause for leaving work that is otherwise suitable requires a two-step showing: not only must "[t]he underlying reason for leaving work ... be compelling," but "[t]he worker must exhaust all reasonable alternatives before leaving the work."[18]

B. The Hearing Officer Correctly Determined That Calvert Left Suitable Work.

1. The Hearing Officer was required to analyze the suitability of Calvert's job at Snug Harbor.

In finding that Calvert failed to establish good cause for quitting suitable work, the Hearing Officer did not explicitly discuss whether Calvert's job at Snug Harbor was suitable. Calvert argues that the hearing officer improperly "abandoned the issue of suitable work" and therefore did not correctly analyze whether she was required to show good cause for leaving. We agree that the Hearing Officer was required to analyze the suitability of Calvert's work. But we hold that the Hearing Officer's decision implicitly found that Calvert's work was suitable.

10 Alaska Statute 23.20.385 provides that the suitability of work depends on a range of factors, including whether wages, hours, or other conditions of work are substantially less favorable than prevailing conditions in the locality; the degree of risk to a claimant's health, safety, and morals; the claimant's physical fitness for the work; the distance of the work from the claimant's residence; "and other factors that influence a reasonably prudent person in the claimant's circumstances."[19] Although suitability of work may not be presumed, it need not be analyzed in all cases.[20] Suitability of work must be examined if: (1) a worker objects to the suitability of wages, hours, or other "conditions of work"; (2) a worker specifically raises the issue of suitability of work; or (3) facts appear during investigation of a worker's claim that put the Department on notice that wages or other conditions of work may be substantially less favorable than prevailing conditions for similar work in the locality.[21]

Calvert raised the issue of suitability in her initial appeal to the Appeal Tribunal, arguing that the Department "makes no claim of sufficient and suitable work from my employer." She did not provide explicit justification for the claim that her work at Snug Harbor was unsuitable, but elsewhere in her appeal and in her initial Voluntary Leaving Statement, Calvert did identify a number of concerns that might be considered objections to "conditions of work" sufficient to place the Hearing Officer on notice that conditions were potentially unfavorable. Specifically, Calvert cited safety concerns, "workplace violence," personality conflicts, and difficulties with transportation to work.

11 12 The Department contends that none of the issues Calvert raised other than transportation could render her work unsuitable 1000 because they were not found to be the "precipitating event" that led Calvert to quit. We disagree with this reasoning. The "precipitating event" analysis described in the BPM identifies which of a worker's reasons for leaving is to be analyzed for good cause: "good cause depends on the precipitating event and the other reasons [for quitting] are irrelevant."[22] By contrast, the determination of whether work is unsuitable is a separate inquiry that is not similarly limited; if work is unsuitable, a worker has good cause to leave it without having to make a separate showing.[23] The fact that a circumstance did or did not precipitate a worker's decision to quit is not relevant to whether the circumstance may render work unsuitable.

The Department also argues that none of the issues Calvert raised can properly be considered "conditions of work" as the term is used in the BPM. It contends that this term should be interpreted to refer not to work conditions generally, but to "an essential aspect of the job."[24] The Department argues that workplace hostility and transportation problems of the type Calvert claims are not properly categorized as "essential aspects" of a job and should instead be considered under the good cause rubric.[25]

13 We find this argument convincing as it applies to Calvert's transportation problems. The BPM provides that "[w]ork that is unreasonably distant from a worker's residence is unsuitable and the worker has good cause for leaving it."[26] The BPM illustrates this rule with a case involving a claimant whose employer assigned him to work in a community 118 miles from his home; the Commissioner found this to be an "unreasonable commuting distance" and concluded that the job was unsuitable, giving the claimant good cause for quitting.[27] But as the Department argues, there is "a subtle but logical distinction" between distance to work and personal factors affecting a commute; "[p]ersonal circumstances that render a reasonable, customary commute no longer feasible cannot make a job unsuitable." Here, Calvert's ten-mile commute was not "unreasonably distant" by any objective measure; she had easily made the commute by bike during the previous summer and would have had no problem getting to work at other times of year if her means of transportation had been less limited. And unlike the case described in the BPM, Calvert's employer had not asked her to relocate or done anything else to change the distance she had to travel to get to work. Her difficulties stemmed from personal circumstances, not from an inherent characteristic of her job at Snug Harbor; they did not give rise to a question of suitability.

14 In contrast with Calvert's transportation issues, the workplace hostility and safety breaches Calvert described in her Voluntary Leaving Statement and Appeal Tribunal brief may be considered "circumstances surrounding the job," rather than merely "personal circumstances surrounding the claimant."[28] By mentioning suitability and raising workplace hostility and safety issues, Calvert objected to conditions of her work, raised the issue of suitability, and put the Department on notice that conditions at Snug Harbor might be less favorable than standard conditions in the locality. Thus, the Hearing Officer was obligated to analyze the suitability of Calvert's job before determining 1001 that she had failed to show good cause for quitting.

2. Calvert did not show that her job at Snug Harbor was unsuitable.

15 Although the Hearing Officer did not explicitly address the question of suitability in reviewing Calvert's appeal, her determination that Calvert "did not establish that she had good cause for quitting suitable work" implicitly concluded that Calvert's work was suitable. Upon independent review of the evidence, we agree with the Hearing Officer's implied finding that Calvert did not show that her job at Snug Harbor was unsuitable.

Calvert mentioned "workplace violence" in her written appeal to the Hearing Officer, but she neither explained what she meant by this term nor provided any evidence of "physical violence" at Snug Harbor. Construing this phrase in light of Calvert's oral testimony, we understand her to refer to workplace hostility and to the personality conflicts she had with Mike and plant manager King. We hold that the level of hostility Calvert describes at Snug Harbor, while no doubt uncomfortable, did not rise to the level of unsuitability. Calvert's personality conflicts did not pose a risk to her "health, safety, and morals."[29] And she does not claim she experienced threats or even serious verbal altercations. Rather, she describes tensions of the type that commonly develop in a workplace as a result of poor communication and the suspicion that coworkers are receiving preferential treatment based on personal relationships. Although certainly not ideal, these workplace conditions did not render Calvert's job "unsuitable."

Nor does Calvert's description of unsafe practices indicate that her work was unsuitable. The incident Calvert described in her Voluntary Leaving Statement took place in 2007. The BPM provides that "[i]f the conditions of work violate a state or federal law concerning wages, hours, safety, or sanitation, the worker has good cause for leaving, regardless of the length of time that the worker has worked under the objectionable condition."[30] Therefore, the fact that Calvert continued to work at Snug Harbor the following year does not, by itself, imply that the work was suitable. But Calvert did not describe any safety-related incidents in 2008 or offer evidence that unsafe practices were an ongoing condition of work. The single 2007 incident cited by Calvert does not provide evidence of health and safety risks sufficient to demonstrate unsafe conditions rendering work at Snug Harbor unsuitable in 2008.

C. Calvert Did Not Show Good Cause For Voluntarily Leaving Work.

16 If the work a claimant has left is determined to be suitable, that claimant's eligibility for unemployment insurance benefits depends on whether she left for good cause.[31] To show good cause, a worker must demonstrate that the underlying reason for leaving work was compelling, and that the worker exhausted all reasonable alternatives before leaving the work.[32] The burden of demonstrating both elements of good cause is on the worker.[33] The BPM provides that "[a] compelling reason is one that causes a reasonable and prudent person of normal sensitivity, exercising ordinary common sense, to leave employment."[34]

17 18 The BPM further notes that "[a] reasonable and prudent worker sincerely interested in remaining at work attempts to correct any condition or circumstance that interferes with continued employment."[35] In order to exhaust all reasonable alternatives, the worker must notify the employer of the problem and request adjustment; the worker must also bring the problem to the attention of someone with the authority to 1002 make the necessary adjustments, describe the problem in sufficient detail to allow for resolution, and give the employer enough time to correct the problem.[36] At the same time, "a worker is not expected to do something futile or useless in order to establish good cause for leaving employment."[37]

We agree with the Hearing Office that Calvert failed to exhaust alternatives to quitting and therefore did not demonstrate good cause for leaving work.

1. We analyze both transportation problems and workplace hostility as potential precipitating causes.

19 The Hearing Officer identified transportation problems as the precipitating cause of Calvert's decision to quit. The BPM provides that, where a worker gives multiple reasons for quitting, "the one reason that was the precipitating event is the real cause of the quit, with the other reasons being incidental. In such cases, good cause depends on the precipitating event and the other reasons are irrelevant."[38] In other words, whether a worker has shown good cause for quitting is to be analyzed in reference only to the event that directly led the worker to quit and not to any other events or circumstances.

Throughout her application for unemployment benefits and subsequent appeals process, Calvert identified two major factors—transportation obstacles and workplace hostility—in her decision to quit. During the hearing on her administrative appeal, the Hearing Officer asked Calvert whether it was her transportation difficulties or personality conflicts that caused her to quit. Calvert answered, "It's both of them ... I don't know if one ... had been taken away, if the other one could have been solved and vice versa." The Hearing Officer then asked, "If CARTS had not been giving you any difficulty on that day, would you still have quit your job?" Calvert replied, "I think I would have gone to work, yes. I think I would have given it another week.... I might have tried the new schedule. I might have complained harder." Based on this testimony, the Hearing Officer concluded that the precipitating event in Calvert's quitting was the loss of transportation, and she therefore limited her good cause analysis to transportation issues.

In her brief to our court, Calvert objects that the Hearing Officer took her words out of context, focusing on "[t]he one comment [she] elicited which was speculative, retrospective, and in conflict with prior testimony and actions." While there is no indication that the Hearing Officer's question was intentionally designed to "trick" Calvert—indeed, the question's structure simply reflected the BPM's emphasis on determining which event led a worker to "quit at [a] particular time"[39]—we nonetheless acknowledge that the Hearing Officer's question may have elicited a different answer than Calvert would have provided in response to an alternatively worded or more open-ended inquiry.[40] Therefore, we analyze both transportation problems and workplace hostility to determine whether Calvert demonstrated good cause for leaving work on the basis of either issue.

2. Calvert did not show good cause for leaving work on the basis of her transportation problems.

a. Calvert's transportation problems did provide a compelling reason to quit.

20 21 The first element of good cause requires that a worker have a "compelling 1003 reason" for leaving work.[41] In contrast to the requirements for determining suitability, "[t]here is no requirement that [a] worker's reasons for leaving work be connected with the work. Either work-connected or personal factors may present sufficiently compelling reasons."[42] 8 AAC 85.095 provides a limited list of factors the Department may consider in determining the existence of good cause, including those factors identified in AS 23.20.385(b). One such factor is "distance of ... available work from the claimant's residence."[43] The BPM clarifies that, for purposes of determining good cause, "[t]he actual mileage from the worker's residence to work is never the determining factor in establishing compelling reasons. It is the time and expense of commuting which must be considered."[44]

The Hearing Officer concluded in her decision that "[t]he loss of transportation can create a compelling reason for a worker to quit [his or her] job." We agree that Calvert demonstrated that her transportation difficulties gave her a compelling reason to quit. The "actual mileage" from Calvert's home to Snug Harbor was not unusual, but the "time and expense" involved in her commute were significant: her bike was gradually breaking down to the point where her commute took an hour and a half each way, CARTS would not allow her to schedule open-ended trips or make last-minute arrangements to fit her work schedule, and taxi fare was prohibitively expensive. These facts provide substantial evidence that meets the standard for showing a compelling reason to quit: left unresolved, they would cause a "reasonable and prudent person of normal sensitivity ... to leave employment."[45]

b. Calvert did not exhaust all reasonable alternatives before leaving work due to transportation problems.

22 The Hearing Officer noted in her findings of fact that Calvert had never told her supervisor that her work schedule—and particularly the lack of notice regarding working hours—was creating transportation problems for her. The Hearing Officer also found that Snug Harbor made repeated attempts to contact Calvert after she quit and was not aware of her reasons for quitting until the hearing. The Hearing Officer concluded that, because Calvert did not discuss her transportation problems with her employer or request an adjustment to her work schedule, she did not exhaust all reasonable alternatives prior to quitting and therefore left without good cause. We agree.

Calvert argues that the primary alternative envisioned by the Hearing Officer, i.e., talking to her supervisors and seeking adjustments to her schedule, was "neither reasonable nor proved to be viable." First, she suggests that the Hearing Officer's failure to investigate why Snug Harbor's representatives (presumably King and Dale) "did not talk to [Calvert] when she brought problems to them" casts doubt on whether her employers would have been willing to accommodate her requests. Second, she contends that "her work schedule was reliant upon the schedule of everyone else" and was therefore not amenable to adjustment.[46] Finally, Calvert contends that the Hearing Officer erroneously relied upon Dale's unreliable "hearsay" report that King had attempted to contact Calvert several times after she quit, a claim that Calvert disputed in earlier stages of the proceeding.[47]

1004 23 An employer's limited authority or expressed refusal to accommodate an employee can establish that requesting an adjustment to work conditions would be futile: "[i]f the employer has already made it known that the matter will not be adjusted to the worker's satisfaction, or if the matter is one which is beyond the power of the employer to adjust, then the worker is not expected to perform a futile act."[48] That does not appear to be the situation here. King and Dale apparently had the authority to assign work hours and adjust employee schedules. Even taking into account the limited flexibility of hours in the gear department, giving Calvert more advance notice of her hours would have significantly mitigated her transportation problems; alternatively, her supervisors may have been able to transfer her to one of the other departments at Snug Harbor where she had worked in the past.

Moreover, neither King nor Dale (or any other Snug Harbor employee) had explicitly "made it known"[49] that they would not accommodate Calvert. Calvert's claim that her employers "did not talk to [her] when she brought problems to them" seems to refer to King's and Dale's failure to follow up on her inquiries about Mike cutting her hours. But as Calvert acknowledged to the Hearing Officer, she did not actually "ask [Dale] to do anything" to address her problems with Mike or the reduction in her hours, on the assumption that to do so would be "presumptuous." When the Hearing Officer asked if Calvert told "Richard [King], Paul [Dale] or Mike that if they didn't stop messing with [her] hours, [she was] going to quit," Calvert said she had not. Nor did she ever raise the issue of her transportation difficulties. There is no indication that Calvert's inquiries about her hours were framed as complaints demanding a response, or that King and Dale would have ignored more direct requests for assistance. Although she reports general "hostility," Calvert presented no evidence beyond her own subjective belief to suggest that her employers' attitudes toward her would make them unwilling to help resolve her transportation problems had they known she was otherwise likely to quit.[50]

24 25 26 27 Calvert's claim that the Hearing Officer relied on "hearsay" to find that she had not exhausted her alternatives is also unconvincing. First, Calvert raised this argument for the first time in the superior court; we therefore consider it to have been waived.[51] Second, even if this argument had not been waived, the hearsay claim would be misplaced. Calvert did not object at the Appeal Tribunal hearing to Dale's testimony that King had reported attempting to call Calvert after she quit. "In the absence of a hearsay objection, hearsay evidence is competent evidence which may be considered."[52] Moreover, "[t]he strict rules of evidence governing admissibility of hearsay in judicial proceedings do not apply to administrative hearings, and [this court] will not reverse an administrative judgment based on hearsay unless the hearsay was inherently unreliable or jeopardized the fairness of the proceedings." 1005 [53] Here, the admission of Dale's testimony does not appear to have "jeopardized the fairness" of Calvert's appeal proceedings. It is not clear from the Hearing Officer's decision that Dale's testimony was, in fact, used to lay a foundation for the viability of the proposed alternative.

The Hearing Officer stated in her Finding of Facts that "[a]t no time did the claimant approach the supervisor and explain that the new work schedule created transportation issues for her.... [T]he employer made repeated attempts to contact [Calvert] in an attempt to discover why she had not returned." This context suggests that the Hearing Officer relied on Dale's testimony primarily in support of the general finding that Calvert never informed her employers of her transportation problems (a finding that is amply supported by other evidence in the record, including Calvert's own testimony), rather than as evidence of Dale's and King's willingness to accommodate Calvert.

We hold that there is substantial evidence in support of the Hearing Officer's finding that Calvert failed to exhaust all reasonable alternatives to quitting on the basis of transportation problems and therefore did not show good cause for leaving suitable work.

3. Calvert did not show good cause for leaving work on the basis of workplace hostility.

a. Calvert's personality conflicts did not provide a compelling reason to quit.

28 29 30 31 Under the BPM, dislike for a fellow employee may only be considered good cause for leaving work if "[t]he worker establishes that the actions of the fellow worker subjected the worker to abuse, endangered the worker's health, or caused the employer to demand an unreasonable amount of work from the worker."[54] Mike's behavior toward Calvert did not endanger her health and, if anything, decreased the amount of work demanded of her (although with correspondingly decreased wages). Nor did it rise to the level of "abuse" as the Department has used the term in the past. Cases in which the Commissioner has found dislike of a fellow employee to be a compelling reason for quitting involve much more serious conflicts, such as threats of physical violence to the claimant.[55] To the extent that the change in Calvert's schedule motivated her decision to quit, it also did not constitute a compelling reason. "A change in [a] worker's hours, shifts, or days of work initiated by the employer is seldom a sufficient breach of the contract of hire to give a compelling reason to quit."[56] A reduction in hours is rarely considered compelling for purposes of establishing good cause: "a worker who leaves work merely because the work is less than full-time has voluntarily left work without good cause" and a "reduction in hours is not good cause for voluntarily leaving work" even where that reduction results in reduced earnings.[57]

b. Calvert did not exhaust all reasonable alternatives before leaving work due to personality conflicts.

32 Even if the personality conflicts Calvert describes were to qualify as "abuse," she made only limited efforts to remedy the situation. As we have already noted, Calvert spoke to King and Dale about Mike reducing her hours but never directly asked either of them to address the issue or, as far as the 1006 record indicates, described the full extent of her conflicts with Mike. By her own admission, Calvert never explicitly sought a remedy for her problem. She contended that Dale and King "should have known ... what [she] was saying to them without [her] having to challenge them to do something about [her] problem." But without more information about precisely what Calvert said to her supervisors, there was little basis for a finding that they should have guessed or intuited what Calvert failed to articulate. Calvert was required to take more active steps to exhaust her alternatives before quitting; because she failed to do so, we agree with the Hearing Officer that she did not show good cause for leaving work on the basis of personality conflicts.

D. Calvert Received A Fair Hearing.

33 Calvert makes a number of arguments relating to the procedural adequacy of her administrative hearing. We review these arguments de novo.[58] We note at the outset that Calvert has waived a number of her due process arguments by not raising them earlier in the appeals process. For example, she argues that the Hearing Officer "[n]eglected the fair hearing principle of discovery to claimant by employer" and "declined to obtain discovery from the employer, disregarding claimant's request for it." She also contends that "[d]ue [p]rocess requires notice of evidence to be used against claimant and an appropriate amount of time to develop a challenge and answer to any information from any source" and claims that she did not have sufficient notice of the evidence to be presented at the Appeal Tribunal hearing. Because these arguments were raised for the first time in Calvert's appeal to the superior court, rather than in her initial post hearing appeal to the Commissioner, we consider them waived.[59] Similarly, Calvert's argument that the Hearing Officer improperly admitted hearsay evidence is waived because she raised it for the first time on appeal to the superior court.

1. Calvert did not demonstrate actual bias by the Hearing Officer.

34 35 Calvert alleges that the hearing was biased, claiming that "[t]he hearing officer picked what she wanted out of the evidence and used it to try to prove her point" and that "[t]he reasonings and conclusions of the Tribunal were not fairly and impartially supported by the record." But as the Department notes in its brief, administrative officers are "presumed to be honest and impartial until a party shows actual bias or prejudgment."[60] To show the bias of a hearing officer, a party must demonstrate that the hearing officer "had a predisposition to find against a party or that the hearing officer interfered with the orderly presentation of the evidence."[61] This is a demanding standard. The United States Supreme Court has found a "probability of actual bias ... too high to be constitutionally tolerable" in cases where "the adjudicator has a pecuniary interest in the outcome" or "has been the target of personal abuse or criticism from the party before him,"[62] but not where a decisionmaker merely performs combined investigative and adjudicative functions.[63] Similarly, we have held that a hearing officer's failure to disclose his position as an AFL–CIO president during a worker's compensation hearing was insufficient to show actual or probable bias.[64]

Calvert has not presented any evidence that the Hearing Officer was predisposed to find against her. The assertion that the 1007 Hearing Officer selected evidence to support her findings is insufficient to show actual bias. Nor does the hearing transcript suggest that the Hearing Officer interfered in any way with the presentation of evidence. The Hearing Officer's questions were thorough and objective; the only evidence she excluded was related to Calvert's efforts to find work after quitting at Snug Harbor, an issue irrelevant to the question of whether Calvert quit suitable work with good cause. Calvert failed to demonstrate bias sufficient to overcome the presumption of the Hearing Officer's impartiality.

2. The superior court did not improperly reweigh evidence.

36 37 In applying the substantial evidence test to review an administrative determination, a reviewing court may not reweigh evidence.[65] Calvert argues that "[t]he Superior Court erred when it improperly reweighed evidence concerning transportation: Transportation problems DID present insurmountable difficulties.... This would affect the issue of suitable work." Though the meaning of this argument is somewhat unclear, Calvert seems to be referring to the superior court's conclusion that, notwithstanding Calvert's expressed concerns regarding transportation (among other issues), "the record does not support a finding that the work at Snug was unsuitable." But this statement does not suggest that the superior court "reweighed" evidence. The superior court clearly indicated that its conclusion regarding suitability was based on the record created by the Hearing Officer. And although the Hearing Officer did not explicitly address the question of suitability, her factual findings provide sufficient evidence to support the conclusion that Calvert's work was suitable. The superior court presumably relied on the Hearing Officer's findings for its conclusion that "there is no evidence that the work was inconsistent with Calvert's physical capability, training, experience, earning capacity, or skill" and that the work was therefore suitable; this did not constitute a reweighing of the evidence.

E. The Department Of Labor Did Not Fail To Inform Calvert Regarding Eligibility For Unemployment Insurance Benefits.

Calvert argues that "[t]he Department of Labor & Workforce Development neglected [its] duty" by failing to "inform the public or claimant adequately concerning its requirements for separation from employment regarding eligibility for full benefits before separation takes place." This argument reiterates Calvert's claim in her brief to the Appeal Tribunal that "[t]he DOL neglects to make known its presence [and] expectations ... regarding [unemployment insurance] benefits"[66] and that, although "[a] reasonably prudent person would believe they had been completely informed by orientation, handbook, practices, and notices posted," the materials distributed to new employees do not in fact provide sufficient information on unemployment insurance eligibility.

38 To the extent Calvert is arguing that she lacked access to the policies governing unemployment benefits eligibility, we find her argument unconvincing. The Department's Wage and Hour Information brochure, which Calvert submitted as an exhibit in her appeal to the Commissioner, includes detailed information about the relevant statutes and regulations as well as directions for accessing past unemployment insurance appeals decisions online and reviewing the BPM at Department offices. And as the Department notes, the BPM is also available online. The "Voluntary Leaving Statement" that Calvert filled out and submitted after she filed for unemployment benefits gives notice to claimants that they must show "reasons for quitting ... so compelling" as to leave "no reasonable alternative." The Hearing Officer also explained the eligibility requirements to Calvert at the start of the 1008 Appeal Tribunal hearing. As a result, Calvert had notice of the Department's basic eligibility requirements and directions for accessing additional information, both prior to her Appeal Tribunal Hearing and throughout the appeals process.

39 To the extent Calvert contends that the Department had a duty to inform her, while she was working, of how she might quit her job and maintain her eligibility for unemployment benefits, we find this argument equally unavailing. We have held that "[a]s a general rule, people are presumed to know the law" without being specifically informed of it.[67] The United States Supreme Court has required explicit notice of hearing procedures only where "the administrative procedures at issue were not described in any publicly available document."[68]

All of the statutes, regulations, and internal policy documents governing eligibility for unemployment insurance benefits are "publicly available documents" that are easily accessible and identified in Department-published materials, such as the Wage and Hour Information brochure and the unemployment insurance section of the Department's website.[69] Workers may be presumed to be familiar with the provisions of those documents. In this case, Calvert has not demonstrated that any circumstance prevented her from informing herself about the Department's eligibility requirements before she left work. The Department did not neglect a legal duty or deny Calvert due process by not informing her of its policies more directly.

V. CONCLUSION

We AFFIRM the decision of the superior court. Calvert did not demonstrate good cause for leaving suitable work voluntarily.

1 Under AS 23.20.379(a)(1), "[a]n insured worker is disqualified for waiting-week credit or benefits for the first week in which the insured worker is unemployed and for the next five weeks of unemployment" if the worker left the "last suitable work voluntarily without good cause." "Waiting-week credit" refers to credit received for the initial week of unemployment, during which the worker does not immediately receive unemployment insurance benefits but still accrues benefits eligibility. See Alaska Department of Labor, Frequently Asked Questions: Filing for Unemployment Insurance, available at http://labor. state.ak.us/esd_ unemployment_insurance/faq.htm.

3 The Department of Labor's Benefit Policy Manual (hereinafter BPM) provides that "A worker may give two or more reasons for quitting. 14 The BPM fulfills 8 AAC 85.360's mandate that "the department ... maintain a policy manual interpreting the provisions of AS 23.20 and this chapter." We have looked to the BPM to interpret AS 23.20 in the past, and continue to do so here. See, e.g., Wescott v. State, Dep't of Labor, 996 P.2d 723 (Alaska 2000) (adopting the BPM's criteria for determining good cause and citing the BPM throughout). The Wescott opinion refers to the BPM as the "Precedent Manual." The BPM is divided into eight sections: Able & Available, Evidence, Labor Dispute, Miscellaneous, Misconduct, Suitable Work, Total & Partial Unemployment, and Voluntary Leaving. Content within each section is indicated by an combination of the abbreviated section title (e.g., "VL" for Voluntary Leaving, "EV" for Evidence) and a numbered subsection (e.g., VL 385–2). Individual subsections may have different dates based on their most recent updates.

The language of the statute and the BPM, while defining suitability and good cause as separate inquiries, creates significant overlap in the criteria applicable to each. AS 23.20.385(b), for example, identifies a single set of factors to be used "[i]n determining whether work is suitable for a claimant and in determining the existence of good cause for leaving or refusing work." Similarly, the BPM includes statements such as "work that is unreasonably distant from a worker's residence is unsuitable, and the worker has good cause for leaving it," id. at VL 150–2 (Nov.2010), followed by a discussion addressing distance from work primarily in terms of good cause. As a result, it can be difficult to draw a clear line between the two concepts in practice.

24 In support of this reading, the Department cites the fact that a suitability inquiry does not require a claimant to show that she exhausted reasonable alternatives before leaving a job, "presumably because an issue that makes work unsuitable is a fundamental attribute of the job itself" and cannot be easily changed. By contrast, a worker who quits for "good cause" unrelated to suitability is required to demonstrate that she explored alternatives, which implies that good cause is determined by factors that are at least potentially within the worker's power to control or adjust.

46 Calvert worked in the "gear" department, where she was responsible for ensuring that other employees' lab coats and other specialized clothing were cleaned daily and ready to be handed out at the start of the work day. This required her to get to Snug Harbor an hour before most employees started work to "start coffee and ... make sure that there was enough gear to hand out and ... everything was ready to go."

47 In her appeal to the Commissioner of the Department of Labor, Calvert argued that her phone bill did not reflect that she had received any calls from King during the relevant period. And in her appeal to the superior court, she contended that "[t]he claim by employer of attempting to phone claimant four times is unsupported HEARSAY and there is a preponderance of credible evidence (my phone bill and written statements) in opposition to that claim."

50 At least one prior decision of the Commissioner of Labor has held that where an employer's actions established a "pattern of abuse and hostility" toward his employee, it would have been futile for the employee to confront the employer about his offensive behavior. See Decision of the Comm'r, Docket No. 98–0321, April 30, 1998. But the situation in Docket No. 98–0321 is distinguishable from the present case. There, the employer was the sole owner of the business, was verbally abusive, and had proven hostile to previous attempts by the employee to resolve other problems. Here, Calvert does not allege a relationship with her employers of such open hostility. She also had multiple levels of authority within Snug Harbor management from whom to seek assistance, and she does not appear to have been refused accommodation (upon direct request) on prior occasions.

VOORHEES CONCRETE CUTTING and Alaska National Insurance Company, Appellees.

No. S–13640. | June 24, 2011.

Synopsis

Background: Employer filed a motion for extraordinary review of Workers' Compensation Board's interlocutory order denying employer's petition to change venue. The Workers' Compensation Appeals Commission, Kristin S. Knudsen, Commission Chair, reversed the Board's venue decision. Claimant appealed.

Holdings: The Supreme Court, Carpeneti, C.J., held that:
1 claimant's challenge to Commission's subject matter jurisdiction to review Board's interlocutory order denying employer's petition to change venue was not untimely;
2 Commission has implied jurisdiction to review interlocutory Board orders; and
3 Commission had jurisdiction to stay Board's decision denying employer's petition to change venue while Commission reviewed the decision.

Affirmed.

I. INTRODUCTION

Does the Alaska Workers' Compensation Appeals Commission have subject matter jurisdiction to review interlocutory orders of the Alaska Workers' Compensation Board before a final Board decision? In 2006 the Commission decided that it had implied jurisdiction to hear motions for extraordinary review, which are similar to petitions for review in the appellate courts. In 2008 an employer asked the Commission to review and to stay the Board's non-final order denying a change of venue from Fairbanks. The Commission first issued a partial stay, permitting the case to go forward in any venue other than Fairbanks. It later reviewed the merits of the Board's decision to deny the change of venue and reversed it. The employee contends that the Commission did not have subject matter jurisdiction over motions for extraordinary review because the legislature only granted the Commission jurisdiction to hear appeals of final Board orders. Because we find that jurisdiction to hear interlocutory appeals is necessarily incident to the Commission's express power to hear appeals from final Board decisions, we affirm the Commission's decision.

II. FACTS AND PROCEEDINGS

Kenneth Monzulla hurt his back in 1999 when he was working for Voorhees Concrete Cutting in Fairbanks. As the Board noted in one of its decisions in the case, "[t]he medical and legal records in this case are voluminous." In September 2001, the parties entered a partial compromise and release agreement to settle all issues except future medical care for his lumbar and thoracic spine; their more recent substantive disputes have involved the extent of this medical care.

The parties have also disagreed about venue for the proceedings. Because Monzulla injured his back in Fairbanks, venue for Board proceedings related to his injury was initially in Fairbanks.[1] Monzulla moved to the Kenai Peninsula in 2002, and his treating 343 physician at the time of the Board proceeding was in Soldotna. Voorhees twice asked the Board to change venue from Fairbanks to Anchorage, arguing that it would be less costly and time consuming to have hearings in Anchorage. Monzulla, appearing pro se, opposed Voorhees's requests to change venue because the Fairbanks office was already familiar with his case.

Voorhees's first petition for a change of venue was filed in November 2006. After a hearing, the Board denied the petition, finding that "Fairbanks [would] better serve the balanced interests of the parties, witnesses, and the [Board], and would provide a speedier remedy." The Board held a hearing on March 1, 2007, on various claims raised by Monzulla; in its decision, it granted some claims and denied others. Voorhees appealed the Board's final decision to the Commission and at the same time appealed the interlocutory order denying its petition for change of venue. On February 4, 2008, the Commission affirmed in part and reversed in part the Board's orders. On the venue issue, the Commission affirmed the Board's denial of a change of venue with a cautionary instruction to the Board not to consider its own interest when evaluating a change of venue request.

On July 16, 2008, Voorhees again petitioned the Board to change venue; the Board again denied the petition.

Voorhees filed a motion for extraordinary review and request for stay with the Commission on October 24, 2008. The Commission granted extraordinary review of the venue question, stayed the Board proceedings "in the northern venue, but not proceedings in other venues," and invited the participation of the director of the Division of Workers' Compensation because of the question's potential impact on Board procedure.2 Monzulla filed a letter with the Commission, which it construed as a motion for reconsideration of its grant of extraordinary review. The Commission denied reconsideration.

In its decision on the merits, the Commission decided that the Board had abused its discretion in failing to change venue to Anchorage "because it relied on an impermissible consideration, its own interest, under 8 [Alaska Administrative Code] 45.072(2) and because it lacked sufficient evidence to find that Fairbanks was a more convenient forum than Anchorage for the parties and witnesses."

After the Commission reversed the Board's venue decision, an attorney entered an appearance on behalf of Monzulla and moved for reconsideration of the Commission's decision. He argued that the Commission did not have subject matter jurisdiction to consider the motion for extraordinary review and had misconstrued the case law in its discussion of the law of the case doctrine. The Commission declined to consider Monzulla's challenge to its subject matter jurisdiction because he had not raised it previously in the appeal and had not distinguished Commission precedent on the subject. But it ordered briefing on whether it had misconstrued our case law. Monzulla filed an appeal in this court related to the Commission's subject matter jurisdiction on October 2, 2009. On October 8, 2009, the parties filed a stipulation with the Commission dismissing Monzulla's motion for reconsideration; the Commission issued an order dismissing the motion for reconsideration and indicating that its decision dated August 6, 2009, was the final decision of the appeals commission. Monzulla appeals the Commission's exercise of jurisdiction over the motion for extraordinary review and its partial stay of the Board's venue order.

III. STANDARD OF REVIEW

1 2 3 In an appeal from the Alaska Workers' Compensation Appeals Commission, we review the Commission's decision rather than the Board's decision.3 We apply our independent judgment to questions of law that do not involve agency expertise.4 344 We likewise apply our independent judgment to questions of statutory interpretation.5

IV. DISCUSSION

A. Monzulla's Challenge To Subject Matter Jurisdiction Was Timely.

4 Monzulla contends that the Commission erred because it did not consider whether it had jurisdiction to hear interlocutory appeals. He asserts that his "failure to object to the Commission's lack of subject matter jurisdiction [before reconsideration] is immaterial."

The Commission refused to consider Monzulla's challenge to its subject matter jurisdiction because he did not raise it until he moved for reconsideration of its decision on the merits and had not established "that there [were] grounds to distinguish or overturn" *Eagle Hardware & Garden v. Ammi.*6 The Commission stated that "AS 23.30.180(f) [did] not permit [Monzulla] to raise a legal issue for the first time on reconsideration, especially one that [was] not closely related to any points raised or decided in the appeal."

5 6 The question of subject matter jurisdiction can be raised at any time,7 and a court can raise the issue of its subject matter jurisdiction sua sponte.8 Therefore, we conclude that Monzulla's challenge was not untimely.9 But any error was harmless, as set out below in Part IV.C.

B. The Legislature Did Not Explicitly Grant Interlocutory Review Jurisdiction To The Commission.

Monzulla's appeal raises the question whether the Commission has jurisdiction to review interlocutory Board orders before the Board issues a final decision. He argues, based on the statutory language, that the legislature did not grant the Commission this power. Monzulla contends that the legislature "was aware of how to fashion broad extraordinary discretionary review power when it enacted the Commission's statutory powers and authority" but chose to limit the Commission's jurisdiction to review of final decisions. Because the legislature in AS 23.30.007(a) limited the Commission's jurisdiction to administrative appeals,10 Monzulla insists that the legislature did not intend to give the Commission power to review non-final Board decisions.

Voorhees responds that the legislature directly granted jurisdiction over interlocutory appeals to the Commission. Voorhees asks us to interpret the statute, particularly AS 23.30.125(b)11 and AS 23.30.128(b),12 as giving the Commission authority to hear motions 345 for extraordinary review. According to Voorhees, these statutory sections are meaningless unless construed as granting the Commission interlocutory appellate jurisdiction.

7 8 9 We interpret a statute "according to reason, practicality, and common sense, taking into account the plain meaning and purpose of the law as well as the intent of the drafters."[13] Our goal in interpreting a statute is "to give effect to the legislature's intent, with due regard for the meaning the statutory language conveys to others."[14] We construe a statute "in light of its purpose."[15]

10 11 12 In construing a statute, we look at the meaning of the words used and the legislative history.[16] "[W]e will presume 'that the legislature intended every word, sentence, or provision of a statute to have some purpose, force, and effect, and that no words or provisions are superfluous.' "[17] All sections of a statute should "be construed together so that all have meaning and no section conflicts with another."[18]

As noted, Voorhees argues that in AS 23.30.125(b) and AS 23.30.128(b) the legislature specifically granted the Commission jurisdiction to review interlocutory orders. According to Voorhees, these statutory subsections are meaningless unless they grant the Commission discretionary review jurisdiction. Voorhees contends that if they are not interpreted this way, they would be in conflict with AS 23.30.007(a) and AS 23.30.008(a).

The parties agree that "all sections of an act are to be construed together so that all have meaning and no section conflicts with another."[19] Voorhees contends that the statutory subsections at issue here—AS 23.30.007(a), AS 23.30.008(a), AS 23.30.125(b), and AS 23.30.128(b)—cannot be construed together unless they are read as a direct grant of interlocutory review jurisdiction to the Commission. We disagree.

The statutory subsections at issue here can be harmonized. Alaska Statute 23.30.007(a) is the express grant of jurisdiction to the Commission; its jurisdiction is "limited to administrative appeals." Alaska Statute 23.30.008(a) provides that the Commission's decisions are final and conclusive and have the force of precedent for the Commission and the Board; it expressly limits the Commission's jurisdiction to workers' compensation cases. Alaska Statute 23.30.125(b) clarifies that review of Board decisions is done by the Commission, not the superior court. Alaska Statute 23.30.128(b) sets out the Board actions the Commission can review and the standards of review for the Commission to apply.[20] Thus, nothing in the statutory language explicitly gives the Commission jurisdiction over discretionary review of non-final Board decisions.

C. The Commission Has Implied Jurisdiction To Hear Interlocutory Appeals.

We next consider whether the Commission has implied jurisdiction to hear interlocutory 346 appeals. We have previously held that the Board has implied powers. In Wausau Insurance Cos. v. Van Biene we decided that the Board had implied jurisdiction to apply equitable principles, such as estoppel, in workers' compensation proceedings.[21] And we decided that the Board had implied jurisdiction to set aside a compromise and release agreement because of fraud in Blanas v. Brower.[22] In both instances we determined that the implied power was necessarily incident to the Board's express powers.[23]

In deciding whether an administrative agency has properly exercised an implied power, other courts have considered whether the implied power is consistent with the legislature's objectives in granting powers to the administrative agency,[24] the nature of the administrative proceeding,[25] and "whether the circumstances, in relation to the type of proceeding, require the agency to exercise its implied and incidental powers."[26]

13 Applying these principles here, we hold that the Commission has implied jurisdiction to review interlocutory Board orders. The Commission "performs a quasi-judicial function that is akin to appellate review."[27] In some circumstances, delay of review until a final decision on the merits can make review pointless. This case is one example: Review of an improper refusal to change venue is pointless after a final decision on the merits when there may be no further proceedings. Similarly, if the Board improperly required an employee to undergo a psychiatric examination, a delay in review could subject the employee to an intrusive and unnecessary examination.[28] Discretionary appellate review of non-final orders may at times be necessary to ensure fundamental fairness to the parties.

14 15 The goal of the statutory amendment that established the Commission was "to increase the efficiency and flexibility of the current system ... and reduce some of its costs."[29] The legislation eliminated superior court review of workers' compensation cases and substituted review by the Commission.[30] Creation of the Commission was intended "to provide 'consistent, legally precedential decisions in an expeditious manner.' "[31]

Discretionary review jurisdiction in the Commission can further all of these goals: increasing efficiency, providing precedential decisions from a body with expertise in workers' compensation, and reducing costs in workers' compensation appeals. Discretionary review can speed the ultimate resolution of a case when review concerns a controlling legal issue.[32] In this case, the ultimate decision on the merits may have been delayed,[33] but we agree with Voorhees that the venue question was one which would evade meaningful 347 review without interlocutory appellate jurisdiction.

We have already noted that, in creating the Commission, the legislature intended to replace review by the superior court with review by the Commission. We agree with Voorhees that the legislature wanted those seeking review of Board decisions to have the same procedural rights of review that they had in the superior court. We recognize, as Monzulla argues, that the discretionary review previously available in the superior court has a different origin[34] than the Commission's authority to hear interlocutory appeals, but nothing in the legislative history indicates that the legislature wanted employers or employees to have fewer rights of review before the Commission than before the superior court. We conclude that the Commission had implied jurisdiction to grant discretionary review of the venue decision.[35]

D. The Commission Had Authority To Stay The Board's Decision.

16 Monzulla argues separately that the Commission was without jurisdiction to stay the Board's decision because the workers' compensation statute and the Commission's regulations only permit stays of "compensation orders," which are a limited class of Board orders. Voorhees does not address this argument separately.

The only provision of the Alaska Workers' Compensation Act related to stays by the Commission is AS 23.30.125(c), which states:

> If a compensation order is not in accordance with law or fact, the order may be suspended or set aside, in whole or in part, through proceedings in the commission brought by a party in interest against all other parties to the proceedings before the board. The payment of the amounts required by an award may not be stayed pending a final decision in the proceeding unless, upon application for a stay, the commission, on hearing, after not less than three days' notice to the parties in interest, allows the stay of payment in whole or in part, where the party filing the application would otherwise suffer irreparable damage. Continuing future periodic compensation payments may not be stayed without a showing by the appellant of irreparable damage and the existence of the probability of the merits of the appeal being decided adversely to the recipient of the compensation payments. The order of the commission allowing a stay must contain a specific finding, based upon evidence submitted to the commission and identified by reference to the evidence, that irreparable damage would result to the party applying for a stay and specifying the nature of the damage.

Monzulla does not dispute that the legislature gave the Commission some power to stay Board decisions; he argues that because a compensation order refers only to a Board order denying a claim or making an award of compensation,[36] the statute permits the Commission to stay only compensation orders, not other Board decisions. 17 Given the purposes of the legislation, we do not think that the legislature intended the Commission's power to issue stays to be confined to compensation orders. The statutory language does not expressly limit stays to compensation orders nor does it prohibit stays of other Board orders. The statute sets out the standards the Commission must apply when a party seeks to stay a monetary award from the Board.[37] Although "[t]here is a presumption that the same words used twice in the same act have the same meaning,"[38] the legislature appears not to have distinguished compensation orders from other decisions in the legislation establishing the Commission. Alaska Statute 23.30.127, which sets out deadlines for appeals and 348 cross-appeals to the Commission, uses the term "compensation order" when referring to the time for filing an appeal[39] and "decision" when referring to the time for filing a cross-appeal.[40]

In addition, without authority to stay Board decisions while review is pending, the Commission's discretionary review jurisdiction would be meaningless. If the Commission could not stay a Board order while it reviewed the order, issues could become moot while review was pending.

V. CONCLUSION

Because discretionary review of non-final Board orders is necessarily incident to the Commission's express power to hear appeals from final Board decisions, we AFFIRM the Commission's decision that it had jurisdiction to stay and review the Board's venue decision in this case.

Supreme Court of Alaska.

MARATHON OIL COMPANY, Appellant,
v.
STATE of Alaska, DEPARTMENT OF NATURAL RESOURCES, Appellee.

No. S–13771. | June 10, 2011.

Synopsis

Background: Company that leased land from State for the purpose of producing natural gas appealed Department of Natural Resources' (DNR's) denial of its request for retroactive application of contract pricing. The Superior Court, Third Judicial District, Anchorage, John Suddock, J., affirmed. Company appealed.

Holdings: The Supreme Court, Fabe, J., held that:
1 reasonable basis standard of review applied to DNR's interpretation of statute governing contract pricing;
2 DNR's interpretation of statute as permitting DNR to approve contract pricing only for future production was longstanding and reasonable, and thus Supreme Court would defer to it;
3 DNR's interpretation of statute was a rule of internal agency procedure, and thus DNR was not required to promulgate its interpretation in a regulation; and 4 company's due process rights were not violated.

Affirmed.

I. INTRODUCTION

Gas producers that lease land from the State of Alaska must pay royalties calculated on the value of the gas produced from the leased area. This royalty payment can be calculated under one of two methods: (1) "higher of" pricing or (2) contract pricing. "Higher of" pricing is the default. Computing the royalty owed under "higher of" pricing involves sophisticated calculations using market data and the prices of other producers. The Department of Natural Resources (DNR) usually does not calculate the royalty payment under "higher of" pricing until years after the time of production, once an audit can be completed. In order to pay royalties under contract pricing, the lessee must first request that form of payment calculation from DNR. Under contract pricing, the lessee's price at which it sells gas is used to determine the lessee's royalty payment.

Marathon Oil Corporation (Marathon) began production in the Ninilchik gas field in 2003. In 2008, before completion of the audit to determine the "higher of" royalty payment for 2003–2008, Marathon requested contract pricing from DNR. Marathon requested contract pricing for the period of 2008 onward and sought retroactive application of contract pricing to the 2003–2008 period. DNR approved Marathon's request for contract pricing from 2008 onward but denied the request to apply contract pricing to production prior to 2008. Marathon appealed to the superior court, which affirmed DNR's ruling. Marathon appeals.

Marathon has three arguments. First, Marathon argues that the statute that governs contract pricing—AS 38.05.180(aa)—permits retroactive application of contract pricing and that DNR was wrong to deny Marathon's request. We conclude that the statute is ambiguous, and because DNR's interpretation is longstanding and has a reasonable basis in the statute, we defer to its interpretation. Second, Marathon argues in the alternative that even if DNR's interpretation of the statute is valid, DNR was obliged to promulgate its interpretation as a 1081 regulation before applying it to any party. We conclude that DNR's interpretation is a rule of internal agency procedure and therefore did not have to be issued as a regulation. Third, Marathon argues that DNR's treatment of Marathon violated due process. We conclude that Marathon's due process rights were not violated. We therefore affirm the superior court's decision upholding DNR's order.

II. FACTS AND PROCEEDINGS

Marathon leases land from the State of Alaska for the purpose of producing natural gas. Marathon has many natural gas leases on the Kenai Peninsula, including one at Ninilchik.

Gas lessees must pay a royalty to the State in the amount of 12.5% of the value of the gas produced in the leased area. Determining the value of the gas produced for the purpose of calculating this royalty is usually done through "higher of" pricing. The value of the gas produced is deemed to be the highest of four possible prices. [1]

Lessees must deliver royalty payments on or before "the last day of the calendar month following the month in which the oil, gas, or associated substances are produced." But the four values needed to calculate the royalty under "higher of" pricing are usually not determined until several years after the time of production, after DNR performs an audit. After the audit, a lessee's royalty liability is often "re-adjusted upward."

In 1986 the legislature amended the royalty statute. [2] The amendments, codified in AS 38.05.180(aa) and AS 38.05.180(bb), allowed lessees to request contract pricing rather than the default "higher of" pricing. Contract pricing permits lessees to use the price at which they sell gas to Alaska utilities as the price on which royalties will be calculated. The stated purpose of the 1986 amendments was to benefit utility consumers. [3] The contracts between gas producers like Marathon and gas-purchasing utilities had historically allocated the risk of higher royalty payments to the utilities. That is, producers sold gas to utilities under a long-term contract with a fixed price for gas. If the market price of gas rose above the contract price, producers had to pay higher royalties. Under the terms of their contracts with utilities, they could pass on this added expense to utilities. Utilities would then pass the expense along to their consumers. The 1986 amendments allowed lessee-producers to use their contract price as the royalty price, thus avoiding this possible increase in consumers' utility bills.

In 1995 DNR leased lands in the Ninilchik Unit on the Kenai Peninsula to Marathon for the purposes of gas production. Marathon began production on this land in 2003. In 2008 Marathon requested contract pricing from DNR, both for future production and for past production between 2003 and 2008. DNR approved Marathon's request for contract pricing from 2008 forward but rejected the request for the 2003–2008 period. The 1082 commissioner stated that he "decline[d] to grant retroactive approval under the terms of the statute." Marathon requested reconsideration, arguing that AS 38.05.180(aa) permitted retroactive approval. DNR affirmed its earlier decision, reasoning that "AS [3]8.05.180(aa) does not authorize the Department of Natural Resources to grant retroactive approval." Marathon appealed, and the superior court affirmed DNR's order. Marathon appeals.

III. STANDARD OF REVIEW

1 2 3 4 5 We interpret statutes "according to reason, practicality, and common sense, taking into account the plain meaning and purpose of the law as well as the intent of the drafters."[4] We decide questions of statutory interpretation on a sliding scale: "[T]he plainer the language of the statute, the more convincing contrary legislative history must be."[5] We use one of two standards to review agency interpretations of statutes.[6] We apply the reasonable basis standard, under which we give deference to the agency's interpretation so long as it is reasonable, when the interpretation at issue implicates agency expertise or the determination of fundamental policies within the scope of the agency's statutory functions.[7] We apply the independent judgment standard, under which "the court makes its own interpretation of the statute at issue, ... where the agency's specialized knowledge and experience would not be particularly probative on the meaning of the statute."[8] We give more deference to agency interpretations that are "longstanding and continuous."[9]

6 It is DNR's job to manage the state's resources and to collect royalties from gas lessees.[10] We have explained that the reasonable basis standard is appropriate when an agency's adjudication of a regulated party's claim "requires resolution of policy questions which lie within the agency's area of expertise and are inseparable from the facts underlying the agency's decision."[11] The question whether to allow retroactivity lies within DNR's expertise. Allowing retroactivity could have important consequences for how royalties are assessed and paid. The state royalty and audit system is complicated, and DNR has expertise in deciding when retroactive application makes sense within that system.[12] In Alaska International Construction v. Earth Movers of Fairbanks, we explained that " 'the comparative qualification of court and agency to decide the particular issue' [is] the most important factor for whether a court should substitute its judgment for that of an agency's."[13] Here, where the question implicates "special agency expertise" and is not "merely ... a question of statutory interpretation," we use the reasonable basis standard.[14]

IV. DISCUSSION

A. DNR's Interpretation Of AS 38.05.180(aa) Is Reasonable.

In 1959, shortly after statehood, the legislature passed the Alaska Land Act and gave DNR the responsibility for managing state- 1083 owned land.[15] The Alaska Land Act provided that state lands were open to oil and gas development and gave DNR the power to lease state lands for that purpose.[16] The Alaska Land Act required that DNR, when it leased state land, collect a royalty of at least 12.5% of the value of all oil and gas produced.[17] To determine a lessee's royalty obligation, DNR must calculate the value of the oil and gas produced by the lessee. To determine the value of the oil and gas produced by a lessee, DNR historically has not used the price at which the lessee actually sold its oil or gas. Rather, DNR has used an approximation of market price. In its lease agreements, DNR has obligated lessees to pay 12.5% of the "higher of" four different values.[18] These four values are designed to estimate the market price of oil and gas. The goal of "higher of" pricing is to ensure the state's royalty is not based on a below-market sales price.

The 1986 amendments to the Alaska Land Act allowed lessees to calculate their royalty obligations using a different, potentially more favorable method. The amendments permitted lessees to use the price at which they contracted to sell gas to Alaska utilities as the basis for calculating the state's royalty. [19] To use this "contract" price, the lessee must apply and receive permission from DNR. [20]

The question presented is whether a lessee must apply for contract pricing before production actually occurs. For at least ten years, DNR has interpreted the 1986 amendments as permitting DNR to approve contract pricing only for future production. Thus, a lessee can apply to have contract pricing used to calculate its royalties for future production, but not for gas production that has already occurred. Marathon disputes this interpretation, arguing that the statute permits DNR to use contract pricing for past production. Marathon offers alternative statutory interpretations, proposing several cutoff points after which a lessee would no longer be permitted to apply for contract pricing. Marathon even suggests that a lessee could apply for contract pricing after the completion of the audit to determine its "higher of" royalty liability so long as the lessee applied "before the statute of limitations ran."

7 To establish the meaning of a statute, we examine both its text and its purpose. [21] We will give the appropriate deference to DNR, deferring to its interpretation "so long as it has a reasonable basis in the law." [22]

1. The text of the statute

a. The meaning of "prospective"

Alaska Statute 38.05.180(aa)(2)(B) provides that DNR should not approve a request for contract pricing if "the prospective reduction in royalty receipts would not be balanced by increased benefits to in-state gas and electric consumers." (Emphasis added.) DNR notes that Black's Law Dictionary defines "prospective" as meaning "[i]n the future." [23] According to DNR, "prospective" refers to the "future period after the application is approved" and therefore AS 38.05.180(aa) only allows contract pricing for future production. DNR maintains that AS 38.05.180(aa) does not permit application of contract pricing to past production.

Marathon argues that the word "prospective" has a different meaning within the context of the statute. In Marathon's view, the legislature's reference to "prospective reduction in royalty receipts" is "not the same as requiring that a request be made in advance of or commensurate in time with first gas production." Marathon instead argues that 1084 the word refers to the future effects of DNR's decision to approve or deny a request for contract pricing. According to Marathon, DNR can decide to approve contract pricing for any period, past or future, but DNR must consider the "prospective" effects of that decision. Marathon contends that "DNR may still consider the 'prospective reduction in royalty receipts' resulting from use of the contract price even if the royalty would [correlate] with gas deliveries and production occurring in the past."

The term "prospective" could plausibly have either meaning. The use of the word could signify that the legislature only intended contract pricing to be available for future gas production; or the use of the word could be incidental "and the timing of the [application] ... immaterial." We agree with the superior court that "the phrase 'prospective reduction in royalty receipts' is ambiguous."

b. The scope of AS 38.05.180(aa)(2)

8 Marathon argues that AS 38.05.180(aa)(2) provides an exhaustive list of the reasons that DNR may reject a request for contract pricing. Alaska Statute 38.05.180(aa)(2) provides that DNR should reject a lessee's request for contract pricing if the commissioner makes a finding that

> (A) the contract price or transfer price is unreasonably low;
> (B) the prospective reduction in royalty receipts would not be balanced by increased benefits to in-state gas and electric consumers;
> (C) the lessee and the utility are related in management, ownership, or other aspect and, in the case of a transfer price, that relationship is not regulated under AS 42.05; and

Marathon contends that because retroactivity is not among the listed reasons for rejection, DNR had no right to refuse Marathon's request for retroactive application. Marathon claims that AS 38.05.180(aa) creates a presumption in favor of approval and that DNR did not respect this presumption. But AS 38.05.180(aa)(2)'s core scope is more limited than Marathon contends. Alaska Statute 38.05.180(aa)(2) provides an exhaustive list of the price-related reasons DNR can reject requests for contract pricing, but the statute does not address other grounds for rejection. The legislative history of the 1986 amendments indicates that AS 38.05.180(aa)(2) is exclusively concerned with objections to the price a lessee submits as its contract price. [24] Other non-price related reasons for rejecting a request may still exist. If DNR is correct that the statute does not authorize retroactive contract pricing, then DNR is justified in rejecting such a request even though the statute does not specifically list that reason for rejection. Therefore, AS 38.05.180(aa) would not preclude DNR from rejecting Marathon's request. As we will discuss below, agencies are generally given discretion to manage such procedural matters.

2. The purpose of the statute

a. The pro-consumer purpose of the 1986 amendments

Both parties agree that the purpose of the 1986 amendments was to benefit consumers: The statute lowers the amount of royalties paid by gas producers, and the savings are passed on to consumers. Marathon points to this pro-consumer purpose of the 1986 amendments and argues that allowing retroactivity would further this legislative purpose. Marathon argues that (1) the purpose of the statute is to benefit consumers by using contract pricing; (2) retroactivity results in more contract pricing; and (3) therefore, retroactivity is consistent with the purpose of the statute. Marathon cites extensive legislative history to support its argument, but while this legislative history generally recognizes the benefits of contract pricing, it does not answer the question whether the statute permits retroactivity.

9 Although it is true that the stated purpose of the 1986 amendments was to benefit consumers, the 1986 amendments exist 1085 within the larger goals of the Alaska Land Act. Alaska Statute 38.05.180(a) recites the goals of the Alaska Land Act:

> (a) The legislature finds that
> (1) the people of Alaska have an interest in the development of the state's oil and gas resources to
> (A) maximize the economic and physical recovery of the resources;
> (B) maximize competition among parties seeking to explore and develop the resources; [and]

As we have recognized, the overall purpose of the Alaska Land Act is to maximize revenue for the state: In Chevron v. LeResche we pointed out that the purpose of the Alaska Land Act was "to provide for orderly oil and gas leasing that maximizes state return on its oil and gas resources," and that this fact should influence the statute's construction.[25] And as Marathon acknowledges, AS 38.05.180(aa) is "an exception to the goal of maximum royalty recovery."

Though the 1986 amendments' purpose of benefiting a smaller subset of Alaska's utility consumers would arguably support Marathon's interpretation, the Alaska Land Act's overall purpose of maximizing revenue for all Alaskan citizens would support DNR's interpretation. The 1986 amendments and their legislative history do not provide guidance as to which purpose should predominate in this case.

b. The legislative tolerance for retroactivity

Marathon points to the retroactivity that exists elsewhere in the statute and the fact that audits and royalty calculations occur well after the time of production. Royalty calculations involve amounts, such as "tax reimbursement amounts," that cannot be known until some time after production.[26] Marathon argues that the 1986 amendments reflect a tolerance for retroactivity and that, therefore, the statute allows retroactive requests for contract pricing. But Marathon ignores a crucial distinction between the type of retroactivity it seeks and the retroactivity built into the statute's structure. The statute recognizes that royalties will be calculated retroactively, but that is different than allowing the method used to calculate royalties to be applied retroactively. Royalties are necessarily calculated after the fact because the amount of gas production and other inputs will not be known until after production has occurred. Selecting which royalty calculation method to apply, however, can be accomplished before production has occurred.[27]

3. We defer to DNR's longstanding interpretation.

10 The key to our decision is the standard of review. We conclude that the statute is ambiguous and provides no direct answer whether retroactive contract pricing is permitted. We have recognized that "an agency's interpretation of a law within its area of jurisdiction can help resolve lingering ambiguity."[28] We therefore defer to DNR's interpretation that both the 1986 amendments' use of the word "prospective" and the Alaska Land Act's purpose of maximizing revenue prohibit it from approving retroactive contract pricing and we therefore conclude that it has a reasonable basis in the statute.

We are especially inclined to defer when an agency's statutory interpretation is longstanding. DNR has been applying its interpretation for at least a decade. In multiple *1086 cases, we have recognized the special deference that is due to longstanding agency statutory interpretations. In Bullock v. State, we afforded a Department of Revenue interpretation "great weight" because it was "long-standing" and "continuous."[29] In Bartley v. State, we also emphasized how deference was due "when the agency's interpretation is longstanding."[30] In Premera v. State, we explained that we "apply a more deferential standard of review where an agency action is longstanding and continuous."[31] Since DNR's interpretation has been "longstanding and continuous," we apply this deferential standard of review and conclude that DNR's interpretation is reasonable.

B. DNR Was Not Required To Promulgate Its Interpretation In A Regulation.

11 12 Marathon argues that DNR's interpretation of the statute, even if valid, must be promulgated through a regulation before being applied to Marathon or any other party.[32] We use our independent judgment in deciding whether an agency action is a regulation.[33] Alaska Statute 38.05.020 provides that DNR may "establish reasonable procedures and adopt reasonable regulations necessary to carry out this chapter." Alaska Statute 38.05.020 requires that regulations so adopted must comply with Alaska's Administrative Procedure Act (APA).[34]

We have been hesitant to force agencies to promulgate all statutory interpretations as regulations.[35] Other courts have been similarly reluctant to require agencies to convert statutory interpretations into regulations, especially in matters that the agency would have had difficulty foreseeing. The United States Supreme Court in SEC v. Chenery explained this limitation: "[P]roblems may arise in a case which the administrative agency could not reasonably foresee, problems which must be solved despite the absence of a relevant general rule."[36] We stated in Alyeska Pipeline Service Co. v. State that a "requirement that each [agency] interpretation be preceded by rulemaking would result in complete ossification of the regulatory state."[37] It would be counterproductive to require DNR to devote its resources to promulgating regulations on every possible eventuality. We have previously explained that "absent statutory restrictions and due process limitations, administrative agencies have the discretion to set policy by adjudication *1087 instead of rulemaking."[38] Here, DNR made its statutory interpretation in the context of adjudicating applications for contract pricing. Because we permit agencies to make new statutory interpretations in adjudications and because DNR's interpretation does not impose "any new substantive requirements,"[39] we hold that DNR was not required to promulgate its interpretation in a regulation.

C. Due Process

Marathon claims that "[d]ue process considerations are triggered by DNR's refusal to consider Marathon's request under the legislative criteria." But, as the State notes, it is somewhat difficult to discern what due process violation Marathon is alleging. The Alaska Constitution provides that "[n]o person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law."[40] The Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution provides that no state shall "deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law." We have held that the "crux of due process is the opportunity to be heard and the right to adequately represent one's interests."[41]

Marathon did have sufficient notice and the opportunity to represent its interests. Marathon argues that DNR did not adequately "apprise" Marathon of the grounds on which DNR would make its decision. Marathon argues that because it did not have adequate notice of DNR's earlier interpretation of the statute, Marathon was therefore denied the "opportunity to defend its request and have its merits judged."

13 But DNR has relied on its interpretation of AS 38.05.180(aa) for over a decade. As we explained in Alyeska Pipeline Service Co. v. State, a statute itself can provide constructive notice of an agency's interpretation.[42] The statute in Alyeska Pipeline, like AS 38.05.180(aa), was silent on the issue in question. Nevertheless, we explained that, since the agency's interpretation was reasonable, a "careful reading" of that statute "should have alerted Alyeska to the possibility" that the agency could interpret the statute the way it did.[43] The fact that AS 38.05.180(aa) does not expressly prohibit retroactive requests does not mean that Marathon can assume that the statute allows retroactivity. Accordingly, we conclude that Marathon did have adequate notice that DNR could interpret AS 38.05.180(aa) as not allowing retroactive contract pricing.

14 Moreover, DNR did provide Marathon with notice of its decision on Marathon's request, and Marathon had the opportunity to present its arguments to DNR. After Marathon submitted its request, DNR rejected the request because it was retroactive. Marathon requested reconsideration and argued that AS 38.05.180(aa) does permit retroactivity. DNR affirmed its earlier decision and explained its interpretation that "AS [3]8.05.180(aa) does not authorize the Department of Natural Resources to grant retroactive approval." Because Marathon had both adequate notice and a fair opportunity to present its claims, we conclude that its due process rights were not violated.

V. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, we AFFIRM the superior court's decision.

<TARGET><BILL></BILL><SUBJECT>1-28-11 OVERVIEWS DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SAFETY and ALASKA COURT SYSTEM</SUBJECT><COMM>HJUD27</COMM></TARGET>

Commissioner Joseph Masters
Department of Public Safety

Commissioner Masters was raised in Unalaska. Following his graduation from high school, the Commissioner pursued a career in law enforcement that spanned more than 24 years. He began his career as a Village Public Safety Officer in Unalakleet. Following his time as a VPSO, Masters served as police officer in both Unalakleet and Unalaska. The majority of his law enforcement career was within the ranks of the Alaska State Troopers, serving in both rural and urban Alaska. However, Commissioner Masters has also served with the division of Fish and Wildlife Protection. Shortly after retirement from the Alaska State Troopers in 2005, Commissioner Masters began working for Doyon Universal Services, where he was the Director of Security for Petrochemical Operations.

In September of 2008, then Governor Sarah Palin appointed Joseph Masters to Commissioner of the Department of Public Safety in September.

Commissioner Masters has served on many Boards, commissions, and committees. Commissioner Masters has served on the Board of the Alaska Native Justice Center, the Alaska Inter-Tribal Council, the Committee on Government to Government Relations, the Matanuska-Susitna Commission on Police Powers, the Board of Western Community Oriented Policing, and the Civil Air Patrol. Masters is a member of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, the Alaska Association of Chiefs of Police, the Alaska Peace Officers Association, the American Society of Law Enforcement Trainers, the Fraternal Order of Alaska State Troopers and the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association. In Alaska, he is considered an expert in the area of law enforcement policy, procedures, training and management.

Commissioner Masters currently lives in Anchorage with his wife, Michelle. Together they have three children who are now grown.

February 4, 2011

Cost Effective Justice: What's at Stake for Alaska?

The Alaska Department of Corrections (ADOC) is committed to providing for the secure confinement of offenders and providing for their rehabilitative programming and supervised community reentry. The ADOC 's overarching mission is to improve public safety while being a sound steward of state resources.

Alaska has the 11th fastest growing prison population in the United States. [1]

From 2000 to 2007, the Alaska prison population increased by 106 prisoners per 100,000 residents. Only Kentucky and West Virginia had a greater increase in per capita prison population. During that same period of time, the per capita prison population of twelve states actually decreased, while nationally the rate of incarceration increased by only 28 prisoners per 100,000 residents.[2] Alaska's prison growth has greatly exceeded its population growth.

From 2004 to 2009 the ADOC's total bookings have increased.

Total Admissions	35,472	35,328	36,715	37,688	37,655	38,897

From 2004 to 2009, the number of prisoners occupying a state paid custodial bed or on Electronic Monitoring has steadily increased.

Year	FY 2004	FY 2005	FY 2006	FY 2007	FY 2008	FY 2009	FY 2010
Daily annual average of state prisoners	4,769	4,805	4,999	5,204	5,383	5,320	5,602

The January 2009, ISER Research Summary report, "The Cost of Crime" requested by the Senate Judiciary Committee found that, with no change in the level of intervention and prevention programs in place at the time of the study, Alaska's prison population was projected to grow to 10,513 by 2030. Such an increase in Alaska's prison population would require the state to fund an unsustainable number of new prisons, not to mention the costs of substantial increases in the state court system, and prosecution, defense, and public safety departments to handle Alaska's growing number of offenders.

95% of Alaska's prisoners are eventually released from prison.

As the number of prisoners grows so does the number of prisoners released. In 2000, there were 2,427 prisoners admitted into an Alaskan correctional facility and 2,599 released. In 2008, there were 3,635 prisoners admitted and 3,741 released. [3]

- In 2009, the ADOC released, on average, 295 convicted felons every month, up from 289 per month in 2008.
- Of the 3,436 prisoners released in 2008, approximately 1,735 were released to Anchorage, 290 to Fairbanks and 106 to Juneau.

In summary, as of 2009, 1 out 36 Alaskans was under the jurisdiction of the ADOC.[4]

of Alaskans under ADOC jurisdiction	1 out of 90	1 out of 38	1 out of 36

The question is: Are Alaskans getting good value for the criminal justice dollars spent? As of 2008, the state is doing better, but we could do better yet.

- In 2011, ADOC expects to spend $136.00 per day to incarcerate a prisoner or $49,800 per year per individual.
- In FY 2010, ADOC's annual budget was $261,160,400.[5]
- Yet, 2 out of 3 former prisoners return to prison within the first 3 years of release for either a probation violation or for the alleged commission of a new crime.[6]

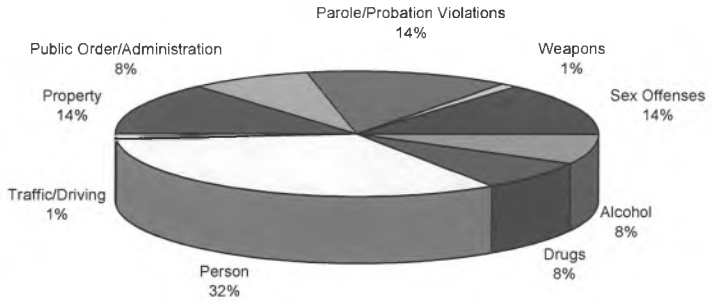
As the pie chart below reflects, a snapshot of the ADOC's prison population in 2009 shows that less than 50% of offenders committed crimes against the person or a sex offense.[7]

Institutional Offenders
by Offense Class
December 31, 2009



Yet, 8% of its population consisted of offenders who had committed Public Order/Administration offenses. The majority of offenses in this category included bail condition violations, failure to appear and contempt of court. These are offenses that certainly require consequences, but, at what cost to the state, and is it possible to create less expensive alternatives that will serve to reaffirm societal norms and protect the public?

What's at stake for Alaska?

Currently, the ADOC is constructing the Goose Creek Correctional Center (GCCC) which will have a maximum capacity of 1536 prisoners. The cost to build this facility is approximately $250 million and the annual operating budget is estimated to be approximately $50 million per year.

The ADOC's goal, along with its other stakeholder partners, is to employ cost-effective measures that will promote public safety, reduce Alaska's prison growth rate and successfully reintegrate newly released prisoners back into their communities.

If Alaska expands recent efforts to reduce recidivism, and employs best practice measures that have been proven successful in other states, it stands the greatest chance to slow its prison system growth while improving public safety.

Collaboration and the identification of a leader is the key to success.

Current collaborative efforts are:

- The Criminal Justice Work Group
    - Sub-group: The Alaska Prisoner Reentry Task Force
    - Alaska's Five-Year Prisoner Reentry Strategic Plan, 2011-2016, Purpose is to identify approaches to reduce recidivism in Alaska.
- Probationer Accountability with Certain Enforcement (PACE), Superior Court Pilot Project in Anchorage, July 2010 to the present.[8]
- The National Governor's Association Cross-Governmental Sentencing & Corrections Policy Forum in Annapolis Maryland, Summer 2010.
- The September 18, 2010, Cost Effective Justice Forum, Anchorage, Alaska
    - Pew Public Safety Project
    - National Governor's Association

The Texas Experience

In 2007, the famously "tough on crime" Texas legislature took dramatic, bipartisan action to control crime and corrections costs. This initiative was led by Republican Jerry Madden who was appointed by the majority leader as Chairman of the Corrections Committee. The then speaker of the house instructed Rep. Madden to develop new approaches to slow Texas' rapid prison growth. "Don't build new prisons. They cost too much".[9] With that directive in mind, Rep. Madden, an engineer and graduate from West Point, gathered the data and the facts to develop a systematic approach to break the cycle of crime.

In 2007, Texas' prison population exceeded 100,000 persons.[10]At the start of 2007, the state's corrections department projected a shortfall of 17,000 prison beds over the next five years and recommended the construction of 4,000 new beds at a cost of more than $900 million. Texas legislators requested assistance from the Pew Center on the States' Public Safety Performance Project and its partner, the Council of State Governments Justice Center (CSG), to identify options to avert prison growth while protecting public safety.

Based on their nonpartisan research and the menu of policy options they prepared, the 2007 Texas legislature approved a plan that provided an historic investment of just over $241 million in treatment and diversion facilities and substance abuse treatment services (just over a quarter of what was being requested to build new prisons) both behind prison walls and in community-based programs.

The components of Texas' new approach included:

- Funding for probation officers to use for outpatient substance abuse treatment for offenders.
- Funding for a mental health Pre-Trial Diversion Program
- Expansion of in-custody substance abuse Therapeutic Communities (like ADOC's RSSAT program).
- A prison dedicated to providing DWI offenders with intensive substance abuse treatment.
- Use of Intermediate sanction facilities for probationers who violate probation conditions.
- Early school intervention programs
- The Nurse Family Partnership program

With these and other measures, the Texas legislature successfully averted construction of all of the previously planned prison beds through 2012.[11]

According to Rep. Madden, who spoke at the September Cost-Effective Justice Forum held in Anchorage, the Texas prison population completely leveled off as a result of these initiatives. No shortfall in capacity is predicted until 2013, when the system may need a relatively small number of prison beds compared to the previously predicted need for eight prisons. Moreover, following the adoption of these reforms, Texas' crime rate did not increase, but continued to fall.

Summing it up:

The Texas experience is illustrative of what Alaska is clearly able to accomplish with leadership, vision and commitment to invest wisely today in best practices that have been shown to reduce prison growth, cut state corrections spending and serve to make Alaska's community safer and healthier places to live. This is the Cost-Effective justice approach.

[11] The Texas "justice reinvestment" approach was a dramatic turn in Texas' criminal justice policies. The state legislature committed to ensuring accountability and the continued success of these new measures. Accordingly, the Texas legislature established the Criminal Justice Legislative Oversight Committee to monitor and evaluate the implementation of the new policies and programs and to evaluate their impact on state prison populations.

  - Legislature passed new law reducing the tax rate to $34.50
  - Preserves payment of about $34 million per year to defray costs of services and facilities to accommodate passenger visits

III. Protecting Fiscal Integrity
Labor and State Affairs Section

- State lawsuit against Mercer, actuary for state pension plans (PERS) and (TERS)
  - Lawsuit settled
  - Mercer paid $500 million

III. Protecting Fiscal Integrity
Natural Resources Section

- Carlson v. State
  - 26 year old lawsuit by non-resident fishermen
    - They sought refunds of commercial fishing permit fees
      - Nonresident fees used to be 3x higher than resident fees
  - Court ruled against state
    - Judgment is $12 million in principal
      - $82.3 million total
      - Much of it due to 11% prejudgment interest compounded quarterly
      - plus attorney's fees
  - Case on appeal to Supreme Court
  - Successful outcome could be worth $60 million in savings

III. Protecting Fiscal Integrity
Transportation Section

- State suing the boat builder and the manufacturer of the state's two fast ferries (M/V Fairweather and M/V Chenega) for engine defects

Gruenberg: "consequential damages"

- Engine defects have cost the state hundreds of thousands of dollars in repairs
- M/V Fairweather still out of service

III. Protecting Fiscal Integrity
Tort and Workers' Compensation Defense Section

- In 2010, Department successfully defended over 200 tort claims with no adverse judgments against the state

IV. Promoting Good Governance

- Natural Resources (13 attorneys)
- Opinions, Appeals and Ethics (11 attorneys)
- Labor and State Affairs (19 attorneys)

  - Miller federal lawsuit (part 1)
  - Miller state lawsuit
  - Miller federal lawsuit (part 2)
  - Other lawsuits
    - Voting Rights Act lawsuit
    - Fairbanks suit filed 1/10/11 (state moved to dismiss as untimely)
- Law advised and defended Division of Elections

IV. Promoting Good Governance
Labor and State Affairs Section

- Nick v. State
  - Defended and settled elections lawsuit in Western Alaska
  - Enhancements to language assistance for Yup'ik speaking voters will be available at elections in Bethel area

IV. Promoting Good Governance
Opinions, Appeals and Ethics, Labor and State Affairs Sections

- Defending the Initiative Process
  - Planned Parenthood v. Campbell
    - State defended lawsuit to overturn certification of ballot initiative to require parental notification of minor daughter's abortion
      - Alaska Supreme Court ruled initiative should appear on the ballot
      - Alaska voters enacted parental notification law by initiative in 2010
        - Constitutionality of that law now being challenged in Planned Parenthood v. State
  - Natural Right to Life (10NRTL)
    - Department opined initiative should not be certified because proposal "clearly unconstitutional" under federal and state law

IV. Promoting Good Governance
Opinions, Appeals and Ethics Section

- Executive Branch Ethics Act advice and enforcement
  - Adopted new regulations, including standards governing state reimbursement of attorneys fees incurred by state officers exonerated in an ethics complaint proceeding
    - Similar to Rep. Gruenberg's HB 14 authorizing state reimbursement only after exoneration
  - Ethics training for senior managers and boards
  - Advisory opinions and investigations

IV. Promoting Good Governance
Opinions, Appeals and Ethics Section

- Public Records Requests
  - 26,500 pages of former Governor Palin's emails
    - Legal review to be completed by 3/31/11
    - Governor's Office review to be completed by 5/31/11
  - In 2010, Department of Law
    - Addressed 43 separate voluminous public records requests directed to Law
    - Provided privilege reviews for records requests to other state agencies

CHALLENGES AND OPPORTUNITIES

WHAT'S AHEAD FY 12 AND BEYOND

- Continue to Advance Core Services
- State-Federal Relations
  - Areas where state and federal cooperation is working well
  - Areas where a core state interest requires federal challenge

General Examples where State-Federal Cooperation is Working Well

- Department of Environmental Conservation's (DEC) air permitting program
- DEC assumption of National Pollutant Discharge Elimination System (NPDES) permit program under the federal Clean Water Act
- Cleanups at federal facilities under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act (CERCLA) and other federal and state laws

Specific Examples of State Cooperation with Federal Programs

- Defended Army Corps of Engineers Clean Water Act permit authorizing disposal of mine tailings, allowing Kensington Mine to open
- Worked with EPA to incorporate revised DEC regulations into Red Dog Mine Clean Water Act permit
- Intervened on side of U.S. in Point Hope v. Salazar and Center for Biological Diversity v. U.S.
  - Outer Continental Shelf cases
    - challenging the OCS 5-year plan
    - challenging to OCS Lease Sale 193 (Chukchi Sea)
    - Challenging Shell's Beaufort and Chukchi Sea OCS exploration plans
- Supported U.S. Forest Service authorization of Logjam timber sale

Areas Where a Core State Interest Requires Challenge Because of Federal Overreach

- Endangered Species Act
  - U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
    - Species listings
    - Critical habitat designations
- Clean Water Act
  - Environmental Protection Agency
    - Wetlands fill permit 404(c) elevated scrutiny
      - CD-5
      - Tanana River Bridge
    - Pre-permit scrutiny
      - Pebble prospect
- Clean Air Act
  - Environmental Protection Agency
    - Offshore oil and gas exploration
      - Shell Beaufort Sea drilling plans
- Wilderness and "Wild Lands" designations
  - Bureau of Land Management
    - Designations could tighten permit requirements
- Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act
  - Constitutionality

Challenges and Opportunities

- Support--as legally appropriate--responsible resource development
  - Develop a comprehensive long term development strategy
    - Endangered Species Act
      - Unwarranted listings
      - Unwarranted designations of critical habitat
    - Outer Continental Shelf exploration
      - Challenges when warranted
    - Clean Air and Water Acts
      - Challenges when warranted

Challenges and Opportunities

- Develop a 5-year interdepartmental plan
- Coordinate and cooperate
  - Legislative and executive branches of state government
  - All executive agencies
    - Department of Natural Resources
    - Department of Environmental Conservation
    - Department of Commerce Community and Economic Development
    - Department of Law
    - Department of Fish and Game

71

Challenges and Opportunities

- Cooperate and coordinate with stakeholders outside and inside state government
  - Municipalities
  - Boroughs
  - Native corporations and tribes
  - Other states
    - Washington and Oregon joined to de-list the Stellar sea lions
  - Allies like National Association of Attorneys General and Association of Fish and Wildlife Agencies

The Honorable Carl Gatto
Chairman, House Judiciary
Alaska State Legislature
State Capitol, Room 118
Juneau, AK 99801-1182

Dear Senator French/Representative Gatto,

Thank you for the opportunity to present the cost statement for the ACMP initiative before the Joint Judiciary Committee on February 6, 2012. The following is in response to questions posed by the Committee during the presentation for distribution to the members.

Questions from the Joint Judiciary Committee meeting Feb. 6

1. Senator Wielechowski asked why a fiscal note for HB106 showed that the former ACMP federal program had shown $4.0 million in federal funding, while the statement of cost indicated available federal funding was $2.0 million.

A fiscal note prepared on 05/13/2011 by the Senate Finance Committee for HB106 shows $4.0 million in federal funding for ACMP. (See Attachment 1) However, this level of federal funding appears well in excess of any recently available federal funding for coastal management programs.

Federal funding for Coastal Management Program administrative grants are governed by 16 U.S.C. § 1455. Since federal fiscal year 2008 (FFY2008) federal funding has come in three funding streams referred to as Sections 306/306A (tiered federal match up to 1:1); Section 309 (no match required); and the Coastal Non Point (CNP) or Section 310 (requires 1:1 match and not funded in FFY 2010).

Federal funding streams in the three programs are subject to maximum awards based upon the availability of federal funds. Alaska has typically received the maximum allowed for these programs. Below is a table showing federal funding from FFY2008-FFY2010. In these years, no more than $2.6 million was available for federal funding of state coastal management programs. Copies of the US

printed on recycled paper

Department of Commerce's program allocation letter are provided for your review. (Attachments 2-4.)

Federal Fiscal Year 2008	Section 306 Section 306A	Section 309	CNP	TOTAL Funds
Total Funding	$55,542,000	$10,000,000	$1,428,000	$66,970,000
Maximum State Funding	$1,967,000	$536,000	$42,000	$2,545,000
Alaska Allocation	$1,967,000	$536,000	$42,000	$2,545,000

Federal Fiscal Year 2009	Section 306 Section 306A	Section 309	CNP	TOTAL Funds
Total Funding	$56,079,000	$10,000,000	$2,345,000	$68,424,000
Maximum State Funding	$1,995,000	$536,000	$75,000	$2,606,000

Federal Fiscal Year 2010	Section 306 Section 306A	Section 309	CNP	TOTAL Funds
Total Funding	$57,085,000	$10,000,000	$0	$67,085,000
Maximum State Funding	$2,030,000	$536,000	$0	$2,566,000
Alaska Allocation	$2,030,000	$536,000	$0	$2,566,000

As indicated during testimony, the total cost estimate of $5.4 million annually could be shared by the federal government provided that the state becomes eligible for federal funding. Uncertainty remains about the timing and availability of the federal funding stream, and all of the funds that would be requested for the budget are subject to legislative appropriation.

2. Senator French and Representative Holmes asked for more specifics about the costs included in the overall cost estimate. They were specifically interested in information about ongoing versus one-time costs.

Please see the summary below that itemizes costs by category. Comments about ongoing versus one-time costs are included in the narrative section. The estimates currently allow flexibility for the state to address one-time costs, however should the initiative pass, program implementation costs are likely to be different than those presented. All proposed costs will be subject to appropriation by the legislature.

CATEGORY	Description
Personal Services	This expenditure would be an ongoing cost to support salaries and benefits for 34 full time positions ranging from a Division Director to an Office Assistant. The majority of the positions are Natural Resource Specialists supporting the envisioned Alaska Coastal Management Program In the first two years, it is likely that personal services costs will be lower than this estimate due to the program beginning from scratch. However, there will be many other activities associated with the initial gear up of the program though, so there is significant uncertainty about what percentage of these resources will be needed in the first two years.	$3,260,000
Travel	The projected travel expenditure would support employee and board related in-state and out of state travel to coastal districts and includes hotel, per diem, airfare and reimbursement for Alaska Coastal Management Program district assistance, staff training, mediation, public education, conferences and other travel supporting the program. This estimate anticipates increased travel costs in the first two years following the establishment of the board in order to assist coastal districts with their plans and advocate for the federal approval of the plan in Washington DC. Some portion of these travel resources would likely be redeployed to other program activities after the program is approved.	$267,900
Services	This expenditure is an ongoing cost to support contracts in the form of Reimbursable Services Agreements (RSA) to agencies participating in the Alaska Coastal Management Program. These contracts would support the implementation of the Alaska Coastal Management Program by the participating state agencies, coastal management areas and other contractors. This estimate also supports purchased services from other state agencies including centralized telecommunication, mail and human resource services, legal services, professional services to support monitoring & compliance activities and development and implementation activities for the Alaska Coastal Management Program. In the initial years, additional contractual services will be needed to draft and review implementing program regulations, and other start up activities.	$1,815,300
Commodities	This is an ongoing expenditure estimate that supports purchases related to office supplies, office furnishings and equipment, software as well as minor repairs to office equipment. In the first two years, actual costs in this category are likely to be significantly	$56,800 higher as the office acquires all of the office furnishings, office equipment and other commodities necessary to build an office from scratch.

3. Senator French asked for more specificity about the costs included in the estimate of costs to support implementation of the 13-member Coastal Policy Board governance structure.

The estimate of additional costs was based largely on cost estimates provided by the Department of Natural Resources (DNR) in their fiscal note for HB106 dated 04/15/2011. (Attachment 5) This fiscal note was chosen as a basis due to its somewhat similar nature to the initiative envisioned program. Comments on whether these are expected to be ongoing or one-time costs are also included.

As indicated during the testimony, these estimates assume a program that is substantially similar to the previous program with a 13-member board meeting in person 4 times annually. Significant uncertainty remains about the program that the board would ultimately implement and the associated costs. It should be noted that not all of the increased costs are directly attributable to the board members.

The costs in the table below are presented as subsets of the estimates presented in the prior table.

CATEGORY	Description
Personal Services	One additional position was added to the previously configured program to cover the additional work associated with the administration of the Alaska Coastal Policy Board and coordinating district planning functions and information sharing. This is an ongoing cost and would be directly attributable to the Coastal Policy Board.	$109,800
Travel	This estimate anticipates increased travel costs in the first two years following the establishment of the board in order to assist coastal districts with their plans and advocate for the federal approval of the plan in Washington DC. These travel resources would likely be redeployed to other program related travel or review activities after the program is approved. These costs are not directly attributable to the addition of a board. This expenditure estimate also includes $60,000 in ongoing travel costs associated with four annual in-person meetings of the 13-member Alaska Coastal Policy Board and two staff members at approximately $1,000 per trip. This is an ongoing cost directly attributable to addition of a Coastal Policy Board.	$164,000

Services	This expenditure supports an additional $300,000 in ongoing services agreements with other state agencies services that DNR indicated would be needed to successfully implement the ACMP program. This would be an ongoing cost. These costs are not directly attributable to the addition of a board. The estimates include $60.000 estimate for regulations review by the Department of Law that would be of limited duration. Length of need is uncertain and dependent upon the complexity of the regulations and the time it takes to promulgate and implement them, this could be a cost for 2-4 years, however these resources would likely be redeployed to reviews and other program support after that time. Other ongoing services costs included $20,000 in postage, teleconference services, and other miscellaneous board and coastal district support such as conducting elections in coastal districts. This would be an ongoing cost directly attributable to the addition of the board.	$380,000
Commodities	This estimate includes some $5,600 in one-time costs such as the purchase of a recorder and sound equipment for the board. Ongoing costs include $10,000 in supplies needed to support the presentation of materials at the board meetings. These costs are directly attributable to the addition of a board.	$15,600

Reason For Change:

CC: This fiscal note combines the additional funding requested with FY12 program funding removed by the Senate. Additionally, this fiscal note is updated to reflect changes made in the House Finance committee substitute.

This revised fiscal note includes $1.36 million capital authorization (federal) for operating grants to communities so they have the funding necessary for local participation.

Analysis:

NOTE: The base budget ($4,691.7 and 33 positions) was removed from the Senate version of the FY12 operating budget, making it subject to conference committee. The annual capital project request for the federal grant funds that are shared with DCCED for grants to communities and for DCCED's administration of the grants was removed from the Senate version of the FY12 Capital Budget making it subject to conference committee.

The Alaska Coastal Management Program (ACMP) will automatically terminate on July 1, 2011 (SLA2005, CH31, Sec 22). CSHB106(FIN) would extend the termination date to July 1, 2017.

Submitted By: Senate Finance for SCS CSHB 106(FIN)

Prepared By: Conference Committee

Date: 05/04/2011

This fiscal note reflects the increased fiscal impacts due to the additional Division of Coastal and Ocean Management (DCOM) duties, including the administration and implementation of the Alaska Coastal Policy Board (CPB). Those increased fiscal impacts are detailed below:

Personal Services
One additional position, a Project Coordinator (range 20), will be required to cover the additional work associated with the CPB and the coordination of district planning functions and information sharing.

Travel
The CPB will meet four times in-person in the first two years following establishment of the board, and will meet in-person twice annually after that. The CPB will need to meet more frequently in-person for the first two years in order to establish board protocols, review coastal district plans, and address issues of interest to ACMP participants. CPB travel includes nine members and two DCOM support staff.

In addition, recognizing coastal districts will be amending their district plans based on CSHB106(FIN), two DCOM staff will travel 5-6 different districts per year for four years to assist the districts with their plan amendments.

Five DCOM staff will travel to regional locations for two years to provide ACMP training and education on program changes and the revised ACMP implementing regulations.

The DCOM Director will travel to Washington, DC three times annually for two years to work with NOAA on program change approvals and NEPA requirements.

Contractual
The CPB will meet two times annually by teleconference, with each 2-day teleconference lasting 8 hours each day (including 20 phone lines). CSHB106(FIN) will require a substantial revision to all three chapters of the implementing ACMP regulations (11 AAC 110, 112, and 114). Contractual services will be required to develop and complete those revisions, including the Department of Law final review. The coordination and distribution of district planning and consistency review data and information requires postage and other fees. DCOM will also reimburse state agencies for their participation and implementation of the ACMP program.

Supplies
Supplies will be required for supporting the CPB (dictation/recorder equipment, packet materials and binders) and support staff (office

MEMORANDUM FOR: Commonwealth, State, and Territorial Coastal Program Managers

THROUGH: Eric Wolfe
Acting Chief Financial Officer
National Ocean Service

FROM: John R. King
Chief, Coastal Programs Division

Coastal Zone Management Act Sections 306/306A, 309 and 310

This final funding guidance is based on the funding levels contained in the Consolidated Appropriations Act, 2008 (P.L. 110-161). This Act contains funding for sections 306/306A; 309; and 310. This memorandum provides guidance on the allocation and uses of these funds. Questions or comments should be directed to me, and I can be reached at (301) 713-3155 extension 188 or via e-mail at john.king@noaa.gov.

- Figures reflect the FY08 Appropriation less assessments for the Hollings Scholarship program and administrative costs.
 - Total deobligated funds added to section 306 funding.

Printed on Recycled Paper

As you can see from the above table, appropriations for sections 306/309 are down by approximately $1.4M. This is partially offset by the availability of $1.2M in prior year deobligations. There is also almost $2M available for the Coastal Nonpoint Pollution Control Program.

Section 306/306A and Section 309 Allotments

For FY 2007, there is $65,542,000 in appropriated and deobligated funds available for sections 306/306A and 309. The CZMA requires that between ten and twenty percent of the section 306/309 appropriation be directed toward section 309, up to a maximum of $10,000,000. We will direct the statutory maximum of $10,000,000 (15.1%) of the appropriation toward section 309, leaving $55,542,000 for section 306/306A. The section 306/306A funds require a 1 to 1 match and are available to states with federally-approved coastal zone management programs. State allocations are provided in the attached table (attachment 1).

The states that have successfully completed section 309 assessments and strategies are eligible for section 309 funding. These funds require no match. All of the section 309 funds will be awarded through the weighted formula. The primary focus of this year's section 309 effort will be to implement the third year of the new enhancement strategies.

Implementation of Section 6217 Programs

There is a total of $1,974,000 available for the Coastal Nonpoint Program. The funds are being allocated as follows: 1. $42,000 for each state with a conditionally or fully approved 6217 program; 2. an additional $26,000 for each state with a fully approved program.

As in past years, Congress has provided these funds to support program implementation activities. Any remaining program development activities (i.e., addressing remaining conditions of approval) should be supported with the $100,000 in section 319 Clean Water Act funding identified initially in EPA's supplemental FY 2001 grants guidance for this purpose. Section 309 funds may also be used to support program development activities and states can utilize section 306 funding to support a variety of CNPCP development and implementation activities.

The CNPCP implementation funds require a 1 to1 match. The state coastal zone management lead agency is the only entity eligible to receive these awards, and may in turn make sub-awards. For states with conditional approval, these funds must be used to implement the approved portions of the CNPCP.

Application Procedures

The current application schedule is attached. July 1 start date awards are due in OCRM by April 10, 2008; and October 1 start date awards are due in OCRM by May 20, 2008 (attachment 2). This schedule may be revised pending discussions with the Grants Management Division. As with FY 2007, use of the electronic grants application system is required.

Notice Information

According to the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972, as amended (CZMA), the Secretary of Commerce may make grants to eligible coastal states. Coastal states are defined as states that are in, or bordering on, the Atlantic, Pacific, or Arctic Oceans, the Gulf of Mexico, Long Island Sound, or one or more of the Great Lakes. For the purposes of the CZMA, the term also includes Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands, Guam, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and American Samoa. This notice is being distributed to all eligible parties, and substitutes for the Federal Register notice required for Federal grant programs.

MEMORANDUM FOR: Commonwealth, State, and Territorial Coastal Program Managers

THROUGH: Chris Cartwright, Chief Financial Officer
National Ocean Service

FROM: John R. King
Chief, Coastal Programs Division

Coastal Zone Management Act Sections 306/306A, 309 and 310

Given the lateness of the appropriation and the need to get the funds out to the recipients, we are forgoing the normal process of issuing draft funding guidance. This final funding guidance is based on the funding levels contained in the Consolidated Appropriations Act, 2008 (P.L. 110-161). This Act contains funding for sections 306/306A; 309; and 310. This memorandum provides guidance on the allocation and uses of these funds. Questions or comments should be directed to me, and I can be reached at (301) 713-3155 extension 188 or via e-mail at john.king@noaa.gov.

In spite of the late appropriation, our goal is to get you your funds in a timely manner. To meet this goal, we must keep an application schedule similar to last year (Attachment 2). We recognize that this is a difficult schedule, however, it is critical that we get applications in as quickly as possible, so that we can get funds out the door in time to meet your start dates. We will work with you to get this done as efficiently as possible.

Printed on Recycled Paper

As you can see from the above table, appropriations for sections 306/309 are up by approximately $1.4M, however, deobligated funds are down by almost $1.2M. There is also almost $3.4M available for the Coastal Nonpoint Pollution Control Program.

Section 306/306A and Section 309 Allotments

For FY 2009, there is $66,079,000 in appropriated funds available for sections 306/306A and 309. The CZMA requires that between ten and twenty percent of the section 306/309 appropriation be directed toward section 309, up to a maximum of $10,000,000. We will direct the statutory maximum of $10,000,000 (15.1%) of the appropriation toward section 309, leaving $56,079,000 for section 306/306A. The section 306/306A funds require a 1 to 1 match and are available to states with federally-approved coastal zone management programs. State allocations are provided in the attached table (attachment 1).

The states that have successfully completed section 309 assessments and strategies are eligible for section 309 funding. These funds require no match. All of the section 309 funds will be awarded through the weighted formula. The primary focus of this year's section 309 effort will be to continue developing program changes outlined in the current strategies and to begin developing revised assessments and strategies.

There is a total of $3,362,000 available for the Coastal Nonpoint Program. The funds are being allocated as follows: 1. $2,345,000 allocated by formula to each state with a conditionally or fully approved 6217 program. Each state will see an increase of at least $19,000 over FY08 in these funds. 2. an additional $46,200 for each state with a fully approved program.

As in past years, Congress has provided these funds to support program implementation activities. Please consult the CNP Funding Guidance for additional information. (http://coastalmanagement.noaa.gov/nonpoint/docs/6217grantsguidance_FY06Final.pdf)

Any remaining program development activities (i.e., addressing remaining conditions of approval) should be supported with the $100,000 in section 319 Clean Water Act funding identified initially in EPA's supplemental FY 2001 grants guidance for this purpose. Section 309 funds may also be used to support program development activities and states can utilize section 306 funding to support a variety of CNPCP development and implementation activities.

The CNPCP implementation funds require a 1 to1 match. The state coastal zone management lead agency is the only entity eligible to receive these awards, and may in turn make sub-awards. For states with conditional approval, these funds must be used to implement the approved portions of the CNPCP.

Application Procedures

The current application schedule is attached. July 1 start date awards are due in OCRM by April 3, 2009; and October 1 start date awards are due in OCRM by May 20, 2009 (attachment 2). As with FY 2008, use of the electronic grants application system is required.

Notice Information

According to the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972, as amended (CZMA), the Secretary of Commerce may make grants to eligible coastal states. Coastal states are defined as states that are in, or bordering on, the Atlantic, Pacific, or Arctic Oceans, the Gulf of Mexico, Long Island Sound, or one or more of the Great Lakes. For the purposes of the CZMA, the term also includes Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands, Guam, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and American Samoa. This notice is being distributed to all eligible parties, and substitutes for the Federal Register notice required for Federal grant programs.

MEMORANDUM FOR: Commonwealth, State, and Territorial Coastal Program Managers

THROUGH: Chris Cartwright, Chief Financial Officer
National Ocean Service

FROM: John R. King
Chief, Coastal Programs Division

SUBJECT: FY 2010 Draft Funding Guidance and Allocations
Coastal Zone Management Act Sections 306/306A and 309

This draft funding guidance is based on the funding levels contained in the Consolidated Appropriations Act, 2010 (P.L. 111-117). This Act contains funding for sections 306/306A and 309. This memorandum provides guidance on the allocation and uses of these funds. Questions or comments should be directed to me, and I can be reached at (301) 713-3155 extension 188 or via e-mail at john.king@noaa.gov. Comments are due by March 8, 2010.

Our goal is to get you your funds in a timely manner, and to meet this goal, we must keep an application schedule similar to last year (Attachment 2). We recognize that this is a difficult schedule, however, it is critical that we get applications in as quickly as possible, so that we can get funds out the door in time to meet your start dates. We will work with you to get this done as efficiently as possible.

Printed on Recycled Paper

As you can see from the above table, appropriations for sections 306/309 are up by approximately $2.0M, however, there is no funding available for the Coastal Nonpoint Pollution Control Program. There is also a small amount of deobligated funds available for re-allocation.

Report Language

Report language accompanying the FY10 Appropriations Act requires that a portion of the increase in the Coastal Zone Management Grants funding be used for a competitive grants program. Specifically, the report states:

> The conference agreement provides $2,000,000 above the request, and NOAA is directed to use a portion of the increase provided for a competitive program for efforts to modernize and improve State information systems to assess, track and manage permitting and land-use tracking procedures. ( FY2010 Appropriations Conference Report (p27))

In addition, the Appropriations Act continues to include the following language regarding allocations:

> Provided further, That in allocating grants under sections 306 and 306A of the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972, as amended, no coastal State shall receive more than 5 percent or less than 1 percent of increased funds appropriated over the previous fiscal year, (FY2010 Appropriations Act (p17))

Proposed Approach

Our challenge is to meet both existing statutory and regulatory requirements, and Congressional direction contained in the Conference Report. To do this, we are proposing to allocate $1,000,000 of the funding increase towards section 306 allocations, and $1,000,000 of the funding increase towards a competitive process for the purposes described in the Conference Report. There will be a separate call for proposals for the competitive funds, as well as separate cooperative agreements. This approach meets the requirements described above, and allows the standard annual CZM cooperative agreement process to move forward in a timely manner.

For FY 2010, there is $67,085,000 in appropriated and deobligated funds available for sections 306/306A and 309. The CZMA requires that between ten and twenty percent of the section 306/309 appropriation be directed toward section 309, up to a maximum of $10,000,000. We will direct the statutory maximum of $10,000,000 (14.9%) of the appropriation toward section 309, leaving $57,085,000 for section 306/306A. The section 306/306A funds require a 1 to 1 match and are available to states with federally-approved coastal zone management programs. State allocations are provided in the attached table (attachment 1).

The states that have successfully completed section 309 assessments and strategies are eligible for section 309 funding. These funds require no match. All of the section 309 funds will be awarded through the weighted formula. The primary focus of this year's section 309 effort will be to develop revised assessments and strategies.

Implementation of Section 6217 Programs

No funding was appropriated for this program for FY 2010. We understand that this presents difficulties for some states, and we will provide flexibility in funding CNP implementation projects with 306 or 309 funds.

Application Procedures

The current application schedule is attached. July 1 start date awards are due in OCRM by April 5, 2010; and October 1 start date awards are due in OCRM by May 20, 2010 (attachment 2). As with FY 2009, use of the electronic grants application system is required.

NOAA Strategic Priorities

NOAA is currently in the process of finalizing its "Next Generation Strategic Plan" intended to guide Agency actions through 2017. The draft goals articulated in this plan align nicely with CZMA goals, OCRM office priorities, and the priorities of many of your programs. This provides a good opportunity to demonstrate the connection between the CZM program and funding and NOAA priorities. Towards this end, we thought it worthwhile to provide a brief description of the NOAA strategic priorities, as they will likely provide greater visibility for the CZM program and new opportunities for states to access a broader array of NOAA resources.

NOAA intends to focus its efforts on the following four (4) overarching goals:

1. Climate Adaptation & Mitigation: An informed society anticipating and responding to a changing climate and its impacts.
2. Weather Resilience: Society prepares for and responds to high-impact events that jeopardize individuals, government, and businesses.
3. Sustainable Coastal Communities and Economies: Environmentally and economically sustainable oceans, coasts, and Great Lakes communities and ecosystem services.
4. Sustainable and Resilient Fisheries, Species, and Habitats: Biodiversity protected and restored and fisheries sustained within healthy and productive ecosystems

By using the following means, familiar to coastal programs, to improve management of our coasts and oceans:

- Promoting partnerships and collaboration at all levels
- Engaging regional ocean governance bodies
- Enabling data integration and delivery
- Improving tools and technology for decision support
- Using local expertise and ecological knowledge

We anticipate that OCRM's support of coastal program engagement in regional ocean governance, climate change adaptation, and the development and use of coastal and marine spatial planning will support the NOAA strategic priorities. We encourage you to consider these priorities in the development of your annual work programs; 309 Assessments and Strategies; and in reporting your program's success stories (Section C of the Performance Reporting Guidelines). Additional information related to NOAA's Strategic Plan can be found here: http://www.ppi.noaa.gov/ngsp.html; and the current OCRM strategic plan can be found here: http://coastalmanagement.noaa.gov/resources/docs/ocrm_strategicplan.pdf.

Why this fiscal note differs from previous version

The fiscal note is updated to reflect changes made in the House Finance committee substitute.
(1) Based on language in the CSHB106 (FIN), this fiscal note reflects the removal of one full time Natural Resource Specialist II position and only an additional $10.0 in supplies for dissemination of projects in review by hard copy.

NOTE: The base budget ($4,691.7 and 33 positions) was removed from the Senate version of the FY12 operating budget, making it subject to conference committee. This fiscal note also includes the annual capital project request for the federal grant funds that are shared with DCCED for grants to communities and for DCCED's adminstration of the grants which was removed from the budget making it subject to conference committee.

FISCAL NOTE #9

STATE OF ALASKA
2011 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. CSHB 106(FIN)

Analysis

NOTE: The base budget ($4,691.7 and 33 positions) was removed from the Senate version of the FY12 operating budget, making it subject to conference committee. The annual capital project request for the federal grant funds that are shared with DCCED for grants to communities and for DCCED's administration of the grants was removed from the Senate version of the FY12 Capital Budget making it subject to conference committee.

The Alaska Coastal Management Program (ACMP) will automatically terminate on July 1, 2011 (SLA2005, CH31, Sec 22). CSHB106(FIN) would extend the termination date to July 1, 2017.

This fiscal note reflects the increased fiscal impacts due to the additional Division of Coastal and Ocean Management (DCOM) duties, including the administration and implementation of the Alaska Coastal Policy Board (CPB). Those increased fiscal impacts are detailed below:

Personal Services
One additional position, a Project Coordinator (range 20), will be required to cover the additional work associated with the CPB and the coordination of district planning functions and information sharing.

Travel
The CPB will meet four times in-person in the first two years following establishment of the board, and will meet in-person twice annually after that. The CPB will need to meet more frequently in-person for the first two years in order to establish board protocols, review coastal district plans, and address issues of interest to ACMP participants. CPB travel includes nine members and two DCOM support staff.

In addition, recognizing coastal districts will be amending their district plans based on CSHB106(FIN), two DCOM staff will travel 5-6 different districts per year for four years to assist the districts with their plan amendments.

Five DCOM staff will travel to regional locations for two years to provide ACMP training and education on program changes and the revised ACMP implementing regulations.

The DCOM Director will travel to Washington, DC three times annually for two years to work with NOAA on program change approvals and NEPA requirements.

Contractual
The CPB will meet two times annually by teleconference, with each 2-day teleconference lasting 8 hours each day (including 20 phone lines). CSHB106(FIN) will require a substantial revision to all three chapters of the implementing ACMP regulations (11 AAC 110, 112, and 114). Contractual services will be required to develop and complete those revisions, including the Department of Law final review. The coordination and distribution of district planning and consistency review data and information requires postage and other fees. DCOM will also reimburse state agencies for their participation and implementation of the ACMP program.

Supplies
Supplies will be required for supporting the CPB (dictation/recorder equipment, packet materials and binders) and support staff (office equipment).

Senator Wielechowski asked why a fiscal note for HB106 showed that the former ACMP federal program had shown $4.0 million in federal funding, while the statement of cost indicated available federal funding was $2.0 million.

A fiscal note prepared on 05/13/2011 by the Senate Finance Committee for HB106 shows $4.0 million in federal funding for ACMP. (See Attachment 1) However, this level of federal funding appears well in excess of any recently available federal funding for coastal management programs.

Federal funding for Coastal Management Program administrative grants are governed by 16 U.S.C. § 1455. Since federal fiscal year 2008 (FFY2008) federal funding has come in three funding streams referred to as Sections 306/306A (tiered federal match up to 1:1); Section 309 (no match required); and the Coastal Non Point (CNP) or Section 310 (requires 1:1 match and not funded in FFY 2010).

Federal funding streams in the three programs are subject to maximum awards based upon the availability of federal funds. Alaska has typically received the maximum allowed for these programs. Below is a table showing federal funding from FFY2008-FFY2010. In these years, no more than $2.6 million was available for federal funding of state coastal management programs. Copies of the US Department of Commerce's program allocation letter are provided for your review. (Attachments 2-4.)

Alaska Allocation	$2,030,000	$536,000	$0	$2,566,000

As indicated during testimony, the total cost estimate of $5.4 million annually could be shared by the federal government provided that the state becomes eligible for federal funding. Uncertainty remains about the timing and availability of the federal funding stream, and all of the funds that would be requested for the budget are subject to legislative appropriation.

Senator French and Representative Holmes asked for more specifics about the costs included in the overall cost estimate. They were specifically interested in information about ongoing versus one-time costs.

Please see the summary below that itemizes costs by category. Comments about ongoing versus one-time costs are included in the narrative section. The estimates currently allow flexibility for the state to address one-time costs, however should the initiative pass, program implementation costs are likely to be different than those presented. All proposed costs will be subject to appropriation by the legislature.

CATEGORY	Description
Personal Services	This expenditure would be an ongoing cost to support salaries and benefits for 34 full time positions ranging from a Division Director to an Office Assistant. The majority of the positions are Natural Resource Specialists supporting the envisioned Alaska Coastal Management Program In the first two years, it is likely that personal services costs will be lower than this estimate due to the program beginning from scratch. However, there will be many other activities associated with the initial gear up of the program though, so there is significant uncertainty about what percentage of these resources will be needed in the first two years.	$3,260,000
Travel	The projected travel expenditure would support employee and board related in-state and out of state travel to coastal districts and includes hotel, per diem, airfare and reimbursement for Alaska Coastal Management Program district assistance, staff training, mediation, public education, conferences and other travel supporting the program. This estimate anticipates increased travel costs in the first two years following the establishment of the board in order to assist coastal districts with their plans and advocate for the federal approval of the plan in Washington DC. Some portion of these travel resources would likely be redeployed to other program activities after the program is approved.	$267,900

Services	This expenditure is an ongoing cost to support contracts in the form of Reimbursable Services Agreements (RSA) to agencies participating in the Alaska Coastal Management Program. These contracts would support the implementation of the Alaska Coastal Management Program by the participating state agencies, coastal management areas and other contractors. This estimate also supports purchased services from other state agencies including centralized telecommunication, mail and human resource services, legal services, professional services to support monitoring & compliance activities and development and implementation activities for the Alaska Coastal Management Program. In the initial years, additional contractual services will be needed to draft and review implementing program regulations, and other start up activities.	$1,815,300
Commodities	This is an ongoing expenditure estimate that supports purchases related to office supplies, office furnishings and equipment, software as well as minor repairs to office equipment. In the first two years, actual costs in this category are likely to be significantly higher as the office acquires all of the office furnishings, office equipment and other commodities necessary to build an office from scratch.	$56,800

Senator French asked for more specificity about the costs included in the estimate of costs to support implementation of the 13-member Coastal Policy Board governance structure.

The estimate of additional costs was based largely on cost estimates provided by the Department of Natural Resources (DNR) in their fiscal note for HB106 dated 04/15/2011. (Attachment 5) This fiscal note was chosen as a basis due to its somewhat similar nature to the initiative envisioned program. Comments on whether these are expected to be ongoing or one-time costs are also included.

As indicated during the testimony, these estimates assume a program that is substantially similar to the previous program with a 13-member board meeting in person 4 times annually. Significant uncertainty remains about the program that the board would ultimately implement and the associated costs. It should be noted that not all of the increased costs are directly attributable to the board members.

The costs in the table below are presented as subsets of the estimates presented in the prior table.

CATEGORY	Description
Personal Services	One additional position was added to the previously configured program to cover the additional work associated with the administration of the Alaska Coastal Policy Board and coordinating district planning functions and information sharing. This is an ongoing cost and would be directly attributable to the Coastal Policy Board.	$109,800
Travel	This estimate anticipates increased travel costs in the first two years following the establishment of the board in order to assist coastal districts with their plans and advocate for the federal approval of the plan in Washington DC. These travel resources would likely be redeployed to other program related travel or review activities after the program is approved. These costs are not directly attributable to the addition of a board. This expenditure estimate also includes $60,000 in ongoing travel costs associated with four annual in-person meetings of the 13-member Alaska Coastal Policy Board and two staff members at approximately $1,000 per trip. This is an ongoing cost directly attributable to addition of a Coastal Policy Board.	$164,000
Services	This expenditure supports an additional $300,000 in ongoing services agreements with other state agencies services that DNR indicated would be needed to successfully implement the ACMP program. This would be an ongoing cost. These costs are not directly attributable to the addition of a board. The estimates include $60.000 estimate for regulations review by the Department of Law that would be of limited duration. Length of need is uncertain and dependent upon the complexity of the regulations and the time it takes to promulgate and implement, this could be a cost for 2-4 years. However, these resources would likely be redeployed to reviews and other program support after that time. Other ongoing services costs included $20,000 in postage, teleconference services, and other miscellaneous board and coastal district support. This would be an ongoing cost directly attributable to the addition of the board.	$380,000
Commodities	This estimate includes some $5,600 in one-time costs such as the purchase of a recorder and sound equipment for the board. Ongoing costs include $10,000 in supplies needed to support the presentation of materials at the board meetings. These costs are directly attributable to the addition of a board.	$15,600

and Economic Development

RE: ACMP

Representative Gatto and Senator French,

We have provided responses to questions raised during the recent hearing on the ACMP initiative. Please contact me if you have any further questions.

1. How long will it take for previously reviewed plans to be adopted at the onset of the new program?
   - The initiative language includes AS 46.41.040(b) which states; "...approved coastal management plans that were in effect as of June 30, 2011 are in effect and are incorporated into the Alaska Coastal Management Program." Upon creation of the program, all existing approved plans would be in effect. Of the existing 28 coastal districts, there were two districts that did not have approved plans: the Northwest Arctic Borough and the North Slope Borough. It appears from the language of the initiative that those two boroughs would not have an approved plan until a new plan was submitted to the board for review and approval.

2. Will previously reviewed plans, or newly adopted plans expire?
   - Under previous versions of the ACMP program, district plans were required to be reviewed and reapproved every 10 years. Additionally, the statutory amendments to the program passed in 2003 and 2005 required all coastal districts to revise and submit their coastal plans for review and approval. The deadline for this submittal was March 1, 2006. The wording in the initiative does not include a mandatory review period where the plan would expire if not reviewed and approved. The initiative language includes AS 46.41.070 which requires coastal districts to review their plans within one year of adoption of regulations to see if they meet the requirement of the regulations and to make any changes and submit revised plans, but it does not state that the plans would expire if not revised or submitted.

3. Will plans need to have a NEPA review?
   - Under the previous program, there was a "State Coastal Management Plan" that was reviewed and approved under NEPA. The individual coastal plans were a part of the State Plan, and thus were not required to undergo individual review. We expect that this same hierarchy would be put in place under a new program.

4. How would formation of Coastal Resource Districts in the Unincorporated Borough take place?
   - The initiative language states in AS 46.41.060(b) that "Coastal Districts, Coastal District Boundaries ...that were in effect as of June 30, 2011 are in effect and incorporated into the Alaska Coastal Management Program." Those municipalities in the unorganized borough that were their own coastal districts (Bethel, Cordova, Craig, Hoonah, Nome, Pelican, Thorne Bay, Valdez, and Whittier) will continue to be coastal districts. In addition, the four Coastal Resource Service Areas (Aleutians West, Bering Straits, Bristol Bay, and Ceñaliulriit) will also be coastal districts. The initiative also provides a method for areas in the unorganized borough (Regional Education Attendance Areas – REAA) that contain part of the coastal area, and that are not already formed into a coastal district, to form a district. This process is outlined starting at AS 46.41.110. Areas that would be affected by this are limited to Prince William Sound REAA (excluding Cordova, Valdez, and Whittier), Chatham REAA (excluding Hoonah and Pelican), and Southeast Island REAA (excluding Craig and Thorne Bay).

Reason For Change:

CC: This fiscal note combines the additional funding requested with FY12 program funding removed by the Senate. Additionally, this fiscal note is updated to reflect changes made in the House Finance committee substitute.

This revised fiscal note includes $1.36 million capital authorization (federal) for operating grants to communities so they have the funding necessary for local participation.

Analysis:

NOTE: The base budget ($4,691.7 and 33 positions) was removed from the Senate version of the FY12 operating budget, making it subject to conference committee. The annual capital project request for the federal grant funds that are shared with DCCED for grants to communities and for DCCED's administration of the grants was removed from the Senate version of the FY12 Capital Budget making it subject to conference committee.

The Alaska Coastal Management Program (ACMP) will automatically terminate on July 1, 2011 (SLA2005, CH31, Sec 22). CSHB106(FIN) would extend the termination date to July 1, 2017.

Submitted By: Senate Finance for SCS CSHB 106(FIN)

Date: 05/04/2011

This fiscal note reflects the increased fiscal impacts due to the additional Division of Coastal and Ocean Management (DCOM) duties, including the administration and implementation of the Alaska Coastal Policy Board (CPB). Those increased fiscal impacts are detailed below:

ACMP Initiative Petition Meets Signature Requirements

February 8, 2012, Anchorage, AK – The citizen initiative to establish an Alaska Coastal Management Program appears to have gathered more than the minimum number of qualified signatures required for a determination of proper filing, Lt. Governor Mead Treadwell announced today. As of today, the Division of Elections has determined that at least 25,875 qualified subscribers, from at least 30 out of 40 legislative districts, signed the initiative petition.

For legal reasons, all signatures that were submitted by petition sponsors on January 17, 2012 are still being reviewed by the Division of Elections. In accordance with AS 15.45.150, the lieutenant governor has 60 days from the date the sponsors filed their petition to make a final determination of proper or improper filing. In addition, all signatures on a petition for a ballot measure must be examined for purposes of voter registration list maintenance pursuant to AS 15.07.130.

Under AS 15.45.190, upon a determination of proper filing, the initiative may appear on the next statewide general, special, or primary election that is held 120 days after a legislative session has convened and adjourned and a period of 120 days has expired since the adjournment of the legislative session.

"Whether the measure actually appears on the primary or general election ballot depends on the timing of the legislature's adjournment, and whether they take action on 'substantially similar' legislation," Treadwell said.

Coastal Management cost estimates challenged

Election director says initiative close to qualifying for ballot

Posted: February 7, 2012 - 12:02am

By Pat Forgey

JUNEAU EMPIRE

Juneau Mayor Bruce Botelho told a legislative committee Monday the Parnell administration significantly overstated the cost of restoring the Coastal Management program in Alaska.

An initiative to do that looks increasingly likely to make the ballot later this year.

Botelho chairs the Alaska Sea Party, a group of coastal communities trying to resurrect the program the Legislature let die last year. He was invited to testify over the objections of some legislators.

Botelho told a joint meeting of the House and Senate Judiciary committees the state's estimated fiscal impact of restoring the program was too high.

"I believe the fiscal note overstated the cost fairly dramatically, at least in the first few years of the program," Botelho said.

The state's official estimate said the state would have to absorb the full cost of the $5.4 million program initially, until partial federal funding would be likely to kick in.

Botelho said it would take some time, probably 2-3 years before the program could begin reviewing projects, which would be what much of its staff does. That would limit its initial cost.

An economist with the Office of Management and Budget, part of the Parnell administration, said because the timing and extent of the program are still in flux, cost estimates are difficult.

"Should the initiative pass it is likely that the actual costs will be different," said OMB economist John Boucher.

Sen. Bill Wielechowski, D-Anchorage, asked why the state was only projecting $2 million a year in federal support for the program, despite the state's previously receiving $4 million a year.

Boucher said he'd have to look into it and respond to the committee later.

Rep. Carl Gatto, R-Palmer, questioned whether the state was being overly optimistic projecting the federal government would have enough money to fund Coastal Management in the future.

Boucher said he couldn't speculate about the availability of the funds in the future, but they are part of federal law now.

One new aspect of the program is it creates a new board to oversee Coastal Management. Botelho said the state's $700,000 cost for that board was high, far higher than similar statewide panels, such as the Board of Game.

State Elections Director Gail Fenumiai said the Elections Division was working its way through the process of confirming the initiative had received the required 24,875 valid signatures from registered voters, and was getting close to doing so.

Of the more than 33,000 signatures submitted, 24,350 have already been validated, with more than 8,800 left to check.

She also said the signatures came from enough districts to satisfy a requirement for initiative petitions. Under state law, a minimum number of signatures must come from at least 30 of 40 House districts. Fenumiai said the Alaska Sea Party had actually collected the minimum number of signatures in 37 of the state's 40 districts, the first time the division has confirmed publicly that hurdle was met.

Monday's committee hearing was required by a new state law mandating an initiative proposal be heard in at least one committee of each house of the Legislature before it goes to the ballot. The House and Senate Judiciary committees were designated to conduct the hearings.

Rep. Kyle Johansen, R-Ketchikan, chief sponsor of the initiative requiring the hearings, had urged the committees to only hear from the administration about how they'd implement the program.

At the hearing itself, one committee member, Rep. Lance Pruitt, R-Anchorage, told Botelho he was "uncomfortable with you being here" as they weren't also hearing from initiative opponents.

The chairmen of the two committees, Gatto and Sen. Hollis French, D-Anchorage, said they decided whom to invite.

The Legislature can head off an election restoring Coastal Management by adopting a substantially similar program on its own. No such legislation has been proposed.

Also testifying were legislative attorneys who discussed the "substantially similar" requirement.

Doug Gardner, director of the Legislative Legal Services Division, said lawmakers would have wide latitude in putting together a substantially similar program, given Coastal Management's complexity, the Associated Press reported.

The Honorable Mike Chenault
Speaker of the House

Gary + Mike —

Dear President Stevens and Speaker Chenault:

In light of the Alaska Coastal Management Program Initiative (11ACMP) recently filed with the Division of Elections, I am writing the presiding officers of each body of the legislature regarding the legislative hearing requirement of AS 24.05.186.

On January 17, 2012, the sponsors of this initiative timely filed their petition with the Division of Elections (Division) under AS 15.45.140. The Division has determined that the petition, on its face, contains a sufficient number of presumptively valid signatures – over 25,875— to be accepted for filing. The Division is now in the process of verifying those signatures as required under AS 15.45.150 -- 15.45.160. The Division has 60 days to complete the signature verification process and to notify the initiative committee of the results of that process.

Under AS 24.05.186, a standing committee of the legislature, selected jointly by the presiding officers of the House and Senate, must hold at least one hearing on an initiative that my office has determined was properly filed. The legislative hearing must occur within 30 days after the convening of the legislative session at which the proposition would appear on the ballot. In this case, if the review finds that the statutory signature requirement is met, the proposition may appear on the August 2012 primary election ballot.

Based on the 60-day signature verification requirement of AS 15.45.150 and the 30-day legislative hearing requirement of AS 24.05.186(b), the required legislative hearing will need presumably to occur before the time for signature verification has elapsed.

Please let me know of any questions or issues regarding this process.

Sincerely,

Mead Treadwell
Lieutenant Governor

Chairmen:

As we understand, your committees have been chosen by the presiding officers to review the initiative regarding Coastal Zone Management.

We write this letter clarifying the intent in adding this provision to the legislation as co-prime sponsors two years ago.

The intent of the Legislative hearing language was to gauge the impact on the agencies charged with duties by an initiative. It has been our experience that, while well intended, language forwarded by initiative sponsors may not fully anticipate implementation challenges faced by regulators.

Therefore, we ask that you consider limiting testimony for this required meeting to the agencies affected by this measure.

While we understand the possible desire for public testimony on the issue, nothing precludes either of you (or other committees) from holding additional hearings.

Our offices can provide you with a copy of the relevant minutes from committee testimony on House Bill 36 regarding the intent of this section of the bill, if necessary.

Respectfully,

Kyle B Johansen

11ACMP STATEMENT OF COSTS

Summary:

The estimated total cost of this program during the next five years is $27.0 million. Of that estimated cost, the minimum expenditure by the State of Alaska under this initiative during the next five years, if it becomes law, is $22.3 million. The program has no expiration date, and the estimate – developed by the Governor's Office of Management and Budget – does not provide for inflation.

Expenses of the proposed program may be shared with the federal government in year three or later if the U.S. Department of Commerce approves the program and provides partial funding, and Congress makes the required appropriation. Of the annual estimated program cost of $5.4 million, federal support is estimated to be up to a maximum of $2.0 million per year after year five. The program is not required by federal law.

Expenditures for this program are subject to legislative appropriation. The estimate excludes potential litigation expenses and revenue impacts to the State of Alaska.

The overall cost estimate may be high or low, depending on decisions made by the new Board proposed in the initiative. The number of days that Board and Coastal District Boards decide to meet, the number and kind of consistency reviews, elevations and appeals over natural resource permits that the program may authorize, and the potential duplication of permitting reviews at the Department of Environmental Conservation and at the Coastal District level are among the major cost uncertainties.

Costs or savings the program would provide in the management or protection of public trust resources or permit coordination cannot be estimated at this time, nor can the estimate include the costs or savings the program would provide in the process of allowing the State and local districts to comment on or condition federal permits issued in Alaska's coastal regions.

The complete budget estimate prepared by the Office of Management and Budget is below:

Statement of Costs for Initiative:
Establishment of Alaska Coastal Management Program
Prepared by the Office of Management and Budget

As required by AS 15.45.090(a)(4), the Office of Management and Budget has prepared the following estimate of costs to the State of implementing the law proposed by this ballot initiative.

This ballot initiative would establish a coastal management program for Alaska. To govern the envisioned program, the initiative creates a new thirteen-member Coastal Policy Board, referred to as the Alaska Coastal Policy Board, which would be responsible for overseeing the proposed coastal management program. Among its principal duties are reviewing and approving regulations for the program and the management plans and enforceable policies prepared by local coastal district boards. The Coastal Policy Board is also to "initiate an interagency program of strategic coastal and ocean planning for each geographic region of the state."

Administrative support for the program and board would be provided by the Alaska Department of Commerce, Community & Economic Development. The department, under the direction of the board, would contract with or employ personnel or consultants the department considers necessary to assist the board in carrying out its duties and responsibilities. To provide the structure for the administrative support, the initiative creates within the department a Division of Ocean and Coastal Management. Among its other duties, the division would be responsible for rendering determinations whether projects subject to the program would be "consistent" with applicable statewide standards and enforceable policies of an affected coastal district.

The initiative would create a coastal management program with a number of substantive differences from the most recent federally approved Alaska Coastal Management Program that existed up until July 1, 2011. If the initiative is approved by the voters, a new administrative structure for the program would be built from scratch. This would include recruiting and hiring personnel, acquiring office space, equipment and supplies. It would also include tasks such as developing implementing regulations and guidance to administer the program. There is insufficient detail in the initiative to identify all of the costs to implement the program – this represents an estimate of the costs and the actual costs are likely to be different.

As a basis for providing cost estimates, it was assumed that the operation and procedural requirements of the Coastal Management Program envisioned by the initiative would include most if not all of the costs that existed before July 1, 2011. The initiative provides the board with broad power to create a program or procedures that could vary widely from the previous program. Substantive differences in the management or procedural requirements of the program could result in the costs varying substantially from the costs presented. Areas of program implementation difference that increase costs to the state include but are not limited to: Costs of additional board meetings should the board be required to meet more than the estimated four times annually; the level and timing of federal funding for the program; potential costs to state agencies in implementing the coastal management program and administering other state programs due to an increase in the number and/or complexity of local enforceable policies and other plan requirements; an increase in the amount and complexity of coordination and enforcement of actions taken by the board; and an increase in the level of financial and other support for local coastal districts.

Expenditures for the program would be subject to legislative appropriation. The estimate excludes litigation expenses and potential revenue impacts to the State of Alaska.

In 2011, the budget estimate for renewing the State's previous federally approved coastal management program was approximately $4,700,000 annually, a portion of the program was funded with federal funds and a portion was funded with state funds.

The cost associated with the administration and implementation of the new Coastal Policy Board was not anticipated in the estimate above. The estimate to provide administrative support to the Coastal Policy Board is approximately $700,000 annually, and the additional cost is assumed to be state funded.

Until the new coastal management program is federally approved and becomes eligible to receive federal funds, the State would expect to initially absorb the entire cost. This would be followed by a period of gradually increasing federal participation in sharing of the costs until the program met eligibility requirements for full federal funding. Typically, it takes a coastal management program approximately two years from initial application to federal approval and an additional three years before qualifying for a full program cost share. During the initial two years, the State could expect to support the program at its anticipated annual funding level of $5,400,000. The amount of federal funds available in the out years is unknown, however given the current federal program; the state would anticipate federal participation to top out at $2,000,000 in year five.

A year by year estimate of federal and state funding is presented below:

	General Funds	Federal Funds	Total Funds
Year 1	$ 5,400,000	$ 0	$ 5,400,000
Year 2	$ 5,400,000	$ 0	$ 5,400,000
Year 3	$ 4,320,000	$ 1,080,000	$ 5,400,000
Year 4	$ 3,763,633	$ 1,636,634	$ 5,400,000
Year 5	$ 3,400,000	$ 2,000,000	$ 5,400,000
Year 6	$ 3,400,000	$ 2,000,000	$ 5,400,000

Administrative support for the new agency would be provided by a new division in the Alaska Department of Commerce and Community Development. It is assumed that the new agency would be similarly structured to the previous Alaska Coastal and Ocean Management component in the Alaska Department of Natural Resources.
Alaska Coastal Management Program estimate by category

Personal Services	$3,260,000

This expenditure would support salaries and benefits for 34 full time positions ranging from a Division Director to an Office Assistant. The majority of the positions are Natural Resource Specialists supporting the envisioned Alaska Coastal Management Program. One additional position was added to the previously configured program to cover the additional work associated with the administration of the Alaska Coastal Policy Board and coordinating district planning functions and information sharing.

Travel $267,900

The projected travel expenditure would support employee and board related in-state and out of state travel to coastal districts and includes hotel, per diem, airfare and reimbursement for Alaska Coastal Management Program district assistance, staff training, mediation, public education, conferences and other travel supporting the program. This estimate anticipates increased travel costs in the first two years following the establishment of the board in order to assist coastal districts with their plans and advocate for the federal approval of the plan in Washington DC.

This estimate assumes travel costs associated with four annual in-person meetings of the 13-member Alaska Coastal Policy Board and two support staff members.

This expenditure supports contracts in the form of Reimbursable Services Agreements (RSA) to agencies participating in the Alaska Coastal Management Program. These contracts would support the implementation of the Alaska Coastal Management Program by the participating state agencies, coastal management areas and other contractors.

It also supports purchased services from other state agencies including centralized telecommunication, mail and human resource services, legal services, professional services to support monitoring & compliance activities and development and implementation activities for the Alaska Coastal Management Program. In the initial years, additional contractual services will be needed to draft and review implementing program regulations, conduct district elections, and other start up activities.

Commodities $56,800

This expenditure estimate supports purchases related to office supplies, office furnishings and equipment, software as well as minor repairs to office equipment.

Additional one-time costs associated with the initiative

Activities on federal lands & waters	In addition to activities onshore and in state waters, the federal Coastal Zone Management Act (CZMA) allows states to review activities occurring in federal waters or on federal land (i.e., activities initiated or permitted by a federal agency). As described below, the ACMP regulations limited this ability.
	The bill does not limit provisions in the CZMA for reviewing activities on federal lands and water.	Due to the designated area requirements in regulation, impacts to coastal resources and lands could only be considered within the designated area. MEMORANDUM February 6, 2012

SUBJECT: Sectional Summary of Coastal Management Program Initiative 11 ACMP (Work Order No. 27-LS1329)

TO: Representative Carl Gatto
Chair of the House Judiciary Committee
Attn: Melanie Lesh

FROM: Alpheus Bullard 1493
Legislative Counsel

You have requested a sectional summary of the above-described initiative.

As a preliminary matter, note that a sectional summary of an initiative should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the initiative and the initiative itself is the best statement of its contents.

Sec. 46.41.010. Coastal Policy Board. Establishes an Alaska Coastal Policy Board ("board") in the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development ("department"). The board consists of nine public members, and their alternates, appointed by the governor from the coastal regions of the state, as well as the commissioners of the Department of Environmental Conservation, the Department of Fish and Game, the Department of Natural Resources, and the Department of Commerce, Community and Economic Development. It specifies membership terms, quorum and meeting requirements, board structure and governance details, and that the department will provide administrative support for the board.

4 of the 7 quorum can make decisions

Sec. 46.41.020. Powers and duties of the board. Establishes the duties and powers of the board.

Sec. 46.41.030. Division of Coastal Management. Establishes a division of ocean and coastal management within the department. Provides the duties of the division.

Sec. 46.41.040. Development of Alaska Coastal Management Program. Provides what regulations must be adopted under the Alaska Coastal Management Program ("program"). Directs that regulations relating to (1) program standards, (2) criteria for the preparation and approval of district coastal management plans, and (3) consistency review procedures for coastal activities and projects, be adopted. Further provides that the coastal management districts ("districts"), coastal district boundaries, and approved coastal management plans ("plans") that were in effect on June 30, 2011, are restored and incorporated into the program.

Sec. 46.41.050. Objectives. Requires that the program be consistent with certain objectives.

Sec. 46.41.060. Development of district coastal management plans. Requires districts to develop and adopt plans. Provides plan requirements. Provides criteria for board approval of plans.

Sec. 46.41.070. Submission of district plans by coastal districts. Requires restored districts to review their plans within one year after the adoption of program regulations by the board. Provides that if plan changes are necessary, a revised plan must be submitted to the department for review by the board.

Sec. 46.41.080. Implementation of district coastal management plans. Requires districts to implement plans. Provides how a plan must be implemented. Provides that a plan for a district that does not exercise zoning or other controls "on the use of resources" within its coastal area will be implemented by "appropriate state agencies."

Sec. 46.41.090. Compliance and enforcement. Requires municipalities and state resource agencies to regulate land and water controls in conformity with district plans. Provides that the superior court has jurisdiction to enforce orders of the board and the department.

Sec. 46.41.100. Coastal management plans in the unorganized borough. States that coastal resource service areas ("service areas") established in the unorganized borough may exercise all authority and perform those duties required by the program.

Sec. 46.41.110. Coastal resource service areas. Provides for how service area boundaries will be determined.

Sec. 46.41.120. Organization of a coastal resource service area. Permits a service area (created under sec. 46.41.110) to be established by a vote at an election after either the submission to the board of (1) a petition from a certain percentage of the voters within the proposed service area or (2) a resolution from a certain percentage of the city and village councils in the proposed service area.

Sec. 46.41.130. Coastal resource service area boards. Requires each service area to have an elected service area board. Provides for board duties and powers, board composition and membership, election of board members, terms of office, vacancies, and the recall of board members.

Sec. 46.41.140. Elections in coastal resource service areas. Directs the lieutenant governor to administer the elections for service area board members under sec. 46.41.130 and the organization of service areas under sec. 46.41.120.

Sec. 46.41.150. Preparation of district coastal management program (sic.) by the Department of Commerce, Community and Economic Development. Permits the board to submit a district plan to the legislature for consideration if (1) the residents of a service area reject the organization of that service area at an election under sec. 46.41.120 and (2) the board finds that major economic activity has occurred, or will occur, in the proposed service area. Such plans are prepared by the department upon request of the board. Further permits the department, in consultation with the service area, to prepare a plan for a service area that has been organized under sec. 46.41.120, but that has not been able to make substantial progress in the preparation of an approvable plan.

Sec. 46.41.160. Approval of plans in coastal resource service areas. Establishes a process for a plan to be reviewed by cities and villages within a service area, prior to (1) adoption by the service area board and (2) approval by the (Coastal Policy) board. Establishes parameters for plan review by cities and villages.

Sec. 46.41.170. Cooperative administration. Provides that a city that is within the coastal area, but that is not part of a coastal service area, will be included within an adjacent service area, unless the city's governing body opts out. Provides that a municipality and a service area are not restricted from engaging in cooperative or joint administration of functions.

Sec. 46.41.180. Construction with other laws. States that the initiative's provisions (secs. 46.41.010 - 46.41.900) may not be construed to diminish various state and municipal powers and duties.

Sec. 46.41.900. Definitions. Provides definitions for the initiative's provisions (secs. 46.41.010 - 46.41.900).

AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act establishing the Alaska Coastal Management Program."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 46 is amended by adding a new chapter to read:

Chapter 41. Alaska Coastal Management Program

Sec. 46.41.010 Coastal Policy Board

(a) There is created in the Department of Commerce, Community and Economic Development the Alaska Coastal Policy Board. The board consists of the following:

(1) nine public members and alternates appointed by the governor from a list composed ~~of at least~~ three names from each region, nominated and submitted by the coastal districts of each region; one public member shall be appointed from each of the following regions:

(A) northwest Alaska, including, generally, the area of the North Slope Borough and the Northwest Arctic Borough;

(B) Bering Straits, including, generally, the area of the Bering Straits regional educational attendance area and the City of Nome;

(C) southwest Alaska, including, generally, the area within the Lower Yukon, Lower Kuskokwim, and Southwest regional educational attendance areas, the City of Bethel, and the Lake and Peninsula and Bristol Bay Boroughs;

(D) Kodiak-Aleutians, including the area of the Kodiak Island and Aleutian East Boroughs and the Aleutian, Adak and Pribilof regional educational attendance areas;

(E) Upper Cook Inlet, including the Municipality of Anchorage and the Matanuska-Susitna Borough;

(F) Lower Cook Inlet, including, generally, the area within the Kenai Peninsula Borough;

(G) Prince William Sound, including, generally, the area east of the Kenai Peninsula Borough to 141 W. longitude;

(H) northern Southeast Alaska, including the area southeast of 141 W. longitude and north of 57 N. latitude, including the entirety of the City and Borough

of Sitka; and

(I) southern Southeast Alaska, including that portion of southeastern Alaska not contained within the area described in (H) of this paragraph;

(2) each of the following:

(A) the commissioner of environmental conservation;

(B) the commissioner of fish and game;

(C) the commissioner of natural resources; and

(b) Public members serve staggered terms of three years. Except as provided by (c) of this section, each member serves until a successor is appointed. A public member may be reappointed.

(c) The alternate for a commissioner serving under (a)(2) of this section shall be a deputy commissioner or the director of a division in the commissioner's department. The names of alternates shall be filed with the board.

(d) The board shall designate co-chairs, one of whom shall be selected from among the public members appointed under (a)(1) of this section and one from among the members designated in (a)(2) of this section.

(e) The board may recommend that the governor remove a public member for cause.

(f) Five public members and two designated members of the board constitute a quorum, but the board may delegate to one or more of its members the power to hold hearings. All decisions of the board shall be by a majority vote of the members present and voting.

(g) The board shall meet at least four times a year and as often as necessary to fulfill its duties under this chapter. Meetings may be held and members may vote telephonically, except one board meeting a year shall be held in person.

(h) Public members of the board or their alternates are entitled to per diem and travel expenses authorized by law for members of boards and commissions.

(i) Administrative support for the board shall be provided by staff of the department. The department, under the direction of the board shall contract with or employ personnel or consultants the department considers necessary to assist the board in carrying out the board's duties and responsibilities.

Sec. 46.41.020. Powers and duties of the board.

(a) The board shall

(1) review and approve regulations necessary to implement the coastal management program in conformity with this chapter and 16 U.S.C. 1451 - 1464 (Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972);

(2) direct the department to seek approval of the Alaska coastal management program by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, Office of Ocean and Coastal Resource Management in conformity with 16 U.S.C. 1451 – 1464 (Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972);

(3) initiate an interagency program of strategic coastal and ocean planning for each geographic region of the state;

(4) review and approve coastal district management plans after receiving the department's recommendations, including local enforceable policies, that meet the provisions of this chapter and the district plan criteria.

(5) establish continuing coordination among state agencies to facilitate the development and implementation of the Alaska coastal management program;

(6) evaluate the effectiveness of district coastal management plans; and

(7) direct the department to apply for and accept grants, contributions, and appropriations, including application for and acceptance of federal funds that may become available for coastal planning and management.

(b) The board may

(1) contract for necessary services;

(2) take any reasonable action necessary to carry out the provisions of this chapter.

Sec. 46.41.030. Division of Coastal Management.

(a) There is created in the department the division of ocean and coastal management.

(b) The division shall

(1) render, on behalf of the state, all federal consistency determinations and certifications authorized by 16 U.S.C. 1456 (Sec. 307, Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972), and each conclusive state consistency determination when a project requires a permit, lease, or authorization from the department or from two or more state resource agencies.

(2) adopt regulations approved by the board necessary to implement this chapter under the provisions of AS 44.62 (Administrative Procedure Act).

(3) assure continued provision of data and information to coastal districts to carry out their planning and management functions under the program.

(4) develop and maintain a program of financial assistance to aid coastal districts in the development and implementation of district coastal management plan.

Sec. 46.41.040. Development of Alaska coastal management program.

(a) The regulations developed under this chapter shall include

(1) statewide coastal program standards;

(2) the criteria and process for the preparation and approval of district coastal management plans; and

(3) consistency review procedures in accordance with this chapter, including provisions for

(A) review of activities proposed or permitted by a state or federal agency;

(B) the types of activities that will trigger a consistency review;

(C) review of phased activities and uses;

(D) public notice and opportunities for public comment;

(E) elevation of proposed consistency determinations to the resource agency commissioners;

(F) establishment of review timelines;

(G) exclusion from an individual project review aspects of activities that are covered by a general permit previously found consistent with the Alaska coastal management program;

(H) exclusion of routine activities with insignificant effects to coastal uses or resources from an individual consistency review.

b) The coastal districts, coastal district boundaries and approved coastal management plans that were in effect as of June 30, 2011 are in effect and are incorporated into the Alaska coastal management program.

Sec. 46.41.050. Objectives.

The Alaska coastal management program shall be consistent with the following objectives:

(1) the use, management, restoration, and enhancement of the overall quality of the coastal environment for this and succeeding generations;

(2) the development of industrial or commercial enterprises that are consistent with the social, cultural, historic, economic, and environmental interests of the people of the state;

(3) the orderly, balanced utilization and protection of the resources of the coastal area consistent with sound conservation and sustained yield principles;

(4) the management of coastal land and water uses in such a manner that, generally, those uses that are economically or physically dependent on a coastal location are given higher priority when compared to uses that do not economically or physically require a coastal location;

(5) the protection and management of significant historic, cultural, natural, and aesthetic values and natural systems or processes within the coastal area;

(6) the prevention of damage to or degradation of land and water reserved for their natural values as a result of inconsistent land or water usages adjacent to that land;

(7) the recognition of the need for a continuing supply of energy to meet the requirements of the state and the contribution of a share of the state's resources to meet national energy needs; and

(8) the full and fair evaluation of all demands on and uses of the land and water in the coastal area.

(9) the coordination of planning and decision-making in the coastal area among levels of government and citizens engaging in or affected by activities involving the coastal resources of the state;

(10) the participation of the public, local governments, and agencies of the state and federal governments in the development and implementation of a coastal management program; and

(11) the requirement that state resource agencies carry out their duties, powers and responsibilities that affect the use of coastal area resources in accordance with the coastal program adopted pursuant to this Act.

Sec. 46.41.060. Development of district coastal management plans.

(a) Coastal districts shall

(1) develop and adopt district coastal management plans in accordance with the provisions of this chapter. The plan adopted by a coastal district shall be based upon a municipality's existing comprehensive plan or a new comprehensive resource use plan or comprehensive statement of needs, policies, objectives, and standards governing the use and conservation of resources within the coastal area of the district. The plan must meet the district plan criteria adopted under AS 46.41.040 and must include

(A) a delineation within the district of the boundaries of the coastal area subject to the district coastal management plan;

(B) a statement, list, or definition of the land and water uses and activities subject to the district coastal management plan;

(C) a designation of any special management areas;

(D) enforceable policies to be applied to all the land and water uses subject to the district coastal management plan as well as policies that apply to special management areas.

(b) The board shall approve an initial or amended district coastal management plan if the

(1) district coastal management plan meets the requirements of this chapter and the district plan criteria in regulation adopted by the department; and

(2) enforceable policies of the district coastal management plan

(A) do not duplicate, restate, or incorporate by reference state or federal statutes or regulations;

(B) are not preempted by federal or state law;

(C) do not arbitrarily or unreasonably restrict a use of state concern;

(D) are clear and concise as to the activities and persons affected by the policies and the requirements of the policies;

(E) use prescriptive or performance-based standards that are written in precise and enforceable language; and

(F) address a coastal use or resource of concern to the residents of the coastal resource district as demonstrated by local knowledge or supported by scientific evidence

(c) In (b)(2)(B) of this section, an enforceable policy of the district coastal management plan is preempted

(1) by federal statutes or regulations if the United States Congress expressly declares that local law or regulation is preempted, if the United States Congress demonstrates the intent to occupy the field exclusively, or if there is an actual conflict between federal and local law or regulation;

(2) by state law if it is prohibited, either by express legislative direction or direct conflict with a state statute or regulation, or where a local law or regulation substantially interferes with the effective functioning of a state statute or regulation or the underlying purposes of a state statute or regulation.

Sec. 46.41.070. Submission of district plans by coastal districts.

(a) Within one year after the effective date of regulations implementing this chapter, coastal districts shall review their coastal management plans and if changes are necessary to meet the requirements of this chapter and implementing regulations, submit to the department a revised district coastal management plan.

Sec. 46.41.080. Implementation of district coastal management plans.

(a) A district coastal management plan approved under this chapter for a coastal district that does not have and exercise zoning or other controls on the use of resources within the coastal area shall be implemented by appropriate state agencies. Implementation shall be in accordance with the comprehensive use plan or the statement of needs, policies, objectives, and standards adopted by the district.

(b) A coastal district that has and exercises zoning or other controls on the use of resources within the coastal area shall implement its district coastal management plan. Implementation shall be in accordance with the comprehensive use plan or the statement of needs, policies, objectives, and standards adopted by the district.

Sec. 46.41.090. Compliance and enforcement.

(a) Municipalities and state resource agencies shall administer land and water use regulations or controls in conformity with district coastal management plans approved under this chapter and in effect.

(b) The superior courts of the state have jurisdiction to enforce lawful orders of the board and the department under this chapter.

Sec. 46.41.100. Coastal management plans in the unorganized borough.

(a) A coastal resource service area incorporated into the coastal management program under this chapter shall exercise those authorities and perform those duties required under this chapter.

Sec. 46.41.110. Coastal resource service areas.

(a) Except as otherwise provided in this section, each regional educational attendance area established under AS 14.08.031 containing a part of the coastal area may be organized as a coastal resource service area.

(b) The commissioner of the department may, after public hearings held in the affected area, consolidate two or more regional educational attendance areas as a single

coastal resource service area

(1) if a substantial portion of the coastal area contains land and water area owned by the federal government over which it exercises exclusive jurisdiction or land held in trust by the federal government for Alaska Natives over which the state would not exercise control as to use; or

(2) if, after giving due consideration to the standards applicable to incorporation of borough governments and the likelihood that a borough will be incorporated within the area, the commissioner determines that the functions to be performed under this chapter could be undertaken more efficiently through the combination of two or more regional education attendance area as a single coastal resource service area.

(c) A determination under (b) of this section shall be made before the organization of the coastal resource service area.

(d) or purposes of coastal management only, the commissioner of the department may, after public hearings held in the regional education attendance area affected, divide an existing regional education attendance area into no more than three coastal resource service areas according to geographic, cultural, economic, environmental, or other features relevant to coastal management planning. However,

(1) each coastal resource service area formed by dividing an existing regional education attendance must contain at least one first class city or home rule city; and

(2) a city within a coastal resource service area formed by dividing an existing regional education attendance area may not elect to exclude itself from the coastal resource service area.

Sec. 46.41.120. Organization of a Coastal Resource Service Area.

(a) Organization of a coastal resource service area may be initiated by

(1) submission to the coastal policy board of a petition signed by a number of registered voters equal to 15 percent of the number of votes cast within the coastal resource service area at the last state general election; or

(2) by submission to the board of a resolution approved by the city council or traditional village council of not less than 25 percent of the number of cities and villages within the coastal resource service area.

(b) Acting at the request of the council, the lieutenant governor, not less than 60 nor more than 90 days after receipt of a proper petition under (a)(1) of this section, a proper resolution under (a)(2) of this section, or at the direction of the council under (a)(3) of this section, shall conduct an election on the question of organization of a coastal resource service area.

Sec. 46.41.130. Coastal resource service area boards

(a) Each coastal resource service area shall have an elected board representing the population of the service area. The board shall have the powers and duties and perform the functions prescribed for or required of coastal districts.

(b) A coastal resource service area board shall contain seven members. Board members shall be elected at large by the qualified voters of the coastal resource service area.

(c) The term of office of a member of a coastal resource service area board is three years. Members serve until their successors are elected and have qualified. This section does not prohibit the reelection of a board member.

(d) The lieutenant governor shall provide for the election of the members of coastal resource service area boards.

(e) Election of members of coastal resource service area boards shall be held annually on the date of election of members of regional educational attendance area boards under AS 14.08.071(b). If no candidate files for election to a seat on the coastal resource service area board, the seat is considered vacant at the time a newly elected member would have taken office.

(f) A seat on a coastal resource service area board shall be declared vacant by the board if the criteria under AS 14.08.045 (a) apply to the person elected. A vacancy on a coastal resource service area board shall be filled by appointment as provided in AS 14.12.070 for vacancies in the membership of regional educational attendance area boards.

(g) Members of coastal resource service area boards are subject to recall on the same grounds and in the same manner as provided for recall of municipal officials in AS 29.26.240 - 29.26.350. The lieutenant governor functions in place of the assembly or council and municipal clerk for receipt and review of recall petitions and the conduct of recall elections.

(h) Members of a coastal resource service area board are entitled to per diem and travel expenses authorized by law for members of boards and commissions and for honorariums for meetings attended in person.

Sec. 46.41.140. Elections in coastal resource service areas.

Elections under AS 46.41.100 - 46.41.160 shall be administered by the lieutenant governor in the general manner provided in AS 15 (Election Code). In addition, the lieutenant governor may adopt regulations necessary to the conduct of coastal resource service area board elections. The state shall pay all election costs.

Sec. 46.41.150. Preparation of district coastal management program by the Department of Commerce, Community and Economic Development

(a) If residents of a coastal resource service area reject organization of the service area at an election called for the purpose and the coastal policy board finds, after public hearing, that major economic development activity has occurred or will occur within the service area, the board may direct the department to prepare and recommend for consideration by the ~~council~~ board and for submission to the legislature a district coastal management plan for the service area.

(b) At the request of the coastal policy board, the department shall complete the district coastal management plan in accordance with this chapter and the guidelines and standards adopted by the board for a coastal resource service area that has been organized but that has failed to make substantial progress in the preparation of an approvable district costal management program within 18 months of certification of the results of an organization election or that has not submitted for approval to the board a program within 30 months of certification of the results of its organization election. Preparation of the program shall be conducted in consultation with the coastal resource service area and shall, to the maximum extent consistent with this chapter, reflect the expressed concerns of the residents of the service area.

(c) Before requesting the department to complete the district coastal management plan under (b) of this section, the board shall meet with members of the coastal resource service area board to determine whether the board is able to complete a district coastal management program within the time limitations established in this section.

Sec. 46.41.160. Approval of plans in coastal resource service areas.

(a) Before adoption by a coastal resource service area board, a district coastal management plan shall be submitted for review to each city or village within the coastal resource service area. The council of a city or traditional village council shall consider the plan submitted for review. Within 60 days of submission, the council of a city or traditional village council shall either approve the plan or enter objections to all or any portion of the plan.

(b) If a city or village within a coastal resource service area fails to approve a portion of the district coastal management plan prepared and submitted for approval under (a) of this section, the governing body shall advise the coastal resource service area board of its objections to the proposed plan and suggest alternative elements or components for inclusion in the district coastal management plan. New matter submitted by a city or village that meets the district plan criteria adopted under this chapter may be accepted by the district and the district coastal management plan modified accordingly. If a city or village fails to provide objections and suggested alternatives within the time limits established in this section, the coastal resource service area board may adopt the district coastal management plan as initially offered.

(c) Objection by a city council under (b) of this section is limited to objection to elements of the plan affecting resources or the use of resources within the corporate limits of the city. Objection by a traditional village council under (b) of this section is limited to objection to elements of the plan affecting resources or the use of resources within the village or within two miles of the village.

(d) For purposes of this section, "village" means an unincorporated community where at least 25 persons reside as a social unit as determined by the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development.

Sec. 46.41.170. Cooperative administration.

(a) A city within the coastal area that is not part of a coastal resource service area shall be included for purposes of this chapter within an adjacent coastal resource service area unless its governing body, by resolution adopted by a majority of its membership, chooses to exclude the city from an adjacent coastal resource service area and a copy of the resolution is filed with the commissioner of commerce, community, and economic development.

(b) This chapter does not restrict or prohibit cooperative or joint administration of functions between a municipality and a coastal resource service area organized under the provisions of this chapter upon initiation of a mutual agreement for the purpose.

Sec. 46.41.180. Construction with other laws.

Nothing in this chapter shall be construed to

(1) diminish state jurisdiction, responsibility, or rights in the field of planning, development, or control of land or water resources, submerged land, or navigable water;

(2) affect in any way any state requirement imposed under a federal authorization or federal waiver of sovereign immunity; or

Sec. 46.41.900. Definitions.

In this chapter, unless the context otherwise requires,

(1) "affected coastal district" means a coastal district with a publically reviewed draft or approved plan in which a project is proposed to be located or that may experience a direct and significant impact from a proposed project;

(2) "board" means the Alaska Coastal Policy Board established in AS 46.41.010;

(3) "coastal district" means each of the following that contains a portion of the coastal area of the state:

(A) unified municipalities;

(B) organized boroughs of any class that exercise planning and zoning authority;

(C) home rule and first class cities of the unorganized borough or within boroughs that do not exercise planning and zoning authority;

(D) second class cities of the unorganized borough, or within boroughs that do not exercise planning and zoning authority, that have established a planning commission, and that, in the opinion of the commissioner of commerce, community, and economic development, have the capability of preparing and implementing a comprehensive district coastal management plan under AS 46.41.030;

(E) coastal resource service areas established and organized under AS 29.03.020 an AS 46.41.100 - 46.41.160;

(4) "coastal use or resource" means any land or water use or natural resource of the coastal zone. Land and water uses include, but are not limited to, public access, recreation, fishing, historic or cultural preservation, development, hazards management, marinas and floodplain management, scenic and aesthetic enjoyment, and resource creation or restoration projects. Natural resources include biological or physical resources that are found within a State's coastal zone on a regular or cyclical basis. Biological and physical resources include, but are not limited to, air, tidal and nontidal wetlands, ocean waters, estuaries, rivers, streams, lakes, aquifers, submerged aquatic vegetation, land, plants, trees, minerals, fish, shellfish, invertebrates, amphibians, birds, mammals, reptiles, and coastal resources of national significance;

(5) "coastal zone" means the coastal water including land within and under that water, and adjacent shoreland, including the water within and under that shoreland, within the boundaries approved by the former Alaska Coastal Policy Council and by the United States Secretary of Commerce under 16 U.S.C. 1451 - 1465 (Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972, as amended); "coastal zone" includes areas added as a result of any boundary changes approved by the board and by the United States Secretary of Commerce under 16 U.S.C. 1451 - 1465; "coastal zone" does not include

(A) those lands excluded under 16 U.S.C. 1453(1); or

(B) areas deleted as a result of any boundary changes by the board in conformance with 16 U.S.C. 1451 - 1465;

(6) "consistency review" means the evaluation of a proposed project against the statewide standards and the approved enforceable policies of an affected coastal district under the process developed by the board;

(7) "department" means the Department of Commerce, Community and Economic Development;

(8) "direct and significant impact" means an activity which proximately contributes to a material change or alteration in the natural or social characteristics of a part of the state's coastal area and in which

(A) would have a net adverse effect on the quality of the resources of the coastal area;

(B) would limit the range of alternative uses of the resources of the coastal area; or

(C) would, of itself, constitute a tolerable change or alteration of the resources within the coastal area but which, cumulatively, would have an adverse effect;

(9) "district coastal management plan" means a plan developed by a coastal district, including enforceable policies of that plan, setting out policies and standards to guide public and private uses of land and water within that district and approved by the board as meeting the requirements of this chapter and the regulations adopted under this chapter;

(10) "enforceable policy" means a policy established by this chapter or approved by the board as a legally binding policy of the Alaska coastal management program applicable to public and private activities;

(11) "local knowledge" means a body of knowledge or information about the coastal environment or the human use of that environment, including information passed down through generations, if that information is

(A) derived from experience and observations; and

(B) generally accepted by the local community;

(12) "project" means all activities that will be part of a proposed development and includes all federal agency activities as defined in 15 C.F.R. 930.31, including lease sales and development projects affecting a coastal use or resource;

(13) "resource agency" means

(A) the Department of Environmental Conservation;

(B) the Department of Fish and Game; or

(C) the Department of Natural Resources.;

(14) "scientific evidence" means facts or data that are

(A) premised upon established chemical, physical, biological, or ecosystem management principles as obtained through scientific method and submitted to the department to furnish proof of a matter required under this chapter;

(B) in a form that would allow resource agency review for scientific merit; and

(C) supported by one or more of the following:

(i) written analysis based on field observation and professional judgment along with photographic documentation;

(ii) written analysis from a professional scientist with expertise in the specific discipline; or

(iii) site-specific scientific research that may include peer-review level research or literature.

(15) "special management area" includes areas meriting special attention and means a delineated geographic area within the coastal area which is sensitive to change or alteration and which, because of plans or commitments or because a claim on the resources within the area delineated would preclude subsequent use of the resources to a conflicting or incompatible use, warrants special management attention, or which, because of its value to the general public, should be identified for current or future planning, protection, or acquisition;

(16) "use of state concern" means a land and water use that would significantly affect the long-term public interest; a "use of state concern" includes

(A) uses of national interest, including the use of resources for the siting of ports

and major facilities that contribute to meeting national energy needs, construction and maintenance of navigational facilities and systems, resource development of federal land, and national defense and related security facilities that are dependent upon coastal locations;

(B) uses of more than local concern, including those land and water uses that confer significant environmental, social, cultural, or economic benefits or burdens beyond a single coastal district;

(C) the siting of major energy facilities, activities pursuant to a state oil and gas lease, a state gas only lease, or a federal oil and gas lease, or large-scale industrial or commercial development activities that are dependent on a coastal location and that, because of their magnitude or the magnitude of their effect on the economy of the state or the surrounding area, are reasonably likely to present issues of more than local significance;

(D) facilities serving statewide or interregional transportation and communication needs; and

(E) uses in areas established as state parks or recreational areas under AS 41.21 or as state game refuges, game sanctuaries, or critical habitat areas under AS 16.20.

About The Totals Report

The first qualification phase is a computer qualification of the signatures submitted. The information provided by the signers such as voter number, last name and last four of social security number, Alaska driver's license number, etc. and signature date is entered into the statewide voter registration system. The computer qualification is run each night. If there is an exact match, the system automatically qualifies signers and they appear in the (Q) Computer Qualified: column. When the system does not match the information entered for signers, they appear in the Number of Unqualified column and the reasons why signatures are not qualified are listed on the right-hand column.

After the division completes the computer qualification phase, the division will manually review each signer that was not qualified during the computer qualification phase. This involves a manual search of the voter registration system for each signer to determine if they are a registered voter. If a successful match is found, the signer will be manually qualified and will appear in the (M) Manually Qualified column.

If a voter's registration record is inactivated before the receipt of the petition booklets, such as a voter who may have signed a booklet and then passed away after signing, they will appear in the (H) Inactive Qualified column. Since the signer was a qualified registered voter at the time of signing the petition, they are an eligible signature.

The Honorable Kyle Johansen
Alaska House of Representatives
Alaska State Capitol
Juneau, AK 99811

Compliments of:
Representative Beth Kerttula

Dear Representative Johansen:

In recent public statements, you have expressed an interest in learning more about the Alaska Sea Party's financial contributors. As you have acknowledged, our group has complied fully with all reporting and other requirements for pursuing a ballot initiative in the State of Alaska. We will continue to do so.

While it is unclear to us why disclosing donors since our last report on January 10 should affect your consideration of the merits of the initiative petition, we set forth below a one-time interim update of donors since the end of the last reporting period (December 31, 2011).

Since January 1, 2012, these entities have donated funds to the Alaska Sea Party in excess of the $500 threshold which requires their disclosure to the Alaska Public Offices Commission (APOC):

Sealaska Corporation- $5,000;
Bristol Bay Native Corporation- $5,000; and Bering Straits Native Corporation- $2,500

We will, of course, make a full and detailed accounting of our revenues and expenses in our first quarter APOC filing, which is due April 10, 2012. We trust that this extraordinary disclosure will remove any impediment to your active engagement on coastal zone management.

Sincerely yours,

Bruce Botelho

Relevant Laws

The Alaska Constitution (Article XI)

§ 1. Initiative and Referendum
The people may propose and enact laws by the initiative, and approve or reject acts of the legislature by the referendum.

§ 2. Application
An initiative or referendum is proposed by an application containing the bill to be initiated or the act to be referred. The application shall be signed by not less than one hundred qualified voters as sponsors, and shall be filed with the lieutenant governor. If he finds it in proper form he shall so certify. Denial of certification shall be subject to judicial review.

§ 3. Petition
After certification of the application, a petition containing a summary of the subject matter shall be prepared by the lieutenant governor for circulation by the sponsors. If signed by qualified voters who are equal in number to at least ten per cent of those who voted in the preceding general election, who are resident in at least three-fourths of the house districts of the State, and who, in each of those house districts, are equal in number to at least seven percent of those who voted in the preceding general election in the house district, it may be filed with the lieutenant governor.

§ 4. Initiative Election
An initiative petition may be filed at any time. The lieutenant governor shall prepare a ballot title and proposition summarizing the proposed law, and shall place them on the ballot for the first statewide election held more than one hundred twenty days after adjournment of the legislative session following the filing. If, before the election, substantially the same measure has been enacted, the petition is void.

§ 6. Enactment
If a majority of the votes cast on the proposition favor its adoption, the initiated measure is enacted. If a majority of the votes cast on the proposition favor the rejection of an act referred, it is rejected. The lieutenant governor shall certify the election returns. An initiated law becomes effective ninety days after certification, is not subject to veto, and may not be repealed by the legislature within two years of its effective date. It may be amended at any time. An act rejected by referendum is void thirty days after certification. Additional procedures for the initiative and referendum may be prescribed by law.

§ 7. Restrictions
The initiative shall not be used to dedicate revenues, make or repeal appropriations, create courts, define the jurisdiction of courts or prescribe their rules, or enact local or special legislation. The referendum shall not be applied to dedications of revenue, to appropriations, to local or special legislation, or to laws necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, or safety.

Alaska Statutes on Initiatives

Sec. 15.45.010. Provision and scope for use of the initiative.

The law-making powers assigned to the legislature may be exercised by the people through the initiative. However, an initiative may not be proposed to dedicate revenue, to make or repeal appropriations, to create courts, to define the jurisdiction of courts or prescribe their rules, or to enact local or special legislation.

Sec. 15.45.020. Filing application.

An initiative is proposed by filing an application with the lieutenant governor. A deposit of $100 must accompany the application. This deposit shall be retained if a petition is not properly filed. If a petition is properly filed, the deposit shall be refunded.

Sec. 15.45.030. Form of application.

The application must include the

(1) proposed bill;

(2) printed name, the signature, the address, and a numerical identifier of not fewer than 100 qualified voters who will serve as sponsors; each signature page must include a statement that the sponsors are qualified voters who signed the application with the proposed bill attached; and

(3) designation of an initiative committee consisting of three of the sponsors who subscribed to the application and represent all sponsors and subscribers in matters relating to the initiative; the designation must include the name, mailing address, and signature of each committee member.

Sec. 15.45.040. Form of proposed bill.

The proposed bill shall be in the following form:

(1) the bill shall be confined to one subject;

(2) the subject of the bill shall be expressed in the title;

(3) the enacting clause of the bill shall be: "Be it enacted by the People of the State of Alaska;"

(4) the bill may not include subjects restricted by AS 15.45.010.

Sec. 15.45.050. Manner of notice.

Notice to the initiative committee on any matter pertaining to the application and petition may be served on any member of the committee in person or by mail addressed to a committee member as indicated on the application.

Sec. 15.45.060. Designation of sponsors.

The qualified voters who subscribe to the application in support of the proposed bill are designated as sponsors. The initiative committee may designate additional sponsors by giving written notice to the lieutenant governor of the names, addresses, and numerical identifiers of those so designated.

Sec. 15.45.070. Review of application for certification.

Within 60 calendar days after the date the application is received, the lieutenant governor shall review the application and shall either certify it or notify the initiative committee of the grounds for denial.

Sec. 15.45.080. Bases of denial of certification.

The lieutenant governor shall deny certification upon determining in writing that

(1) the proposed bill to be initiated is not confined to one subject or is otherwise not in the required form;

(2) the application is not substantially in the required form; or

(3) there is an insufficient number of qualified sponsors.

Sec. 15.45.090. Preparation of petition.

(a) If the application is certified, the lieutenant governor shall prepare a sufficient number of sequentially numbered petitions to allow full circulation throughout the state. Each petition must contain

(1) a copy of the proposed bill;

(2) an impartial summary of the subject matter of the bill;

(3) a statement of minimum costs to the state associated with certification of the initiative application and review of the initiative petition, excluding legal costs to the state and the costs to the state of any challenge to the validity of the petition;

(4) an estimate of the cost to the state of implementing the proposed law;

(5) the statement of warning prescribed in AS 15.45.100;

(6) sufficient space for the printed name, a numerical identifier, the signature, the date of signature, and the address of each person signing the petition; and

(7) other specifications prescribed by the lieutenant governor to ensure proper handling and control.

(b) Upon request of the initiative committee, the lieutenant governor shall report to the committee the number of persons who voted in the preceding general election.

Sec. 15.45.100. Statement of warning.

Each petition shall include a statement of warning that a person who signs a name other than the person's own on the petition, or who knowingly signs more than once for the same proposition at one election, or who signs the petition when knowingly not a qualified voter, is guilty of a class B misdemeanor.

Sec. 15.45.105. Qualifications of circulator.

To circulate a petition booklet, a person shall be

(1) a citizen of the United States;

(2) 18 years of age or older; and

(3) a resident of the state as determined under AS 15.05.020.

Sec. 15.45.110. Circulation of petition; prohibitions and penalty.

(c) A circulator may not receive payment or agree to receive payment that is greater than $1 a signature, and a person or an organization may not pay or agree to pay an amount that is greater than $1 a signature, for the collection of signatures on a petition.

(d) A person or organization may not knowingly pay, offer to pay, or cause to be paid money or other valuable thing to a person to sign or refrain from signing a petition.

(e) A person or organization that violates (c) or (d) of this section is guilty of a class B misdemeanor.

(f) In this section,

(1) "organization" has the meaning given in AS 11.81.900;

(2) "other valuable thing" has the meaning given in AS 15.56.030(d);

(3) "person" has the meaning given in AS 11.81.900.

Sec. 15.45.120. Manner of signing and withdrawing name from petition.

Any qualified voter may subscribe to the petition by printing the voter's name, a numerical identifier, and an address, by signing the voter's name, and by dating the signature. A person who has signed the initiative petition may withdraw the person's name only by giving written notice to the lieutenant governor before the date the petition is filed.

Sec. 15.45.130. Certification of circulator.

Before being filed, each petition shall be certified by an affidavit by the person who personally circulated the petition. In determining the sufficiency of the petition, the lieutenant governor may not count subscriptions on petitions not properly certified at the time of filing or corrected before the subscriptions are counted. The affidavit must state in substance

(1) that the person signing the affidavit meets the residency, age, and citizenship qualifications for circulating a petition under AS 15.45.105;

(2) that the person is the only circulator of that petition;

(3) that the signatures were made in the circulator's actual presence;

(4) that, to the best of the circulator's knowledge, the signatures are the signatures of the persons whose names they purport to be;

(5) that, to the best of the circulator's knowledge, the signatures are of persons who were qualified voters on the date of signature;

(6) that the circulator has not entered into an agreement with a person or organization in violation of AS 15.45.110(c);

(7) that the circulator has not violated AS 15.45.110(d) with respect to that petition; and

(8) whether the circulator has received payment or agreed to receive payment for the collection of signatures on the petition, and, if so, the name of each person or organization that has paid or agreed to pay the circulator for collection of signatures on the petition.

Sec. 15.45.140. Filing of petition.

(a) The sponsors must file the initiative petition within one year from the time the sponsors received notice from the lieutenant governor that the petitions were ready for delivery to them. The petition may be filed with the lieutenant governor only if it meets all of the following requirements: it is signed by qualified voters

(1) equal in number to 10 percent of those who voted in the preceding general election;

(2) resident in at least three-fourths of the house districts of the state; and

(3) who, in each of the house districts described in (2) of this subsection, are equal in number to at least seven percent of those who voted in the preceding general election in the house district.

(b) If the petition is not filed within the one-year period provided for in (a) of this section, the petition has no force or effect.

Sec. 15.45.150. Review of petition.

Within not more than 60 days of the date the petition was filed, the lieutenant governor shall review the petition and shall notify the initiative committee whether the petition was properly or improperly filed, and at which election the proposition shall be placed on the ballot.

Sec. 15.45.160. Bases for determining the petition was improperly filed.

The lieutenant governor shall notify the committee that the petition was improperly filed upon determining that

(1) there is an insufficient number of qualified subscribers;

(2) the subscribers were not resident in at least three-fourths of the house districts of the state; or

(3) there is an insufficient number of qualified subscribers from each of the house districts described in (2) of this section.

Sec. 15.45.170.Submission of supplementary petition. [Repealed, Sec. 7 ch 80 SLA 1998].

Sec. 15.45.180. Preparation of ballot title and proposition.

(a) If the petition is properly filed, the lieutenant governor, with the assistance of the attorney general, shall prepare a ballot title and proposition. The ballot title shall, in not more than 25 words, indicate the general subject of the proposition. The proposition shall give a true and impartial summary of the proposed law. The total number of words used in the summary may not exceed the product of the number of sections in the proposed law multiplied by 50. In this subsection, "section" means a provision of the proposed law that is distinct from other provisions in purpose or subject matter.

(b) The proposition prepared under (a) of this section shall comply with AS 15.80.005 and shall be worded so that a "Yes" vote on the proposition is a vote to enact the proposed law.

Sec. 15.45.190. Placing proposition on ballot.

The lieutenant governor shall direct the director to place the ballot title and proposition on the election ballot of the first statewide general, special, or primary election that is held after

(1) the petition has been filed;

(2) a legislative session has convened and adjourned; and

(3) a period of 120 days has expired since the adjournment of the legislative session.

Sec. 15.45.195. Public hearings.

(a) At least 30 days before the election at which an initiative is to appear on the ballot, the lieutenant governor or a designee of the lieutenant governor shall hold two or more public hearings concerning the initiative in each judicial district of the state. Each public hearing under this section shall include the written or oral testimony of one supporter and one opponent of the initiative.

(b) The lieutenant governor shall provide reasonable notice of each public hearing required under this section. The notice must include the date, time, and place of the hearing. The notice may be given using print or broadcast media. The lieutenant governor shall provide notice in a consistent fashion for all hearings required under this section.

(c) Penalties for a violation of this section may not include removal of an initiative from the ballot.

(d) If the lieutenant governor determines that it is technologically and economically feasible, the division shall provide a live audio and video broadcast of each hearing held under (a) of this section on the division's Internet website.

Sec. 15.45.200. Display of proposed law.

The director shall provide each election board with at least five copies of the proposed law being initiated, and the election board shall display at least one copy of the proposed law in a conspicuous place in the room where the election is held.

Sec. 15.45.210. Determination of void petition.

If the lieutenant governor, with the formal concurrence of the attorney general, determines that an act of the legislature that is substantially the same as the proposed law was enacted after the petition had been filed, and before the date of the election, the petition is void and the lieutenant governor shall so notify the committee.

Sec. 15.45.220. Adoption and effective date of proposed law.

If a majority of the votes cast on the initiative proposition favor its adoption, the proposed law is enacted, and the lieutenant governor shall so certify. The act becomes effective 90 days after certification.

Sec. 15.45.230.Insufficiency of application or petition. [Repealed, Sec. 7, ch 80 SLA 1998].

Sec. 15.45.240. Judicial review.

Any person aggrieved by a determination made by the lieutenant governor under AS 15.45.010 - 15.45.220 may bring an action in the superior court to have the determination reviewed within 30 days of the date on which notice of the determination was given.

Sec. 15.45.245. Delegation by lieutenant governor.

The lieutenant governor may delegate the duties imposed on the lieutenant governor by AS 15.45.010 - 15.45.240 to the director.

....

Legislative Powers

Sec. 24.05.186. Legislative hearings on initiatives certified by the lieutenant governor.

(a) A standing committee of the legislature, selected jointly by the presiding officers of the house of representatives and senate, shall hold at least one hearing on an initiative that the lieutenant governor has determined was properly filed under AS 15.45.160.

(b) The standing committee selected jointly by the presiding officers of the house of representatives and senate under (a) of this section shall hold at least one hearing under this section within 30 days after the convening of the legislative session preceding the statewide election at which the initiative proposition must appear on the election ballot under AS 15.45.190.

Here is a good line to use for the ACMP hearings.

The public will have its chance to weigh in at the polls this fall. This is the legislature's opportunity to gather the background it needs in order fully understand the initiative implications and to decide whether it may be in the state's best interest to advance legislation this session. If legislation is heard, the public would have every opportunity to comment at that point.

As of Friday, Feb. 3, the Division of Elections had qualified 23,636 of the needed 25,875 voter signatures on the coastal management reinstatement initiative and had 9,513 waiting for manual review. A tally on the requirement that total signatures come from 7 percent of voters in 30 of the 40 House districts was not available. With the coastal zone initiative petition possibly on its way to final approval for the general election ballot there are back channel moves underway to clarifying or eliminate legislative options. Whether or not any bill to reinstate the program will be introduced remains to be seen.

The joint Judiciary Committees are meeting at 1 p.m. Feb. 6 for an informational hearing, required under state law, that will focus on operational impacts to state agencies. The invitation-only witness list is headed by Juneau Mayor Bruce Botelho, one of initiative's three prime sponsors; Susan Bell, commissioner of the Dept. of Commerce, which would house the revived program; and John Boucher, senior economist in the Office of Management and Budget. Elections director Gail Fenumiai and head legislative attorney Doug Gardner are also scheduled to speak. A legal opinion from Gardner seemed to confirm that the version of HB 106 passed by the House last year (which failed ultimately to pass) does not meet the "substantially similar" (to the

HB 298, tax-exemption for construction materials, moves fast

Legislation exempting sand, gravel, quarry rock and "marketable earth" extraction from the state mining license tax is moving quickly through the House. HB 298 was introduced on Jan. 25 and is scheduled for a Feb. 7 Finance Committee hearing. Sponsored by House Resources Committee Cochair Paul Seaton (R-Homer), the bill moved out of that committee after a Feb. 1 hearing where lawmakers, extraction companies and the Dept. of Revenue agreed that the levy is a net loss rather than an income source for the state.

Seaton said the Dept. of Transportation and local governments buy over 80 percent of the products covered by the bill so that the state is effectively paying most of the "nuisance tax." It raised only $320,360, or seven-tenths of one percent of total mining tax revenues in fiscal 2011, according to the Dept. of Revenue.

Analysis by Bob Tkacz

On coastal initiative, what does "substanially similar" mean?

"Substantially similar" is the standard – comfortably vague – in Alaska law that describes the requirement for a legislative bill that would replace an initiative petition on the general election ballot. What the phrase means will be debated intensely if lawmakers attempt to pass such a bill to reestablish the Alaska Coastal Management Program, replacing the ballot proposition now pending. A 1975 ruling by the Alaska Supreme Court, reaffirmed in 2005, established a three-part test to determine if a bill is "substantially similar." The ruling came in the Warren v. Boucher case, which addressed the process and conditions by which legislative action could prevent an initiative from appearing on the ballot. The high court reaffirmed the test in State v. Trust The People, over the initiative petition, now state law, that allows a governor to make only a temporary appointment of a U.S. senator when the post becomes vacant. That petition was launched after Gov. Frank Murkowski appointed his daughter Lisa to the U.S. Senate seat he vacated when he was elected governor in 2002.

The definition of the constitutional phrase "substantially the same," in Article 11, Sec. 4 of the Alaska Constitution is "not apparent" and nothing in the legislative history of the founders' debate on the subject "points to an agreed upon meaning or a consciously adopted definition," the high court's opinion in Warren declares. The first part of the test requires the court to "first determine the scope of the subject matter, and afford the Legislature greater or lesser latitude depending on whether the subject mater is broad or narrow." Secondly, the court must consider "whether the general purpose of the legislation is the same as the general purpose of the initiative." Finally, it must "consider whether the means by which that purpose is effectuated are the same" in the initiative and legislation.

The Warren decision also said lawmakers have "reasonably broad" discretion in writing a law to replace an initiative. "It is clear that the legislative act need not conform to the initiative in all respects, and that the framers intended that the Legislature should have some discretion in deciding how far the legislative act should differ from the provisions of the initiative. The question, of course, is how great is the permitted variance before the legislative act becomes no longer substantially the same," the decision declares.

petition) requirement. "If you want to draft legislation that will increase the odds of voiding the initiative and being considered 'substantially the same,' a bill that provides greater local control and participation than the former program did and HB 106 would have. It could only help the effort," the Jan. 31 opinion states.

House Speaker Mike Chenault and Senate Pres. Gary Stevens met Jan. 31 to discuss how legislation might proceed but seemed to reach no agreement. "We just have to find a vehicle we can agree to, if we can find one," Stevens (R-Kodiak) said on the way in to the hour-long session. After the meeting he said, "The important thing right now is to figure out how that petition is going to be finalized." If the petition is confirmed for the ballot "that will move us on," he added. Chenault said if the petition qualifies, "the House will have to look at it and see if it is an issue we're going to address or not." The House Majority has not had a serious discussion of the issue and Chenault added that he would not lead any initiative. "It's not me saying 'yes' or 'no.' Any legislator

Railroad's 95-year land leasing bill is derailed, in Senate at least

Senate Transportation Committee Chairman Donny Olson (D-Nome) said the bill to raise the time limit on Alaska Railroad leases to 95 from 55 years won't leave his committee "unless there's clear and convincing evidence we need it." Olson made the comment after the panel's 17-minute first hearing on SB 156, Feb. 2, had recessed. Jon Cook, chairman of railroad board's real estate committee had told the Transportation Committee that developers of three potential projects, including one on Ship Creek in Anchorage, had informed him they would not consider railroad land unless 95-year leases were available.

Cook also noted that land values for all leases are reappraised every five years and rates increased by eight percent for most of the railroad's roughly 400 properties. He said the board unanimously endorsed the bill, that 95-year leases would require exceptional circumstances and that the board would establish standards for the maximum term. At the bill's Senate Labor & Commerce Committee hearing he said $10 million valuation would be the minimum needed to qualify for 95-year terms. The bill was introduced by the Senate Labor & Commerce Committee at the request of the railroad and was reported out of that committee with four "do pass" recommendations on Jan. 27. Sen. Joe Paskvan (D-Fairbanks) gave it "no recommendation."

Bill clarifying auto price, advertising details moves from House, Senate committees

The Senate version of a multi-part proposal to broaden and clarify terms for new and used car advertising and promotions and consumer protection issues moved through the Senate Transportation Committee after a single hearing, Feb. 2. SB 122 awaits a Senate Labor & Commerce Committee review; parallel to HB 235, its companion bill in the House. Endorsed by Alaskan auto dealers and the Dept. of Law's consumer protection section, the bills require advertised prices show all dealer fees, excluding licensing and other government charges.

The bill breaks new ground by allowing used car dealers to publish comparative discount claims in ads if they are supported by comparisons to nationally recognized sources like the "Blue Book." It voids vehicle sales contracts if dealers or financing institutions change any terms after the buyer has signed. Consumers can be charged a mileage fee if a returned car has been driven more than 100 miles and would be required to pay for any damage, parking tickets, towing or storage fees and similar charges. The House version, HB 235, was reported out of the House Transportation Committee after a Jan. 26 hearing can put in a bill dealing with ACMP at any time," he said. "There's people talking about it in different groups, trying to decide do they want to put in something," he said. Rep. Beth Kerttula, House Minority Leader said a successful signature count would encourage lawmakers to pass a substantially similar bill. Rep. Charisse Millett (R-Anch.), who requested the legal opinion, also asked if the Legislature could amend an initiative petition that was approved by the voters but rejected by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, federal administrator of the coastal zone program. To that, the legal opinion said yes, if changes were actually amendments and not a repeal. Kerttula agreed but was confident the initiative meets federal standards. "This program was built on programs that were approved by NOAA," Kerttula said last Saturday. She added that NOAA allows "great latitude" in states programs. "All the different coastal programs are different," she said.

AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act establishing the Alaska Coastal Management Program."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 46 is amended by adding a new chapter to read:

Chapter 41. Alaska Coastal Management Program

Sec. 46.41.010 Coastal Policy Board

(a) There is created in the Department of Commerce, Community and Economic Development the Alaska Coastal Policy Board. The board consists of the following:

(1) nine public members and alternates appointed by the governor from a list composed of at least three names from each region, nominated and submitted by the coastal districts of each region; one public member shall be appointed from each of the following regions:

(A) northwest Alaska, including, generally, the area of the North Slope Borough and the Northwest Arctic Borough;

(B) Bering Straits, including, generally, the area of the Bering Straits regional educational attendance area and the City of Nome;

(C) southwest Alaska, including, generally, the area within the Lower Yukon, Lower Kuskokwim, and Southwest regional educational attendance areas, the City of Bethel, and the Lake and Peninsula and Bristol Bay Boroughs;

(D) Kodiak-Aleutians, including the area of the Kodiak Island and Aleutian East Boroughs and the Aleutian, Adak and Pribilof regional educational attendance areas;

(E) Upper Cook Inlet, including the Municipality of Anchorage and the Matanuska-Susitna Borough;

(F) Lower Cook Inlet, including, generally, the area within the Kenai Peninsula Borough;

(G) Prince William Sound, including, generally, the area east of the Kenai Peninsula Borough to 141 W. longitude;

(H) northern Southeast Alaska, including the area southeast of 141 W. longitude and north of 57 N. latitude, including the entirety of the City and Borough

of Sitka; and

(I) southern Southeast Alaska, including that portion of southeastern Alaska not contained within the area described in (H) of this paragraph;

(2) each of the following:

(A) the commissioner of environmental conservation;

(B) the commissioner of fish and game;

(C) the commissioner of natural resources; and

(b) Public members serve staggered terms of three years. Except as provided by (c) of this section, each member serves until a successor is appointed. A public member may be reappointed.

(c) The alternate for a commissioner serving under (a)(2) of this section shall be a deputy commissioner or the director of a division in the commissioner's department. The names of alternates shall be filed with the board.

(d) The board shall designate co-chairs, one of whom shall be selected from among the public members appointed under (a)(1) of this section and one from among the members designated in (a)(2) of this section.

(e) The board may recommend that the governor remove a public member for cause.

(f) Five public members and two designated members of the board constitute a quorum, but the board may delegate to one or more of its members the power to hold hearings. All decisions of the board shall be by a majority vote of the members present and voting.

(g) The board shall meet at least four times a year and as often as necessary to fulfill its duties under this chapter. Meetings may be held and members may vote telephonically, except one board meeting a year shall be held in person.

(h) Public members of the board or their alternates are entitled to per diem and travel expenses authorized by law for members of boards and commissions.

(i) Administrative support for the board shall be provided by staff of the department. The department, under the direction of the board shall contract with or employ personnel or consultants the department considers necessary to assist the board in carrying out the board's duties and responsibilities.

Sec. 46.41.020. Powers and duties of the board.

(a) The board shall

(1) review and approve regulations necessary to implement the coastal management program in conformity with this chapter and 16 U.S.C. 1451 - 1464 (Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972);

(2) direct the department to seek approval of the Alaska coastal management program by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, Office of Ocean and Coastal Resource Management in conformity with 16 U.S.C. 1451 – 1464 (Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972);

(3) initiate an interagency program of strategic coastal and ocean planning for each geographic region of the state;

(4) review and approve coastal district management plans after receiving the department's recommendations, including local enforceable policies, that meet the provisions of this chapter and the district plan criteria.

(5) establish continuing coordination among state agencies to facilitate the development and implementation of the Alaska coastal management program;

(6) evaluate the effectiveness of district coastal management plans; and

(7) direct the department to apply for and accept grants, contributions, and appropriations, including application for and acceptance of federal funds that may become available for coastal planning and management.

(b) The board may

(1) contract for necessary services;

(2) take any reasonable action necessary to carry out the provisions of this chapter.

Sec. 46.41.030. Division of Coastal Management.

(a) There is created in the department the division of ocean and coastal management.

(b) The division shall

(1) render, on behalf of the state, all federal consistency determinations and certifications authorized by 16 U.S.C. 1456 (Sec. 307, Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972), and each conclusive state consistency determination when a project requires a permit, lease, or authorization from the department or from two or more state resource agencies.

(2) adopt regulations approved by the board necessary to implement this chapter under the provisions of AS 44.62 (Administrative Procedure Act).

(3) assure continued provision of data and information to coastal districts to carry out their planning and management functions under the program.

(4) develop and maintain a program of financial assistance to aid coastal districts in the development and implementation of district coastal management plan.

Sec. 46.41.040. Development of Alaska coastal management program.

(a) The regulations developed under this chapter shall include

(1) statewide coastal program standards;

(2) the criteria and process for the preparation and approval of district coastal management plans; and

(3) consistency review procedures in accordance with this chapter, including provisions for

(A) review of activities proposed or permitted by a state or federal agency;

(B) the types of activities that will trigger a consistency review;

(C) review of phased activities and uses;

(D) public notice and opportunities for public comment;

(E) elevation of proposed consistency determinations to the resource agency commissioners;

(F) establishment of review timelines;

(G) exclusion from an individual project review aspects of activities that are covered by a general permit previously found consistent with the Alaska coastal management program;

(H) exclusion of routine activities with insignificant effects to coastal uses or resources from an individual consistency review.

b) The coastal districts, coastal district boundaries and approved coastal management plans that were in effect as of June 30, 2011 are in effect and are incorporated into the Alaska coastal management program.

Sec. 46.41.050. Objectives.

The Alaska coastal management program shall be consistent with the following objectives:

(1) the use, management, restoration, and enhancement of the overall quality of the coastal environment for this and succeeding generations;

(2) the development of industrial or commercial enterprises that are consistent with the social, cultural, historic, economic, and environmental interests of the people of the state;

(3) the orderly, balanced utilization and protection of the resources of the coastal

area consistent with sound conservation and sustained yield principles;

(4) the management of coastal land and water uses in such a manner that, generally, those uses that are economically or physically dependent on a coastal location are given higher priority when compared to uses that do not economically or physically require a coastal location;

(5) the protection and management of significant historic, cultural, natural, and aesthetic values and natural systems or processes within the coastal area;

(6) the prevention of damage to or degradation of land and water reserved for their natural values as a result of inconsistent land or water usages adjacent to that land;

(7) the recognition of the need for a continuing supply of energy to meet the requirements of the state and the contribution of a share of the state's resources to meet national energy needs; and

(8) the full and fair evaluation of all demands on and uses of the land and water in the coastal area.

(9) the coordination of planning and decision-making in the coastal area among levels of government and citizens engaging in or affected by activities involving the coastal resources of the state;

(10) the participation of the public, local governments, and agencies of the state and federal governments in the development and implementation of a coastal management program; and

(11) the requirement that state resource agencies carry out their duties, powers and responsibilities that affect the use of coastal area resources in accordance with the coastal program adopted pursuant to this Act.

Sec. 46.41.060. Development of district coastal management plans.

(a) Coastal districts shall

(1) develop and adopt district coastal management plans in accordance with the provisions of this chapter. The plan adopted by a coastal district shall be based upon a municipality's existing comprehensive plan or a new comprehensive resource use plan or comprehensive statement of needs, policies, objectives, and standards governing the use and conservation of resources within the coastal area of the district. The plan must meet the district plan criteria adopted under AS 46.41.040 and must include

(A) a delineation within the district of the boundaries of the coastal area subject to the district coastal management plan;

(B) a statement, list, or definition of the land and water uses and activities subject to the district coastal management plan;

(C) a designation of any special management areas;

(D) enforceable policies to be applied to all the land and water uses subject to the district coastal management plan as well as policies that apply to special management areas.

(b) The board shall approve an initial or amended district coastal management plan if the

(1) district coastal management plan meets the requirements of this chapter and the district plan criteria in regulation adopted by the department; and

(2) enforceable policies of the district coastal management plan

(A) do not duplicate, restate, or incorporate by reference state or federal statutes or regulations;

(B) are not preempted by federal or state law;

(C) do not arbitrarily or unreasonably restrict a use of state concern;

(D) are clear and concise as to the activities and persons affected by the policies and the requirements of the policies;

(E) use prescriptive or performance-based standards that are written in precise and enforceable language; and

(F) address a coastal use or resource of concern to the residents of the coastal resource district as demonstrated by local knowledge or supported by scientific evidence

(c) In (b)(2)(B) of this section, an enforceable policy of the district coastal management plan is preempted

(1) by federal statutes or regulations if the United States Congress expressly declares that local law or regulation is preempted, if the United States Congress demonstrates the intent to occupy the field exclusively, or if there is an actual conflict between federal and local law or regulation;

(2) by state law if it is prohibited, either by express legislative direction or direct conflict with a state statute or regulation, or where a local law or regulation substantially interferes with the effective functioning of a state statute or regulation or the underlying purposes of a state statute or regulation.

Sec. 46.41.070. Submission of district plans by coastal districts.

(a) Within one year after the effective date of regulations implementing this chapter, coastal districts shall review their coastal management plans and if changes are necessary to meet the requirements of this chapter and implementing regulations, submit to the department a revised district coastal management plan.

Sec. 46.41.080. Implementation of district coastal management plans.

(a) A district coastal management plan approved under this chapter for a coastal district that does not have and exercise zoning or other controls on the use of resources within the coastal area shall be implemented by appropriate state agencies. Implementation shall be in accordance with the comprehensive use plan or the statement of needs, policies, objectives, and standards adopted by the district.

(b) A coastal district that has and exercises zoning or other controls on the use of resources within the coastal area shall implement its district coastal management plan. Implementation shall be in accordance with the comprehensive use plan or the statement of needs, policies, objectives, and standards adopted by the district.

Sec. 46.41.090. Compliance and enforcement.

(a) Municipalities and state resource agencies shall administer land and water use regulations or controls in conformity with district coastal management plans approved under this chapter and in effect.

(b) The superior courts of the state have jurisdiction to enforce lawful orders of the board and the department under this chapter.

Sec. 46.41.100. Coastal management plans in the unorganized borough.

(a) A coastal resource service area incorporated into the coastal management program under this chapter shall exercise those authorities and perform those duties required under this chapter.

Sec. 46.41.110. Coastal resource service areas.

(a) Except as otherwise provided in this section, each regional educational attendance area established under AS 14.08.031 containing a part of the coastal area may be organized as a coastal resource service area.

(b) The commissioner of the department may, after public hearings held in the affected area, consolidate two or more regional educational attendance areas as a single

coastal resource service area

(1) if a substantial portion of the coastal area contains land and water area owned by the federal government over which it exercises exclusive jurisdiction or land held in trust by the federal government for Alaska Natives over which the state would not exercise control as to use; or

(2) if, after giving due consideration to the standards applicable to incorporation of borough governments and the likelihood that a borough will be incorporated within the area, the commissioner determines that the functions to be performed under this chapter could be undertaken more efficiently through the combination of two or more regional education attendance area as a single coastal resource service area.

(c) A determination under (b) of this section shall be made before the organization of the coastal resource service area.

(d) or purposes of coastal management only, the commissioner of the department may, after public hearings held in the regional education attendance area affected, divide an existing regional education attendance area into no more than three coastal resource service areas according to geographic, cultural, economic, environmental, or other features relevant to coastal management planning. However,

(1) each coastal resource service area formed by dividing an existing regional education attendance must contain at least one first class city or home rule city; and

(2) a city within a coastal resource service area formed by dividing an existing regional education attendance area may not elect to exclude itself from the coastal resource service area.

Sec. 46.41.120. Organization of a Coastal Resource Service Area.

(a) Organization of a coastal resource service area may be initiated by

(1) submission to the coastal policy board of a petition signed by a number of registered voters equal to 15 percent of the number of votes cast within the coastal resource service area at the last state general election; or

(2) by submission to the board of a resolution approved by the city council or traditional village council of not less than 25 percent of the number of cities and villages within the coastal resource service area.

(b) Acting at the request of the council, the lieutenant governor, not less than 60 nor more than 90 days after receipt of a proper petition under (a)(1) of this section, a proper resolution under (a)(2) of this section, or at the direction of the council under (a)(3) of this section, shall conduct an election on the question of organization of a coastal resource service area.

Sec. 46.41.130. Coastal resource service area boards

(a) Each coastal resource service area shall have an elected board representing the population of the service area. The board shall have the powers and duties and perform the functions prescribed for or required of coastal districts.

(b) A coastal resource service area board shall contain seven members. Board members shall be elected at large by the qualified voters of the coastal resource service area.

(c) The term of office of a member of a coastal resource service area board is three years. Members serve until their successors are elected and have qualified. This section does not prohibit the reelection of a board member.

(d) The lieutenant governor shall provide for the election of the members of coastal resource service area boards.

(e) Election of members of coastal resource service area boards shall be held annually on the date of election of members of regional educational attendance area boards under AS 14.08.071(b). If no candidate files for election to a seat on the coastal resource service area board, the seat is considered vacant at the time a newly elected member would have taken office.

(f) A seat on a coastal resource service area board shall be declared vacant by the board if the criteria under AS 14.08.045 (a) apply to the person elected. A vacancy on a coastal resource service area board shall be filled by appointment as provided in AS 14.12.070 for vacancies in the membership of regional educational attendance area boards.

(g) Members of coastal resource service area boards are subject to recall on the same grounds and in the same manner as provided for recall of municipal officials in AS 29.26.240 - 29.26.350. The lieutenant governor functions in place of the assembly or council and municipal clerk for receipt and review of recall petitions and the conduct of recall elections.

(h) Members of a coastal resource service area board are entitled to per diem and travel expenses authorized by law for members of boards and commissions and for honorariums for meetings attended in person.

Sec. 46.41.140. Elections in coastal resource service areas.

Elections under AS 46.41.100 - 46.41.160 shall be administered by the lieutenant governor in the general manner provided in AS 15 (Election Code). In addition, the lieutenant governor may adopt regulations necessary to the conduct of coastal resource service area board elections. The state shall pay all election costs.

Sec. 46.41.150. Preparation of district coastal management program by the Department of Commerce, Community and Economic Development

(a) If residents of a coastal resource service area reject organization of the service area at an election called for the purpose and the coastal policy board finds, after public hearing, that major economic development activity has occurred or will occur within the service area, the board may direct the department to prepare and recommend for consideration by the council and for submission to the legislature a district coastal management plan for the service area.

(b) At the request of the coastal policy board, the department shall complete the district coastal management plan in accordance with this chapter and the guidelines and standards adopted by the board for a coastal resource service area that has been organized but that has failed to make substantial progress in the preparation of an approvable district costal management program within 18 months of certification of the results of an organization election or that has not submitted for approval to the board a program within 30 months of certification of the results of its organization election. Preparation of the program shall be conducted in consultation with the coastal resource service area and shall, to the maximum extent consistent with this chapter, reflect the expressed concerns of the residents of the service area.

(c) Before requesting the department to complete the district coastal management plan under (b) of this section, the board shall meet with members of the coastal resource service area board to determine whether the board is able to complete a district coastal management program within the time limitations established in this section.

Sec. 46.41.160. Approval of plans in coastal resource service areas.

(a) Before adoption by a coastal resource service area board, a district coastal management plan shall be submitted for review to each city or village within the coastal resource service area. The council of a city or traditional village council shall consider the plan submitted for review. Within 60 days of submission, the council of a city or traditional village council shall either approve the plan or enter objections to all or any portion of the plan.

(b) If a city or village within a coastal resource service area fails to approve a portion of the district coastal management plan prepared and submitted for approval under (a) of this section, the governing body shall advise the coastal resource service area board of its objections to the proposed plan and suggest alternative elements or components for inclusion in the district coastal management plan. New matter submitted by a city or village that meets the district plan criteria adopted under this chapter may be accepted by the district and the district coastal management plan modified accordingly. If a city or village fails to provide objections and suggested alternatives within the time limits established in this section, the coastal resource service area board may adopt the district coastal management plan as initially offered.

(c) Objection by a city council under (b) of this section is limited to objection to elements of the plan affecting resources or the use of resources within the corporate limits of the city. Objection by a traditional village council under (b) of this section is limited to objection to elements of the plan affecting resources or the use of resources within the village or within two miles of the village.

(d) For purposes of this section, "village" means an unincorporated community where at least 25 persons reside as a social unit as determined by the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development.

Sec. 46.41.170. Cooperative administration.

(a) A city within the coastal area that is not part of a coastal resource service area shall be included for purposes of this chapter within an adjacent coastal resource service area unless its governing body, by resolution adopted by a majority of its membership, chooses to exclude the city from an adjacent coastal resource service area and a copy of the resolution is filed with the commissioner of commerce, community, and economic development.

(b) This chapter does not restrict or prohibit cooperative or joint administration of functions between a municipality and a coastal resource service area organized under the provisions of this chapter upon initiation of a mutual agreement for the purpose.

Sec. 46.41.180. Construction with other laws.

Nothing in this chapter shall be construed to

(1) diminish state jurisdiction, responsibility, or rights in the field of planning, development, or control of land or water resources, submerged land, or navigable water;

(2) affect in any way any state requirement imposed under a federal authorization or federal waiver of sovereign immunity; or

Sec. 46.41.900. Definitions.

In this chapter, unless the context otherwise requires,

(1) "affected coastal district" means a coastal district with a publically reviewed draft or approved plan in which a project is proposed to be located or that may experience a direct and significant impact from a proposed project;

(2) "board" means the Alaska Coastal Policy Board established in AS 46.41.010;

(3) "coastal district" means each of the following that contains a portion of the coastal area of the state:

(A) unified municipalities;

(B) organized boroughs of any class that exercise planning and zoning authority;

(C) home rule and first class cities of the unorganized borough or within boroughs that do not exercise planning and zoning authority;

(D) second class cities of the unorganized borough, or within boroughs that do not exercise planning and zoning authority, that have established a planning commission, and that, in the opinion of the commissioner of commerce, community, and economic development, have the capability of preparing and implementing a comprehensive district coastal management plan under AS 46.41.030;

(E) coastal resource service areas established and organized under AS 29.03.020 an AS 46.41.100 - 46.41.160;

(4) "coastal use or resource" means any land or water use or natural resource of the coastal zone. Land and water uses include, but are not limited to, public access, recreation, fishing, historic or cultural preservation, development, hazards management, marinas and floodplain management, scenic and aesthetic enjoyment, and resource creation or restoration projects. Natural resources include biological or physical resources that are found within a State's coastal zone on a regular or cyclical basis. Biological and physical resources include, but are not limited to, air, tidal and nontidal wetlands, ocean waters, estuaries, rivers, streams, lakes, aquifers, submerged aquatic vegetation, land, plants, trees, minerals, fish, shellfish, invertebrates, amphibians, birds, mammals, reptiles, and coastal resources of national significance;

and adjacent shoreland, including the water within and under that shoreland, within the boundaries approved by the former Alaska Coastal Policy Council and by the United States Secretary of Commerce under 16 U.S.C. 1451 - 1465 (Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972, as amended); "coastal zone" includes areas added as a result of any boundary changes approved by the board and by the United States Secretary of Commerce under 16 U.S.C. 1451 - 1465; "coastal zone" does not include

(A) those lands excluded under 16 U.S.C. 1453(1); or

(B) areas deleted as a result of any boundary changes by the board in conformance with 16 U.S.C. 1451 - 1465;

(6) "consistency review" means the evaluation of a proposed project against the statewide standards and the approved enforceable policies of an affected coastal district under the process developed by the board;

(7) "department" means the Department of Commerce, Community and Economic Development;

(8) "direct and significant impact" means an activity which proximately contributes to a material change or alteration in the natural or social characteristics of a part of the state's coastal area and in which

(A) would have a net adverse effect on the quality of the resources of the coastal area;

(B) would limit the range of alternative uses of the resources of the coastal area; or

(C) would, of itself, constitute a tolerable change or alteration of the resources within the coastal area but which, cumulatively, would have an adverse effect;

(9) "district coastal management plan" means a plan developed by a coastal district, including enforceable policies of that plan, setting out policies and standards to guide public and private uses of land and water within that district and approved by the board as meeting the requirements of this chapter and the regulations adopted under this chapter;

(10) "enforceable policy" means a policy established by this chapter or approved by the board as a legally binding policy of the Alaska coastal management program applicable to public and private activities;

(11) "local knowledge" means a body of knowledge or information about the coastal environment or the human use of that environment, including information passed down through generations, if that information is

(A) derived from experience and observations; and

(B) generally accepted by the local community;

(12) "project" means all activities that will be part of a proposed development and includes all federal agency activities as defined in 15 C.F.R. 930.31, including lease sales and development projects affecting a coastal use or resource;

(13) "resource agency" means

(A) the Department of Environmental Conservation;

(B) the Department of Fish and Game; or

(C) the Department of Natural Resources.;

(14) "scientific evidence" means facts or data that are

(A) premised upon established chemical, physical, biological, or ecosystem management principles as obtained through scientific method and submitted to the department to furnish proof of a matter required under this chapter;

(B) in a form that would allow resource agency review for scientific merit; and

(C) supported by one or more of the following:

(i) written analysis based on field observation and professional judgment along with photographic documentation;

(ii) written analysis from a professional scientist with expertise in the specific discipline; or

(iii) site-specific scientific research that may include peer-review level research or literature.

(15) "special management area" includes areas meriting special attention and means a delineated geographic area within the coastal area which is sensitive to change or alteration and which, because of plans or commitments or because a claim on the resources within the area delineated would preclude subsequent use of the resources to a conflicting or incompatible use, warrants special management attention, or which, because of its value to the general public, should be identified for current or future planning, protection, or acquisition;

(16) "use of state concern" means a land and water use that would significantly affect the long-term public interest; a "use of state concern" includes

(A) uses of national interest, including the use of resources for the siting of ports

and major facilities that contribute to meeting national energy needs, construction and maintenance of navigational facilities and systems, resource development of federal land, and national defense and related security facilities that are dependent upon coastal locations;

(B) uses of more than local concern, including those land and water uses that confer significant environmental, social, cultural, or economic benefits or burdens beyond a single coastal district;

(C) the siting of major energy facilities, activities pursuant to a state oil and gas lease, a state gas only lease, or a federal oil and gas lease, or large-scale industrial or commercial development activities that are dependent on a coastal location and that, because of their magnitude or the magnitude of their effect on the economy of the state or the surrounding area, are reasonably likely to present issues of more than local significance;

(D) facilities serving statewide or interregional transportation and communication needs; and

(E) uses in areas established as state parks or recreational areas under AS 41.21 or as state game refuges, game sanctuaries, or critical habitat areas under AS 16.20.

Joint Judiciary Committee Hearing on 11ACMP:
Coastal Management Program Initiative
– February 2012 –
Relevant Laws

The Alaska Constitution (Article XI)

§ 1. Initiative and Referendum
The people may propose and enact laws by the initiative, and approve or reject acts of the legislature by the referendum.

§ 2. Application
An initiative or referendum is proposed by an application containing the bill to be initiated or the act to be referred. The application shall be signed by not less than one hundred qualified voters as sponsors, and shall be filed with the lieutenant governor. If he finds it in proper form he shall so certify. Denial of certification shall be subject to judicial review.

§ 3. Petition
After certification of the application, a petition containing a summary of the subject matter shall be prepared by the lieutenant governor for circulation by the sponsors. If signed by qualified voters who are equal in number to at least ten per cent of those who voted in the preceding general election, who are resident in at least three-fourths of the house districts of the State, and who, in each of those house districts, are equal in number to at least seven percent of those who voted in the preceding general election in the house district, it may be filed with the lieutenant governor.

§ 4. Initiative Election
An initiative petition may be filed at any time. The lieutenant governor shall prepare a ballot title and proposition summarizing the proposed law, and shall place them on the ballot for the first statewide election held more than one hundred twenty days after adjournment of the legislative session following the filing. If, before the election, substantially the same measure has been enacted, the petition is void.

§ 6. Enactment
If a majority of the votes cast on the proposition favor its adoption, the initiated measure is enacted. If a majority of the votes cast on the proposition favor the rejection of an act referred, it is rejected. The lieutenant governor shall certify the election returns. An initiated law becomes effective ninety days after certification, is not subject to veto, and may not be repealed by the legislature within two years of its effective date. It may be amended at any time. An act rejected by referendum is void thirty days after certification. Additional procedures for the initiative and referendum may be prescribed by law.

§ 7. Restrictions
The initiative shall not be used to dedicate revenues, make or repeal appropriations, create courts, define the jurisdiction of courts or prescribe their rules, or enact local or special legislation. The referendum shall not be applied to dedications of revenue, to appropriations, to local or special legislation, or to laws necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, or safety.

Alaska Statutes on Initiatives

Sec. 15.45.010. Provision and scope for use of the initiative.

The law-making powers assigned to the legislature may be exercised by the people through the initiative. However, an initiative may not be proposed to dedicate revenue, to make or repeal appropriations, to create courts, to define the jurisdiction of courts or prescribe their rules, or to enact local or special legislation.

Sec. 15.45.020. Filing application.

An initiative is proposed by filing an application with the lieutenant governor. A deposit of $100 must accompany the application. This deposit shall be retained if a petition is not properly filed. If a petition is properly filed, the deposit shall be refunded.

Sec. 15.45.030. Form of application.

The application must include the

(1) proposed bill;

(2) printed name, the signature, the address, and a numerical identifier of not fewer than 100 qualified voters who will serve as sponsors; each signature page must include a statement that the sponsors are qualified voters who signed the application with the proposed bill attached; and

(3) designation of an initiative committee consisting of three of the sponsors who subscribed to the application and represent all sponsors and subscribers in matters relating to the initiative; the designation must include the name, mailing address, and signature of each committee member.

Sec. 15.45.040. Form of proposed bill.

The proposed bill shall be in the following form:

(1) the bill shall be confined to one subject;

(2) the subject of the bill shall be expressed in the title;

(3) the enacting clause of the bill shall be: "Be it enacted by the People of the State of Alaska;"

(4) the bill may not include subjects restricted by AS 15.45.010.

Sec. 15.45.050. Manner of notice.

Notice to the initiative committee on any matter pertaining to the application and petition may be served on any member of the committee in person or by mail addressed to a committee member as indicated on the application.

Sec. 15.45.060. Designation of sponsors.

The qualified voters who subscribe to the application in support of the proposed bill are designated as sponsors. The initiative committee may designate additional sponsors by giving written notice to the lieutenant governor of the names, addresses, and numerical identifiers of those so designated.

Sec. 15.45.070. Review of application for certification.

Within 60 calendar days after the date the application is received, the lieutenant governor shall review the application and shall either certify it or notify the initiative committee of the grounds for denial.

Sec. 15.45.080. Bases of denial of certification.

The lieutenant governor shall deny certification upon determining in writing that

(1) the proposed bill to be initiated is not confined to one subject or is otherwise not in the required form;

(2) the application is not substantially in the required form; or

(3) there is an insufficient number of qualified sponsors.

Sec. 15.45.090. Preparation of petition.

(a) If the application is certified, the lieutenant governor shall prepare a sufficient number of sequentially numbered petitions to allow full circulation throughout the state. Each petition must contain

(1) a copy of the proposed bill;

(2) an impartial summary of the subject matter of the bill;

(3) a statement of minimum costs to the state associated with certification of the initiative application and review of the initiative petition, excluding legal costs to the state and the costs to the state of any challenge to the validity of the petition;

(4) an estimate of the cost to the state of implementing the proposed law;

(5) the statement of warning prescribed in AS 15.45.100;

(6) sufficient space for the printed name, a numerical identifier, the signature, the date of signature, and the address of each person signing the petition; and

(7) other specifications prescribed by the lieutenant governor to ensure proper handling and control.

(b) Upon request of the initiative committee, the lieutenant governor shall report to the committee the number of persons who voted in the preceding general election.

Sec. 15.45.100. Statement of warning.

Each petition shall include a statement of warning that a person who signs a name other than the person's own on the petition, or who knowingly signs more than once for the same proposition at one election, or who signs the petition when knowingly not a qualified voter, is guilty of a class B misdemeanor.

Sec. 15.45.105. Qualifications of circulator.

To circulate a petition booklet, a person shall be

(1) a citizen of the United States;

(2) 18 years of age or older; and

(3) a resident of the state as determined under AS 15.05.020.

Sec. 15.45.110. Circulation of petition; prohibitions and penalty.

(c) A circulator may not receive payment or agree to receive payment that is greater than $1 a signature, and a person or an organization may not pay or agree to pay an amount that is greater than $1 a signature, for the collection of signatures on a petition.

(d) A person or organization may not knowingly pay, offer to pay, or cause to be paid money or other valuable thing to a person to sign or refrain from signing a petition.

(e) A person or organization that violates (c) or (d) of this section is guilty of a class B misdemeanor.

(f) In this section,

(1) "organization" has the meaning given in AS 11.81.900;

(2) "other valuable thing" has the meaning given in AS 15.56.030(d);

(3) "person" has the meaning given in AS 11.81.900.

Sec. 15.45.120. Manner of signing and withdrawing name from petition.

Any qualified voter may subscribe to the petition by printing the voter's name, a numerical identifier, and an address, by signing the voter's name, and by dating the signature. A person who has signed the initiative petition may withdraw the person's name only by giving written notice to the lieutenant governor before the date the petition is filed.

Sec. 15.45.130. Certification of circulator.

Before being filed, each petition shall be certified by an affidavit by the person who personally circulated the petition. In determining the sufficiency of the petition, the lieutenant governor may not count subscriptions on petitions not properly certified at the time of filing or corrected before the subscriptions are counted. The affidavit must state in substance

(1) that the person signing the affidavit meets the residency, age, and citizenship qualifications for circulating a petition under AS 15.45.105;

(2) that the person is the only circulator of that petition;

(3) that the signatures were made in the circulator's actual presence;

(4) that, to the best of the circulator's knowledge, the signatures are the signatures of the persons whose names they purport to be;

(5) that, to the best of the circulator's knowledge, the signatures are of persons who were qualified voters on the date of signature;

(6) that the circulator has not entered into an agreement with a person or organization in violation of AS 15.45.110(c);

(7) that the circulator has not violated AS 15.45.110(d) with respect to that petition; and

(8) whether the circulator has received payment or agreed to receive payment for the collection of signatures on the petition, and, if so, the name of each person or organization that has paid or agreed to pay the circulator for collection of signatures on the petition.

Sec. 15.45.140. Filing of petition.

(a) The sponsors must file the initiative petition within one year from the time the sponsors received notice from the lieutenant governor that the petitions were ready for delivery to them. The petition may be filed with the lieutenant governor only if it meets all of the following requirements: it is signed by qualified voters

(1) equal in number to 10 percent of those who voted in the preceding general election;

(2) resident in at least three-fourths of the house districts of the state; and

(3) who, in each of the house districts described in (2) of this subsection, are equal in number to at least seven percent of those who voted in the preceding general election in the house district.

(b) If the petition is not filed within the one-year period provided for in (a) of this section, the petition has no force or effect.

Sec. 15.45.150. Review of petition.

Within not more than 60 days of the date the petition was filed, the lieutenant governor shall review the petition and shall notify the initiative committee whether the petition was properly or improperly filed, and at which election the proposition shall be placed on the ballot.

Sec. 15.45.160. Bases for determining the petition was improperly filed.

The lieutenant governor shall notify the committee that the petition was improperly filed upon determining that

(1) there is an insufficient number of qualified subscribers;

(2) the subscribers were not resident in at least three-fourths of the house districts of the state; or

(3) there is an insufficient number of qualified subscribers from each of the house districts described in (2) of this section.

Sec. 15.45.170.Submission of supplementary petition. [Repealed, Sec. 7 ch 80 SLA 1998].

Sec. 15.45.180. Preparation of ballot title and proposition.

(a) If the petition is properly filed, the lieutenant governor, with the assistance of the attorney general, shall prepare a ballot title and proposition. The ballot title shall, in not more than 25 words, indicate the general subject of the proposition. The proposition shall give a true and impartial summary of the proposed law. The total number of words used in the summary may not exceed the product of the number of sections in the proposed law multiplied by 50. In this subsection, "section" means a provision of the proposed law that is distinct from other provisions in purpose or subject matter.

(b) The proposition prepared under (a) of this section shall comply with AS 15.80.005 and shall be worded so that a "Yes" vote on the proposition is a vote to enact the proposed law.

Sec. 15.45.190. Placing proposition on ballot.

The lieutenant governor shall direct the director to place the ballot title and proposition on the election ballot of the first statewide general, special, or primary election that is held after

(1) the petition has been filed;

(2) a legislative session has convened and adjourned; and

(3) a period of 120 days has expired since the adjournment of the legislative session.

Sec. 15.45.195. Public hearings.

(a) At least 30 days before the election at which an initiative is to appear on the ballot, the lieutenant governor or a designee of the lieutenant governor shall hold two or more public hearings concerning the initiative in each judicial district of the state. Each public hearing under this section shall include the written or oral testimony of one supporter and one opponent of the initiative.

(b) The lieutenant governor shall provide reasonable notice of each public hearing required under this section. The notice must include the date, time, and place of the hearing. The notice may be given using print or broadcast media. The lieutenant governor shall provide notice in a consistent fashion for all hearings required under this section.

(c) Penalties for a violation of this section may not include removal of an initiative from the ballot.

(d) If the lieutenant governor determines that it is technologically and economically feasible, the division shall provide a live audio and video broadcast of each hearing held under (a) of this section on the division's Internet website.

Sec. 15.45.200. Display of proposed law.

The director shall provide each election board with at least five copies of the proposed law being initiated, and the election board shall display at least one copy of the proposed law in a conspicuous place in the room where the election is held.

Sec. 15.45.210. Determination of void petition.

If the lieutenant governor, with the formal concurrence of the attorney general, determines that an act of the legislature that is substantially the same as the proposed law was enacted after the petition had been filed, and before the date of the election, the petition is void and the lieutenant governor shall so notify the committee.

Sec. 15.45.220. Adoption and effective date of proposed law.

If a majority of the votes cast on the initiative proposition favor its adoption, the proposed law is enacted, and the lieutenant governor shall so certify. The act becomes effective 90 days after certification.

Sec. 15.45.230.Insufficiency of application or petition. [Repealed, Sec. 7, ch 80 SLA 1998].

Sec. 15.45.240. Judicial review.

Any person aggrieved by a determination made by the lieutenant governor under AS 15.45.010 - 15.45.220 may bring an action in the superior court to have the determination reviewed within 30 days of the date on which notice of the determination was given.

Sec. 15.45.245. Delegation by lieutenant governor.

The lieutenant governor may delegate the duties imposed on the lieutenant governor by AS 15.45.010 - 15.45.240 to the director.

....

Sec. 24.05.186. Legislative hearings on initiatives certified by the lieutenant governor.

(a) A standing committee of the legislature, selected jointly by the presiding officers of the house of representatives and senate, shall hold at least one hearing on an initiative that the lieutenant governor has determined was properly filed under AS 15.45.160.

(b) The standing committee selected jointly by the presiding officers of the house of representatives and senate under (a) of this section shall hold at least one hearing under this section within 30 days after the convening of the legislative session preceding the statewide election at which the initiative proposition must appear on the election ballot under AS 15.45.190.

Chapter No.

AN ACT

Relating to ballot initiative proposal applications, to ballot initiatives and to those who file or organize for the purpose of filing a ballot initiative proposal, and to election pamphlet information relating to certain propositions.

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

THE ACT FOLLOWS ON PAGE 1

AN ACT

Relating to ballot initiative proposal applications, to ballot initiatives and to those who file or organize for the purpose of filing a ballot initiative proposal, and to election pamphlet information relating to certain propositions.

 Section 1. AS 15.13.040(k) is amended to read:

(k) Every individual, person, nongroup entity, or group contributing a total of $500 or more to a group organized for the principal purpose of influencing the outcome of a proposition, and every individual, person, nongroup entity, or group contributing a total of $500 or more to a group organized for the principal purpose of filing an initiative proposal application under AS 15.45.020 or that has filed an initiative proposal application under AS 15.45.020, shall report the contribution or contributions on a form prescribed by the commission not later than 30 days after the contribution that requires the contributor to report under this subsection is made. The report must include the name, address, principal occupation, and employer of the individual filing the report and the amount of the contribution, as well as the total amount of contributions made to that group by that individual, person, nongroup entity, or group during the calendar year.

 Sec. 2. AS 15.13.050(a) is amended to read:

(a) Before making an expenditure in support of or in opposition to a candidate or before making an expenditure in support of or in opposition to a ballot proposition or question or to an initiative proposal application filed with the lieutenant governor under AS 15.45.020, each person other than an individual shall register, on forms provided by the commission, with the commission.

 Sec. 3. AS 15.13.050 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(c) If a group intends to make more than 50 percent of its contributions or expenditures in support of or in opposition to a single initiative on the ballot, the title or common name of the initiative must be a part of the name of the group. If the group intends to make more than 50 percent of its contributions or expenditures in opposition to a single initiative on the ballot, the group's name must clearly state that the group opposes that initiative by using a word such as "opposes," "opposing," "in opposition to," or "against" in the group's name.

 Sec. 4. AS 15.13.065(c) is amended to read:

(c) Except for reports required by AS 15.13.040 and 15.13.110 and except for the requirements of AS 15.13.050, 15.13.060, and 15.13.112 - 15.13.114, the provisions of AS 15.13.010 - 15.13.116 do not apply to limit the authority of a person to make contributions to influence the outcome of a ballot proposition. In this subsection, in addition to its meaning in AS 15.60.010, "proposition" includes

(1) an issue placed on a ballot to determine whether

(A) [(1)] a constitutional convention shall be called;

(B) [(2)] a debt shall be contracted;

(C) [(3)] an advisory question shall be approved or rejected; or

(D) [(4)] a municipality shall be incorporated;

(2) an initiative proposal application filed with the lieutenant governor under AS 15.45.020.

 Sec. 5. AS 15.13.110(e) is amended to read:

(e) A group formed to sponsor [AN INITIATIVE,] a referendum or a recall shall report 30 days after its first filing with the lieutenant governor. Thereafter, each group shall report within 10 days after the end of each calendar quarter on the contributions received and expenditures made during the preceding calendar quarter until reports are due under (a) of this section.

 Sec. 6. AS 15.13.110 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(g) An initiative committee, person, group, or nongroup entity receiving contributions exceeding $500 or making expenditures exceeding $500 in a calendar year in support of or in opposition to an initiative on the ballot in a statewide election or an initiative proposal application filed with the lieutenant governor under AS 15.45.020 shall file a report within 10 days after the end of each calendar quarter on the contributions received and expenditures made during the preceding calendar quarter until reports are due under (a) and (b) of this section. If the report is a first report, it must cover the period beginning on the day an initiative proposal application is filed under AS 15.45.020 and ending three days before the due date of the report.

 Sec. 7. AS 15.13.400(4) is amended to read:

(4) "contribution"

(A) means a purchase, payment, promise or obligation to pay, loan or loan guarantee, deposit or gift of money, goods, or services for which charge is ordinarily made, and includes the payment by a person other than a candidate or political party, or compensation for the personal services of another person, that is rendered to the candidate or political party, and that is made for the purpose of

(i) influencing the nomination or election of a candidate;

(ii) [, AND IN AS 15.13.010(b) FOR THE PURPOSE OF] influencing a ballot proposition or question; or

(iii) supporting or opposing an initiative proposal application filed with the lieutenant governor under AS 15.45.020 [, INCLUDING THE PAYMENT BY A PERSON OTHER THAN A CANDIDATE OR POLITICAL PARTY, OR COMPENSATION FOR

THE PERSONAL SERVICES OF ANOTHER PERSON, THAT ARE RENDERED TO THE CANDIDATE OR POLITICAL PARTY];

(B) does not include

(i) services provided without compensation by individuals volunteering a portion or all of their time on behalf of a political party, candidate, or ballot proposition or question;

(ii) ordinary hospitality in a home;

(iii) two or fewer mass mailings before each election by each political party describing the party's slate of candidates for election, which may include photographs, biographies, and information about the party's candidates;

(iv) the results of a poll limited to issues and not mentioning any candidate, unless the poll was requested by or designed primarily to benefit the candidate;

(v) any communication in the form of a newsletter from a legislator to the legislator's constituents, except a communication expressly advocating the election or defeat of a candidate or a newsletter or material in a newsletter that is clearly only for the private benefit of a legislator or a legislative employee; or

(vi) a fundraising list provided without compensation by one candidate or political party to a candidate or political party;

 Sec. 8. AS 15.13.400(6) is amended to read:

(6) "expenditure"

(A) means a purchase or a transfer of money or anything of value, or promise or agreement to purchase or transfer money or anything of value, incurred or made for the purpose of

(i) influencing the nomination or election of a candidate or of any individual who files for nomination at a later date and becomes a candidate;

(ii) use by a political party;

(iii) the payment by a person other than a candidate or political party of compensation for the personal services of another person that are rendered to a candidate or political party; [OR]

(iv) influencing the outcome of a ballot proposition or question; or

(v) supporting or opposing an initiative proposal application filed with the lieutenant governor under AS 15.45.020;

(B) does not include a candidate's filing fee or the cost of preparing reports and statements required by this chapter;

(C) includes an express communication and an electioneering communication, but does not include an issues communication;

 Sec. 9. AS 15.13.400(8) is amended to read:

(8) "group" means

(A) every state and regional executive committee of a political party; [AND]

(B) any combination of two or more individuals acting jointly who organize for the principal purpose of influencing the outcome of one or more elections and who take action the major purpose of which is to influence the outcome of an election; a group that makes expenditures or receives contributions with the authorization or consent, express or implied, or under the control, direct or indirect, of a candidate shall be considered to be controlled by that candidate; a group whose major purpose is to further the nomination, election, or candidacy of only one individual, or intends to expend more than 50 percent of its money on a single candidate, shall be considered to be controlled by that candidate and its actions done with the candidate's knowledge and consent unless, within 10 days from the date the candidate learns of the existence of the group the candidate files with the commission, on a form provided by the commission, an affidavit that the group is operating without the candidate's control; a group organized for more than one year preceding an election and endorsing candidates for more than one office or more than one political party is presumed not to be controlled by a candidate; however, a group that contributes more than 50 percent of its money to or on behalf of one candidate shall be considered to support only one candidate for purposes of AS 15.13.070, whether or not control of the group has been disclaimed by the candidate; and

(C) any combination of two or more individuals acting jointly who organize for the principal purpose of filing an initiative proposal application under AS 15.45.020 or who file an initiative proposal application under AS 15.45.020;

 Sec. 10. AS 15.45.080 is amended to read:

Sec. 15.45.080. Bases of denial of certification. The lieutenant governor shall deny certification upon determining in writing that

(1) the proposed bill to be initiated is not confined to one subject or is otherwise not in the required form;

(2) the application is not substantially in the required form; or

 Sec. 11. AS 15.45.090(a) is amended to read:

(a) If the application is certified, the lieutenant governor shall prepare a sufficient number of sequentially numbered petitions to allow full circulation throughout the state. Each petition must contain

(1) a copy of the proposed bill [IF THE NUMBER OF WORDS INCLUDED IN BOTH THE FORMAL AND SUBSTANTIVE PROVISIONS OF THE BILL IS 500 OR LESS];

(2) an impartial summary of the subject matter of the bill;

(3) a statement of minimum costs to the state associated with certification of the initiative application and review of the initiative petition, excluding legal costs to the state and the costs to the state of any challenge to the validity of the petition;

(4) an estimate of the cost to the state of implementing the proposed law;

(5) the statement of warning prescribed in AS 15.45.100;

(6) sufficient space for the printed name, a numerical identifier, the signature, the date of signature, and the address of each person signing the petition;

and

* Sec. 12. AS 15.45 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 15.45.195. Public hearings. (a) At least 30 days before the election at which an initiative is to appear on the ballot, the lieutenant governor or a designee of the lieutenant governor shall hold two or more public hearings concerning the initiative in each judicial district of the state. Each public hearing under this section shall include the written or oral testimony of one supporter and one opponent of the initiative.

(b) The lieutenant governor shall provide reasonable notice of each public hearing required under this section. The notice must include the date, time, and place of the hearing. The notice may be given using print or broadcast media. The lieutenant governor shall provide notice in a consistent fashion for all hearings required under this section.

(c) Penalties for a violation of this section may not include removal of an initiative from the ballot.

(d) If the lieutenant governor determines that it is technologically and economically feasible, the division shall provide a live audio and video broadcast of each hearing held under (a) of this section on the division's Internet website.

* Sec. 13. AS 15.58.010 is amended to read:

Sec. 15.58.010. Election pamphlet. Before each state general election, and before each state primary or special election at which a ballot proposition is scheduled to appear on the ballot, the lieutenant governor shall prepare, publish, and mail at least one election pamphlet to each household identified from the official registration list. The pamphlet shall be prepared on a regional basis as determined by the lieutenant governor.

* Sec. 14. AS 15.58.020(b) is amended to read:

(b) Each primary or special election pamphlet shall contain only the information specified in (a)(6) and (a)(9) of this section for each ballot measure scheduled to appear on the primary or special election ballot.

MEMORANDUM January 28, 2012

SUBJECT: Coastal Management Program Legislation
(Work Order No. 27-LS1217)

TO: Representative Mike Chenault
Attn: Tom Wright

FROM: Doug Gardner
Director

Kathryn L. Kurtz
Assistant Revisor

Alpheus M. Bullard
Legislative Counsel

1. Will the coastal management program initiative appear on the primary election ballot, or the general election ballot?[1]

A. Summary

Taking certain assumptions into account,[2] the following bullet points explain when the coastal management program initiative will appear on the ballot this year, depending on when the legislature adjourns.

- If the legislature adjourns on April 15th (the 90th day), or on any day on or before April 29th (the 104th day), the initiative would appear on the primary election ballot.

[1] You also asked whether we could identify any aspect of the ACMP initiative that is unconstitutional; specifically you asked whether the initiative is unconstitutional because if it ultimately appears on the ballot and is approved by the voters, the ACMP program could not, in reality, function without legislative appropriation. I note that the attorney general, in advising Lieutenant Governor Mead Treadwell by letter on November 29, 2011, discussed this issue at pages 7 through 10 of the attorney general's letter. I do not disagree with the analysis on these pages of the memorandum, and attach this discussion to this memorandum as it answers your constitutional inquiry regarding appropriation.

[2] The following assumptions apply:

1) the second regular session of the Twenty-Seventh Alaska State Legislature was the first legislative session to convene after the filing of the initiative;

2) there are no special sessions called during the course of the regular session; and

3) there are no special elections called prior to the general election.

- If the legislature adjourns on April 30th or May 1st, the initiative should appear on the general election ballot, but there is a possibility that the lieutenant governor would arrive at a different interpretation of the relevant statutes and constitutional provisions, and place the measure on the primary election ballot.
- If the legislature adjourns on or after May 2nd (the 107th day), the initiative would appear on the general election ballot.

The following analysis provides a detailed explanation of the basis for these conclusions.

B. Interpreting the statutory and constitutional provisions relating to timing of the placement of initiatives on the ballot

The key issue is how the lieutenant governor will calculate the 120-day period required under AS 15.45.190(3) and art. XI, sec. 4 of the state's constitution. AS 15.45.190 provides:

> Sec. 15.45.190. Placing proposition on ballot. The lieutenant governor shall direct the director to place the ballot title and proposition on the election ballot of the first statewide general, special, or primary election that is held after
> (1) the petition has been filed;
> (2) a legislative session has convened and adjourned; and

Article XI, sec. 4 of the Constitution of the State of Alaska provides:

> Section 4. Initiative Election. An initiative petition may be filed at any time. The lieutenant governor shall prepare a ballot title and proposition summarizing the proposed law, and shall place them on the ballot for the first statewide election held more than one hundred twenty days after adjournment of the legislative session following the filing. If, before the election, substantially the same measure has been enacted, the petition is void.

The statutory and constitutional provisions would require the lieutenant governor to count 120 days after the session adjourned and before the day of the election. If the legislature adjourned on or before April 29th, the lieutenant governor should place the initiative on the primary election ballot, since 120 days or more will have passed after adjournment and before the day of the primary election.[3] If the legislature adjourned on April 30, there would be only 119 days after adjournment and before the primary election (starting [3] The primary election this year will be held on August 28th. If the legislature adjourned on April 29th, and the lieutenant governor began counting the 120-day period on April 30, he would count one day in April, 31 in May, 30 in June, 31 in July, and 27 in August, a total of 120 days.

May 1 and counting through August 27), so an initiative filed before the session convened should appear on the general election ballot.

However, it is possible that the lieutenant governor might interpret the 120-day period to include the day of the primary election, in which case he might still place the initiative on the primary election ballot. This reading is not persuasive, since the constitution says "more than one hundred-twenty days after adjournment," and this suggests that one must begin counting the day after adjournment, and that the election would have to be at least 121 days from that date. Nonetheless, it is a possibility you should consider.

Similarly, if the lieutenant governor reads the statute and constitution as permitting him to count both the last day of the legislative session and the day of the primary election in the 120-day period, he might place the measure on the primary election ballot even if the legislature adjourned on May 1.[4] Again, this reading is not supported by the language of the statute and the constitution, but the possibility of the lieutenant governor adopting this interpretation cannot be ruled out.

If the legislature adjourned on or after May 2, the measure could not be placed on the primary election ballot. Even counting both the last day of session and the day of the primary election, one only arrives at a period of 119 days,[5] which clearly does not satisfy the statutory and constitutional requirement.

C. The possibility of a special session

The discussion above assumes that there will not be a special session of the legislature held concurrently with the current regular session. The constitutional language requires placement on the ballot for "the first statewide election held more than one hundred twenty days after adjournment of the legislative session following the filing." This language ("the") appears to anticipate a single legislative session. The statutory language is slightly different, requiring placement on the ballot after "a legislative session has convened and adjourned." If the legislature were to convene a special session during the current regular session, and adjourn that special session prior to adjournment of the regular session,[6] the lieutenant governor could arguably start counting the 120-day period after adjournment of the special session, rather than the regular session. However, the Alaska legislature has never, to our knowledge, held a concurrent special session.[7] Also, a court might insist on counting from the adjournment of the first legislative session convened after the initiative petition was filed rather than the first adjourned.

[4] Counting 31 days in May, 30 in June, 31 in July, and 28 -- including the day of the primary -- in August, for a total of 120 days.

[6] Special sessions are limited to 30 days under art. II, sec. 9 of the Constitution of the State of Alaska.

[7] Perhaps this is because questions might be raised about the permissibility of such a special session under the state constitution.

D. The possibility of a special election

The above discussion also assumes that there will not be a statewide special election held between the 2012 primary election and the 2012 general election. A special election could be called under AS 15.40.140 if there were a vacancy in the office of United States Senator or under AS 15.40.230 if a vacancy occurred in the office of the governor. For example, it is conceivable that if there were a vacancy in the office of United States Senator occurring 59 days or less before the primary election the governor might call a special election to be held after the primary but before the general election (if the general election were more than 90 days after the vacancy). Because the language of the constitution calls for placement of an initiative on the ballot at the first statewide election held more than 120 days after adjournment of the legislative session, if there were a special election held after the primary election but before the general election, an initiative could appear on the special election ballot.

Note that a special session held after the regular session convened and adjourned would not affect the analysis. AS 15.45.190 requires placement of the initiative on the ballot of the first statewide election that is held after "(2) a legislative session has convened and adjourned; and (3) a period of 120 days has expired since the adjournment of the legislative session." (Emphasis added.) Although the use of "a" in paragraph two invites speculation about multiple legislative sessions, the use of "the" in paragraph three clearly relates to the single session referred to in paragraph two. A single session would have to convene and adjourn before the 120-day period would begin. If the current regular session were to last for 90 days, and if it were followed by a 30-day special session, an initiative filed before the convening of the regular session would be placed on the primary election ballot (see the analysis above). The occurrence of a subsequent special session should not affect the calculus, regardless of the date of adjournment of the subsequent special session.

E. The 90-day session limit

Obviously, a 107-day session would extend beyond the statutory 90-day session limit found in AS 24.05.150(b). However, it would fall well within the 121-day limit established in art. II, sec. 8 of the Constitution of the State of Alaska. Despite the statutory session limit, given the court's reluctance to interfere with matters of legislative procedure,[8] it is unlikely that a court would order the legislature to adjourn if it remained in session longer than 90 days. Also, the statute and the constitution require the lieutenant governor to count 120 days from adjournment of the legislature, not from the date of the 90-day session limit.

The bottom line is, to ensure that an initiative filed before the 2012 regular session appears on the 2012 general election ballot, rather than the primary election ballot, the legislature would need to adjourn May 2nd or later. That amounts to a session length of 107 days or longer.

2. Would a bill modeled on the provisions of the former Alaska Coastal Management Program, as those provisions would have been amended by the substantive portions of SCS CSHB 106(FIN) ("HB 106"), be interpreted as "substantially the same" as the initiative entitled "An Act establishing the Alaska Coastal Management Program"?

While both HB 106 and the initiative have the same general purpose -- establishing a state coastal management program -- the means by which that purpose are effectuated would be different. Given the relative scarcity of prior court cases interpreting the state constitution's art. XI, sec. 4 "substantially the same" language, it's not clear to what degree this difference might result in HB 106 and the initiative being interpreted as not substantially the same.

Discussion

Under art. XI, sec. 4 of the Constitution of the State of Alaska, a proposed initiative is void if a law is enacted that is "substantially the same measure" as the proposed initiative.[9] Under AS 15.45.210, the lieutenant governor, with the concurrence of the attorney general, is responsible for determining whether an Act of the legislature is substantially the same as a proposed initiative.[10]

A. "Substantially the same" test in Warren v. Boucher

The test of how similar a bill and an initiative must be for the bill to invalidate the initiative was first set out in Warren v. Boucher, 543 P.2d 731 (Alaska 1975):

> It is clear that the legislative act need not conform to the initiative in all respects, and that the framers intended that the legislature should have some discretion in deciding how far the legislative act should differ from the provisions of the initiative. The question, of course, is how great is the [9] Article XI, sec. 4, Constitution of the State of Alaska states:

> INITIATIVE ELECTION. An initiative petition may be filed at any time. The lieutenant governor shall prepare a ballot title and proposition summarizing the proposed law, and shall place them on the ballot for the first statewide election held more than one hundred twenty days after adjournment of the legislative session following the filing. If, before the election, substantially the same measure has been enacted, the petition is void.

[10] AS 15.45.210 states:

> Determination of void petition. If the lieutenant governor, with the formal concurrence of the attorney general, determines that an act of the legislature that is substantially the same as the proposed law was enacted after the petition had been filed, and before the date of the election, the petition is void and the lieutenant governor shall so notify the committee.

> Upon reflection we have concluded that the legislature's discretion in this matter is reasonably broad. If in the main the legislative act achieves the same general purpose as the initiative, if the legislative act accomplishes that purpose by means or systems which are fairly comparable, then substantial similarity exists. It is not necessary that the two measures correspond in minor particulars, or even as to all major features, if the subject matter is necessarily complex or requires comprehensive treatment. The broader the reach of the subject matter, the more latitude must be allowed the legislature to vary from the particular features of the initiative.

543 P.2d at 736.

B. "Substantially the same" test revisited in Trust the People

In State of Alaska v. Trust the People Initiative Committee, 113 P.3d 613, 621 (Alaska 2005) (considering whether an initiative was void under art. XI, sec. 6 of the state constitution), the court cited the Warren v. Boucher test:

> A court must first determine the scope of the subject matter, and afford the legislature greater or lesser latitude depending on whether the subject matter is broad or narrow; next, it must consider whether the general purpose of the legislation is the same as the general purpose of the initiative; and finally it must consider whether the means by which that purpose is effectuated are the same in both the legislation and the initiative.

1. Scope of subject matter

Turning to the first part of the test, as articulated by the court in Trust the People, it should be noted that the subject matter of this initiative, the establishment of an Alaska Coastal Management Program, is relatively complex and its reach is broad. Correspondingly, the legislature's discretion to vary from particular features of the initiative is broader in this instance than it might be in the context of a different initiative (i.e. the filling of a U.S. Senate vacancy in Trust the People). HB 106 would most likely be interpreted to satisfy this element of the test.

2. Purpose of legislation and initiative

The next part of the test consists of examining whether the purposes of the legislation and the initiative are the same. The Warren v. Boucher test asks whether "the legislative act achieves the same general purpose as the initiative." Id. The establishment of a state coastal management program under both HB 106 and the initiative would, if approved by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's (NOAA) Office of Ocean and Coastal Resource Management under the Coastal Management Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. §§ 1451 - 1465), enable the state to formally review and influence federal activities affecting Alaska, allow the state to receive Coastal Zone Management Act grant funds, reestablish a coordinated permitting process for projects requiring state and federal authorizations, and result in greater local participation in state and federal permitting processes. Additionally, it should be noted that for a state coastal management program to be approved, the Secretary of Commerce must find that the program includes certain program elements that are consistent with Congressional declaration of policy (purpose) found at 16 U.S.C. § 1452.[11] Both HB 106 and the initiative are likely to be found to meet these federal requirements. Because of this, the general purpose of HB 106 would likely be interpreted as the same as the general purpose of the initiative, satisfying the second element of the Trust the People test.

3. "Means"

The third prong of the test involves considering whether the means by which this general purpose is effectuated is the same in the bill and the initiative. It is here that HB 106 and the initiative could be found to differ, because the initiative provides for greater local participation and control than the state's former coastal management program as it would have been modified by HB 106.

The former program, at the time of its repeal, was housed within the Department of Natural Resources, and that department was responsible for coordinating consistency reviews, reviewing and approving coastal management plans, offering technical assistance to coastal resource districts, and offering statutory and regulatory changes to improve coastal management.[12] The initiative ends direct state agency control of the program, instead vesting control of the program in a Coastal Policy Board (board),[13] the majority of whose members are residents of the coastal regions of the state.[14] Similarly, the former program prevented coastal resource districts or areas from adopting enforceable policies relating to air, land, and water quality issues that were under the Department of Environmental Conservation's authority (colloquially known as the "DEC carve-out"),[15] whereas the initiative does not.

[12] The consistency review process, in which private and public land and water uses and natural resources in the coastal zone are managed in a manner consistent with the policies of a state's coastal management program, is the heart of the 1972 Coastal Management Act (16 U.S.C. §§ 1450 - 1464).

[13] While SCS CSHB 106(FIN) established a board, the board was advisory in nature. See secs. 3, 12, and 13 of 27-GH1965\H.

[14] The initiative's board would be located in the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development.

[15] See former AS 46.40.040(b), AS 46.40.040(c), and AS 46.40.096(i). For a discussion of the "carve-out," see the Alaska Coastal Management Program Audit Part I, pages 25 - 27, available January 27, 2012 at: http://www.legaudit.state.ak.us/pages/digests/2011/30060adig.htm.

C. Conclusion

It is hard to predict how the lieutenant governor, or a court, would interpret the significance of this different balance of power between state agencies and local governments in determining whether the bill would be "substantially the same" as the initiative. However, if you want to draft legislation that will increase the odds of voiding the initiative and being considered "substantially the same," a bill that provides greater local control and participation than the former program did (and HB 106 would have) could only help the effort.

Re: Review of 11ACMP Initiative Application
A.G. File No. JU2011200659

Dear Lieutenant Governor Treadwell:

You have asked us to review an application for an initiative entitled "An Act establishing the Alaska Coastal Management Program." Despite numerous potential constitutional concerns with this initiative bill as discussed herein, and numerous irregularities involving draftsmanship, inconsistencies, and ambiguities in the bill itself, the application complies with the specific constitutional and statutory provisions governing the initiative process and we therefore recommend that you certify the application.

I. SUMMARY OF THE PROPOSED BILL

A. BRIEF SUMMARY AND BACKGROUND

The bill proposed by this initiative would create an Alaska Coastal Management Program (hereafter "ACMP"). In 2005, the legislature repealed the state's prior coastal management program with an effective sunset date of July 1, 2011.[1] On June 28, 2011, the legislature adjourned the second of two special sessions without passing legislation required to extend the prior coastal management program. Because the prior coastal management program was fully repealed, the similarities and differences between this initiative bill and the prior program are irrelevant unless expressly noted otherwise. Therefore we must analyze the initiative bill on its own merits.

B. SECTIONAL SUMMARY

The bill proposed by this initiative is 15 pages long, double-spaced, and consists of one designated section containing 18 new statutory provisions. The bill amends Title 46 of the Alaska Statutes by adding a new chapter entitled "Alaska Coastal Management Program." The 18 new statutory provisions are summarized as follows:

- AS 46.41.010. Coastal Policy Board. This provision would create operational criteria for a 13-member Coastal Policy Board in the Department of Commerce, Community and Economic Development (hereafter "the Department of Commerce"). The 13 governor-appointed members would include nine coastal resource district representatives and the four state commissioners from the Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation, the Alaska Department of Fish and Game, the Alaska Department of Natural Resources, and the Alaska Department of Commerce.

- AS 46.41.020. Powers and duties of the board. This provision describes the proposed powers and duties of the Coastal Policy Board. In significant part, this provision would require the Coastal Policy Board to develop an interagency program of strategic coastal and ocean planning for each geographic region of the state. The provision also lists a number of other duties, such as to direct the Department of Commerce to seek required federal approval of the ACMP; to review, approve, and evaluate coastal district management plans; to establish coordination among state agencies to facilitate the ACMP; to contract for necessary services; to apply for and accept grants, contributions, and appropriations; and to review and approve regulations necessary to implement the coastal management program under this chapter and the federal Coastal Zone Management Act.

- AS 46.41.030. Division of Coastal Management. This provision would create a division of ocean and coastal management within the Department of Commerce. The division's duties would include issuing state consistency determinations and responding to federal consistency determinations and certifications; adopting regulations approved by the Coastal Policy Board; providing data and information to coastal districts to carry out their planning and management functions; and developing and maintaining a financial assistance program to help coastal districts.

- AS 46.41.040. Development of Alaska Coastal Management Program. This provision would direct the promulgation of regulations for statewide coastal standards, and the criteria and procedures for the preparation and approval of district coastal management plans and consistency review procedures for coastal projects. It would also restore the coastal districts, coastal district boundaries, and approved coastal management plans that were in effect as of June 30, 2011.

- AS 46.41.050. Objectives. This provision establishes objectives for the ACMP, which are largely the same as those in the prior coastal management program. The provision adds that the coast should be used, managed, restored, and enhanced "for this and succeeding generations." It also adds three objectives: (1) the coordination of coastal planning among government and citizens; (2) public and government participation in the program; and (3) the requirement that state agencies comply with the program.

- AS 46.41.060. Development of district coastal management plans. This provision would require coastal districts to develop and adopt district coastal management plans, and would provide requirements for the plans and for the plans' policies.

- AS 46.41.070. Submission of district plans by coastal districts. This provision would require coastal districts to review their coastal management plans within one year after the effective date of implementing regulations and submit any necessary changes to the plans to the Department of Commerce for review and approval by the Coastal Policy Board.

- AS 46.41.080. Implementation of district coastal management plans. This provision would require districts to implement plans when the district has and exercises zoning or other controls on the use of resources within the district. Where a district does not have or exercise zoning or other controls on the use of resources, state agencies would implement the district plan.

- AS 46.41.090. Compliance and enforcement. This provision would require municipalities and state resource agencies to administer land and water use regulations or controls in conformity with district plans, and states that the superior court has jurisdiction to enforce lawful orders of the board and the Department of Commerce.

- AS 46.41.100. Coastal management plans in the unorganized borough. This provision would require coastal resource service areas in unorganized boroughs to exercise all authorities and perform duties required by the chapter.

- AS 46.41.110. Coastal resource service areas. This provision would provide for the establishment of coastal resource service areas and allow such areas to be geographically linked to pre-existing regional educational attendance areas established under AS 14.08.031.

- AS 46.41.120. Organization of a coastal resource service area. This provision would permit the organization of coastal resource service areas by petition of voters within the area or by resolution approved by the relevant city or village council and submitted to the voters at an election at the council's request.

- AS 46.41.130. Coastal resource service area boards. This provision would create elected boards consisting of seven members each, representing the population of the coastal resource service areas. The boards would have the powers and duties of coastal districts.

- AS 46.41.140. Elections in coastal resource service areas. This provision would establish that the lieutenant governor would administer elections of board members of coastal resource service areas and could adopt regulations for these elections.

- AS 46.41.150. Preparation of district coastal management program by the Department of Commerce. This provision would allow the Coastal Policy Board to submit a district plan to the legislature for consideration if a coastal resource service area rejects organization. At the request of the Coastal Policy Board, the Department of Commerce would complete a district plan for a coastal resource service area that has been organized but that has failed on its own to make substantial progress in the plan.

- AS 46.41.160. Approval of plans in coastal resource service areas. This provision would create a process through which district coastal management plans would be submitted for review to each city or village within the applicable coastal resource service area, which would then have 60 days to approve or object to the plan.

- AS 46.41.170. Cooperative administration. This provision would include a city within an adjacent coastal resource service area if it is in a coastal area but is not part of the coastal resource service area, unless the city opts out by resolution. The provision further specifies that the chapter as a whole does not restrict or prohibit cooperative or joint administration of functions between a municipality and a coastal resource service area.

- AS 46.41.180. Construction with other laws. This provision would set forth the relationship between the new chapter and state jurisdiction, state requirements imposed under federal law, and municipal zoning and planning authority.

- AS 46.41.900. Definitions. This provision would set out definitions for the new chapter 41.

II. ANALYSIS

Under AS 15.45.070, the lieutenant governor must review an application for a proposed initiative and within 60 calendar days of receipt either "certify it or notify the initiative committee of the grounds for denial." The application for the 11ACMP initiative was filed on October 7, 2011. The 60th calendar day after the filing date is December 6, 2011. Under AS 15.45.080, certification shall only be denied if: (1) the proposed bill to be initiated is not confined to one subject or is otherwise not in the required form; (2) the application is not substantially in the required form; or (3) there is an insufficient number of qualified sponsors.

A. FORM OF THE PROPOSED BILL

In evaluating an initiative application, you must determine whether the application is in its "proper form."[2] Specifically, you must inquire whether the application complies with "the legal procedures for placing an initiative on the ballot, and whether the initiative contains statutorily or constitutionally prohibited subjects which should not reach the ballot."[3]

The form of a proposed initiative bill is prescribed by AS 15.45.040, which requires that: (1) the bill be confined to one subject; (2) the subject be expressed in the title; (3) the enacting clause state, "Be it enacted by the People of the State of Alaska"; and (4) the bill not include prohibited subjects. The prohibited subjects, which are identified in AS 15.45.010 and article XI, section 7 of the Alaska Constitution, are: (1) dedication of revenue; (2) the making or repealing of appropriations; (3) the creation of courts, the definition of their jurisdiction, or prescribing rules of court; and (4) the enactment of local or special legislation.

This initiative bill meets the first three requirements. It is confined to one subject, the Alaska Coastal Management Program; the subject is expressed in the title, "An Act establishing the Alaska Coastal Management Program"; and the required enacting clause is present.

Although there are concerns as to whether the initiative bill complies with the requirement that it not contain a prohibited subject, the Alaska Supreme Court has adopted a "deferential attitude toward initiatives,"[4] and has consistently recognized that the constitutional and statutory provisions pertaining to the use of the initiative should be liberally construed in favor of allowing an initiative to reach the ballot.[5] Accordingly, we have analyzed the bill with these principles in mind and conclude that the initiative bill contains no prohibited subject. As such, the fourth requirement relating to the form of the bill is therefore satisfied.

1. Does the Bill Make an Appropriation?

Six provisions of this initiative bill appear at first blush to implicate the restriction against making an appropriation by initiative.[6] When viewed in the context of the entire initiative bill and the case law governing appropriations in such bills, however, none of these six provisions constitutes a prohibited appropriation. In reaching this conclusion, we are mindful of the firmly-held principle that unless an initiative bill is "clearly unconstitutional," it should reach the ballot and be left to the voters to decide.[7] "Merely doubtful" legality is not enough.[8] Because no provision of the bill makes a clearly unconstitutional appropriation, certification should not be denied on that basis.

Under article XI, section 7 of the Alaska Constitution and AS 15.45.010, the initiative process may not be used to "make or repeal appropriations." The Alaska Supreme Court has held that these provisions "prohibit an initiative whose primary object is to require the outflow of state assets" in the form of either land or money.[9] A key element in determining whether an initiative makes an appropriation is whether the initiative bill would "designate the use of state assets in a manner that is executable, mandatory, and reasonably definite with no further legislative action."[10] Specifically, the analysis is whether the initiative sets aside specific sums of money for a specific purpose that is "ascertainable" and "definite," as opposed to being "ancillary," "incidental," or "redundant."[11] The Alaska Supreme Court has found that laws that "merely create new government programs or liabilities do not constitute appropriations" in the context of initiatives.[12] Indeed, the lieutenant governor must include in the petition booklets that circulate after certification "an estimate of the cost to the state of implementing the proposed law."[13] Moreover the legislature in fact anticipates that implementing a law appropriately enacted by initiative will have associated costs, and the existence of such costs does not alone constitute an appropriation.

The first provision in question would require the Department of Commerce "to apply for and accept grants, contributions, and appropriations, including application for and acceptance of federal funds that may become available for coastal planning and management."[14] This provision does not designate the use of state assets, but merely directs a state agency to seek funding sources for coastal planning and management. This provision therefore does not make an appropriation.

Second, the bill creates a Division of Ocean and Coastal Management.[15] This proposed division would have four tasks: (1) to respond to all federal consistency determinations and certifications authorized by the federal Coastal Zone Management Act and issue state consistency determinations; (2) to adopt regulations; (3) to assure continued provision of data and information to coastal districts to carry out planning and management functions; and (4) to develop and maintain a program of financial assistance.

Although this portion of the bill creates a new division in the Department of Commerce, as noted above the mere creation of a government program or entity does not of itself constitute a prohibited appropriation.[16] The Alaska Supreme Court adopted this principle in McAlpine v. University of Alaska, when it cited favorably to case law concluding that an initiative establishing a government program does not violate the prohibition against the use of initiatives for appropriation if the initiative itself commits no assets to the program. The funding level for the program still "rests within the power" of the legislature, and that is dispositive.[17] The legislature would have complete discretion to determine what types and levels of funding the new division would receive, and further legislative action would be required to appropriate any funds for that purpose. The creation of this division does not "designate the use of state assets in a manner that is executable, mandatory, and reasonably definite with no further legislative action."[18] Nor does creation of the division set aside specific sums of money for a specific purpose that is "ascertainable" and "definite."[19] Indeed, the provision designates the use of no state assets at all. An unfunded mandate is not an appropriation. The fact that a new agency would have costs, potentially including personnel and operating expenses, does not render the creation of the agency an appropriation. Accordingly, the creation of the division and its duties, without more, does not amount to a prohibited appropriation.

The third provision in question would require the Division of Ocean and Coastal Management to "develop and maintain a program of financial assistance to aid coastal districts in the development and implementation of district coastal management plan." [sic].[20] This provision simply directs the Division of Ocean and Coastal Management to develop and maintain a program of financial assistance. It creates a new government program, but says nothing about how, or from what source, such a program would be funded. And it does not designate the use of state assets at all, much less in a manner that is executable, mandatory, and reasonably definite with no further legislative action. This provision therefore does not make an appropriation.

The fourth and fifth such provisions provide that members and alternates of the Coastal Policy Board and members of the Coastal Resource Service Area Boards would be entitled to per diem and travel expenses "authorized by law for members of boards and commissions."[21] Although these provisions technically entitle board members to state funds in the form of per diem and travel expenses, these expenses are, by the express terms of the provisions, no different than those already authorized for members of boards and commissions. The per diem expenses and travel expenses do not set aside any specific amount of state assets, but rather are incidental liabilities that flow from the creation of the new government program and its implementing boards, and by the express terms of the bill are no different from the state liability that accrues to any other board or commission. Further, the outflow of state assets is clearly not the primary object of this bill. Thus, this provision is likely not a prohibited appropriation.[22]

Finally, the bill provides that "the state shall pay all election costs" to administer and conduct the elections of coastal resource service area board members.[23] Again, the elections system created by this initiative bill and the costs of implementing that system are incidental and ancillary to the creation of the program rather than its primary objective, and no specific amount of state assets is set aside or dedicated to cover the costs of these elections. This is likewise not a prohibited appropriation.

2. Does the Bill Dedicate Revenue?

This initiative bill proposes a new "objectives" statute, providing in part that "[t]he Alaska coastal management program shall be consistent with the following objectives ... the recognition of the need for a ... contribution of a share of the state's resources to meet national energy needs."[24] Under article XI, section 7 of the Alaska Constitution, the initiative process may not be used to "dedicate revenues." Likewise, under AS 15.45.010, an initiative "may not be proposed to dedicate revenue."

The vague "objective" of "recognition" of an ongoing need to utilize an unspecified type or amount of state resources does not amount to the dedication of revenue, so this provision does not violate that prohibition.

22 A similar analysis would apply to proposed AS 46.41.010(i), requiring department staff to provide administrative support for the board and requiring the department, at the board's direction, to contract with or employ personnel or consultants the department considers necessary to assist the board in carrying out its duties and responsibilities.

23 Proposed AS 46.41.140.

24 Proposed AS 46.41.050(7) (emphasis added).

3. Does the Bill Define the Jurisdiction of Courts?

This initiative bill contains a provision that would give Alaska's superior courts "jurisdiction to enforce lawful orders of the board and the department under this chapter."[25] Accordingly, this provision raises the question whether the initiative bill "defines the jurisdiction of courts" in violation of the constitutional and statutory provisions governing the use of the initiative. Because the provision neither limits nor expands the existing jurisdiction of the superior court, we conclude that it does not define the jurisdiction of courts.

Under article XI, section 7 of the Alaska Constitution and AS 15.45.010, the initiative process may not be used to "define the jurisdiction of courts." The Alaska Supreme Court has not interpreted this particular restriction, but minutes from the Alaska Constitutional Convention reveal that the delegates were concerned primarily with the creation of special courts for special purposes by use of the initiative.[26]

Article IV, section 3 of the Alaska Constitution establishes the superior court as "the trial court of general jurisdiction" in the state. This constitutional provision is implemented by statute at AS 22.10.010-AS 22.10.190. Alaska Statute 22.10.020(a) provides that "[t]he superior court is the trial court of general jurisdiction, with original jurisdiction in all civil and criminal matters ...." The Alaska Supreme Court has held that trial courts of general jurisdiction such as the superior court have "traditionally been regarded as having the power to hear all controversies which may be brought before a court within legal bounds of rights or remedies, except insofar as has been expressly and unequivocally denied by the state's constitution or statutes."[27]

In giving the superior court "jurisdiction to enforce lawful orders of the board and the department under this chapter,"[28] the initiative bill does not limit the existing jurisdiction of the superior court or confer upon the court any jurisdiction it does not already have under the Alaska Constitution and statutes." It is not clear from the bill exactly what "orders" of the board this provision intends to cover, but read in context, the provision seems aimed at ensuring access to judicial process—not at "defining" jurisdiction of the courts.

Although the precise meaning and intent of the proposed AS 46.40.090(b) is somewhat ambiguous, defining the jurisdiction of the court system is manifestly not an aim of this bill. Even a strict construction of the initiative restrictions in this case favors adherence to the long-standing principle that the people should generally have liberal access to the initiative process, and we have previously resolved similar ambiguities in favor of certification.[29] So we conclude that the initiative bill does not contain a prohibited subject with respect to defining the jurisdiction of courts.

4. Does the Bill Raise Any Additional Constitutional Concerns?

We note that this initiative bill is long and complex. In places, the bill is not clearly drafted and contains a number of typographical errors, inconsistencies, and ambiguities. Also, some provisions potentially raise specific constitutional issues or give rise to constitutional concerns.

For example, proposed AS 46.41.040(b) may raise potential due process issues with respect to implementation. That provision states that "the coastal districts, coastal district boundaries and approved coastal management plans that were in effect as of June 30, 2011 are in effect and are incorporated into the Alaska Coastal Management Program." This raises questions concerning the immediate application of these district plans to projects, given that the consistency review provisions will not be in place until adopted as regulations under AS 46.41.040(a)(2) and approved by the U.S. Department of Commerce under the Federal Coastal Zone Management Act as required in AS 46.41.020(a)(2). Similarly, the Division of Coastal Management will not be able to issue state responses on federal consistency determinations and certifications under AS 46.41.030(b) until the program is approved by the U.S. Department of Commerce.

[29] 2009 Op. Alaska Att'y Gen. (July 2) at 13 (finding that where provisions of an initiative bill possibly implicated the prohibition on prescribing court rules, that conclusion was "not so clear that we can recommend that [the Lt. Governor] deny certification of [the] initiative application.").

AS 46.41.040(b) raises potential due process problems under article I, section 7 of the Alaska Constitution and delegation of legislative authority issues under article II, section 1 because of the ambiguity and lack of standards for application of the local district plans in this interim period. However, a court is likely to interpret these provisions to avoid these constitutional infirmities[30] by applying these local district plan requirements to project reviews only after the scope of such projects and the consistency review procedures are defined in the regulations required by AS 46.41.040(a)(2) and those regulations are submitted and approved by the U.S. Department of Commerce as called for by proposed AS 46.41.020(a)(2).

Another potential problem involves pre-emption issues under the Alaska Constitution and the supremacy clause of the federal constitution with respect to the application of certain local district standards. Many of these potential pre-emption issues will not arise or become clear until the statewide and district coastal standards are adopted under AS 46.41.040(a)(1) and (2). Depending on how AS 46.41.060(b)(2), (c) and AS 46.41.180 are interpreted and implemented, and on what factual basis, these pre-emption and conflict of law issues may not arise. The same is true for any argument that differing coastal district enforceable policies may invoke equal protection concerns under article I, section 1 of the Alaska Constitution.

At this point, these provisions should be construed in favor of constitutionality.[31] You have the authority to deny certification if you determine that the measure violates any of the liberally construed restrictions on initiatives—the constitutional and statutory provisions regulating initiatives.[32] As discussed above, we do not believe such violations exist. With respect to other constitutional challenges "grounded in general contentions that the provisions of an initiative are unconstitutional," you may deny certification only 30 Where it is reasonable to do so, the Alaska Supreme Court "will construe statutes to avoid constitutional problems." See, e.g., Whitesides v. State, Dep't of Public Safety, Div. of Motor Vehicles, 20 P.3d 1130, 1139 (Alaska 2001) (citing Chenega Corp. v. Exxon Corp., 991 P.2d 769, 785 (Alaska 1999)).

31 See, e.g., Whitesides, 20 P.3d at 1139.

if "controlling authority leaves no room for argument about its unconstitutionality."[33] We find no such authority. In sum, we cannot say that these provisions are clearly unconstitutional on their face, or that the people should be denied access to the initiative process on that basis.

Finally, we should note that a court may sever impermissible portions of a proposed initiative bill during a pre-election review.[34]

B. FORM OF THE APPLICATION

The form of an initiative application is prescribed in AS 15.45.030, which provides:

> The application must include the
> (1) proposed bill;
> (2) printed name, the signature, the address, and a numerical identifier of not fewer than 100 qualified voters who will serve as sponsors; each signature page must include a statement that the sponsors are qualified voters who signed the application with the proposed bill attached; and
> (3) designation of an initiative committee consisting of three of the sponsors who subscribed to the application and represent all sponsors and subscribers in matters relating to the initiative; the designation must include the name, mailing address, and signature of each committee member.

33 Id. (internal citations and quotations omitted).

34 Specifically, severance is appropriate where "(1) standing alone, the remainder of the proposed bill can be given legal effect; (2) deleting the impermissible portion would not substantially change the spirit of the measure; and (3) it is evident from the content of the measure and the circumstances surrounding its proposal that the sponsors and subscribers would prefer the measure to stand as altered, rather than to be invalidated in its entirety." McAlpine, 762 P.2d at 94.

The application meets the first and third requirements, as well as the latter portion of the second requirement regarding the statement on the signature page. With respect to the first clause of the second requirement, we understand that the Division of Elections has determined that the application contains the signatures and addresses of not fewer than 100 qualified voters.

C. NUMBER OF QUALIFIED SPONSORS

As noted above, we understand that the Division of Elections has determined that the application contains the signatures and addresses of not fewer than 100 qualified voters.

III. PROPOSED BALLOT AND PETITION SUMMARY

We have prepared a ballot-ready petition summary and title for your consideration. It is our practice to provide you with a summary and title to assist you in compliance with AS 15.45.090(2) and AS 15.45.180. Under AS 15.45.180, the title of an initiative is limited to 25 words and the body of the summary is limited to the number of sections in the proposed law multiplied by 50. "Section" in AS 15.45.180 is defined as "a provision of the proposed law that is distinct from other provisions in purpose or subject matter."

Technically this initiative bill has only one "section," but this single section creates an entire new chapter of the Alaska Statues consisting of 18 new statutory provisions governing a complex new program. All of these provisions are distinguishable in purpose, if not subject matter. If the bill were treated as a single section, the summary would be limited to 50 words. Alaska Statute 15.45.180 requires that the ballot proposition "give a true and impartial summary" of an initiative bill, and the Alaska Supreme Court has held that such a summary should provide "an accurate depiction of the scope and substance of the initiative."[35]

It is not possible to accomplish these mandates by summarizing this initiative bill in 50 or fewer words. So we think the proper approach is to treat these 18 provisions as separate sections for purposes of summary preparation. Therefore the maximum number of words for the summary may not exceed 900. We have used 703 words in the summary and seven words in the title of the following proposed summary, which we submit for your review:

This bill would create the Alaska Coastal Management Program in the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development ("the Department"). The program would develop new state and local standards to review projects in coastal areas of the State. These standards would be in addition to existing state and federal permitting requirements. Both state and federally permitted projects would be reviewed under the program. The program would go into effect upon federal approval of these new state and local standards by the U.S. Department of Commerce under the federal Coastal Zone Management Act.

The bill creates a Coastal Policy Board. The board would have 13 members appointed by the governor. Nine would be members of the public from coastal areas. 4 would be state commissioners. The board would coordinate agencies for coastal and ocean planning. The board would work with agencies to develop and implement the program. The board would also review, approve, and evaluate coastal district management plans ("district plans"). The board would direct the Department to apply for funding. The board would review and approve regulations. Board members could receive per diem and travel expenses.

The bill sets out 9 coastal districts. Each district would adopt a district plan. District plans would need board approval. To be approved, the district plan must comply with the bill's provisions and regulations approved by the board. Each district plan would set boundaries for the coastal area subject to the district plan. District plans would define the land and water uses subject to the district plan's requirements. District plans would also set special management areas and enforceable policies. The bill sets standards for district enforceable policies. The bill defines when an enforceable policy is pre-empted by existing state or federal law.

The bill would restore coastal districts, boundaries, and district plans that were in effect on June 30, 2011 under the prior coastal management program. Coastal districts would have to review their prior district plans and submit any needed changes for board approval. Coastal districts with zoning or land use authority would use those powers to apply their district plans. Otherwise, state agencies would put the district plan into effect. Local and state agencies would regulate uses to conform to the district plans. The superior court could enforce board or department orders.

The bill would also create the Division of Ocean and Coastal Management in the Department. This division would issue state consistency determinations and respond to federal consistency determinations and certifications. It would adopt board-approved regulations. It would also give planning and management information to coastal districts. The division would create a financial aid program to help coastal districts create and effect their district plans.

The bill sets goals for the program. These goals include (1) management goals for coastal uses and resources; (2) the coordination of coastal planning among government and citizens; (3) public and government participation in the program; and (4) require state agencies to comply with the program.

The bill requires that regulations be adopted. The regulations would be approved by the board and then issued by the division. They would set state coastal standards, district plan requirements, and consistency review procedures.

The bill would allow regional education attendance areas ("REAAs") in the unorganized borough to be used as Coastal Resource Service Areas ("CRSAs"). CRSAs would act through a board and function like coastal districts. The Department could combine or divide REAAs into CRSAs under set conditions. A coastal city could also be included in a CRSA under set conditions. CRSAs could also be created by voters or by a voter-approved city or village council decision. Service areas would elect boards with seven members. The State would run and fund CRSA board elections. Under some circumstances, board members could be appointed. Board members could be recalled. They could receive per diem and travel expenses. If voters fail to create a needed service area, the Department could create a district plan for the area to submit to the legislature. Under set conditions, the Department could complete a district plan for a CRSA. The bill creates a development, approval and implementation process for district plans in service areas.

The bill sets out rules of construction and defines 16 terms.

Should this initiative become law?

This summary has a Flesch test score of 52.8 and thus approximates the target readability score of 60 set out in AS 15.80.005. We have tried to use simple words to summarize the complex subject matter of this initiative to ensure that the summary meets the statutory readability standards set forth in AS 15.80.005.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, we find that the proposed bill and application are in the proper form and that the application complies with the constitutional and statutory provisions governing the use of the initiative. We therefore recommend that you certify the initiative application and notify the initiative committee of your decision. You may then begin to prepare petitions in accordance with AS 15.45.090.

Please contact me if we can be of further assistance in this matter.

Subject: FASD Panel before House Judiciary on March 28

Hi Melanie,

I'm writing to follow-up on the idea of a 15-minute panel before the House Judiciary Commimttee on the topic of FASD and the Justice System.

The panelists will be in Juneau for an FASD Justice Summit, hosted by the Alaska FASD Partnership, on March 28.

They include: Superior Court Judge Mike Jeffery, Barrow; Dee Dee Raymond, Mental Health Release Program/DOC; Trish Smith, Prevention Director/Volunteers of America-Anchorage, Stephanie Johnson, Mental Health/Nome Youth Facility; and Jeri Museth, Wellness Director, Central Council Tlingit & Haida Indian Tribes of Alaska/Juneau.

They would be prepared to give a short presentation on the prevalence of fetal alcohol spectrum disorders in Alaska's criminal justice system and solutions being implemented, followed by an opportunity to answer questions by the committee.

Before presenting to the committee, the panelists (as part of the FASD Justice Summit) will have met with the Juneau Mental Health Court, Juneau Public Defender's Agency, and Juneau Office of Public Advocacy, the statewide director of the Division of Juvenile Justice, and Barrow Superior Court Judge Michael Jeffery, who has been addressing FASD issues in his court for many years.

As a bit of background, our boards (see signature below) coordinate the Alaska FASD Partnership, the sponsoring entity for the FASD Justice Summit.The goal of the summit is to strategize and put into place efforts to address fetal alcohol spectrum disorders within the criminal justice system. The "FASD and the Legal System Workgroup" of the Partnership has been working for nearly two years on issues related to FASD and the justice system.

Thanks again for your willingness to consider this. If it works out great, if not, thanks for trying!

House Judiciary Committee
Alaska State Legislature
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Dear Representative,

It is with great pleasure that the Alaska FASD Partnership supports HB 367 to include FASD as a mitigating factor in sentencing.

The intent underlying Alaska's sentencing structure – that people will modify their behaviors based on the criminal justice system's response to their crimes – is not met when applied to individuals with FASD. These disabilities manifest as deficits in executive function, resulting in impaired adaptive behavior, memory difficulties, an inability to plan, and a failure to recognize the consequences of actions. In the interest of justice, it is important to take these deficits into account during sentencing. Neither the offender nor society benefits from holding individuals with FASD to community standards that they cannot possibly attain given their impairments.

The cost of incarceration in Alaska's prison is about $136 per day. Over the course of five to ten years in an Alaskan prison, an inmate is expected to cost the state close to $250,000-$500,000 (not including medical, mental health or other specialized treatment while incarcerated).

The cost of intensive case management, including electronic monitoring and probation/parole, is about $76 per day ($48 for intensive case management, $21 for electronic monitoring, $7 for probation/parole) – for a savings of $21,900 per person, per year.[1]

According to the 2009 ISER Study, The Cost of Crime: Could the State Reduce Future Crime and Save Money by Expanding Education and Treatment Programs?" the cost of providing services is less than the cost of incarceration. With appropriate supports, clients with FASD and other brain-based disabilities can live successfully in the community as contributing citizens, and provide jobs for Alaskan case workers, clinicians, assisted living providers, mental health and substance abuse counselors, psychologists and psychiatrists. Not only does HB 367 further the cause of justice for a vulnerable population, it represents a better investment of our state's resources.

Additionally, the state's movement toward "Smart Justice" aims to promote reduced public costs, fewer crimes, and a greater rehabilitative effect on offenders. While some offenders are clearly dangerous enough and need long-term incarceration, the research behind "Smart Justice" suggests that for certain non-violent offenders, treatment programs inside the prison, combined with adequate transition and case management services, will result in lower costs, less recidivism, and a safer general public.

Thank you for the time and effort you have put into supporting this important effort.

The Need for SB 151/HB 367

Individuals diagnosed with a fetal alcohol spectrum disorder (FASD) are disproportionately represented within Alaska's criminal justice system. The intent underlying Alaska's sentencing structure – that people will modify their behaviors based on the criminal justice system's response to their crimes – is not met when applied to individuals with FASD. These disabilities manifest as deficits in executive function, resulting in impaired adaptive behavior, memory difficulties, an inability to plan, and a failure to recognize the consequences of actions. In the interest of justice, it is important to take these deficits into account during sentencing. Neither the offender nor society benefits from holding individuals with FASD to community standards that they cannot possibly attain given their impairments.

SB 151/HB 367 fulfills a recommendation adopted by the Alaska Criminal Justice Assessment Commission: "The legislature should create a statutory mitigating factor for use at criminal sentencing, recognizing when the wrongful conduct was substantially affected by an organic brain disorder."[1]

A draft resolution being proposed by the Commission on Youth At Risk of the American Bar Association for consideration at this year's annual ABA meeting states: "... the American Bar Association urges lawyers and judges, as well as bar associations and law school clinical programs, to support training that includes law school law enforcement, and legal/judicial education curricula on enhanced awareness of the child and adult disability of Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders (FASD) and its impact on individuals in the child welfare, juvenile justice, and adult criminal justice systems, and that they work with medical, mental health, and FASD disability experts to promote: ... (d) applying FASD as a mitigating factor in the mitigation of juvenile justice and criminal sentencing ... and consideration of alternatives to incarceration that reduce recidivism."

Overview of the changes proposed in SB 151/HB 367

SB 151/HB 367 proposes to allow FASD as a mitigating factor for sentencing in certain cases where there is clear and convincing evidence that a "defendant committed [an] offense while suffering from a condition diagnosed as a fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, the fetal alcohol spectrum disorder substantially impaired the defendant's judgment, behavior, capacity to recognize reality, or ability to cope with the ordinary demands of life, and the fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, though insufficient to constitute a complete defense, significantly affected the defendant's conduct."

SB 151/HB 367 would, for the purposes of the subsection on mitigating factors, define fetal alcohol spectrum disorder as any "a condition of impaired brain function in the range of permanent birth defects caused by maternal consumption of alcohol during pregnancy."

[1] Alaska Criminal Justice Assessment Commission (2000). Final Report. Retrieved October 12, 2010 from www.hss.aic.state.ak.us/reports/CJAC Final 2004.pdf, at p.71.

The legislation DOES NOT:

1) require a judge to use the mitigating factor;
2) automatically adjust a presumptive sentence; the defendant would have to prove by clear and convincing evidence 1) that he or she has a fetal alcohol spectrum disorder and 2) that the condition "significantly affected the defendant's conduct" before the judicial officer can consider the possibility of adjusting the presumptive sentence; or
3) the goal is not a "get out of jail free" card, but an attempt to be "smarter" within the justice system to better direct people who have impaired brain function to services both within and after release from the criminal justice system.

What are mitigating factors?

The Legislature has decided in the presumptive sentencing law that judges should give jail time within certain ranges in all felonies (with the exception of "class C felonies" where the minimum presumptive term is 0 years). The amount of the presumptive term depends on the severity of the crime and whether or not a defendant has prior felonies. There are 34 statutory aggravating factors that could result in a sentence above the presumptive range, if proved by clear and convincing evidence. A judge must sentence a person to at least the minimum presumptive term unless a "mitigating factor" is shown by clear and convincing evidence. There are 19 statutory mitigating factors. With the current mental disease or defect mitigating factor, the defendant must also show by clear and convincing evidence that the condition "significantly affected the defendant's conduct." The proposed fetal alcohol spectrum disorder mitigating factor also requires proof by clear and convincing evidence that the condition "significantly affected the defendant's conduct" before a judge could consider it. If the required showing has been made for any mitigating factor, it is legally possible for the judge to sentence below the minimum term (but if the minimum term is more than 4 years, the lower limit is half the minimum presumptive term).

There are special rules when there is a factor in a case that does not fit within the statutory list but which is so important in a case that it would be manifestly unjust to sentence a person without considering the factor. If the sentencing judge finds that such a "non statutory mitigating factor" exists, then the judge must refer the case to a three judge sentencing panel. If at least two judges on the panel agree, the panel can sentence with the same lower limits applicable to a statutory mitigating factor. If the panel does not agree, the case is referred back to the original judge to impose at least the minimum presumptive term. The "three judge panel" method is very cumbersome, time consuming and expensive. SB 151/HB 367 is a "statutory mitigating factor" and would not require any referral to a three judge sentencing panel.

What are Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders?

FASD is not a medical diagnosis, but an umbrella term for the range of diagnoses associated with damage caused by maternal alcohol consumption during pregnancy. These medical diagnoses can include Fetal Alcohol Syndrome (FAS), Partial Fetal Alcohol Syndrome (PFAS), Alcohol-Related Birth Defects (ARBD), and Alcohol-Related Neurodevelopmental Disorder (ARND). Note that the term, Fetal Alcohol Effects (FAE), is no longer commonly used, having been replaced by the PFAS, ARBD and ARND diagnoses.

Each diagnosis has its own symptoms and attributes, but common among all the diagnoses is permanent, life-long brain damage – often affecting decision-making, judgment and impulse control.

FASD is a brain-based disorder, similar to autism, traumatic and acquired brain injury, and other cognitive impairments.

FASDs appear in individuals differently. Some alcohol-exposed individuals may exhibit impulsivity, hyperactivity and risky behaviors. Some have difficulties with memory, while others have very good memories. Some have low IQs, while others have normal IQs.

Experts report that the different presentations are influenced by many variables, including when the mother drank, how much she drank, the genetic makeup (or genotype) of the baby, and the genotype of the mother.

Primary behavior characteristics of people with impaired brain function include: impulsiveness, memory difficulties, anger and frustration, difficulty pairing actions to consequences. Secondary behaviors that develop in reaction to or as a result of the primary disability, include substance abuse and mental health problems, anger and aggression, homelessness, involvement with the criminal justice system, and more.

Neurologist Dr. Susan Hunter-Joerns, a member of the Juneau FASD Diagnostic Team, wrote that structural brain damage "often significantly impair[s] cognitive behavior, common sense, the ability to understand right from wrong, cause-and-effect, consider consequences, ability to recognize social norm ... even though defendants may verbally seem able to talk about the issues. Making long term goals, planning appropriate actions, delaying gratification, and understanding the legal system, are often significant problems."

Who in Alaska is qualified to give a diagnosis of FAS/FASD?

Though some physicians may be qualified to diagnose all the disorders on the FASD spectrum, the preferred method of diagnosis, according to Susan Astley, Professor of Epidemiology and Pediatrics at the University of Washington and director of the Washington State FASD Diagnostic and Prevention Network, is by an interdisciplinary diagnostic team using current, rigorous FASD diagnostic guidelines. This preferred method is also advocated for nationally by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Each diagnosis on the spectrum requires evaluation and testing related to the Central Nervous System (CNS) to detect damage that cannot be measured alone by physical attributes. Interdisciplinary diagnostic teams using the 4-Digit Diagnostic Code include evaluations by a medical professional, psychologist, occupational therapist, and speech-language pathologist. These evaluations can detect the nuances of the disability.

How many diagnostic teams and/or physicians are available to give FASD diagnoses in Alaska?

Currently, through the Division of Behavioral Health FASD Diagnostic Team Provider Agreement, Alaska has eight active FASD diagnostic teams – in Bethel, Fairbanks, Mat-Su, Kenai, Juneau, Sitka, and two in Anchorage (Southcentral Foundation and ASSETS). Alaska also has a trained diagnostic team at Alaska Psychiatric Institute (API) for children who enter the service system through that door. In the past there were teams in Dillingham and Kodiak — both locations that are interested in reviving their teams at some point, but do not have the resources to do it at this time. Alaska also has had team in Nome, Copper Center, and Ketchikan. The majority of FASD diagnoses in Alaska are determined by the diagnostic teams overseen by DHSS.

How many people are diagnosed with FAS/FASD in Alaska annually?

In 2011, Alaska's FASD diagnostic teams diagnosed 179 individuals. The average per year number is around 153 per year, according to the Alaska Department of Health & Social Services.

What is Alaska's diagnostic standard based on?

In 1999, the DHSS Office of FAS, in conjunction with the statewide FASD Steering Committee, agreed to use the 4-Digit Diagnostic Code as the standard diagnostic system for Alaska's developing Diagnostic Team Network. The 4-Digit Diagnostic Code was developed at the University of Washington's FASD Diagnostic and Prevention Network by Drs. Susan Astley and Sterling Clarren. The 4-Digit Diagnostic Code measures: 1) facial features, 2) growth deficiency, 3) central nervous system damage/dysfunction, and 4) prenatal alcohol exposure. The client's diagnosis is derived after a thorough evaluation by an interdisciplinary team of professionals, which generally includes a physician (or nurse practitioner), psychologist, occupational therapist, speech-language pathologist, social worker, and family advocate. For more information on the FASD 4-Digit Code, visit: http://depts.washington.edu/fasdpn/htmls/4-digit-code.htm.

The 4-Digit Diagnostic Code is considered the "gold standard" for FASD diagnosis and provides a reliable, evidence-based diagnostic process that gives detailed information about the individual client and how best to help that person work with their disability to reach their full potential. All team members are required to complete the University of Washington FASD 4-Digit Diagnostic Code Training Course.

The economic benefits of SB 151/HB 367

The cost of incarceration in Alaska's prison is about $136 per day. Over the course of five to ten years in an Alaskan prison, an inmate is expected to cost the state close to $250,000-$500,000 (not including medical, mental health or other specialized treatment while incarcerated).

The cost of intensive case management, including electronic monitoring and probation/parole, is about $76 per day ($48 for intensive case management, $21 for electronic monitoring, $7 for probation/ parole) – for a savings of $21,900 per person, per year.[2]

According to the 2009 ISER Study, The Cost of Crime: Could the State Reduce Future Crime and Save Money by Expanding Education and Treatment Programs?, the cost of providing services is less than the cost of incarceration. With appropriate supports, clients with FASD, T/ABI and other brain-based disabilities can live successfully in the community as contributing citizens, and provide jobs for Alaskan case workers, clinicians, assisted living providers, mental health and substance abuse counselors, psychologists and psychiatrists. Not only does SB 151/HB 367 further the cause of justice for a vulnerable population, it represents a better investment of our state's resources.

FASD in other jurisdictions

Judges nationwide are experiencing repeat offenders diagnosed with these disorders who, as a direct result of their disabilities, are effectively unable to understand the charges against them, or comply with the conditions of their sentence. There is a growing body of research affirming that FASDs are brain disorders effectively impairing "judgment, behavior, capacity to recognize reality, or ability to cope with the ordinary demands of life."

Kate Burkhart, attorney and executive director of the Alaska Advisory Board on Alcoholism and Drug abuse, wrote that the language in SB 151/HB 367 "is commensurate with the federal sentencing guidelines and other western state laws that provide for such a mitigating factor. While none of the western states surveyed expressly include FASD in their definitions of mental defect, Utah includes a broad definition that would include FASD. The other states and federal guidelines would permit but do not mandate consideration of FASDs in sentencing unless they impair comprehension or ability to form intent."

Burkhart noted that Utah defines "mental illness" as "a mental disease or defect that substantially impairs a person's mental, emotional, or behavioral functioning. A mental defect may be a congenital condition, the result of an injury, or residual effect of a physical or mental disease that includes, but is not limited to, mental retardation" which is further defined to mean "significant sub-average general intellectual functioning, existing concurrently with deficits in adaptive behavior."

Idaho permits consideration of mental condition creating an "inability to appreciate the wrongfulness" of conduct or to conform to legal requirements at sentencing."

Washington permits the courts to consider "the defendant's capacity to appreciate the wrongfulness of his or her conduct, or to conform his or her conduct to the requirements of the law, was significantly impaired."

Nationally, advocates within the American Bar Association are proposing a resolution urging lawyers, judges, bar associations and law school clinical programs to promote "applying FASD as a factor in the mitigation of juvenile and criminal sentencing ... and consideration of alternatives to incarceration that reduce recidivism." The resolution also asks, "that state and federal laws and policies reflect the serious effects of prenatal alcohol exposure by a) including persons diagnosed with FASD, or suffering from the affects of prenatal alcohol exposure, within the statutory definition of developmental disabilities ... and b) enhancing identification and diagnosis of ... persons with FASD." Their intent is that this resolution would be approved by the ABA House of Delegates at the annual meeting in Chicago in August 2012.

Internationally, Alaska is among the forerunners in awareness, diagnosis, and prevention of fetal alcohol spectrum disorders, both nationally and internationally. However, Canada and parts of Australia are leading the world in establishing laws and practices that address FASD as a brain-based disability with specific interventions and solutions.

The Canadian Bar Association passed a resolution in 2010 acknowledging that FASDs involve a range of neurological and behavioral challenges that can include "impaired mental functioning, poor executive functioning, memory problems, impaired judgment, inability to control impulse behavior, inability to understand the consequences of their actions, and inability to internally modify behavior control."

The resolution also acknowledged that "the criminal justice system is based on normative assumptions that a person acts in a voluntary manner, makes informed choices with respect to the decision to commit crimes, and learns from their own behavior and the behavior of others" and " these normative assumptions and sentencing principals such as specific and general deterrence, are not valid for those with FASDs.

Following are other highlights addressed in the CBA's resolution:

- sentencing options available to courts are often ineffective in changing the behavior of those with FASD and those with FASD are frequently repeat offenders

- some courts have ruled that absolutely no rehabilitative or deterrent purpose is served by incarceration of those with FASD;
- laws, programs or activities could ameliorate the disadvantages experienced by those with FASD whose behavior is judged on a standard that they are incapable of meeting because of their disability;
- the Canadian bar is resolved to urge the federal government to amend criminal sentencing laws to accommodate the disability of those with FASD.

In Heather Douglas' article, The sentencing response to defendants with fetal alcohol spectrum disorder (2010) published by Thomas Reuters in Australia, the author notes that "as a result of deficits in executive function resulting in memory difficulties, inability to plan and failure to recognize the consequences of actions, many of those with FASD are likely to fail to pay fines and to breach probation orders ... Suspended sentences will not be useful in a context where cause and effect is not understood. In prison, highly suggestible FASD sufferers are likely to be victimized. While FASD clients cannot be cured of all their symptoms, techniques and approaches have been identified that can be employed by professionals to help the person reach his or her potential."

Conclusion

The state's movement toward "Smart Justice" aims to promote reduced public costs, fewer crimes, and a greater rehabilitative effect on offenders. While some offenders are clearly dangerous enough and need long-term incarceration, the research behind "Smart Justice" suggests that for certain non-violent offenders, treatment programs inside the prison, combined with adequate transition and case management services, will result in lower costs, less recidivism and a safer general public.

Chasnoff, M.D., an international expert on FASD, wrote in an article "Is Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders a Mitigating Factor in Criminal Litigation and Sentencing?" in Psychology Today (2011), "We are in an ethical conundrum. Children, youth and young adults with FASD are more likely than not to end up before the court on criminal or civil charges, but the legal system has not come close to resolving how their cases should be treated. Most individuals with FASD have normal IQs, and most can relate a story as to how they ended up before the judge. Most can even state they understand the charges against them. But the truth is that neurocognitive damage that inhibits executive functioning, decision-making, and emotional and behavioral regulation has tremendous bearing on the capacity of these individuals to understand the ramifications of their actions. These people look normal, they speak normally, but they often have only a superficial understanding of the charges against them."

As noted by Canadian Judge Barry Stuart in R. v. Sam (1993), FASD takes away someone's "... ability to act within the norms expected by society." It is "manifestly unfair to make an individual pay for their disability with their freedom. Society is failed because a sentence calculated for a 'normal' offender cannot serve the same ends when imposed on an offender with FASD," he said. "Not only can traditionally calculated sentences be hopelessly ineffective when applied to FASD offenders, but the punishment itself, calibrated for a non-disabled individual, can have a substantially more severe effect on someone with the impairments associated with FASD," Judge Stuart concluded.

What are Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders (FASD)?

Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders (FASDs) are a range of birth defects caused by maternal consumption of alcohol during pregnancy. FASDs can include:

- Fetal Alcohol Syndrome (FAS)
- Partial Fetal Alcohol Syndrome (PFAS)
- Alcohol-Related Neurodevelopmental Disorder (ARND)
- Alcohol-Related Birth Defects (ARBD) and Fetal Alcohol Effect (FAE)
- Static encephalopathy (alcohol exposed)
- Neurobehavioral Disorder (alcohol exposed)

The term FASD is not in itself a clinical diagnosis, but describes the full range of disabilities that may result from prenatal alcohol exposure. Currently, the only expression of prenatal alcohol exposure that is defined by the International Statistical Classification of Diseases and Related Health Problems is FAS, assigned ICD-9 and ICD-10 diagnoses.

FASD-related disabilities result when alcohol crosses the placental barrier and causes the developing brain cells and structures in the fetus to be underdeveloped or malformed, causing permanent brain damage. Primary disabilities can include poor memory, attention deficits, impulsive behavior, and poor cause-and-effect reasoning. Secondary disabilities, or by-products of the primary disabilities, can include cognitive and behavioral problems, poor self-esteem, addiction disorders, homelessness and unemployability.

National prevalence rates for Fetal Alcohol Syndrome (FAS) range from 0.2 to 1.5 per 1,000 live births; prevalence rates for FASD were reported to occur approximately three times as often (Centers for Disease Control, 2004).

According to a 2007 report in the Journal of Psychological Practice, "FASD is of serious concern to behavioral health practitioners due to high prevalence rates, soaring economic costs, and lifelong implications of the disorder ... It is critical that practitioners working with children and families are aware of FASD and are prepared to screen for the disorder."

The Range of FASDs

Fetal Alcohol Syndrome (FAS) is a congenital medical condition which can include growth deficiency and body deformation, abnormal facial features, central nervous system damage, especially to the brain, and prenatal exposure to alcohol.

Partial Fetal Alcohol Syndrome (PFAS) is a diagnostic classification for patients who present with most, but not all, of the growth deficiency and/or facial features of FAS, central nervous system damage (structural, neurological and/or functional impairment), and prenatal exposure to alcohol.

Alcohol Related Neurodevelopmental Disorders (ARND)* is a diagnostic classification, coined by the Institute of Medicine in 1996, for patients who present with central nervous system damage (structural, neurological, and/or functional impairment).

Static encephalopathy (alcohol exposed)* The term encephalopathy refers to any significant abnormal condition of the structure or function of brain tissues. The term static means that the abnormality in the brain is unchanging – neither progressing nor regressing. This diagnostic classification is for patients who present with central nervous damage and prenatal alcohol exposure.

Neurobehavioral Disorder (alcohol exposed)* This is a diagnostic outcome classification for patients who present with central nervous system dysfunction (mild functional impairment with no evidence of structural or neurological abnormalities) and prenatal alcohol exposure.

* Note: Outcomes such as ARND, Static Encephalopathy (alcohol exposed), and Neurobehavioral Disorder (alcohol exposed) are more prevalent than FAS or partial FAS.

Alaska FASD Talking Points

- FASDs are a range of disabilities caused when a developing fetus is exposed to alcohol.
- The term FASD is not in itself a clinical diagnosis, but describes the full range of disabilities that may result from prenatal alcohol exposure, including Fetal Alcohol Syndrome (FAS), Partial Fetal Alcohol Syndrome (PFAS), Alcohol-Related Neurodevelopmental Disorder (ARND), Static encephalopathy (alcohol exposed) and Neurobehavioral Disorder (alcohol exposed).
- One of every four Alaskans dependent on or abusing alcohol is a woman, and one of every 25 women whose babies are born alive said she drank while pregnant, according to the Center for Behavioral Health Research and Services (UAA).
- This lifelong disability can include learning disabilities, problems with memory, heart and kidney problems, impulsiveness, poor judgment, mental retardation and severe emotional disturbance (SED).
- Alaska has the highest per capita rate of FASD in the United States.
- FASD is the most common known cause of mental retardation in the United States.
- FASDs are a leading cause of preventable and permanent birth defects in the United States.
- A person with an FASD without support is at high risk of developing secondary disabilities – such as alcoholism, drug abuse, depression, mental illness, and/or criminal behaviors.
- With early diagnosis, knowledge, and support – families, schools and communities can become better equipped to support a person with FASD and minimize or prevent the development of secondary disabilities.
- With the right supports, individuals with FASD can live productive and fulfilled lives.

FASD in Alaska's Correctional Institutions

Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders (FASDs) are a range of birth defects caused by maternal consumption of alcohol during pregnancy. These defects can arise when alcohol crosses the placental barrier and causes the developing brain cells and structures in the fetus to be underdeveloped or malformed, resulting in permanent brain damage. Primary disabilities include poor memory, attention deficits, impulsive behavior, and poor cause-and-effect reasoning. Secondary disabilities, or by-products of the primary disabilities, can include alcoholism, drug abuse, depression, mental illness, and/or criminal behaviors. Impulsive behavior and poor cause-and-effect reasoning are commonly at the root of criminal behaviors.

A 2006 evaluation by the University of Alaska Anchorage (UAA) Behavioral Health & Research Services, conducted surveys distributed to personnel at each of Alaska's correctional institutions:

- Estimated percentage of the inmates on current caseload who may have FAS = 27%
- Percentage of Corrections staff who have referred an inmate for FAS screening or diagnosis = 25%
- Percentage of Corrections staff who say they have the appropriate skills and knowledge to deal with alcohol abuse among the inmates or offenders on their caseload = 56%
- Percentage of Corrections staff who say they have the appropriate skills and knowledge to deal with offenders or inmates who have FASD = 55%
- Percentage of Corrections staff who say they have the support of their admini-stration to deal with inmates or offenders on their caseload who have FAS = 56%
- Percentage of Corrections staff who say the current social service programs within the correctional system are appropriate for inmates or offenders on their caseload who have FAS = 30%
- Percentage of Corrections staff who say the current educational service programs within the correctional system were appropriate for the inmates or offenders on their caseload who have FAS = 35%
- Corrections respondents had an average of 9-10 year experience working in corrections in Alaska.

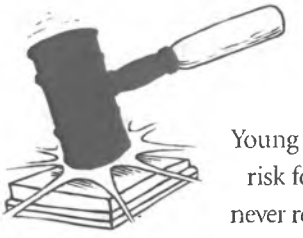
Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders And Juvenile Justice: How Professionals Can Make a Difference



[T]here is hope. We can change how lawyers, clients, police, judges, probation officers, prison guards, and family members work with FAS clients.[1]

—David Boulding, attorney for clients with fetal alcohol spectrum disorders

Young people who are affected by fetal alcohol spectrum disorders (FASD) are at increased risk for involvement with the juvenile justice system.[2,3] Most youth who have an FASD have never received a diagnosis or services, and they reach the system after a long fall through the cracks.

How is FASD Linked to Problems With the Juvenile Justice System?

Youth with an FASD were born with brain damage that can make it difficult for them to stay out of trouble with the law. They do not know how to deal with police, attorneys, judges, social workers, psychiatrists, corrections and probation officers, and others they may encounter.

Professionals who work with the court system can reach out to young people who may have an FASD to ensure that they receive needed help. Education and training can help professionals identify young people who may have an FASD. This can help them get fair treatment and appropriate services.

What Is FASD?

"FASD" is an umbrella term describing the range of effects that can occur in an individual whose mother drank alcohol during pregnancy. These effects may include physical, mental, behavioral, and/or learning disabilities with possible lifelong implications.

The term FASD is not used as a clinical diagnosis. It refers to conditions such as fetal alcohol syndrome (FAS), alcohol-related neurodevelopmental disorder (ARND), and alcohol-related birth defects (ARBD). FASD occurs in about 10 per 1,000 live births, or about 40,000 babies per year in the United States.[4]

What Are the Challenges for Youth With an FASD?

FASD's effects on the brain can result in cognitive or behavioral deficits. These deficits may include mental retardation, learning disabilities, hyperactivity, attention deficits, and poor social skills. These and other problems associated with FASD may increase the chance that a person will break the law.

Individuals with an FASD typically are impulsive and have trouble foreseeing the consequences of their actions. They may have a poor sense of personal boundaries. Many are very susceptible to peer pressure and can be easily led. Their judgment is often poor.[2]

FASD also presents challenges throughout the judicial process, from questioning through arrest, hearings, sentencing, and detention. Many youth who have an FASD have poor communication skills, while others may "talk" much better than they can function. They may become confused under pressure. They often cannot understand their rights and may confess or otherwise implicate themselves and others, even if they are not guilty. Youth who have an FASD may believe that if they confess, they will be allowed to go home. They also want people to like them and may provide a false confession in an effort to please the police.

Youth who have an FASD typically have memory problems, which can contribute to forgotten court dates or meetings with probation officers, judges, and attorneys. Their risk for victimization in detention is high, as they may fall prey to other inmates.

It can be difficult for persons with an FASD to learn from their mistakes. Because the judicial process can be lengthy, they may not draw a connection between their actions and the later consequences. Once released from detention, youth who have an FASD may commit similar offenses and cycle through the system again and again.

How Can the System Help Youth With an FASD?

Youth should be screened for FASD at all entry points into the juvenile justice system. Those who work in the system, especially attorneys and social workers, should look for a history of behavior that suggests an FASD. They also should ask questions about prenatal exposure to alcohol. When they suspect that an FASD is present, they should request a complete

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES
Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration
Center for Substance Abuse Prevention www.samhsa.gov

evaluation by clinicians qualified to diagnose an FASD. The evaluation should include assessments of possible co-occurring psychiatric disorders and adaptive behavior.[5]

Attorneys should be aware of FASD and use their knowledge to advocate effectively for their clients, particularly in proceedings related to:

- Competency—Youth with an FASD may be unable to understand the charges against them and participate in their own defense.
- Diminished capacity—Young people with an FASD may find it difficult to distinguish right from wrong, form intent to commit an offense, and understand consequences.
- Decisions to decline/remand/waive—Youth with an FASD are likely to be safer in a juvenile facility than in an adult prison due to potential victimization.
- Sentencing—In some cases, attorneys may be successful in presenting FASD as a mitigating or exculpatory factor. They also should explore alternative sentencing options.
- Treatment—Court-ordered treatment is sometimes the only way for youth with an FASD to receive appropriate interventions.

Information from evaluations, medical records, family history, and school and employment records should be included in presentencing investigations. The outcome may influence whether or not the youth will be detained, where, for how long, and what support he or she will receive. Appropriate services are essential, including medication or substance abuse treatment (if necessary), vocational training, life skills training, mentoring, and advocacy.

Detention of youth with an FASD may be unproductive. It can increase the risk of recidivism because they may copy the deviant behavior of other juveniles. For probation or aftercare, a highly supervised, structured living arrangement is critical for success. People with an FASD often have difficulty managing their money or tending to household chores. Attorneys should ensure that clients who were receiving developmental disabilities support do not lose their benefits while they are in the system.[6,7]

Throughout the judicial process, communication with young people who have an FASD should be concrete, simple, and repetitive. Youth with an FASD have trouble following multistep instructions and understanding figures of speech. Using frequent reminders, visual cues, and open-ended questions can help them follow rules and understand what is happening.

FASD is not an excuse for breaking the law. However, all youth, including those with an FASD, deserve to be treated fairly by the juvenile justice system. Increased awareness and action at all levels of the system can offer a lifeline to young people with an FASD. In addition, the potential benefits to society, through decreased crime and costs, are tremendous.

Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders and the Criminal Justice System

There was a part of me that was angry, but I also knew that the police department and the justice system were uninformed about how vulnerable and easily swayed people [with an FASD] are.

WHAT YOU NEED TO KNOW

Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders

FASD is an umbrella term describing the range of effects that can occur in an individual prenatally exposed to alcohol. These effects may include physical, mental, behavioral, and/or learning disabilities with possible lifelong implications. FASD is not a clinical diagnosis. It refers to conditions such as fetal alcohol syndrome (FAS), alcohol-related neurodevelopmental disorder (ARND), and alcohol-related birth defects (ARBD).

Reasons People With an FASD Get in Trouble With the Law

Studies show that people with an FASD have specific types of brain damage that may cause them to get involved in criminal activity. These individuals show:

- Lack of impulse control and trouble thinking of future consequences of current behavior
- Difficulty planning, connecting cause and effect, empathizing, taking responsibility, delaying gratification, or making good judgments
- Tendency toward explosive episodes
- Vulnerability to peer pressure (e.g., may commit a crime to please their friends).

Persons with an FASD may break the law without intending to do so. For example, they may touch people when it is unwanted and think they are just being friendly. They may take things that do not belong to them because they like them.

People can take advantage of individuals with an FASD. They may talk them into committing crimes. Females with an FASD may be involved with destructive men for food, shelter, attention, or drugs.[3] These relationships put them at risk for arrest.

Number of People in the Criminal Justice System With an FASD

It is difficult to know how many people in the criminal justice system have an FASD. Data are limited, and populations vary by State. In addition, few systems screen for FASD or conduct a full diagnostic assessment. Researchers at the University of Washington estimate that 35 percent of individuals with an FASD have been in jail or prison at some point. They also estimate that more than half the people with an FASD have been in trouble with the law.[1]

The number of people with an FASD in the criminal justice system is assumed to be high. In the United States, approximately 3 million people are in jail or prison. Based on estimates of FASD in the general population, as many as 28,036 inmates could have an FASD.[2]

Issues Related to FASD in the Criminal Justice System

Laws vary by State and case law is binding only in the State or circuit where the case was decided. Only Supreme Court cases are binding nationally. However, several general issues can arise for attorneys and judges dealing with persons with an FASD:

- Competency to stand trial, which is the ability to understand the charges, participate in a trial, and assist in one's own defense. Persons with an FASD may not understand the charges against them. They may find criminal proceedings confusing. They may have problems with time management and come to court late or not at all. Several cases address competency and FASD.[4–6]
- Validity of expert testimony regarding diagnosis. Questions arise about the types of exams that are sufficient to determine a diagnosis of an FASD. For example, what if maternal alcohol use during pregnancy is unknown?[7,8]
- Diminished capacity. Capacity refers to the ability to understand right and wrong and to understand the

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES
Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration

SAMHSA
Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders
Center for Excellence

likely outcome at the time of the act. Some crimes require evidence of intent for the person to be found guilty. Defense lawyers may argue that persons with an FASD cannot form the intent to commit crimes because they cannot foresee the likely outcome.[9]

- Effect of FASD on sentencing. Lawyers have appealed the death penalty by arguing that FASD was not introduced as evidence to support a lesser sentence.[10–12]
- Ability to testify. Persons with an FASD are highly suggestible and may not be able to give accurate testimony. They are prone to making false confessions.[13]
- Recidivism. Offenses do not appear to get worse, such as from auto theft to robbery. However, persons with an FASD tend to repeat crimes of opportunity, such as shoplifting. Their thought process seems to be, "I want. I take."[14]

Ways the Criminal Justice System Can Address the Needs of Persons With an FASD

Because of their disabilities, persons with an FASD may repeat the same mistakes many times. Thus, support to improve funtioning might be more appropriate than rehabilitation. This approach focuses on education, job training, and family support, rather than punishment. Medication may also help. In some cases, adults with an FASD who had multiple jail stints for petty, impulsive acts avoided jail when given appropriate medical treatment.[3]

Understanding how persons with an FASD respond to certain situations can help. Due to sensory issues, they can become overwhelmed by bright lights, causing them to panic and run from the police or resist arrest. Because they are eager to please, many unknowingly waive their rights by signing forms that they do not understand. In addition, they may consent to being searched or take responsibility for the crimes of others to win favor.

Sentencing is also an issue. Some persons with an FASD respond well to the intense structure and rules of prison. Others are vulnerable to attack, exploitation, and manipulation by other inmates. Some do not understand prison rules and break them. Because corrections officers may not understand FASD, they may punish inmates with an FASD for failing to follow directions. It is critical to offer training on FASD to all corrections staff so they can learn strategies to respond to inmates with an FASD.

Once on probation, persons with an FASD may have trouble meeting probation requirements. They can have problems managing time, recalling appointments, and making plans. Therefore, they may need a greater level of supervision. A relative or support person may need to be assigned to follow up on probation requirements. Highly structured probation that includes supervised living, life skills education, and drug and alcohol treatment can be very effective.[15] In fact, supervision can help prevent crime. Many clients with an FASD can remain crime free with intense supervision.[14]

Other effective alternatives to prison include halfway houses, group home treatment centers, or electronic monitoring at home. In such cases, emphasis must be placed on creating a well-structured environment with predictable rules and consequences. In these settings, persons with an FASD can continue to participate in the community but their behavior will be more closely monitored.[16]

Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder and the Criminal Justice System

FASD: Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder

FASD is an umbrella term covering a range of birth defects and brain damage resulting from prenatal exposure to alcohol. The term FASD is not used as a clinical diagnosis, but encompasses diagnoses such as Fetal Alcohol Syndrome (FAS) and related disorders. FAS is diagnosed when a child shows retarded growth, a specific pattern of minor facial anomalies and neurological damage. Children who do not show all the features of FAS may receive a diagnosis of partial FAS, Fetal Alcohol Effects, Alcohol-Related Neurodevelopmental Disorder, or Alcohol-Related Birth Defects. All persons with a FASD have lifelong cognitive, social and behavioral disabilities.

Trouble with the law

FASD often goes unrecognized, or is misdiagnosed as ADHD or another disorder. The behavior is sometimes blamed on environment or poor upbringing, while the true underlying cause may be brain damage due to prenatal exposure to alcohol. Youth and adults with FASD get intro trouble due to their cognitive disabilities:

- Poor grasp of right and wrong.
- No feeling of guilt.
- Lack of impulse control.
- Poor understanding of cause and effect.
- Do not learn from experience.
- Vulnerability to peer pressure.
- Social immaturity: think and act much younger than chronological age.

How many persons with FASD are in the criminal justice system?

It is not known how many people in the criminal justice system have a FASD. A report of the US Centers for Disease Control estimates that 60% of people with an FASD over the age of 12 have been in trouble with the law, and that 35% have been incarcerated.[1] A Canadian study found that 23% of young offenders remanded to a forensic psychiatric inpatient assessment unit had a FASD.[2]

Problems in dealing with the police

Youth and adults with FASD may panic during encounters with the police, or alternatively, may be very friendly and, in an effort to please, admit to crimes they did not commit. Questioning may confuse them due to their intellectual disabilities:

- Poor short- and long-term memory.
- Difficulty with concept of time (past, present, future, how long).
- Poorly developed concept of property ("It was just lying there, so it didn't belong to anybody.")
- Difficulty separating fact and fiction.

" The person with FASD can be misunderstood in court, victimized in jails, and mismanaged in the transition back to the community, unless those working with the individual are aware of FASD and its implications." Fast & Conry (2004)

Helping offenders with FASD

Police, attorneys and judges should be aware of the limitations that accompany FASD. Offenders should be screened for FASD. Detention may be unproductive, resulting in copying deviant behavior. Lifelong structure and supervision is the best way to avoid recidivism.

FASD: What the Justice System Should Know

Alcohol abuse and pregnancy are common among women in the criminal justice system.

- An estimated 70 to 85 percent of inmates need substance abuse treatment.
- Approximately one in four women is either pregnant or postpartum when she enters prison.

The Justice System can help to prevent Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders (FASD) among the incarcerated population by offering educational workshops on FASD and addiction counseling for women inmates.

Behavioral impairments due to FASD make affected individuals more likely to get in trouble with the law

- Sixty-one percent of adolescents and 58% of adults with FASD have been in legal trouble.
- Thirty-five percent of those with FASD over the age of 12 had been incarcerated at some point in their lives.

Many individuals with FASD will never socially mature beyond the level of 6 year-old child.

Other factors that may place persons with FASD at risk for involvement with the criminal justice system include:

- Difficulties in impulse control;
- Intellectual deficits;
- Poor judgment skills; and
- A history of abuse and/or neglect.

Problems individuals with FASD may encounter when dealing with police include:

- Being persuaded by the police (even inadvertently) to admit to crimes which they did not commit;
- Taking responsibility for crimes committed by others in order to win the favor of more sophisticated companions or to please the police;
- Consenting to searches of themselves or their possessions in circumstances in which non-disabled sophisticated individuals would not;
- Panicking during encounters with the police, running away or resisting arrest;
- Saying that they understand their legal rights when in fact they do not; and
- Making potentially incriminating statements about how serious any misconduct may have been.

The Justice System can help FASD-affected individuals by:

- Educating judges, lawyers and parole officers about the characteristics and behaviors of persons with FASD;
- Establishing screening, analysis, and treatment procedures for those with FASD who enter the juvenile justice or adult criminal justice system;
- Establishing/utilizing alternative sentencing programs for persons with FASD who have committed non-violent offenses; and
- Offering referral information for the children of incarcerated women who may have been prenatally exposed to alcohol.

Alaska FASD Partnership: a productive first year

The Alaska Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders (FASD) Partnership is now one year old. The coalition has expanded to 75 individuals and organizations statewide.

FASDs are a range of brain-based disabilities caused from drinking alcohol during pregnancy. The mission of the Partnership is to address prevention and interventions for people affected by FASD.

Since May 2010, Partnership members have advocated in work-groups, visited with policy-makers, and held public meetings and events promoting awareness of FASD statewide.

During the legislative session, Partnership members visited Juneau and wrote their legislators about FASD. They advocated for substance abuse treatment for pregnant women and access to services for people diagnosed with FASD. They promoted early childhood screening and peer support services in rural areas.

Following are some of the Partnership's activities in 2010-11:

In 2010

- Membership increased to over 75 organizations and individuals by the end of 2010;
- Successfully advocated for funding in the state operating budget that supported case management for individuals diagnosed with FASD in Kenai, Juneau, Bethel and Sitka, and substance abuse treatment for pregnant women.

- Co-sponsored with Alaska Mental Health Board and Advisory Board on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse, through the boards' Family Voice project, advocacy training for five families who presented on FASD before the House and Senate Health and Social Services Committees. Families also met with individual legislators and presented on a panel discussion at the FASD Southeast Alaska Regional Conference about their experiences related to FASD;
- Successfully advocated for SCR 12, proclaiming Sept. 9, 2010 as FASD Awareness Day, sponsored by Senator Kevin Meyer (R-Anchorage);
- Collaborated with Alaska CHARR in promoting "free non-alcoholic beverages for pregnant women" in restaurants on International FASD Awareness Day;
- Co-sponsored, with Alaska CHARR (Cabaret Hotel, Restaurant and Retailers), an appreciation luncheon at the Capitol for legislators who have worked on behalf of individuals and families affected by FASD;
- Hosted a summit of the Alaska FASD Partnership steering committee to determine short and long-term recommendations.

In 2011

- Met with all 60 legislators on topics related to FASD; each legislator received an information packet that outlined facts and figures, funding recommendations for FY12, and other issues related to FASD;
- Co-sponsored with Alaska Mental Health Board and Advisory Board on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse, through the boards' Family Voice project, three families to present before the Senate Education Committee on "FASD and the Education System," and for a lunchtime Legislative Health Caucus. Participants received advocacy training and met with legislators individually to discuss issues related to FASD;
- Successfully advocated for substance abuse treatment for at-risk parents, rural peer support services, and the Alaska Complex Behaviors Collaborative, in the state operating budget;
- Successfully advocated for SCR 7, proclaiming Sept. 9, 2011 as FASD Awareness Day, sponsored by Senator Kevin Meyer (R-Anchorage);
- The steering committee continues to meet monthly; workgroups are addressing recommendations from the December 2010 Summit.

Legislators learn about Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders

During the 2011 legislative session, members of the Alaska FASD Partnership came to Juneau and advocated for issues related to fetal alcohol spectrum disorders.

In early February, Partnership members presented before the Senate Education Committee, chaired by Sen. Kevin Meyer, on the topic of FASD and the Education System. Other legislators on the committee include Sen. Gary Stevens, Sen. Bettye Davis, Sen. Joe Thomas, and Sen. Hollis French.

The group also presented at a noontime Legislative Health Caucus, sponsored by Rep. Sharon Cissna and Sen. Donny Olson, and chaired by Sen. Olson.

The panels included Cindy Anderson, director of Special Education for Anchorage School District; Monica Charles Leinberger, FASD and Behavioral Specialist for Lower Kuskokwim School District; Deb Evensen, FASD Education Consultant; Jeanne Gerhardt-Cyrus, parent navigator and parent of children with fetal alcohol spectrum disorders, and Ivory Gerhardt-Cyrus, teen with FASD; Mary, Trevor and Angela Andrews, family affected by FASD; and Mindy Cason, UAA student and adult with an FASD.

Panel discussions covered many issues facing students, teachers, administrators and families affected by FASD. Following are some of the highlights of their presentations, with recommendations:

- ✓ Policy-makers and administrators need to know what FASD is and understand the importance of addressing issues related to FASD; including:
- ✓ Expand FASD training for teachers and staff, including what is FASD and how to effectively work with students who have an FASD;
- ✓ Expand models for serving students, teachers and families used at Lower Kuskokwim School District and Anchorage School District who incorporate an FASD/Behavior Specialist in their schools;
- ✓ Expand special education services to students with FASD (and suspected FASD), with or without a diagnosis, based on behavior and functionality;
- ✓ Facilitate a paradigm shift for teachers, staff and families in how to work with students who have FASD, including seeing behavior as the result of a brain-based disability, understanding that students can't perform certain behaviors, not won't, develop patience with individual student processing time; work on changing the environment, to accommodate the student's disability.

During a visit to Juneau in 2011, members of the Alaska FASD Partnership presented in a panel before the Senate Education Committee (above) and again at a Legislative Health Caucus (below) on the topic of "FASD and the Education System." Panel members pose at the Capitol (center).

Members also visited legislators individually in their offices to discuss one-on-one many issues related to FASD and funding priorities supported by the Partnership.

Several budget items passed the legislature in 2011 that will benefit people and providers who work with people impacted by FASD (see pages 10-15 for state budget overview).

By the end of session, all sixty legislators had been visited and handed an FASD information packet that included background information on FASD and what kinds of efforts are needed to address FASD issues in Alaska. ❖

Proclaiming September 9, 2011 as FASD Awareness Day

WHEREAS fetal alcohol spectrum disorders are a leading cause of preventable and permanent birth defects and mental retardation in the United States; and*

WHEREAS the birth defects associated with fetal alcohol spectrum disorders include brain damage, facial deformities, and deficits in growth, learning, memory, and internal organ development; and*

WHEREAS fetal alcohol spectrum disorders result from ingestion of alcohol by a woman during pregnancy; and*

WHEREAS Alaska has the highest known incidence of fetal alcohol spectrum disorders in the United States; and*

WHEREAS fetal alcohol spectrum disorders affect all racial and socioeconomic groups; and*

WHEREAS, in addition to the personal emotional costs, fetal alcohol spectrum disorders cost taxpayers millions of dollars over an affected individual's lifetime;*

BE IT RESOLVED that the Alaska State Legislature proclaims September 9, 2011, as Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders Awareness Day; and be it*

FURTHER RESOLVED that the people of the state observe Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders Awareness Day with appropriate efforts to promote awareness of the effects of prenatal exposure to alcohol and of the fact that there is no known safe level of alcohol consumption during pregnancy, to increase identification of children with fetal alcohol spectrum disorders, and to improve the lives of those affected by fetal alcohol spectrum disorders.*

-- SCR 12 Sponsored by Senator Kevin Meyer, signed into law on 4/28/11

New bill, SB 127, would put FASD Awareness Day permanently in state statute

At the end of the 2011 legislative session, Senator Kevin Meyer introduced a bill that would permanently recognize September 9 as FASD Awareness Day in state statute.

SB 127, "An Act establishing September 9 each year as Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders Awareness Day" will likely begin having hearings in the 2012 legislature.

Alaska has the highest known incidence of FASD in the United States – a condition caused by prenatal exposure to alcohol – which can result in permanent brain damage, birth defects, learning disabilities, behavioral problems and the loss of individual potential.

While FASD affects all racial and socio-economic groups, it is a 100% preventable condition.

FASD Awareness Day is observed internationally on September 9th – serving as a reminder that during the nine months of pregnancy a woman should abstain from alcohol.

SB 127 would observe FASD Awareness Day by promoting the awareness of the effects of prenatal exposure to alcohol.

Following is the language of the bill:

Sec. 44.12.074. Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders Awareness Day

"Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders Awareness Day is established on September 9 of each year to promote awareness of the fact that there is no known safe level of alcohol consumption during pregnancy, to promote awareness of the effects of prenatal exposure to alcohol, to increase identification of children with fetal alcohol spectrum disorders, and to improve the lives of those affected by fetal alcohol spectrum disorders.

"SCR 7 would proclaim September 9, 2011 as Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders Awareness Day (FASD)."

FAScinating Families Camp will expand to three new communities

Volunteers of America (VOA) in Anchorage was recently awarded a grant to expand their FAScinating Families Camp to three new locations: Fairbanks, Sitka and Homer. The three-day weekend camp provides a supportive, educational, and fun environment for children and families impacted by fetal alcohol spectrum disorders (FASD). VOA has been coordinating the camps in the Anchorage/Mat-Su area since 2000. Members of Anchorage Council on FASD helped develop the Anchorage camp.

VOA will partner with Anchorage's Stone Soup Group to share expertise and resources for the new and existing camps. Expanding the camps to rural areas was one of the priorities of the Partnership's Family/Peer Support workgroup, which worked with Trish Smith at VOA early on to help identify potential new sites and offer support.

The selected communities were chosen in part because they have a FASD diagnostic team coordinator or a parent navigator willing to assist in camp preparation – which will include locating a campsite, gathering volunteer support, advertising, and identifying eligible families.

The camps feature the 16-hour FASD into Action parent/care provider training model developed by Diane Malbin, MSW, an internationally recognized authority on FASD. The hands-on training is designed to help care providers better understand and work with young people affected by prenatal alcohol exposure.

Families and staff participate in Native dancing at FAScinating Families Camp in February 2011, near Anchorage.

Families are able to practice what they learn with the support and guidance of trained professionals.

Besides offering training and respite, the camps feature lots of fun activities, like arts and crafts, cultural and outdoor activities. Families get to know each other, share stories, watch their children play and have fun, and learn new strategies for success. For many families, the FAScinating Families Camp is the only resource they have for learning about FASD and meeting with others who share similar experiences.

"Trying differently, rather than harder" is a central theme at the camps, and the environment is supportive and helpful, as well as fun.

VOA is hoping to expand the camps to other camp-ready communities in the future.

The Governor's disabilities council invites comment on FASD issues

The Governor's Council on Disabilities and Special Education (GCDSE) is currently working on its Five-Year Plan. There are several parts that address issues related to FASD. If you're interested in reading about it and/or commenting, go to: www.hss.state.ak.us/gcdse and look for the 5-year plan. Deadline for comment is July 15.

Some sections to note, are: 1) Page 13, see description of underserved and unserved people affected by FASD; 2) Page 13, Goal 3, see the section related to housing and supporting "living in accessible, affordable and safe homes in the community;" and 3) Page 20, Goal 4, related to access to health care services, "work with relevant state agencies and other key stakeholders to prevent FASD and better serve those affected by prenatal alcohol exposure."

FASD training opportunities for parents and professionals in Alaska

Alaskans have several options for FASD training: FASD 101 and FASD 201 through the state Division of Behavioral Health (DBH) and affiliated trainers, and FASD Into ACTION, through Stone Soup Group in Anchorage.

FASD 101 focuses on the physiology of prenatal drinking and the disabilities that can result from prenatal exposure to alcohol. FASD 201 offers helpful strategies for working with individuals with FASD, including successful approaches in the home, classroom, employment settings, and society.

Genevieve Casey, FASD Program Coordinator with DBH, wrote: "Through this training we can begin to change the paradigm related to this disability (brain damage vs. behavior problem) and it can begin the process of systems change within our existing service delivery systems —education, developmental disabilities, juvenile justice, child protection, health care, public assistance, vocational rehabilitation, substance abuse treatment, mental health and corrections to name a few ... Most importantly, we need to ensure that these service systems remain strong and continue to grow."

FASD into ACTION: Becoming a More Effective Caregiver was developed for parents and professionals working with people affected by FASD by Diane Malbin of Fetal Alcohol Syndrome Consultation, Education and Training Services, Inc., (FASCETS) in Oregon.

The course provides parents and professionals information about FASD and neurobehavioral disorders. Malbin reports that with an increased understanding of FASD as a brain-based disorder, parents and caregivers can adjust the environment to decrease the occurrence of secondary behaviors (e.g., frustration, aggression, depression, irritability, anger, isolation, tantrums, etc.).

Participants have reported reduced stress and improved parenting ability after taking the course. Similar results were found in a study by Hume et al. (2009) which reported an increase in parent/caregiver confidence and understanding of the needs and strengths of people with FASD.

Substance abuse treatment for pregnant women expands in Kenai and Juneau

In 2010, stakeholders statewide successfully advocated for increased funding that would expand substance abuse treatment for pregnant women in Alaska. The Division of Behavioral Health (DBH) has recently awarded grants to two programs, Serenity House at Central Peninsula Hospital and Rainforest Recovery Center at Bartlett Regional Hospital. Another program is expected to be awarded soon.

Serenity House offers a wide variety of clinical programs assisting clients with their individual needs, including substance abuse treatment and mental health care, motivation interventions, FASD education, Dialectical Behavior Therapy, trauma-informed care, couples therapy, and Strengthening Families Program. Contact them at: www.cpgh.org.

Rainforest Recovery Center's outpatient addiction treatment program for women focuses on pregnant women, women with children, and women of child-bearing age, and offers family and individual counseling, group therapy, case management, child care assistance and transportation. Contact them at www.bartletthospital.org/patientServices/rainforest.htm.

Funding for FASD case management

In 2010, stakeholders successfully advocated for funding to help people diagnosed with FASD get better access to support services in four communities: Juneau, Bethel, Kenai, Sitka. The diagnostic clinics in these communities determined the best way to get clients to services is to offer case management, since most families upon getting a diagnosis are unaware or unprepared to handle what comes next. A case manager helps families identify what services are needed, fill out necessary paperwork, make it to appointments, etc.

The Division of Behavioral Health (DBH) has finalized provider agreements and funding should be available in July.

Lower Kuskokwim and Anchorage School Districts lead the way on FASD

The Alaska FASD Partnership applauds the work of LKSD and ASD in serving students, teachers, and families impacted by FASD. Both districts have initiated efforts to deal with FASD in their schools. The establishment of a district-wide FASD specialist position at LKSD and putting a behavior specialist in each school at ASD shows foresight and leadership. As other school districts increase their awareness and follow this trend, they will be looking to LKSD and ASD for guidance.

FASD and Sexuality Workshop

Advocates in Juneau hosted a one-day workshop in February that addressed FASD and sexuality, including how people with FASD understand and express sexuality, what strategies are effective for directing and encouraging healthy expressions of sexuality and preventing inappropriate behavior, healing for victims and perpetrators, and how communities and care systems can better respond to FASD challenges.

Break-out sessions focused on parents and caregivers, justice system workers and care providers. Presenters included Jeremy Baumbach, Deb Evensen, Morgan Fawcett, Ric Iannolino, Judge Mike Jeffery, Kay Kelly and Sherri Wes. ❖

Participate in FASD Awareness Day on September 9

A table tent offers pregnant women a free, non-alcohol beverage on Sept. 9, 2011, and informs restaurant customers about the effects of drinking alcohol during

Free non-alcoholic drinks in restaurants for pregnant women

For the past eight years, the Alaska Women's Recovery Project has promoted a "free non-alcoholic drinks for women" in Anchorage restaurants. The Alaska FASD Partnership his helped expand the effort throughout the state.

This campaign invites local restaurants to offer a free non-alcoholic beverage to pregnant women on FASD Awareness Day, September 9, 2011. The event promotes awareness about alcohol-free pregnancies and educates patrons about the potential effects of drinking during pregnancy. Table tents at participating restaurants present an overview of what FASD is, what causes it, and how to prevent it. The tents also give contact info for local and national FASD agencies and invites pregnant women to enjoy a free non-alcoholic beverage provided by the restaurant.

In 2010, three other communities joined the effort: Juneau, Nome and Sitka. In 2011, the Partnership is coordinating with CHARR (Alaska Cabaret, Hotel, Restaurant and Retailers Association) in promoting the effort statewide.

If you would like to host your own restaurant promotion, here are some hints, or contact the Partnership for templates:

Event Preparation:

1. Assign a master coordinator to keep track of who is doing what.
2. Recruit volunteers to go to restaurants and solicit participation in the promotion. Consider church groups, youth groups, VISTA, AmeriCorp volunteers, etc.
3. Maintain a master list of volunteers and their assigned restaurants.
4. Print and prepare posters, restaurant invitation letter, table tents, and sample thank you notes.
5. Hang community posters around town week before the event (optional).

Volunteer Responsibilities:

1. Volunteers choose or are assigned a restaurant.
2. Volunteers agree to approach the restaurant manager or owner to solicit participation in the promotion. Each restaurant is given a participation request letter, sample table tent, and poster. Set a deadline to confirm with restaurant and report to master coordinator.
3. Upon commitment from the restaurant, volunteer counts how many tables will need table tents and agrees to return on September 9 to place the tents on the tables. At this same time, volunteer hangs a poster in a prominent place at the restaurant (such as front door, bulletin board, near cash register, bathrooms, etc.) at the direction of the manager/owner to pre-advertise the event.
4. Volunteers report to master coordinator with a total number of table tents needed and coordinate for time to pick up table tents.
5. On September 9, each volunteer picks up table tents and returns to assigned restaurant to place them on the tables and hangs poster in prominent place.
6. Volunteers return the following day to pick up table tents and take down poster(s).
7. Volunteers give a thank you note to the restaurant.

For guidelines and posters/table tent templates contact Teri at (907) 465-4765, or email at: akfasdpartnership@alaska.gov. ❖

Partnership workgroups address top issues statewide

At a summit in December 2010, the steering committee of the AK FASD Partnership met in Anchorage to finalize short-term and long-term goals for the following year. The recommendations came after a month of teleconferenced workgroups, who met and identified issues related to FASD that are most pressing to Alaskans. To join a workgroup, contact akfasdpartnership@alaska.gov.

Diagnosis

- Develop use of telemedicine in expanding diagnosis, support and services
- Promote use of screening tools/EPSDT (Early Periodic Screening, Diagnosis & Treatment) statewide
- Promote FASD training for primary care and behavioral health providers

Family/Peer Support

- Expand FASD Family Camps to rural areas
- Expand FASD training for primary care and behavioral health providers
- Coordinate efforts with the Alaska Peer Support Consortium (AKPSC), Alaska Mental Health Trust Authority and Dept. of Health & Social Services to develop peer specialist network and training programs

Prevention and Treatment for Pregnant Women

- Support FASD messages on pregnancy tests
- Vary "Do Not Drink When You Are Pregnant" signs in public places
- Expand substance abuse screening for females of child bearing age
- Expand Parent-Child Assistance Programs (PCAP) in Alaska
- Coordinate efforts with the Dept. of Health & Social Services

FASD and the Education System

- Educate district, board and school personnel about FASD, TBI, and other neurobehavioral disabilities and their relationship to behavior, e.g. presenting at conferences, in-services, hands-on in classrooms, etc.
- Promote statewide the LKSD/ASD models of employing an FASD/Behavior Specialist offering effective interventions for students, teachers and families impacted by FASD
- Expand training for para-educators, teachers and special education teachers, small village clergy, tribal staff and elders about successful interventions, e.g. positive behavior support (PBS), the importance of structure, alternative tools for discipline, etc.
- Coordinate efforts with the Dept. of Education and Early Development

FASD and the Legal System

- Address mitigating factors for people with FASD and other neurobehavioral disabilities (e.g. Traumatic Brain Injury (TBI), Bipolar Disorder, etc.)
- Expand use of mental health courts as alternatives to incarceration for people with FASD, and other neurobehavioral disorders.
- Expand screening and services in corrections and juvenile justice for people with neurobehavioral disabilities.
- Coordinate efforts with the Depts. of Corrections and Law, Public Defenders Agency, Courts, Disability Justice Workgroup of the Alaska Mental Health Trust Authority, and the Criminal Justice Working Group (CJWK).

Services for Adults with FASD

- Expand transition services (housing, treatment, medication management, employment, education, case management)
- Develop service system for adults with neurobehavioral disabilities
- Expand diagnosis for adults
- Coordinate efforts with Depts. of Health & Social Services and Corrections.

Professional Development

- Distribute resources for professionals
- Training for professionals, including medical personnel, educators, small village clergy, tribal staff, legal system personnel, public safety personnel, mental health/substance abuse treatment providers, and alcohol beverage servers
- Coordinate efforts with Dept. of Labor & Workforce Development, the Disability Justice Workgroup of the Alaska Mental Health Trust Authority, and Criminal Justice Working Group (CJWG)

Public Relations (Ad Hoc)

- Identify/contact conferences for exhibit space, keynote and break-out sessions
- Create/distribute exhibit kits for use at conferences
- Create/distribute packets for mushers and other potential sponsors ❖

Strategies for Success

Mindy Cason (far right), and other panelists, discuss personal experiences at Collaborative Conversations, sponsored by the Arctic FASD Regional Training Center, in May 2010.

Mindy Cason is a recent UAA graduate. She experienced prenatal alcohol exposure and was 20 before she discovered many of her difficulties were related to having an FASD. Her early school years were difficult because learning disabilities and a lack of interventions limited her ability to develop normal social and academic skills. After realizing the cause of her difficulties, she began to let go of the blame and shame, and with others' help, started developing strategies that have helped her succeed. Mindy wrote this article for people who experience an FASD and for people affected by FASD.

By Mindy Cason

When thinking about success, to me, it means preventing certain responses that come with shame, guilt, or embarrassment. When looking at coping mechanisms, any of the three of these emotions can hinder success. Learning how to reframe my ability to learn is critical to deter these feelings.

When looking closely at education and social life, there are a few coping skills that I have developed, and since awareness is the best tool to find these for any individual, here are my discoveries:

- Focusing for long amounts of time is not a strength. There are things to be expected, distractions. Redirecting and asking many questions are inevitable.
- Keeping and carrying a bag with the essential items I frequently use to escape uncomfortable situations: ipod, pen, pencils, snacks, a book, journal, tactile hand toys, magazines, and pictures of people I care about. These provide comforts and familiarity in an unfamiliar environment, or situations such as social or educational setting, and relieve anxiety or stress.
- Prepare for distractions: make the items I distract myself with available, collect them before I sit to study. This may include making food before studying and having it available the entire time I have to focus my attention. Also, having the bag of essentials available as well. I will become distracted at some point so I provide myself with an expected distraction. This way I can move from one thing to another easily and redirect to the task at hand without feeling guilt for being off task. After being distracted for a while I find a closing point and redirect to the task I am accomplishing.
- Asking questions – all and any questions. This can mean asking the same one many times even minutes after the answer has been given. I process verbal directions atypically. I may think I understand, only to discover I am off base from the intended outcome. I find it encouraging and reassuring to know that if there are doubts about the outcome, I can ask for clarification or to be walked through the information until I own it.
- Learning that taking breaks and knowing that it's alright to isolate at times, and understanding that I have social differences, was difficult. However, I now understand my perspective is uniquely mine; no one perceives things the same as myself. I need time alone with my comfort tools to find a calm place and be ready to re-enter the setting in a healthy way.
- Positive regard is very important. My difficulty with learning, the inability to stay focused, and my not understanding sequential information creates frustration for those working with me. The times I realize I have frustrated someone unintentionally causes me to shut down due to guilt and embarrasssment. Having a person who is patient and has positive regard makes a significant difference. ❖

YOUTH and PREVENTION

Early Intervention/Infant Learning Program Positive Parenting Training $80,000 to Infant Learning Program Grants, OCS/DHSS. Funding will support three demonstration sites in fully implementing the "Teacher Pyramid" model, an evidence-based research model for supporting social competence and preventing challenging behavior in young children. The parent training modules serve both biological and foster families who are in need of intervention supports, but whose provider agencies have not yet adopted these strategies (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust Funds).

Clinician to work with Head Start & day care centers for early childhood screening services $100,000 to Infant Learning Program Grants, OCS/DHS Funding will establish an early childhood mental health learning network and provide grants for agencies to engage in early childhood screening and intervention services – serving youth at risk of experiencing SED. Coordinator will provide consultation, technical assistance, and professional development to mental health clinicians, family support workers, child care workers, Head Start staff, early intervention, and infant learning specialists (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust Funds).

Expansion of school-based services capacity
$300,000 to Services for Seriously Emotionally Disturbed Youth, DBH/DHSS. Grants will provide funding for educational tracking of youth returning from RPTCs to ensure their educational success upon return; and pilots positive behavioral supports in four school districts: Ketchikan, Juneau, Sitka and Dillingham (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds and state GF funds).

Crisis bed stabilization statewide
$150,000 to Services for Seriously Emotionally Disturbed Youth, DBH/DHSS. This program maintains services in Anchorage and begins to expand services beyond Anchorage for youth in crisis. It provides grants to assist both youth in OCS custody and youth with family, and is expected to save Medicaid funds by reducing acute hospitalizations and referrals to RPTCs (funded by state general funds).

Services for transition-aged youth
$250,000 to Services for Seriously Emotionally Disturbed Youth, DBH/DHSS. Funding will support community-based capacity for transition-aged youth to move into adulthood with age-appropriate services, including productive work and educational activities. The goal for this increment is to target youth with few or no family supports who are at risk of moving into adult systems, such as corrections, emergency mental health or substance abuse services (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

Training and Technical Assistance for Bring the Kids Home programs $330,000 to Behavioral Health Administration, DBH/DHSS. Funding will support technical assistance, training, and ongoing mentoring to improve delivery of integrated, family-driven, recovery-oriented services. Focus is on business practices and clinical performance improvement projects – such as developing wraparound facilitation, implementing evidence-based or best practices, developing FASD waiver services, and/or expanding in-home and family therapy service models (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

Child Psychiatrist at API
$50,000 to Alaska Psychiatric Institute (API), DBH/DHSS. Funds will pay for a child psychiatrist at API to provide doctor-to-doctor consultation to other RPTCs on issues of case planning and treatment recommendations. The psychiatrist will provide a second opinion for state staff working to divert children from RPTC care and consults with primary care physicians on children at risk of moving into acute or residential care (funded by state general funds).

Alaska Family Violence Prevention Project (AFVPP)
$200,000 to Chronic Disease Prevention and Health Promotion, DPH/DHSS. Funding will support training, personnel, curricula and tools, printing and dissemination of resource materials for providers statewide. AFVPP is a nationally recognized best practices program for violence prevention that uses a community-based, multidisciplinary team approach to address dating violence and substance use among youth (funded by state general funds).

Pre-K Program Funding
$1.7 million to Early Learning Coordination, TLS/DEED; and $300,000 for intervention districts Lower Yukon and Yupiit School Districts. Funds will help continue pilot preschool programs statewide as part of the Alaska Pre-Kindergarten Project, which provides voluntary, comprehensive, half-day preschool pro-grams in rural and urban settings. These programs build on existing community resources and supports the creation of local model programs. Early childhood programs help identify and serve students with special needs throughout their school years. This increment maintains the program that began as a pilot project in previous years (funded by state general funds).

TREATMENT/RESOURCES

Alaska Complex Behaviors Collaborative: Start Hub
$325,000 to Services to Seriously Mentally Ill, DBH/DHSS. This funding will be used to begin implementation of the Alaska Complex Behaviors Collaborative Hub, where individuals who experience developmental disability, mental illness, addiction, fetal alcohol spectrum disorders, and/or other behavioral disorders can receive stabilization, triage, assessment, referral to diagnostic services and/or short and long-term community-based support services. Funding will support project start-up costs, brief stabilization services, intensive intermediate services, and development of the Hub, or point-of-entry, component (funded by state general funds).

Substance Abuse Treatment and Recovery Services for At-Risk Parents $225,000 to Family Preservation in OCS/DHSS. Funding will provide clinical substance abuse treatment and recovery services for parents who have a substantiated report of harm, where substance abuse is a contributing factor to continued risk of harm for their children. It will be delivered through the Family Preservation program offered by the Office of Children's Services, to ensure that treatment services are available to the parent before a child must be removed from the home (funded by state general funds).

Treatment funding for therapeutic court participants
$500,000 to Therapeutic Courts/COURTS. Funding will support timely access to substance abuse and mental health treatment for therapeutic court participants in an effort to address the underlying issues related to contact with the criminal justice system. Timely access to substance abuse and mental health treatment services is a critical component to the operations of these courts, the success of its participants, and to reduced recidivism (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds and state general funds).

Pre-development for sleep-off alternatives in Nome
$100,000 to Behavioral Health Grants, DBH/DHSS. Funds will be used to support pre-development and planning activities for alternatives to incarcerating persons requiring protective custody in Nome. Activities may include substance abuse assessment, assessment of the service capacity of existing programs and facilities within the community, and developing an implementation plan for identified treatment services (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

IMPACT model of treating depression
$75,000 to Alaska Psychiatric Institute, DBH/DHSS. Funding will support the "Improving Mood Promoting Access to Collaborative Treatment" (IMPACT) model of treating depression in the primary care setting. Administered by a psychiatrist and depression care manager, this model emphasizes patient education, positive lifestyle changes, and antidepressant medication when appropriate. Funding will also support telehealth equipment for three demonstration projects in urban and rural Alaska (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

Family Wellness Warriors Initiative (Year Two)
$200,000 to DHSS. Family Wellness Warriors Initiative seeks to address domestic violence, abuse, and neglect in Alaska Native communities. The project will equip organizations and individuals to effectively address the emotional, spiritual, mental and physical effects of domestic violence, abuse, and neglect (funded by state general funds).

Traumatic/Acquired Brain injury Program
$300,000 to Senior and Disabilities Services Administration, SDS/DHSS. Funding will support continuation of the Acquired/Traumatic Brain Injury (A/TBI) Program, a mini-grant program currently serving about 60 Alaskans with A/TBI. Funding will support planning, coordinating and developing TBI-specific services in Alaska – including access to neuropsychological exams, assistive technology, memory devises, treatment, and more. Additionally, it will support the development of the Traumatic/ Acquired Brain Injury Longitudinal Registry. People with A/TBI are at risk for mental health, substance abuse, homelessness, incarceration and suicide. Access to appropriate services is critical to ensuring hope for recovery (funded by state general funds).

Acquired/Traumatic Brain Injury Program Research Analyst & Registry Support $136,000 to Senior and Disability Services Administration, SDS/DHSS. This funding will support staffing, planning infrastructure and development expertise for the ATBI Program. These funds will also support planning and successful demonstration of best practice activities that provide treatment and support for individuals and families impacted by brain injury (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

See "Alaska Family Violence Prevention Project (AFVPP)" under YOUTH/PREVENTION

PEER SUPPORT

Rural Peer Support Services
$225,000 to Behavioral Health Grants, DBH/DHSS. Funding will expand availability of peer support services for people with mental health and/or substance use disorders in rural areas. Peer-operated services include drop-in centers, clubhouses, crisis services, support groups, supported employment and housing assistance, case management, outreach, and more. "Peers" have experienced mental and/or physical difficulties and support other people experiencing the same difficulties (funded by state general funds).

Peer Navigator Program
$200,000 to Services for Seriously Emotionally Disturbed Youth, DBH/DHSS. Funds will maintain peer navigator services, including hiring parents and youth experiencing SED to assist peers in navigating the service delivery system. Grantees are required to report outcomes, including number of parents involved, results of the interaction, and effectiveness of services (funded by Alaska Mental HealthTrust funds and state general funds).

RURAL SERVICES

Tribal/rural system development
$100,000 to Behavioral Health Administration, DBH/DHSS. Funding will assist in establishing SED children's services in rural areas, including developing and improving funding mechanisms and strategies specific to tribal systems. Projects may include developing Medicaid clinical, billing and supervision capacity, technical assistance to link programmatic and finance sections into an effective service delivery/billing revenue generation, implementing telemedicine, Skype or other distance delivery technology, grant writing, and/or blending funding streams (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

Rural specialist
$110,900 to Probation Services, DJJ/DHSS. Funding will support a specialist to assist rural communities (treatment providers and local natural supports) in developing prevention and/or early intervention activities and making training recommendations that ultimately serve youth returning to their rural home communities from DJJ facilities (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

Rural long term care development
$140,000 to Senior and Disabilities Services Administration, SDS/DHSS. Funding continues a project that provides technical assistance to rural communities and helps address long-term care needs and resources to meet those needs. It includes outreach, education, and intensive community-based work to meet the needs of people with Alzheimer's and related dementias, fetal alcohol spectrum disorders, and other cognitive impairments (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

DISABILITY JUSTICE

Social services specialist position in Bethel
$138,800 to Public Defenders Agency, LAS/ADMIN. Funding will support a social services specialist in the Public Defender Agency to assist attorneys with "in-house" clinical expertise on the disorders experienced by Trust beneficiaries and available community treatment. Duties may include forensic psychosocial interviews, home visits, needs assessments, and assistance in developing expert opinion and negotiating ongoing legal issues (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

Mental Health clinical positions in Corrections
$164,000 to Behavioral Health Care, IHC/DOC. Funding will support a mental health clinician in the Dept. of Corrections to manage the high needs of offenders in the newly expanded Men's Mental Health Unit at the Anchorage Correctional Complex. Duties will include assessment and programming, monitoring for safety, and developing appropriate release plans (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

Implement APIC discharge planning model in Corrections
$210,000 to Behavioral Health Care, IHC/DOC. Funding will support "Assess, Plan, Identify, and Coordinate" (APIC) model of connecting Trust beneficiary offenders re-entering the community to appropriate community behavioral health services. APIC has shown to reduce recidivism by engaging both Corrections and the community treatment provider in developing transition plans for the soon-to-be-released offenders (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

Criminal justice technician in Corrections
$56,000 to Behavioral Health Care, IHC/DOC. Funding will support a technician to track and provide reports on program outcome measures, clinical contacts, unit census changes, mental health Title 47s, access to programming, treatment failures, suicide data, assault and injury data, release data and a variety of other patient and programming needs, for offenders in the Dept. of Corrections (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

Increase mental health clinical capacity in DJJ
$200,000 to McLaughlin Youth Center, DJJ/DHSS. Funding will maintain adequate mental health clinical staff capacity to provide appropriate mental health treatment and transition planning to youth in DJJ facilities statewide (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds and state general funds).

Management & clinical oversight of therapeutic court probation staff $142,700 to Therapeutic Courts/COURTS. Funding will provide focused daily and clinical supervision of the therapeutic court probation staff to ensure for adequate mentoring, program planning, budget management, monitoring, and public safety. Therapeutic courts serve people with mental illness, substance abuse and other cognitive impairments (funded by state general funds).

Fairbanks Juvenile Therapeutic Court
$245,900 to Therapeutic Courts/COURTS. This project continues funding for a therapeutic court alternative for youth with mental illness, substance abuse disorders, or other cognitive impairments involved in the juvenile justice system in Fairbanks. The project engages youth in treatment to avoid future treatment services and costs associated with the adult correctional and judicial systems. Funding also supports tracking and reporting outcomes (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

Mental Health Court expansion in targeted communities $204,400 to Therapeutic Courts/COURTS. Funding supports a therapeutic court alternative for people with mental illness, substance abuse disorders, or other cognitive impairments in identifying the underlying reasons for an individual's contact with the criminal justice system. Funds will also support development of court-ordered treatment plans designed to decrease the risk of future contact with the criminal justice system. Funding also supports tracking and reporting data related number of individuals served and their outcomes, how funding is utilized and associated cost savings (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

ASAP therapeutic case management and monitoring treatment in Barrow $139,900 to Therapeutic Courts/COURTS. Funding maintains a position with the Barrow Alaska Safety Action Program (ASAP) which provides a therapeutic court alternative for people with mental illness, substance abuse disorders, and other cognitive disabilities. Responsibilities include identifying available treatment options and making treatment recommendations, monitoring adherence to court-ordered recommendations, and mechanisms that address the underlying disorder contributing to the individual's contact with the justice system (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

Probation Officer for Anchorage Wellness Court
$79,900 to Alcohol Safety Action Program, DBH/DHSS. Funding supports a probation officer at the Anchorage Municipal Wellness Court. Responsibilities include substance abuse screening, case management, education and treatment recommendations, monitoring of DWI and other alcohol/drug related misdemeanor cases. ASAP operates as a neutral link between the justice and the health care delivery systems, including enforcement, prosecution, judicial, probation, corrections, rehabilitation, licensing, traffic records, and public information/education (funded by state general funds).

SUPPORTED HOUSING

Office of Integrated Housing
$225,000 to Behavioral Health Administration, DBH/DHSS. Funding supports an ongoing project offering technical assistance in developing supported housing options for people with mental illness, substance abuse disorders, cognitive impairments and other disabilities (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

Discharge Incentive Grants
$400,000 to Services to Seriously Mentally Ill, DBH/DHSS. Funding supports beneficiaries in DOC settings who require extended supervision and support services to prevent repeat incarceration and public health concern. These funds will be administered by DBH as Assisted Living Home Vouchers or support service resources. Resources will help increase skill level and capacity for assisted living providers (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds and state general funds).

Bridge Home Program
$750,000 to Services to Seriously Mentally Ill, DBH/DHSS. Funding supports the Bridge Home Program, which offers rent subsidies paired with intensive in-home support services for individuals 'cycling' through emergency and institutional settings, including DOC facilities, API, hospital emergency services, and other high-cost social service and health programs (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

Capital projects

AHFC Homeless Assistance Program ($10.05 million in AHFC receipts); and AHFC Beneficiary and Special Needs Housing ($1.750 million).

See "Assisted living home training and targeted capacity for development" under TRAINING/WORKFORCE

PLANNING and RESOURCES

Comprehensive Integrated Mental Health Plan
$120,000 to Health Planning and Systems Development, DPS/DHSS. Funding supports continued development of the Comprehensive Integrated Mental Health Program Plan (Comprehensive Plan), a legislatively-mandated planning process used to guide the behavioral health system, to be carried out by DHSS, The Trust and four advisory boards (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

Behavioral health follow-up survey
$100,000 to Behavioral Health Grants, DBH/DHSS. Funding will be used to conduct a behavioral health survey of client recovery levels at one year after treatment. This survey has important policy implications for improving mental health and substance abuse treatment and could also help to document important cost savings from good treatment. If survey information is found to be helpful, it is the intent to repeat this survey every four- to five-years (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

Family Voice for parents and youth
$25,000 to Alaska Mental Health Board, DBH/DHSS. Funding brings youth experiencing SED to the Bring the Kids Home (BTKH) quarterly meetings and other advocacy/policy settings, with the goal of providing policymakers with first-hand knowledge of issues affecting youth and families affected by SED, including FASD (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

TRAINING and WORKFORCE

Assisted living home training and targeted capacity for development $100,000 to Behavioral Health Grants, DBH/DHSS. Funding continues assisted living home training and targeted capacity development to improve the quality of training available for assisted living home providers serving individuals with severe mental illness and high-needs individuals in correctional facilities. Both programs address homelessness and daily functioning for very impaired individuals (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

Mini grants for people with disabilities
$227,500 to Community Developmental Disabilities Grants, SDS/DHSS. Mini-grants provide Trust beneficiaries with a broad range of equipment and services that are essential to directly improving quality of life and increasing independent functioning, including therapeutic devices, access to medical, vision and dental, special health care, and other supplies or services that might remove or reduce barriers to an individual's ability to function in the community (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

Microenterprise capital
$125,000 to Governor's Council on Disabilities and Special Education, SDS/DHSS. Funding provides beneficiaries access to startup funding, small business technical assistance and support, alternative and innovative resources and other options promoting beneficiary self-employment and economic independence (funded by Alaska Mental Health funds).

Community Behavioral Health Centers outpatient/ emergency residential services & training $780,000 to Services for Seriously Emotionally Disturbed Youth, DBH/DHSS. Funding expands grant opportunities to Community Behavioral Health Centers (CBHC) to enhance outpatient services with innovative programs and training for children experiencing SED, Fetal Alcohol Syndrome (FAS), and other cognitive impairments. A separate component will evaluate the cost effectiveness of these outpatient services (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds and state general funds).

Training and technical assistance for Bring the Kids Home programs $330,000 to Behavioral Health Administration, DBH/DHSS. Funding will support technical assistance, training and on-going mentoring to improve delivery of integrated, family-driven, recovery-oriented services. Focus is on business practices and clinical performance improvement projects, such as wrap-around facilitation, evidence-based or best practices, FASD waiver services, and/or in-home/family therapy service models (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

Foster parent & parent recruitment training & support $276,000 to Family Preservation, OCS/DHSS. Funding will provide 1) resources to recruit and screen potential foster parents, 2) provide training and technical assistance for parents and foster parents. Therapeutic Foster Homes are recognized in Bring the Kids Home (BTKH) planning as an economical and effective alternative to more costly residential care for youth experiencing SED. Biological parents will be included in relevant trainings as available (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds and GF funds).

Probation staff instruction on therapeutic models of community supervision $80,000 to Therapeutic Courts/COURTS. Funding supports training for ASAP probation staff in evidence-based practices that will serve to improve long-term client outcomes and reduce criminal recidivism among people with mental illness, substance abuse disorders and other cognitive impairments (funded by state general funds).

Training for Judicial Conference participants
$15,000 to Therapeutic Courts/COURTS. Funding will support training on topics related to mental health disorders, substance abuse and other cognitive impairments, including autism, bipolar disorder, and fetal alcohol spectrum disorders, etc.. Training offers jurisprudence principles and practices to participants of the Judicial Conference, which includes representatives from Dept. of Law, Public Defender Agency, Office of Public Advocacy. Focus will be on root causes for a beneficiary's contact with the criminal justice system, recommendations for appropriate interventions, and alternatives in sentencing and conditions of bail/ probation (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

Training for prosecutors
$15,000 to Third Judicial District-Anchorage, Criminal Division/LAW. This project provides foundational knowledge to prosecutors within the Dept. of Law on mental illness, substance abuse, and other cognitive impairments, to include available treatment and an overview of the state's community behavioral health system. Training better equips prosecutors to 1) better understand and provide for the needs of offenders with disabilities, 2) consider underlying causes for an offender's contact with the criminal justice system, and 3) setting appropriate conditions of bail/ probation based on the individuals mental and/or cognitive capacity (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

Training for defense attorneys
$15,000 to Office of Public Advocacy, LAS/ADMIN. Funding will provide training for defense attorneys in understanding mental illness and other impairments, and how to better handle legal cases involving persons with disabilities, including education in treatment options and available resources (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

Training for therapeutic court clinical staff
$15,000 to Therapeutic Courts/COURTS. Funding will send Therapeutic Court teams (judges, attorneys, clinical case coordinators) to a national conference sponsored by SAMHSA and the GAINS Center focusing on the connection between mental health and criminal justice systems, including evidence-based practices as solutions (funded by Alaska Mental Health Trust funds).

Alaska FASD Partnership Steering Committee

Message from the Chair

Waqaa to the readers from the Alaska FASD Partnership. This partnership is a group of individuals and organizations coming together to address Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders (FASD) and the concerns associated with FASD – health and social issues, as well as, providing education and awareness. We are professionals, parents, educators, voters, community leaders, health care providers, and more.

Alaska is an incredible state with diversity in our cultures, languages, and communities. Every year, our state attracts many tourists to witness firsthand the beauty of Alaska – in our lands and our people. Yet, behind this beauty, Alaska leads the way with the highest number of individuals born with FASD, the highest rates of alcohol abuse and domestic violence. The common factor is alcohol. FASD does not discriminate by culture, education, or economic status. It can happen anywhere alcohol is available.

Our policymakers are working to address the needs for each district: safe school buildings, road improvements, health care, safe water, law enforcement ... to name a few. Although Alaska leads the way with identification of FASD through our diagnostic teams, we can do more to help decrease the incidence of FASDs through education and awareness. If everyone reading this newsletter pledges to learn more about FASD – its causes and the issues surrounding alcohol use – our state has the potential to live more healthy, safe, and happier lives. Join our cause – sign up to become a member of the AK FASD Partnership!

Quyana for your time. If you have any questions, concerns, or would like to join the Partnership, please contact us.

Monica Charles Leinberger

The criminal justice system was never designed to accommodate the reality of people affected by Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder. With efforts under way to address this issue, it is becoming apparent that the focus belongs on keeping them out of the system to begin with. And that is proving to be a far greater challenge.

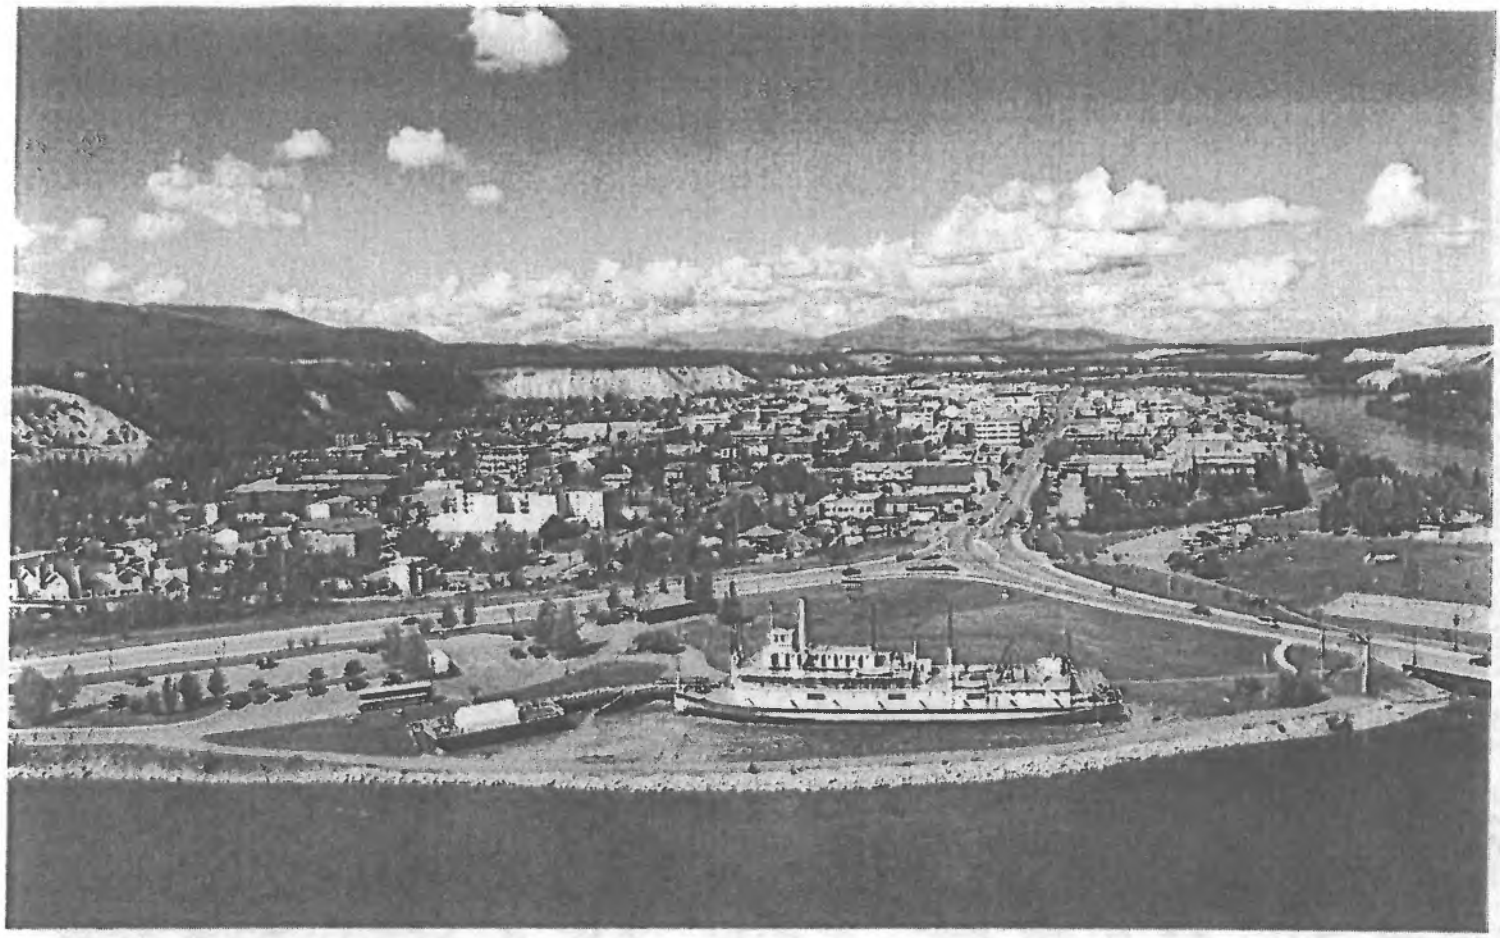
A DIFFERENT KIND OF JUSTICE

By Beverley Spencer

Lesley Carberry puts her arm affectionately around the smiling young man in the sunny kitchen of her home in Whitehorse. She introduces a guest and asks whether he knows why she's come to visit. "Do you remember what we're going to talk about?" she asks. "Hurt brain," he replies.

Frank, 33, has Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder (FASD). So does his brother Carl, 36. They were adopted 26 years ago by Carberry and her husband Ray Marnoch, who have also acted as caregivers to two other young men with FASD. "Hurt brain" is how Frank has come to understand the permanent brain damage he suffered because his mother drank during pregnancy.

FASD is an umbrella term referring to a complex range of brain injuries resulting from prenatal exposure to alcohol. It is one of the leading causes of mental retardation, developmental and cognitive disabilities in Canada. It is estimated to affect 0.9 per 1,000 people in the general population with higher rates in areas with widespread alcohol abuse and poverty, but this is based on an extrapolation of U.S. data. The actual prevalence is not known since diagnostic capacity is limited and there is no systematic screening for FASD. Most of the legal cases where FASD has been a factor involve native people, but FASD affects anyone whose mother abused alcohol during pregnancy.



Every case is different. Symptoms include poor memory, impulsiveness, an inability to fully appreciate the consequences of one's actions and being easily influenced by others. It is a permanent condition that can affect the ability to function independently in life and it puts many on a collision course with the criminal justice system. It is also costly for both individuals and society: individuals with FASD in Canada who are alive today will cost taxpayers about $600-billion, according to FASworld Canada, a non-profit organization that aims to build awareness for the disorder.

"FASD is not just a northern issue nor is it only a first nations issue," Yukon Justice Minister Marian Horne wrote to her provincial counterparts in 2010. "It is an issue that affects every community... and every facet of the justice system we are responsible to uphold."

FASD means that Carberry and her husband still financially support their adult children and guide them through the ups and downs of everyday life. Carl, who lives in Edmonton with his partner and two daughters, cannot keep a regular full-time job. The only people who will hire him, Carberry says, are people on the fringes who think he is an easy target. "And he is," she says. He has been in and out of jail and has battled addiction. Frank, who lives at home, works at a major retailer through a supported employment program and dreams of becoming a full-time employee. He has a job coach and a girlfriend and generally enjoys a happy life, his mother says, but he will always need a support worker. She worries about what will happen to her sons and grandchildren when she and her husband are no longer there.

There is greater recognition of FASD now than there was 26 years ago, but not the permanent life-long support her sons will need.

"I'm not comforted that when I die and my husband dies there will be anybody to take care of our children," she says. "I'm not comforted that if they were to get into trouble because they're not getting the supports that were provided for them [by us] that anybody would understand any better about what's going on."

The wrong assumptions

The criminal justice system is based on a set of assumptions that collide with the reality of FASD, namely that people act in a voluntary manner that is determined by free will, University of Toronto law professor Kent Roach and Andrea Bailey, a law clerk at the Territorial and Supreme Courts of Yukon, write in a paper on the issue. It assumes that "they can make informed and voluntary choices both with respect to the exercise of their rights and the decision to commit crimes."

In law, accused persons are presumed to be fit to stand trial and not to suffer from a mental disorder that would exempt them from criminal responsibility. There are exceptions for those with extreme cognitive impairments that deprive them of the ability to understand the proceedings or to appreciate the consequences or wrongfulness of their actions. There is also an assumption that mental disorders can be treated so that the accused will either be fit to stand trial or no longer present a substantial danger to the public and be safe to release. As Roach and Bailey point out, this runs counter to the reality of the permanent brain damage caused by FASD.

WWW.ARCHBOULD.COM

The law of sentencing is also influenced by assumptions about free will. The purposes of sentencing — specific and general deterrence, denunciation, incapacitation, rehabilitation and the promotion of a sense of responsibility — all assume that offenders are capable of "making choices, understanding the consequences of their actions and learning from their mistakes," write the authors.

"In short, Canadian criminal law is premised on assumptions about free will and individual responsibility, and temporary and treatable departures from that norm," they add. "These assumptions unfortunately do not fit well with what is known about FASD."

The Yukon has been a leader in addressing the reality of FASD in the criminal justice system. Judges Heino Lilles and Barry Stuart of the Yukon Territorial Court (both now retired), are considered pioneers in recognizing that crimes committed by offenders with FASD must be understood in the context of the cognitive brain damage they suffered and the system needs to change.

In 2002, Chief Judge Barry Stuart issued a clarion call for action in the case of Marcel Jacob, a 21-year-old who had committed a vicious sexual assault. The judge sentenced him to eight years in the penitentiary, but warned there will be more cases like his unless families, communities and professionals learn to work together to address the root causes of crime.

Jacob was neglected for most of his childhood and physically and sexually abused; his history was full of symptoms suggesting FASD and he was diagnosed with psychopathic tendencies and multiple personality disorders, the judge observed. How could those well-documented problems not have been addressed? he asked.

"The villain in this piece, as in so many other cases, is no one person, no one agency or department, but rather the system," he wrote. "The fragmented, truncated system that has no integrated vision or holistic approach is the villain."

"We cannot stop the next Marcel Jacob with good intentions, nor with small changes. . . . I believe there will always be a need for what the justice system currently offers, but it can no longer be the only . . . approach to the underlying causes of crime, the conditions that generate so many 'next cases' like Marcel Jacob."

In 2007, a Community Wellness Court was established in Whitehorse in a partnership between the Yukon Territorial Court, Yukon Department of Justice and the Yukon First Nations. It offers a therapeutic alternative for offenders with substance abuse problems, FASD or other cognitive impairments and/or other diagnosable mental health problems related to the commission of their offences. In 2008, the Yukon hosted the first-ever national conference on FASD and the law, which brought together experts and professionals to share information about cross-country FASD initiatives, including youth justice projects in Vancouver and Winnipeg and efforts by Correctional Service of Canada to identify the prevalence of FASD in the prison population.

Since then, the Yukon has developed a justice training curriculum on FASD, undertaken a prevalence study in the Yukon corrections population with Justice Canada and is developing greater collaboration between government departments.

In 2010, the CBA passed a resolution, put forward by its

What is FASD?

- Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder is the term used to describe the medical diagnoses caused from maternal alcohol consumption during pregnancy. They include: Fetal Alcohol Syndrome (FAS); partial Fetal Alcohol Syndrome (pFAS); Alcohol-Related Neurodevelopmental Disorder.
- Not everyone who drinks alcohol during pregnancy will have a child with FASD: it also depends on genetics, maternal characteristics, nutrition, environment, development timing, reactions to other drugs and duration and extent of alcohol exposure.
- FASD manifests differently in every individual with an alcohol-related diagnosis.
- Some individuals with FASD, especially those with FAS, have facial anomalies, such as short horizontal eye length, a thin flat upper lip and a flattened midface, but most do not have any visible facial or other characteristics.
- Approximately half of individuals with FASD meet standard criteria for mental retardation (IQ less than 70).
- National guidelines for diagnosis of FASD were introduced in 2005. The challenge with diagnosis is not simply to identify brain injury, but to assess a person's ability in the exercise of judgment, planning, memory and the ability to cope independently with day to day life.

Yukon branch, urging the federal government to avoid criminalization of people with FASD and allocate resources to develop solutions. CBA past-president Rod Snow recalls asking a meeting in Whitehorse in 2006 whether the branch should take on the issue of FASD in the criminal justice system. A judge sitting across the table responded immediately. "Of course you should. If you are not doing that, what good are you doing? I have a file this thick on the topic," he said, holding his hand about a foot above the table.

Fia Jampolsky, a former Legal Aid lawyer who now works for Cabott & Cabott in Whitehorse and serves on the CBA FASD Advisory Committee, remembers a client who couldn't spend more than three weeks out of the system. A "lost soul" who had been bounced around group homes after his caregiver died, the 19-year-old was always in trouble for spontaneous crimes of opportunity: grabbing jackets off the wall or stealing penny jars from hotels. Sometimes the offences would escalate to break and enters or assault.

"I would get a phone call and he would always be embarrassed and upset to be calling me," she recalled in an interview. "He'd say: 'Oh, I screwed up again' which I don't think is necessarily the case. I think I felt like everybody else was screwing up."

For Jampolsky, he epitomized the conundrum of FASD in the criminal justice system. "I don't think his behavior is necessarily criminal," she says. "I think he's a victim more often than he's an offender and he lacks the services and resources that may have been able to stabilize him." He was diagnosed with Alcohol Related Neurodevelopmental Disorder (ARND), a form of FASD, but displays no physical symptoms of the disorder. "I think it is hard for people to see him as anything less than willfully disregarding the law," Jampolsky said. He wasn't in the wellness court program because he missed too many meetings and could not follow conditions.

Nils Clarke, executive director of Yukon Legal Services Society, estimates that FASD is a factor for between 30 and 40 per cent of his clients. "These are not people that are criminal masterminds committing sinister offences of forethought and premeditation," he observed in an interview.

Jampolsky tried to work within the system to find a solution that could break the cycle for her client. She asked the court for time to get assessments for a suspected cognitive disorder, a measure not normally available to adults under the Criminal Code. The court nonetheless agreed to the request, but by the time the assessment was ready, her client "would have spent so much time in jail that I would end up doing a sentencing with him and he would get time served," she said.

Efforts to get Jampolsky's client into adult services also failed. "They would say, 'This is voluntary so he has to be able to come in and make his meetings and tell us the path that he wants.' Well that's precisely the problem with an individual with FASD."

What would have made a difference, she believes, is a multi-sectoral approach to the young man's problems. "Everybody knew about him," Jampolsky points out. "He was a product of the foster care system so he has a file a foot thick. I know there are privacy interests, but I think more sharing of information and resources with a real focus on preventing him from coming into the system would have been the most important approach."

The last she heard, he was back in the system and a former legal-aid colleague was handling his bail review.

A rough start in life

Lesley Carberry's son Carl was a handsome young boy who displayed none of the outward manifestations of FASD. That turned out to be part of the problem.

Unlike his younger brother, he didn't have the physical facial features — the thin upper lip, short eye slits and slightly recessed jaw — associated with Fetal Alcohol Syndrome. Frank, on the other hand, was a "funny-looking kid," Carberry told the Yukon FASD conference in 2008. "And thank goodness he was because that diagnosis afforded him a protection and services not available to his older brother, who didn't look funny and therefore didn't come to the attention of any medical professionals at the time."

Carl was handsome, bright, charming, "very verbal, very adept" and a people-pleaser. Teachers viewed him as capable and competent. But something was very wrong. "He was in trouble really from the day we met him," Carberry says. "His inability to accept consequences for actions, his inability to predict consequences for actions — looking back, it's all there."

She and her husband knew very little about the early history of their adopted children. In fact, Carl and Frank both had endured an abusive childhood in a Dene Nation community in the Northwest Territories. Carl had suffered a traumatic brain injury as a baby when his father smashed his skull against the wall. He spent over a year recovering in a medical foster home before being returned to his parents. His mother later took the two boys and moved to Whitehorse. The two brothers were apprehended and placed in foster care after they were discovered stealing food from a grocery store. Carl was 6 and Frank was 2.

They spent the next four years in a foster home where Carl was physically and sexually abused by his foster father and foster brother. Eventually, Carl and Frank were put up for adoption, their pictures appearing in an ad in the local newspaper. "Ray and I looked at them, and I said: 'I think this is it,'" Carberry remembers.

After a rigorous home study, the boys, ages 10 and 6, came to live with them. Frank had the benefit of supportive teachers and social workers who understood his diagnosis, but Carl struggled.

His teachers expected him to be able to perform at school and would make excuses for him when he couldn't. "There was no diagnosed disability," Carberry says. "He's charming, he's first nations; they wanted him to succeed. So they let him off with a whole lot of stuff." He had trouble understanding consequences and his parents' efforts to make him learn from his mistakes were futile.

Attempts to express love and support and talk things through were interpreted as judgment and created confusion and misunderstanding, Carberry says. Tough love and behavior modification didn't work. The family sought professional help, but the situation was blamed on a variety of factors, including adoption breakdown, overprotective and unrealistic parents and an incorrigible son. "Systems and professionals continued to look for reasons, to focus on something that could be 'fixed' — either our son or us," Carberry told the FASD conference. Carl started drifting from the family and took up with a community that was more accepting than his home: kids who were abusing drugs and stealing cars. It led to his first encounter with the criminal justice system.

He was 13.

THE CANADIAN BAR ASSOCIATION
L'ASSOCIATION DU BARREAU CANADIEN

Darren Vallentgoed of Schulich Law School in Halifax, has won the 2011 CBA National Military Law Section (NMLS) Law School, Sword & Scale Essay Prize. Mr. Vallentgoed's essay deals with the extraterritorial applicability of the Charter after the Omar Khadr decisions and Amnesty International v. The Canadian Forces.

The prize is presented annually for the best scholarly essay in military law or justice, public policy or public affairs related to Canadian military law affairs. The Sword & Scale Essay Competition prize consists of a monetary prize of $250 as well as paid registration for the NMLS annual PD conference in Ottawa held on June 14, 2011. The winning essay will be published in NMLS' electronic newsletter, the Sword & Scale.

Full details can be found on the CBA's website, at http://www.cba.org/CBA/sections_military/main/.

Darren Vallentgoed, de la Faculté de droit Schulich à Halifax, est le lauréat du Prix Salut militaire pour le Concours de dissertation des facultés de droit 2011 de la Section nationale du droit militaire (SNDM) de l'ABC. Sa dissertation traite de l'application extraterritoriale de la Charte à la suite des décisions portant sur Omar Khadr et de l'affaire Amnistie Internationale c. les Forces canadiennes.

Le Prix est présenté, à tous les ans, à l'étudiant ou l'étudiante en droit qui rédige la meilleure dissertation sur un thème de droit militaire ou de justice militaire, de politiques publiques ou d'affaires publiques se rapportant au droit militaire canadien.

Le gagnant reçoit un prix en espèces de 250 $, ainsi qu'une inscription gratuite à la conférence annuelle de développement professionnel de la SNDM, qui a eu lieu à Ottawa le 14 juin 2011. La dissertation de M. Vallentgoed sera publiée dans Salut militaire, le bulletin électronique de la Section.

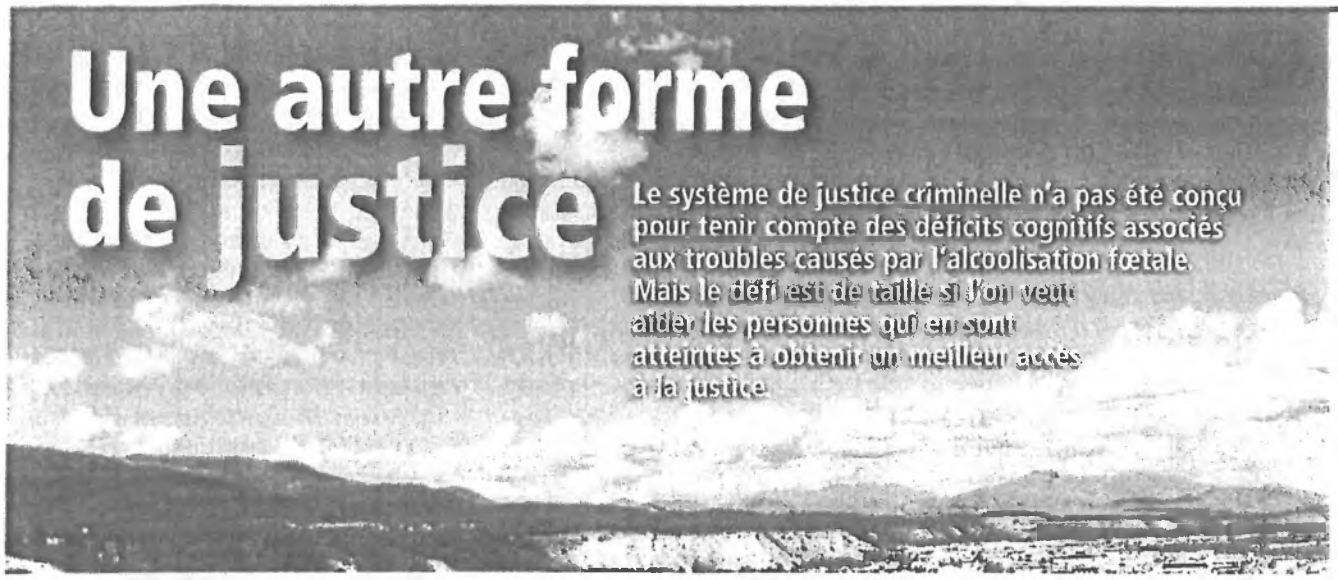
Une autre forme de justice

Le système de justice criminelle n'a pas été conçu pour tenir compte des déficits cognitifs associés aux troubles causés par l'alcoolisation fœtale. Mais le défi est de taille si l'on veut aider les personnes qui en sont atteintes à obtenir un meilleur accès à la justice.



Lesley Carberry place son bras autour des épaules d'un jeune homme souriant, dans la cuisine ensoleillée de Whitehorse. Elle lui présente votre correspondante et lui demande s'il sait pourquoi il est venu. « Cerveau blessé », répond-il.

Frank, 33 ans, souffre de l'Ensemble des troubles causés par l'alcoolisation fœtale (ETCAF). Son frère Carl, 36 ans, également. Ils ont été adoptés il y a 26 ans par Leslie Carberry et son mari, Ray Marnoch. « Cerveau blessé » est la manière dont Frank exprime le dommage permanent qu'a subi son cerveau parce que sa mère buvait durant sa grossesse.

L'ETCAF est un terme général utilisé pour décrire un ensemble complexe de blessures cérébrales résultant de l'exposition prénatale à l'alcool. C'est l'une des premières causes de retards mentaux, de troubles cognitifs et de développement au Canada. Près d'une personne sur 1000 en serait atteinte, beaucoup plus dans les régions où la consommation d'alcool et la pauvreté sont plus répandues. Mais l'ampleur du phénomène demeure peu connue, vu l'absence d'évaluation systématique de l'ETCAF.

Chaque cas est différent et il dépend de la consommation de la mère. Les symptômes incluent la mauvaise mémoire, l'impulsivité, une incapacité à juger des conséquences de ses actes et le fait d'être facilement influencé par les autres. C'est une condition permanente qui en place plusieurs sur la voie de la délinquance.

L'ETCAF signifie que Lesley Carberry et son mari soutiennent toujours financièrement leurs enfants adultes et les guident à travers les hauts et les bas de leur vie quotidienne. Carl, qui vit à Edmonton avec sa conjointe et ses deux filles, n'est pas capable de conserver un emploi stable. Frank, qui habite à la maison, travaille dans un grand magasin dans le cadre d'un programme de soutien aux employés. Il rêve d'y travailler à temps plein.

« Je m'inquiète du fait que quand je mourrai et que mon mari mourra, il n'y aura personne pour s'occuper de nos enfants, dit Mme Carberry. Je m'inquiète du fait que s'ils se mettent dans le trouble parce qu'ils n'ont plus le même soutien, personne ne comprendra ce qui se passe. »

De mauvaises présomptions

Le système de justice criminelle est bâti autour d'une série de présomptions qui sont en contradiction avec la réalité de l'ETCAF. Le système assume que les gens « peuvent faire des choix informés et volontaires au moment d'exercer leurs droits ou de prendre la décision de commettre des crimes », ont récemment écrit le professeur Kent Roach et la juriste du Yukon, Andrea Bailey, dans un article sur la pertinence de l'ETCAF en droit criminel canadien.

Les principes de détermination de la peine sont aussi influencés par des présomptions de libre arbitre. La dissuasion, la dénonciation, la

"How are you feeling?" the judge asks with a kind smile. "I'm feeling anxious," the woman replies in a quiet voice. She had missed a recent court appointment, but the judge notes it is her first slip, suggests a change in scheduling and gently reminds her about the importance of showing up.

This sets the tone for the rest of the afternoon. Every sign of progress earns a "Good job!" from the judge. "It's been a long road, but it will be nice to get to the end of it," she tells a young dark-haired man wearing an Evil Knieval T-shirt and a black hoodie. People who have failed to follow through on commitments are quietly but firmly set straight. "Mr. Blanchard, we've missed you," Judge Ruddy tells a man who has missed the last two court appearances. "If you don't show up, we can't help you. You need to think long and hard about whether you want to be in this process. If no, we'll go to sentencing on June 13."

Clearly, this is no ordinary court.

Therapeutic courts have gained popularity over the past 20 years as part of a move to restorative justice and a focus on rehabilitation and reconciliation. They have been established in Canada, the United States and Britain in response to the stress placed on the system by increasing numbers of offenders and the recognition that the traditional approach addresses the symptoms but not the cause of their legal problems, according to a paper on the Yukon wellness court prepared by the Four Worlds Centre for Development Learning in Alberta.

They are based on the assumption that an integrated program of intense supervision, treatment, therapeutic support, and skills development will produce better results for the offender (who must be willing to take responsibility for his or her behavior), the victims and the community. But finding resources to make it work, especially for structured supervision, can be a challenge.

One of the most important roles of the Yukon wellness court is getting a proper diagnosis for offenders with suspected FASD. Once the individual is found to be a suitable candidate for the program, the judge can order a formal FASD assessment. It costs $3,000 to $6,000; separate funding is available under the program since FASD assessments are not routinely covered by provincial or territorial health plans.

"Once you've got that assessment, it's not limited to this process," Judge Ruddy said. "Where people's expectations of réhabilitation et la promotion d'un sens de la responsabilité assument toutes que les délinquants sont capables de faire des choix, de comprendre les conséquences de leurs actions et d'apprendre de leurs erreurs.

Un tribunal pas comme les autres

Le Yukon est un leader quand vient le temps de faire face à la réalité de l'ETCAF dans le système de justice criminelle. En 2007, Whitehorse a créé un Tribunal communautaire du mieux-être, en partenariat avec la Cour territoriale du Yukon, le ministère de la Justice et les Premières nations du territoire. Cette cour offre une alternative thérapeutique pour les délinquants avec des problèmes de consommation, aux prises avec l'ETCAF ou d'autres formes de troubles mentaux.

Dans une petite juridiction comme celle-ci, les juges, les avocats et d'autres employés de la cour ont rapidement noté que les mêmes personnes revenaient toujours devant les tribunaux pour faire face aux mêmes accusations et au non-respect de conditions.

Fia Jampolsky, une ancienne avocate de l'aide juridique qui travaille maintenant chez Cabot & Cabot, à Whitehorse, se souvient d'un client qui ne pouvait passer plus de trois semaines à l'écart du système judiciaire. Le jeune homme de 19 ans était toujours dans le trouble pour des crimes spontanés : voler des manteaux sur des murs, voler des pots de monnaie dans des hôtels... Parfois, les infractions escaladaient jusqu'à l'entrée par effraction ou les voies de fait.

« Je recevais un coup de téléphone et il était toujours gêné et frustré de devoir m'appeler », se souvient Me Jampolsky.

Pour elle, ce jeune homme incarnait la tragédie de l'ETCAF dans le système de justice criminelle. « Je ne pense pas que son comportement soit nécessairement criminel, dit-elle. Je crois qu'il est une victime plus souvent qu'il est coupable, en ce qu'il manque de services et de ressources qui pourraient l'aider à se stabiliser. »

Il a été diagnostiqué avec des Troubles neurologiques du développement liés à l'alcool (TNDLA), une forme d'ETCAF, mais il n'affiche aucun symptôme. « C'est difficile pour les autres de le voir autrement que comme une personne qui ne respecte pas la loi », note Me Jampolsky. Il n'était plus devant le tribunal du bien-être parce qu'il avait manqué trop de rencontres et ne pouvait respecter ses conditions.

Les tribunaux thérapeutiques comme celui du Yukon ont gagné en popularité au cours des 20 dernières années. Ils sont basés sur l'hypothèse qu'un programme intégré d'intense supervision, de soutien thérapeutique et de développement des habilités donnera des meilleurs résultats pour le délinquant, les victimes et la communauté.

L'un des rôles les plus importants du tribunal du mieux-être du Yukon est d'obtenir un diagnostic pour les gens en apparence atteints de l'ETCAF. Ce diagnostic aide par la suite à établir un plan de mieux-être aux délinquants, qui inclut une évaluation de leurs habilités.

Mais pour faire de véritables progrès, les individus ont besoin d'un environnement de vie stable, sobre et supervisé. Et c'est peut-être là le plus grand défi, note la juge en chef du tribunal, Karen Ruddy. Malgré l'existence de certaines familles comme celle de Lesley Carberry ou de centres comme la maison de transition de 20 lits opérée par l'Armée du salut à Whitehorse, « la réalité est que nous n'avons pas toujours » ce dont ils ont besoin, reconnaît la juge.

Signes de progrès

L'ABC travaille avec le ministère fédéral de la Justice pour trouver des solutions au problème de l'ETCAF dans le système de justice criminelle. En 2010, l'Association a adopté une résolution exhortant Ottawa d'éviter de criminaliser les gens aux prises avec l'ETCAF et d'allouer des ressources pour développer des solutions. Puis, en mars dernier, un comité qui travaille sur le sujet a entre autres recommandé d'amender le Code criminel pour permettre aux tribunaux d'ordonner une évaluation des adultes susceptibles d'être touchés. Les changements proposés permettraient aussi au juge de ne pas tenir compte de certaines obligations du code, comme des peines minimales, dans certaines circonstances.

Quand les ministres de la Justice du pays se sont entretenus de la question de l'ETCAF en octobre 2010, ils ont donné leur appui aux efforts de sensibilisation de l'ABC et ont indiqué leur volonté de continuer à échanger avec l'ABC sur le sujet.

Lesley Carberry est encouragée par tous ces efforts, mais l'expérience lui a appris que ces changements doivent être accompagnés par des plans de soutien communautaire pour faire une différence à long terme. « Pour moi, ce qui est prometteur, c'est de voir plusieurs communautés qui luttent avec ce problème de supporter tant de délinquants aux prises avec l'ETCAF. Et ils prennent vraiment les choses en main et tentent de savoir quoi faire. »

Quand on lui demande ce qui l'a soutenu pendant toutes ces années passées à élever deux enfants avec l'ETCAF, elle répond immédiatement : « Mes enfants. Mes enfants sont les personnes les plus fortes que je n'aie jamais rencontrées. Ils se relèvent chaque fois et se remettent à marcher. Je ne suis pas certaine que je pourrais faire la même chose. » them need to be modified that assessment is there and can still be used for other purposes."

The assessment helps the court develop a wellness plan for each individual. The diagnosis is accompanied by an assessment of individual skills and abilities and recommendations on how to deal with them in the justice system. "The nature of the disorder differs from person to person," Judge Ruddy points out. "It helps you clearly understand what you can expect from a particular individual in terms of what they can do and what they can't do."

The nature of FASD means their behavior is not going to improve over time. The goal is to create an environment and structure that allows them to function in a way that keeps them from coming into conflict with the law, Judge Ruddy says. "For a lot of [FASD clients], success is keeping them from offending substantively over the period of time that they're with the court."

Life skills programs such as Challenge, which also offers vocational training and employment opportunities, provide some of that structure. But to make real progress, the individual needs a sober, stable, supervised living environment. And that's been the biggest struggle, Judge Ruddy admits. "There have actually been people that we have had to turn away because we can't find that for them."

Sometimes family can help. The Adult Resource Centre (ARC), a 20-bed halfway house for adult men operated by the Salvation Army in Whitehorse, is another option. For individuals who can function at a higher level and don't need 24-hour supervision, a semi-independent living situation can work. "We have to ask ourselves in each case, 'Do we have what this person needs to be able to help them?' and the sad reality is sometimes we don't," she says.

Dennis Cooley, the Yukon deputy minister of justice, says the biggest challenge is finding funding and co-ordinating services to ensure clients with FASD get what they need. "My role is to ensure that citizens have access to justice," he said in an interview. "In the Yukon, it's clear we could do better for those with FASD."

What would be ideal, Judge Ruddy says, is a comprehensive housing project that provides programs and a supervised living environment. Longer-term programs to transition offenders back into the community are also needed.

those needs outside of the justice system would be wonderful. But it's going to take time for us to get to that stage. It's an evolution."

Lucky to be alive

Carl was in and out of the criminal justice system from age 13 until he was over 30. As a youth, he was involved in stealing cars. He withdrew from his parents; a series of psychiatrists framed his problems as attachment disorder and adoption breakdown. A cognitive disorder was never considered.

"We were at a loss," Carberry remembers. "It took us a long time to understand that someone could be as bright as Carl and still be affected by pre-natal exposure."

At age 15, he left home in a stolen vehicle. Later, he wound up in jail in Edmonton after being caught in a high-speed police chase in another stolen car. Back on the street with a group of other young troubled kids, he got involved in drugs and alcohol. "I don't know all the details of what happened there," she says. "I know enough to know that he's really fortunate to still be alive."

But Carberry and her husband never lost contact with Carl and eventually rebuilt the relationship. She has a theory about why he left. "He knew he had to go because he felt he was going to take us down," his mother says. "I think he was right. I don't think we were going to survive with him here."

Carl was finally diagnosed with FASD in his early thirties. He understands that his life will be permanently affected by what has happened to his brain. But after the birth of his two daughters, he gave up criminal activity (he has not been in trouble with the law for the past six years) and stopped using drugs and alcohol. He wants his daughters to have a better dad than he did.

Carl is a good father who loves his children, Carberry says, but he can't manage without support from his family. "The key is to keep him in that strong husband/father role without overwhelming him," she says. "I don't have many fears that he's going to slide back as long as we keep a support network around and as long as the money can last."

Recently when she asked Carl what might have made a positive difference for him, he had two observations. First, when he was caught misbehaving, as a child, he felt it was like a little game: there weren't enough consequences so he didn't understand the path he was on. Second, he said, "People just need to be kind."

As for what the criminal justice system could have done differently, he says his natural father should have been charged with abusing him. "His father has never had any consequences for anything he's ever done to this kid," Carberry says. "So Carl grew up knowing that you could do those things to somebody and it didn't matter."

Signs of progress

FASD is a multifaceted issue with no easy solutions. There are no national surveillance or prevention strategies and research activities are fragmented and underfunded. Multiple sectors, including health, social services, education, the courts and corrections, are involved which means approaches to services for individuals with FASD and their families can be haphazard.

The criminal justice system has proved to be a blessing and a curse for offenders with FASD. Some would never have received a diagnosis or any kind of therapeutic intervention if they hadn't committed a crime. On the other hand, the system itself creates unique challenges for them. Their inability to connect behavior to consequences makes the process confusing and stressful; their impulsive behavior makes it a challenge to comply with routine conditions and probation orders, and they struggle in the aggressive and uncertain prison environment and are more likely to be victimized by other inmates, according to a 2008 report submitted to the Yukon Department of Justice by the Canadian Research Institute for Law and the Family.

When federal, provincial and territorial (FPT) ministers responsible for justice and public safety met in October, 2010, there was strong support to continue to make FASD and the justice system a priority item, and to engage the CBA in dialogue about FASD as an access to justice issue.

In March, 2011 the CBA FASD Advisory Committee and the Federal Provincial Territorial FASD Steering Committee recommended measures to improve access to justice for individuals with FASD. They include education of justice professionals, resources for community alternatives such as supportive housing and alternative measures and diversion programs that hold individuals accountable "consistent with their degree of responsibility" [see sidebar below.]

The committee also wants the Criminal Code amended to address the unique challenges that FASD presents. For example, it recommends taking a page from the Youth Criminal Justice Act to allow courts to order assessments of adults suspected of having FASD. (Currently, courts cannot order assessments for suspected cognitive disorders in adults unless the accused is considered unfit to stand trial or not criminally responsible by reason of a mental disorder. These provisions do not apply or are considered inappropriate for individuals with FASD.) The committee also recommends giving the judiciary discretion when sentencing individuals with FASD and removing barriers including mandatory minimum sentences.

Nils Clarke favours dual track sentencing provisions for FASD and any other cognitive disorder where diminished capacity is recognized. "I would like the judges to have the tools to have that parallel-track sentencing regime," he said. "There should be national consensus and it shouldn't be that controversial. We should move forward and strike while the iron is hot."

Lesley Carberry is encouraged by the efforts she sees to deal with the issue in the criminal justice system, but experience has taught her that changes must be accompanied by corresponding community support plans to make a difference over the long haul. "What's promising for me is just to see different communities struggling with how to support so many of these high-volume offenders with FASD. They're really stepping up and saying, 'We need to know how to do this,'" she says, "It's very, very tough stuff they're trying to do."

When asked what has sustained her through the years of raising two children with FASD, she answers immediately: "My kids. My kids are the strongest people I have ever met. They just get up and keep going. I'm not sure I could do that.

"My kids are my heroes." N

Beverley Spencer is editor-in-chief of National.

A call to action

The CBA FASD Advisory Committee and members of the Federal Provincial Territorial FASD Steering Committee have suggested the following measures to improve access to justice for people with FASD:

- Allocate resources for community alternatives, including supportive housing and social services, to avoid the unnecessary criminalization of individuals with FASD;
- Develop alternative measures/ diversion programs in the criminal justice system that hold individuals with FASD accountable consistent with their degree of responsibility;
- Educate justice system professionals, including police, judges and lawyers, about FASD;
- Add sections of the Youth Criminal Justice Act that offer special protections to youth to the Criminal Code to accommodate the unique challenges presented by individuals with FASD. That would include:
  - a. Allowing courts to order assessments of adults that are believed to be affected by FASD at any stage in the proceedings and as early as possible;
  - b. Ensuring that counsel are present in encounters with the criminal justice system;
  - c. Using case conferencing at an early stage to get collaboration among key players in deciding an appropriate response.
- Encourage all government ministries to collaborate to share information and co-ordinate and integrate services;
- Recognize that FASD is a life-long disability distinguishable from a mental illness that requires appropriate legal and social accommodations;
- Allow all sentencing options to be available to judges to allow them to devise just and appropriate dispositions for people affected by FASD;
- Limit unnecessary conditions, including bail conditions and terms of probation, to avoid the unnecessary accumulation of administration of justice breaches;
- Review standardized checklists and risk assessments tools used by courts and corrections to ensure their validity for people affected by FASD.

Suggestions for more user-friendly court hearings

Barrow has about 4,500 people. It's the farthest north community in the United States. The Barrow court serves an area about half the size of California, with a population of about 10,000 people. We do a lot of telephonic hearings. Most of the population is Inupiaq Eskimo, but there are a large number of other racial and cultural groups, too. These suggestions are offered in a spirit of humility, knowing that there are many different kinds of courts, different types of cases and different amounts of time available for each case. These thoughts are personal to me based on over 29 years as a judge in this community: they are not an official position of the Alaska Court System.

- Realize that a person who appears to understand everything, and even says they understand, may not. There may be language problems and cultural misunderstandings about the justice system. There may be mental conditions like Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder in which (for example) a young adult in his or her 20's actually has the ability to understand of an elementary school student. Some "red flags" that I consider in being especially careful to accommodate the person:
  - ✓ Diagnosis of FAS/FAE/FASD or other mental challenge.
  - ✓ A very traditional type of person who may just not understand the Western justice system.
  - ✓ Judge's personal knowledge or indication in file that the person had an alcoholic mother and/or a very disrupted childhood.
  - ✓ A follower in criminal activity but is the person getting caught.
  - ✓ Keeps getting into trouble multiple times, especially in similar type of cases.

- ✓ In special education or left school early.
- ✓ Others say the person is impulsive—does not think before doing actions.
- ✓ Back in court for multiple, relatively minor, probation violations.

- Slow down and check in with a person during an explanation of rights or similar hearing to make sure that the person knows what is going on. Pauses are probably necessary between different major points just to make sure the concepts sink in. When questions are being asked, pauses may be necessary for the person to respond in a manner that is comfortable and that will allow sharing of information that the person wants to say. Offer a chance to consult again with the attorney after the explanation.
- Consider using visual aids, such as writing on large sheets of paper or on a wipe on/wipe off board. Logistics in the courtroom may make this difficult.
- A rural court like Barrow involves frequent use of telephonic hearings. Using the telephone is extremely convenient and cost-effective for everyone. But such hearings present special issues. If silences are necessary during telephonic hearings, explain what is going on so that the frustration level for the person(s) on the phone can be reduced. Sometimes, it's impossible to do a telephonic hearing with certain people involved in the justice system. The lack of personal contact may reduce their ability to understand. It may be possible simply to combine two hearings done in person at a future date instead of having one telephonic (like a change of plea) and the other (like a felony sentencing) in person. We have arranged for a preparation of a presentence report and then conducted a combined change of plea and sentencing with a remand to jail immediately following the hearing.
- Be sensitive to your own cultural biases. Someone may not look at you directly. It may be the person is ignoring you. But, in that person's culture, it may be a sign of respect.

Some shy juveniles dealing with justice system personnel in this part of Alaska may raise their eyebrows to indicate "yes". Though not saying anything, they are responding to the question. Saying "he let me do something" might mean the other person allowed it to happen or it might mean that the other person forced it to happen.

- Do not assume that the attorneys involved have had the time to explain what is needed to their clients in a way that the client can understand. There may have been a lack of time or a lack of understanding of a client's mental conditions (such as FASD). I believe that it's the judge's responsibility to make sure the persons involved in the hearing understand what happened.
- Where possible, use plain English in what is said and what is written. Written forms should have places for a defendant or juvenile to initial so that the person focuses on each portion of the form. Concrete language is best. Having "white space" and easy to read type is helpful, even if it uses more paper! We need to avoid having the whole experience being a "blur" of words.
- When appropriate, check in with the lawyer's client about their personal schedule when setting a court hearing. The convenience of the judge and attorneys may not coincide with other factors like making sure that a child's hearing occurs after the school day.
- Once structure has been provided to a juvenile by a conduct agreement and treatment, the juvenile may do much better. Busy professionals may suggest that the interventions are no long needed. Be very cautious about removing the structure, since that portion of the environment of the juvenile may be the source of the success being experienced.
- Bottom line: the goal of timely judicial decision making ("moving cases") must not displace having respect for all the participants' need to understand what is happening.

GENERAL CONDITIONS OF PROBATION

JAIL ALTERNATIVE SERVICES

State of Alaska Department of Corrections

Purpose

- The Alaska Mental Health Trust Authority, Alaska Mental Health Board and Alaska Department of Corrections identified "decriminalization of the mentally ill" as a priority. In 1998, Anchorage based Jail Alternative Services (JAS), was funded by the Trust as a pilot project. In 2005, JAS became a core program in State budget. Jail Alternative Services links mentally ill misdemeanants with treatment programs in the Anchorage community.
- Initial identification in jail -- with sufficient time to stabilize acute symptoms or make treatment arrangements prior to sentencing -- could help stop the "revolving door."
- Court ordered conditions to comply with mental health treatment could enhance the individual's motivation and prospect for continued treatment and stability.

Eligibility

- Pre-sentenced misdemeanants in DOC custody
- Psychotic disorder or Major mental illness
- New arrests in or out of custody
- Agreement by the offender to participate
- Final approval by DOC project staff
- Up to 30 clients can be served on each caseload

Admission Process

- DOC Mental Health Clinicians collaborate with the two JAS Coordinators to identify pretrial mentally ill misdemeanants in Anchorage correctional facilities, assess current mental status and suitability for release, make recommendations for treatment, identify risk factors and determine the likelihood of compliance with community-based treatment recommendations.
- JAS Coordinators assist the Defense to determine whether the individual is willing and able to participate in the program.
- Recommendations for post-release treatment are presented to the Defense for use in determining sentencing and court-ordered conditions of probation.
- The Defendant must agree to follow the recommendations of the JAS program and agree to be sentenced in the Anchorage Coordinated Resources Project (Mental Health Court).

Monitoring

- The JAS Coordinator maintains regular contact with treatment providers and program participants for the purpose of monitoring stability and treatment compliance.
- Clients remain on the Active Caseload for at least 12-24 months, with the length of time dependent on criminal and psychiatric history. Clients who experience relapse or make only minimal progress may remain on the Active Caseload for the duration of the court order.
- If the client fails to comply with court ordered conditions, then the JAS Coordinator facilitates filing affidavits of non-compliance and petitions to revoke probation.
- If the JAS participant decides not to follow treatment and probation conditions, then he/she may decide to opt out and return to sentencing in regular District Court.

Institutional Discharge Project Plus (IDP+)
State of Alaska Department of Corrections

Purpose

- The Alaska Department of Corrections has identified "decriminalization of the mentally ill" as a priority.
- DOC IDP+ Clinicians work to link mentally ill felons who will be released on felony probation or parole to treatment programs in Anchorage. The IDP+ Coordinator s work closely with probation officers and community treatment providers to provide an effective case plan.
- Initial identification in jail – with referral to IDP+ to be made within 6-12 months of release date. Although shorter referral dates may be considered, longer notice helps to insure establishing effective treatment plans, intake with a community provider, and referral to appropriate housing resources. IDP+ is also able to initiate expedited prerelease Social Security applications for individuals who qualify.
- Close monitoring of court ordered conditions to comply with mental health treatment can enhance the individual's motivation and prospect for continued treatment and stability, and promote public safety.
- IDP+ is a mandatory DOC program for all individuals with a DOC diagnosed psychotic disorder that will be released on felony probation or parole in Anchorage.

Eligibility

- Must be released on felony probation or parole
- Major mental illness with a history of psychosis
- Final approval by DOC project staff
- 75-80+ clients are served on the active caseload.

Admission Process

- Mental Health Clinicians in DOC correctional facilities collaborate with the IDP+ Coordinators to identify felons with a psychotic disorder who will release on probation or parole in Anchorage, make recommendations for treatment, identify risk factors and determine the likelihood of compliance with community-based treatment recommendations.
- The institutional clinician advises the IDP+ Coordinator of possible referrals and completes the DOC Mental Health Release Program IDP+ referral packet.
- If accepted, the IDP+ Coordinator will meet with the referred individual to create a set of treatment recommendations and determine the appropriate agency to refer to for services.
- Recommendations for post-release treatment are presented to the individual, who is advised he/she is required to comply with treatment recommendations as part of probation or parole. IDP+ works to increase the prospect of a successful transition and to ensure public safety.

Monitoring

- The IDP+ Coordinator maintains regular contact with treatment providers and program participants for the purpose of monitoring stability and treatment compliance, or to alter treatment plans as necessary.
- If the client fails to comply with court ordered conditions, the IDP+ Coordinator works with the Probation Officer to use positive reinforcement, impose sanctions or revoke probation or parole. The person may be remanded for a short or long period depending on what will be needed to enhance compliance with treatment and probation conditions in the community.

Attorney/Clinician Handout October 2011

What is APIC and what does an APIC Mental Health Clinician do?

Due to the deinstitutionalization of America, the nation's correctional system has become the largest residential provider for individuals with severe mental illness, developmental delays or mental retardation (DDMR). APIC is a national best practice model that was implemented statewide through procedures that were developed by the APIC Steering Committee; a multi-state, federal and community agency committee. The goal of APIC is to reduce recidivism for severally mentally ill inmates with co-occurring disorders and increase public safety through transitional planning that can start 90 days before release and continue for at least 60 days post release from jail. The APIC Steering Committee chose to implement the APIC model through the awarding of contracts with funds from the AMHTA to community providers. The APIC funds pay for non-Medicaid billable services, to include services inside of the jail, services prior to benefits, and services that are needed for success. Initially, the community mental health providers had planned on providing all the transitional planning and services; however, it quickly became apparent that a bridge between the all the systems (DOC, the Court, OPA, SSA e.g.) was essential. The APIC population encompasses a broader diagnostic range than the other mental health release programs and it is statewide. The IDP+ clinician and DOC institutional clinicians rely on the assistance of APIC for release planning. The APIC staff work on planned releases and the "crisis" of the day for inmates that are suddenly released from jail . The APIC Mental Health Clinician also manages the APIC contracts and works closely with the DOC Director of Mental Health Release programs to develop interagency partnerships, problem solve and advocate for the most challenging and difficult to house or serve individuals, and assists in maintaining multi-agency systems (social security, guardianships, court e.g.). APIC was originally implemented to work with the severely mentally ill population; however, it quickly became apparent that the DDMR population had been significantly underserved. Because of the mental health challenges both of these populations face, they are more likely to re-offend and can be very dangerous if left untreated. For example, a sex-offender with DDMR issues will need housing, wrap-around treatment and services, and benefit applications. At present, APIC provides transitional services to some of the DDMR population, simply because no one else does. Within this fiscal year, APIC has provided intensive transitional services to 26 high risk inmates that did not qualify for APIC or a DOC mental health release program. Since the inception of APIC in 2007, APIC has grown from 60 to 143 APIC individuals and is currently beyond maximum capacity.

What is IDP+ and what does an IDP+ Mental Health Clinician do?

IDP+ is a DOC Mental Health Release Program for felons released on felony probation or parole who are diagnosed with a psychotic disorder. While APIC provider crisis and transitional services, IDP+ provides ongoing supervision. Given the intensive level of services and monitoring needed and the lack of housing options statewide, most of these individuals with a psychotic disorder and significant functional impairments and are released in Anchorage. The current Anchorage IDP+ caseload is 77-81, up from a caseload of 30 when DOC took over management of IDP+ in 2002. Outside-of-Anchorage, an additional 15 felons are on probation or parole with a psychotic disorder that meet formal IDP+ diagnostic criteria. All these out-of-Anchorage IDP+ probationers are supervised by Probation Officers only. No DOC mental health clinician is assigned or able to provide ongoing oversight or assistance with out-of-Anchorage cases. Initial limited consultation for these individuals is provided by the APIC clinician, with occasional telephone calls and 1 time per year face to face contact. This is in stark contrast to felons with a psychotic disorder who are on IDP+ in Anchorage, who are intensively supervised by both the DOC IDP+ mental health clinician and designated Anchorage mental health Probation Officers, in tandem with Anchorage based community mental health providers.

At the present time, the IDP+ caseload is too high to broaden the diagnostic range to include individuals with FASD, TBI or other DDMR cognitive impairments. The DDMR population can be very intensive due to the combination of the behavior and cognitive challenges this population faces and the very limited to non-existent services and housing options. In FY10, it is estimated that DOC institutional mental health staff completed consults on 188 unique inmates who were identified as having a history of a Traumatic Brain Injury and 93 unique inmates who were considered to have Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder. At the present time it is estimated that there are approximately 25 probationers in Juneau, Fairbanks and Palmer, plus, 45 probationers that are supervised by the Anchorage Probation Officers who have DDMR related diagnosis and corresponding severe functional impairments, for a total of 70 individuals statewide that have a non-psychotic disorder or a DDMR related challenge.

TALKING POINTS

- The Alaska Department of Corrections (DOC) is the largest institutional provider of mental health services in the State of Alaska. Since the deinstitutionalization of American, nationwide correctional centers have become the largest residential provider for individuals with severe mental health and DDMR challenges.

- 42% of DOC's inmate population are considered Alaska Mental Health Trust beneficiaries with a mental illness or mental disorder (Hornby Zeller, 2006). There are over 2,327 unique individuals within the correctional system that were seen by DOC mental health staff in 2010.

- 95+ felony offenders, who have been diagnosed with a psychotic disorder, are on the current IDP+ caseload (80+ for Anchorage and 15 for out-of-Anchorage). The IDP+ caseload has more than doubled since 2002 (caseload of 30) and there is only 1 mental health clinician assigned to the Anchorage caseload.

- IDP+ probationers are intensively supervised by the IDP+ Mental Health Clinician and Anchorage Mental Health Probation Officers, in tandem with Anchorage based community mental health providers.

- Outside of Anchorage, there are 15 felony offenders who have been diagnosed with a psychotic disorder that are on IDP+. All these out-of-Anchorage IDP+ probationers are supervised by Probation Officers only. No DOC mental health clinician is assigned or able to provide ongoing oversight or assistance with out-of-Anchorage cases.

- The DDMR population, to include individuals with FASD, TBI and other cognitive impairments, face challenges that significantly increase their risk for re-offending and recidivism.

- Individuals with DDMR challenges, such as FASD, TBI, mental retardation or other cognitive impairments are significantly underserved by the APIC program and not supervised at all by the IDP+ program.

- 70 felony offenders that include individuals with non-psychotic disorder or DDMR challenges are currently on statewide Mental Health Probation Officer's caseloads that need IDP+ supervision.

- APIC has proven to be very successful in bringing the community together to integrate services and systems to provide transitional services for severely mentally ill inmates. APIC participant have a much higher chance of success in the community and a reduced chance of recidivism.

- IDP+ had no new felony charges for violent offenses for years when the caseload numbers were within recommended limits. Now that the caseload has more than doubled, the rates of legal (jail) and clinical (API) recidivism has increased.

- The IDP+ and APIC Mental Health Release programs have been presented in numerous statewide conferences and in the National GAINS conference in 2008 and 2010, respectively. Both programs are considered to be very effective at reducing recidivism, increasing public safety and increasing offender's chances of success in the community.

An Arctic judge's journey with FASD

BY HON. MICHAEL I. JEFFERY

A trial court judge knowledgeable about Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders struggles with adapting the operations of his court to the needs of FASD-affected individuals in the Alaskan Arctic. His background in learning about FASD through cases and training a the methods he has brought to the Barrow Superior Court to atte to make the justice system more understandable and fair to perso affected by FASD are described. His frustration at not being able evaluate the degree of impairment from FASD experienced by the affected persons in the courtroom and the appropriate accommodations needed for each person are also described.

KEY WORDS: FASD, Arctic, justice system.

Barrow, Alaska,[1] is the northernmost community in the United States. It is the hub community of the North Slope Borough,[2] an expanse of about 89,000 square miles of Arctic tundra, ponds, critical habitat for wildlife, and the home of the resilient Inupiaq Eskimo people and other ethnic groups.

The wind blows for hundreds of miles across the Arctic plain. The small amount of air pollution in Barrow is carried by the winds from Russia and China. The sun shines nonstop in the summer, but it does not rise in the winter for about 8 weeks.

A group of Inupiaq Eskimo people ("the Inupiat") settled in Barrow in ancient times because of the food resources, including caribou, ducks, seals, and the bowhead whale. In the late 1800's the bowhead whale attracted the intrepid Yankee whaling crews for whale oil and baleen. The whalers not only drastically reduced the population of bowhead whales; they also brought alcoholic beverages with them. The Inupiat were introduced to a substance that is still part of daily life, used by many natives and nonnatives alike.

In precontact times, the Inupiat had traditional laws administered by consensus of the whaling captains and elders (Case, 1984). In the late 19th century, the traditional law was supplemented by the U.S. Revenue Cutter Bear whose captain dispensed Western justice during annual visits, until Charles Brower, a nonnative former whaler who had married into the community, became territorial magistrate. From Alaska statehood on January 3, 1959 to the early 1980s, Barrow was served by dedicated local magistrates, without formal legal training, supplemented by Superior Court judges who would visit on occasion.

After a year of work as a legal services attorney in Boston, a near-fatal car crash, and almost 5 years in India, I moved to Barrow in mid-January 1977 to open an office for the Alaska Legal Services Corporation. I traveled to all seven North Slope villages as part of this work. In 1982, I was appointed the North Slope's first resident superior court judge and have continued this service since. Alaska has a statewide court system. The Barrow Court has been staffed since 1982 by a superior court judge and magistrate, with the support of the hard-working court staff. The magistrates serving since 1984 have all had law degrees. The court serves an area of about 80,000 square miles,[3] including Barrow, six of the seven Arctic villages, and the Prudhoe Bay oil complex.

My journey with FASD begins

The ancient Greek philosophers Plato and Aristotle recognized the problems caused to children by mothers drinking during pregnancy, but in 1968, French researchers first described the existence of common issues associated with children thus born (Lemoine, Horousseau, Borteyru, & Menuet, 1968). In 1973, researchers in Seattle, Washington identified a set of characteristics occurring in children with mothers who drank alcohol during pregnancy. They called these characteristics Fetal Alcohol Syndrome (FAS) (Warren, 1997).

Since 2004, the term Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders (FASD) has been used to describe a variety of conditions that can occur when a child has been exposed to alcohol while in the mother's womb (CDC, 2009).[4] Fetal Alcohol Syndrome is the most easily diagnosed and studied of the FASD conditions because of distinctive physical features, but the number of individuals affected by all of FASD conditions is 9-10 times the number affected by FAS (Briacombe et al. 2009).

I was completely unaware of all this information during my years in Barrow with Legal Services and during my early years on the bench. I don't remember when I first heard about "Fetal Alcohol Syndrome or Fetal Alcohol Effects" (the former terms used for FASD), but Clayton's[5] case in 1990 was a crash course for me.

[3] This area is about the same size as Minnesota (79,610 sq. mi., 206,189 sq. km.) (Bockenhauer & Cunha, 2004).

[4] "Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders" is not itself a diagnosis. The term includes the following diagnoses: Fetal Alcohol Syndrome (FAS), Partial Fetal Alcohol Syndrome (PFAS) (most of the features of FAS), static encephalopathy (alcohol exposed) (an unchanging brain condition with central nervous system damage and prenatal alcohol exposure), and neurobehavioral disorder (alcohol exposed) (central nervous system impairment without structural or neurological abnormalities). The last two categories have also been described as "Alcohol-Related Neurodevelopmental disorders" (ARND) (Fetal Alcohol Syndrome Diagnostic and Prevention Network, n.d.).

/ton Clayton had appeared before me as a juvenile delinquent. Shortly after his 18th birthday, he received an adult felony conviction for taking money from the cash register of a local restaurant. He was back in front of me in 1990 for his second felony, sexual assault in the second degree, for the sexual touching of a teacher in a remote classroom. His energetic defense attorney on the second felony discovered that the sober couple that raised Clayton had adopted him—his birth mother had been afflicted with severe alcoholism. The defense attorney was able to get her client diagnosed by a mental health professional who was familiar with FAS/FAE, and the conclusion was "fetal alcohol effects." The diagnosis recognized the damage to his brain even though he did not have the short stature and facial features of Fetal Alcohol Syndrome.

Under the sentencing laws in effect in 1990, Clayton was facing a maximum sentence of 10 years and a "presumptive term" of 4-6 years on the new charge.[6] In Alaska, the only way for a defense attorney to obtain an adjustment of a presumptive term is to convince the sentencing judge by clear and convincing evidence that it would be manifestly unjust to sentence the person according to the presumptive term (Alaska Statute 12.55.165(b)).

The defense attorney contended that it would be manifestly unjust to sentence Clayton without considering his fetal alcohol effects condition. Her solution was that there should be less than the required four years of jail time, followed by supervision of the Department of Corrections in a far less restrictive setting. I agreed with her arguments and followed the presumptive sentencing statute's requirements by referring the case to a three-judge sentencing panel of other superior court judges. If at least two members of the panel agreed after a sentencing hearing in front of them that the panel should accept the case, they would be able to sentence Clayton without being bound by the presumptive term. If they did not accept it, they would refer the case back to me, the sentencing judge, to impose the presumptive term (Alaska Statute 12.55.165)(b)).

They did not accept the case, finding that the fetal alcohol effects issue was a mental health consideration not included in the Legislature's existing mental health mitigating factor, and that judges should not add new mental health considerations when the Legislature had already spoken. They stated that the Department of Corrections would have discretion to release the inmate to a halfway house during the jail time, and they referred the case back to me.

Since our spring judicial conference was being held in Fairbanks, Alaska, at the appropriate time for the resentencing hearing, the parties agreed that I would do the hearing there. Fairbanks is the location of the nearest long-term jail to Barrow and is located about 500 miles south. As it happened, just before the Fairbanks conference my long plane flights to and from a meeting on the East Coast provided the opportunity to read a book that opened my eyes to the challenges facing families and children affected by fetal alcohol exposure. The book was Michael Dorris' The Broken Cord (Dorris, 1990), a memoir about raising a child afflicted with mysterious difficulties that proved to be FAS.

As required by statute, I sentenced Clayton to the four-year presumptive term with a recommendation for classification to a halfway house. But as I looked at him, I suddenly was deeply affected by the thought of so many defendants like him that would really not understand or benefit from the longer jail sentence. I got emotional and left the bench abruptly at the end of the hearing. The defendant appealed the three-judge panel decision but the Alaska Court of Appeals affirmed (W. R. L. v. State, 1992).

[6] The current Alaska sentencing scheme for sexual felonies has drastically increased the jail time for these crimes. Now a person with one prior nonsexual felony convicted of sexual assault in the second degree is subject to a maximum of 99 years and a presumptive range of 10-25 years (Alaska Statute 12.55.125(i)(3)(B)).

There is some good news: The Department of Corrections followed my recommendation and did release Clayton to a halfway house during the jail term. He is now living in the Anchorage area and he has a guardian/conservator to help manage his affairs. Court records show only one misdemeanor case for Clayton since his 1990 felony case.

After my encounter with Clayton, I was appointed to the Alaska Criminal Justice Assessment Commission, which had been established to allow representatives of all three branches of government and other citizens to review the criminal justice system "and to collectively develop recommendations to alleviate the problem" of prison overcrowding (Alaska Criminal Justice Assessment Commission, 2000). I advocated for inclusion of "organic brain disorder" as a mitigating factor in felony presumptive sentences. Although the Commission adopted the proposal,[7] this statutory amendment has not been passed by the Legislature.

My understanding increased during a 1996 Barrow conference on FAS/FAE sponsored by the North Slope Borough Health Department. The organizers arranged for many inspiring speakers including Ann Streissguth, Ph.D., from Seattle, Washington, (one of the leading researchers on FASD) and Jan Lutke from Vancouver, British Columbia (who is raising and effectively advocating for her adoptive children with FASD), as well as experts from Alaska. As I attended the sessions and continued my work at the court that week, I began to realize that the lifelong effects of exposure of a fetus to alcohol in the mother's womb affected the justice system in countless ways. I also realized that it would be impossible to know for certain in a particular hearing who was affected and who was not, and how deeply prenatal alcohol exposure affects any given person. The frustration this understanding left with me remains with me daily.

[7] Proposal 19: "The legislature should create a statutory mitigating factor for use at criminal sentencing, recognizing when the wrongful conduct was substantially affected by an organic brain disorder" (Alaska Criminal Justice Assessment Commission, 2000, p. 71).

Characteristics of FASD that are recognized as presenting difficulties for the justice system

It is not surprising that the justice system in Barrow is struggling to adapt to FASD. That the challenges faced by persons affected by FASD impact the justice system has been recognized in other jurisdictions as well. A recent example is the September, 2008, conference in Whitehorse, Yukon Territory on The Path to Justice—Access to Justice for Individuals with Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder. The conference attracted 130 delegates from across Canada and the United States, and the summary conference report discusses characteristics of FASD that present severe problems for adaptation by the Canadian justice system to these conditions.

Dr. Sterling Clarren, a physician involved with FASD issues for over thirty years and now CEO and Scientific Director of the Canada Northwest FASD Research Network in Vancouver, British Columbia, described persons with FASD who have been diagnosed early in life as having "mysterious maladaptation:"

> First, they don't do well in school and social experiences; by the time they get to [be] adults they are often alienated or have exhausted their care givers, so they are out on their own, and these combined lead to social isolation, poor job performance, poverty, mental health problems, homelessness, victimization, and criminogenesis (Fraser, 2008, September, p. 6). He recognized that "there are often no apparent physical characteristics that predict FASD. Individuals with FASD may appear 'normal' and often have good verbal communication skills. Without specific knowledge of the common behavioral characteristics associated with FASD, it is difficult to 'flag' or identify someone that may have this disability" (Fraser, 2008, p. 8).

The 2008 conference identified additional reasons that the justice system has difficulty adapting to persons with FASD:

> Furthermore, behaviors associated with individuals with FASD are also common among offenders that do not have FASD. For example, offenders with and without FASD are often considered to be impulsive, thrill-seeking, and lacking in judgment. Individuals from both groups who are involved with the criminal justice system may have substance abuse and mental health problems, along with limited employment and education histories. Also, co-occurring problems such as anti-social personality disorder, conduct disorder, or attention deficit disorder may be masking an underlying condition of FASD.

Justice professionals, whether they are police, defense counsel, Crown [prosecutors], judges, victim services workers, or corrections officers, only spend limited time with a client. The short period of time spent with each client often results in the professional not knowing much about the client, including if they have a disability. It often takes more time than professionals have to clearly communicate with individuals with FASD to ensure that they fully understand what is being said to them. Also, some behavioral characteristics associated with FASD are sometimes seen by justice professionals as behavior that suggests disobedience, noncompliance, or aggressiveness. If justice professionals are not aware how FASD may impact an individual, they may not want to get to know their client or work with them any more than the basic minimum to "get by" (Fraser, 2008, p. 8).

The conference report summarized the challenges facing efforts to encourage justice system adaptation to the needs of persons affected by FASD. An important issue is the "lack of awareness of FASD among justice system professionals." Additional challenges are: "(1) that FASD is an 'invisible disability"; (2) the short time-frame that individuals spend with criminal justice professionals; and (3) that it is difficult to order or conduct an FASD diagnostic assessment" (Fraser, 2008, p. 8).

Recent documentation of the prevalence and costs to society of FASD

Facial features typical of FAS make it easier to document than the other far more prevalent but hidden FASD conditions. Therefore, even in publications discussing the general issues presented by FASD, the available statistical data is often limited to studies of the prevalence of FAS. The Alaska Department of Health and Social Services has found that among states tracking FAS rates, Alaska has the highest prevalence in the nation (Alaska Department of Health and Social Services, 2010). Corrections officers in Alaska estimate that 27% of the inmate population has FAS (Behavioral Health Research and Services, 2006). The federal Centers for Disease Control (CDC) reports that the FAS prevalence in the general population of the United States is 0.2-1.5 per 1,000 births; in the American Indian/Alaska Native population it is 3-5 per 1,000 births; in the population of the children in foster care it is 15 per 1,000 births; and in the population of children in a (Canadian) juvenile justice treatment facility it is 200 per 1,000 births (Briacombe et al, 2009, p. 11).

The CDC also reports studies showing that the estimated prevalence of all FASD conditions in the general population of the United States is 9-10 per 1,000 live births (Briacombe, et. al, 2009, p. 11). The Alaska Department of Health and Social Services states that about 180 babies born each year in Alaska have "suspected FASD." (Alaska Department of Health and Social Services, 2010). In 2008, there were 11,438 births (Alaska Bureau of Vital Statistics, 2010) yielding an estimated prevalence of FASD in Alaska of approximately 16 per 1,000 live births. The prevalence of births of children affected by FASD on the North Slope or other rural areas of Alaska is not documented.

A study by the Fetal Alcohol and Drug Unit at the University of Washington of 661 clients diagnosed at their clinic with FAS from 1973 to 1995 showed that "[s]ixty percent of the adolescents and adults and even 14% of the children had trouble with the law." (Streissguth, 1997). This over-representation of persons affected by FASD in the justice system, justifies substantial efforts to accommodate the cognitive disabilities presented by fetal alcohol exposure.

The incredibly high costs to society from this situation are illuminated by the federal Centers for Disease Control recognition of a 2004 study, which found that "[i]n 2002, the estimated [average] lifetime cost for one individual with FAS was $2 million" (Briacombe et al., 2009, p. 12,). The CDC admits that the costs to society from all FASD conditions are "unknown" (Briacombe, et al., 2009).

Accommodations used in the Barrow court for persons who may be affected by FASD

The following ideas are offered as a work in progress. The justice system in Barrow is always interested in approaches relevant to our situation and I have found that each conference I attend presents new ideas and a deeper understanding of how to best adapt to the realities presented by FASD. These are some techniques that seem to work for us in our rural court environment:

ɔwn ring

Instead of completing the hearing quickly by assuming that there has been effective communication with counsel before the hearing, I take the time to completely explain to local participants what is going on. It is sometimes necessary to take a break in the hearing to allow an individual affected by FASD to process what he or she has heard before yet more information is discussed.

ear, ete age the ing

I try to avoid legal jargon as much as possible. I often use a more informal tone, since a person affected by FASD may really be relating to the whole experience like a middle school (or far younger) student, instead of the high school student or adult that the person appears to be.

ber ural ors

In addition to sensitivity to the possibility of FASD, I need to respect cultural influences that can affect many court participants. For example, more traditional persons in many Alaska Native cultures do not look directly at an authority figure, as a sign of respect. Shy youth on the North Slope will sometimes not respond to a question except by raising their eyebrows, meaning, "yes." Local people on the North Slope often require a longer time to formulate an answer to a question even if they understand perfectly what was said, as within this culture a thoughtful answer is valued above a quick answer.

Adapt commonly used forms to have 1) concrete language, 2) more white space, and 3) opportunities for a defendant to put initials by each condition

For example, my criminal forms do not simply state "OR Release." Alaskan practitioners know that this statement means a person is released without posting any bail, but one should not assume a defendant, especially one affected by FASD, understands this. The current version of my four-page form appointing counsel, setting dates and bail conditions, says:

> ☐ OWN RECOGNIZANCE. I can get out on my "own recognizance." This means: I don't have to give any money right now. I promise to come back to court or jail. I also promise to follow all the promises in this form. The police could arrest me if I do not come back to court or follow all the promises.
> My initials: [_____]

Using more white space, 14-point type, and the requirement to initial each rule are efforts to make sure that the whole process is not simply a "blur" of words. Both the Court and the defendant must focus on each point.

Use the same system for conduct agreement/ conditions of probation forms in a juvenile delinquency case

These cases are less formal than the adult criminal cases and Alaska's Division of Juvenile Justice emphasizes the value of "restorative justice." The Division has been supportive in our implementation of a shortened version using concrete language of its Conduct Agreement/Conditions of Probation form. For example, the current form used at Barrow includes the following rules:

> 1. I won't drink alcohol. [_____]
> 2. I won't use illegal drugs like marijuana. [_____]
> 3. I will take a "PBT" or "UA" test when the police or the probation officer asks me to. [_____]

Be receptive to "third party custody" arrangements (including, when available, electronic monitoring) in criminal cases rather than using higher bail, when such arrangements will provide adequate structure for a defendant. Such arrangements will reduce overcrowding in the jails, are more humane and constructive for defendants affected by FASD, and reduce costs to society.

When sentencing laws provide enough flexibility, reduce the amount of jail time (or the level of care for a juvenile delinquent) and increase the amount of supervision time. The attorneys involved in a case can often reach this result through plea bargains that reduce the severity of a charge, enhancing judicial discretion in fashioning a meaningful sentence or juvenile disposition. A person affected by FASD could adapt well to the structure of a jail or juvenile institution, but the person is also more likely to learn negative behaviors from others in the same environment. Another reason supporting the use of sentencing alternatives for persons affected by FASD is that jail beds and placements at juvenile institutional facilities provide more structure than needed at greatly increased cost to society (Wartnik, 2007).

When FASD is suspected, include a recommendation in a sentencing judgment or juvenile disposition order that can assist professionals working with the individual. The recommendation for adult defendants could read something like: "This defendant may have a FASD condition. The Court THEREFORE RECOMMENDS that anyone working with the defendant use concrete language, with the realization that basic concepts will need to be repeated frequently."

- For defendants who might qualify for community custody and who have issues of alcohol/substance abuse and limited employment skills: Classification to a halfway house for alcohol/substance abuse counseling and employment training.

- For defendants likely to remain in jail and have alcohol/substance abuse issues: Defendant should participate in any alcohol/substance abuse counseling provided to the defendant by the Department of Corrections, which may include a residential therapeutic community within the jail.

- For defendants with more severe cognitive impairments: Prior to release from jail, the Department of Corrections should explore long-term structured living arrangements that might be available for this defendant upon completion of the jail term.

Keep bringing up the issue of FASD, especially in child welfare and juvenile delinquency cases

If a FASD condition is suspected, encourage the social worker or juvenile probation officer to obtain a FASD diagnosis. The greater resources available in these cases and the greater amount of time that a youth is in custody, as compared to adult defendants, make it more likely that an evaluation might be arranged. The earlier the evaluation can occur, the more useful in the life of the person: Having an evaluation prior to the age of 6 is the second most beneficial "protective factor" for patients 12 years and older (Streissguth, Barr, Kogan, & Bookstein, 1997). Efforts to bring up the subject of FASD are also necessary in other types of cases when a participant is suspected of having the condition (Malbin, 2004).

Schedule periodic review hearings in certain cases

More frequent interaction with an authority figure like a judge is a great way to enhance structure for juveniles and adults involved in the justice system. Therefore, we have monthly or quarterly review hearings in some cases. The hearings are an opportunity to make sure a treatment program is working, to celebrate successes, and (once again) to warn of consequences of not following the rules.

Acknowledge and support, on record, initiatives by other professionals to assist FASD-affected clients

For example, one officer in Barrow had a number of probationers who were obviously affected by FASD who were not doing well. Rather than immediately filing petitions to revoke probation, the officer started the "Breakfast Club." Each of these defendants had to come into the office at 8:00 a.m. to plan his or her activities for that day. The next day they would come in and report on the previous day's activities and plan the current day. The officer found that after about three weeks of this additional structure in their lives, they would get the message on complying with probation or show that they were not able to do so.

courage ation of nship or itorship ements, y when g with a ear the e of 18

Caring social workers or juvenile probation officers may have gone through the steps necessary to qualify a young adult affected by FASD for federal Social Security disability payments. In Alaska, youth in custody may build up a significant trust fund from dividends received from the state and/or native corporations. Such trust funds become available in a lump sum on the 18th birthday. Most youths need guidance in managing these government or private funds, and appointment of a conservator provides great benefits for such youth. If the mental problems are severe enough to prevent normal decisions about living arrangements and medical care decisions, the court may also need to appoint a guardian.

Do not gnose om the ench," emain o what ou see

Another adaptation I have made is to attempt to identify suspected FASD cases even though an actual FASD diagnosis is rare in my court. I keep in mind (and put on record) that I cannot "diagnose from the bench." Yet there are indicators that I use to tell me if a person is probably affected by FASD:

1. Comes from an alcoholic family.
2. Frequent contact with the justice system—especially with similar kinds of cases; back in court repeatedly for bail or probation violations.
3. Impulsive behavior is demonstrated in current situation and/or prior record.
4. Often a "follower" in criminal incidents, but is the one who is getting caught.
5. History of problems with school, including having an IEP or dropping out early.
6. Has a lot of mental health diagnoses (FASD may be the most basic one that has been missed).
7. Short stature.
8. Facial appearance—however, for adults this factor is not very useful.

9. Multiple foster home placements (in the unusual case in which such information is available to me).
10. History of inappropriate sexual behavior (when such information is available to me).

Encourage the individual to learn more about FASD and attempt to reduce feelings of guilt and blame of the birth mother

Bringing up the issue of FASD at a court hearing can sometimes lead to some very sensitive moments, especially when parents are in court to support a person with a possible FASD. Here is the approach I use for both adolescents and adults:

It looks like you might have a challenge in your life called FASD. It's not your fault; it just happens that your brain may work a little differently because your mother may have been drinking while you were inside her. You might want to learn about it and mention it to people working with you so that they can do a better job in helping you understand things. Remember that your mom could have been drinking before she even knew that she had you inside her.

Special programs at the Barrow Court

Barrow Misdemeanor Resources Project

The Alaska Mental Health Trust Authority (Alaska Statutes 47.30.11-47.30.61) uses the income from the one million acres of Alaska's land Congress granted to the Territory of Alaska "to be held in public trust to help effectuate the creation and operation of mental health care facilities in Alaska" (Weiss v. State, 1997).[8] The beneficiaries of the Trust are persons with various mental health conditions, including developmental disabilities (Alaska Statute 47.30.056(c)(2), (d), (e), (f), & (g)). The Trust programs may also include "prevention or early intervention services for individuals at risk of becoming Trust beneficiaries. The Trust considers prevention of these conditions, where possible, as part of its mandate" (Alaska Mental Health Lands Trust, 2010).

The Trust has been aware that there are a significant number of persons involved in the justice system in Alaska who have FASD or other mental health challenges that result in excessive jail time. In fact, "approximately 42% of individuals incarcerated in the Alaska Department of Corrections qualify as Trust beneficiaries" (Alaska Mental Health Trust Authority, 2010). The Trust approached the Barrow Court as a site to try initiatives to specifically deal with this issue in a rural setting. The Trust's first approach at Barrow was to encourage formation of a therapeutic court program. It paid for a consultant who (after consultations with the judicial officers, social workers, juvenile probation officers, prosecutor, defense attorney, police and others) prepared manuals for both professionals and defendants. Despite these substantial efforts, this attempt did not work in our small community: We have only one prosecuting attorney, one resident defense attorney, one superior court judge and one magistrate. Considerations of both time and personnel made it impossible to have the type of specialized "team" and "premeetings" before each court hearing that therapeutic courts require. The extremely low number of clients demonstrated that the complexity of the program did not appeal to North Slope defendants.

With considerable input from the justice community in Barrow, the Trust's efforts have now evolved into the Barrow Misdemeanor Resources Project (BMRP). An adult misdemeanor probation officer/case manager (administered through the statewide Alcohol Safety Action Program [ASAP]) staffs this program. The case manager's duties are broader than other probation officers administrated by ASAP. Since well over 90% of the crime on the North Slope is alcohol-related, and since we also have a relatively high percentage of domestic violence assaults, misdemeanor (and felony) probation conditions routinely include treatment requirements. The case manager attends misdemeanor arraignments and sentencings as well as other court hearings. Most referrals to the case manager state that the defendant is to meet with BMRP soon after the hearing (or completion of jail time) "for assistance in complying with probation conditions." The case manager meets with the defendant in the BMRP office across from the courtroom. The case manager interviews the person to gain information for a mental health screening tool she has developed based on models used in other programs, reviews the probation conditions, and then assists the defendant in contacting local treatment programs for assessment.

The assistance from BMRP may end after the interview if the defendant does not appear to have mental challenges. However, if the initial interview reveals mental health concerns, including suspected FASD, the case manager undertakes a broader range of involvement. The defendant is assisted in contacting treatment programs, referrals may be made to other support services, and family counseling about guardianship/conservatorship may be given. The case manager schedules ongoing appointments with the defendant to monitor progress. The effort is to make the criminal justice process more understandable with extra attention and explanation, and to keep the defendant affected with FASD from needlessly facing petitions to revoke probation and more jail time by providing greater structure that helps maintain the defendant's ability to make appointments and comply with treatment recommendations (G. Hooper, personal communication, September 1, 2010). The adult probation officer has also requested assistance from the BMRP caseworker for felony probationers needing special assistance because of mental health concerns.

Compliance hearings

The flexibility of a therapeutic court program to conduct relevant hearings and have reasonable, swift sanctions for those with FASD make such programs a very desirable option,[9] but Barrow's small justice community does not have the available staff to support a full therapeutic court program. However, this reality does not prevent us from using therapeutic court principles. For about 2 years, District Court Magistrate Karen R. Hegyi maintained a program of monthly compliance hearings, inviting the superior court judge to join her on the bench to hear from treatment providers and misdemeanor defendants whose probation conditions included treatment conditions. Unlike a traditional therapeutic court, however, there were no premeetings before the monthly compliance hearings. Treatment providers sent compliance forms in before hearings. These were reviewed by the magistrate and cases were ranked. Defendants doing well were first. As each name was called, the defendant would come up and treatment provider(s) would give a summary of progress in treatment. Completion of a program resulted in a standing ovation, good progress met with applause, spotty compliance was met with silence and the prosecuting attorney would inform persons not making adequate progress that a petition to revoke probation would be filed. (If the defendant shows compliance, the prosecutor would withdraw the petition).

The value of ongoing contact between the judicial authority figure and the defendant is one of the basic techniques of the nationwide therapeutic court movement, especially for defendants with mental challenges such as FASD (Hora, Schma, & Rosenthal, 1999). Barrow's compliance hearing program is currently in vacation mode because of workload considerations from the clerk's office and the concern of a treatment program's former administrator that the monthly reporting could harm the program's treatment relationship with the client. We anticipate addressing these issues and rejuvenating this program within the next few months.

The journey continues: Some recent cases involving persons affected by FASD

Tom Tom has never been evaluated for Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder despite his lengthy juvenile justice history, a series of misdemeanor convictions, and his felony weapons charge involving a dangerous standoff with police officers. Tom is now 24 years old, but he started using alcohol and marijuana when he was 12. Raised in a North Slope village, he was placed in another village in foster care from age 11 to 14. Several males in his extended family had committed suicide. Police investigations found at least probable cause that he was involved with a great deal of dysfunctional behavior as a juvenile: at age 8, deliberately setting a fire; at 10, breaking windows; at 14, stealing items from the counseling center in Barrow, assaulting another youth, stealing a bike and trying to steal a four-wheeler; at ages 15 to 16, being identified as someone who took snow machines and arranged for other youth to do so. All these incidents were dismissed or handled with counseling by the juvenile probation officer.

Tom was formally adjudicated a juvenile delinquent at 16 after he chased another youth while in possession of a baseball bat. He was referred to a residential alcohol/substance abuse treatment program in Southeast Alaska and did fairly well. But then, as a 19- to 20-year-old adult he was convicted three times of misdemeanor domestic violence assaults against his girlfriend. He reported to treatment providers that during this period of time he also had eight major snow machine accidents. He had periods of employment: 2 years as a stockman in an auto parts store, 4 months as a laborer, and 28 months as a tour guide.

At the age of 22 he received his first felony conviction for having an illegal weapon (a sawed-off shotgun) during an incident in which he possessed the illegal weapon and a rifle, was intoxicated and highly agitated, and engaged in a 3-hour standoff with police officers until he was allowed to talk with his ex-girlfriend. Based on the plea agreement, I sentenced him to 24 months with 18 months suspended and put him on probation for 3 years with probation conditions including no possession or consumption of alcohol and treatment requirements. By the time of the sentencing hearing he had served the jail time.

His probation officer allowed him to travel to Anchorage shortly after the sentencing. When he returned, the probation officer searched his baggage and found two bottles of whiskey, a probation violation. He told his probation officer that he knew he should not have brought in the alcohol, but he figured "his chances of getting searched were only about 5% so it was worth the risk." I added some community work service to his sentence. He is currently before the court for another petition to revoke probation for failing to complete the court-ordered domestic violence intervention program. The probation officer, prosecuting attorney, and defense attorney agreed to extend his probation for enough time to complete all treatment and to require him to travel to Fairbanks, Alaska to complete (and pay for) domestic violence intervention treatment, alcohol/substance abuse treatment, and a psychiatric evaluation. I recommended that the psychiatrist be someone familiar with FASD.

The fact that Tom was in foster care from ages 11 to 14, the dysfunction in his birth family, and his ongoing offenses as a juvenile strongly suggest a cognitive impairment such as Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder, but he never had the benefit of this type of assessment. The child welfare and juvenile justice systems (and the Court) had ample opportunity to conduct such an evaluation but missed it. At last, as an adult, he is being referred for an appropriate mental health evaluation.

Jane Jane's case demonstrates the limits of service delivery when a client turns 18 and insists on leaving an available structured placement. Jane was involved in the child welfare system, and the FASD evaluation arranged by the social worker yielded a diagnosis of FASD "static encephalopathy-alcohol exposed." Her behaviors were quite difficult for care providers to deal with and she lived in institutional placements for extended periods of time. As she approached her 18th birthday, she was placed in a therapeutic foster home. The foster parents were working with her to finish her high school diploma. But she insisted that she leave the custody of the social workers as soon as she turned 18. When all persuasive efforts failed, the state moved to close the case at the 18th birthday. Custody remained open only long enough to have a conservatorship established for her.

Tragically, she was sexually assaulted while in Anchorage shortly after her release from custody. She returned to her birth mother in a North Slope village, but had problems in the village and became suicidal. She was immediately transferred to the Fairbanks Memorial Hospital for care. When the hospital released her, she was provided temporary housing, and she received transition to adulthood services in Fairbanks from a specialist at the Office of Children's Services. But she insisted on going to locations frequented by alcohol and drug abusers and spending time there. Only after she was again physically assaulted did she begin to realize that she needed more assistance than the conservatorship. A temporary guardian is now in place (pending the permanent guardianship hearing) with the ability to find adequate housing and require Jane to take advantage of the placement.

Mary Mary is someone for whom the structure provided by a loving adoptive family has given her a reasonable chance to live a full life as an adult. I had handled the termination of parental rights proceeding of Mary's birth parents some twenty years ago. One part of the evidence was videotaped testimony of a child psychologist about the many complicated problems Mary would face as she grew up because of her exposure to alcohol during her mother's pregnancy, and how the birth parents would be unable to cope with them because of their own instability. I granted the termination of parental rights. Mary was very blessed to have a Barrow couple file an adoption petition within a few months. I insisted that the couple watch the videotaped expert testimony before I would grant the adoption. The couple watched the video and proceeded; I granted the adoption. I have noticed that Mary has never been in the Barrow court[10] and has had appropriate employment. She appears to be doing fine, with the structure that had been provided by the adoptive parents and her employment.

John John had the benefit of a tentative FASD diagnosis while in the juvenile justice system. But his desire to live with his family in an Arctic village resulted in an environment that did not provide the structure he needed. His impulsive criminal behavior has landed him in jail, again. John came before me in a juvenile delinquency case for burglarizing the store in his home village near Barrow. His dysfunctional family situation and the lack of other options on the North Slope that would meet his needs required placement outside the North Slope. One benefit of the placement was that the Division of Juvenile Justice was able to arrange for a mental health evaluation that concluded he had "Axis III: . . . Possible Fetal Alcohol Effect/Fetal Alcohol Syndrome." Just after his 18th birthday, he was back in front of me with an adult felony case for burglarizing the same village store. He had learned something from the previous burglary juvenile case: He wore gloves and turned off the store's electricity so that the surveillance camera did not work. But he was quickly turned in and the stolen items were recovered. When he was arrested, he was still wearing socks he'd stolen from the store.

The probation officer noted the diagnosis and recommended approval of an agreement for limited jail time and a suspended imposition of sentence that would give John the opportunity to have the felony taken off his record. She showed her understanding of FASD in her additional recommendation that if the defendant violated probation there should be a prompt response so that he will understand the connection between his actions and the consequences. I accepted the plea agreement and the defendant was out on probation immediately, since prior to sentencing he had already served the 60-day jail sentence required by the plea agreement.

Back in the village after the jail time, John wanted to get a job with a local construction company. The construction staff lived in the village's small hotel. When he approached them about the job, they told him to apply online. He said he did not have computer and they let him use the computer in their area of the hotel. When he left, he was wearing some Carhartt overalls that he had seen inside the hotel, which had an iPhone in the pocket. The staff called the police. When the officer arrested John, he was still wearing the Carhartts, with the iPhone still in the pocket. Now he faced a petition to revoke probation with a possible maximum sentence of five years in the old case, as well as a new charge of burglary in the first degree with a maximum of 10 years and a "presumptive sentence" of 4-6 years. He faced an immediate sanction, because he remained in jail continuously since his arrest; however, the investigation and plea negotiations for the two cases lasted 5 months. I accepted the plea agreement resolving both cases, which mandated dismissal of the new case and a permanent felony conviction with a 2-year flat sentence for the probation revocation in the earlier case. I included a recommendation that because of the diagnosis of "probable FASD," corrections staff should use concrete language and repeat basic concepts. I also recommended that the defendant be transferred to a halfway house.

Joseph This young adult was diagnosed with FASD as a youth and his behaviors prevented an adoptive placement. He was not able to cope with living in a community setting and his social workers placed him in a residential psychiatric facility for treatment that lasted about one year. He now has chosen to live in Anchorage and he has just started residing in an assisted living program that will be available for almost the next 3 years. Joseph was one of several children in a highly dysfunctional family that generated a child welfare case resulting in termination of parental rights. He was 6 years old at the time. Both parents were severely alcoholic. When he was 11, Joseph was diagnosed with the FASD "static encephalopathy-alcohol exposed." His behaviors prevented a permanent adoptive placement. The social workers had to place him in a residential psychiatric program in the rural hub community of Bethel in Southwest Alaska, which had staff that understood his FASD condition and worked well with their native clients. He completed the program in approximately 1 year.

As he approached his 18th birthday, professionals obtained the services of a court-appointed conservator for him. Joseph wanted to move to Anchorage and, with assistance from the transition to adult life specialist in the Office of Children's Services, he was accepted to an assisted living program where he can live with some structure until his 21st birthday. With the income he has coming in from Social Security and native corporation dividends, along with the structure of the assisted living program, he has an ideal situation for beginning his life as an adult. His case is now being transferred to Anchorage, but I had the gratification of seeing these arrangements put in place for him.

The journey continues: Ideas for the future at Barrow

In addition to continuing to implement adaptations in the court setting, it is important to consider additional projects to make our rural community more responsive to the needs of persons affected by a FASD.

ourage mation a local FASD gnostic team

Service providers in our community have identified the difficulty of finding opportunities for diagnosis of FASD as a stumbling block in providing support to individuals with obvious challenges in dealing with their life experiences (Ruiz, personal communication, September 9, 2010). Having the diagnosis when it is justified holds the promise of more effective treatment and adequate structure to avoid the justice system altogether.

Efforts are underway to form a FASD diagnostic team in Barrow. Dedicated professionals active in a FASD diagnostic team in Anchorage have offered to assist Barrow professionals in establishing a FASD diagnostic team for the North Slope. They have proposed a model of having quarterly 4-day trips (including weekend days) to Barrow to conduct evaluations as a team alongside local professionals. We could have a "FASD Clinic" just like the existing "Orthopedic Clinic," "Diabetes Clinic," and other specialty clinics provided at our local hospital facility with specialists from Alaska Native Medical Center in Anchorage. Having such a team would slowly reduce the tremendous backlog of undiagnosed individuals, including young children, teenagers and adults, resulting in more effective service delivery, greater understanding by the person and his or her caregivers about behavioral issues, and enhanced ability to access benefits. On a statewide basis, this model would encourage development of traveling FASD diagnostic teams to serve rural hub communities similar to Barrow.

Adopt innovations such as the "Probation Icon Project" for juvenile justice cases

The FASD Youth Justice Program in Winnipeg, Manitoba has developed sheets of peel-off icons symbolizing each juvenile probation condition. When the juvenile probation officer is explaining the conditions to a FASD-affected youth, the youth is encouraged to peel off the appropriate icon and place it by the corresponding probation condition. When the youth is done, the youth leaves with the copy of the conditions with the icons on it. The probation officers testing this approach feel that the level of comprehension is greatly increased (Robson, 2009). The Alaska Division of Juvenile Justice is receptive to adapting the use of peel-off icons to its Conduct Agreement/ Conditions of Probation (Murray, personal communication, October 28, 2010). The first step will be to develop icons that fit the Alaska Division of Juvenile Justice probation conditions.

Encourage development of programs to support birth mothers to care for a child with FASD, when at all possible, while preserving safety for the child

The value of such programs in providing meaningful support for birth mothers and their families has been confirmed by research (Olson, Oti, Gelo, & Beck, 2009). Programs in Washington such as Families Moving Forward and the Parent Child Assistance Program provide such a model. Dr. Sterling Clarren, a leading physician in the field of FAS for over 30 years, has predicted that such programs would reduce the incidence of FASD by half, since birth mothers given such support tend not to have additional FASD-affected children (Clarren, 2010). Barrow's Children and Youth Services program[11] is currently developing such an initiative using the Teaching-Family Model of providing a great deal of support within the family to eliminate or at least greatly reduce time that a child must be separated from the child's family (Dunbar, personal communication, October 22, 2008).

The Barrow Superior Court is in the process of becoming the first rural Alaska court to implement the Alaska Department of Corrections' Probationer Accountability with Certain Enforcement (PACE) program. Modeled on a successful program in Hawai'i, the program identifies certain felony probationers for special enforcement procedures in which even technical probation violations result in immediate petitions to revoke probation, warrants are served on an expedited basis, and a court hearing is held within 72 hours (Halpin, 2010). The hearing results in a very prompt but limited sanction. The sanction might be the immediate service of a few days in jail (Telkamp, personal communication, October 13, 2010). Such an effort will assist probationers affected by a FASD or similar cognitive impairments to realize that violating probation conditions has a consequence of jail time by having the limited consequence occur immediately after the violation.

Such placements would be more humane, suitable, and far less costly to the citizens than locking persons affected by FASD in jails or locked juvenile institutions. The Lakeland Centre for Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders in Cold Lake, Alberta, Canada has issued a report describing a large number of Canadian programs that provide structured living for persons affected by FASD. One program of particular interest is the Whitecrow Village FASD Society in Nanaimo, British Columbia, Canada, which provides a wonderful model of a structured living and outreach program administered by and serving adults with FASD (Warner & Kissinger, 2010). Two programs that have lost their funding also demonstrated the feasibility of structured living specifically targeted for adults and adolescents affected by FASD: the Phoenix House program for adult offenders in a halfway house in Vancouver, British Columbia, and the Kids Kare and Education program in Washington State for adolescents in state custody.

Bread for the journey

As hopes for a North Slope justice system that is more caring and more appropriate for its citizens with fetal alcohol spectrum disorders and other mental health challenges become more real, it is useful to keep some basic realities in mind.

FASD is not a racial issue; it is a medical condition caused by maternal drinking during pregnancy that can happen anywhere on earth among persons of any race. Unfortunately, the medical community may misdiagnose or overlook the FASD condition and provide a psychiatric diagnosis that leads to ineffective and inappropriate treatment. Instead of realizing the FASD condition exists, the professional may give a diagnosis limited to conditions such as Attention-Deficit/Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD), Oppositional Defiant Disorder, and/or Conduct Disorder only (Dubovsky, 2008). On the other hand, a person with a FASD may also have a number of other mental health conditions along with the FASD.[12] Effective intervention will only occur if the treatment providers pay attention to FASD and the other conditions as well.

Even if facial appearance changes over time, a person does not "outgrow" FASD. With a structured life, the person may adapt and become a productive citizen (Kleinfeld & Westcott, 1993). In court, an affected person may be quite verbal, give answers indicating that the person has "understood," and could, if asked, repeat back what was said. But an adult or teenager affected by FASD may have the understanding and behavior of a middle school student or younger. A person affected by a FASD may be able to follow a direction one day and be unable to do so the next, not due to recalcitrance, but simply because of the way the person's brain functions (Rathbun, 1993).

The challenges for persons affected by FASD are present across the justice system. A defendant may lack the intent required for certain crimes, yet be convicted of them. A defendant might be very suggestible during police questioning, leading to false confessions and wasted resources (and increased danger to the community) when the investigation is shut down too soon. Victims and other witnesses affected by FASD may have a great deal of difficulty in a trial when asked to describe what has happened (Conry & Fast, 2000). Probationers or parolees may have special difficulties in following the rules, leading to more court time and jail commitments for violations of bail, probation and/or parole. Parents in child welfare cases may have special difficulties in satisfactorily completing case plans.

Delivering adequate training about FASD to justice system professionals can be challenging, given work loads and shift work. The problems become more acute when dealing with the vast area of a jurisdiction like Alaska. Even when persons have been trained, the turnover in these positions fosters the need for ongoing training despite the costs involved.

Even if judicial officers and other justice system professionals understand FASD and its effect across a person's life span, the traditional justice system has many roadblocks for those wishing to adapt. Research on the effect of FASD shows that an affected person has difficulty relating consequences to previous actions (Conry & Fast, 2000), yet cases drag on for months because of workloads and efforts to protect rights, greatly diminishing the impact of any consequences imposed. The experience of families raising a child affected by FASD shows that it is most productive to have an affected person concentrate on a very limited number of goals (Jones & Cunningham, n.d.), yet bail orders and case plans may have a dozen rules and a document like the judgment for a felony probationary sentence in Alaska has 12 to 30 general and special probation conditions. Pressures to complete hearings promptly to move the docket and leave court clerks free to work on progressively more difficult data entry requirements make it difficult to slow down a hearing and provide the explanations needed by an affected person. The very real possibility that a person affected by FASD will be overwhelmed by too much information provided at one time justifies taking a short break in a hearing when possible to maximize the ability of the person to understand it.

A person affected with FASD almost always needs enhanced structure—the "external brain." But the available tools may be excessive in structure and expense—like a jail cell—or provide reasonable structure, but only for a relatively short period of time—like a halfway house, alcohol treatment program, or juvenile treatment program. Also, knowing how much structure is needed for a particular individual is difficult: Professionals (including judicial officers) can become chronically frustrated with the frequent situation that we do not know how intensely a particular individual is affected by FASD.

Conclusion, but not the end of the journey

Failure to adapt to the legitimate needs of persons with the "invisible disability" of FASD needlessly encourages the development of "secondary disabilities" (Streissguth, Barr, Kogan & Bookstein, 1996) that lead to excessive involvement of affected persons with the justice system, increased confinement, and tremendous time demands for all the professionals involved, including peace officers, probation officers, and social workers. Tribal courts face the same challenges as they resolve cases within their jurisdiction. Society as a whole bears a great burden of cost. By helping affected persons avoid disproportionate entanglement with the criminal justice system, these costs would be reduced.

Accommodating persons with a cognitive disability like Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder is both a human rights issue and a due process issue (Evensen, 2010). Despite the pressures on time and energy, courts must do their best to be understandable, and to be respectful of such persons appearing before them. Failure to do so implicates ethical requirements for both attorneys and judges to insure that persons involved in the justice system understand what is happening to them (Huguelet, 2010).

Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder impacts the entire justice system in ways that are difficult for any one person to grasp. Those who realize this fact feel somewhat lonely and overwhelmed as the overall justice system adapts slowly to accommodating the human rights of cognitively impaired persons. But there are some rays of hope. The Canadian Bar Association's (CBA) 2010 resolution 10-02-A "Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder in the Criminal Justice System" shows admirable understanding of the issues raised by FASD (Canadian Bar Association, 2010). The resolution recommends that the CBA:

1. support the initiative of Federal, Provincial and Territorial Ministers responsible for Justice with respect to access to justice for people with FASD and urge all levels of government to allocate additional resources for alternatives to the current practice of criminalizing individuals with FASD;

2. urge the federal, territorial and provincial governments to develop policies designed to assist and enhance the lives of those with FASD and to prevent persistent overrepresentation of FASD affected individuals in the criminal justice system; and

3. urge the federal government to amend criminal sentencing laws to accommodate the disability of those with FASD.

Similar efforts in the justice community in Alaska and the rest of the United States would result in a more humane, effective justice system which would lead to a noticeable reduction in the needless human and financial costs of our current treatment of persons affected by a Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder. As Canadian Judge Mary Ellen Turpel-Lafond stated at the September, 2008 Whitehorse conference on access to justice of persons affected by FASD, improving effective "access to justice" for individuals with FASD "is the desire in fact to understand and keep them out of the justice system and to ensure that the justice system is not used as a substitute for appropriate social services and supports for some of the most vulnerable citizens" (Fraser, 2008).

Understanding FASD: Disability and Social Supports for Adult Offenders

E. Sharon Brintnell, Patricia G. Bailey, Anjili Sawhney, and Laura Kreftin

Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder (FASD) can affect people of all backgrounds, ethnicities, religious persuasions, and socioeconomic groups, and represents a significant factor in predicting involvement in the correctional system. The following discussion is focused on the issues facing the corrections system and offenders or former offenders with FASD, as well as issues facing society on the release of people with FASD back into the community. The strong correlation between the disability, unmet multifaceted needs and incarceration of people with FASD, along with the stigma and hard realities of incarceration, necessitate a thoughtful perspective to improve the chances of success for this population.

Adults with FASD experience a range of disabilities that contribute to the likelihood that they will enter the correctional system. These include the primary brain deficits of cognitive and behavioral problems, gullibility, inhibition and poor judgment; secondary disabilities, such as substance abuse and mental illness; and deficits in the social determinants of health, such as poverty and racism. However, the judicial and correctional systems are generally not prepared either to identify FASD, or to address the disabilities of FASD among the offender population. Screening and assessment for the spectrum in these systems is limited, and at present there is no system in place to screen for FASD in adult prisons in Canada (Chapman, 2008). Although there are overtures in some jurisdictions to address the latter deficit, the needs of adult offenders with FASD are currently not adequately met in the corrections system (Chapman, 2008; Miller, 2005; Boland, Chudley, and Grant, 2002). It is important that the correctional system recognizes and identifies affected individuals, because people with FASD are vulnerable and their disabilities contribute to their getting into trouble with the law (Moore and Green, 2004; Streissguth et al., 2004). Moreover, research has indicated that identifying FASD at any age improves options for interventions and helps to reframe problematic behaviors (Malbin, 2004).

Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder (FASD) is a Disability

The term "disability" has a variety of definitions. For the purposes of discussing the interrelationship between FASD, social services and incarceration, disability occurs when individuals have activity limitations that create barriers to their participation in society. In the International Classification of Functioning, Disability and Health (ICF), developed by the World Health Organization (WHO), three broad health domains are noted: body functions and structures; activities or the execution of actions; and participation, or life involvement (Cieza et al., 2009). Using this international framework, it is appropriate to view FASD as a brain dysfunction that causes impairments (Olson et al. 2009) in all three main areas of functionality.

Fetal alcohol exposure (FAE) results in a continuum of impairments that cause affected people to be functionally disabled in a variety of ways. There are both primary disabilities and secondary disabilities associated with FASD. Primary disabilities are those that are directly caused by exposure to alcohol before birth, while secondary disabilities arise out of the interplay between primary disabilities, psychosocial factors, and environmental influences. Other factors that contribute to the barriers experienced by people with FASD are deficits in the social determinants of health.

Incarcerated people with FASD are an especially vulnerable subgroup of the affected population. Offenders may never have received a diagnosis, and they commonly have a pattern of repeated trouble with the law. People with extensive criminal histories are frequently considered high-risk offenders, and factors contributing to their criminality, including brain damage caused by FASD, may not be taken into account by the justice system. The incidence of primary and secondary disabilities caused by the prenatal exposure to alcohol is very high in offenders with FASD, and interventions to ameliorate adverse outcomes generally have not been employed (Fast and Conry, 2004). The interrelationship between the primary and secondary disabilities of FASD can lead to behavior that results in incarceration, and as a result affected people will require the same societal accommodation and supports that are available to people with other disabilities. Offenders with FASD are disabled. FASD can be viewed as a disability with societal challenges and needs for support similar to those of other chronic impairments that result from injury, such as spinal cord injuries.

Primary Disabilities Associated with FASD

The effects of prenatal alcohol exposure (PAE) include damage to brain structures that results in deficits in cognition, development, and behavior. PAE can also cause separate medical conditions, such as seizure disorders, skeletal problems, cardiovascular disease, dental problems, and reactions to medications (Paley and O'Connor, 2009). All of these conditions influence an individual's ability to function and participate fully in society.

In particular, the diminished cognitive function in FASD results in major deficits in an individual's ability to meet the demands of daily life. Poor short-term memory can result in information and instructions being quickly forgotten; and while long-term memory may be unaffected, information storage is often disorganized and therefore information becomes difficult to retrieve (Grant et al., 2004). Effective executive function (EF), or the integration of basic cognitive processes, is often lacking in people with FASD. Deficiencies in EF affect multiple areas of functioning, including work and school performance, social interactions, parenting, daily living skills, and ability to plan, organize and learn from mistakes (Grant et al., 2004; Connor et al., 2000). The scores on intelligence tests of people with FASD may or may not be abnormal, but many people with FASD are not able to perform at the level predicted by their IQ scores (Malbin, 2004; Kodituwakku, 2009; Fast and Conry, 2009; Chudley et al., 2007; Wass, Persutte, and Hobbins, 2001). These factors, combined with insufficient inhibition and poor cause-and-effect reasoning, can lead to life-long difficulties in adapting to social expectations and functioning socially (Rasmussen et al., 2008).

Secondary Disabilities Associated with FASD

Secondary disabilities are conditions, behaviors or situations that develop after birth. Secondary disabilities associated with FASD include mental illness (depression, anxiety and psychoses), substance abuse, restlessness, trouble at school, homelessness, and unemployment (Paley and O'Connor, 2009; Chudley et al., 2007). Secondary disabilities cause significant upheaval in people's lives. Trouble at school can lead to delinquency and then to trouble with the law, which can in turn cause difficulty in attaining and retaining employment and lead to further encounters with the legal system. According to Streissguth et al. (2004), adolescents and adults with FASD have a 60% risk of getting into trouble with the law. Incarceration can result in a loss of housing and possessions, and association with other criminals can lead to stigma and victimization.

These problems are also referred to as "neurobehavioral." Malbin (2004) states that the observable behavioral effects of FASD need to be recognized as the result of the physical changes in the brain and their impact on brain processing. Dysfunction in behavior includes poor judgment, poor impulse control, conduct problems, poor problem-solving skills, learning problems, fine motor skills deficits, hyperreactivity to stress, sexual promiscuity, resistance to change, difficulties in forming lasting relationships, gullibility, victimization, and an inability to understand or conform to social norms (Paley and O'Connor, 2009; Chudley et al., 2007; Rasmussen et al., 2008; Aragon et al., 2008). Some of these behaviors develop over time as protective reactions to feelings of frustration (Malbin, 2004). Aragon et al. (2008), indicate a link between a lack of services due to undiagnosed FASD and the development of secondary disabilities in adolescence and adulthood. Other research suggests that the early evaluation and identification of exposed people is vital to anticipating the confounding occurrence of secondary disabilities (Schonfeld, Mattson, and Riley, 2005). Among offenders with FASD, secondary disabilities are a key aspect of their involvement with the justice system.

14.1.3 The Social Determinants of Health and FASD

Housing, sanitation, nutritious food, health care, employment, access to services, justice and human rights are vital for everyone, and are known as the "social determinants of health." These are the economic and social conditions in which people are born, grow up, live and age, and the wider economic, social and political systems established to deal with illness (World Health Organization, 2008). Research indicates that social determinants of health have a greater influence on an individual than behavioral risk factors.

Social determinants of health influence both the incidence of FASD and the outcomes of people affected by it. There are a number of factors that lead to FAE. The mother's alcohol consumption during pregnancy is the direct cause; however, women do not live their lives in a vacuum. Trauma, poverty, inadequate nutrition and housing, gender inequity, racism, addiction, abusive relationships and other conditions affect their health, personal options and behavior. Children born with FASD in such environments face serious environmental and social adversities that place them at risk for adverse outcomes (Streissguth et al., 2004; Rasmussen et al., 2008). Adults with FASD have frequently grown up in unstable environments and have experienced difficulty in meeting their basic needs; many have been separated from biological parents and lived in multiple foster homes (Olson et al., 2009). They often have experienced learning problems and unemployment, and may have ended up in jail (Streissguth et al., 2004). Studies indicate that FASD-affected children have lower health-related quality of life than children who have survived cancers and other significant physical disabilities (Stade et al., 2006). High-quality caregiving and a stable home environment are important factors in successful outcomes for people with FASD, yet positive and stable family environments are not typical for this population (Olson et al., 2009). The negative outcomes associated with FASD are thus related to the very high rates of environmental risk factors and the inadequacy of family resources for affected children (Olson et al., 2009). Offenders with FASD represent the output of an environment that is characteristically rated low on social determinants of health.

The principal health risks such as trauma, physical and sexual abuse, racism, poverty and housing instability are rarely addressed in FASD prevention (Reid, Greaves, and Poole, 2008). In order to improve the health of people with FASD and lower the prevalence of the spectrum, the contributing social influences on alcohol use need to be attended to (Gearing, McNeill, and Lozier, 2005). All of these factors are important to address, as they contribute to sustaining a disadvantaged life situation. When added to the secondary disabilities such as substance abuse, unemployment and incarceration, social and environmental risk factors are increased. Attending to the social determinants of health should help to reduce not only the occurrence of complex conditions but also the societal costs associated with FASD.

14.1.4 Human Rights and FASD

FASD is best considered within a broader disability context wherein participation in society is accommodated and functionality is managed through service provisions, much as would occur for someone with a progressive degenerative disorder. Canadian law, as detailed in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, recognizes that individuals are equal under the law and entitled to equal protection and benefit, without discrimination based on age, race or ethnicity, religion, skin color, gender, mental or physical disability (Canada, Charter of Rights and Freedoms, 1982). The purpose of equality rights is to respect the dignity, worth and value of all Canadians, and to ensure that laws and government action are based on circumstances and needs, and not on negative stereotypes. One of the roles of government is to facilitate equal access to services and supports for citizens. The impairments caused by FASD necessitate that affected individuals receive the supports they need to participate equally in society.

14.1.5 Incarceration and FASD

The prevalence of FASD is difficult to assess. Current estimates of the percentage of the overall population that is affected range from 2% to 5% in North America and Western Europe, with the spectrum generally under-recognized (Malbin, 2004; Fast and Conry, 2004; May et al., 2009). There is a higher incidence of FASD in certain regions and groups. Typically, rural, isolated and remote areas have a higher incidence, but the precise numbers are unknown (Bohjanen, Humphrey, and Ryan, 2009). Canadian FASD research suggests that rates are also higher in some Aboriginal communities (Boland et al., 1998). In particular, the prevalence of FASD is significantly higher among incarcerated people in Canada, and an estimated 10-fold greater than among the general population (MacPherson and Chudley, 2007).

The problems that people with FASD have in adhering to social norms of behavior can result in their being considered socially deviant instead of disabled. Children with FASD are viewed as victims of the birth defects caused by alcohol exposure (Donohue, 2008). Adults with FASD in the correctional system are regarded in an entirely different way, as deviants who have violated social norms (Donohue, 2008). Research indicates that the disabilities caused by FASD become de-medicalized as the affected person develops into an adult (Donohue, 2008; Golden, 1999). The term "de-medicalization" refers to affected people coming to be regarded as in charge of their lives and perpetrating social wrongs through choosing to display challenging behaviors, rather than as people with physical and mental limitations caused by damage to the brain (Golden, 1999). This change in perspective results in adults with FASD being considered fully responsible and then being relegated to the criminal justice system (Donohue, 2008). However, the child with FASD inevitably matures into the adult with FASD, because the

Treatment Programs

The brain deficits in offenders with FASD, combined with the secondary disabilities associated with the spectrum, cause problems in functioning that make traditional prison treatment programs ineffective. It is an expensive use of scarce resources to have people enrolled in programs that cannot be effective. Moreover, a lack of response to programs by people with FASD can lead to their not being able to access prison programs because they have a history of not being helped by such programs (Fast and Conry, 2009; Chudley et al., 2007; Boland et al., 1998; Burd et al., 2003). The literature calls for corrections to do a better job with offenders with FASD. One way to accomplish this goal is to effect a change in offenders' behavioral skills and social circumstances before they are released into the community. The research calls for programs in prisons to address affected people's abilities (Chapman, 2008; Debolt, 2009; Alberta Health Services, 2009; SAMHSA, 2007). In addition, the prison programs need to be client-centered in order to assess each individual's strengths and weaknesses and to develop appropriate skills training and treatment. In order to attend to the different needs and functional abilities of people with FASD, existing programs in the corrections system require restructuring. Notably, this can be accomplished through focusing on meaningful outcomes, such as building adaptive skills.

The rehabilitation of offenders is an evaluative and capability-building process (Ward and Marshall, 2007). Current research indicates that rehabilitation programs, and the release plans developed for individuals, need to include constructive conceptions of positive lives (Ward, 2002). It is important to assess individuals' life histories to better understand their psychological dispositions and vulnerabilities, as well as the internal and external factors that may prevent them from meeting their primary needs (Ward, 2002). The multiple and comprehensive requirements of people with FASD in the correctional system require interdisciplinary teams to deliver programs (Evans and Brewis, 2008; Egger, Binns, and Rossner, 2009). The research on PAE conducted in schools indicates that a structured environment which is heavily oriented around order and routine is beneficial for people with FASD; developing integrated programs in the corrections system could help to address these requirements for adults (Chapman, 2008; Bell, Trevethan, and Allegri, 2004).

Recidivism and Alternative Sentencing

Numerous studies have noted the high rates of recidivism among offenders with FASD (Boland, Chudley, and Grant, 2002; Malbin, 2004; Fast and Conry, 2004; Chudley et al., 2007; Mitten, 2003). Recidivism among FASD-affected people occurs for many reasons. The brain structural deficits that cause difficulty with school and socializing continue to cause problems in the correctional system. People with FASD have difficulty adhering to parole conditions, which is a primary reason for the recidivism problems for this group (Fast and Conry, 2004; Chudley et al., 2007). Moreover, research indicates a link between a lack of community living skills and high rates of recidivism (Eggers et al., 2006; Lindstedt et al., 2004). For offenders with mental illnesses, a lack of community services after release can exacerbate their illnesses and contribute to recidivism (Sneed et al., 2006).

Considering the primary and secondary disabilities of people with FASD, a strong argument can be made for addressing recidivism among offenders with FASD through purposeful sentencing, improving skills, and attending to other issues such as mental illness. Research into chronic offenders acknowledges that high-needs offenders, such as people with FASD, are more likely to return to prison (Government of Canada, 2007), and that receiving services to meet those needs may act to reduce recidivism. However, this research also suggests that the criminal law paradigm is a less than appropriate way to deal with disabled offenders (Government of Canada, 2007).

Incarceration is based on principles of deterrence and rehabilitation, along with denouncing unlawful conduct. Incarceration is designed to deter people from breaking laws, and rehabilitation is intended to return offenders to the community in a better state than before the crime. These principles assume that offenders have the capacity to understand the nature and consequences of unlawful behavior and to enact changes in their behavior and personal circumstances. The brain damage caused by FASD makes deterrence from future crimes and rehabilitation unlikely, if not impossible (Malbin, 2004). Alternatives to incarceration for people with FASD, such as diversions, conditional sentences and sentencing circles, need to be considered (Fast and Conry, 2004; Fast and Conry 2009; Roach and Bailey, 2009; Mitten, 2004). The literature calls for environmental accommodations for affected people within the correctional system, much as would be considered standard for persons with other disabilities (Malbin, 2004). Chudley et al. (2007) have recommended alternative sentences and parole conditions that consider the disability caused by FASD.

Currently, the justice system in Canada may consider FASD as either a mitigating or an aggravating factor in sentencing offenders. An analysis of Canadian case law indicates a lack of consistency in the approach to offenders with FASD (Roach and Bailey, 2009; Justice Canada, 2009). In certain cases, offenders were found unfit to stand trial, some were sentenced as youths to adult correctional facilities, while others were labeled as dangerous offenders (Roach and Bailey, 2009; Justice Canada, 2009). FASD may be considered or mentioned by the court, but the brain impairments are frequently not given substantial weight during sentencing (FASD Ontario Justice Committee, 2007).

For offenders with FASD, it is essential for the justice system to focus on achieving long-term positive outcomes. Alternatives to incarceration are recommended in the literature for offenders with FASD who are not a risk to the public (Fast and Conry, 2009; Mitten, 2003; Debolt, 2009; Roach and Bailey, 2009). Suggestions for incarceration alternatives include holistic community-based programs that address both substance-abuse problems and mental health issues (Mitten, 2003). According to the research, the most purposeful sentences for people with FASD may be those that effect change in the person's life or social circumstances, rather than strictly aiming to change the person's behavior (Fast and Conry, 2009). Another factor to consider in the sentencing of FASD-affected offenders is their susceptibility to victimization while in custody (Chudley et al., 2007; Jones, 2007). Incarceration is not appropriate for many affected people because of the brain deficits caused by PAE, which impair learning and reasoning and influence behavior. Inmates with mental illnesses may accumulate disciplinary sanctions during incarceration, and thereby reduce their opportunities for parole (Baillargeon et al., 2009). In addition, the negative social networks extant in prison increase the probability of re-offending through post-release affiliations.

Reducing recidivism by offenders with FASD will require adjustments within the correctional system. Canadian government research acknowledges that incarceration is an inefficient and ineffective way of addressing recidivism in chronic offenders for whom prison is not a deterrent (Government of Canada, 2007). This research recommends that, for chronic offenders with cognitive impairments, investing resources in health and social systems may yield better results than repeated processing through the criminal justice system (Government of Canada, 2007). Chudley et al. (2007) have called for the allocation of appropriate resources within social services to improve the outcome and quality of life for affected people. Addressing the lack of fit between the abilities of people with FASD and release requirements will also reduce the costs of recidivism associated with FASD, and improve outcomes (Alberta, Government, 2007–2008; Every et al., 2000; Canada Government, 2009; Canada, Government, 2007).

The criminal justice system is currently limited in its ability to impose the type of sentencing that would be beneficial to people with FASD. Court jurisdictions were not intended to recommend the community-based holistic supports and services that help people with FASD live effectively in the community (Roach and Bailey, 2009).

14.2.3 Release Planning

Statutory release from custody is governed by a federal law that allows offenders who are not considered dangerous to serve the last one-third of their sentence in the community on parole to the Correctional Service of Canada (CSC). Parole is granted to offenders to facilitate rehabilitation and ease transition into the community. The criteria for granting parole includes the risk to society, the prisoner's post-release plan, criminal record, behavior in prison, and information provided by psychiatrists/psychologists, police, victims, and family. The CSC is responsible for preparing offenders for consideration by the National Parole Board. Upon release, prior offenders are required to report to a parole supervisor and to adhere to a variety of conditions, including curfews, restrictions on travel, movement and behavior, as well as prohibitions on alcohol consumption and associating with certain individuals. Should the conditions of release be violated, the offender may be returned to custody (Correctional Service of Canada, 2008).

Before an offender is released from custody, the individual must agree to a cor rectional plan, which outlines the procedures to maintain a law-abiding lifestyl in the community. The plan details restrictions on movement and commitment to participate in employment and programs. Each plan is individualized to th person's needs and focuses on specific issues, such as job training and substanc abuse. Successfully re-engaging prior offenders in the community requires ade quate supervision and effective community programs (Correctional Service c Canada, 2008). The inherent limitations faced by people with FASD can result i significant barriers to reintegration into the community for this group.

Community reintegration programs for offenders with brain damage, includin those with FASD, are vital to success. However, the research identifies a gener need for community reintegration programs in the corrections systems (Egger et al., 2006), and a lack of continuity and program consistency between correction sites and community settings. This can result in people with FASD "fallin through the cracks" in service provision if bridging and transitions between th two environments are not in place.

Prior to the release of an offender with FASD into the community, planning fc that eventuality is critical. Both pre-release and post-release plans for affecte individuals need to be developed (Eggers et al., 2006; Sneed et al., 2006). Any trea ment needs of individuals, such as for mental illness and substance abuse, nee to be started while the person is in custody and then continued in the communit upon release (Magaletta et al., 2009). Establishing contacts with a team of servic providers in the community is therefore essential for affected people before releas (Eggers et al., 2006). It is also important that probation and parole orders be inte preted to offenders with FASD. Otherwise, their learning disabilities may precluc adherence to the guidelines and increase their risk of re-offending (Fast an Conry, 2004). Research recommends that affected people receive comprehensiv but simply written and meaningful discharge planning before being released int the community (Debolt, 2009).

Housing for offenders with FASD upon release appears to be a key to succeedin in the community. Stable housing for adults with FASD upon release from inca ceration will also improve the delivery of necessary services. The correction system has an opportunity to maximize the chance of successful reintegration fc offenders with FASD by tailoring services and supports, programs, sentences an probation or parole orders to reflect the needs and functionality of the individua

14.2.4 Correctional System Needs

The challenges facing the corrections system in addressing the functional disabil ties caused by conditions such as FASD are increasingly being recognized by bot researchers and governments. The complexity is in altering the existing system i such a way as to enable the needs of FASD-affected offenders to be successfull met within the corrections context, and then extending these services into th community upon the person's release. The FASD literature calls for purposefi sentencing that is focused on outcomes, and effecting changes in the behaviors and skills of this population while they are in custody.

A recent formal evaluation of federal Canadian correctional programs revealed that targeting the specific needs of offenders is both relevant and effective (Correctional Service of Canada, 2009). Offenders who participated in correctional service programs, such as for substance abuse, exhibited changes in behavior and were more likely to be granted a discretionary release than those who did not participate in programs (Correctional Service of Canada, 2009). Program participation was also associated with a reduction in re-admissions into the correctional system. However, the evaluation also revealed that the correctional system is significantly lacking in its ability to deliver programs to offenders with learning deficits, cognitive disabilities, and mental disorders. The report formally recommended developing a strategy to address the programming needs of such offenders (Correctional Service of Canada, 2009).

Studies indicate a need to develop a clear approach to FASD in the criminal justice system, and to develop clear practice guidelines (Cox, Clairmont, and Cox, 2008). FASD research calls for specific units to be established within the correctional system that are environmentally sensitive to the offenders' behavioral profile (Fast and Conry, 2009; Chudley et al., 2007; Boland et al., 1998; Bell, Trevethan, and Allegri, 2004; Burd et al., 2003). Founding FASD units would enable the corrections system to address the cognitive and behavioral impairments of offenders with FASD. Training corrections personnel about FASD and its effects is also vital since, unless they have an awareness of the condition, such personnel are unlikely to recognize that potentially difficult behaviors are not deliberately chosen but are, rather, a result of brain impairment. Corrections system staff require both a knowledge of FASD impairments and the skills to interact effectively with offenders with FASD (Fast and Conry, 2009; Chudley et al., 2007; Boland et al., 1998; Bell, Trevethan, and Allegri, 2004; Burd et al., 2003). In these ways, the neurobehaviors caused by the impairment can be addressed through modifying the social and physical environment experienced by affected people.

In addition to training for corrections personnel, programming is needed that targets meaningful and relevant roles for FASD-affected offenders after release. Corrections is an environment that can be viewed as both a barrier and a facilitator to participating in society. Because people do get released, it can play a vital role in preparing people to re-enter society (Canada, Criminal Code of Canada, RSC, 1985). Certain aspects of correction culture–structure, repetition, habit–are positive environmental supports that can enhance this pre-release preparation. Working with the FASD-affected population in prisons is an opportunity to connect with individuals who might otherwise "fall through the cracks" in the system.

Interventions and Social Supports for Adults with FASD after Release

Viewing FASD as a disability under the WHO International Classification of Functioning (ICF) framework allows us to see FASD as a condition that can benefit from many of the same strategies and principles used in developing services for other disability groups, such as those with acquired brain injury or spinal cord injury. In the case of FASD, there is some research indicating that the disabilities (both primary and secondary) may not be in a stable state (Moore and Green, 2004; Paley and O'Connor, 2009; Kodituwakku, 2009; Rasmussen et al., 2008; McGee et al., 2008). (This point will be discussed later, because it has implications for the design of a community service network.) Drawing on the prevention model (Caplan and Grunebaum, 1967), secondary prevention (which is sometimes called "treatment") and tertiary prevention (which can be viewed as "rehabilitation") are the focus of the activities both within corrections system and in the community.

Appropriate interventions and accommodations are vital for people with FASD if they are to remain in the community after being released from the correctional system. One major issue here is to establish seamless and continuous support from the correctional system to the community. Providing continuity in services requires that the correctional system establishes methods and policies to interact with community partners who will help individuals function and access services in the outside world. The limited knowledge regarding adults with FASD, and the challenges that they face in the community, dictates that interventions be specifically tailored to their individual profiles, but still be within the principles of general social service offerings.

Client-Centered Lifelong Multisectoral Supports

A client-centered approach recognizes that the specific characteristics and circumstances of individuals must influence service need and service delivery. The clients are the best persons to describe their experiences of reality, and as a result it behooves service providers to spend the necessary time to learn about the client's life experiences (Law, 1998). An essential element of client-centered practice is facilitating clients in solving their problems (Law, 1998). In the client-centered approach, clients may be involved in making choices about their rehabilitation, rather than having pre-established external decisions imposed on them. The approach allows for flexibility in program delivery and recognizes the particular requirements of the individual.

A client-centered approach has multiple advantages in delivering interventions for people with FASD, because of the highly variable nature of the brain deficits associated with the disorder. The needs of individuals with FASD depend in part on the extent of brain damage by PAE and on the secondary disabilities. Interventions that focus on the individual will be most able to address specific requirements (Chudley et al., 2007; O'Connor and Paley, 2009; Bertrand, 2009). The literature recommends the establishment of multidisciplinary teams to work with community partners to maximize the interventions for individuals, based on their needs and abilities (Grant et al., 2004; Chudley et al., 2007). By tailoring interventions to the needs of the individual, personally beneficial programs and treatments can be provided (Lindstedt et al., 2004; O'Connor and Paley, 2009).

The disabilities caused by FASD do not self-correct over time, and the FASD research indicates that lifelong interventions are necessary for affected people (Paley and O'Connor, 2009; Grant et al., 2004; Chudley et al., 2007; O'Connor and Paley, 2009; Bertrand, 2009). As a result, people with FASD need multisectoral coordinated services that are accessible across their lifespan (Grant et al., 2004). The involvement of multiple service providers in comprehensive interventions has a variety of benefits. Service providers generally follow different mandates to deliver services, which can result in a "silo" approach. Affected people can be lost to follow-up and monitoring if left alone to negotiate the support system. A comprehensive approach that offers coordinated care across multiple systems, including corrections, is important to maximize success for people with FASD (Paley and O'Connor, 2009). Furthermore, traumatic brain injury research reveals that rehabilitation involving an interdisciplinary team leads to improved function and independence (Evans and Brewis, 2008). Successful initiatives are multidisciplinary and multisectoral, and also involve partnerships with community agencies to provide services (Olson et al., 2009; Brown, 2004).

There are multiple barriers to accessing community services for adults with FASD. Affected individuals may not realize they are in need of formal support, and therefore do not seek it out (Debolt, 2009). In addition, they may not possess sufficient cognitive faculties to negotiate separate application processes, and adhere to the variety of system requirements developed for people without brain damage. For offenders with FASD, other impediments include a lack of coordination between the correctional system and programs available in the community (Hartwell and Orr, 1999). The literature identifies a need for community programs for newly released offenders, in part due to the prevalence of waiting lists for entry into treatment programs in communities (Brown, 2004). Further, establishing connections between the services that people receive in the correctional system and in the community will assist in informing service providers about the specific needs and goals of individual offenders (Magaletta et al., 2009).

Employment and Housing

For adults with FASD, an additional impediment to successful community establishment after release from prison is trouble finding employment and other forms of support (Brown, 2004). Other barriers include deficient work skills, gaps in employment records, difficulty accessing transportation to employment or community services, and the availability of health care, child care, and medication (Brown, 2004; Magaletta et al., 2009; Fonfield-Ayinla, 2009).

The availability of stable housing for newly released offenders with FASD is also crucial to success in the community. Homelessness worsens secondary disabilities, such as mental illness and substance abuse, even in people without the brain deficits caused by FASD (Fonfield-Ayinla, 2009; Zlotnick, 2009; Shand, 2004). Moreover, offenders may be released into unfamiliar communities, and with few financial resources (Brown, 2004). It is well known that limited financial resources have a negative influence on the ability to find and maintain a stable home. As a result, developing a comprehensive approach to intervention across multiple systems of care, including stable housing, is strongly advocated for people with FASD (Paley and O'Connor, 2009; Grant et al., 2004; Chudley et al., 2007; Bohjanen, Humphrey, and Ryan, 2009).

Secure and stable housing has multiple benefits for adults with FASD, and acts as a cornerstone to success in other programs. Housing can help people with FASD to protect against, cope with, and minimize secondary disabilities, such as mental illness (Burd et al., 2003; Brinda, 2006). Stability in housing also assists them in adhering to treatment goals (Debolt, 2009), and reduces recidivism in offenders with mental illnesses (Lindstedt et al., 2004; Case et al., 2009). The difficulties of affected individuals in tracking finances, controlling impulses and following rules necessitates support to ensure stability in housing, such as access to a case worker who can assess the person's needs and ensure that they are met (Brinda, 2006).

The variable and particular effects of FASD on individuals require that programs cover a wide range of housing options appropriate to the range of abilities and functionality, including specialized support and more independent programs. For a newly released offender with FASD, housing within the community is preferred over placement in halfway houses, due to the negative influence of other criminals on affected individuals (Brinda, 2006). Following a client-centered model for providing housing to newly released offenders with FASD is beneficial. A comprehensive umbrella program to provide housing for people with FASD has been recommended in recent research. Such a program would have the capacity to maintain housing stability while accommodating the changing needs of individuals.

Training and Programs

Social and vocational skills training is important for people with FASD. Adults with FASD may have significant social and vocational skill deficits because the impairments caused by PAE do not improve over time, and may even intensify (Moore and Green, 2004; Paley and O'Connor, 2009; McGee et al., 2008). Moreover, even if individuals have received social skills training during their incarceration, repetitive training is vital due to problems in short-term memory and information storage and retrieval (Grant et al., 2004).

The deficits in social problem-solving skills in adults with FASD also require specific interventions. Social problem-solving is affected by impairments in working memory, initiating and planning tasks, and organization and monitoring behavior. Interventions aimed at providing appropriate training and adequate academic and social support can improve the individuals' skills (McGee et al., 2008). Research into interventions in anger management and social skills programs for adults with FASD after release from prison suggests that the management of high-risk situations can be successful with appropriate interventions (Brinda, 2006).

Integrated treatment programs to address mental illness and substance abuse for people with FASD are important. The literature clearly indicates that the secondary disabilities of mental illness and substance abuse are common in people with FASD. Furthermore, mentally ill offenders are at risk of social isolation on release, which is known to worsen substance abuse-related problems (Hartwell and Orr, 1999). Considering that many offenders with FASD are affected by mental illness and addictions, linking treatment for these conditions will help to reduce feelings of isolation. Research into the experiences of mentally ill offenders strongly advocates for an integrated mental health and substance abuse treatment to improve outcomes (Magaletta et al., 2009; Roskes and Feldman, 1999).

Treating mental illnesses or substance abuse in people with FASD requires certain accommodations. Treatment approaches that focus on changing behaviors that are symptoms of FASD disability are inappropriate and ineffective (Malbin, 2004). Research indicates that, like people who have received a traumatic brain injury, those with FASD can be more sensitive to the medications used to treat mental illnesses, and may react to such medications in unexpected ways (Paley and O'Connor, 2009; Fast and Conry, 2009; O'Connor and Paley, 2009). People with FASD may also be resistant to medications and psychosocial therapy (O'Connor and Paley, 2009; Hellemans et al., 2008). These atypical reactions to typical interventions require that service providers monitor individuals closely in order to ensure that medications are prescribed and administered effectively, and that any negative side effects are minimized.

Interventions provided for people with FASD after release from corrections must be tailored to address the needs that are specific to people of their age and gender. Youth require access to education, vocational and life skills training, social skills training and to stable housing. Adaptations to the learning problems associated with FASD require environments of reduced stimulation, the use of visual schedules, repeated instructions, and positive behavioral support (Bohjanen, Humphrey, and Ryan, 2009). Women require access to birth control and child care, as well as certainty in release planning to aid in re-establishing relationships with their children (Pedlar et al., 2008). It is also important to screen for alcohol use in women during pregnancy (SAMHSA, 2007). The social and life skills training for women and men with FASD should reflect particular life circumstances, gender roles, culture and behaviors, such as anger management and parenting skills.

External Executive Function Support

People with FASD require the assistance of designated people to act as transitional navigators or advocates, mentors, advocates, and trustees. The problems that affected people have in learning, reasoning, judgment and adaptive skills frequently result in their becoming lost in the system, without assistance. They may have a limited insight into their lack of abilities, and over-represent their capabilities to themselves and others (Chudley et al., 2007). The FASD research recommends that an "external brain" in the form of formal caregivers and advocates be established to help affected individuals adapt, function, and meet their social needs (Chapman, 2008; Chudley et al., 2007; Boulding, 2007; Kellerman, 2003). Access to stable and funded contacts for service providers helps to improve adherence to recommendations and retain participants in programs (Grant et al., 2004; Debolt, 2009). Assistance in financial management is also necessary, and affected people should benefit from the establishment of trustees to manage their personal finances (Chudley et al., 2007). The experience of disability can be minimized with integrated approaches to optimize the person's capacities, strengthen their access to available resources, and improve their interaction with the environment (Stucki and Celio, 2007).

Accommodating the disabilities caused by FASD requires whole system modifications to the person's social and political environment. The ability of affected people to function in society can be improved through coordinated multisectoral targeted interventions, and the establishment of an "external brain" composed of caretakers, advocates, and trustees. Alterations in the environment to support and enhance the functionality of the person disabled by FASD need to be made at the community level, through programs and services provided by governments and community agencies.

One essential aspect of providing interventions to adults with FASD is to follow individuals through the system. When multiple systems of care provide services, it is vital to establish a process to follow the individual across services, to communicate between providers, and to ensure that the individual does not fall through any gaps in the services. Research indicates that, without follow-up, individuals can become lost in the system (SAMHSA, 2007; Hartwell and Orr, 1999). Recent FASD-associated literature calls for a full continuum of services to be available to affected individuals across the lifespan (Malbin, 2004; Olson et al., 2009; Paley and O'Connor, 2009; Fast and Conry, 2009; Chudley et al., 2007). Developing official procedures to follow affected people from the correctional system through the services supplied by multiple providers is critical.

FASD Costs

The economic costs of FASD are important to consider when evaluating the benefits of multisectoral assisted support across the lifespan for adult offenders with FASD. The overall costs of FASD are difficult to assess, due to the variety of factors that influence individuals. Furthermore, researchers acknowledge that the estimates of costs are minimum values, due to the unavailability of many types of data on individuals (Fast and Conry, 2009; Thanh and Jonsson, 2009; Stade et al., 2009). However, there are several basic categories of cost, including direct short-term and long-term costs of FASD to society, correctional system costs, and costs of homelessness.

Evaluations of the general costs of FASD for Canada and for Alberta indicate considerable expenditures at provincial and federal levels. In Canada, the cost of FASD from birth to 53 years of age is CA$5.3 billion (at 2007 price levels) (Stade et al., 2009). (For updated figures on the cost of FASD, see Chapter 4.) Over half of these costs are attributed to education and healthcare for affected children. This estimate does not include the costs of incarceration, or the cost of lost productivity among adults. The costs in Alberta of FASD amount to about CA$400 million annually in long-term costs, and about CA$143 million annually in short-term costs such as healthcare, education and the justice system (based on 2009 price levels) (Thanh and Jonsson, 2009).

Although the correctional system costs are not exclusive to people with FASD, the corrections system includes many with FASD. The cost of the corrections program in Alberta is CA$106.31 per person per day (CA$38 696 per year), while the federal corrections cost is CA$260.10 per person per day (CA$94 676 per year) (Alberta, Government 2008–2009). Despite these significant expenditures, the figures do not include all of the costs of FASD to the legal system, as there are also costs associated with the crime itself, policing, and court appearances (Fast and Conry, 2009). Boland, Chudley, and Grant (2002) have advocated that the costs associated with adult offenders with FASD be reduced by identifying affected individuals, so that the system could accommodate their disabilities.

The costs of homelessness are also significant. For example, in 2008 there were approximately 11 000 homeless people in the province of Alberta, while the provincial government spends annually an estimated CA$ 100 000 per person to deliver programs and services to chronically homeless people, such as emergency medical services. The cost of shifting from managing homelessness to ending homelessness in Alberta would save an estimated CA$ 7 billion over a 10-year period (The Alberta Secretariat for Action on Homelessness, 2008). Clearly, the avoidance of homelessness in people with FASD would lead to a major reduction in associated costs.

The extent of costs to society from FASD is substantial, even without an accurate breakdown of all the costs associated with the spectrum. The figures indicate, unmistakably, that to assist affected individuals in avoiding the correctional system and homelessness would not only greatly help the person but also have significant and lasting economic benefits to society.

Developmental Disability Assistance

The FASD research recognizes that a significant impediment to improving the community participation of people with FASD is the narrow criterion for disability assistance, which includes developmental disabilities (DD) and financial assistance (Streissguth et al., 2004; Grant et al., 2004; Bertrand, 2009). Chudley et al. (2007) have identified the need for access to developmental disability assistance for adults with FASD. Moreover, DD services can help in secondary prevention efforts. Burd et al., (2003) have identified the receipt of developmental disability services as a protective factor for avoiding the secondary disabilities associated with FASD. The literature clearly indicates the lasting and meaningful solutions that could be developed through providing access to developmental disability assistance to people with FASD, thus improving the quality of their lives. These supports may be just enough to keep some of these adults out of justice systems.

Alberta has developed a vision and innovative approaches to FASD in its ten-year strategic plan. There are a number of important ongoing projects in the province, and recently programs have been funded to address the needs of adults with FASD, one of which is Corrections and Connections to the Community (3C). The program has three components: evaluation, transition, and follow-up. Evaluation occurs within the correctional site, while transition begins with programming and relationship-building prior to release, and then continues into the community. The project also has an assertive follow-up phase.

Existing funded programs should be an exceptional source of data to expand the current knowledge of FASD. The annual reports that they submit to funders illustrate the importance of reporting requirements that go beyond accountability, and actually provide important information.

The above strategies are all reasonable and currently in existence in many areas of the community. The challenge is access to support for those people who are not in the greater urban areas and, more specifically, those returning to remote geographical areas with limited health and social services.

Policy Considerations for Adults with FASD

1) Comprehensive diagnostic capacity. In order to access services and supports to assist people with FASD to be contributing members of society, it is necessary to have access to a diagnosis. Diagnostic services for people who may be affected by FASD are needed for children, youth, and adults in all jurisdictions. The usual diagnostic clinics should also seek to evaluate the functional performance of individuals.

2) Seamless and equitable services across the lifespan. The brain impairments caused by FASD are lifelong. Thus, services that transcend the traditional "silo" approach, are multisectoral and connect the separate social, health and corrections systems are vital if people with FASD are to have access. It is important for these services to be available, regardless of the affected person's chronological age.

3) Expand Persons with Developmental Disabilities (PDD) legislation to incorporate the functional disabilities of FASD. Legislation that governs developmental disabilities assistance needs to be expanded to include adults with FASD. The legislation which guides eligibility and available services to people with developmental disabilities varies by province. Currently, the leading provinces in Canada for providing inclusive disability support are Manitoba, Ontario, Prince Edward Island, and Saskatchewan. Alberta, British Columbia, the Northwest Territories and Quebec continue to link access to developmental disability support to narrow eligibility criteria: people with an IQ two standard deviations below the norm.

4) Transitions from child to adult services be pre-planned and allow for wrapa-round services, including follow-up, housing, and supported employment.

5) Sustainably funded services based on functional needs.

6) Ongoing life skills and socialization assistance.

7) FASD prevention efforts to target the social determinants of health.

8) Alternative sentences for offenders with FASD whenever possible.

9) Pre-release and post-release plans for offenders with FASD.

10) Enhance correctional environment to reflect the needs and functionality of offenders with FASD.

11) Reduce reconnecting with justice and correctional systems through provision of training, programs, and ongoing assertive supports.

12) Create a safe and supporting community-based "virtual world." Such a world has destinations, activity programs and shelters in which staff and volunteers understand and can manage the neurobehavioral presentation and profile of individuals with FASD. This world is interconnected and linked to resources and case management options across disparate service sectors.

Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder as an Access to Justice Issue

Meeting with Canadian Bar Association and Federal Provincial Territorial Co-ordinating Committee of Senior Officials (Criminal Justice) Steering Committee on FASD

March 1, 2011 • 10:00am – 5:00pm

Vancouver

Participants

CBA FASD Advisory Committee: Dan MacRury (NS), Corey LaBerge (MB), Fia Jampolsky (YT), Jonathan Rudin (ON), Gaylene Schellenberg (CBA staff) Regrets: David Christie (YT), Rod Snow (CBA President)

FPT Steering Committee Members: Teresa Brown (MB), Marilou Reeve (DOJ Canada), Natasha Phillips (YT), Sherri Lee – (AG/ BC) Janice Laycock (NT), Samantha Hulme (BC).

Chair: Marilou Reeve, Department of Justice Canada

Background

At its 2010 Canadian Legal Conference, the Canadian Bar Association (CBA) passed a resolution concerning Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder (FASD) in the criminal justice system (Appendix A). This resolution supported the current work on FASD by the Federal Provincial Territorial Ministers Responsible for Justice (FPT Ministers). It urged them to avoid ongoing criminalization of people with FASD, and to allocate additional resources to develop policies and solutions relating to FASD as an access to justice issue.

In October 2010, FPT Ministers directed officials to engage with the CBA on FASD as an access to justice issue. An Engagement Strategy was then approved by FPT Deputy Ministers in January 2011 (Appendix B). Deputies supported the Engagement Strategy approach and directed its FASD Steering Committee to implement the Engagement Strategy and report back at the June 2011 Deputies' meeting.

A meeting was convened on March 1, 2001 (Item # 6 of the Engagement Strategy) in conjunction with The 4th International Conference on FASD, Vancouver, BC, March 2-5, 2011. Funding was provided by Justice Canada.

Meeting Overview

The CBA FASD Advisory Committee representatives and members of the FPT FASD Steering Committee discussed the complex issues related to access to justice for individuals with FASD in a comprehensive and constructive forum. Participants had extensive experience working on issues relating to FASD, including program and frontline work, as well as policy development and prosecution/defence of individuals with FASD. The group discussed promising practices and the good work that is currently taking place in relation to this issue in some areas.

Participants agreed that individuals with FASD should be assessed and dealt with outside of the criminal justice system whenever possible through health and social services systems with adequate supports.

Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder as an Access to Justice Issue

If individuals with FASD become involved in the criminal justice system, alternative measures/ diversion programs should be considered. The realities of the disability of FASD must be balanced with the need for public safety. Social services and agencies outside the criminal justice system play a critical role in responding appropriately to individuals with FASD who become involved in the justice system.

Outcome

Participants at the March 1 meeting suggest that the following measures would improve access to justice for people with FASD:

1. Allocate new resources (or re-allocate existing resources as appropriate) for effective programs that avoid the unnecessary criminalization of individuals with FASD (i.e. community alternatives including supportive housing, social services etc.).

2. Explore and develop alternative measures / diversion programs that deal effectively with individuals with FASD who come into conflict with the law, in a timely, effective manner that holds individuals accountable consistent with their degree of responsibility.

3. Educate justice system professionals, including RCMP, police services and probation officers, judges, Crown, defence, court workers, corrections, and victim service workers about FASD and the implications for service provision.

   The possibility of FASD should be considered in deciding on an appropriate justice system response. For example, the Prosecution Policy directives should be changed to require that consideration.

4. Amend the legislative framework within the Criminal Code to more effectively address the unique challenges that FASD presents to the criminal justice system.

   The Youth Criminal Justice Act (YCJA) provides a legislative framework that could be applied to offenders with special needs such as those with FASD. Some of the sections offering special protections to youth under the YCJA that could be added to the Criminal Code to accommodate the unique challenges individuals with FASD present to the criminal justice system include:

   YCJA s.34 (ordering assessments) A similar provision would allow court ordered assessments of adults that the court believes might be affected by FASD.

   YCJA s.25 (right to counsel) Ensuring that counsel are present in encounters with the criminal justice system is critical for people with a diminished cognitive ability, as with FASD.

   YCJA s.19 (case conferencing) Case conferencing can be an effective tool to garner collaboration amongst key players, in deciding on an appropriate response in the individual circumstances at an early stage of the criminal justice system process.

5. Address the problems of people affected by FASD through an interdisciplinary/multi-sectoral approach.

Some jurisdictions effectively use collaborative or inter-ministerial approaches between government ministries to share information and coordinate and integrate services. All jurisdictions should consider implementing this approach when addressing the needs of individuals with FASD.

Participants also recommended that a case conferencing provision equivalent to section 19[1] of the YCJA should be added to the Criminal Code to recognize the diminished capacity of people affected by FASD and the need for an integrated, multi-sectoral approach to addressing the unique challenges.

6. Create legislative authority to allow courts to obtain an accurate assessment of an individual's neurocognitive abilities.

   Section 34 of the YCJA has been used effectively to order assessments for FASD. The same provision should be added to the Criminal Code for adults affected by FASD.

   Currently, the courts cannot order assessments for adult accused they believe may have a cognitive deficit unless the accused is considered "unfit to stand trial" or "not criminally responsible by reason of a mental disorder". Part XX.1 of the Criminal Code, dealing with mental disorder, is generally not applicable to, or appropriate for individuals with FASD.

   In order to more effectively ensure access to justice for individuals with FASD, courts should be able to order an assessment at any stage in the proceedings, and as early as possible in the judicial process to ensure that any diagnosis is properly considered throughout the individual's involvement with the justice system.

7. Recognize that FASD is a life long disability distinguishable from a mental illness.

   The distinction between permanent brain damage and a condition that may change with treatment is critical when considering the appropriate criminal justice system response, including in specialty courts and in sentencing dispositions.

   FASD must be considered the primary underlying issue and any mental illnesses then be considered in the context of FASD. FASD is not an illness, but a permanent disability that requires appropriate legal and social accommodations.

8. Allow all sentencing options to be available to judges to allow them to devise just and appropriate dispositions for people affected by FASD.

   It is important to remove barriers that constrain the exercise of judicial discretion, including mandatory minimum sentences.

   For example, a legislative safety valve (exemption clause) could be added to the Criminal Code that would allow judiciary to exercise discretion when sentencing individuals with FASD.

1 Section 19 of the Youth Criminal Justice Act provides that a conference can be convened by a youth justice court judge, the provincial director, a police officer, a justice of the peace, a prosecutor or a youth worker for the purpose of making a decision under the Act (subsection 19(1)).

9. Minimize possibilities for people with FASD to accumulate unnecessary Administration of Justice Breaches.

   All justice professionals should limit unnecessary conditions (bail conditions, terms of probation, sentencing conditions) to accommodate the cognitive ability of individuals with FASD and avoid the unnecessary accumulation of administration of justice breaches. This is a perfect example of the need for education and the types of policies and directives that can be established by justice agencies for working with individuals with FASD.

10. Review standardized checklists and risk assessment tools used in the Court and Corrections systems to make decisions about individuals to ensure their validity & reliability for persons affected by FASD.

FASD and the Legal System

"FASD is not an excuse, it is a reason".

Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder (FASD) is a range of clinical conditions including Fetal Alcohol syndrome (FAS), Partial Fetal Alcohol syndrome (pFAS), Alcohol-related Neurodevelopmental Disorder (ARND) and Alcohol Related Birth Defects (ARBD). Many of these individuals go unrecognized as they appear "normal" with above average IQ's and are often defiant or disruptive. The spectrum of neurological damage with FASD causes many different cognitive and behavioral problems.

Currently our legal system is based on fundamental principals of freewill and choice. However, the whole issue of FASD challenges these precepts.

Whether or not we are able to overcome the issues of identification and diagnosis of FAS in the court system is not the context of this discussion. Diagnosis or not, we are still left struggling to understand the issue of FASD and its relationship to offending and the law. There are a number of issues we must begin to understand and address.

1. Individuals with FASD have an increased susceptibility to involvement with the legal system.

   FASD individuals are highly suggestible, often have a negative self-image and almost always get caught by the legal system because they can't plan ahead. These individuals have poor adaptive behavior, poor language ability, they acquiesce when they don't understand, confabulate because their memory is faulty, and fail to reason through issues. Julie Conry's study (Conry, 1999) reports that approx 25% of youth prison populations in British Columbia are FAS affected and 50% have other disabilities. This results in a high representation of disabled youth who are now labeled criminal. A Seattle study found 60% of FAS affected individuals were in conflict with the law (Conry, 1999)

2. Courts are designed to deal with a model of intervention that assumes a person is responsible for their future behavior.

   The court system is inappropriate and unworkable for FASD affected individuals. The model of the courts is based on the notion of freewill and choice and that the accused is responsible for their future behavior. Judges need to ask that people affected with FASD have a fixed point of responsibility who monitors the specific and concrete plans for day-to-day living. A fixed point of responsibility requires someone who knows how to advocate for access to those services in the community that will best facilitate the FASD individual's needs. FASD affected are often without family supports that could act as such for them. A model that has been successful in the deinstitutionalization of the handicapped is the individual program plans (I.P.P.'s). Should we not consider the concept of Individual Sentencing Plans (I.S.P.'s) where the emphasis is on the individual's plans and there is identification of a fixed point of responsibility to ensure that those needs are met?

3. FASD affected individuals have little or no concept of cause and effect. We must ask whether or not their actions can then be deemed to be criminal.

An FASD affected individual is not able to link cause and effect which of course limits their ability to anticipate consequences. They are unable to integrate all of the information from cause and effect situations, leading to an inability to look at the "whole picture". These are serious cognitive impairments. We must ask ourselves if it is morally or ethically acceptable to punish handicapped individuals. More humane methods of dealing with FASD in the legal system can be utilized.

4. FASD are victimized in the court system and the jail setting.

   FASD display a number of characteristics, which have a negative effect in the court and in the prison system where there is a definite expectation of ability to comply with "appropriate behavior". They are often non-compliant, "stubborn", misinterpret cues, go to far, don't respond to adult approval, ignore verbal limit setting, have trouble adjusting in social situations, over or under react, may show flat affect or lack of eye contact, are spacey or lack initiative, have inappropriate responses to situations and have an apparent lack of remorse. Failure to engage in appropriate behavior leads to the desire to "teach the youth a good lesson", one which he will usually be unable to learn.

5. We don't spend enough time early in their conflict with the law, trying to understand the underlying causes for why people come into the system.

   Criminal lawyer's are taught to ask the question of guilt and innocence but these are not the right questions to ask FASD affected. We need to ask "why are you here", "What should happen to you now", "Why did this happen" and "what can we do to ensure that this doesn't happen again"? The vast majority of accused do not warrant incarceration. This could be reduced by 50% if we focused on these questions. (Canada places second in the Western World for number of incarcerated citizens)

6. We can lower the risk of re-offending by establishing effective strategies for working with FASD individuals.

   Incarceration is not the only form of punishment in our society. The increased use of the principles of restorative justice could assist in diverting these disabled individuals from the legal system and ensure appropriate community supports. There are no restrictions on the kinds of offenses that can be diverted so as long as the issues of public protection and the needs of the individual are addressed there is a potential here to decriminalize people with disabilities.

Viable Alternatives

Judges are asking for alternatives. They are becoming more aware of the need to deal with this disability in a more proactive way. An "aggressive, comprehensive, intervention and treatment program" is required. Information Management Systems that keep track of FASD affected people are required and Therapeutic Courts like those used in the Toronto Drug Courts should be developed.

Circle Courts are being explored in Saskatoon (Judge Turpel-LaFond, Saskatoon Provincial Courts, 2001). These team-based, mediation oriented, interagency courts create a "circle of care" support network that utilizes the inter-community expertise and family supports to create a solid support network for the FASD affected. The provision of appropriate legal services for FASD affected is not specialized treatment. It is however differential treatment with the goal of ensuring an outcome of equality. All disabilities deserve to have an outcome of equality in our society.

A LAWYER'S BRIEF ON FETAL ALCOHOL SPECTRUM DISORDERS (FASD)

DAVID BOULDING, LAWYER
PORT COQUITLAM, BRITISH COLUMBIA
dmboulding@shaw.ca

Alcohol in the womb is a solvent and acts on the baby's developing brain like paint stripper acts on layers of old paint on furniture: it dissolves brain cells, bubbles them away. Thus, brain functions are missing.

1. FASD IS A PERMANENT BRAIN-BASED BIRTH DEFECT

- Jan Lutke advises: distinguish between non-compliance and non-competence. There is a difference, and it is brain-based.

2. FASD IS A MULTI-SECTOR PROBLEM

- It is a school, police, social, legal, medical, family, community, and national problem.
- It is a delusion to think one agency can solve this problem.

3. DO NOT RE-INVENT THE WHEEL

- Find the new research online. Start at these two websites: www.asantecentre.org and www.fasdconnections.ca
- Early assessments are critical. Seek informed help now.

4. GO PAST JUDGMENT AND UNDERSTAND THE REASONS WHY PREGNANT WOMEN DRINK ALCOHOL

- This is difficult and requires a heartfelt, clear-minded knowledge of family violence, the history of close relationships, poverty, lack of education, addiction, and an understanding of how people cope with daily difficulty.
- FASD is not restricted to poor marginalized Canadians. Rich stockbrokers have wives who binge-drink while pregnant. Young, educated professional women binge-drink almost as a rite of passage, often not knowing they are pregnant.

5. THERE IS GOOD NEWS: IT'S CALLED THE "EXTERNAL BRAIN"

- The "External Brain" as intended by Dr. Sterling Clarren means appropriate supervision 24/7. Design appropriate structures to create opportunities for the FASD person to be successful. All the available drugs and therapy, all the jail time, all the best intentions found in court orders, will not generate new brain cells. These offenders will be the same every time they come into the courtroom. They are not going to change. It is our responsibility to create success for persons with FASD. They need help from a walking, talking committee of knowledgeable helpers.
- The "External Brain", as a legal concept, is our duty of care. It is our duty to accommodate FASD persons because we are all to be equal before the law.
- Diane Malbin provides four practical suggestions:
    1. Match the brain before you to the task you set.
    2. Identify your assumptions.
    3. Adjust your expectations and stretch your definition of success.
    4. Change their environment.
- These suggestions are easy to say aloud but difficult to implement for four reasons:

- Each of us has a little voice inside that says: they should not get away with this unacceptable behaviour.
- Each of us shares a social sense that an individual could do better if the individual would just try harder.
- If we really knew how the brain worked, we would punish differently. We would design our "teaching and corrections industries" differently. Our knowledge of the human brain is in its infancy. There is much we do not know. Many of our brain-based assumptions in the criminal system are clearly wrong. The McNaughten Rules (1853) work for you and I, not FASD persons.
- Change is not easily accepted or even wanted, especially in rigid systems like the legal or educational systems.

Most importantly: caregivers and others charged with dealing with persons with FASD will experience near total exhaustion very quickly—this includes police, teachers, lawyers, social workers, and judges. Guard against dying inside yourself, the same way a long-distance runner guards against fading too soon. There are training tips and they involve physical, mental, emotional, and spiritual fitness—take care of yourself. Like the monotonous warnings on airlines, put on your air mask before helping others. You are useless if dead, or unable to do your appointed task.

AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION
COMMISSION ON YOUTH AT RISK

Resolution for August 2012 Meeting of the ABA House of Delegates (3/22/12 Third Draft)

RESOLVED, that the American Bar Association urges attorneys and judges, as well as state and local bar associations and law school clinical programs, to support training that enhances understanding of the child and adult disability of Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders (FASD), its impact on individuals in the child welfare, juvenile justice, and adult criminal justice systems, and the importance of collaboration with medical, mental health, and disability experts to promote:

a) Skilled civil, juvenile, and criminal legal representation for persons with FASD;
b) Enhanced access to FASD experts for screening and assessing persons suspected of having this disability;
c) Appropriate responses to the over-abundance of FASD-affected persons in foster care, juvenile delinquency cases, adult criminal proceedings, and correctional facilities; and
d) Use of FASD knowledge in court for the mitigation of sentencing, as well as in the use of alternatives to incarceration and execution, including therapy and comprehensive services, to help rehabilitate individuals and reduce recidivism.

FURTHER RESOLVED, that the American Bar Association urges that state and federal laws, and policies at all levels of government, reflect the serious effects of prenatal alcohol exposure by:

a) Including FASD, alcohol-related neurological disorders, alcohol-related birth defects, and persons suffering from the effects of fetal alcohol abuse generally within the statutory definition of developmental disabilities and the listing of conditions that provide medical and other benefit coverage for screening, diagnosis, and treatment to help enhance the lives of those with these conditions;
b) Allocating comprehensive resources for the early identification, diagnosis, intervention, and treatment of persons with FASD;
c) Fully implementing provisions, including those in the federal Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act, for more effective screening and referral processes to help ensure that infants and toddlers affected by FASD are identified at the earliest possible age and provided assistance at the earliest opportunity;
d) Developing programs designed to enhance the lives of and protect persons living with FASD (and to support their families), including youth transitioning from foster care and juvenile justice systems, since these impairments make those with this condition especially vulnerable to physical and sexual assault; and
e) Increasing public awareness, especially for women of childbearing age and substance-abusing women generally, about FASD and the importance of preventing alcohol-related birth disorders.

Report

Introduction

Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders (FASDs) are a group of conditions that can occur in individuals whose mother drank alcohol during pregnancy. This can result in severe physical and emotional symptoms. FASD is a serious problem in the United States that warrants greater attention. This past Alcohol is a "teratogen" (substance that is toxic to the baby's developing brain). Damage can occur in various regions of the brain. The areas that might be affected depend on which areas are developing at the time the alcohol is consumed. Since the brain and the central nervous system are developing throughout the entire pregnancy, the baby's brain is always vulnerable to damage from alcohol exposure.

The regions of the brain that might be affected by prenatal alcohol exposure include:

Frontal Lobes – this area controls impulses and judgment. The most noteworthy damage to the brain probably occurs in the prefrontal cortex, which controls what are called the Executive Functions.

Corpus Callosum - passes information from the left brain (rules, logic) to the right brain (impulses, feelings) and vice versa; related to attention deficits, psychosocial function, and verbal learning.

Basal Ganglia – involved in cognitive function; affects spatial memory and behaviors like perseveration and the inability to switch modes, work toward goals, and predict behavioral outcomes, and the perception of time.

Hypothalamus - controls appetite, emotions, temperature, and pain sensation

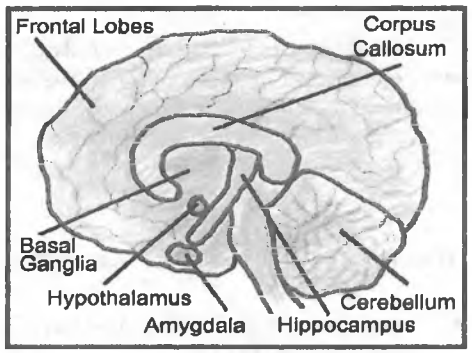
Amygdala – central part of emotional circuitry, senses danger, fear and anxiety; plays major role in recognizing faces and facial expressions, social behavior, aggression, and emotional memory; critical for stimulus-reinforcement association learning.

Hippocampus - plays a fundamental role in spatial and verbal memory retrieval; damage can cause chronic stress, anxiety, and depression; dysfunction is related to symptoms of schizophrenia.

Cerebellum – controls balance, coordination and movement; impacts learning and cognitive skills.

The hypothalamus, amygdala, and hippocampus are part of the limbic system, regulating emotions, social and sexual behavior, fight or flight" response, and empathy.

Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders (FASD)



Executive Functions of the Prefrontal Cortex

Effects of alcohol exposure on behaviors related to executive functions of the prefrontal cortex:

- inhibitions: socially inappropriate behavior
- problem solving: inability to figure out solutions spontaneously
- sexual urges: inability to control sexual impulses, especially in social situations
- planning: inability to apply consequences from past actions
- time perception: difficulty with abstract concepts of time and money
- internal ordering: like files out of order, difficulty processing information
- working memory: storing and/or retrieving information
- self-monitoring: needs frequent cues, requires "policing" by others
- verbal self-regulation: needs to talk to self out loud, needs feedback
- motor control: fine motor skills more affected than gross motor
- regulation of emotion: moody "roller coaster" emotions, may withdraw or lash out
- motivation: apparent lack of remorse, need external motivators
- judgment – inability to make wise decisions

Alcohol Exposure by Trimester:

1. During the first trimester, as shown by the research of Drs. Clarren and Streissguth, alcohol interferes with the migration and organization of brain cells. [Journal of Pediatrics, 92(1):64-67]

2. Heavy drinking during the second trimester, particularly from the 10th to 20th week after conception, seems to cause more clinical features of FASD than at other times during pregnancy, according to a study in England. [Early-Human-Development; 1983 Jul Vol. 8(2) 99-111]

3. During the third trimester, according to Dr. Claire D. Coles, the hippocampus is greatly affected, which leads to problems with encoding visual and auditory information (reading and math). [Neurotoxicology And Teratology, 13:357-367, 1991]

Not all damage from alcohol exposure is seen on brain scans, as lesions might be too small to be detected, yet large enough to cause significant disabilities.

Children do not need to have full Fetal Alcohol Syndrome (FAS) to have significant difficulties due to prenatal exposure to alcohol. According to research done by Drs. Joanne L. Gusella and P.A. Fried, even light drinking (average one-quarter ounce of absolute alcohol daily) can have adverse affects on the child's verbal language and comprehension skills. [Neurobehavioral Toxicology and Teratology, Vol. 6:13-17, 1984] Drs. Mattson and Riley in San Diego have conducted research on the neurology of prenatal exposure to alcohol. Their studies show that children of mothers who drank but who do not have a diagnosis of FAS have many of the same neurological abnormalities as children who have been diagnosed with full FAS. [Neurotoxicology and Teratology, Vol. 16(3):283-289, 1994]

The brain is the organ most sensitive to prenatal alcohol damage. [Dr. Edward P. Riley lecture, September 25, 2002]

Damage to the brain from alcohol exposure can have an adverse affect on behavior. Alcohol exposure appears to damage some parts of the brain, while leaving other parts unaffected. Some children exposed to alcohol will have neurological problems in just a few brain areas. Other exposed children may have problems in several brain areas. The brain dysfunction is expressed in the form of inappropriate behaviors. Their behavior problems should be viewed with respect to neurological dysfunction. Although psychological factors such as abuse and neglect can exacerbate behavior problems in FASD, we are looking primarily at behavior that is organic in origin. To better understand FASD behavior issues, shift perspective from thinking the child "won't" to "can't." (Diane Malbin, MSW, Trying Differently Rather Than Harder,)

Sometimes the person's behavior is misinterpreted as willful misconduct (Debra Evensen, www.fasalaska.com), but for the most part, maintaining good behavior is outside of the child's control, especially in stressful or stimulating situations. Behavior problems in children with FASD are often blamed on poor parenting skills. While good parenting skills are required, even alcohol exposed children raised in stable, healthy homes can exhibit unruly behavior. The most difficult behaviors are seen in children who were prenatally exposed to alcohol and who also suffer from Reactive Attachment Disorder.

Most children with FASD have some attachment issues, may display inappropriate sexual behaviors, show poor judgment, have difficulty controlling their impulses, are emotionally immature, and need frequent reminders of rules. As a result, many will require the protection of close supervision for the rest of their lives.

Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders (FASD)

Alcohol causes more damage to the developing fetus than any other substance, including marijuana, heroin, and cocaine. (Institute of Medicine, 1996)

"Soft Signs"

(Psychological signs of FASD brain damage)

- Immature social development: overly friendly to strangers
- Emotional lability:
- Poorly developed conscience:
- Lack of consistent impulse control:
- Inability to learn from consequences
- Good expressive language skills
- Talented in art, music or mechanics.
- Attention deficits: not always hyperactive, but easily distracted by external stimuli
- Short-term memory deficits
- Inappropriate social interactions
- Difficulty managing money:
- Poor concept of time
- Grandiose ideas and unrealistic life goals, distorted perceptions
- Poor judgment
- Vulnerability and naiveté

"The greatest obstacle our children with fetal alcohol disorders must overcome is chronic frustration from not being able to meet the unrealistic expectations of others." – Dr. Calvin Sumner, nationally recognized expert.

Alaska FASD Partnership

The Alaska Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders (FASD) Partnership is a coalition of over 75 organizations and individuals committed to addressing issues related to FASD in Alaska.

The mission of the Partnership is to promote awareness, prevention, and effective life-long interventions for those affected by prenatal exposure to alcohol and their families.

The Partnership was formed in early 2010 after a groundswell of stakeholder effort and public comment to the Advisory Board on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse, and its partners, about the need for a more organized effort to address FASD in Alaska.

The Partnership is guided by a steering committee of individuals, organizations, and agencies – including people who experience FASD, family members, and professionals who work in the field. Additionally, the steering committee has members representing the Departments of Health & Social Services, Corrections, Education and Early Development, Labor and Workforce Development, and the Alaska Court System.

Seven workgroups of the Partnership are actively addressing a variety of issues related to FASD, including developing policy and funding recommendations, promoting public awareness, workforce development, collaborations, research, training, and more. They are:

- Diagnosis and Parent Navigation
- Family and Peer Support
- Prevention & Treatment for Pregnant Women
- FASD and the Education System
- FASD and the Legal System
- Services for Adults with FASD
- Professional Development

If you are interested in joining the Partnership or a workgroup, please visit our webpage or contact us via the information below.

Members of the Alaska FASD Partnership pose at the Alaska State Legislature in 2011 after a day of advocating for policies and funding related to FASD.

Message from the Chair

Waqaa from the Alaska FASD Partnership. We are a group of individuals and organizations coming together to address Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders (FASD) and the concerns associated with FASD. We are individuals, parents, professionals, educators, community , healthcare providers, and voters.

Alaska is an incredible state with diversity in our cultures, languages, and communities. Every year, our state attracts many tourists to witness firsthand the beauty of Alaska – in our lands and our people. Yet, behind this beauty, Alaska leads the way with the highest number of individuals born with FASD, and the highest rates of alcohol abuse and domestic violence. The common factor is alcohol. FASD does not discriminate by culture, education, or economic status. It can happen anywhere alcohol is available.

Although Alaska leads the way with identification of FASD through our diagnostic teams, we can do more to help decrease the incidence of FASDs through education and awareness. If everyone reading this newsletter pledges to learn more about FASD – its causes and the issues surrounding alcohol use – our state has the potential to live more healthy, safe, and happier lives. Join our cause – sign up to become a member of the AK FASD Partnership!

Quyana for your time. If you have any questions, concerns, or would like to join the Partnership, please contact us.

Eclectic group vie for Alaska House Seat 12

by Amanda Bohman abohman@newsminer.com
08.18.10 - 11:52 pm

FAIRBANKS — A bush pilot, a dairy farmer and an instrument and electrical designer want the GOP nomination for House District 12 on Tuesday.

The district stretches down the Richardson Highway from Eielson Air Force Base to Valdez and includes a large chunk of the Matanuska-Susitna Borough to the west.

The Republican hopefuls are Eric Feige, 49, a U.S. Air Force veteran who graduated from West Point in 1983; Pete Fellman, 53, a father of seven who supplements farming as an aide to Rep. John Harris; and Don Haase, 40, a father of eight with an endorsement from Alaska Right to Life.

Harris, the Republican incumbent, said he decided not to seek re-election because he is making a new home outside the district in Anchorage.

The candidate drawing the most votes will face Valdez Mayor Bert Cottle, a Democrat, in the November general election.

Eric Feige

Feige came to Alaska in 1995 and launched a career as a bush pilot, eventually landing in Chickaloon, where he operates a bed and breakfast with his wife.

He is running for state House because he thinks the Legislature can do better.

"I'm pretty disappointed in what I've seen with the Legislature to date," Feige said. "Some poor decisions have been made that tend to rely too much on politics and not what's best for the state."

If elected, Feige would push for reform of taxes on oil production. He wants the state to boost support for agriculture with more product marketing overseas. Feige thinks the state ought to set a two-year spending plan. He supports an all-Alaska gas pipeline.

"Over the last several years, the Legislature has imposed so many new fees and taxes on businesses that many are finding it difficult to profit," Feige stated on his campaign website, www.ericfeige4akhouse12.org. "I will look to make the state of Alaska a more attractive to investment than it is now."

Pete Fellman

After a bout with homelessness, a stint in the U.S. Army and the loss of a farm in Washington, Fellman needed a fresh start. So he towed a U-Haul trailer to Alaska and stopped in Delta Junction.

That was 1988.

Now he's hoping to draw on his life experiences, including five years as a diesel mechanic and 11 years as a legislative assistant to help residents of House District 12. His campaign slogan is "put my experience to work for you."

"My first priority is to listen to and serve the people of District 12," he said in a position statement posted on his website, www.petefellmanworks.com. "Being a legislator is, above all, a job, and that job is to work for the people of the state. Everything else is secondary. A legislator doesn't work for big business, large corporations, lobbyists, special interest groups, the governor or any state employee."

He favors limiting state government to its constitutional responsibilities and he opposes abortion and gun control.

"A free nation is a well-armed nation," Fellman states. "Load them, tote them and show them."

Don Haase

After earning a political science degree at Grand Valley State University in Michigan, Haase came to Alaska 17 years ago looking for adventure.

"I wanted to experience the last frontier while still young enough to climb the mountains and hike the trails," he said.

For Haase, Valdez is home and he's served his community on the trails association, the mental health advisory committee and he's been involved with committees of the Copper Valley Electric Association. He works for CH2MHill.

"I am running to make sure there are jobs available for (my children) when they grow up so they do not feel the need to leave the state," Haase stated in an e-mail. "I guess it is kind of selfish, but I don't want to have to fly thousands of miles to visit my grandkids."

He serves on the conservative Eagle Forum Alaska's board of directors, supports the Alaska Family Council and describes abortion as execution on his campaign website, www.haaseforhouse.com.

"I am proud to say that I remain married to the mother of my children," he stated on the website. "This also speaks to trustworthiness, for how can you trust me to keep my word to you once I've broken the most sacred vow I ever made, to honor and cherish my bride until death?"

Haase said the government should focus on what it does best — road construction, public safety and education — and leave economic development to the private sector, which he said can more nimbly respond to market demands.

1) Denali KidCare – Abortion funding

Background

In June 2010, Governor Sean Parnell vetoed a $2.9 million appropriation to expand the Denali KidCare program. The Governor stated that he vetoed the additional money because Denali KidCare has used public funds to pay for abortions. The Dept. of Health and Human Services reports that Denali KidCare spent a total of $384,000 to pay for 664 abortions in 2009. This number equates to about 35 percent of the total number of 1,875 abortions reported to have occurred in Alaska during 2009.

Question

Do you support Governor Parnell's decision to veto additional funding for Denali KidCare due to the program's funding of abortions?

YES _____ NO _____ UNDECIDED _____

2) Policy concerning "medically necessary" abortions

Background

In 2001, the Alaska Supreme Court ruled that the Legislature could not refuse to pay for "medically necessary" abortions for poor women. In the same decision, however, the court said their opinion "does not concern State payment for elective abortions." Elective abortions are generally defined as abortions that are performed voluntarily at the request of the mother for reasons unrelated to concerns for maternal health. However, the state has no criteria, either in statute or regulation, for distinguishing between a "medically necessary" abortion and an "elective" abortion. The person who makes the judgment now for what is medically necessary is the doctor who stands to profit from receiving a state reimbursement for performing the procedure.

Question

Would you support legislation establishing objective and neutral medical criteria for determining what is a "medically necessary" abortion, and further stipulating that any application for a state-funded abortion must be reviewed by independent medical advisors with the Department of Health and Social Services before payment can be approved?

YES _____ NO _____ UNDECIDED _____

3) Abortion and the Alaska State Constitution

Background

In the 1997 Valley Hospital decision, the Alaska Supreme Court stated as follows: "...the right to an abortion is the kind of fundamental right and privilege encompassed within the intention and spirit of Alaska's constitutional language." The court reached this conclusion despite the fact that (a) the word "abortion" is nowhere mentioned in the state constitution and, (b) nothing in the history of the Alaska Constitutional Convention (or any subsequent amendments adopted by the people) provides any evidence that the framers of the constitution intended to create a legal right to abortion.

This manufactured "right to abortion" in the state constitution has been interpreted by the state Supreme Court as being far more liberal in scope than the federal abortion policy set out in U.S. Supreme Court decisions such as Roe vs. Wade (1973) and Planned Parenthood vs. Casey (1992). As a consequence, Alaska courts have struck down many laws that are permissible under Roe and Casey – such as requirements for parental consent before a minor's abortion, and restricting public funding of abortion.

The Alaska Family Council supports a state constitutional amendment that would make it clear that nothing in the state constitution may be interpreted or construed to create any abortion-related rights beyond what is required under the U.S. constitution, as interpreted by the U.S. Supreme Court. Such an amendment would permit the Legislature, and also the people acting directly through the initiative process, to establish whatever abortion policy they deem appropriate for Alaska, provided it is consistent with the U.S. constitution.

Question

Would you support a constitutional amendment that would clarify that the state constitution does not provide a more liberal or expansive right to abortion than what is required under the U.S. constitution?

YES _____ NO _____ UNDECIDED _____

4) "Choose Life" specialty license plates

Background

About half the states in the U.S. allow their residents to select specialty plates for their motor vehicles that display the message, "Choose Life." In most of these states, proceeds from the sale of "Choose Life" license plates are donated to maternity homes, pregnancy care centers, and non-profit adoption agencies, which use the funds to assist needy women and their families with expenses associated with pregnancy, labor and delivery, and infant care.

Question

Would you support legislation that allows Alaska motorists to select "Choose Life" license plates, with the proceeds from plate sales going to non-profit groups that assist pregnant women?

YES _____ NO _____ UNDECIDED _____

5) Employment benefits for same-sex partners of public employees

Background

In 1998, Alaska voters overwhelmingly approved a state constitutional amendment defining marriage as a union of one man and one woman. In 2005, the Alaska Supreme Court declared that, despite the 1998 amendment, the same-sex "partners" of public employees were required to be treated the same as spouses of married employees in terms of eligibility for taxpayerfunded employment benefits (e.g., participation in retirement plans, health insurance, etc). In response, the Alaska Legislature passed a measure calling for an advisory vote in a special election on April 3, 2007. The question before voters was: "Shall the legislature adopt a proposed amendment to the state constitution to be considered at the 2008 general election that would prohibit the state, or a municipality or other subdivision of the state, from providing employment benefits to the same-sex partners of public employees and to same-sex partners of public employee retirees?"

A majority of voters, nearly 53 percent, indicated they wished to vote on the proposed constitutional amendment. Despite this fact, the proposed amendment has failed to garner the required 2/3 majority-vote in either the House or Senate before the question can be placed before voters.

Question

Do you support placing a constitutional amendment on the ballot that would let voters decide if taxpayer-funded employment benefits should be reserved for the spouses of married public employees, and not extended to the same-sex partners of public employees and retirees?

YES _____ NO _____ UNDECIDED _____

6) State civil rights law with respect to "sexual orientation" and "gender identity"

Background

In 2009 the Anchorage Assembly debated Ordinance 64, a controversial measure that would have banned individuals, businesses, schools, and city government from discriminating on the basis of a person's actual or perceived "gender identity" or "sexual orientation," in areas such as employment and housing. (The measure passed the Assembly on a vote of 7 to 4, but was later vetoed by Mayor Dan Sullivan).

The Alaska Family Council opposes such legislation because it inevitably leads to discrimination against those persons who, for reasons of conscience, cannot pretend to be morally indifferent to the homosexual lifestyle in the operations of their schools and businesses. For example, Christian schools would be required to hire homosexual teachers; a Christian bookstore owner could not refuse to hire a person who is a cross-dresser (based on prohibition of "gender identity" discrimination); a religious adoption agency would be required to place children with homosexual couples. Outside of Alaska, legislation similar to Ordinance 64 has been adopted by a number of states, and has predictably resulted in religious discrimination against Christians.

Question

If a bill is introduced in Juneau to add "gender identity" and/or "sexual orientation" to Alaska's civil rights statute, will you vote to oppose such legislation?

YES _____ NO _____ UNDECIDED _____

7) Gambling for profit in Alaska

Background

In 2009, a proposed constitutional amendment (HJR 3) was introduced that would generally prohibit all for-profit gaming or gambling in Alaska, unless it was authorized by an act of the Legislature, then ratified by a majority vote in the next statewide election, and approved by a majority of voters in the city, borough, or other area where the gambling may occur. The proposed amendment would not affect existing state law concerning non-profit gaming sponsored by boroughs, cities, and non-profit organizations.

Question

Would you support a constitutional amendment to require a vote of the people before any forprofit gambling is approved in Alaska?

YES _____ NO _____ UNDECIDED _____

8) Parental choice in education

Background

Across the U.S., there are 18 different private school choice programs at either the state or municipal level that provide parents increased options for educating their children at the K-12 level. States such as Arizona and Florida, and cities such as Milwaukee and the District of Columbia, use vouchers, tax credits, and/or "opportunity scholarships" to help promote school choice. Studies have shown that school choice programs increase graduation rates, improve educational performance, and provide a quality education for a lower cost on a per-pupil basis than public education. The programs also promote fairness for parents who are essentially "paying twice" for their child's education. Parents who currently send their children to nonpublic schools save the taxpayers' money because those children are not making demands on the public education system. Nevertheless, those same parents are still paying taxes to support the public schools that their children do not attend.

Question

Would you support legislation and/or a constitutional amendment to create some form of a private school choice program in Alaska at the K-12 level, whether through vouchers, tax credits, and/or opportunity scholarships?

9) Children's access to pornography

Background

The federal Children's Internet Protection Act, or CIPA, requires schools and libraries to place Internet filters on computers as a condition of receiving federal funds. However, statefunded libraries in Alaska that do not receive federal funds are currently not required to have Internet filters on their public computers. A bill was introduced in the Alaska Legislature in 2008 (HB 353) that would require all state-funded libraries to adhere to CIPA requirements and utilize filtering devices or software to prevent children from accessing obscene materials, as a condition of receiving state funds. Library staff would be permitted to turn off the filters when requested by patrons over the age of 18.

Question

Would you support legislation similar to HB 353 that would require libraries receiving state funds to install Internet filters on public computers?

YES _____ NO _____ UNDECIDED _____

10) Judicial selection process

Background

Alaska's constitution provides that the Governor shall appoint a qualified nominee to fill judicial vacancies in the state court system. However, the Governor's choices are extremely limited. he or she may choose only from a list of names that are submitted by the "Alaska Judicial Council," a seven-member body that is dominated by attorneys. In the past, the Alaska Judicial Council has refused to nominate many qualified applicants for court vacancies, thus artificially narrowing the Governor's options for appointing judges & justices.

Question

Would you support a state constitutional amendment that would allow the Governor the same leeway for appointing state judges as the U.S. President has for appointing federal judges, i.e., the Governor could nominate any candidate of his or her choosing for a judicial vacancy, and such nominee would have to be confirmed by the Alaska Senate?

YES _____ NO _____ UNDECIDED _____

Judicial Retention Information

- By Glen Biegel (posted by Don Haase)

Why judicial retention matters.

First, what is it? Judicial retention is a periodic opportunity for the public to judge our judges. They are voted on, or 'retained', in our regular elections in what has traditionally been an elective 'non-event.'

Judicial retention matters because the misinterpretation of even a single word in our Constitution leads to overturning supermajorities of legislators and Governors. Our judicial branch was designed to be the least powerful, not the most important. That is no longer the case. Liberalism in all of its forms is not often implemented by our elected legislators. It comes almost exclusively through the courts.

In extreme cases, our judge's rulings can abuse the will of the people by ignoring even a Constitutional Amendment such as the Marriage act that was passed in 1998. The Marriage Act was disregarded in a recent 5 to 0 decision that recognized 'same-sex domestic partnerships' as having the same characteristics as married people, and therefore were eligible for benefits. Read their reasoning:

The Supreme Court Ruling: ACLU vs State of Alaska and Municipality of Anchorage (S-10459) > to pay public employees who are in committed domestic relationships with same-sex partners less in terms of employee benefits than their coworkers who are married."

> Many same-sex couples are no doubt just as "truly closely related" and "closely connected" as any married couple, in the sense of providing the same level of love, commitment, and mutual economic and emotional support, as between married couples, and would choose to get married if they were not prohibited by law from doing so.

There are no references to 'committed domestic relationships' or 'same-sex couples' in current Alaska law. They are constructs exclusively of the Alaska State Supreme court. This kind of judicial abuse directly contradicts the marriage amendment:

Section 1.25 - Marriage.

> To be valid or recognized in this State, a marriage may exist only between one man and one woman.

The courts may not grant the benefits of marriage by equating another relationship to marriage. That is specifically rejected in the amendment. Whether you call another relationship a 'same-sex couple' or a 'committed domestic relationship with same-sex partners,' our Constitution does not allow the courts to equate them to marriage.

The following is the list of judges who are up for retention. While none of the Supreme Court justices are up, that does not mean that the great disparity between public opinion and judicial action cannot be addressed.

Retention of Judges (posted by Don Haase)

From the Eagle Forum Alaska Newsletter, October, 2006
-By Debbie Joslin

Alaska voters will be asked to vote on whether to retain judges on November 7.

Two judges of particular interest on the ballot this year are Peter Michalski and Sen Tan.

Judge Michalski is interesting. His wife Jo was listed as a co-sponsor of a fundraiser for Tony Knowles in September. Judge Michalski is probably best known for his 1996 court decision finding that homosexual partners are entitled to be "married". Alaskan voters apparently disagreed as we voted overwhelmingly to uphold traditional one man-one woman marriage.

Judge Sen Tan ruled in 2000 that the state must pay for convenience abortions for poor women. His rationale was that if the state was going to pay for prenatal care for these women, they must also fund abortions.

Alaska's courts are some of the most liberal in the country. Our Alaska Supreme Court overturned parental consent for abortion and the partial birth abortion ban. They are now considering forcing the legislature to fund education at whatever level the court says is appropriate. That is a move that has been successful in other states and I don't expect our courts to disappoint the liberals. After all, Alaska Courts are consistent if nothing else.

Reply:

Dear Concerned Student:

Sorry,

I am not allowed in schools!

Sincerely,

God

How did this get started?...

Perhaps when Madeline Murray O'Hare complained
She didn't want any prayer in our schools.

And the courts said, OK.

Then, someone said you better not

Read the Bible in school,
the Bible that says
"thou shalt not kill,
Thou shalt not steal,
And love your neighbors as yourself,"

And the courts said, OK...

Dr. Benjamin Spock said
We shouldn't spank our children
When they misbehaved
Because their little personalities
Would be warped and we might damage their self-esteem.

And we said,
An expert should know what he's talking about
So we won't spank them anymore..

Then someone said
Teachers and principals better not Discipline our children when they misbehave.
And the school administrators said
No faculty member in this school
Better touch a student when they misbehave
Because we don't want any bad publicity,
And we surely don't want to be sued.

And we accepted their reasoning...

Then someone said,
let's let our daughters have abortions if they want,
And they won't even have to tell their parents.

And the courts said, that's a grand idea.

Then some wise school board member said,
Since boys will be boys
And they're going to do it anyway, let's give our sons all the condoms they want,
So they can have all the fun they desire,
And we won't have to tell their parents they got them at school.

And the courts said, that's another great idea...

Then some of our top elected officials said
It doesn't matter what we do in private as long as we do our jobs.

And we said,
It doesn't matter what anybody, including the President,
Does in private as long as we have jobs and the economy is good....

And someone else took that appreciation a step further
And published pictures of nude children
And then stepped further still by Making them available on the Internet.

And the courts said, everyone's entitled to free speech....

And the entertainment industry said,
let's make TV shows and movies that promote Profanity, violence and illicit sex...
And let's record music that encourages
Rape, drugs, murder, suicide, and satanic themes...

And the courts said,

it's just entertainment
And it has no adverse effect
And nobody takes it seriously anyway,
So go right ahead.

Now we're asking ourselves
Why our children have no conscience,
Why they don't know right from wrong,
And why it doesn't bother them to Kill strangers, classmates or even themselves.

Undoubtedly,
If we thought about it long and hard enough,
We could figure it out.
I'm sure it has a great deal to do with...

In this case, the sentencing judge did not specify during his remarks at sentencing whether the defendants sentences were concurrent or consecutive. We hold that, under former AS 12.55.025(e), when a sentencing judge does not specify whether a defendants sentences are concurrent or consecutive, the sentences must be deemed concurrent.

ALASKA MAN SENTENCED TO JAIL FOR MOLESTING TWO GIRLS
A deaf man in Juneau, Alaska was sentenced to eight years in prison after admitting to molesting two girls when they were children. Arley Dominguez, 48, "hugged his wife, smiled and waved his shackled hands at other family members" as he was led out of court last Friday, reported the Juneau Empire. Assistant Public Defender Eric Hedland said his client accepted guilt in the case ever since he was charged in November with eight felonies. "He was willing to take his lumps," said Hedland. Sitka Superior Court Judge Larry Zervos placed Dominguez on probation for 10 years after his release and ordered him to register as a sex-offender and participate in sex-offender treatment arranged by the Department of Corrections.

Judicial Elitism
On July 28 Superior Court Judge William Morse determined that Superior Court Judge Michael Jeffery (Barrow) and District Court Judge Nancy Nolan (Anchorage) had timely filed their notices of intention to run for retention on the November 2004 ballot despite the undisputed fact that both judges submitted their declaration of candidacy forms to the Division of Elections over two weeks after the filing deadline, with the request that the Division accept them late. Under Alaska law the notice to file must be made by August 1st before the general election. In addition, the Alaska Supreme Court has held that the Division of Elections has no discretion to accept a late-filed declaration of candidacy, and that the Division must strictly construe the statute requiring this filing. However, in Jeffrey v. Glaiser and Nolan v. Glaiser the court said that the Division of Elections abused its discretion by refusing to put the names of judges on the ballot.

Even though the Division of Elections provides a declaration of candidacy form, Judge Morse determined that Judges Jeffrey and Nolan fulfilled the filing requirement when a Judicial Council employee sent an email containing the addresses of the judges eligible for retention, without their knowledge, to a temporary employee at the Division of Elections whose job was to coordinate the ballot pamphlet sent to Alaska voters. This Elections employee then mailed the judges information about how to submit ballot pamphlet materials, along with a reminder that they were required to file their declarations of candidacy by August 1. The Judicial Council employee also later sent a reminder to the candidates, stating that if they failed to file a declaration of candidacy with the Division of Elections by August 1, their names would not appear on the ballot.

"The Division of Elections is charged with running a fair election, and this requires clear rules that the public understands," said Márquez. "The superior court decision recognizes that there are concrete deadlines for filing declarations of candidacy for any office, but establishes ambiguous standards for what constitutes a declaration by a judicial candidate. The burden that this decision places on the Division combined with the importance of the legal issue compels us to seek review by the Alaska Supreme Court."

James alleged in his motion that he had not been given visitation rights as court- ordered and that he had been allowed to see C.R. only three times since the divorce. His supporting affidavit and memorandum alleged that C.R. was included in the divorce order because it had been determined that there was an existing father-son relationship. The question presented in this case is whether AS 11.71.060(a) is constitutional to the extent that it prohibits possession of marijuana by adults in their homes for personal use.

On one level, the answer is straightforward. The Alaska Supreme Court ruled in Ravin that the right of privacy codified in article I, section 22 of our state constitution protects the right of adults to possess marijuana in their homes for personal use. When a statute conflicts with a provision of our state constitution, the statute must give way. Thus, a statute which purports to attach criminal penalties to constitutionally protected conduct is void.

INTRODUCTION
Initially, I acquired my dental skills in the military. After military service, I entered the private sector and have worked in almost every aspect of a dental practice. During the past 15 years I have grown as a person, an employee, and a leader. Through mutual respect, building those up around me, working hard, and leading by example; I have found we are truly limited by our own ambition. While working full time, I went to school full time, and in 5 years, achieved two college degrees. The secret to success: put one foot in front of the other, focus on the strengths of your co-workers, and be open to the wisdom and experience of others.

Burns, John
State of Alaska Attorney General

John J. Burns

John J. Burns is Governor Parnell's appointee as Alaska's twenty-second Attorney General. Burns, age 51, is a life-long Alaskan, who grew up in Nome and Fairbanks, where his father was a marine mammal biologist with the Alaska Department of Fish and Game and his mother worked in the airlines industry. Burns graduated from West Valley High School in Fairbanks in 1976 and from the University of Alaska Fairbanks in 1982 with degrees in history and philosophy. In 1986, Burns received his JD degree from University of Puget Sound School of Law in Tacoma, Washington.

Burns spent the summer months of his high school, college, and law school years working as a fisheries technician for the Alaska Department of Fish and Game throughout Western Alaska and in Prince William Sound.

Burns was admitted to the Alaska Bar in 1986 and to the U.S. District Court of Alaska in 1987. He was a judicial extern for Justice Jay Rabinowitz of the Alaska Supreme Court and a law clerk for the Fairbanks Superior Court. Burns entered private practice with the law firm Birch Horton Bittner and Cherot in their Fairbanks office. In 1999, Burns and partner Cory Borgeson formed Borgeson and Burns, PC, providing a full range of legal services, including business law and litigation, public utility practice, property law, insurance defense, estate planning, and family law. Burns' practice focused primarily on business transactions and commercial litigation.

In addition to his legal practice, Burns commercial fished for a number of years in Bristol Bay and taught business law classes for 12 years as an adjunct professor at the University of Alaska Fairbanks. Burns was a member of the Fairbanks Chamber of Commerce, serving as its past president, and he has been active in many other community service organizations, including the Fairbanks Rotary Club, the University's Chancellor Advisory Committee, and Hospice of Alaska.

Attorney General Burns and his wife Christi have been married for twenty-four years. Together they have two daughters, Alissa, a senior at the University of Arizona, and Kate, a high school junior who is currently studying in Poland on a Rotary exchange fellowship.

MEMORANDUM

Date: 2011

To: All Committees

From: Suzi Lowell
Chief Clerk

Subject: Confirmation Committee Report (Signature Page) for Governor's Appointments

The attached Confirmation Committee Report (signature page) should be used in conjunction with the Referral for Confirmation form for the Governor's appointments to boards and commissions requiring legislative confirmation. After a committee has reviewed the qualifications of the appointee(s), the Referral for Confirmation form(s) should be dated and attached to a signature page. Have members sign the signature page and return the confirmation packet to the Chief Clerk's office.

Please use a single signature page for multiple appointees if the names of all members signing the report are the same for each attached referral. This allows members to sign once for multiple appointments.

Attached are several signature pages for your use. We used colored paper to make them easier to identify. If you anticipate needing more forms or need assistance, please call Nancy McMullen at 465-6809.

Note: A separate report, including the signatures, will be used for department commissioners.

State of Alaska Attorney General

MICHAEL C. GERAGHTY

mgeraghty@dmgz.com

PROFILE

Since he joined the firm in 1979, Mr. Geraghty's work has been devoted exclusively to litigation and trial practice before state and federal courts. He has assumed lead counsel responsibilities in all of his trials, which have included both civil and criminal law, as well as proceedings before the OSHA Review Board, the Alaska State Commission on Human Rights and the U.S. Land Commission. He has tried cases before juries in Fairbanks, Anchorage, Barrow, Kenai and Dillingham. Mr. Geraghty has been selected in The Best Lawyers in America in the specialties of Construction Law and Personal Injury Litigation since 2007 and he has also been recognized as a "Superlawyer" by Washington Law & Politics magazine since 2008. In 2005 he was appointed by the Governor to serve Alaska as a Uniform Law Commissioner to the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. In 2007 he was honored by his peers when he received the Board of Governors Professionalism Award "in recognition of exemplary conduct in his association with the public, his colleagues and the legal community." In 2011, he was elected to the Fellows of the American Bar Foundation "in recognition of outstanding dedication to the welfare of the community, the traditions of the profession and the advancement of the objectives of the American Bar Association."

PRACTICE DESCRIPTION

Born and raised in Alaska, Mr. Geraghty's practice has focused on industries and areas that reflect this state's growth and history, including natural resources, oil and gas and construction. He has been involved in numerous complex litigations, including class actions and anti-trust. Many, if not most, of these cases pose unique challenges in terms of developing orderly plans for discovery, document production, depositions of witnesses and experts, and other related matters.

He has handled approximately 20 appeals to the Alaska Supreme Court in the areas of sovereign immunity, administrative law, insurance and bad faith, attorney-client privilege, OSHA regulations, personal injury, products liability and premises-landowner liability. His reported cases include:

- Harris v. Ahtna Government Services Corp., 193 P.3d 300 (Alaska 2008)
- Kirk v. Demientieff, 145 P.3d 512 (Alaska 2006)

Senator Hollis French, Chair, Senate Judiciary Committee
Representative Carl Gatto, Chair, House Judiciary Committee

Sirs,

I would like to submit testimony regarding the appointment of Mr. Michael G. Geraghty as Attorney General. After contacting the Anchorage LIO who referred me to the offices of the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives I understand that the hearings on Mr. Geraghty's appointment have not been held. I also understand that both Legislative Judiciary Committees will be involved in this process.

This concerns Mr. Geraghty's performance as an independent counsel in regard to an ethics complaint I filed against the Governor. I am not contesting Mr. Geraghty's decision. What concerns me is the manner in which he executed his duties. Based on my experience, I very much doubt if Mr. Geraghty could effectively serve all Alaskans as Attorney General.

I understand that the facts concerning my complaint might want to be treated as confidential. Therefore I am asking for guidance regarding how to submit my testimony. Thank you.

The Honorable Carl Gatto, Representative
Chair, House Judiciary Committee
Alaska House of Representatives
Alaska State Legislature
State Capitol, Room 411
Juneau, Alaska 99801

Re: Alaska Office of Victims' Rights, Executive Director Appointment

Dear Representative Gatto:

My appointment term as the Victims' Advocate and Executive Director of the Alaska Office of Victims' Rights (OVR) ends in July 2012. It has been a great honor to serve the Alaska Legislature in this rewarding position for the past four and one-half years. I am grateful for the opportunity to serve Alaska residents with their rights as crime victims in the criminal justice system.

I sincerely hope that the Alaska Legislature will consider renewing my appointment term as allowed by Alaska Statue 24.65.040(a), Term of office.

Under Alaska Statute 24.65.040(a), the Victims' Advocate may be reappointed and serve for three terms. The term of office is five years. Since the establishment of the OVR, I have served the longest as the appointed Executive Director in the agency's history. I am the third appointed Executive Director of the OVR.

I have enclosed the last four annual reports to the Alaska Legislature detailing the work of the Alaska Office of Victims' Rights during my appointment term.

In June 2011, the National Crime Victim Law Institute recognized the Alaska Office of Victims' Rights for outstanding achievement. The Alaska Office of Victims' Rights received the 2011 Victims' Rights Partnership Award identifying the agency for its leadership in victims' rights, dedication to victims in Alaska, and collaborative efforts toward advancing crime victim rights (the announcement for this national award is attached).

Please inform me if I can provide any additional information regarding the Alaska Office of Victims' Rights. I stand ready to meet with any committee of the Alaska Legislature to discuss my continuing interest to serve Alaska and the Alaska Legislature as the Executive Director of the Alaska Office of Victims' Rights.

Respectfully submitted,

CSHB 01 (HSS) Alaska Health Freedom Act

The Alaska Health Freedom Act codifies as state policy that every person in the state of Alaska is and shall continue to be free from government compulsion in the selection of health insurance options, and that such liberty is protected by the Constitutions of the United States and the State of Alaska. The bill removes the authority of any state official or employee from enforcing any penalty which violates the policy. CSHB 1 (HSS) affirms the right of all Alaskans to choose their own "mode of securing health care services."

We allege that the new federal law, Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA), infringes upon the constitutional rights of U.S. individuals by mandating all citizens and legal residents have qualifying health care coverage or pay a tax penalty. By imposing such a mandate, the law exceeds the powers of the United States under the Constitution.

There are currently 44 state legislatures who have introduced legislation to limit, alter or oppose selected state or federal actions, including single-payer provisions and mandates that would require purchase of insurance. Please help Alaska join nine other states, Virginia, Idaho, Utah, Georgia, Louisiana, Arizona, Oklahoma, and Missouri, who enacted legislation in 2010 to establish the individual's right in their state to be free from government force to make their own choice about health care.

Explanation of Changes from HB 01, version A To CSHB 01 (HSS) version M

There was a concern from the HSS Committee regarding the definition of penalty in HB01, version A. Under the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA), there is a mandate requiring all citizens and legal residents to have qualifying health care coverage or pay a tax penalty.

A scenario was presented that an individual decided to opt out of obtaining health care insurance coverage under the PPACA. He then received health care services and was issued a bill from the practitioner. Under HB01, "...a person has the right to choose or decline any mode of obtaining health care services without penalty or threat of penalty."

The concern was that this individual could say that the bill from the practitioner could be viewed as a "penalty" under the definition in HB 01, stating that a "penalty means a fine, tax, surcharge, fee, or other monetary charge." This individual could potentially not pay for the practitioner's bill because HB01 states a person declining health care insurance would not be penalized.

Therefore, a qualifying statement was added in CSHB 01 (HSS), Page 2, Line 9 stating "...however, liability for the cost of health care services is not a penalty". This additional definition to "penalty" will alleviate the concern of practitioners not being paid for health care services.

FISCAL NOTE

STATE OF ALASKA BILL NO. HB001
2011 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Analysis:

The bill adds a new AS 44.99.130, which states that a person has the right to choose any mode of obtaining or declining health care without subject to penalty or threat of penalty. There is an exception for health programs that are required by the State, its political subdivisions, and State courts. The bill adds no responsibility to the Department of Health and Social Services and would not directly impact it.

Explanation of Page 1, Line 12: "(1) does not apply to health care services provided or required by the state, a political subdivision of the state, or a court of the state; and may not impair a contract right that provides health care services."

This subsection does not apply to

- persons in custody of the Department of Correction or a local confinement facility or who have not completed all requirements imposed as the result of a sentence in a criminal conviction, including, but not limited to, any type of probation, parole, or post-release supervision.
- This section shall not be construed to expand, limit, or otherwise modify any of the following:
  (1) that a spouse is liable for the necessary expenses incurred by the other spouse, including expenses incurred by medical necessity, or any other duty a person owes to a spouse or dependent with respect to the provision of health care services or medical treatment.
  (2) Any law regarding which health care services or medical treatments are lawful within this State or who is authorized to provide health care services or medical treatments within this State.
  (3) Any law regarding the right or duty of a parent or guardian in the determination or provision of health care services or medical treatment for a minor.
  (4) Any law regarding the screening of newborns for metabolic or other hereditary and congenital disorders, examination and testing of a child for lead poisoning and health assessments for children entering Kindergarten in the public schools
  (5) Any law regarding health care services or medical treatments ordered under the Workers' Compensation Act.
  (6) Any law regarding health care services or medical treatment regarding involuntary commitments for mental illness or substance abuse.
  (7) The physical and mental examination of a party ordered by a judge, such as, blood or genetic testing to establish paternity
  (8) Any law requiring the provision of health insurance for employees as a condition of receiving State economic incentives.
  (9) Any law regarding the examination and testing of persons to determine possible exposure to nuclear, biological, or chemical agents caused by a terrorist incident

RE: House Bill 1

Dear Representative Gatto,

On behalf of the National Federation of Independent Business/Alaska, I wish to express our support for House Bill 1. The National Federation of Independent Business is the largest small-business advocacy group in the Alaska.

House Bill 1 establishes a state policy that an individual cannot be coerced to purchase a health insurance policy. This legislation at the state level will help block a government requirement to purchase health insurance. If enacted in Alaska, the legislation will block an individual mandate. NFIB believes that the government does not have constitutional authority to mandate an individual purchase health insurance.

As you may be aware, NFIB is the only trade association that is a party to the lawsuit filed in federal court in Florida. The district court found in favor of our suit. We expect the government will appeal the ruling. In the interim, we believe it is important that Alaska, that is also a party to the suit, set a state policy consistent with the position advocated in the lawsuit.

Sincerely yours,

Dennis L. DeWitt

RE: HB 1 (Gatto and Lynn)—Oppose

Dear Chair Keller:

On behalf of the members of AARP in Alaska, we encourage you and your colleagues on the House Health and Social Services Committee to oppose HB 1, authored by Representatives Carl Gatto and Bob Lynn and co-sponsored by Representative Peggy Wilson.

There is no doubt that there is significant disagreement about the impact of federal health care reform, in particular the individual mandate.

To date, three federal judges have found it constitutional and two have found aspects of the federal bill to be unconstitutional.

AARP advocates for the full implementation of the Affordable Care Act in every state. We believe the federal law should be implemented to best meet the needs of older Americans and their families.

If HB 1 is enacted, we believe Alaskans would face a series of unintended consequences:

- Who would pay for the health care costs of individuals who decide to opt out of coverage? Would our hospitals have to provide free care to those who choose not to obtain insurance or who have limited coverage or high deductibles? To make up for this fee care, hospitals would have to charge everyone else more, resulting in higher premiums for individuals, employers, state and local government and school districts, PERS and TRS.
- Because it would allow individuals to opt out of any health care coverage, HB 1 could, for example, preclude courts from ordering one party in a divorce proceeding to maintain health insurance for his spouse and children. This would leave many without coverage and some would undoubtedly seek coverage under Medicaid and Denali KidCare or rely on uncompensated hospital care.
- We understand that HB 1 would permit the sale of insurance by out-of-state and off-shore insurance companies not subject to state laws, regulation or courts. Consumers who have problems would not be able to seek the assistance of the Alaska Division of Insurance.

AARP believes there is great uncertainty of how the legislation would be carried out. The consequences of HB 1 are, we believe, not fully known or understood.

The language is vague and will be open to so many interpretations that it can only result in costly litigation for the state.

Our health care should not end up in litigation—that's nobody's idea of freedom of choice.

HB 1 could also impact the private sector too. It could result in insurance companies raising premiums, deductibles and co-pays—driving up already skyrocketing health care costs for individuals and businesses. Physicians and other providers, including our network of community health centers, hospitals and nursing homes, would find themselves serving even more uninsured patients.

HB 1 is a risky gamble. It is more than a political gesture to Washington, DC. HB 1 raises too many unanswered questions and unintended consequences. Why bet Alaska's health care on an unproven idea?

The federal health care reform implementation improves the state's ability to deliver health care for its citizens. Health care for our citizens is too important to become a turf war between the state and federal government.

AARP requests an "NAY" vote on HB 1.

Should you have any questions about our position, please feel free to contact me (586-3637) or Patrick Luby, AARP Advocacy Director (907-762-3314).

Dear Representatives Lynn, Gatto, Chenault, Guttenbert and Gardner:

The Alaska Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals strongly supports any legislation that strengthens our state animal cruelty laws. We understand that HB 179 is before you now, and would provide that cruelty to five or more animals, as defined in more detail in the legislation, would constitute a class C felony. While we understand that there may be isolated instances where "back yard" individuals are charged with cruelty or neglect, to less than 5 animals, that is determined not to rise to the level of a felony, they should be treated as the exception to the rule, and not be the basis for a rule that allows cruelty to 4 animals, for example. If an individual commits egregious cruelty to 5 animals, s/he is guilty of a felony, but the same act(s) to 4 animals is not; and egregious pain and suffering to one animal is not. We do not believe that these standards are in the best interest of the animals.

We understand that Anchorage Animal Care and Control has made recommendations that would modify the proposed HB 179 so that this loophole does not occur. We sincerely hope that you will take their recommendations into serious consideration.

We are very grateful to all of you for your interest and hard work on behalf of animals, and hope that you will take HB 179 just one more notch to make it truly effective and meaningful for those creatures who depend entirely upon your decisions for their very lives.

CS FOR HOUSE BILL NO. 1(JUD)

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SEVENTH LEGISLATURE - FIRST SESSION

BY THE HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Offered:
Referred:

Sponsor(s): REPRESENTATIVES GATTO AND LYNN, Peggy Wilson

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act stating a public policy that allows a person to accept or decline any offered mode of securing health care services."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

* Section 1. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

SHORT TITLE. This Act may be known as the Alaska Health Freedom Act.

* Sec. 2. AS 44.99 is amended by adding a new section to article 2 to read:

Sec. 44.99.130. Declaration of policy for securing health care services. (a) It is the policy of the State of Alaska that a person has the right to accept or decline any offered mode of obtaining health care services without penalty or threat of penalty.

(b) The policy stated in (a) of this section

(1) does not apply to health care services provided or required by the state, a political subdivision of the state, or a court of the state; and

(2) may not impair a contract right that provides health care services.

(c) In this section,

(1) "health care services" means a service or treatment, or provision of a product, for the care of a physical or mental disease, illness, injury, defect, or condition, or to maintain or improve physical or mental health;

(2) "mode of obtaining" means directly purchasing health care services from a health care provider or purchasing insurance to cover the cost of health care services;

(3) "penalty" means a fine, tax, surcharge, fee, or other monetary charge; however, liability for the cost of health care services is not a penalty.

Insert after health care provider (AS DEFINED IN SEC. 09.55.560)

"material" to a reasonable patient's decision concerning treatment. Under this view, expert testimony concerning the professional standard of disclosure is not a necessary element of the plaintiff's case because the scope of disclosure is measured from the standpoint of the patient. Korman v. Mallin, 858 P.2d 1145 (Alaska 1993).

Signed informed consent. — The requirements set forth in 7 AAC 12.120(e) are not inconsistent with this section. The regulations, simply impose a supplemental requirement that the patient's medical record contain a "signed informed consent" before a surgical procedure may begin. Sweet v. Sisters of Providence, 895 P.2d 484 (Alaska 1995).

In a medical malpractice suit, the court found no merit in the patient's contention that the implied consent form was invalid, because it was witnessed by a nurse instead of being signed in the doctor's presence. Neither this section nor its implementing regulation, 7 AAC 12.120, require that the treating physician personally read the consent form to the patient or witness the patient's signature. Harrold v. Artwohl, 132 P.3d 276 (Alaska 2006).

Discusssion of risks associated with procedure. — In a case involving informed consent, summary judgment was improperly granted in favor of several healthcare providers where no evidence was presented regarding whether the risks associated with a catheterization were discussed with a patient prior to the performance of the procedure. Parker v. Tomera, 89 P.3d 761 (Alaska 2004).

Failure to inform patient of reasonable alternative. — Where a patient underwent surgery to remove his appendix, the record suggested that he may not have been told that a CT scan could have ruled out the need for immediate surgery. The superior court erred by dismissing his malpractice suit upon summary judgment; a triable issue of fact was raised concerning informed consent under this section. Harrold v. Artwohl, 132 P.3d 276 (Alaska 2006).

Informing patient of HIV/AIDS status of hospital roommate. — Assignment of a room and a roommate to patient does not qualify as a "treatment or procedure," requiring informed consent. Gallant v. United States, 392 F. Supp. 2d 1077 (D. Alaska Oct. 5, 2005).

Validity of regulation. — The trial court in an evidentiary hearing did not adequately investigate the application of 7 AAC 12.120(e) which requires a signed informed consent before a surgical procedure because there was an insufficient factual basis from which to conclude that the regulation either was or was not obscure and whether or not it could be fairly interpreted to set the standard of care. Sweet v. Sisters of Providence, 895 P.2d 484 (Alaska 1995).

Hospital's duty to obtain consent. — This section did not impose a duty on a hospital to obtain a patient's consent before her physicians proposed and ordered blood transfusions. Ward v. Lutheran Hosps. & Homes Soc'y of Am., Inc., 963 P.2d 1031 (Alaska 1998).

Jury instructions held proper. — In a medical malpractice case, a court properly instructed the jury that the doctor had a duty to disclose information that would be material to a reasonable patient; "material information" was defined as information which the surgeon knew or should have known would be regarded as significant by a reasonable person in the patient's position. Marsingill v. O'Malley, 128 P.3d 151 (Alaska 2006).

Cited in Marsingill v. O'Malley, 58 P.3d 495 (Alaska 2002).

Collateral references. — Modern status of views as to general measure of physician's duty to inform patient of risks of proposed treatment. 88 ALR3d 1008.

Duty of medical practitioner to warn patient of subsequently discovered danger from treatment previously given. 12 ALR4th 11.

Liability for failure of physician to inform patient of alternative modes of diagnosis or treatment. 38 ALR4th 900.

Medical practitioner's liability for treatment given child without parents' consent. 67 ALR4th 511.

Malpractice: physician's duty, under informed consent doctrine, to obtain patient's consent to treatment in pregnancy or childbirth cases. 89 ALR4th 799.

Sec. 09.55.560. Definitions. In AS 09.55.530 — 09.55.560,

(1) "board" means an arbitration board established under AS 09.55.535;

HOUSE BILL NO. 6

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SEVENTH LEGISLATURE - FIRST SESSION

BY REPRESENTATIVES GRUENBERG, Peggy Wilson

Introduced: 1/18/11
Referred: Education, Judiciary

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act authorizing the governor to remove or suspend a member of the Board of Regents of the University of Alaska for good cause; and establishing a procedure for the removal or suspension of a regent."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

* Section 1. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

LEGISLATIVE FINDINGS AND PURPOSE. (a) The legislature finds that

(1) the framers of the Constitution of the State of Alaska intended to insulate the University of Alaska and the Board of Regents from politics, but did not intend to immunize the University of Alaska and the Board of Regents from appropriate nonpolitical legislative and executive branch oversight;

(2) under AS 14.40.170(b)(1), the legislature has delegated to the Board of Regents the power to regulate itself, but the Board of Regents has not adopted self-governance rules that authorize the board to remove or suspend a regent in appropriate circumstances; and

(3) the legislature has the power to create procedures under which the governor may remove a regent for good cause or suspend a regent in appropriate circumstances, if the procedures ensure that

(A) the regent is accorded due process; and

(B) the University of Alaska and the Board of Regents remain insulated from politics.

(b) The purpose of AS 14.40.155, added by sec. 2 of this Act, is to

(1) clarify that the governor may not remove a regent without good cause;

(2) clarify that the governor may remove a regent with good cause;

(3) prescribe a due process procedure under which the governor may remove a regent for good cause;

(4) prescribe a due process procedure under which the governor may suspend a regent in certain circumstances; and

(5) accomplish each of the above purposes in a manner that ensures the University of Alaska and the Board of Regents remain insulated from politics.

 Sec. 2. AS 14.40 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 14.40.155. Removal and suspension of regents. (a) The governor may remove a member of the Board of Regents for good cause by providing to the member

(1) a copy of the allegations pertaining to the reasons for removal;

(2) an opportunity for a hearing on the allegations; and

(3) at least 30 days' notice of a hearing if a hearing is requested; the notice must include the applicable rules governing the conduct of the hearing.

(b) After removal of a regent for good cause under (a) of this section, the governor shall file with the lieutenant governor a copy of the allegations made against the former regent, the governor's findings on each of the allegations, and a complete record of the removal proceedings.

(c) The governor may, after providing notice and an opportunity for a hearing, suspend a member of the Board of Regents while final disposition is pending on

(1) a criminal complaint, presentment, information, or indictment involving a felony in any jurisdiction;

(2) an information or formal criminal charges of a misdemeanor described under (g)(3) of this section; or

(3) allegations of nonfeasance in office described under (g)(4) of this section under consideration by the governor.

#3 clarified

(d) A regent who has been suspended under (c) of this section may, at any time, request a hearing to lift the suspension.

#2 our

(e) In a hearing involving the suspension of a regent under (c) of this section, the governor or the governor's designee shall provide the regent an opportunity to defend against the stated grounds for suspension or to show cause why the suspension should be lifted after a suspension is imposed.

(f) The governor may delegate the conduct of a hearing under this section to the office of administrative hearings under AS 44.64.030(b).

(g) In this section, "good cause" means

(1) a violation of AS 39.52 (Alaska Executive Branch Ethics Act);

(2) conviction of a felony in any jurisdiction;

(3) conviction of a misdemeanor in any jurisdiction if the misdemeanor involves

(A) dishonesty;

(B) breach of trust; or

(C) the University of Alaska;

(4) nonfeasance in office, including

(A) misconduct in office;

(B) an inability to serve;

(C) neglect of duty;

(D) incompetence;

(E) unjustified failure to perform the duties of the Board of Regents;

(5) failure to possess the qualifications of a regent under AS 14.40.130.

 Sec. 3. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

APPLICABILITY. AS 14.40.155, added by sec. 2 of this Act, applies to all conduct and acts occurring before, on, or after the effective date of this Act.

House Bill 6:
Removing a Regent
Sponsor Statement

This bill creates a statutory due process procedure under which the governor may suspend or remove a University of Alaska regent for good cause.

This bill is in response to a 2007 incident in which a regent was federally indicted on multiple counts of fraud. He refused to resign his position until impeachment proceedings began. The board of regents' by-laws do not set forth a procedure remove a regent. The legislative legal counsel has concluded that regents serve at the pleasure of the governor and thus can be removed. An informal attorney general's opinion states that the governor does not have the authority to remove a regent without cause. That AG opinion concluded that the governor does have the authority to remove a regent so long as cause is established and due process granted.

It should be noted that during the 25th legislature letters were sent to the board of regents asking that it, under the authority of 14.40.170(b)(1), adopt procedures for the removal and/or suspension of a regent, but it has not done so.

It is important to acknowledge that the constitution does bear upon this bill due to the governor's powers being enumerated in Article III of the Alaska Constitution while the board of regents is established in Article VII, section 6. The Alaska Supreme Court has ruled that the UA is subject to a degree of legislative control. For example, the legislature can, without approval of the regents, dispose of UA land. Additionally, the legislature has, through law, provided the UA with a broad degree of autonomy; however, this implies the UA is still subject to laws enacted by the legislature. The legislature has been given broad authority under the constitution, indeed the only constitutional constraints on the power of the legislature to make laws regarding other agencies of the State of Alaska deal with the rules of court and the repeal of initiatives. In effect this legislation provides a check upon the powers of the university.

This bill secures the state's interest and the university's interest. This legislation will keep a cloud from hovering over the UA in a future scenario in which a regent must be removed or suspended for cause.

House Bill 6:
Removing a Regent
Sectional Analysis for CS for HB 6 (EDC) (27-LS0027\D)

Section 1[1] sets forth the legislative findings and purposes of the bill. The legislature finds that the framers of the Alaskan Constitution intended to insulate the University of Alaska from politics, that the legislature delegated the power of self-governance to the UA under AS 14.40.170(b), and that the legislature has the power to create laws that pertain to the university. The purposes of the bill are to clarify that the governor may only remove a regent with good cause and that the governor must afford a regent due process in the proceedings dealing his or her removal or suspension. Finally, the legislative findings in this section affirm the political insulation of the university and the board of regents.

Section 2[2] adds a new section, AS 14.40.155, to AS 14.40 the chapter that governs the University of Alaska's Board of Regents. AS 14.40.155 is patterned after other statutory removal procedures for other boards, including the workers compensation appeals commission. See AS 23.30.007(j).

AS 14.40.155(a) sets forth the procedure for the governor to suspend a regent for good cause . The governor must provide the regent with notice and an opportunity for a hearing. Good cause is defined in subsection (g) to include a violation of the Executive Branch Ethics Act, a conviction of a felony, conviction of a misdemeanor involving a crime of dishonesty or the University of Alaska, malfeasance or nonfeasance in office, or failure to continue to meet the qualification requirements of a regent.

AS 14.40.155(b) allows the governor to remove a regent for good cause by providing the regent with an accusation and opportunity for a hearing and judicial review.

AS 14.40.155(c) details the procedure for a regent to either defend against a possible suspension or lift a suspension once it has been imposed.

AS 14.40.155(d) permits the governor to delegate the conduct of the hearing to the Office of Administrative Hearings. The standard of proof to be used in the hearing for removal for "good cause" is "clear and convincing," one of the highest standards.

AS 14.40.155(e) states that the Administrative Procedures Act (AS 44.62.330-44.62.630) applies to all of the proceedings of this section.

AS 14.40.155(f) sets out that the governor must file a copy of the allegations against the regent, the findings of the governor, and a complete record of the removal proceedings with the lieutenant governor.

Because this law deals with the conduct of the board of regents during their entire term in office it must apply retroactively to ensure that past violations do not go unchecked. Section 3[3] is an applicability clause that allows AS 14.40.155 to apply to conduct occurring before, on or after the effective date of this Act.

House Bill 6:
Removing a Regent
Explanation of changes between
HB 6 (27-LS0027\A) to CS for HB 6 (EDC) (27-LS0027\D)

There are a number of changes between the "A" and "D" versions, including minor grammatical and stylistic changes, and substantive changes.

There was one major change to Section 1 of the bill. Subsection (a) paragraph (3) of the "A" version (page 2 lines 2-7) was deleted and subsection (a) paragraph (2) of the "D" version (page 1 lines 12-13) was added. The effect of this change is to show that the legislature has legislative authority over the University of Alaska.

There were a few changes to Section 2 of the bill. Subsection (e) of the "A" version (page 3 lines 7-10) was deleted, as with the addition of new subsections in the "D" version it was unnecessary. Specifically, with designation that the proceedings in this section fall under the guidelines of the Administrative Procedures Act, the language in subsection (e) was not needed.

The other major change to Section 2 of the "A" version was a reordering of the subsections to better reflect the flow of the proceedings.

FISCAL NOTE#1

STATE OF ALASKA
2011 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. CSHB 6(EDC)

Analysis

This bill authorizes the governor to remove a member of the University of Alaska Board of Regents for good cause and establishes procedures for removal. The procedures include an opportunity for a hearing. Under section 2, the hearing function could be delegated by the governor to the office of administrative hearings. Removals likely would be infrequent. OAH, therefore, does not anticipate that this bill would result in an appreciable increase in caseload and expectsto be able to provide any hearing-related services required with existing authorized personnel. The cost to OAH of performing the services would be recovered from the Office of the Governor through interagency receipts, based on the time commitment required for hearings.

MEMORANDUM January 28, 2011

SUBJECT: Interpretation of statutory phrases defining "good cause" in HB 6 (Work Order No. 27-LS0027\A)

TO: Representative Max Gruenberg
Attn: Ted Madsen

FROM: Jean M. Mischel
Legislative Counsel

You have asked for an interpretation of the phrases used in the definition of "good cause" at proposed sec. 14.40.155(g)(3) and (4) in section 2 of the above-referenced bill. Those phrases provide as follows:

> (3) conviction of a misdemeanor in any jurisdiction if the misdemeanor involves
> (A) dishonesty;
> (B) breach of trust; or
> (C) the University of Alaska;
> (4) nonfeasance in office, including
> (A) misconduct in office;
> (B) an inability to serve;
> (C) neglect of duty;
> (D) incompetence;
> (E) unjustified failure to perform the duties of the Board of Regents;

As you know, nothing in the bill defines or otherwise modifies the plain meaning of the above phrases. A court will construe undefined terms by applying the plain meaning and, if ambiguous, will look to legislative intent to determine the meaning. The committee records may be used in some cases of ambiguity. In addition, a court may rely by analogy on interpretations by agencies, courts, or the attorney general of similar phrasing used in other state statutes. A memorandum to you in 1991 describing the statutory instances of "removal for cause" is attached.

The term "nonfeasance" is defined in dictionaries and is used in at least two other instances for removal of a state officer. See, for example, AS 23.30.007 pertaining to the Workers' Compensation Appeals Commission. The term "dishonesty" is used in several instances in state law in relation to barrier crimes for licensing. See, for example,

AS 05.15.105 pertaining to gaming and AS 06.50.020(a), pertaining to financial institutions.

With the exception of the term, "unjustified" as used in (g)(4)(E), I find nothing ambiguous in the phrases identified. A court would therefore interpret the wording according to its plain meaning, including dictionary definitions and common usage. The hearing officer, if one is appointed, or the governor must make the initial determination of what may be considered "justified" until a court is asked to interpret the term and looks to legislative intent.

If you wish to further define the terms used in the bill, let me know.

MEMORANDUM February 11, 1991

SUBJECT: Statutory Criteria for Dismissal of Members of Boards and Commissions (W.O. 7LS-0703)

TO: Representative Max Gruenberg

FROM: Terri Lauterbach
Legislative Counsel

You have asked several questions in regard to dismissal of members of boards and commissions in Alaska[1]:

(I) Which statutes refer to dismissal for cause?[2] How is that term defined in Alaska Statutes or Alaska case law?

(II) What are the statutory criteria for dismissal in statutes that do not refer to dismissal for cause? How have those criteria been defined?

(III) What procedural protections, if any, are there for dismissed members?

These questions do not admit of short answers, so I'll just plunge into a discussion that I hope will give you the information you seek.[3]

[1] You also asked questions about dismissal of members of boards and commissions in other states. Those questions have been forwarded to the Legislative Research Agency.

[2] Your memo actually only referred to "just or good cause." However, since there is only one statute (AS 08.04.030) that refers to "just cause" and none that refer to "good cause," I have treated your questions as pertaining to "cause."

[3] I do not attempt in this memo to determine whether any given statutory criteria would be upheld as constitutional. As I am sure you are aware, the legislature's power to inhibit the governor's power of removal may extend only to "section 26" boards and commissions. I understand your request to be one aimed at knowing what our current statutes say with regard to this area.

I. REMOVAL FOR CAUSE

May be removed for cause

There are 22 boards and commissions listed in AS 08.01.010 that are occupational licensing boards. According to AS 08.01.020, members of these boards and commissions "serve at the pleasure of the governor." However, the last sentence of AS 08.01.020 also states that "a board may provide by regulation that three or more unexcused absences from meetings are cause for removal."

This combination of serving at the governor's pleasure and being removable for cause also shows up in the specific statutes relating to three of the boards listed in AS 08.01.010. Statutes relating to the Board of Chiropractic Examiners, the Board of Nursing Home Administrators, and the Board of Pharmacy each provide

> A member of the board may be removed from office by the governor for cause. The board may by regulation provide that unexcused absences from meetings constitute cause for removal.[4]

Another occupational licensing board, the Board of Public Accountancy, has a specific removal statute, too, even though it is also listed in AS 08.01.010 and is covered by the general language of AS 08.01.020. Its specific statute provides

> The governor shall remove any member of the board whose certificate, license or permit has been revoked or suspended. The governor may, after hearing, remove any member for neglect of duty or other just cause.[5]

The members of boards and commissions can also be removed for cause under AS 39.52 (Alaska Executive Branch Ethics Act), which provides that violation of AS 39.52 "is grounds for removal of a board or commission member for cause."[6]

Members of the board of directors of the Alaska Science and Technology Foundation may be removed for cause under AS 37.17.040(a). Under AS 41.37.050, members of the Citizens' Advisory Commission on Federal Areas in Alaska "may be removed by the appointing authority for cause after notice and hearing or after missing three consecutive meetings of the commission."[7]

May be removed only for cause

In addition to the instances cited above where the statutes give the governor the discretion to remove a board member for cause, there are four statutes that provide specifically that the governor may remove members of certain agencies only for cause.

Members of the Labor Relations Agency, the personnel board, and the Alaska Public Broadcasting Commission may only be removed for "cause" under AS 23.05.360(c), AS 39.25.060(c), and AS 44.21.258(a).

The fourth statute providing that members may "only" be removed for cause relates to the Alaska Mental Health Board. It is a little more explanatory, providing that > Members may be removed only for cause, including, but not limited to, poor attendance or lack of contribution to the board's work.[8]

Definitions of "cause"

My research has not uncovered any definitions of "cause" in Alaska Statutes or in Alaska case law relating to dismissal of members of boards and commissions other than the reference to "poor attendance" and "lack of contribution" noted in the preceding quotation concerning the Alaska Mental Health Board.

However, there is a definition of "cause" in the statute that allows the State Board of Education to dismiss the commissioner of education "for cause." It provides that, for purposes of that section, "cause" means

> (1) incompetency which is the inability or the unintentional failure to perform the duties of the commissioner;
> (2) immorality which is the commission of an act which, under the laws of the state, constitutes a crime involving moral turpitude; or
> (3) malfeasance or misfeasance in office which includes, but is not limited to, the failure of the commissioner to comply with the rules or regulations adopted by the board.[9]

[7] Although this is the only statute I found that refers to removal for cause "after notice and hearing," it is likely that all removals for cause would be construed to require notice and hearing. See discussion of procedural protections that begins on page 6.

Other definitions of "cause," "just cause," and "good cause" may be found in general authorities like Corpus Juris Secondum and Black's Law Dictionary. (Excerpts enclosed.) For instance, Black's provides that "cause," as used with reference to the removal of an officer or employee, means > a just, not arbitrary, cause; one relating to a material matter or affecting the public interest; ...conduct indicating unworthy or illegal motives or improper administration of power; ...misfeasance or nonfeasance.[10]

C.J.S.'s general definition of "cause" is that which is > sufficient or necessary to authorize a removal from office..., that is, reasons which the law and sound public policy recognize as sufficient warrant for removal and not merely a cause which the appointing power in the exercise of discretion may deem sufficient.[11]

II. REMOVAL FOR REASONS OTHER THAN "CAUSE"[12]

Misconduct, neglect of duty, etc.

Under AS 08.48.041, the governor "may" remove a member of the State Board of Registration for Architects, Engineers, and Land Surveyors for "misconduct, incompetency or neglect of duty."

Under AS 14.20.430, the governor "may" remove a member of the Professional Teaching Practices Commission for "misconduct, malfeasance or nonfeasance in office, or incapacity."

Under AS 16.05.280 and AS 41.17.045(a), respectively, the governor "may" remove a member of the Board of Fisheries or Game or the Board of Forestry for "inefficiency, neglect of duty, or misconduct in office."

[12] Some statutes cited in this section may be construed as referring to dismissal for cause for purposes of procedural protections; however, they do not use the term "cause" so they are discussed separately, as your memo requested.

Under AS 18.60.057(b) and AS 18.67.020, respectively, the governor "may" remove a member of the OSHA Review Board or the Violent Crimes Compensation Board for "inefficiency, neglect of duty or malfeasance in office."

I have found no statutes defining terms like "misconduct," "misfeasance," "malfeasance," or "nonfeasance," but I have enclosed an excerpt from C.J.S. that discusses them.[13]

Other non-"cause" reasons for removal

Under AS 44.21.200(d), the Older Alaskans Commission "may" request the governor to remove a member who has failed to attend three consecutive meetings of the commission.[14]

Under AS 42.40.230(e), the members of the board of directors of the Alaska Railroad Corporation "may" recommend to the governor that a board member be removed for intentionally violating the conflict of interests provisions of AS 42.40.230.

Two other statutes do not refer to a specific reason for removal but do require that a statement of reasons be given. These statutes are AS 37.13.070(a) (Alaska Permanent Fund) and AS 44.33.705(c)(2) (members of the Alaska Tourism Marketing Council that are appointed by the trade association).

Removal not specifically addressed

My research indicates that there are at least 28 advisory boards and commissions. None of their statutes carries a reference to removal powers or reasons for removal. A few state that the members serve at the pleasure of the governor, but none speaks to removal, per se.[15]

III. PROCEDURAL PROTECTIONS.

Statutory protections

[14] This is similar to the situation for occupational licensing boards covered by AS 08.01.010 and 08.01.020, but the Older Alaskans' statute does not use the term "cause." (Members of the Older Alaskans Commission serve "at the pleasure of the governor" under AS 44.21.200(c) just as the members of licensing boards do under AS 08.01.020.)

[15] See AS 03.17.020; AS 14.40.087; AS 14.42.030; AS 18.07.011; AS 18.08.020; AS 18.60.030; AS 23.20.025; AS 37.14.120; AS 38.06.020; AS 41.15.310; AS 41.21.510 and 41.21.625; AS 41.23.430; AS 41.37.010; AS 44.19.101, 44.19.110, 44.19.120, 44.19.155, 44.19.165, 44.19.181, 44.19.255, and 44.19.561; AS 44.29.100; AS 44.46.030; AS 44.88.174; AS 46.30.020; and AS 47.07.110.

Only two Alaska statutes relating to removal for "cause" specify any procedures that must be followed. One says the removal must be "after hearing"[16] and the other says "after notice and hearing."[17]

Three statutes that should probably be considered to be "cause" statutes, even though that term is not used,[18] also specify some procedures to follow. One requires "due notice and hearing";[19] two require "a written copy of charges," "an opportunity to be heard in person or through counsel at a public hearing...upon 10 days' notice," and allows the removed member to "confront and cross-examine witnesses."[20]

Constitutional protections

Members of boards and commissions who serve "at the pleasure of the governor" probably are not entitled to any procedural protections attendant to their removal unless the governor removes them for cause. If they are removed for cause, they are probably entitled to reasonable notice of the charges and an opportunity to be heard, even if the statute governing their agency does not so provide.

The Alaska Supreme Court, in Breeden v. City of Nome, 628 P.2d 924, held that

> A person who is employed "at the pleasure" of his employer has no "property" interest in continued employment that is protected by due process.

However, removal of persons serving "at the pleasure of the governor" is probably still governed by the same types of exceptions the courts have found applicable to the "at will" doctrine, e.g., discrimination, unfair labor practice, "whistleblower," and other violations of public policy.

Persons who are removed for cause, whether or not they had been serving at the pleasure of the appointing authority may be entitled to notice and an opportunity to be heard. This

[18] Although not using the term "cause," the statutes relating to the Boards of Fisheries and Game, the Violent Crimes Compensation Board, and the Board of Forestry all refer to removal for something akin to "cause," such as neglect of duty, misconduct in office, and malfeasance.

is so because removal for cause may tend to stigmatize them or injure their reputations; hence, they are entitled to defend themselves.[21]

IV. CONCLUSION.

Removal "for cause" is used in a number of Alaska Statutes relating to members of boards and commissions, but not uniformly and with no definition of the term. Only three statutes that use the term purport to restrict removal only to situations involving cause. Some members who are removable for cause serve at the pleasure of the governor; some do not.

Procedural protections afforded by statute are minimal, spelled out in less than a handful of statutes. Procedural protections arising from the constitution will vary, depending on the type of board or commission involved and whether or not dismissal was for cause.

MEMORANDUM April 17, 2007

SUBJECT: Removal of a University Regent (HB 237) (Work Order No. 25-LS0839\A)

TO: Representative Bob Lynn
Attn: Nancy Manly

FROM: Jean M. Mischel
Legislative Counsel

You asked whether the governor may remove a University regent. In my opinion, the answer is yes. In fact, the constitutional authority of the legislature to restrict or otherwise control the removal or suspension of a regent by the governor is the subject of considerable debate. Unlike boards and commissions controlled by art. III, sec. 26 of the constitution, nothing in art. VII, sec. 3, which establishes the Board of Regents, provides for legislative control over removal of the regents and therefore the governor's removal authority appears to be unrestricted.

Article VII, sec. 3 provides:

> The University of Alaska shall be governed by a board of regents. The regents shall be appointed by the governor, subject to confirmation by a majority of the members of the legislature in joint session . . . .

A limitation on removal of some executive officers may be interposed by law, but arguably only as to persons who hold appointment under art. III, sec. 26 of the state constitution. Article III, sec. 26 states:

> When a board or commission is at the head of a principal department or a regulatory or quasi-judicial agency, its members shall be appointed by the governor, subject to confirmation by a majority of the members of the legislature in joint session, and may be removed as provided by law . . . .

Even with the additional legislative authority over sec. 26 boards, the Alaska Supreme Court interpreted that authority very narrowly. When the Court was faced with the question of the extent of legislative authority over sec. 26 boards and commissions, the Court found that the confirmation power of the legislature provided in art. III, secs. 25 (principal department heads) and 26, is merely a limited delegation of the executive appointment power to the legislature and stated:

> As to this issue, we think the provision of Sections 25 and 26 of Article III are clear and unambiguous. Thus, we conclude that Sections 25 and 26

> mark the full reach of the delegated, or shared, appointive function to Alaska's legislative branch of government. (Bradner v. Hammond, 553 P.2d 1, 7 (Alaska 1976))

The University's status as a "body corporate" does not imply a legislative role in removal of a regent (apart from the impeachment process available to the legislature as to all civil officers). Though the University, alone in the constitution, expressly holds corporate status, the Alaska Supreme Court has said that members of other public corporations established by law serve at the pleasure of the governor. (Walker v. Alaska State Mortgage Association, 416 P.2d 245 (Alaska 1966)) The Court stated:

> The Association's three board members from the Board of Commissioners of the Alaska Housing Authority are appointed by the governor and serve at his pleasure. Therefore, the governor is empowered to remove any member of the governing board of the Association at his pleasure.

Id. at 240 (citations omitted).

I am aware of a recent informal attorney general opinion that suggests in a footnote that the legislature has some authority over removal of a regent without any judicial support for that position. The addition of legislative control over suspension of a regent is even more questionable. I do not know how a court would view the kind of intrusion proposed in HB 237 into the governor's appointment and removal authority, but perhaps the court would be persuaded by the governor's support of this concept.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

Subject: Governor's Power to Remove a University of Alaska Regent

We have been asked whether the Governor has the power to remove a University of Alaska regent without cause. In our view, the answer is no.

We acknowledge that this question has been posed to different counsel and different conclusions reached. Legislative counsel has concluded in a written opinion that regents serve at the pleasure of the governor and may be removed at any time. University of Alaska counsel has concluded in a verbal opinion that a regent may be removed only through impeachment by the legislature.

For the reasons set forth below, we do not fully agree with the conclusions of either legislative counsel or university counsel. That being said, we do agree with both legislative counsel and university counsel that impeachment is an option that may be pursued in order to remove a regent. But we disagree with university counsel that it is the only option.

The basis for our views is grounded primarily in the constitution and discussions of the framers regarding the University of Alaska during the constitutional convention. We start there.

I. Historical Background

The University of Alaska was created by the territorial legislature in 1935. ch. 49, SLA 1935. The Board of Regents was created at that time as well, with the governor empowered to appoint regents subject to confirmation by a joint session of the legislature. Id. at sec. 3. The term of a regent was eight years and a regent was to serve "until their successors are appointed and have qualified." Id. The original statute made no mention of how a regent should be removed. This law has essentially remained unchanged through today, though the number of regents was increased to eleven in 1975. See AS 14.40.120; 14.40.140; AS 14.40.150.

From the University's inception through statehood we are aware of no instance of a governor removing a regent prior to the end of a regent's term. We recognize that it is possible such could have happened, but it would take further historical research to determine this.

The constitutional convention considered the University of Alaska several times during the course of the convention. Before considering these passages, however, it is important to understand that the territory of Alaska had suffered from a fragmented executive branch with several elected officials and multiple governing boards designed to erode the power of the federally appointed governor. A fundamental goal of the convention was to establish a strong governor who was completely in control of the executive branch of government.[1]

During the consideration of the executive branch article, however, concerns were raised regarding the appropriate place for the University of Alaska within the constitutional design for the new government. These concerns were often expressed in terms of the need to insulate education from politics. Alaska Constitutional Convention Proceedings at 2043, 2246. During the discussions of the provisions that ultimately became sections 25 and 26 of Article III,[2] questions were raised concerning the extent to which these sections governed appointments to the Board of Regents. The chair of the Executive Branch Committee, Victor Rivers, and a member of that Committee, Katherine Nordale, both responded that section 26 of Article III only applied to "principal departments" and that the University of Alaska was not a principal department. Alaska Constitutional Convention Proceedings at 2034, 2037, 2246. Therefore, in their mind, the University of Alaska did not fall under section 26 of Article III.

[1] Delegate Fischer later wrote, "[Territorial] government was neither responsible nor responsive to the people. As a result, convention delegates were ready to make basic structural changes so the people could hold the governor wholly responsible for the conduct of state administration." V. Fischer, Alaska's Constitutional Convention at 106 (1975).

Other delegates, however, remained concerned that in order to insulate the University from politics it needed to be made explicit that the University was not subject to section 26 of Article III. In particular, certain delegates were concerned that if section 26 did apply to the University, that the Board of Regents' appointment of a president would be subject to approval by the governor. Accordingly, these delegates sought to amend section 26 to state that the provision did not apply to the University of Alaska. Alaska Constitutional Convention Proceedings at 2245-2258. Ultimately, these attempts failed because the members of the Executive Branch committee persuaded the convention that section 26 simply did not apply to the University of Alaska. Alaska Constitutional Convention Proceedings at 2246, 2257. Moreover, several delegates noted that a separate article was being drafted to govern the University of Alaska. Id. at 2247-48, 2250, 2255.

During the debate, some delegates expressed observations as to the status of the University. The chair of the Executive Committee, Victor Rivers, stated that the Executive Branch article would have no impact on the University:

[2] Section 25. Department Heads. The head of each principal department shall be a single executive unless otherwise provided by law. He shall be appointed by the governor, subject to confirmation by a majority of the members of the legislature in joint session, and shall serve at the pleasure of the governor, except as otherwise provided in this article with respect to the secretary of state.

Section 26. Boards and Commissions. When a board or commission is at the head of a principal department or a regulatory or quasi-judicial agency, its members shall be appointed by the governor, subject to confirmation by a majority of the members of the legislature in joint session, and may be removed as provided by law. They shall be citizens of the United States. The board or commission may appoint a principal executive officer when authorized by law, but the appointment shall be subject to the approval of the governor.

> Walsh: May I ask a question, Mr. Rivers? I think to clarify in the minds of several people here it might be well for me, that [as] one of those serving on the Board of Regents of the University of Alaska, composed of eight members, and the Board of Regents select the President of the University. The governor, as I understand it, does not have the power of the removal of the president of the University. It is a matter for the Board. Would this situation change that, Mr. Rivers?
> Rivers: No, in regard to the University, this would not affect their present setup. They are a private corporation, or rather a nonprofit corporation, and under the specific law providing for their make-up, and you would still have a board of regents appointed by the governor and confirmed by the legislature, and the powers as you now have them would be identical to what they now are as I visualize them.

Id. at 2033-34. Delegate Taylor stated that the "University is not a part of the Territorial government whatsoever; it is an independent agency." Id. at 2253. Notably, Delegate Nordale expressed the view that by explicitly putting the University in a separate article it would "make it very clear that it can never be dissolved and that it is not part of the executive branch of government." Id. at 2256.

Later in the convention, the Executive Branch committee proposed language regarding the University. Chair Rivers introduced the language as follows:

> Mr. President, you have heard the reading of this article and it was considered important that in the constitution there be included an article of this type. It gives the University, as a corporate body, the authority to receive and hold property which will be granted to them under the enabling act. It also gives them the authority for administering and disposing of that according to law. It sets up the board of regents and the governing body of the University, and I think the main point of this article has is that constitutionally the University of Alaska shall be the only state university in Alaska.

Id. at 2792. Perhaps notably, the Executive Branch committee saw fit to clear the language of the proposed article with the President of the University prior to bringing it to the floor of the convention.[3] Id.

II. Analysis

With this summary of the constitutional history of the University in mind, we think it is fair to draw the following conclusions. First, the convention intended to create a very strong governor with full appointive power. Second, despite the strong governor model, the convention nevertheless intended to insulate the University from politics, including the governor. Third, the convention intended that the University would not be subject to section 26 of Article III of the Alaska Constitution. Fourth, the convention intended to constitutionalize the existence of the University. Finally, some members of the convention believed that the University resided outside the executive branch of government in 1955 and that the constitution preserved that status.[4]

Nowhere in the convention minutes is there any discussion regarding removal of a regent.[5] But the above conclusions are sufficient to give us pause that the governor's power to remove certain executive branch appointees without cause extends to the University Board of Regents. This view is consistent with the views previously expressed by this office. In 1979, we opined:

> Under the state constitution, the University of Alaska is 'governed' by the Board of Regents. Alaska Const., art. VII, § 3. The regents are appointed by the governor, subject to confirmation by the legislature. Id. They serve for terms of eight years. Thus, while the regents are appointed by and are responsible to the governor, they do not serve at his pleasure but rather for fixed terms, and they may, therefore, be

[3] In other words, it is doubtful that President Patty, the University president at the time, would have approved this language if he thought it allowed the governor to remove a regent without cause.

[4] By observing this latter point, we do not conclude that in fact the convention succeeded in fully removing the University from the executive branch.

[5] Though at one point, Chair Rivers states that "[t]he law could provide no doubt for means of removal . . ." Id. at 2255-56. He appears to be referring to the chief executive of the University, not the regents, however.

> removed from office solely for cause. 67 C.J.S. Officers § 120 (1978); 63 Am. Jur.2d Public Officers and Employees § 189 (1972). As a result, the governor's supervision over the university is made distinctly indirect. Unless the members of the Board of Regents commit acts of malfeasance, misfeasance, or nonfeasance sufficient to constitute cause for their removal, the governor possesses no check upon them and no power to direct their activities.

1979 Inf. Op. Att'y Gen. 1 (Jan. 23; J-66-103-79). We have reiterated this view over the years[6] and see no reason to stray from it today.

For the reasons expressed above, the University is accorded unique constitutional status. We must be mindful of these reasons when considering the applicability of Alaska Supreme Court precedents. A number of these cases have been cited by other counsel, but we doubt that a court would find them controlling on the issue of whether the governor may remove a regent without cause. For instance, Walker v. Alaska State Mortgage Assoc., 416 P.2d 245 (Alaska 1966) does not involve the University of Alaska, but rather pertains to a board of a public corporation that does not have a unique constitutional status. The cases involving the University do not have issues that directly implicate the political independence of the University, one of the reasons for the University's unique constitutional status. See, e.g., University of Alaska v. Nat'l Aircraft Leasing, 536 P.2d 121 (Alaska 1975) (University is instrumentality of state for purposes of sovereign immunity); McGrath v. University of Alaska, 813 P.2d 1370 (Alaska 1991) (legislature may subject University to Administrative Procedures Act). Instead, we think a court if faced with the issue of whether the governor may remove a regent without cause would be more likely to focus on the constitutional history of the University set forth above.

Finally, legislative counsel contends that under AS 39.05.060(d) regents serve at the pleasure of the governor and may be removed at any time. This interpretation is at odds with the express intention of the constitutional convention that the University be insulated from politics. Moreover, review of the fairly lengthy legislative history of this statute demonstrates that the legislature never intended AS 39.05.060(d) to reach the [6] In 1998, an assistant attorney general stated that, "Regents are considered to be sort of in a class by themselves. We've always advised the governor that it's inadvisable to remove the regents at a change of an administration. Legal complications may ensue." 1998 Anchorage Daily News (quoting AAG James Baldwin).

Board of Regents. This statute was originally enacted as part of the State Organization Act of 1959, under which the executive branch of the new State of Alaska was formed. See ch. 64, SLA 1959. The University of Alaska is not within the scope of this Act—it was not mentioned in the Act and was left out of the organization of the executive branch accomplished by this Act. Id. When initially enacted, AS 39.05.060 only referred to boards that were explicitly mentioned in the State Organization Act of 1959. While the scope of AS 39.05.060 has both expanded and contracted over the years, it has never been broadened to include the Board of Regents.[7]

In summary, we conclude that the Governor may only remove a regent if cause is established, preferably at a hearing prior to removal. We would be happy to address in another memo the evidence necessary to establish cause, and the criteria for an appropriate hearing process.

MAB:ajh

[7] We note, however, that it may be possible for the legislature to provide for removal of a regent through enactment of a statute consistent with the constitution. Such a statute would have to preserve the University's politically independent constitutional status and probably could only provide for removal if it were for some cause that was established at a hearing prior to removal.

ALASKA STATUTES
Title 23. Labor and Workers' Compensation.
Chapter 30. Alaska Workers' Compensation Act.
Article 1. Administration.

Sec. 23.30.007 Workers' Compensation Appeals Commission.

(a) There is established in the Department of Labor and Workforce Development the Workers' Compensation Appeals Commission. The commission has jurisdiction to hear appeals from final decisions and orders of the board under this chapter. Jurisdiction of the commission is limited to administrative appeals arising under this chapter.

(b) The commission consists of five members appointed by the governor and confirmed by a majority of the members of the legislature in joint session. The members shall be appointed as follows:

(1) a member appointed as chair who meets the requirements of (c)(2) of this section;

(2) two members who meet the qualifications in (c)(1) of this section and, because of their employment or affiliations, may be classified as a representative of employees covered by this chapter;

(3) two members who meet the qualifications in (c)(1) of this section and, because of their employment or affiliations, may be classified as a representative of employers covered by this chapter.

(c) To be eligible for appointment under this section,

(1) a member must

(A) be a citizen of the United States;

(B) be a resident of the state for the five years preceding the appointment;

(C) have not been convicted of either a

(i) felony; or

(ii) misdemeanor related to workers' compensation; and

(D) have served for a total of not less than 18 months as a member of the Alaska Workers' Compensation Board;

(2) the chair must

(A) meet the criteria specified in (1) of this subsection, except for the requirement in (1)(D) of this subsection;

(B) be licensed to practice law in this state and be a member in good standing with the Alaska Bar Association; and

(C) have engaged in the active practice of law for at least five years with experience in workers' compensation in this state.

(d) An individual seeking appointment as a member or as chair shall submit an application to the chief administrative law judge appointed under AS 44.64.010. The application must show that the applicant meets requirements in (c) of this section that are applicable to the position for which the application is submitted. For each vacant position, other than the chair, the chief administrative law judge shall select not less than two eligible individuals and submit the names of those individuals to the governor. For the chair, the chief administrative law judge shall select not less than three for submission to the governor.

(e) The term of service on the commission is five years. A member may be reappointed so long as the reappointment complies with the provisions of this section, including the application and appointment process described in (d) of this section.

(f) A vacancy arising in the commission shall be filled by appointment by the governor and confirmed by a majority of the members of the legislature in joint session. Except as provided in AS 39.05.080(4), an appointee selected to fill a vacancy shall hold office for the unexpired term of the member whose vacancy is filled. A vacancy in the commission does not impair the authority of a quorum of members to exercise all the powers and perform all the duties of the commission.

(g) A member may act and receive compensation under this section from the date of appointment until confirmation or rejection by the legislature.

(h) The chair of the commission is in the exempt service under AS 39.25.110 and shall receive a monthly salary that is not less than Step A nor more than Step F of Range 27 of the salary schedule in AS 39.27.011(a) for Anchorage, Alaska.

(i) An appeal to the commission shall be heard and decided by a three-member panel of the commission. An appeal panel shall consist of the chair of the commission and two members of the commission assigned by the chair, one member classified as representing employees, and one member classified as representing employers. At other meetings to conduct commission business, the number of commission members classified as representing employees must equal the number of commission members classified as representing employers. The chair of the commission and two representative members of the commission, one classified as representing employees and one classified as representing employers, constitute a quorum.

(j) A member of the commission may be removed from office by the governor for good cause. To be removed for cause, a member of the commission shall be given a copy of the charges and afforded an opportunity to be heard in person or by counsel in the member's own defense upon not less than 10 days' notice. If the member is removed for cause, the governor shall file with the lieutenant governor a complete statement of all charges made against the member, the governor's findings on the charges, and the record of any proceedings. In this subsection, "good cause" includes

(1) misconduct in office or violation of AS 39.52;

(2) conviction of a felony;

(3) conviction of a misdemeanor related to workers' compensation;

(4) inability to serve, neglect of duty, incompetence, unjustified failure to handle the caseload assigned, or similar nonfeasance of office; and

(5) failure to continue to meet the requirements of this section relating to qualification for office.

(k) Representative members are entitled to compensation in the amount of $400 a day for each day spent in actual hearing of appeals or on authorized official business incidental to their duties, and to transportation and per diem as provided by law. Compensation shall be paid pro rata for each portion of a day spent in actual hearing of appeals or on authorized official business.

(l) A member of the commission may not hear an appeal under this chapter if

(1) a party is an employee or was, in the past seven years, an employee of the commission member or of a business that employs the commission member; this paragraph does not apply to the chair of the commission when the State of Alaska is or was the employer of a party;

(2) a party is a member or was, in the past seven years, a member of the same union or employee association as the commission member;

(3) a party has a contractual relationship with the commission member, a business that employs the commission member, or a union or employee association of which the commission member is a member;

(4) the commission member is unable to be fair, impartial, and unbiased toward the appeal participants; or

(5) participation in the appeal is a violation of AS 39.52.

(m) If the chair of the commission is unable to hear an appeal for reasons of absence or illness in excess of 10 days, or for reasons set out in (l) of this section, the chief administrative law judge appointed under AS 44.64.010 shall appoint a person who meets the qualifications of this section to serve as chair to hear the appeal as chair pro tempore. The person shall receive the compensation provided in (k) of this section. Appointment of a chair pro tempore does not require legislative confirmation.

(n) Each member of the commission, before entering upon the duties of office, shall take and subscribe to the oath prescribed for principal officers of the state. A member of the commission, during tenure, may not

(1) hold or campaign for elective office;

(2) be an officer of a political party, political committee, or group;

(3) permit the member's name to be used, or make any contributions whatsoever, in support of or in opposition to a candidate or proposition or question that appears on any ballot in the state including but not limited to that of a municipality; however, contributions may be made to a candidate for the office of President of the United States;

(4) participate in any way in an election campaign or participate in or contribute to any political party; or

(5) lobby, employ, or assist a lobbyist.

(o) The offices of the commission shall be physically separate from the offices of the division.

(p) Notwithstanding (e) of this section, the terms of the individuals initially appointed to the commission shall be as follows:

(1) the chair, five years;

(2) one member, four years;

(3) one member, three years;

MEMORANDUM March 17, 2011

SUBJECT: Separation of powers issue (HB 6; Work Order No. 27-LS0027\A)

TO: Representative Steve Thompson
Attn: Jane Pierson

FROM: Jean M. Mischel
Legislative Counsel

You have asked about the constitutionality of HB 6. The constitutional authority of the legislature to restrict or otherwise control the removal or suspension of a regent by the governor is the subject of considerable debate and raises a significant possibility of a separation of powers challenge. Unlike boards and commissions controlled by art. III, sec. 26 of the constitution, nothing in art. VII, sec. 3, which establishes the Board of Regents, provides for legislative control over removal of the regents and therefore the governor's removal authority appears to be unrestricted.

Article VII, sec. 3 provides:

> The University of Alaska shall be governed by a board of regents. The regents shall be appointed by the governor, subject to confirmation by a majority of the members of the legislature in joint session. . . .

A limitation on removal of some executive officers may be interposed by law, but arguably only as to persons who hold appointment under art. III, sec. 26 of the state constitution. Article III, sec. 26 states:

> When a board or commission is at the head of a principal department or a regulatory or quasi-judicial agency, its members shall be appointed by the governor, subject to confirmation by a majority of the members of the legislature in joint session, and may be removed as provided by law. . . .

Even with the additional legislative authority over sec. 26 boards, the Alaska Supreme Court interpreted that authority very narrowly. When the Court was faced with the question of the extent of legislative authority over sec. 26 boards and commissions, the Court found that the confirmation power of the legislature provided in art. III, secs. 25 (principal department heads) and 26, is merely a limited delegation of the executive appointment power to the legislature and stated:

> As to this issue, we think the provision of Sections 25 and 26 of Article III are clear and unambiguous. Thus, we conclude that Sections 25 and 26

> mark the full reach of the delegated, or shared, appointive function to Alaska's legislative branch of government.

Bradner v. Hammond, 553 P.2d 1, 7 (Alaska 1976).

The University's status as a "body corporate" does not imply a legislative role in removal of a regent (apart from the impeachment process available to the legislature as to all civil officers). Though the University, alone in the constitution, expressly holds corporate status, the Alaska Supreme Court has said that members of other public corporations established by law serve at the pleasure of the governor. Walker v. Alaska State Mortgage Association, 416 P.2d 245 (Alaska 1966). The Court stated:

> The Association's three board members from the Board of Commissioners of the Alaska Housing Authority are appointed by the governor and serve at his pleasure. Therefore, the governor is empowered to remove any member of the governing board of the Association at his pleasure.

Id. at 240 (citations omitted).

I am aware of an informal attorney general opinion that suggests in a footnote that the legislature currently has some authority over removal of a regent without any judicial support for that position. I do not know how a court would view the kind of intrusion proposed in this draft into the governor's appointment and removal authority, but perhaps the court would be persuaded by the governor's support of this concept.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

House Bill 6:
Removing a Regent
Sectional Analysis for CS for HB 6 ( ) (27-LS0027\T)

Section 1[1] sets forth the legislative findings and purposes of the bill. The legislature finds that the framers of the Alaskan Constitution intended to insulate the University of Alaska from politics, that the legislature delegated the power of self-governance to the UA under AS 14.40.170(b), and that the legislature has the power to create laws that pertain to the university. The purposes of the bill are to clarify that the governor may only remove a regent with good cause and that the governor must afford a regent due process in the proceedings dealing his or her removal or suspension. Finally, the legislative findings in this section affirm the political insulation of the university and the board of regents.

Section 2[2] adds a new section, AS 14.40.155, to AS 14.40 the chapter that governs the University of Alaska's Board of Regents. AS 14.40.155 is patterned after other statutory removal procedures for other boards, including the workers compensation appeals commission. See AS 23.30.007(j).

AS 14.40.155(a) sets forth the procedure for the governor to suspend a regent for good cause . The governor must provide the regent with notice and an opportunity for a hearing. Good cause is defined in subsection (g) to include a violation of the Executive Branch Ethics Act, a conviction of a felony, conviction of a misdemeanor involving a crime of dishonesty or the University of Alaska, malfeasance or nonfeasance in office, or failure to continue to meet the qualification requirements of a regent.

AS 14.40.155(b) allows the governor to remove a regent for good cause by providing the regent with an accusation and opportunity for a hearing and judicial review.

AS 14.40.155(c) details the procedure for a regent to either defend against a possible suspension or lift a suspension once it has been imposed.

AS 14.40.155(d) permits the governor to delegate the conduct of the hearing to the Office of Administrative Hearings. The standard of proof to be used in the hearing for removal for "good cause" is "clear and convincing," one of the highest standards.

AS 14.40.155(e) states that the Administrative Procedures Act (AS 44.62.330-44.62.630) applies to all of the proceedings of this section.

AS 14.40.155(f) sets out that the governor must file a copy of the allegations against the regent, the findings of the governor, and a complete record of the removal proceedings with the lieutenant governor.

Because this law deals with the conduct of the board of regents during their entire term in office it must apply retroactively to ensure that past violations do not go unchecked. Section 3[3] is an applicability clause that allows AS 14.40.155 to apply to conduct occurring before, on or after the effective date of this Act.

House Bill 6:
Removing a Regent
Explanation of changes between
HB 6 (EDC) (27-LS0027\M) to CS for HB 6 (EDC) (27-LS0027\T)

There are a few of changes between the "E" and "T" versions.

There are no changes to Section 1 of the bill.

There are a few changes to Section 2 of the bill. Changes were made to (a)(3)-(5) (page 2, lines 20-26). The change to (a)(3) (page 2, lines 20-21) reflected that mere allegations of an ethics violation under consideration by the Alaska Public Offices Commission should not be enough to suspend a regent. Instead this was changed to a determination of probable cause of a knowing ethics violation that results in a complaint being considered by the personnel board. The change to (a)(4) (page 2, lines 22-23) also reflected that mere allegations should not be enough to suspend a regent. Instead it must be a verified complaint. Paragraph (a)(5) was added to include that if a regent faces misconduct proceedings before a professional or occupational licensing body that relate to his or her ability to serve as a regent then he or she may be suspended.

The final change to Section 2 of the bill is in (g)(5) (page 3, line 31-page 4, lines 1-2 of the "T" version. This paragraph was changed to reflect that only misconduct before a professional or occupation licensing body related to a regent's ability to serve should be grounds for removal.

There are no changes to Section 3 of the bill.

CS FOR HOUSE BILL NO. 6( )

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SEVENTH LEGISLATURE - FIRST SESSION

BY

Offered:
Referred:

Sponsor(s): REPRESENTATIVES GRUENBERG, Peggy Wilson

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act authorizing the governor to remove or suspend a member of the Board of Regents of the University of Alaska for good cause; and establishing a procedure for the removal or suspension of a regent."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

LEGISLATIVE FINDINGS AND PURPOSES. (a) The legislature finds that

(1) the framers of the Constitution of the State of Alaska intended to insulate the University of Alaska and the Board of Regents from politics, but did not intend to immunize the University of Alaska and the Board of Regents from appropriate nonpolitical legislative and executive branch oversight;

(2) the legislature has the power to pass laws that pertain to the University of Alaska; and

(3) under AS 14.40.170(b)(1), the legislature has delegated to the Board of Regents the power to regulate itself, but the Board of Regents has not adopted self-governance rules that authorize the board to remove or suspend a regent in appropriate circumstances.

(b) The purposes of AS 14.40.155, added by sec. 2 of this Act, are to

(1) clarify that the governor may remove a regent only with good cause;

(2) prescribe a due process procedure under which the governor may remove a regent for good cause;

(3) prescribe a due process procedure under which, in certain circumstances, the governor may suspend a regent; and

(4) accomplish each of the above purposes in a manner that ensures the University of Alaska and the Board of Regents remain insulated from politics.

 Sec. 2. AS 14.40 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 14.40.155. Suspension and removal of regents. (a) The governor may, after providing notice and an opportunity for a hearing, suspend a member of the Board of Regents while final disposition is pending on

(1) a criminal complaint, presentment, information, or indictment involving a felony in any jurisdiction;

(2) an information or formal criminal charges of a misdemeanor described under (g)(3) of this section;

(3) a probable cause determination of a knowing ethics violation under AS 39.52 that results in a complaint under consideration by the personnel board;

(4) a verified complaint of malfeasance or nonfeasance in office described under (g)(4) of this section under consideration by the governor; or

(5) proceedings involving misconduct that is related to the regent's ability to serve as a regent under consideration by a professional or occupational licensing body.

(b) The governor may remove a member of the Board of Regents for good cause by providing to the member an accusation and an opportunity for a hearing and judicial review.

(c) Notwithstanding the procedure under AS 44.62.390, a regent who has been suspended under (a) of this section may, at any time, request a hearing to

(1) defend against the grounds for the suspension stated in the accusation; or

(2) lift the suspension.

(d) The governor may delegate the conduct of a hearing under this section to the office of administrative hearings under AS 44.64.030(b). If a hearing is requested, the hearing officer may prepare a proposed decision under AS 44.62.500(b) to

(1) remove a regent based on clear and convincing evidence of good cause for removal;

(2) not remove a regent; or

(3) continue a suspension or lift a suspension of a regent.

(e) AS 44.62.330 - 44.62.630 applies to all proceedings under this section.

(f) After a final decision by the governor that removes a regent for good cause under (b) of this section, the governor shall file with the lieutenant governor a copy of the allegations made against the former regent, the governor's findings on each of the allegations, and a complete record of the removal proceedings.

(g) In this section, "good cause" means

(1) a violation of AS 39.52 (Alaska Executive Branch Ethics Act);

(2) conviction of a felony in any jurisdiction;

(3) conviction of a misdemeanor in any jurisdiction if the misdemeanor involves

(A) dishonesty;

(B) breach of trust; or

(C) the University of Alaska;

(4) malfeasance or nonfeasance in office, including

(A) misconduct in office;

(B) an inability to serve;

(C) neglect of duty;

(D) incompetence;

(E) unjustified failure to perform the duties of the Board of Regents;

(5) misconduct related to the regent's ability to serve as a regent and resulting in the revocation or suspension of a professional or occupational license issued under state law;

(6) failure to possess the qualifications of a regent under AS 14.40.130.

* Sec. 3. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

APPLICABILITY. AS 14.40.155, added by sec. 2 of this Act, applies to all conduct and acts occurring before, on, or after the effective date of this Act.

SUBJECT: Misdemeanors (CSHB 6 ( )(Work Order No. 27-LS0027\T))

TO: Representative Max Gruenberg
Attn: Ted Madsen

FROM: Jean M. Mischel

You have asked for examples of misdemeanors in the state that may be construed to involve a breach of trust or dishonesty and for others that do not for purposes of interpreting the above-referenced bill.

A court would form its own interpretation of the phrases as used in the bill when presented with a specific set of facts. If the phrase is considered to be ambiguous the legislative history of the bill, including committee minutes, may be relied upon.

In my opinion, two examples of a misdemeanor involving a breach of trust are endangering the welfare of a vulnerable adult in the second degree, AS 11.51.210, and endangering the welfare of a child that results in physical injury to the child under AS 11.51.100.

For a misdemeanor involving dishonesty, a court would likely consider whether an element of the crime is knowledge or intent. For example, aiding the nonpayment of child support in the second degree under AS 11.51.122 requires proof that the person knows of an obligor's duty to pay child support. Another example of a misdemeanor involving dishonesty is theft in the third degree under AS 11.46.140. A third example is issuing a bad check under AS 11.46.280.

Some examples of misdemeanors that do not involve a breach of trust or dishonesty would likely involve personal use or possession of a small amount of a controlled substance. Criminal trespass in the first degree under AS 11.46.320 may not involve a breach of trust or dishonesty.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

February 28, 2011

Representative Carl Gato, chairman House Judiciary Committee

On February 22, 2011 I sent the following e-mail to you and other members of the House Judiciary Committee:

> I am stunned that the House Education Committee has advanced House Bill 6 and sent it on to the Judiciary Committee. The bill's introduction is a knee-jerk reaction to a problem several years ago that has been solved under current law. If I read the bill correctly, it allows the governor to suspend a regent for a variety of real or imagined reasons including those listed on Lines 18-28 of Page 3. Under this bill, if the governor does not like the way a regent votes on some issue, or even the way the regent combs his or her hair, the sitting governor can suspend that regent and force the regent to show why he or she should not be removed from office. That is quite a threat, and it also seems to go against the idea that a person is innocent until proven guilty. If this bill is put into law it will be possible for a governor to pack the board of regents with members of his own party or persons who share his opinions on various issues such as evolution, abortion or other that could affect how the regent might vote on issues facing the governance of the University of Alaska. In essence, this bill puts the regents in the position of serving in office at the pleasure of the governor, and thereby voids the protection afforded by AS 14.40.140. This is a bad bill, detrimental to higher education in Alaska. If it comes to you for a vote, I strongly urge you to reject it--
> -T. Neil Davis, professor emeritus and alumnus, University of Alaska Fairbanks

I now wish to thank Representative Max Gruenberg, co-sponsor of House Bill 6, for telephoning me on February 23 and 24, 2011 to discuss my objections to the bill. In these discussions Rep. Gruenberg stated that the intent of the bill was to speed up the current process for removal of a University of Alaska Regent as stated in Article 2 Section 20 of the Alaska Constitution:

> All civil officers of the State are subject to impeachment by the legislature. Impeachment shall originate in the senate and must be approved by a two-thirds vote of its members. The motion for impeachment shall list fully the basis for the proceeding. Trial on impeachment shall be conducted by the house of representatives. A supreme court justice designated by the court shall preside at the trial. Concurrence of two-thirds of the members of the house is required for a judgment of impeachment. The judgment may not extend beyond removal from office, but shall not prevent proceedings in the courts on the same or related charges.

I understand that such impeachment currently is the only way a University of Alaska regent can be removed from office because of the guarantee afforded by the Alaska Constitution Article 7, § 3. Board of Regents stating, "The University of Alaska shall be governed by a board of regents. The regents shall be appointed by the governor, subject to confirmation by a majority of the members of the legislature in joint session. The board shall, in accordance with law, formulate policy and appoint the president of the university. He shall be the executive officer of the board," and Alaska Statute § 14.40.140 which says, "Except for a student regent as specified in AS 14.40.150(b), the term of office of a regent is eight years. The term of office begins on the first Monday in February of the year in which the appointment is made. Each regent serves until a successor is appointed and qualifies."

I note that the governing board of the University of Alaska (initially called Trustees and later Regents) has been in existence for 94 years and that 145 Alaskans have served on the board. In only one instance has there been cause to initiate impeachment proceedings against a sitting regent, James C. Hayes in 2007, and that he then resigned at that point.

In view of these facts I contend that the wording of the Alaska Constitution and existing statutes have proven capable of solving all problems that have occurred during the course of almost a full century. Therefore, I further contend that there is no need for the drastic actions allowed by House Bill 6, and that such actions run counter to the intent of the framers of the Constitution of the State of Alaska to insulate the University of Alaska and the Board of Regents from inappropriate political action.

In our discussions of the matter Rep. Gruenberg stated that he believed the existing process for removal of a regent was too slow, and HB 6 would allow for rapid removal of a regent. I contend that the removal of a regent is a matter of serious nature that deserves deliberate due process spelled out by Article 2 Section 20 of the Alaska Constitution, describing the impeachment process. It should not be possible for the executive branch or the legislature to avoid such due process in seeking to remove a regent from his or her duties.

Representative Gruenberg stated to me that one objective of the proposed bill was to make certain that the full 11-member board was in existence at all times, and that the attendance of the full board was necessary for the board to conduct its duties. It is not clear to me that the proposed bill accomplishes this aim or that the attendance of the full board is necessary, since only a quorum of six is required to conduct business. In this connection I note that of the last eleven regent meetings during only six was the full board in attendance (see Board Minutes).

In the Legislative Findings and Purpose of HB 6 are the strange statements:

(2) under AS 14.40.170(b)(1), the legislature has delegated to the Board of Regents the power to regulate itself, but the Board of Regents has not adopted self-governance rules that authorize the board to remove or suspend a regent in appropriate circumstances;

(3) the legislature has the power to create procedures under which the governor may remove a regent for good cause or suspend a regent in appropriate circumstances....

Regarding the first of these statements: AS 14.40.170(b)(1) states that the Board of Regents may (not shall) "adopt reasonable rules, orders, and plans with reasonable penalties for the good government of the university and for the regulation of the Board of Regents." It likely would be unconstitutional for the regents to adopt any rules that would allow them to suspend or remove a member. Similarly, with regard to the second statement, the Alaska Constitution does not award the legislature the power to cause removal of a regent for any reason whatsoever other than by impeachment.

One final point:

During our discussion, Rep. Gruenberg verified that the passage of HB 6 would allow a governor to notify a regent of suspension, and the suspension would be effective immediately and remain in effect until the regent called for a hearing and the result of the hearing would not justify the suspension. So if the regent did not try to defend self, that would, at least temporarily, terminate the regent's service on the board. Even if without any justification whatsoever, such an act would cast doubt on the character of the regent and perhaps do irreparable damage to the regent's reputation. Just the knowledge that such an act could be committed is a threat to the aforementioned clear intent of the framers of the Constitution of Alaska to insulate the University of Alaska and the Board of Regents from politics.

Please reject this bill. And remember, there is good reason why the Constitution establishes the regent's term of office at not less than eight years—it is to insulate the regents from politics as much as possible.—Neil Davis, 375 Miller Hill Road, Fairbanks, AK 99709, 479-2732, neildavs@mosquitonet.com

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act authorizing the governor to remove or suspend a member of the Board of Regents of the University of Alaska for good cause; and establishing a procedure for the removal or suspension of a regent."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

LEGISLATIVE FINDINGS AND PURPOSES. (a) The legislature finds that

(1) the framers of the Constitution of the State of Alaska intended to insulate the University of Alaska and the Board of Regents from politics, but did not intend to immunize the University of Alaska and the Board of Regents from appropriate nonpolitical legislative and executive branch oversight;

(2) the legislature has the power to pass laws that pertain to the University of Alaska; and

(3) under AS 14.40.170(b)(1), the legislature has delegated to the Board of Regents the power to regulate itself, but the Board of Regents has not adopted self-governance rules that authorize the board to remove or suspend a regent in appropriate circumstances.

(b) The purposes of AS 14.40.155, added by sec. 2 of this Act, are to

(1) clarify that the governor may remove a regent only with good cause;

(2) prescribe a due process procedure under which the governor may remove a regent for good cause;

(3) prescribe a due process procedure under which, in certain circumstances, the governor may suspend a regent; and

(4) accomplish each of the above purposes in a manner that ensures the University of Alaska and the Board of Regents remain insulated from politics.

 Sec. 2. AS 14.40 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 14.40.155. Suspension and removal of regents. (a) The governor may, after providing notice and an opportunity for a hearing, suspend a member of the Board of Regents while final disposition is pending on

(1) a criminal complaint, presentment, information, or indictment involving a felony in any jurisdiction;

(2) an information or formal criminal charges of a misdemeanor described under (g)(3) of this section;

(3) a probable cause determination of a knowing ethics violation under AS 39.52 that results in an accusation under consideration by the personnel board;

(4) a verified complaint of malfeasance or nonfeasance in office described under (g)(4) of this section under consideration by the governor; or

(5) proceedings involving misconduct that is related to the regent's ability to serve as a regent under consideration by a professional or occupational licensing body.

(b) The governor may remove a member of the Board of Regents for good cause by providing to the member an accusation and an opportunity for a hearing and judicial review.

(c) Notwithstanding the procedure under AS 44.62.390, a regent who has been suspended under (a) of this section may, at any time, request a hearing to

(1) defend against the grounds for the suspension stated in the accusation; or

(2) lift the suspension.

(d) The governor may delegate the conduct of a hearing under this section to the office of administrative hearings under AS 44.64.030(b). If a hearing is requested, the hearing officer may prepare a proposed decision under AS 44.62.500(b) to

(1) remove a regent based on clear and convincing evidence of good cause for removal;

(2) not remove a regent; or

(3) continue a suspension or lift a suspension of a regent.

(e) AS 44.62.330 - 44.62.630 applies to all proceedings under this section.

(f) After a final decision by the governor that removes a regent for good cause under (b) of this section, the governor shall file with the lieutenant governor a copy of the allegations made against the former regent, the governor's findings on each of the allegations, and a complete record of the removal proceedings.

(g) In this section, "good cause" means

(1) a violation of AS 39.52 (Alaska Executive Branch Ethics Act) that results in a recommendation of removal under AS 39.52.410(b)(3);

(2) conviction of a felony in any jurisdiction;

(3) conviction of a misdemeanor in any jurisdiction if the misdemeanor involves

(A) dishonesty;

(B) breach of trust; or

(C) the University of Alaska;

(4) malfeasance or nonfeasance in office, including

(A) misconduct in office;

(B) an inability to serve for an extended period of time;

(C) neglect of duty;

(D) incompetence;

(E) unjustified failure to perform the duties of the Board of Regents;

(5) misconduct related to the regent's ability to serve as a regent and resulting in the revocation or suspension of a professional or occupational license issued under state law;

(6) failure to possess the qualifications of a regent under AS 14.40.130.

 Sec. 3. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

APPLICABILITY. AS 14.40.155, added by sec. 2 of this Act, applies to all conduct and acts occurring before, on, or after the effective date of this Act.

House Bill 6:
Removing a Regent
Explanation of changes between
CS for HB 6 ( ) (27-LS0027\T) to CS for HB 6 ( ) (27-LS0027\R)

There are a few of changes between the "T" and "R" versions.

There are no changes to Section 1 of the bill.

There are a few changes to Section 2 of the bill. The phrase "a compliant" (page 2, line 21 of the "T" version) was changed to "an accusation" (page 2, line 21 of the "T" version). The phrase "that results in a recommendation of removal under AS 39.52.410(b)(3)" was added to page 3, line 17 of the "T" version (now page 3, lines 17-18 of the "R" version). The last change was to add "for an extended period of time" following "an inability to serve" (page 3, line 27 of the "R" version).

There are no changes to Section 3 of the bill.

HB7 - Ban on Controlled Substances

A new synthetic cannabinoid, commonly known as K2 or Spice, has become readily available at local stores and over the internet. Some users of this chemical compound experience severe adverse reactions including hallucinations, nausea, vomiting, agitation, and panic attacks.

The synthetic cannabinoid is a combination of herbal and chemical compounds that commonly produce a reaction similar to the use of marijuana. The popularity is increasing, especially among youth, due to easy accessibility, low cost, and the difficulty of detection on drug tests.

The first introduction to K2 came to my attention through an individual's story. Within moments of inhaling K2 the young man experienced adverse reactions that included severe vomiting, loss of reality, inability to walk and talk, and violent outbursts. Without the quick reaction of those nearby there may have been tragic ending to this story. Many similar stories have surfaced in communities throughout Alaska. To date, nine states have successfully enacted laws to prohibit synthetic cannabinoids.

HB7 will classify certain synthetic cannabinoids as schedule IIA controlled substances under Alaska Statute 11.71.150(b). Schedule IIA includes materials, compounds and mixtures which contain hallucinogenic substances. It is important that we get ahead of this problem and I urge your support for the passage of this bill.

MEMORANDUM January 14, 2011

SUBJECT: Sectional Summary - HB 7 (Work Order No. 27-LS0044\D)

TO: Representative Cathy Muñoz
Attn: Kendra Kloster

FROM: Gerald P. Luckhaupt
Assistant Revisor

You have requested a sectional summary of the above-described bill. As a preliminary matter, please note that a sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill -- the bill itself is the best statement of its contents.

Section 1 of the bill amends AS 11.71.150(b), by adding certain compounds to the list of Schedule IIA controlled substances contained in that section. The compounds that are being included:

(21) (6aR,10aR)-9-(hydroxymethyl)-6, 6-dimethyl-3-(2-methyloctan-2-yl)-6a,7,10,10a-tetrahydrobenzo[c]chromen-1-ol, also known as HU-210;

(22) (6aS,10aS)-9-(hydroxymethyl)-6, 6-dimethyl-3-(2-methyloctan-2-yl)-6a,7,10,10a-tetrahydrobenzo[c]chromen-1-ol, also known as Dexanabinol or HU-211;

(23) 1-Pentyl-3-(1-naphthoyl)indole, also known as JWH-018;

(24) 1-Butyl-3-(1-naphthoyl)indole, also known as JWH-073;

(25) (2-methyl-1-propyl-1H-indol-3-yl)-1-naphthalenyl-methanone, also known as JWH-015;

(26) 1-pentyl-3-(4-chloro-1-naphthoyl)indole, also known as JWH-398;

(27) 1-pentyl-3-(2-methoxyphenylacetyl)indole, also known as JWH-250;

(28) 1-hexyl-3-(1-naphthoyl)indole, also known as JWH-019;

(29) 1-(2-(4-(morpholinyl)ethyl))-3-(1-naphthoyl)indole, also known as JWH-200;

(30) 2-[(1R,3S)-3-hydroxycyclohexyl]-5-(2-methyloctan-2-yl)phenol, also known as CP 47, 497, and homologues are commonly known, or have been identified by other states or the federal government, as forms of synthetic marijuana.

Section 2 of the bill provides an effective date.

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act classifying certain substances as schedule IIIA controlled substances; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 11.71.160(f) is amended to read:

(f) Schedule IIIA includes, unless specifically excepted or unless listed in another schedule, any material, compound, mixture, or preparation that contains any quantity of the following substances or that contains any of its salts, isomers, whether optical, position, or geometric, or salts of isomers whenever the existence of those salts, isomers, or salts of isomers is possible within the specific chemical designation:

(1) hashish;

(2) hash oil or hashish oil;

(3) tetrahydrocannabinols;

(4) parahexyl;

(5) dronabinol (synthetic) in sesame oil and encapsulated in a soft gelatin capsule in a U.S. Food and Drug Administration approved drug product; [AND]

(6) nabilone;

(7) (6aR,10aR)-9-(hydroxymethyl)-6, 6-dimethyl-3-(2-methyloctan-2-yl)-6a,7,10,10a-tetrahydrobenzo[c]chromen-1-ol, also known as HU-210;

(16) 2-[(1R,3S)-3-hydroxycyclohexyl]-5-(2-methyloctan-2-yl)phenol, also known as CP 47, 497, and its dimethyloctyl (C8) homologue; in this paragraph, "homologue" means a chemical compound in a series in which each compound differs by one or more alkyl functional groups on an alkyl side chain.

 Sec. 2. This Act takes effect immediately under AS 01.10.070(c).

Sec. 11.71.150. Schedule IIA.

(a) A substance shall be placed in schedule IIA if it is found under AS 11.71.120(c) to have a degree of danger or probable danger to a person or the public which is less than substances listed in schedule IA, but higher than substances listed in schedule IIIA.

(b) Schedule IIA includes, unless specifically excepted or unless listed in another schedule, any material, compound, mixture, or preparation which contains any quantity of the following hallucinogenic substances, or which contains any of its salts, isomers, whether optical, position, or geometric, or salts of isomers whenever the existence of these salts, isomers, or salts of isomers is possible within the specific chemical designation:

(1) 4-bromo-2, 5-dimethoxy-amphetamine, also known as 4-bromo-2, 5-dimethoxy-a-methylphenethylamine and 4-bromo-2, DMA;

(2) 2,5-dimethoxyamphetamine, also known as 2,5-dimethoxy-a-methylphenethylamine and 2,5-DMA;

(3) 4-methoxyamphetamine, also known as 4-methoxy-a-methylphenethylamine and paramethoxyamphetamine, PMA;

(4) 5-methoxy-3,4-methylenedioxy-amphetamine;

(5) 4-methyl-2,5-dimethoxy-amphetamine, also known as 4-methyl-2,5-dimethoxy-a-methylphenethylamine;

(6) 3,4-methylenedioxy amphetamine;

(7) 3,4,5-trimethoxy amphetamine;

(8) bufotenine, also known as 3-(B-dimethylaminoethyl)-5-hydroxyindole, 3-(2-dimethylaminoethyl)-5-indolol, N, N-dimethylserotonin; 5-hydroxy-N, N-dimethyltryptamine, and mappine;

(9) diethyltryptamine, also known as N, N-diethyltryptamine and DET;

(10) dimethyltryptamine, also known as DMT;

(11) ibogaine, also known as 7-ethyl-6, 6B, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13-octahydro-2-methoxy-6, 9-methano-5H-pyrido [1',2': 1, 2] azepino [5, 4-b] indole and tabernanthe iboga;

(12) lysergic acid diethylamide, also known as LSD;

(13) mescaline;

(14) n-ethyl-3-piperidyl benzilate;

(15) n-methyl-3-piperidyl benzilate;

(16) peyote;

(17) analogs of phencyclidine (PCP), including:

(A) ethylamine analog, also known by some trade or other names as follows: N-ethyl-1-phenylcyclohexylamine (1-phenylcyclohexyl)-ethylamine, N-(1-phenylcyclohexyl)ethylamine, cyclohexamine, PCE;

(B) pyrrolidine analog, also known by some trade or other names as follows: 1-(1-phenylcyclohexyl)-pyrrolidine, PCPY, PHP;

(C) thiophene analog, also known as 1-[1-(2-thienyl) cyclohexyl]piperidine and 2-thienylanalog of phencyclidine, TPCP, and TCP;

(D) 1-[1-(2-thienyl)-cyclohexyl]-pyrrolidine, also known as TCPy;

(18) psilocybine;

(19) psilocyn;

(20) 3,4-methylenedioxymethamphetamine (MDMA).

(c) Schedule IIA includes cocaine or coca leaves, and any salt, compound, derivative, mixture, isomer, ester, ether, or preparation of cocaine or coca leaves produced directly or indirectly by extraction from coca leaves, or independently by means of chemical synthesis, or by a combination of extraction and chemical synthesis, including the isomers, salts, and salts of isomers of cocaine and other derivatives of coca leaves whenever the existence of these esters, ethers, isomers or salts is possible, but does not include decocainized coca leaves or extractions of coca leaves which do not contain cocaine or ecgonine.

(d) Schedule IIA includes, unless specifically excepted or unless listed in another schedule, any material, compound, mixture, or preparation which contains any quantity of the following substances having a depressant effect on the central nervous system, including their salts, isomers, and salts of isomers whenever the existence of these salts, isomers, and salts of isomers is possible within the specific chemical designation:

(1) amobarbital;

(2) mandrix or mandrax;

(3) mecloqualone;

(4) methaqualone;

(5) pentobarbital;

(6) phencyclidine, also known as PCP;

(7) secobarbital.

(e) Schedule IIA includes, unless specifically excepted or unless listed in another schedule, any material, compound, mixture, or preparation which contains any quantity of the following substances having a stimulant effect on the nervous system:

(1) amphetamine, its salts, optical isomers, and salts of its optical isomers;

(2) methamphetamine, its salts, isomers, and salts of its isomers;

(3) methylphenidate;

(4) phenmetrazine and its salts;

(5) fenethylline;

(6) N-ethylamphetamine;

(7) 3,4-methylenedioxy-N-ethylamphetamine, also known as N-ethyl-alpha-methyl-3,4(methylenedioxy)phenethylamine, N-ethyl MDA, MDE, and MDEA;

(8) N-hydroxy-3,4-methylenedioxyamphetamine, also known as N-hydroxy-alpha-methyl-3,4-(methylenedioxy)phenethylamine, and N-hydroxy MDA;

(9) 4-methylaminorex, also known as 2-amino-4-methyl-5-phenyl-2-oxazoline;

(10) N,N-dimethylamphetamine, also known as N,N,alpha-trimethylybenzencethaneamine or N,N,alpha-trimethylphenethyline, its salts, optical isomers, and salts of optical isomers.

(f) Schedule IIA includes, unless specifically excepted or unless listed in another schedule, any material, mixture, or preparation which contains any quantity of the following substances:

(1) immediate precursor to amphetamine and methamphetamine:

phenylacetone also known as phenyl-2-propanone; P2P; benzyl methyl ketone; methyl benzyl ketone;

(2) immediate precursors to phencyclidine, also known as PCP:

(A) 1-phencylclohexylamine;

(B) 1-piperidinocyclohexanecarbonitrile, also known as PCC.

Decisions -

Annotators notes.Some of the cases cited in the notes below were decided under former AS 17.10.

Regulation of cocaine. - Word "narcotic" in common usage includes cocaine although cocaine is not a narcotic pharmacologically. State v. Erickson, 574 P.2d 1 (Alaska 1978).

The legislature specifically intended to regulate the use and possession of cocaine, regardless of its particular pharmacological status. State v. Erickson, 574 P.2d 1 (Alaska 1978).

Constitutionality of classification of cocaine as narcotic. - The classification of cocaine with narcotics under former AS 17.10 was not violative of equal protection or due process. State v. Erickson, 574 P.2d 1 (Alaska 1978).

When viewed from the overall legislative purpose of preventing the use of a drug harmful to the health and welfare of society, the classification of cocaine as a narcotic drug was not so irrational or arbitrary as to violate due process. State v. Erickson, 574 P.2d 1 (Alaska 1978).

Cocaine was not unconstitutionally classified as a narcotic drug by former AS 17.10. Johnson v. State, 577 P.2d 230 (Alaska 1978).

Sec. 11.71.120. Authority to schedule controlled substances.

(a) If, after considering the factors set out in (c) of this section, the committee decides to recommend that a substance should be added to, deleted from, or rescheduled in a schedule of controlled substances under AS 11.71.140 - 11.71.190, the governor shall introduce legislation in accordance with the recommendation of the committee.

(b) If a substance is added as a controlled substance under federal law, the governor shall introduce legislation in accordance with the federal law.

(c) In advising the governor of the need to add, delete, or reschedule a substance under AS 11.71.110(1), the committee shall assess the danger or probable danger of the substance after considering the following:

(1) the actual or probable abuse of the substance including

(A) the history and current pattern of abuse both in this state and in other states;

(B) the scope, duration, and significance of abuse;

(C) the degree of actual or probable detriment which may result from abuse of the substance;

(D) the probable physical and social impact of widespread abuse of the substance;

(2) the biomedical hazard of the substance including

(A) its pharmacology, in the effects and modifiers of the effects of the substance;

(B) its toxicology, the acute and chronic toxicity, interaction with other substances, whether controlled or not, and the degree to which it may cause psychological or physiological dependence;

(C) the risk to public health and the particular susceptibility of segments of the population;

(3) whether the substance is an immediate precursor of a substance already controlled under this chapter;

(4) the current state of scientific knowledge regarding the substance, including whether there is any acceptable means to safely use the substance under medical supervision;

(5) the relationship between the use of the substance and other criminal activity, including

(A) whether persons engaged in illicit trafficking of the substance are also engaged in other criminal activity;

(B) whether the nature and relative profitability of manufacturing or delivering the substance encourages illicit trafficking in the substance;

(C) whether the commission of other crimes is one of the effects of abuse of the substance;

(D) whether addiction to the substance relates to the commission of crimes to support the continued use of the substance.

(e) The committee has no authority over tobacco or alcoholic beverages as defined in AS 04.21.080.

Construction of former law. - For construction of former AS 17.12.040, concerning regulations and authorizing the commissioner of health and social services to promulgate list of certain drugs, see State v. Erickson, 574 P.2d 1 (Alaska 1978).

Sec. 11.71.160. Schedule IIIA.

(a) A substance shall be placed in schedule IIIA if it is found under AS 11.71.120(c) to have a degree of danger or probable danger to a person or the public less than the substances listed in schedule IIA but higher than substances listed in schedule IVA.

(b) Schedule IIIA includes, unless specifically excepted or unless listed in another schedule, any material, compound, mixture, or preparation which contains any quantity of the following substances having a stimulant effect on the central nervous system, including their salts, isomers whether optical, position, or geometric, and salts of these isomers whenever the existence of these salts, isomers, and salts of isomers is possible within the specific chemical designation:

(1) benzphetamine;

(2) chlorphentermine;

(3) clortermine;

(5) phendimetrazine;

(6) any compound, mixture, or preparation in dosage unit form containing any stimulant substance listed in schedule IIA, which compound, mixture, or preparation was listed on August 25, 1971, as an excepted compound under 21 C.F.R. Sec. 1308.32, and any other drug of the quantitative composition shown in that list for those substances, or which is the same except that it contains a lesser quantity of any controlled substance.

(c) Schedule IIIA includes, unless specifically excepted or unless listed in another schedule, any material, compound, mixture, or preparation which contains any quantity of the following substances having a depressant effect on the central nervous system:

(1) amobarbital, secobarbital, or pentobarbital or any salt of these substances, combined with one or more other active medicinal ingredients which are not listed in any other schedule;

(2) amobarbital, secobarbital, or pentobarbital or any salt of these substances, approved by the federal Food and Drug Administration for marketing only as a suppository;

(3) any substance which contains any quantity of a derivative of barbituric acid or any salt of barbituric acid;

(4) chlorhexadol;

(5) glutethimide;

(6) lysergic acid;

(7) lysergic acid amide;

(8) methyprylon;

(9) sulfondiethylmethane;

(10) sulfonethylmethane;

(11) sulfonmethane;

(12) tiletamine and zolazepam, or any of their salts.

(e) Schedule IIIA includes, unless specifically excepted or unless listed in another schedule, any material, compound, mixture, or preparation containing any of the following narcotic drugs or their salts calculated as the free anhydrous base or alkaloid, in the following quantities:

(1) not more than 1.8 grams of codeine per 100 milliliters or not more than 90 milligrams per dosage unit, with an equal or greater quantity of an isoquinoline alkaloid of opium;

(2) not more than 1.8 grams of codeine per 100 milliliters or not more than 90 milligrams per dosage unit, with one or more active, nonnarcotic ingredients in recognized therapeutic amounts;

(3) not more than 300 milligrams of dihydrocodeinone per 100 milliliters or not more than 15 milligrams per dosage unit, with a fourfold or greater quantity of an isoquinoline alkaloid of opium;

(4) not more than 300 milligrams of dihydrocodeinone per 100 milliliters or not more than 15 milligrams per dosage unit, with one or more active nonnarcotic ingredients in recognized therapeutic amounts;

(5) not more than 1.8 grams of dihydrocodeine per 100 milliliters or not more than 90 milligrams per dosage unit, with one or more active nonnarcotic ingredients in recognized therapeutic amounts;

(6) not more than 300 milligrams of ethylmorphine per 100 milliliters or not more than 15 milligrams per dosage unit, with one or more active, nonnarcotic ingredients in recognized therapeutic amounts;

(7) not more than 500 milligrams of opium per 100 milliliters or per 100 grams or not more than 25 milligrams per dosage unit, with one or more active, nonnarcotic ingredients in recognized therapeutic amounts;

(8) not more than 50 milligrams of morphine per 100 milliliters or per 100 grams, with one or more active, nonnarcotic ingredients in recognized therapeutic amounts.

(f) Schedule IIIA includes

(1) hashish;

(2) hash oil or hashish oil;

(3) tetrahydrocannabinols;

(4) parahexyl;

(5) dronabinol (synthetic) in sesame oil and encapsulated in a soft gelatin capsule in a U.S. Food and Drug Administration approved drug product; and

(6) nabilone.

BILL NO. HB007

Analysis

This bill adds several chemical forms of Synthetic cannabinoids to Schedule IIA of Alaska's prohibited substance Schedules. Currently, cannabis or Marijuana is a Schedule VIA prohibited substance. The anticipated fiscal impact is zero, however, if litigation ensues there will be addition costs in defending this litigation.

BILL NO. HB 7

Analysis

This legislation makes synthetic cannabinoids a schedule IIA controlled substance. Currently, possession of a schedule IIA is a Class C felony with a possible sentence of 0-2 years. Manufacturing or delivering a schedule IIA controlled substance is a Class B felony with a possible sentence of 0-4 years. The current average daily cost to house an inmate is $136.44. Therefore, housing an offender could cost the department anywhere from $0.0 (no time served) to $199,202.40 (for a 4-year sentence).

Department of Corrections is unable to determine the fiscal impacts of the passage of this legislation, as we cannot estimate the total number of actual violations that will occur.

FISCAL NOTE

STATE OF ALASKA
2011 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB7

Analysis

This proposed legislation would add certain synthetic cannabinoids to the schedule IIA list of controlled substances. This bill would become effective immediately upon passage.

The Alaska Scientific Crime Detection Laboratory (Crime Laboratory) provides analysis of suspected controlled substances, issues reports, and provides expert testimony for the state of Alaska. For calendar year 2010 the laboratory received 1,267 requests for controlled substances analysis. A full time position is capable of analyzing 480 requests per year. The Controlled Substances Section of the Crime Lab currently has 2.5 full time staff assigned to it.

Once controlled, it is anticipated that the Crime Laboratory will receive significant requests for analysis related to the newly controlled substances. With the large presence of internet sales, and the ability for manufacturers to rapidly change the substances present in the materials sold, any suspected of containing these newly controlled substances will require scientific analysis at the Crime Laboratory.

This new position would come at an initial cost of $126,800. This includes a starting salary with benefits of $96,000, a work station start up cost of $7,300 for equipment , $2,000 for supplies, and there will be $3,000 in travel funds required for the ongoing training and education necessary for an analyst to maintain their expertise and certifications. There is an expected $5,000 in contractual costs as well, and this position also requires an initial $3,500 to obtain licensing required for the laboratory's LIMS database. Subsequently, there is a yearly 18% maintenance fee for that license. In addition to the above considerations involved with this new position, the Crime Laboratory would be required to obtain the standards necessary to analyze these nine new chemicals and their various isomers. This would be a one-time cost of $10,000.

In addition to the ongoing salary, benefits, and necessary travel costs relative to this position, all positions utilize an ongoing $2,000 for supply needs, and there is an ongoing licensing and maintenance cost of $5,600 per year. Therefore, the initial cost for this position would be $126,800, with a subsequent ongoing cost of $106,600.

State Legislation on Synthetic Cannabinoids Pending on October 5, 2010

Synthetic Cannabinoids

Synthetic cannabinoids are chemically engineered substances, similar to THC—the active ingredient in marijuana—that, when smoked or ingested, can produce a high similar to marijuana. Initially developed for research related to treatment of pain and the effects of cannabis on the brain, these substances have recently become a popular alternative to marijuana. When sprayed onto dried herbs, the substances are marketed under names such as "Spice," "K2" or "Genie" and sold legally in local convenience stores or on the Internet.

The European Monitoring Centre for Drugs and Drug Addiction cautions that little research has been conducted on their effects on humans. As of September 2010, the American Association of Poison Control Centers documented more than 1,500 calls to poison control centers for symptoms such as racing heartbeat, nausea and elevated blood pressure following use of synthetic cannabinoid products. Only 14 such calls were received in 2009.

State Action

State lawmakers are acting quickly to curb the growing availability and use of these substances by passing laws to designate certain synthetic cannabinoids as schedule I controlled substances and outlaw their possession or distribution.

Because there are at least seven documented categories of synthetic cannabinoids, state laws identify specific types or specific chemical substances commonly found in them.

Synthetic Cannabinoids Listed in Statute

Federal Action

As of September 2010, the Federal Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) identified five "spice cannabinoids"--CP 47, 497 and homologues; HU-210; HU-211; JWH-018; and JWH-073--as drugs of concern. Except for HU-210, no synthetic cannabinoids currently are controlled under the federal Controlled Substances Act. The DEA also reports that, except for HU-210, no studies have been conducted on the effects of these drugs on humans.

State Legislation on Synthetic Cannabinoids
Pending on October 5, 2010

2010 PENDING LEGISLATION

New Jersey AB 2644
Adds the synthetic cannabinoids HU-210, JWH-018 and JWH-073 to the list of controlled substances as schedule I drugs.

New York SB 7081
Defines synthetic cannabinoid to include CP 47, 497; HU-210; HU-211; JWH-018; and JWH-073. Prohibits sale or distribution of any product containing a synthetic cannabinoid. Establishes a defense for FDA-approved over-the-counter drugs or lack of knowledge that the product contained a synthetic cannabinoid.

New York AB 10439
Adds HU-210, JWH-018, JWH-073 and the components of synthetic ecstasy 1-(3-[trifluoromethylphenyl]) piperazine (trade name: TFMPP) to the list of schedule I controlled substances.

New York AB 11216
Prohibits sale or distribution of any product containing a synthetic cannabinoid; defines the chemical compounds that constitute a synthetic cannabinoid; imposes a civil penalty of not more than $1,000 for a violation thereof; creates defenses based on over-the-counter drugs approved by the Food and Drug Administration or lack of knowledge that the product contained a synthetic cannabinoid.

Ohio SB 275
Adds JWH-018 and JWH-073 to the list of schedule I controlled substances.

Ohio HB 544
Adds synthetic cannabinoids commonly known as K2 or Spice to the list of Schedule I controlled substances; prohibits the possession of Spice; prohibits trafficking in Spice; provides that, if Spice is the drug involved in a violation of the offense of corrupting another with drugs, the penalty for the violation will be the same as if marihuana was the drug involved in the offense.

Pennsylvania HB 176
Adds CP 47, 497; HU-210; HU-211; JWH-018; and JWH-073 to the list of schedule I controlled substances.

Herbal Incensed

Synthetic Cannabinoids Detected in Herbal Incense and Smoking Blends

by Dwain C. Fuller, D-FTCB, TC-NRCC

I am a skeptic by nature. I am particularly circumspect about believing anecdotal accounts of just about anything. I've become even more jaded in light of the number of urban legends that otherwise intelligent people send to my inbox each week. Thus is my reason for waiting this long to cover the Spice/K2 issue. It was my contention that I should wait and see what happens. I figured that if one is willing to smoke some mix of herbs that one doesn't even know the identity of, a person is likely to get sick and have some bad experiences, as well as some real, or perhaps imagined, good experiences, i.e. placebo effect. However, there now appears to be reliable scientific evidence that at least some of these products contain potent cannabinoid-like compounds.

What are "K2" and "Spice"?

K2 and Spice are trade names for two different products, but what they have in common is that they are sold as "herbal incense" or "herbal smoking blends". These products have become very popular with teenagers across the nation who are using them in place of marijuana, fueled by their ease of purchase (internet and "head shops") and their legal status in most areas. The users of these and similar products are beginning to show up in emergency rooms with hallucinations, nausea, vomiting, hypersomnolence, agitation, and other adverse reactions.

The origins of Spice and K2 appear to be primarily in Europe, China and Korea, with many competing products, or "knock-offs", appearing for sale on the internet daily. A check of one website offered various K2 products: K2 Summit, K2 Blue, K2 Pink, K2 Mango, K2 Citron, and K2 Bubblegum, for sale at prices ranging from about $10 to $15 per gram. The ingredient list on the package claims that it contains a number of herbal products. However, there is growing evidence that herbs are not the only active ingredients.

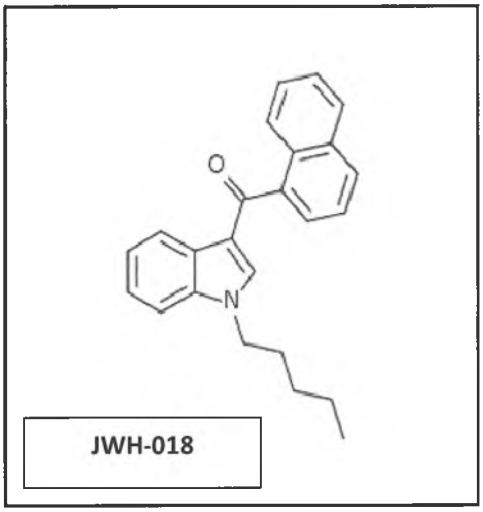
- On December 15, 2008 the German pharmaceutical company, THCPharm, announced that it had found the synthetic cannabinoid, JWH-018, in at least three versions of Spice.
- On January 19, 2009 the University of Freiburg in Germany announced that another synthetic cannabinoid known as CP 47,497 had been detected in Spice.
- In March 2009 the Drug Enforcement Administration reported in the Microgram Bulletin that Customs and Border Protection – Chicago Laboratory, had recently found the synthetic cannabinoid, HU-210, in "small but verifiable amounts" in "incense" labeled as "Spice Gold", "Spice Silver", "Spice Diamond", "Genie", and "Yucatan Fire".
- Not to be outdone, in October 2009 the Johnson County Criminalistics Laboratory in Mission, Kansas reported that it detected the presence of two synthetic cannabinoids, JWH-018 and JWH-073, in a K2 product submitted to the laboratory.

Synthetic Cannabinoids, a Primer:

This subject is too vast to cover in depth in an article such as this, so I will provide an overview of the various synthetic cannabinoids that have been implicated in these "herbal blends":

JWH-018

All of the "JWH" designated cannabinoids take their prefix initials from Clemson University organic chemist, John W. Huffman. Dr. Huffman's research interests include the synthesis of analogues and metabolites of THC, with the goal of developing new pharmaceutical products and elucidating the geometry of the CB_1 and CB_2 receptor.



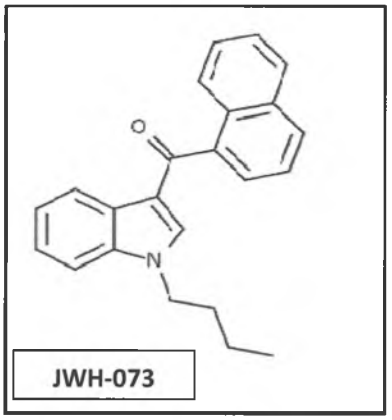
JWH-018

Dr. Huffman first synthesized JWH-018 in the mid-1990's, but notes that JWH-018 was being sold as a plant growth stimulant in China and Korea even before he published a book chapter of the synthetic scheme for this and other cannabinoid agonists.

JWH-018 has a molecular mass of 341.45 and bears the IUPAC name, Naphthalen-1-yl-(1-pentylindol-3-yl)methanone. JWH-018 acts as an agonist at both the CB_1 and CB_2 receptors with some selectivity for the CB_2, and produces marijuana-like effects of somewhat longer duration. JWH-018 is not currently scheduled in the United States.

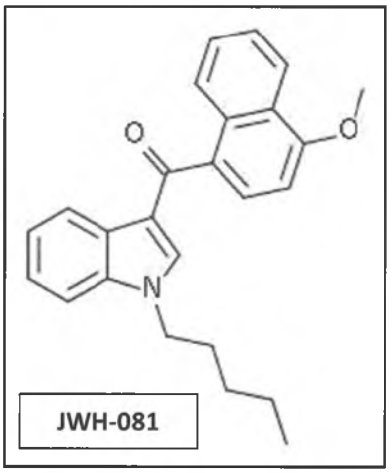
JWH-073

JWH-073 has a molecular mass of 327.42 and bears the IUPAC name, Naphthalen-1-yl-(1-butylindol-3-yl)methanone, differing by only by a methylene group in the alkyl chain on the indole portion of the molecule from JWH-018. JWH-073 is a CB_1 and CB_2 receptor agonist with approximately 5 times the affinity for the CB_2 compared to the CB_1 receptor. JWH-073 is not currently scheduled in the United States.



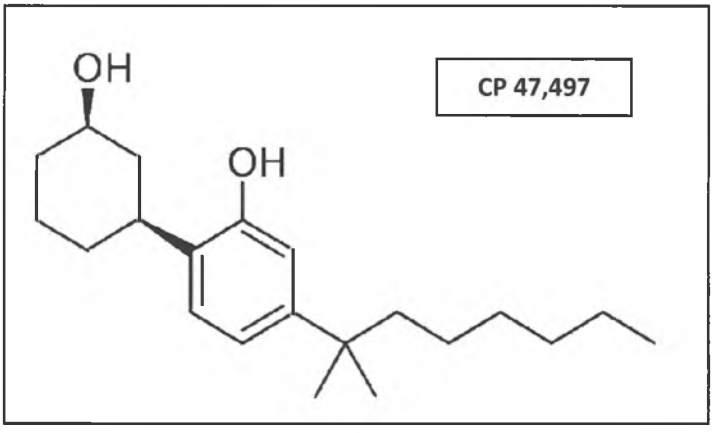
JWH-081

JWH-081 has a molecular mass of 371.47 and bears the IUPAC name, 4-methoxynaphthalen-1-yl-(1-pentylindol-3-yl)methanone, differing from JWH-018 by a methoxy group in the 4 position of the naphthalene portion of the molecule. JWH-081 is a CB_1 and CB_2 receptor agonist with selectivity for the CB_1 receptor approximately 10 times that of the CB_2 receptor. There is speculation that JWH-081 is replacing JWH-018 in herbal blends that are being marketed in states where the latter is being banned. JWH-081 is not currently scheduled in the United States.



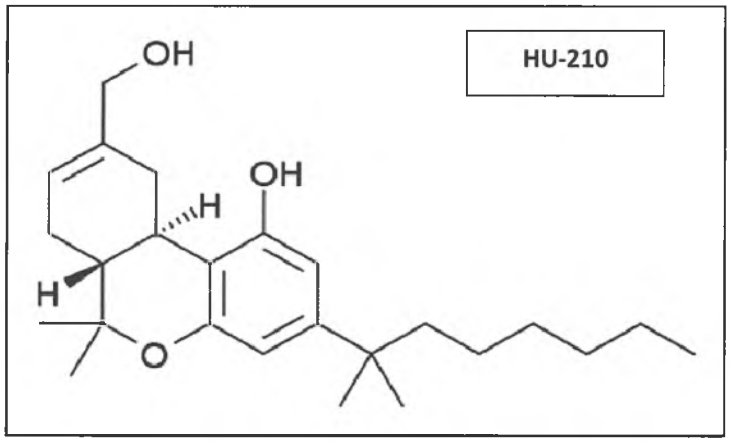
CP 47,497

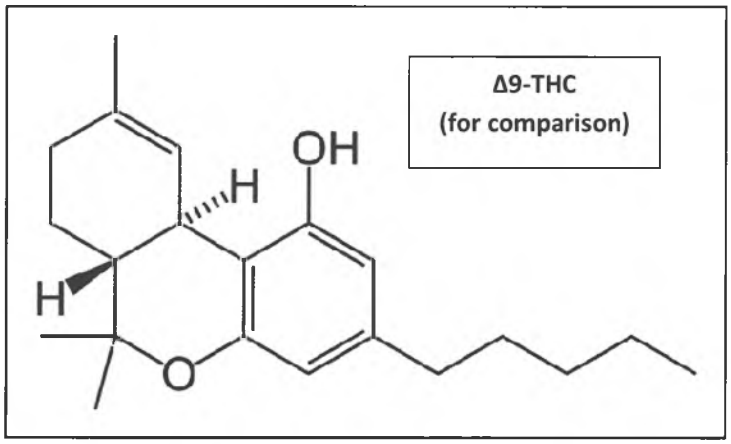
CP 47,497 has a molecular mass of 318.49 and bears the IUPAC name, 2-[(1R,3S)-3-hydroxycyclohexyl]- 5-(2-methyloctan-2-yl)phenol. CP 47,497 was developed by Pfizer in the 1980's and is reported to be a potent CB_1 agonist. CP 47,497 is not currently scheduled in the United States.



HU-210

HU-210 has a molecular mass of 386.57 and bears the IUPAC name, (6a*R*,10a*R*)- 9-(Hydroxymethyl)- 6,6-dimethyl- 3-(2-methyloctan-2-yl)- 6a,7,10,10a-tetrahydrobenzo [c]chromen-1-ol. Noteworthy is the extreme similarity to Δ9-THC, differing only in the alkyl group, an additional hydroxyl group, and the position of the double bond, which is analogous to Δ8-THC. HU-210 was first synthesized by a group at Hebrew University (thus the "HU" designation) led by Professor Raphael Mechoulam. In mice HU-210 decreased overall activity, produced analgesia, decreased body temperature, and produced catalepsy. In in-vitro studies, HU-210 bound both the CB_1 and CB_2 receptors. HU-210 is reported to be 100 – 800 times more potent than THC with an extended duration of action. HU-210 is a schedule I controlled substance in the United States.





Legality

For the most part, K2, Spice and related products are not illegal in the United States based on their stated ingredients. Their continued legal status will depend, in part, on whether they are found to universally contain synthetic cannabinoids, whether those substances are controlled, as is HU-210, and whether any of the other included cannabinoids will be deemed to fall under the Federal Analog Act, which is a rather confusing document in its own right.

Summary

The use of clandestine synthetic cannabinoids in the guise of herbal preparations appears to be an increasing problem, especially among teens. Only time will tell if the trend continues. If it does, laboratories will need to gain access to standards for these compounds and to develop assays to detect these substances, which in some incidences are many times more potent than Δ9-THC.

Army punishes 36 for using synthetic pot

SPICE AND K2: U.S. Army Alaska banned head shop product in August.

The Associated Press

(12/21/10 11:33:48)

The U.S. Army Alaska says it has punished 36 soldiers for the use of synthetic marijuana since it banned the substance.

Seven soldiers were tried at courts-martial, and 29 received nonjudicial punishments, the Fairbanks Daily News-Miner reported.

Synthetic marijuana is known as Spice or K2. It's a blend of spices and herbs sprayed with a compound similar to the psychoactive ingredient in marijuana. It's commonly sold in head shops.

Some users think the substance can't be detected in drugs tests. But the Army says its urine tests can now find the chemicals used in Spice.

In March, a 25-year-old Fort Richardson soldier just back from Iraq was convicted of driving under the influence of Spice. He was arrested after driving his Chevrolet Avalanche over three raised medians, into a concrete wall and down a sidewalk with flat tires and a broken axle.

The U.S. Army Alaska banned Spice in August.

It had seen an increase in users with high blood pressure and heart rates admitted to hospitals at Fort Richardson in Anchorage and Fort Wainwright in Fairbanks.

The soldiers have had life-threatening reactions in some cases, the commander of U.S. Army Alaska, Brig. Gen. Raymond Palumbo, wrote in a commentary published in the Fort Richardson and Fort Wainwright newspapers.

"We have no idea what the long-term effects are since the chemicals vary and have not been fully tested," Palumbo wrote. "But we do know that in the short term, bad things happen when people use Spice."

This month, the Anchorage Assembly voted unanimously to make the chemicals illegal in the city as of Jan. 6. It will be a misdemeanor to sell, make, have or use products containing cannabinoids, which are versions of the active ingredients in marijuana. The products are found in convenience stores and tobacco shops in parts of the country where they're not illegal.

In October, state Sen. Kevin Meyer, R-Anchorage, proposed a bill to outlaw Spice after state troopers arrested a Fairbanks man who used the substance, broke into a house, stripped naked and slept in the homeowners' bed. He told troopers God had told him to do so.

The U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency has started a process to outlaw five chemicals commonly used in synthetic marijuana.

Assembly outlaws chemical known as 'synthetic marijuana'

By ROSEMARY SHINOHARA

A street chemical that authorities say can cause severe reactions will be illegal in Anchorage starting in early January.

The Anchorage Assembly on Tuesday voted unanimously to ban the sale, possession or use of products containing synthetic versions of cannabinoids. The products go by a variety of names such as K2, Spice and Spike, and are found in convenience stores and tobacco shops in parts of the country where they're not illegal.

Cannabinoids, natural and synthetic, are versions of the active ingredients in marijuana.

"These products pose serious and significant health risks up to and including death, and they offer nothing positive to anyone ingesting it," said Assembly member Paul Honeman, a former police officer. Assembly members Honeman, Dick Traini and Mike Gutierrez and Mayor Dan Sullivan sponsored the new city law.

State Sen. Kevin Meyer, R-Anchorage, has pre-filed a legislative bill for consideration next year that would criminalize such products on a statewide basis.

In Anchorage, it will be a misdemeanor to sell, make, have or use products containing cannabinoids starting on Jan. 6.

The Anchorage School District made public its fears about use of the synthetic chemical last April, and said some Anchorage teens have been hospitalized. In October, school district spokeswoman Heidi Embley said regular marijuana is still much more prevalent, and that the district knew of probably only a handful of synthetic cannabinoid cases.

CBJ readying to outlaw synthetic cannabis

CBJ readying to outlaw synthetic cannabis
Substance is banned in as many as 15 states, city attorney says

By Sarah Day | JUNEAU EMPIRE

The City and Borough of Juneau may soon preempt the state in making synthetic marijuana illegal. A draft ordinance could be ready by the next Borough Assembly meeting.

City Attorney John Hartle gave an update Monday on research he'd done on the legal aspect of banning the substances, per the request of Assemblyman Merrill Sanford.

Synthetic marijuana is currently banned in 13 to 15 states, Sanford said. According to an article in the Boston Globe in late December, the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration is looking at banning five of the chemicals used in synthetic marijuana — often called K2 or Spice. The drug is currently legal on a national basis, and can be purchased from smoke shops, convenience and grocery stores.

"There's been a number of cases reported at the hospital and some cases reported through the Juneau Police Department about the use and hazards of using the Spice drug," Sanford said. "Of course, some people can use it like other drugs and get away with it without having ill effects. Some people have been in the hospital for a week or more recovering from the use."

Sanford said synthetic marijuana is not regulated and the quantity of the components varies.

The City of Anchorage enacted an ordinance last month making use, possession or sale of synthetic marijuana illegal.

Hartle recommended drafting an ordinance based on Anchorage's. Hartle said typically this is the domain of state and federal governments. Bills criminalizing the substance are going before state lawmakers, Hartle said. "If those are adopted, those will take maybe nine months to take effect."

Hartle recommended the Assembly include an automatic repeal once a state law similar to the city ordinance goes into effect.

Sanford agreed. "I don't think we should lose any opportunities at all to get this stuff off the streets as much as possible," he said.

Juneau's police department hasn't yet had a chance to comment on the proposal.

Frightening new drug becoming concern in athletics

Saturday, May 1, 2010

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The company that does drug testing for the NFL, NCAA and more than 100 U.S. schools is coming up with a way to detect a troubling new synthetic substance that mimics the effects of marijuana and is so far legal in 49 states.

The lab-made drug known as K2, King Krypto and Spice, among other names, is well known in Europe and authorities say it's been banned in countries including Germany, Russia, Sweden and England.

It began showing up in the United States only about six months ago, federal authorities say, and Kansas outlawed it in March. A ban at the federal level could take months, if not years.

The NCAA declined to comment on the drug, but the agency it pays to conduct drug testing is already working on a test to detect K2 use after hearing from a number of schools concerned about it.

By this fall, the National Center for Drug Free Sport Inc. hopes to have a test ready to go for college athletes, many of whom may be especially tempted by the drug.

"What you see with college kids is they're young and they think they're invincible," said Barbara Carreno, a spokeswoman for the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency. "They don't have a sense of their own mortality yet. And with this, they're not going to get thrown in jail. It's got a lot of appeal."

The NCAA bans a broad swath of substances, including marijuana, and anything "chemically related" to those substances whether they are performance enhancers or recreational drugs.

Drug Free Sport contracts with the NFL, NCAA, several athletic conferences and schools to administer more than 20,000 drug tests annually. Athletes are tested at NCAA championships and randomly throughout the academic year, and Drug Free Sport tests athletes who fall under suspicion by coaches or trainers.

"We started receiving phone calls about K2 after the first of the year from a few schools," said Frank Uryasz, president of the Kansas City-based company. "They were concerned that they were hearing athletes talk about K2."

Uryasz is confident K2 will eventually be banned in college athletics and Carreno is equally certain states will outlaw it.

But so far, Kansas lawmakers are alone in taking action.

"We found out about it in October," said Jeremy Morris, a senior forensics scientist at the Johnson County, Kan., criminal investigation laboratory. "And by March, the governor signs the bill and we have it controlled. Kids were getting sick, going to the hospital, and we couldn't stop it. But now we can."

Officials interviewed for this story were not aware of any deaths resulting from the use of K2. But many expressed concern about the drug's effects.

"It's rather frightening," said Dr. Anthony Scalzo, director of the Missouri Regional Poison Control Center in St. Louis and a consultant in cases of suspected K2 use around the country.

"We've had people come in with dreadful symptoms. They're agitated. Their heart's racing. Their blood pressure is up," Scalzo said. "They feel terrible. Some are even paranoid and having hallucinations. And the tests come back negative, even for marijuana. So doctors wind up scratching their heads and wondering what's going on here.

"I've also had patients say, 'Hey, Doc, I know you're trying to do your best on this, but I had some K2 and let me tell you, I felt perfectly fine.'"

Like the NCAA, the Big Ten Conference declined to comment when asked about the new drug. Ed Stewart, an assistant commissioner of the Big 12, said he had not heard of it.

But calls and e-mails about K2 have begun coming into Drug Free Sport's Resource and Exchange Center, a service that answers questions from anonymous athletes, trainers, or anyone connected with college sports.

"They were all anonymous, so we don't know where they came from or who they came from, or if they were using it or just trying to learn more about it," said Dan Regan, a staff member at Drug Free Sport. "But there have been inquiries."

K2, in whatever form, is available for roughly the same price as marijuana and it can be purchased over the counter. Steve Vogt can hardly keep the stuff in stock at Weedz, a shop he owns near the Las Vegas Strip.

"You can make $7,000 a day if you've got a busy shop," Vogt said in a telephone interview. "I don't think I want to say exactly how much. But I'm going through a lot. All I do is keep buying more. More and more people are hearing about it. More and more people are buying it."

The DEA said the drug is made primarily abroad, in Europe and China, and Scalzo said K2 was developed in laboratory experiments in the mid-90s as scientists sought ways to restore the appetite of emaciated chemotherapy patients.

"I think we can make a pretty good guess that somebody was doing some research on synthetic cannabinoids and came across this paper and realized that was something that could be a pretty good drug," said Morris, the Kansas forensics expert.

A perfected test would be cheered by the DEA.

"God bless them and good luck," said Carreno, the agency spokeswoman. "It's not difficult to make a test, but there are so many different chemicals to test for to be comprehensive. You might be testing for HU-210 and your athletes are using JWH-018. Or JWH-173. There's a number of these chemicals and you have to test for all of them to know that you're catching them all."

Testimony for HB7

I would have to start by saying that I never thought I would have had a bad trip on synthetic herb, most times people have bad trips from mushrooms or acid but that herb I had was unlike anything I'd ever heard of. I had started smoking spice in February of this year and smoked on weekends. The appealing side of this herb was that it gave a marijuana like high for about 3 hours with just a couple of hits and the best part being that you didn't have to worry about drug tests because it passed for friends that I knew in the military so passing standard tests was not a problem.

Now another plus to this herb was that unlike normal weed, this herb is not supposed to produce any paranoia, and there was no sign of being high at all, such as no red eye, no half open eyes and you were able to basically be a functional stoner, you could be in public and not look or smell high in anyway. This of course was very appealing to me and many of my friends who also couldn't smoke weed because of drug tests at their jobs.

The brand of spice I had been smoking for about 6 months was called red dawn, spark 20. The herb I smoked the night of my incident was called spike, max. I only had 2 hits and less than 2 minutes later I was losing my perception of what was real in every way, it turned everything into a fuzzy cartoon like picture and I lost control of my legs that I couldn't walk at all. I couldn't talk. I could hear what I thought and what I wanted to say, but all I was spitting out was gibberish. This went on for what felt like many hours. I can remember thinking to myself that I wasn't actually going come out of this craziness and this might be how I end up dying! I remember telling my brother to call 911 and remember going into the ambulance and ending up in the hospital for a day. The doctors haven't had an incident with synthetic herb until that night and I had to basically be flushed out for 10 hours.

I know many people are still going to want to try spice but the fact it's just a bunch of chemicals sprayed on tobacco and nobody knows what the long term affects of this herb are and the scary thing is that this stuff is so easy to purchase. The price has dropped here in town from $53 a gram down to $30 a gram, which is just a bit more than the going rate for actual weed.

I would have thought this herb was completely harmless but the fact that a regular smoker such as myself could even have a bad experience as bad as mine was a huge eye opener to just how bad this stuff really is. The fact that it's very easy to get in town and that it only takes a little bit to get to a mind altering high is spooky. I know a large number of kids in town have had a substance abuse problem and this drug is dangerous because of the fact you can have an herb that twists reality in such a way that you can't tell what's real and what's a hallucination. I see this problem getting worse in the near future because it's a new drug that is easy to obtain and has a weed like high and at the same time has dangerous side effects.

Representative Cathy Munoz
State Capitol Room 403
Juneau AK 99801

Dear Representative Munoz:

As the Chief of Police for the Fairbanks Police Department, I would like to extend my support of House Bill No. 7 "An Act classifying certain synthetic cannabinoids as schedule IIA controlled substances."

According to the U.S. Department of Justice Drug Enforcement Administration, these substances have no known therapeutic use and are known to cause a variety of effects including seizures, hallucinations, psychotic episodes, and non-responsiveness. In addition the Alaska Information Analysis Center (AKIAC) has reported in studies that subjects have reported having difficulties with balance, slurred speech, and being light headed.

These cannabinoids present a significant threat to the safety of Alaska's citizens as long as they remain unclassified. Without this new legislation a person who is under the influence of synthetic cannabinoids while operating a motor vehicle is not in violation of the law. This presents a clear danger to the citizens of Alaska, as someone could potentially be under the influence of a synthetic cannabinoid while driving and experience hallucinations, seizures, or a psychotic episode. This is not a hypothetical situation and the Fairbanks Police Department has already investigated a motor vehicle accident where the driver of the vehicle was having seizures as a result of consuming synthetic cannabinoids.

By classifying synthetic cannabinoids as a schedule II controlled substance, the act of operating a motor vehicle under the influence of a synthetic cannabinoid would become an illegal act. This bill would therefore have a direct impact on the safety of the citizens of the State of Alaska.

RE: Synthetic Cannabinoids

To Whom it May Concern,

The purpose of this correspondence is to support House Bill 7 that would list certain synthetic cannabinoids found in "K2" or "Spice" as Scheduled controlled substances which will provide law enforcement will have the necessary authority to prosecute the sell and possession of these substances. These drugs are currently being sold in several local venders which sends the social message that they are not harmful and social acceptable; thereby, increasing the risk for youth consumption and related consequences.

K2/Spice products are a mixture of herbal/spice plant products sprayed with potent psychotropic drugs, often contaminated with unidentified toxic substances which is marketed under variety of names including K2, Spice, Pep Spice, Spice Silver, Spice Gold, Spice Diamond, Smoke, Sence, Skunk, Yucatan Fire, Genie & Zohai and sold in variety of colors/flavors-usually sold in foil packaging

The growing popularity of these drugs is causing increasing alarm among law enforcement officials, lawmakers, and health care professionals across America. "Spice" has been banned by some U.S. domestic and overseas military commands as well as in Germany and other European countries because substances have been identified in the product to have the presence of chemicals with tetrahydrocannabinol (THC)-like effects.

The danger in smoking "Spice" is that the product is unregulated and not manufactured in a controlled environment. Smoking this product could be very harmful because the substance could also include unknown contaminants. Therefore, there is no way to accurately determine what the potential harmful effects could be. [1] Medical officials concur that smoking "Spice" can cause adverse effects to one's health. Hospitals have reported incidents of people, mostly teenagers, visiting emergency rooms for: heart palpitations, respiratory issues, panic attacks, hallucinations, delusions, and, one case where a teen lapsed into a coma.[2]

The Mat-Su Substance Abuse Prevention Coalition seeks to reduce substance abuse among youth by advocating for and implanting evidence-based environmental strategies. These drugs are currently sold at local shops which increases access to the drug and sends the social message to young people that they are acceptable and not harmful.

I have attached legislation adopted by the state of Missouri which contains a list of the compounds used to create these drug which can be used by the Senate as a template to draft a similar bill/ordinance.

The Mat-Su Substance Abuse Prevention Coalition appreciates your time and consideration of this issue. If you would like any additional information, please contact the project coordinator, undersigned. Thank you for your time.

Dear Representatives Munoz and Kerttula and Senator Egan:

I would like express my support and encourage you to pass HB 7 and SB 17 banning synthetic marijuana and the chemical substances that lace these "Herbal Incense". These substances should not be sold to anyone for any reason. The sale of such material should be designated a criminal act with penalties severe enough to discourage their sale and distribution.

As an employer with strict drug use policies the legal sale of synthetic narcotics creates untold liability. I think it is safe to say that if my fully loaded boom truck is in an accident with your loved ones and the driver has been enjoying "Herbal Incense" prior to the accident you won't be satisfied with a defense that the product was sold over the counter by a local business and is legal. Dead is dead. Legalizing these materials creates a liability nightmare for employers, school sports programs and endangers the public.

Alaska has more than its share of substance abuse problems so lets join with other states that have already passed legislation of this particular poison from being so readily available on store shelves.

Honorable Representatives Munoz and Kerttula, and Senator Egan:

Please support the above bills and outlaw synthetic cannabis products (Spice, K2, etc.).

- This family of drugs is intended to produce a high – thus users are impaired in any activities they may undertake (e.g. driving)
- These products appear to be falsely labeled and do not contain herbal plants, but rather cannabinoid compounds related to THC (active ingredient in pot); i.e., they lie

It would appear these products are a thinly veiled effort to bypass anti-marijuana rules to sell pot by-any-other-name. Whether it is pot or other, the stated intent is to produce a drugged high. That alone is sufficient to merit regulation as a controlled substance. At a minimum it should be so regulated – at best it would be made illegal. It's market is based on wriggling around anti-drug law. Let's close the door on the deceptive marketing of pot by-any-other-name. It is a drug (or group of drugs) being made available to the public essentially as an unregulated nutraceutical. This is a sham and should be ended.

Respectfully,

Frank Bergstrom

To whom it may concern,

I would like to voice my opinion in favor of banning synthetic marijuana in Alaska. It's a very dangerous drug and it doesn't belong in our state.

I have seen what smoking this does to a person and it was a very scary experience. Vomiting, very intense hallucinations, and high heart rate just to name a few symptoms. I believe if I wasn't around during this episode this person very well could have died. I think it's just a matter of time before it does take someones life.

I hope Alaska follows in many other states footsteps and bans this substance.

To Representives Munoz and Kerttula and Senator Egan

I would like to voice my support for the passage of HB 7 and SB 17 banning synthetic marijuana and the chemical substances that these "Herbal Incense" are laced with.

I feel that for this product to be sold off the shelf by local businesses to anyone is a criminal act and the penalities should be severe enough to discourage the sale and distribution of this meth like product.

The target market for synthetic pot, in my opinion, is typically anyone that is trying to avoid drug use detection by their employers, (including the military), as well as students participating in school sports at districts that have a drug testing program in place.

While people over 18 should know better than to smoke this substance, many do not understand the consequences of inhaling the unregulated chemicals sprayed on these herbs. I fear that the drug is going to cause irreparable harm or death to someone, and sadly that someone will likely be under the age of 18 to get the public's attention and to shed the light on the potential harm that this product can cause. However, passage of a law to criminalize the sale and possession can help circumvent that concern.

The Federal Government regulates the importation of toys painted with lead from China, sometimes not all that well quite honestly. Alaska should join the ranks of several other states that have already passed legislation of this particular poison from being so readily available on store shelves.

We don't need to make it easy for people to gain access to this drug.

Thank you,

Scott Spickler

Subject: Info on SPice Incidents

SYMPTOMS

- Dangerously high BP (200+ / 100+)
- Tachycardia – 2 known incidents where heart stopped altogether, both died.
- Hallucinations
- Delusions
- Super-Human Strength (Polce and EMT safety risk)
- Unconsciousness
- Memory Loss (sustained)

For statistics, this would be a rough estimate, but combining information we have from APD, medics and EMTs, AFD, the schools, department of corrections, probations, youth organizations, treatment professionals, and the courts – several hundred incidents since April 2010. The rate of usage is, of course much higher as the police and EMTs don't usually get called unless something bad happened.

By incident, I mean a person who used it (either an admission, or the drug was found on the person and symptoms were consistent with Spice usage) and they had some kind of negative effect (loss of consciousness, hospitalized for high blood pressure, crashed a vehicle, irrational behavior, super-human strength used to assault officers or medics, memory loss, death, homicide, etc) I also included reports from department of corrections, school resource officers, felony probation officers and parents who report having found the substance in the possession of inmates/kids or where use was admitted.

The estimate of several hundred is also consistent with other states. This drug is everywhere at the same time, it is unlike meth where it was first in Hawaii and gradually moved to the west coast and took about 10 years to reach the east coast; Spice is in wide use in every state.

Examples in Anchorage include:

- High school student hospitalized overnight after loss of consciousness and uncontrollable high BP (confirmed no other drugs onboard)
- Traffic fatality – packet of spice found in center console of suspect vehicle who caused the crash
- High school student hallucinating – black rabbits hoping out of the ground wearing heads of dead people trying to kill him
- Delusion of death, pleading with AFD medics not to let him die. He was fine except for the drug usage
- Hallucination of 3 ghosts trying to kill user (DUI defendant)
- Numerous incidents where the user lost consciousness for anywhere from 15 minutes – 5 hours.
- One death in anchorage where the user ingested Spice just prior to him losing consciousness (awaiting blood confirmation)
- Suspected death Whittier
- User grabbed officer's gun, lifting officer up off ground. Officers broke wooden night stick oer user's head, tazed user twice, each time user reengaged and went for officer's weapons, eventually choked user unconscious.
- Ft Wainwright – Military soldier exhibiting symptoms in lock-down 30 hours after smoking spice/K2

Several other shocking incidents, each of which posed a danger to the community and the officers responding

National Incidents include:

- Approx 1800 spice/K2 calls to poison control in 2010 (increase of nearly 600% over the previous year. Similar increases were seen for ER admissions in about 40 states, but we don't have a reliable number nationally)
- Death in Montana 16 year old student – no other drugs detected; high levels of JWH-018 detected
- Suicide by 17 year old in Iowa within 5 minutes of ingesting Spice/K2
- Washington State Patrol – user unable to talk, stand or function even 16 hours after ingestion
- Most common age group of users is 14-27, across every ethnicity; not linked to any one ethnicity or sex.

Re: House Bill 7 and Senate Bill 17 - Synthetic Cannabinoids

Dear Representatives:

The Municipality of Anchorage supports the bills currently before the legislature. As I indicated last Friday before your Committee, the primary reasons to treat synthetic cannabinoids more serious than their organic equivalents is because the potency of the synthetics has been found to be up to 800 times greater than the organic, and the potency from sample to sample varies widely. We have evidence that this high potency induces hallucinogenic reactions and unpredictable behaviors that are far more dangerous to the user, and those who may come into contact with them, than marijuana. The variations in the strength of any one dose can cause users to get a mild reaction in one instance and fall into unconsciousness in another instance. We have had one death in Anchorage that can be directly attributed to the use of synthetic cannabinoids. The Municipality believes felony prosecution for the manufacture, production, distribution, and sale of synthetics is a necessary tool that should be available to law enforcement to discourage the use of these drugs.

The Municipality supports providing the State Crime Lab with necessary resources to test for these drugs. As of a couple of months ago, we were aware of only two labs nationally that could test for these products in blood or urine. One lab could test urine samples and the other could test blood samples. In order to successfully prosecute people in the chain of production and consumption, we need the capability of testing both seized products and the bodily fluids of users. If properly resourced, having these tests performed locally and having local technicians available to testify, may save both money and time over using out-of-state labs.

Please find included in our email the Powerpoint presentation our Traffic Safety Resource Prosecutor uses. We have been making these presentations to the local military, business groups, and governmental agencies. We look forward to providing additional testimony on the bills in the coming weeks. If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Memorandum

TO: Representative Cathy Muñoz
FROM: Chuck Burnham, Legislative Analyst
DATE: February 8, 2011
RE: Comparing States' Laws on Synthetic Cannabinoids to Selected Alaska Drug Laws
LRS Report 11.159

You asked us for information on states' laws on synthetic cannabinoids. Specifically, you asked for an account of where such substances appear on states' schedules of controlled substances and the crime classifications and penalties for possessing those substances. You also asked us to compare those other states' penalties for such crimes to those indicated for possession of substances in Alaska's controlled substance schedules IIA and IIIA.

We identified 11 states with laws prohibiting the possession of synthetic cannabinoids.[1] Classifications and penalties for a first criminal offense of possession in these states range from a Class B misdemeanor in Kentucky, which carries a maximum term of imprisonment of 90 days and a $250 fine, to an unclassified felony in Georgia, for which an offender is subject to a prison sentence of 2-15 years. In addition to the 11 states that have synthetic cannabinoid prohibitions in place, at least 21 states, including Alaska, are currently considering similar legislation.

In Alaska, as you know, controlled substances are placed on a given level within the schedule of controlled substances based on the degree of danger or probable danger a given drug poses to a person or the public. Those schedules range from "IA," containing the most dangerous substances, to "VIA," which are perceived to be the least dangerous drugs. Possession of a Schedule IIA controlled substance in Alaska constitutes the crime of "misconduct involving a controlled substance in the fourth degree." That offense is a Class C felony punishable by a maximum of 5 years in prison and a $50,000 fine. Please note, however, that the presumptive sentencing guideline in Alaska is far less severe, and a suspended sentence is possible for a first offense. Possession of a Schedule IIIA controlled substance in Alaska is a Class A misdemeanor for which an offender can receive a maximum of 1 year in prison and a $10,000 fine.[2]

The attached table summarizes crime classifications and penalties for possessing synthetic cannabinoids in the eleven states where that activity has been criminalized, and compares that information to the crime classification and penalties for possession of items on Alaska' controlled substances Schedules IIA and IIIA. Please note that the penalties listed in our table are either maximum sentences or ranges of incarceration periods. Actual penalties are generally subject to considerable discretion by the sentencing courts.

We hope this is helpful. If you have questions or need additional information, please let us know.

[1] Those states are Alabama, Georgia, Illinois, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, Oklahoma, and Tennessee. According to the National Conference of State Legislatures (NCSL), synthetic cannabinoids are "chemically engineered substances, similar to THC—the active ingredient in marijuana—that, when smoked or ingested, can produce a high similar to marijuana. Initially developed for research related to treatment of pain and the effects of cannabis on the brain, these substances have recently become a popular alternative to marijuana. The NCSL maintains information about these substances and states' responses to the issue at http://www.ncsl.org/?tabid=21398.

Comparing States' Laws on Synthetic Cannabinoids to Selected Alaska Drug Laws
State	Citation	Controlled Substance Schedule	Crime Classification (1st Offense--Possession)	Penalty
Alaska	AS § 11.71.040 and § 12.55.125	Schedule IIA (as proposed in HB 7)	Class C felony	Maximum 5 years imprisonment and $50,000 fine (presumptive sentence is far less--suspended sentence possible)

DEA Moves to Emergency Control Synthetic Marijuana

Agency Will Study Whether To Permanently Control Five Substances

NOV 24 -- WASHINGTON, D.C. – The United States Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) is using its emergency scheduling authority to temporarily control five chemicals (JWH-018, JWH-073, JWH-200, CP-47,497, and cannabicyclohexanol) used to make "fake pot" products. Except as authorized by law, this action will make possessing and selling these chemicals or the products that contain them illegal in the U.S. for at least one year while the DEA and the United States Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS) further study whether these chemicals and products should be permanently controlled.

A Notice of Intent to Temporarily Control was published in the Federal Register today to alert the public to this action. After no fewer than 30 days, DEA will publish in the Federal Register a Final Rule to Temporarily Control these chemicals for at least 12 months with the possibility of a six-month extension. They will be designated as Schedule I substances, the most restrictive category, which is reserved for unsafe, highly abused substances with no medical usage.

Over the past year, smokable herbal blends marketed as being "legal" and providing a marijuana-like high, have become increasingly popular, particularly among teens and young adults. These products consist of plant material that has been coated with research chemicals that mimic THC, the active ingredient in marijuana, and are sold at a variety of retail outlets, in head shops and over the Internet. These chemicals, however, have not been approved by the FDA for human consumption and there is no oversight of the manufacturing process. Brands such as "Spice," "K2," "Blaze," and "Red X Dawn" are labeled as incense to mask their intended purpose.

Since 2009, DEA has received an increasing number of reports from poison centers, hospitals and law enforcement regarding these products. Fifteen states have already taken action to control one or more of these chemicals. The Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 amends the Controlled Substances Act (CSA) to allow the DEA Administrator to emergency schedule an abused, harmful, non-medical substance in order to avoid an imminent public health crisis while the formal rule-making procedures described in the CSA are being conducted.

"The American public looks to the DEA to protect its children and communities from those who would exploit them for their own gain," said DEA Acting Administrator Michele M. Leonhart. "Makers of these harmful products mislead their customers into thinking that 'fake pot' is a harmless alternative to illegal drugs, but that is not the case. Today's action will call further attention to the risks of ingesting unknown compounds and will hopefully take away any incentive to try these products."

* Sec. 2. This Act takes effect immediately under AS 01.10.070(c).

(e) The committee may not meet less than twice a year.

(f) Five members of the committee constitute a quorum, except that a smaller number may adjourn a meeting in the absence of a quorum. A quorum being present, a majority vote of the total membership is required to take official action. (§ 2 ch 45 SLA 1982)

Sec. 11.71.110. Duties of committee. The committee shall

(1) advise the governor of the need to add, delete or reschedule substances in the schedules in AS 11.71.140 — 11.71.190;

(2) recommend regulations for adoption by the Board of Pharmacy to prevent excessive prescription of controlled substances and the diversion of prescription drugs into illicit channels;

(3) evaluate the effectiveness of programs in the state providing treatment and counseling for persons who abuse controlled substances;

(4) recommend programs to the Alaska Court System to be instituted as alternatives to the prosecution or imprisonment of offenders who have no prior criminal record involving controlled substance offenses and who are charged with crimes involving controlled substances;

(5) review and evaluate enforcement policies and practices of the Department of Public Safety and the Department of Law with regard to crimes involving controlled substances, and recommend modifications of those policies and practices consistent with the committee's assessment of the probable danger of particular controlled substances; and

(6) review budget requests and recommend amounts for appropriations to the governor and the legislature for departments and agencies responsible for

(A) enforcing criminal laws pertaining to controlled substances;

(B) providing treatment and counseling of persons who abuse controlled substances; and

(C) regulating the legitimate handling of controlled substances. (§ 2 ch 45 SLA 1982)

Sec. 11.71.120. Authority to schedule controlled substances. (a) If, after considering the factors set out in (c) of this section, the committee decides to recommend that a substance should be added to, deleted from, or rescheduled in a schedule of controlled substances under AS 11.71.140 — 11.71.190, the governor shall introduce legislation in accordance with the recommendation of the committee.

(b) If a substance is added as a controlled substance under federal law, the governor shall introduce legislation in accordance with the federal law.

(c) In advising the governor of the need to add, delete, or reschedule a substance under AS 11.71.110(1), the committee shall assess the danger or probable danger of the substance after considering the following:

(1) the actual or probable abuse of the substance including

(A) the history and current pattern of abuse both in this state and in other states;

(B) the scope, duration, and significance of abuse;

(C) the degree of actual or probable detriment which may result from abuse of the substance;

(D) the probable physical and social impact of widespread abuse of the substance;

(2) the biomedical hazard of the substance including

(A) its pharmacology, in the effects and modifiers of the effects of the substance;

(B) its toxicology, the acute and chronic toxicity, interaction with other substances, whether controlled or not, and the degree to which it may cause psychological or physiological dependence;

(C) the risk to public health and the particular susceptibility of segments of the population;

(3) whether the substance is an immediate precursor of a substance already controlled under this chapter;

(4) the current state of scientific knowledge regarding the substance, including whether there is any acceptable means to safely use the substance under medical supervision;

(5) the relationship between the use of the substance and other criminal activity, including

(A) whether persons engaged in illicit trafficking of the substance are also engaged in other criminal activity;

(B) whether the nature and relative profitability of manufacturing or delivering the substance encourages illicit trafficking in the substance;

(C) whether the commission of other crimes is one of the effects of abuse of the substance;

(D) whether addiction to the substance relates to the commission of crimes to support the continued use of the substance.

(d) [Repealed, § 40 ch 6 SLA 1984.]

(e) The committee has no authority over tobacco or alcoholic beverages as defined in AS 04.21.080. (§ 2 ch 45 SLA 1982; am § 40 ch 6 SLA 1984)

Legislative history reports. — For statement of the purpose of the 1984 repeal of subsection (d) of this section, see the 1984 House Journal at p. 2287, in the paragraph captioned "Section 40."

NOTES TO DECISIONS

Construction of former law. — For construction of former AS 17.12.040, concerning regulations and authorizing the commissioner of health and social services to promulgate list of certain drugs, see State v. Erickson, 574 P.2d 1 (Alaska 1978).

Sec. 11.71.140. Schedule IA. (a) A substance shall be placed in schedule IA if it is found under AS 11.71.120(c) to have the highest degree of danger or probable danger to a person or the public.

(b) Schedule IA includes, unless specifically excepted or listed in another schedule, any of the following substances whether produced directly or indirectly by extraction from substances of vegetable origin, or independently by means of chemical synthesis, or by a combination of extraction and chemical synthesis:

(1) opium and opiate, and any salt, compound, derivative, or preparation of opium or opiate, excluding apomorphine, dextrorphan, nalbuphine, nalmefene, naloxone, and naltrexone, and their respective salts, but including the following:

(A) raw opium;

(B) opium extracts;

(C) opium fluid extracts;

(D) powdered opium;

(E) granulated opium;

(F) tincture of opium;

(G) codeine;

(H) ethylmorphine;

(I) etorphine hydrochloride;

(J) hydrocodone;

(K) hydromorphone;

(L) metopon;

(M) morphine;

(N) oxycodone;

(O) oxymorphine;

(P) thebaine;

(2) any salt, compound, derivative, or preparation of a substance included in (b)(1) of this section which is chemically equivalent or identical to any of the substances referred

States race to ban risky 'bath salts' drug

Updated 5h 15m ago |

By Jessie Halladay, USA TODAY

A growing number of states are moving to ban a new synthetic drug known as "bath s alts" that can cause severe side effects, including paranoia, hallucinations and sometimes violent behavior.

By Rogelio V. Solis, AP

These are examples of fake 'bath salts,' which contain toxic chemicals that some people are using to get a psychotic high.

Emergency bans have been issued in Louisiana, North Dakota and Florida. Legislators in Hawaii, Kentucky, North Dakota and Mississippi have introduced bills to ban the drug, which can be sold legally in stores and online in most places.

Calls to poison centers across the nation have skyrocketed in recent weeks as the drug has grown in popularity, officials in several states say.

Nationwide, there have been more than 360 calls about the drug this year, said Mark Ryan, director of the Louisiana Poison Center, who has been studying the trend.

There were 291 calls in all of 2010, Ryan said.

The drug has been compared to cocaine and methamphetamine because of its addictive characteristics, Ryan said.

Many of the products, sold under names such as Cloud Nine, Ivory Wave and Blue Silk, contain methylenedioxypyrovalerone, or MDPV, which is a chemical not approved for medical use in the United States.

Packages containing the powdery substance are typically labeled "not for human consumption" and marketed as "bath salts," Ryan said, or as plant food or insect repellent.

Users mostly snort the drug, similar to cocaine. But it is versatile and can be injected, smoked or even eaten, he said.

"It's some serious stuff," said Steven Spady, a Kentucky physician who has treated patients suffering from the effects of bath salts. Patients have exhibited signs of high anxiety, hypertension and agitation and, in one case, the patient was "quite psychotic," Spady said.

Last week, White House drug czar Gil Kerlikowske issued a warning against taking the synthetic products.

"They pose a serious threat to the health and well-being of young people and anyone who uses them," Kerlikowske said in a statement.

Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal, a Republican, issued an emergency ban on Jan. 6 for six substances, including MDPV and mephedrone, the most common chemicals in the drug.

Florida Attorney General Pam Bondi also issued an emergency ban that took effect Jan. 26.

"These are dangerous drugs that should not be confused with any type of common bath product," Bondi said.

Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., said last week that he will introduce legislation to ban bath salts nationwide.

John Moody of St. Joseph, Mo., knows firsthand the devastation bath salts can have. His 29-year-old son, Jarrod, killed himself in October after using the drug for at least two weeks. Moody said his son had struggled with a painkiller addiction a couple of years before.

"I'm sure Jarrod bought this stuff over the counter thinking this stuff can't be that strong, can't be that dangerous," John Moody said. "But, oh my gosh, are they ever."

Ryan said he's certain people don't know what they are in for when they try the drug.

"If you take the worst characteristics of LSD, PCP, Ecstasy, cocaine and methamphetamine and put all those together, you've got one big bad thing," Ryan said.

Re: Request for hearing on HB 8 (27-LS0052\A

Please consider this as a request for you to schedule HB 8 "Federal Regulations and Executive Orders" before the House Judiciary Committee. I have included a packet of information and will be glad to provide your committee staff a .pdf version if they so desire.

HB 8 puts in place statutory language that Alaska will review and if necessary nullify federal regulations and executive orders if it is determined they are unconstitutional or improperly filed. More and more the administration is circumventing Congress and imposing its own interpretation of the rule of law. HB 8 gives us a tool to respond.

If you have any questions please feel free to contact my office.

House Bill 8
Sponsor Statement

"An Act relating to certain federal regulations and presidential executive orders; relating to the duties of the attorney general; and providing for an effective date."

HB 8 clarifies in Alaska Statute that a federal regulation or a presidential executive order that is not properly adopted or is unconstitutional does not preempt state law. The Attorney General will continue to review and report federal regulations and executive orders that appear to have not been properly adopted. Under HB 8 those reports will be forwarded to the legislature for consideration.

HB 8 presumes Alaska Legislative interest in an important legal process called "nullification". Nullification is when a state 'nullifies' a federal law, proclaiming it to be void and inoperative, or 'non-effective' within the boundaries of that state. In other words it is not a law as far as that state is concerned. In HB 8 a negative review by the Attorney General would generate an alert to our Judiciary Committees so nullification legislation can be considered.

There has been disagreement regarding nullification going back to the late eighteenth century. Not surprisingly, federal courts have often leaned toward favoring federal power over state sovereignty in spite of the fact that our founding fathers clearly intended otherwise. Federalism is our historically unique and profound arrangement where sovereign and separate states got together and carefully designed a central government with carefully limited powers. It is an illogical perversion of one of our most important founding principles to presume states must comply with unconstitutional federal laws. HB 8 presumes a proper State responsibility to uphold and protect our constitution.

HB 8 is intended to provide important information to the Alaska State Legislature by tapping the expertise and evaluation of our Attorney General. Certainly the legislature has a responsibility to consider its response whenever there is question of constitutionality of a federal regulation or executive order.

Re: Sectional of House Bill 8 (27-LS0052\A

House Bill 8 is broken into five sections:

1. Legislative findings that establish an understanding of the Supremacy Clause in relationship to state statute. It also recognizes that the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that federal regulations, provided they are properly adopted, may also apply in Supremacy rules. The section also indicates that some executive orders and federal regulations do not always meet the constitutional or properly adopted criteria and therefore may not preempt state law.

2. Places into state statute that unconstitutional or improperly adopted executive orders and regulations do not preempt state statute.

3. Directs the Judiciary committee's in each house upon receipt of a report from the Attorney General that an executive order or regulation that preempts state statute and does not meet stated criteria to consider a response to the findings.

4. Directs the Attorney General to submit reports of potential preemptive executive orders or regulations that are unconstitutional or improperly adopted to the appropriate committees and establishes what documents need to be included in that report.

5. Effective date

CS FOR HOUSE BILL NO. 8(JUD)

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SEVENTH LEGISLATURE - FIRST SESSION

BY THE HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Offered:
Referred:

Sponsor(s): REPRESENTATIVES KELLER, Peggy Wilson

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to certain federal regulations and presidential executive orders; relating to the duties of the attorney general; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

LEGISLATIVE FINDINGS. The legislature finds that

(1) the Supremacy Clause of art. VI, clause 2, Constitution of the United States, provides that the Constitution of the United States and the laws of the United States made under and in conformity with the Constitution of the United States are the supreme law of the land;

(2) the United States Supreme Court, in City of New York v. Federal Communications Commission, 486 U.S. 57 (1988), stated that "[t]he phrase, 'Laws of the United States' encompasses both federal statutes themselves and federal regulations that are properly adopted in accordance with statutory authorization";

(3) federal regulations and presidential executive orders that are unconstitutional and not properly adopted in accordance with statutory authority are not laws of the United States for the purposes of the Supremacy Clause; and

(4) federal regulations and presidential executive orders that are not properly adopted in accordance with statutory authority may not preempt state laws that are not in conflict with federal statutory authority and regulations properly adopted in accordance with that statutory authority.

* Sec. 2. AS 01.10 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Article 5. Laws of the United States.

Sec. 01.10.200. Federal preemption; effect of certain federal regulations and presidential executive orders. A federal regulation or presidential executive order that is unconstitutional or was not properly adopted in accordance with federal statutory authority may not be considered to preempt a state law.

* Sec. 3. AS 24.05 is amended by adding a new section to article 4 to read:

Sec. 24.05.188. Federal regulations and executive orders. After receiving a report from the attorney general under AS 44.23.020(h) that a state law is in conflict with a federal regulation or presidential executive order that is unconstitutional or was not properly adopted in accordance with federal statutory authority, the house and senate committees having jurisdiction over judicial matters may each consider whether legislative action is necessary in response to the findings by the attorney general.

* Sec. 4. AS 44.23.020 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(h) If the attorney general finds that a federal regulation or presidential executive order would preempt a state law if constitutional and properly adopted in accordance with federal statutory authority but also finds that the federal regulation or presidential executive order is unconstitutional or was not properly adopted in accordance with federal statutory authority, the attorney general shall report the findings to the chairs of the house and senate committees having jurisdiction over judicial matters. The report must include

(1) a copy of the federal regulation or presidential executive order that the attorney general finds was not properly adopted in accordance with federal statutory authority;

(2) a citation to the state law that is in conflict with the federal regulation or presidential executive order identified in (1) of this subsection;

(3) a written opinion explaining

(A) the basis for finding that the federal regulation or presidential executive order is unconstitutional or was not properly adopted in accordance with federal statutory authority;

(B) the conflict between the federal regulation or presidential executive order identified in (1) of this subsection and the state law identified in (2) of this subsection and why, if properly adopted, the federal regulation or presidential executive order would preempt the state law; and

(C) the effect on the state if the state law identified in (2) of this subsection is found by a court to be preempted by the federal regulation or presidential executive order identified in (1) of this subsection; and

(4) other information relevant to the findings by the attorney general.

* Sec. 5. This Act takes effect immediately under AS 01.10.070(c).

STATE OF ALASKA
2011 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB 008

Analysis

HB 008 would require the Attorney General to review federal regulations and presidential executive orders that "may be in conflict with and may preempt state law." If the Attorney General were to find that a federal regulation or executive order (1) is unconstitutional or was not properly adopted and (2) would preempt a state law if it were constitutional and properly adopted, the Attorney General would be required to report those findings to the chairs of the appropriate legislative committees. The Attorney General would be required to include in the report an explanation of the grounds for the findings.

The Code of Federal Regulations includes more than 157,000 pages. This bill would require the analysis as to whether a particular regulation was constitutional, properly adopted, or preemptive.

As such, the fiscal impact of this legislation to the Department of Law would likely be substantial but cannot be accurately determined at this time.

SUPREMACY CLAUSE

"This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding." U.S. Const. art. VI, Paragraph 2

Under the Supremacy Clause, everyone must follow federal law in the face of conflicting state law. It has long been established that "a state statute is void to the extent that it actually conflicts with a valid federal statute" and that a conflict will be found either where compliance with both federal and state law is impossible or where the state law stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress. Edgar v. Mite Corp., 457 U.S. 624, 631 (1982). Similarly, we have held that "otherwise valid state laws or court orders cannot stand in the way of a federal court's remedial scheme if the action is essential to enforce the scheme." Stone v. City and County of San Francisco, 968 F.2d 850, 862 (9th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 113 S. Ct. 1050 (1993).

Due to concerns of comity and federalism, the scope of federal injunctive relief against an agency of state government must always be narrowly tailored to enforce federal constitutional and statutory law only. Toussaint v. McCarthy, 801 F.2d 1080, 1089 (9th Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 481 U.S. 1069 (1987). This is critical because "a federal district court's exercise of discretion to enjoin state political bodies raises serious questions regarding the legitimacy of its authority." Id.

In Pennsylvania v. Nelson, 350 U.S. 497, 76 S. Ct. 477, 100 L. Ed. 640 (1956), the Supreme Court developed criteria for assessing whether federal law preempts state action when Congress has not specifically stated its intent. These criteria include whether the scheme of federal regulations is "so pervasive as to make the inference that Congress left no room for the States to supplement it," whether the federal interest "is so dominant that the federal system [must] be assumed to preclude enforcement of state laws on the same subject," or whether the enforcement of a state law "presents a serious danger of conflict with the administration of the federal program."

The Tenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution reads:

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.

Ratified in 1791, the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution embodies the general principles of Federalism in a republican form of government. The Constitution specifies the parameters of authority that may be exercised by the three branches of the federal government: executive, legislative, and judicial. The Tenth Amendment reserves to the states all powers that are not granted to the federal government by the Constitution, except for those powers that states are constitutionally forbidden from exercising.

For example, nowhere in the federal Constitution is Congress given authority to regulate local matters concerning the health, safety, and morality of state residents. Known as POLICE POWERS, such authority is reserved to the states under the Tenth Amendment. Conversely, no state may enter into a treaty with a foreign government because such agreements are prohibited by the plain language of Article I to the Constitution.

At the time the states adopted the Tenth Amendment, two primary conceptions of government were under consideration. Many federalists supported a centralized national authority, with power concentrated in a single entity. This type of government was exemplified by the English constitutional system, which vested absolute authority in the monarchy during the seventeenth century and in Parliament during the eighteenth century.

On the other hand, many anti-federalists supported a more republican form of government consisting of a loose confederation of sovereign states that would form an alliance only for the purpose of mutual defense. The Articles of Confederation, which governed the 13 states in national matters until 1787, when the Constitution was ratified, epitomized this form of government. Under the Articles of Confederation, the national government was unable to levy and collect taxes on its own behalf.

Many federalists, such as James Madison, argued that the Tenth Amendment was unnecessary because the powers of the federal government are carefully enumerated and limited in the Constitution. Because the Constitution does not give Congress, the president, or the federal judiciary the prerogative to regulate wholly local matters, Madison concluded that no such power existed and no such power would ever be exercised. However, British oppression had made the Founding Fathers fearful of unchecked centralized power. The Tenth Amendment was enacted to limit federal power. Although it appears clear on its face, the Tenth Amendment has not been consistently applied.

Before the Civil War, nearly every state urged a broad reading of the Tenth Amendment. Although no state wanted a federal government that was impotent against internal enemies or foreign aggressors, many state politicians challenged the authority of the federal government to regulate any matter that could otherwise be handled by local authorities. For example, immediately after the U.S. Revolution, all 13 states resisted federal efforts to force local governments to return the property of British loyalists taken during the war. During the first half of the nineteenth century, Southern states objected to federal legislation that attempted to limit Slavery. State sovereignty reached its height when 11 states seceded from the Union to form the Confederacy.

Following the Civil War, the Tenth Amendment was virtually suspended. For a number of years during the Reconstruction era, the federal government occupied the former Confederate states with military troops and required each occupied state to ratify the Civil War Amendments, which outlawed slavery, gave African Americans the right vote, and declared the equality of all races. To a large extent the federal government ran local matters in Southern states during this period.

In 1883, the Tenth Amendment regained some of its force. In that year the Supreme Court invalidated the federal CIVIL RIGHTS ACT of 1875 (18 Stat. 335), which criminalized RACIAL DISCRIMINATION in public accommodations, such as hotels and restaurants, because it violated state sovereignty under the Tenth Amendment (CIVIL RIGHTS CASES, 109 U.S. 3, 3 S. Ct. 18, 27 L. Ed. 835 [1883]). In 1909, the Supreme Court struck down the White Slave Traffic Act (34 Stat. 898), which Congress had passed to prohibit the harboring of alien women for the purposes of prostitution, because it violated the Tenth Amendment (Keller v. United States, 213 U.S. 138, 29 S. Ct. 470, 53 L. Ed. 737 [1909]).

Nine years later the Court struck down another congressional law prohibiting the interstate shipment of products that had been manufactured by certain businesses that employed children under the age of 14 (HAMMER V. DAGENHART, 247 U.S. 251, 38 S. Ct. 529, 62 L. Ed. 1101 [1918]). "In interpreting the Constitution," the Court said in Hammer, "it must never be forgotten that the nation is made up of states to which are entrusted the powers of local government. And to them the powers not expressly delegated to the national government are reserved."

During the depth of the Great Depression, the Tenth Amendment returned to a dormant condition. President FRANKLIN ROOSEVELT worked with Congress to pass the New Deal,a series of programs designed to stimulate the troubled economy. After the Supreme Court upheld a provision of the National Labor Relations Act (mandatory Collective Bargaining) in NLRB V. JONES & LAUGHLIN STEEL CORP., 301 U.S. 1, 57 S. Ct. 615, 81 L. Ed. 893 (1937), Congress began exercising unprecedented lawmaking power over state and local matters. For the next 40 years, the Supreme Court upheld congressional authority to regulate a variety of matters that had been traditionally addressed by state legislatures. For example, in one case the Supreme Court upheld the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 (7 U.S.C.A. §§ 1281 et seq.) over objections that it allowed Congress to regulate individuals who produced and consumed their own foodstuffs entirely within the confines of a family farm (Wickard v. Filburn, 317 U.S. 111, 63 S. Ct. 82, 87 L. Ed. 122 [1942]).

The Tenth Amendment enjoyed a brief resurgence in 1976 when the Supreme Court held that the application of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C.A. §§ 201 et seq.) to state and local governments was unconstitutional. In National League of Cities v. Usery, 426 U.S. 833, 96 S. Ct. 2465, 49 L. Ed. 2d 245 (1976), the Court said that the Minimum Wage and maximum hour provisions of this act significantly altered and displaced the states' abilities to structure employment relationships in such areas as fire prevention, police protection, sanitation, public health, and parks and recreation. These services, the Court emphasized, are historically reserved to state and local governments. If Congress may withdraw from the states the authority to make such fundamental employment decisions, the Court concluded, "there would be little left of the states' separate and independent existence," or of the Tenth Amendment.

National League of Cities proved to be an unworkable constitutional precedent. It cast doubt on congressional authority to regulate many aspects of local affairs that most of society had come to rely upon. It was unclear, for example, whether the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA), a federal agency established by Congress to regulate workplace safety, retained any constitutional authority after the Supreme Court announced its decision in National League of Cities.

The Supreme Court eliminated these concerns by overturning National League of Cities in Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U.S. 528, 105 S. Ct. 1005, 83 L. Ed. 2d 1016 (1985). In Garcia the Court upheld the minimum wage and maximum hour provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act as it applied to a city-owned public transportation system. In reaching this decision, the Court said that if certain states are worried about the extent of federal authority over a particular local matter, the residents of such states should contact their senators and representatives who are constitutionally authorized to narrow federal regulatory power through appropriate legislation. Judicial Review of federal regulations under the Tenth Amendment, the Supreme Court suggested, is not the proper vehicle to achieve this end.

The ebb and flow of Tenth Amendment Jurisprudence reflects the delicate constitutional balance created by the Founding Fathers. The states ratified the Constitution because the Articles of Confederation created a national government that was too weak to defend itself and could not raise or collect revenue. Although the federal Constitution created a much stronger centralized government, the Founders did not want the states to lose all of their power to the federal government, as the colonies had lost their powers to Parliament. The Tenth Amendment continues to be defined as courts and legislatures address the balance of federal and state power.

The Free Dictionary by FARLEX 2011

When Idaho Governor C.L. "Butch" Otter signed HO391 into law on 17 March 2010, the "national" news media circled the wagons and began another assault on State sovereignty. The bill required the Idaho attorney general to sue the federal government over insurance mandates in the event national healthcare legislation passed. The lead AP reporter on the story, John Miller, quoted constitutional "scholar" David Freeman Engstrom of Stanford Law School as stating that the Idaho law would be irrelevant because of the "supremacy clause" of the United States Constitution.

In his words, "That language is clear that federal law is supreme over state law, so it really doesn't matter what a state legislature says on this." Now that Barack Obama has signed healthcare legislation into law, almost a dozen States have filed suit against the federal government, with Idaho in the lead. Battle lines have been drawn. Unfortunately, the question of State sovereignty and the true meaning of the "supremacy clause" may be swallowed up in the ensuing debate.

Engstrom's opinion is held by a majority of constitutional law "scholars," but he is far from correct, and Idaho and the thirty seven other States considering similar legislation have a strong case based on the original intent of the powers of the federal government vis-à-vis the States.

The so-called "supremacy clause" of the Constitution, found in Article 6, states, "This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding [emphasis added]."

The key, of course, is the italicized phrase. All laws made in pursuance of the Constitution, or those clearly enumerated in the document, were supreme, State laws notwithstanding. In other words, the federal government was supreme in all items clearly listed in the document.

A quick reading of the Constitution illustrates that national healthcare is not one of the enumerated powers of the federal government, so obviously Engstrom's blanket and simplistic statement is blatantly incorrect, but his distortion of the supremacy clause goes further.

The inclusion of such a clause in the Constitution was first debated at the Constitutional Convention on 31 May 1787. In Edmund Randolph's initial proposal, called the Virginia Plan, the "national" legislature had the ability to "legislate in all cases to which the separate states are incompetent…" and "to negative all laws passed by the several states contravening, in the opinion of the national legislature, the Articles of Union…." John Rutledge, Pierce Butler, and Charles Pinckney of South Carolina challenged the word "incompetent" and demanded that Randolph define the term. Butler thought that the delegates "were running into an extreme, in taking away the powers of the states…" through such language.

Randolph replied that he "disclaimed any intention to give indefinite powers to the national legislature, declaring that he was entirely opposed to such an inroad on the state jurisdictions, and that he did not think any considerations whatever could ever change his determination [emphasis added]." James Madison, the author of the Virginia Plan, was not as forthcoming as to his sentiment. Ultimately, Madison preferred a negative over State law and wished the national legislature to be supreme in call cases. But he was not in the majority.

The Convention again broached a federal negative on State law on 8 June 1787. Charles Pinckney, who presented a draft of a constitution shortly after Randolph offered the Virginia Plan, believed a national negative necessary to the security of the Union, and Madison, using imagery from the solar system and equating the sun to the national government, argued that without a national negative, the States "will continually fly out of their proper orbits, and destroy the order and harmony of the political system." Such symbolism made for a beautiful picture, but it belied reality.

To most of the assembled delegates, the national government was not the center of the political universe and the States retained their sovereignty. Hugh Williamson of North Carolina emphatically stated he "was against giving a power that might restrain the states from regulating their internal police."

Elbridge Gerry of Massachusetts was against an unlimited negative, and Gunning Bedford of Delaware believed a national negative was simply intended "to strip the small states of their equal right of suffrage." He asked, "Will not these large states crush the small ones, whenever they stand in the way of their ambitious or interested views?"

When the negative power was put to a vote, seven States voted against it and three for it, with Delaware divided (and Virginia only in the affirmative by one vote). Roger Sherman of Connecticut summarized the sentiment of the majority when he stated he "thought the cases in which the negative ought to be exercised might be defined." Since the negative did not pass, such a definition was unnecessary.

Thus, the federal government was supreme only in its enumerated powers and it did not have a negative over State law. Supremacy had limits.

By the time the Constitution was debated in the several State ratifying conventions in 1787 and 1788, the "supremacy clause" galvanized opponents of the document. The Constitution, they said, would destroy the States and render them impotent in their internal affairs. The response from proponents of ratification illuminates the true intent of the clause. William Davie, a delegate to the Constitutional Convention from North Carolina and proponent of the Constitution, responded to attacks levied on the "supremacy clause" by stating that:

This Constitution, as to the powers therein granted, is constantly to be the supreme law of the land. Every power ceded by it must be executed without being counteracted by the laws or constitutions of the individual states. Gentlemen should distinguish that it is not the supreme law in the exercise of power not granted. It can be supreme only in cases consistent with the powers specially granted, and not in usurpations [emphasis added].

Davie wasn't alone in this opinion. Future Supreme Court justice James Iredell of North Carolina argued that, "This clause [the supremacy clause] is supposed to give too much power, when, in fact, it only provides for the execution of those powers which are already given in the foregoing articles....If Congress, under pretence of executing one power, should, in fact, usurp another, they will violate the Constitution [emphasis added]."

Furthermore, in a foreshadowing of nullification, Iredell argued that, "It appears to me merely a general clause, the amount of which is that, when they [Congress] pass an act, if it be in the execution of a power given by the Constitution, it shall be binding on the people, otherwise not [emphasis added]. Other ratifying conventions had similar debates, and proponents of the Constitution continually reassured wavering supporters that the Constitution would only be supreme within its delegated authority.

Most bought their assurances, though to staunch opponents, the Constitution still vested too much power in the central authority. The States would lose their sovereignty, they argued, and as a result, these men demanded an amendment to the Constitution that expressly maintained the sovereignty of the States and placed limits on federal power. Even several moderate supporters of the Constitution embraced this idea.

Ultimately, the three most powerful States in the Union, New York, Massachusetts, and Virginia, demanded that a bill of rights be immediately added to the Constitution; near the top of those recommended amendments on every list, a State sovereignty resolution. These ultimately became the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution, which reads, "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

Clearly the intent of this amendment was to mitigate any design the federal government had on enlarging its powers through the "supremacy clause." If the power was not enumerated in the Constitution and the States were not prohibited by the Constitution from exercising said power, then that power was reserved to the States.

Several other constitutional "scholars" have weighed in on the debate in the last week, and each has invoked the "supremacy clause" to defend their opposition to State action against healthcare. Duke Law Professor Neil Siegel went so far as to suggest that the States are not reading the Tenth Amendment correctly. In perhaps the most outlandish statement of the debate, he also said, "Any talk of nullification bothers me because it's talk of lawlessness."

I guess Mr. Siegel has failed to consider that Idaho bill HO391 was passed by a legitimate legislative body elected by the people of the State. That would make it lawful.

Of course, this debate ultimately boils down to loose interpretation verses strict construction. Thomas Jefferson had the best line on this issue. When asked to read between the lines to "find" implied powers, Jefferson responded that he had done that, and he "found only blank space."

The original intent of both the "supremacy clause" and the Tenth Amendment indicate that Idaho and the other States challenging Obamacare are justified and correct and that the legal profession is either in the tank for the federal government or has not read either the debates of the Constitutional Convention and/or the State ratifying debates. This should make people like Engstrom and Siegel, rather than legitimate State law directed at unconstitutional authority, irrelevant.

Executive Orders

Dateline: 12/18/97

Executive Orders Defined
An Executive Order (EO) is a directive issued to executive-level agencies, department heads, or other employees from the President under the President's statutory, or constitutional powers. In many ways, the EO is similar to written orders, or instructions the president of a corporation might send to department heads or directors.Thirty days after it is officially published in the Federal Register, an EO becomes law. While the EO does bypass the U.S. Congress and the standard legislative law making process, no part of an EO may be illegal or unconstitutional. The first EO was issued in 1789 by none other than George Washington. Not until 1907 were EOs given official numbers.

Reasons for Issuing an Executive Order
Presidents typically issue an EO for one of these purposes:
1. Operational management of the executive branch
2. Operational management of federal agencies or officials
3. To carry out statutory presidential responsibilities

- - In 1970, President Nixon used this 398 word Executive Order establishing NOAA.

How Executive Orders May be Vacated
The President can retract an EO at any time. The President may also issue an EO that supersedes an existing one. New incoming Presidents may choose to follow the EOs of their predecessors, replace them with new ones of their own, or revoke the old ones completely. In extreme cases, Congress may pass a law that alters an EO, and the Supreme Court can declare them unconstitutional.

Executive Orders vs. Proclamations
Presidential Proclamations differ from EOs in that they are either ceremonial in nature or deal with issues of trade and may or may not carry legal effect. All EOs become law.

Constitutional Authority for Executive Orders
Article II, section 1 of the Constitution reads, in part, "The executive power shall be vested in a president of the United States of America." And, Article II, section 3 asserts that, "The President shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed..." Since the Constitution does not specifically define executive power, critics of Executive Orders argue that these two passages do not imply Constitutional authority. But, Presidents of the United States since George Washington have argued that they do.

Modern Use of Executive Orders
Until World War I, the Executive Order was used for relatively minor, usually unnoticed acts of state. A trend that changed drastically with passage of the War Powers Act of 1917. This act passed during WWI granted the President temporary powers to immediately enact laws regulating trade, economy, and other aspects of policy as they pertained to enemies of America. A key section of the War Powers act also contained language specifically excluding American citizens from its effects.

The War Powers Act remained in effect and unchanged until 1933 when a freshly elected President Franklin D. Roosevelt found America in the panic stage of the Great Depression. The first thing FDR did was to convene a special session of Congress where he introduced a bill amending the War Powers Act to remove the clause excluding American citizens from being bound by its effects. This would allow the President to declare "national emergencies" and unilaterally intact laws to deal with them. This massive amendment was approved by both houses of Congress in under 40 minutes without debate.

Hours later, FDR officially declared the depression a "national emergency" and stared issuing a string of Executive Orders that effectively were the "New Deal."

While some of FDR's actions were, perhaps, constitutionally questionable, history recognizes them as averting the growing panic and starting our economy on its way to recovery.

All Those Opposed
Many people strongly oppose the Executive Order as being an unconstitutional, even potentially dictatorial application of power. While the purpose of this article is not to state an opinion, or editorialize either way, I feel it only fair that this alternative point of view be represented.

US state pensions becoming federal issue

By Nicole Bullock in New York and Hal Weitzman in Chicago
Published: May 19 2010 20:44 | Last updated: May 19 2010 20:44

Illinois used to have a plan to pay off the gaping shortfall in the pension funds that pay retired teachers, university employees, state workers, judges and politicians, Dan Long recalls.

Mr Long, director of the Commission on Government Forecasting and Accountability, the non-partisan auditing arm of the Illinois state legislature, remembers that, back in 1994, the state laid out a proposal that would have paid off most of what was then a $17bn gap by 2011.

But Illinois could not stick to the plan.

With financial year 2011 less than six weeks away, the pension arrears of the 1990s look quaint. Instead of a balanced system, the state faces unfunded liabilities of about $78bn, the biggest pension hole in the US, and contributions of more than $4bn for 2011, the largest single element of its $13bn budget deficit.

Illinois is the poster child of unfunded pensions in the US. But state retirement systems could become a national concern, new research shows.

Joshua Rauh, associate professor of finance at the Kellogg School of Management at Northwestern University said that, without reform, some state pensions might run out within the decade. By 2030, as many as 31 states may not have the money to pay pensions. And, if these funds exhaust their assets, the size of payments for the benefits they have promised will be too large to cover through taxes, putting pressure on the federal government for a bail-out that could potentially cost more than $1,000bn, he says.

"It is more than a local problem," Mr Rauh said. "The federal government could be on the hook."

Estimates put the unfunded liabilities at between $1.000bn and $3.000bn after years of states promising benefits but not contributing enough in both good times and bad to cover them.

Many states base their calculations on an 8 per cent annual return and use an accounting method called smoothing, which staggers gains and losses over several years, two factors that some observers warn could mask the size of the shortfalls. The problem has come to the fore with the financial crisis and recession. Pension funds, like most money managers, suffered losses. The tax revenues that fund annual contributions to pensions, along with essential services such as healthcare and education, have plummeted, leaving little room to reimburse the losses.

States have begun reforms, with some lowering return expectations and raising employee contributions and retirement ages.

Mr Rauh said such measures were cosmetic and states needed comprehensive, federally sponsored reform that would require closing the systems to new members, shifting state workers to Social Security and individual plans similar to those that are used by the private sector in order to obtain incentives to borrow to bridge the gaps.

Mr Rauh said subsidising pension borrowing would cost a net $75bn with new contributions to the national Social Security programme offsetting some of the subsidies.

By his calculations, which assume the 8 per cent return, Illinois would run out by 2018 followed by Connecticut, New Jersey and Indiana in 2019. Some 20 states will have run out by 2025.

Five states would never run out, including New York and Florida, and 17 other states have a horizon of 2030 or beyond.

Robert Megna, New York's budget director, said his state had had to make "tough choices" to keep funding its pensions despite budget shortfalls over the past few years. On March 31, the state made a nearly $1bn payment for the last fiscal year.

"We had to make cuts: education, healthcare, local government support and not-for-profit providers," Mr Megna said of the last year's budget process.

New York's governor has proposed borrowing from the pension system, which is about 94 per cent funded, as the state did after the September 11 attacks, and repaying it with interest if low tax collections persist, Mr Megna said.

For fiscal 2010, Illinois sold $3.5bn of bonds to pay for its annual contribution.

But in an election year, there is no political support in Springfield, the capital of Illinois, for another bond issue, particularly since it requires a two-thirds majority in the state legislature.

The most likely outcome is that the state will defer the issue to next year. "That'll have an impact in terms of lost investment opportunities, and they'll have to sell some of the portfolio to pay the pensions," said Mr Long.

Utah gov. OKs eminent domain use on federal land

Posted: Mar 28, 2010 11:35 AM Updated: Mar 28, 2010 12:36 PM
By BROCK VERGAKIS
Associated Press Writer

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) - Fed up with federal ownership of more than half the land in Utah, Republican Gov. Gary Herbert on Saturday authorized the use of eminent domain to take some of the U.S. government's most valuable parcels.

Herbert signed a pair of bills into law that supporters hope will trigger a flood of similar legislation throughout the West, where lawmakers contend that federal ownership restricts economic development in an energy-rich part of the country.

Governments use eminent domain to take private property for public use.

The goal is to spark a U.S. Supreme Court battle that legislators' own attorneys acknowledge has little chance of success.

But Utah Attorney General Mark Shurtleff and other Republicans say the case is still worth fighting, since the state could reap millions of dollars for state schools each year if it wins.

More than 60 percent of Utah is owned by the U.S. government, and policy makers here have long complained that federal ownership hinders their ability to generate tax revenue and adequately fund public schools.

Utah spends less per student than any other state and has the nation's largest class sizes. Under the measure Herbert has approved, the state will set aside $3 million to defend the law.

Lawmakers recently slashed education funding by $10 million and raised taxes on cigarettes by $1 a pack. Democrats have decried the eminent domain measure as a waste of money, and Democratic gubernatorial hopeful Peter Corroon is making it an issue in this year's special election.

But if the law is as bad as Democrats say it is, a court will quickly overturn it and the state won't have to spend much money defending it, Herbert said.

Initially, the state would target three areas for the use of eminent domain, including the Kaiparowits plateau in Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument, which is home to large coal reserves.

Many people in Utah are still angry that then-President Bill Clinton's designated the area as a national monument in 1996, a move that stopped development on the land and greatly pleased environmentalists as he ran for re-election.

Utah lawmakers contend the federal government should have long ago sold the land it owns in the state. Because it hasn't, the federal government has violated a contract made with Utah when statehood was granted, they say.

Eminent domain would also be used on parcels of land where Interior Secretary Ken Salazar last year scrapped 77 oil and gas leases around national parks and wild areas.

The States Can Stop Obama

By Sheriff Richard Mack (Ret.)

By now we have all heard the cliches and seen the posters from the "Tea Parties" espousing freedom, less government, and perhaps most of all, how the federal government had better back off trying to shove their national healthcare down our otherwise healthy throats. The truth of the matter is all the slogans of "Don't Tread On Me" or "Give Me Liberty Or Give Me Death" or "We're Mad As Hell And We're Not Taking It Anymore," don't mean a thing when compared to reality; the real and actual answer to all the protests, marches, and outrage. The answer is in our own backyards! The States can stop every bit of it! That's right, the individual States can stop "Obamacare" and all other forms of out-of-control federal government mandates and "big brother" tactics. If Arizona, Hawaii, New Hamshire, Texas, etc. want nothing to do with National Healthcare as proposed by Barack Obama or Congress, then all they have to do is say "No!"

For you skeptics who think the States could no more do this than fly to the moon, let's look at the law. First, the U.S. Constitution is the ultimate and supreme law of the land. More specifically, the Bill of Rights was established, because some of our Founding Fathers, feared that the Constitution did not go far enough in restricting or limiting the central government. Hamilton was one of a select few who wanted a bigger and powerful federal government. However, several key states and powerful delegates such as Patrick Henry, said they would not support the formation of a new government if the Constitution did not contain a Bill of Rights, a supreme law to establish basic and fundamental human rights that could never, for all future American generations, be violated, altered or encroached upon by government. So the Framers of our Constitution came up with ten; ten God-given freedoms that would forever be held inviolable by our own governments.

The last of these basic foundational principles was the one to protect the power, sovereignty, and the autonomy of the States; the Tenth Amendment. This amendment and law underscores the entire purpose of the Constitution to limit government and forbids the federal government from becoming more powerful than the "creator." Let's be very clear here; the States in this case were the creator. They formed the federal government, not the other way around. Does anyone believe rationally that the States intended to form a new central government to control and command the States at will? Nothing could be further from the truth. Article 1, Section 8 of the Constitution details what duties the federal government will be responsible for under our new system of "balanced power." Anything not mentioned in Article 1, Sec. 8, is "reserved to the States respectively, or to the people." (Tenth Amendment) Hence, the federal government was not allowed creativity or carte blanche to expand or assume power wherever and whenever they felt like it. The feds had only discrete and enumerated and very limited powers. Omnipotency was the last thing the Founding Fathers intended to award the newly formed federal government. They had just fought the Revolutionary War to stop such from Britain and their main concern was to prevent a recurrence here in America.

In perhaps the most recent and powerful Tenth Amendment decision in modern history, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in Mack/Printz v U.S. that "States are not subject to federal direction." But today's federal Tories argue that the "supremecy clause" of the U.S. Constitution says that the federal government is supreme and thus, trumps the States in all matters. Wrong! The supremacy clause is dealt with in Mack/Printz, in which the Supreme Court stated once and for all that the only thing "supreme" is the constitution itself. Our constitutional system of checks and balances certainly did not make the federal government king over the states, counties, and cities. Justice Scalia opined for the majority in Mack/Printz, that "Our citizens would have two political capacities, one state and one federal, each protected from incursion by the other." So yes, it is the duty of the State to stop the Obamacare "incursion." To emphasize this principle Scalia quotes James Madison, "The local or municipal authorities form distinct and independent portions of the Supremacy, no more subject within their respective spheres, to the general authority than the general authority is subject to them, within its own sphere." The point to remember here is; where do we define the "sphere" of the federal government? That's right; in Article 1, Section 8 of the Constitution and anything not found within this section belongs to the States or to the People. So where does health care belong? The last place it belongs is with the President or Congress. It is NOT their responsiblity and the States need to make sure that Obama does not overstep his authority.

Just in case there is any doubt as to what the Supreme Court meant, let's take one more look at Mack/Printz. "This separation of the two spheres is one of the Constitution's structural protections of liberty. Hence, a double security arises to the rights of the people. The different governments will control each other..." What? The Constitution, the supreme law of the land, has as a "structural protection of liberty" that States will keep the federal government in check? No wonder it was called a system of "checks and balances." The States (and Counties) are to maintain the balance of power by keeping the feds within their proper sphere.

So do the States have to take the bullying of the federal government? Not hardly! The States do not have to take or support or pay for Obamacare or anything else from Washington DC. The States are not subject to federal direction. They are sovereign and "The Constitution protects us from our own best intentions." (Mack/Printz) Which means the States can tell national healthcare proposals or laws to take a flying leap off the Washington monument. We are not subject to federal direction!

In the final order pursuant to the Mack/Printz ruling Scalia warned, "The federal government may neither, issue directives requiring the States to address particular problems, nor command the States' officers, or those of their political subdivisions, to administer or enforce a federal regulatory program. Such commands are fundamentally incompatible with our constitutional system of dual sovereignty." It is rather obvious that nationalized healthcare definitely qualifies as a "federal regulatory program."

Thus, the marching on Washington and pleas and protests to our DC politicians are misdirected. Such actions are "pie in the sky" dreaming that somehow expects the tyrants who created the tyranny, will miraculously put a stop to it. Throughout the history of the world such has never been the case. Tyrants have never stopped their own corrupt ways. However, in our system of "dual sovereignty," the States can do it. If we are to take back America and keep this process peaceful, then state and local officials will have to step up to the plate. Doing so is what States' Rights and State Sovereignty are all about.

The perversion of the U.S. Constitution

"Stroke of the pen. Law of the land. Kinda cool."
--Clinton presidential aide Paul Begala, July 1998

"All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives."
--Article 1, U.S. Constitution, 1789

The greatest fear of the Founding Fathers was the establishment of a strong central government and an ambitious, power-hungry political leader at the center of that government. They had had their fill of kings and dictators. They believed the best assurance against centralized authority was a loose association of sovereign states, which maintained most governmental power at the local level.

President Clinton's glib announcement that he will issue a barrage of executive orders to further his legislative agenda while bypassing Congress is the ultimate fulfillment of those fears. More chilling yet is the timing of the ominous announcement. It comes less than two months after Clinton issued, while on foreign soil, Executive Order 13083, which annihilates the principles of federalism that have guided the nation for the last 200 years.

The 10th Amendment states: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people." Under EO 13083, Clinton has effectively tacked on to that clear, forthright, inspired, unambiguous statement a list of exceptions. He has done it single-handedly, with the stroke of a pen. And, no Mr. Begala, there is nothing cool about totalitarianism.

Say what you will about him, Bill Clinton is a bright and educated man. His actions and his words are carefully considered. He knows what he is doing. That's what makes this trend so frightening. Where does he want to take the nation? How far from its founding principles are we to stray? Is America about to transform itself from a nation governed by laws to a nation ruled by men?

How far we've come from the days of statesmen like James Madison, who believed "That all power is originally vested in, and consequently derived from, the people. That government is instituted and ought to be exercised for the benefit of the people; which consists in the enjoyment of life and liberty and the right of acquiring property, and generally of pursuing and obtaining happiness and safety. That the people have an indubitable, unalienable, and indefeasible right to reform or change their government whenever it be found adverse or inadequate to the purpose of its institution."

Note that Madison said "the people" -- not the government -- have a right to change their government. Bill Clinton has taken on this mission as his own God-given responsibility. He is acting like a strongman, an ayatollah, a czar, a potentate, a Fuhrer.

Even before Clinton abused his office so egregiously, the United States was in grave danger of concentrating too much power in Washington and too much power in the Oval Office. Clinton, ever the opportunist, has taken full advantage of Americans' ignorance of their constitutional heritage and usurped much of the remaining congressional legislative authority.

Potentially, the worst abuse of all is the executive order. For 30 years, Americans have lived under the shadow of executive orders that could -- as Mr. Begala inelegantly stated it -- with "the stroke of a pen," turn America into just another fascist dictatorship. Fortunately, America has been blessed with leaders -- some good, some bad -- who have restrained themselves from signing away our freedoms.

Without congressional approval, the president has the power to relocate whole populations of Americans, the power to shut down the free press, to force a national registration of all people. There doesn't need to be a war to justify such an action -- just a crisis, be it domestic or foreign, violent or merely economic.

I count at least a dozen executive orders, today standing as the law of the land, which would suspend the Constitution and the Bill of Rights in their entirety with such a stroke of the pen. Such power should not be in the hands of any one man -- particularly one as ambitious, driven and morally contemptible as Bill Clinton.

Oh, what a delicate thread from which our liberty is suspended.

Null. Void. Of No Effect.

Michael Boldin Tenth Amendment Center
January 21, 2011

When Washington D.C. violates the constitution – as it does every single day – the essential question is –"what do we do about it?"

For countless decades, Americans have been responding through protests, lawsuits, and "voting the bums out." Yet, year in and year out, federal power always grows. And it doesn't matter which political party is in power, or what person occupies the white house either.

THE RIGHTFUL REMEDY

In 1798, Thomas Jefferson wrote that

"whensoever the general government assumes undelegated powers….a nullification of the act is the rightful remedy."[emphasis added]

Notice that TJ didn't advise us to use nullification as a remedy "once in a while." And he certainly didn't tell us that a nullification is the rightful remedy after "we vote some bums out" or "we sue the federal government in federal court" or after anything else for that matter. Jefferson was pretty straightforward and recommended that every single time the federal government exercises powers not delegated to it in the constitution (there's about 30 powers and nothing more), that we're to reject and nullify those acts on a state level as they happen.

HAPPENING NOW

Already, more than two dozen states have virtually stopped the 2005 Real ID act dead in its tracks. How? By refusing to implement it. Fifteen states – most recently Arizona – are using the principles of the 10th Amendment to actively defy federal laws (and a supreme court ruling, too!) on marijuana. Eight states have passed Firearms Freedom Acts in an attempt to reject some federal gun laws and regulations. And seven states have passed Health Care Freedom Acts to block health care mandates from being enforced.

NULL. VOID. OF NO EFFECT.

Get used to reading these words, because the political climate is starting to swing a new direction. There is a growing number of people in America that are recognizing a simple truth – Asking, demanding, or suing to get the federal government to fix problems caused by the federal government just doesn't work.

Take, for example, the Federal Health Care Nullification Act, first introduced in Texas as HB297, and now also introduced in Montana (SB161), Wyoming (HB0035), Oregon (SB498) and Maine (LD58). Here's an excerpt:

"the federal law known as the "Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act," signed by President Barack Obama on March 23, 2010, is not authorized by the Constitution of the United States and violates its true meaning and intent as given by the Founders and Ratifiers, and is hereby declared to be invalid, shall not be recognized, is specifically rejected, and shall be considered null and void and of no effect."

But these bills, as introduced in Texas, Maine, Montana, Oregon, and Wyoming are far more than mere declarations or position statements

ENFORCEMENT

Implied in any nullification legislation is enforcement of the state law. In the Virginia Resolution of 1798, James Madison wrote of the principle of interposition:
That this Assembly doth explicitly and peremptorily declare, that it views the powers of the federal government, as resulting from the compact, to which the states are parties; as limited by the plain sense and intention of the instrument constituting the compact; as no further valid that they are authorized by the grants enumerated in that compact; and that in case of a deliberate, palpable, and dangerous exercise of other powers, not granted by the said compact, the states who are parties thereto, have the right, and are in duty bound, to interpose for arresting the progress of the evil, and for maintaining within their respective limits, the authorities, rights and liberties appertaining to them.

In his famous speech during the war of 1812, Daniel Webster said:

"The operation of measures thus unconstitutional and illegal ought to be prevented by a resort to other measures which are both constitutional and legal. It will be the solemn duty of the State governments to protect their own authority over their own militia, and to interpose between their citizens and arbitrary power. These are among the objects for which the State governments exist"

Here Madison and Webster assert what is required of nullification laws to be successful – that state governments not only have the right to resist unconstitutional federal acts, but that, in order to protect liberty, they are "duty bound to interpose" or stand between the federal government and the people of the state.

All five bills explicitly include this principle, and if passed, would impose penalties on federal agents for attempting to enforce National Health Care mandates in their state. For example, from Wyoming's HB35:

Any official, agent, employee or public servant of the state of Wyoming as defined in W.S. 6-5-101, who enforces or attempts to enforce an act, order, law, statute, rule or regulation of the government of the United States in violation of this article shall be guilty of a felony punishable by a fine of not more than five thousand dollars ($5,000.00), imprisonment in the county jail for not more than two (2) years, or both.

Sources close to the Tenth Amendment Center tell us to expect approximately ten states to introduce such bills in the 2011 legislative session.

H. RES. 5

Adopting rules for the One Hundred Twelfth Congress.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

M__._____ submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on _____

RESOLUTION

Adopting rules for the One Hundred Twelfth Congress.

Resolved, That the Rules of the House of Representatives of the One Hundred Eleventh Congress, including applicable provisions of law or concurrent resolution that constituted rules of the House at the end of the One Hundred Eleventh Congress, are adopted as the Rules of the House of Representatives of the One Hundred Twelfth Congress, with amendments to the standing rules as provided in section 2, and with other orders as provided in sections 3, 4, and 5.

SECTION 2. CHANGES TO THE STANDING RULES.

(a) CITING AUTHORITY UNDER THE CONSTITUTION.—

(1) In clause 7 of rule XII, add the following new paragraph:

"(e)(1) A bill or joint resolution may not be introduced unless the sponsor submits for printing in the Congressional Record a statement citing as specifically as practicable the power or powers granted to Congress in the Constitution to enact the bill or joint resolution. The statement shall appear in a portion of the Record designated for that purpose and be made publicly available in electronic form by the Clerk.

"(2) Before consideration of a Senate bill or joint resolution, the chair of a committee of jurisdiction may submit the statement required under subparagraph (1) as though the chair were the sponsor of the Senate bill or joint resolution.".

(2) In clause 3(d) of rule XIII, strike subparagraph (1) (and redesignate the succeeding paragraphs accordingly).

(b) THREE-DAY AVAILABILITY FOR UNREPORTED MEASURES.—In rule XXI, add the following new clause:

"11. It shall not be in order to consider a bill or joint resolution which has not been reported by a committee

Senate Resolution 632

By: Senators Pearson of the 51st, Rogers of the 21st, Williams of the 19th, Wiles of the 37th, Mullis of the 53rd and others

ADOPTED SENATE

A RESOLUTION

Affirming states' rights based on Jeffersonian principles; and for other purposes.

WHEREAS, the Ninth Amendment of the United States Constitution states "[t]he enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people" and the Tenth Amendment states "[t]he powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED BY THE SENATE that this body reaffirms the principles of government expressed by Thomas Jefferson in a resolution written for the Kentucky legislature in 1798 stating that the several States composing the United States of America, are not united on the principle of unlimited submission to their General Government; but that, by a compact under the style and title of a Constitution for the United States, and of amendments thereto, they constituted a General Government for special purposes, -- delegated to that government certain definite powers, reserving, each State to itself, the residuary mass of right to their own self-government; and that whensoever the General Government assumes undelegated powers, its acts are unauthoritative, void, and of no force; that to this compact each State acceded as a State, and is an integral party, its co-States forming, as to itself, the other party: that the government created by this compact was not made the exclusive or final judge of the extent of the powers delegated to itself; since that would have made its discretion, and not the Constitution, the measure of its powers; but that, as in all other cases of compact among powers having no common judge, each party has an equal right to judge for itself, as well of infractions as of the mode and measure of redress; and

That the Constitution of the United States, having delegated to Congress a power to punish treason, counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States, piracies, and felonies committed on the high seas, and offences against the law of nations, slavery, and no other crimes whatsoever; and it being true as a general principle, and one of the amendments to the Constitution having also declared, that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people," therefore all acts of Congress which assume to create, define, or punish crimes, other than those so enumerated in the Constitution are altogether void, and of no force; and that the power to create, define, and punish such other crimes is reserved, and, of right, appertains solely and exclusively to the respective States, each within its own territory; and

That it is true as a general principle, and is also expressly declared by one of the amendments to the Constitution, that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people;" and that no power over the freedom of religion, freedom of speech, or freedom of the press being delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, all lawful powers respecting the same did of right remain, and were reserved to the States or the people: that thus was manifested their determination to retain to themselves the right of judging how far the licentiousness of speech and of the press may be abridged without lessening their useful freedom, and how far those abuses which cannot be separated from their use should be tolerated, rather than the use be destroyed. And thus also they guarded against all abridgment by the United States of the freedom of religious opinions and exercises, and retained to themselves the right of protecting the same. And that in addition to this general principle and express declaration, another and more special provision has been made by one of the amendments to the Constitution, which expressly declares, that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press": thereby guarding in the same sentence, and under the same words, the freedom of religion, of speech, and of the press: insomuch, that whatever violated either, throws down the sanctuary which covers the others, and that libels, falsehood, and defamation, equally with heresy and false religion, are withheld from the cognizance of federal tribunals. That, therefore, all acts of Congress of the United States which do abridge the freedom of religion, freedom of speech, freedom of the press, are not law, but are altogether void, and of no force; and

That the construction applied by the General Government (as is evidenced by sundry of their proceedings) to those parts of the Constitution of the United States which delegate to Congress a power "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imports, and excises, to pay the debts, and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States," and "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the powers vested by the Constitution in the government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof," goes to the destruction of all limits prescribed to their power by the Constitution: that words meant by the instrument to be subsidiary only to the execution of limited powers, ought not to be so construed as themselves to give unlimited powers, nor a part to be so taken as to destroy the whole residue of that instrument: that the proceedings of the General Government under color of these articles, will be a fit and necessary subject of revisal and correction; and

That a committee of conference and correspondence be appointed, which shall have as its charge to communicate the preceding resolutions to the Legislatures of the several States; to assure them that this State continues in the same esteem of their friendship and union which it has manifested from that moment at which a common danger first suggested a common union: that it considers union, for specified national purposes, and particularly to those specified in their federal compact, to be friendly to the peace, happiness and prosperity of all the States: that faithful to that compact, according to the plain intent and meaning in which it was understood and acceded to by the several parties, it is sincerely anxious for its preservation: that it does also believe, that to take from the States all the powers of self-government and transfer them to a general and consolidated government, without regard to the special delegations and reservations solemnly agreed to in that compact, is not for the peace, happiness or prosperity of these States; and that therefore this State is determined, as it doubts not its co-States are, to submit to undelegated, and consequently unlimited powers in no man, or body of men on earth: that in cases of an abuse of the delegated powers, the members of the General Government, being chosen by the people, a change by the people would be the constitutional remedy; but, where powers are assumed which have not been delegated, a nullification of the act is the rightful remedy: that every State has a natural right in cases not within the compact, (casus non foederis), to nullify of their own authority all assumptions of power by others within their limits: that without this right, they would be under the dominion, absolute and unlimited, of whosoever might exercise this right of judgment for them: that nevertheless, this State, from motives of regard and respect for its co-States, has wished to communicate with them on the subject: that with them alone it is proper to communicate, they alone being parties to the compact, and solely authorized to judge in the last resort of the powers exercised under it, Congress being not a party, but merely the creature of the compact, and subject as to its assumptions of power to the final judgment of those by whom, and for whose use itself and its powers were all created and modified: that if the acts before specified should stand, these conclusions would flow from them: that it would be a dangerous delusion were a confidence in the men of our choice to silence our fears for the safety of our rights: that confidence is everywhere the parent of despotism -- free government is founded in jealousy, and not in confidence; it is jealousy and not confidence which prescribes limited constitutions, to bind down those whom we are obliged to trust with power: that our Constitution has accordingly fixed the limits to which, and no further, our confidence may go. In questions of power, then, let no more be heard of confidence in man, but bind him down from mischief by the chains of the Constitution. That this State does therefore call on its co-States for an expression of their sentiments on acts not authorized by the federal compact. And it doubts not that their sense will be so announced as to prove their attachment unaltered to limited government, whether general or particular. And that the rights and liberties of their co-States will be exposed to no dangers by remaining embarked in a common bottom with their own. That they will concur with this State in considering acts as so palpably against the Constitution as to amount to an undisguised declaration that that compact is not meant to be the measure of the powers of the General Government, but that it will proceed in the exercise over these States, of all powers whatsoever: that they will view this as seizing the rights of the States, and consolidating them in the hands of the General Government, with a power assumed to bind the States, not merely as the cases made federal, (casus foederis,) but in all cases whatsoever, by laws made, not with their consent, but by others against their consent: that this would be to surrender the form of government we have chosen, and live under one deriving its powers from its own will, and not from our authority; and that the co-States, recurring to their natural right in cases not made federal, will concur in declaring these acts void, and of no force, and will each take measures of its own for providing that neither these acts, nor any others of the General Government not plainly and intentionally authorized by the Constitution, shall be exercised within their respective territories; and

That the said committee be authorized to communicate by writing or personal conferences, at any times or places whatever, with any person or person who may be appointed by any one or more co-States to correspond or confer with them; and that they lay their proceedings before the next session of the General Court.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that any Act by the Congress of the United States, Executive Order of the President of the United States of America or Judicial Order by the Judicatories of the United States of America which assumes a power not delegated to the government of the United States of America by the Constitution for the United States of America and which serves to diminish the liberty of the any of the several States or their citizens shall constitute a nullification of the Constitution for the United States of America by the government of the United States of America. Acts which would cause such a nullification include, but are not limited to:

I. Establishing martial law or a state of emergency within one of the States comprising the United States of America without the consent of the legislature of that State.

II. Requiring involuntary servitude, or governmental service other than a draft during a declared war, or pursuant to, or as an alternative to, incarceration after due process of law.

III. Requiring involuntary servitude or governmental service of persons under the age of 18 other than pursuant to, or as an alternative to, incarceration after due process of law.

IV. Surrendering any power delegated or not delegated to any corporation or foreign government.

V. Any act regarding religion; further limitations on freedom of political speech; or further limitations on freedom of the press.

VI. Further infringements on the right to keep and bear arms including prohibitions of type or quantity of arms or ammunition; and

That should any such act of Congress become law or Executive Order or Judicial Order be put into force, all powers previously delegated to the United States of America by the Constitution for the United States shall revert to the several States individually. Any future government of the United States of America shall require ratification of three quarters of the States seeking to form a government of the United States of America and shall not be binding upon any State not seeking to form such a government.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the Secretary of the Senate is authorized and directed to transmit an appropriate copy of this resolution to the President of the United States, each member of the United States Congress.

HOUSE RESOLUTION NO. 9

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SIXTH LEGISLATURE - FIRST SESSION

BY REPRESENTATIVES KELLY, Johnson, Keller, Harris, Gatto, Johansen, Dahlstrom, Wilson

Introduced: 2/25/09
Referred: Rules

A RESOLUTION

Relating to sovereign powers of the state.

BE IT RESOLVED BY THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

WHEREAS the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States reads, "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people"; and

WHEREAS the Tenth Amendment defines the total scope of federal power as being that specifically granted by the Constitution of the United States and no more; and

WHEREAS the scope of power defined by the Tenth Amendment means that the federal government was created by the states specifically to be an agent of the states; and

WHEREAS some federal actions weaken states' rights protected by the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States; and

WHEREAS the Tenth Amendment assures that we, the people of the United States of America and each sovereign state in the Union of States, now have, and have always had, rights the federal government may not usurp; and

WHEREAS art. IV, sec. 4, Constitution of the United States, reads, "The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican Form of Government," and the Ninth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States reads, "The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people"; and

WHEREAS the United States Supreme Court has ruled in New York v. United States, 112 S.Ct. 2408 (1992), that the United States Congress may not simply commandeer the legislative and regulatory processes of the states; and

WHEREAS all states, including Alaska, find themselves regularly facing proposals from the United States Congress that weaken states' rights protected by the Tenth Amendment;

BE IT RESOLVED that the House of Representatives hereby claims sovereignty for the state under the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States over all powers not otherwise enumerated and granted to the federal government by the Constitution of the United States; and be it

FURTHER RESOLVED that this resolution serves as Notice and Demand to the federal government, as our agent, to cease and desist, effective immediately, mandates that are beyond the scope of these constitutionally delegated powers; and be it

FURTHER RESOLVED that all compulsory federal legislation that directs states to comply under threat of civil or criminal penalties or sanctions or requires states to pass legislation or lose federal funding be prohibited or repealed.

COPIES of this resolution shall be sent to the Honorable Barack Obama, President of the United States; the Honorable Joseph R. Biden, Jr., Vice-President of the United States and President of the U.S. Senate; the Honorable Nancy Pelosi, Speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives; the Honorable Lisa Murkowski and the Honorable Mark Begich, U.S. Senators, and the Honorable Don Young, U.S. Representative, members of the Alaska delegation in Congress; and all other members of the 111th United States Congress.

CITY OF NEW YORK, City of Miami, City of Wheaton and National League of Cities, Petitioners
v.
FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION et al.

No. 87-339.

Argued March 29, 1988.

Decided May 16, 1988.

Syllabus

In 1974, after two years of unsatisfactory experience with conflicting federal and local technical standards governing the transmission of cable television broadcast signals, the Federal Communications Commission (FCC or Commission) promulgated regulations pre-empting the field of signal-quality regulation. In 1984, this Court broadly approved the pre-emptive authority that the FCC had asserted over cable system regulation. Capital Cities Cable, Inc. v. Crisp, 467 U.S. 691, 104 S.Ct. 2694, 81 L.Ed.2d 580. A few months later, Congress enacted the Cable Communications Policy Act of 1984 (Cable Act or Act), which empowers state or local authorities to enfranchise cable systems and to specify the facilities and equipment that franchisees could use, but which also authorizes the FCC to establish technical standards for such facilities and equipment. Pursuant to the latter provision, the FCC adopted regulations establishing technical standards governing the quality of cable signals and forbidding local authorities to impose more stringent technical standards. Petitioners sought review of the regulations in the Court of Appeals, contesting the scope of the FCC's claimed pre-emptive authority and asserting that franchising authorities could impose stricter technical standards than the Commission's. The court upheld the regulations.

Held: The FCC did not exceed its statutory authority by forbidding local authorities to impose technical cable signal quality standards more stringent than those set forth in the Commission's regulations. Pp. 63-70.

(a) Whether a federal agency has properly determined that its authority in a given area is exclusive and pre-empts any state regulatory efforts does not depend on the existence of express congressional authorization to displace state law. Rather, the correct focus is on the agency itself and on the proper bounds of its lawful authority to undertake such action. If the agency's decision to pre-empt represents a reasonable accommodation of conflicting policies committed to the agency's care by statute, the accommodation should not be disturbed unless it appears from the statute or its legislative history that the accommodation "is not one that Congress would have sanctioned." United States v. Shimer, 367 U.S. 374, 383, 81 S.Ct. 1554, 1560, 6 L.Ed.2d 908. Pp. 63-64.

(b) In adopting the regulations at issue, the FCC explicitly stated its intent to continue its prior policy of exercising exclusive authority and of pre-empting state and local regulation, in order to address the potentially serious adaptability and cost problems created for cable system operators and consumers by technical standards that vary from community to community. Thus, this case does not turn on whether there is an actual conflict between federal and state law, or whether compliance with both federal and state standards would be physically impossible. Pp. 65-66.

(c) The FCC acted within its authority under the Cable Act when it pre-empted state and local regulation. In adopting the statute, Congress acted against a 10-year background of federal pre-emption on this particular issue and at a time shortly after Crisp approved FCC pre-emption in very similar respects. Nevertheless, Congress sanctioned in relevant respects the regulatory scheme that the Commission had already been following, without indicating explicit disapproval of the Commission's pre-emption of local technical standards. Given the difficulties the FCC had experienced with inconsistent local standards, it is doubtful that Congress would have meant to overturn pre-emption without discussion or even any suggestion that it was doing so. To the contrary, the legislative history makes clear that the Cable Act was not intended to work any significant change. Thus, nothing in the Act compels the conclusion that the decision to pre-empt "is not one that Congress would have sanctioned." Pp. 66-70.

259 U.S.App.D.C. 191, 814 F.2d 720 (1987), affirmed.

WHITE, J., delivered the opinion for a unanimous Court.

Stephen J. McGrath, New York City, for petitioners.

Lawrence G. Wallace, Washington, D.C., for federal respondent, F.C.C.

H. Bartow Farr, III, Washington, D.C., for respondent, National Cable Television.

Justice WHITE delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Federal Communications Commission has adopted regulations that establish technical standards to govern the quality of cable television signals and that prohibit local authorities from imposing more stringent technical standards. The issue is whether in doing so the Commission has exceeded its statutory authority.

* This case deals with yet another development in the ongoing efforts of federal, state, and local authorities to regulate different aspects of cable television over the past three decades. See Capital Cities Cable, Inc. v. Crisp, 467 U.S. 691, 700-705, 104 S.Ct. 2694, 2700-2703, 81

L.Ed.2d 580 (1984); United States v. Southwestern Cable Co., 392 U.S. 157, 161-178, 88 S.Ct. 1994, 1996-2005, 20 L.Ed.2d 1001 (1968). With the incipient development of cable television in the 1950's and 1960's from what had been more generally known as community antenna television systems, the Federal Communications Commission began to assert regulatory authority in this area. See CATV Second Report and Order, 2 F.C.C.2d 725 (1966). In 1972, the Commission first asserted authority over technical aspects of cable television and devised technical standards to govern the transmission of broadcast signals by cable, though without pre-empting regulation of similar matters by state or local franchising authorities. Cable Television Report and Order, 36 F.C.C.2d 143, on reconsideration, 36 F.C.C.2d 326 (1972), aff'd sub nom. American Civil Liberties Union v. FCC, 523 F.2d 1344 (CA9 1975).1 Within two years, however, the Commission became convinced from its experience with conflicting federal and local technical standards that there is "a compelling need for national uniformity in cable television technical standards" which would require it to pre-empt the field of signal-quality regulation in order to meet the "necessity to rationalize, interrelate, and bring into uniformity the myriad standards now being developed by numerous jurisdictions." Cable Television Report and Order, 49 F.C.C.2d 470, 477, 480 (1974). The Commission explained that a multiplicity of mandatory and nonuniform technical requirements undermined "the ultimate workability of the over-all system," could have "a deleterious effect on the development of new cable services," and could "seriously imped[e]" the "development and marketing of signal source, transmission, and terminal equipment." Id. at 478-479.2

In 1984, the Court approved the pre-emptive authority that the Commission had asserted over the regulation of cable television systems. We held that in the Communications Act of 1934, Congress authorized the Commission "to regulate all aspects of interstate communication by wire or radio," including the subsequently developed medium of cable television, and that the Commission's authority "extends to all regulatory actions 'necessary to ensure the achievement of the Commission's statutory responsibilities.' " Crisp, supra, 467 U.S. at 700, 104 S.Ct. at 2701, quoting FCC v. Midwest Video Corp., 440 U.S. 689, 706, 99 S.Ct. 1435, 1444, 59 L.Ed.2d 692 (1979). Although the state law that was invalidated in Crisp regulated commercial advertising on cable television, rather than the technical quality of cable television signals, the Court recognized that for 10 years the Commission had "retained exclusive jurisdiction over all operational aspects of cable communication, including signal carriage and technical standards." Crisp, supra, 467 U.S. at 702, 104 S.Ct. at 2702.

A few months after the Court's decision in Crisp, Congress enacted the Cable Communications Policy Act of 1984 (Cable Act or Act), 98 Stat. 2780, 47 U.S.C. §§ 521-559 (1982 ed., Supp. IV). Among its objectives in passing the Cable Act, Congress purported to "establish a national policy concerning cable communications" and to "minimize unnecessary regulation that would impose an undue economic burden on cable systems." 47 U.S.C. §§ 521(1), (6) (1982 ed., Supp. IV). The Act was also intended to "establish guidelines for the exercise of Federal, State, and local authority with respect to the regulation of cable systems" through procedures and standards that "encourage the growth and development of cable systems and which assure that cable systems are responsive to the needs and interests of the local community." §§ 521(3), (2) (1982 ed., Supp. IV).

The Cable Act left franchising to state or local authorities; those authorities were also empowered to specify the facilities and equipment that franchisees were to use, provided such requirements were "consistent with this title." Cable Act, §§ 624(a), (b), 47 U.S.C. §§ 544(a), (b) (1982 ed., Supp. IV). Section 624(e) of the Cable Act provided that "[t]he Commission may establish technical standards relating to the facilities and equipment of cable systems which a franchising authority may require in the franchise." 47 U.S.C. § 544(e) (1982 ed., Supp. IV).

In 1985, the Commission promulgated regulations that would establish technical standards governing signal quality for one of four different classes of cable television channels and that would forbid local cable franchising authorities to impose their own standards on any of the four classes of channels. 50 Fed.Reg. 7801, 7802 (1985), 47 CFR pt. 76 (1986). The Commission eventually adopted a modified version of these regulations, which reaffirmed the Commission's established policy of pre-empting local regulation of technical signal quality standards for cable television. 50 Fed.Reg., at 52462, 52464-52465. The Commission found its statutory authority to adopt the regulations in § 624(e) of the Cable Act, 47 U.S.C. § 544(e) (1982 ed., Supp. IV), and in 47 U.S.C. §§ 154(i) and 303(r). 50 Fed.Reg., at 52466. Petitioners (the cities of New York, Miami, and Wheaton, and the National League of Cities) sought review of the regulations in federal court, where they contested the scope of the pre-emptive authority claimed by the Commission and insisted that franchising authorities could impose stricter technical standards than those specified by the Commission.

The Court of Appeals granted partial relief to petitioners. 259 U.S.App.D.C. 191, 814 F.2d 720 (1987). It noted that the Commission had adopted technical standards applicable to one class of cable television channels, but had left the other three classes of channels completely unregulated. It agreed with petitioners that the Commission had acted arbitrarily and capriciously when it did not adopt technical standards for the latter three classes of channels, yet prohibited local authorities from adopting such standards and ignored the apparent conflict between these actions and the language of the Cable Act. It therefore vacated this part of the rule and remanded to the Commission for further proceedings. The court's holding was unanimous on this point, and that part of its decision is not at issue here.3

The Court of Appeals divided, however, over the propriety of the Commission's technical standards that apply to the first class of cable channels and that pre-empt more stringent local regulations. The majority of the panel upheld pre-emption, ruling that Congress intended federal regulations like these to supersede local law and that the Commission acted within the broad confines of the pre-emptive authority delegated to it by Congress when it adopted the regulations with respect to this one class of channels. One judge dissented, contending that the majority had sanctioned pre-emption without a clear manifestation of congressional intent, contrary to this Court's decisions. We granted certiorari, 484 U.S. 962, 108 S.Ct. 449, 98 L.Ed.2d 389 (1987), and we now affirm.

II

When the Federal Government acts within the authority it possesses under the Constitution, it is empowered to pre-empt state laws to the extent it is believed that such action is necessary to achieve its purposes. The Supremacy Clause of the Constitution gives force to federal action of this kind by stating that "the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance" of the Constitution "shall be the supreme Law of the Land." U.S. Const., Art. VI, cl. 2. The phrase "Laws of the United States" encompasses both federal statutes themselves and federal regulations that are properly adopted in accordance with statutory authorization. For this reason, at the same time that our decisions have established a number of ways in which Congress can be understood to have pre-empted state law, see Louisiana Public Service Comm'n v. FCC, 476 U.S. 355, 368-369, 106 S.Ct. 1890, 1898-1899, 90 L.Ed.2d 369 (1986), we have also recognized that "a federal agency acting within the scope of its congressionally delegated authority may pre-empt state regulation" and hence render unenforceable state or local laws that are otherwise not inconsistent with federal law. Id., at 369, 106 S.Ct. at 1898-1999.

10

This case involves the latter kind of pre-emption, and here the inquiry becomes whether the federal agency has properly exercised its own delegated authority rather than simply whether Congress has properly exercised the legislative power. Thus we have emphasized that in a situation where state law is claimed to be pre-empted by federal regulation, a "narrow focus on Congress' intent to supersede state law [is] misdirected," for "[a] pre-emptive regulation's force does not depend on express congressional authorization to displace state law." Fidelity Federal Savings & Loan Assn. v. De la Cuesta, 458 U.S. 141, 154, 102 S.Ct. 3014, 3023, 73 L.Ed.2d 664 (1982). Instead, the correct focus is on the federal agency that seeks to displace state law and on the proper bounds of its lawful authority to undertake such action. The statutorily authorized regulations of an agency will pre-empt any state or local law that conflicts with such regulations or frustrates the purposes thereof. Beyond that, however, in proper circumstances the agency may determine that its authority is exclusive and pre-empts any state efforts to regulate in the forbidden area. Crisp, 467 U.S., at 700, 104 S.Ct. at 2700; De la Cuesta, supra, 458 U.S., at 152-154, 102 S.Ct., at 3022-3023. It has long been recognized that many of the responsibilities conferred on federal agencies involve a broad grant of authority to reconcile conflicting policies. Where this is true, the Court has cautioned that even in the area of pre-emption, if the agency's choice to pre-empt "represents a reasonable accommodation of conflicting policies that were committed to the agency's care by the statute, we should not disturb it unless it appears from the statute or its legislative history that the accommodation is not one that Congress would have sanctioned." United States v. Shimer, 367 U.S. 374, 383, 81 S.Ct. 1554, 1560, 6 L.Ed.2d 908 (1961); see also Crisp, supra, 467 U.S., at 700, 104 S.Ct., at 2700.

In this case, there is no room for doubting that the Commission intended to pre-empt state technical standards governing the quality of cable television signals. In adopting the regulations at issue here, the Commission said:

12

"Technical standards that vary from community to community create potentially serious negative consequences for cable system operators and cable consumers in terms of the cost of service and the ability of the industry to respond to technological changes. To address this problem, we proposed in the Notice to retain technical standards guidelines at the federal level which could be used, but could not be exceeded, in state and local technical quality regulations.

13

14

"After a review of the record in this proceeding, we continue to believe that the policy adopted in 1974 was effective, should remain in force, and is entirely consistent with both the specific provisions and the general policy objectives underlying the 1984 Cable Act. This pre-emption policy has constrained state and local regulation of cable technical performance to Class I channels and has prohibited performance standards more restrictive than those contained in the Commission's rules. The reasons that caused the adoption of this policy appear to be as valid today as they were when the policy was first adopted." 50 Fed.Reg., at 52464.

15

As noted above, the policy adopted by the Commission in 1974, which was continued in effect by the 1985 regulations, was a pre-emptive policy applying in the area of technical standards governing signal quality. 49 F.C.C.2d, at 477-481. Since the Commission has explicitly stated its intent to exercise exclusive authority in this area and to pre-empt state and local regulation, this case does not turn on whether there is an actual conflict between federal and state law here, or whether compliance with both federal and state standards would be physically impossible. De la Cuesta, supra, 458 U.S., at 153, 102 S.Ct., at 3022.

The second part of the inquiry is whether the Commission is legally authorized to pre-empt state and local regulation that would establish complementary or additional technical standards, where it clearly is possible for a cable operator to comply with these standards in addition to the federal standards. We have identified at least two reasons why this part of the inquiry is crucial to our determination of the pre-emption issue. "First, an agency literally has no power to act, let alone pre-empt the validly enacted legislation of a sovereign State, unless and until Congress confers power upon it. Second, the best way of determining whether Congress intended the regulations of an administrative agency to displace state law is to examine the nature and scope of the authority granted by Congress to the agency." Louisiana Public Service Comm'n, 476 U.S., at 374, 106 S.Ct., at 1901. The second reason was particularly relevant in Louisiana Public Service Comm'n because there we were obliged to assess the import of a statutory section in which Congress appeared to have explicitly limited the Commission's jurisdiction, so as to prohibit it from pre-empting state laws concerning the manner in which telephone companies could depreciate certain plant and equipment. Id., 476 U.S., at 369-376, 379, 106 S.Ct., at 1899-1902, 1904, construing 47 U.S.C. § 152(b).

17

We conclude here that the Commission acted within the statutory authority conferred by Congress when it pre-empted state and local technical standards governing the quality of cable television signals. When Congress enacted the Cable Act in 1984, it acted against a background of federal pre-emption on this particular issue. For the preceding 10 years, the Commission had pre-empted such state and local technical standards under its broad delegation of authority to "[m]ake such rules and regulations and prescribe such restrictions and conditions, not inconsistent with law, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this chapter [the communications laws, Title 47 of the U.S. Code, Chapter 5]," as a means of implementing its legitimate discretionary power to determine what the "public convenience, interest, or necessity requires" in this field. 47 U.S.C. §§ 303 and 303(r); see also 49 F.C.C.2d, at 481; 47 U.S.C. § 154(i). The Court's decision in Crisp, which was handed down during the time Congress was considering the legislation that within a few months became the Cable Act, broadly upheld the Commission's pre-emptive authority in very similar respects. 467 U.S., at 701-705, 104 S.Ct., at 2701-2703.

18

In the Cable Act, Congress sanctioned in relevant respects the regulatory scheme that the Commission had been following since 1974. In § 624 of the Cable Act, Congress specified that the local franchising authority could regulate "services, facilities, and equipment" in certain respects, and could enforce those requirements, but § 624(e) of the Act grants the Commission the power to "establish technical standards relating to the facilities and equipment of cable systems which a franchising authority may require in the franchise." 47 U.S.C. §§ 544(a)-(e) (1982 ed., Supp. IV). This mirrors the state of the regulatory law before the Cable Act was passed, which permitted the local franchising authorities to regulate many aspects of cable services, facilities, and equipment but not to impose technical standards governing cable signal quality, since the Commission had explicitly reserved this power to the Federal Government.

It is also quite significant that nothing in the Cable Act or its legislative history indicates that Congress explicitly disapproved of the Commission's pre-emption of local technical standards.[4] Given the difficulties the Commission had experienced in this area, which had caused it to reverse its ground in 1974 after two years of unhappy experience with the practical consequences of inconsistent technical standards imposed by various localities, we doubt that Congress intended to overturn the Commission's decade-old policy without discussion or even any suggestion that it was doing so. To the contrary, the House Report which discusses this section of the Act portrays it as nothing more than a straightforward endorsement of current law:

20

"Subsection (e) allows the Commission to set technical standards related to facilities and equipment required by a franchising authority pursuant to a franchising agreement. This provision does not affect the authority of a franchising authority to establish standards regarding facilities and equipment in the franchise pursuant to section 624(b) which are not inconsistent with standards established by the FCC under this subsection." H.R.Rep. No. 98-934, p. 70 (1984), U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News, 1984, pp. 4655, 4707.

21

This passage from the House Report makes clear that the Act was not intended to work any significant change in the law in the respects relevant to this case. By noting that § 624(e) authorizes "the Commission to set technical standards related to facilities and equipment" and that it "does not affect the authority of a franchising authority to establish standards regarding facilities and equipment" that are not inconsistent with Commission standards, the House Report indicates both that Congress did not intend to remove from the Commission its longstanding power to establish pre-emptive technical standards, and that Congress did not intend to "affect the authority of a franchising authority" to set standards in these and similar matters regarding cable facilities and equipment. In particular, Congress did not manifest any intent to "affect the authority" of local franchising authorities by giving them the power to supplement the technical standards set by the Commission with respect to the quality of cable signals, a power which they generally had not been permitted to exercise for the last 10 years and which, according to the Commission's consistent view, disserves the public interest.[5] Petitioners insist that under § 624, as evidenced by the passage from the House Report quoted above, a franchising authority may specify any technical standards that do not conflict with Commission standards and hence may set stricter standards for signal quality. But this disregards the Commission's own power to pre-empt, an authority that we do not believe Congress intended to take away in the Cable Act. And it also disregards the Commission's explicit findings, based on considerable experience in this area, that complementary or additional technical standards set by state and local authorities do conflict with the basic objectives of federal policy with respect to cable television—findings that the Commission first articulated in 1974 and then reiterated in 1986. See 49 F.C.C.2d, at 478-479; 50 Fed.Reg., at 52464-52465.

In sum, we find nothing in the Cable Act which leads us to believe that the Commission's decision to pre-empt local technical standards governing the quality of cable signals "is not one that Congress would have sanctioned." Shimer, 367 U.S., at 383, 81 S.Ct. at 1560.6 We therefore affirm the judgment of the Court of Appeals.

23

It is so ordered.

The "technical standards" established by the Commission describe, in quantitative terms, various electrical characteristics of the audio and video components of the signals delivered by the cable system to its subscribers, including such specific items as visual carrier frequency, aural center frequency, visual signal level, terminal isolation, and radiation and signal leakage. See 47 CFR §§ 76.601, 76.605 (1987).

Although the Commission recognized that "[t]he broad pre-emptive policy we are adopting today will ultimately affect all cable systems," 49 F.C.C.2d, at 480, it fashioned this policy to have a more gradual effect. Because "many of the pre-existing technical standards adopted by cities and states cannot be shown to adversely affect our stated goals," the Commission decided to extend a "grandfather" approval to those technical standards that were already operational or certified to the Commission by January 1, 1975. Ibid. In addition, a mechanism was established (and remains in effect) that allows state and local authorities to impose "different or additional technical standards" if they obtain a specific waiver from the Commission. Id., at 480-481; see n. 5, infra.

At argument, petitioners contended that the question of the Commission's statutory authority to regulate these other three classes of cable channels is properly presented to the Court in this case. Tr. of Oral Arg. 5-7, 9-10. We disagree. The Court of Appeals explicitly failed to resolve this question because it agreed "with petitioner's alternative argument that the FCC's . . . rulemaking was arbitrary and capricious." 259 U.S.App.D.C. 191, 197-198, 814 F.2d 720, 726-727 (1987). The Court of Appeals' disposition with respect to these three classes of cable channels was to vacate those portions of the rule and to remand to the Commission for further proceedings. In their brief, moreover, petitioners refer specifically to "a vote of 2-1 [in] the Court of Appeals" in stating the questions presented, which was the disposition below only with respect to the one class of cable channels. Brief for Petitioners i.

Petitioners argue that by empowering local franchising authorities to take into account whether "the quality of the operator's service, including signal quality . . . has been reasonable in light of community needs," 47 U.S.C. § 546(c)(1)(B) (1982 ed., Supp. IV), Congress implicitly recognized that local franchising authorities would need a comprehensive set of additional technical standards in order to carry out this task. Yet this argument simply ignores the fact that local authorities are able to assess signal quality against the technical standards set by the Commission, which it has found are adequate to ensure "an acceptable quality of service at the worst subscriber location and thus a better quality of service to the average subscriber." 50 Fed.Reg. 52462, 52463, n. 2 (1985).

Petitioners and other state and local authorities remain free, of course, to petition the Commission for an individualized waiver that would permit them to "impose additional or different requirements," which they may seek to obtain by demonstrating that particular local conditions create special problems that make the federal technical standards inadequate. See 47 CFR § 76.7 (1987).

Since we conclude that the Commission is authorized under § 624(e) of the Cable Act to pre-empt technical standards imposed by state and local authorities, we need not also consider whether the Commission retains the same broad pre-emptive authority in the area of cable television under §§ 4(i) and 303 of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, 47 U.S.C. §§ 154(i) and 303, that it had exercised before the Cable Act was enacted in 1984. In adopting the regulations at issue here, the Commission claimed to possess statutory authority under those two sections of the Communications Act as well as under the new Cable Act. 50 Fed.Reg., at 52466. Petitioners claim that the Cable Act withdrew such authority from the Commission, and their claim draws some support from new language in 47 U.S.C. § 152(a) (1982 ed., Supp. IV), which states that "[t]he provisions of [the Communications Act] shall apply with respect to cable service . . . as provided in [the Cable Act]." On the other hand, the House Report suggests that this language is merely a more explicit grant of "exclusive jurisdiction" to the Commission over specified aspects of cable service, see H.R.Rep. No. 98-934, pp. 95-96 (1984), U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1984, pp. 4732, 4733, which settles matters that had occasionally been in dispute. In addition, § 303 of the Communications Act continues to give the Commission broad rulemaking power "as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this chapter," 47 U.S.C. § 303(r), which includes the body of the Cable Act as one of its subchapters. But since in any event the Commission possesses statutory authority to adopt the regulations at issue in this case under § 624(e) of the Cable Act, we do not decide whether the Commission's actions are authorized on this alternative basis as well.

UPDATED SPONSOR STATEMENT
HB 14 - EXECUTIVE ETHICS: LEGAL FEES/FAMILY TRAVEL

House Bill 14 sets forth in statute the substance of the Attorney General's recently-enacted regulations establishing standards for (1) reimbursement of legal fees and costs for any executive branch employees accused of ethical violations, and (2) payment of travel expenses for the families of only the governor and lieutenant governor.

HB 14 differs from the regulations in two important ways. First, although both the regulations and HB 14 authorize the use of state funds to pay the travel costs of children of the governor and lieutenant governor to certain events, HB 14 would authorize this payment not just for minor children, but also for mentally and physically disabled children who are dependent on the governor or lieutenant governor for care.[1] Second, the regulations authorize the state to pay, in advance of exoneration, the ongoing legal fees and costs of an employee accused of an ethics violation. If the employee is not exonerated of the ethics charges, the state must then attempt to recoup the funds it advanced to defend the guilty employee. HB 14, on the other hand, would require that an employee be exonerated before the state could reimburse the employee for his or her fees and costs.[2] HB 14 cures both problems.

If you have any questions, please contact my legislative aide, Gretchen Staft, at 465-4940.

Thank you for your consideration of HB 14.

SECTIONAL ANALYSIS
HB 14 - EXECUTIVE ETHICS: LEGAL FEES/FAMILY TRAVEL

Sec. 1. Deletes definition of "for partisan political purposes." This definition section is moved to section 3 on page 3, line 30 to page 4, line 4.

Sec. 2. Conforms AS 39.52.120(f) to the change proposed in section 1.

Sec. 3. Adds language to AS 39.52.120 that would allow, with exceptions, the use of state resources to cover costs of transporting members of the governor's and lieutenant governor's families to certain events.

Sec. 4. Creates an exception to AS 39.52.120 by allowing (but not requiring) a state agency to pay the reasonable costs of private legal representation relating to the defense of an ethics complaint by a person accused of an Executive Branch Ethics Act violation, in certain circumstances.

Sec. 5. Makes section 4 of the bill applicable only to ethics complaints filed on or after the effective date of the bill.

FISCAL NOTE #1

STATE OF ALASKA
2011 LEGISLATIVE SESSION

BILL NO. HB 14

Analysis

This bill authorizes state agencies to pay private legal fees and costs incurred by persons exonerated of alleged Alaska Executive Branch Ethics Act violations. Allows certain public officers and former public officers to accept state payments to offset private legal fees and costs related to defending against an Alaska Executive Branch Ethics Act complaint. Creates certain exceptions to Alaska Executive Branch Ethics Act limitations on the use of state resources to provide or pay for transportation of spouses and children of the governor and lieutenant governor. Department of Law does not anticipate a fiscal impact from this bill.

9 AAC 52.040. UNWARRANTED BENEFITS OR TREATMENT. (a) As used in AS 39.52.120 (a), "unwarranted benefits or treatment" includes

(1) a deviation from normal procedures for the award of a benefit, regardless of whether the procedures were established formally or informally, if the deviation is based on the improper motivation; and

(2) an award of a benefit if the person receiving the benefit was substantially less qualified, in light of the formal or informal standards set out for the award, than another person who was or reasonably should have been considered for the award if the award is based on an improper motivation.

(b) A public officer may not grant or secure an unwarranted benefit or treatment, regardless of whether the result is in the best interest of the state.

(c) Subject to the requirements of AS 39.52.110, 39.52.120, 39.52.150, and AS 39.90.020, neither the Ethics Act nor this chapter prohibits a public officer from

(1) considering a person who has a relationship with an officer for a state contract or job if the person is considered on an equal basis with other applicants; or

(2) considering an individual's political affiliation or political support in determining whether to appoint the individual to a state board or commission or to hire the individual for an exempt or partially exempt state job.

(3) accepting money to reimburse the public officer for reasonable expenses incurred for professional legal services to defend against a complaint brought under AS 39.52.310 - 39.52.390, if

(A) the public officer is exonerated of a violation of the Ethics Act for which payment is made;

(B) the complaint concerns conduct that occurred during the public officer's employment or service as a public officer;

(C) the public officer executes a written agreement to repay any money requested and paid in advance of exoneration if the public officer is not exonerated of the violation; and

(D) the public officer repays any money paid in advance if the public officer is not exonerated of the violation; or

(4) approving money to reimburse another public officer for reasonable expenses incurred for professional legal services to defend against a complaint brought under AS 39.52.310 - 39.52.390, entering into an agreement to pay those expenses on behalf of another public officer, or authorizing payment to secure those professional legal services on behalf of another public officer, if

(A) the complaint concerns conduct that occurred during the public officer's employment or service as a public officer;

(B) the payment is made by a state agency that has money appropriated that may be lawfully used for the purpose of paying the expenses; and

(C) the public officer whose expenses are paid

(i) has been exonerated of a violation of the Ethics Act for which payment is made; or

(ii) has executed a written agreement to repay any money paid in advance of exoneration, if the public officer is not exonerated of the violation.

(d) For purposes of (c)(3) and (4) of this section,

(1) exoneration of a violation of the Ethics Act

(A) occurs when an allegation in a complaint brought against a public officer under AS 39.52.310 - 39.52.390 is

(i) dismissed under AS 39.52.310(d), 39.52.320, or 39.52.370(d);

(ii) resolved with only preventive action recommended under AS 39.52.330 to avoid a potential violation; or

(iii) dismissed after appeal under AS 39.52.370(f); and

(B) does not include the dismissal or resolution of an allegation in a complaint when corrective action is required under AS 39.52.330;

(2) expenses are reasonable if, based on an evaluation of the complexity of the alleged claim, the attorney's fee or hourly rate, the hours expended, the relationship between the amount of work performed and the significance of the alleged claim, and other relevant factors, the expenses were necessarily incurred to defend against an allegation in a complaint brought under AS 39.52.310 - 39.52.390; those expenses may

(A) include attorney's fees, fees incurred for professional legal services customarily performed by an attorney but delegated to and performed by an investigator, paralegal, or law clerk, and related costs; and

(B) be apportioned by alleged violation if a complaint alleges more than one violation, but only if the public officer provides clear documentation that the expenses paid were limited to the alleged violation for which the public officer is exonerated; and

(3) payment under this section may be made to or on behalf of a current public officer or a former public officer who was the subject of a pending complaint when the officer left state service or becomes the subject of a complaint after leaving state service.

9 AAC 52.045. TRANSPORTATION OF FAMILY MEMBERS OF GOVERNOR AND LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR. (a) The use or authorization of use of state money or other state resources for transportation of a family member of the governor or lieutenant governor does not violate AS 39.52.120(a) or (b)(3) if transportation is provided to an event at which the family member's presence benefits the state. The presence of a family member of the governor or lieutenant governor benefits the state if the family member's presence

(1) is required for official action of the state; or

(2) has a public purpose related to the governor's or lieutenant governor's official duties, including

(A) attending a state-sponsored event that the family of the governor or lieutenant governor customarily attends;

(B) attending an event at which the family member serves as an officially designated representative of the state; or

(C) accompanying, as an invited guest, the governor or lieutenant governor to an event related to issues important to the state when the family member's attendance is appropriate for the event, such as youth- or family-related events.

(b) For purposes of AS 39.52.120(a) and (b)(3) and (a) of this section, transportation of a family member to attend a political or campaign event held for partisan political purposes does not benefit the state.

(c) For purposes of AS 39.52.120(a) and (b)(3), the use or authorization of use of state money or other state resources for transportation of a family member that does not benefit the state is presumed insignificant if the governor or lieutenant governor pays the state the cost of the family member's transportation. Except for transportation by state aircraft for partisan political purposes under AS 39.52.120(f), the agency that authorized or paid for the travel shall determine the cost of the transportation based on either

(1) the actual fare paid; or

(2) the fare for equivalent commercial transportation, if the travel was by state aircraft, vessel, or vehicle.

(d) In this section,

(1) "child" has the meaning given in AS 39.52.960;

(2) "family member" means a spouse or minor child of the governor or lieutenant governor;

(3) "for partisan political purposes" has the meaning given in AS 39.52.120(b)(6).

9 AAC 52.050. USE OF STATE TIME, PROPERTY, EQUIPMENT, OR OTHER FACILITIES. (a) Unless the attorney general has issued a general opinion against the use or advised the public officer against the use, a public officer who uses state time, property, equipment, or other facilities to benefit the officer, an immediate family member of the officer, the officer's personal or financial interest, or another person does not violate AS 39.52.120(a) or (b)(3) if the officer's designated supervisor determines that the use is insignificant.

(b) For purposes of determining whether a public officer has violated AS 39.52.120(a) or (b)(3), the use of a state cellular telephone to benefit the officer, an immediate family member of the officer, the officer's personal or financial interest, or another person is presumed insignificant if

(1) the cellular telephone service plan provides, for a set monthly fee, an allowance of usable minutes or an unlimited number of usable minutes;

(2) the use does not exceed

MEMORANDUM February 12, 2010

SUBJECT: Are ethics regulations proposed December 8, 2009, within the scope of the Department of Law's regulation-making authority? (Work Order No. 26-LS1493)

TO: Representative David Guttenberg

FROM: Dan Wayne
Legislative Counsel

You have asked if the Executive Branch Ethics Act regulations proposed by the Department of Law on December 8, 2009, are within the department's regulation-making authority or if the changes proposed would first require a change in statute by the legislature.

The Administrative Procedure Act says, at AS 44.62.020:

> Except for the authority conferred upon the lieutenant governor in AS 44.62.130 - 44.62.170, AS 44.62.010 - 44.62.320 do not confer authority upon or augment the authority of a state agency to adopt, administer, or enforce a regulation. To be effective, each regulation adopted must be within the scope of authority conferred and in accordance with standards prescribed by other provisions of law.

In this instance, the department's regulation-making authority comes from AS 39.52.950, which says:

> The attorney general may adopt regulations under the Administrative Procedure Act necessary to interpret and implement this chapter.

I see two places where this limited authority may be exceeded by the proposed regulations. Proposed 9 AAC 52.045 would allow the state to pay the transportation expenses of family members of the governor and lieutenant governor, even though the Act, at AS 39.52.120, prohibits that type of payment. The attorney general has previously covered this in a September 30, 2004, opinion, that said:

> For purposes of the Ethics Act, it is irrelevant that it does not cost the state more to fly the King Air with more of its seats occupied. The focus of the Ethics Act is on the benefit being conferred on the administration official > who would not have to pay the cost of a commercial air ticket to fly his or her spouse to a location, not the cost to the state.

> Therefore, under current law, the Ethics Act precludes the spouses of administration officials from flying on the King Air unless the official reimburses the state the cost of a coach fare ticket for the spouse.
> . . .
> An amendment to the Ethics Act would be required to enable the Governor to allow spouses of administration officials to accompany the official on King Air flights free of charge.

Op. Attn'y Gen. (September 30, 2004); redated for publication March 9, 2007; 2007 Alas. AG LEXIS 5. Under the facts of this opinion there was no additional cost to the state in transporting the accompanying spouse. The 2004 opinion did not address the proposition, which the proposed 9 AAC 52.045 seems to rest upon, that the offices of governor and lieutenant governor should be considered apart from other administrative offices, as a matter of public policy, for the purpose of determining whether the state receives a benefit from the governor and lieutenant governor being accompanied by their spouses or children when traveling on state business.

The 2004 opinion said that AS 39.52.120 prohibits a public officer from securing or granting an unwarranted benefit for a spouse. "Unwarranted benefits" have been defined in existing regulations, at 9 AAC 52.040, as benefits that deviate from normal procedure and are improperly motivated. "Improper motivation" means, as defined by 9 AAC 52.990(b)(4), giving primary consideration to a person's relationship with a public officer. The 2004 A.G. Opinion reasoned that if a spouse of an administration official accompanies the official on a state trip without having to pay, there is a benefit to the spouse, and "[t]he primary consideration in granting the benefit would be the spouse's relationship with the administration official and the official's relationship with the Governor -- precisely the type of motivations that are prohibited by the Ethics Act."

In proposed 9 AAC 52.045, the accompanying spouse or child would have to demonstrate that the spouse's or child's transportation is of benefit to the state. However, as can be seen from existing regulations already adopted by the department, the department's past interpretation of AS 39.52.120 regarding state payment of family transportation costs does not, on balance, support a "benefits the state" exception to the prohibition. In fact, 9 AAC 52.040(b), which is not being amended by the proposed regulations, says that a public officer may not grant an unwarranted benefit "regardless of whether the result is in the best interest of the state." Although the proposed 9 AAC 52.045 appears to be in conflict with existing 9 AAC 52.040(b), that does not mean that a court would invalidate the proposed regulation. A court may or may not determine that a "benefits the state" exception allowing spouses and children of the governor and lieutenant governor to be transported with the governor without reimbursement of transportation costs, exceeds the scope of AS 39.52.120; I am not able to predict which way the court would go on that question.

The proposed regulations would allow an exception to the prohibition for a spouse or child if the presence of the spouse or child is required for state business or if the purpose of transportation of the spouse or child is performance of a customary or ceremonial duty as an "official representative of the state." There is no legal authority to suggest that a person who is not a public employee or public official can be an "official representative" of the state. Being the spouse or child of a public officer does not legally confer official representative status on a person, and it follows from this that if the governor's or lieutenant governor's family member does serve the state it is in an unofficial role. I would note, nonetheless, that the governor's and lieutenant governor's families do serve a ceremonial role that is much more significant than the role served by the families of other administrative officials. The proposed regulations could be upheld on this basis if challenged.

The proposed regulations would also provide for reimbursement of private legal expenses incurred by public officers who are exonerated of allegations in an ethics complaint. The Executive Branch Ethics Act is silent with respect to legal representation of a public officer by private counsel during a complaint proceeding. The attorney general acknowledged the Act's silence on this point but argued, in a recent opinion, that public officers exonerated in ethics complaint proceedings should be reimbursed for private legal expenses incurred because it is consistent with the public's best interest and consistent with the state's general policy of paying legal expenses for public officers who defend against civil or criminal allegations arising from their service to the state.[1] A court might agree with this policy argument and still find that the legal expense reimbursement provisions of the proposed regulations go beyond the scope of the authority, granted to the Department of Law by AS 39.52.950 to adopt regulations "necessary to interpret and implement this chapter."

The legislature might appropriately choose to consider the public policy issues presented by these regulations and attempt to resolve them with legislation. Please let me know if you would like a bill drafted.

MEMORANDUM January 31, 2011

SUBJECT: State reimbursement of legal costs for defending against ethics complaints. (HB 14; Work Order No. 27-LS0124\A)

TO: Representative Max Gruenberg
Attn: Gretchen Staft

FROM: Dan Wayne
Legislative Counsel

You have asked for a further explanation of the term "apportionment" as used on page 4, lines 12 - 13 of HB 14, and the term "necessarily incurred," as used on page 4, line 31.

1. "Apportionment" would allow for partial reimbursement of legal expenses where a single ethics complaint alleges more than one ethics violation, if an accused person is exonerated of fewer than all of the violations alleged. 9 AAC 52.040 allows apportionment as well. 9 AAC 52.040(d)(2)(B) says that legal expenses paid may "be apportioned by alleged violation if a complaint alleges more than one violation, but only if the public officer provides clear documentation that the expenses paid were limited to the alleged violation for which the public officer is exonerated."

2. The term "necessarily incurred" is relied on by Alaska courts when awarding attorney fees under Rule 82 of the Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure. Rule 82(b)(2) requires that, in cases in which the prevailing party does not win a money judgment, the court shall award the prevailing party a percentage of that party's "reasonable actual attorney's fees which were necessarily incurred." The court does not pay the awarded fees; it orders them paid by the party who opposed the prevailing party. The percentage is 30 percent if the case goes to trial and 20 percent if it's resolved without a trial, although under Rule 82(b)(3) that amount can be increased or decreased based on fairness to the parties, the complexity of the litigation, the length of trial, vexatious or bad faith conduct, the relationship between the amount of work performed and the significance of the matters at stake, the extent to which the fees incurred by the prevailing party suggest they were influenced by considerations apart from the case (such as a desire to discourage claims by others), and the reasonableness of the hourly rate, number of hours expended, and number of attorneys used.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise.

Memorandum

TO: Representative Max Gruenberg
FROM: Patricia Young, Manager
DATE: January 25, 2011
RE: State Payment of Legal Fees Incurred in Defense of an Ethics Complaint against a Public Official
LRS Report 11.122

You wished to know of any instances in Alaska or other jurisdictions where the government is authorized to reimburse a public official or state employee for legal fees and costs that the individual incurs in defending against an ethics complaint. You also wished to know of instances in Alaska or other jurisdictions where the government is authorized to pay such fees and costs in advance of exoneration.

Authorization for reimbursement of legal fees appears to be relatively common, although in a number of jurisdictions, the reimbursement is authorized to be gained from the person who brought the complaint. We identified at least three jurisdictions in which reimbursement comes through the government.[1]

- A 2008 amendment to the ethics laws on investigations in Alberta, Canada, provides for reimbursement of legal expenses through the Legislative Assembly.

- Connecticut law provides for reimbursement of legal fees by the state when charges of ethics violations are held to be without foundation. The Connecticut law further authorizes that if the complainant brought the charge knowing that it was baseless, the public official or state employee will have a cause of action against the complainant for double the amount of damage caused. If the action is successful, the courts may also award the individual the costs and reasonable attorneys' fees for the action.

- An agreement between Alaska's Division of Risk Management and the Alaska Court System establishes that in exchange for interagency assessments, Risk Management provides coverage for third party tort liability and workers' compensation claims for the Court System and its employees, for the Alaska Judicial Council and its members and employees, and for the Alaska Commission on Judicial Conduct and its members and employees. Risk Management provides limited coverage for disciplinary proceedings before the Alaska Commission on Judicial Conduct, the Alaska Bar Association, the Alaska Public Offices Commission, or any similar entity if the alleged conduct is within the scope of the employee's or member's office or employment and does not allege a conflict of interest. The annual aggregate limit is $45,000 per fiscal year, and each disciplinary proceeding is limited to $15,000. The employee must retain independent counsel and pay the first $3,000 for actual incurred attorney's fees and related costs. Thereafter, Risk Management pays up to $15,000 for the representation. In proceedings alleging a conflict of interest, no reimbursement is made unless a final adjudication establishes that no conflict existed.[2]

While there may be other jurisdictions that provide for advance payment of legal fees in such cases, we identified only the following in the timeframe of this report: in December 2010, the Alaska executive branch promulgated regulations establishing standards for the use of state money to reimburse or to pay in advance of exoneration a public officer's ongoing legal fees and costs for defending against an ethics complaint. In either case, the public officer must repay any money if not exonerated. Language of the new provisions follows.[3]

---

[1] Given the timeframe for this response, we searched the 2010 and 2009 Ethics Updates for the COGEL Blue Book, published annually by the Council on Governmental Ethics Laws and the websites of selected state ethics commissions. We also contacted Peggy Kerns, director of the Center for Ethics in Government at the National Conference of State Legislatures. Although traveling at this time, Ms. Kerns noted that she may be able to provide additional information on this topic in the future. We will forward any additional information upon its arrival.

[2] A copy of the Memorandum of Agreement between the Division of Risk Management and the Alaska Court System is attached.

[3] We also note that some states—including California, Michigan, and North Carolina—allow candidates for elective office or elective officials to create legal defense funds.

9 AAC 52.040. Unwarranted Benefits or Treatment.

(c) Subject to the requirements of AS 39.52.110, 39.52.120, 39.52.150, and AS 39.90.020, neither the Ethics Act nor this chapter prohibits a public officer from

(3) accepting money to reimburse the public officer for reasonable expenses incurred for professional legal services to defend against a complaint brought under AS 39.52.310 - 39.52.390, if

(A) the public officer is exonerated of a violation of the Ethics Act for which payment is made;

(B) the complaint concerns conduct that occurred during the public officer's employment or service as a public officer;

(C) the public officer executes a written agreement to repay any money requested and paid in advance of exoneration if the public officer is not exonerated of the violation; and

(D) the public officer repays any money paid in advance if the public officer is not exonerated of the violation; or 3

(4) approving money to reimburse another public officer for reasonable expenses incurred for professional legal services to defend against a complaint brought under AS 39.52.310 - 39.52.390, entering into an agreement to pay those expenses on behalf of another public officer, or authorizing payment to secure those professional legal services on behalf of another public officer, if

(A) the complaint concerns conduct that occurred during the public officer's employment or service as a public officer;

(B) the payment is made by a state agency that has money appropriated that may be lawfully used for the purpose of paying the expenses; and

(C) the public officer whose expenses are paid

(i) has been exonerated of a violation of the Ethics Act for which payment is made; or

(ii) has executed a written agreement to repay any money paid in advance of exoneration, if the public officer is not exonerated of the violation.

(d) For purposes of (c)(3) and (4) of this section,

(1) exoneration of a violation of the Ethics Act

(A) occurs when an allegation in a complaint brought against a public officer under AS 39.52.310 - 39.52.390 is

(i) dismissed under AS 39.52.310(d), 39.52.320, or 39.52.370(d);

(ii) resolved with only preventive action recommended under AS 39.52.330 to avoid a potential violation; or

(iii) dismissed after appeal under AS 39.52.370(f); and

(B) does not include the dismissal or resolution of an allegation in a complaint when corrective action is required under AS 39.52.330;

(2) expenses are reasonable if, based on an evaluation of the complexity of the alleged claim, the attorney's fee or hourly rate, the hours expended, the relationship between the amount of work performed and the significance of the alleged claim, and other relevant factors, the expenses were necessarily incurred to defend against an allegation in a complaint brought under AS 39.52.310 - 39.52.390; those expenses may

(A) include attorney's fees, fees incurred for professional legal services customarily performed by an attorney but delegated to and performed by an investigator, paralegal, or law clerk, and related costs; and

(B) be apportioned by alleged violation if a complaint alleges more than one violation, but only if the public officer provides clear documentation that the expenses paid were limited to the alleged violation for which the public officer is exonerated; and

(3) payment under this section may be made to or on behalf of a current public officer or a former public officer who was the subject of a pending complaint when the officer left state service or becomes the subject of a complaint after leaving state service.

Memorandum of Agreement for Representation and Liability Coverage and Workers' Compensation Coverage between

State of Alaska,
Department of Administration,
Division of Risk Management

and

State of Alaska,
Alaska Court System

RECEIVED
JUN 01 2010
DEPARTMENT OF ADMINISTRATION
COMMISSIONER'S OFFICE

The Division of Risk Management and the Alaska Court System agree that Risk Management will provide representation and liability coverage and workers' compensation coverage under the terms of this Memorandum of Agreement ("Agreement") for the Alaska Court System and its employees, for the Alaska Judicial Council and its members and employees, and for the Alaska Commission on Judicial Conduct and its members and employees.

The Alaska Court System, the Alaska Judicial Council, and the Alaska Commission on Judicial Conduct ("Court System") pay interagency assessments to Risk Management in exchange for coverage of tort liability and workers' compensation claims. Because Risk Management provides a program of self-insurance, this Agreement is not an insurance agreement.

This agreement confirms that based upon the receipt of these interagency funds the Division of Risk Management will provide the following services to the employees and members of the Court System:

(1) Defense and indemnity of third party tort liability claims for damages made against the Court System or its employees or members when acting within the scope of the employee's or members office or employment. For purposes of this agreement "acting within the scope of the employee's office or employment" is defined as set forth in AS 09.50.253(h)(1) and this definition is incorporated by reference. Third party liability claims for damages does not include claims or litigation arising out of employment scenarios (such as wrongful discharge, constructive discharge, employment related torts);

(2) Defense and indemnity of third party claims for damages brought pursuant to 42 USC sec. 1983 which meet the criteria in (1) above;

(3) If the criteria in (1) above is met, legal representation of employees and members will be provided to defend claims for punitive damages; however this agreement does not provide indemnity for punitive damage awards or judgments;

(4) Defense counsel for the above services will be provided through the State of Alaska, Department of Law, through Risk Management's RSA, unless there is an ethical conflict barring representation; and

(5) Claim processing and payment of workers compensation claims made by Court System employees where the Court System is the employer.

The Division of Risk Management will provide the following additional services to the Court System as set forth below:

(1) Risk Management will not provide representation or indemnification to an employee for disciplinary proceedings. However, Risk Management will provide limited coverage for disciplinary proceedings, if the alleged conduct is within the scope of the employee's or member's office or employment as defined in AS 09.50.253(h)(1) and does not allege a conflict of interest.

(a) For each disciplinary proceeding, an employee who retains a private attorney will be reimbursed up to $15,000 for the actual incurred costs (independent attorney fees and related legal expenses) incurred for that representation. Reimbursement will be made per disciplinary proceeding, notwithstanding the number of allegations contained within any complaint or charging document.

(b) Prior to reimbursement, the employee must first pay $3,000 for actual incurred costs (independent attorney fees and related legal expenses) for private representation.

(c) There is an annual aggregate limitation to this reimbursement by the Division of Risk Management to $45,000 per fiscal year (the period of July 1 through June 30).

(d) Risk Management will not provide reimbursement for proceedings that allege a conflict of interest between the employee's official capacity and the activities of the employee as a director, officer, partner, investor, or trustee of any private, public, or charitable organization, or to any other conflict of interest claim, unless a final adjudication has been made and no conflict was found to exist.

(e) "Disciplinary proceedings" means proceedings before the Alaska Commission on Judicial Conduct, the Alaska Bar Association, the Alaska Public Offices Commission, or any similar entity, but does not include proceedings brought under the Alaska Court System's Personnel Rules, or under any personnel rules adopted by the Alaska Judicial Council or the Alaska Commission on Judicial Conduct.

This agreement may be cancelled by either party upon 60 days' notice.

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act authorizing state agencies to pay private legal fees and costs incurred by persons exonerated of alleged Alaska Executive Branch Ethics Act violations; allowing certain public officers and former public officers to accept state payments to offset private legal fees and costs related to defending against an Alaska Executive Branch Ethics Act complaint; and creating certain exceptions to Alaska Executive Branch Ethics Act limitations on the use of state resources to provide or pay for transportation of spouses and children of the governor and the lieutenant governor."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

* Section 1. AS 39.52.120(b) is amended to read:

(b) A public officer may not

(1) seek other employment or contracts through the use or attempted use of official position;

(2) accept, receive, or solicit compensation for the performance of official duties or responsibilities from a person other than the state;

(3) use state time, property, equipment, or other facilities to benefit personal or financial interests;

(4) take or withhold official action in order to affect a matter in which the public officer has a personal or financial interest;

(5) attempt to benefit a personal or financial interest through coercion of a subordinate or require another public officer to perform services for the private benefit of the public officer at any time; or

(6) use or authorize the use of state funds, facilities, equipment, services, or another government asset or resource for a partisan political purpose [PURPOSES]; this paragraph does not prohibit use of the governor's residence for meetings to discuss political strategy and does not prohibit use of state aircraft or the communications equipment in the governor's residence so long as there is no charge to the state for the use [; IN THIS PARAGRAPH, "FOR PARTISAN POLITICAL PURPOSES"

(A) MEANS HAVING THE INTENT TO DIFFERENTIALLY BENEFIT OR HARM A

(i) CANDIDATE OR POTENTIAL CANDIDATE FOR ELECTIVE OFFICE; OR

(ii) POLITICAL PARTY OR GROUP;

(B) BUT DOES NOT INCLUDE HAVING THE INTENT TO BENEFIT THE PUBLIC INTEREST AT LARGE THROUGH THE NORMAL PERFORMANCE OF OFFICIAL DUTIES].

* Sec. 2. AS 39.52.120(f) is amended to read:

(f) Use of state aircraft for a partisan political purpose [PURPOSES] is permitted under (b) of this section only when the use is collateral or incidental to the normal performance of official duties and does not exceed 10 percent of the total of the use of the aircraft for official purposes and partisan political purposes, combined, on a single trip. A public officer who authorizes or makes any partisan political use of a state aircraft under (b) of this section shall disclose the authorization and use under AS 39.52.210 or 39.52.220 for each trip, and the person who uses the aircraft shall reimburse the state for the proportionate share of the actual cost of the use.

* Sec. 3. AS 39.52.120 is amended by adding new subsections to read:

(g) Notwithstanding (a) and (b)(1) - (5) of this section, state resources may be used to transport or pay the cost of transporting a person who is the spouse or child of the governor or lieutenant governor to an event. This subsection authorizes transportation or payment of the cost of transportation of a person who is a child of the governor or lieutenant governor if the person is a biological child, an adoptive child, or a stepchild of the governor or lieutenant governor and is under 19 years of age or, without regard to age, is dependent on the governor or lieutenant governor for care because of a physical or mental disability. Under this subsection, use of state resources is permitted if the event does not have a partisan political purpose and

(1) the person is transported with the governor or lieutenant governor and the state is reimbursed for the actual cost or, if the actual cost is not reasonably calculable, the fair market value of the person's transportation; or

(2) the person's attendance is a benefit to the state; under this paragraph, a benefit to the state is presumed when

(A) the person's attendance at the event is required for official action of the state;

(B) the event is state-sponsored and the person's attendance has been customary at similar events;

(C) the person is attending as an officially designated representative of the state; or

(D) the person is invited by the sponsor of the event before the transportation occurs, the event is related to issues important to the state, the governor or lieutenant governor attends, and

(i) the event is a family or youth oriented event at which the person's attendance is particularly appropriate; or

(ii) the invitation and the person's attendance have been customary for similar events.

(h) In this section, "partisan political purpose"

(1) means a purpose intended to differentially benefit or harm a

(A) candidate or potential candidate for elective office; or

(B) political party or group;

(2) does not include a purpose intended to benefit the public interest at large through the normal performance of official duties.

* Sec. 4. AS 39.52 is amended by adding a new section to article 5 to read:

Sec. 39.52.470. Legal fees and costs. (a) Notwithstanding AS 39.52.120, a state agency may pay the fees and costs of private legal representation that are incurred by a person who is a public officer or a former public officer while defending against a complaint initiated or filed under AS 39.52.310 concerning conduct by the person during a period when the person was serving or employed as a public officer, if the person has been exonerated. When a complaint has alleged more than one violation against a public officer or a former public officer, payments may be apportioned by alleged violation.

(b) A payment made under this section must be from funds that have been appropriated to a state agency and that may lawfully be used for the payment.

(c) Notwithstanding AS 39.52.120, a public officer or former public officer who is the subject of a complaint may accept a payment under (a) of this section.

(d) A public officer may not act for the state in the matter of a payment under this section if the payment is to the public officer or an immediate family member of the public officer.

(e) In this section,

(1) "exonerated" means that an allegation of a violation of AS 39.52 (Alaska Executive Branch Ethics Act) has, without corrective action under AS 39.52.330, been

(A) dismissed under AS 39.52.310(d), 39.52.320, or 39.52.370(d);

(B) dismissed after an appeal under AS 39.52.370(f); or

(C) resolved solely with a recommendation for preventive action under AS 39.52.330;

(2) "fees and costs of private legal representation" means reasonable fees and related costs of legal representation that are necessarily incurred in defense against the allegations in the complaint and may include fees for services customarily performed by an attorney but delegated to and performed by a person working under the supervision of an attorney licensed to practice in the state.

* Sec. 5. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

APPLICABILITY. AS 39.52.470, enacted by sec. 4 of this Act, applies only to complaints under AS 39.52.310 - 39.52.390 that are initiated or filed on or after the effective date of this Act.

MEMORANDUM

To: Representative Carl Gatto, Chair
House Judiciary Committee

From: Representative Mike Doogan

Date: April 4, 2011

Re: Hearing request for HB 15: Preventing, evaluating and liability for concussions in student athletes.

I respectfully request that House Bill 15, An Act relating to prevention and evaluation of and liability for concussions in student athletes, be scheduled for a hearing in the House Judiciary Committee.

Attached you will find a current version of the bill, a copy of the original bill, a sponsor statement, a sectional analysis, and pertinent background information.

We expect to have testimony from a representative of the National Football League, the Alaska Brain Injury Network, The Alaska School Activities Association and the Alaska Athletic Trainers Association. At least two of these will be off-net callers.

Please feel free to contact me or my aide, Frank Ameduri, with questions or thoughts at 465-2734.

HB 15

An Act relating to prevention and evaluation of and liability for traumatic brain injuries in student athletes

More than 60,000 high school student athletes sustain concussions each year. The number is much greater when you include middle school and younger children. The National Football League has recently begun focusing on concussions and brain trauma, raising public awareness of this serious problem, and many states are now moving to add protections for students who participate in sports or other potentially dangerous activities. While concussions and brain trauma are more prevalent in football, many other sports and activities are also dangerous, with girls' soccer resulting in the second-most concussions.

A concussion results from the brain striking the inside of the skull, and can be caused by a blow to the head, or by violent motion of the head. Though the risk can be somewhat reduced with a helmet, it cannot be prevented with external equipment. While it is nearly impossible to completely prevent an initial concussion or brain trauma, this legislation seeks to minimize complications and more permanent conditions that can be caused when athletes continue to practice or play after receiving a concussion.

HB 15 is modeled after legislation that recently passed in Washington State, known as the Zackery Lystedt Law. Zackery was a middle-school football player who was returned to a game after suffering a concussion. He sat out for about 15 minutes, and then returned to the game, forcing a game-saving fumble, but suffering a further head injury on the play. The second injury caused a brain hemorrhage that ultimately lead to the removal of both sides of Zackery's cranium, leaving him drifting in and out of a coma for three months. He has battled his way back to some sense of normalcy, but will never fully recover from this avoidable injury.

HB 15 simply requires school districts, in consultation with the Alaska School Activities Association, to develop and publish guidelines and information to educate coaches, student athletes and parents about the nature and risks of concussions and traumatic brain injuries. The bill will require that a student athlete suspected of suffering a concussion or brain trauma be removed from practice or play, and not be allowed to return until cleared by a licensed health care professional.

While there is no way to completely prevent concussions or traumatic brain injuries, we can strive to prevent the serious complications and potentially life-altering or life-threatening ramifications that can occur from continuing to practice or compete once a brain injury has occurred. This is a critical public health issue, and a responsibility to our children we should take seriously.

SECTIONAL ANALYSIS

HB 15
An Act relating to prevention and evaluation of and liability for traumatic brain injuries in student athletes.

Section 1: Adds a new section to the uncodified law of the State of Alaska that will explain statistics, risks and challenges related to youth-related concussions, including:

(1) Concussions rank high in reported brain trauma injuries to children participating in sports and recreational activities.
(2) The CDC estimates nearly 4 million sports- and rec-related concussions in the US every year.
(3) Provides the definition of a concussion and some of the consequences of concussions – the effects may or may not include loss of consciousness; disruption of normal brain function.
(4) Explains how concussions may occur during organized or unorganized sports and rec. activities – such as through a fall or from a collision with another player.
(5) Explains that the risks of catastrophic injury or death from head injuries increase without proper evaluation and management, and if the athlete is allowed to continue participating following the concussion.
(6) Explains that, in spite of nationwide guidelines recommending individual assessment and gradual return to play following concussions, athletes continue to be returned to play prematurely – increasing risk of greater injury.

Section 2: Amends AS 14.30 by adding new sections to article 3 that would establish requirements for school district governing bodies relating to prevention and reporting. It also clarifies points of liability and damages (more details below, if needed):

Sec. 14.30.142. Concussions in student athletes: prevention and reporting.
(a) Requires school district governing body to consult with Alaska School Activities Association to develop and publish guidelines, etc. to educate coaches, student athletes and parents about the nature and risks of concussions.
(b) A student suspected of having a concussion or traumatic brain injury is immediately removed from the practice or game.
(c) Before returning to play or practice, the student must be cleared by a licensed health care provider who has received training in evaluating and managing traumatic brain injuries, including concussions.
(d) This provision explains that an evaluator may not be held liable for civil damages, except where he/she acted recklessly or with intentional misconduct or gross negligence.

Sec. 14.30.143. Concussions: school district immunity.
(a) Explains that a school district may not be held liable for injury or death resulting from the action or inaction of an employee or contractor with a non-profit youth organization if –
(1) the action/inaction occurred on school property during the delivery of services by the district or organization;

(2) the organization is under contract with the district to provide the services, and

(3) before the provision of services, the organization provided to the district written verification of –

(A) a valid insurance policy covering the injury or death in an amount not less than $50,000 per person and $100,000 per incident;

(B) compliance with the protocol for prevention and reporting of traumatic brain injury required in AS 14.30.142.

(b) This section may not be construed to impair or modify a person's ability to recover damages for harm due to negligent or reckless actions of a school or district employee or contractor or by the existence of a condition, equipment, program or structure known by the school district or organization to be unsafe.

(c) "Youth organization" means a public or private entity, qualified to do business in the state, that provides a program or service to persons under 19 years old.

HB 15: An Act relating to prevention and evaluation of and liability for concussions in student athletes

Changes from original version

The current version of the bill before you has been changed in a few minor ways from the original bill.

- The title has changed, listing "concussions in student athletes," rather than "traumatic brain injuries in student athletes."
- On P. 3, lines 1-4, the definitions of qualified people who can release student athletes back to play have been expanded from the original bill, to address access challenges in rural communities, and also to allow certified athletic trainers to participate.
- On P. 3, line 14 the words "on school property" were deleted. Many school sponsored athletic events in Alaska do not happen on school property.

HOUSE BILL NO. 15

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

TWENTY-SEVENTH LEGISLATURE - FIRST SESSION

BY REPRESENTATIVES DOOGAN, Kerttula, Johnson, Muñoz

Introduced: 1/18/11
Referred: Education, Health and Social Services

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to prevention and evaluation of and liability for traumatic brain injuries in student athletes."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

* Section 1. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to read:

TRAUMATIC BRAIN INJURY; FINDINGS. The legislature finds that

(1) concussions rank among the most commonly reported traumatic brain injuries in children and adolescents who participate in sports and recreational activities;

(2) the United States Centers for Disease Control and Prevention estimates that as many as 3,900,000 concussions occur each year in the United States as a result of sports and recreational activities;

(3) a concussion is caused by a blow to or jarring of the head or body that causes the brain to move rapidly inside the skull, resulting in a mild to severe traumatic brain injury, which may occur with or without loss of consciousness, and may disrupt normal brain function;

(4) a concussion may occur during an organized or unorganized sport or recreational activity as a result of a fall or from players colliding with each other or another obstacle;

(5) the risk of catastrophic injury or death from a concussion or other head injury increases when the injury is not properly evaluated and managed, and the athlete is allowed to continue to participate in sports or recreational activities following the concussion;

(6) although voluntary nationwide guidelines for managing concussion in sports recommend assessing concussions on an individual basis, with gradual return to play, athletes continue to be returned to play prematurely, putting them at risk for greater injury or death.

* Sec. 2. AS 14.30 is amended by adding new sections to article 3 to read:

Sec. 14.30.142. Traumatic brain injury in student athletes: prevention and reporting. (a) The governing body of a school district shall consult with the Alaska School Activities Association to develop and publish guidelines and other information to educate coaches, student athletes, and parents of student athletes regarding the nature and risks of concussions and other traumatic brain injuries. Guidelines developed under this section must include a description of the risks of return to play and standards for return to play, including the procedures required under (b) and (c) of this section.

(b) A student who is suspected of having sustained a concussion or other traumatic brain injury during a practice or game shall be immediately removed from the practice or game.

(c) A student who has been removed from participation in a practice or game for suspicion of concussion or other traumatic brain injury may not return to play until the student has been evaluated and cleared for participation by a licensed health care provider who has received training in the evaluation and management of traumatic brain injuries, including concussions.

(d) A person who conducts an evaluation under (c) of this section may not be held liable for civil damages resulting from an act or omission during the evaluation, except that the person may be held liable for reckless or intentional misconduct and for gross negligence.

Sec. 14.30.143. Traumatic brain injury: school district immunity. (a) A school district may not be held liable for an injury to or the death of a person resulting from the action or inaction of a person employed by or under contract with a nonprofit youth organization if

(1) the action or inaction occurred on school property during the delivery of services by the district or organization;

(2) the organization is under contract with the district to provide the services; and

(3) before the provision of services, the organization provided to the district written verification of

(A) a valid insurance policy covering the injury or death in an amount not less than $50,000 for each person and $100,000 for each incident;

(B) compliance with the protocol for prevention and reporting of traumatic brain injury required in AS 14.30.142.

(b) This section may not be construed to impair or modify the ability of a person to recover damages for harm caused by the negligent or reckless actions of an employee or contractor of a school district or by the existence of a condition, equipment, program, or structure known by the school district or organization to be unsafe.

(c) In this section, "youth organization" means a public or private entity qualified to do business in the state that provides a program or service to persons under 19 years of age.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY AND DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS RESEARCHERS DISCOVER BRAIN TRAUMA IN SPORTS MAY CAUSE A NEW DISEASE THAT MIMICS ALS

Two former NFL players died after being diagnosed with Lou Gehrig's Disease; New findings suggest they had a new disease associated with repetitive brain trauma

(BOSTON) – The Center for the Study of Traumatic Encephalopathy (CSTE) at Boston University School of Medicine (BUSM) and Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) announced today that they have provided the first pathological evidence that repetitive head trauma experienced in collision sports is associated with motor neuron disease, a neurological condition that affects voluntary muscle movements. The most common form of motor neuron disease is amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS) or Lou Gehrig's disease. The findings will be published in the September issue of the Journal of Neuropathology and Experimental Neurology (http://journals.lww.com/jneuropath).

The finding was discovered by Ann McKee, MD, and colleagues at the CSTE. McKee, a CSTE Co-Director, is an associate professor of neurology and pathology at BUSM, as well as Director of Neuropathology for the Department of Veterans Affairs at the Bedford VA Medical Center, where this research was conducted.

McKee and the CSTE researchers made this groundbreaking pathological discovery while examining the brains and spinal cords of 12 athletes donated by family members to the CSTE Brain Bank at the Bedford VA Medical Center. Three of these 12 athletes, including former professional football players Wally Hilgenberg and Eric Scoggins, as well as an unidentified former military veteran and professional boxer, developed motor neuron disease late in their lives. The former football players were diagnosed clinically with ALS, which is a progressive neurodegenerative disease that attacks motor nerve cells in the brain and spinal cord, resulting in muscle weakness and atrophy. ALS affects fewer than two in 100,000 patients annually, and 30,000 Americans currently live with the disease. The majority of ALS cases (90-95 percent) are considered "sporadic," meaning of unknown cause, although it has long been suspected to involve a complex interaction between multiple genetic and environmental risk factors.

In this study, funded in part by an unrestricted gift from the National Football League (NFL) to the CSTE, McKee found that when they died, all 12 athletes showed neuropathological evidence of chronic traumatic encephalopathy (CTE), a progressive degenerative brain disease characterized by deposits of an abnormal form of tau protein and believed to be caused by repetitive head trauma. In the three athletes with motor neuron disease, abnormal tau protein deposits were not only found throughout the brain, but also in the spinal cord.

CSTE researchers also discovered that 10 of 12 CTE victims had a second abnormal protein, TDP-43, in their brains. Of those 10, only three had TDP-43 in the brain and the spinal cord, and those were the three athletes diagnosed with motor neuron disease. TDP-43 is also found in individuals with sporadic ALS although in the athletes with repetitive brain trauma, the TDP-43 pathology was more severe than found in sporadic ALS and was accompanied by extensive tau pathology. The brains and spinal cords of normal individuals show no TDP-43 or tau deposition.

These new findings suggest that the motor neuron disease that affected the three athletes is similar to, but distinct from sporadic ALS and represents a disease never described previously in the medical literature. This new disease, referred to as chronic traumatic encephalomyopathy (CTEM) by McKee and colleagues is likely caused by the repetitive head trauma experienced by athletes in contact sports.

The association between head trauma and ALS is supported by the medical literature, in which the risk of ALS has been reported to be higher among contact sport athletes and veterans. A study of professional soccer players in Italy found that the incidence rate of ALS was 6.5 times higher than in the general population. An increased incidence of ALS has also been reported in American football players, including three players from the 1964 San Francisco 49ers who died from ALS. Based on the number of retired NFL players with ALS, it is estimated that the risk is at least 8 times higher than in the adult male population. Among Veterans with a history of head injuries, their risk of ALS was 2.3 times higher than normal, and Gulf War Veterans have a twofold increased risk. In fact, since 2008, the US Department of Veterans Affairs has considered ALS as a presumptively compensable illness for all veterans. The discovery of this new ALS-like disease by the BU CSTE investigators suggests that one possible reason for the increased risk of clinically diagnosed ALS in veterans and in contact sport athletes may be the exposure to repetitive head trauma, including concussions, subconcussive blows and blast injuries.

These findings raise the question of whether head injuries may have contributed to Lou Gehrig's motor neuron disease, and whether he also suffered from CTEM. Gehrig, nicknamed the "Iron Horse," played football at Columbia University before becoming a legendary member of the New York Yankees and playing in 2,036 consecutive games, a record that stood for more than 60 years. Gehrig suffered at least five documented concussions and was reported to have been knocked unconscious for five minutes after taking a pitch to the head while not wearing a helmet. He played the next day.

"When we read reports about cases of the disease being linked to specific activities or experiences, such as the increased risk associated with military service, or this one regarding professional athletes, we are reminded of just how complex of a disorder ALS is. We're hopeful that this new work may shed light on potentially exciting new possibilities for biomarker and therapy development," said Steve Perrin, PhD, CEO and Chief Scientific Officer of the ALS Therapy Development Institute.

Responding to these new findings, Hunt Batjer, MD and Richard Ellenbogen, MD, the co-chairmen of the NFL's new Head, Neck and Spine Committee, stated, "We are pleased that the NFL has provided the support necessary for this research and look forward to continued discussion of the findings within our medical committee and with other researchers to better understand their clinical implications."

McKee now has analyzed the brains of more than 35 athletes and found evidence of CTE in 12 of 13 former NFL players. These brains were acquired primarily through the efforts of CSTE co-director Chris Nowinski who is also president of the non-profit Sports Legacy Institute. The CSTE maintains a registry of more than 350 living athletes who have agreed to donate their brain and spinal cord following death and to undergo telephone-based interviews and assessments during life. Robert Stern, PhD, CSTE co-director and an associate professor of neurology at BUSM, oversees the CSTE registry as well as a study about to begin of retired NFL players who undergo extensive neurological, cognitive, psychiatric, cerebrospinal fluid and neuroimaging studies. Robert Cantu, MD, a clinical professor of neurosurgery at BUSM and co-director of the CSTE, was recently appointed senior advisor to the NFL Head, Neck and Spine Committee.

Wally Hilgenberg died in 2008 at the age of 66 after a three-year battle with ALS. After graduating from the University of Iowa, Mr. Hilgenberg played 12 seasons with the Minnesota Vikings and three with the Detroit Lions as a linebacker.

Eric Scoggins died in 2009 at the age of 49 after a two-year battle with ALS. After graduating from the University of Southern California, he played one season for the San Francisco 49ers before playing two seasons in the United States Football League, for the Los Angeles Express and the Houston Gamblers.

Early symptoms of ALS often include increasing muscle weakness, especially involving the arms and legs, and progressive problems with speech, swallowing and breathing. Because voluntary muscle action is progressively affected, patients in the later stages of the disease may become totally paralyzed. In nearly all cases, ALS is fatal.

The CSTE (www.bu.edu/cste/) was founded in 2008 and is the leading center in the world studying the long-term effects of repetitive brain trauma in sports and the military. The CSTE was created as a collaboration between Boston University (BU), Sports Legacy Institute (SLI) and the Department of Veterans Affairs. Co-directors of the BU CSTE include Robert Cantu, MD, a clinical professor of neurosurgery at BUSM, Ann McKee, MD, an associate professor of neurology and pathology at BUSM, Chris Nowinski, and Robert Stern, PhD, an associate professor of neurology at BUSM. The mission of the CSTE is to conduct state-of-the-art research of CTE, including its neuropathology and pathogenesis, the clinical presentation, biomarkers, and course, the genetics and other risk factors for CTE, and ways of preventing and treating this cause of dementia. Brain trauma is increasingly seen as a public health crisis due to the discovery of CTE in a number of recently deceased athletes, most of whom have been studied at the CSTE. McKee also identified CTE in the only former NHL player examined, Reggie Fleming. The CSTE's groundbreaking research created a dramatic change in the understanding of and response to brain trauma and concussions in all sports, especially football. The BU CSTE has received grants from the National Institute on Aging and the National Operating Committee on Standards in Athletic Equipment (NOCSAE), and has received an unrestricted gift from the NFL.

CTE, originally referred to as "dementia pugilistica" because it was believed to only affect boxers, is a progressive brain disease believed to be caused by repetitive trauma to the brain, including concussions and subconcussive blows. It is characterized by deposits of an abnormal protein called tau in the form of neurofibrillary tangles, glial tangles, and neuropil threads throughout the brain, and, in some cases, the presence of another abnormal protein – associated with motor neuron disease – known as TDP-43. These abnormal proteins are associated with the impaired functioning and eventual death of brain cells. Early on, CTE sufferers may display symptoms such as memory impairment, emotional instability, erratic behavior, depression and problems with impulse control. CTE may eventually progress to full-blown dementia. Although similar to Alzheimer's disease, CTE is pathologically distinct, and it is the only known preventable cause of dementia.

CSTE co-directors Cantu, McKee and Nowinski serve on the NFL Players Association Mackey/White Traumatic Brain Injury Committee, which includes, and is chaired by, CSTE registry member Sean Morey. In addition, Cantu serves as a senior advisor to the newly created NFL Head, Neck and Spine Committee.

Sports Legacy Institute is a 501(c)(3) nonprofit corporation founded in 2007 to solve the sports concussion crisis. SLI is dedicated to education, prevention, treatment and research on the effects of concussions and other brain injuries in athletes and the military. SLI partnered with Boston University School of Medicine to form the Center for the Study of Traumatic Encephalopathy in 2008.

Journey Toward Understanding: Concussion & Mild Brain Injury

Introduction

Three little monkeys jumping on the bed.
One fell off and bumped his head.
Took him to the doctor and the doctor said,
"That's what you get for jumping on the bed!"

This nursery rhyme tells a story about concussion--the bumps, bangs and shakings to the brain that many adults and children experience. Unfortunately, just like the monkeys jumping on the bed, professionals may not understand concussion well enough to offer support and to help individuals who sustain concussions. People with concussions may just try and "shake it off" and, thus, not be evaluated and treated properly by professionals. It is not uncommon for individuals to be sent home from emergency rooms (ERs) with no follow-up care or to end up with long-term problems that no one understands. This paper will define concussion, present the common symptoms of concussions and discuss ways to help people who sustain concussions.

Each year, it is estimated that approximately 1.5 million people experience concussions. Vehicular crashes (cars, motorcycles, bicycles), sports/recreational activities (football, hockey, playgrounds), abuse/assault (shaken baby syndrome, beatings), falls (young children and the elderly) and other events all have been implicated. It is easy to see that almost any activity can put a person at risk for a concussion. It is a little surprising that people do so well avoiding concussions and equally not surprising that many of us have had concussions.

It is important to note that concussions clearly are associated with lifestyle and parallel other similar lifestyle injuries. If you are involved actively in sports that put your body at risk for muscle pulls, strains, sprains and broken bones, then your chances of a concussion also are great. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) estimates 300,000 sports-related concussions in the United States each year. The more risk to your body, the more risk of serious harm and permanent damage, and the greater the chances that a concussion or more permanent brain injury can occur.

If your job involves heavy labor in farm or construction settings, your chances of physical injury increase and the chances of a concussion increases as well. The use of substances, such as alcohol, that alter your judgment and coordination about everyday activities, like driving or even walking, put you at risk for physical injury and, therefore, at similar risk for a concussion or more serious brain injury. Children--especially younger children--are susceptible to sustaining concussions from falls, play activities and abuse. Lastly, older individuals with balance problems may be prone to falls that can result in not only broken hips, but concussions as well.

What is Concussion?

It is important to understand that a concussion is a physical injury to the brain that causes a disruption of normal functioning just like any other physical injury disrupts your normal functioning. For example, some ankle injuries (i.e., sprains and fractures) are more disruptive than others, just as some brain injuries are more disruptive than others. The better we understand any injury, the better our chances are for a speedier and healthier recovery.

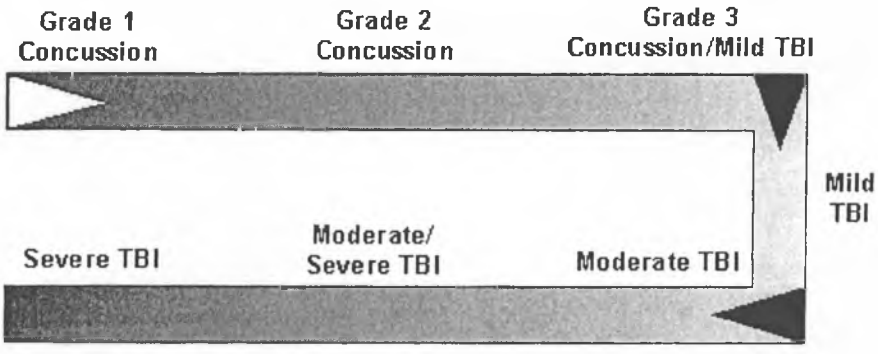
There is some confusion as to the definition of a concussion and the definition of a mild traumatic brain injury (MTBI). Brain injury can be viewed along a continuum that incorporates concussion, mild brain injury, moderate brain injury and severe brain injury. Each type of brain injury varies depending upon: 1) whether the person was unconscious, 2) how long he/she was unconscious, 3) the length of their amnesia, 4) the resulting cognitive, behavioral and physical problems and 5) the recovery. Viewed as a continuum, the severity of brain injuries can be represented as follows:



As one can see, the definition for a Grade 3 concussion and a MTBI tend to overlap on this continuum.

To further clarify, a concussion is defined as a trauma (i.e., a blow to the head or a serious whiplash) that induces an alteration in mental status (physical or cognitive abilities) that may or may not involve a loss of consciousness.
Concussion as detailed by guidelines developed by the American Academy of Neurology (AAN) and the Brain Injury Association (BIA), commonly is divided into three different types.

Grade 1 Concussion

- Person is confused but remains conscious.
- SIGNS: Temporarily confused, dazed, unable to think clearly, has trouble following directions
- TIME: Symptoms clear within 15 minutes

Grade 2 Concussion

- Person remains conscious, but develops amnesia .
- SIGNS: Similar to Grade 1
- TIME: Symptoms last more than 15 minutes

Grade 3 Concussion

- Person loses consciousness
- SIGNS: Noticeable disruption of brain function exhibited in physical, cognitive and behavioral ways.
- TIME: Unconsciousness for seconds or minutes

It is important to note that a person can sustain a concussion (Grades 1 & 2) without losing consciousness. A Grade 3 concussion involves the loss of consciousness, even if only briefly. As defined by the American Congress of Rehabilitation Medicine, MTBI is a traumatically induced physiological disruption of brain function as manifested by some or all of the following:

- Any period of loss of consciousness
- Any loss of memory for events immediately before or after the incident
- Any alteration in mental state at the time of incident
- Focal neurological deficits that may or may not be transient but does not exceed:
  1. Loss of consciousness of approximately 30 minutes or less
  2. An initial Glasgow Coma Scale score of 13-15 after 30 minutes
  3. Post-traumatic amnesia (PTA) of no more than 24 hours

If concussion and MTBI are seen as part of the brain injury continuum, with Grade 3 concussion and MTBI overlapping, one can get a better understanding of how these definitions compliment each other and enhance our understanding. BIA estimates that approximately 75% of all brain injuries fall in the "concussion-MTBI continuum."

The Functional Mechanics of Concussion

Two mechanisms currently are believed to underlie the changes following concussion. In the first, a sudden movement or direct force applied to the head can set the neural matter of the brain in motion even though the brain is well protected in the skull and very resilient. This motion squeezes, stretches and sometimes tears the neural cells, changing the precise balance and distance the cell's axons and dendrites maintain to transmit or process information.

The second mechanism involves changes that occur in the neuron's ability to produce energy for the cell's vital functions in structures called mitochondria. An initial increase in energy production occurs followed by a dramatic decrease that affects the ability of the cell to produce structural proteins to preserve the diameter of the axon. This change occurs gradually after the time of impact and may be responsible for the delay in symptoms sometimes observed.

The changes that occur affect the electrical or chemical aspects of neural cell functioning and result in unusual processing of normal information. (For this reason, radiologic studies that look at the structure of the brain, such as CT scans and MRI, are most frequently read as normal after concussion/MTBI.) This actually is quite adaptive because the brain cells automatically keep working to reconnect or establish normal impulse transmission. Even the loss of consciousness is adaptive, because the brain shuts down all unnecessary functions until the most important life sustaining neural adjustments are made. Unfortunately, sometimes these neural adjustments cannot be made quickly enough and death can occur.

As a person recovers, the cells re-establish the precise balance needed to ensure effective information processing, but this may mean some compensation or adjustments to the neural cell's original alignments. The more often neural cells must compensate or adjust to injury, the more likely the task takes longer and may not be as complete. For example, when a person sprains or fractures an ankle, professionals recommend cold/heat treatments, rest and supports (i.e., cast, brace) and specific exercises to help the ankle adjust to the injury and recover maximal function. Depending on the severity of the ankle injury (i.e., sprain, fracture) and what is required after recovery (i.e., long distance running, ballet), the severity of the injury to the ankle can disrupt a person's life. Obviously, a human brain is much more complicated than an ankle. Yet similarly, rest, supports (i.e., compensations, modifications) and "exercises" (i.e., therapies, education) for the brain may be recommended to rehabilitate and restore useful function. Depending on the severity of the concussion and what the person needs to do (i.e., care for a family, return to work or school, manage a large company), a concussion can disrupt a person's life for a short period of time or even longer.

To review, a concussion causes a disruption of normal brain function that may be a temporary inconvenience or result in permanent changes in brain function. Where there are complicating factors, the disturbance in brain function can be fatal. Because of the potential life-threatening danger associated with brain injury, the severity of any brain injury--including concussion--is determined at the time of the injury, based on measures of physical, cognitive and behavioral responsiveness. Again, the three categories commonly used to describe brain injury--mild, moderate and severe--indicate only how seriously impaired the person was at the time of the injury. Thus, on the brain injury scale of severity, a concussion usually is classified as a MTBI because the alterations in brain function are not severe enough or do not last long enough to be classified as moderate or severe brain injury. In the moderate and severe classifications, there appears to be direct damage to the brains neural network with long-term difficulties related to the sites of the damage. The long-term effects of MTBI on brain cell recovery and functioning and behavior vary across individuals. However, for most individuals, no long-term neuronal changes are noted after three to four months and the cognitive and behavioral adjustments return to normal.

Exceptions to this rule exist. Studies indicate that age (i.e., 40 years or older), the presence of a systemic disease (i.e., diabetes mellitus), and possibly female gender affect the recovery process. Other risk factors for delayed recovery include a history of previous brain injury or when situational and personality factors play a role in recovery. For example, individuals who sustain a second concussion while still symptomatic from the first one may sustain what is termed "second impact syndrome." This condition is very serious and can result in lifelong impairments, coma and even death. Individuals who sustain a series of multiple concussions over time (i.e., boxers, abused children) may be left with permanent impairments and disabilities. People who have mental health issues or other disabilities (i.e., attention deficits, learning disabilities) may find that a concussion further complicates their behavioral and learning challenges. Also, even litigation issues may complicate a person's recovery.

The symptoms of concussions cover a wide range of perceptual, sensory, cognitive, emotional and behavioral features. The TABLE below lists the common early and late symptoms of concussion:

Early Symptoms:

- Headache
- Dizziness or vertigo
- Lack of awareness of surroundings
- Nausea with or without memory dysfunction
- Vomiting

Later Symptoms:

- Persistent low grade headache
- Lightheadedness
- Poor attention and concentration
- Excessiveness or easy fatigue
- Intolerance of bright light or difficulty focusing vision
- Intolerance of loud noises
- Ringing in the ears

- Anxiety and depressed mood
- Irritability and low frustration tolerance

As you can see, many of the symptoms listed above are common to a variety of other natural human experiences. Feeling scared or anxious can make our vision change and cause dizzy feelings and numerous "fight or flight" reactions. Muscle cramps in the neck can give headaches, just as not having our usual dose of caffeine causes headaches. A virus can make us feel "spaced-out" and affect our balance. Depression can affect our cognitive abilities and memory. Being angry over changes due to an injury such as a broken arm can make us irritable and affect our motivation. And, as with concussion, if everyone else feels you "should be over it by now," being treated unfairly may cause hopelessness that makes it difficult to concentrate and sleep.

Recovery Variations after Concussion

Concussions vary, depending upon the type and the individual, hence, recovery varies as well. Some commonly asked questions by individuals who sustained concussions include:

Why is there so much variation in symptom presentations? This variation can best be explained because people differ and their perceptual experience of sensations such as pain and distress remains subjective. Without a technology (i.e., more sophisticated CT/MRI scanning technology) to measure these individual experiences, it remains difficult to determine when the brain's coping or healing has taken place and when the individual's reaction to the process has left perceptual and learned phenomena. Thus, we need to monitor the symptoms of concussion in order to monitor recovery. The following checklist can help individuals and their families monitor their recovery one to three months after a concussion so they can report this information to their physician or therapist. Symptoms that persist beyond the usual recovery time for concussion need to be evaluated and treated more carefully.

Physical Symptoms

- Headache, dizziness, lightheadedness
- Vomiting or nausea
- Numbness or tingling
- Balance problems, clumsiness, drops things, trips often
- Fatigue, tires easily, needs extra sleep, drowsiness, trouble falling asleep or staying asleep
- Sensitivity to light and noise
- Blurry vision
- Ringing in ears

Cognitive Symptoms

- Confusion, in a "fog," has befuddled expression, gets mixed up about time and place
- Attention or concentration problems, inability to do more than one thing at a time, unable to return to a task if interrupted
- Memory problems, forgets things
- Takes longer to get things done or complete assignments
- Has problems organizing thoughts or words, misunderstands things

Behavioral Symptoms

- Restless, irritable, fussy
- Acts without thinking

- Becomes upset easily, loses temper
- Sadness, depressed mood
- Anxiety, nervousness

Why some people adjust better after a concussion than others? Research in cognitive-behavioral therapy supports the notion that: 1) looking at the positive aspects of recovery, 2) taking steps to gain control of your rehabilitation and 3) knowing that fundamental healthy behavior requires a focused rehearsed plan all can contribute to dealing better with the many sensations and feelings that often follow concussion. Concussion needs to be taken seriously and modifications to a person's life (i.e., home, work, school) need to be made during the recovery period. Just because a person "looks great" does not mean that they are recovered fully. Having a good plan for recovery and knowledge about concussion helps individuals feel more in control and lessens their anxiety.

Why do concussive symptoms change over time? It now appears that during the first months after concussion the brain begins to heal and evidence suggests that there is little trace of brain damage after three to four months. During this period of time, sleep patterns return to normal, sensations mirror the brains recovery and efforts to return to normal and develop a sense of self are influenced by the rehabilitation process. For example, many strange sensations accompany recovery from a sprained or fractured ankle, including pain from the efforts a person makes to accommodate the recovery time (such as muscle atrophy), as well as sleeping and exercise changes due to limitations. Brain function is much more complex to understand and monitor. Yet, just as an ankle can "return to normal" over time, so can the brain after concussion.

Why can't professionals tell if there is permanent brain injury over time? Without doing an autopsy, brain function can only be estimated. For example, neurological testing can provide information about what a person might be able to do at this point in time, but without the same information from before the concussion, it is only possible to estimate how a concussion affected performance. Many professionals use various tools to help them understand the degree of brain damage (i.e., CAT scans, MRI, neuropsychological batteries, neurolinguistic assessment, functional behavioral analysis), but these tools are only approximations and it is difficult to predict the total impact a brain injury may have on a person's life. The best "predictor" is the person with the injury working with a dedicated team of professionals to identify and compensate for permanent damage.

Is permanent brain damage always bad? This is a trick question because the easy answer is that damage always means a loss of brain cells. Yet, many people can attest that the loss of brain cells does not mean that they themselves are "lost". Rather, many individuals have found the strategies and techniques they have used to cope with brain injury have been helpful in assisting them to become the person they felt they wanted to be all along--happy, loved, productive and important. The experience of coping with a rehabilitation or treatment program has helped them: 1) appreciate their talents, 2) give up bad habits and 3) become more mindful of what they truly wanted out of life. This is not to minimize the tremendous changes brain injury causes for people and their families, but rather to emphasize the importance of good treatment programs and community support to help people re-define their lives.

Treatment Recommendations

The only cure for brain injury is prevention. Obviously, the treatment of concussion starts with prevention. Thoughtful preparation before activities--knowing your limits; minimizing risk to one's head by wearing protective gear such as seat belts, helmets, hard hats; and being substance free when activities require concentration such as driving, bicycling, swimming, boating and skiing--all will reduce the likelihood of injury. Unfortunately, concussions often are difficult to prevent even with careful preparation and protective gear.

Immediately after a concussion, emergency care may be required. Since life-threatening complications--usually due to brain swelling and bleeding--can occur from any brain injury regardless of the type, all brain injuries must be taken seriously. The proper assessment of concussion by emergency medical professionals and physicians is critical.

AAN and the BIA have developed a clear, scientifically based set of guidelines for the medical management of concussion in sports that is used by team physicians, coaches and athletic trainers and can easily be adapted for all concussions. Thus, after the type of concussion has been determined, management guidelines are implemented. If an adult sustains a Grade 1 or 2 concussion, it may be wise for that person to rest for two or three days before returning to regular activities and not operate a motor vehicle for at least a week. If a child crashes a bicycle and the physician has examined and given them a clean bill of health, it is wise to keep the child off the bicycle for a week. As always with children, the rule should be that if it has wheels, you need a helmet.

The potential danger with concussion is sustaining a second one before allowing the brain time to rest and recovery from the first one (as we would for a broken ankle). The chart below summarizes AAN's management recommendations for athletes returning to play after concussion, but reworded for the general audience. Please remember that all concussions are potentially serious and an individual should be examined by a physician if there is any doubt about their safety.

Grade 1 Concussion Management Guidelines

If the person has no symptoms or mental status abnormalities 15 minutes after the injury, he/she can resume normal activities. All symptoms from the concussion must have disappeared, first at rest and then with exertional testing, before the individual can return to regular activities.

Grade 2 Concussion Management Guidelines

The individual should refrain from activities for at least one week, again only after the person is asymptomatic at rest and during exertion. Additionally, a physician should perform a neurological exam before the individual is allowed to go back to regular activities. If the individual experiences a worsening in headaches and other concussion symptoms and/or these symptoms last longer than a week, a CT scan or MRI is recommended.

Grade 3 Concussion Management Guidelines

One month should be the minimum period for an individual to return to rigorous activity. For an individual with a brief loss of consciousness (i.e., seconds), he/she can return to regular activities only after being asymptomatic for at least one week. For a person who had a prolonged loss of consciousness (i.e., minutes), he/she can resume normal activities no sooner than after two weeks of rest. A thorough neurological examination and a neuro-imaging study (i.e., CT scan, MRI) should be performed on all individuals who have been rendered unconscious for brief periods of time. The individual should be admitted to the hospital if any signs of pathology are detected and/or the mental status of the person remains abnormal.

Recovery after concussion--just like a sprained or fractured ankle--takes time. An individual with a broken ankle would not go out the next day and run a marathon. That individual likely would take time out from work, rest and put the leg up, use crutches, attend therapy, if necessary, and allow the ankle time to recover. Too often after concussion, many individuals immediately return to work or school, push themselves to think as well and as quickly as they did before and expect that in a day or two they are recovered fully. One of the problems with concussion is that people try and "get back on the horse" too quickly. The danger in doing this is that the person could sustain a second concussion (i.e., the athlete returns to the game; the child gets back on his/her bicycle; the person resumes driving a car) that could cause more serious injury to the brain. Or, if individuals push themselves to perform and/or are expected to perform by their colleagues and family too soon after the concussion, the symptoms may become exacerbated.
After a concussion, it is wise for people to modify their lives by: 1) reducing workloads, 2) building in rest periods, 3) giving more time to finishing projects, 4) developing a written plan to refer to when confused or uncertain, 5) using a notebook/calendar to write things down and check-off when completed, 6) writing down schedules with time, place and person and 7) avoiding the use of alcohol or other substances that may slow recovery.

It is also important to monitor symptoms over the next one to three months and report this data to one's physician and other treating professionals. Family members can become more knowledgeable about concussion and help the person make accommodations, monitor symptoms and ensure that--just like with a broken ankle--the person is given ample healing time. The use of other professionals, such as a Neuropsychologist, can help through testing to determine a person's strengths, needs and preferences. Psychologists and counselors may be extremely beneficial in helping people with more serious injuries to understand and adjust to any changes caused by the concussion. BIA, its chartered state affiliates and support groups may provide the person with education about concussion and where to go for additional help.

Conclusion

Concussion is the most common of all brain injuries. It needs to be better understood, evaluated and treated. Individuals who sustain concussions may experience an array of symptoms, both short, and long term. The important thing is to take any concussion seriously and recognize that recovery is dependent on many things.

Headbanger Nation

By Jeffrey Kluger

I didn't get a good look at the little boy who injured my daughter in the science museum in Mexico City. He seemed to be about 7, my daughter Elisa was not yet 3, and the two of them were part of a scrum of kids playing on an indoor patio. At precisely the wrong moment, she turned left, he turned right, and they collided. Physics being physics, the smaller mass yielded to the larger one, and my daughter fell down. She landed first on her bottom, then tipped backward and hit her head on the floor.

The sound was one that parents dread: the singular clunk of skull striking cement. I winced, Elisa wailed, and I gathered her up. Soon she stopped crying and went off to play, but even as she did, a dangerous process had begun to unfold inside her skull. (Read Dr. Mehmet Oz's column about concussions.)

When Elisa's head hit the floor, the deceleration was sudden, but — physics again — her brain stayed in motion for an instant, moving through the small intracranial space until it collided with the back of the inside of her skull. Concussive energy radiated through the tissue. As it did, channels in the neurons opened wide, allowing calcium ions to flow into the cells, depressing their ability to metabolize energy. Brain tissue began swelling, but with nowhere to go, it squeezed up against the skull wall. Shearing forces tore axons connecting the cells, damaging their myelin sheathing, which can disrupt nerve signals. All of that was the best-case scenario. The worst case was a brain bleed, which could be fatal without immediate surgery.

Within 20 minutes, Elisa grew withdrawn. An hour later, back in our hotel, she vomited and then began thrashing convulsively. We rushed her to a hospital, where doctors struggled to get a line into one of the tiny veins in her arm, shouting at her to stay awake.

"Open your eyes!" I shouted at her in English. "Abre tus ojitos!" my wife echoed. Elisa understood both languages; she answered in neither.

Finally, the doctors got her into a CT scanner, then administered an EEG. There was no bleeding, but there was swelling. Elisa spent three days in the hospital taking antiseizure and antiswelling medication and finally was released. On the flight home, she was a terror — but only in the way a toddler is supposed to be. (See a graphic on the physics behind concussions.)

For us, that was a first-time — and, we dearly hoped, last-time — experience, but we're hardly alone in having gone through it. In the U.S., concussions are an alarmingly commonplace injury, particularly among kids and most particularly among active, athletic ones. Up to 3.8 million Americans are getting concussed per year, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, and even that big a figure is a moving target. In 2005, the number of children who visited emergency rooms for treatment of concussions was more than twice what it had been in 1997, according to a new study in the journal Pediatrics. High school football players alone sustain 100,000 full-blown, diagnosed concussions per year. Flying under the radar are injuries mild enough to get passed off by coaches as a mere ding or ignored by players anxious to get back on the field.

According to a study by neuroscientist Kevin Guskiewicz of the University of North Carolina, the average college football player sustains a breathtaking 950 to 1,100 subconcussive blows per season — hits that are enough to do cumulative damage to young brain tissue but not enough to cause immediate symptoms. "There's what we call a dose response," Guskiewicz says. "After a certain number of hits, the damage starts to show."

But while football is responsible for more than half the concussions kids suffer playing team sports, there's a lot more blame to go around. The success of Title IX, which forbids gender discrimination in scholastic athletics, has led to a 900% increase in girls' sports teams since the law's passage in 1972. But guaranteeing girls equal access to sports also guarantees them equal access to injuries. Girls' soccer accounts for nearly 12% of total team-sports concussions, compared with just 6.6% for boys' soccer. Girls' basketball causes 7%. Even volleyball weighs in at 1.1%. (See a special report on women and health.)

What's more, a third of all concussions among kids are caused by nonteam activities such as ice skating, bicycling and playground recreation. Gaining fast too are newer head-cracking activities like snowboarding and extreme skateboarding. Kids may be the first group to fall in love with such sports, but they're the last group — neurologically speaking — that should engage in them.

"The immature brain is still developing," says Julian Bailes, a neurologist at West Virginia University and the medical director for the Pop Warner Youth Football program. "That makes it more susceptible to damage and more likely to suffer repetitive injury." How this shapes overall development is unknown. A child's brain is like a ship en route to somewhere: a concussion can blow it off course.

The severity of the damage — both acute and chronic — is what researchers are now trying to understand and what legislators and the sports-equipment industry are trying to control. Even as scientists look deeper into the physics, neurochemistry and genetics of brain injury, lawmakers are imposing new rules governing how kids should be assessed for concussions and when they should and should not be eligible to play. Equipment manufacturers, particularly those who make football helmets, are being pushed to redesign their product lines and reform the testing standards that essentially allow the industry to police itself. Pro teams too are feeling the heat for selling an elbow-throwing, stick-swinging, head-butting ethos that may be fine for millionaire athletes who know what they're getting into but is hurting, and in some cases killing, the kids who emulate them.

"I keep telling kids, Your brain is not your knee. It's not your shoulder. It's your future," says neuropsychologist Gerard Gioia, chief of pediatric neuropsychology at Children's National Medical Center in Washington. "We have to protect it better than we are." (See TIME's special report "How to Live 100 Years.")

The Science of a Hit

If it's football that receives most of the attention in conversations about concussions, it's partly because the hits inflicted in the game can be so shocking. In soccer, basketball or even hockey, violence is typically a by-product of aggressive play. In football, it is the play. Guskiewicz conducts his studies by placing accelerometers in players' helmets and recording not just how often they get hit but also how hard. The unit of measure he uses is g-force. Liftoff of a Saturn V moon rocket exposed its crew to a maximum of four g's. A roller coaster may exceed six g's. College football players, by contrast, collide with each other with an impact of nearly 23 g's — and that's the average. Higher-end blows range from 85 to 100 g's. "The highest we ever recorded was 180 g's," says Guskiewicz.

Worse, it's not necessary to be hit in the head for that kind of impact to do concussive damage. A player struck in the chest can suffer whiplash just like a passenger in a car accident, and when the head snaps back and forth, the brain sloshes around with it. "One sign," says Gioia, "is when a player complains of neck pain. That's often an indicator that the head has moved around hard."

Many of those blows don't necessarily lead to a concussion, and in a way, that's unfortunate. Only about 10% of concussions lead to loss of consciousness, but the other signs are hard to miss, including headache, vomiting, dizziness, balance problems, sensitivity to light or noise, confusion, irritability and amnesia. A player with any of those symptoms is likely to be sent to the bench — at least for a while. A player whose brain has been jolted at a subconcussive level is much likelier to stay on the field and return there week after week with no recuperation time. The damage that does can be deadly. (Read Dr. Mehmet Oz's column about concussions.)

In April 2010, University of Pennsylvania football star Owen Thomas committed suicide in his off-campus apartment, having never before exhibited any sign of mental illness. When researchers at Boston University examined his brain, they found it flecked with what are called tau proteins, telltale signs of a condition known as chronic traumatic encephalopathy (CTE), which is often seen among dementia patients and NFL players with a lifetime of concussions behind them. Thomas had never sustained a concussion, but that might not have mattered.

"He'd been playing since he was 9," says neuropsychologist Robert Stern, part of the team that conducted the analysis. "That suggests he had a great deal of exposure to repeated subconcussive blows."

The link between tau and brain damage is straightforward. The protein is one of the major structural materials of nerve tissues. When the brain is shaken too hard, nerve fibers are torn and the tau is released. The brain tries to clean up the mess, and given enough time, it could. If the hits keep coming, however, the proteins just accumulate. "I describe [the tau deposits] as a form of sludge," says Bailes.

It's not unusual for players like Thomas suffering from CTE to die in violent or otherwise dramatic ways. Bailes was part of a team that found tau protein in the brain of Chris Henry, a player for the Cincinnati Bengals who was killed in 2009 when he got into an argument with his fiancée and jumped on the back of her pickup truck as she drove away — taking a fatal tumble onto the road. In 2007 wrestler Chris Benoit murdered his wife and son and then hanged himself. In 2004 former Pittsburgh Steeler Justin Strzelczyk, who suffered from hallucinations, died when he drove his car into a tractor trailer while fleeing police. Both Benoit and Strzelczyk had CTE. "This disease starts young and progresses through life," says Stern.

Until recently, doctors didn't know just how young, but they're getting an idea. Michael (not his real name) is a ninth-grade football player visiting an outpatient concussion clinic Gioia runs in Rockville, Md. Michael got clobbered in a game in mid-September, suffered many of the immediate concussion symptoms and four months later is still not well. Recovery time varies for all patients, though three months is a good benchmark; four months suggests trouble. Michael's sleep remains disturbed, his temper remains erratic, and his school performance has cratered. An honor-roll student in eighth grade, he has gotten mostly D's and F's this year. "The change," says his mother, "it's shocking."

It's not possible to diagnose anything like CTE from just those symptoms, particularly because Michael's recent academic problems began before his concussion. But he already had a history of what he calls stingers, or head blows — none of which kept him off the field. What's more, his coach allowed him to return to play only a month or so after his recent concussion, a game in which he took another blow to the head, then lost his temper and got ejected.

Michael is hardly the only student athlete playing roulette with his brain, and his coach is hardly alone in abetting such recklessness. One study has shown that up to 40% of players who experience a concussion are back on the field before their brains have fully healed. That, Gioia says, is especially worrisome since sometimes two mild injuries can do more damage than one severe one. In some cases — mercifully rare — players who return to the field before they're fully recovered may even suffer what is known as malignant brain edema, or second-impact syndrome, in which another blow to the head leads to a fatal brain bleed. About half a dozen kids per year die from second impact. (Read Dr. Mehmet Oz's column about concussions.)

It's easy enough to make the case that any person who has suffered a brain injury needs a long period of recuperation before returning to vigorous physical activity. But what about vigorous intellectual activity? The brain is a cognitive machine, and it requires an enormous amount of energy to keep its gears moving. That's a fact concussed kids often confront when they resume their classwork after an injury and find that their symptoms return the moment they crack a book. "Cognitive exertion requires a high degree of metabolic activity," says Gioia. "If you have a brain that's already impaired, that ability is going to be reduced."

Mary, a high school junior and another patient at Gioia's clinic, has suffered three concussions over the past three years as a goalie for her soccer team. Surprisingly, it is not heading the ball that leads to most concussions in soccer — though the limited studies that have been done have looked only at young adults, and none have explored subconcussive injury. Rather, the damage is done mostly by collisions with other players or, as in Mary's case, with equipment. Her third concussion came last November, when she hit her head against the frame of the goal. She remains an honors student in the International Baccalaureate program in her high school, but the struggle to keep up that level of academic excellence has been grueling.

"I didn't have any exams until two months after the injury," she says. "But when I did, the headaches and fatigue came back immediately. I lost focus during one test and had no idea what I'd just written." She got through all the same and has gone back to school full time, but every day is a battle with pain, exhaustion and sensitivity to noise and light. She has also accepted that soccer — which was a passion — is just not an option anymore. "I can't afford another concussion," she says. (See a graphic on the physics behind concussions.)

Digging Deep

The fact that no two concussions follow the same recovery arc is one of the things that makes them so challenging to diagnose and treat. But that same particularity of injury also provides scientists insights into which people are at the greatest concussive risk.

Gender, for one thing, seems to play a role. Mary may be recovering faster from her injury than Michael is, but on the whole, females are both more susceptible to concussions than males are and suffer more-severe symptoms. So far, the reason for that gap is unclear. There is some thought that a girl's comparatively weaker neck muscles may leave her head more susceptible to violent shock. Hormones too may play a role. Among epileptic girls and women, rising and falling estrogen levels are known to make the brain more or less vulnerable to seizures. The thinking is that this may apply to concussion symptoms as well — though it's unclear whether a girl's hormonal makeup leaves her more concussion-prone throughout the month or just during menstruation. (See a special report on women and health.)

Genes may also be involved. The fact is, plenty of athletes make it through their careers battered and scarred but cerebrally intact, while others who may not get hit with any greater frequency suffer all manner of brain damage. Researchers at the Children's National Medical Center are studying the genomes of both concussed and nonconcussed kids, looking for markers that may explain the difference.

"There could be a genetic predisposition that affects metabolic activity," says geneticist Susan Knoblach. "People always assume that there's a genetic component in degenerative conditions but not acute ones, but of course there can be."

Maryland's Fairfax County has instituted a program in which student athletes spit into cups so their genetic profiles can be taken. The genomes of the ones who come down with concussions can then be compared for key similarities. Early attention is focusing on a gene that codes for a protein called ApoE, which has been implicated in Alzheimer's disease. In the long run, teasing out concussion genes could lead to better drugs or gene therapy to treat or prevent the injury. In the short run, it could help parents and coaches determine in advance which sports kids are best suited to play. Says Gioia: "We may actually find out, 'You know what? You're not set up to be a football player. You might be a better tennis player.'"

Newer brain-scanning technology is also making a difference, helping doctors diagnose concussions and track recovery. The microscopic size of tau proteins and nerve fibers makes them impossible to see without a postmortem exam, but three noninvasive techniques can help sidestep that problem. Magnetic resonance spectroscopy measures not direct damage to the brain but its metabolic activity — a good way to evaluate the very system that breaks down first when a brain is concussed. Diffusion tensor imaging can observe transmission along nerve-fiber tracks, providing a sense of the integrity of the neural wiring. And resting fMRI allows physicians to watch the brain when it's not performing a task, providing a look at basic function. (See TIME's special report "How to Live 100 Years.")

Changing the Rules

Smart medicine, of course, can do only so much to reverse the number of concussions. Smart policy must do the rest. To keep kids from hurting themselves — and to prevent coaches from enabling them — 10 states, including New Jersey, Oregon, Virginia and football-mad Oklahoma, have passed return-to-play laws requiring kids who have sustained even a suspected concussion in any sport to be pulled from play and not returned until a doctor or certified athletic trainer declares them fit. A handful of other states are considering similar legislation, and last year two separate bills along the same lines were introduced in the House of Representatives. Both will have to be resubmitted under the new GOP majority. Still, the national trend is clear: "When in doubt, sit them out" is how the advocates put it.

Most major professional sports leagues in the U.S., as well as most large universities and 4,000 high schools, now also use a computer program known as ImPACT (for Immediate Post-Concussion Assessment and Cognitive Testing) that measures such basic skills as memory, word recognition and pattern recognition. Players are required to take a baseline test at the beginning of the season and are periodically retested, especially postconcussion, to determine if there's been any erosion of skills. "I used to sit across from athletes doing paper-and-pencil memory tests," says ImPACT developer Mark Lovell, a neuropsychologist at the University of Pittsburgh Medical Center. "That would never work with large groups of kids. There aren't that many neuropsychologists alive."

Reform is also coming — slowly — to the major manufacturers of football helmets, driven mostly by the NFL, which has imposed much stricter concussion and tackling rules in the past season. The NFL is anxious both to protect its players and to shake its image as a weekly tutorial for student athletes learning all the wrong safety lessons from pros who should know better. Currently, the group that certifies helmets is the National Operating Committee on Standards for Athletic Equipment (NOCSAE), which sounds reassuringly official except for the fact that it's essentially funded by the manufacturers themselves. NOCSAE has come under fire not only for this seeming conflict of interest but also for what critics consider unreliable testing. The larger problem, though, is that the standard football helmet was designed to prevent only lacerations and fractures — a job it does very well — and to do little or nothing to prevent concussions. "The science just isn't there today," says Dr. Robert Cantu, a neurosurgeon at Boston University and a member of NOCSAE's board. (See a graphic on the physics behind concussions.)

That's not NOCSAE's or the NFL's fault, but they're trying to do something about it. In December the league and the helmet manufacturers convened a sort of head-injury summit in New York — a gathering that also included officials from NASCAR and the military — to consider helmet modifications that could reduce the concussive carnage. For football, those modifications could include better padding, stronger chin straps and redesigned face masks that distribute shock differently. Kids' helmets must also be more than simply smaller versions of those used by adults. The padding inside all helmets is designed to compress at the forces generated by colliding adult bodies. With the smaller forces kids produce, the padding stays rigid, essentially becoming one more hard surface for the head to strike. Innovations introduced in football could ripple out to other sports' playing fields, to say nothing of battlefields.

Athletics will never be stripped of all danger, and terrible as the blown knee or wrecked elbow may be, there is always an assumption of those risks when you elect to play the game. But the brain is more than a joint or a limb. It's the seat of the self. We overlook that fact at our peril and — much worse — at our children's.

The National Football League, USA Football, the Brain Injury Association of Washington, and the American College of Sports Medicine, among many other organizations, strongly support the adoption of laws to prevent traumatic brain injury in youth athletes in all fifty states. The Zackery Lystedt law, passed in Washington state, through the efforts and hard work of advocates in the medical, educational and athletic fields represents model legislation. The bill includes three elements essential to protecting youth athletes in all sports:

(1) Inform and educate youth athletes, their parents and guardians and require them to sign a concussion information form;
(2) Removal of a youth athlete who appears to have suffered a concussion from play or practice at the time of the suspected concussion; and
(3) Requiring a youth athlete to be cleared by a licensed health care professional trained in the evaluation and management of concussions before returning to play or practice.

This packet of materials includes information about the Zackery Lystedt law and frequently asked questions regarding it. In addition, educational materials on the topic of youth concussions are included. These documents published by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and USA Football and endorsed by the American College of Sports Medicine, the National Football League, USA Football, and the Brain Injury Association of Washington will provide significant information about youth concussions.

As of November 2010, nine states have adopted laws containing the three key provisions of the Zackery Lystedt law. We encourage you to adopt a similar law in your state and encourage you to reach out to our organizations if we can be of assistance.

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS ABOUT CONCUSSION-PREVENTION LAWS

How widespread are concussions among youth athletes?

An estimated 400,000 high school athletes sustained concussions while participating in five major male sports and four major female sports during the 2005-2008 school years[i]. In addition, experts believe that the prevalence of sports-related concussions among young people in all sports is significantly higher than reported.

Moreover, the number of youth athletes taken to emergency rooms with sports-related concussions doubled during the 10-year-period from 1997 to 2007[ii]. Meanwhile, among youth aged 14 to 19, emergency room visits for concussions sustained during team sports more than tripled over the same period[iii].

What dangers do these head injuries pose to young athletes?

A concussion is a type of traumatic brain injury, or TBI, which changes the way the brain normally works. Recognizing and responding to concussions when they first occur help to aid recovery and to prevent prolonging concussion symptoms, chronic brain damage or even death. Yet, a recent study estimated that more than 40 percent of high school athletes return to participate in school athletics before they have fully recovered from these serious head injuries[iv].

Do concussions involve youth athletes in all sports and at any age or is it just an injury sustained by boys who play football?

Concussions can occur in athletes of any age and in any sport or recreational activity. In fact, each year, U.S. emergency departments treat an estimated 135,000 sports-related and recreation-related TBIs, including concussions, among children ages 5 to 18[v]. In addition, children and teens are more likely to get a concussion and take longer to recover than adults. While youth sports concussions often are associated with football, the rate of concussions in girl's high school soccer is almost as high. Research also indicates that there may be gender differences in how boys and girls recover from concussions.[vi]

How many states have enacted laws related to concussion-awareness, prevention and management?

As of October 2010, eight states have adopted similar concussion-awareness and prevention laws initially adopted in Washington, known as the Zackery Lystedt law, including Oregon, New Mexico, Connecticut, Oklahoma, Virginia, Massachusetts and Rhode Island. In many other states, active coalitions are pushing to enact similar legislation.

What are the key elements of a concussion-prevention and management bill?

An effective concussion-prevention bill follows the example of the State of Washington's Zackery Lystedt law. It includes three essential elements: (1) inform and educate student athletes, their parents and guardians and require them to sign a concussion information form; (2) removal of a student-athlete who appears to have suffered a concussion from play or practice at the time of the suspected concussion; and (3) requiring an athlete to be cleared by a licensed medical professional trained in the evaluation and management of concussions before returning to play or practice.

There is an international consensus on return to play guidelines for youth, adopted at the 3rd International Conference on Concussion in Sport in Zurich, in November 2008, which states that "It is not appropriate for a child or adolescent athlete with concussion to RTP on the same day as the injury regardless of the level of athletic performance."[vii]

What is the cost of implementing a concussion prevention and awareness bill?

Zero. The bill is revenue neutral. There are no mandates in the bill and no requirements that resources be spent to hire or train medical professionals or to purchase equipment. Free information on concussions for high school and youth coaches, parents, athletes, as well as school professionals is publicly available on the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's (CDC) website at www.cdc.gov/Concussion, including a youth concussions poster found at www.cdc.gov/concussion/pdf/poster_Eng.pdf designed to hang in every locker room across the country.

What are the penalties for violating the concussion prevention and awareness law? Who is liable if the law is not followed?

There is no liability attached to Washington's Zackery Lystedt law. It does not mandate any civil or criminal penalties, nor does it create greater liability for individuals and/or organizations. Indeed, the education and awareness efforts and requirement of medical clearance before return to play has decreased the variability of care and decreased liability. Wherever the law is passed, the community can determine if and how to monitor and enforce the law.

What about implementing the law in rural areas where it may be more challenging to find medical professionals?

The law does not require a specific medical specialist to participate in every evaluation. Rather, the language of the Washington statute requiring an athlete "to be cleared by a licensed medical professional trained in the evaluation and management of concussions before returning to play or practice" permits a wide range of qualified individuals to determine a youth athlete's suitability for returning to play. For example, in Washington State, the Washington Interscholastic Activities Association decided that qualifying medical professionals included: medical doctors, osteopaths, nurse practitioners, athletic trainers, and physician assistants.

What is the impact of concussion-prevention laws on private sports organizations?

These laws may be written in such a way as to apply not only to public sports organizations but also to private sports organizations, many of which maintain public-sector connections/affiliations (such as the use of public facilities). For example, in Washington private sports groups are required by law to carry insurance to play on publicly-owned playing fields. The Zackery Lystedt law amended that insurance-based law to require private nonprofits to comply with the policies on the management of concussions and head injuries in youth sports.

What impact have concussion-prevention laws had in states that have passed them?

The Zackery Lystedt law was the first concussion-prevention state law to pass in 2009. While no comprehensive and detailed assessment can yet be made, early and anecdotal data suggests that the law is having an immediate and positive impact. It is helping meet a critical goal -- preventing preventable brain injuries and making sports and recreational activities safer for youth.

What organizations have supported such measures?

A broad coalition of groups representing teachers and parents, sports medicine, medical professionals, school administrators, the disability community and athletic organizations have supported concussion-prevention legislation at the state and federal level. These organizations include the National Football League, American College of Sports Medicine, USA Football, National School Boards Association, Parent Teacher Association, National Association of School Nurses, National Council of Youth Sports, The Sarah Jane Brain Foundation, National Disability Rights Network, National Athletic Trainers' Association, National Association of Health and Fitness, the Brain Injury Association of America, the Brain Injury Association of Washington, and many others.

What law, if any, has Congress proposed or passed regarding concussion prevention and awareness?

The "Protecting Student Athletes from Concussions Act of 2010" incorporates the same core principles of the Lystedt law and was introduced in Congress in September of 2010. If passed, the bill would require school districts to develop and implement a minimum standard, community-based plan for concussion safety and management. Of course, states would be able to implement standards far exceeding these basic, minimum standards.

Where may I find/read a copy of the Zackery Lystedt law?

The Zackery Lystedt law may be found in this packet. It may also be found online by visiting: http://www.leg.wa.gov/CodeReviser/documents/sessionlaw/2009pam3.pdf

Where may I find more information about the dangers of concussions and passing a law in my state?

More information about concussions may be found on the website of the CDC. You also may watch an NFL-produced video about enacting a concussions-prevention law in your state, which is available at NFL.com/youthconcussions and on the CDC's website as well.

ENGROSSED HOUSE BILL 1824

AS AMENDED BY THE SENATE

Passed Legislature - 2009 Regular Session

State of Washington 61st Legislature 2009 Regular Session

By Representatives Rodne, Quall, Anderson, Liias, Walsh, Pettigrew, Priest, Simpson, Kessler, Rolfes, Johnson, Sullivan, and Morrell

Read first time 01/30/09. Referred to Committee on Education.

AN ACT Relating to requiring the adoption of policies for the management of concussion and head injury in youth sports; amending RCW 4.24.660; and adding a new section to chapter 28A.600 RCW.

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF WASHINGTON:

Sec. 1. RCW 4.24.660 and 1999 c 316 s 3 are each amended to read as follows:

(1) A school district shall not be liable for an injury to or the death of a person due to action or inaction of persons employed by, or under contract with, a youth program if:

(a) The action or inaction takes place on school property and during the delivery of services of the youth program;

(b) The private nonprofit group provides proof of being insured, under an accident and liability policy issued by an insurance company authorized to do business in this state, that covers any injury or damage arising from delivery of its services. Coverage for a policy meeting the requirements of this section must be at least fifty thousand dollars due to bodily injury or death of one person, or at least one hundred thousand dollars due to bodily injury or death of two or more persons in any incident. The private nonprofit shall also provide a statement of compliance with the policies for the management of concussion and head injury in youth sports as set forth in section 2 of this act; and

(c) The group provides proof of such insurance before the first use of the school facilities. The immunity granted shall last only as long as the insurance remains in effect.

(2) Immunity under this section does not apply to any school district before January 1, 2000.

(3) As used in this section, "youth programs" means any program or service, offered by a private nonprofit group, that is operated primarily to provide persons under the age of eighteen with opportunities to participate in services or programs.

(4) This section does not impair or change the ability of any person to recover damages for harm done by: (a) Any contractor or employee of a school district acting in his or her capacity as a contractor or employee; or (b) the existence of unsafe facilities or structures or programs of any school district.

NEW SECTION. Sec. 2. A new section is added to chapter 28A.600 RCW to read as follows:

(1)(a) Concussions are one of the most commonly reported injuries in children and adolescents who participate in sports and recreational activities. The centers for disease control and prevention estimates that as many as three million nine hundred thousand sports-related and recreation-related concussions occur in the United States each year. A concussion is caused by a blow or motion to the head or body that causes the brain to move rapidly inside the skull. The risk of catastrophic injuries or death are significant when a concussion or head injury is not properly evaluated and managed.

(b) Concussions are a type of brain injury that can range from mild to severe and can disrupt the way the brain normally works. Concussions can occur in any organized or unorganized sport or recreational activity and can result from a fall or from players colliding with each other, the ground, or with obstacles. Concussions occur with or without loss of consciousness, but the vast majority occurs without loss of consciousness.

(c) Continuing to play with a concussion or symptoms of head injury leaves the young athlete especially vulnerable to greater injury and even death. The legislature recognizes that, despite having generally recognized return to play standards for concussion and head injury, some affected youth athletes are prematurely returned to play resulting in actual or potential physical injury or death to youth athletes in the state of Washington.

(2) Each school district's board of directors shall work in concert with the Washington interscholastic activities association to develop the guidelines and other pertinent information and forms to inform and educate coaches, youth athletes, and their parents and/or guardians of the nature and risk of concussion and head injury including continuing to play after concussion or head injury. On a yearly basis, a concussion and head injury information sheet shall be signed and returned by the youth athlete and the athlete's parent and/or guardian prior to the youth athlete's initiating practice or competition.

(3) A youth athlete who is suspected of sustaining a concussion or head injury in a practice or game shall be removed from competition at that time.

(4) A youth athlete who has been removed from play may not return to play until the athlete is evaluated by a licensed health care provider trained in the evaluation and management of concussion and receives written clearance to return to play from that health care provider. The health care provider may be a volunteer. A volunteer who authorizes a youth athlete to return to play is not liable for civil damages resulting from any act or omission in the rendering of such care, other than acts or omissions constituting gross negligence or willful or wanton misconduct.

(5) This section may be known and cited as the Zackery Lystedt law.

Passed by the House April 20, 2009.
Passed by the Senate April 2, 2009.

Concussion Information Sheet

A concussion is a brain injury and all brain injuries are serious. They are caused by a bump, blow, or jolt to the head, or by a blow to another part of the body with the force transmitted to the head. They can range from mild to severe and can disrupt the way the brain normally works. Even though most concussions are mild, all concussions are potentially serious and may result in complications including prolonged brain damage and death if not recognized and managed properly. In other words, even a "ding" or a bump on the head can be serious. You can't see a concussion and most sports concussions occur without loss of consciousness. Signs and symptoms of concussion may show up right after the injury or can take hours or days to fully appear. If your child reports any symptoms of concussion, or if you notice the symptoms or signs of concussion yourself, seek medical attention right away.

Symptoms may include one or more of the following:
• Headaches • "Pressure in head" • Nausea or vomiting • Neck pain • Balance problems or dizziness • Blurred, double, or fuzzy vision • Sensitivity to light or noise • Feeling sluggish or slowed down • Feeling foggy or groggy • Drowsiness • Change in sleep patterns	• Amnesia • "Don't feel right" • Fatigue or low energy • Sadness • Nervousness or anxiety • Irritability • More emotional • Confusion • Concentration or memory problems (forgetting game plays) • Repeating the same question/comment

Signs observed by teammates, parents and coaches include:
• Appears dazed • Vacant facial expression • Confused about assignment • Forgets plays • Is unsure of game, score, or opponent • Moves clumsily or displays incoordination • Answers questions slowly • Slurred speech • Shows behavior or personality changes • Can't recall events prior to hit • Can't recall events after hit • Seizures or convulsions • Any change in typical behavior or personality • Loses consciousness

What can happen if my child keeps on playing with a concussion or returns too soon?

Concussion Information Sheet

Athletes with the signs and symptoms of concussion should be removed from play immediately. Continuing to play with the signs and symptoms of a concussion leaves the young athlete especially vulnerable to greater injury. There is an increased risk of significant damage from a concussion for a period of time after that concussion occurs, particularly if the athlete suffers another concussion before completely recovering from the first one. This can lead to prolonged recovery, or even to severe brain swelling (second impact syndrome) with devastating and even fatal consequences. It is well known that adolescent or teenage athletes will often fail to report symptoms of injuries. Concussions are no different. As a result, education of administrators, coaches, parents and students is the key to student-athlete's safety.

If you think your child has suffered a concussion

Any athlete even suspected of suffering a concussion should be removed from the game or practice immediately. No athlete may return to activity after an apparent head injury or concussion, regardless of how mild it seems or how quickly symptoms clear, without medical clearance. Close observation of the athlete should continue for several hours. The new "Zackery Lystedt Law" in Washington now requires the consistent and uniform implementation of long and well-established return-to-play concussion guidelines that have been recommended for several years:

> "a youth athlete who is suspected of sustaining a concussion or head injury in a practice or game shall be removed from competition at that time"
> "...may not return to play until the athlete is evaluated by a licensed heath care provider trained in the evaluation and management of concussion and received written clearance to return to play from that health care provider".

You should also inform your child's coach if you think that your child may have a concussion. Remember it's better to miss one game than miss the whole season. And when in doubt, the athlete sits out.

New York, NY 10017-1206

Dear Commissioner Goodell:

From the time I was first approached to support a law to protect youth athletes from the risks of concussions, I have focused on, and learned much about, this important issue. We all share the desire to protect our children from serious, yet preventable, health risks. This is why I am pleased to share Washington State's experience with the Zackery Lystedt Law.

I feel it is my responsibility to protect the health and safety of our young athletes while carefully limiting the cost to Washington State taxpayers. Our state, like many others in our country, is facing significant budget challenges, so any new expenditures have to be carefully scrutinized.

I am thrilled to report that the Zackery Lystedt Law is working. We are seeing a decrease in concussions and other head injuries in our student athlete population. I believe the adoption of this important legislation has saved our state money in emergency medical care, rehabilitation, and other services children need when they suffer the consequences of untreated brain injuries. In addition, school districts have not been required to hire medical professionals or trainers, and no additional significant investments were needed to comply with this law.

Thank you for your leadership in working to have a version of the Zackery Lystedt Law adopted around the country. Please feel free to share this with other states as you work to keep our country's children active and safe.

Sincerely,

Chris

Christine O. Gregoire

Heads Up Online Training Course

Heads Up: Concussion in Youth Sports is a free, online course available to coaches, parents, and others helping to keep athletes safe from concussion. It features interviews with leading experts, dynamic graphics and interactive exercises, and compelling storytelling to help you recognize a concussion and know how to respond if you think that your athlete might have a concussion.

What You Will Learn

This course will help you:

- Understand a concussion and the potential consequences of this injury,
- Recognize concussion signs and symptoms and how to respond,
- Learn about steps for returning to activity (play and school) after a concussion, and
- Focus on prevention and preparedness to help keep athletes safe season-to-season.

You can help make your league and school sports safer and healthier for all athletes. Learn when to make the call to pull an athlete off the field, ice, court, or track, and work with athletes, parents, and league and school officials to implement a concussion action plan and prevention strategies.

Course Highlights

Concussion Basics

- Understand concussion and what happens to the brain,
- Discover what causes a concussion, and
- Learn the potential consequences of concussion.

Recognize and Respond to a Suspected Concussion

- Focus on what to look for and when to pull athletes out of play,
- Watch for danger signs and seeking immediate medical attention, and
- Learn the four-step, "Heads Up" action plan when a concussion is suspected.

Helping Athletes Get Back to Play and to School

- Characterize the gradual steps for returning to activity (play and school), and
- Review a concussion preparedness checklist to guide you through pre-, mid-, and post-seasons.

Resource Center

- Access additional concussion information, videos, presentations by leading experts, fact sheets, communication strategies for talking with parents and athletes, and other tools.

HEADS·UP CONCUSSION IN HIGH SCHOOL SPORTS

A FACT SHEET FOR PARENTS

What is a concussion?

A concussion is a brain injury. Concussions are caused by a bump, blow, or jolt to the head or body. Even a "ding," "getting your bell rung," or what seems to be a mild bump or blow to the head can be serious.

What are the signs and symptoms?

You can't see a concussion. Signs and symptoms of concussion can show up right after the injury or may not appear or be noticed until days after the injury. If your teen reports one or more symptoms of concussion listed below, or if you notice the symptoms yourself, keep your teen out of play and seek medical attention right away.

Signs Observed by Parents or Guardians	Symptoms Reported by Athlete
• Appears dazed or stunned • Is confused about assignment or position • Forgets an instruction • Is unsure of game, score, or opponent • Moves clumsily • Answers questions slowly • Loses consciousness (even briefly) • Shows mood, behavior, or personality changes • Can't recall events prior to hit or fall • Can't recall events after hit or fall	• Headache or "pressure" in head • Nausea or vomiting • Balance problems or dizziness • Double or blurry vision • Sensitivity to light or noise • Feeling sluggish, hazy, foggy, or groggy • Concentration or memory problems • Confusion • Just not "feeling right" or is "feeling down"

How can you help your teen prevent a concussion?

Every sport is different, but there are steps your teens can take to protect themselves from concussion and other injuries.

- Make sure they wear the right protective equipment for their activity. It should fit properly, be well maintained, and be worn consistently and correctly.
- Ensure that they follow their coaches' rules for safety and the rules of the sport.
- Encourage them to practice good sportsmanship at all times.

What should you do if you think your teen has a concussion?

1. Keep your teen out of play. If your teen has a concussion, her/his brain needs time to heal. Don't let your teen return to play the day of the injury and until a health care professional, experienced in evaluating for concussion, says your teen is symptom-free and it's OK to return to play. A repeat concussion that occurs before the brain recovers from the first—usually within a short period of time (hours, days, or weeks)—can slow recovery or increase the likelihood of having long-term problems. In rare cases, repeat concussions can result in edema (brain swelling), permanent brain damage, and even death.
2. Seek medical attention right away. A health care professional experienced in evaluating for concussion will be able to decide how serious the concussion is and when it is safe for your teen to return to sports.
3. Teach your teen that it's not smart to play with a concussion. Rest is key after a concussion. Sometimes athletes wrongly believe that it shows strength and courage to play injured. Discourage others from pressuring injured athletes to play. Don't let your teen convince you that s/he's "just fine."
4. Tell all of your teen's coaches and the student's school nurse about ANY concussion. Coaches, school nurses, and other school staff should know if your teen has ever had a concussion. Your teen may need to limit activities while s/he is recovering from a concussion. Things such as studying, driving, working on a computer, playing video games, or exercising may cause concussion symptoms to reappear or get worse. Talk to your health care professional, as well as your teen's coaches, school nurse, and teachers. If needed, they can help adjust your teen's school activities during her/his recovery.

If you think your teen has a concussion:
Don't assess it yourself. Take him/her out of play. Seek the advice of a health care professional.

It's better to miss one game than the whole season.

A Fact Sheet for ATHLETES

WHAT IS A CONCUSSION?

A concussion is a brain injury that:

- Is caused by a bump or blow to the head
- Can change the way your brain normally works
- Can occur during practices or games in any sport
- Can happen even if you haven't been knocked out
- Can be serious even if you've just been "dinged"

WHAT ARE THE SYMPTOMS OF A CONCUSSION?

- Headache or "pressure" in head
- Nausea or vomiting
- Balance problems or dizziness
- Double or blurry vision
- Bothered by light
- Bothered by noise
- Feeling sluggish, hazy, foggy, or groggy
- Difficulty paying attention
- Memory problems
- Confusion
- Does not "feel right"

WHAT SHOULD I DO IF I THINK I HAVE A CONCUSSION?

- Tell your coaches and your parents. Never ignore a bump or blow to the head even if you feel fine. Also, tell your coach if one of your teammates might have a concussion.
- Get a medical check up. A doctor or health care professional can tell you if you have a concussion and when you are OK to return to play.
- Give yourself time to get better. If you have had a concussion, your brain needs time to heal. While your brain is still healing, you are much more likely to have a second concussion. Second or later concussions can cause damage to your brain. It is important to rest until you get approval from a doctor or health care professional to return to play.

HOW CAN I PREVENT A CONCUSSION?

Every sport is different, but there are steps you can take to protect yourself.

- Follow your coach's rules for safety and the rules of the sport.
- Practice good sportsmanship at all times.
- Use the proper sports equipment, including personal protective equipment (such as helmets, padding, shin guards, and eye and mouth guards). In order for equipment to protect you, it must be:
  - The right equipment for the game, position, or activity
  - Worn correctly and fit well
  - Used every time you play

CONCUSSION

A Must Read for Young Athletes | Let's Take Brain Injuries Out of Play

CONCUSSION FACTS

- A concussion is a brain injury that affects how your brain works.
- A concussion is caused by a blow to the head or body:
  - from contact with another player, hitting a hard surface such as the ground, ice, or court, or
  - being hit by a piece of equipment such as a lacrosse stick, hockey puck, or field hockey ball.
- A concussion can happen even if you haven't been knocked unconscious.
- If you think you have a concussion, you should not return to play on the day of the injury and until a health care professional says you are OK to return to play.

CONCUSSION SYMPTOMS

- Concussion symptoms differ with each person and with each injury, and may not be noticeable for hours or days. Common symptoms include:
  - Headache
  - Confusion
  - Difficulty remembering or paying attention
  - Balance problems or dizziness
  - Feeling sluggish, hazy, foggy, or groggy
  - Feeling irritable, more emotional, or "down"
  - Nausea or vomiting
  - Bothered by light or noise
  - Double or blurry vision
  - Slowed reaction time
  - Sleep problems
  - Loss of consciousness

During recovery, exercising or activities that involve a lot of concentration (such as studying, working on the computer, or playing video games) may cause concussion symptoms to reappear or get worse.

WHY SHOULD I REPORT MY SYMPTOMS?

- Unlike with some other injuries, playing or practicing with concussion symptoms is dangerous and can lead to a longer recovery and a delay in your return to play.
- While your brain is still healing, you are much more likely to have another concussion. Repeat concussions can increase the time it takes for you to recover and the likelihood of long term problems.
- In rare cases, repeat concussions in young athletes can result in brain swelling or permanent damage to your brain. They can even be fatal.

For more information about concussion and other types of traumatic brain injuries, go to www.cdc.gov/Concussion

A part of CDC's Heads Up series

What Should I Do if I Think I Have a Concussion?

DON'T HIDE IT, REPORT IT. Ignoring your symptoms and trying to "tough it out" often makes symptoms worse. Tell your coach, parent, and athletic trainer if you think you or one of your teammates may have a concussion. Don't let anyone pressure you into continuing to practice or play with a concussion.

GET CHECKED OUT. Only a health care professional can tell if you have a concussion and when it's OK to return to play. Sports have injury timeouts and player substitutions so that you can get checked out and the team can perform at its best. The sooner you get checked out, the sooner you may be able to safely return to play.

TAKE CARE OF YOUR BRAIN. A concussion can affect your ability to do schoolwork and other activities. Most athletes with a concussion get better and return to sports, but it is important to rest and give your brain time to heal. A repeat concussion that occurs while your brain is still healing can cause long-term problems that may change your life forever.

All concussions are serious. Don't hide it, report it. Take time to recover.

Concussion Awareness

What Youth Football Coaches Should Know About Concussions

By Michael D. Goodlett, M.D., Lawrence J. Lemak, M.D.
March 11, 2009, revised December 28, 2009

Recognize the signs and symptoms of a concussion to ensure your players' safety. An easy rule of thumb to follow is when in doubt, sit them out.

WHAT COACHES SHOULD KNOW

*A concussion is any change in an athlete's behavior, awareness, and/or physical feelings caused by a direct or indirect blow to the head.

*Any concussion has the potential to be a serious injury.

*Before letting an athlete go back to play, a concussion should be evaluated by a doctor.

*An athlete should never return to play while exhibiting any signs or symptoms of a concussion either at rest or with exertion. When in doubt, sit them out!

*There is an increased risk of suffering subsequent concussions after a first concussion.

*Any head injury associated with loss of consciousness must be treated as a suspected head, neck, or back injury.

Knowing the signs and symptoms of a concussion will help a youth football coach feel more comfortable and be more prepared in case of an emergency.

*The only instances in which an athlete's helmet and shoulder pads should be removed is when a medical authority believes that it is necessary for the care of the athlete, or if the equipment interferes with the rescuers' ability to provide required CPR.

*If necessary to provide care for life-threatening conditions, it is recommended that the facemask be removed rather than the whole helmet. A tool to remove the facemask should be in the first aid kit.

*For any head injury, activate the Emergency Action Plan and follow the emergency action steps, Check-Call-Care.

When a player is hit, he may receive a blow to the head and become unconscious or demonstrate changes in behavior. If the player regains consciousness, seems to be alert and oriented, and is eager to play, a coach may feel the player is fully recovered and allow him back into the game or practice. However, the player has suffered a concussion. Failure to recognize a concussion can potentially lead to coma and death particularly if a second impact occurs. Coaches need to be aware of the signs of concussions and treat the situation properly.

Concussions are caused by a force being transmitted to the head. The force may be caused by any direct or indirect hit to the head or body and can cause changes in behavior, awareness, or physical feeling in the injured person. Concussions often go unrecognized by coaches because they are underreported by athletes who want to continue competing. Athletes often will minimize or deny symptoms. Maintaining a high level of suspicion and having some knowledge of the individual athlete's personality helps coaches in early detection of the signals of concussion. This awareness can prevent additional concussive injury, potential long-term brain damage, or other possible catastrophic outcomes.

On-The-Field Evaluations
If there is a forceful blow to the head, with or without loss of consciousness, the coach should suspect a head injury and also be concerned that the neck or back has been injured. When caring for the player on the field, tell him not to nod or shake his head during the assessment, but to say yes or no. The player's helmet should also be left in place. The goal is to minimize movement. If the head impact has caused the player to become unconscious or show the signs of concussion listed below, activate the Emergency Action Plan and follow the emergency action steps, Check-Call-Care. Check the scene for safety and check the ill or injured athlete, Call 9-1-1 or the local emergency number when needed, and Care for the injured player until EMS personnel arrive.

To Care For Serious Injuries To The Head, Neck, And Back
Follow basic precautions to prevent disease transmission.

Minimize movement of the player's head, neck, and back by putting your hands on both sides of the player's helmet or head. Maintain an open airway using a jaw-thrust maneuver. Have the player remain in the position that you found him until EMS personnel arrive and take over.

Monitor the player's airway, breathing, and circulation.

If life-threatening symptoms are present, it is recommended that the facemask of the athlete's helmet be removed, rather than removing the entire helmet. This will allow access to an airway should the athlete stop breathing.

A tool for removing the facemask should be in the team's first aid kit.

The coach should evaluate the symptoms listed below if he suspects a player may have a concussion requiring immediate care.

The only instance in which an athlete's helmet and shoulder pads should be removed is when a medical authority believes that it is necessary for the care of the athlete, or if the equipment interferes with the rescuers' ability to provide CPR.

Symptoms that require immediate activation of the Emergency Action Plan and immediate removal to a medical facility are:

- *Period of unconsciousness;
- *Confusion, disorientation to time and place;
- *Severe headache or vomiting;
- *Appears sleepy, pale, and is sweating;
- *Blurred vision, slurred speech, and muscle weakness;
- *Neck pain.

Checking For Concussion
If the player is removed from the field after receiving a head impact, it is important to continue evaluating the player every five minutes for at least 30 minutes.

Look at the facial expression of the athlete.

- *Does the athlete have a vacant stare or a confused facial expression?

Check the athlete's behavior.

- *Is the athlete easily distracted or slow to answer questions or follow directions?
- *Does the athlete display unusual emotional reactions, such as *crying or laughing?
- *Does the athlete have a headache or complain of nausea?
- *Is the athlete irritable and easily frustrated?
- *Does the athlete appear unusually anxious or depressed?
- *Does the athlete appear sleepy?
- *Does the athlete have significantly decreased playing ability from earlier in the contest?

Check the athlete's orientation and memory.

- *Is the athlete aware of the time of day and date?
- *Is the athlete generally confused? Questions to ask
- *Which quarter or period is it?
- *Where are we? Which field or arena?
- *Which team are we playing?
- *Which side scored the last points?
- *Which team did the athlete play in the last game?
- *Did the athlete's team win or lose in the last game?

Check for posttraumatic amnesia (the athlete's ability to remember events after the injury).

- *Ask the athlete how he got injured?
- *Ask the athlete the first thing he remembers after the injury?
- *Ask the last thing the athlete remembers before the injury?

Medical attention is required if the athlete's expression, behavior, or memory is affected. Attention should be immediate if symptoms show a deteriorating situation. When an athlete has had a concussion, he should not be allowed to return to the current game or practice, and should not be left alone. Medical evaluation following the concussion is required before a return to participation is permitted.

Postconcussion syndrome
After a player is removed from the field, he may develop symptoms of postconcussion syndrome. This can occur immediately after the injury or many hours or days later. Symptoms of postconcussion syndrome include:

- *Blurred vision
- *Fatigue
- *Ringing in the ears
- *Trouble falling asleep
- *Dizziness

- *Sleeping more or less than usual
- *Headache
- *Increased sensitivity to light and noise
- *Nausea and vomiting
- *Feeling more emotional than normal
- *Poor coordination or balance
- *Difficulty concentrating
- *Increased irritability
- *Difficulty remembering
- *Slurred speech
- *Feeling dazed or stunned
- *Seeing stars or flashing lights
- *Having double vision.

A physician may conduct neuropsychological testing or neuroimaging to assess exactly when the athlete has recovered from a concussion. No athlete should go back to play before being free of all symptoms and signs, both at rest and during exertion, and a physician has indicated the player is ready to return to competition.

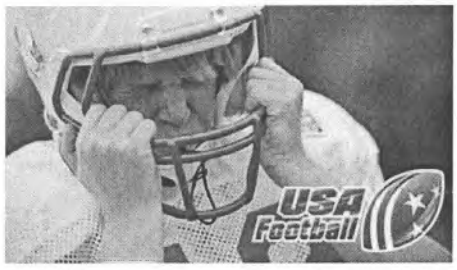
CDC, NFL unite national governing bodies of sport to teach young athletes about concussions

By Joe Frollo
October 11, 2010, revised October 28, 2010

Free poster available for download and distribution to all youth leagues

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), the NFL and 14 national governing bodies of sport, including USA Football, are promoting a free poster designed to increase concussion awareness among young athletes, parents and coaches.



Players, coaches and parents can better recognize concussion symptoms thanks to a poster being distributed by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, NFL, USA Football and other national governing bodies of sport.

The poster, created by the NFL's Head, Neck and Spine Medical Committee, the CDC and the NFL Players Association, is similar to the one displayed in NFL locker rooms but geared toward a younger audience. It stresses the importance of recognizing a concussion, taking time to recover and not returning to play too soon. By walking through the steps to recognize if the athlete - or a teammate - has suffered a concussion, the goal is increased concussion awareness in all sports.

"The NFL understands its obligation to educate and inform parents, teachers, coaches and especially young athletes about the risks of concussions," NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell said. "This poster is one element of the NFL's program to assist in the development and broad dissemination of reliable medical information on concussions, which will give players, parents, coaches and others the information they need."

The poster is available online for download and order at no cost at CDC's website or by calling (800) CDC-INFO. Information on recognizing and reacting to concussions also can be found at usafootball.com and through USA Football's Put Pride Aside For Player Safety program as well as through the following national governing bodies:

USA Football's Certified Coaching Education Program, employed by youth football coaches in all 50 states, includes chapters on concussion awareness and management as well as hydration and proper equipment fitting. Health and safety videos also are available at USA Football's Health and Safety page.

"Having more than one dozen different sports be part of this initiative underscores the point that coaches, athletes and parents across all youth athletics need to be informed about this issue," USA Football Executive Director ScottHallenbeck said.

"USA Football has worked with the CDC on concussion education since 2007, and we will continue to emphasize it while teaching coaches and players proper football fundamentals for fun and safe play."

Redskins and USA Football Welcome High School Coaches for Concussion Education

By Steve Alic
April 23, 2010, revised April 29, 2010

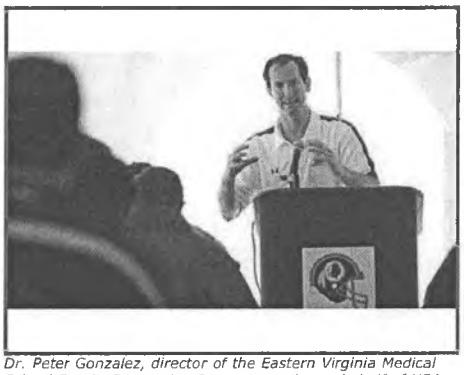
The Washington Redskins and USA Football partnered for the Redskins' inaugural Concussion Awareness and Education Forum on April 17 at Redskins Park.

Redskins Park has a history of preparing football teams for success.

Successful preparation at the football training facility earned a new and vital definition on April 17 when the Washington Redskins and USA Football partnered for the Redskins' inaugural Concussion Awareness and Education Forum for Maryland, Virginia and Washington, D.C. high school head football coaches.

Nearly 200 high school coaches traveled to Redskins Park as guests of the team to watch minicamp practice and participate in a 90-minute concussion education seminar led by USA Football's Peter Gonzalez, M.D.

Dr. Gonzalez is the director of the Eastern Virginia Medical School Sports Concussion Program in Norfolk, Va.



Dr. Peter Gonzalez, director of the Eastern Virginia Medical School Sports Concussion Program, spoke on behalf of USA Football regarding concussion awareness and management to 170 high school head football coaches at Redskins Park. The session was part of a full-day minicamp invitation that the Washington Redskins extended to high school coaches throughout Maryland, Virginia and Washington, D.C. (Photo courtesy of Ned Dishman/Washington Redskins)

Redskins General Manager Bruce Allen opened the day by welcoming the coaches and introduced Dr. Gonzalez. Each coach received a USA Football/CDC concussion awareness clipboard sticker listing concussion signs, symptoms and an action plan. This same material is given to thousands of coaches who attend USA Football's full-day coaching schools across the country. Concussion-related information is available at no cost throughout usafootball.com.

"The coaches asked good questions," Dr. Gonzalez said after the presentation. "The Redskins are to be commended - this was a great discussion and also was the largest group of high school coaches I've spoken to at any one time."

"I came to learn all I can," said Jason Meade, head football coach of Lee-Davis High School in Mechanicsville, Va., a two-hour drive from Redskins Park. Coach Meade enters his eighth season as head coach this fall. "Learning more when it comes to putting our players in a better, safer situation is important to us."

"We can't allow high school athletes who suffer concussions to return to play too soon," Dr. Gonzalez added. "If there's one thing a coach takes away from our session today, it's not allowing an athlete to return to play while still possessing the symptoms of a concussion.

"And if we even suspect someone to have suffered a concussion, there is no same-day return to play."

Concussion awareness and management is an important part of USA Football's online coaching education courses and its 80-plus training events held across the country for players, coaches and youth league commissioners.

USA Football is the official youth football development partner of the NFL, its 32 teams and the NFL Players Association. More than 60 of USA Football's events in 2010 are conducted in partnership with NFL clubs.

NATIONAL FOOTBALL LEAGUE AND THE NATIONAL ATHLETIC TRAINERS' ASSOCIATION TEAM TO PASS STATE LAWS TO PROTECT YOUTH ATHLETES FROM THE RISKS OF CONCUSSIONS

Washington, D.C., December 7, 2010 – The National Football League and the National Athletic Trainers' Association today announced a joint effort to promote legislation to raise awareness and protect youth athletes from the risks of concussions. The new partnership was announced during the Youth Sports Safety Summit in the nation's capital.

"We are pleased to team with the National Athletic Trainers' Association on a state-based legislative effort to protect youth athletes," said Jeff Miller, the NFL's vice president of government relations. "We will advance a simple, but significant shared goal -- to help prevent concussions and make sports and recreational activities safer for young athletes around the country."

The NFL and NATA have agreed to work together to pass concussion awareness and prevention laws in every state throughout the country. The league and the association will promote laws modeled on the Zackery Lystedt law in Washington State, which contains three key elements: (1) concussion education for young athletes, parents and coaches on an annual basis; (2) immediate removal of a student athlete who appears to have suffered a concussion from play or practice; and (3) mandatory clearance of that student by a health care professional who is trained in the evaluation and management of concussions before returning to play or practice.

Marjorie J. Albohm, MS, ATC, president of the National Athletic Trainers' Association added, "We know from recent cases and studies that far too many youth athletes are either playing with undiagnosed symptoms of concussions or returning to play before fully recovering from them. That's why our organization of trained health care professionals supports legislation in every state that will help coaches, youth athletes, their parents and school officials to recognize and respond appropriately to concussions. Doing so will help prevent injury, chronic impairment and even death."

The NFL and NATA also have pledged to encourage and enlist the participation of other stakeholders and advocates. Organizations already supporting the adoption of such laws include USA Football, the American College of Sports Medicine and the Brain Injury Association of Washington. To date, nine states have enacted adequate concussion awareness and prevention laws including Washington, Oregon, New Mexico, Virginia, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Oklahoma, Connecticut and New Jersey.

National Athletic Trainers' Association (NATA) – Health Care for Life & Sport

Athletic trainers are health care professionals who specialize in the prevention, diagnosis, treatment and rehabilitation of injuries and sport-related illnesses. They prevent and treat chronic musculoskeletal injuries from sports, physical and occupational activity, and provide immediate care for acute injuries. Athletic trainers offer a continuum of care that is unparalleled in health care. The National Athletic Trainers' Association represents and supports 32,000 members of the athletic training profession. Visit www.nata.org

Alaska Athletic Trainers Association
PO Box 872710
Wasilla, AK 99687

March 15, 2011

Representative Doogan,

The Alaska Athletic Trainers Association fully supports the language of House Bill 15 and Senate Bill 22, Student Athlete Traumatic Brain Injuries. This legislation serves to raise awareness and protect youth athletes from the risks of concussions. The Alaska Athletic Trainers Association pledges to support the following key elements: (1) concussion education for young athletes, parents and coaches; (2) immediate removal of a student athlete who appears to have suffered a concussion from play or practice; and (3) mandatory clearance of that student by a health care professional who is trained in the evaluation and management of concussions before returning to play or practice.

Athletic trainers are health care professionals who specialize in the prevention, diagnosis, treatment and rehabilitation of injuries and sport-related illnesses. We prevent and treat chronic musculoskeletal injuries from sports, physical and occupational activity, and provide immediate care for acute injuries. Athletic trainers offer a continuum of care that is unparalleled in health care.

The Alaska Athletic Trainers Association is also working toward licensing athletic trainers in the state of Alaska. A licensed athletic trainer is one who has established qualifications and works within a scope of practice. Alaska is one of only three states that do not regulate athletic trainers and we feel it is time to change that. We hope you will support our professional endeavor for licensing athletic trainers in Alaska.

Sincerely,

B. Shelden

The Honorable Mike Doogan
Alaska House of Representatives

Dear Representative Doogan,

Thank you for introducing HB 15, an act relating to prevention and evaluation of and liability for concussions in student athletes.

The Alaska Brain Injury Network, Inc (ABIN) is a non-profit organization dedicated to Alaskans whose lives have been changed by brain injury. ABIN's eighteen member board represents all regions of Alaska and at least 50 percent are TBI survivors or family members. We fully support HB 15.

ABIN has become the leader in understanding the needs of Alaskans with brain injury. ABIN has heard from 800 Alaskans requesting brain injury services since 2007. In addition, ABIN has heard public testimony from hundreds of Alaskans from Anchorage, Juneau, Fairbanks, Kenai, Barrow, Nome, Kodiak, Dillingham, Bethel, Copper River Basin, Tok, Ketchikan, Sitka, Homer, and more.

There are an estimated 10,000 Alaskans who have experienced long-term difficulties from a moderate to severe brain injury. The number of Alaskans experiencing a concussion or Mild TBI (mTBI) who visit the emergency department is estimated at 3,000 per year. Concussion and brain injury need to be taken seriously. With proper diagnoses, management, and treatment, research shows 80-90 percent of people experiencing a concussion or mTBI will recover fully. HB 15 is vital to ensuring our youth athletes have the best chance of recovery after an injury. When a concussion is not properly managed, prolonged recovery or even death from a second impact may result.

The National Football League, National Hockey League, the United States Olympic teams, majority of collegiate teams, and most recently in many states, even high school and youth sports teams have protocols and guidelines for concussion identification and return to play. Many of the leagues also require a cognitive baseline which is the first step to providing the best data to assess for a concussion when symptoms appear. If an athlete is suspected of a concussion, the assessment guidelines and return to play protocol are in place for the safety of the athlete, as well as ensuring the team has the strongest players in the game. A player who is normally elite, but then suffers a concussion, may temporarily have difficulty making quick decisions, their speed and reaction time may be compromised, and they may clumsily handle the ball. This compromised state caused by the concussion may hinder the team, and more importantly may put the athlete at risk for serious, life-long disability. No one wants to see an athletic child or young adult become disabled due to a decision to keep a kid in the game for a win or because of lack of education of what concussion symptoms may look like.

HB 15 will ensure that coaches have a basic understanding of concussion, student athletes will begin to understand the seriousness of concussion on and off the field, and parents may begin to understand brain injury better as well. This legislation is an opportunity to improve the public's awareness of the seriousness of concussion and brain injury, and keep our student athletes safe.

The future of our state depends on the brains of the individuals that reside here. HB 15 is one tool to giving Alaska's youth the best opportunity to become community and business leaders as adults.

The Alaska Brain Injury Network appreciates your leadership in sponsoring this important legislation. You have our support.

Sincerely,

Jill Hodges
Executive Director

RE: HB 15 – Student Athlete Traumatic Brain Injuries

Dear Representative Doogan:

The National Football League is pleased to support HB 15 – the Student Athlete Traumatic Brain Injuries bill. The bill will help raise awareness and protect youth athletes from the dangers of preventable brain injuries.

The NFL is playing a leading role on this important issue for the safety of our own players as well as athletes at all levels of sports. Our primary rule is this: the medical decisions of health care professionals take precedence over the playing decisions of coaches and players. Given our experience at the professional level, we believe a similar approach is appropriate and necessary when dealing with concussions in youth sports.

Concussions can occur in male and female athletes of any age and in any sport or recreational activity. In fact, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention estimates that there may be as many as 3.8 million sports and recreational-related concussions each year in the United States.

In addition, medical researchers have determined that children and teenagers whose brains still are developing are more susceptible to concussions than adults, and they recover more slowly. Recognizing and responding to concussions when they first occur aids recovery and helps to prevent prolonged concussion symptoms, chronic impairment and even death.

That is the reason the NFL supports the passage of this bill and similar legislation in states throughout the country. HB 15 contains three core principles: (1) concussion education for youth athletes, parents and coaches on an annual basis; (2) immediate removal of a youth athlete who is suspected of sustaining a concussion from play or practice; and (3) mandatory clearance of that youth athlete by an appropriate licensed health care professional before returning to play or practice.

1201 Pennsylvania Avenue NW, Suite 645, Washington, DC 20004 Tel 202.662.6650 Fax 202.662.6860

The bill as drafted applies these principles to school-based youth sports. While this is vital, we encourage you to consider amending the legislation to include other youth sports leagues as well. All young athletes deserve the protections offered in this bill.

The youth concussion bill provides better protection for Alaska's youth athletes by mandating a more formal, aggressive and uniform approach to the treatment of concussions. We applaud you and offer our assistance in aiding the passage of this bill.

Parents, coaches, teachers and school personnel will benefit from this measure. And, most importantly, our youth athletes will as well.

Sincerely,

Jeff Miller
Senior Vice President

CS HB22 (TRA): PROHIBIT CELL PHONE USE WHILE DRIVING

If enacted, House Bill 22 will prohibit cell phone use while driving, unless the person is over the age of 18 and a hands-free device is being used or an emergency situation exists. The allowance for hands-free devices for those over 18 years of age will accommodate commercial drivers, tour operators and others to allow flexibility in the implementation of the law. Nine states, and the District of Columbia, have prohibited the use of cell phones while driving for all drivers, twenty-eight states prohibit novice drivers – usually defined as drivers under 18 years old – and thirty states, and the District of Columbia, ban drivers from text messaging, including Alaska.

Cell phone use in the United States has been on a rapid increase in the past decade. According CTIA – The Wireless Association, there are about 293 million subscribers, representing more than 84 percent of the U.S. population, as of June 2010.

Distracted drivers create a risk to all motor vehicles, bicyclists and pedestrians. Driver performance is affected by the cognitive distractions associated with cell phone tasks which typically decrease reaction time, travel speed and increase lane deviations and steering wheel movements, resulting in a higher number of crashes.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration Distracted Driving Report (2009) estimates 5,474 people were killed and an additional 448,000 were injured in motor vehicle accidents that involved distracted driving. The University of Utah published a study showing motorists who talk on cell phones are as impaired as drunk drivers. Cell phone use in Alaska has also followed the upward trend of increased usage, according to the Alaska 2010 Highway Safety Phone Survey 61% of Alaskan drivers talk on their cell phone while driving.

HB22 will create safer roads for all travelers and help to prevent accidents caused by distracted drivers. I urge your support in the passage of HB22.

RE: Explanation of Changes to CS for HB22 (TRA)

The House Transportation Committee adopted an amendment to HB22 which would prohibit the use of cell phones for individuals under the age of 18 (including prohibiting the use of hands-free devices and a speaker function). Committee members stated teen drivers are more at risk for causing a collision due to their inexperience of driving - this has also been sighted in numerous studies. For those 18 years of age and over the use of a hands-free device is still permitted while operating a motor vehicle to accommodate commercial drivers, tour operators and other to allow flexibility.

BILL NO. HB022

Analysis

This legislation would amend AS 28.35 by adding a new section that would prohibit the use of certain cellular telephones when driving a motor vehicle. Violation would be an infraction and considered a primary traffic offense.

It is not estimated that this bill will significantly increase the workload of the division of Alaska State Troopers. There is no fiscal cost to the AST as a result of this legislation.

BILL NO. HB 022

Analysis

HB 22 makes it an infraction to operate a motor vehicle on a highway or vehicular way while using a cell phone. The bill excepts use of a cell phone for emergency purposes or with a cell phone that is voice-activated or may be used hands-free.

Passage of this legislation would have no foreseeable fiscal impact on the Department of Law.

LEGISLATIVE RESEARCH REPORT

JANUARY 26, 2011

REPORT NUMBER 11.132

LAWS REGARDING CELLULAR PHONE USE BY DRIVERS

PREPARED FOR REPRESENTATIVE CATHY MUÑOZ

BY TIM SPENGLER, LEGISLATIVE ANALYST

You wanted to know what states have done regarding limiting or banning the use of cellular (cell) phones by individuals operating motor vehicles.[1]

Alaska Legislation Regarding Driver Cell Phone Usage

Under Alaska law (AS 28.35.161), enacted September 1, 2008, drivers are effectively banned from text messaging while operating a motor vehicle. Alaska is one of the 30 states (and the District of Columbia) to ban text messaging for drivers—thought by many experts to be the most distracting cell phone activity. There have also been several attempts in Alaska this decade to limit or ban the use of cell phones by all drivers, but none has been successful.

Currently, the Alaska legislature is considering three bills—House Bill 22, House Bill 35 and House Bill 68—all of which would prohibit the use of cellular telephones by an individual, regardless of age, while driving a motor vehicle.

Legislation in Other States

According to the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety (IIHS), as of January 2011, the following cell phone bans or restrictions are in place across the nation:[2]

- Nine states and the District of Columbia impose state-wide bans on driving while talking on hand-held cell phones;[3]

[1] This report is essentially an update of Legislative Research Report 10.179 from February 18, 2010.

[2] The Insurance Institute for Highway Safety is an independent, nonprofit organization focused on reducing the losses — deaths, injuries, and property damage — from crashes on the nation's highways (http://www.iihs.org/).

[3] The nine states that impose state-wide bans on driving while using hand-held cell phones are California (Vehicle Code 23123), Connecticut (Public Act No. 05-159), Delaware (Del. Code 4176C), Maryland (Md. Code Ann. 21-1124.2), New Jersey (N.J.S.A. 30:4-97.3), New York (Vehicle and Traffic Law Section 1225c), Oregon (ORS 811.507), Utah (UT Code 41-6a-1715), and Washington (RCW 46.61.667). Utah considers talking on a cell phone, without a hands-free device, to be an offense only if a driver is also committing some other moving violation (other than speeding).

- Twenty-eight states and the District of Columbia prohibit novice drivers—usually defined as drivers under 18 years old—from using cell phones when operating vehicles;[5] and,
- Thirty states and the District of Columbia ban drivers from text messaging.[6]

We include, as Attachment A, a table from the Institute for Highway Safety that presents an overview of states' cell phone laws. Also in Attachment A, we include a question and answer sheet from the IIHS on cell phones and driving. It provides a summary of the myriad issues surrounding this topic. Arthur Goodwin, senior research associate at the Highway Safety Research Center, contends that laws banning or limiting cell phone use while operating a motor vehicle are of vital importance and are gaining momentum nationwide.[7] He likened the situation to when seat belt laws came to the fore in the United States: it took some time to educate the public, and for people to change their habits, but eventually most did. Mr. Goodwin believes this will be the case with cell phone laws—that it will take time and continued efforts for these laws to become solidified in our national consciousness.

All the experts with whom we spoke, and the literature we reviewed, support states enacting laws restricting the use of cell phones while driving.[8] While difficult to enforce, such legislation does highlight the reality that the behavior is unsafe.

We hope you find this information to be useful. Please let us know if you have questions or need additional information.

[4] School bus drivers in the following states are banned from using cell phones while driving: Arizona, Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Illinois, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, New Jersey, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia.

[5] Novice drivers are banned from using cell phones while driving in the following states: Alabama, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Jersey, North Carolina, Oregon, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, and West Virginia.

[6] A ban on texting while driving is in place in the following states: Alaska, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Delaware, Connecticut, Georgia, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Oregon, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

[7] The Highway Safety Research Center's stated mission is to improve the safety, security, access and efficiency of all surface transportation modes through a balanced, interdisciplinary program of research, evaluation and information dissemination (http://www.hsrc.unc.edu/index.cfm). Arthur Goodwin can be reached at (919) 843-5038.

[8] In addition to Mr. Goodwin, we also contacted Anne McCartt, Senior Vice President of the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety (703) 247-1534, and Dr. David Strayer of the University of Utah, who has studied distracted drivers issues for more than ten years (801) 581-5037.

Cellphone laws

January 2011

A jurisdiction-wide ban on driving while talking on a hand-held cellphone is in place in 9 states (California, Connecticut, Delaware, Maryland, New Jersey, New York, Oregon, Utah, and Washington) and the District of Columbia. Utah has named the offense careless driving. Under the Utah law, no one commits an offense when speaking on a cellphone unless they are also committing some other moving violation other than speeding.

Local jurisdictions may or may not need specific state statutory authority to ban cellphones or text messaging. Several of the many localities that have enacted restrictions on cellphone use include: Oahu, HI; Chicago, IL; Brookline, MA; Detroit, MI; Santa Fe, NM; Brooklyn, North Olmstead, and Walton Hills, OH; Conshohocken, Lebanon, and West Conshohocken, PA; Waupaca County, WI; and Cheyenne, WY.

The use of all cellphones while driving a school bus is prohibited in 19 states and the District of Columbia.

The use of all cellphones by novice drivers is restricted in 28 states and the District of Columbia.

Text messaging is banned for all drivers in 30 states and the District of Columbia. In addition, novice drivers are banned from texting in 8 states (Alabama, Indiana, Maine, Mississippi, Missouri, Oklahoma, Texas, and West Virginia) and school bus drivers are banned from text messaging in 2 states (Oklahoma and Texas).

The table below shows the states that have cellphone laws, whether they specifically ban text messaging, and whether they are enforced as primary or secondary laws. Under secondary laws, an officer must have some other reason to stop a vehicle before citing a driver for using a cellphone. Laws without this restriction are called primary.

[1]The laws in Arkansas and California prohibit police from stopping a vehicle to determine if a driver is in compliance with the law. Clearly, that language prohibits the use of checkpoints to enforce the law, but it has been interpreted as the functional equivalent of secondary provisions that typically state the officer may not stop someone suspected of a violation unless there is other, independent, cause for a stop.

[2]In Louisiana, all learner's permit holders, irrespective of age, and all intermediate license holders are prohibited from driving while using a hand-held cellphone and all drivers younger than 18 are prohibited from using any cellphone. Effective April 1, 2010 all drivers, irrespective of age, issued a first driver's license will be prohibited from using a cellphone for one year. The cellphone ban is secondary for novice drivers age 18 and older.

[3]In Oklahoma, learner's permit and intermediate license holders are banned from using a hand-held electronic device while operating a motor vehicle for non-life-threatening emergency purposes.

[4]Utah's law defines careless driving as committing a moving violation (other than speeding) while distracted by use of a hand-held cellphone or other activities not related to driving.

1 | How many people use cellphones?

Cellphone use in the United States has grown quickly during the past decade. There were about 293 million wireless cellphone subscribers as of June 2010, according to CTIA – The Wireless Association, an industry trade group.[1] That's up 51 percent from 194 million in June 2005 and 3 times the 97 million wireless subscribers in June 2000. Minutes of use have surged to about 2.3 trillion in June 2010 from 195 billion in June 2000.

2 | Do drivers frequently use phones behind the wheel?

Yes, though it's hard to determine accurately just how many drivers use phones. Combining observational and self-reported data on phone use, the federal government estimated that drivers using phones nearly tripled during 2000-08, from 4 to 11 percent, and then declined to 9 percent in 2009. Federal observational data indicate that 5 percent of drivers in 2009 were talking on hand-held phones at any moment during the day. This means about 672,000 passenger vehicles on the road at any moment during the day were driven by people talking on hand-held phones.[2]

A 2009 Institute telephone survey of 1,219 drivers 18 and older indicates phone use may be somewhat lower than government estimates. Drivers on average reported spending about an hour in the car each day, with about 4 minutes of that time on the phone. This translates into roughly 7 percent of time behind the wheel on the phone.[3] The discrepancy between the two estimates may be a result of drivers in the Institute survey understating how much phoning while driving they do because the practice has negative connotations. It also could reflect different methodologies. Government researchers observed hand-held phone use among drivers waiting at intersections during the daytime, then adjusted this for self-reported hands-free use. The Institute's survey estimates self-reported driver phone use on all kinds of roads during all hours.

3 | Who is most likely to talk on a cellphone while driving?

Young drivers ages 16-24 are more likely than other drivers to talk on hand-held cellphones according to daytime observational surveys of drivers the federal government conducted nationwide in 2009. Eight percent of drivers ages 16-24 were observed talking on hand-held phones, compared with 5 percent of those ages 25-69 and 1 percent of drivers 70 and older.[2] In the Institute's 2009 survey of drivers' self-reported phone use, people younger than 30 spent 16 percent of driving time on the phone, compared with 7 percent for drivers 30-59 years old, and just 2.5 percent for drivers 60 and older.[4]

Men in the Institute's survey reported spending slightly more time on the phone than women (7 percent versus 6 percent). This differs from the government's and other observations that female drivers use cellphones more. Drivers reported using phones more on weekdays and during afternoons and evenings. Use rates were 8 percent during these times.[3] This is in line with government observations that use is higher on weekdays.[2]

4 | Does using a cellphone while driving increase crash risk?

Yes. Two controlled studies link talking on a cellphone directly to increased crash risk. A 2005 Institute study of drivers in Western Australia found cellphone users four times as likely to get into crashes serious enough to injure themselves.[5] The study used cellphone billing records to verify phone use of crash-involved drivers. Increased risk was similar for males and females, drivers younger than 30 and those 30 and older, and hands-free and hand-held phones. The findings were consistent with 1997 research that showed phone use among Canadian drivers was associated with a fourfold increase in the risk of a property damage crash. The Canadian study also used cellphone billing records to verify phone use of drivers.[6]

5 | How many crashes have been caused by drivers using cellphones?

The federal government estimates that in 2009, 5,474 people were killed and an additional 448,000 were injured in motor vehicle crashes that were reported by police to have involved distracted driving. The government estimates that 18 percent of these deaths and 5 percent of these injuries involved cellphones.[7] However, these estimates are imprecise and likely underestimate distraction's role in crashes, as many police reports don't have information on distracting events. Police crash reports aren't a reliable way to count cellphone-related collisions because drivers often don't volunteer that they were on the phone.

It is possible to estimate the expected number of crashes linked to phoning while driving. An Institute analysis suggests this practice could account for 22 percent of all crashes, or about 1.3 million in 2008, based on how much phoning while driving motorists admitted to researchers and the estimated risk of driver phone use.[3] However, there is a disconnect between estimated crashes and real-world data, which indicate that crashes have been holding steady in recent years, even as cellphone use in general and driver use of phones in particular have proliferated.

About 5.5 million police-reported motor vehicle crashes occurred during 2009, the latest year for which federal data are available. This count doesn't differ much from the approximately 6 million crashes recorded annually during the early 1990s, when cellphones started getting popular, and it is lower than the 6.4 million crashes in 2000, when federal researchers began documenting the increase in phone use while driving.

An increase in cellphone-related crashes isn't showing up in insurance claims either. An analysis by the Highway Loss Data Institute indicates that the frequency of insurance claims for crash damage filed under collision coverage during 1998-2008 hasn't increased, even though driver phone use has escalated.[8]

A 2006 Virginia Tech Transportation Institute study used video cameras to monitor drivers in about 100 vehicles for about a year. Four percent of crashes or near-crashes were attributable to talking on a cellphone, researchers estimated.[9]

6 | Are hands-free cellphones safer?

No, at least not after the conversation begins. Two studies of crashes using cellphone billing records to verify phone use found about a fourfold increase in crash risk with conversing on both hands-free and hand-held phones.[5,6] The studies were unable to estimate crash risk from different types of hands-free devices. They also were unable to determine whether there was any benefit associated with hands-free devices while placing the call. Experimental research using driving simulators indicates that phone conversation tasks, whether using hand-held or hands-free devices, affect some measures of driving performance.[10,11] Hands-free phones may eliminate some of the physical distraction of handling phones, but the cognitive distraction from phone conversations remains.

7 | How does cellphone use affect driving performance?

An Institute review of more than 120 cellphone studies, about half of which were experimental studies using driving simulators or vehicles instrumented with video cameras, sensors, and other equipment, found that nearly all reported that some measures of driver performance were affected by the cognitive distractions associated with cellphone tasks.[11] Phone conversation tasks typically increased reaction times and travel speeds and increased lane deviations and steering wheel movements. Statistical analyses that aggregated the results of 33 studies and 23 studies, respectively, reported similar findings.[10,12] Some studies have found that older drivers' performance is more affected by cellphone tasks, particularly their reaction time. Few studies included drivers younger than 18, and evidence is mixed on the effects of phone use for teenage drivers compared with adult drivers. Findings also are mixed on whether driving performance while talking on a cellphone improves with practice. Some simulator studies suggest that the negative impact of phone use on driving performance may lessen with experience.[13,14] Other simulator research has found no change in performance with practice.[15]

Using functional magnetic resonance imaging, researchers at Carnegie Mellon University found a 37 percent reduction in brain activity associated with driving when research subjects listened via a headset to spoken sentences that they judged as true or false while steering in a driving simulator. Researchers concluded that listening and processing information from a phone conversation can draw mental resources away from driving, worsening driving performance, even when drivers are not holding or dialing a phone.[16]

Further evidence comes from a few studies of small samples of people observed during their everyday driving. One study included drivers of 100 vehicles instrumented with video cameras and other monitoring technologies. Only a few serious crashes occurred, but researchers calculated the odds of being in a near-crash or crash were 2.8 times higher when dialing a hand-held phone than when phones weren't being used. The odds of a near-crash or crash were 1.3 times higher when talking on a hand-held phone, although this was not statistically significant. But because drivers spend more time talking on a hand-held phone than dialing, the percentage of crashes and near-crashes estimated to be attributable to talking and dialing on hand-held phones were both about 4 percent.[9]

8 | Do bans on hand-held phones work to reduce driver phone use?

Institute research has documented that all-driver bans on hand-held phoning can have large and lasting effects on phone use. In November 2001, New York became the first state to implement a universal ban on hand-held cellphones. Observed driver hand-held cellphone use declined by an estimated 47 percent immediately after the ban. Use then began going back up, but when measured more than 7 years after the ban, use was 24 percent lower than would have been expected without the ban. Soon after a ban was passed in the District of Columbia in 2004, observed driver hand-held phone use dropped by 41 percent. Nearly five years after the ban, the rate of phone use was 43 percent lower than would have been expected without a ban. Connecticut's ban took effect in 2005. Observed hand-held phone use declined an estimated 76 percent immediately after a ban; more than 3 years later, use was 65 percent lower than would be expected without a ban.[17]

In the Institute's telephone survey of cellphone use, drivers in states with hand-held bans were less likely to say they talk on phones while driving. Forty-four percent of drivers in states with bans reported they don't use phones when driving, compared with 30 percent in states without such laws. The percent of drivers who talk on phones and always talk hands-free was 22 in states with all-driver bans on hand-held phones, and 13 in states without all-driver bans.[4]

9 | Do hand-held phone bans reduce crashes?

There is no evidence so far that banning hand-held phone use reduces crashes, even though Institute research demonstrates that bans on hand-held phoning while driving can have big and long-term effects in curbing phone use. A 2009 analysis by the Highway Loss Data Institute found that hand-held bans had no effect on insurance claims. Researchers compared claims for crash damage in 4 jurisdictions before and after hand-held phone use bans, finding steady claim rates before and after laws went into effect.[8]

Many drivers still use hand-held phones where use is banned, and others may simply switch to hands-free phones. Given that crash risk increases substantially with drivers' use of either hand-held or hands-free phones, bans on hand-held cellphones won't eliminate the problem entirely. Laws prohibiting hands-free phones are difficult to enforce, plus drivers may be unfamiliar with restrictions in their state. In the Institute telephone survey, 18 percent of drivers in states with a universal ban on hand-held phone use either believed there was no law or were unsure. The proportion was even higher (48 percent) among drivers in states with a universal texting ban. Many drivers don't believe police pay much attention to them. Only 29 percent of drivers in states with universal hand-held phone bans who knew about the bans and 22 percent of drivers in states with universal texting bans who were aware of the restrictions felt they were strongly enforced.[4]

10 | How common are bans on hand-held cellphones and texting?

Bans are widespread in other countries and are becoming more common in the U.S. Nine states (California, Connecticut, Delaware, Maryland, New Jersey, New York, Oregon, Utah, and Washington) and the District of Columbia have enacted laws that ban drivers of all ages from using hand-held cellphones.

More common in the US are laws that restrict young drivers from using any type of cellphone. Teenage drivers in 28 states and the District of Columbia have such laws. School bus drivers in 19 states and the District of Columbia are restricted from using all cellphones while driving a bus.

In Australia, drivers in Victoria and Tasmania are banned from using all phones, except ones secured in a commercially designed holder fixed to the vehicle that can be operated without touching any part of the phone.

Text messaging is banned for all drivers in 30 states and the District of Columbia. In addition, novice drivers are banned from texting in 8 states (Alabama, Indiana, Maine, Mississippi, Missouri, Oklahoma, Texas, and West Virginia), and school bus drivers are banned from text messaging in 2 states (Oklahoma and Texas).

Cellphone laws in the US

11 | Why do more laws cover only teenage drivers?

Cellphone bans for young drivers are becoming more common amid concerns about the role distractions play in teenagers' elevated crash risk. Distractions of any type are a common factor in crashes of newly licensed 16-year-old drivers.[18] Some research also shows teenage drivers tend to use cellphones and other emerging technologies more than adult drivers.[19] States increasingly have graduated licensing laws that place restrictions on newly licensed drivers, e.g., limiting nighttime driving and the number of passengers a novice driver can carry. Cellphone bans are being added to those restrictions.

12 | Do teenagers comply with cellphone bans?

Young drivers often ignore cellphone restrictions, according to an Institute study of North Carolina's cellphone ban for young beginning drivers. The state bans the use of any telecommunications device by drivers younger than 18 under its graduated licensing system. Observed cellphone use by teenagers leaving high schools in the afternoon changed little from 1-2 months before to 5 months after the restriction took effect on Dec. 1, 2006.[20] About 11 percent of teenage drivers were seen using phones before the law. That percentage rose slightly to 12 percent in the postlaw survey. Cellphone use remained steady at about 13 percent at comparison sites in South Carolina, which doesn't restrict teenage drivers' phone use. When observed postlaw, less than 1 percent of teenage drivers in North Carolina were using hands-free phones. About 2 percent were observed dialing or texting and about 9 percent were holding a phone to their ear.

The study coupled driver observations with telephone surveys of North Carolina parents and their teenagers. In postlaw surveys, about two-thirds of teenagers said they knew about their state's law, compared with 39 percent of parents. Three-quarters of teenagers and 95 percent of parents said they approved of the law. The proportion of teenagers who reported using phones while driving declined somewhat following the law. However, of those who owned a phone and admitted to ever talking on the phone while driving, about half admitted they used their phones, if they had driven, on the day prior to the interview. There was no evidence of focused enforcement or publicity of the law. Only 22 percent of teenagers and 13 percent of parents believed the ban was being enforced fairly often or a lot.[20]

13 | Is cellphone use more distracting to drivers than other tasks?

Evidence is mixed. For example, some experimental studies found that phone conversations are more disruptive than conversations with passengers or adjusting a radio.[11] However, two statistical analyses combining the results of multiple experimental studies found similar decrements in reaction time for conversation tasks with passengers and with hand-held or hands-free phones.[10,12] Two studies reported that talking on cellphones or having a 0.08 percent blood alcohol concentration (BAC) — the legal threshold for impairment — has a comparable effect on some simulated driving tasks.[21,22] However, the risks associated with alcohol impairment accumulate over the entire duration of a trip, whereas the risks of cellphone use generally apply for only a portion of a trip. In addition, crash risk increases substantially at very high BACs, and the implications of the experimental studies for drivers in their own vehicles is unknown.

14 | Is texting while driving a problem?

Texting in general is on the increase. Annualized text messages soared to about 1.8 trillion in June 2010 from 57 billion in June 2005.[1] Many people report that they text while driving. A 2009 Institute survey found that 13 percent of drivers of all ages have texted while driving, and this jumps to 43 percent among 18-24-year-old drivers.[4] Similar results were found in other studies.[23,24]

There hasn't been a lot of research on the safety effects of texting and driving, but three studies of young drivers using driving simulators all found that receiving, and especially sending, text messages impeded drivers' reaction times and lane-keeping ability.[25,26,27] In a study involving large trucks instrumented with video cameras and other monitoring technology, the odds of a traffic conflict, lane drift, near-crash, or crash were 23 times higher when a truck driver was texting. A limitation is that less than 1 percent of the incidents involved crashes; most were lane drifts or other driver errors. It's unknown how such incidents relate to actual crashes. It also is unclear whether the results generalize to passenger vehicle drivers.[28]

15 | Do drivers comply with text messaging bans?

So far it appears that drivers, especially young adults, largely shrug off texting bans. An Institute study found that among 18-24 year-olds — the group most likely to text — 45 percent reported texting while driving in states that bar the practice, just shy of the 48 percent of drivers who reported texting in states without bans.[4] Among drivers 25-29, 40 percent reported texting in states with bans, compared with 55 percent in states without bans.

Many drivers are unclear about the laws in their state. Forty-eight percent of drivers in states with universal texting bans believed there was no law or were unsure. Plus, only 22 percent of drivers who were aware of the restrictions felt they were strongly enforced.[4]

16 | Do bans on driver text messaging reduce crashes?

Not according to research by the Highway Loss Data Institute. A 2010 study examined insurance claims filed for damage to vehicles before and after driver texting bans were enacted in four states. There was no reduction in claim rates relative to comparison states. Rather, there was a significant increase of 7-9 percent in the frequency of claims in 3 of the 4 study states. Increases in the frequency of claims also were found for rated drivers 25 and younger in these 3 states.[29]

17 | Can technology be used to prevent crashes caused by distracted driving?

Automakers are rolling out crash avoidance systems that warn drivers when they are not paying attention. Some systems may intervene if the system judges that a crash is imminent. Systems like lane-departure warning and forward-collision warning promise to prevent many kinds of distracted driving crashes, not just those that result from cellphone use (see Status Report, April 17, 2008). But this isn't a quick fix. Most new vehicles don't have crash avoidance features, and it will take some time before the systems are in wide use as newer vehicles supplant older ones. Plus, the effects of these technologies on real-world crashes have not yet been established.

High Visibility Enforcement Demonstration Programs in Connecticut and New York Reduce Hand-Held Phone Use

By Linda Cosgrove, Neil Chaudhary, and Scott Roberts

Driving while distracted increases the likelihood of a crash (NHTSA, 2010), and recent well-publicized events have brought this unsafe driving behavior to the forefront of the public eye. According to CTIA-The Wireless Association (2009) about 285 million Americans (91% of all Americans) now own cell phones, compared to only 1 million in 1987. The National Health Interview Survey (Blumberg & Luke, 2010) found that nearly one in four households were wireless only (no land line), up nearly 2 percentage points from the year before. The popularity of text messaging is increasing, and videotaped footage of drivers who were texting immediately before a crash has circulated widely on television and the Internet.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration estimates that 6% of drivers nationwide were using an electronic device at any given time in 2008 (Pickrell & Ye, 2009. A meta-analysis (Horrey & Wickens, 2006) of 23 experiments that measured the effects of cell phone use on driving performance found that, across all studies, reaction times were consistently slower when using a cell phone than when not using a phone.

To address this problem, NHTSA initiated distracted driving demonstration programs in two communities to test whether a high visibility enforcement (HVE) model could reduce two specific instances of distracted driving -- talking or texting using a hand-held cell phone. The HVE model combines dedicated law enforcement during a specific period, paid and earned media emphasizing an enforcement-based message, and evaluation before and after. Click It or Ticket, NHTSA's best known and most successful HVE campaign for seat belt use, has also been effective in areas of aggressive driving and impaired driving. This report summarizes results from the first two of four waves of enforcement and media for distracted driving high visibility enforcement campaigns in two communities.

Background

Over the past several years legislatures have introduced laws banning hand-held cell phone use and texting in a number of States. New York and Connecticut passed laws banning hand-held cell phone while driving in 2001 and 2005 respectively. At the time of this report, 8 States and the District of Columbia have banned hand-held cell phone use for all drivers, and 30 States and the District have banned texting for all drivers (GHSA, 2010). Many States also ban any use of a cell phone (even with a hands-free device) for novice teen drivers. The demonstration projects were aimed to test whether HVE would be effective in persuading drivers not to use hand-held phones to talk or text, whether law enforcement would be able to observe violations, and whether an HVE campaign would increase drivers' perceived risk of receiving a citation for violating the law.

Hand-held cell phone use while driving dropped 56% in Hartford (from 6.8% to 3.1%) and 38% in Syracuse (from 3.7% to 2.3%).*

Texting while driving declined 68% in Hartford (from 3.9% to 1.4%) and 42% in Syracuse (from 2.8% to 1.6%).*

Under the leadership of the U.S. Department of Transportation Secretary Ray LaHood, NHTSA awarded cooperative agreements to Connecticut and New York to implement and evaluate demonstration programs that apply the high visibility enforcement model to distracted driving at the community level. Syracuse, New York, and Hartford, Connecticut, (a combination of three contiguous cities -- East Hartford, Hartford, and West Hartford) conducted the demonstrations.

Program Description

NHTSA worked with the Connecticut Department of Transportation and the New York Department of Motor Vehicles' (DMV) Governor's Traffic Safety Committee to conduct model high visibility enforcement programs in the two selected communities. In Connecticut, the participating law enforcement agencies were the Connecticut State Police and the Hartford, West Hartford, and East Hartford Police Departments. In New York, the New York State Police, the Syracuse Police Department, and the Onondaga County Sheriff's Office participated. Both communities planned to conduct four waves of enforcement over the course of one year.

Under separate contracts, NHTSA provided evaluation and communications support to both sites. Preusser Research Group was the evaluation firm and the Tombras Group was the communications firm.

Post Wave Awareness	April 15-20	April 19-22	July 29-August 3	August 2-6

The first two waves of focused enforcement took place in April and July 2010. Table 1 shows the timeline for pre and post evaluation data collection, media flights, and enforcement in test and control sites.

Development of the Creative Material

In September 2009 NHTSA explored a variety of project themes and held focus groups in Syracuse and Hartford (four in each city). Six potential taglines were selected for assessment. The line "A phone in one hand leads to a ticket in the other" received the highest marks. Based on additional comments, the line for the demonstration project was shortened to Phone in One Hand, Ticket in the Other.

The creative material was designed to generate high awareness of stepped-up enforcement efforts regarding local cell phone laws and convince drivers to adhere to those laws. In December 2009, eight more focus groups were held in Hartford and Syracuse to test four TV commercial ideas. The "BAM!" concept received the highest marks, and became the ad for the demo project.

Earned Media

Secretary LaHood and NHTSA Administrator David Strickland launched the campaign with press events (U.S. DOT, 2010) in each State on April 8, 2010. These events generated considerable coverage from local and national media outlets including a feature on ABC-TV's Good Morning America (Clarke, 2010) and a feature on ABC News (San Miguel, 2010).

Each of the demonstration sites received sample earned media templates so that they could develop localized press releases, fact sheets and post wave press releases. Outreach with the news media and various partners during each wave resulted in scores of articles and events in both States. In Connecticut and New York, more than 100 news organizations developed news stories about the demonstration projects. Syracuse and Hartford actively generated opportunities to earn additional media for the program. For instance, New York initiated a media tour and the Connecticut DMV joined with Traveler's Insurance Company to sponsor a teen driving video contest.

Paid Media

NHTSA's Office of Communications and Consumer Information purchased air time to promote the program activity and emphasize the enforcement component among the target audience of men and women 18 to 45 years old. The television spots are available online at distraction.gov/hartford and distraction.gov/syracuse. Figure 1 shows a still shot from one of the animated Internet ads also located on the Web site.

Advertisers use "gross rating points" (GRPs) to determine how much of their target audience is reached by a specific advertisement multiplied by the number of times the target audience sees it. For the first wave in April 2010, NHTSA purchased two weeks of advertising in each demonstration location at a level of about 535 GRPs for television/cable, 400 GRPs for radio, and an additional 2 million online impressions on Web sites like USAToday.com. This was considered a strong buy that would reach the target audience enough times that the ad's message would resonate with them. For the second wave in July 2010, NHTSA purchased one week of advertising in each demonstration location at a level of about 300 GRPs for television/cable, approximately 240 GRPs for radio, and an additional 1.5 million online impressions. The media expenditures were $219,290 in Hartford and $88,904 in Syracuse for both waves combine (see Table 2).

The Connecticut Highway Safety Office also ran the Phone in One Hand, Ticket in the Other slogan on variable message boards in and around the pilot area and purchased digital billboards on major Hartford Interstate Highways I-84 and I-91. The billboard message also ran at the XL Center, a sports and concert venue in downtown Hartford. This message ran on the XL Center digital billboard and outdoor marquee.

Enforcement

Hartford and Syracuse chose enforcement strategies tailored to their communities. Hartford preferred a spotter technique, where an officer, usually standing on the side of the road, radioed ahead to another officer whenever a passing motorist using a hand-held cell phone was observed. The second officer made the stop and wrote the ticket. The Connecticut Highway Safety Office prepared citation holders, short brochures that officers used to hold the tickets to provide specific information about Connecticut's cell phone law, the fine amount, and the risks associated with distraction.

Syracuse preferred roving patrols where officers drove though their jurisdiction actively seeking out distracted drivers using cell phones or texting. Officers reported that higher vantage points, SUVs, and unmarked vehicles were particularly effective in identifying violators. Both States found that having the flexibility to schedule overtime shifts as needed was critical to the successful implementation of the enforcement mobilizations.

Both Hartford and Syracuse dedicated officers to vigorously enforce the hand-held cell phone ban during the two waves, exceeding benchmarks based on previous high visibility enforcement campaigns. Table 3 shows the number of enforcement hours and phone and texting citations issued in each site, along with the rate of citations per 10,000 of each city's population.

Evaluation Methodology

Before and after each enforcement wave, NHTSA conducted observations of driver cell phone use and collected public awareness surveys at driver licensing offices in each test and comparison site.

Albany, New York, served as the comparison area for Syracuse. Bridgeport and Stamford, Connecticut, were noncontiguous control areas to match the demographics of the three Hartford area cities. Control sites allow evaluators to separate the effect of the demonstration program from extraneous influences that may be going on in the State. None of the control sites received the paid media advertising and law enforcement officers continued their usual enforcement activities without special emphasis on cell phone laws.

Cell Phone Observations

Cell phone observations were taken at 15 sites in each intervention area, plus 15 sites in Albany, 15 in Stamford, and 7 sites in Bridgeport. Sites were selected from road segments based on traffic volume estimates. Three of the sites in each area were highway off-ramps. The rest of the sites were identified from the highest volume segments, assuring that they were geographically dispersed throughout the areas. The main goal of site selection was to capture the bulk of the traffic streams in the given area.

Observation protocols were based on NHTSA's National Occupant Protection Use Survey (NOPUS) observation protocols, adapted to increase sample size. An earlier formulation of the method, consistent with NOPUS observation protocols, had observers sampling from traffic stopped at red lights. Therefore all selected sites were at traffic light controlled intersections. Pilot testing of this method resulted in few observations and NHTSA modified its method to observe moving traffic only. Observations were made from street corners observing one direction of traffic (the vehicles traveling in the lanes nearest the observer) for one hour at each site. When traffic signals turned red, observers pivoted and sampled vehicles from the moving traffic on the cross street. Observers coded vehicle type, sex, estimated age (16-24, 25-59, 60+) and whether the driver was holding a hand-held phone to her or his ear, manipulating a cell phone (other than by holding to one's ear) and if the driver had a hands-free headset (e.g., Bluetooth) in the visible ear.

The main analyses were the average percentage of each of the three cell phone use categories separately for each test and control area. Weighting of data occurred prior to analysis so that each site held equal weight. That is, for a 15-site survey in which the number of observed drivers varied between sites, the percentage use recorded in each site contributed an equal 1/15 of the total use rate for that area. Binary logistic regressions analyses evaluated the significance of differences and chi squares were conducted for raw data for subsets of the data (e.g., age). Over 121,000 vehicles were observed for the first two waves of the demonstration program.

Self-Reported Use and Awareness Surveys

Motorists who visited driver licensing offices in the test and comparison sites completed a single page questionnaire asking whether they had seen or heard of the distracted driving program, enforcement, or messaging. They were asked about their cell phone use while driving and whether they had changed their cell phone use in the past 30 days, among other topics. Surveyors collected more surveys for the first (pre Wave 1) administration and will do the same for the final (post Wave 4) administration to increase the power of analyses for both baseline and final data. Over 11,000 self-report surveys were collected for the first two waves of the demonstration program.

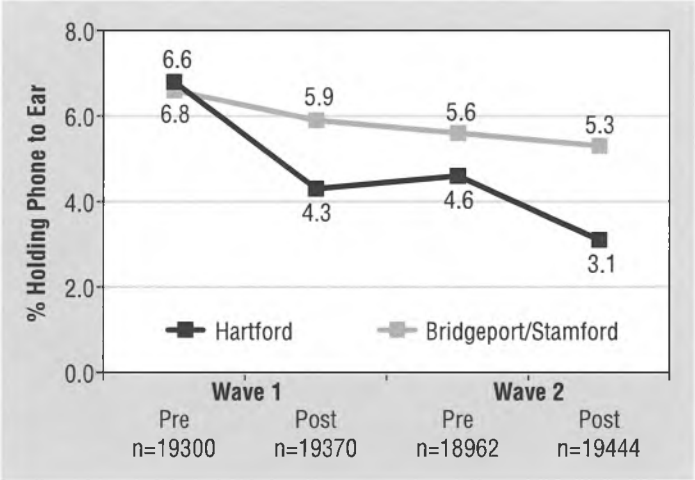
Researchers collected some data a bit later than originally planned (Table 1). In Syracuse there was a clerical error on the final question about slogan recognition. For this question, the analyses report data from another survey administered two weeks later in both Syracuse and Albany. There were inexplicable fluctuations in the Wave 2 results (pre and post) in the Albany surveys compared to Wave 1. For example there were 14% (pre) and 11% (post) of the respondents who reported having gotten a ticket for using a hand-held phone in the past month for Wave 2. This value was only 1% in both pre and post Wave 1 surveys. The data collected two weeks later were more comparable to Wave 1 results. For this reason the researchers deemed the original data from Albany Wave 2 unreliable. The analyses report only the re-sampled post wave data for Albany.

Results

Observed Phone Use in Connecticut

The results of Wave 1 showed a significant decrease ($p < .01$) in hand-held cell phone use in the Hartford areas from 6.8% before the program to 4.3. afterwards (see Figure 2). The control areas also showed a slight decrease in hand-held cell phone use, but this was not statistically significant (6.6% to 5.9%, $p > .05$).

Figure 2
Observed Hand-Held Phone Use in Connecticut



There were further reductions in observed hand-held cell phone use in the second wave in the Hartford intervention area. In between waves, there was minimal increase in hand-held cell phone use in the Hartford areas, when the program was silent. Observed use was 4.6% at the pre measurement of the second wave, dropping to 3.1% in the post measurement ($p < .01$). Use in the control areas continued a slight, although not statistically significant, downward trend, starting at 5.6% and dropping to 5.3% ($p > .05$).

From the baseline (pre Wave 1) to the end of the second wave (post Wave 2) hand-held cell phone use dropped 56% (from 6.8% to 3.1% in the Hartford areas compared to 20% (6.6% to 5.3%) in the control areas.

Most of the decrease in cell phone use was attributed to drivers age 25 to 59 in the Hartford area. Young drivers 16 to 24 dropped 5.3 percentage points (from a pre of 9.0% to a post of 3.7%) following enforcement during Wave 1. However, relatively small sample sizes for this group made this drop only marginally significant ($p < .06$). There was no change for the second wave for the young drivers and there was also no change in use among this group for control areas in either wave. For the 25- to 59-year-old age group, there were significant pre to post drops for both waves in the Hartford area. The changes in the control areas were not significant for either wave and there were no significant effects for the oldest drivers in either wave in either area.

There were significant drops in observed phone use for men and women in both waves in the Hartford area. Surprisingly, there were significant (p's $< .05$) pre to post decreases among female drivers in the control area for both waves but no change for male drivers.

For Wave 1, headset use significantly decreased from pre to post in both the Hartford area (3.5% to 2.8%) and in the control area (4.1% to 2.7%). For Wave 2, none of the pre to post differences were significant in either the test or control sites.

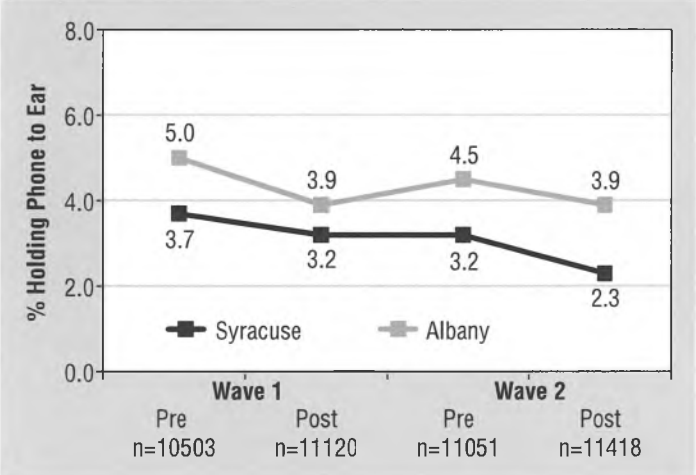
The percentage of people observed manipulating their phones decreased significantly in Wave 1 from pre to post. There was a larger decrease in the Hartford area (3.9% to 2.7%) than in the control area (2.8% to 2.1%). For Wave 2 there was another significant pre to post decrease without much of an increase between waves in the Hartford area (2.6% to 1.4%). There was no change in the control area for the second wave (2.6% to 2.6%).

Observed Phone Use in New York

The results of Wave 1 showed a non-significant decrease in hand-held cell phone use in Syracuse going from 3.7% to 3.2% ($p > .05$) (see Figure 3). There was an unexpected decrease in use in the control area that did reach significance. In Albany use started at 5.0% and dropped to 3.9%.

Wave 2 results were more in line with expectations. Between waves there was no increase in hand-held cell phone in Syracuse and use remained at 3.2%. After the second wave there was a significant drop in use to 2.3% ($p < .01$). Use in Albany rebounded between waves and was 4.5% prior to Wave 2. There was a drop in hand-held cell phone use in Albany (to 3.9%) but this decrease was not significant.

Figure 3
Observed Hand-Held Phone Use in New York



From the baseline (pre Wave 1) to the end of the second wave (post Wave 2) hand-held cell phone use dropped 38% (from 3.7% to 2.3%) in Syracuse compared to a 22% decline (from 5.0% to 3.9%) in Albany.

Drivers 25 to 59 accounted for most of the decrease in cell phone use in Syracuse in Wave 1, but not enough to influence the overall observation rate. None of the other age categories in Syracuse showed a decrease for this wave. The same age group was also the only significant decrease for the Albany drivers in Wave 1. For Wave 2, this group was again the only age group showing a significant decrease in Syracuse. In Albany, despite no overall significant drop, the drivers under 25 showed a significant decrease in driving while using a hand-held phone.

During Wave 1, male drivers showed a significant decrease in driving while on a hand-held phone in Syracuse while women did not. This effect for men was also the only significant drop in Albany. In the second wave men again significantly reduced their use in Syracuse while women did not. Conversely, there was a small but significant decrease in use by women in Albany but not men.

Observations of phone manipulation (e.g., texting, dialing) significantly decreased ($p < .05$) in Syracuse in Wave 1 (2.8% to 2.2%). There was also a decrease in Wave 2 (2.2% to 1.6%), but this decrease was not significant. The observed rate of manipulating a phone while driving was much higher in Albany than Syracuse. In both waves there was a significant pre to post decrease in observed phone manipulation in Albany (Wave 1: 6.3% to 5.3%; Wave 2: 5.7% to 3.0%). Both cities showed an overall decrease of 43% in observed phone manipulation from the baseline to the end of the second wave, with an absolute change of 1.2 percentage points in Syracuse and 3.3 points in Albany.

There were no significant changes in Syracuse in the percentage of drivers observed with hands-free headset. In both waves (pre and post) the rate was about 2% (ranging from 1.7% to 2.3%). Albany's rate of hands-free use was more variable ranging from 4.4% to 2.6%. There was a significant decrease between pre and post use rates during Wave 1 (4.4% to 2.8%).

Self-Reported Cell Phone Use and Program Awareness in Connecticut

Respondents in Connecticut were aware of and knowledgeable about the program and enforcement. From pre to post in Wave 1, Hartford area respondents reported increased chances of getting tickets while there was no effect in the control area. In both Syracuse and the control site, Albany, respondents also reported hearing more general distracted driving information after Wave 1 than before. In Wave 1 there was a decrease in the percentage reporting that it is important for police to enforce the hand-held cell law in both Hartford and control areas, but much of the decrease was restored by Wave 2. There was a pre to post increase in the Hartford area in Wave 1 for reports of having ever gotten a cell phone ticket. Similarly there was a pre to post (Wave 1 only) increase in reports of getting a ticket in the past month (for the control area also).

During Wave 2 there was an increase in the percentage of respondents in the Hartford area who heard about enhanced police enforcement. There was no such increase during Wave 1, but there was an overall gain between the waves. There were no significant effects for the control area.

During Wave 1 there was actually a decrease in the percentage of people having heard about distracted driving in general (both areas) but in Wave 2 there was a large increase (pre to post) in recognition for the Hartford area (but not the control area).

Awareness of the Phone in One Hand, Ticket in the Other slogan started at 5% in the pre of Wave 1. Following the first wave, recognition rose significantly to 32%. There was also a significant increase in the control area but not of the same magnitude (5% to 11%). Wave 2 led to further increases in recognition in the Hartford areas (27% to 47%). There was no increase in the control areas (8% to 10%).

Recognition of other slogans was not as high. The other most recognized slogan in the Hartford area following Wave 2 was I-Promise Not to Drive Distracted which was recognized by 15% of respondents. A local TV station (WFSB) has been running messages with this slogan between enforcement waves. Ten percent of the respondents recognized Hang Up or Pay Up, an enforcement type distracter slogan not in use in the area. Recognition of Oprah Winfrey's No Phone Zone was at 8%.

There was an increase in Wave 1 for judgments of frequency of cell phone use while driving, with no effect for the control group. The effect dissipated by Wave 2 -- the Wave 2 pre and post measures were much lower than the post of Wave 1. There was also a significant increase in self-reported texting during the first wave in the Hartford area. During the second wave there was a significant decrease in reported use by the control area respondents.

Self-Reported Cell Phone Use and Program Awareness in New York

Overall, Syracuse respondents knew about the enforcement and messaging campaign. Drivers in Syracuse reported having heard about the cell phone enforcement with significant pre to post increases for each wave. They also reported hearing about distracted driving (in general) more in the post of Wave 1 than in the pre of Wave 1 and this was also true in Albany. There was also an increase in self-reported tickets within the last month for Wave 1 in Syracuse. There was an increase in both waves for perceived strictness of police enforcement in Syracuse while there was a significant decrease during Wave 1 in Albany, the control site.

Unexpectedly, self-reported hand-held cell phone use increased from pre to post in Wave 1 in Syracuse. Albany's rates stayed the same. There were no changes in self-reported texting while driving.

Recognition of the main message, Phone in One Hand, Ticket in the Other, increased 32 percentage points in Syracuse (5% to 37%). The rates were flat in Albany, going from 4% to 5%.

Slogan recognition for Syracuse went from 5% to 21%. It is likely that recognition would have been even higher immediately following the campaign. Indeed, the recognition was at 37% following Wave 1. Rates in Albany, the control site, stayed the same going from 4% to 5%.

Recognition of other slogans was considerably lower at the end of Wave 2 in Syracuse. For example Hang Up or Pay Up, (not in use in the area) was 11%. Eight percent of the respondents recognized Oprah Winfrey's No Phone Zone.

There was an unexpected increase from pre to post in the first wave in Syracuse respondents' judgment of how frequently they use a hand-held phone while driving, similar to the findings in Hartford. This increase was not present in Albany, and was not present in the second wave in either area. Self-reported cell phone use rates for both pre and post in the second wave were lower than the post in the first wave for Syracuse. Figures 4 through 8 show public awareness findings for Syracuse, Hartford, and the control sites over both waves.

Discussion

The most apparent finding from the first two waves of NHTSA's distracted driving demonstration programs in Syracuse and Hartford is that awareness about cell phone use and texting is remarkably high. About 6 in 10 in both communities had heard something about distracted driving, even before the new Phone in One Hand, Ticket in the Other advertisements aired. This most likely reflects the influx in media discussing the issue. Insurance companies, mobile phone providers, and safety organizations have been addressing the dangers of using a cell phone and texting while driving, especially for teens, and have sponsored advertisements on national television. State legislatures have passed texting and cell phone bans. The U.S. Department of Transportation held a summit in Washington, DC, in September 2009 bringing together over 250 researchers, government agencies, industry representatives, public advocates, and elected officials to discuss what could be done to reduce the preventable deaths and injuries that distracted driving is causing in America. The President issued an Executive order advising Federal workers to "put it down." In January 2010 Oprah started the No Phone Zone and on April 30, the Oprah Winfrey Show launched a "No Phone Zone Day" with a live TV broadcast, rallies in six cities – Atlanta, Boston, Detroit, Chicago, Los Angeles, and Washington – and a national public service announcement campaign.

Despite the national attention and motorists' beliefs that distracted driving by others is a dangerous activity, surveys show that motorists are willing to engage in the behavior themselves. Changing driver behavior presents a challenge, but high visibility enforcement campaigns are a proven countermeasure in a variety of traffic safety areas. The intent of a high visibility enforcement campaign is not to issue tickets. Rather, the intent is to deter drivers from engaging in that particular behavior in the first place. In order words, if drivers violate a particular law, there should be a high certainty that they will receive a ticket. While issuing one citation to a motorist may persuade that person to avoid that offense in the future (known as specific deterrence), highly visible enforcement seeks to have 100 or 1,000 other drivers know about that one citation so they choose to avoid that behavior (general deterrence).

The new slogan, Phone in One Hand, Ticket in the Other, proved effective in conveying the message of increased cell phone enforcement to the public. Nearly 50% of respondents in Hartford and 20% in Syracuse reported that they had seen and heard about the program after just the first wave of the program. People reported having heard about the enforcement, recognized the increased strictness of the police, and thought that their chance of getting a ticket if they used a hand-held cell phone increased. An interesting anomaly in the public awareness data is that self-reported use of a hand-held cell phone actually increased during the first wave, before finally decreasing at the end of the second wave. One explanation is that drivers were becoming more aware of their cell phone use while driving because of the increased media. There was strong public support for the program, with 8 out of 10 drivers believing that it is important for the police to enforce the hand-held cell phone law.

Observed cell phone use decreased in both sites by the end of the second wave of the Phone in One Hand, Ticket in the Other demonstration program. Before the distracted driving programs began, observed cell phone use in Syracuse was about half that of the rest of the Nation and Connecticut was close to average. Both States have had hand-held cell phone bans while driving for some time – 2001 for New York and 2005 for Connecticut. After the second wave of the high visibility enforcement campaign, hand-held cell phone use decreased 38% in Syracuse (from 3.7% to 2.3%) and 58% in Hartford (from 6.8% to 3.1%). The laws alone may have served to keep these States at or below the national average, but the addition of high visibility enforcement and media emphasizing the enforcement drove the rates down even lower. High levels of national media and celebrity attention to distracted driving, such as by the Oprah Winfrey Show, may account for some of the high public awareness of the issue and for the steady declines in observed hand-held cell phone use in the control sites and among women in three of the five sites overall.

Unlike other periodic traffic safety campaigns, there was no rebound or ratcheting effect during the period between waves where the observed behavior reverted close to previous levels. It remains to be seen whether this trend will continue throughout the remaining two waves, but it is promising and suggests that social norms towards phone use and texting are shifting towards finding it as unacceptable as driving while impaired by alcohol.

The law enforcement agencies in both sites exceeded program expectations. Ticketing rates of about 20 citations per 10,000 population are common benchmarks for effective belt enforcement programs, a rate deemed sufficient to change motorists' behaviors. Enforcement rates for the distracted driving demonstration programs in Syracuse and Hartford were more than five times that benchmark. Officers reported that they were enthusiastic about the dedicated advertising that focused on their increased enforcement. They reported that coordinated enforcement activities with neighboring law enforcement agencies expanded the visibility of their enforcement efforts. They reported positive public reactions -- the general theme was that "it was about time."

There are challenges to enforcing hand-held cell phone and texting bans. The most obvious challenge is the difficulty in observing the offense. Syracuse law enforcement officers preferred roving patrols and found higher observation locations or taller vehicles like SUVs useful in seeing down into a passenger vehicle to observe texting offenses. Hartford officers found the spotter, or stationary, strategy effective but both chose strategies that suited their community and resources and both used other strategies as well. Because this was a demonstration program, additional reporting paperwork was required. The Hartford officers felt that their post ticketing paper work was more time consuming than a seat belt ticket but they are working to improve the process in time for the third wave.

There are two additional waves of enforcement planned in Hartford and Syracuse. The third wave will begin in October 2010; the fourth and final wave will occur in the spring of 2011. At the conclusion of the fourth wave, NHTSA's Office of Behavioral Safety Research will prepare a final report detailing all four waves.

Executive Summary:
As reported by Alaskan Drivers:

- One in four have driven within two hours of drinking an alcoholic drink in the past 60 days.
- Nearly 70% believe that the court system is somewhat to very tough on enforcing drunk driving laws.
- Almost half believe that chances of getting arrested for drinking and driving are at least very likely.
- 91% always buckle up.
- 41% think it is unlikely they'll get a ticket for not wearing a seatbelt.
- 49% rarely or never drive over 35mph in a 30 mph zone.
- 81% rarely or never drive over 70 mph in a 65 mph zone.
- 79% of 4-8 years olds always use booster seats.
- 61% talk on their cell phone while driving.
- 86% never text while driving.
- 72% usually use headlights when driving in daylight.

Introduction:
The Alaska Injury Prevention Center (AIPC) designed and implemented a phone survey, in compliance with the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration guidelines. A randomly selected representative sample of Alaska licensed drivers was asked a series of questions in the five-minute phone survey. The questions addressed driver attitudes, awareness of highway safety enforcement and communication activities and self-reported driving behavior. The questions addressed the following topics: seatbelt use, drinking and driving, headlight use, talking and texting while driving, speeding and booster seat use.

Methodology:
A five-minute telephone survey, was conducted in August, 2010. The survey included 40 questions, mostly closed-ended, introduction, screener, and demographics questions. Craciun Research Group (CRG) was contracted with to conduct the survey. AIPC provided CRG with questions, conducted analysis and wrote the report of survey findings. CRG reviewed the survey and made suggestions for changes; programmed the approved survey; prepared the four sample frames from CRG's database of Alaska residents, with quotas for age categories; conducted the survey, and provided the data to the client.

Total sample size for the survey was four hundred (n=400) Anchorage, Kenai/Soldotna, Mat-Su and Fairbanks and Juneau residents for a total margin of error of +/-5% with 95% confidence.

Analysis:

The analysis section is broken out into 6 sections. Each section addresses behaviors and potential motivational variables and demographic variables which might affect the behavior choices. Motivational variables include awareness of enforcement efforts and perceived likelihood of getting caught engaging in an illegal and unsafe behavior. Analysis was done utilizing PASW 18 (formerly know as SPSS.) Frequencies and crosstabs were the primary analytical tests used for this preliminary review of the data. Additional analysis will be conducted in the next few months to provide a broader vision of highway issues.

Drinking and Driving

Just over one in four (27%) persons of driving age reported driving a motor vehicle within 2 hours of consuming an alcoholic drink in the past sixty days. These persons are referred to as "drinking- drivers" throughout this report. Thirty-two percent of males and 21% of females reported at least one drinking-driving trip in the past 60 days. Within these groups, 8% of men and 4% of women have taken 4 or more drink-driving trips in the past 60 days. [1]

When examined by education, the percentage of the driving-age public who reported driving a motor vehicle within 2 hours of drinking any alcoholic beverages ranged from 22% - 26% for respondents with a GED to those with a 4-year degree. The percent jumped to 42% for those with a postgraduate degree.

Looking at type of vehicle driven revealed that drivers of cars, SUV's and trucks all had about a 30% chance of drinking and driving. Only 4% of van drivers reported having made at least one trip after drinking alcohol.

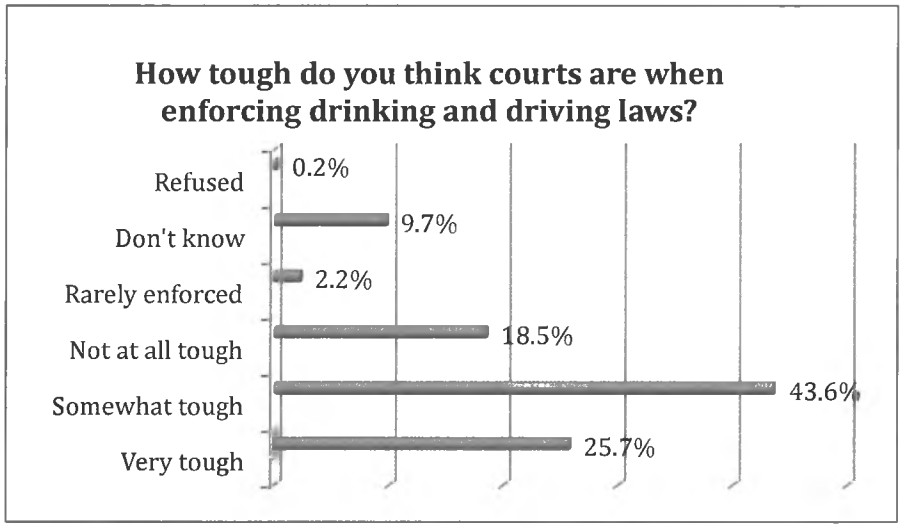
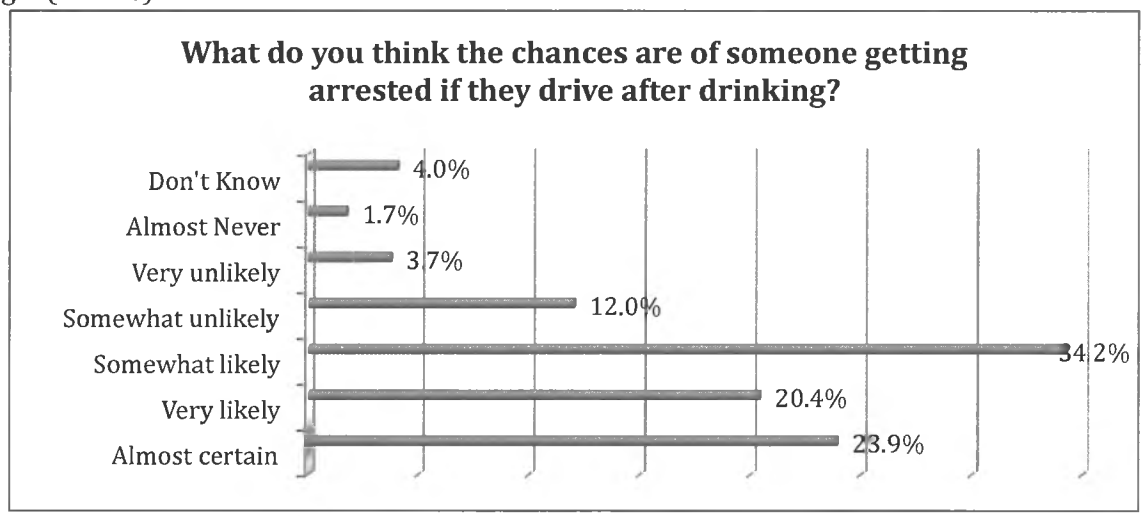
[1] Q.22 In the past 60 days, how many times have you driven a motor vehicle within 2 hours after drinking an alcoholic beverage? Never, Once, Two or three times, Four or five times, Many times, Some. I don't know how many, Refused



Participants were also asked how tough they thought courts were in enforcing drinking and driving laws.[2] Most answered that they thought courts were somewhat to very tough. (69.3%)



Participants were also asked how tough they thought courts were in enforcing drinking and driving laws.[3]

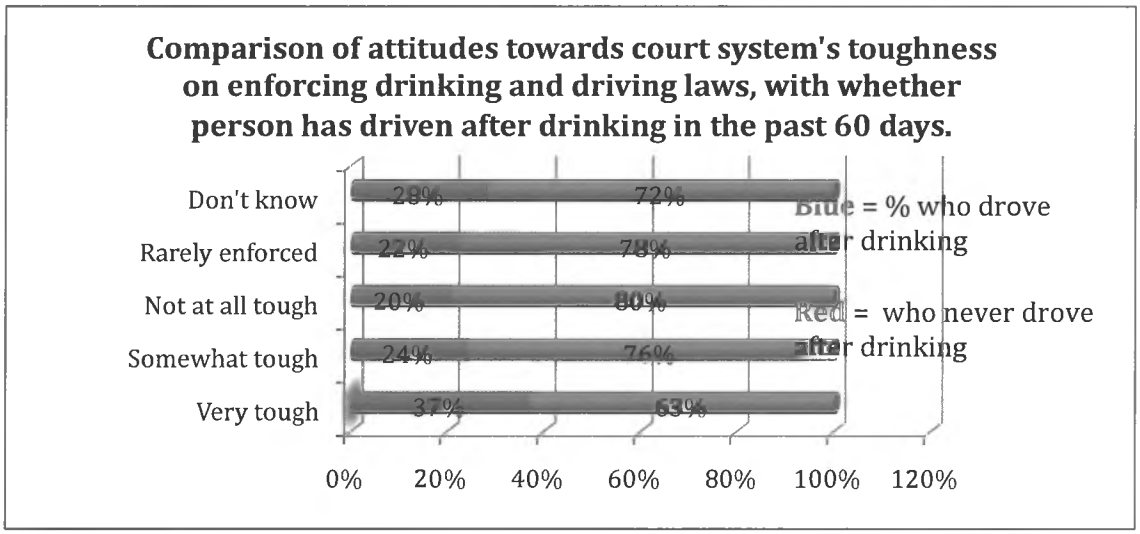
[3] Q.15 In your opinion, how tough do you think the courts are when enforcing drinking-and-driving laws?
Very tough, Somewhat tough, Not at all tough, Rarely enforced, Don't know/ Unsure, Refused

Twenty-three percent of the driving-age public believed that a driver who had too much to drink to drive safely was "almost certain" to be arrested by the police. Seventy-eight percent believe a person's chances are "Somewhat likely" or more that they will get arrested if they drive after drinking. Twenty-six percent believed that the courts are very tough when enforcing drinking and driving laws. While 70% believe that the courts are somewhat to very tough with enforcing these laws.



Of those who believe that the courts are very tough enforcing drinking and driving laws, 37% had driven after drinking in the last 60 days. Participants were asked whether they had "read, seen or heard anything about drunk-driving enforcement in Alaska."[4] Sixty-seven percent answered yes. Of those who self reported making many trips after drinking in the last 60 days, 82% were aware of drunk driving enforcement.

Seatbelt Use

In the 2010 seatbelt observation survey for Alaska, 86.7% or drivers and passengers were observed wearing a seatbelt. When asked: "How often do you use a seatbelt when you drive or ride in your personal vehicle" 91% answered "always" and 5% said "almost always."[5] Only 1.2% said never. Fifty-five percent said they had read, seen or heard about seatbelt enforcement in the past 60 days.[6] And 29% believed that a person would always or nearly always get a ticket for not using a seatbelt.[7] Forty-two percent answered that the chance was never or seldom.

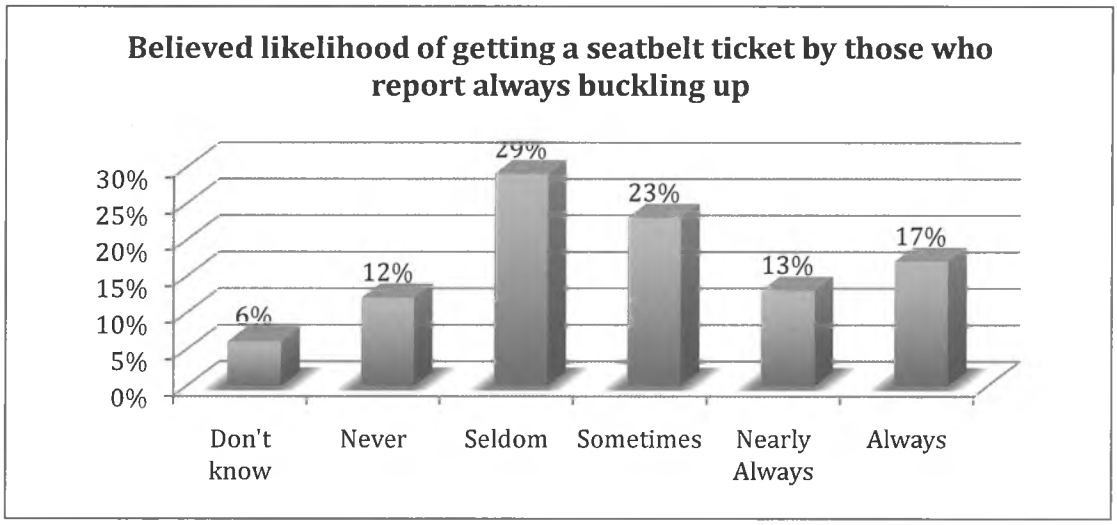
[4] Q.21 In the past 60 days, have you read, seen or heard anything about drunk-driving enforcement in Alaska? Yes, No, Don't know/ Unsure, Refused

[5] Q.11 How often do you use a seatbelt when you drive or ride in your personal vehicle? Always, Nearly always, Sometimes, Seldom, Never, Unsure, Refused

[6] Q.12 In the past 60 days, have you read, seen or heard anything about seat belt enforcement in Alaska? Yes, No, Don't know/ Unsure, Refused

[7] Q.13 What do you think the chance is for you to get a ticket if you do not wear your seat belt? Would you get one: Always, Nearly always, Sometimes, Seldom, Never, Don't know/ Unsure,Refused

The degree of certainty of which a person would get a seatbelt ticket did not seem to be effected by awareness of seatbelt use enforcement. Sixty-four percent of those who thought they had no chance of getting a seatbelt ticket had heard about seatbelt enforcement in the last 60 days. Sixty percent of those who thought they would always get a ticket had also heard of the enforcement efforts.



For those who always wear a seatbelt, 12% felt that they would never get a ticket for not buckling up and 17 percent felt they would always get a ticket. Forty-one percent thought they would never or seldom get a ticket. While 30% thought they would always or nearly always get a ticket.

Speeding

Two scenarios were presented concerning speeding. The first was how often a driver goes more than 70 mph in a 65 mph zone.[8] And the second how often the driver goes faster than 35 mph in a 30 mph zone.[9] People report being more likely to speed in 30 mph areas than 65 mph areas. Eighty-one percent say they rarely or never go over 70 in a 65 area. However, 59% say they rarely or never drive more than 35 mph in a 30 mph zone.

[8] Q.18 On a road with a speed limit of 65 mph, how often do you find yourself driving faster than 70 mph: Most of the time, Half of the time, Rarely, Never, Refused

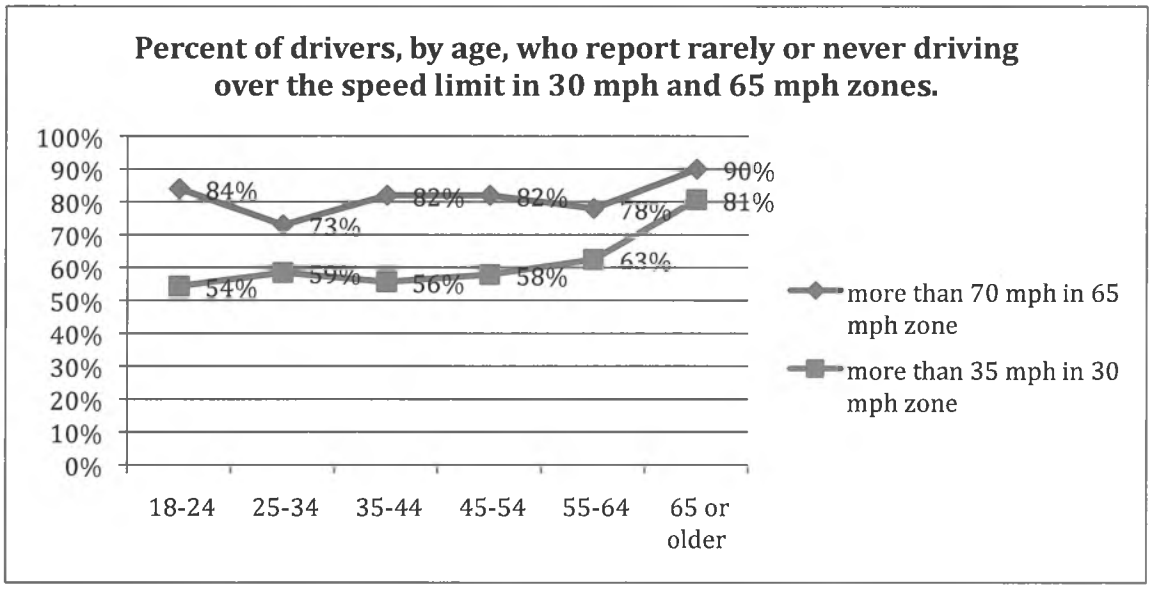
Considering this further, gender makes a difference. Eighty percent of men and 82% of women report never or rarely driving over 70 in a 65 zone. While Sixty-three percent of men and 56% of women report rarely or never driving faster than 35 in a 30 mph zone.

[9] Q.17 On a local road with a speed limit of 30 mph, how often do you find yourself driving faster than 35 mph: Most of the time, Half of the time, Rarely, Never, Refused



Looking at the data by age group shows that there is an increase in the percent of drivers who drive close to the speed limit with an increase in age. But this doesn't really show until the 65-year and older group of drivers.

Cell Phones:

Ninety-three percent of respondents said that there is at least one cell phone in their households. Cell phones have become commonplace in and out of cars. This is the first time cell phone use and ownership questions were asked in an Alaska Highway Safety phone survey. The answers here will serve as baseline data.

Multiple questions were asked concerning cell phone use in cars. Questions included how often the driver talks on the phone, reads of sends texts, makes or answers calls, whether these happen more often on city or rural roads, and whether hands-free devices are used while driving.[10] Additionally, the 2010 Alaska NOPUS observational surveys collected data about observed cell phone usage rate for drivers. The statewide observed cell phone use rate was 5.1%. The observed usage rates by borough were:

[10] Q.25 How often do you talk on a cell phone while driving your car? Almost every time you drive, Every two or three times, Sometimes, not often, Never, Don't know/ Unsure, Refused

Q.26 How often do you read or send text messages while driving your car? Almost every time you drive, Every two or three times, Sometimes, not often, Never, Don't know/ Unsure, Refused

Q.27 Do you make calls from your car, answer them or both? Make calls, Answer them, Both, Refused

Q.28 Do you take or make calls when you are driving in a city or town or only on rural roads? In cities or towns, in rural areas, Both, Neither, Refused

Q.29 Do you have a "hands-free" cell phone arrangement in your vehicles? Yes, No, Not in every car I drive, Refused MatSu 8.0%, Kenai/Soldotna 6.0%, Anchorage 5.0%, Fairbanks 4.9%, and Juneau 2.0%. These numbers do not include use where a hands-free device was in use.

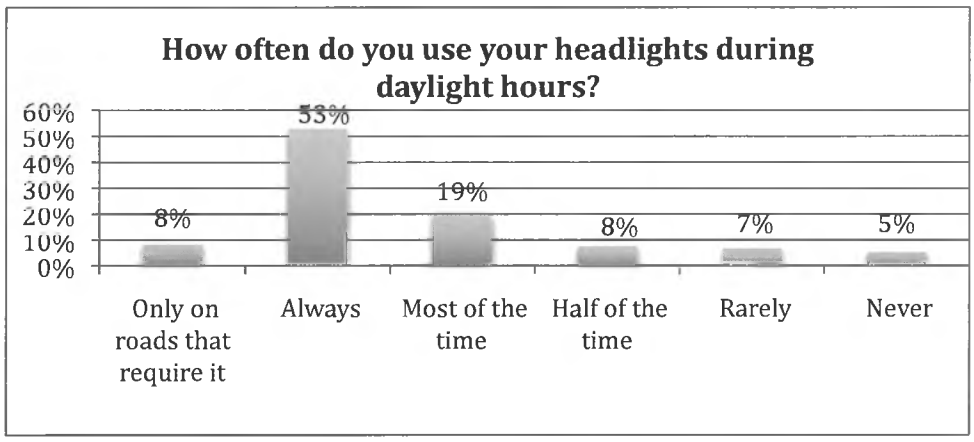
Most people (86%) report that they never read or send texts while driving. Two percent say they text at least every two or three times that they drive. While 19% of drivers talk on their cell phones at least every two or three times that they drive. And 42% say they talk on their phone some times but not often. Thirty-nine percent of drivers say they never talk on a cell phone while driving.

The next three questions were only asked of those who have used a cell phone while driving. Just over a third (36%) of cell phone using drivers have a hands-free device. Seventy-six percent of users have both made and received phone calls. Twenty-one percent have only answered calls. Sixty percent use cell phones in both rural and urban areas. Twelve percent use them only is urban areas, and 9% in only rural areas.

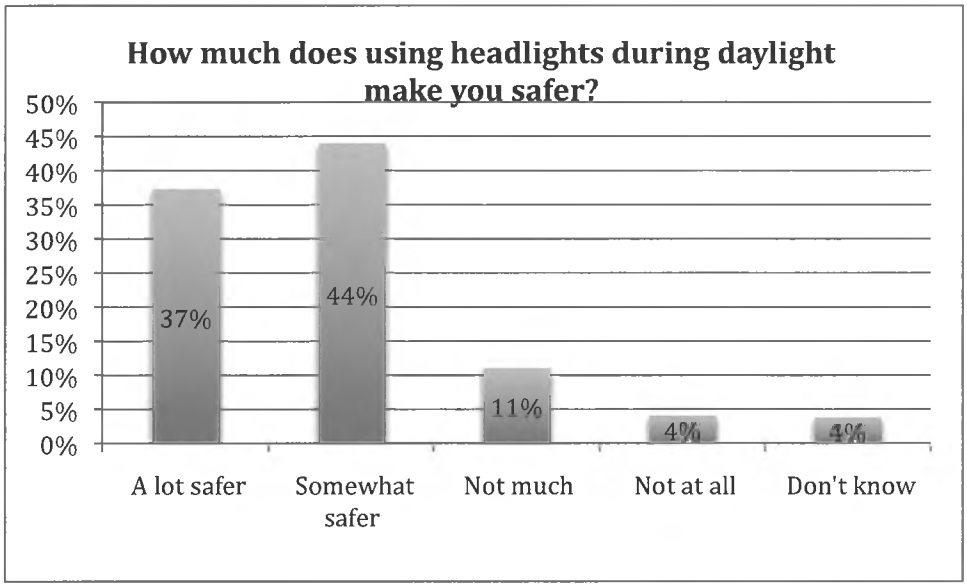
Headlights:

Headlight use was defined as a crash prevention strategy in the Alaska Strategic Highway Safety Plan. The survey asked two questions concerning headlight use in order to determine baseline behavior and attitudes.[11]

[11] Q.23 During daylight hours, would you say you use your headlights: Only on roads that require it, Always, Most of the time, Half of the time, Rarely, Never, Don't know/ Unsure, Refused
Q.24 Do you think using headlights during daylight makes you a lot safer, somewhat safer, not much safer or not at all? A lot safer, Somewhat safer, Not much, Not at all, Don't know/ Unsure, Refused



Drivers were asked how often they use their headlights during daylight hours, and how much they think doing so makes them safer. Fifty-three percent said they use their lights all of the time and 72% said always or most of the time. This is slightly higher than the NOPUS observations of headlight use, in which observers determined that headlight use was 45.5% in Anchorage, 45.3% in Fairbanks, 22.9% in Juneau, 29.3% in Kenai/Soldotna, and 30.3% in MatSu 30.3%. Statewide, 42.5% of cars observed had their headlights on during daylight hours.



There was a statistically significant correlation between those who felt that using headlights makes a person safer, and people who use headlights.

Booster Seats

The Alaska Injury Prevention Center conducted 3 booster seat use observations studies. The first took place in June 2009, prior to implementation of new booster seat legislation. Fifty-two percent of observed children were using appropriate child passenger safety devices. The second took place in October, 2009 after the legislation, mandating booster seat use for most children between 4 and 8 years old was signed into law, and a major public awareness campaign was implemented. At that point, 74% of children were using appropriate child passenger safety devices. In July, one-year follow-up observations were made, with a finding that 80% of children were properly restrained.

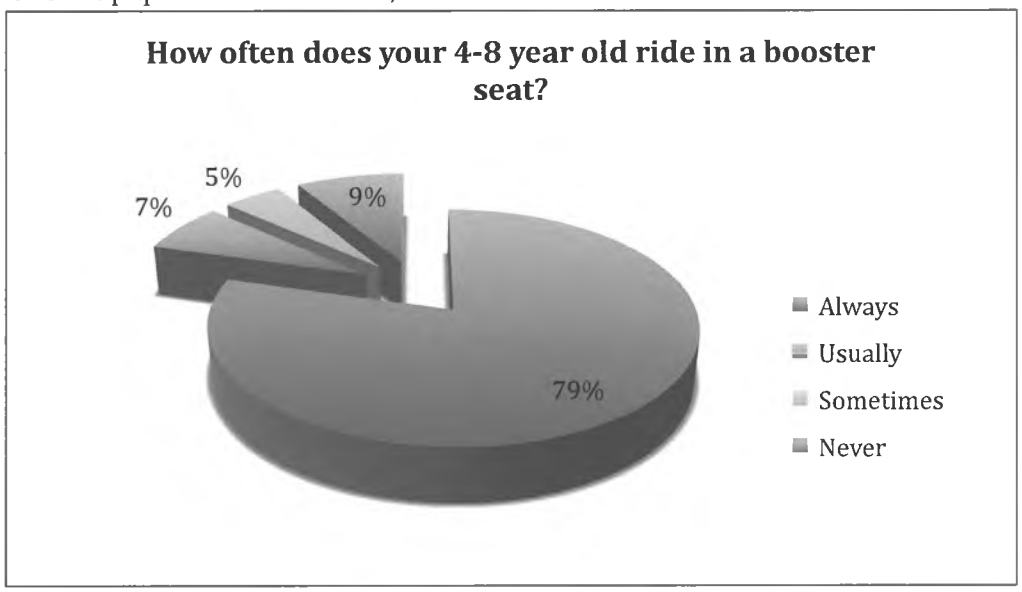
This phone survey also asked about booster seat use. It first asked whether the driver being interviewed ever drove in a car with a 4-8 year old. [12] If the answer was yes, a follow-up question was asked, how often that child rode in a booster seat.[13]



Drivers' self reported answers mimicked observed use at 79%. This is a dramatic increase from the 52% use observed prior to the media campaign and implementation of the law.

Conclusions:

Results from the 2010 phone survey addressing highway safety issues in Alaska provide useful information for future safety interventions.

- Addressing speeding in low speed limit areas is important, especially since these areas usually involve multiple modes of transportation including bikes and pedestrians.
- Most people wear seatbelts, and at the same time, most people do not think that it is likely that they will get a ticket for being unbuckled. It would be helpful to [12] Q.30 Do you ever drive with a child between the ages of four and eight? Yes, No, Refused

[13] Q.31 How often is the child riding in a booster seat? Always, Usually, Sometimes, Never, Refused better understand the motivators for wearing seatbelts, and possibly build them into campaigns for other desired behavior changes.

- Only 16% of people report texting while driving. Tracking changes in this statistic will be important for prioritization of highway safety efforts. It is currently a small number of those who say they text and drive, and texting is reportedly not being done very often. The risk created by texting and driving may be minimal.
- There is a majority belief (70%) that the courts are tough when enforcing drinking and driving laws. Understanding how this perception grew would be helpful for future behavior change and perception creating campaigns.

Conducting phone surveys with Alaskan drivers has created an opportunity to gain insights into behaviors, levels of awareness and motivators for behaviors. This information will be useful to assist with developing future initiatives as well as monitoring success with current one.

Research on distracted driving reveals some surprising facts:

- 20 percent of injury crashes in 2009 involved reports of distracted driving. (NHTSA).
- Of those killed in distracted-driving-related crashed, 995 involved reports of a cell phone as a distraction (18% of fatalities in distraction-related crashes). (NHTSA)
- In 2009, 5,474 people were killed in U.S. roadways and an estimated additional 448,000 were injured in motor vehicle crashes that were reported to have involved distracted driving. (FARS and GES)
- The age group with the greatest proportion of distracted drivers was the under-20 age group – 16 percent of all drivers younger than 20 involved in fatal crashes were reported to have been distracted while driving. (NHTSA)
- Using a cell phone use while driving, whether it's hand-held or hands-free, delays a driver's reactions as much as having a blood alcohol concentration at the legal limit of .08 percent. (Source: University of Utah)

Highlights

Police-reported data from the Fatality Analysis Reporting System (FARS) and the National Automotive Sampling show that:

- In 2009, there were 30,797 fatal crashes in the United States, which involved 45,230 drivers. In those crashes 33,808 people died.
- In 2009, 5,474 people were killed in crashes involving driver distraction (16% of total fatalities).
- The proportion of fatalities reportedly associated with driver distraction increased from 10 percent in 2005 to 16 percent in 2009. During that time, fatal crashes with reported driver distraction also increased from 10 percent to 16 percent.
- The under-20 age group had the highest proportion of distracted drivers involved in fatal crashes (16%). The age group with the next greatest proportion of distracted drivers was the 20- to-29-year-old age group – 13 percent of all 20-to-29-year-old drivers in fatal crashes were reported to have been distracted.
- Of those drivers reportedly distracted during a fatal crash, the 30-to-39-year-old drivers were the group with the greatest proportion distracted by cell phones. Cell phone distraction was reported for 24 percent of the 30-to-39-year-old distracted drivers in fatal crashes.
- An estimated 20 percent of 1,517,000 injury crashes were reported to have involved distracted driving in 2009.

The National Motor Vehicle Crash Causation Survey (NMVCCS) is a nationally representative survey specifically focused toward documenting events and conditions leading up to crashes.

- NMVCCS captures distraction as an associated factor to the crash and/or as the critical reason that made the crash imminent. Driver distraction was coded as the critical reason in 18 percent of the crashes. Data describing the specifics of the distraction — for example adjusting the radio or eating — are included in this data set.

Dear Representative Muñoz:

On behalf of our respective organizations, we would like to thank you for introducing HB 22, an Act prohibiting the use of a cellular telephone when driving a motor vehicle; and providing for an effective date.

We met recently to review proposed legislation and decided to unanimously support this bill.

Again, thank you for addressing this issue. Please contact the APOA office in Anchorage at 277-0515 if there is anything our organizations can do to assist in the passage of this bill.

Re: HB35 and HB68

Dear Honorable Representative Munoz-

Thank you for your support of both of these bills. I think that even hands-free use should be banned except in the event of an emergency. Talking on any cell phone is really dangerous because it creates a distraction from the primary function of driving. And for those who say that hands-free is not a distraction because one's hands are not involved, it's simply not true. Drivers talking on a cell phone are not fully engaged in the act of driving and are less likely to respond to events. I used to talk on my cell phone frequently, but have reduced that dramatically after almost being involved in two accidents.

Please support a total ban on driving while using a cell phone.

Sincerely,

Subject: Cell Phone Bill HB 22

Greetings Representative Munoz, I write to you in support of HB 22 that you have worked so hard to get on the floor of the Session going on. My name is Ricky Deising 58 year old male who has lived here in Juneau the past 32 years and I ride a Harley Davidson Motorcycle, The reason I support this bill are several but what took place last summer to comes to mind firstly, I was riding down the road by the Juneau Empire when out of the DOT parking area a car pulled out in front of me with the driver on her cell phone in her left hand which was blocking her view of the road, I had to react fast by locking up my brakes and sliding sideways to avoid being run over, when the driver did hear me yelling and I came to a stop with my foot hitting her door she realized what had just happened, after yelling at her for being on her cell phone and almost ending my life, she said very casually sorry and drove away while still talking on her phone, Being a grown adult is one thing, but kids never would have had a chance and probably could or would have been seriously injured or killed because of this action by a cell phone user while driving, and not paying attention to the task of being a safe and responsible person behind the wheel of a moving vehicle, there have been several other near misses by drivers on their phones just pulling over into the next lane without even looking because their view is blocked by the phone in their hand, lucky again for me that I am a skilled rider and have been able to avoid a crash while going 55 mph on a motorcycle. I ask that each and everyone of our Elected Officials please support HB 22 and pass it into law. With the passing of this HB 22 I can guarantee many lives will be saved that other wise will be lost to someone using a cell phone driving down the road.

Praise Life & Namast'e Ricky Deising 4500 Glacier Hwy Juneau Alaska.

`ubject: Please outlaw cell phone use when driving

Dear Members of the Alaska State Legislature:

I respectfully request that you create a law prohibiting motor vehicle drivers from talking on cells phones - including hands free models - when they are driving, except in the event of an emergency.

There is sufficient evidence that distractions are a significant cause of accidents. And talking on a cell phone including a hands free cell phone takes attention from the most important job at hand, driving. (Please see the websites below.)

I recognize that many people think they are skilled multi-taskers; and they like the convenience of being able to keep in touch with friends and family while driving. However, the benefits don't outweigh the costs in terms of potential danger and harm that may eventuate by inattentiveness at the wheel. If it is truly important for a driver to be in contact with friends and family while motoring, the driver can pull off the road and return or place a call.

'hile I understand there is a movement afoot to prohibit the use of hand held ell phones, this approach does not adequately take into consideration the danger involved in simply talking on a cell phone, whether hand held or not.

Your consideration will be most appreciated.

Thank you.

Please note my support for legislation (three bills) that would ban cell phone use while driving. I would ban "all" cell phone use, including "hands-free" which I understand causes some drivers to become distracted and to cause a crash, injury or death. I experienced almost getting run over on three separate occasions (all in a cross walk) due to cell phone use. I subscribe to the idea of "do no harm," by which I mean people should not have the "freedom" to run over me due to their distracted driving habits.

ubject: Drive Safe Alaska Coalition

Dear Rep. Munoz,

I share your concern with cellphone usage while driving and am pleased you have introduced HB-22. My public relations firm is in the process of forming the Drive Safe Alaska Coalition, a public awareness campaign to educate Alaskans on the dangers of texting while driving. MSI Communications has spearheaded several public awareness campaigns, including one for the AK Men's Run to raise funds for cancer research as well as political campaigns such as Alaskans Standing Together that helped re-elect Senator Lisa Murkowski.

Educating Alaska drivers on the dangers of texting while driving is our way of giving back. Many of us here at MSI are parents of teenagers and well aware of the impact texting has on their lives. We believe educating them on safe driving could only enhance our communities. I've attached a summary and hope you will support this effort by including it in the capital budget.

Please call me with any questions.

Dear Senators Coghill, Giessel, and Dyson, and Representatives Doogan, Costello, and Kerttula,

Please support HB 22. National statistics show that motor vehicle and pedestrian accidents have risen precipitously since the wide-spread use of cell phones. Some studies see rates of cell phone distraction as similar to the impairment caused by drug or alcohol use.

- Drivers using cell phones have the same reaction time as drunk drivers - they are 9% slower to brake and 19% slower to return to normal driving speeds.
- Drivers using cell phones are four times as likely to get into an auto accident.
- While some states have imposed laws requiring the use of hands-free devices while driving, statistics do not demonstrate that these devices significantly reduce the risk of an accident. 1

I concur that use of any cell phone (including hands-free) while driving should be illegal. Telephone conversations involve complex mental activity, including the perceptive processes also required for driving or even walking; and the mechanism of, and reflexes associated with operation of a motor vehicle are altered when engaged in telephone conversation.

(That does not seem to be the case if conversing with someone in your car or if one is listening to any type of music.)

I have experienced a "near miss" by another car because the driver was using a cell phone and I have observed such gross inattentiveness of a cell-phone-using pedestrian that she nearly walked into a car.

Such misdirected perception that people fail to see something that is directly in front of them is referred to by cognitive researchers as "inattentional blindness." 2,3.

Finally, I do not think that the argument many might posit, "they'll still drive and talk" has any merit. People do break laws; but most abide by them. If, in this instance, just one life is saved, or catastrophic injury averted, by enacting a "no cell phone use while driving" law, would it not be worth it?

Please let me know your thoughts on this matter. I urge you to support and vote in favor of HB 22. We need a law with stiff fines for those who use any electronic device while driving.

Subject: Cell Phone bill (House #68)

Dear Ms. Wilson,

I'm writing to express my views of the cell phone bill(s) that are in the House. I'm a big supporter of individual rights, and would rather not have the government regulate most personal choices. BUT, talking on a cell phone while driving doesn't only affect the person driving & talking, it puts others at danger. Talking on a cell phone and driving has statistics that compare it to drunk driving, it's a hazard to the general public.

My person story: numerous times I've had to take actions to avoid people that were distracted by talking while driving. When I lived in Anchorage, I was almost killed numerous times while riding my Harley... all because people think their petty phone calls are more important than other's lives. A couple of years ago I was driving on the Parks going to Fairbanks when a truck was speeding down the hill towards me... it was a four lane road in that spot and I had to pull off to the shoulder because the guy talking on his phone was coming down the slow lane of the opposite (MY) lane! This past Thursday, I had a lady put out in front of me and I almost lost control trying to slow down and not hit her... guess what, she was on her cell phone. A couple of minutes later I had to wait for someone going way to slow to make a turn, because they were distracted by talking and trying to one hand turn a big truck.

My thoughts: I think the "except for emergencies" provision is weak. If I was talking while driving, I'd hit 911 on my phone and have a story made up... if I can think how to defeat this section of the bill, I'm sure others can (I wouldn't do that, because I don't talk and drive, and don't even have a cell phone). Also, the "hands free" provision is weak as most statistics I've seen show that hands free is just as distracting. Do you know the reason this was put in, because in my view, it should be removed.

Thank you for your time,

Subject: Cell Phone Ban

Here are two things not often brought up when talking about the cell phone ban legislation - Potential to distract and level of distraction.

One would be hard pressed to argue cell phone use when driving doesn't have the potential to distract. Yet when taking a step back and looking at the big picture, we see there are countless actions and activities which can and do distract drivers. Something as simple as changing the radio, dealing with kids in the back seat, eating fast food drive-thru, reading a map or directions, pets in the car, putting in a new CD, looking at a GPS device, and so forth. All of these examples have the potential to distract the driver, yet our state is focused solely on only one activity? That being a cell phone in your ear while driving? Why the lack of consistency when it comes to possible driver distractions if one's motivation for passing this new law is safety on Alaskan roads?

The second part is level of distraction. There's no question everything I've mentioned thus far has the potential to distract. But the level of possible distraction is not static or set for all drivers in all conditions. My ability to talk to my wife while driving down Northern Lights is far different then a 16 year old's ability to talk to his buddy while driving down C Street at midnight with 4 other friends in the car and the music blaring.

What this bill fails to address is that the activity is not what makes a driver potentially distracted and therefore dangerous, but rather what's dangerous is a driver allowing themselves to be distracted. They are the source of the danger, not the activity. And here's the kicker - This law will not compel irresponsible drivers to drive more safely. We can rationalize in our own minds how nanny state laws will be better for all of us, but at the end of the day there has to be a line in the sand where each of us takes personal responsibility for our own actions.

And where are the state statistics to warrant such a law? A person being frustrated at what they perceive as distracted drivers due to cell phone use is not cause for enacting a new law. Correct me if I'm wrong, but I'm not under the impression Alaska is facing an epidemic of automotive related deaths due to cell phone drivers being distracted on our roads. Where are all the deaths in Anchorage that can be directly tied to drivers talking on cell phones and therefore justifying this law?

Protecting us from ourselves is foolhardy and never addresses the underlining issues. Not to mention this law is taking up valuable time in the limited 90 day session of the legislature. Why are our elected busybodies attempting to mandate behavior instead of focusing on the real issues facing our state? With a gas line nowhere in site, oil production concerns, and a pipeline that may run dry in the near future, why are we focused on such trivial matters as preventing citizens from driving with a phone up to their ear? It's mind numbing insanity.

National Safety Council Estimates that At Least 1.6 Million Crashes are Caused Each Year by Drivers Using Cell Phones and Texting

Washington, DC – The National Safety Council announced today that it estimates at least 28% of all traffic crashes – or at least 1.6 million crashes each year – are caused by drivers using cell phones and texting. NSC estimates that 1.4 million crashes each year are caused by drivers using cell phones and a minimum of 200,000 additional crashes each year are caused by drivers who are texting. The announcement came on the one-year anniversary of NSC's call for a ban on all cell phone use and texting while driving.

"We now know that at least 1.6 million crashes are caused by drivers using cell phones and texting," said Janet Froetscher, president & CEO of the National Safety Council. "We know that cell phone use is a very risky distraction and texting is even higher risk. We now know that cell phone use causes many more crashes than texting. The main reason is that millions more drivers use cell phones than text," she said. "That is why we need to address both texting and cell phone use on our roads."

"This new estimate provides critical data for legislators, business leaders and individuals to evaluate the threat and need for legislation, business policies and personal actions to prevent cell phone use and texting while driving," Froetscher said. "There was great progress made in 2009, particularly regarding a broad recognition that texting is dangerous. We now need the same broad consensus that recognizes cell phone use while driving causes even more crashes."

Froetscher said public support for laws banning cell phone use while driving is gaining momentum.

"Public opinion research conducted in 2009 by the AAA Foundation for Traffic Safety and Nationwide Insurance show public support for total bans on cell phones at 43 and 57 percent respectively," Froetscher said. "With public support now around 50 percent, we will continue to educate people about the risks of cell phone use while driving and the value of effectively-enforced laws in changing behavior and reducing crashes."

In constructing its estimates, NSC used widely-accepted statistical methods and analysis based on data of driver cell phone use from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) and from peer-reviewed research that quantifies the risk of using a cell phone and texting while driving. NSC's statistical model and estimates were peer-reviewed by academic researchers in traffic safety and biostatistics.

The estimate of 25% of all crashes -- or 1.4 million crashes -- caused by cell phone use was derived from NHTSA data showing 11% of drivers at any one time are using cell phones and from peer-reviewed research reporting cell phone use increases crash risk by four times. The estimate of an additional minimum 3% of crashes -- or 200,000 crashes -- caused by texting was derived by NHTSA data showing 1% of drivers at any one time are manipulating their device in ways that include texting and from research reporting texting increases crash risk by 8 times. Using the highest risk for texting reported by research of 23 times results in a maximum of 1 million crashes due to texting; still less than the 1.4 million crashes caused by other cell phone use.

The National Safety Council (www.nsc.org) saves lives by preventing injuries and deaths at work, in homes and communities, and on the roads, through leadership, research, education and advocacy.

June 29, 2006 -- Three years after the preliminary results first were presented at a scientific meeting and drew wide attention, University of Utah psychologists have published a study showing that motorists who talk on handheld or hands-free cellular phones are as impaired as drunken drivers.

"We found that people are as impaired when they drive and talk on a cell phone as they are when they drive intoxicated at the legal blood-alcohol limit" of 0.08 percent, which is the minimum level that defines illegal drunken driving in most U.S. states, says study co-author Frank Drews, an assistant professor of psychology. "If legislators really want to address driver distraction, then they should consider outlawing cell phone use while driving."

Psychology Professor David Strayer, the study's lead author, adds: "Just like you put yourself and other people at risk when you drive drunk, you put yourself and others at risk when you use a cell phone and drive. The level of impairment is very similar."

"Clearly the safest course of action is to not use a cell phone while driving," concludes the study by Strayer, Drews and Dennis Crouch, a research associate professor of pharmacology and toxicology. The study was set for publication June 29 in the summer 2006 issue of Human Factors: The Journal of the Human Factors and Ergonomics Society.

The study reinforced earlier research by Strayer and Drews showing that hands-free cell phones are just as distracting as handheld cell phones because the conversation itself – not just manipulation of a handheld phone – distracts drivers from road conditions.

Human Factors Editor Nancy J. Cooke praised the study: "Although we all have our suspicions about the dangers of cell phone use while driving, human factors research on driver safety helps us move beyond mere suspicions to scientific observations of driver behavior."

The study first gained public notice after Strayer presented preliminary results in July 2003 in Park City, Utah, during the Second International Driving Symposium on Human Factors in Driver Assessment, Training and Vehicle Design. It took until now for the study to be completed, undergo review by other researchers and finally be published.

Key Findings: Different Driving Styles, Similar Impairment

Each of the study"s 40 participants "drove" a PatrolSim driving simulator four times: once each while undistracted, using a handheld cell phone, using a hands-free cell phone and while intoxicated to the 0.08 percent blood-alcohol level after drinking vodka and orange juice. Participants followed a simulated pace car that braked intermittently.

Both handheld and hands-free cell phones impaired driving, with no significant difference in the degree of impairment. That "calls into question driving regulations that prohibited handheld cell phones and permit hands-free cell phones," the researchers write.

The study found that compared with undistracted drivers:

- Motorists who talked on either handheld or hands-free cell phones drove slightly slower, were 9 percent slower to hit the brakes, displayed 24 percent more variation in following distance as their attention switched between driving and conversing, were 19 percent slower to resume normal speed after braking and were more likely to crash. Three study participants rear-ended the pace car. All were talking on cell phones. None were drunk.

- Drivers drunk at the 0.08 percent blood-alcohol level drove a bit more slowly than both undistracted drivers and drivers using cell phones, yet more aggressively. They followed the pace car more closely, were twice as likely to brake only four seconds before a collision would have occurred, and hit their brakes with 23 percent more force. "Neither accident rates, nor reaction times to vehicles braking in front of the participant, nor recovery of lost speed following braking differed significantly" from undistracted drivers, the researchers write.

"Impairments associated with using a cell phone while driving can be as profound as those associated with driving while drunk," they conclude.

Are Drunken Drivers Really Less Accident-Prone than Cell Phone Users?

Drews says the lack of accidents among the study's drunken drivers was surprising. He and Strayer speculate that because simulated drives were conducted during mornings, participants who got drunk were well-rested and in the "up" phase of intoxication. In reality, 80 percent of all fatal alcohol-related accidents occur between 6 p.m. and 6 a.m. when drunken drivers tend to be fatigued. Average blood-alcohol levels in those accidents are twice 0.08 percent. Forty percent of the roughly 42,000 annual U.S. traffic fatalities involve alcohol.

While none of the study's intoxicated drivers crashed, their hard, late braking is "predictive of increased accident rates over the long run," the researchers wrote.

One statistical analysis of the new and previous Utah studies showed cell phone users were 5.36 times more likely to get in an accident than undistracted drivers. Other studies have shown the risk is about the same as for drivers with a 0.08 blood-alcohol level.

Strayer says he expects criticism "suggesting that we are trivializing drunken-driving impairment, but it is anything but the case. We don't think people should drive while drunk, nor should they talk on their cell phone while driving."

Drews says he and Strayer compared the impairment of motorists using cell phones to drivers with a 0.08 percent blood-alcohol level because they wanted to determine if the risk of driving while phoning was comparable to the drunken driving risk considered unacceptable.

"This study does not mean people should start driving drunk," says Drews. "It means that driving while talking on a cell phone is as bad as or maybe worse than driving drunk, which is completely unacceptable and cannot be tolerated by society."

University of Utah Cell Phone Research

Previous research by Strayer, Drews and colleagues include:

- A 2001 study showing that hands-free cell phones are just as distracting as handheld cell phones.
- A 2003 study showing that the reason is "inattention blindness," in which motorists look directly at road conditions but don't really see them because they are distracted by a cell phone conversation. And such drivers aren't aware they are impaired.
- A 2005 study suggesting that when teenagers and young adults talk on cell phones while driving, their reaction times are as slow as those of elderly drivers.

The University of Utah psychologists conducted the alcohol study because a 1997 study by other researchers evaluated the cell phone records of 699 people involved in motor vehicle accidents and found one-fourth of them had used their phone in the 10 minutes before their accident – a four-fold increase in accidents compared with undistracted motorists.

Those researchers speculated there was a comparable risk from drunken driving and cell phone use while driving. So Strayer and Drews conducted a controlled laboratory study.

The study included 25 men and 15 women ages 22 to 34 who were social drinkers (three to five drinks per week) recruited via newspaper advertisements. Two-thirds used a cell phone while driving. Each participant was paid $100 for 10 hours in the study.

The driving simulator has a steering wheel, dashboard instruments and brake and gas pedals from a Ford Crown Victoria sedan. The driver is surrounded by three screens showing freeway scenes. Each simulated daylight freeway drive lasted 15 minutes. The pace car intermittently braked to mimic stop-and-go traffic. Drivers who fail to hit their brakes eventually rear-end the pace car. Other simulated vehicles occasionally passed in the left lane, giving the impression of steady traffic flow.

Each study participant drove the simulator during three sessions – undistracted, drunk or talking to a research assistant on a cell phone – each on a different day.

The simulator recorded driving speed, following distance, braking time and how long it would take to collide with the pace car if brakes were not used.

The study was funded by a $25,000 grant from the Federal Aviation Administration – which is interested in impaired attention among pilots – and by Strayer's and Drews' salaries. The Utah Highway Patrol loaned the researchers a device to measure blood-alcohol levels.

Driving while Distracted: A Growing Problem

The researchers cited figures from the Cellular Telecommunications Industry Association indicating that more than 100 million U.S. motorists use cell phones while driving. The National Highway Transportation Safety Administration estimates that at any given moment during daylight hours, 8 percent of all drivers are talking on a cell phone.

"Fortunately, the percentage of drunk drivers at any time is much lower," Drews says. "So it means the risk of talking on a cell phone and driving is probably much higher than driving intoxicated because more people are talking on cell phones while driving than are driving drunk." The main reason there are not more accidents is that "92 percent of drivers are not on a cell phone and are compensating for drivers on cell phones," he adds.

Cell phone use is far from the only distraction for motorists. The researchers cite talking to passengers, eating, drinking, lighting cigarettes, applying makeup and listening to the radio as the "old standards" of driver distraction.

"However, over the last decade many new electronic devices have been developed, and they are making their way into the vehicle," the researchers write. "Drivers can now surf the Internet, send and receive e-mail or faxes, communicate via a cellular device and even watch television. There is good reason to believe that some of these new multitasking activities may be substantially more distracting than the old standards because they are more cognitively engaging and because they are performed over longer periods of time."

Britnee Moore expresses remorse as a judge sends her to jail for causing a car crash that killed 16-year-old Hope Maley.

WAYNESBURG, Pa. -- A young Waynesburg woman expressed remorse Thursday as a judge ordered her to serve jail time for causing a car crash that killed a 16-year-old high school student.

Britnee Moore, 20, was found guilty in June of homicide by vehicle. Judge William Nalitz sentenced her to no less than five months and no more than 36 months in the Greene County Jail.

"The judge did say during the sentencing that no sentence would help the family, but I disagree. I was hoping she would be mandated to a state prison," said Hope Maley's mother, Darlene. "Hope's life matters, and I just have not seen any remorse. The defendant has never apologized in over 2 1/2 years."

Maley's family said Moore never apologized to them. Outside the courtroom on Thursday, Moore did tell Channel 4 Action News that she was sorry.

"I'm just real sorry for my actions and I hope a lot of other people learn from this," said Moore, who told reporters, "I take full responsibility for this."

State police said Moore was going too fast in a 45 mph zone and reaching for a cell phone when her car collided head-on with Hope Maley's car in Franklin Township in March 2007.

Maley, who attended Waynesburg High School, was pronounced dead at the scene of the wreck on a curvy section of Route 218 near Randy Hoge Road.

Asked if she had a message for the Maley family, Moore said, "I'm very sorry for your loss. My prayers go out to you."

Police estimated that Maley was driving somewhere between 25 mph and 47 mph when the collision happened.

In addition to the homicide by vehicle charge, Moore was convicted of involuntary manslaughter and reckless endangerment.

Moore hopes her example will teach people "not to pick up their cell phone when they're driving. Just let it ring, no matter how important your call is, and don't rush."

Stanley Teen Killed In Crash Using Cell Phone While Driving

Posted: 5:34 pm EDT September 7, 2009Updated: 8:43 am EDT September 8, 2009

GASTON COUNTY, N.C. -- A 16-year-old Stanley girl crashed while using a cell phone and died Sunday night, witnesses and investigators said.

Brittany Johnson, an East Gaston High School student, was driving on Mauney Road toward Stanley when she wrecked at about 6:30 p.m. Troopers said she ran off the right side of the road, struck an embankment, went airborne and then hit a utility pole.

Rescue crews found the teen's Chevrolet Lumina on its side, and it appeared the top of the car hit the utility pole just above the teen's head before the car spun around. Johnson was pronounced dead at the scene.

Neighbors who heard the crash ran out to help. Greg Burch said the car was wrapped like a horseshoe around the pole.

"We tried to help her out, but we couldn't do nothing for her," Burch said.

Burch said he found Johnson's cell phone on the ground nearby, and it had an unfinished text message to her mother on the screen.

He said he used the number marked "Mom" to make a heartbreaking phone call.

"I asked her if her daughter drove a green Lumina," Burch said.

He said he told her to come to the scene quickly, but she asked the question he didn't want to answer.

"It was tough. She asked me how she was, and I said, 'I don't know,'" Burch said.

He said he suspected the worst, but he didn't want to say it.

On Monday, Johnson's grandmother hugged Burch and thanked him for making the call.

She whispered a little goodbye as she stared down at the growing memorial of flowers, stuffed animals and notes placed at the scene by friends and supporters.

"It hurts, Brit. It hurts, but I know you are with God now so you'll be OK," Helen Anderson said.

Anderson said Johnson was her first grandchild. She said she hopes other teens will learn from the tragedy.

"I hope they learn their lesson and don't put their families what we are going through now. Don't text and drive. It's not that important," she said.

Classmates and friends cried together at the pole Monday. Johnson's boyfriend put her picture on the pole, and together they silently said goodbye.

"I'll always love her," Anderson said.

Family members said they are still working on funeral plans. A memorial service for Johnson was held at the First Baptist Church in Stanley on Monday evening.

North Carolina is one of nine states that bans texting for certain groups. In some cases, they restrict drivers younger than 18, and in others, the ban has to do with restrictions on the license, not the driver.

On Dec. 1, North Carolina will join a group of 18 states that have total bans, which restrict all drivers from texting while driving.

South Carolina does not have any sort of cell phone ban, but it could be forced to adopt one if Congress goes ahead with a nationwide ban.

Several studies have indicated how dangerous texting while driving can be. A study from Car And Driver magazine found texting is more dangerous than driving drunk. A study out of Virginia Tech found text messaging could take the driver's eyes off the road for 4.6 seconds. That's equal to driving the length of a football field at 55 mph

TRIBUNE-REVIEW

Crash survivor urges cell-phone ban

By Brad Bumsted
STATE CAPITOL REPORTER
Thursday, March 12, 2009

HARRISBURG — Jacy Good lost her parents in a May vehicle crash she says could have been avoided if the driver at fault had not been talking on a hand-held cell phone.

The Goods were returning to their Lancaster County home on the day that Jacy, 22, graduated from Muhlenberg College in Allentown. Jay and Jean Good, both 57, died in the crash on Route 222 when their station wagon, stuffed with Jacy's belongings, was hit by a tractor-trailer that swerved to avoid a minivan that ran a red light, police say.

Jacy Good suffered a shattered pelvis, several broken bones and a brain injury.

Now she is the "face" of a state House effort to ban hand-held cell phone use by drivers and to make text messaging while driving illegal.

"I will not stop until this bill becomes law," Good said Wednesday after a news conference. Enacting the law would honor her parents, she said.

"Paramedics and the doctors were giving her a less than 10 percent chance" of living, said Northern Berks Regional Police Chief Scott Eaken. He confirmed the 18-year-old minivan driver was talking on a cell phone when the crash happened and was cited for traffic violations.

Berks County District Attorney John Adams said he decided against filing charges of homicide by vehicle or involuntary manslaughter because his office could not establish that the driver ran the light because he was on the phone. It did not rise to the level of "reckless or gross negligence" as it might have if the driver were intoxicated or speeding 30 miles above the limit, Adams said.

"The guy was on the phone with somebody from Bible camp or Bible school," he said, but added, "An inexperienced driver should not be on a cell phone."

Rep. Josh Shapiro, a Montgomery County Democrat, cited Good's story, other crash statistics and the bill's 70 co-sponsors as reasons he believes lawmakers will pass the legislation. He began pushing the idea four years ago without much data. His bill failed to gain traction last session.

"We've got the technology available today to save lives in Pennsylvania," Shapiro said.

But Matthew Brouillette, president of the Commonwealth Foundation, a conservative policy group, said he isn't convinced the bill would make the highways safer.

"There is no way to adequately regulate and punish activities that distract drivers," Brouillette said. "Whether it is eating, putting on makeup or talking on the phone, the issue is more about personal responsibility and paying the consequences for bad decisions than trying to come up with another law that has not proven to make our roads safer."

Under the bill, violators would be charged with a summary offense carrying a $50 fine. Motorists could use speaker phones or cell phones with earpieces.

About 1,200 crashes involving drivers with hand-held phones occur in Pennsylvania each year, according to PennDOT figures. Fifty-six crashes in 2007 involved drivers using hands-free cell phones, Shapiro said.

Six states, including New York and New Jersey, have enacted bans, as has the District of Columbia.

"My friends from New York and New Jersey don't understand why Pennsylvania is having trouble passing this bill," Good said.

Pollster Mike Young, a former political science professor at Penn State University, said the average Pennsylvanian probably places the issue far down a growing list of things to worry about.

"Pennsylvania is not an 'early adopter' of most reforms, nor an enthusiastic advocate of state restrictions on social behavior," he said.

Senate Transportation Chairman Rob Wonderling, a Republican from Montgomery County, said the Senate's priority is "to put Pennsylvanians back to work."

Wonderling said a cell phone ban likely won't be debated early this session, but he wouldn't rule it out. He said he would take a "deliberative approach" with any such bill, weighing others' views.

Verizon Wireless supports statewide legislation to ban hand-held cell phones while driving but questions municipal regulations that drivers can find confusing, said Laura Merritt, a Dublin, Ohio-based spokeswoman for the company.

"We will certainly not oppose anything of that nature. We strongly encourage our drivers to focus on driving," Merritt said.

(13) "highway" means the entire width between the boundary lines of every way that is publicly maintained when a part of it is open to the public for purposes of vehicular travel, including but not limited to every street and the Alaska state marine highway system but not vehicular ways or areas;

(14) "highway work zone" means an area identified by advance signing where road construction, repair, or maintenance work is being done on or adjacent to a highway, whether or not work is actually being done at that time;

(15) "low-speed vehicle" means a motor vehicle that has four wheels, that was manufactured to be capable of propelling itself and achieving a minimum speed of 20 miles an hour and a maximum speed of 25 miles an hour, that has not been modified to have a maximum speed greater than 25 miles an hour, and that meets weight, equipment, and safety standards set by the department by regulation; weight, equipment, and safety standards shall be consistent with, and may not exceed, federal standards;

(16) "motor vehicle" means a vehicle which is self-propelled except a vehicle moved by human or animal power;

(17) "motorcycle" means a vehicle having a seat or saddle for the use of the rider and designed to travel on not more than three wheels in contact with the ground; the term does not include a tractor;

(18) "motor-driven cycle" means a motorcycle, motor scooter, motorized bicycle, or similar conveyance with a motor attached and having an engine with 50 or less cubic centimeters of displacement;

(19) "official traffic-control device" means a sign, signal, marking, or other device not inconsistent with this title, placed or erected by authority of a state or municipal agency or official having jurisdiction, for the purpose of traffic regulating, warning, and guiding;

(20) "owner" means a person, other than a lienholder, having the property in or title to a vehicle, including but not limited to a person entitled to the use and possession of a vehicle subject to a security interest in another person, but exclusive of a lessee under a lease not intended as security;

(21) "physical injury" has the meaning given in AS 11.81.900;

(22) "revoke" means the termination, by formal action of the Department of Public Safety or the Department of Administration or by formal action of a court, of a certification, registration, license, permit, or privilege issued or allowed under this title or regulations adopted under this title; the certification, registration, license, permit, or privilege may not be reissued, renewed, or restored during the time for which revoked; however, after that time, an application for a new certificate, registration, license, permit, or privilege may be made;

(23) "roadway" means that portion of a highway designed or ordinarily used for vehicular travel, exclusive of the sidewalk, berm, or shoulder, even though the sidewalk, berm, or shoulder is used by persons riding bicycles or other human powered vehicles; and in the event that a highway includes two or more separate roadways, the term refers to each roadway separately but not to all such roadways collectively;

(24) "serious physical injury" has the meaning given in AS 11.81.900(b);

(25) "suspend" means the temporary withdrawal, by formal action of the Department of Public Safety or the Department of Administration or by formal action of a court, of a certificate, registration, license, permit, or privilege issued or allowed under this title or regulations adopted under this title, effective for a period of time which must be specifically designated by the appropriate department or by the court;

(26) "traffic" means pedestrians, ridden or herded animals, vehicles, and other conveyances either singly or together while using a highway or vehicular way or area that is open to public use for purposes of travel;

(27) "traffic safety corridor" means a portion of a highway on which signs have been erected designating that portion as a traffic safety corridor under AS 19.10.075;

(28) "underinsured motor vehicle" means a motor vehicle licensed for highway use with respect to ownership, operation, maintenance, or use for which there is a bodily injury or property damage insurance policy or a bond applicable at the time of an accident and the amount of insurance or bond is less than the amount the covered person is legally entitled to recover for bodily injury or property damage from the owner or operator of the underinsured motor vehicle;

(29) "vehicle" means a device in, upon, or by which a person or property may be transported or drawn upon or immediately over a highway or vehicular way or area; "vehicle" does not include

(A) devices used exclusively upon stationary rails or tracks;

(B) mobile homes;

(30) "vehicular way or area" means a way, path, or area, other than a highway or private property, that is designated by official traffic control devices or customary usage and that is open to the public for purposes of pedestrian or vehicular travel, and which way or area may be restricted in use to pedestrians, bicycles, or other specific types of vehicles as determined by the Department of Public Safety or other agency having jurisdiction over the way, path, or area.

(b) The commissioner of public safety or the commissioner of administration, as appropriate, shall adopt regulations to define other terms that are used in this title and in regulations adopted under this title. NOTES TO DECISIONS

Steering a towed vehicle. — Despite the failure of paragraph (a)(7) to specifically mention towed vehicles, a person who steers a towed vehicle is "driving" within the meaning of that paragraph and AS 28.35.030(a). Williams v. State, 884 P.2d 167 (Alaska Ct. App. 1994).

A motor vehicle does not cease to be a motor vehicle whenever it cannot be started within the meaning of paragraph (a)(12) (now (a)(14)). Williams v. State, 884 P.2d 167 (Alaska Ct. App. 1994).

A towed snowmobile is a motor vehicle because steering such a vehicle, even if only partially, involves exercising control over the vehicle, and it amounts to operating the vehicle; where a motorist was operating a towed snowmobile while intoxicated, and refused to submit to a chemical breath test under the implied consent law, his driver's license was properly revoked. Conkey v. Dep't of Admin., 113 P.3d 1235 (Alaska 2005).

An all terrain three-wheeler is a motor vehicle for which a driver's license is required. State v. Benolken, 838 P.2d 280 (Alaska Ct. App. 1992).

Sponsor Statement
HB 23: Computer Privacy

The State of Alaska has a long tradition of protecting citizens' privacy rights, and this bill would protect the privacy rights of Alaskan computer users by closing a loophole in existing law. Current law addresses what is commonly known as "hacking", that is surreptitiously accessing a computer or network, but does not address intercepting data as it is being entered. A keystroke logger is a device that is used to record keystrokes as they are being entered into a computer. Emerging technology can even record keystrokes remotely from up to 100 yards away. This bill would ban the installation or use of keystroke loggers or other devices that intercept data being entered on a computer without the consent of the computer's owner.

It should not matter whether information is stolen out of a computer, or as it is being typed into it. The victims' privacy is just as violated, and the law should recognize it.

Keystroke logger manufacturers specifically advertise that their products cannot be detected or disabled by anti-virus or anti-spyware software or firewalls, and the devices are designed so computer users would not notice them unless they carefully inspected their computers every time they use their computers.

While some specific information like social security numbers or credit card information are protected by federal or other law, it is often difficult to prove that someone used or stole such information. Under this bill, all that would need to be proved is that someone installed a keystroke logger or enabled the ability to log keystrokes wirelessly or by other nonwired means on a computer they had no right to access. Keystroke loggers can also be used by stalkers to monitor their victims.

This bill would not affect people using keystroke loggers on their own computers, parents monitoring their children's computer use, or law enforcement operating with a search warrant.

Sectional Analysis

HB 23: Computer Privacy

Section 1 establishes that the crime of "criminal use of a computer" is committed when a person, without having a right to do so, installs on a computer a keystroke logger or other device that can record data being entered into the computer, or enables a device that can wirelessly record keystrokes or other data entered.

Section 2 establishes an affirmative defense for the offense created above that the person installing or enabling the device owns the computer on which it is installed.

Sec. 11.46.740. Criminal use of computer.

(a) A person commits the offense of criminal use of a computer if, having no right to do so or any reasonable ground to believe the person has such a right, the person knowingly accesses, causes to be accessed, or exceeds the person's authorized access to a computer, computer system, computer program, computer network, or any part of a computer system or network, and, as a result of or in the course of that access,

(1) obtains information concerning a person;

(2) introduces false information into a computer, computer system, computer program, or computer network with the intent to damage or enhance the data record or the financial reputation of a person;

(3) introduces false information into a computer, computer system, computer program, or computer network and, with criminal negligence, damages or enhances the data record or the financial reputation of a person;

(4) obtains proprietary information of another person;

(5) obtains information that is only available to the public for a fee;

(6) introduces instructions, a computer program, or other information that tampers with, disrupts, disables, or destroys a computer, computer system, computer program, computer network, or any part of a computer system or network; or

(7) encrypts or decrypts data.

(b) In this section, "proprietary information" means scientific, technical, or commercial information, including a design, process, procedure, customer list, supplier list, or customer records that the holder of the information has not made available to the public.

(c) Criminal use of a computer is a class C felony.

BILL NO. HB023

Analysis

HB 23 adds a section to statute that would make installation of computer keystroke loggers or devices or programs that have the ability to record another person's keystrokes or entries or enables on a computer a program to record keystrokes wirelessly or by nonwired means a class C felony.

The average sentence for a class C felony is 122 days. This legislation, if passed, would result in an increase in arrests and an increase in the number of offenders being housed at Department of Corrections facilities.

However, the Department of Corrections is unable to determine the fiscal impact of this legislation, as we cannot estimate the total number of violations of this law that will occur.

January 18, 2010

Dear Representative Petersen,

Thank you for the updated information on House Bill 23, an act relating to criminal use of a computer.

Last session the Alaska CHARR Government Affairs Committee considered this bill and unanimously agreed that an effort such as this to protect our members and their patrons deserved our full support. As you renew efforts to pass this bill, we are happy to continue to offer our support.

With identity theft and credit card fraud becoming more prevalent in our automated society, and our bar and restaurant members some of the prime targets, we are glad that you are looking ahead and trying to close loopholes that technology like keystroke loggers are leaving open.

Please let me know if I can be of additional assistance.

Compromising Electromagnetic Emanations of Wired and Wireless Keyboards

Abstract

Computer keyboards are often used to transmit confidential data such as passwords. Since they contain electronic components, keyboards eventually emit electromagnetic waves. These emanations could reveal sensitive information such as keystrokes. The technique generally used to detect compromising emanations is based on a wide-band receiver, tuned on a specific frequency. However, this method may not be optimal since a significant amount of information is lost during the signal acquisition. Our approach is to acquire the raw signal directly from the antenna and to process the entire captured electromagnetic spectrum. Thanks to this method, we detected four different kinds of compromising electromagnetic emanations generated by wired and wireless keyboards. These emissions lead to a full or a partial recovery of the keystrokes. We implemented these side-channel attacks and our best practical attack fully recovered 95% of the keystrokes of a PS/2 keyboard at a distance up to 20 meters, even through walls. We tested 12 different keyboard models bought between 2001 and 2008 (PS/2, USB, wireless and laptop). They are all vulnerable to at least one of the four attacks. We conclude that most of modern computer keyboards generate compromising emanations (mainly because of the manufacturer cost pressures in the design). Hence, they are not safe to transmit confidential information.

1 Introduction

Today, most of the practical attacks on computers exploit software vulnerabilities. New security weaknesses are disclosed every day, but patches are commonly delivered within a few days. When a vulnerability is based on hardware, there is generally no software update to avoid the exposure: the device must be changed.

Computer keyboards are often used to transmit sensitive information such as passwords, e.g. to log into computers, to do e-banking money transfer, etc. A weakness in these hardware devices will jeopardize the security of any password-based authentication system.

Compromising electromagnetic emanation problems appeared already at the end of the 19^{th} century. Because of the extensive use of telephones, wire networks became extremely dense. People could sometimes hear other conversations on their phone line due to undesired coupling between parallel wires. This unattended phenomenon, called crosstalk, may be easily canceled by twisting the cables.

A description of some early exploitations of compromising emanations has been recently declassified by the National Security Agency [26]. During World War II, the American Army used teletypewriter communications encrypted with Bell 131-B2 mixing devices. In a Bell laboratory, a researcher noticed, quite by accident, that each time the machine stepped, a spike appeared on an oscilloscope in a distant part of the lab. To prove the vulnerability of the device, Bell engineers captured the compromising emanations emitted by a Bell 131-B2, placed in a building across the street and about 25 meters away. They were able to recover 75% of the plaintext.

During the Vietnam war, a sensor called Black Crow carried aboard C-130 gunships was able to detect the electromagnetic emanations produced by the ignition system of trucks on the Ho Chi Minh trail, from a distance up to 10 miles [25, 11].

1.1 Related Work

Academic research on compromising electromagnetic emanations started in the mid 1980's and there has been significant recent progresses [28, 1]. The threat related to compromising emanations has been constantly confirmed by practical attacks such as Cathode Ray Tubes (CRT) displays image recovery [34], Liquid Crystal Display (LCD) image recovery [20], secret key disclosure [16], video displays risks [18, 33] or radiations from

FPGAs [24].

Compromising electromagnetic emanations of serial-port cables have been already discussed by Smulders [30] in 1990. PS/2 keyboards still use bi-directional serial communication to transmit the pressed key code to the computer. Hence, some direct compromising electromagnetic emanations might appear. However, the characteristics of the serial line changed since the 90's. The voltage is not 15 volts anymore and the transition times of the signals are much longer (from picoseconds to microseconds).

Since keyboards are often the first input device of a computer system, they have been intensively studied. For instance, the exploitation of visual compromising information leaks such as optical reflections [5] which could be applied to keyboards, the analysis of surveillance video sequences [6] which can be used by an attacker to recover the keystrokes (even with a simple webcam) or the use of the blinking LEDs of the keyboard as a covert channel [21]. Acoustic compromising emanations from keyboards have been studied as well. Asonov and Agrawal [4] discovered that each keystroke produces a unique sound when it is pressed or released and they presented a method to recover typed keystrokes with a microphone. This attack was later improved, see [38, 7]. Even passive timing analysis may be used to recover keystrokes. Song et al. highlighted that the keystroke timing data measured in older SSH implementations [32] may be used to recover encrypted passwords. A risk of compromising emission from keyboards has been postulated by Kuhn and Anderson [20, 17, 2]. They also proposed countermeasures (see US patent [3]). Some unofficial documents on TEMPEST [37] often designate keyboards as potential information leaking devices. However, we did not find any experiment or evidence proving or refuting the practical feasibility to remotely eavesdrop keystrokes, especially on modern keyboards.

1.2 Our Contribution

This paper makes the following main contributions:

A Full Spectrum Acquisition Method. To detect compromising electromagnetic emanations a receiver tuned on a specific frequency is generally used. It brings the signal in base band with a limited bandwidth. Therefore, the signal can be demodulated in amplitude (AM) or frequency (FM). This method might not be optimal. Indeed, the signal does not contain the maximal entropy since a significant amount of information is lost. We propose another approach. We acquire the raw signal directly from the antenna and analyze the entire captured electromagnetic spectrum with Short Time Fourier Transform (also known as Waterfall) to distill potential compromising emanations.

The Study of Four Different Sources of Information Leakage from Keyboards. To determine if keyboards generate compromising emanations, we measured the electromagnetic radiations emitted when a key is pressed. Due to our improved acquisition method, we discovered several direct and indirect compromising emanations which leak information on the keystrokes. The first technique looks at the emanations of the falling edges (i.e. the transition from a high logic state to a low logic state) from the bi-directional serial cable used in the PS/2 protocol. It can be used to reveal keystrokes with about 1 bit of uncertainty. The second approach uses the same source, but consider the rising and the falling edges of the signal to recover the keystrokes with 0 bits of uncertainty. The third approach is focused on the harmonics emitted by the keyboard to recover the keystrokes with 0 bits of uncertainty. The last approach considers the emanations emitted from the matrix scan routine (used by PS/2, USB and Wireless keyboards) and yields about 2.5 bits of uncertainty per keystroke. This compromising emanation has been previously posited by Kuhn and Anderson [3], although that work provided no detailed analysis.

The Implementation and the Analysis of Four Keystroke Recovery Techniques in Four Different Scenarios. We tested 12 different keyboard models, with PS/2, USB connectors and wireless communication in different setups: a semi-anechoic chamber, a small office, an adjacent office and a flat in a building. We demonstrate that these keyboards are all vulnerable to at least one of the four keystroke recovery techniques in all scenarios. The best attack successfully recovers 95% of the keystrokes at a distance up to 20 meters, even through walls. Because each keyboard has a specific fingerprint based on the clock frequency inconsistencies, we can determine the source keyboard of a compromising emanation, even if multiple keyboards from the same model are used at the same time. First, we did the measurements in a semi-anechoic electromagnetic chamber to isolate the device from external noise. Then we confirmed that these compromising emanations are exploitable in real situations.

We conclude that most of modern computer keyboards generate compromising emanations (mainly because of the manufacturer cost pressures in the design). Hence they are not safe to transmit confidential information.

1.3 Structure of the Paper

Section 2 describes some basics on compromising electromagnetic emanations. In Section 3 we present our acquisition method based on Short Time Fourier Transform. In Section 4 we present four different setups used for the measurements, from a semi-anechoic chamber to real environments. In Section 5 we give the complete procedure used to detect the compromising electromagnetic emanations. Then, we detail the four different techniques. In Section 6, we give the results of our measurements in different setups. In Section 7, we describe some countermeasures to avoid these attacks. In Section 8, we give some extensions and improvements. Finally we conclude.

2 Electromagnetic Emanations

Electromagnetic compatibility (EMC) is the analysis of electromagnetic interferences (EMI) or Radio Frequency Interferences (RFI) related to electric devices. EMC aims at reducing unintentional generation, propagation and reception of electromagnetic energy in electric systems. EMC defines two kinds of unwanted emissions: conductive coupling and radiative coupling. Conductive coupling requires physical support such as electric wires to transmit interferences through the system. Radiative coupling occurs when a part of the internal circuit acts as an antenna and transmits undesired electromagnetic waves. EMC generally distinguishes two types of electromagnetic emissions depending on the kind of the radiation source: differential-mode and common-mode.

Differential-mode radiation is generated by loops formed by components, printed circuit traces, ribbon cables, etc. These loops act as small circular antennas and eventually radiate. These radiations are generally low and do not disturb the whole system. Differential-mode signals are not easily influenced by external radiations. Moreover they can be easily avoided by shielding the system.

Common-mode radiation is the result of undesired internal voltage drops in the circuit which usually appear in the ground loop. Indeed, ground loop currents are due to the unbalanced nature of ordinary transmitting and receiving circuits. Thus, external cables included in the ground loop act as antennas excited by some internal voltages. Because these voltage drops are not intentionally created by the system, it is generally harder to detect and control common-mode radiations than differential-mode radiations.

From the attacker's point of view there are two types of compromising emanations: direct and indirect emanations.

Direct Emanations. In digital devices, data is encoded with logic states, generally described by short burst of square waves with sharp rising and falling edges. During the transition time between two states, electromagnetic waves are eventually emitted at a maximum frequency related to the duration of the rise/fall time. Because these compromising radiations are provided straight by the wire transmitting sensitive data, they are called direct emanations.

Indirect Emanations. Electromagnetic emanations may interact with active electronic components which induce new types of radiations. These unintended emanations manifest themselves as modulations or inter-modulations (phase, amplitude or frequency) or as carrier signals e.g. clock and its harmonics. Non-linear coupling between carrier signals and sensitive data signals, crosstalk, ground pollution or power supply DC pollution may generate compromising modulated signals. These indirect emanations may have better propagation than direct emanations. Hence, they may be captured at a larger range. The prediction of these emanations is extremely difficult. They are generally discovered during compliance tests such as FCC [15], CISPR [10], MIL-STD-461 [22], NACSIM-5000 [37], etc.

3 Electromagnetic Signal Acquisition

Two techniques are generally used to discover compromising electromagnetic emanations.

3.1 Standard Techniques

A method consists in using a spectral analyzer to detect signal carriers. Such a signal can be caught only if the duration of the carrier is significant. This makes compromising emanations composed of peaks difficult to detect with spectral analyzers.

Another method is based on a wide-band receiver tuned on a specific frequency. Signal detection process consists in scanning the whole frequency range of the receiver and to demodulate the signal according to its amplitude modulation (AM) or frequency modulation (FM). When an interesting frequency is discovered, narrow-band antennas and some filters are used to improve the Signal-to-Noise Ratio (SNR) of the compromising emanations. In practice, wide-band receivers such as R-1250 [19] and R-1550 [12] from Dynamic Sciences International, Inc. are used, see [17, 1]. Indeed, these receivers are compliant with secret requirements for the NACSIM-5000 [37] also known as TEMPEST. These devices are quite expensive and unfortunately not owned by our lab. Hence, we used a cheaper and open-source solution based on the USRP (Universal Software Radio Peripheral) [14] and the GNU Radio project [35]. The USRP is a device which allows you to create a software radio using any computer with USB port. With different daughterboards, the USRP is able to scan from DC to 2.9 GHz with a sample rate of 64 MS/s at a resolution of 12 bits. The full range on the ADC is 2 volts peak to peak and the input is 50 ohms differential. The GNU

Radio project is a powerful software library used by the USRP to process various modulations (AM, FM, PSK, FSK, etc.) and signal processing constructs (optimized filters, FFT, etc.). Thus, the USRP and the GNU Radio project may act as a wide-band receiver and a spectral analyzer with software-based FFT computation.

3.2 Novel Techniques

Some direct and indirect electromagnetic emanations may stay undetected with standard techniques, especially if the signal is composed of irregular peaks or erratic frequency carriers. Indeed, spectral analyzers need significantly static carrier signals. Similarly, the scanning process of wide-band receivers is not instantaneous and needs a lot of time to cover the whole frequency range. Moreover the demodulation process may hide some interesting compromising emanations.

In this paper, we use a different method to detect compromising electromagnetic emanations of keyboards. First, we obtain the raw signal directly from the antenna instead of a filtered and demodulated signal with limited bandwidth. Then, we compute the Short Time Fourier Transform (STFT), which gives a 3D signal with time, frequency and amplitude.

Modern analog-to-digital converters (ADC) provide very high sampling rates (Giga samples per second). If we connect an ADC directly to a wide-band antenna, we can import the raw sampled signal to a computer and we can use software radio libraries to instantly highlight potentially compromising emanations. The STFT computation of the raw signal reveals the carriers and the peaks even if they are present only for a short time.

Unfortunately there is no solution to transfer the high amount of data to a computer in real time. The data rate is too high for USB 2.0, IEEE 1394, Gigabit Ethernet or Serial ATA (SATA) interfaces. However, with some smart triggers, we can sample only the (small) interesting part of the signal and we store it in a fast access memory. Oscilloscopes provide triggered analog-to-digital converters with fast memory. We used a Tektronix TDS5104 with 1 Mpt memory and a sample rate of 5 GS/s. It can acquire electromagnetic emanations up to 2.5 GHz according to the Nyquist theorem. Moreover, this oscilloscope has antialiasing filters and supports IEEE 488 General Purpose Interface Bus (GPIB) communications. We developed a tool to define some specific triggers (essentially peak detectors) and to export the acquired data to a computer under GNU/Linux over Ethernet. Thus the signal can be processed with the GNU Radio software library and some powerful tools such as Baudline [29] or the GNU project Octave [13]. The advantage of this method is to process the raw signal, which is directly sampled from the antenna without any demodulation. Moreover, all compromising electromagnetic emanations up to a frequency of 2.5 GHz are captured. Thus, with this technique, we are able to highlight compromising emanations quickly and easily. This solution is ideal for very short data burst transmissions used by computer keyboards.

4 Experimental Setup

The objective of this experiment is to observe the existence of compromising emanations of computer keyboards when a key is pressed. Obviously electromagnetic emanations depend on the environment. We defined four different setups.

Setup 1: The Semi-Anechoic Chamber. We used a professional semi-anechoic chamber (7×7 meters). Our aim was not to cancel signal echos but to avoid external electromagnetic pollution (Faraday cage). The antenna was placed up to 5 meters from the keyboard connected to a computer (the maximum distance according to the echo isolation of the room). The tested keyboard was on a one meter high table and the computer (PC tower) was on the ground.

Setup 2: The Office. To give evidence of the feasibility of the attacks with background noise, we measured the compromising emanations of the keyboards in a small office (3×5 meters) with two powered computers and three LCD displays. The electromagnetic background noise was quite important with a cluster of 40 computers 10 meters away from the office, more than 60 powered computers on the same floor and a 802.11n wireless router at less than 3 meters away from the office. The antenna was in the office and moved back through the opened door up to 10 meters away from the keyboard in order to determine the maximum range.

Setup 3: The Adjacent Office. This setup is similar to the office setup but we measured the compromising emanations of the keyboards from an adjacent office through a wall of 15 cm composed of wood and plaster.

Setup 4: The Building. This setup takes place in a flat which is in a building of five floors in the center of a mid-size city. The keyboard was in the fifth floor. We performed measurements with the antenna placed on the same floor first. Then, we moved the antenna as far as the basement (up to 20 meter from the keyboard).

Antennas. Since the compromising emanations were found on frequency bands between 25 MHz and 300 MHz, we used a biconical antenna (50 Ohms VHA 9103 Dipol Balun) to improve the Signal-to-Noise Ratio (SNR). We also tested if these compromising emanations can be captured with a smaller antenna such as a simple loop made of a wire of copper (one meter long).

Keyboards. We picked 12 different keyboard models present in our lab: 7 PS/2 keyboards (Keyboard A1-A7), 2 USB keyboards (Keyboard B1-B2), 2 Laptop keyboards (Keyboard C1-C2) and 1 wireless keyboard (Keyboard D1). They were all bought between 2001 and 2008. We also collected measurements with the keyboard connected to a laptop with battery to avoid possible conductive coupling through the power supply. For obvious security reasons, we do not give the brand name and the model of the tested keyboards.

5 Discovering and Exploiting Emanations

To discover compromising emanations, we placed Keyboard A1 in the semi-anechoic chamber and we used the biconical antenna. A diagram of the experiment is depicted in Figure 1. We acquired the raw signal with the oscilloscope as explained above. Since the memory of the oscilloscope is limited, we have to precisely trigger data acquisition. First, we used the earliest falling edge of the data signal sent when a key is pressed . We physically connected a probe on the data wire of the cable between the keyboard and the computer.

Figure 2 gives the STFT of the captured raw signal when the key E is pressed on an American keyboard. With only one capture we are able to represent the entire spectrum along the full acquisition time. In addition, we have a visual description of all electromagnetic emanations. In particular we clearly see some carriers (vertical lines) and broadband impulses (horizontal lines). The three first techniques are based on these compromising emanations and are detailed in the following sections.

Our objective is to use an electromagnetic trigger, since we normally do not have access to the data wire. The discovered broadband impulses (horizontal lines) can be used as a trigger. Thus, with only an antenna, we are able to trigger the acquisition of the compromising electromagnetic emanations. More details are given below.

Some keyboards do not emit electromagnetic emanations when a key is pressed. But with a different trigger model, based on peak detector as well, we discovered another kind of emission, continuously generated (even if no key is pressed). This is the last technique, detailed in Section 5.4.

5.1 The Falling Edge Transition Technique

To understand how direct compromising emanations may be generated by keyboards, we need to briefly describe the PS/2 communication protocol. According to [9], when a key is pressed, released or held down, the keyboard sends a packet of information known as a scan code to the computer. In the default scan code set[1], most of the keys are one-byte long encoded. Some extended keys are two or more bytes long. These codes can be identified by the fact that their first byte is 0xE0. The protocol used to transmit these scan codes is a bi-directional serial communication, based on four wires: Vcc (5 volts), ground, data and clock. For each byte of the scan code, the keyboard pulls down the clock signal at a frequency between 10 KHz and 16.7 KHz for 11 clock cycles. When the clock is low, the state of the signal data is read by the computer. The 11 bits sent correspond to a start bit (0), 8 bits for the scan code of the pressed key (least significant bit first), an odd parity check bit on the byte of the scan code (the bit is set if there is an even number of 1's), and finally a stop bit (1). Figure 3 represents both data and clock signals when the key E is pressed. Note that the scan code is binded to a physical button on the keyboard, it does not represent the character printed on that key. For instance, the scan code of E is 0x24 if we consider the American layout keyboard.

Logic states given by data and clock signals in the keyboard are usually generated by an open collector coupled to a pull-up resistor. The particularity of this system is that the duration of the rising edge is significantly longer (2 μs) than the duration of the falling edge (200 ns). Thus, the compromising emanation of a falling edge should be much more powerful (and with a higher maximum frequency) than the rising edge. This property is known and has been already noticed by Kuhn [17, p.35]. Clock and data signals are identically generated. Hence, the compromising emanation detected is the combination of both signals. However (see Figure 3), the edges of the data and the clock lines are not superposed. Thus, they can be easily separated to obtain independent signals.

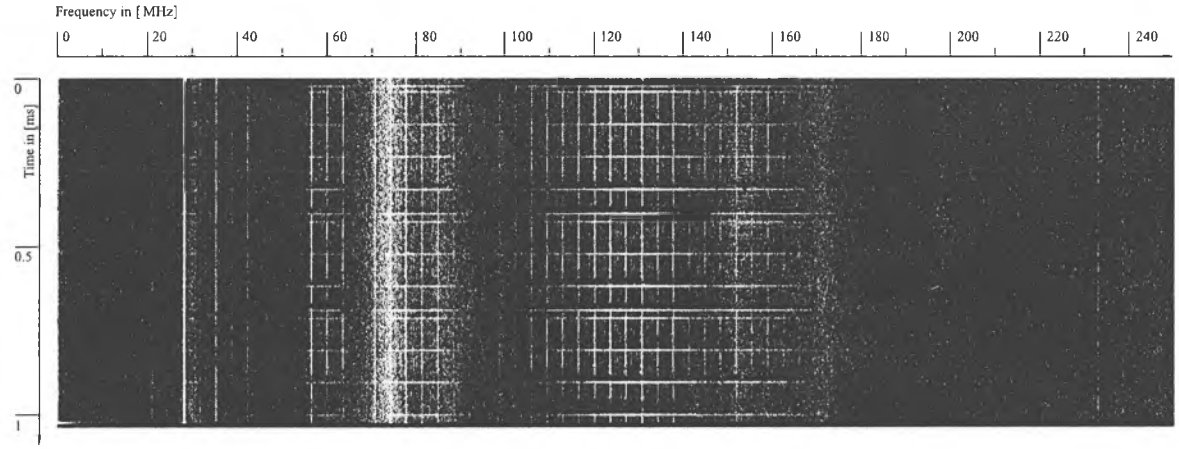

Figure 2: Short Time Fourier Transform (STFT) of the raw signal depicted in Figure 6 (Kaiser windowing of 40, 65536 points)

Since the falling edges of clock signal will always be at the same place, contrary to the falling edges of data signal, we can use them to improve our trigger model. Indeed we consider the detection of a signal based on 11 equidistant falling edges.

Indirect Emanations. If we compare the data signal and the compromising emanation (see Figure 4) we clearly see that the electromagnetic signal is not directly related to the falling edge, as described by Smulders. Indeed, the durations are not equivalent. Thus, the peaks acquired by our antenna seem to be indirectly generated by the falling edges of the combination of clock and data signals. They are probably generated by a peak of current when the transistor is switched. Nevertheless, these emanations, represented by 14 peaks, 11 for the clock signal and 3 for the data signal (see the horizontal lines in Figure 2 or the peaks in Figure 3) partially describe the logic state of the data signal and can be exploited.

Collisions. Because only the falling edges are detected, eventually collisions occur during the keystroke recovery process. For instance, both E (0x24) and G (0x34) share the same trace if we consider only falling edges. We define the falling edge trace as '2' when both data and clock peaks are detected and '1' when only a clock peak is captured. The letters E (see lower graph in Figure 3) and G may be described by the string `21112112111`.

In Figure 5 we grouped every one byte-long scan code, according to their shared falling edge-based traces.

Figure 5: The one byte-long scan codes classification, according to the falling edges trace for an American keyboard layout.

Even if collisions appear, falling edge traces may be used to reduce the subset of possible transmitted scan codes. Indeed, the average number of potential characters for a falling edge trace is 2.4222 (2.0556 if we consider only alpha-numeric characters and a uniform distribution). For example, an attacker who captured the falling edge-based trace of the word `password` obtains a subset of $3 \cdot 2 \cdot 3 \cdot 3 \cdot 2 \cdot 6 \cdot 2 \cdot 6 = 7776$ potential words, according to Figure 5. Thus, if the objective of the attacker is to recover a secret password, he has significantly reduced the test space (the initial set of $36^8 \approx 2^{41}$ is lowered to 2^{13}). Moreover, if the eavesdropped information concerns an e-mail or a text in English, the plaintext recovery process can be improved by selecting only words contained in a dictionary.

Feature Extraction. The recovery procedure is firstly based on a trigger model, able to detect 11 equidistant peaks transmitted in less than 1 ms. Then, we compute the number of peaks, using a peak-detection algorithm and the GNU Radio library. The feature extraction is based on the number of peaks correlated to the most probable value of the table depicted in Figure 5. The main limitation of the recovery procedure is the ability to trigger this kind of signal.

5.2 The Generalized Transition Technique

The previously described attack is limited to a partial recovery of the keystrokes. This is a significant limitation. We know that between two '2' traces, there is exactly one data rising edge. If we are able to detect this transition we can fully recover the keystrokes.

To highlight potential compromising emanations on the data rising edge, we use a software band-pass filter to isolate the frequencies of the broadband impulses (e.g. 105 MHz to 165 MHz of the raw signal in Figure 2). Figure 7 corresponds to the filtered version of the raw time-domain signal represented in Figure 6. We remark that the filtering process significantly improves the SNR. Thus, the peak detection algorithm is much more efficient.

Furthermore, we notice that the energy of the peaks of the clock falling edges is not constant. Empirically, clock peaks have more energy when the state of data signal is high. Indeed, the data signal pull-up resistor is open. When the clock signal is pulled down, the surplus of energy creates a stronger peak. Hence, the peaks generated by the falling edge of the clock signal intrinsically encode the logic state of the data signal. Because there is exactly one rising edge between two falling edge traces of '2', we simply consider the highest clock peak as the rising edge data transition. For example in Figure 7, the rising edge data transitions are respectively at peaks 5 and 9. Thus, the complete data signal is 0010 0100 which corresponds to 0x24 (E). Thus, we manage to completely recover the keystrokes. Note that the band-pass filter improves the previous attack as well. However, the computation cost prevents real time keystroke recovery without hardware accelerated filters.

Feature Extraction. The recovery procedure is firstly based on the same trigger model described previously (11 equidistant peaks detected in less than 1 ms). Then, we filter the signal to consider only the frequency bands containing the peak impulses. The feature extraction is based on the detected peaks. First, we define the threshold between a high peak and a low peak thanks to the two first peaks. Indeed, because we know that data and clock are pulled down, the first one corresponds to a state where clock is high and data is low and the second one describes the state where both signals are low. Then, we determine the potential (and colliding) keystrokes with Figure 5. In our example, it corresponds to the keys 3,6,E,G. Then, we select some bits which differentiate these keys. According to their scan code 3=0x26, 6=0x36, E=0x24, G=0x34 we check the state of the peaks 4 and 8 in Figure 7, which correspond to respectively the second and the fifth bit of the scan codes. Because they are both low, we conclude that the transmitted key is E.

5.3 The Modulation Technique

Figure 2 highlights some carriers with harmonics (vertical lines between 116 MHz and 147 MHz). These compromising electromagnetic emissions come from unintentional emanations such as radiations emitted by the clock, non-linear elements, crosstalk, ground pollution, etc. Determining theoretically the reasons of these compromising radiations is a very complex task. Thus, we can only sketch some probable causes. The source of these harmonics corresponds to a carrier of approximately 4 MHz which is very likely the internal clock of the microcontroller inside the keyboard. Interestingly, if we correlate these harmonics with both clock and data signals, we clearly see modulated signals (in amplitude and frequency) which fully describe the state of both clock and data signals, see Figure 8. This means that the scan code can be completely recovered from these harmonics.

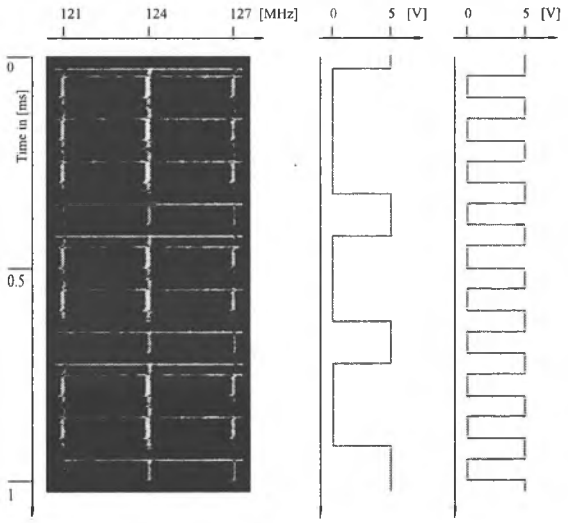

Figure 8: The amplitude and frequency modulations of the harmonic at 124 MHz correlated to both data and clock signals (Keyboard A1, semi-anechoic chamber at 5 meters).

Note that even if some strong electromagnetic interferences emerge, the attacker may choose non-jammed harmonics to obtain a clear signal. It is even possible to superpose them to improve the SNR. Compared to the previous techniques, the carrier-based modulation is much more interesting for distant reception. Indeed, AM and FM transmissions are generally less disrupted by noise and obstacles such as walls, floors, etc. Moreover this technique is able to fully recover the keystrokes. These indirect emanations – which have no formal explanation, but are probably based on crosstalk with the ground, the internal clock of the microcontroller, data and clock signals – let the attacker recover the keystrokes of a keyboard.

This experiment shows that cheap devices such as keyboards may radiate indirect emanations, which are much more compromising than direct emanations. Even if the SNR is smaller, the use of a frequency modulation significantly improves the eavesdropping range. Moreover, the attacker may avoid some noisy frequency bands by selecting only the clearest harmonics. Furthermore, indirect emanations completely describe both clock and data signals.

Feature Extraction. The feature extraction is based on the demodulation in frequency and amplitude of the captured signal centered on the strongest harmonic. In our example and according to Figure 8 the carrier corresponds to 124 MHz. We used the GNU Radio library to demodulate the signal. However, we still need to use the trigger model based on peak detector since the memory of the oscilloscope is limited. Another option is to directly capture the signal with the USRP. Indeed, the lower but continuous sampling rate of the USRP is sufficient to recover the keystrokes. Unfortunately, the sensitivity of the USRP is weaker than the oscilloscope and the eavesdropping range is limited to less than 2 meters in the semi-anechoic chamber.

5.4 The Matrix Scan Technique

The techniques described above are related to the use of PS/2 and some laptop keyboards. However, new keyboards tend to use USB or wireless communication. In this section, we present another compromising emanation which concerns all keyboard types: PS/2, USB, Notebooks and even wireless keyboards. This attack was previously postulated by Kuhn and Anderson [20] but no practical data has appeared so far in the open literature.

Almost all keyboards share the same pressed key detection routine. A major technical constraint is to consider a key as pressed if the button is pushed for 10 ms, see US Patent [31]. Thus every pressed key should be detected within this time delay. From the manufacturer's point of view, there is another main constraint: the cost of the device. A naive solution to detect pressed keys is to poll each key in a row. This solution is clearly not optimal since it requires a large scan loop routine and thus longer delays. Moreover important leads (i.e. one circuit for each key) increase the cost of the device.

A smart solution [31] is to arrange the keys in a matrix. The keyboard controller, often a 8-bit processor, parses columns one-by-one and recovers the state of 8 keys at once. This matrix scan process can be described as 192 keys (some keys may not be used, for instance modern keyboards use 104/105 keys) arranged in 24 columns and 8 rows. Columns are connected to a driver chip while rows are connected to a detector chip. Keys are placed at the intersection of columns and rows. Each key is an analog switch between a column and a row. The keyboard controller pulses each column through the driver (using the address bus and the strobe signal). The detector measures the states of the 8 rows. Note that a row is connected to 24 keys, but only one may be active, the one selected by the driver. Suppose we pressed the key corresponding to column 3 and row 5. The controller pulses columns . . ., 22, 23, 24, 1, 2 with no key event. Now, the controller pulses column 3. Row 5, which corresponds to the pressed key, is detected. The keyboard starts a subroutine to transmit the scan code of the key to the computer. This subroutine takes some time. Thus, the next column pulse sent by the scan routine is delayed.

Columns in the matrix are long leads since they connect generally 8 keys. According to [31], these columns are continuously pulsed one-by-one for at least $3\mu s$. Thus, these leads may act as an antenna and generate electromagnetic emanations. If an attacker is able to capture these emanations, he can easily recover the column of the pressed key. Indeed, the following pulse will be delayed.

To figure out if these emanations can be captured, we picked Keyboard A6 and acquired the signal being one meter from the keyboard in the semi-anechoic chamber with a simple one meter long wire of copper as antenna. Figure 9 gives the repeated peak burst continuously emitted by the keyboard. Figure 10 shows the zoomed compromising emanations when the key C resp. key H is pressed.

The key matrix arrangement may vary, depending on the manufacturer and the keyboard model. We dismantled a keyboard and analyzed the key circuit layout to retrieve the matrix key specifications. The right part of the keyboard layout is depicted on Figure 11. We clearly identify a column (black) and fours rows.

Figure 12 represents the groups of alphanumeric scan codes according to their indirect compromising emanations (or column number) for Keyboard A6. We describe each electromagnetic signal as a number corresponding to the delayed peak. For example, in Figure 10, the key C is described as 12 and the key H as 7.

Even if this signal does not fully describe the pressed key, it still gives partial information on the transmitted scan code, i.e. the column number. So, as described in the Falling Edge Transition Technique, collisions occurs between key codes. Note that this attack is less efficient than the first one since it has (for this specific keyboard) in average 5.14286 potential key codes for a keystroke (alpha-numeric only). However, an exhaustive search on the subset is still a major improvement.

Note that the matrix scan routine loops continuously. When no key is pressed, we still have a signal composed of multiple equidistant peaks. These emanations may be used to remotely detect the presence of powered computers.

Concerning wireless keyboards, the wireless data burst transmission can be used as an electromagnetic trigger to detect exactly when a key is pressed, while the matrix scan emanations are used to determine the column it belongs to. Moreover the ground between the keyboard and the computer is obviously not shared, thus the compromising electromagnetic emanations are stronger than those emitted by wired keyboards. Note that we do not consider the security of the wireless communication protocol. Some wireless keyboards use a weakly or not encrypted channel to communicate with the computer, see [8, 23].

Feature Extraction. To partially recover keystrokes, we continuously monitor the compromising emanations of the matrix scan routine with a specific trigger model. According to Figure 12 the six first peaks are always present, as well as the last three peaks. Indeed, these peaks are never missing (or delayed). Thus, we use this Figure 11: Scan matrix polls columns one-by-one. We are able to deduce on which column the pressed key belongs to. On this keyboard, there will be a collision between keystrokes 7, U, J, M, and others non alpha-numeric keys such as F6, F7, ^, and the dot.

fixed pattern to define a trigger model. Moreover, the matrix scan continuously radiates compromising emanations since the key is pressed. When a keystroke subset is detected, we acquire multiple samples until another pattern is detected. Therefore, we pick the most often captured pattern.

5.5 Distinguishing Keystrokes from Multiple Keyboards

The falling edge-based traces are distinguishable depending on the keyboard model. Indeed, according to the frequency of the peaks, the clock frequency inconsistencies, the duration between clock and data falling edges, we are able to deduce a specific fingerprint for every keyboard. When multiple keyboards are radiating at the same time, we are able to identify and differentiate them. For example, we measured a clock frequency of 12.751 KHz when a key was pressed on a keyboard and the clock frequency was 13.752 KHz when a key was pressed on another keyboard. Thus, when an emanation is captured, we measure the time between two falling edges of the clock and then we deduce if the scan code comes from first or the second keyboard. In practice, we were able to differentiate all the keyboards we tested, even if the brand and the model were equivalent.

This method can be applied to the Falling Edge Transition Technique, the Generalized Transition Technique and the Modulation Technique since they rely on the same kind of signal. The distinguishing process for the Modulation Technique can even be improved by using the clock frequency inconsistencies of the microcontroller as another identifier. For the Matrix Scan Technique, the compromising electromagnetic emanation burst emitted every 2.5 ms (see Figure 9) can be used as a synchronization signal to identify a specific keyboard emission among multiple keyboards. Additionally, the duration between the scan peaks is different, depending on the keyboard model. Thus, it may be used to identify the source keyboard. However, the continuous emission significantly deteriorates the identification process.

Another physical element can be used to distinguish keystrokes from multiple keyboards. For the three first techniques, the broadband impulse range is determined by the length of the keyboard cable, which forms a resonant dipole. Thus, we can use this particularity to identify the source of a compromising emanation. An interesting remark is that the length of the wire connecting the computer to the keyboard is shorter in notebooks. The frequency band of the compromising emanation is higher and the SNR smaller. The Matrix Scan Technique emanates at a higher frequency since the leads of the keyboard layout, acting as an antenna, are shorter.

6 Evaluation in Different Environments

While we have demonstrated techniques that should be able to extract information from keyboard emanations, we have not studied how they are affected by different environments. In this section we study the accuracy of our approaches in all the environments described. Our analysis indicates that keyboard emanations are indeed problematic in practical scenarios.

Evaluating the emission risks of these attacks is not an easy task. Indeed, these results highly depend on the antenna, the trigger model, pass-band filters, peak detection, etc. Moreover, we used trivial filtering processes and basic signal processing techniques. These methods could be significantly improved using beamforming, smart antennas, better filters and complex triggers. In addition, measurements in real environments but the semi-anechoic chamber were subject to massive change, depending on the electromagnetic interferences. Figure 13 gives the list of vulnerable keyboards in all setups, according to the four techniques previously described. Note that all the tested keyboards (PS/2, USB, wireless and laptop) are vulnerable to at least one of these attacks. First, we present the measurements in Setup 1 (semi-anechoic chamber) to guarantee some stable results.

6.1 Results in the Semi-Anechoic Chamber

We consider an attack as successful when we are able to correctly recover more than 95% of more than 500 keystrokes. The Falling Edge Transition Technique, the Generalized Transition Technique and the Modulation Technique are successful in the semi-anechoic chamber for all vulnerable keyboards. This means that we can recover the keystrokes (fully or partially) to at least 5 meters (the maximum distance inside the semi-anechoic chamber). However, the Matrix Scan Technique is limited to a range of 2 to 5 meters, depending on the keyboard. Figure 14 represents the probability of success of the Matrix Scan Technique according to the distance between the tested keyboard and the antenna.

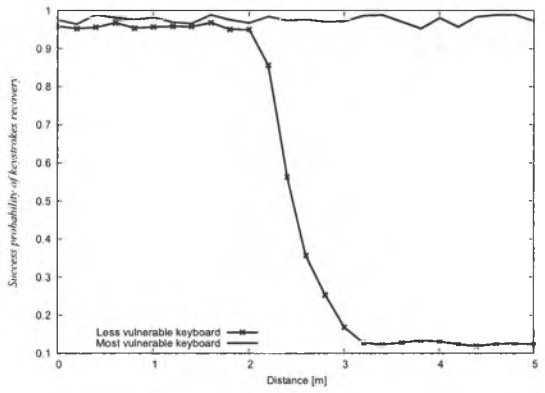

Figure 14: The success probability of the Matrix Scan Technique in the semi-anechoic chamber according to the distance.

We notice that the transition between a successful and a missed attack is fast. Indeed, The correctness of the recovery process is based on the trigger of the oscilloscope. If a peak is not detected, the captured signal is incomplete and the recovered keystroke is wrong. Thus, under a SNR of 6 dB there is nearly no chance to successfully detect the peaks. The SNR is computed according to the average value of the peaks in volts divided by the RMS of the noise in volts.

Considering 6 dB of SNR as a minimum, we are able to estimate the theoretical maximum distance to successfully recover the keystrokes for all techniques in the semi-anechoic chamber. Figure 15 gives the estimated maximum distance range according to the weakest and the strongest keyboard.

In Figure 16 the upper graph gives the SNR of the Falling Edge Transition Technique and the Generalized Transition Technique on Keyboard A1 from 1 meter to 5 meters. The middle graph details the SNR (in dB) of the strongest frequency carrier of the Modulation Technique for the same keyboard. Thus, we can estimate the maximum range of these attacks according to their SNR. The lower graph gives the SNR of the Matrix Scan Technique for the same keyboard. All the measurements were collected in the semi-anechoic chamber.

6.2 Results in Practical Environments

The second phase is to test these techniques in some practical environments. The main difference is the presence of a strong electromagnetic background noise. However, all the techniques remain applicable.

Setup 2: The Office. Figure 17 gives the probability of success of the Generalized Transition Technique on Keyboard A1 measured in the office according to the distance between the antenna and the keyboard. We notice that the sharp transition is present as well when the SNR of the peaks falls under 6 dB. The maximum range of this attack is between 3 and 7.5 meters depending on the tested keyboard. Note that these values were unstable due to a changing background noise. They correspond to an average on multiple measurements.

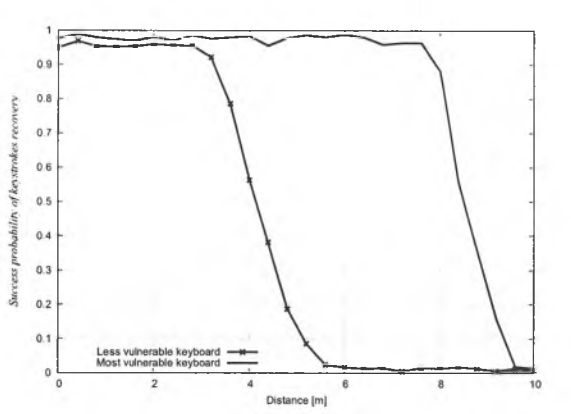

Figure 17: The success probability of the Generalized Transition Technique in the office, according to the distance between the keyboard and the antenna (biconical).

The Modulation Technique is based on a signal carrier. The SNR of this carrier should determine the range of the attack. However, we obtained better results with the same trigger model used in the Falling Edge Transition Technique and the Generalized Transition Technique than one based on the carrier signal only.

Because the Matrix Scan Technique is related to the detection of the peaks, we noticed the same attenuation when the SNR falls under 6 dB. Figure 18 gives the maximum range for the four techniques measured in the office.

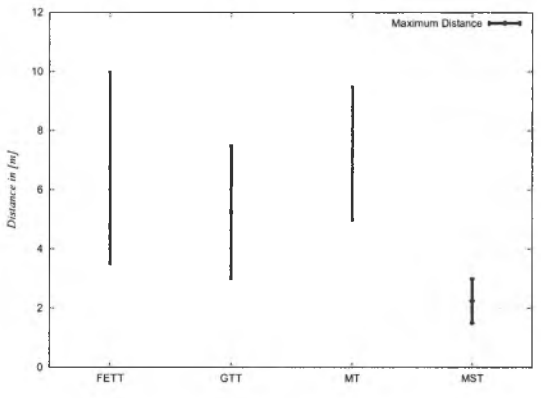

Figure 18: Maximum distance ranges, from the least vulnerable keyboard to the most vulnerable keyboard, to successfully recover 95% of the keystroke according to the techniques (in the office with the biconical antenna).

Setup 3: The Adjacent Office. Results on this setup are basically the same as the previous setup (the office), except that the wall made of plaster and wood removes 3 dB to the SNR.

Setup 4: The Building. We notice some unexpected results in this setup. Indeed, we are able to capture the signal and successfully recover the keystroke with a probability higher than 95% 20 meters away from the keyboard (i.e. the largest distance inside the building). Sometimes the environment can be extremely favorable to the eavesdropping process. For example, metallic structures such as pipes or electric wires may act as antennas and significantly improve the eavesdropping range. In this case, the compromising emanations are carried by the shared ground of the electric line. Thus, the range is defined by the distance between the keyboard and the shared ground and the distance between the shared ground and the antenna. Note that the Matrix Scan Technique is easily disrupted by a noisy shared ground, since the trigger model is more complicated and the emanations weaker. For this technique, we were only able to successfully capture compromising emanations when the keyboard is at less than one meter away from the shared ground. This setup is interesting because it corresponds to a practical scenario where the eavesdropper is placed in the basement of a building and tries to recover the keystrokes of a keyboard at the fifth floor. Unfortunately, it was impossible to provide stable measurements since they highly depend on the environment. We noticed that the main (metallic) water pipe of the building acts as an antenna as well and can be used in place of the shared ground. Furthermore, this antenna is less polluted by electronic devices.

Perfect Trigger. We tried the same experiment in the office, but the background noise was too strong. Indeed, we were not able to successfully detect the compromising emissions. However, with a probe physically connected to the data wire, we correctly triggered the emanations. Indeed, the electromagnetic compromising emissions are present in the shared ground. The limitation concerns only the trigger. All the techniques were applicable on the whole floor (about 20 meters) with the keyboard one meter away from the shared ground.

Obviously, you can directly connect the oscilloscope to the shared ground of the building to eavesdrop the keystrokes. Note that an old PC tower used to supply tested keyboards carries the compromising emanations directly through the shared ground. But, this is out of the scope of this paper since we focused our research on electromagnetic emanations only. To avoid such conductive coupling through power supply, we performed our measurements with the keyboards connected to a battery powered laptop.

7 Countermeasures

In this Section, we suggest some possible countermeasures to protect keyboards against the four attacks.

The first solution to avoid the compromising emanations seems trivial. We should shield the keyboard to significantly reduce all electromagnetic radiations. Many elements inside the keyboard may generate emanations: the internal electronic components of the keyboard, the communication cable, and the components of the motherboard inside the computer. Thus, to eliminate these emanations, we have to shield the whole keyboard, the cable, and a part of the motherboard of the computer. We discussed with a manufacturer and he pointed out that the price to shield the entire keyboard will at least double the price of the device. This solution may not be applicable for cost reasons. One can find on the market some keyboards which respect the NATO SDIP-27 standard. All these documents remain classified and no information is available on the actual emission limit or detailed measurement procedures. Another solution is to protect the room where vulnerable keyboards are used. For example, the room can be shielded or a secure physical perimeter can be defined around the room, for instance 100 meters. Attacks 1, 2 and 3 are directly related to the PS/2 protocol. One solution to avoid unintended information leaks is to encrypt the bi-directional serial communication, see [3]. In modern keyboards, one chip contains the controller, the driver, the detector, and the communication interface. So, the encryption may be computed in this chip and no direct compromising emanations related to the serial communication will appear. Attack 4 is related to the scan matrix loop. A solution could be to design a new scanning process algorithm. Even if keyboards still use scan matrix loop routine, there exists some applicable solutions. As described by Anderson and Kuhn [3], the loop routine can be randomized. Actually columns are scanned in the incremental order 1, 2, 3, . . ., 23, 24, but it seems possible to change the order randomly. Moreover, we can add some random delays during the scanning loop process to obfuscate the execution of the subroutine. Both solutions do not avoid electromagnetic emanations, but makes the keystrokes recovery process theoretically impossible. Paavilainen [27] also proposed a solution. It consists in high-frequency filtering matrix signals before they are fed into the keyboard. This will significantly limits compromising electromagnetic emanations.

8 Extensions

Our study has shown that electromagnetic emanations of modern wired and wireless keyboards may be exploited from a distance to passively recover keystrokes. In this section, we detail some extensions and remarks.

The main limitation of these attacks concerns the trigger of the data acquisition. This can be improved with an independent process, using specific filters between the antenna and the ADC. Additionally, other compromising emanations such as the sound of the pressed key could be used as trigger. Furthermore, modern techniques such as beamforming could significantly improve the noise filtering.

Another improvement would be to simultaneously leverage multiple techniques. For keyboards that are vulnerable to more than one technique, we could correlate the results of the different techniques to reduce uncertainty in our guesses.

Another extension would be to accelerate these attacks with dedicated hardware. Indeed, the acquisition time (i.e. the transfer of the data to a computer), the filtering and decoding processes take time (about two seconds per keystroke). With dedicated system and hardware-based computation such as FPGAs, the acquisition, filtering and decoding processes can obviously be instantaneous (e.g. less than the minimum time between two keystrokes). However, the keystrokes distinguishing process when multiple keyboards are radiating is still difficult to implement especially for the Matrix Scan Technique, since the acquisition process should be continuous.

We spend time experimenting with different types of antennas and analog-to-digital converters. In particular, we used the USRP and the GNU Radio library to avoid the need of an oscilloscope and to obtain a portable version of the Modulation Technique. Indeed, we can hide the USRP with battery and a laptop in a bag, the antenna can be replaced by a simple wire of copper (one meter long) which is taped on the attacker's body hidden under his clothes. With this transportable setup, we are able to recover keystrokes from vulnerable keyboards stealthily. However the eavesdropping range is less than two meters.

9 Conclusion

We have provided evidence that modern keyboards radiate compromising electromagnetic emanations. The four techniques presented in this paper prove that these inexpensive devices are generally not sufficiently protected against compromising emanations. Additionally, we show that these emanations can be captured with relatively inexpensive equipment and keystrokes are recovered not only in the semi-anechoic chamber but in some practical environments as well.

The consequences of these attacks is that compromising electromagnetic emanations of keyboards still represent a security risk. PS/2, USB laptop and wireless keyboards are vulnerable. Moreover, there is no software patch to avoid these attacks. We have to replace the hardware to obtain safe devices. Due to cost pressure in the design, manufacturers may not systematically protect keyboards. However, some (expensive) secure keyboards already exist but they are mainly bought by military organizations or governments.

The discovery of these attacks was directly related to our method based on the analysis of the entire spectrum and the computation of Short Time Fourier Transform. This technique has some pros such as the human-based visual detection of compromising emanations, the large spectrum bandwidth, the use of the raw signal without RF front-ends and the post-demodulation using software libraries. The cons are the limited memory and the difficulty to obtain efficient triggers. However, for short data bursts, this solution seems relevant.

Future works should consider similar devices, such as keypads used in cash dispensers (ATM), mobile phone keypads, digicodes, printers, wireless routers etc. Another major point is to avoid the use of a peak detection algorithm since it is the main limitation of these attacks. The algorithms of the feature extractions could be improved as well. The correlation of these attacks with non-electromagnetic compromising emanation attacks such as optical, acoustic or time attacks could significantly improve the keystroke recovery process.

We discussed with a few agencies interested by our videos [36]. They confirmed that this kind of attack has been practically done since the 1980's on old computer keyboards, with sharp transitions and high voltages. However, they were not aware on the feasibility of these attacks on modern keyboards. Some of these attacks were not known to them.

Hardware Keystroke Logging

Say you work in a company and are up for a promotion. You want to negotiate your salary effectively, but to do this, you need to know what others in that position are making. How do you get into the Human Resource records?

Bob, who has a cube across the hall, is the DBA. He could get in there, but how do you get his password? Your network is monitored and audited pretty closely. You can't do anything to steal his password "on the network" which might get logged and would be traceable to you.

Enter this little device:

This USB keyboard logger has a huge 2MB or 4MB memory capacity, organized into an advanced flash file system. Super fast data retrieve is achieved by switching into pendrive mode for download. Completely invisible for computer operation…

It comes in USB and PS/2 models and costs less than $100. (No link, lest I be accused of encouraging this. You can find these things easily enough if you want to.)

One night, you work late, then you unplug his keyboard, plug this device into his computer, then plug his keyboard into the device. His computer is way under his desk, so he'll never see it. You retrieve the device the next evening and download all his keyboard input for the entire day from the internal Flash memory. It wouldn't be hard to pick out his password, and now you're him.

This is unlike a software keyboard logger because there's no evidence left behind. No process that runs in the background, no need to install anything on his machine, etc. It's like stabbing someone with an icicle — no evidence gets left behind.

All you security types out there — how do you defend against this? Do they sell encrypting keyboards, which encrypt data sent down the keyboard cable and decrypt it on the machine?

Defeating Keystroke Logging

We've talked a bit about keyloggers before, which can be a brutally effective way to capture passwords (see this post, this post, or this post). But there's a completely simple way to defeat them, based on the fact that a keylogger doesn't know where on the page the focus is when…

Keystroke Logging in Action

Lessons Learned from Biggest Bank Heist in History: In the comments on yesterday's post about hardware keystroke loggers, someone posted a link to this story about a near-heist at the Japanese bank, Sumitomo Mitsui. Would-be robbers used this exact attack. By installing software keystroke loggers on the PCs…

On modern computers, keyboards tend to not work anymore when unplugged and replugged when the PC still runs. So if you leave your PC on all time, and someone hooks such a device to your PC, you come in in the morning and the keyboard is not working. Or if the eavesdropper is a bit smarter, your PC has rebooted. Both would be a signal for me to check what had happened.

Really? I haven't found this to be the case with my machines.

Keystroke logger :)

It would be very difficult to guard against this. After all, if you don't have physical security, you don't have security.

---

by Michael, August 15, 2006 3:01 PM

Works for me all the time - and I hate it. Maybe it's with USB stuff only. Hadn't had a PS/2 keyboard for ages.

If it doesn't work for your PC then you must refer to "plan B" and "booby trap" your PC. A motion sensor comes to mind, triggering when the (tightly stacked towards the back) PC gets moved in order to make way for the plug.

I've been in a lot of a IT shops, and I haven't seen one yet that physical secures all the desktop machines. You?

I've been in a lot of a IT shops, and I haven't seen one yet that physical secures all the desktop machines. You?

Nope. And the headaches that would entail would be far more costly than not taking the measures.

Remember, security is a series of tradeoffs. You can't ensure someone won't do something boneheaded like that, so you put something in the company policy manual about it and generally forget it. And if someone does that, you fire them and sue for damages. And you try not to hire someone like that in future.

Employees will always be able to do stuff like that. If it's not a keystroke logger, it could be a wireless mini-cam. Or it could be a replacement keyboard (slightly modified of course). Or it could be a Trojan. Or it could be getting Bob drunk and asking him the password...

by Dave, August 15, 2006 4:16 PM

Let's say you stuck this doodad on Bob's computer and weren't able to get back to it for a week? Would this thing max out and cause an interruption that would result in a service call? Or would it just happily pass along the bits that it can't hold?

If one were devious enough to do this, you could also pick up a few blackmail-worthy tidbits about Bob, which could be used to enhance your earning potential.

The Sumitomo Mitsui Banking Corporation in Tokyo decided the answer to this question was Super Glue!

Not a bad idea, actually. More manageable would be a desktop where the keyboard attached inside the case, which would be locked.

When you really think about it, keyboards are a pretty stunning security hole. A lot of very sensitive data travels through a keyboard into the machine, and it can be intercepted pretty easily. The network cable too -- I'm sure there are physical capture devices for them that you can attached to a machine for a day or two.

Ok, ready for a great little trick to bypass your would-be co-worker spy? This is a great but little know way to get around the key logger attached to the back of your PC. The beauty of it is, you keep letting the spy think he's undetected, ie he thinks he knows your password when in reality you're using the real one and letting him think it's something else. Ok, here goes. Pay attention.....

Click on Start, then All Programs, then Accessories, then Accessibility, then On-Screen Keyboard.

The rest should be self explainitory, if not, then you shouldn't be in the corporate possition you're in. Just use the on screen keyboard to input your password at the appropriate point and access your secure files. Since the keystrock logger on the back of your PC only records keys actually pressed on the hard-keyboard itself, the spy will never see your Real Password and will continue to think the one he has is ginuine. If you want to really confound him, reset the Fake Password daily by the conventional means and continue to access your files by the method above. While he'll never be able to access your system, he'll start thinking he's one step behind you password wise since each new password he receives won't let him in. Watch him get more and more flustered daily as he's tries unsuccessfully to catch up with your resetting the latest Fake Password. Of course it's not necessary to reset what he sees but the process keeps him thinking there must be a really good reason you're resetting your password every day. He's just a fumbling would-be James Bond who's too stupid to realize every single one of the new passwords are worthless and for your amusement only. Good Luck and have fun. PS...Remember however, what ever you type on the hard-keyboard will be seen by the logger device.

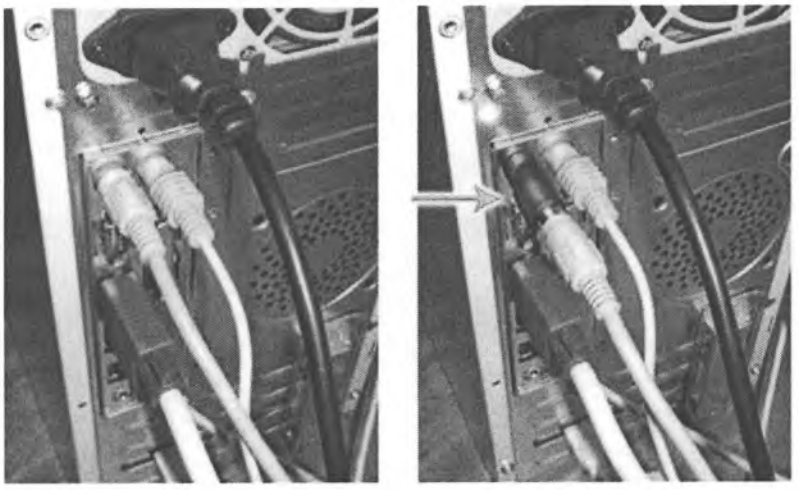
Home » Wireless Keylogger Plug

The WIRELESS KEYLOGGER plug is designed to resemble a ps/2 adapter. Plug this unit into your keyboard port and the setup is complete. This is the most popular product we carry and its success is mainly due to the ease of use and it's flexibility to be transferred from one computer to another computer in just a few seconds.

- Plug & Record Wireless Keylogger installs in seconds.
- Will record every keystroke, independent of the systems access level.
- Record on one PC & retrieve data on another PC / Laptop or Phone from a remote location.
- No software needs to be installed on the target PC.
- Operating system independent - works on any desktop computer.
- Can't be detected or disabled by any anti-spyware or anti-virus programs.

- Not effected by firewalls
- Uses no system or network resources.
- Will not interfere with any software application.
- Will not be detected as a new device by the Operating system. (No popup message)
- Stored data is password protected.

WIRELESS KEYLOGGER INSTALLED ON A PC



Before After

Specifications:

- Internal Memory:
  The WIRELESS KEYLOGGER has 4 MB storage. (It can store 4,000,000 keystrokes, which is approximately 2 years of data on an active computer).

- Distance of Wireless Transmitting:
  Up to 300 feet (100 meters) the length of a football field.
  It is capable of transmitting through walls and other physical structures.

Advantages over other models of the WIRELESS KEYLOGGER:

- Easy and quick setup. (just a few seconds)
- Transferable to different computers and keyboards.

Disadvantages of this model against other models of the WIRELESS KEYLOGGER:

- Is detectable to visual inspection.

Privacy Watch: More Criminals Use Keystroke Loggers

By Andrew Brandt, PCW Print Nov 23, 2005 4:00 PM

Keystroke loggers--programs that secretly record every character you type--are getting much more common, security analysts say, as criminals use them to steal user names and passwords for financial and other accounts.

Websense, a computer security firm, reports that for stealing passwords many cyberpickpockets prefer keystroke loggers (keyloggers for short) to phishing. Unlike phishers, bad guys who use keyloggers don't have to create elaborate fake Web sites to trick people into divulging their bank passwords, for instance. Instead, the crooks just wait until the unsuspecting victim visits the real site. The keylogger records the keys the person types to log in and then it uploads the data to the criminals.

Websense says that the number of unique keylogger programs in use by criminals more than doubled between April 2005, when there were 77 of them, and July 2005, when the company saw 179.

Early in 2005 criminals used a keylogger to discover the password for accessing a computer that performs electronic money transfers at the Sumitomo Mitsui bank in London. Police learned of the plot to steal $420 million just before the bad guys could execute the transfer. Arcot Systems, which develops software used to thwart keylogging and phishing, says crimes involving stolen passwords result in $2.75 billion in losses each year.

To combat the threat, many online banks have started using software keyboards on their Web site log-in pages. Because you enter your password or PIN by clicking on-screen buttons rather than by typing the numbers or letters on your keyboard, this arrangement can defeat a simple keylogger. And because the Arcot software keyboard constantly changes the labels on its virtual keys, the bad guys can't tell what number you're clicking by recording the mouse pointer's location on screen every time you click.

Of course, crooks always counterattack. Some aim keyloggers at sites of financial institutions that don't use software PIN pads or other advanced security features. Others are beefing up their malware arsenal with software that can capture an image of your screen every time you click a number on an on-screen PIN pad.

Still, if you use a software firewall, keep your antivirus software up-to-date, and avoid running programs that you receive via e-mail or instant messaging, your chances of stopping a keylogger before it can harm you are good. The best way to determine whether a keylogger is running on your PC is to scan the system regularly with a good antispyware tool, such as Webroot Software's Spy Sweeper.

Super-Glue: Best practice for countering key stroke loggers

This wonderful little gadget is for sale over at Thinkgeek. It is colored an innocuous IBM grey so no one will notice when you attach it to their keyboard. It fits between the back of the PC and the keyboard cable. It needs no power and it can record 130,000 keystrokes. It works like a software keystroke logger. Once it is installed it just captures anything that is typed: usernames, passwords, URLs, email, banking info, everything. To access the data the owner of the device just types the password into any word processor and then you start to communicate with the device. It is very slick. Of course the primary difference between this and a software keystroke logger is that there is NO WAY to detect it and remove it.

Of course this is exactly how the greatest attempted bank heist in history was pulled off. The bank robbers installed these devices on machines inside the bank and eventually got access to Sumitomo Bank's wire transfer capability. They then proceeded to transfer more that $440 million to various accounts in other countries. Read all the gory details in this article I just published.

The one thing I do not mention in the article is that it is reported that Sumitomo Bank's best practice for avoiding a repeat attack is that they now super-glue the keyboard connections into the backs of their PCs.

> I completely agree. Passwords are now at least a decade out of date and have become almost useless as a security device. Smart cards or some similar system can talk in two directions with the computer that is asking for authentication of the user. This allows two crucial changes in the security protocol:
> 1) True end-to-end strong encryption can be built into the communication system, so that evesdropping and related attacks are effectively impossible.
> 2) The server can authenticate itself to the smart card, as well as the smart card to the server, using several steps which use computation instead of direct transmission of secret data. You obviously do not want to provide any information to an adversary posing as a well-known vendor!
> Without some such system, our data security will continue its relentless decline, dropping to effectively zero protection in the near future.

> You can't key log a smartcard, but you can duplicate one. You can also piggy-back commands from your keyboard to any destinations after whichever authentication methods you choose, may it be smartcard or any other variations in the future.
> Also at some point all that encrypted materials have to be reverted into human-readable format, so your "secured" communication is only as secured as your video cable, or any programs that can tap into the video rendering of your terminal. How would you know what you view on your computer screen is ACTUALLY generated by your computer?
> There is no solution. Smartcard will make money for a lot of people, and I'm all for that, but it's not a solution to end the problem. Heck, it doesn't even solve the problem. It only patches a tiny crack in a huge hole.

Instead of plugging something in between the keybboard and computer you could do exactly the same with whatever input device. You have to securely connect whatever device you are using to the computer so that noone can put something in the middle. Of course a really determined person could cut the cable and fit something but that would be hard to do unnoticed.

Now I know what to look for on my hardware before I use my computers. Hopefully, I won't need to use super-glue, but I don't have any reason to believe that someone at work or home would stoop to putting hardware-shwarez on my systems.

If I do find one, I'll pull it off and run it over several times with my car. Or toss it into the middle of a busy street and watch the traffic do the dirty work. Or... maybe... if I can find a powerfull enough electromagnet...

When was the last time the seriously non-techie types at your workplace looked at the back of their PC? And, even if they did, would any of them even realise that, in that rat's nest of wires, there was something that didn't belong?

I didn't think so ....

The article says it is impossible to detect or remove. That's the only thing I'm disputing. Don't put words in my mouth.

But since you brought it up, when was the last time the seriously non-techie types at your workplace ran utilities to check for software keyloggers?

When was the last time you looked at the back of your computer? Most corporate computer users don't even acknowledge that they even have a computer...it's always "some box that has the hard drive that sits under my desk". It sits there, innocous until tech support gets a service call that someone's "hard drive" has failed and they come out to replace the box....that happens less often than the 3-5 year PC refresh does... so, yeah...crawl on your hands and knees in your business suit, amoungst the dirt, dust bunnies, old french fries and corn chips, pull out the CPU and using your flashlight, get your head behind the box and see if you can identify everything that is plugged into your computer? Likely not...and if you can, congratulations...now your pants are dirty and the CEO wants to see you in the conference room now to meet with a new multi-million dollar customer...good luck on that first impression!

Why not put a "keyboard unplugged" detection device on the keyboard plug? It would be like the chassis intrusion function on a PC and would alert the user that the keyboard had been unplugged (with a message on the screen during POST). The user could be informed during the warning to check the keyboard plug for tampering (and extra hardware). Alternatively, do away with PS2 ports and switch to all USB mice and keyboards!!

Carrion

Yes but the USB port is much cheeper to attack. This device costs 99.99 USD. Fo that I can get a 1 gig USB plug-in device and use free software k/b logger.
Its cheaper than TEMPEST or Optical tempest by a factor of 10.
What about hidden partitions on your HD?
Extra PCI cards inside?
Many m/b have unused ports for further USB sockets that could be internal.

It only goes to show that in the real world "IT Security" is a myth.
Either /or your equipment or your staff are always open to compromise, so long as you have something worth getting and an enemy can devote the time, effort and cash to doing it!

I can detect them 100% of the time. Just look behind the computer and check the keyboard connector.

I can remove them 100% of the time too, even if superglued. I have a skill level of 256+ in computer disassembly and discombobulation.

take one of these keyloggers and glue it in place with shoe goo put your own password on it I doubt they will work 2 deep, you can check up on the crew and it takes an act of GOD to bust shoe goo

Note you can get these keyloggers to imbed inside the keyboard itself think about it all the precautions and for naught 10 minutes and some vandal has a chip in your keyboard watching every keystroke

SPONSOR STATEMENT

HB 50

An Act relating to the purchase of alcoholic beverages at a club and to access by certain persons under 21 years of age to a club's licensed premises when alcoholic beverages are present.

House Bill 50 is an effort to support the young men and women serving in the armed services in Alaska, by clarifying language to make it easier for them to enjoy companionship in the clubhouses of service and patriotic organizations.

The young soldiers, airmen, sailors, marines and coast guard personnel stationed in Alaska face special challenges. Separation from loved ones, the rigors of barracks life and the monotony of three mess hall meals a day can take their toll on morale. Patriotic clubs – such as those operated by the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Disabled American Veterans and others – are places to relax with buddies and enjoy the special understanding and support from others who have "been there" and understand the rigors of military life.

The Legislature recognized this value, and in 2006 passed SB 209 to allow these young men and women access to such clubs using their military ID cards. However, some language remains in statute that creates confusion as to when such access is permitted. HB 50 will eliminate that confusion by making it clear that such access is not limited solely to special events.

It is important to note that HB 50 makes no change in law that would allow service members under the age of 21 to purchase or consume alcohol in service clubs.

Your support of HB 50 will be a clear demonstration that Alaska understands and works to address the special needs of those who defend our freedom.

MEMORANDUM March 31, 2011

SUBJECT: Sectional Summary for HB 50 (Work Order No. 27-LS0254\A)

TO: Representative Dan Saddler
Attn: Lynne Smith

FROM: Doug Gardner
Director

You requested a sectional summary of HB 50, a bill relating to purchase of alcoholic beverages at a club, and to access by certain persons under 21 to the club's licensed premises when alcoholic beverages are present. This summary is current as of the date of this memorandum and the "A" version of the bill. As a preliminary matter, a sectional summary of a bill should not be considered an authoritative interpretation of the bill and the bill itself is the best statement of its contents. If you would like an interpretation of the bill as it may apply to a particular set of circumstances, please advise.

Section 1 removes the phrase "upon special occasions" from AS 04.11.110(d). The effect of this deletion would allow military personnel on active duty, who are extended club privileges by patriotic organizations, to purchase alcoholic beverages in the portion of the club that is a part of the club's licensed premises at times beyond just "special occasions."

Section 2 adds the phrase "is a guest or member of the club" to AS 04.11.110(g). The addition of this phrase would allow a person under 21 years of age to enter or remain on the premises of a patriotic organization that is licensed as a club under AS 04.11.110, when alcoholic beverages are present, if the person under 21 years of age is a guest or a member of the club, and has proper military identification on their person. The amendments to this section add the requirement that for a person under 21 years of age to remain in the licensed premises portion of a patriotic club, the person must be either a guest or a member of the club.

Section 3 conforms AS 04.16.049 (Access of persons under 21 years of age to licensed premises), to the amendment set out in section 2 of the bill. This section adds a subsection to AS 04.16.049(a), which allows a person under 21 to enter or remain on a licensed premises under Title 4, if "the person is permitted on the premises under AS 04.11.110(g)."

If you have further questions, please advise.

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

"An Act relating to the purchase of alcoholic beverages at a club and to access by certain persons under 21 years of age to a club's licensed premises when alcoholic beverages are present."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

 Section 1. AS 04.11.110(d) is amended to read:

(d) Alcoholic beverages sold under a club license may be purchased only by (1) members of the club and their families, (2) widows or widowers of deceased members who have been accorded club privileges, and (3) military personnel on active duty who are extended the privilege by patriotic organizations [UPON SPECIAL OCCASIONS]. Alcoholic beverages may be purchased only in the portion of the club rooms that are part of the licensed premises.

 Sec. 2. AS 04.11.110(g) is amended to read:

(g) Access [NOTWITHSTANDING AS 04.16.049, ACCESS] by persons under 21 years of age to

(1) a club's licensed premises is permitted when alcoholic beverages are not present; and

(2) the premises of a patriotic organization licensed as a club under this section is permitted when alcoholic beverages are present if the person is a guest or member of the club and possesses a valid active duty military or armed forces identification card issued by the United States Department of Defense or the United States Department of Homeland Security.

 Sec. 3. AS 04.16.049(a) is amended to read:

(a) A person under the age of 21 years may not knowingly enter or remain in premises licensed under this title unless

(1) accompanied by a parent, guardian, or spouse who has attained the age of 21 years;

(2) the person is at least 16 years of age, the premises are designated by the board as a restaurant for the purposes of this section, and the person enters and remains only for dining; [OR]

(3) the person is under the age of 16 years, is accompanied by a person over the age of 21 years, the parent or guardian of the underaged person consents, the premises are designated by the board as a restaurant for the purposes of this section, and the person enters and remains only for dining; or

(4) the person is permitted on the premises under AS 04.11.110(g).
