Compensation Commissions

In ²¹ 29 states boards, committees, or commissions make recommendations regarding legislative compensation. Several also recommend salaries for certain elected officials and judges. Commissions in 12 states act only in an advisory capacity. They make recommendations to the governor or the legislature, but the legislature has final authority to set salaries, expense allowances, and benefits for its members.

In Hawaii, Idaho, Maryland, and Michigan compensation commissions recommendations become effective unless the legislature enacts a resolution to the contrary. Existing salary levels are continued if the legislature rejects the commission's recommendations. In West Virginia the commission's recommendations must be enacted into law to become effective. The legislature may reduce, but not increase the proposed salary levels. Recommendations made by Oklahoma's commission are final and are not subject to legislative review. In Arizona the commission's recommendations for changes in legislative salaries are submitted to the voters for approval. In many states new salaries do not become effective until the following session of the legislature.

In some states commission members are appointed exclusively by the governor, but in others the appointing authority is shared by the governor and legislative leadership. In Washington persons holding certain positions are automatically appointed to the commission.

Table III summarizes the major organizational and functional aspects of each state commission, including the number of commission members, appointing authority, and scope and frequency of commission recommendations.

MEMORANDUM

October 16, 1985

SUBJECT: Constitutional amendment: state officers compensation commission
(Work Order No. 14-1391)

TO: Senator Mitch Abood
Chairman Joint Special Committee on Legislative Salaries

FROM: ^{Dick} Richard A. Bradley
Legislative Counsel B

Linda Firestone has requested that a constitutional amendment be prepared that would establish a state officers compensation commission. Such a constitutional amendment is enclosed.

The structure of the amendment is derived, in part, from art. IV, sec. 8 of the Alaska Constitution, the structure for the judicial council.

Linda Firestone also asked that I identify the scope of the amendment as drafted.

It applies to the sixty members of the legislature and to the governor and lieutenant governor. It applies to justices and judges. There are five members of the Supreme Court, three members of the Court of Appeals, and, by my calculation, 28 superior court judges and 16 district court judges according to the February, 1985 state directory. As I suggested to Linda Firestone, there is an open question as to its application to magistrates though probably the supreme court should retain control of those salaries.

52
28

It applies to the "heads and deputy heads of each principal department". There are fifteen principal departments: Administration, Commerce and Economic Development, Community and Regional Affairs, Corrections, Education, Environmental Conservation, Fish and Game, Health and Social Services, Labor, Law, Military and Veterans Affairs, Natural Resources, Public Safety, Revenue, and Transportation and Public Facilities. The Department of Education appears to have no deputy; Administration has four deputies; the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities has five deputies; the Departments of Commerce and Economic Development, Corrections, Fish and Game, Health and Social Services, Natural Resources, and Revenue each have two deputies, and the remaining departments each have a single deputy. Thus it seems that the category of heads and deputy heads of principal departments contains, according to the February, 1985 directory, some 42 members. 42

The remaining category is described as "full-time members of a state board or commission. To my knowledge, the only state board or commission whose members are full-time employees of the state is the Public Utilities Commission. 5

There are five members of the commission. Commission Fisheries
John Smith - Commission - + >

One substantive comment might be made. Existing constitutional law protects the salaries of the governor and lieutenant governor (art. III, sec. 15) and of the justices and judges (art. IV, sec. 13). As a later amendment to the constitution that deals with the question in general terms, it might be argued that the power of the state officers compensation commission established under this resolution, if ratified by the people, included the power to reduce the salaries in question or, perhaps, to make the judicial retirement system contributory. Because these issues will eventually emerge, it is probably appropriate to deal with the questions affirmatively in the resolution.

If I may be of further assistance, please advise. ma 50+1

MEMORANDUM

TO: Representative Katie Hurley
FROM: Gretchen Keiser, Legislative Analyst
RE: Legislative Compensation Commissions
Research Request 85-113

Patty Macklin of your staff requested information regarding commissions established in other states to address the issue of compensation for legislators. She indicated a particular interest in the mechanisms created for determining legislators' pay. In addition, we were asked to review previous bills addressing this issue which have been introduced in the Alaska Legislature.

Legislative Compensation Commissions

According to The Book of the States 1984-1985 (Council of State Governments), legislative compensation provisions have gradually become more flexible, as many states have made compensation a statutory provision rather than rigid constitutional definition. The advent of compensation commissions and the practice of matching salaries of legislators to those of other state employees have led to more frequent adjustments of legislators' salaries in many states.

Table 1 summarizes the methods of setting legislative compensation employed by the 50 states, based on a 1983 survey of state statutes by the Oregon Legislative Research Agency. Legislative salaries are established by constitution in nine states, whereas the legislatures in 22 states, including Alaska, are solely responsible for setting their pay.

Representative Hurley

A compensation commission, board or committee makes recommendations to the legislature on salaries in 19 states. According to the Oregon Legislative Research report, commissions in 12 states act only in an advisory capacity to the legislature or governor; the legislature has final authority in establishing salaries and benefits. On the other hand, Hawaii, Idaho, Maryland and Michigan compensation commissions' recommendations become effective unless the legislature passes a resolution to the contrary. If the legislative resolution overrules the commission's recommendations, the existing salary levels are continued. The Oklahoma Commission recommendations are final and not subject to legislative review. In order for the West Virginia commission's recommendations to become effective, they must be enacted into law. Finally, Arizona submits its commission's recommendations to the voters for approval.

According to The Book of the States 1982-1983, new legislative salaries in many states do not become effective immediately. Twelve states postpone the salary changes enacted by law until the next legislature; another two adopt the changes during the subsequent session. Under laws enacted in ten other states, salary changes do not become effective during current members' terms. Only ten states, including Alaska, have no restrictions on the effective date of legislative compensation adjustments enacted by law.

Table 2, taken from the Oregon Legislative Research report, summarizes major organizational aspects of the compensation commissions in the 19 states which had them as of January 1983.¹ The number of members on a commission varies between 5 and 19, although 5 and 7 are the most common. The governor appears to be the most common appointing authority (of at least some of the commission members) in the 19 states. Legislative leaders appoint some members in 12 of these states, but do not appear to have sole authority in any state. As indicated in Table 2, the scope of commission recommendations varies among the states. In addition, these salary commissions most commonly meet every two years.

According to Jan Carpenter of the National Conference of State Legislatures, Maine has a state compensation commission which is comprised of citizens who set salaries for the governor, legislators and their staff and the judiciary. According to NCSL, the commissions in Hawaii, Idaho, Maryland and Oklahoma, in addition to Maine, are citizen boards. Unfortunately, Table 2 does not indicate the representation of commission members.

¹We were unable to locate a more recent survey of legislative compensation procedures through the Council of State Governments or the National Conference of State Legislatures.

Previous Legislation

Bills introduced in the Alaska Legislature beginning with the 1979 session were reviewed and no legislation which addressed the issue of a legislative compensation commission was identified. Numerous bills were introduced, particularly during the 13th Legislature, which sought to establish various salaries or per diem rates or to limit legislators' pay to a certain number of days in session. Senate Bill 359, introduced by Senators Pettyjohn, Kelly, Halford, Sturgulewski, P. Fischer and Gilman in January 1984, addresses legislators' salaries in essentially the same manner as recently introduced HB 48.

I hope this information is useful to you. I have also attached a recent summary of legislators' compensation in the 50 states obtained from The Book of the States 1984-1985. Please contact us if we can provide further assistance.
