One problem identified was the reluctance of supervisors to fire unsatisfactory employees. This reluctance may result from lack of training in the state's standards, processes and some skill developments. But there may be other obstacles or reasons why supervisors fail to fire employees, such as concern with union procedures, which training will not address. (Local 71 representatives testified that they always file a grievance when an employee is fired, but that they dismiss those grievances where their investigation indicates that the action was justified).

14. Personnel Rules. There are a number of problems with the Personnel Rules. For example, there is no specific rule on whether temporary employees may use the appeal procedures set out in the rules. The Division has analogized from the rule for probationary employees that temporary employees may not use the appeal procedures except in limited circumstances, but it would be clearer if there were a specific provision in the rules concerning the rights of temporaries.

Little or no attempt has been made to reconcile the Personnel Rules with the several bargaining unit agreements; the rules and the standard operating procedures and memoranda implementing or changing them are not cross-indexed, and there is no one source for all the standards which need be applied to resolve a question: Personnel Rules are in some instances vague, leading to different applications by departments and inconsistent treatment of state employees, depending only on which department they work in;

STATUTE: AS39.25.140 sets out the procedures for amendment of the rules and AS39.25.150 sets out the scope of the rules.

REMEDY: Does the Commission wish to recommend that the Department of Administration prepare a comprehensive revision of the rules for submission to the personnel board?

Does the Commission wish to recommend that the Division of Personnel study the rules and establish personnel rules which would apply to all employees, regardless of whether or not they were members of a union? Should the state have personnel rules beyond the scope of those general rules which would complement each union contract?

Since the Personnel Rules are out-of-date, does the Commission wish to recommend that there be a periodic review of the rules? Should the Personnel Board retain jurisdiction over the rules or should this function be given to an Ethics Committee?

15. Use of employees in tasks above job specifications. Supervisors are unwilling to document the performance by their staff of duties above the job classification to which the employee is assigned. This denies to the employee credit for work done - either when being considered for promotion or for employment elsewhere - as well as for extra pay for the task in question. There are procedures available for documenting work above grade.

QUESTION: Does the Commission wish further review of this problem?

16. Flex time. The use of flex time should be encouraged as a way of responding to individual employee needs while also better meeting the public's needs for services during lunch hours and after regular state hours. PROBLEM: Experience has shown that having people work at odd times will result in unions demanding extra pay for those odd hours, increasing the cost to the state.

QUESTION: Does the Commission wish further review of this problem?

17. Job performance evaluations. At the October 3 meeting, this topic was raised. The Commission decided to leave development of it to the individual members.

1. Excellence or substandard performance
2. EEO
3. Dress codes
4. Training and job performance assessment

18. Personnel Act. As indicated in issue number 2 of the Merit System/Collective Bargaining Committee Summary, there has not been a comprehensive review of the Personnel Act since the adoption of the Public Employees Relations Act in 1972. This has led to considerable confusion about how the two systems should be integrated. Furthermore, the Personnel Act is considered by some to be poorly constructed.

REMEDY: Does the Commission wish to recommend that the Code Revision Commission be directed to recodify the Personnel Act so that it is well structured and written in plain language?

19. Criminal history check. The application form for state employment asks applicants to indicate whether they have been convicted of a felony within the past ten years. Federal law may now prohibit requiring that an applicant respond to that question. The only way to check the truth of an applicant's answer, should one be provided, is to make a personal complaint with the Department of Public Safety. They will then search their computers to learn whether there has been a conviction.

Some supervisors believe that it is important to know about an employee's criminal background when hiring for positions in which the employee would have access to funds or to supplies which might prove to be too tempting to resist.

QUESTION: Does the Commission wish to pursue this topic further?

Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order and referred to the memo on partially exempt employees prepared by Terry Cramer. She explained that partially exempt employees do not belong to collective bargaining unions because they have never petitioned for representation. Under current statutes, all employees in the Governor's Office are in the partially exempt service, unless their positions are federally funded.

The subcommittee reviewed the list of partially exempt positions in the memo and raised questions on the following:

DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE
- Revenue Hearing Examiners
- Investment Officers I-III

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH & SOCIAL SERVICES
- Staff Psychiatrist

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE
- Executive Officer of the Nursing Board
- Executive Secretary of the Real Estate Commission
- Regional Loan Manager

DEPARTMENT OF FISH & GAME
- Special Assistant

DEPARTMENT OF ENVIRONMENTAL CONSERVATION
- Administrative Officer I

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION & PUBLIC FACILITIES
- Special Assistant

Senator Ray stated that he would discuss with Governor Hammond the possible removal of some partially exempt positions from his office and the addition of policy-making supervisors to the partially exempt service. Pat Murphy pointed out that it is possible for employees to have the protection of the classified service while being excluded from collective bargaining. Employees in this special class are not subject to termination each time a new Governor is elected. Mr. Murphy added that he is sure there will be a bill introduced next session to remove Deputy and Assistant Directors from bargaining units. Senator Ray pointed out that Deputy and Assistant Directors should be in the partially exempt service because they make policy decisions. If they were placed in the classified service as career employees, they would be less sensitive to implementing the Governor's policy.

Lois Jund cited her experiences in being offered a partially exempt position and her reluctance to accept it because of the possibility of making unpopular policy decisions and the unsure tenure of the partially exempt service. She believes that Deputy and Assitant Directors should be part of the career ladders in the classified service, but should not be part of the collective bargaining process. Ms. Jund recommended that these employees be moved into the special class Mr. Kareen referred to. Ken Kareen explained that the Governor has already proposed that these positions be removed from the collective bargaining process.

Senator Ray mentioned that he had received a complaint regarding APEA representatives being employed in policy-making positions with the state. Pat Murphy commented that this has not been a problem, but John Pugh, for example, resigned as President of APEA because the Commissioner of the Department of Health and Social Services felt that the office might conflict with his job responsibilities.

Ken Kareen stated that because of unique requirements, he feels that the Governor's staff should remain in the partially exempt service. However, there is a question about why some agencies are placed in the Governor's Office. Lois Jund pointed out that the public sector often applies pressure to have certain functions placed under the Governor's Office for visibility purposes. Ken Kareen added that there are instances when there is no logical place to put agencies other than in the Office of the Governor.

Senator Ray addressed the issue of auditing the personnel system. Lois Jund commented that audits of state agencies should be a role of the Division of Personnel. Senator Ray asked whether there is an internal audit function in the Department of Administration, and Ken Kareen responded that the internal audit function was deleted from the department's budget and reestablished under the Office of the Governor. The Department of Administration does have some audit responsibilities. Senator Ray suggested that a departmental ombudsman position might be created to handle such studies. Lois Jund mentioned that the Civil Service Commission's Personnel Branch performs personnel audits in agencies, examines specific positions, training and EEO functions, and writes reports containing recommendations for improvement. Ken Kareen elaborated that the Personnel Branch is then audited by the General Services Administration, which has a similar function.

Senator Ray moved that the subcommittee recommend that audits be performed in agencies by the Division of Personnel and that the Legislative Budget and Audit Committee determine the scope of the audits and be the recipient of reports. There were no objections.

Lois Jund asked who would be responsible for auditing the Division of Personnel, and Ken Kareen suggested that the study be performed jointly by the Division of Legislative Audit and the Department of Administration. Senator Ray pointed out that current legislative audit methods are time consuming, and reviews are not performed annually. Presently, the Legislative Audit Division reviews the system and reports findings to the Legislative Budget and Audit Committee, which submits the report to the department involved. The department then considers the report and submits a reply to the Legislative Audit Division. Mr. Kareen stated that legislative audits performed on the Division of Personnel are extremely time consuming. Mr. Murphy asserted that the Division of Personnel would be capable of handling performance audits on agencies if other functions were decentralized and the Division was responsible for administering the personnel system. Senator Ray moved that the subcommittee recommend that there be annual audits of the personnel system performed either by the Division of Personnel, the Legislative Audit Division or a combination of both. Lois Jund amended the motion by deleting reference to "annual". There were no objections.

On the issue of creating more effective disciplinary measures for violation of Personnel Rules, Senator Ray observed that supervisors are apparently lacking selfdiscipline. Ms. Jund stated that the U.S. Civil Service Commission has rules on offenses and publishes a table of penalties covering each offense. Mr. Kareen commented that under the present system, violations of Alaska's Personnel Rules are considered misdemeanors. He remembered only one prosecution in the history of the state.

Senator Ray cited an example of problems arising when the desire to prosecute is lacking. Ms. Jund commented that employees found violating the Personnel Rules should have an opportunity for hearing or appeal. Pat Murphy explained that collective bargaining unit representatives are responsible for representing employees in all disciplinary actions. All employees are responsible for abiding by the Personnel Rules, and if it is proved that they are willfully violating them, management has the right to take disciplinary action. Senator Ray asked whether the subcommittee agreed that the present disciplinary system is ineffective. Pat Murphy did not concur. Ms. Jund asserted that disciplinary measures are not applied consistently, because they are left to the supervisor's discretion and because there are no established guidelines. Ken Kareen stated that there are many parties involved when violations occur who are concerned with assisting the employee. He advocates uniform application of disciplinary measures and penalties less severe than misdemeanors. Senator Ray suggested that the subcommittee recommend an amendment to the Personnel Act to provide disciplinary action commensurate with the seriousness of violations. There were no objections.

Senator Ray brought up the issue of recommending comprehensive revision of both the Personnel Act and the Personnel Rules. The subcommittee had already voted affirmatively on recodifying the State Personnel Act. Senator Ray suggested that the decision on who should conduct the recodification process be left to the legislature's discretion. Members concurred, and suggested that the Personnel Rules be redrafted following revision of the statutes.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 11:45.

CERTIFICATION, CLASSIFICATION & RECRUITMENT
Capitol Building, Juneau
October 11, 1979

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the subcommittee meeting to order and invited Ron Lehr, Director of the Division of Budget and Management, to address questions on the role of his division in the classification and reclassification proccesses. Karen Corey was also present, representing the Governor's Office.

In the classification of new positions, the Division of Budget and Management is responsible for preparing position authorization forms, known as SA 21's. The agency requests that the division authorize the creation of a new position. This form is returned to the agency, which submits it with a position description (P402) to the Division of Personnel for their action on the proposed classification. The role of Budget and Management is to verify that funds are available for the position and to insure that the position is in accordance with the operations plan of the agency.

Senator Ray commented that the subcommittee has heard testimony regarding frequent delays in the classification process that was attri--buted to Budget and Management. Mr. Lehr responded that in most instances, SA21's are prepared by the division in May or June, well before the beginning of the fiscal year. Senator Ray mentioned the subcommittee's concern over Budget and Management's veto powers. Mr. Lehr explained that the Division of Budget and Management staff acts as the staff of the Governor's Budget Review Committee during the preparation of the Governor's budget, just as the Legislative Finance Division serves as staff of the Legislative Finance Committees during their review. In neither case do the staff members have decision-making powers. He added that there were some delays this year, since the legislative cut-back on the proposed budget required agencies to revise their operational plans. To insure that this was done, the division held up processing other documents for each agency, including authorizing expenditures for new positions, until the operations plan of the agency had been cleared.

Lynda McCurry commented that in the Department of Labor, the establishment of new positions doesn't present a problem. However, there have been problems in reclassifying positions, from seasonal to part-time for example. Ms. McCurry cited delays in the delete/reestablish process of up to several weeks. She was informed by Budget and Management analysts that reclassification actions were low on the division's list of priorities. She does not feel that agencies should be responsible for calling the division to expedite the process. Mr. Lehr stated that reclassification actions should not take more than a few days. The division only has to verify that funding is available and that the reclassification is in accordance with the operation plan intended in the budget.

Ms. McCurry stated that from the program manager's point of view, it is difficult to obtain answers to questions over which Budget and Management and the Division of Personnel have authority. Mr. Lehr responded that the division revised its procedures manual, in August or September, and it may help in identifying the source for answers.

Senator Ray pointed out that there are some who feel that the Division of Budget and Management consists of a group of elitists who give everyone a bad time. Apparently, some staff members act as though they have more authority than is actually the case. Mr. Lehr replied that he would have to hear specific complaints to respond to the accusation.

Senator Ray asked whether each analyst in the division is assigned to one department. Mr. Lehr explained that each analyst works on a budget category, and there is one category for each department, with the exception of Natural Resources. He added that the division's task is quite simple, and it is easy to complete authorization forms, which are not very complex.

Senator Ray noted that personnel officers and agencies do not care to call the division whenever they have difficulties, because this often leads to being labeled as a trouble-maker. Mr. Lehr stated that the division has a control function responsible for excercising the Governor's authority. Some friction is inherent, given that role. Lynda McCurry observed that one on the problems appears to be a lack of communication between the division and the user agencies.

There are only certain instances when the division has to get involved in the classification process, such as in the delete/reestablish actions and when reclassifications require additional money. Doryce Eggleston stated that there are no clear operating procedures outlined for personnel officers, thus there is confusion as to the role of the division. Senator Ray suggested that the first step in the process, submitting the forms to the Division of Personnel, could be eliminated. Thus, P402's and SA21's could be sent directly to the Division of Budget and Management for authorization. Mr. Lehr stated that the Division of Personnel serves as a screening function, and his division would be overrun with requests if that step were eliminated.

Senator Ray recommended that the division write a handbook outlining procedures for all entities coming in contact with the division.

Mr. Lehr stated that the division has been writing a procedures manual for internal use, but it is a time consuming task and not a high priority. Senator Ray suggested that a short-form manual be prepared in the meantime in collaboration with the Division of Personnel and some of the agencies experiencing difficulties. There were no more questions for Mr. Lehr. Senator Ray expressed the commission's thanks for his participation in the meeting and offered congratulations on his recent promotion to the position of Director. Mr. Lehr and Ms. Corey left.

Lois Jund suggested that agencies could expedite the process by preparing position descriptions prior to receipt of SA21's. Ms. McCurry noted that APEA representatives have referred to problems in the process of upgrading classifications. Ken Kareen explained that their problems are results of grievances over position reclassifications. When the Division of Budget and Management receives requests for upgrading, they have to verify that funds are available and in accordance with legislative intent. Often, funds have not been appropriated for the elevated classifications, and the Division must delay authorization until funds have been approved.

Senator Ray addressed subcommittee members, stating his hopes that the commission can remain objective on issues that members are personally involved with. He informed the subcommittee that he had made a report to the Legislative Council on the commission's activities and their lack of action on the merit system/collective bargaining issues. The council indicated that the collective bargaining issue is a priority for commission consideration. Senator Ray assured the council that all information researched and all public testimony heard on the topic will be placed in the final report to the legislature. He invited members to prepare their own reports on any of the issues discussed during meetings. Senator Ray asserted that the commission is a legislative entity that is responsible for disseminating whatever information it acquires to the legislature.

On the issue of multiple applications, Ms. Jund commented that in the civil service system, an application may be submitted for all levels in a job series. Sandra Withers stated that the Division of Personnel operates with a limited number of employees and is designed to utilize their time and effort in the most productive manner. Senator Ray asked whether it would be possible to save time by accepting one application for a series, and then if an individual passed a test for the highest level, he or she could be scored for the lower levels accordingly. Ken Kareen explained that the Division of Personnel is working on computer backup that would allow for this in some instances. However, different values are assigned to experience and skills at different levels. Final scores are based on a combination of experience and knowledge of applicants, and individuals with both should be the best candidates for the job.

Senator Ray commented that individuals from academic backgrounds fare better on tests than those who have had more actual on-the-job experience. Mr. Kareen pointed out that the Division of Personnel is trying to develop a detailed questionnaire to evaluate experience in a more efficient manner. Evaluating experience described on applications and resumes can be difficult. Some applicants write autobiographies, and some scribble only a few lines. The recruitment responsibilities of the Division of Personnel are becoming more complicated because of state and federal regulations. The division cannot, at this time, interview an applicant for a position unless there is statistical documentation that the interview is nondiscriminatory.

Senator Ray moved that the subcommittee recommend that the Division of Personnel be encouraged to get away from the necessity of multiple applications, provided that the process doesn't become more labor intensive than it is presently. There were no objections.

The issue of test validation was addressed, and Ken Kareen asserted that the commission should not address the issue because of the complexity of state and federal regulations. Presently, a competent professional is required to study jobs and then construct validated tests. There are many alternatives, such as multiple choice, essay and combination tests. The Division must show statistically that people performing well on tests will perform best on the job. Lois Jund asked if there is an agency that validates tests nation wide. Mr. Kareen explained that there are a number of consulting firms that do, but there is no one agency involved. The leader in this area is the U.S. Civil Service Commission. Ms. Jund asked whether it would be possible to obtain validated tests to be used in Alaska. Mr. Kareen replied that the test couldn't be used unless it was validated for use in Alaska. The test on which the Civil Service Commission (Office of Personnel Management) spent the most money is currently being challenged in the courts because there is some question of its validity. The state is required by federal regulation to validate tests, but only some have been at this time. Ms. Jund asked if additional funding is necessary to complete the task. Mr. Kareen stated that he has mixed feelings on requesting additional funds because he doesn't believe that the state will ever be able to validate all tests. The subcommittee took no action on the issue.

On the issue of the veteran's preference system, Senator Ray suggested that it be abolished. Mr. Kareen stated that the Division of Personnel receives applications from career military people who are drawing retirement benefits from the federal government, and they expect to receive preference in state employment as well. Senator Ray suggested that the subcommittee recommend that veterans be given preference when applying for positions within a three-year period following discharge from the service. He believes that the present ten-point preference system for disabled veterans should not be changed. There was general agreement on the issue.

Referring to the topic of regional registers, it was pointed out that limiting registers to applicants from one region would restrict competition. Applicants presently have the option of choosing the area in which they are willing to accept employment on application forms. Ken Kareen pointed out that certification of some registers are handled in Anchorage. However, individuals indicate on applications that they are willing to work anywhere in the state but frequently turn down interviews for openings in rural areas. The state is required to hire from among the best available applicants, and limiting applicants to just one area would conflict with equal employment opportunity policies. Mr. Kareen stated that the U.S. Civil Service Commission (Office of Personnel Management) has regional registers requiring one application for each region. This type of system would increase the influx of paperwork in the Division of Personnel drastically. Lois Jund suggested that the state might be able to give hiring preference to residents in some rural areas. Senator Ray moved that the issue be noted in the commission's report and identified as a problem. There were no objections.

Members addressed the issue of interviewing the top five interested applicants on a register. Senator Ray suggested that requiring a cursory interview could alleviate some grievances from individuals who believe that they should have such opportunities. Lois Jund stated that appointing authorities work under time constraints, and a requirement would present difficulties. The procedure for requiring interviews for those on block scored registers was discussed. On some registers using block scoring, there are as many as 70 applicants in the top group. Terry Cramer commented that an individual had presented his views to her on an interview at the University of Alaska. He had been told that the position might be filled by promotion, and he felt that the interview was a waste of time. Senator Ray moved that the subcommittee recommend that the top five interested applicants be notified of position openings and given an opportunity to request a meaningful interview. The recommendation does not address registers using block scoring. There were no objections.

Senator Ray mentioned that the commission's recommendations on filling authorized permanent positions with only permanent employees had been taken care of in the new nonpermanent hiring law. He made a presentation on the new law to the Council of State Government's meeting, and it has been printed in their publication as a model for other legislatures. The staff is preparing a memo on the changes being implemented by the state.

On the issue of training, Senator Ray stated that the staff is preparing a report designed to inform the legislature of the commission's views.

There was general agreement that the issues of promotion and equal employment opportunities are matters for Division of Equal Employment Opportunity consideration. Ken Kareen elaborated that the subcommittee is sympathetic to EEO philosophies and believes that the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity provides adequate representation of the issues.

Sentor Ray commented that on the topic of documenting tasks performed above class specifications, there are sufficient means for promotional advancement and compensation. Documentation procedures are available, which are the responsibilities of supervisors and managers. The issue is also a bargainable item. Senator Ray moved that the subcommittee recommend that this continue to be a bargainable item. Mr. Kareen added that it is management's responsibility to insure that the position description of their employees are current. There were no objections.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 11:50.

CERTIFICATION, CLASSIFICATION & RECRUITMENT SUBCOMMITTEE
Capitol Building--Juneau
October 5, 1979

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order and referred to the September 26 issues summary as an agenda for discussion. Items IIA1 (creation of a Department of Employee Relations) and IIA2 (adopting the Personnel Rules in compliance with the Administrative Procedures Act) were reviewed by members. Under language drafted into SB256, Personnel Rules would no longer be exempted from Administrative Procedure Act requirements. Under the present law, the Personnel Board has discretion as to whether a public hearing is held on proposed changes.

On the issue of a block scoring system (IIA3), Ken Kareen explained that the subcommittee's previous recommendation was viewed by the Division of Personnel as an encouragement to continue moving in that direction. He stated that currently, almost all clerical examinations are block scored. There are numerous federal requirements for compliance with examination regulations, and it is possible that further subcommittee refinements would not be in compliance. The federal government permits the use of block scoring in its own system where there is sufficient statistical information available.

Sue Greene stated that the "rule of five" is restrictive for some classes and not so for others. There are certain types of positions that require employee qualities that do not show up through testing. Ken Kareen commented that to meet this need, there are provisions in the Personnel Rules where an appointing authority has discretion to hire below the top five. When an exception is made, the burden is placed on the appointing authority to supply a reasonable explanation for such action.

Senator Ray stated that people's expectations of getting hired when within the top five are being thwarted, written examinations are ambiguous, experience is erroneously evaluated and "buzz words" are the most significant factors in evaluations. Darlene Livermore responded that final ratings are usually based 60% on experience and 40% on test scores. There are inherent difficulties in classifying people, and there is always a question of subjectivity. On another topic, it was noted that after an individual is tested and hired, the emphasis on training is dependent upon the position. If a classification is for training purposes, the examination is created to predict which individual has the greatest learning potential.

John Pugh pointed out that the Division of Personnel has improved certain classifications by consolidating them into larger classes. When his department needs a program coordinator, it requests the specific qualifications necessary. The Division of Personnel provides an eligible list of those persons on the general program coordinator list who meet the specific qualifications requested. However, this can be very time consuming for the Division of Personnel, and generalizations cannot always be made in classifications.

Senator Ray elaborated on existing classification problems, such as requests for accountants, when a position only requires an accounting clerk. Sue Greene responded that the Division of Personnel relies on information from supervisors, who are required to review each of their employees' position descriptions during the annual performance evaluations. There is a need to improve the system. Ken Kareen pointed out that a recommendation to create a stronger audit function in the Division of Personnel would make the division even less popular than it is now. Members discussed some possibilities for reviewing the classification system. Washington contracts with a consulting firm on an ongoing basis. Alaska has previously contracted with a firm to examine and make recommendations on the system. Although the firm was well respected, their recommendations were unpopular and not acted upon. Ken Kareen agreed with Sue Greene that a study performed by an outside firm would be more objective, but credibility would be better from the Division of Personnel. If a study were to be done, it would be important for the current division staff to work with the firm conducting the study because they would be responsible for maintaining the revised system.

Lynda McCurry stated that several agencies have highly developed classification review plans. However, there is a lack of resources for all departments to do so. Departments and personnel sections should be more responsible for position classifications. John Pugh suggested that register ranking could be better handled by departmental personnel, especially unique classes which some departments are responsible for now. Some classification problems can be attributed to the departmental employees who write evaluations and minimum qualifications. How much authority for independent action should personnel officers have? Personnel officers in some departments are classifying positions. In various agencies, employees are responsible for writing their own job descriptions and evaluations, which are reviewed by supervisors and then sent to personnel sections. Lynda McCurry stated that if an incumbent is familiar with the work, he or she will usually be able to write a very honest job description. In the Word Processing Center, for example, it was found that almost universally, the staff rated its work with fewer points than actually earned. John Pugh mentioned his belief that "padding" is more prevalent for positions in Juneau offices than those located in other parts of the state. Positions with a higher level of decision-making authority are better paid in the state than are those with less authority but more daily responsibilities.

Senator Ray asked the subcommittee whether personnel officers should be centralized or decentralized. Darlene Livermore replied that it would appear to be easier to have them congregated in one central location. However, good logic dictates a decentralized system to the maximum degree possible, where the personnel officers have a great amount of authority and some type of uniformity in regulation application. John Pugh commented that there are some functions that need to remain in the Division of Personnel. He recommends a centralized system to establish and maintain policies and procedures, with a strong audit function. Lynda McCurry added that the Confidential Employees Association recommends that personnel officers with classification authority be located in each department and that there be a strong audit function in the Division of Personnel.

Sue Greene said that there are two points of concern in maintaining a cohesive system of equitable application. In the long term, fragmentation can occur in a decentralized system. She recommends that personnel officers be hired and managed by departments and be delegated different levels of authority, depending upon their capabilities. Presently, each department has a personnel section, and the Division of Personnel employs individuals to service all the departments. Employees in the division distribute some activities to departments and ask for assistance in various tasks. Ms. Greene advocates moving in the direction of greater delegation of tasks to the departments at the discretion of the Division of Personnel.

Senator Ray observed that the decentralization of personnel officers appeared to be favored by members and that the biggest argument against such an action would be the veto power of the Divsion of Personnel. Classification procedures could be performed by personnel officers in agencies, but the Division of Personnel would have the final word. Ken Kareen explained that there are many variables that must be taken into consideration when delegating tasks to departments such as different management skills, personalities, general abilities and knowledge of procedures of personnel officers and their staffs. The Division of Personnel responds in proportion to the input and performance qualifications of departments.

Senator Ray commented on complaints the commission has received regarding reclassifications that originate in departments, are approved by personnel officers and then denied by the Division of Personnel. Ken Kareen responded that this problem relates to control at the commissioner's level. How much authority should they have in the process? Even if personnel officers were employed by the Division, they would still be subjected to pressure from commissioners and would have to consider priorities. Darlene Livermore recommended the delegation of functions from a centralized division, responsible for overseeing rules and regulations on how to distribute tasks. That is how the Department of Labor is working now. Ms. Livermore stated that delegation of responsibilities could work on a performance basis to the benefit of all. Those personnel offices incapable of performing could be dealt with by providing training to the staff or by whatever action became necessary.

John Pugh cited the prompt classification of new positions as being a major problem. New positions are assigned to a class in the budget enacted by the legislature and should be handled by departments so that programs can start on time. Ms. Livermore stated that the problem in classification of new positions is created by the Division of Budget and Management. In a study initiated by Senator Croft two years ago, it was found that delays are most often due to delays in receiving position descriptions or in Budget and Management's authorization process. Once a department has written a job description (P402), after the budget has been authorized by the legislature and signed by the Governor, the entire mass of paperwork must be submitted to Budget and Management so that the source of funding can be identified and documents can be coded into the budget process.

Senator Ray asked why Budget and Management is involved in the process. It was explained that they must verify the existence of funds appropriated to agencies for their classifications and that the use of funds is consistent with the legislature's intent. The staff was directed to request that a representative of the Office of Budget and Management attend the next subcommittee meeting.

On the question of reviewing all existing classifications, Senator Ray stated that he would prefer to have someone other than the Division of Personnel perform the study. It was noted that there is presently insufficient staff in the division to perform a comprehensive review. Darlene Livermore commented that she had been in contact with other states that had hired personnel consulting firms to investigate the feasibility of utilizing their services. The responses she received on some of the most respected firms were not favorable. The state or municipalities involved experienced extreme difficulties with the recommendations of the firms that were implemented.

Senator Ray suggested to the subcommittee that it recommend that the legislature fund a comprehensive review of existing classifications to identify troubled areas. Ms. McCurry stated that dealing with outside consultants had been disastrous in the past and that funds could be better spent by giving the Division of Personnel additional resources. Other options such as utilizing the Civil Service Commission (Office of Personnel Management), the Legislative Audit Division or the Division of Personnel were mentioned. Senator Ray modified his recommendation: A study should be performed by either the Division of Personnel, Legislative Audit, the Civil Service Commission, an outside consulting firm or a combination of the above. A vote was taken. Two were in favor and two opposed. The motion failed.

John Pugh moved that the subcommittee recommend that the Division of Personnel head towards broader classifications. There were no objections, and the motion passed.

On the topic of closing eligibility registers, Ken Kareen stated that the issue has gone to arbitration, and a decision has not been made. The grievance is based on the fact that once registers are closed, unionized employees are precluded from promotional openings because they cannot get on registers. John Pugh stated that open recruitment on all positions is ridiculous. The grievance arose when permanent employees were denied access to promotional lists. Mr. Pugh added that it makes sense to limit recruitment because of the insufficient amount of employees in the Division of Personnel.

Ken Kareen pointed out that the Division of Personnel is trying to schedule recruitment and staff workloads so that every job classification will be open for a minimum of 30 days per year. Senator Ray observed that applicants might be allowed to test for closed positions at any time. From the public standpoint, testing should be available at all times. Lynda McCurry pointed out that there are instances where only four positions exist in one classification, yet the Division of Personnel receives 185 applications annually. Ken Kareen stated that the state is spending funds on recruitment that is unnecessary. Last year, the Division of Personnel processed 60,000 applications from approximately 28,000 individuals. Mr. Kareen stated that the present Division of Personnel policy is to close recruitment for a maximum of 11 months when there are sufficient numbers of eligibles on registers to meet the state's needs for one year. Mr. Pugh asserted that registers should not be closed to permanent employees. Senator Ray asked why a present employee should be treated better than a citizen.

Senator Ray moved that the subcommittee recommend the continuation of open registers in a modified form. There were no objections, and the motion passed.

Members agreed to hold a meeting next week to receive testimony from Ron Lehr of Budget and Management and possibly from a representative of the Governor's Office.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 12:10.

CLASSIFICATION, CERTIFICATION & RECRUITMENT SUBCOMMITTEE
Governor's Conference Room, Juneau
April 17, 1979

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order and invited testimony from individuals present. He stated that the Commission requires information from people regarding all sides of the issues it is considering. The commission feels strongly that people should be able to speak freely without fear of repercussions from their supervisors or others. Members will weigh all information and opinions expressed in making their decisions.

TESTIMONY

Lynda McCurry presented testimony on the question of centralization/decentralization. In her estimation, it would be possible to decentralize personnel functions to some departments without additional cost to the state. Many unique job classes are presently examined and classified by personnel officers who are experienced in working with departmental job classifications.

Ms. McCurry believes that personnel officers should be employed by departments rather than by the Division of Personnel to assure access to departmental commissioners. Regarding the placement of personnel officers in departments, Ms. McCurry recommended as her personal opinion either placement in the commissioners' offices or at least as supervisors in offices of directors of administrative services one level below. It is essential for personnel officers to have a direct line of communication with the commissioners' offices in order to keep the chief executives up-to-date.

Senator Ray asked if there are instances when there is not ready access to the commissioners. Ms. McCurry responded that this is the case in some instances, and she does not believe that commissioners are fully aware of the problem.

Senator Ray questioned whether changing the statutes to require that personnel officers be administrative assistants for labor relations in order to have direct access to commissioners would eliminate this problem. Ken Kareen asked if a law stating that personnel officers shall have access to the commissioners would improve the situation. He added that there are a wide variety of commissioners and that the Personnel Rules are subject to different interpretations by them. Ms. McCurry stated that it is not uncommon for division directors to take action without the knowledge of personnel officers.

Senator Ray inquired if a change in the law would lessen the number of problems and complaints received by the Ombudsman's Office. Frank Flavin responded that if it were the specific intent of the law, commissioners would be more likely to give the personnel officer's position the responsibility needed. Pat Hunt said that the responsibilities of the positions are diminished in some instances. If positions were put into the law, they would become partially exempt because of policy role. Ms. McCurry stated that this could upset the personnel officers' departmental status if positions were placed in law as part of the commissioner's office. The change in the law might not have the desired effect.

Senator Ray commented that he could not comprehend a personnel officer not having access to the department's commissioner. Ms. McCurry recommended that centralization/decentralization should be based on the cooperation of the Division of Personnel and agencies, depending on the abilities of the individual department. Personnel officers who abuse the authority given them should be held accountable for their actions, and the delegation of authority should be removed to correct the situation if necessary. This would require a strict audit system to be developed by the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations.

Ken Kareen elaborated that in the State Personnel Act, delegation of this authority is discretionary rather than mandatory. Testimony from Wisconsin indicated that when their Department of Employment Relations withdrew delegation of authority, they also withdrew funding for departmental personnel office staff. Should the same thing be possible in Alaska?

Senator Ray pointed out that the non-permanent employee bill is moving through the legislature and that the section on punitive damages is an innovative approach to discouraging abuses of rules and regulations. He has recently been appointed to the Council of State Governments. If the Commission so wishes, he will present this approach to the Council so that other states may consider it.

Doryce Eggleston, Personnel Officer for the Department of Public Safety, presented testimony regarding her department's Personnel Office, which is in the Division of Administrative Service. The office does have access to the commissioner, deputy commissioner and division director.

The question of centralization vs. decentralization can be broken dwon into two separate issues: personnel officers and personnel functions. These two aspects may have direct impact on the general public, applicants and on the departments.

On the centralization or decentralization of personnel officers, Ms. Eggleston stated that there would be great impact on departments if personnel officers were made employees of the Division of Personnel. As indicated in the Commission's report, the goals of this move include better communication between the Division of Personnel and departments, uniformity of application of the Personnel Rules and control by the Division of Personnel. These can be achieved within the present structure. The Personnel Rules need to be clarified and redrafted in accordance with changes in the statutes to limit the many different interpretations within departments. There is no reason why regular meetings cannot be held between the Division of Personnel and the departmental personnel officers to discuss various aspects of labor relations and personnel administration such as arbitration proceedings, union contracts, negotiation results and ambiguous Personnel Rules. These meetings would insure better communication and more uniform interpretation of the Personnel Rules by the departments.

Possible problems for personnel officers moved into the Division of Personnel would include loss of credibility and trust of employees within departments and difficulties in remaining part of departmental management teams. Personnel officers would be considered outsiders, and this might lead to departmental staff circumventing them on some matters. For example, she would not have been included in the Director's staff meeting where strategy and planning were discussed with the new Commissioner if she had been an employee of the Division of Personnel. No one can successfully serve two masters. It would be possible to be caught in the middle of problems between the two. Problems could also arise in funding for the position, performance evaluations, training, approval of leave, etc. Impact upon applicants would be minimal, but user agencies would be affected by the change.

On the centralization or decentralization of personnel functions, Ms. Eggleston agrees with Ms. McCurry that functions cannot be decentralized across the board. She believes that this type of program should be optional for each department, depending on the feasibility of operating the system with present staff. There would be a significant impact on applicants and the general public as well as on the departments if functions were decentralized.

Recruitment and advertising could be performed by departments with information, assistance and review provided by the Division of Personnel. These could be made more selective, especially for regional positions. This would also be an advantage for rural areas.

Ms. Eggleston advocates the review of unique job applications by user departments. The Division of Personnel reviewed over 55,000 applications in 1978. If this responsibility was shared with departments, more time could be spent on those applications, and better judgements could be made. The departmental staff have more technical knowledge on the positions unique to their departments. The register process, placment on eligible lists and hiring would also be expedited. The Division of Personnel could provide guidance and oversight when necessary.

Classifications could be performed by departments with guidance and oversight from the Division on general job classes. The departments could work directly with the Office of Management and Budget on funding. The processes could be speeded up through departmental participation.

There should be no adverse impact on the number of staff in the Division of Personnel. Staff functions could be changed to guidance and oversight roles by the Division, and studies could be done on employee turnover, career ladders, classification, counseling, minority recruitment, etc. One of the reasons for the lengthy delays in the Division of Personnel is the time needed for examination and recruitment. The result of decentralization would be less frustration on the part of applicants, the general public and the departments. All must work together to resolve time problems.

Senator Ray suggested a hypothetical situation. What if a department decided to reclassify its Personnel Officer positions to some other classification and to ask the Division of Personnel to handle all its personnel functions for it. That would provide the department with two positions for other work and yet insure that the necessary personnel functions were performed without using departmental funds. This possibility is one reason why he favors providing for personnel officers in departments by statute.

Pat Murphy pointed out that each department should have a personnel officer. The Commission has already put together a bill on the Department of Employee Relations. Problems can develop when trying to be too specific in legislation. Each department in the bill will have a personnel officer. Not all departments are ready for decentralization. He leans towards an audit function within the Department of Employee Relations.

Pat Hunt added that he wouldn't mind seeing jobs in the statutes and that it would be important to specify the level of responsibility as well as the titles. Frank Flavin asked if the intent was for the departmental personnel officers to have the responsibility of recruiting, advertising and examining for unique positions. Would the departments be in a position to do this better than the Division of Personnel? Ms. Eggleston replied that an employee in her office could handle the paperwork faster in regard to unique job classes. Mr. Flavin rephrased his question to general terms: Is a personnel officer in a department more capable of making decisions? Ms. Eggleston responded affirmatively.

Pat Murphy stated that the Commission has received a number of complaints in the area of rating education and training where people believe they have been judged erroneously. The Division of Personnel has no time to check these areas. If unique job classes were handled through the departments, more time would be spent on these evaluations. Technical job classes cannot be handled by generalists. Mr. Murphy asked how applicants would be routed to the correct departments in a decentralized system. Ms. Eggleston replied that the Division could act as a receiving agency for applicants and direct forms to the proper agencies. Ken Kareen pointed out that this is being done now in the Department of Education.

Senator Ray pointed out that the Commission has received testimony regarding the difficulties of "fighting city hall" and the adverse results this may bring about. One concern is the "black marks" individuals receive for speaking out about problems encoutered within the state system. Frank Flavin elaborated that he does receive cases of this type, but that they are difficult to verify. Senator Ray referred to previous testimony before the Commission where one individual's score had been changed noticably by the Division of Personnel after she complained to them.

Ken Kareen countered that in the central office of the Division of Personnel, everything is documented. Those individuals responsible for rating applicants have practically no influence over selection of applicants. There is little chance that the hiring authority will know about problems in the Division. Therefore, problems in ratings will not influence final hiring decisions. Senator Ray asked if this meant that there is no communication between the Division and departments. Mr. Kareen stated that this type of communication would not be tolerated in his office.

Mr. Flavin quesitoned what role personnel officers play in the evaluation of merit violations. Ms. Eggleston responded that personnel actions, such as selection from eligible lists, are reviewed before they are returned to the Division of Personnel for placement of the person selected on the state payroll.

All material is checked before it is sent out by personnel officers. Advice may be sought from the Division of Personnel and commissioners, deputy commissioners or directors where questionable circumstances appear.

Senator Ray asked what happens if a commissioner or deputy commissioner asks a personnel officer to break the rules. Ms. Eggleston replied that there are legal implications, and steps may be taken. She gave an example of one individual who was fired because he refused to do what the director requested. Through a grievance procedure, he was reinstated. Personnel officers can and do refuse to certify anything illegally. The commissioner and deputy commissioner are each certifying officers and can sign positions authorizations (PA's) thereby taking responsibility for any impropriety if they insist on pursuing the matter over the objections of the personnel officer. Frank Flavin asked if Ms. Eggleston's personnel files have ever been audited. She replied that there is a post-audit procedure. Lynda McCurry commented that the Department of Labor has been subject to numerous federal audits. Ken Kareen stated that there are certain review procedures handled by the Division of Personnel, but there are no audits in that sense.

Wells Gabier, a state employee for over seven years and current employee of the Alaska Occupational Information Coordination Committee (AOICC) testified regarding his experiences with the committee, the Department of Health and Social Services, the Department of Labor and the state Manpower Service. He addressed the topic of his PCN and gave a brief description of his background.

In 1970, Mr. Gabier was hired out of Colorado for a position in Alaska, and his relocation expenses were paid by the state. Upon arrival, he was classified as an Employment Counselor III. One year later, he was reclassified as State Counseling Supervisor for the Department of Labor, and spent five years in that capacity. During this time, he communicated with the Division of Personnel frequently on the subject of upgrading the Counselor-level positions by one range. He worked with Lee Antrim (the Departments of Labor's representative in reviewing tests for employment interviewers) on the reclassification.

Mr. Gabier then took a voluntary demotion of one range step to go to work for the Department of Health and Social Services. One year later, he retired from state employment and moved to Mississippi for a short period of time. Upon his return to Alaska, he experienced the trials and tribulations of applying for state employment and of having his experience rated. He was subsequently placed on 18 registers, and was asked to interview with the AOICC for his present position. The following is description of events that took place after his initial interview:

March 10, 1978--The position description was first written by committee member Phyllis Woodman, Personnel Officer for the Department of Education which controls the funding of the state AOICC.

March 14, 1978--The position description was transmitted to Mike McMullen in the Classification Section of the Division of Personnel as that of a Social Research Coordinator at range 20. Both Ms. Woodman and committee members supported this classification level.

April 6, 1978--A decision was returned to the department that the classification should be at the Research Analyst III level. It appears that the Social Research Coordinator class was being eliminated, and this was considered an equitable substitute. Wishing to get started on the program, the committee decided to accept the classification given by the Division of Personnel and requested the Analyst III register. Unable to find a qualified applicant for the position on this register, the committee requested parallel registers which required approximately the same range and job functions. Mr. Gabier was within the top five on two of these and was hired for the position.

Mr. Gabier pointed out he had qualified for these registers without receiving employee credit or veteran's preference points. Prior to his appointment, he had applied for the Research Analyst II and III registers. His examination results came back as below passing. The committee had hired him for a position that the Division of Personel had deemed him to be ineligible for. Entering the position, Mr. Gabier realized that the responsibilities were not consistent with the Research Analyst III level. The committee had indicated during a meeting that they would push for a reclassification of the position at a later date.

November 20, 1978--The committee submitted a reclassification request to the Division of Personnel.

December 28, 1978--The delete/establish form was sent to Budget and Managment by the Division of Personnel.

February 9, 1979--Mr. Gabier checked with the Division of Personnel on the status of his reclassification, after having waited for a response for a number of months. The Division advised him that the request would be signed within a week by the Office of Budget and Management.

The position description and authorization came back listed as a Project Coordinator. Again, the advice of Phyllis Woodman had been ignored, although she had supplied first-hand information on the job functions. It had been stated on the request that if the position came back as anything other than a Program Coordinator, a desk audit would be requested. Ms. Woodman was advised that more detailed paperwork would have to be supplied to justify a desk audit performed by the Division of Personnel.

April 12, 1979--A request was submitted for a desk audit.

Due to the fact that the position remains classified improperly after a period of over one year, Mr. Gabier felt that the matter should be brought to the attention of the commission.

Ken Kareen spoke from the vantage point of the classifier. The personnel officer came to him seeking advice and assistance on the best way to get the job filled. In this instance, the classification of Research Analyst III was not appropriate, and alternate lists were suggested by Mr. Kareen, such as Project Coordinator.

Mr. Flavin asked for the definition of a desk audit. Mr. Gabier explained that a classification specialist actually goes to the place of employment and gets a verbal description of the job. In his experience, Mr. Gabier feels that the Division of Personnel has difficulty in interpreting anything that is not in writing. Ken Kareen responded that the demand for desk audits cannot be satisfied by the Division of Personnel, given the limited amount of staff available. There is a reluctance on the Division's part to conduct an audit unless the need is perceived. Quite often, the Division receives inadequate position descriptions.

Pat Murphy stated that the commission has heard a lot of testimony along similar lines, where employees and technical authorities have different opinions. It is very difficult to ascertain who is right and who is wrong.

Mr. Kareen pointed out that there is also a third party involved in this type of dispute: the collective bargaining union. Mr. Gabier commented that he has never felt that this is a problem for grievance procedures. It should have been handled when it was initially brought to the Division's attention. If the system were decentralized, this responsibility would be given to the personnel officers who are more qualified to make judgements.

Fred Cook, Personnel Officer with the Department of Fish and Game, testified on the question of centralization/decentralization. He believes that personnel officers should be a part of the management teams of departments. Fisheries Biologists are convinced that the Department of Administration is a regulatory agency rather than a service-oriented agency. This is consistent with the feeling of the troops in the field.

Mr. Cook feels that personnel functions should be delegated to the departments if they are willing to accept the responsibility. Personnel officers would not be able to supervise their staff members if they were centralized in the Division of Personnel. If there were instances where opinions differed, it would be difficult to argue with supervisors in the Division of Personnel.

Mr. Cook does not see any way that centralization would make the personnel system more efficient. If a person is not employed by a department, they are left out of policy-making decisions and information is then relayed down to them. The Division of Personnel should have more positions assigned to them, and he urged the Blue Ribbon Commission to make that recommendation.

One suggestion Mr. Cook presented was to have personnel officers exchange positions with staff in the Division of Personnel intermittently. This is something that has been discussed in the past and seen by many as workable. This might relieve the schism between Personnel and the departments by increasing the awareness of each others' problems.

Frank Flavin asked which functions personnel officers in departments could perform better than the Division of Personnel, assuming adequate resources exist. Mr. Cook suggested that the Department of Fish and Gaeme could rate applicants for positions in technical areas generally above range 16. In the case of biometricians, for example, a committee consisting of other specialists in that field would be better qualified to make evaluations than generalists in the Division of Personnel.

Mr. Flavin pointed out that past testimony has revealed problems on the rating of biologists: Is an adequate job being done? Mr. Cook responded that in higher-level classes, the departmental personnel officers could do a better job, assuming the department has the staff to do so.

Mildred Zenger, Personnel Officer with the Department of Natural Resources, concurred with testimony presented. She expressed the following, representing her personal opinions:

Ms. Zenger stated that the Division of Personnel could better handle rating and examinations if they were given additional funding. Her department lacks staff to handle decentralization, but is in a better position to handle certain unique job classes. Ms. Zenger does not believe that qualified judgements are made by the Division of Personnel examiners in those cases. The Department of Natural Resources specialists used to help the Division of Personnel rate applications in the more technical fields.

Over the years, personnel officers' access to the commissioner has varied. At present, access is more limited than in the past. Access and support are essential for providing back-up to personnel officers when program managers disagree with their decisions. Ms. Zenger also made it clear that though the Department of Natural Resources is under fire for many reasons, some accidental and some intentional, she is not defending those who hire illegally. She has never certified a document illegally in her 30 years of state service.

Ms. Zenger believes that some functions handled by the Division of Personnel could be delegated to the individual departments. A better means of communication between personnel officers and the Division is one solution. Removing personnel officers from departments would cause problems. It would then be difficult to convince employees in the department that personnel officers are actually working for them and trying to help the department. This might also lead to the belief that personnel officers were regulatory oriented.

Frank Flavin asked if the problems within the department were geographical in nature, due to the large number of staff in field offices. Ms. Zenger answered they are due to the influx of new employees who don't understand the system and lack education in the standards of the system rather than poor intent. Ms. McCurry concurred that cycles do run good and bad depending on who's who in the zoo. Ms. Zenger reiterated that there are many new people who do not understand what they are supposed to do. Senator Ray pointed out that this might call for some type of statutory identification.

Mr. Flavin asked Ms. Zenger if she has access to personnel files in departmental field offices as a personnel officer. Ms. Zenger answered that her travel is limited. She did not have a large staff until the past year. The central office does perform a monthly audit on departmental personnel actions.

Senator Ray commented that this is ample reason to have a trouble shooter to take care of these matters. As an example, he mentioned two Public Safety officers who are responsible for presenting informational programs in schools to juveniles.

Frank Flavin stated that in his experience, problems were more prevalent in agencies where personnel officers do not have high status. There are significantly fewer personnel problems in those departments with strong personnel officers. Pat Murphy agreed that certain departments have more problems than others. The departments of Health and Social Services, Transportation and the Division of Corrections have strong commissioners or directors who typically insist on independence, which can lead to union grievances. APEA has been able to resolve problems before they develop into major crises by negotiating with personnel officers with stronger positions in their departments. Another aspect of the problem is that in departments with high turnover rates, the management staff is less well informed about the requirements of union contracts and the Personnel Rules.

Senator Ray pointed out that the reorganization of the secretarial staff of the Department of Administration into a typing pool is a topic which the commission has overlooked. Pat Murphy commented that there is general agreement that the program has created a mess.

Ken Kareen responded that a previous commissioner of Administration thought that if the equipment were upgraded and typists were combined in one location, there would be more work performed at less cost to the state. Many of the people in the pool have fallen behind on the typing requirments set by the program. Mr. Kareen also asked about Don Fisher's report to the commission on the subject. Pat Murphy replied that APEA is doing investigative work on the matter and that information will be available at a later date.

Senator Ray requested a resume of the information available to date and said that he was interested in pursuing the matter personally. Experimenting with state employees is not an acceptable procedure. Pat Murphy commented that the coordinator of the typing pool program has been on contract with the state for two or three years. He believes that this should be a permanent position.

Frank Flavin requested that the staff prepare a breakdown of where personnel officers are located in each department and to whom they report. Lynda McCurry offered to supply this information to him. Senator Ray directed the staff to write to each department advising them that attempts to keep individuals from testifying at commission meetings or to punish them for speaking will not be tolerated.

Lois Wingo, Personnel Officer for the Department of Military Affairs, concurred with testimony heard. She stated that employee/personnel officer relationships are stronger when the personnel officer is in the department. Ms. Wingo acts as Training Coordinator, EEO Officer and Payroll Supervisor in addition to her functions as the department's personnel officer. She does have access to the commissioner's office and receives support from high-level management. She is not expected to circumvent the Division of Personnel in fulfilling her duties. The department was audited once, about a year ago, by the Legislative Audit Division. Leave records were checked against the files, and employee records were spot-checked.

Senator Ray asked whether Ms. Wingo had ever been in a catch-22 sitaution where her superior asked her to do something contrary to her beliefs. Ms. Wingo replied that this happens very rarely.

Frank Flavin asked if there was any conflict of interest in being an EEO Officer and a Personnel Officer. Ms. Wingo answered that some perceive a conflict between the two functions, and some don't. It depends on who is the Director of EEO. Lynda McCurry pointed out that there is a problem with adding EEO funcitons to the duties of personnel officers in departments. However, this function must be placed in a position where the person will do the job. When EEO functions were taken out of the Personnel Office of the Department of Labor and given to someone else, no progress was made on the reports required to be filed. Eventually, the EEO responsibilites returned to the personnel officer. Ms. Wingo stated that she doesn't have hiring authority, so there is not a direct conflict. She does encourage the hiring of women and minorities. Frank Flavin asked if she has "double clout" with the additional EEO responsibilities. Ms. Wingo said that this did give her additional authority.

Senator Ray asked for input from commission members on the continuation of additional meetings. He stated that they will have to be after the legislative session is over.

Ken Kareen offered his thoughts on the decentralization issue. An employee starts his employment by pledging his loyalty and credibility to a department. The supervisor giving direction may severely test the loyalty of the employee to do the job and advance his career vs. state rules and compliance with the laws. Elements of regulation and compliance should be built into Personnel. This would serve to limit the flexibility, but would avert capricious and arbitraty proceedings. At what cost should the state encourage dedication to the department? What is the cost to the state for decentralization? In some cases, 18 departments could be working on 18 different systems. There has to be some uniform application of rules to give employees constants. Employees do not know where these lines are. Mr. Kareen offered an observation: There are tremendous variations based on the personality of the personnel officers and personality of their supervisors. Senator Ray elaborated that it is a question of either having a cut and dried or a flexible system. Ken Kareen stated that an employee starts with an investment in state employment. If a new boss gives a questionable direction, that will severely test the loyalty of the employee to his or her career vs. the state rules. Some stand up to the tests, and some don't. The problem does exist.

Mr. Kareen expressed his feelings that examination and review boards do not work well, judging by his past experiences. One of the most frequent problems encountered is in rating applications. For example, his staff is instructed not to make assumptions in rating applicants. What is judged is the information provided in writing. A review board may be tempted to consider information not on the record, thereby favoring applicants they know over those they do not. This could cause problems if the decision were ever audited. There will always be errors and mistakes.

Responding to Mr. Gabier's testimony, Mr. Kareen stated that Mr. Gabier has two options open to him: to go through the union or through supervisory channels. Bob Mourant commented that as a former union negotiator, he has had problems with the Division of Personnel. There are no checks made on the ethics of the Division of Personnel staff. There is no assurance that a check will be made if there is no violation of union contract. An individual has no assurance of ethics in force.

Mr. Gabier addressed the philosophical difference between himself and Mr. Kareen. He observed that the attitude seems to be "If you don't like it, fight it". What happened to settling these matters fairly? If he followed the proper channels, he would be told in two months that his complaint is not a grievable matter. He believes that this is an example of violation of merit principles. In his opinion, the Division of Personnel thinks only in terms of dollars rather than in terms of people.

Senator Ray asked commission members if they would agree to his making a personal investigation into the word processing center problems. There was no dissent.

Senator Ray suggested another meeting in Anchorage following the end of the session. Pat Murphy commented that issues might best be dealt with in subcommittee meetings on particular problems, followed by a full commission meeting to review subcommittee suggestions. Meetings to receive public testimony are also necessary. No decision was made on a future schedule.

ALASKA LEGISLATURE SPECIAL COMMITTEE / SUBJECT FILE 8672
1360 SCOMM 51: BLUE RIBBON COMN. ON STATE PERSONNEL ACT 1978-1983

CLASSIFICATION, CERTIFICATION & RECRUITMENT SUBCOMMITTEE
February 23, 1979

MINUTES

Don Fisher chaired the meeting in the absence of Senator Ray.

Ken Spray provided information to the subcommittee on SB194, an act relating to public employment. The bill would disallow payment of differentials based on geographic location in the state or cost-of-living differences in an attempt to increase the appointment of residents in rural locations where there is relatively severe unemployment in jobs which are located in their home locations. The bill proposes amendments to the Vocational Substitution Program.

Mr. Thomas suggested that a better way to accomplish the goals of Senator Sumner's bill would be to invigorate recruitment taking place in rural areas for positions in rural areas. The state's selection processes are questionable in evaluating the skills of applicants, but they do appear to be effective in screening out native Alaskans.

Mr. Spray suggested that the Blue Ribbon Commission might wish to consider the problem and propose a committee substitute to the present bill.

CERTIFICATION OF ELIGIBLES

MOTION: Frank Flavin moved that the subcommittee recommend to the commission that a pass/fail certification system be adopted until a reliability based broad band certification system could be developed.

Subcommittee discussion followed. The fundamental idea of the merit system is to select the best qualified applicant for the position, not simply to select someone meeting minimum qualifications. Ms. McCurry said that a pass/fail system would present problems in meeting constitutional requirements for a merit system and could jeopardize federal funding. Mr. Thomas responded that the broad band certification system is acceptable to the federal government.

John Pugh asked how this system would affect the system which the commission had recommended of requiring interviews for the top five applicants.

Ken Humphreys pointed out that while the tests given by the Division of Personnel may not be wholely accurate, they do have a considerable degree of accuracy in ranking the skills of those who achieve first place on the list versus those who place last. He suggested that the subcommittee might wish to consider a system of five grades, in which all those who scored within a range on the test would receive an equal score; for example, A-B-C-D-E.

Mr. Pugh added that he has worked for five years as a supervisor, and during that time has hired approximately 150 to 200 employees. Initially, he had thought that the top five was not meaningful, but experience has demonstrated that the system does test with accuracy for the kinds of skills needed to fill the position. (Verbal skills are a necessity for the positions he recruits for.) However, some tests are irrelevant and need to be updated.

Mr. Thomas replied that this belief in the system may be misplaced. The troopers were required, two years ago, to use a rule of the whole list in order to remedy past discriminatory practices. Hiring has been done from all parts of the list, and no one has yet argued that the standards or efficiency of the services of the employees hired under this system have been lower. The commission should not be closed to the idea of change.

Mr. Murphy suggested that if the object of Mr. Flavin's motion was to increase the openinings for women and minority applicants, the the commission could consider adopting the kinds of systems of Wisconsin or Minnesota without doing away with the state's rating system.

Mr. Spray pointed out that this dilemma is one reason why his members favor a seniority system.

Ken Kareen defended the concept of the top five. It is an integral part of the merit system. There is a misapprehension among some that the top five is limited to five individuals. In fact, all of those whose score equals that of the fifth person on the list are included in the group. The majority of appointments made in state service are, in fact, made from the top five eligibles, so there is less tampering with the system than testimony may have indicated.

Mr. Kareen added that the majority of job classes do not require written testing. There are 147 state tests of which only seven or eight have been validated. Validating tests has been slow because the process is time consuming and there are only two staff members available to do the work.

The question of whether a pass/fail system would increase possible political abuses in hiring decisions was raised. Ms. McCurry warned that the system might lead to no control and utter chaos. There will always be some instances in which who you know will be instrumental in obtaining employment. Just because there are laws against such preferential hiring does not mean that violations are not going to occur.

Mr. Humphreys pointed out that while it would be much more difficult to justify not hiring within the certified group if a pass/fail system were implemented, there would be fewer controls and less opportunity to review and regulate who was selected from that group.

VOTE: A vote was taken. Four were in favor, and four opposed. The motion failed.

MOTION: Niel Thomas moved that the subcommittee recommend to the commission that some alternative be adopted which would broaden the rule of the top five. There was brief discussion.

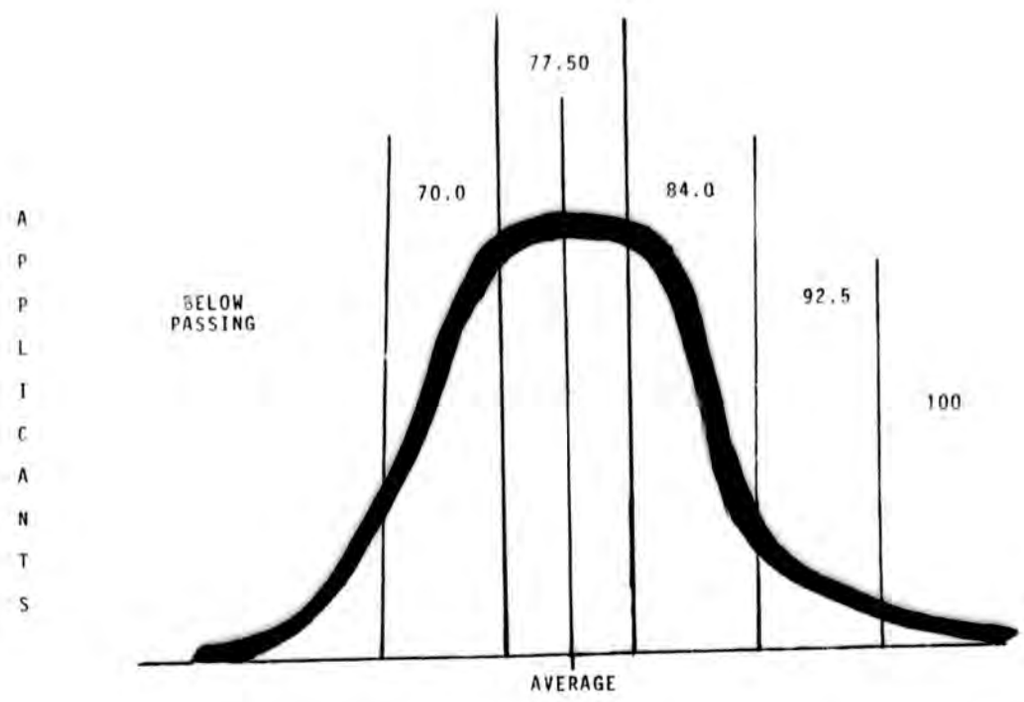
VOTE: A vote was taken. The motion passed unanimously.

Discussion followed on alternative systems. Mr. Flavin suggested that the sumbcommittee consider the structure used by the court system. Applicants are evaluated and placed in one of three categories: outstanding, acceptable or unacceptable.

In answer to Mr. Spray's question of what's wrong with hiring the first person on the list, and if that person is found unacceptable, then requiring that the second person be hired, and so on, Mr. Kareen explained that the broad classifications used for many classes prohibit that sort of system. For example, if the state wants to hire a medical examiner, it is probably looking not just for someone qualified to be a medical examiner, but someone with a specialty in a particular field and background in the same. That person best qualified might well appear below the top five on the list of those qualified to be medical examiners.

Mr. Thomas added that becaused the selection devices are inaccurate, the best person on the list might actually appear at number 16 instead of number one.

Mr. Flavin reviewed the types of evaluation systems which Ken Humphreys enumerated in his memorandum. The rule of the whole list was rejected by previous action of the subcommittee. The rule of __ number is the present system, and has been found wanting. The other two alternatives presented are zone or category scoring, and block scoring. Mr. Humphreys explained that zone scoring occurs when a list is created from the ranked applications and then divided into zones. All those within a zone are then treated as having performed equally on the evaluation device. Block scoring, on the other hand, is a system in which blocks of scores are pre-established without regard to the new list, but based on prior experience with the performance of previous applicants. The new applicants are evaluated and placed in one of the groups or blocks based on the raw score they receive.



All those within a particular block are treated thereafter as having secured identical scores.

Mr. Murphy reminded the committee that the lists which the state uses are not solely ranked in order of performance, but include preference points for prior state service, for previous service in the military, and for being a resident of the state.

Mr. Kareen explained the system which the state now uses in evaluating applicants for those classes in which it has sufficient experience in testing to be able to establish averages. Once the average is established, general score ranges are determined. All applicants who fall within that range receive the same score on the register. If there are six who fall within the top range, they are all consider number one, and their names all appear as such on the register. The next name on the register would be number 7, and all of those who appeared within the second range of scores would appear as number 7. This system can be represented here graphically.

DIVISION OF PERSONNEL

Method of Assigning Scores for Certification

The bell-shaped curve represents the number of applicants who achieve a particular score on their evaluation of experience, training and any written test given. The numbers above the line represent, in the example, the converted scores given to all applicants whose score falls within the range indicated. Those who recieve an average score, for example, receive 77.50 points. The average for that particular class may have been 80 or it may have been 60, but all who tested as average will be credited with 77.50 points.

MOTION: Frank Flavin moved that the commission recommend to the Department of Administration that they move away from a rule of five system towards a system of block scoring. He indicated that his motion intended to leave the question of the number of blocks to the discretion of the department.

VOTE: A vote was taken. The motion pass unanimously.

Mr. Fisher adjourned the meeting.

CLASSIFICATION, CERTIFICATION & RECRUITMENT SUBCOMMITTEE
Work Session Summary, February 5, 1979

Don Fisher chaired the work session in the absence of Senator Ray.

ISSUES DISCUSSED (See Issue Summary, dated January 21, 1979)

1. Centralization or decentralization of Personnel Administration.

There was general discussion on this topic and of the questions raised in the issue summary. Some of the points mentioned follow:

Collective bargaining has acted as a centralizing force in personnel matters. Where disputes arise, the grievance procedure which, in step IV, results in a decision by the Commissioner on the question, creates uniformity of application for all members of that bargaining unit.

Decentralization would further diversify the state's personnel practices. The state must be concerned with providing fair and consistent treatment for all of its employees. Decentralization increases the likelihood of abuse by departmental staff. Increased auditing would be required of the Division of Personnel. Decentralization may also require an increase in departmental personnel staff and therefore be more expensive. A decentralized system could result in a more cumbersome application process if each department maintained its own application files.

In a centralized system, there will be fewer checks on the authority of the head of that system. The Division of Personnel and Labor Relations has unclear authority to set uniform policies in some areas of personnel procedure which has been delegated to departments, leading to a diversity of practices among the departments.

Some of the problems which have been identified in the personnel system (for example, the time required to evaluate applications) result from inadequate staffing and budget within the Division of Personnel. Providing increased funding to the Division would resolve a number of these.

It is possible to decentralize the authority to perform certain tasks while leaving the policy setting and interpretation role in a centralized agency.

The question of whether to centralize or to decentralize should be resolved after the Commission makes its decisions on what kind of system it wishes to recommend. For example, if the Commission recommends that the state adopt a broad-band classification system and a Department of Employee Relations, then those decisions would lean towards a centralized system. The Commission needs to recognize in its debate that parts of the personnel system are people oriented (examination and application processes) and that parts are management oriented (classification and pay).

The Commission should analyze personnel functions and ask for each whether the present vehicle works well or whether changes are needed. If changes are indicated, is the problem a result of understaffing or do the methods need to be stream-lined or the priorities re-defined?

Departmental Personnel Officers. Whether the system is centralized or decentralized, there will still have to be departmental personnel officers, either employed by the department or by the central agency. The kinds of tasks they do and the skills they need will depend upon the decisions the Commission reaches on the question of centralization or decentralization.

At present, personnel officers can be caught in a battle between the departmental commissioners, who may want to do something in conflict with the rules, and the Director of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations. A centralized system, with personnel officers as employees of the Division, would require the commissioners to argue directly with the Director instead of placing the personnel officer in the middle.

Wherever the personnel officers are employed, they will still be subject to two sources of authority, and between those two will still be an undefined area, the limits of which will have to be resolved in a case-by-case manner.

The question of who should employ departmental personnel officers deserves a full subcommittee hearing to which each of the personnel officers of the departments should be invited.

Department of Employee Relations. There was general agreement that the subcommittee should recommend the creation of a new Department of Employee Relations for Commission consideration. Some of the points raised in discussion follow:

The Commissioner of the new department should be required by statute to have labor relations experience, either in the public or private sector. The Commissioners of Administration of the state have not understood the intricacies of labor relation prior to assuming their posts, which required that there be a time spent in gaining the necessary background.

Functions of the new department:

1. Labor Relations
2. Personnel
3. Benefits - The negotiation of benefits would be part of the labor relations functions of the new department. The running of the Public Employees Retirement System would remain the responsibility of the Department of Administration, as would the details of the Blue Cross-Blue Shield contract and the record keeping for credit under the retirement programs of the state.
4. Safety and training programs - See discussion in the Merit System/Collective Bargaining issue summary.
5. Equal Employment Opportunity. The subcommittee suggested that the new department would be a logical place to house the state's EEO office.

The Human Rights Commission has adopted a position that wherever the state EEO office is located, it should receive the prestige, support, budget and technical advisors it needs to be effective. It has been recommended that the office be located in the Office of the Governor. Given the increased status that a Department of Employee Relations would have when compared to a division within the Department of Administration, the Human Rights Commission might be receptive to the placement of the EEO office within the new department, provided that its importance and effectiveness were recognized and maintained.

The Department of Administration would be left with the following divisions: Data Processing, Finance, General Services and Supply, Pioneer's Benefits, Retirement and Benefits, and Internal Audit.

Ken Kareen doubted that there is any other state where government employment has as great an impact on the state's economy as is the case in Alaska, and where the state is as deeply involved in collective bargaining. What rank should the person in charge of these functions hold in state government?

Cost of the new department. The existing staff of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations would be transferred, as would the staff of the EEO office, should that office be placed within the new department. A commissioner's salary would have to be added to the budget.

When the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities was created, there was a zero increase fiscal note acompanying the legislation.

It is possible that ultimately, the state would save money by creating the new department, since the increased authority and access to the Governor by the Commissioner of the department would result in a more consistent application of the terms of the collective bargaining agreements and lead to fewer arbitrations.

Some federal programs in which the state participates identify a portion of the funding to be used for administrative services. The state's practice is to charge the department for support services provided by the Department of Administration but to place those portions of the federal funds into the general fund rather than to transfer them directly to the Department of Administration.

Ken Humphreys was requested to review statutes of other states (such as Hawaii and Pennsylvania, as well as Wisconsin) when drafting the statutes for the Department of Employee Relations.

2. Audits of the personnel system. There was general agreement that annual audits of the system would be useful. Discussion revolved around who should perform the audit, what the scope should be, and to whom the auditor should report.

Scope

1. Audit against the goals adopted by the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations.

2. The Blue Ribbon Commission should set goals of the audit, identifying different functions for different audits.

3. The Blue Ribbon Commission should set the scope for review of its recommendations so that there would be identification of problems or non-compliance with its proposals.

4. Audit according to the standards established in the Personnel Rules and the labor contracts.

By Whom

1. Legislative Audit - There would need to be guidelines for the audit clearly stated so that Legislative Audit would know the intent of the audit.

2. Internal audit office within the department.

3. An outside CPA firm.

Report to Whom

1. The legislature.

2. A special committee of the legislature, for example, composed of the commissioner from another department and the chairperson of the State Affairs Committee. This committee should have the authority to define the annual audit as they felt necessary and to delegate audit responsibilities accordingly. They should have an adequate budget for this purpose.

There was general concern that the audit be non-political and be performed against standards that were valid for the conditions in Alaska. The scope should be defined to make the topic manageable and useful. As the Commission adopts recommendations, it should consider defining the results it expects so that these would be the basis for future audits.

The subcommittee decided to hold the questions of the audit until the Commission has decided what it wishes to recommend on other topics. It was generally agreed that some provision should be made for audits to evaluate the effectiveness of the Commission's recommendations and the effectiveness of the personnel system as a whole.

Committee consideration of EEO matters. The subcommittee will invite Karen Cory, the Director of the state's EEO office, to join in discussions when it is ready to consider the state hiring practices in detail. Her comments will be most useful and important in that context.

Word processing centers. The subcommittee will also arrange for a later meeting with John Mitchell, Coordinator of Word Processing, on the question of the word processing centers and the selection of supervisors for those centers.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
Certification, Classification & Recruitment
Subcommittee Meeting
North Star Public Library
December 13, 1978

MINUTES

The Certification, Classification and Recruitment Subcommittee was called to order by Representative Buchholdt, in the absence of Senator Ray, Chairman.

PUBLIC TESTIMONY

Will Conwell, a Mining Engineer with the Department of Natural Resources, spoke of several state practices which he finds objectionable. The first items he brought to the committee's attention were the inequities in the hiring system and the mismanagement within individual departments rather than in the Division of Personnel. Specifically, he mentioned the lack of equal pay for equal work for similar job classifications and misuse of temporary hires. The guidelines set by the Governor are not being followed by departmental management.

Mr. Conwell gave examples of similar positions with quite broad salary range differences. Studies of these positions had been done by departmental employees, comparing them to similar positions in private industry. The findings confirmed that the jobs were similar and salary ranges should have been equal. After submitting the study to the commissioner of the department, Mr. Conwell was told that it would have to be disregarded because it should have been conducted by the Division of Personnel. The matter was taken to Ed Styer, and employee of the Division, for a desk audit. The results were never made available, nor were the recommendations on classifications. The P402's for the department had not been done since 1971.

Mr. Conwell also described an experience he had in applying for a promotion to a new position. After receiving a very high rating when tested by the Division of Personnel, he received no further indication of an opening being available. Mr. Conwell felt that he was overlooked, probably because of misues of the register, and someone else filled the position.

Other examples Mr. Conwell presented in regard to temporary employment were of up-grading or down-grading positions to appoint favored applicants, misuse of evaluation forms and the hiring of temporaries who lack minimum qualifications. He believes that there are sufficient names on the registers to hire permanent employees. The temporaries being hired stay in the positions long enough to enable them to gain minimum qualifications, and thus be hired in permanent status.

Niel Thomas stated that there is a tendency within the state to place newly created classes of positions at higher salary ranges than similar long-standing positions. This has resulted in the large number of similar classifications at different pay ranges.

Kathy Carr-Lundfelt, Assistant Director of the Human Rights Commission for the Northern Region, testified that the northern region and rural communities are neglected by the state personnel system. Employee concerns about terms of employment are constantly delayed because they have to be answered by Juneau or Anchorage. The staffing of the Personnel Department in Fairbanks is inadequate, being limited to two employees. For this reason, recruitment is insufficient, especially in the case of minorities and Alaskan natives. Program managers are not trained in recruitment, and registers do not contain people interested in working in rural areas. When the top five or ten names on the register are not available, program managers become frustrated and hire temporaries as an alternative.

One particular problem Ms. Carr-Lundfelt encountered was in organizing a Better Writing Workshop, a program given by the Division of Personnel. For a period of 18 months, she constantly arranged for classes which were then cancelled by the instructor. The delay was due to the instructor's having to be flown out of Juneau. Ms. Carr-Lundfelt suggested that the Division of Personnel should station instructional staff in Fairbanks or should contract with firms there to provide resources to state employees.

Also not to be overlooked are the range classification problems, Ms. Carr-Lundfelt asserted. "Secretaries" are made available only to supervisors at the Director level or above. Others below that level are allowed to hire only clerk typists even though the responsibilities may be equal to those of a secretary. The Division of Personnel has three secretarial classifications: Secretary I, II and III. Directors are allowed to have Secretary I's, Deputy Commissioners can hire Secretary II's and Commissioners are assigned Secretary III's. Ms. Carr-Lundfelt has had to hire temporaries in the clerical class to maintain office functions. Clerical employees are reluctant to fill permanent positions in clerk classifications when their actual duties are secretarial in nature. Ms. Carr-Lundfelt's classification and salary range were established a long while ago, and Division of Personnel is reluctant to reclassify. There appears to be more control over classifying new positions than reclassifying old.

Ms. Carr-Lundfelt pointed out the discrepancies between requirements for entry level clerical positions, where a high school degree is required, and entry level draftsman positions, where only a year of experience is required. Despite the greater educational requirement for clerical positions, draftsman positions are classified at higher salary ranges. Minimum qualifications don't accurately reflect skills necessary for the job. Artificial minimum qualifications discourage both women and minorities.

Ms. Carr-Lundfelt expressed the belief that the unions are as responsible as the Division of Personnel in taking action on these matters. Career ladders are not available to many individuals and across-the-board percentage increases in salary provide less compensation for clerical employees than for employees in different classifications at higher salary ranges. Ms. Carr-Lundfelt suggests cost-of-living increases be concentrated at lower salary ranges to compensate for this effect.

Ron Galbraith, a former Assistant Professor of English with the University of Alaska, commented on the register system. He has been seeking state employment since last summer and is on 15 registers. After being placed on the registers, he followed instructions by keeping in touch with the Personnel Department. When a program manager is filling a position, only one call is made to an applicant. If the individual is not reached at that time, no further effort is made to contact him or her.

Lynda McCurry asked whether Mr. Galbraith had ever been contacted as a result of being on a register. Mr. Galbraith answered that only once within the last few months had he been contacted, and that was a call to ask whether he wished to remain on the register.

David Giles, a Field Representative of APEA, brought to the committee's attention four distinct problems that he feels should be addressed. He sees these problems as typical within the state's recruitment, examination and hiring processes.

1) Temporary Hire. Program managers have a tendency to hire temporary employees over permanent employees and use the temporary period as an addition to the probationary period required. During their temporary employment, these individuals are encouraged to get on registers so that they may be hired and placed in the permanent position.

2) Notification of Job Openings. Individuals listed on registers are supposed to be notified of openings. Mr. Giles gave an example of one individual who was removed from a register because he had not replied to a notification of a position open in his classification. In actuality, the notification was never sent. The department claimed to have sent an RCA night but RCA indicated that no letters had been sent on the date specified.

3) Bush Positions. Within the Department of Community and Regional Affairs, individuals applying for "bush" positions are submitting applications and being interviewed, but no action is being taken in hiring. The registers are being requested repeatedly. The people interviewed from the first register were not notified that a second register had been requested. The department indicated that the position requires someone with experience in the bush, and that therefore, they were unable to hire from the first register. However, not only did one of the applicants on the first register have bush experience, but Mr. Giles also does not believe there could be any need for bush experience in these positions.

4) Applying for New Positions. One person tried to apply for a particular position for a period of two years, submitting applications to Juneau every three months. He was continually informed that they were lost. The application was finally sent by registered mail, and the individual was informed that there would be a delay in processing the application because of an overload in paperwork. Mr. Giles believes this is a typical problem experienced in the Fairbanks region.

Niel Thomas asked Mr. Giles whether he was familiar with the personnel rule of justifying hire of an applicant below the top five on the register in unique and unusual circumstances. He replied that he was not familiar with any department having used that practice in Fairbanks.

George Morrisson, a Personnel Assistant with the Department of Health and Social Services, asked that the commission not recommend tightening of rules so much that he and other supervisors cannot accomplish their duties. He has experienced many difficulties in finding qualified individuals for positions both in Fairbanks and the bush areas. Many applicants desire to relocate out of Fairbanks to Anchorage or Juneau. Many times after working an entire register, Mr. Morrisson has been unable to find an applicant qualified for a permanent position and willing to work in the bush. The only alternative left to him is to hire temporaries who may not meet minimum qualifications but who can do the job. These temporaries often cannot pass the examinations to be placed on registers, because the examinations do not test for the skills needed.

Niel Thomas inquired about the recruiting practices in the Health and Social Services Personnel Office. Mr. Morrisson indicated that he is the only personnel employee in Fairbanks. In an aside, he indicated that has salary range problems also. Because his position is classified by the number of employees dealt with, he stated that he is at a lower salary range than he should be. Mr. Thomas also asked if Mr. Morrisson was instructed to actively recruit because of the lack of applicants. Recuritment is handled by the personnel office in Juneau. Only after discovering people are not available on registers is he instructed to recruit applicants.

Representative Buchholdt questioned whether testing administered orally would be a possible solution to written tests that must be processed through Juneau. Mr. Morrisson replied that it would be difficult to administer the tests in certain areas, because there would be a problem in finding qualified people to give the tests.

Ms. Lucille Owen, a Supervisor in the Unemployment Insurance Section of the Department of Labor, testified regarding the problems in using the register in hiring permanent employees. She has a total of 21 employees in her office. Ms. Owen once sent out 49 telegrams to applicants on a register, receiving replies from only a very few. Many were already working and did not want the position, but wished to remain on the register in case a better opportunity became available. The entire process took ten days. Ms. Owen would like to see applicants removed from the register if they are holding equivalent classifactions or above. She stated that names are not being removed from the register when applicants are hired.

Niel Thomas asked when she would be permitted by Personnel to request removal of a name from a register. Ms. Owen circles "failure to respond" on the register after unsuccessful attempts to reach applicants. Lynda McCurry stated that that should be sufficient reason for a name to be removed from the register, but it is not unusual for a name to be sent out a number of times when a department requests registers for the same classification for several vacancies.

Pat Hunt explained that updating the data base within the Division of Personnel is secondary to other functions such as recruitment, certification and payroll. Eligible lists are certified for 60 days, and before one is returned, others may be sent out.

Another complaint Ms. Owen presented to the committee was that Division of Personnel no longer tests applicants for proficiency in typing and shorthand. She has had to give her own tests to applicants, and they have not met the requirements for the job classifications despite their claims on applications. Ms. Owen suggested that applicants be investigated more thoroughly by Personnel, both by experience and testing.

In hiring temporaries, Ms. Owen would like to have some means of changing the classifications to permanent once the temporary has been trained. Lynda McCurry asked how many permanent seasonal classifications were authorized within the department. Ms. Owen replied there are 18, and an additional five or six would be needed for peak workload periods if the department were to avoid hiring temporaries.

Ms. Owen also expounded on the incomplete information supplied on bulletins describing positions. They do not accurately reflect the type of work experience needed, nor the duties to be performed. She must rely on the registers when hiring, and only recruits when seeking temporaries.

Niel Thomas asked what the percentage for minority hire was within the department. Ms. Owen replied approximately 20% of her employees are minorities who have been hired from a register.

Darlene Howard asked if there is sufficient interest in the Fairbanks region to fill seasonal positions. Ms. Owen replied that because of the availability of temporaries, she assumes that seasonal positions would also be filled. The lay-off time would be in summer, which is considered a desirable time to be out of work. Ms. Howard asked if seasonal position programs were generally understood by the public. Ms. Owen answered affirmatively. Ms. Howard also asked if a cost model report on productivity based on volume versus staffing had been done. Ms. Owen replied that she can anticipate yearly lay-offs, and in the past, the attrition of temporaries handled the necessary decrease in staff.

Ms. Owen also pointed out that security checks are not made by the Division of Personnel, although she thought it a necessity when the employee would be handling cash flow. Shiela Gottehrer asked whether she meant more than verification of references. Ms. Owen answered that a total security check of an applicant's background would not be difficult. Representative Buchholdt asked for statistics on how many people were found to create problems which could have been avoided by security checks. Ms. Owen responded that there have been only a very few; only three cases where an employee was dishonest. In one instance this resulted in termination of an employee. She felt very uncomfortable with the situation and had to be very careful in handling it. Ms. Owen also stated that nonperformance had never been a problem in her office.

Bob Mourant questioned her procedures in checking backgrounds: Is the employee given a chance for rebuttal? Ms. Owen answered that she had been successful in contacting former employers either by phone or correspondence to determine and employee's past performance. Pat Hunt stated that the the Division of Personnel does not require a security check, except when the position requires that the employee be bondable.

Mr. Leo Winegar, a resident of Fairbanks for three years, presented testimony on his dissatisfaction with the state's hiring procedures. Since his arrival in the state, Mr. Winegar has put in many applications for positions he qualifies for. He is on nine or ten registers and holds a B.A. and a Master degree in Business Administration and Economics. He also has one year of study towards a Ph.D. On many of the registers, he is listed number one. Mr. Winegar has been notified only once of an opening. A number of the positions he had been registered for have been abolished over the past three years, leaving him discouraged by the system.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
CERTIFICATION, CLASSIFICATION & RECRUITMENT SUBCOMMITTEE
December 1, 1978

The meeting was called to order by Don Fisher. Public testimony was invited. A summary of the testimony follows.

PUBLIC TESTIMONY

1. Personnel Systems in Private Industry

Upon the invitation of Niel Thomas, three personnel officers employed in private Alaskan industry presented their views on personnel functions and offered suggestions to resolve state problems.

Lee Valwalt, an Employee Relations Supervisor with the Alaska Gas & Service Company, attested to her belief in a centralized personnel department. However, she emphasized the absolute necessity of an operable communication system between individual department heads and personnel officers within the personnel department. Ms. Valwalt's company is relatively small, with 100 unionized employees (technically skilled) and 45 exempt employees (management and supervisory). The union contract applies to promotions, evaluations and merit increases. The company has three categories of employment: regular (full-time), part-time (20-30 hours weekly) and casual (limited duration of six months employment). After the six month period has ended, casual help has the option of being hired on a regular employee basis (depending on vacancies)or of being laid off.

All non-exempt employees are required to become members of the union within one month of their initial hire, in accordance with contract provisions. All benefits are available to regular employees; part-time employee benefits are pro-rated. Casual help is not eligible for benefits.

Employees do receive annual increases and are subject to annual reviews. A committee of department heads evaluates the company employees in conjuction with personnel officers and decides on promotions and merit increases. Contract interpretations support a centralized control for promotions and merit reviews.

The union can request that a group of jobs/positions be reclassified. It is not clear whether a failure of the company to reclassify as requested is a grievable issue. In practice, the company consults with the union shop steward before initiating a reclassification on its own. To date, the union has been satisfied with the grade system, so the issue has not been raised.

Notice of vacant positions is posted on a bulletin board for 72 hours to give employees the opportunity to apply for promotions or transfers. If no employees are interested in the vacancy, then the personnel officer looks through the applicant files. Applications are retained for a period of two years grouped by skill level without numerical rank designations, which is similar to the register concept. If the files do not produce a qualified applicant, the company recruits from outside sources such as referrals and employment agencies.

The personnel office interviews all applicants for a position and eliminates those who fail to meet the minimum requirements. All qualifying applications are submitted to the department head, who conducts his or her own interview. The personnel officer and the department head discuss the candidates prior to the department head's decision to hire an applicant. There are no written tests for applicants--they are evaluated through a personalized interviewing system which has apparently been effective for Alaska Gas & Electric Company.

The authority to hire, fire, evaluate and promote employees is coordinated between the personnel officers and the department heads. A department cannot create, reclassify or abolish a position without personnel's consent. The decision-making process is a combined effort, where both must be aware of all activities.

Dave Eubanks, a Personnel Director with an oil and gas production and exploration company which has corporate offices in Ohio, expressed his belief that a non-structured personnel system is a major contributing factor to employee motivation. In private industry, employee productivity directly relates to the company's profit. Thus, incentives such as merit increases and promotion have an effect upon the overall budget. It is important to have ample ways and means of evaluating and providing incentives. Ms. Valwalt also mentioned that a certain percentage of her company's budget would be allocated for merit increases after discussion with department heads.

Jerry Thorn, the third witness, concurred with the other's opinions. He also added that as a Personnel Director with the Cargosteen Company (approximately 300 employees throughout Alaska), he interfaces with many established unions from time to time. His bargaining thrust is to maintain management prerogatives to retain control over operation of the business.

Mr. Thorn does not have job descriptions for every job, but does have them for management positions. The issue on classification of positions is grievable, and he checks with unions prior to classification of new positions. Standards used for determining qualifications for positions are accomplished through job analysis and qualitative evaluation. Promotions are based on proven performance and merit increases are considered upon request. The company gives a cost-of-living increase every six months and fringe benefits are taken into consideration.

2. State Employees

Mr. Albert Carson, Deputy Director of the Division of Lands, Department of Natural Resources, had four major areas of concern:

1) Class specification categories are too broad in definitions of minimum qualifications. Because of this, applicants on registers do not possess the skills necessary for positions open to them. Departments use preferential recruitment methods to avoid the process of eliminating these unsatisfactory applicants. 2) Pay levels are inconsistent for comparable positions. 3) Division of Personnel's evaluations and point systems are inaccurate in measuring experience, skills and qualifications. Professional skills are often not recognized and may be misjudged. 4) The forms used for analysis do not identify areas of expertise.

Carmen Price an employee with the Department of Transportation, testified that the performance of duties above an assigned job classification is not credited to the employee. Supervisors have the ability to document the functions being performed by an employee in order for the employee to be given credit for this experience when applying for promotions or increases. Apparently, it is not common for supervisors to verify an increase of duties and responsibilities being handled by an employee. In many cases, this is because of personality clashes and extensive amounts of time and paperwork involved.

Jo Fenety, a Leasing Officer with the Department of Transportation, had a few additional comments: Applications phrased in personnel language receive higher evaluations than applications not using those terms. She believes that the Division of Personnel presently appears to employees as a regulatory body and that it should increase its emphasis on the provision of services.

Irene Price, Right-of-Way Assistant with the Department of Transportation, agreed with prior testimony regarding the lack of interaction between departments and Division of Personnel. One problem not previously brought to the Committee's attention is the unwillingness of supervisors to fire unsatisfactory employees. There is a tendency to pass these employees from department to department, causing frustration for both the employee and the departments in addition to hindering departmental performance.

Cecilia Kleinhoff, a Social Worker with the state, offered additional testimony to the problems within Division of Personnel. She opposed the substitution of experience for accredited degrees, especially in regard to Social Workers. She feels that generalizing qualifications in that instance is objectionable and that testing is not adequate to determine professional skills.

3. Flex Time

Ms. Kleinhoff also suggested that flex time and job sharing were two methods of providing better service to the state. Darlene Howard stated that some departments are using a flex-time system and that each program manager can decide whether to allow the employees to shift their work hours. Ms. Howard also suggested that the Commission research the response to flex time and study the pros and cons of operations in other states. Senator Ray pointed out that the convenience of having offices open during lunch time and after hours would be of benefit to the public.

CLASSIFICATION, CERTIFICATION & RECRUITMENT SUBCOMMITTEE HEARING

November 15, 1978

The Subcommittee on Classification, Certification & Recruitment met at 1:30 p.m. on Wednesday, November 15, 1978. Chairman Bill Ray opened the meeting to public testimony.

CENTRALIZED PERSONNEL OFFICERS

Fred Cook, a member of the Confidential Employees Association, spoke on behalf of the Association. A poll of its membership showed that the personnel officers of the state believe that the personnel functions of the state should not all be placed in the Division of Personnel. Reasons given were that the Division of Personnel regulates rather than provides services and that personnel officers employed directly by the Division of Personnel would be seen by the departments in which they worked as outsiders, owing no loyalty to the department. They would therefore be less effective in working with the departmental planning process and meeting departmental staffing needs.

Lynda McCurry spoke of her experience as a personnel officer employed by the Division of Personnel and placed in a department from 1973 to 1975. She found that there was considerable friction between the commissioner of her department and the Director of Personnel about her role. Others in her department looked upon her as an outsider, and the expectations about her duties were unclear. The stormy relationship between her department and personnel, partly caused by personality problems, led to an extensive contract being written about her position.

Under the existing system, personnel officers should be placed directly under the head of the agency in which they are working, so that they have the base of authority to operate effectively. The relationship between Personnel and personnel officers needs to be changed.

Senator Ray asked Mr. Kareen for the Division's problems with the decentralization of personnel officers. The problem is in having a personnel officer provide adequate information to the Division for the action which needs to be taken. Although the Division tries to rely on personnel officers, sometimes they have to meet with program managers to get accurate information. If the information is inadequate or incorrect, then the personnel analyst may have to return the forms to the department in question to be redone, causing considerable delay. In response to a question of whether the Division of Personnel entered into the departmental grievance collective bargaining process, Ms. McCurry's answer was negative. They had overturned an agreement which she had negotiated, however.

TEMPORARY HIRING

Mr. Kareen explained that each department has the authority to establish job qualifications and to hire whomever they wish, provided that the employee meets the minimum qualifications for that job class, and that Alaska hire laws are complied with. Division of Personnel audits a certain number of the temporary positions after the department has acted to ensure compliance.

CLASSIFICATION

Ms. McCurry told the committee that at present the final decision on the classification of a particular position is made by the Division of Personnel. Normally, the Division can process the papers to create a new position within two days after receiving them from the department. The classification is made by a personnel analyst after reviewing the department's recommendations. She suggested that decisions about classification of unique job classes and recruitment for open positions within them become the responsibilities of the department concerned. All decisions should be made in full compliance with the merit principles of the state. General job classes should remain the responsibility of Personnel.

The commissioner of a department has the authority to abolish a particular job within the department and contract out the work, without review by the Division of Personnel. Should the commissioner decide to increase the salary range of an employee of the department, then the Division of Personnel has and should retain a reviewing and controlling role.

The Division of Personnel puts first priority on the classification of new positions, and second on reclassifications of existing jobs. Last upon their list is the updating of duties on existing jobs. All departments should review the requirements of each job every two or three years to determine whether the position should be reclassified because the duties have changed.

Frank Flavin told the committee that the Ombudsman's office has found two major problem areas: isolated instances of individual abuse which need attention, and frustration with the time consumed in going through the Division of Personnel which leads program managers to cut corners. In addition, the Division is so occupied with day to day functions, it is incapable of devoting time to its audit functions.

DELEGATION OF PERSONNEL FUNCTIONS TO DEPARTMENTS

Phyllis Woodman, Personnel Officer for the Department of Education, told the committee of the system her department uses. Staff from the department worked with the Division of Personnel to learn how to evaluate applications for the unique job classes within their department. Division of Personnel collects applications for those job classes and then sends them to the department. It takes a day or two for the department to evaluate, score and rank them. They are then returned to the Division of Personnel for inclusion on the eligibility register. New listings appear on the division's computer within five to seven days. Division of Personnel audits the department's work to ensure compliance with the merit system. Mr. Kareen pointed out that this system is available to other departments, should they choose to learn how to do it, but that Division of Personnel is responsible for insurance that the merit system principles are adhered to, and therefore that training is necessary.

Ken O'Donnell, Personnel Officer from the Department of Health & Social Services, told the committee that when Health & Social Services tried handling classification and certification for the 150 unique job classes, they found that they did not have the staff to properly handle the volume of paper and therefore they no longer use that system, except for a few laboratory and nursing assistant positions. Health & Social Services has a large number of employees and a high rate of turnover in some classes. The system used in the Department of Education would only work if the staffing in Health & Social Services was increased. The department has not had problems in making changes in its 150 unique job classes through the Division of Personnel.

Mr. O'Donnell stated that he believes that the job of personnel officer belongs within the departmental structure and that it is important for the personnel officer to have ready access to the commissioner of the department. Otherwise, too much pressure can be generated by program managers.

Roger Thayer, Personnel Officer with the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities, spoke. He indicated that Commissioner Harris of the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities favors the complete decentralization of personnel functions, with all decisions left to the individual department. Mr. Thayer, himself, favors decentralization of some personnel functions. The Department of Transportation and Public Facilities presently handles recruitment, examination and certification in more than 50 job classes which are unique to that department. Division of Personnel establishes minimum qualifications for those positions. If experience shows that the minimum qualifications either screen out all applicants by being too stringent, or fail to screen out applicants who lack the necessary skills, then the department asks the Division of Personnel to change the minimum qualifications, and the department regrades those applications in the job class. Some controls need to be kept on a department's use of redefinition of minimum qualifications to avoid abuse.

ELIGIBILITY LISTS

Ms. McCurry indicated that the major problem with the hiring process is the time it takes an applicant to get on the eligibility list. Mr. Kareen said that being put on a register can take from 10 days to 8 or 9 weeks. Evaluation of work experience and education takes longer than grading the tests given by the department, although time for notification of examinations adds to the time required for those positions tested.

The Ombudsman's office receives complaints that the eligibility lists sent to departments are irrelevant--either the list is too long to be useful or it lacks people with the qualifications to do the job.

Ms. McCurry said that the time that it takes a department to receive a list of eligibles is short, although in the case of clerical registers, the lists are usually out of date, due to failure of the people on the list to advise the Division of a change in address or status.

Mr. Thayer said that because the Division of Personnel lacks adequate staff, there is little coordination between program managers and the Division on establishing criteria to analyze the app'ications for a particular position. That problem would be resolved by delegating responsibility for hiring in unique job classifications to the individual departments. Ms. McCurry added that even if the department did not become solely responsible for rating applicants, that when there is a difference between the department and the division about the rating for a particular candidate in a unique job class, the department should make the final decision.

Mr. Spray stated that if an applicant uses the "magic words" in detailing his past experience, the Division of Personnel will rate that applicant much higher than someone with the same experience who hasn't used those key words.

The Ombudsman's office receives complaints from people who have been in the top 5 on the register for some time and have never been considered for a position.

The Human Rights Commission has found that minority applicants for state jobs have been having difficulty in actually being hired. Minority applicants are frequently found in the middle of the register and therefore, departments who are required to hire from the top five do not have an opportunity to consider them for open positions.

Mr. Flavin asked whether there was a meaningful distinction between the top five and the top ninety-five on the common job class registers. Mr. Thayer indicated that for the most part, the distinction is artificial. Mr. Flavin suggested that the Division of Personnel should select those applicants who are generally qualified, without ranking, so that more time could be spent on other division functions. Mr. Kareen pointed out that where a particular job takes unique skills, the supervisor can select someone from below the top five, provided that a written justification is filed. For example, in data processing there are a number of different machines, languages and systems. If the top five on the register do not have a background in the particular system in use, the the supervisor can look lower on the list for someone who does. Mr. Thomas pointed out that this system can also be used to address affirmative action, where a department has been found to have a problem in that area.

Mr. Thayer related that the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities does not use this selective certification system, although it had been used in the past. There had been problems, and the practice was dropped. Most of the department's positions are filled through promotions rather than through hiring new people, so the limitation on considering the top five has not been a problem. People on the promotional list are not counted when the top five are indicated.

Mr. Flavin suggested that the Division of Personnel should audit the use of promotional lists for hiring to ensure compliance with the merit principles of the state.

There was discussion about the requirement that applicants take the examinations for each level in a job class such as secretary or accountant. Mr. Kareen explained that one reason the state requires tests at each level is to provide a fair system for ranking candidates at lower level positions. Studies have shown that when switching to different levels, there is no consistent grouping of higher-level applicants. Further, lower levels in a job class may require more extensive technical knowledge, while the higher, supervisory level will require more managerial and supervisory skills. This is true, for example, with the positions of Accountant III and Accountant IV.

Many job applicants with the state expect to eventually be hired, once they have been placed on a register. They become upset when others, lower on the list, receive jobs before they do. Confusion may result from thinking of the register as a union-hall hiring list, although the Division of Personnel provides information explaining what being on the register means. In addition, a number of the higher level jobs within a class are filled by promotion, limiting those people who are considered and hired from the register.

RURAL RECRUITMENT AND HIRING

Representative Sally Smith addressed the committee from Fairbanks through the teleconferencing system. She pointed out that, at the regional level, the state personnel system functions even less quickly than in Juneau. Some personnel actions are routed through Anchorage offices before reaching Juneau for a decision. Job specifications may not reflect the skills needed to do the work in the regional office and therefore, the list of eligibles provided will be inappropriate.

For filling positions in the bush areas, the minimum qualifications become a more severe problem. Frequently, the educational requirements in the minimum qualifications preclude hiring someone who could do the work lacking the formal education specified. More emphasis should be placed on knowledge of the immediate community and its needs, with less emphasis on education in writing specifications for rural jobs. Recruitment of candidates for particular jobs could be handled on a decentralized basis, provided the Division of Personnel maintained an active auditing role to guard against favoritism.

Rep. Smith also said that being removed from central departmental decision-making causes other problems. While she was working for the Department of Community and Regional Affairs, she tried to fire an unsatisfactory employee. She was required by the department to schedule an interview between the employee and the department's personnel officer. The personnel officer did not come to Fairbanks until after the employee's probationary period had ended.

ALASKA PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYEES HIRING

The APSE contract with the state affects the procedures for hiring their members. When there is a vacancy, the union is notified of the position and the skills required. They search their membership list and then send over the next person on their list who is qualified for that particular job. If the department does not hire that person, then they send over a second and so on. The union is required to abide by the Department of Labor's policy of Alaska hire and of local hire.

EFFECT OF FEDERAL REQUIREMENTS

Federal regulations governing how states must hire for programs which are funded in part by federal money limit the options which Alaska can consider without losing that source of money. Originally, Alaska used a Rule of Three when hiring for a position. That proved too restrictive, and the state tried a system in which applicants were tested and ranked without limit to the numbers provided to the department. Then the U.S. Civil Service Commission stated that such a system was not consistent with the merit system required for hiring with federal monies and therefore, the state adopted a Rule of Five, with modifications permited through selective certification for unique requirements of a particular position. The state must conform to federal regulations on hiring in any program which receives federal money for its operation. The federal regulations have recently been changed.

Don Fisher moved that the committee request an Attorney General's opinion on the definition of "merit system" and the conflicts that arise from various federal regulations. The motion was adopted without objection. An opinion will also be obtained from the Legislative Affairs Agency.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
Pouch AG
Juneau, Alaska 99811

TO: Blue Ribbon Commission Members

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer, Administrative Assistant

DATE: January 21, 1979

RE: Issues Summary, Merit System/Collective Bargaining Subcommittee

MERIT SYSTEM/COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

1. Structure of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations. It has been suggested that the Division should be divided into two separate entities, a Division of Personnel and a Division of Labor Relations. A position of Director of Labor Relations was placed in the budget by the Free Conference Committee for fiscal year 1978 at the Governor's request. The new position was never filled, and it was deleted from the budget for fiscal year 1979.

The Division of Personnel is specifically created by statute as a division of the Department of Administration. AS39.25.030. There does not appear to be direct statutory authority for the creation of the labor relations division, but the principal executive officer of each department does have the authority, with the Governor's approval, to create divisions or other organizational units within the department. AS44.16.020 and PR2 04.4. The new Division of Labor Relations could be placed within the Department of Administration or within the Governor's office.

QUESTION: Does the Commission wish to recommend the creation of a separate Division of Labor Relations? If so, where should the division be placed?

2. Relationship of collective bargaining contract terms to statutes, Personnel Rules and departmental standard operating procedures. There is confusion about how contract terms conflicting with provisions in statutes and the personnel rules are to be interpreted. The State Personnel Act was written and adopted in 1960 and has not been comprehensively revised since the enactment of the Public Employees Relations Act in 1972.

It has been suggested that the Personnel Rules should apply only to non-union employees, and that the unions and the Division of Labor Relations be required by statute to bargain on all those topics covered by the personnel rules. The proposed statute should require that a contract, to be valid, be in conformance with the constitutional requirement that merit principles govern employment of persons by the state (Article XII, Section 6) and should set out specific topics to be covered by the agreement.

QUESTIONS: 1. Does the Commission wish to recommend legislation to establish the priority of contract terms and conflicting statutes and Personnel Rules and to indicate whether unions can bargain on matters otherwise prohibited by statute? 2) Should the Personnel Rules apply to members of unions or associations covered by a collective bargaining agreement with the state or should all those matters addressed in the rules be required to be part of any collective bargaining agreement entered into by the state? 3) Does the Commission wish to recommend that the Personnel Rules be revised so that those matters which shoudl apply to all state employees, regardless of membership in a union or association, are clearly separated from those matters which apply only to non-unionized state employees?

3. Method of adopting the Personnel Rules and departmental standard operating procedures. By statute, AS39.25.140(c), the Personnel Rules are not required to be adopted in accordance with the Administrative Procedures Act because they are considered to relate to the internal management of state agencies. The statute requires that the Commissioner of Administration give notice of proposed rule changes by posting notices in public buildings throughout the state. The Personnel Board may, within 30 days, disapprove the suggested changes. If requested, the Personnel Board may hold public hearings on the amendments.

Dress codes and appearance standards adopted by departments for state employees are required to be in the form of a regulation subject to legislative review under the Administrative Procedure Act. AS39.26.015.

QUESTION. Does the Commission wish to recommend amendment of the statute to provide greater opportunity for public comment before Personnel Rules and Standard Operating Procedures are adopted?

4. Membership on the Alaska State Labor Relations Agency, the Personnel Board and the Retirement Board. Membership on these boards is presently nearly identical.

STATUTES:

The Personnel Board is composed of three members appointed by the Governor with confirmation by the legislature in joint session. The appointees must be qualified electors of the state, and there is a maximum of two members from the same political party. They serve at the Governor's pleasure and for a maximum of six years. AS39.25.060.

The Labor Relations Agency, for state employees, is the Personnel Board. For other public employees, the Department of Labor is the Labor Relations Agency. AS23.40.260(3).

The Retirement Board is composed of five members, three of whom are the members of the Personnel Board of the Department of Administration. AS39.25.030.

QUESTION: Is this over-lapping membership appropriate?

5. Scope of authority of the Labor Relations Agency and the Personnel Board. The Labor Relations Agency generally is concerned with the organization of bargaining units and the recognition of labor organizations of public employees. It hears and decides complaints alleging that an employer or a labor organization has engaged in unfair labor practices. (Unfair labor practices are generally attempts to interfere with employees rights to organize or failure by either party to bargain in good faith.) It may appoint a mediator where negotiations between a public employer and an organization have deadlocked, either on its own initiative or at the request of any party to the dispute. It may adopt regulations in accordance with the Administrative Procedures Act. It may seek to enjoin strikes of employees whose right to strike is prohibited or limited by statute. See AS23.40.

The Personnel Board approves or disapproves the original Personnel Rules and amendments to them, acts upon recommendations for the extension of the partially exempt and classified service, determines appeals by employees in the classified service, and establishes its own rules of procedure. AS39.25.070. An employee may appeal to the Personnel Board if the employee has been dismissed, demoted or suspended for more than 30 working days in a 12-month period. The board may reinstate the employee if it finds that the action was taken for a political, racial or religious reason or in violation of Chapter 25 of the statutes or of the Personnel Rules. In all other cases, the board reports its findings and recommendations to both parties. AS39.25.170.

QUESTION: Is the division of authority between these bodies appropriate? Should the Commission recommend the creation of an Ethics Committee to consider the adoption of Personnel Rules? (See discussion, Classification, Certification & Recruitment Subcommittee Memo, Issue number 12, page 12 and 13, and Issue number 13, page 14).

6. Inclusion of non-certificated school district employees under the Public Employment Relations Act. As the law is written now, the definition of "public employee" in the Public Employment Relations Act specifically excludes noncertificated school district employees. AS23.40.060(5). The difinition of "public employer" does not exclude school districts. AS23.40.260(6).

QUESTION: Does the Commission wish to recommend that legislation be adopted including non-certificated school district employees within the scope of the Public Employment Relations Act?

7. Inequity of wages between union members and non-union state employees. In some positions there is a sizeable diffenence between wages paid for union members and those paid for positions requiring similar skills but not unionized. In committee discussion, it was pointed out that it is not the legislature's responsibility to insure absolute equity of salaries between groups of employees. The state pay plan should reflect the principle of like pay for like work. AS39.25.150(2).

QUESTION: Should the Commission consider a recommendation to the administration to strive to reflect the principle of "like pay for like work"?

8. Due process rights for temporary employees. Under the Personnel Rules, temporary employees have only a limited right to pursue grievances. The grievance procedures set out in Rule 12 are available to "any employee occupying a position in the classified service who has a grievance relating to his position, working conditions or employment over which the Executive Head of his department may lawfully exercise discretion". However, Rule 6 04.0 limits the rights of probationary employees to appeal or have a hearing for a dismissal, except where the dismissal was due to discrimination based on race, color, sex, religion, national origin, or political beliefs. The Division of Personnel has reasoned that temporary employees have less status than probationary employees, and that therefore if probationary employees' right to appeal adverse decisions are limited, then the right of temporary employees must also be limited.

The Personnel Board appeals procedure set out in AS39.25.170 has been administratively construed to apply to employees having a permanent status, rather than a probationary status, except in cases where dismissal of a probationary employee is due to racial, religious or political discrimination. Whaley v. State, 438, P.2d 718 (1968). Therefore, it is probably also unavailable to temporary employees.

Under collective bargaining agreements, the right of temporary employees to use the grievance procedures is limited as well. In the past, APEA did pursue grievances for temporary employees within their bargaining unit. However, the Division of Personnel began, about a year ago, to hold the association to the letter of the agreement. Under language that had been in the contract since at least 1973, the definition of employee did not include temporary employees.

Art. 1, Sec. 2(c) "Employee" in this Agreement means a person in the state service who is paid a salary or wage and holds probationary, permanent, or provisional status.

Grievances were defined as "any controversy or dispute arising between APEA or an employee of the bargaining unit and the Employer". Article X, Section 1. Given the language, an arbitrator upheld the Division's position, that grievance rights were not available to temporary employees, even though that language had not been challenged by the department in previous grievances on the behalf of temporaries within the unit.

The Local 71 contract provides that temporary employees have the right to grieve on contract terms and penalty pay, but that only permanent or probationary employees have a right to arbitration procedures.

NOTE: This topic may also be considered by the Subcommittee of Categories of Employees, since they have concentrated their discussion on the temporary employee category.

QUESTION: Does the Commission wish to recommend that temporary employees be afforded due process rights beyond those presently provided for in cases of discrimination based on race, color, sex, religion, national origin or political beliefs?

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION MEETING
Capitol Building, Juneau
November 15, 1979

MINUTES

Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order and introduced Steve Halfling, Chairman of the Alaska State Personnel Board and Labor Relations Agency, and member of the Retirement Board.

Mr. Halfling briefly described his background as a 40-year Alaska resident and presented a summary of his views on the functions of the three boards. He believes that the Labor Relations Agency (LRA) is one of the most misunderstood operations in the state. It is effective and very frugal. A summary of the LRA's activities in 1979 was handed out to members.

Mr. Halfling was first appointed to the Personnel Board in 1960, when the agency met only three or four times annually to handle final steps in employee grievances. Following the adoption of the Public Employment Relations Act (P.E.R.A.) in 1972, the members of the Personnel Board were given additional duties as members of the LRA. The LRA has been meeting 30 to 35 times annually ever since. The first major task of the LRA was action on petitions to place positions in bargaining units. Since then, it has been responsible for refereeing disputes between the administration and collective bargaining units, hearing unfair labor practice allegations, monitoring strike votes, and generally performing functions similar to those of the National Labor Relations Board. In 1976, the agency heard over 250 disputes and held 60 hearings to make determinations. The LRA now spends an average of two days each month on hearings, investigations and research. Six or seven LRA decisions have been challenged in court, and all of them have been upheld.

Pat Murphy commented that the three members of the boards are volunteers who are not reimbursed for their assistance and that the subcommittee had questioned whether the agency should be given the support of a full-time staff or have full-time members. Mr. Murphy added that the present members have always impressed him with their performance. Mr. Halfling explained that the boards are funded by the state, but members don't work for any department. Therefore, members and staff can remain absolutely objective. The other two members of the boards, Morgan Reed of Skagway and Ron Henry of Fairbanks, and Mr. Halfling are longtime Alaskan residents and volunteers. The agency has a part-time secretary who handles office functions and who works on a contract basis for $2,000 monthly. A consulting attorney in Anchorage, who is a former Assistant Attorney General, Mark Ertichek, is also contracted on an hourly basis. He receives approximately $24,000-30,000 annually, which is half the cost of the former agency attorney, who lived out of state.

Mr. Halfling asserted that there is insufficient work on a continuing basis to justify having full-time agency members or staff. He doesn't believe that offices should be encouraged to justify their existence by creating work. As an example of this problem, Mr. Hafling cited the Labor Relations Office in the Municipality of Anchorage as a full-time office that appears to have created a lot of labor turmoil. The only unsolved business before the LRA for this year is the dispute between the University of Alaska and community college teachers. The LRA does not look for problems, and the law is written in such a way as to allow the agency to refuse cases that are frivolous.

Lois Jund commented that the members wear three hats. Mr. Halfling elaborated that as Personnel Board members, they have practically no workload since the advent of collective bargaining. The board holds semi-annual meetings to review changes to the Personnel Rules. The Retirement Board meets only occasionally to hear appeals. Their only real workload is as members of the LRA, and it is difficult to predict what the future volume might be. If all contracts are administered properly, the volume will decrease. Mr. Murphy stated that all states with numerous public employee unions have full-time labor relations agencies. He added that these positions are extremely vulnerable to political appointments and preconceived ideas and asked what will happen when present members choose to resign. Mr. Halfling responded that the boards must remain neutral--neither pro-union nor pro-administration.

Senator Ray asked whether the LRA's attorney's fees were excessive. Mr. Halfling replied that the Commissioner of Administration has questioned the expense of the legal consultant. Mr. Halfling believes that the finished product must be able to stand up in court, and the cost of a professional with experience in labor relations is therefore justifiable. Any inexperienced employee would be incapable of handling the demands of the position, and anyone on the state's payroll would have to be loyal to her or his employer. The LRA's secretary is also on contract for this reason. The total cost of services provided by the agency last year totalled under $40,000.

Ms. Jund asked how members of the boards are presently appointed. Mr. Halfling replied that the Governor appoints members for six-year terms, although he wasn't sure what criteria are used in the selection process. The appointments are confirmed by the legislature. Ms. Jund asked what the duties of the Personnel Board include, and Mr. Halfling explained that the board did promulgate the initial Personnel Rules and acted as an appeals board in employee disputes. Senator Ray questioned whether the Personnel Board functions are obsolete. Mr. Halfling replied that the board hears only two or three appeals per year but must still act on changes to the Personnel Rules and changes in employee status from the partially exempt service to the classified service or vice versa.

Ms. Jund asked whether the Personnel Board or the Department of Administration would be responsible for a comprehensive revision of the Personnel Rules. Mr. Halfling replied that the Personnel Board only has authority to accept or reject Personnel Rule changes proposed by the Commissioner. The Board cannot write them nor modify them.

Senator Ray questioned whether the LRA has received inquiries or complaints regarding the hire of applicants from outside of Alaska. Mr. Halfling explained that in the early part of statehood, the Personnel Rules gave a five-point preference to anyone who had been an Alaskan resident for at least one year. Senator Ray commented that he has heard complaints about agencies and commissions hiring outside of the state without considering Alaskan applicants. Mr. Halfling stated that there is a Superior Court ruling that preferential treatment of state residents is in violation of the interstate commerce clause of the constitution. Senator Ray cited a written complaint he received from a long-time Alaskan who was not considered for a position with the Renewable Resources Corporation, even though he was extremely qualified. Mr. Kareen stated that the Renewable Resources Corporation is exempted by statute from the merit system hiring practices set out in the Personnel Rules. Mr. Halfling asserted that if the legislature could reenact the residential preference hiring system in Alaska, the Personnel Board would adopt it immediately if it were legal.

Mr. Halfling added that the Personnel Board must approve positions being placed in the partially exempt service, and the agency has turned down requests in the past which were unjustified. The board has also witnessed cases where partially exempt employees were dismissed without any appeal rights. He hopes that the commission can review these appointments to the exempt and partially exempt services.

Mr. Murphy asserted that preference for Alaskans might be provided for in collective bargaining contracts. Senator Ray stated that for strictly state-funded positions, the legislature might require a hiring preference towards individuals who had paid a state income tax during the previous year. Mr. Kareen commented that the argument for a preferential hiring system was turned down by the state's own Supreme Court, and federal funding did not enter into the question or the final decision. He added that he would be in favor of such a system, but there are exceptions when it is necessary to hire out-of-state applicants. He also pointed out that federal law requires that any minimum qualifications for positions be job-related. Ms. Jund stated that she would also favor the system when state applicants are better qualified. She proposed that agencies be required to justify the hire of out-of-state applicants in writing. Mr. Halfling asserted that employee turnover rates are increased when applicants are recruited from outside of the state. Mr. Kareen commented that this argument was raised in the state's unsuccessful court case.

Mr. Halfling concluded his discussion by reiterating his opinion that the LRA can maintain its neutrality by keeping its present structure. Mr. Kareen asked whether the agency would want additional staff if their workload increased. Mr. Halfling responded affirmatively, but said that he would not want the employees placed in the classified or partially exempt service. He also commented that an ideal candidate for board member would be someone who is retired, financially independent (to resist temptations) and objective.

Since the LRA formed, it has reached 55 formal decisions which were almost all unanimous. The most controversial of its decisions have gone to court and have been upheld.

Senator Ray summarized the situation of the LRA: The agency can work satisfactorily with its present contract attorney and part-time office staff as long as members are and continue to be completely neutral. He thanked Mr. Halfling for being candid in testifying before the commission and extended the commission's appreciation for his service on the boards.

The commission proceeded to review the Merit System/Collective Bargaining section of its draft report to the legislature, discussed changes, and added a section on positions in the partially exempt and exempt services which might be more appropriately placed in the classified service.

Senator Ray scheduled the next meeting for November 26 at 1:30 and adjourned the meeting.

MERIT SYSTEM/COLLECTIVE BARGAINING
Capitol Building, Juneau
October 17, 1979

MINUTES

Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, called the subcommittee meeting to order and raised questions on the topic of merit increases. Lynda McCurry explained that merit increases are provided to employees in accordance with step-increase plans. For most state employees, merit increases (steps B-F in the pay plan) constitute the only raises provided by the state. Once the top step has been reached, there are no raises except for the longevity increments provided by statute. Pat Murphy commented that raises are provided in a number of ways by collective bargaining contracts. APEA has incorporated merit increase steps into its contracts. Mr. Murphy distributed copies of another union's pay plan which has two steps (APEA has six) and a service bonus plan as an alternative to the statutory longevity increments. The two steps provided for in the other union's contract represent salary increases equivalent to APEA's six steps (A-F). However, the other union contract provides it's members with a lump-sum increase after six months of employment, and APEA's are available on an annual basis at management's discretion.

Lois Jund asserted that concerns over merit increases arise when the system is abused. She added that merit increase awards should be based on specific performance criteria. Ken Kareen elaborated that agencies have no performance-based standards established. Even if there were, each supervisor would interpret them differently. Senator Ray stated that present practices are unfair, and merit increases are being applied indiscriminately. Mr. Kareen stated that he is in favor of developing performance standards and maintaining the merit increase system, although he is skeptical of the results.

Ms. Jund commented that it is easier to evaluate employees who have lower-level functions than those in the higher echelons. There is nothing precluding supervisors from setting up performance standards, and the Division of Personnel encourages agencies to do so. Mr. Kareen observed that there will always be a certain amount of subjectivity involved in the evaluation of employees.

Senator Ray stated that the legislature is dissatisfied with the lack of uniformity in the granting of merit increases and is convinced that it is not the best way to reward employee performance. Unions can bargain about providing their members with raises. He added that the merit system is not compatable with collective bargaining on the issue of merit increases. Senator Ray asserted that if an employee's performance is exemplary, that employee should receive an annual bonus at the discretion of the employer. Bob Mourant pointed out that a state supervisor cannot grant a bonus. Ms. Jund asked whether the legislature would be in favor of merit increases if some method could be devised for granting increases for meritorious service only. Senator Ray responded that the legislature apparently does not care for the terminology and would be more receptive to a system of rewarding longevity or seniority.

Senator Ray commented that few legislators are actually familiar with collective bargaining contracts, and they don't understand why the state provides raises to employees based on both the cost of living clause in contracts and merit increse provisions of the merit system. Mr. Kareen stated that there are not very many employees who advance through the final merit increase step. There is a 60% turnover rate of employees in the first three steps. Senator Ray responded that the turnover rate is decreasing as state employment becomes more popular because of benefits provided by both the merit system and collective bargaining unions.

Ken Kareen explained that merit increase steps A through F were originally provided for in Title 39, and steps J through M were added to provide for longevity in state service. Not all employees are hired at the initial step because there are instances when it is difficult to recruit for positions. Positions beginning at advanced steps are used as inducements to recruit valuable skills from the private sector. Ms. Jund commented that merit increases are necessary for recruiting and retaining valuable employee services, as well as for rewarding exceptional performance. She recommended that performance-based standards be mandatory for granting merit increases. Mr. Kareen asserted that a multi-step pay plan is better than granting a flat rate. Senator Ray stated that he doesn't believe employees should be hired at anything other than the beginning step. Ms. Jund added that if an employee in the private sector is earning more than step A, the state must compete with private industry for professional skills.

Senator Ray pointed out that although the economy in Juneau is dependent upon state and federal job income, government employees are minorities in other parts of Alaska. Mr. Murphy responded that government employees make up about 40% of Alaska's workforce, and 60-65% of the state's economy is impacted by government expenditures.

Senator Ray repeated that the legislature believes merit increases to be incompatable with collective bargaining. Ken Kareen stated that merit increase plans are presently negotiated, and changing the Personnel Act will not affect most classified state employees. Pat Murphy added that the only employees who would be affected by legislative changes to the Personnel Act, unless collective bargaining is restricted, would be partially exempt and exempt employees. Mr. Murphy pointed out that although some believe that merit increases are automatically granted on an annual basis, they have not been funded by the legislature for the past year. Therefore, departments have been applying them inconsistently depending upon how much is left in the budget because of vacancy factors, etc. Some departments are better able to supply merit increases than others. Senator Ray suggested that the subcommittee list the alternatives in the commission's report to the legislature and that current practices be explained. The report will address: a bonus for meritorious service, collective bargaining impact, step increase plans, performance standards, etc. There was no further discusssion of the issue.

On the topic of amplifying the merit principles in the Public Employment Relations Act (P.E.R.A.), Senator Ray commented that one essential principle is the concept of basing merit on ability and performance. Mr. Kareen elaborated that the evaluation of employees and retention in state service are also essential merit principles. He pointed out that although merit increases are not specifically defined under the merit principles, almost every state provides employees with increases for meritorious service. Alaska's problems with the system are not unique to state government. Terry Cramer commented that a memo from Commissioner Hudson states that merit increases are almost universally granted to public employees and include graduated pay plans.

Senator Ray asked what principles are essential to Alaska's personnel system. Mr. Kareen replied that the five principles outlined in Terry Cramer's memo (selection and retention of employees based on ability, including examination for positions; equal treatment of those seeking employment; regular integrated salary programs based on the nature of the work to be performed; selection or retention of one's position to be secure from political influences; and tenure during the time that employees perform well) should be applied to all public employees. Senator Ray observed that equal treatment of applicants seeking state employment is especially important according to recent testimony.

Senator Ray stated that the five merit principles should be defined in the Personnel Act. Mr. Kareen explained that collective bargaining impacts merit principles by implementing alternative provisions for each unit. The state does not comply with the principle of equal pay for equal work, for example, given that each unit bargains for a different pay plan. Unless the Collective Bargaining Act is revised, statutory changes to the Personne Act will cover only partially exempt and exempt employees. Senator Ray and Mr. Murphy agreed that merit principles should be statutority defined.

Senator Ray was advised that the Categories of Employees subcommittee had discussed the issue of statutory changes to the membership of the Labor Relations Agency, Retirement and Personnel Boards. Mr. Murphy pointed out that the Personnel Board meets only occasionally, and members do not have enough time to get the job done. An executive assistant has been holding hearings for members. Senator Ray asked whether there is a need for the boards. He was informed that the Personnel Board is the only agency authorized to adopt changes to the Personnel Rules, and it consists of three voluntary members. Terry Cramer explained that the statutes provide for the same three volunteers to be members of both the Personnel Board and the Labor Relations Agency. The Retirement Board consists of five members, three of whom must be the members of the Personnel Board and the Labor Relations Agency. Mr. Kareen commented that it is difficult for the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations to provide staff support for the boards, because of their involvement in labor relation disputes.

Senator Ray suggested that statutory requirements on the membership of the Labor Relations Agency, the Personnel Board and the Retirement Board be reevaluated, and recommended that the Legislative Budget and Audit Committee review the overall functions of the Boards to consider whether they should continue. There was a consensus that the Labor Relations Agency should be provided with a staff of classified employees.

Senator Ray directed the staff to prepare additional information on the topic of adopting Personnel Rules in accordance with the Administrative Procedures Act.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 2:40.

MERIT SYSTEM/COLLECTIVE BARGAINING
AND BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION
Capitol Building, Juneau
October 11, 1979

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order and referred to Senate Bill # 256, creating a Department of Employee Relations. He suggested that the commission consider recommending the separation of labor relations and personnel functions from others in the Department of Administration as an alternative to the creation of a new department. A Deputy Commissioner would be appointed to head each division. If the structure showed an improvement, the argument for a separate department would be substantiated. The commission could recommend to the legislature that it provide funding for the separation of functions to alleviate problems evidenced in the operation of the personnel system. Senator Ray moved that the commission include the recommendation in its report to the legislature. There were no objections.

On the issue of the legislature's involvement in collective bargaining, Senator Ray stated that the legislature doesn't appear to want to be directly involved in the bargaining process at this time. However, it must meet constitutional requirements of appropriating money to fund the contracts, and legislators want some form of veto power over unreasonable contracts in the name of the public. Senator Ray asserted that there should be some provision for legislative action on negotiated contracts within a specific time frame. A deadline for legislative action has been proposed, and if contracts are not acted upon within the time allotted, unions would be able to take any steps they believe are necessary.

Greg O'Claray stated that a legislative veto would be preferable to no legislative action. He added that he does not believe the legislature should be given two chances at approving or rejecting contracts. Sandra Withers pointed out that it is not uncommon for a government body to review contracts and order renegotiations. Mr. O'Claray responded that he doesn't believe contracts should be looked at piecemeal because the legislature would then be able to procrastinate in making a decision.

Sandra Withers commented that unions would have two opportunities to strike if the legislature had the authority to order renegotiations. Presently, all state contracts contain "no strike" clauses which provide that there will be no work stoppages during the life of the contracts. Therefore, when negotiations reach an impasse, unions are precluded from petitioning the Labor Relations Agency for striking authority until the existing contracts expire. If all contracts were to expire on December 31, and negotiations reached an impasse, unions would be able to strike if mediation was unsuccessful. If negotiations resumed and an agreement was reached, it would then be submitted to the legislature. Unions would again be able to petition for a strike vote if the contract was not funded, unless the agreement had some legal force during the interim and also contained a "no strike" clause.

Senator Ray stated that agreements should be negotiated and transmitted to the legislature by a date convenient to the parties. The legislature would then have 30 days to either accept or reject the negotiated contract. If all contract expiration dates were changed to June 30, the unions would not be able to petition for a strike vote until after adequate time for renegotiations. The Department of Administration would thus only be responsible for handling negotiations, and strikes would have to be handled by the legislature. Mr. O'Claray questioned how a strike would be resolved. Senator Ray replied that either the Governor or the legislature would call a special session. Ms. Withers suggested that the commission research other state statutes that address legislative procedures for funding negotiated contracts. Senator Ray responded that public employee strikes are not uncommon, and they should be accepted as a possibility when the legislature does not approve the monetary terms.

Senator Ray asserted that the legislature is only interested in the monetary terms of the contracts. Mr. O'Claray reiterated his belief that the legislature should not be able to exercise a line-item veto over contracts. Ken Kareen commented that there are two large cost items: wages and benefits. Senator Ray stated that the legislature is only interested in the total price tag. Mr. O'Claray suggested that the commission recommend that the legislature be required to vote on negotiated contracts between the 90th and 120th day of the session. Senator Ray suggested that the legislature be required to take action by March 15 or within 30 days after receipt of contracts or before adjournment.

Ms. Withers pointed out that the expiration dates of contracts are currently considered bargainable items. Senator Ray stated that the commission should recommend that contracts coincide with the fiscal year. He added that language could be drafted to provide for multi-year contracts.

Senator Ray moved that the commission recommend that a time limit be set for legislative action on negotiated contracts. There were no objections. He added that the discussion should include alternatives to the procedure such as: negotiations being handled by the legislature, by a private negotiator hired by the legislature, or by the Department of Administration.

Mr. O'Claray stated that there should be a mechanism in the law for resolution of disputes if the legislature rejects a negotiated agreement. The method presently provided in the statutes is a strike. However, Mr. Kareen pointed out that some bargaining units are precluded from striking by statute. Lois Jund commented that if the timetable for legislative action was early enough, it could allow for renegotiation of contracts prior to the end of the session. Ms. Withers asserted that the legislature's role in collective bargaining is not unique to Alaska, and she suggested that other statutes be examined to get ideas on timetables. Mr. O'Claray stated that if the Finance Committee can give consideration to contracts in 30 days, then a negotiated agreement should be submitted by February 15. Mr. Kareen voiced concerns about the transition period on contracts, and Senator Ray responded that special provisions have to be made for implementing any new law.

On the issue of excluding policy-making supervisors from collective bargaining, Senator Ray commented that the partially exempt service appears to be another classification problem. Ken Kareen responded that some supervisors are responsible for policy making and others are required to enforce policy and collective bargaining contract terms. Mr. O'Claray mentioned that APEA representatives had testified at a House Committee meeting that they were willing to remove 90 supervisors from collective bargaining units. Senator Ray directed the staff to call the Governors Office to find out which classifications were proposed for removal from collective bargaining.

Senator Ray addressed the topic of a non-negotiable management rights clause and asked what would be included in such a clause. Terry Cramer explained that statutes in other states include hiring, promotion, tranfer, and the establishment of personnel rules as management rights. Mr. Kareen elaborated that the issue relates to problems that arose when the Department of Administration negotiated with a collective bargaining union on hiring hall practices, which do infringe upon management's ability to recruit and examine applicants. He added that merit principles must be adhered to by both parties. The fundamental question is what should and what should not be bargainable. Ms. Withers stated that the Commissioner of Administration is attempting to define what is bargainable. Currently, the classification, recruitment and examination processes are bargainanble, and a management rights clause would be a vehicle for setting out things that should remain consistent for all state employees. Ms. Withers added that the state negotiated an alternative to the statutory longevity system with one union. The only thing presently exempted from collective bargaining is retirement benefits. Changes to the Personnel Act are bargainable items.

Senator Ray recommended that the commission advise the legislature that certain items which are currently negotiable such as health benefits, classification, recruitment and examination might be exempted from collective bargaining. He instructed the staff to make clear in the draft of the commission's report that collective bargaining has created inconsistencies in employee's health insurance and medical benefits. Mr. O'Claray pointed out that each union placed emphasis on different contract components. He added that IBU is tied into Taft-Hartley Act retirement trusts, and the state would have to amortize should it decide to require ferry workers to belong to the state's retirement system. Senator Ray directed the staff to point out in the commission's draft report that unions trade in different ways and place varying degrees of importance on increasing wages or benefits. This has prompted some discussion within the commission on the possibility of adopting a management rights clause to exclude certain topics from the collective bargaining process. Further investigation and study is needed before the commission will be prepared to make any definitive recommendations.

On the issue of cost of living adjustments, Senator Ray observed that there are two ways to go about it: lump sum or percentage increases. Mr. O'Claray suggested that there is no single answer to the question. The legislature is against percentage increases, but across-the-board increases create problems with compression of salaries. Senator Ray concurred that both systems have inherent problems. He suggested that this might be a topic for review each year. Ms. Withers commented that the country's economic situation will determine the continuation of such increases. Senator Ray stated that in the public's viewpoint, a hamburger costs the same amount for the guy who runs the elevator as it does for a commissioner. He does not believe that life styles should determine the allocations of increases. Lois Jund suggested that a third alternative is possible: varying percentage increases so that lower salary levels receive larger increases. Senator Ray reminded members that cost of living adjustments are not actual salary increases. They are not tied to geographical differences or anything else.

On the issue of merit increases, Senator Ray stated his belief that they should be done away with. Ken Kareen pointed out that they are currently negotiable items. Lois Jund commented that without merit increases, employee productivity is not encouraged. Senator Ray responded that a meritorious service award could be granted by a committee to deserving employees. The panel/committee could consider recommendations from supervisors and could have discretion on the amount of awards. Ms. Jund stated that it is not fair to pay a long term employee who is extremely productive the same amount that a new employee with no experience would receive. In addition, there are some positions in specialized fields where there is no career ladder and therefore no opportunity for advancement. She recommended that performance standards be created for evaluation of meritorious service, so that merit increases would not be considered "living and breathing" awards. Senator Ray asserted that collective bargaining is not compatable with the merit system, and it is perceived as a double dip for state employees. Ken Kareen stated that he believes there should be performance evaluations, but that it would be impossible to have a uniform system of application because of the subjectivity inherent in any evaluation system. Mr. O'Claray pointed out that most labor organizations don't believe in merit increases, because it provides supervisors with a method for "playing favorites". He stated that a seniority system does not allow for favoritism. Senator Ray repeated that the legislature is seriously considering the incompatability of the merit system and collective bargaining.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 4:25.

MERIT SYSTEM/COLLECTIVE BARGAINING SUBCOMMITTEE
Capitol Building, Juneau
October 5, 1979

MINUTES

Greg O'Claray, Vice Chairman, called the meeting to order and referred to the September 26 issues summary as the topic of subcommittee discussion. The meeting was recessed briefly to prioritize the issues to be addressed (issue numbers in parenthesis reflect those in the summary). Mr. O'Claray reconvened the meeting.

1. The legislative role in collective bargaining. (IIIB1)

The only place where the legislature's involvement in collective bargaining is addressed in the statutes is in AS23.40.215 of the Personnel Employment Relations Act. Presently, the legislature takes no active role in the bargaining process. The Constitution requires that the legislature enact all appropriations, including those for collective bargaining contracts. The result is that unions must deal initially with the Administration at the negotiation tables and then with the legislature to encourage appropriation of funds. John Pugh commented that the legislature appears to want more information about contracts and a better method of communication from the administration.

In discussing alternatives, Terry Cramer stated that Wisconsin has a joint committee consisting of the leadership of both houses and parties that is consulted by state negotiating teams. Sandra Withers commented that the legislature is considering taking a more active role in negotiations through a legislative employee at the bargaining table. The legislative representative could have either a moderating or approval role, but in either case it would be impossible. If the legislature sits at the table, it should take the entire responsibility for bargaining. Otherwise, the unions would be asked to bargain with people (Department of Administration staff) who do not have authority to make any committments. Ms. Withers added that in some states, an elected body passes on both monetary and contract terms.

Greg O'Claray stated that he doesn't believe that the legislature should be involved in the process at all. Right now, it is not clear what role they play, and he does not feel that they want to bargain at the negotiating table. Sandra Withers suggested that the topic is beyond the subcommittee's purview. Mr. O'Claray disagreed, stating that the legislature is seeking information and direction on the topic from the commission. Darlene Livermore recommended that legislative involvement not be changed because 95% of collective bargaining contracts do not deal with monetary terms and could be divorced from the legislative process. John Pugh commented that this is a constitutional issue that may be resolved in the courts.

Sandra Withers stated that if it is a legislative concern, there should be a vehicle for communicating concerns. Has the commission received any directives? Ken Kareen concurred and added that this is a relationship between the legislature and the Governor. Frank Flavin suggested that the subcommittee ask some legislators how they perceive the problem if the commission is going to address this issue. Greg O'Claray tabled the issue for discussion at a future subcommittee meeting.

2. Amplification of merit principles in the Personnel Employment Relations Act. (IIIB7)

John Pugh commented that Pat Hunt, former Director of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations, had suggested placing merit principles in the statutes. Frank Flavin suggested that the subcommittee consider what part of the merit system or what merit principles are bargainable. It had been Mr. Hunt's belief that all principles are bargainable. There is a constitutional requirement for a merit system, but it may be provided for by collective bargaining contracts.

Ken Kareen stated that neither the state Constitution nor the statutes defines the principles. In practice, Alaska generally follows those of the federal government. Sandra Withers pointed out that the Personnel Act sets out the operation of merit principles. Mr. Flavin commented that this also relates to whether Alaska should adopt a management rights clause. Greg O'Claray asked whether merit principles should be spelled out in the P.E.R.A. John Pugh stated that they have been written out in the Model Personnel Administration Law.

Greg O'Claray tabled discussion of the topic for future subcommittee deliberation.

3. Membership of the Labor Relations Agency, the Personnel Board and the Retirement Board. (IIIB8 and IIIB9)

The subcommittee is on record as recommending the establishment of a full-time Labor Relations Agency. The issue was brought about due to concerns based on accessibility to the agency. The Labor Relations Agency is established by statute as a three member board and members serve on a voluntary basis, operating on limited resources. Both John Pugh and Greg O'Claray stated that they had never experienced problems with accessibility to the agency, but Darlene Livermore stated that bargaining unit changes end up being delayed for months due to the infrequency of agency meetings. The agency has never spoken before the subcommittee on problems.

Frank Flavin questioned the interrelationship of the three boards, and it was explained that membership overlaps. The three members of the Labor Relations Agency are required by statute to be the three members of the Personnel Board. Three of the five members of the Retirement Board are required to be the Personnel Board members. Ken Kareen explained that the function of the Retirement Board is to oversee the retirement system, to make decisions on investment of retirement funds and to act as an appellate board on claims, such as early retirement. The staff was asked to invite a member of the Labor Relations Agency to attend its next meeting and to research the function of the three boards. Ken Kareen mentioned that Title 39 does outline the agencies' duties.

4. Methods of adopting Personnel Rules and standard operating procedures. (IIIB10)

Sandra Withers pointed out that the Personnel Rules are exempted from the Administrative Procedures Act review. However, SB 256 as currently drafted deletes the exemption. Ken Kareen elaborated that the issue relates to concerns that the Personnel Rules do not detail procedures for implementation, and departments have been writing their own standard operating procedures. In many instances, the procedures differ and have impacted employees differently.

Mr. Kareen added that standard operating procedures are also subjects of collective bargaining. Frank Flavin commented that there is nothing in the Administrative Procedures Act that prohibits collective bargaining on the issue. The A.P.A. requires that before rules are adopted, they must be subject to public comment. Contracts are not considered rules and are therefore not subject to the A.P.A. Mr. Flavin added that those standard operating procedures which affect the public would be required to conform to the A.P.A. Those procedures which are solely concerned with internal management are excluded. Lynda McCurry asked if there is a problem in how standard operating procedures implement the Personnel Rules. Does the subcommittee want to recommend a review of the departmental standard operating procedures to determine whether there is consistency of treatment of state employees in various departments?

Greg O'Claray tabled the issue for future subcommittee consideration.

5. Exclusion of policy-making supervisors from collective bargaining. (IIIB2)

John Pugh stated that all supervisors are involved in some form of policy making, whether it be in disciplinary actions for subordinates or actual regulation formulation. However, it is possible for supervisors to be in the classified service and exempt from collective bargaining. They would not have to be removed from the classified service and placed in the partially exempt service. However, this exclusion from bargaining would have to be provided for in the P.E.R.A. John Pugh stated that APEA has already agreed to the removal of some supervisors from collective bargaining.

Greg O'Claray tabled the topic for future subcommittee discussion and adjourned the meeting at 2:45.

MERIT SYSTEM/COLLECTIVE BARGAINING
Work Session Summary
February 23, 1979

The session was chaired by Ken Humphreys in the absence of Representative Buchholdt and Greg O'Claray.

DEPARTMENT OF EMPLOYEE RELATIONS DRAFT BILL

The subcommittee received copies of the Department of Employee Relations draft bill and discussed adding provisions concerning the structure and functions of the Labor Relations Agency, the Personnel Board, and the Retirement Board. These agencies should be structured and staffed to insure insularity from pressure and independence of action. Pat Murphy pointed out that the subcommittee should focus on establishing the new department and avoid opposition where possible. Changes to those agencies can be proposed in another measure.

Pat Hunt suggested amendment to Section 10, page 4, line 21, to reflect that the P.E.R.A. limits the ability of the division to remove people from collective bargaining units. The subcommittee agreed to amend the section by adding "Except as provided in AS23.40.090" to the beginning of the sentence.

The subcommittee discussed the qualifications for the commissioner of Employee Relations (Section 1, page 1, lines 13 and 14). John Pugh moved that the qualifications for the commissioner read: "shall have experience in both personnel administration and labor relations either in the public or private sector. The commissioner shall have a total of at least five years of full-time experience in those fields." The motion was adopted unanimously.

Changes were also made to the bill to require that the director of the Division of Labor Relations have at least three years of practical working experience in the field of labor relations. Pat Hunt moved that the subcommittee recommend to the Commission that this bill be submitted to the legislature. The motion passed unanimously.

Ken Humphreys presented a draft bill providing for a bargainable merit system. Pat Murphy pointed out that what is bargainable will remain discretionary between the parties involved. He also expressed his reluctance to be responsible for personnel functions such as training, recruitment, etc. Ken Kareen moved that the subcommittee recommend to the Commission that the bill be introduced in the legislature. The motion passed unanimously.

Ken Humphreys explained that this bill, if enacted, would exempt all employees covered by collective bargaining from AS39.25. If the temporary hire draft bill was passed along with this, temporary hire rules would not apply to bargaining unit members. Bargaining agreements would therefore have to contain language addressing AS39.25 or offer alternatives. The statute would not apply to people covered by collective bargaining.

NON-CERTIFIED SCHOOL DISTRICT EMPLOYEES

Ken Spray requested the subcommittee recommend that the Commission support SB213, introduced by Senator Bennett, allowing non-certified school district employees the opportunity to bargain collectively under the P.E.R.A. Pat Hunt pointed out that the legislation addresses those employees not in the state system. It is not within the Division's nor the Commission's purview. Ken Spray moved that the subcommittee recommend that the Commission support SB213. Three (3) were in favor. Four (4) opposed. The motion failed.

MERIT SYSTEM/COLLECTIVE BARGAINING
Work Session Summary, February 5, 1979

The session was chaired by Representative Thelma Buchholdt. The Issue numbers, as follows, refer to the Summary of Issues dated January 21, 1979.

Issue 1. Structure of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations.

SUBCOMMITTEE MOTION: Pat Murphy moved that the subcommittee request the Legislative Affairs Agency to draft a bill for further subcommittee review to create a Department of Employee Relations encompassing the functions of personnel, labor relations, training, and for the purposes of this bill, equal employment opportunity and affirmative action. Ken Spray requested that the functions include safety and training. Mr. Murphy agreed.

DISCUSSION

Retirement functions. Responsibility for maintaining the retirement system should remain in the Department of Administration.

Budget. The budget for the new department should result from the transfer of the budget of the existing divisions plus appropriation of additional funds for the creation of the position of the new Commissioner.

Safety. Safety should be included in the new department because there needs to be central coordination of safety programs. The system now is that user departments are supposed to coordinate with the Department of Labor, which supplies trainers on request. The requirements of OSHA, which directs that the state provide safety training for its employees, are not being met.

Pat Hunt suggested that money for safety and training programs could be provided by the user departments, who would compensate the Division or the new department for the cost of materials used. The training which the Division of Personnel has been able to provide to date (given limited staffing and funding) has been very well received. Money allocated for training is one of the first items to be cut in a lean budget year.

CLARIFICATION OF MOTION: The question of which state agency has the authority and responsibility to negotiate with the Marine Transit unions is not resolved. The state Supreme Court has ruled that those unions are now covered by the Public Employees Relations Act, and that therefore, they negotiate with the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations. Prior to that decision, the Commissioner of Public Works held that authority.

It was generally agreed that the motion applied to those unions representing employees of the University of Alaska.

Affirmative Action/EEO. At present, the state EEO office is in the Department of Administration, having moved from the Office of the Governor. In addition to this central EEO office, each department has its own EEO officer, who is responsible for providing information to and counseling employees within that department as well as for preparing and monitoring the departmental affirmative action plan. There is a need to have trained, sensitive people who are aware of legal requirements in the departments. The departmental EEO officers hold other jobs within the departments and usually place priority on those other duties.

The central EEO office has placed a priority on providing training to supervisors and managers in state agencies, as well as reviewing the personnel practices and procedures of the state and monitoring Division of Personnel compliance, revising the affirmative actions plans, and gathering statistics on the state's work force.

Placing the central EEO office as a division of the new Department of Employee Relations would ensure that there was communication between that division and the divisions of personnel and labor relations. Much of the functions of those divisions (recruitment, examination, certification and training) is of great concern to the EEO office, and therefore having an opportunity to affect decisions in those areas as they are made is important. Making the EEO office a division would ensure that it had the status necessary to act effectively and would help emphasize the state's committment to equal opportunity.

Departmental Personnel and Training Officers. The creation of this new department does not address, at this stage, the placement of the departmental personnel officers. They could either remain departmental employees or become employees of the new department. Training officers in the departments could also Training. The state's training programs, like the safety and EEO functions, need central coordination, which could be achieved by making the new department responsible for that role. Individual departments would continue to provide their own, specialized programs, but the central office in the new department would provide information on what programs were being offered and would provide technical assistance in programs as its own staffing and expertise permitted. Having one central person in charge of that oversight would help to ensure that training programs which the state was required (by union contract, for example) to provide would take place. If the programs did not occur, then there would be one person to whom the union could turn to question why they had not.

Training is often misunderstood in Alaska. There is a feeling that employees should know all the intricacies of their jobs at the time that they are hired. But government procedures are different from those in private industry - for example, in accounting - and the unique orientation to governmental work means that there will have to be an orientation for the new employee, whether that person is just out of school or has worked for a number of years in that field in private industry.

The efficiency and productivity of state employees depends in a large part upon the intial training they receive.

Orientation of the New Department. There is a hope that the Department of Employee Relations would be people oriented, rather than fiscally oriented, as the Department of Administration is. Most of the programs within the Department of Administration are financial in nature, while those programs proposed for transfer to the new department concern people directly: What happens to a new employee on entering and while serving in state government?

Model. The Department of Employee Relations should be modeled along the lines of the Anchorage Municipal ordinance, but without creating separate divisions for the separate functions in the Division of Personnel. There should be provision for the Commissioner of the department to delegate some personnel functions to the individual departments.

VOTE ON THE SUBCOMMITTEE MOTION: A vote was taken on the motion. It carried unanimously, nine (9) members voting.

Issue 2. Relationship of collective bargaining contract terms to statutes, Personnel Rules and departmental standard operating procedures.

SUBCOMMITTEE MOTION: Pat Hunt moved that staff be directed to design language to add to Title 39 which limits application of Title 39 to those not covered by collective bargaining units and to define merit principles which must be negotiatied in all collective bargaining agreements. The draft should be brought to the subcommittee for further review.

DISCUSSION

There is confusion about what standards govern employees covered by both collective bargaining contracts and the Personnel Rules. The language suggested by the motion would clearly make each union contract the operating system for determining all conditions of work for covered employees, while ensuring that merit principles would be recognized in each agreement and complied with. The Rules would then apply only to those solely affected by them. (At the work session on February 7, Mr. Hunt indicated that there are five classified employees in the state who are not members of a union. Ken Kareen represents 20% of that group.) The Rules are therefore needed to set out the conditions of employment for those five employees, as well as for any employees added to the group in the future.

At present, to chage a Personnel Rule, the Personnel Board must consider not only the merits of the proposed change but also how that rule affects each contract. If the scope of the rule has been partially affected by any contract, then a change would have to be agreed to by the union in question.

Unions have established different systems to implement the merit principles (which are made applicable to union contracts by AS23.40.070:

> The legislature further finds that the enactment of positive legislation establishing guidelines for public employment relations is the best way to.. strengthen the merit principle where civil service is in effect...)

For example, employees hired for positions in APEA bargaining units are hired from the eligibility lists maintained by the state. Employees hired for positions within Local 71's bargaining unit are hired from eligibility list maintained by the union, except that OSHA inspectors are hired from the state's registers. The Marine Transit unions maintain their own retirement program, whereas APEA and Local 71 members participate in the program administered by the state.

There are also differing views on the policy of hiring by seniority. Local 71 members strongly support seniority hiring while members of APEA support hiring of the most qualified without direct consideration of seniority. If supervisors are responsible about disciplining and firing unsatisfactory employees, then a policy favoring seniority should ensure that fully-qualified individuals are at the top of the eligibility lists.

Wages negotiated by unions are ususally passed on to non-unionized employees by management. This policy is followed by almost all states.

CLARIFICATION OF AMENDMENT OF MOTION:

Ken Humphreys suggested two amendments: that a section be added requiring that any contract negotiated must meet federal merit principle standards, and that a savings clause be added, saying that if the contract does not comply with those standards, then the parties will renegotiate to provide for compliance.

General Policy Statement. There should be a policy statement identifying those topics which are essential to a merit system and which must be covered by all contracts. The list would include promotion, selection of the most qualified, career ladders, employee development potential, an agreed guiding principle on classification, and like pay for like work. Section 1 of the Model Public Personnel Administration Law is an example:

> The general purpose of this act is to establish a system of personnel administration that meets the social, economic and program needs of the people of the state. This system shall provide means to recruit, select, develop and maintain an effective and responsive work force, and shall include policies and procedures for employee hiring and advancement, training and career development, job classification, salary administration, retirement, fringe benefits, discipline, discharge and other related activities. All appointments and promotions in the state service shall be made without regard to sex, race, religion or political affiliation, and shall be based on merit and fitness.

Legislative Concern. The legislature is concerned about how the merit system and collective bargaining intertwine. The Commission should explain the two systems in its report as well as why it is important to retain each of them.

Exempt and Partially Exempt Employees. Janet Bradley expressed her personal concern that partially exempt employees have none of the benefits or protections of permanent employees, even though many of those placed in that category are not holding jobs appropriately considered political. The Categories of Employees Subcommittee should consider this issue.

VOTE ON SUBCOMMITTEE MOTION: The motion was adopted, eight (8) members of the subcommittee voting in favor, and one (1) opposed.

Issue 3. Method of adopting Personnel Rules and departmental standard operating procedures. (Discussion of this topic was postponed until the report of the group examining departmental standard operating procedures is prepared.)

Issue 4. Membership of the Alaska State Labor Relations Agency, the Personnel Board and the Retirement Board.

Issue 5. Scope of authority of the Labor Relations Agency and the Personnel Board.

These issues were combined for purposes of discussion. The subcommittee requested that Ken Humphreys research two bills introduced in previous sessions concerning the Labor Relations Agency. The subcommittee will discuss these issues in a later meeting.

Issue 6. Inclusion of non-certified school district employees under the Public Employment Relations Act.

A bill was introduced last session to include non-certified school district employees within the Public Employment Relations Act. It passed the House, but not the Senate.

Dwayne Carlson, the lobbyist for the AFL-CIO has indicated that passage of legislation in this area is priority number 2 of the AFL-CIO this session. Ken Humphreys will research the past bills in this area, and the subcommittee will then consider this issue.

Issue 7. Inequity of wages between union members and non-union state employees. This issue is incorrectly stated in the Issue Summary. It should read inequity of wages between members of two different unions.

The subcommittee decided to table this issue.

Issue 8. Due process rights for temporary employees.

This issue is within the scope of the Categories of Employees Subcommittee. The Merit System/Collective Bargaining Subcommittee decided to leave the topic for their consideration.

WORK SESSION SUMMARY
MERIT SYSTEM/COLLECTIVE BARGAINING SUBCOMMITTEE
Anchorage, January 26, 1979

The subcommittee discussed recommending the following to the Commission:

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. Creation of a new department composed of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations. This would ensure that the Governor would receive prompt notification on Labor Relation's activities, since there would be a Commissioner in his cabinet. The state of Wisconsin has adopted such a system. The subcommittee will consider whether to make a formal recommendation after hearing from a representative from Wisconsin at the conference on February 6.

2. Composition and duties of Labor Relations, the Personnel Board and the Retirement Board. The Labor Relations Agency has no permanent staff and relies on the Labor Relations Section to provide support. Its workload is increasing, and a need for permanent staffing has been indicated. The Personnel Board meets only two or three times a year and is not very busy.

Ken Humphreys will research bills from the last two legislative sessions on the creation of a full-time Labor Relations Agency. He will also compile examples of Labor Relations Agencies in other states and in federal government.

The subcommittee work session was chaired by Don Fisher, upon the request of Representative Buchholdt, Chairperson.

Representative Buchholdt, Chairperson, called the meeting to order. There being no response to an invitation for public testimony, the hearing was opened to committee discussion.

COMMITTEE DISCUSSION

Pat Hunt began the discussion by stating that all issues covered by the committee indicate that the question of the merit system versus collective bargaining must be addressed. He asked if it is the intention of the committee to limit the scope of bargaining available to employees. What effect would the amendment of statutes have on future union contracts? Mr. Hunt also questioned the role of the legislature in the area of union contracts: Would it be politically feasible to limit bargaining rights?

Ken Spray responded by stating that he believes the committee does not want to limit collective bargaining rights. He suggested the separation of personnel and labor relations functions. At present, personnel is more regulatory than service oriented, and labor relations is influenced by this emphasis.

Niel Thomas questioned what is negotiable under collective bargaining. Pat Hunt replied that all conditions of employment are negotiable. The only exception, in accordance with an Attorney General's opinion, is retirement plans. The leave system, salary, wages, hours, insurance and classification are all negotiable.

Niel Thomas asked if anyone could conceive of a system in which the Legislature basically funds the personnel structure that emerges from the collective bargaining process without any other particular role over what is bargained. Ken Spray responded by stating that the Public Employment Relations Act is structured so that the responsibility is left to the Executive Branch. The Legislature maintains control over funding the agreement reached.

Representative Buchholdt suggested the major question appears to be the continuation of collective bargaining in conjunction with the merit system, modification of one or both, or elimination of one.

Ken Humphreys explained that as it stands, the Alaska Collective Bargaining Act is very broad in scope. The trend in other states has been towards very broad definitions of collective bargaining acts. It is within the Legislature's authority to limit and define conditions. However, he believes this would put additional constraints upon the unions and the state government, causing additional conflicts.

Pat Hunt stated that the Constitutional mandate for a merit system for state employees could be fulfilled by a statutory requirement that those principles be incorporated in each collective bargaining agreement. The Personnel Rules would then set out a merit system to govern the terms of employment of non-unionized state employees not otherwise exempt from its coverage.

Niel Thomas questioned the testimony of individuals seeing the merit system as being against their rights for freedom of expression. Ken Spray added that labor relations was created for stability of labor, and that collective bargaining draws power from the labor movement, supplying employees with individual representation.

Niel Thomas brought up the question of the cost impact of collective bargaining. Ken Humphreys stated that his research indicates employee's salaries increased more before collective bargaining was enacted. In his study, he compared the increased percentages in employee salary seven years prior to the collective bargaining act implementation and seven years after. The salaries increased a total of 35% over the 73% cost-of-living increase within the past 14 years. This averaged out to a 2.5% annual increase. The cost of fringe benefits was not taken into consideration in his analysis. Mr. Humphreys is in the process of completing additional studies which he will make available to the committee.

PUBLIC TESTIMONY

Mary Langan, a freelance writer with Alaska Industrial Magazine, presented her views on the state personnel system. She had experienced working in both clerical and supervisory levels as a temporary with the state. Ms. Langan pointed out five major problems she had faced while employed by the state:

1) In 80 to 90% of government jobs, employee enthusiasm, creativity and initiative are stifled. The ideal employee is one whose attendace is prompt, who does not express new ideas which are contrary to "the system".

2) The recruitment of minorities and women is very limited. In some instances, temporaries are hired for permanent positions to avoid minority hiring.

3) There are inequities in the implementation of rules and federal regulations within both management levels and within the Division of Personnel. One example Ms. Langan mentioned was a delay in receiving her paycheck after termination. Federal law requires payment within three days of employee termination. The state took two weeks in sending out her check, and when she protested, she was advised that the state was exempt from that provision of the law. Ken Spray explained that the state is not exempt from this federal statute.

4) At the job service office of the state, books on vacancies in state government are not readily available to the public.

5) The promotional ladder and the merit system are subject to misinterpretation and office politics, resulting in discrimination against women and minorities. Ms. Langan suggested that promotions be decided by a committee consisting of objective members not employed by the state.

COMMITTEE REVIEW

Representative Buchholdt directed the committee to consider the possibilities to recommend and refine during the next meeting in Anchorage. Each committee member will prepare a list of ideas for consideration. The staff will provide a summary of information presented to date.

In conclusion, Representative Buchholdt pointed out the advantages of having both the merit system--employee motivation and reward for performance--and the collective bargaining process--mandated by the Legislature to provide a voice to employees.

Niel Thomas presented his opinion that there is a general misunderstanding of the two by the public. He suggests the distinctions and definitions be clarified for the benefit of state employees.

Darlene Howard addressed the problems she sees within the systems--procedural and operational methods at the administrative level.

MERIT SYSTEM/COLLECTIVE BARGAINING SUBCOMMITTEE
Municipality of Anchorage Assembly Chambers
November 30, 1978

MINUTES

The meeting was called to order by Representative Buchholdt, Chairperson. Public testimony was invited.

PUBLIC TESTIMONY

Tom Phillips, an employee with the Department of Transportation, Division of Maintenance and Operation, presented his views on the implementation of Governor Hammond's policy on merit increases by the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities. Deputy Commissioner James O'Sullivan has changed previous departmental policy by requiring that the evaluation of employee performance be "outstanding" or "exceptional" to qualify the employee for a merit increase. The new policy requires that the director of each region review all evaluations. When the employee's performance justifies awarding a merit increase, the evaluation is reviewed by the Deputy Commissioner. As part of the new system, all supervisors were required to attend a training course on "Measuring Job Performance".

Apparently, the Governor's policy is not being applied consistently within state government. Mr. Phillips indicated that in the department across the hall from him, merit increases were being awarded on the basis of "acceptable" evaluations, as well as "outstanding".

Darlene Howard advised the committee that in the APEA supervisory unit contract, the contract language spells out when merit increases may be awarded. These contract provisions are consistent with Personnel Rules.

Mr. Phillips has filed a grievance after being denied a merit increase. (His supervisor, Clyde Dolly, confirmed his position and testified later in the meeting.) Deputy Commissioner Patrick Ryan has received the grievance form submitted by Mr. Phillips, and as of the meeting date had not acknowledged the situation. Mr. Phillips is awaiting further action.

In response to Representative Buchholdt's inquiry as to how many employees within his department could be considered "outstanding", Mr. Phillips replied that a very small per entage of state employees are evaluated as outstanding. He believes that employees deserving merit increases are not receiving them as a direct result of interpretation of the Governor's policy.

Albert Baffone, Business Manager of Public Employees Local No. 71, was next to testify in regard to the merit system. He regards the merit system as counter-productive and inadequate in covering all employees. Mr. Baffone suggests that the merit system be governed by a collective bargaining process. He pointed out that the legislature is burdened with many problems in labor relations and could expedite proceedings by considering solution adopted by unions.

Public Employees Local No. 71 works on a preferential hiring system. When the state calls the local seeking an applicant, the name of a qualified individual is given within 48 hours. The state provides a description of the position, classification, and any particular qualifications necessary. These specifications are taken into consideration by the union in referring an applicant, in accordance with contract guidelines. The employer may reject the applicant referred from the union, in which case another applicant will be recommended. There are no tests given by the union. Applicant are evaluated on the basis of their experience. Mr. Baffone stated that the system has approximately a 95% accuracy rate in placing these applicants. Under current laws, this system could be adopted by the state.

In addition, Mr. Baffone testified that despite the inference made that state employees cannot be fired, Local No. 71 has many cases of employees who were in fact fired. It is their policy to file a grievance on every case which a member brings to them, so that they have standing to investigate the matter. If their research shows that the management action was justified, then they withdraw the grievance, documenting for their own protection their reasons for doing so. Unions are liable to their members for failure to represent.

Clyde Dolly, Manager of the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities, proceeded to testify that he is in favor of employees' associations and merit increases. Merit increases are one of the tools applicable to employees for inspiring and rewarding performance.

Mr. Dolly further indicated that employee morale has declined because of the change in the merit increase policy and the inconsistent application by different departments. Because there is a lack of funding, there is also little opportunity for supervisors to recognize the abilities of their employees by promoting them.

In answer to a question, Mr. Dolly stated that if a supervisor recommends a merit increase, the evaluation form is returned to the supervisor with directions to rewrite it. In Mr. Dolly's opinion, the instructions given on how to evaluate employee performance discourage a supervisor from evalauting an employee as outstanding or exceptional. This was the basis for Tom Phillip's grievance.

Mr. Dolly continued, adding that he is in favor of the register system. Ken Spray asked how long it took him to get employees off the register. Mr. Dolly explained that it takes at least three weeks to hire through the register, but he is given the top five names to consider. As a program manager in a previous position, he had experience working with the preferential hiring system. In hiring from the union, he received a response within three days. However, he was sent one individual at a time, and had to justify not selecting the first person sent. There was no way for the supervisor to know whether the second person would be more qualified for a particular job.

Greg O'Claray asked why it took Mr. Dolly three weeks to be able to hire someone from the register. Mr. Kareen responded that it was probably a result of internal departmental procedures. Lynda McCurry indicated that it takes her department an average of two days to receive a register from the Division of Personnel once requested.

Mr. Dolly concluded that although the register system takes a minimum of three weeks to hire an employee, as opposed to 48 hours when using the preferential hiring system, he would rather be given a choice of five applicants who have been tested for qualifications and experience. With the preferential system, the first candidate to meet minimum qualifications must be hired, and the opportunity to have a choice is not supplied.

Ron Felty, an employee with the Municipality of Anchorage, stated briefly that he was present to observe proceedings because of an interest in the concept of the merit system and the application to the labor environment. Representative Buchholdt explained that the commission is designed to take an overall view of personnel practice within the state and to cover as many topics as possible, including all government entities.

Beverly McCartney, an employee with Community and Regional Affairs Department, was present to observe proceedings and offered a few comments on another problem within the state. She indicated that her department is not filling permanent positions in order to create vacancy funds to use to provide merit increases to remaining employees. For example, the Property Control office has lost staff members who have not been replaced. As a result, none of the new property received has been tagged during the last four months. This vacancy factor has not been articulated in writing, yet it is currently practiced by numerous departments.

the Governor indicated changes in procedures and funding for merit increases. APEA challenged the provisions of the memo and their contract now specifies how merit increases are to be awarded. In response, Niel Thomas commented that concern over expenditures controls the work force. Budgetary procedures are left to the discretion of divisional management. Misinterpretations of guidelines, insufficient funds and lack of controls lead to manipulation of budgetary allowances.

Ken Kareen pointed out that the process in itself controls the state work force and the amount of money spent. First, there are a set number of positions, designated as "man-months", authorized in the budget. Second, each department is authorized a set amount of money. The department cannot hire more than the combination of what the two permit.

Niel Thomas suggested that better management oversight would be performed by the legislature if the concentration were on the executive performance of tasks and goals set, rather than the structural aspects of the executive branch--how many people are employed and where they are placed. The legislature needs to hold the executive branch accountable for achieving the goals the legislature sets.

Representative Buchholdt questioned Ms. McCartney on whether she felt that her department was providing adequate service. Ms. McCartney indicated that because of vacancies, employees in the department are doing considerably more work and not receiving sufficient compensation for additional responsibilities and a heavier workload. State employees are becoming frustrated with their work, lack of recognition and insufficient funding for increases and promotions. There is a serious decline in employee morale.

John Pugh asked Representative Buchholdt whether, as a legislator, she had been aware that the merit increases for present employees had not been funded for the past two years. She did not recall. He asked because APEA has been castigated for seeking both merit increases and cost-of-living adjustments for its membership, while the administration uses the existence of merit increase possibilities to hold down wage increases.

Representative Eliason suggested that there are two solutions to the inequities in the present system: 1) have a single bargaining unit for all state employees, or 2) repeal the collective bargaining act.

Ken Spray pointed out that there are inequities in the private sector, where different unions representing different trades had negotiated different wages.

Representative Eliason pointed out that it is not the responsibility of the legislature to bring about equal pay scales between unions. Mr. O'Claray explained that unions that grew out of the private industry unions have philosophical problems with the concept of a merit increase system. This comes about because of the control which The Boss exercised over his work force and the resentment felt by workers towards his potentially arbitrary and unchecked discretion. Therefore, unions rely on salary increases for time in service and the promotional ladder as the way to reward competence.

Ken Foot, a State Trooper from the Fairbanks office of the Public Safety Employees Association, indicated that because of personal experiences, he believes there are not sufficient promotional opportunities available to reward service to the state. Therefore, in his opinion, merit increases should be retained to compensate for this lack of upward mobility.

After a brief discussion on possibilities for rewarding deserving employees, John Pugh suggested that President Carter's Productivity Bonus may be worth consideration.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
Merit System/Collective Bargaining Subcommittee Minutes
November 30, 1978

ADDENDA

The following is an addenda to the Merit System/Collective Bargaining Subcommittee Minutes of November 30, 1978. The addenda was proposed by Darlene Howard to be included on Page 4, after Paragraph 6. The addenda was adopted at the Full Commission hearing on January 10, 1979:

Darlene Howard spoke on the experience of collective bargaining by state employees who are also subject to the principles of a merit system. The public sector has had a merit system primarily in response to the problems created by political patronage. It is meant to be a way to insure equal treatment of employees. The merit system addresses individual ideas: selection, promotion, increases and career ladders. Any merit system seeks to promote equity and efficiency in the organization. Collective bargaining presents the collective voice of employees in terms of conditions of employment in the decision making process and insures due process.

Merit increases are management's way of rewarding an employee for a job well-done. Public union bargaining sets general salary ranges. Although some perceive a "double dip" for state employees, there is a distinction between the two and the existence of merit increases is taken into account in contract negotiations.

The two systems are not inherently contradictory. Ms. Howard has worked for the state for ten years under both a merit system only and under a merit system supplemented by a collective bargaining union. The combination has, in her experience, led to due process, equity and representation.

One area that needs to be addressed is the situation that arises when contract terms differ from statutes or from Personnel Rules. If a statute prohibits something, can the union and the Division of Personnel bargain on that point?

XV. CONCLUSION.....32
A. Miscellaneous Contract Provisions.....33

I. INTRODUCTION

The purpose of this overview is to summarize the effect of collective bargaining on the Personnel Act (AS 39.25) and the Personnel Rules and, as space permits, to identify the different systems for handling personnel procedures established by the contracts considered. This is a topical presentation of the Personnel Act, the Rules and five of the eight collective bargaining contracts covering Alaska's public employees during 1979. No attempt is made to investigate the application of the contracts: The study is limited to summarization of actual contract terminology.

The five contracts studied represent a variety of union memberships and interests: APEA's General Government Unit (GGU) represents non-supervisory members; APEA's Supervisory Unit represents supervisory and managerial members; Confidential Employees Association (CEA) represents members employed in personnel departments; Local 71 represents members belonging to the labor, trades and crafts professions; and Public Safety Employees Association (PSEA) represents regularly commissioned public safety officers.

Because marine employees are classified as exempt and are therefore excluded from the provisions set forth in the Personnel Act (AS 39.25.110(12)) and the Personnel Rules, they have not been considered here. The Inlandboatmen's Union of the Pacific (IBU), the International Order of Masters, Mates and Pilots (MMP) and the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association (MEBA) negotiate with the state on wages, hours, working conditions and other employee benefits covering marine transportation employees engaged in the operation of the state ferry system. AS 23.40.040.

Each of the collective bargaining contracts reviewed here contains a clause committing the union and the state to strengthening merit principles in the bargaining unit and to use all due diligence in maintaining merit principles among public employees. Each contract also contains a statement that the terms of the contract take precedence over personnel rules and departmental operating procedures. One of the contracts provides that if the terms of the contract conflict with the law, the contract supersedes the provision of the law. Additionally, the contracts provide that the parties will renegotiate if any portion of the contract is declared invalid and that the remaining parts of the contract should be considered valid.

There are two Local 71 contract versions, one printed by the state and one by the union. There are no substantive differences between the two, although articles and sections are numbered differently. All citations noted herein are from the union version.

II. CLASSIFICATION

A. Statute:

> Sec. 39.25.150. Scope of rules. The personnel rules shall provide for (1) the preparation, maintenance, and revision by the director of personnel...of a position classification plan for all positions in the classified and partially exempt services;

B. Personnel Rules

Actual allocations of positions to job classifications are handled by the Director of the Division of Personnel with assistance from the appointing authorities. This necessitates budgeting prior to the completion of classification actions and certification of the availability of funds by the Director of the Division of Budget and Management. PR 2 04.5. Periodically, classification allocations in both the classified and partially exempt service are to be systematically reviewed by the Director, and appropriate adjustments are to be made in accordance with findings. PR 2.

C. Collective Bargaining Contracts

All collective bargaining contracts representing employees in the state service recognize the classification, development, modification and assignment of positions to various classifications as a management prerogative. The contract terms on this topic are limited, in most instances, to requirements that job descriptions be updated periodically, and to the enumeration of the classifications within each union.

General Government Unit

The GGU contract provides that the union may require the employing department to prepare an updated position description when it believes the duties and responsibilities of an employee's position description are inconsistent with the employee's assigned duties. The union may then request the department to order a job audit by the Chief of the Classification and Pay Section of the Division of Personnel. If the union believes inequities exist in a class series, between classes or in salary ranges assigned classes, it may notify the Chief of Classification and Pay, who must then respond. In either case, the union may appeal any findings of the Chief of Classification and Pay to the Director of Personnel and then to the Commissioner of Administration. Art. 19.

Supervisory Unit

In the SU contract, disputes or grievances relating to classification are apparently subject to grievance procedures outlined in Article 10, which state that any dispute arising between the unit or an employee and the state is to be settled by the methods outlined in that article. The contract does not otherwise address the topic of classification.

Local 71

Local 71's contract states that the state and the union agree to review all existing classification specifications and descriptions within the union's purview and to take any classification or reclassification action necessary to correct errors. A procedure is set forth for handling disputes on such matters. The Commissioner of Administration is responsible for initiating investigations on classification actions disputed by the union. If the Commissioner of Administration and the union cannot resolve an issue regarding classification, then an arbitrator may be called in for a final binding decision. The arbitrator has authority to establish a new wage rate or classification only for positions in which new types of equipment or operations for which rates of pay have not been previously established are the subject of the dispute.

Confidential Unit

The CEA contract has no provisions addressing the classification process. Any disagreement or dispute regarding classification could conceivably be filed in accordance with grievance procedures set out in the contract. Art. 13.

Public Safety Unit

The PSEA contract enumerates classifications within the union by title and salary range (Art. 15), and grievances regarding classification resulting from violations of the personnel rules or the operating procedures manual can be brought before the Commissioner of Administration. Grievances involving contract terms may be brought to binding arbitration. Art. 10(1).

D. Summary

Of all the contracts studied, Local 71's appears to establish the most involvement in the state's classification system. Only Local 71's contract requires a classification study of positions within the union and provides a separate procedure for resolving classification disputes.

The membership of CEA and SU have the most knowledge of, and in the normal scope of their responsibilities, the most control over classification procedures. Confidential employees in the normal course of their functions handle all classification actions for their departments and are therefore less likely to encounter problems on their own behalf. Similarly, supervisors work closely with the classification plan and are more familiar with its implementation. Conversely, GGU, Local 71 and PSEA members are isolated from the actual classification processes and consequently have less ability to influence classification decisions.

III. RECRUITMENT, EXAMINATION AND ELIGIBLE LISTS

A. Statutes

The Personnel Act states that, in accordance with the merit principle of employing the best qualified persons for state service, the personnel rules shall provide for "the use of sound selection methods, including open competitive examinations...for positions in state service". AS 39.25.150(3). The rules shall also provide for:

> the establishment and maintenance of eligible lists for appointment and promotion; the names of eligible candidates shall be placed on eligible lists in order of their relative performance in the examinations. AS 39.25.150(5).

The statutes provide for a veteran's preference system (AS 39.25.150(23)), employment preference for the severely handicapped (AS 39.25.150(25)), and a vocational substitution program for Alaskan residents who live in underemployed or remote areas of the state where opportunities to gain hiring qualifications do not exist (AS 39.25.155).

B. Personnel Rules

The Director of the Division of Personnel is responsible for recruitment of qualified applicants for the classified and partially exempt service. PR 3 01.0.

There are three types of examinations used by the state: continuous examinations, with no closing date for receipt of applications; specific examinations, which do have a time limit on receipt of applications; and promotional examinations, which are only open to permanent employees. PR 3 01.0. The final examination grade may be based on all factors of the examination, including test results, educational requirments, experience and other data from the applicant or other verified information. PR 3 05.1. The performance record and seniority of a permanent employee in the classified service applying for promotion is also evaluated. PR 3 05.2.

Applicants may review tests, except those used for a continuous recruitment class and other information used in the applicant's final rating except information gained as a result of confidential inquiries. PR 3 06.0.

All eligible lists must be by class title, with eligibles ranked following competitive tests and performance ratings. All lists are applicable statewide, unless otherwise designated by the Director, and all vacancies are filled by certification from competitive eligible lists except as otherwise provided in the rules. PR 4 01.0.

The Director is responsible for the certification of such lists for filling vacancies within the classified and partially exempt services. Emergency appointments are an exception to this rule. Eligibles for permanent positions are first to be certified from layoff lists, and if none exist, the Director certifies from competitive eligible lists. Appointments are made on the basis of merit from the selection of the highest on the list in accordance with the duties of the position. Selection is made from the top five available eligibles on competitive lists, and can include eligibles on rehire lists. In unique and unusual circumstances, the appointing authority can choose an applicant below the top five. PR 5.

C. Collective Bargaining Contracts

The contracts examined in this study, with the exception of Local 71's, recognize recruitment, examination, selection, promotions, transfers and the determination of methods for such action as a management prerogative.

General Government Unit

When a member applies for a position within the GGU contract's jurisdiction, the applicant is required to receive notification of her or his eligibility for a competitive examination. If the Division of Personnel finds that an applicant fails to meet the test and examination standards for the position, the unit can receive an explanation of the criteria used in the computation of the final rating on training and experience. Art. 18(9). If a written examination is found to have discriminatory impact on members, the unit and the Deputy Director of the Division of Personnel agree to appoint an advisor to review the examination(s) in question and to made recommendations for corrective action. If the GGU and the Deputy Director cannot reach an agreement on the advisor's recommendations, the matter is referred to the Director for final disposition. Art. 18(10).

The GGU contract also requires that explanation be provided to the union from the Division of Personnel when a member is refused certification on an eligible list. Employees are not required to seek the approval of their supervisors when requesting placement on tranfer lists. Art. 18(1).

Supervisory Unit

The SU contract also requires explanation from the Division of Personnel when a member is refused certification on an eligible list. Supervisors cannot remove names of employees from eligible or transfer lists, and placement on transfer lists does not necessitate the approval of a supervisor. Art. 16(1).

The contract does not contain any direct reference to the recruitment and examination processes, but does agree to uphold the merit principle of encouraging the hire of the most qualified. Art. 4.

Public Safety Unit

PSEA's contract stipulates that the merit principle of selecting the most qualified will be upheld. Art. 5. There is no specific mention of the topic of eligible lists in PSEA's contract.

Confidential Unit

CEA's contract requires that employees receive written explanation in instances where they are refused certification on eligible lists or are removed from lists. Placement of an employee's name on a transfer list does not necessitate a supervisor's approval. Art. 12(1). CEA's contract requires that vacancies be filled first from layoff lists, and if none exist, from promotional lists. This serves to give applicants who are current members of the union or previous members preference over applicants from outside the union's jurisdiction. Art. 12(4).

Local 71

Preferential hiring facilities are provided for within the Local 71 contract for the purpose of operating a job referral system, which the state uses in acquiring employees for classifications within the union's purview. A joint hiring committee of two state representatives and two union representatives is established contractually to oversee and control the job referral system, to establish rules and regulations for maintaining the system and to hear grievances, or in the case of a deadlock, to employ an impartial umpire to make a final binding decision. Local 71's contract stipulates that selection of applicants for certification to the state is not discriminatory and that preference is given to residents of Alaska and residents within the immediate vicinity of available positions. The state maintains the right to reject applicants referred by Local 71, but must supply reason(s) for rejection of applicants. In the event that Local 71 cannot supply a qualified applicant upon the state's request within 48 hours, the state may hire from any other source, provided Local 71 is notified of the action. Art. 5.

Because of federal regulations and merit system standards, Occupational Safety Compliance Officers have been exempted from the job referral system and are subject to the testing and examination process used by the state. Art. 43(1).

D. Summary

Collective bargaining appears to have no significant impact on the state's recruitment and examination processes. However, Local 71's job referral system does replace the state's system with an alternative practice. Federal and statutory mandates of hiring the best qualified are upheld by all of the unions considered in this study.

IV. TEMPORARY, EMERGENCY, PROVISIONAL & PART TIME APPOINTMENTS

A. Statutes

The Personnel Act provides for the existence of emergency, temporary, provisional and permanent part-time appointments in the personnel rules. Temporary appointments are defined by statute as those of a seasonal or temporary nature, and provisional appointments as those occuring without competitive examination when appropriate eligible lists are not available. AS 39.25.150(8),(9) and (10). Permanent part time appointments are defined as employment on the basis of 15 hours or more a week, including employment of two persons to fill one permanent full-time position. AS 39.25.150(24).

B. Personnel Rules

The personnel rules define more clearly the extent of the appointments and their limitations. Temporary appointments are not to exceed six months in duration and are to be made from eligible lists when practicable. The Director of the Division of Personnel may grant extensions to this time limit, and temporary employees may seek employment in other departments immediately following the expiration of this term, but not with the same employing department. PR 5 06.0. The rules also create short term appointments, which are not to exceed 90 days in any one calendar year and may be made for positions in remote areas only. PR 5 06.1.

Emergency appointments are limited to 30 days in duration with no more than three appointments per person in any one calendar year. An emergency is defined as a condition necessitating immediate action to provide work in the public interest, and as filling a need that could not be anticipated. Exception to the limit of three appointments per person in one year is made for guards or attendants for prisoners. PR 5 07.0.

Provisional appointments may be authorized by the Director in the absence of appropriate eligible lists. A provisional employee must be terminated upon the expiration of the probationary period of a regular permanent appointment or the subsequent appointment from an appropriate eligible list. A provisional employee may be converted to probationary status, provided the employee meets the qualifications specified by the Director and is placed on an eligible list in a position that is reachable for appointment. PR 5 08.0.

C. New Legislation

Effective as of January 1, 1980, reference to temporary appointments will be eliminated from the statutes in accordance with new legislation on nonpermanent hire. The following is a summary of Chapter 67, SLA 1979:

State Employees

Categorizes all classified state employees as permanent, nonpermanent or emergency employees and provides that a nonpermanent employee may not be appointed and placed on the payroll without the prior written approval of the director of the division of personnel and labor relations. Sets out conditions under which nonpermanent employees may be appointed and limits their service to 120 days in a 12-month period unless they are "program or project employees." Makes a person who falsely certifies a need for a nonpermanent employee personally liable in a civil action to the nonpermanent employee if the employee was terminated as a result. (HCS CSSB 198).

D. Collective Bargaining Contracts

General Government Unit

GGU is recognized as the exclusive representative of temporaries in the unit, and conditions on temporary employment are set out. Temporaries do not come under the definition of "member". The contract limits the temporary employment period to nine months, with no extensions possible. However, by amending the contract, that term has been shortened to six months. Temporaries must meet minimum qualifications of the classifications they are hired for. Following the six month term, a person may be employed as a temporary within a different employing department. Temporaries receive holiday pay, credit for time in service should they become probationary employees and compensation that is at least equivalent to the entry level of the assigned class. Art. 2(2).

Emergency appointments to positions within GGU are limited to a total of no more than 60 days in any calendar year. The contract states that emergency employees are not members of the unit and are therefore not covered by the terms of the contract. They are subject to the personnel rules on emergency appointments. Art. 22.

Supervisory Unit

The SU contract contains a clause similar to that of GGU regarding the representation of temporaries, but does not include provision for retroactive credit for time in service towards the probationary period. Art. 2(2). Emergency appointments are not addressed in the SU contract. By definition, the term "employee" as used in the contract includes permanent, probationary and provisional employees. Art. 1(2)(c).

Public Safety Unit

Temporaries are also recognized as bargaining unit members of PSEA. Temporaries must meet minimum qualificaitons, be paid at wage levels equivalent to those paid to permanent employees within the same classification and receive evaluations on performance after 30 days in service to be included in their personnel records. Temporaries are also eligible for holiday pay. Art. 2. The duration of temporary employment is not limited by PSEA's contract, and emergency employees are not specifically addressed. Provisional employees are included in the definition of "member" and are therefore subject to the same terms and conditions of the contract as are permanent employees. Art 1(2)(g).

Confidential Unit

Temporary employment is limited to nine months within any calendar year by CEA's contract, and temporaries are eligible to receive holiday pay. Provisional employees are recognized as "members" and are therefore subject to the terms and conditions of the contract as are permanent employees. Art. 2. Emergency appointments are not addressed.

Local 71

Local 71's contract limits the temporary term to not more than 120 calendar days, althought the time may be extended by mutual agreement between the union and the state. Temporaries, in lieu of benefits, receive $1.32 per hour over regular class wages. Seniority is retroactive if a temporary is appointed to permanent status. CETA and PEP temporary appointments are not restricted to the 120 day limit, but are placed at step B of the salary scale following the 120 day period. Art. 25(2) and (3).

Local 71 does not recognize emergency employees within their contract. As an alternative to emergency appointments, Local 71's contract provides for "casual" employees who can be appointed by the Director of Personnel for not more than 15 calendar days. These appointments are not subject to other terms and conditions of the contract, with the exception of overtime compensation. Art. 25(5). Provisional employees are not recognized in Local 71's contract.

E. Summary

Of the contracts examined, Local 71's alters the effect of appointments to the greatest extent. Besides restricting the time in which its members may be employed as temporaries (120 days), Local 71 has created an alternative category for emergency appointments, which the union labels "casual" employment (15 days).

In regard to time limitations on emergency appointments, GGU's contract is the only one that restricts the initial employment period to one shorter than established in the personnel rules. On temporary appointments, both GGU and SU contract amendments restrict extensions beyond the six month period specified by the personnel rules, thus denying the possibility of extensions with the Director's approval.

CEA's contract, rather than limiting the employment period for temporaries, extends the time to nine months and makes no reference to possible extensions. PSEA's contract is the only one that does not address time limitations on temporary appointments.

Temporaries are entitled to holiday and compensation that is equivalent to that of permanent employees within the same classifications. Local 71 is the only union that provides additional compensation ($1.32 per hour) in lieu of medical and insurance benefits. Three unions address credit for a temporary's time in service: GGU, SU and Local 71.

Provisional employees are generally recognized as being subject to the same provisions as permanent employees, with the exception of Local 71.

V. PROBATIONARY PERIODS

A. Statutes

The objective of the probationary term is to give an appointing authority opportunity to examine and evaluate the performance of the hired employee. The Personnel Act states that the personnel rules shall provide for:

> a period of probation not to exceed one year...except that a permanent employee receiving a promotional appointment retains permanent status in the service and job class from which appointed for the duration of the probationary period, and may be demoted to his former class without right of appeal, §170 of this chapter notwithstanding, but if dismissed from the service he has appeal rights under §170 of this chapter. AS 39.25.150(7).

B. Personnel Rules

The probationary period set out in the personnel rules is one year for employees above range 13 and six months for those range 13 and below, which can be extended at the Director's discretion. Employees rehired, promoted or transferred must complete a probationary period for the position they are appointed to, which counts towards the completion of any probationary period uncompleted in a lower classification.

Temporary and emergency employees do not receive credit towards the probationary period for time in service. PR 6 01.0 and PR 6 02.0. During this probationary period, the Director can request employee evaluations at any time. PR 6 03.0.

A probationary employee, unless holding permanent status at the time of probationary appointment, may be dismissed without the right of appeal or hearing, unless dismissal is a result of discrimination. The employee dismissed for reasons other than discrimination may petition the Director for review of such action. The Director may restore an individual's name to an appropriate eligible list, but may not certify the individual to the same appointing authority. PR 6 05.0.

The Director is notified 15 days prior to the expiration of the probationary period, and if performance evaluations are satisfactory, the employee is placed in permanent status. PR 6 05.0. If dismissed from service, a probationary employee has the right to appeal through the Director to the Personnel Board under Rule 12 01.2, but does not have the right to appeal a demotion to a former classification. PR 6 06.0.

C. Collective Bargaining Contracts

General Government Unit

The GGU contract provides for a probationary term of six months for ranges 13 and below. The Director of Personnel may limit, by written agreement with the employee, the probationary period for ranges 5 through 13 to three months. The probationary terms for positions in range 14 and above are one year, but may be shortened to six months at the Director's discretion. Art. 18(7). All probationary employees are required to receive a written performance evaluation mid-way through the probationary term. Art. 18(8). A probationary holding permanent status in another classification is entitled to process disputes up to step four of the grievance procedures. Art. 10(1). In all other aspects, probationary employees are recognized as members and are subject to the terms and conditions of the GGU contract. Art. 2(1).

Supervisory Unit

The SU contract contains no mention of time limitations on probationary periods, so it is assumed that there is no alteration of the personnel rules in this regard. The contract does state, however, that probationary employees receive semi-annual evaluations (Art. 16(4)) and that appeals in response to dismissal of a probationary in permanent status may be submitted to arbitration (step five) for settlement. Because the definition of "employee" includes probationaries (Art.1 (2)(h)), they have access to the grievance procedures up to step four on all other matters. Art. 10.

Public Safety Unit

The PSEA contract provides for a probationary period of one year in duration, which may be extended an additional 90 days for completion of a Public Safety Academy course. The probationary period for promoted employees is limited to six months. Art. 18(1).

Probationary employees are precluded from filing grievances during their initial appointment. However, during the final six months of a probationary term, a grievance pertaining to disciplinary action (except dismissal) may be brought before the Commissioner of Administration. Art. 10(1). Probationaries within PSEA must receive semi-annual performance evaluations. Art. 18(2)(B).

Confidential Unit

Probationary employees within CEA are recognized under the definition of "employee" and are subject to the terms and conditions of CEA's contract. Art. 2. Because the probationary employee is not differentiated from the permanent employee, probationaries presumably have access to grievance procedures to the same extent as do permanent employees. Art. 13.

Local 71

Local 71's contract reduces the probationary period as set out in the personnel rules. Upon completion of a 60-day probationary period, an employee is considered to be in permanent status, and seniority is then retroactive to the date of hire. Art. 25(1). Probationary employees who are discharged or terminated have appeal rights through step three of the grievance procedures. Art. 12. Probationary employees holding permanent status have access to arbitration proceedings (step four) in cases of dismissal. All other grievances received from probationaries can be brought to step three. Art. 13.

D. Summary

Probationary time frames set out in the personnel rules are altered either by limiting or extending the periods by the GGU, PSEA and Local 71 contracts.

The Personnel Act states that an employee in the classified service may appeal a dismissal, a demotion or a suspension of more than 30 days in a hearing before the Personnel Board. AS 39.25.170(a). The phrase "employee in the classified service" has been interpreted by the Supreme Court of Alaska to include permanent employees and to exclude probationary or provisional employees. Whaley vs. State, 438 P.2d 718 (1968). (By extension of this reasoning, temporary employees would also be excluded.)

The statute setting out probationary periods does make clear, however, that promoted employees retain their permanent status in the classes from which they were promoted and therefore do have the right to appeal dismissals from state service under AS 39.25.170, although they may not appeal demotions to their former classes. AS 39.25.150(7).

Under the personnel rules, however, all probationary employees may appeal dismissals which are alleged to result from discrimination based on race, color, sex, religion, national origin or political beliefs to the Director of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations. PR 6 04.0.

Grievance rights on demotions and dismissal issues for probationary members not holding permanent status vary within each collective bargaining contract. With the exception of CEA, probationary members are precluded from arbitration proceedings.

VI. TRAINING

A. Personnel Rules and Statutes

The Director of Personnel is responsible for the development, in cooperation with appointing authorities, of programs for the improvement of employee effectiveness and morale. AS 39.25.050(3). The personnel rules implementing the statute provide for pre-service and in-service training to raise the quality of employee performance. Appointing authorities, with the Director's approval, can establish intern and apprenticeship training programs. Regulations on reimbursement of educational fees are issued by the Commissioner of Administration and are contingent upon the employee's agreement to remain in state service. PR 8 02.0.

B. Collective Bargaining Contracts

General Government Unit

In the GGU contract, the Division of Personnel agrees to recognize its responsibility to reimburse employees for expenses incurred in job-related training courses. Employees who attend training courses do not lose leave or pay unless the course is for an extended time. The Division of Personnel is also responsible for developing, when practicable, employee training procedures. On-the-job and cross-training are encouraged. The GGU contract requires that the Division of Personnel designate a person within each department to explain training and educational opportunities available to employees. Art. 20.

Supervisory Unit

As stated in the SU contract, the Division of Personnel agrees to recognize the need for educational advancement and shall reimburse, if funds are available, employees' tuition and text fees for job-related training. The unit's contract also provides for compensation during the training sessions. Art. 23(9).

Local 71

Both the state and Local 71 are to consider individual programs for employee training and reach agreement on provisions regarding wages and conditions in accordance with the union's contract. The state agrees to establish a policy committee of four members from each party to the contract to create training policies and procedures in each department. Art. 25(6).

Public Safety Unit

The PSEA contract has more specific provisions regarding emp oyee training than do other union contracts. The Director of Personnel is to select and assign members to particular fields for safety training. Employees submit memos annually requesting training with comments from supervisors regarding the requests, and if a request is denied, a reason must be supplied to the employee. Whenever possible, the state is to attempt to obtain college accreditation for training courses. PSEA members must qualify on pistol and shotgun courses semiannually and must receive periodic retraining as required to maintain certification for job performance in their unique professions. The Division is also obligated to continue its policy of encouraging members to seek further advanced education. A standing advisory committee is established to make recommendations to the Commissioner of Public Safety on academy training, minimum training needs for Police Standards certification and in-service training needs. Art. 9.

Confidential Unit

The CEA contract states that the Division of Personnel will provide 15 hours of training each year to all members and will develop the contents of such training. Art. 14.

C. Summary

With the exception of Local 71 and PSEA, the scope of collective bargaining in relation to training is limited to requiring the Division of Personnel to create training policies and procedures. The topic of reimbursement for such expenses is addressed by GGU and SU. Local 71 and PSEA provide for the establishment of committees to oversee the implementation of training practices. The CEA contract requires that the state provide 15 hours of training annually to all members.

VII. TRANSFERS

A. Statutes

The Personnel Act states that the Personnel Rules shall provide for:

transfers from one department to another and from another merit system jurisdiction to the state service (and) transfers from one area of the state to another. AS 39.25.150(11) and (12).

B. Personnel Rules

The personnel rules define transfers as lateral moves to the same or parallel job classifications. There are two types of transfers: intra-agency and inter-agency. The status of employees is not affected by transfer. PR 5 10.3. The Director retains the right to examine an employee to establish that minimum qualifications are met before approving parallel transfer. PR 5 10.4. Fringe benefits awarded employees are also not affected by transfer. PR 5 10.6. Transfers without employee consent must be approved by the Director. PR 5 10.7.

C. Collective Bargaining Contracts

All of the collective bargaining contracts recognize the transfer of employees and the methods for determing such action as a management right. The contracts contain some provisions regarding transfers.

General Government Unit

GGU's contract states that an employee can request a transfer from the Division of Personnel and prohibits an immediate supervisor from refusing such a request or from removing an employee's name from a register. Art. 18(1).

Supervisory Unit

Provisions in the SU contract state that employees may request placement on transfer lists through the Division of Personnel and that such requests do not require a supervisor's approval. Art. 16(1).

Local 71

According to Local 71's contract, employees may not be compelled to accept transfers to new duty stations. Art. 25(16)(e).

Public Safety Unit

The provisions set forth in PSEA's contract differ significantly from those in other union contracts. Transfers are to be in the best interest of the Department, and length of service is considered in the determination of preference for transfer where other factors are relatively equal. The state is responsible for posting notices of duty posts available on a monthly basis and for maintaining files of transfer requests. When the most senior member's transfer is not honored in filling a vacancy, that member is advised of the reason in writing.

Members who have served in the unit in excess of five years are not subject to involuntary transfer except under extenuating circumstances. Members normally receive 60 days notice prior to transfer, and are granted five days of adminsitrative leave with an additional five days available at the discretion of the Department Commander to effectuate such a move. The state agrees to continue to effect transfers arising out of special need and extenuating circumstance of a personal nature consistent with transfer policy. Transfer is not considered a method for disciplinary action. Grievances concerning involuntary transfers are to be filed with the Commissioner of Public Safety and may only be appealed to the Commissioner of Administration. Art. 12.

Confidential Unit

CEA's contract states that an employee may have her or his name placed on a transfer list by submitting the proper forms to the Division of Personnel and that this does not necessitate the approval of the employee's supervisor. Art. 12(1).

D. Summary

Collective bargianing contracts, with the exception of Local 71's, limit the ability of supervisors to prohibit employees from applying for transfers and being placed on transfer lists. Transfers may be involuntary for GGU, SU, CEA and PSEA members. Local 71's contract prohibits the state from transferring an employee involuntarily to a new duty station. The PSEA contract is the only one which includes procedures for grievance submissions relating to involuntary transfer.

VIII. PROMOTIONS

A. Statutes

The Personnel Act specifies that the personnel rules shall provide for:

> promotions from within the state service when there are qualified candidates in the state service; vacancies shall be filled by promotion whenever practicable and in the best interest of the state service, and promotion shall be by competitive examination whenever possible; in considering promotions, applicants' qualifications, performance record, seniority and conduct shall be evaluated. AS 39.25.150(4).

B. Personnel Rules

The personnel rules implement the statute and provide that appointments be made from the top five eligibles on inter-departmental and departmental promotional lists. Promoted employees retain permanent status within their former classifications and may be demoted to former former classifications at any time during the probationary period without the right to appeal.

C. Collective Bargaining Contracts

The promotion of employees and the determination of methods for such action is recognized as a managment prerogative by GGU, SU, PSEA and CEA contracts.

General Government Unit

Vacant positions within the GGU are to be open to employees in the unit who are certified as promotionally eligible prior to consideration of outside applicants. The GGU contract also states that employees may refuse promotions and not have their names removed from promotional lists should they decide not to accept a promotional opportunity. Art. 18(6). Promotional evaluations and ratings must be placed in personnel files and be made available to GGU members. Art. 18(8).

Supervisory Unit

SU's contract also stipulates that unit members are to be given consideration over outside applicants and that employees may refuse promotions without being removed from such lists. Art. 16(3). The contract states that an employee who is not satisfied with a score received in the rating of training and experience for a promotional opportunity may apply for reexamination. Art. 16(4). Should an employee be unsatisfied with results after a final review by the Director of Personnel of examination results, she or he may appeal the finding to a final review panel.

The review panel consists of three members: one from SU, one from the Division of Personnel and a third party recognized for expertise in the job functions being examined, who is chosen by the other panel members from a list provided by the U.S. Civil Service Commission. The decisions of the panel are final and binding. Art. 16(5).

Local 71's contract provides for promotion of its members by seniority as long as the employee is equally qualified with other employees in the classification and the action is mutually agreed upon by both the state and the union. The contract does not state that employees have the right to appeal final ratings of promotability. Promoted employees remain in permanent status in their new positions and therefore have access to grievance procedures. Promotional listings must be posted for four days before being filled. Art. 25 (9) and (13). Promoted employees retain seniority in their former classifications for a period of three years. Art. 25(12).

Confidential Unit

CEA's contract addresses the salary increase received when promoted, which is to be a two-step minimum. Art. 12(2). Promotional lists are to be used when no appropriate layoff lists exist for appointment to positions. Art. 12(4).

Public Safety Unit

PSEA's contract does not address the topic of promotion.

D. Summary

The collective bargaining contracts now in force leave promotions within management's discretion, with the exception of Local 71's. Contained in Local 71's contract is specific language on the methods by which management may promote members, with greater emphasis on seniority than established in the personnel rules.

IX. MERIT INCREASES

A. Personnel Rules and Statutes

The personnel rules state that merit increases are based on an appointing authority's evaluations of employee performance. A one-step increase is awarded for "acceptable" performance of progressively greater value to the state. At the appointing authority's discretion, an increase of two steps may be granted for "outstanding" performance. Merit increases are limited in that they cannot exceed the top step of an assigned salary range. PR 9 02.0.

Performance that is less than acceptable may result in a one-step withdrawal, following employee notification and a 30 day period in which the employee is given an opportunity to improve performance and thus alter an appointing authority's evaluation. Grievance procedures outlined in PR 12 01.1 are available to employees who have received a merit "decrease". PR 9 02.24 and 9 02.25.

B. Collective Bargaining Contracts

General Government Unit

GGU's contract terms on merit increases are consistent with the personnel rules, with an additional clause stating that the state agrees to modify the evaluation and merit system to make it more meaningful. The contract also states that the administration will not establish a quota or percentage system to determine the number of increases to be granted, but will discuss the establishment of objective performance evaluation criteria with union representatives. Various provisions regarding merit "decreases" are addressed in GGU's contract, such as: A decrease may not be withdrawn below the entry step of a job classification, and no more than one step may be withdrawn in one year. Art. 4.

Local 71

Local 71's contract does not provide merit increases for members. As an alternative, a service bonus program was negotiated with the state. Members of the union are hired at wage step A and remain in that step for 120 days, at which time they are placed at wage step B. An employee is eligible for another increase after seven years in service. At that time, an employee with seven years of continuous service receives an additional twenty cents per hour. After nine years, the employee is entitled to an increase of forty cents per hour, and after eleven years an increase of fifty cents. These rates are cumulative and an alternative to the longevity bonus program (AS 39.27.022) and merit increases. Art. 20.

Supervisory, Confidential and Public Safety Units

SU and PSEA contracts do not address the topic of merit increases. CEA's contract states that when an employee is promoted, the increase in salary will be at least an advance of two steps if one-half of the merit increase evaluation period has been served, or step A, whichever is greater. Art. 12(2).

C. Summary

With the exception of Local 71, negotiations on merit increases have been limited to agreements to "modify the evaluation and merit system to be more meaningful" and to "establish objective performance evaluation criteria" (GGU) and provisions regarding promotional compensation in conjunction with merit increases (CEA).

Local 71 is the only collective bargaining union that has opted out of receiving merit increases for its membership by substituting the increases with its own service bonus plan.

X. LAYOFFS

A. Statutes

The Personnel Act states that the personnel rules shall provide for:

> layoffs for reason of lack of funds or work, abolition of positions, or material changes in duties or organization; both performance and seniority records shall be considered in the development of layoff orders. AS 39.25.150(15).

B. Personnel Rules

The personnel rules provide that employee layoffs may occur in the classified service when a position is seasonal, a substitute appointment or when positons are abolished due to shortage of work or funds or other reasons that are beyond employee control. An employee may remain on a layoff list for a period of two years and does not lose earned leave or other benefits during that time. PR 11 04.1.

During an emergency, no permanent or probationary employee may be laid off while provisional or temporary employees in the same classification are assigned to positions that could reasonably be assumed by a permanent or probationary employee. PR 11 04.2.

The order of layoff due to reduction of work force is based on performance reports and seniority. PR 11 04.4. Permanent or probationary employees must receive written notice of the reasons for their being laid off. PR 11 04.5 and 11 04.6. The names of permanent or probationary employees who are demoted in lieu of layoff may be placed on layoff lists for the positons from which they were demoted. PR 11 04.8.

C. Collective Bargaining Contracts

The reduction of the state work force due to lack of work, funding or other cause consistent with efficient management is recognized as a management prerogative in CEA, GGU, PSEA and SU contracts.

General Government Unit

Layoff, as defined in GGU's contract, means involuntary separation from service due to abolition of a position, insufficient funds, or lack of work. Art. 1(2)(1). Layoffs of employees are to be performed in accordance with the personnel rules. Art. 3(3). All employees must receive written notification of the reasons for layoff. Art. 31(1).

Supervisory Unit

The only reference to layoff in the SU contract pertains to wages becoming due immediately following separation from service. Art. 12(4).

Local 71

Local 71's contract states that all permanent employees are to be given two weeks notice or two weeks pay prior to discharge, and that a termination or layoff slip must be supplied indicating the actual reason for the action. Art. 12.

Local 71's contract also states that layoffs are to be made in reverse order of duty station seniority. If a member is laid off and holds seniority in a lower classification, the individual may be returned to the lower class and wage level. Art. 25(12).

Public Safety Unit

PSEA's contract states that all employees are to receive two weeks notice or two weeks pay prior to discharge. Art. 18(3).

Confidential Unit

CEA's contract addresses the topic of layoffs only by providing that layoff lists are used in selection for vacancies in the bargaining unit. Art. 12(4).

D. Summary

Provisions set out in the GGU, SU and CEA contracts are in accordance with those in the personnel rules. PSEA and Local 71 contracts affect the rules by providing that employees receive either two weeks notice or pay when layoffs occur. Local 71 also provides that layoffs be made in reverse order on the basis of seniority.

XI. SUSPENSION, DEMOTION AND DISMISSAL

A. Statutes

The Personnel Act states that the personnel rules shall provide for:

> the imposition of disciplinary suspension without pay for not longer than 30 days in any 12 month period. AS 39.25.150(17).

B. Personnel Rules

Suspension

The personnel rules state that the appointing authority may suspend an employee for delinquency or misconduct and must inform the employee in writing of the reason for the suspension. An employee in the classified or partially exempt service may be suspended without pay and cannot receive seniority credit for the duration of a suspension. PR 11 03.0.

Dismissal

Employees not holding permanent status may be dismissed at any time at the appointing authority's discretion upon written notification. Dismissal based on improper discrimination is forbidden. A permanent employee may be dismissed by an appointing authority for just cause only, normally preceded by suspension of not less than three nor more than thirty days. During the suspension, the employing department may make a thorough investigation of the cause and notify the employee and the Director of the reason for dismissal. All violations of the prohibitions set out in Rule 13 are considered "just cause" for dismissal (e.g. political activity; bribery; acceptance of gifts; existence of financial conflict of interest; fraud; nepotism; deception or obstruction of rights; etc.). PR 11 05.0.

Demotion

Appointing authorities may demote employees for just cause and must supply a written statement of the reason for such action to both the Director and the employee. Employees have the right to request voluntary demotions to lower classes within their job series and maintain permanent status in the class to which demoted. PR 11 06.0.

C. Collective Bargaining Contracts

General Government Unit

GGU's contract provides that the union be notified in cases of demotion, dismissal, discharge and suspension of members. Art. 31(2). Provision is also made for employees receiving demotions, either voluntary or for just cause, to remain at the same wage step as held in the higher classification. Art. 18(3) and (4). "Just cause" is defined as incompetence, unsatisfactory performance of duties, unexcused absenteeism, drunkenness, dishonesty or gross disobedience. Art. 1(2)(k). All employees, with the exception of those discharged for "just cause", are required to receive written notification of the reason for discharge prior to termination. Suspended employees must also receive written notification of the reasons for such action. Employees who wish to have such action reviewed must follow the grievance procedures outlined in the contract. Art. 31(1). A grievance on demotion or dismissal may be brought to binding arbitration by an employee holding permanent status. Probationary employees may pursue a grievance on suspension, demotion or dismissal only to step four, and are denied access to binding arbitration. Art. 10(1). All grievances resulting from dismissal, demotion or a single suspension in excess of thirty days shall be entered at step three of the grievance procedures. Art. 10(2).

Supervisory Unit

SU's contract contains the same provisions as those in GGU regarding notification of the employee and the union in cases of discharge, suspension and demotion. It also states that a union representative may be present during all stages of hearings determining such matters. Copies of written reprimands must be made available to representatives by employee request. Art. 25(2).

Members of SU who are demoted either voluntarily or for just cause retain the same wage step, a higher step or a step that best reflects creditable service to the state. Art. 16(6) and (8). Dismissed, demoted or suspended employees in permanent status have access to grievance procedures including binding arbitration. Art. 10(1).

Local 71's contract recognizes management's right to discharge permanent employees for just cause (e.g. incompetence, unsatisfactory performance, unexcused absenteeism, etc.). The union is to be notified of the reason for the discharge of a permanent employee prior to the employee's notification. All permanent employees are given two weeks notice or pay prior to discharge, with the exception of those discharged for just cause.

All employees are to be supplied with a termination slip showing the specific reason for termination. Local 71 representatives must be notified in writing concurrent with notice to the employee of reasons for disciplinary actions, and union representatives have the right to be present at all hearings if requested by the employee. Employees holding permanent status have access to binding arbitration on matters concerning demotion, dismissal or suspension. Other employees have appeal rights through step three of the grievance procedures. Art. 12.

Public Safety Unit

PSEA's contract states that conduct unbecoming an officer is grounds for immediate dismissal. Otherwise, all employees must receive two weeks notice or pay prior to discharge. Permanent and temporary members of the union are required to give 30 days written notice before leaving employment, which may be modified by mutual agreement between the employee and the state. Art. 18(3) and (4).

The contract sets out detailed procedures governing the conduct of administrative investigations into a member's alleged misconduct, including the member's right to be informed of a complaint and its origin, union representation, time to prepare a response to allegations, a copy of the record of investigation proceedings and reassignment to "administrative" functions without loss of pay or benefits until the conclusion of the investigation. In addition, members may request an investigation into adverse rumors affecting the member's credibility, integrity or reputation. Probationary employees who have completed six months of the initial probationary period are protected by these rights except in the case of dismissals. Art. 7.

Grievances relating to violations of PSEA's contract terms or involving demotion, discharge or suspensions may be brought to binding arbitration. During the final six months of the probationary period, an employee may bring a grievance involving any disciplinary action other than dismissal to the Commissioner of Administration. Art. 10(1).

Confidential Unit

CEA's contract states that in cases of discipline, suspension or demotion, CEA will be notified in writing concurrent with the commencement of such action. Employees who directly or indirectly exploit their connection with the employer through outside business activities or who disclose any confidential information pertaining to the employer's business are subject to immediate disciplinary action. Art. 11. Demoted employees must enter classifications at the same step as occupied in the higher range or a step approved by the Director of Personnel. Art. 12(3). The grievance procedure outlined in Article 13 is the sole method for settling disputes on suspension, demotion or dismissal, which are subject to binding arbitration.

D. Summary

It is generally recognized by the five union contracts that discipline, suspension, demotion and dismissal of employees for just cause is a management prerogative. However, the definition of just cause varies slightly in each contract. In most instances, members holding permanent status are provided access to grievance procedures up to and including binding arbitration.

XII. HEARINGS AND APPEALS

A. Statutes

The State Personnel Act provides that:

(a) An employee in the classified service who is dismissed, demoted, or suspended for more than 30 working days in a 12-month period shall be notified in writing by his employer of the action and the reason for it and may be heard publicly by the personnel board and may be represented by counsel at the hearing. In order to be heard, the complainant shall request a hearing within 15 days of dismissal, demotion or suspension.

(b) If the board finds that the action complained of was taken for a political, racial or religious reason, or in violation of this chapter or the rules adopted under this chapter, the officer or employee shall be reinstated to his position without loss of pay or leave benefits for the period of his dismissal, demotion, or suspension. In all other cases, the board shall report its findings and recommendations to both parties. AS 39.25.170.

The personnel rules shall provide for:

the procedures for review of disputed personnel actions and for resolving employee and interagency grievances. AS 39.25.150(18).

B. Personnel Rules

The dispute procedures for hearings and appeals outlined in PR 12 are available to employees in the classified service only. They are as follows:

Step 1: The employee discusses the action grieved with immediate supervisor.

Step 2: The employee submits a written statement to the supervisor.

Step 3: The supervisor replies and submits a copy of the response to the departmental personnel officer.

Step 4: The employee submits a written grievance to the personnel officer who transmits the information to the Division of Personnel.

Step 5: There are two alternative methods for procedures at this point:

a. If the grievance is not a violation of an interpretation of the personnel rules and is within the discretion of the appointing authority, the departmental personnel officer and the employing division head investigate and make recommendations to the executive head of an agency.

b. If the grievance stems from violation of the personnel rules, the Director of the Division of Personnel responds with a written statement of findings to both the grievant and the department.

Step 6: The agency head or a designated representative makes a decision.

Step 7: The employee addresses the Commissioner of Administration requesting a hearing.

a. A grievance committee is formed to conduct a hearing, which submits a report to the employee's department and the employee's representative following the close of the hearing. (If the grievance is a result of a supervisor's mistake, the committee may order a copy of the decision rendered be placed in the supervisor's personnel file.)

Step 8: An appeal may to submitted to the Personnel Board following receipt of the grievance committee's report.

a. The Personnel Board reviews and affirms, modifies or vacates findings. The Board may conduct a hearing and then submits a report in the same manner as the grievance committee.

Inter-agency disputes are settled by the appointing authorities representing agencies involved in the disputed personnel action. Final decision on such matters may be made by the Commissioner of Administration.

C. Collective Bargaining Contracts

General Government Unit

GGU's contract sets out grievance procedures which supersede those in the personnel rules. The contract specifies the time limitations on filing grievances and subsequent responses. An employee must first bring a grievance to her or his supervisor, with or without GGU representation, for settlement (step 1). This step may be either verbal (informal) or written (formal) at the employee's discretion. If the dispute is not settled at the supervisor's level, the employee must present the dispute in writing to the division head, again with or without GGU representation (step 2).

If a settlement is not reached at step 2, an employee must seek GGU representation to pursue the grievance. The GGU representative presents an appeal to the Commissioner or head of the agency in question (step 3). Should a satisfactory decision still not be forthcoming, an appeal may be submitted to the Commissioner of Administration (step 4).

The final step is binding arbitration. Any grievance pertaining to the application or interpretation of GGU contract terms or an appeal of demotion or dismissal of an employee holding permanent status may be submitted to arbitration for settlement (step 5). The contract outlines arbitration procedures calling for an arbitrator from the U.S. Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service. Art. 10.

Supervisory Unit

The SU contract contains the same grievance procedures set out in the GGU contract. Art. 10.

Local 71

Local 71's contract provides grievance procedures similar to those outlined above. An employee initially files an appeal with the Steward, then with the executive head of the agency, and then with the Commissioner of Administration. Any grievance regarding the terms of the contract or the demotion or dismissal of a member may be brought to binding arbitration before an arbitrator from the U.S. Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service. Art. 13 and 14.

Confidential Unit

CEA's contract also provides similar grievance procedures. The last alternative for settling a grievance is through the Board of Arbitration before an arbitrator of the U.S. Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service. Unlike the contracts discussed above, the CEA contract does not provide limits to the application of grievance provisions. Art. 13.

Public Safety Unit

PSEA's contract sets forth varying levels to which an employee may carry grievance proceedings. Violations of the personnel rules or the operating procedures manual, involuntary transfers, written reprimands, and disciplinary grievances (except dismissal) of a probationary employee following the initial six month's of the term may be brought to the Commissioner of Administration for final decision. Grievances pertaining to discharge, suspension, demotion and disciplinary actions can be brought to binding arbitration when they are violations of the personnel rules, the operating procedures manual or contract terms. Art. 10(1).

Class grievances are initially submitted to the Commissioner of Public Safety. Art. 10(2). Time limitations are specified in PSEA's contract, as well as enumerated steps for settling grievances up to binding arbitration before a Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service arbitrator. Association grievances are filed with the Commissioner of Public Safety and may be brought to binding arbitration. Art. 10(5) and (6).

D. Summary

All of the collective bargaining contracts examined have grievance procedures superseding those set out in the personnel rules. The contracts generally outline five "steps" in which a grievance may be processed. The final step in all contracts is binding arbitration before an arbitrator from the U.S. Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service. Four contracts limit the scope of arbitration or to whom it is available (PSEA, GGU, SU, and Local 71), and one doesn't (CEA).

In comparing grievance procedures specified by contracts and the personnel rules, time frames do not appear to differ significantly. The personnel rules do not address binding arbitration, but union members must use the procedures outlined in their respective contracts for settlement of disputes.

XIII. HOURS OF WORK

A. Statutes

The Personnel Act states that the personnel rules shall provide for the hours of work for employees and the methods and procedures covering overtime work and pay, as well as for employees who work part-time at 15 hours or more a week, including two employees filling one permanent full-time position. AS 39.25.150(19), (20) and (24).

B. Personnel Rules

The appointing authority, with the Director's approval, is responsible for the establishment of reasonable working hours, which are not to be less than the minimum work week of 37½ hours. The normal work day consists of 7½ hours from 8:00 to 4:30, Monday through Friday. Overtime availability and compensation are subject to the policies established by the Commissioner of Administration. Holidays are enumerated in this section as well as the rules for following holidays and other rules and regulations that may be adopted by departments required to remain in operation on holidays. PR 7 07.0.

The equations for hourly, part-time and monthly rates are set out in the personnel rules. Part-time compensation is to be proportionate to the rates for full-time service, and actual time on the job is to be the basis for total remuneration. PR 9 03.0. Compensation for overtime may be in cash or in compensatory time off. A maximum of 300 hours of compensatory time may be accrued annually. Anything over that amount must be paid in cash, liquidated annually (unless the Commissioner of Administration approves an extension) and may be taken off when desired by the employee, with the appointing authority's approval.

C. Collective Bargaining Contracts

General Government Unit

GGU's contract states that the determination of employee eligibility for overtime must be in accordance with the Fair Labor Standards Act. A neutral hearing officer is appointed to determine such eligibility and has authority to make binding decisions. Normal working hours as specified by the contract are 37½ hours per week, and anything in excess of the normal week constitutes overtime, which is equalized among those employees who desire additional hours of work. However, it is recognized that the state does have the right to assign and require overtime when an individual's qualifications are necessary to accomplish a particular task. Art. 25(1) and (2).

Employees called back to work within four hours after completion of a shift are subject to recall provisions and the appropriate overtime rate, and employees remaining on call or those who must periodically report their whereabouts are entitled to standby provisions as designated in GGU's contract. Art. 25(3). Shift differentials and holiday provisions are set forth in the contract, which also limits the time an employee may be required to work to a maximum of 15 hours per day. Art. 25(4).

Supervisory Unit

The SU contract contains terms requiring the state's compliance with the Fair Labor Standards Act in determining eligibility for overtime and sets out holiday, standby, recall and shift differential provisions. Art. 18.

Local 71

Local 71's contract provides for overtime on both a daily and weekly basis. Regular working hours consist of 7½ hours per day and 37½ hours per week. Time and a half is paid for the first day worked in excess of 37½ hours, and double time is paid for overtime exceeding two or more days. An employee may not be required to work overtime, which is distributed evenly on the basis of seniority among those who desire it. Art. 22.

Shift differentials for swing and graveyard shifts, hazardous working conditions, recall and standby are provided for in 71's contract. Art. 23, Art. 24 and Art. 26(7) and (8). Working hours for members may be subject to certain variables such as tidal operations, a membership vote in favor of rotating multiple shifts or ferry travel time. Art. 26(2), (10) and (11). Holidays are also provided for in the contract. Art. 32.

Public Safety Unit

PSEA's contract addresses the special interests and functions of its members in regard to overtime and related topics. Provisions are made for shift differentials, holidays, Field Officer Training differentials, standby, recall, early call-in, interruption of vacation, flexible posts, hazardous conditions and sea duty. Art. 15. Members cannot be required to work in excess of 15 hours within a 24 hour period and are entitled to a minimum of 8 hours between shifts. Art. 16(4) and (6). The normal work week is set forth as 37½, and PSEA's contract provides that overtime will constitute hours exceeding 7½ per day. Art. 15(16).

Confidential Unit

CEA's contract states that the normal work week for members consists of 37½ hours, 7½ hours per day, Monday through Friday. Employee overtime eligibility is determined in accordance with the Fair Labor Standards Act guidelines for employees covered by the Act and by policy established by the Commissioner of Administration for those not covered. Holidays are specifically enumerated and the methods for following them. Clauses regarding recall, standby and the maximum hours that an employee may be required to work (16 hours within any 24 hour period) are contained in the contract. Art. 8.

D. Summary

All of the collective bargaining contracts studied contain provisions regarding the "normal" working hours for members (37½ hours per week and 7½ hours per day). Three contracts (PSEA, Local 71 and CEA) state that overtime consists of hours exceeding 7½ in any one day or 37½ in any week. Three contracts (GGU, SU and CEA) provide that overtime eligibility be determined in accordance with the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Guidelines are established by the contracts regarding shift differentials, standby, recall and other variables relating to employee working hours. Holidays are enumerated within each contract, which are identical to those set out in the personnel rules.

XIV. PAY

A. Personnel Rules and Statutes

The Director of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations has responsibility for the state's pay plan in accordance with AS 39.25.150(2), which states that the personnel rules shall provide for:

> the preparation, maintenance, revision, and administration by the director of personnel of a pay plan for all positions in the classified and partially exempt services; the pay plan shall be prepared after consultation with the appointing authorities or their designee, and with representatives of interested employee groups; the plan shall be based upon the position classification plan, shall provide for fair and reasonable compensation for services rendered, and shall be based on the principle of like pay for like work; commissioners' salaries are not the maximum limit for the pay plan and in exceptional circumstances higher salaries may be specified; the pay plan may provide for uniform starting pay, increments and area and time differentials; the pay plan prepared under this section may be amended, approved or disapproved by the legislature in regular or special session; after the pay plan is put into effect, no salary or wage payment may be made to a state employee covered by the pay plan unless the payment is in accordance with this chapter and the rules adopted under this chapter;

The application of the rules on pay depends upon funds being available. Various provisions within the rules address salaries for beginning, former, promoted, transferred and demoted employees; merit increases; hourly parttime and monthly rates as well as overtime compensation; compensatory time; and moving expenses (these topics are addressed in other portions of this study).

B. Collective Bargaining Contracts

All of the contracts negotiated with the state set wage schedules for their respective memberships and provide for cost-of-living adjustments based on the Anchorage Consumer Price Index for multi-year contracts.

Also incorporated in the contracts are clauses pertaining to compensation and variables such as geographic differentials, shift differentials, hazardous working conditions, subsistence, recall and standby. Each collective bargaining contract has provisions that are unique to the functions of its membership.

General Government Unit

GGU's contract states that members of the unit are to receive one and one-half their base salaries for hours exceeding 37½ per week. Employees called back to work within four hours after completion of a shift are entitled to overtime (recall), and those ordered to remain at home or to periodically report their whereabouts are entitled to receive 10% of their base salaries while assigned to a standby roster. Geographic and shift differentials are also included in computation of compensation of standby and recall. Art. 25(3). GGU members receive overtime pay for work on holidays and regular pay for holidays enumerated in the contract.

Supervisory Unit

SU's contract also addresses standby, recall, shift differentials for both swing and graveyard shifts, and hazard pay. Art. 18 and 19.

Local 71

Local 71's contract states that union members are entitled to time and one-half for the first day worked in excess of regular hours and two times their base salary for hours exceeding that limit. Any member working over 7½ hours per day is entitled to receive overtime. Art. 22. Shift differentials are provided to members for both swing and graveyard shifts at 3.75% and 7.5% of base salaries respectively. Art. 23. Members are entitled to hazard pay when working at excessive heights, handling explosives or traveling by helicopter. Art. 24. Provision is also made for standby and recall assignments. Art. 26(7).

Public Safety Unit

PSEA's contract provides members with additional compensation for shift differentials, field officer training differentials, geographic differential, standay, recall, early call-in and hazardous working conditions. Other miscellaneous provisions encompass the unique responsibilities of the union's membership.

Confidential Unit

CEA's contract provides that when members work swing or graveyard shifts, they are entitled to one or two step increases above normal pay ranges, respectively. Recall and standby service is defined, and payment for employee time is provided for by the contract. Art. 8.

C. Summary

Each collective bargaining contract contains a salary schedule for its membership and various provisions regarding compensation variables and overtime. Traditionally, salary negotiations are an integral part of the collective bargaining process and are emphasized by the provisions set forth in the contracts studied. There are many diverse factors that are taken into account regarding salaries, which have only been briefly noted above.

XV. CONCLUSION

There are, of course, many other provisions set forth in the five contracts studied relating to the interests of public employees. These topics (with the exception of leaves of absence, insurance, retirement, examination of records and moving expenses) are not addressed by either the Personnel Act or the personnel rules. They do, however, come under the category of "terms and conditions of employment", which are bargainable in accordance with the Collective Bargaining Act. AS 23.40.

The chart on the following page is designed to enumerate some of the additional topics addressed by the five collective bargaining contracts studied. It is by no means a comprehensive list of all provisions set out in the contracts.

I. OVERVIEW

A. Commission Creation

The Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act was created by the Second Session of the 10th legislature to study and refine the State Personnel Act and to address a number of issues about the personnel system, collective bargaining, and contract employees which were of concern to the legislature. Some of these issues had been identified by the Office of the Ombudsman in a letter to the Legislative Council, suggesting a comprehensive review of the personnel system, and by the Division of Legislative Audit in its report of January 27, 1977, on the Division of Personnel in the Department of Administration.

B. Commission Structure and Activities

Commission members were drawn from the legislature, the Department of Administration and the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations, public employees unions, the Ombudsman's office, the Human Rights Commission, the Legislative Affairs Agency and departmental program managers. An organizational meeting was held in Juneau on September 15, 1978, at which Senator Bill Ray was elected Chairman. At the October 3, 1978 meeting, Senator Ray appointed subcommittees to carry on the investigation of the commission. Ken Humphreys, Senior Policy Analyst from the Legislative Affairs Agency, was designated to provide research assistance to the commission. In November, the commission hired an administrative assistant and a secretary.

The commission divided its tasks among three subcommittees:

Classification, Certification & Recruitment, chaired by Senator Ray; Merit System/Collective Bargaining, chaired by Representative Thelma Buchholdt; and Categories of Employees, chaired by Representative Joseph McKinnon.

The Classification, Certification & Recruitment subcommittee was designated to consider whether Alaska should have a central personnel system or whether the system should be partially or fully decentralized. The topic included consideration of the problems of certification, recruitment, classification and pay, examinations, and equal employment opportunity. The subcommittee considered the personnel statutes, rules and the practices of the Division of Personnel and the other state departments and agencies.

The Merit System/Collective Bargaining subcommittee studied the relationship between the merit system and collective bargaining as well as problems in the structure of the agencies working in those areas.

The task of the Subcommittee on Categories of Employees was to examine the groups into which state employees are placed, particularly the category of temporary employees. Each of the subcommittees was directed to draft recommendations for consideration by the full commission.

Membership of the three subcommittees overlapped so that each of the subcommittees would be advised of the approach of the others and to insure that problems would not be ignored by one subcommittee on the assumption that another was addressing them.

The subcommittees and the commission held public hearings in Juneau, Anchorage and Fairbanks and solicited written testimony from those who were unable to attend the meetings. (A list of these meetings appears as Appendix A.) A total of 78 people testified about their experiences and concerns. The commission received 23 letters about problems in the personnel system, and was provided copies of the Department of Administration's "Tell Us Off Questionnaire". In addition, commission members submitted memoranda and position papers for consideration by the others.

A conference on Civil Service Reform was co-sponsored by the commission and the National Conference of State Legislatures' Project TRAIN. Representatives of the federal Office of Personnel Management (formerly the U.S. Civil Service Commission), and from the states of Minnesota and Wisconsin addressed commission members on civil service reform efforts in their respective jurisdictions, and Jean J. Couturier, a nationally recognized authority on public management programs, provided a wider view. The speakers participated with the commission members in work sessions as well as making formal presentations of their respective topics.

Some of the commission members participated in a walk-through of the classification process for new positions and the reclassification process for exising positions, to better understand the paper flow. The walk-through was arranged by Lynda McCurry, Personnel Officer of the Department of Labor and commission member. Ken Kareen, Deputy Director of the Division of Personnel and an alternate commission member, assisted in the walk-through with the help of his staff.

The commission learned of problems in the personnel system through the written and oral testimony presented and through the experiences and knowledge of its members, most of whom had dealt closely with various aspects of the system for a number of years. The public testimony presented was not always directed to the appropriate subcommittee, and care was taken to refer specific information and problems to the appropriate body.

In late January, the commission staff compiled the information received into issue summaries for each subcommittee, which then formed the basis for subcommittee work sessions. Recommendations from each of the subcommittees came before the commission for further review and discussion. Only those recommendations adopted by the full commission are presented in this report.

C. Conclusion

The commission has found the subject matter complex. Facets of the system interlock, making it more difficult to change one aspect without also addressing changes to the other aspects. We have only begun to meet the task set out in the resolution which created the commission. Accordingly, in addition to the recommendations included in this report, the commission requests that the legislature extend the life of the commission through June 30, 1980. The commission will then be in a position to present a comprehensive analysis of the state's personnel system and changes to make it more responsive, equitable and efficient.

II. MERIT SYSTEM/COLLECTIVE BARGAINING SUBCOMMITTEE

A. Overview of the Development of Collective Bargaining in Alaska

The State Personnel Act (AS39.25) was enacted in 1961, shortly after Alaska achieved statehood. No comprehensive revision of that act has taken place since that time, although the advent of public employee collective bargaining in 1972 profoundly and fundamentally affected the nature of the rules and regulations governing the conditions of employment of most of the state's employees.

The state's work force has grown substantially since 1961. Almost all of the classified employees belong to one of the unions representing state employees. (See Appendix B for a list of those unions.) Of the remaining employees, some are classified as partially exempt, subject to only some of the Personnel Act and Rules, and the rest are members of the exempt service, and not affected at all by the Act. Membership in the partially exempt and the exempt service is established by statute. AS39.25.110 and AS39.25.120. As of February 16, 1979, there were 9,723 state employees in the classified service and 748 state employees in the partially exempt service. Figures were not available on the number of employees in the exempt service.*

Initially, at statehood, none of the state's employees were unionized. In 1964, legislation was passed to permit state employees of the Division of Marine Transportation engaged in operating the state ferry system to negotiate with the Commissioner of Public Works concerning wages, hours, working conditions and other employment benefits. AS23.40.040.

In 1972, the Public Employment Relations Act (P.E.R.A., AS 23.40.070 - .260) was passed, extending collective bargaining rights to all state employees, as well as to employees of political subdivisions of the state, except to elected or appointed officials, teachers and non-certificated employees of school districts. AS23.40.080 and AS23.40.250 (5) and (6). The P.E.R.A. grants employee organizations the right to bargain on matters of wages, hours and other terms and conditions of employment. AS23.40.070(2). Terms and conditions of employment are defined as "the hours of employment, the compensation and fringe benefits, and the employer's personnel policies affecting the working conditions of the employees, but does not mean the general policies describing the function and purposes of a public employer". AS23.40.250(7).

In a recent case before the Alaska Supreme Court, marine transportation unions were held to be covered by P.E.R.A. as well as the marine transportation collective bargaining statutes, and therefore, one system now covers the state's collective bargaining. Hafling vs. Inlandboatmen's Union of the Pacific, No. 3438, 585 P.2d 870, October 6, 1978.

B. Summary of Issues Before the Merit System/Collective Bargaining Subcommittee

1. Structure of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations

The Division of Personnel and Labor Relations is responsible for the operation of the state's personnel system and for representing the state as an employer in collective bargaining matters. It is one of eight divisions within the Department of Administration. The others consist of the following: Division of Administrative Services, Division of Data Processing, Division of Finance, Division of General Services and Supply, Division of Pioneer's Benefits, Division of Retirement and Benefits, and the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity. In addition, the department contains the Office of the Internal Auditor.

The tasks of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations and the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity differ significantly from the kinds of tasks of the other six divisions within the department. The orientation of the other divisions is towards fiscal matters, and the commissioner of the department must be skilled in those areas. It is less likely that the commissioner will be selected because of his familiarity with labor relations, personnel administration and equal employment laws. The Director of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations must educate new commissioners on issues concerning the division's activities, and during this time, the governor is probably less well informed about these topics. Given the significant impact labor relations negotiations have on the state's budget, the commission felt this to be undesirable.

Two approaches were suggested to the subcommittee. The first was to divide the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations into two separate divisions within the Department of Administration, which would require additional funding for a director of labor relations. The second was to recommend the creation of a new Department of Employee Relations, to be headed by a commissioner with experience in labor relations and personnel administration. The subcommittee considered this second recommendation to be a better approach and requested that a draft bill be prepared for its consideration.

The functions of the new department would include administering the state personnel system, representing the state in its labor relations activities, coordinating safety and training programs for state employees and coordinating all executive branch activities involving equal employment opportunity in state government. The budget for the department would be provided by transferring the budgets of the existing divisions involved (Division of Personnel and Labor Relations and the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity) with the addition of funds for the positions of the new commissioner and perhaps a deputy commissioner.

The administration of the state personnel system and the representation of the state in its labor relations activities are the present responsibilities of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations. Those responsibilities would not change by the creation of the new department, though there would be two separate divisions instead of one division with two subdivisions.

Specific reference to coordinating safety programs for state employees is included in the duties of the new department because the commission was concerned that there is a need for oversight of training programs. Under the federal Occupational Safety and Health Act, the state is required to provide training for its employees in safety matters, but this requirement is not always met by the programs. Therefore, the commission plans that staff within the new department would monitor whether OSHA requirements were being met by the departments and would provide information on programs which might be of benefit to their employees.

The state's training programs also would benefit from general coordination which could be provided by the new department. Each department would continue to provide specialized programs, but the central office would make information available on programs of general interest and would provide technical assistance as requested. Having one central person in charge of coordination would help to insure that training programs which the state was required to provide (by union contract, for example) would take place.

The commission recognized that the efficiency and productivity of the state's employees depends in large part on the training they receive. For example, governmental accounting procedures differ significantly from procedures used in private industry or taught in college programs. Therefore, an introduction to the differences would make new state accountants more effective in carrying out their responsibilities. This same approach holds true for other areas as well. Training in supervisory and managerial skills would help insure the efficient management of the state's programs and improve employees' performance.

The Equal Employment Opportunity Division coordinates the state's equal employment opportunity programs, including gathering statistics on the work force, providing training to program managers and supervisors on equal employment opportunity issues, investigating and counseling on complaints of discrimination in state government, and monitoring contract compliance and the state Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action plans. In addition to this central EEO office, each department has its own EEO officer, who is responsible for providing information and counseling to employees within that department as well as for preparing and monitoring the departmental affirmative action plan. The departmental EEO officer typically has other duties which are of greater priority.

Placing the central Equal Employment Opportunity office as a division of the new Department of Employee Relations would insure effective communication between that division and the divisions of personnel and labor relations in the areas which affect equal employment opportunities for all Alaskans. It should hold the status of a division to reflect the importance of its recommendations and emphasize the state's committment to equal opportunity.

The commission also recommends that the adoption of Personnel Rules be made subject to the Administrative Procedures Act. A discussion of this recommendation follows.

In the proposal for a Department of Employee Relations, the commission does not address the issue of whether personnel functions should be centralized or decentralized. Considerable discussion has occurred on this topic, and the commission believes that more investigation is needed before it can decide the course it wishes to recommend to the legislature. Accordingly, the bill makes only peremptory amendments in the existing statute which addresses the decentralization of personnel functions to some departments. AS39.25.153. The commission will advise the legislature of its findings and recommendations on the centralization/decentralization issue at a later time.

2. Procedures for the Adoption of the Personnel Rules

By statute, the Personnel Rules are considered to relate to the internal management of state agencies and are therefore exempted from the Administrative Procedures Act. The Commissioner of Administration is required to post notices of proposed rule changes in public buildings throughout the state, and if requested, the Personnel Board may hold public hearings on the amendments. Unless the Board disapproves the proposals within 30 days, they become effective. AS39.25.140. Rules pertaining to dress codes and appearance standards adopted by departments are made subject to the provisions of the A.P.A. AS39.26.015.

Would the adoption of Personnel Rules under the A.P.A. add greater opportunity for public comment on proposed changes? This is a question for legislative scrutiny. The A.P.A. sets out procedures to provide for hearings and for legislative review on proposed rule changes. AS44.62.210 and 44.62.320. In an emergency situation, the Rules could be amended under the emergency rule provision which permits rules stated to be necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, safety or general welfare to take effect immediately. AS44.62.250.

There does not appear to be a need to differentiate the methods for adopting the Personnel Rules from the methods required of other state departments in the adoption of their regulations. Therefore, the majority of the commission recommends that legislation be adopted to provide that the Personnel Rules no longer be exempted from the Administrative Procedures Act.

3. Relationship of Collective Bargaining Contract Terms to Statutes and Personnel Rules

When adopted in 1961, the State Personnel Act, and the Personnel Rules promulgated under its authority, established the terms and conditions of employment for the entire classified service of the state. Since that time, collective bargaining has changed that situation dramatically.

As noted above, almost all of the state's classified employees are represented by public employee unions which negotiate with the state to establish the wages, hours and terms and conditions of employment which apply to their members. The standards of employment for most employees are contained in a multitude of uncoordinated documents--the collective bargaining contract, arbitration decisions interpreting the contract, the Personnel Act and Personnel Rules to the extent not superseded by the contract and departmental operating procedures.

The commission was advised by the Legislative Affairs Agency that amendments to the State Personnel Act which are adopted after the Public Employment Relations Act was passed would serve, to the extent that their intent so indicated, to limit the terms of future contract negotiations. (Opinion/Memorandum of March 9, 1979, by Ken Rosenstein, Legislative Counsel.)

The subcommittee discussed limiting the application of the State Personnel Act to employees not covered by collective bargaining. This would allow the Act and the Rules to be amended to establish a comprehensive and consistent system for those employees but would require that all union contracts include terms for all aspects of the employment practices of the state affecting union members. This needs more study.

Under the P.E.R.A., collective bargaining agreements, to be valid, must conform to the constitutional provision that merit principles govern employment of persons by the state. Article XII, Sec. 6 of the Constitution of the State of Alaska, and AS 23.40.070(3). If the Personnel Act is to apply only to non-union employees, then a policy statement must be adopted emphasizing that merit principles be complied with, and also providing that the parties would immediately renegotiate any terms failing to meet those standards. This also needs more study.

Such a provision would also be important because federal standards have the same requirements. In most cases, when the state receives federal money for the operation of a program, it makes a commitment that employees hired to operate the program, whether salary money is provided by state or federal funds, will be selected in accordance with merit principles. The federal government retains the right to demand the return of moneys awarded if the hiring system is not found to be in compliance. In the past, the state was forced to modify its certification of eligibles on the hiring registers in order to comply with federal requirements.

4. Membership and Duties of the Alaska State Labor Relations Agency, the Personnel Board and the Retirement Board

The Personnel Board is composed of three members appointed by the governor with confirmation by the legislature in joint session. The appointees must be qualified electors of the state, and there is a balance of two members from the same political party. They serve at the governor's pleasure and for a term of six years. AS39.25.060.

The Labor Relations Agency, for state employees, is the Personnel Board. For other public employees who are members of bargaining units, the Act sets the Department of Labor as the Labor Relations Agency unless the public employer has chosen to adopt its own labor relations system and established a different body for its labor relations agency. AS23.40.060(3).

The Public Employee Retirement Board is composed of five members, three of whom are the members of the Personnel Board of the Department of Administration. AS39.35.030.

The Labor Relations Agency generally is concerned with the organization of bargaining units and the recognition of labor organizations of public employees. It hears and decides complaints alleging that an employer or a labor organization has engaged in unfair labor practices. (Unfair labor practices are generally attempts to interfere with employee rights to organize or failure by either party to bargain in good faith.) It may appoint a mediator where negotiations between a public employer and an organization have deadlocked, either on its own initiative or at the request of any party to the dispute. It may adopt regulations in accordance with the Administrative Procedures Act. It may seek to enjoin strikes of employees whose right to strike is prohibited or limited by statute. AS23.40.

The Personnel Board approves or disapproves the original Personnel Rules and amendments to them, acts upon recommendations for the extension of the partially exempt and classified service, determines appeals by employees in the classified service and establishes its own rules of procedure. AS39.25.070. An employee may appeal to the Personnel Board if the employee has been dismissed, demoted or suspended for more than 30 working days in a 12-month period. The board may reinstate the employee if it finds that the action was taken for a political, racial or religious reason or in violation of Chapter 25 of the statutes or of the Personnel Rules. In all other cases, the board reports its findings and recommendations to both parties. AS39.25.170.

The Retirement Board oversees the operation of the Public Employee Retirement System of Alaska, sets policy, adopts regulations, acts as an appeal board, prescribes the interest rate credited to employee accounts each year and recommends contribution rates for public employees. AS39.35.040.

Testimony before the commission indicated that the Labor Relations Agency workload has increased substantially over the past few years. The Labor Relations Agency has no permanent staff, and relies on the employees of the Labor Relations Division for much of its supporting work. This places the Labor Relations Division in conflicting roles: first, as advocate for the state, and second, as impartial supporter of the Labor Relations Agency. This needs legislative action.

The Personnel Board (which consists of the same three members who form the Labor Relations Agency), in contrast, has a much lighter workload. The subcommittee is continuing to consider the issue, and the commission is not prepared, at this time, to offer recommendations for the legislature's consideration.

5. Inclusion of Non-certificated School District Employees Under the Public Employees Relations Act

The commission received testimony in support of permitting non-certificated school district employees the right to organize under the P.E.R.A. They are presently specifically excluded from the Act. AS23.40.240(5). The subcommittee has asked the Legislative Affairs Agency to provide it with copies of bills which were introduced in previous sessions. The commission is not prepared at this time to offer any recommendations on this matter to the legislature.

6. Merit Increases

The commission received testimony on the state's merit increase policy. The Personnel Rules provide that a merit increase of one step in the same salary range may be given to an employee who has received an overall performance evaluation of "acceptable" or better and who has demonstrated satisfactory service of a progressively greater value to the State. P.R.9 02.21 and 9 02.22. The commission has not investigated the extent to which two-step merit increases are granted.

The availability of merit increases to state employees is limited by collective bargaining agreements. Members of the general government unit of the APEA are not permitted under their contract to be considered for or to receive two-step merit increases. Members of Local No. 71 do not participate in the merit increase program at all.

In a memorandum dated November 14, 1977, Governor Hammond initiated changes in the procedures and funding of merit increases. All supervisors were required to attend a specialized training course in "Measuring Job Performance". Each performance evaluation was to be reviewed with the division director or the head of the office before it was discussed with the employee. Each position was to be reviewed and the position description updated, and specified standards of achievement were to be provided in writing to each employee on the basis of the updated descriptions.

For the past two years, funding for merit increases has been provided only out of departmental vacancy moneys. Departments no longer receive a separate allocation for that purpose. In the past, the legislature did provide an allocation amounting to 1.75% of the departmental budget to be used, together with any vacancy money, for merit increases to deserving employees.

Merit increases appear to be management's way of rewarding an employee for a job well done. They are proposed to serve a different function from cost-of-living increases or salary increases based on length of service. Public union bargaining sets general salary ranges. Some perceive the existence of both bargaining and the availabil ty of merit increases as a double dip for state employees. The existence of a merit increase program should be taken into account when salaries are negotiated and management holds down wage increases based on the possibility of this individual performance reward.

The foremost question is how to permit a system to reward those employees who are most productive, to encourage outstanding performance and to persuade the best state employees to remain in service with the state, while avoiding unjustified awards to employees who are good friends with their supervisors or to employees whose supervisors are uncomfortable with the obligation of evaluating their staff.

The dilemma presented is how to divide the limited funds available for state employees salaries. If cost-of-living adjustments required by contracts are funded, can the state afford to provide additional merit increase money as it did two years ago?

The commission discussed this issue at length. Because of the obvious complexity, it can make no recommendations to the legislature without further study.

III. Classification, Certification & Recruitment Subcommittee

A. Scope of the Subcommittee's Assignment

This subcommittee was assigned to review those topics within the classification process (by which the state assigns positions to salary ranges, titles and position control numbers), the certification process (through which applicants for positions are evaluated and placed on the state's lists of eligibles) and the recruitment process, as well as to consider whether the system should be decentralized to permit the user departments to take a greater role in those processes, and to review the auditing role of the Division of Personnel on the sum of these activities. In addition, the subcommittee heard testimony on problems concerning a variety of other issues. These issues are interlocking, and the commission was reluctant to change one piece of the puzzle without full consideration of the effect of that change on the other pieces. Therefore, the commission is continuing to consider these issues to develop recommendations to present to the legislature at a later date.

The processes which are described in the discussions below apply generally to state employees. However, they do not apply in all cases to all employees, since by collective bargaining agreements, other procedures have been adopted for members of some unions.

B. Summary of Issues Presented to the Classification, Certification & Recruitment Subcommittee

CENTRALIZATION OR DECENTRALIZATION OF PERSONNEL ADMINISTRATION

1. Centralization or Decentralization

A thread throughout many of the issues presented to the subcommittee is whether the personnel functions of the state should be centralized in the Division of Personnel or decentralized to the separate departments. Decentralization of the certifying of eligibles for unique job classes could result in more accurate classification of positions and evaluation of applicants and take less time than Division of Personnel now requires, leaving the Division with more time to handle the general job classes and fulfill its audit and service roles. The audit role would be more important under a decentralized system because there would be need of insuring consistency among departmental decisions.

Decentralization could result in confusion for applicants if there were no central locations for applying for jobs. However, the Division of Personnel could provide central information offices for applicants. These offices could be coordinated with Department of Labor's Job Service Centers to accept applications and forward them to appropriate departments.

On the other hand, it would be possible to centralize all departmental personnel officers by making them employees of the Division of Personnel. This might insure better communication between the Division and the departments, and better control by the Division over personnel decisions within the departments. Testimony was presented to the commission indicating that a centralized system could result in considerable friction between the Division and the department in question and that this friction could hinder the effectiveness of the personnel officer.

Some departments have statutory authority for hiring their own personnel officers who are also empowered to adopt regulations for those classes of employees which are unique to that department. The departments are: Highways, Fish and Game, Education, Labor and Health and Social Services. AS39.25.153. This statutory authorization is not extensively used, for a variety of reasons, and if the state were to adopt a more decentralized system, then some departmental personnel offices might require additional staff to handle the increased workload.

Further subcommittee meetings are planned for review of this issue and the departmental personnel officers will be invited to present their opinions on the matter before the commission prepares its recommendations.

CLASSIFICATION OF POSITIONS

2. Classification Process

The process used for classifying new positions differs little from the process used for reclassifying existing positions. Testimony has indicated and the commission finds that in some cases both are slow and cumbersome. The process includes:

a) Preparation of job descriptions (P402's) describing the duties of the position and justifying the requested title and salary range. For new positions, the P402 is prepared by the immediate supervisor of the position. For reclassifications, the present job holder typically prepares the form. This needs study.

b) Departmental review, which varies widely among departments.

c) Review and approval by the Division of Budget and Management, if the classification or reclassification requires an increase to departmental budget.

d) Classification study by the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations, including a comparison to similar positions in other departments, other states and in private industry if the position does not clearly fall into a particular classification. The Division then assigns a salary range, title and position control number. Attempted analogy of Alaska's problems with other states has been, at times, a controlling factor in reclassification with disparity of results.

While most time is spent in the classification study, the process of classifying positions can develop delays at any of these steps. The time required for reclassifications prompts some program managers to blanket apply for full-time positions and then hire temporaries with their full-time appropriation. This often leads to circumvention of the controls of the merit system.

The subcommittee discussed decentralizing this process. Classification of new positions and of existing positions could be done by the user department's personnel section. The department would prepare Budget and Management forms and submit them directly to the Division of Budget and Management for budget authorization. The Division of Personnel would be given a copy of the entire submittal and would have a limited time to approve or veto the proposed classification action. If no response were received from the Division within the time set, then the action would stand, subject to post-audit review, which would be limited to changing actions found to be contrary to established rule or law. Another suggested alternative is to allow an agency to only fill requested permanent positions with permanent employees.

This concept makes the classification time responsive to management at the departmental level, which can set priorities for action by its personnel section. Division of Personnel would retain an oversight role to insure consistency in classification standards throughout the state. This process could also be more responsive to applicants.

3. Division of Personnel Recommendations to Division of Budget and Management on Reclassifications

Testimony received by the commission indicates that the Division of Personnel evaluates and makes recommendations on proposed reclassifications only after the Division of Budget and Management has authorized funding for the changes.

Federal law requires that employees be paid on the principle of equal pay for equal work, as does state law. Under federal law, employees who have been underpaid may be entitled to back pay with interest and attorney's fees in case of litigation, if there is evidence of discrimination against a protected class.

The present system of approving reclassifications gives Budget and Management effective veto, in some instances, over reclassifications based upon the unavailability of funds to pay increased salaries. By written policy, the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations cannot begin work on any requests that will result in substantial budgetary impact without prior approval from the Division of Budget and Management. It is presumed that Budget and Management's decision is based on monetary considerations.

Therefore, reclassification requests which are not approved in advance by Budget and Management are not analyzed by the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations. The merit, or lack of merit, of the requests is never determined.

Consequently, Budget and Management is not fully informed of the need for the reclassification when it makes its decision. The priorities established for allocating available departmental funds will not reflect advice from the Division on the potential state liability under the equal wage and equal employment laws if the reclassification is not approved.

4. Structure of Classes of Positions

a) Consolidation of job clas ifications. At present, there are 1,600 job classifications in the state. Reducing the number could speed the classification process and could help to prevent some of the inequities in salaries assigned to different classifications. At the same time, the consolidation could help to develop rational career ladders within classes.

b) Minimum qualifications for positions. Testimony was presented that minimum qualifications for some positions over emphasize educational requirements, which then eliminate candidates who could perform the work satisfactorily but who lack the educational background specified. This is a particular problem for filling positions in the bush. On the other hand, one witness thought that more stringent educational standards should be required for social workers employed by the state.

The Vocational Substitution program requires establishment of vocational standards as alternatives for education or experience levels now required for non-professional occupational areas. Applicants will be placed on eligible lists for the vocational classification indicated on their applications, ranked by assessment of their technical ability and place of residence, without written examination. The purpose of the program is to establish a liberal system under which Alaskan residents not employed by the state may demonstrate their abilities and be hired.

c) Career ladders. Two alleged problems with career ladders were brought to the commission's attention:

1) In the Public Health Nurse class, there is no viable career ladder system. There are a number of PHN-I's in the state, only a handful of PHN-II positions and a few PHN-III positions. PHN-III's are itinerant health nurses, located in rural areas and traveling throughout a wide area. Nurses working as PHN-I's have no realistic opportunity of remaining in the state in their field and receiving a promotion to another job classification.

2) As reported to the commission, in the Chemist class, there was no position available to chemists just out of college. The Chemist I position requires the applicant to have a master's degree or one year of experience as a chemist. There was no typical entry-level chemist classification which required a college degree in chemistry and no additional experience.

CERTIFICATION

5. Certification Process

The process for certifying applicants and placing them on registers takes, in the majority of cases, from three to eight weeks. There are several components to this problem:

a) Open recruitment. The state's policy of open recruitment of applicants has led to a substantial increase in the number of applications submitted to the Division of Personnel. This increased workload has added to the time taken for evaluation, testing (where required) and placement on the register. The Legislative Auditor suggests in Recommendation No.2 of his report of January 27, 1977, that the Division should accept applications based on forecasted turnover of positions rather than continue accepting all applications submitted. The Division replied that the state would have to have a greater pool of employees before it could accurately forecast future staffing needs. The Division is now closing some classes.

Applicants are encouraged by the fact that the state has accepted an application and believe that there is a vacancy in that position. If no job interview occurs for a considerable time, the applicants become frustrated and feel that they are being unfairly treated by the Division of Personnel. On the other hand, if recruitment is closed for a period of time, then the state could not accept applications for any position within that classification. This could present a severe handicap, particularly for classes with a number of specialized positions.

b) Unreasonable departmental requirements. One applicant found the application process for the position of Correctional Officer I to be unduly cumbersome and overly technical. The Division of Corrections required that he be fingerprinted at a particular state office within a limited time, although there were other more convenient state locations for being fingerprinted. He was forced to take personal leave in order to meet the division's schedule.

c) Evaluation of applicant's experience. It can take longer for the Division of Personnel to evaluate an applicant's experience than to administer an examination, even though the testing process is lengthy. Testimony presented alleged that for unique job classes and for professional level positions, the personnel analyst in the Division may lack the knowledge of the field necesary to perform an accurate evaluation. If the responsibility for filling positions in unique job classifications were delegated to the user department, this problem would be avoided.

d) Location. The Division of Personnel has offices in Anchorage, Fairbanks and a central office in Juneau. The Juneau office is responsible for evaluation of all applications except those from Anchorage for certain job classifications. Mail delivery and frequent mail delays add to the time required for action on an application. Applicants in other locations do not have ready access to the person making the evaluation and therefore are less able to challenge the results, should they feel that the evaluation is incorrect. Decentralization should be considered.

e) Data Processing. The Legislative Auditor, in his report, recommended that the Division adopt an automated application processing system. The Division indicated in its response that progress was being made on the implementation of that system. The Auditor also recommended that files be kept by social security number and that employee records should be automatically interfaced with the Payroll Section for immediate and constant updating. The Division replied that because of considerable public and legislative concern about the expanding use of social security numbers as identity numbers, a social security based filing system did not appear advisable.

As the discussion indicates, these issues will be affected by whether the state moves to a more decentralized or more centralized personnel system.

6. Multiple Applications within a Job Series

The Division of Personnel now requires an application for each job classification within a series. Applicants are therefore required to file several applications and to take several tests if they wish to apply for different levels within the series. In most cases if an applicant can pass the higher level test, he or she should automatically qualify for the lower level positions within that series.

For example, accountants must take different examinations for the different levels within the accounting field. The Division of Personnel has found that giving multiple examinations within a job series is necessary since different levels of a series may require different kinds of skills. Furthermore, performance on an examination for one level does not accurately predict the applicant's performance on an exam for a different level.

7. Veteran's Preference Points

One witness testified that he and his subordinate each applied for a vacancy outside the classification series of their present positions, but closely similar to them. His subordinate received the job because he was slightly higher on the register as a result of the five points added to his score because he was a veteran.

Upon entry into state service, the Personnel Act provides for the granting of preference to veterans. In determining the qualification of applicants for entrance into the classified service under the merit system examination, five points are added to the passing grade of a veteran and ten points are added to the passing grade of a disabled veteran. AS39.25.150(23). The commission is considering alternatives.

8. Promotional Lists

Because the state's policy is to fill vacancies from promotional lists whenever possible, applicants who are on the competitive (rather than the promotional) registers may never be considered for vacancies. This may lead to the applicant on the competitive register becoming frustrated with the state's hiring system.

9. Hiring from the List of Eligibles (Registers)

a) Currentness of lists. Both program managers and applicants have concerns about the lists of eligibles. Program managers have found that some eligibility lists are not current. This occurs sometimes because of regional preferences of applicants and sometimes because the applicant has become unavailable for work or has accepted another position with the state and is no longer seeking the same level of placement.

An applicant may remain on an eligibility list for a period of two years. There are procedures for supervisors to indicate that an eligible should be removed from the register, but apparently, there is some confusion about how to do so. The Division of Personnel puts a lower priority on updating the eligible list for this kind of information.

b) Qualifications of top five applicants on registers compared with qualifications of those following. For registers with a large number of applicants, the top five eligibles may not be significantly more qualified than those who follow. Federal regulations used to require that the state hire from the top five interested eligibles for programs funded by federal money, but federal civil service reforms have expanded the alternatives.

Some of those alternatives were listed in a memorandum on Merit Systems in Other Jurisdictions prepared for the commission by Ken Humphreys, Senior Policy Analyst with the Legislative Affairs Agency:

1) Rule of the list. Under this method, eligibles are certified on a pass/fail basis. All who pass are certified as eligible for appointment. This is the most open alternative.

2) Zone or category scoring. Individuals are ranked within specified ranges. Such categories might be called outstanding, well qualified, qualified and not qualified. Selections would be from the highest category unless the number of eligibles in it fell below a certain level, in which case the next category would become eligible. This is the method under the new federal law. It is worth noting that zones or categories may be tailored to suit different job classes.

3) Block scoring. All candidates within a specified block of scores are certified.

4) Rule of ___. Any arbitrary number such as one, seven or ten may be inserted. The Classification, Certification and Recruitment Subcommittee has recommended that the state move toward a block scoring system. The full commission will study this recommendation.

c) Interviews for top five applicants. Departments are required to hire within the top five on the register (except where they can justify not doing so) but they are not required to interview each applicant within the group.

Supervisors may be prejudiced against an applicant because he or she has been on the register for a considerable length of time, and be less willing to hire him or her for that reason. The failure to interview all of the members of the group rewards those who are aggressive in seeking interviews with program managers and those who are in the location in which there is a vacancy. A prospective employer should have more knowledge of an applicant after an interview than he or she could glean from reading the written application.

The Department of Administration has indicated that they will prepare regulations for a pilot project to require that all of the top five interested applicants have an opportunity for a meaningful interview before a position is filled. The interviews should be scheduled long enough in advance to insure that the applicant will receive notice and be able to attend. The commission believes that this is an item specifically for legislative intent. Supervisors may wish to ask departmental staff in the applicant's area to conduct the interview, if the applicant prefers not to travel to the office with a vacancy. Interviews might also be conducted by telephone. Either of these methods is less desirable than an interview between the applicant and the person hiring.

The applicant would be responsible for any transportation costs to the interview.

10. Criminal Records of Applicants

The application form for state employment asks applicants to indicate whether they have been convicted of a felony within the past ten years. Federal law may now prohibit requiring that an applicant respond to that question. The only way to check the truth of an applicant's response, should one be provided, is to make a personal complaint with the Department of Public Safety.

Some commission members believe it is important for the state to know whether an applicant has a criminal record when filling a position where prior criminal activity may be relevant to the duties involved. For example, knowledge of a prior conviction of embezzlement would be relevant when considering an applicant's qualifications for a position which provides access to funds or supplies.

AUDITS OF THE PERSONNEL SYSTEM AND PRACTICES

11. Auditing Role of the Division of Personnel

The Division of Personnel should increase its review of personnel actions taken by departments, so that abuses of the personnel system would decrease. Testimony has indicated that one of the major areas of abuse is in departmental hiring practices. In order to avoid unfair treatment of those individuals hired through improper departmental actions, the Division should be able to insure that it learns of improper actions promptly. Applicants for state employment should be provided with the name of the person whose duty it is to investigate and resolve abuses.

12. Audits of the Personnel System

The subcommittee considered whether to propose annual audits of the personnel system similar to the audit performed by the Division of Legislative Audit in 1977. An annual audit would reveal problems within the system, and would provide the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations with information about its performance. It could also serve to focus attention on misconceptions of the personnel system and serve to identify need for education about the personnel processes. The subcommittee was advised that the staff of the Division whole-heartedly supports a regular audit program.

The subcommittee was convinced that any audit should be non-political and should be performed considering standards which are valid for the conditions in Alaska. The scope should be defined to make the task manageable and useful. It was agreed that some provision should be made for audits to evaluate the effectiveness of the commission's recommendations, as well as the effectiveness of the personnel system as a whole.

While supporting the concept of annual audits, the commission has not yet defined who should perform the audit, what the scope should be, nor to whom the auditor should report. Therefore, the commission makes no recommendation on that issue at this time.

13. Disciplinary Measures for Violations of the Personnel Rules

There is no workable system to penalize supervisors who circumvent the Personnel Rules or who disobey equal employment opportunity laws in the decisions they make. In the Prohibitions and Penalties section of the Personnel Rules, there is a provision making any person who violates the Rules guilty of a misdemeanor and providing that any state employee who is convicted of that misdemeanor shall immediately forfeit his office or position. P.R.13 18.0. This is an unenforceable remedy, and therefore likely never to be used. An acceptable alternative needs to be formulated.

JOB PERFORMANCE

14. Training Programs

The Division of Personnel has limited staff to provide training programs to state employees. Training needs should include introduction to new state employees of the state's required procedures, EEO and Affirmative Action information, better management practices, introductory budget and financial management information to non-fiscal program managers, explanation of the state's personnel system, classification and reclassification processes and standards, the hiring system, labor relations information and the like.

One problem identified was the reluctance of supervisors to fire unsatisfactory employees. This reluctance may result from the lack of training in the state's standards, processes and some skill developments. But there may be other obstacles which training will not address.

15. Flex Time

Flex time is a system in which employees' hours are staggered so that not all arrive or depart at the same time, though each employee must work a full shift. The use of flex time is a way of responding to individual employee needs while also better meeting the public's need for services during lunch hours and after state offices are normally closed. Experience has shown that having people work at odd times can result in unions demanding extra pay for those hours, increasing the personal service costs to the state. The state permits departments to implement flex time programs, but this option is not widely practiced. The commission recommends that the legislature urge the executive branch to increase the availability of the use of flex time to state employees.

16. Use of Employees in Tasks Above Job Specifications

Supervisors are unwilling to document the performance by their staff of duties above the job classification to which an employee is assigned. This denies the employee credit for work done--either when being considered for promotion or for employment elsewhere--as well as for extra pay for the task in question. The procedures available for documenting work above grade should be fully implemented.

THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT AND PERSONNEL RULES

17. The State Personnel Act

As discussed in the section on the summary of issues before the Merit System/Collective Bargaining Subcommittee, the Personnel Act has not been comprehensively revised since its adoption, although circumstances have changed substantially since then.

ALASKA LEGISLATURE SPECIAL COMMITTEE / SUBJECT FILE 8672

In addition, the Act itself is poorly structured, and modifications and exceptions to the Act are spread throughout the rest of the statutes. There is need for a comprehensive recodification. Because of the complexity of the question, the Blue Ribbon Commission has not, within the time constraint, been able to consider this issue fully, and therefore can make no recommendation on this matter. We request more time so that we may complete the formulation of additional concepts.

18. The Personnel Rules

In addition to the method by which the Rules are adopted (see discussion above in the Merit System/Collective Bargaining Subcommittee Summary, page 11), there are a number of other problems with the Personnel Rules. Little attempt has been made to cross index the Rules with the several bargaining unit agreements nor are the Rules comprehensive in setting out the topics which they do address. For example, there is no specific rule on whether temporary employees may use the appeal procedures established in Rule 12. The Division has, by analogy, reasoned that temporaries may not use those procedures since probationary employees are forbidden access under the Rule on dismissal during the probationary period, P.R.6 04.0, and since temporary employees have fewer rights generally than do probationary employees.

Personnel Rules are in some instances vaguely drafted, leading to conflicting applications by different departments, and to inconsistent treatment of state employees, depending only on which department they work in. In some cases, it would be reasonable to set out those limits statutorily.

The commission has not considered this issue extensively. Given the changes to the Rules which may result from future commission recommendations, a decision on this issue will be made at a later time.

IV. Categories of Employees Subcommittee

A. Overview of the Categories of Employees in the State System

In addition to three classes of service (classified, exempt and partially exempt), the state has six categories of employees. Provisions for those categories are set out in the Personnel Rules, and some of the union contracts modify those provisions. The six are: permanent (either full-time, part-time or seasonal), probationary, provisional, temporary, emergency, and short-term. The subcommittee focused its attention on the temporary category, although recognizing a need to later consider contract employees and to consider whether positions in the partially exempt service should be removed to the classified service.

The discussion of the issues following is limited to temporaries in the classified service, although much of what is said would pertain to tnose in the partially exempt service as well.

B. Temporary Employees

A temporary position is one which is established with an anticipated duration of less than six months. P.R. 1. That period may be extended by the director in extenuating circumstances. Appointments are not required to be made from the registers, but are directed, when practicable, to be done in that manner. P.R.5 06.0. Some departments have adopted internal procedures to require that this policy be followed (Health and Social Services, and recently Natural Resources). Time served as a temporary does not count as part of an employee's probationary period (P.R.6 02.6), nor are temporaries eligible to receive most of the benefits provided to permanent employees.

The terms governing the employment of temporaries by the state have been modified in some of the contracts negotiated with public employee unions. Specific reference is made to some of those modifications in the discussion of the issues before this subcommittee.

C. Summary of Issues Before the Categories of Employees Subcommittee

1. Hiring Temporary Employees from the Register

Although the Personnel Rules require that temporary appointments shall, when practicable, be made from the eligible lists, (P.R.5 06.0), most of the temporary employees who testified before the commission were not hired from the registers. Requiring departments to abide by the rule and to hire temporaries from the registers could eliminate some of the abuses associated with temporary hiring practices. Abuses include hiring people who would not meet the minimum qualifications of vacant permanent positions so that they can develop minimum qualifications and be placed in the position; hiring people from out of state as temporaries so that they can establish residency and be placed in permanent positions; and using the temporary period to add to the probationary period of permanent employment.

Hiring from the register takes some time. Steps include request for and receipt of the register from the Division of Personnel; notification to eligibles on the register of the vacancy; inter-department they work in. In some cases, it would be reasonable to set out those limits statutorily.

The commission has not considered this issue extensively. Given the changes to the Rules which may result from future commission recommendations, a decision on this issue will be made at a later time.

count as part of an employee's probationary period (P.R.6 02.6), nor are temporaries eligible to receive most of the benefits provided to permanent employees.

C. Summary of Issues Before the Categories of Employees Subcommittee

1. Hiring Temporary Employees from the Register

Although the Personnel Rules require that temporary appointments shall, when practicable, be made from the eligible lists, (P.R.5 06.0), most of the temporary employees who testified before the commission were not hired from the registers. Requiring departments to abide by the rule and to hire temporaries from the registers could eliminate some of the abuses associated with temporary hiring practices. Abuses include hiring people who would not meet the minimum qualifications of vacant permanent positions so that they can develop minimum qualifications and be placed in the position; hiring people from out of state as temporaries so that they can establish residency and be placed in permanent positions; and using the temporary period to add to the probationary period of permanent employment.

Hiring from the register takes some time. Steps include request for and receipt of the register from the Division of Personnel; notification to eligibles on the register of the vacancy; interviews of those interested in the position; and selection from among the applicants. In some instances, program managers may not be able to leave a position vacant for the length of time required.

2. Time Limits on Employment of Temporaries

The Personnel Rules provide that temporary employees can be employed in one position for a maximum of six months, with extensions possible in extenuating circumstances. P.R.5 06.0. Union contracts modify that rule. Local No. 71 members receive a wage supplement of $1.32 per hour for the first 120 days of temporary service. If the period is extended beyond that time, then they are entitled additionally to shift from the entry-level wage step into the higher level step. The union must agree to the extension beyond the first 120 days. The APEA collective bargaining contract limits employment of its members as temporaries to six months and restricts extensions.

The six-month term is seen as excessively long by some. It invites departments to use temporary employees instead of hiring permanent full-time, part-time or seasonal employees, and permits them to evade the merit system established for hiring permanent employees.

On the other hand, some temporary employees and some program managers see the term as inadequate. The time required to establish a new position can cut into the time available for completion of a project, so managers may have no choice but to hire temporaries. If the project lasts longer than six months, then the manager is forced to train a new employee in the middle of the work. One witness suggested that some of the time required for implementa-count as part of an employee's probationary period (P.R.6 02.6), nor are temporaries eligible to receive most of the benefits provided to permanent employees.

The terms governing the employment of temporaries by the state have been modified in some of the contracts negotiated with public employee unions. Specific reference is made to some of those modifications in the discussion of the issues before this subcommittee.

C. Summary of Issues Before the Categories of Employees Subcommittee

1. Hiring Temporary Employees from the Register

Although the Personnel Rules require that temporary appointments shall, when practicable, be made from the eligible lists, (P.R.5 06.0), most of the temporary employees who testified before the commission were not hired from the registers. Requiring departments to abide by the rule and to hire temporaries from the registers could eliminate some of the abuses associated with temporary hiring practices. Abuses include hiring people who would not meet the minimum qualifications of vacant permanent positions so that they can develop minimum qualifications and be placed in the position; hiring people from out of state as temporaries so that they can establish residency and be placed in permanent positions; and using the temporary period to add to the probationary period of permanent employment.

Hiring from the register takes some time. Steps include request for and receipt of the register from the Division of Personnel; notification to eligibles on the register of the vacancy; inter-tion of a new program could be avoided if the legislature requested that departments present P402's for all positions created by a new program at the same time that the budget for the program was being considered.

3. Project Employees

It is difficult to plan for permanent positions in programs funded through federal grants whose receipt is not guaranteed from year to year. Program managers are not authorized to fill those positions until after funding is definite. This leads to the employment of temporaries in those positions. An alternative would be to create a new category for project employees. The employees would understand that their employment would be dependent upon continued receipt of funds for the project.

4. Benefits for Temporary Employment

Of the benefits provided to permanent employees by the state, temporary employees in the classified service are entitled to receive only holiday pay and unemployment insurance. Temporaries are not eligible for court leave, administrative leave, personal leave, or retirement benefits. Even if a temporary employee is subsequently placed in a permanent position, he or she does not receive retroactive credit towards either retirement or, in most cases, seniority.

Temporary employment does not entitle employees to be placed on promotional registers. The state's merit system provides a policy favoring filling positions by promotions. This would appear in some cases to penalize temporary employees who may have worked for a substantial period of time for the state.

If temporary employees did, in fact, work only for a short time in one position, then it might be inappropriate for the state to provide leave benefits. Temporaries would then be hired only where there were deadlines that could not otherwise be met, and if they were out on leave, the department would have to pay not only their salary, but also the salary of a second replacement temporary.

Because the state does not have to pay for as many fringe benefits to temporaries as it does for permanent employees, it is cheaper for departments to hire temporaries. Program managers may therefore leave permanent positions vacant and hire temporaries instead so as to be able to increase the staff available to work on a project. For the same reason, departments may use temporary employees instead of permanent seasonal employees for recurrent seasonal needs. Some departments have a substantial number of such employees and would probably need a supplemental appropriation to fund benefits if they made use of the permanent seasonal category.

The Local No. 71 collective bargaining agreement addresses the lack of benefits provided to temporary employees. Members who are working as temporaries receive a wage supplement of $1.32 per hour for the first 120 days of work in a temporary position. After the 120 days, they shift from the entry level wage step into a higher level wage step, and they continue to receive the supplement.

5. Vacant Permanent Positions

The legislature reviews the number of vacant PCN's when it considers a department's budget request. In some instances, those PCN's which have been vacant for more than six months are removed from the budget, unless the department can justify the delay in hiring. There is evidence that despite this policy, a number of PCN s are remaining vacant for several years, although funds are made available to departments to fill them. Departments use this money to hire temporaries instead of permanent employees.

6. State Employees who are Enrollees of the CETA Program

The state placed employees who are enrolled in the CETA (Comprehensive Employment and Training Act) program in the temporary employee category. This placement creates some problems, both for CETA's working under Titles II and VI and for CETA's working in SCSEP (Senior Community Service Employment Program). The objective of CETA is to provide employment opportunities for underemployed and disadvantaged groups of people in the state.

a) SCSEP. The federal regulations for the SCSEP program provide that an enrollee may work for a maximum of 1,300 hours in a year. No enrollee may be required to work more than 30 hours per week, although he or she may choose to work the full hours of a normal work week. The state may not set a time limit in conflict with these provisions. Therefore, the six-month limit placed on temporary employment appears to be in violation of the program rules. However, extensions are available.

As temporary employees, SCSEP enrollees do not receive the leave, retirement, or health insurance benefits provided to permanent employees. Federal regulations require that all enrollees of an employer receive the same benefits and that those benefits be comparable to the benefits provided to other employees within the same category. The state meets that requirement, since all temporary employees are treated equally. If the state placed SCSEP employees in the permanent category, whether in the classified or the partially exempt service, then the state would be obligated to provide them with all the benefits which it provides to permanent employees.

As a result of being placed in the classified service, SCSEP employees are members of the bargaining units in which they are placed. Therefore, the union contract provisions apply to them. The APEA contract establishes a minimum wage which the state must meet, and this provision applies equally to SCSEP members as to all other members of the bargaining unit. The union contract and federal regulations of the program forbid the state to work members in tasks above their classification. Placement within the partially exempt service would remove the SCSEP employees from collective bargaining units. In addition to removing them from union oversight, the employees would lose access to the grievance procedures provided in the union contract. As temporary employees, or as partially exempt employees, they would not have access to the dispute resolution procedures set out in the Personnel Rules (P.R. 12) and in order to meet the requirements of the federal regulations governing the program, the state would have to develop some new mechanism of dispute resolution for this group.

Because the goal of the SCSEP program is to promote the useful part-time employment of economically disadvantaged persons who are 55 years or older, the normal state selection procedures for employees have to be modified for the program enrollees. However, those employed by the state must, in addition to meeting the eligibility standards, meet the state's minimum requirements for the job class in which they are hired. If they were placed in the classified service as permanent employees, special registers would have to be developed for SCSEP positions, containing only applicants who both meet the program's and the state's selection criteria. Placement in the partially exempt service would mean that enrollees would not have to be hired from the state's registers nor meet minimum qualification standards and would avoid this difficulty.

b) Other CETA programs. The federal regulations implementing the CETA program set the maximum salary which the federal government will provide for an enrollee. Prior to October 1, 1978, that limit was set at $10,000 per year, or approximately $833 per month. The maximum has been changed to reflect the higher cost of living in Alaska and is now $19,880 per year or about $1,656 per month. The state may supplement that amount, should it wish to do so. The state is expected to maintain an average salary for all CETA's in Titles II and VI of no more that $14,314 per year. Testimony was presented on the experience of one CETA enrollee working at a correctional center. She indicated that she was doing the same work as the Correctional Officer I's employed at the institution, but that they were not part of the CETA program and therefore received significantly higher wages than she did. She knew of an instance where a CETA enrollee was supervising a non-CETA state employee who was much higher paid than the supervisor.

Other testimony presented to the commission has indicated that the state is relying on CETA enrollees to provide essential state services in a number of programs. This reliance, while economical in that CETA salaries are paid from federal monies, may cause serious disruption to those programs in the event that CETA funds become unavailable. There is some question of whether state practices are in full compliance with federal CETA regulations.

7. Due Process Rights for Temporary Employees

Under the Personnel Rules, temporary employees have only a limited right to pursue grievances. The grievance procedures set out in Rule 12 are available to "any employee occupying a position in the classified service who has a grievance relating to his position, working conditions or employment over which the Executive Head of his department may lawfully exercise discretion". However, Rule 6 04.0 limits the rights of probationary employees to appeal or have a hearing for dismissal, except where the dismissal was due to discrimination based on race, color, sex, religion, national origin, or political beliefs. The Division of Personnel has reasoned that temporary employees have less status than probationary employees, and that therefore if probationary employees' right to appeal adverse decisions is limited, then the right of temporary employees must also be limited.

The Personnel Board appeals procedure set out in AS39.25.170

has been administratively construed to apply to employees having a permanent status, rather than a probationary status, except in cases where dismissal of a probationary employee is due to racial, religious or political discrimination. Whaley vs. State, 438 P.2d 718 (1968). Therefore, it is probably also unavailable to temporary employees.

Under collective bargaining agreements, the right of temporary employees to use the grievance procedures is limited as well. In the past, APEA did pursue grievances for temporary employees within their bargaining unit. However, the Division of Personnel began, about a year ago, to hold the association to the letter of the agreement. Under language that had been in the contract since at least 1973, the definition of employee did not include temporary employees.

Art. 1, Sec. 2(c) "Employee" in this Agreement means a person in the state service who is paid a salary or wage and holds probationary, permanent, or provisional status.

Grievances were defined as "any controversy or dispute arising between APEA or an employee of the bargaining unit and the Employer." Article X, Section 1. Given the language, an arbitrator upheld the Division's position that grievance rights were not available to temporary employees, even though that language had not been challenged by the department in previous grievances on the behalf of temporaries within the unit.

The Local 71 contract provides that temporary employees have the right to grieve on violations of contract terms and penalty pay, but that only permanent or probationary employees have a right to arbitration procedures.

8. Pool of On-call Permanent Employees as an Alternative to the Hiring of Temporaries

The state could develop a pool of skilled, permanent employees who would be on call to the various departments to fill in during vacations and to be available during unexpected vacancies or periods of peak work. The departments would have to work with the Division of Personnel to identify which classifications are used enough to benefit from a pool. Certainly, clerical needs could be filled from a pool, and perhaps accounting. Some of the positions in the pool could be set aside for people interested in working part-time.

SENATE BILL NO. 253

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

ELEVENTH LEGISLATURE - FIRST SESSION

A BILL

For an Act entitled: "An Act relating to the hiring of non-permanent employees in the state personnel system; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

* Section 1. LEGISLATIVE FINDINGS AND INTENT. The legislature finds and declares that certain inconsistencies and abuses in the hiring of employees in the state personnel system have jeopardized the integrity and efficiency of the merit system as well as the morale of employees. The legislature intends to curb the widespread administrative practice of using non-permanent state employment to evade departmental accountability and mask poor planning. The legislature further intends that non-permanent employees be used only to the extent that it is impractical to meet the need with permanent employees and that the burden of proof shall fall upon the department or agency which proposes non-permanent hire.

* Sec. 2. AS 39.25.150(9) is amended to read:

(9) non-permanent [TEMPORARY] appointments to positions in the state service in accordance with AS 39.25.195 - 39.25.200 [WHICH ARE DETERMINED TO BE OF A SEASONAL OR TEMPORARY NATURE];

* Sec. 3. AS 39.35.680(21)(C)(iii) is amended to read:

(iii) casual or [,] emergency [OR TEMPORARY] workers or non-permanent employees as defined in AS 39.25.200;

* Sec. 4. AS 39.25 is amended by adding new sections to Article 6 to read:

Sec. 39.25.195. APPOINTMENT OF NON-PERMANENT EMPLOYEES. (a) An individual may not be appointed as a non-permanent employee in the state

(3) the need for the non-permanent employee is not urgent and could reasonably have been anticipated and met by the appointing authority through the creation and filling of a permanent position.

(e) To insure compliance with the intent of this section the director may require a department or agency to obtain prior approval for emergency appointments.

(f) The director shall adopt regulations implementing this section. The regulations shall include consideration of the need for timely substitution for permanent employees on medical or personal leave and other situations in which the appointment of an emergency or permanent employee would be inappropriate and when delay in hiring would cause serious disruption.

(g) A work assignment may not be performed by a non-permanent employee for more than 120 calendar days in a 12-month period. A non-permanent employee may not be employed by any one department for more than 120 calendar days in a 12-month period. In extraordinary circumstances the director may authorize an extension of the limit imposed by this subsection if he finds that there is an urgent need for the extension. The limit imposed by this subsection does not apply to program or project employees.

(h) The director shall present a report on non-permanent and emergency hire practices in state government to the legislature within the first 10 days of each regular legislative session. The report shall include information on the number of non-permanent employees authorized under this section and the number of emergency employees hired in each department, a description of the procedures used in authorizing the hiring of non-permanent employees, and any recommendations for legislation required to implement the intent of this section.

Sec. 39.25.197. TERMINATION OF NON-PERMANENT EMPLOYEES. When the director determines that a non-permanent employee has been appointed in violation of AS 39.25.195, he shall immediately notify the appointing authority in writing and the appointing authority shall immediately terminate the non-permanent employee from state service.

Sec. 39.25.198. CIVIL LIABILITY. An appointing authority who violates AS 37.25.195 is liable in a civil action to an individual terminated under AS 37.25.197 as a result of that violation. The damages recoverable under this section are presumed to be three times the gross monthly salary at which the non-permanent employee was hired by the appointing authority.

Sec. 39.25.200. DEFINITIONS. In AS 39.25.195 - 39.25.200,

(1) "director" means the director of the division of personnel and labor relations;

(2) "emergency employee" means an employee appointed for a period not to exceed 30 calendar days, whose appointment was made under conditions requiring immediate action to carry on work that is required in the public interest;

(3) "non-permanent employee" means a person who is employed in state service in a position which is not in the exempt or partially exempt service and who is not a permanent or an emergency employee;

(4) "permanent employee" means an employee who has been appointed to an authorized, permanent part-time or permanent seasonal position in the classified service and who is in the process of completing or has successfully completed the required probationary service in that position;

(5) "program or project employee" means a non-permanent employee who is employed in state service with prior written understanding that employment in that position will continue for at most the duration of a specified program or project which is not a regular and continuing function of a department or agency and which has an established probable date of termination.

* Sec. 5. This Act takes effect September 30, 1979.

SUMMARY OF RECOMMENDATIONS

The Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act recommends that:

1. The merit principles identified during the state constitutional debates should be specifically set forth in the State Personnel Act. These principles are fundamental to fair employment and should be recognized and adopted. (Page 11)

2. If any positions are removed from collective bargaining units, that they remain in the classified service but be prohibited from collective bargaining activity. (Page 15)

3. The legislature should re-examine the placement of positions in the exempt and partially exempt services. Where necessary, statutes should be amended to correct any errors identified. (Page 17)

4. If the legislature wishes to increase its role in the collective bargaining process, it do so by formally considering and approving or rejecting the agreements entered into between the bargaining units and the employer before they take effect. The agreements would be presented to the legislature by a specified date. The legislature would then be required to consider and act on the agreements within 30 days. The law should state that the legislature could not adjourn before having acted. If the agreements were ratified by the legislature, they would become binding contracts. (Page 18)

   The legislature consider only the monetary terms of the collective bargaining agreements. (Page 19)

5. An alternative system be developed to reward outstanding employees if the legislature decides to limit eligibility for the merit increase program. (Page 23)

6. Cost of living adjustments be considered on an annual basis to determine whether across-the-board increases or percentage increases are more appropriate based on the current economic situation. (Page 24)

7. Legislative Audit Division review the membership and the functions of the Personnel Board, the Labor Relations Agency and the Public Employee Retirement System Board and report to the legislature on the results of its audit. (Page 26)

   The commission finds that the Labor Relations Agency can work satisfactorily within its present staff and structure as long as its members are, and continue to be, completely neutral and the workload of the agency does not substantially increase. (Page 26)

8. The commission continues to support the elevation of personnel and labor relations to departmental rank. In addition, as an interim measure, the commission recommended to the Department of Administration that the department be restructured into two major divisions, one for personnel related matters, and the other for administrative matters, each division to be headed by a Deputy Commissioner. The department has recently initiated steps to accomplish this reorganization. (Page 28)

9. The legislature direct the Division of Budget and Management to immediately prepare and distribute a procedures manual to assist personnel officers and other managers in understanding the process of authorizing new or reclassified positions and to identify whether to consult the Division of Budget and Management or the Division of Personnel when questions arise. (Page 30)

   The Division of Personnel continue to extend responsibility to departments for classifying positions and the commission encourages the division to consider granting departmental personnel offices full authority as well as responsibility in that area. (Page 31)

10. All of the state's registers remain open continuously and that the four positions necessary to do the added work be funded by the legislature. (Page 35)

11. The Division of Personnel develop a system in which only one application is necessary from each applicant for each class series for which the applicant wishes to be considered. (Page 35)

12. The majority of the commission recommends that the veterans' preference system be changed to award a five-point bonus to veterans for a three-year period following their discharge from the armed services of the United States. (Page 36)

    The preference system for disabled veterans should not be changed. (Page 37)

13. The state continue its efforts to establish a block scoring system for the ranking of applicants. (Page 39)

14. The Division of Personnel review the justifications furnished by departments when hiring below the top five on the register, and that the division be authorized to forbid hiring under the "unique or unusual circumstances" exception when the department cannot substantiate the reasons. (Page 40)

15. Each of the top five interested applicants be advised that they may request a meaningful interview with the person responsible for making the hiring decision prior to the final selection for the position. (Page 40)

16. Each performance evaluation which includes a recommendation that the employee not be rehired be reviewed by the staff of the Division of Personnel prior to its becoming part of the employee's personnel file to establish that the circumstances warrant the recommendation given. (Page 45)

17. Either the Division of Personnel or the Legislative Budget and Audit Committee periodically audit the operation of the personnel system of the state. The results of that audit should be presented to the legislature. (Page 47)

18. A graduated system of penalities be devised to include penalities appropriate to the seriousness of the offense. This should be accompanied by policies indicating when it is appropriate to admonish an employee, when suspension should be considered, when a fine should be assessed, and in what cases the more severe dismissal or involuntary demotion should be imposed. (Page 49)

19. A comprehensive revision of all of the laws affecting personnel should be undertaken by the Blue Ribbon Commission so that the State Personnel Act is the authority for all personnel-related matters. (Page 50)

20. The Personnel Rules should be revised to reflect existing employment practices and to indicate to what extent the Rules have been affected by collective bargaining. This review should be undertaken by the Blue Ribbon Commission after it completes its revision of the State Personnel Act, so that the Personnel Rules will be in accordance with the revised act. INTRODUCTION

The Alaska State Legislature authorized the formation of the Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act in 1978 to study and refine the State Personnel Act and to investigate the decentralization of the selection process and problems in contracting for services. The Resolution noted that the State Personnel Act had not undergone substantive revision since its enactment and was consequently vastly out of step with personnel developments of the last decade, and that the advent of collective bargaining and the tremendous growth in the number of state government employees required refinement of the personnel system, all of which was impossible for the legislature to do during the session because of the time required. Legislative Resolve No. 27, 1978.

The commission held extensive public hearings in the fall and winter of 1978-1979 to identify problems in the personnel system. It made its report to the 11th Alaska State Legislature First Session in March, 1979. In response to the commission's request for additional time to study the complex, inter-related problems which it had identified, the legislature funded the commission for a second year.

The commission's membership is representative of all persons and groups vitally concerned with the personnel system. In addition to the legislators who serve on the commission, the membership includes representatives from the public employee unions and associations, from the Department of Administration and the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations, and from the Ombudsman's office as well as managerial state employees and a public member.

The commission formed three subcommittees for the purpose of reviewing and resolving the problems identified. The subcommittees--Classification, Certification and Recruitment; Merit System/Collective Bargaining; and Categories of Employees--propose their recommendations to the full commission for formal action. Membership overlaps, so that each is advised of the approach the other subcommittees are taking on issues. The subcommittees and the full commission have held public hearings and have solicited written testimony to insure the widest possible participation from the citizens of Alaska.

The task has been challenging. Frequently, conflicting goals preclude reaching an ideal solution, and compromise becomes necessary. There are several areas where the commission is not prepared to make recommendations at this time. The commission therefore requests that it be extended for another year. The commission believes it is vital that the State Personnel Act be redrafted so that all laws concerning personnel management are coordinated. The present act has been in existence for almost 20 years. The commission hopes that its recommendations for changes will be equally well-considered and solid.

The commission urges the legislature to consider carefully the information in this report and to take the necessary action to implement its recommendations so that Alaska's personnel system will more nearly reach the goal of being responsive, equitable and efficient.

CHAPTER I
CATEGORIES OF EMPLOYEES

The State Personnel Act creates a number of different categories of employees. Three services are established: the exempt, partially exempt and classified services. Within each service there are different kinds of appointments, including permanent (full-time, part-time, or seasonal), temporary (nonpermanent after January 1, 1980), and, for the classified service, provisional and probationary. In addition to obtaining services through its own employees, the state also contracts with private firms for services. Issues arise concerning the standards used for the placement of positions in the different services and concerning the standards used for deciding whether to contract for services or hire state employees. The question of moving some exempt and partially exempt positions into the classified service is considered in Chapter II, "Transferring Positions to the Classified Service," page 16.

EXEMPT SERVICE

The exempt service is designed for those positions which require the greatest degree of responsiveness to the policies and philosophies of the state's chief executive as well as for those positions which are properly outside the control of the executive branch. Exempt positions are not subject to any of the requirements of the State Personnel Act or the Personnel Rules. Commissioners of the departments, elected officials and legislative and judicial branch employees are placed in the exempt service by statute. For a copy of the statute see Appendix A. For a list of exempt positions in state government see Appendix B.

The State Personnel Act lists positions in the exempt service, but does not set out criteria for adding future positions to that service. Furthermore, positions in some special commissions and boards are placed in the exempt service by the substantive statutes which create the commission or board. No cross-reference is made to the State Personnel Act, so these positions are hard to identify when considering the composition of the exempt service.

PARTIALLY EXEMPT SERVICE

Positions in the partially exempt service are subject to the State Personnel Act and the Personnel Rules only as specifically stated in the Act. Partially exempt employees are not subject to the selection methods required for classified positions, nor are they eligible for a hearing by the Personnel Board in cases of dismissal, demotion or suspension. Their permissible political activities are not as restricted as those of classified employees. The limitations on emergency, nonpermanent and provisional appointments do not apply to partially exempt positions. They are part of the state's classification plan, and their salaries are set according to the pay plan. Incumbents are subject to the rules concerning performance evaluations and merit increases and they may be suspended for disciplinary reasons.

The State Personnel Act places assistant commissioners, some division directors, attorney members of the staff of the Department of Law, one private secretary for each commissioner, and employees of the offices of the governor and the lieutenant governor in the partially exempt service. For a copy of the statute see Appendix C. For a list of partially exempt positions in state government see Appendix D.

The Personnel Board may add positions to the partially exempt service, provided they meet the criteria set out in the State Personnel Act. It has no authority to add positions to the exempt service. The board may place positions which involve principle responsibility for the determination of policy or the way in which policies are carried out, or those whose responsibilities and duties are of a type not susceptible to the ordinary recruiting and examining procedures of the state's classified service, in the partially exempt service. AS 39.25.130.

The commission reviewed the positions placed in the partially exempt service and considered the question of adding other positions to the service. Employees responsible for collective bargaining contract administration may find a conflict between those duties and their own union membership. Alternatives discussed included placing these positions in the partially exempt service or leaving them in the classified service but prohibiting them from bargaining. See Chapter II, "Collective Bargaining for Managers," page 13.

CONTRACTING FOR SERVICES

The Division of Personnel is not involved in the state's contracting for services practices. The system is monitored by the Division of Finance of the Department of Administration. Their review is limited to a fiscal analysis which focuses on whether it is economical this year to contract for these services. The state does not attempt to identify whether, in the long run, the state would be better served by adding employees to its staff to perform those services.

The commission expects that the civil liability section in the nonpermanent hiring law, which the legislature passed last session, will cause some state program managers to contract for services which were previously provided by temporary employees. Therefore, it becomes more important for the state to fully consider its decision to contract rather than to create permanent, part-time or seasonal positions. In the past, the legislature has felt that temporary positions were used to evade fiscal responsibility. It is important that budgets prepared for the legislature accurately forecast the departments' staffing needs so that the legislature will be less inclined to randomly reduce requests, with possible illogical results to essential or deserving programs.

CHAPTER II
MERIT SYSTEM/COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

In 1961, the legislature enacted the State Personnel Act to govern the employment system of the state. Three years later, ferry system employees were granted the right to organize and form collective bargaining units to negotiate with the state concerning their wages, hours and working conditions. AS 23.40.010 - 060. Then, in 1972, collective bargaining rights were extended to almost all employees of the state with the adoption of the Public Employment Relations Act (AS 23.40.070 - 260). No comprehensive revision of the State Personnel Act has been undertaken to reflect the changes brought about by collective bargaining, despite the fact that collective bargaining has fundamentally changed the relationship between the state and most of its employees.

MERIT PRINCIPLES OF EMPLOYMENT

The Alaska Constitution directs that: "The legislature shall establish a system under which the merit principle will govern the employment of persons by the state." Article XII, Section 6. During the constitutional debates concerning that section, delegates identified several principles which they considered important components of a merit system, including:

-- Selection and retention of employees based on ability, including examination for positions

-- Equal treatment of those seeking employment

-- Regular integrated salary programs based on the nature of the work performed

-- Selection and retention of one's position to be secure from political influences

-- Tenure for employees during the time that they perform well

The delegates left to the legislature the task of structuring the system for the state.

The debates also establish that the delegates recognized a need for different kinds of employees. The majority of regular employees would be covered by the protections and restrictions of a merit system. Those holding positions of a sensitive nature close to the chief executive should reflect the political philisophy of the Governor. These positions should be exempt from the protections and restrictions of the classified service.

The State Personnel Act incorporates the concepts of the constitutional convention debates. It provides for exempt, partially exempt and classified service employees. The merit system implemented by the Personnel Rules includes provisions on each of the topics which had been identified. The Act provides that the Rules include, among other items:

(1) a classification plan in which positions are grouped on the basis of duties and responsibilities;

(2) a pay plan, based on the classification plan, which provides fair and reasonable compensation on the basis of like pay for like work;

(3) Employee selection methods including open competitive examinations to test the fitness of applicants;

(4) promotion of qualified candidates whenever practicable and in the best interest of the state;

(5) eligible lists with applicants ranked according to their relative performance on examinations;

(6) hearings on dismissal, demotion and suspension; and

(7) prohibitions against certain political activities.

However, these are not specifically identified as the "merit principle" of the constitution.

With the advent of bargaining, the union contract is the primary source of information for unit members' rights. The State Personnel Act applies only when the contract is silent on a topic or when the contract is unclear and the past practices of the employer need to be considered to interpret a vague term. Therefore, changes to the State Personnel Act actually affect a very limited number of state employees directly.

By the Act itself, exempt employees are not subject to the rights and restrictions imposed on other employees. Partially exempt employees are covered only to the extent specifically stated in the Personnel Rules. Classified employees are almost entirely organized. In fact, there are only five employees in the state who are members of the classified service who are not included in bargaining units. These five are: the Deputy Director for Personnel, the Deputy Director for Labor Relations, the Chief for Recruitment and Examining, the Chief for Classification and Pay, and the Research Manager, all within the Department of Administration.

The Public Employment Relations Act requires that contracts negotiated with employee organizations must maintain merit system principles among employees. AS 23. 40.070(3). Since these principles are not defined in the statutes, they are open to interpretation during each bargaining session.

Federal law requires that state programs receiving federal grants-in-aid must abide by the federal merit system standards for employment. The standards are set out in 5 CFR Part 900, Subpart F, 1979. They state that programs must meet the following six principles:

> I. Recruiting, selecting, and advancing employees will be on the basis of their relative ability, knowledge, and skills, including open consideration of qualified applicants for initial appointment.
> II. Equitable and adequate compensation will be provided.
> III. Employees will be trained as needed to assure high-quality performance.
> IV. Employees will be retained on the basis of adequacy of their performance and provision will be made for correcting inadequate performance and separating employees whose inadequate performance cannot be corrected.
> V. Fair treatment of applicants and employees in all aspects of personnel administration without regard to race, color, religion, sex, national origin, political affiliation, age, handicap or other nonmerit factors and with proper regard for their privacy and constitutional rights as citizens will be assured.
> VI. State and local governments will inform their employees of their political rights and prohibited practices under the Hatch Act.

The commission believes that the merit principles identified during the constitutional debates should be specifically set forth in the State Personnel Act. These principles are fundamental to fair employment and should be recognized and adopted.

MANAGEMENT RIGHTS IN BARGAINING

Management rights clauses identify those topics which are considered to be inherently managerial and on which a bargaining unit cannot require an employer to negotiate.

The P.E.R.A. permits bargaining units to negotiate for wages, hours, and terms and conditions of employment. AS 23.40.070. The act defines terms and conditions of employment as including hours, compensation and fringe benefits, and an employer's personnel policies affecting the working conditions of employees, but as excluding "the general policies describing the function and purposes of a public employer." AS 23.40.260(7). The requirement that contracts adhere to the merit principles of employment also limits the scope of what may be bargained. AS 23.40.070(3). Although there has been no court decision on the question, the present administration believes that the Public Employees Retirement System prohibits bargaining on the benefits provided, although the marine unions participate in their own Taft-Hartley trusts.

Collective bargaining has created inconsistencies in the working conditions and compensation of state employees, depending on the unit to which they belong. Different units have chosen to make different trade-offs during negotiations, and therefore, there are a variety of health plans, pay plans, rights to overtime compensation, eligibility for merit increases, and promotional systems which apply to state employees. Some state employees are selected through hiring halls provided for in collective bargaining contracts.

If the legislature believes that it is important that there be one system which applies equally to all state employees on a particular topic, then it may wish to either exclude the topic from bargaining by amending the definition of the "terms and conditions of employment" to exclude that topic, or it may wish to enact a management rights clause which would include the subject within its scope.

Topics which might be addressed in a management rights clause include the functions and programs of the employer, its overall budget, the selection, promotion, transfer, assignment and retention of its employees, appropriate disciplinary actions against employees for just cause, and the use of technology.

Consideration should be given to the fact that the P.E.R.A. applies to local government employees as well as to state employees when the legislature decides whether to amend the act.

The commission believes that further investigation and study is needed before it is prepared to make any definitive recommendations concerning management rights.

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING FOR MANAGERS

The P.E.R.A. permits public employees to organize and to negotiate with their employer. "Public employee" is defined as "any employee of a public employer, whether or not in the classified service of the public employer, except elected or appointed officials or teachers or noncertificated employees of school districts." AS 23.40.260(5). Although the definition does not limit the right to bargain to employees in the classified service, only classified service employees of the state and marine transportation employees, teachers and University of Alaska employees (who are placed by statute in the exempt service) have chosen to form unions or associations. Since the act excludes appointed officials from the definition, a number of the employees in the exempt service are prohibited from collective bargaining.

However, the definition is generous in its scope, and many mid-level management employees are in positions included in the Supervisory Unit of the Alaska Public Employees Association. The extent of employees permitted to bargain in Alaska is greater than in most states, and may hamper management in its collective bargaining negotiations and in the administration of contracts. There are only five employees in the classified service who are not in one of the five bargaining units representing classified employees. All are staff of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations.

The State Personnel Act places commissioners in the exempt service and deputy commissioners and division directors in the partially exempt service in recognition of the need that the policy-setting state employees be politically responsive to the chief executive. The question of continuing the collective bargaining rights for assistant and deputy directors and the chiefs of certain sections has been recently posed. See Appendix E for a list of the positions in question. The commission has identified two alternatives, should the legislature wish to remove these positions from bargaining.

We recommend that if any positions are removed from collective bargaining units, that they remain in the classified service but be prohibited from collective bargaining activity. The second, less desirable alternative is to place the positions in the partially exempt service. In addition to removing them from bargaining, this action would end the protections of the Personnel Rules.

The mid-level management positions under consideration should be considered part of the career service of the state. The incumbents must be knowledgeable and skilled in their fields. The selection procedures of the classified service assure selection from among the most qualified applicants. The restraints imposed by the Personnel Rules on political activities and the requirement that discipline and removal from the position be for demonstrated just cause insure that competent employees will be retained and that the continuity necessary for good management is protected.

The commission recognizes that top level management should reflect the political philosophies of the governor, and that it is therefore appropriate for those positions to be either exempt or partially exempt. However, mid-level management positions can be considered as a buffer group between this politically responsive, policy-setting group and the larger number of state employees responsible for the day-to-day functions, who are granted collective bargaining rights.

Retaining the protections of the classified service for these positions will insure competence and will encourage career state employees with valuable accumulated skills and knowledge of state programs to accept promotion into them. If, on the other hand, the positions are moved to the partially exempt service or exempt service, fewer career employees will risk losing the job security and protection from a change in political administration which is now provided by the classified service to accept a deputy or assistant division director position, at loss to the state of their experience.

TRANSFERRING POSITIONS TO THE CLASSIFIED SERVICE

There are state employees in the partially exempt and exempt services whose duties do not appear to meet the standards for placement in these less-protected and more politically responsive services. It may be appropriate for the heads of the agencies in question to be placed in the exempt or partially exempt service, but the support staff positions appear to belong more logically in the classified service. For a general discussion of the exempt and partially exempt services, see Chapter I.

The entire staff of the Alaska Commercial Fisheries Entry Commission is placed in the exempt service by statute.

AS 39.25.110(15). The entire staff of the Alaska Post-secondary Education Commission is in the exempt service, although the statute only specifically placed the executive director there. AS 14.40.913. A list of exempt state positions may be found as Appendix B. The commission questions the need for all of these employees to be in the exempt service.

There are a number of commissions and agencies whose staff appear to be inappropriately placed in the partially exempt service. These include the Alaska Power Authority, the Alaska Oil & Gas Conservation Commission, the Council on the Arts, the Historical Commission, the Alaska Public Offices Commission and the Human Rights Commission. A list of partially exempt state positions may be found as Appendix D.

The commission recommends that the legislature re-examine the placement of these and other positions in the services. Where necessary, statutes should be amended to correct any errors identified.

ROLE OF THE LEGISLATURE IN COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Initially, the legislature was responsible for setting the salaries of state employees. With collective bargaining, salaries are negotiated by the administration's bargaining team and the unions or associations representing state employees. The legislature retains its constitutionally-based authority for appropriating money necessary for negotiated wages. The P.E.R.A. states in AS 23.40.215:

> The monetary terms of any agreement entered into under the Public Employment Relations Act are subject to funding through legislative appropriation.

Recently, interest in collective bargaining has increased within the legislature, and a more active legislative role in the process has been considered. The cost of negotiated salaries and benefits can substantially affect the fiscal policies of the state.

There are a number of alternatives which the legislature should consider, some with substantial problems. The legislature could take responsibility for negotiating with state employees, either through a committee or through professional staff. This would give the legislature the greatest role in the proceedings, but at the expense of spending considerable time in negotiations. Under this system, administration of contracts would remain the responsibility of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations.

The legislature could place an observer at the negotiating table. However, negotiating roles are essentially active, and the presence of an observer could disrupt the effectiveness of the negotiating process. If the observer had no authority to make commitments for the legislature, then there would be frustration for all of the participants, since they would feel that whatever agreements were reached would be subject to renegotiation with the legislature at a later time.

The commission recommends that if the legislature wishes to increase its role in the collective bargaining process, it do so by formally considering and approving or rejecting the agreements entered into between the bargaining units and the employer before they take effect. The agreements would be presented to the legislature by a specified date. The legislature would then be required to consider and act on the agreements within 30 days. The law should state that the legislature could not adjourn before having acted. If the agreements were ratified by the legislature, they would become binding contracts.

If the legislature disapproved an agreement, it would be up to the parties to decide what further action they wished to take. If they chose to renegotiate, they could do so; and if time permitted, the second agreement could be presented to the legislature prior to the end of the session. If the parties were unable to reach a new agreement, the bargaining units could take whatever "job action"--including striking, if permitted under the P.E.R.A.--their membership deemed appropriate. No contract could be entered into without the legislature's approval, so there might be need for a special session to resolve disputes.

The legislature's review could include the entire terms of the contract or it could be limited to the monetary terms. Contracts typically include many provisions on working conditions and other personnel matters--uniforms, parking, access to overtime, safety and health standards, working rules, hours and shifts and the like--which may not interest the legislature. Therefore, the commission recommends that the legislature consider only the monetary terms of the agreement.

Tied into this plan for legislative review could be a requirement that all contracts end on the last day of the fiscal year--June 30. This would insure, after the system was in place, that there would be a contract in force during negotiations and legislative review. Since all of the contracts negotiated presently contain a clause providing that there will be no strikes during the life of the agreement, there would be additional time if the contracts were not approved before the bargaining units would be able to petition the Labor Relations Agency for strike vote authorization. However, when contracts begin and end has in the past been one of the items negotiated on, and removing this from the scope of bargaining might affect settlements reached on other items.

If the legislature adopts the commission's recommendation for legislative review and action on the contracts, the commission urges that an early date be set for submission of the agreements. Efforts should be made to avoid hampering legislative review with end-of-the-session pressures.

MERIT INCREASES

The Personnel Rules establish a system for merit increases. An employee who has received an overall performance evaluation of "acceptable" or better and who has demonstrated satisfactory service of a progressively greater value to the state is eligible for the award. PR 9 02.21 and 22. The increases are provided for in the state pay plan and are the means by which employees advance from Step A of a salary range through Steps B to F. The steps beyond F are reserved for time-in-service raises (the longevity increment program).

Merit increases have been the subject of employee negotiations. Most state employees are covered by contracts which adopt the Personnel Rule system. Some of the bargaining units have chosen not to include a merit increase program but rather to provide periodic salary increases for their members based on seniority.

Merit increases are the major alternative open to supervisors for rewarding an employee's outstanding performance. As employees gain experience in positions, they can be expected to provide more valuable services to the state. In theory, the merit increase system rewards an employee only when increased value has been established by the performance evaluations prepared by the supervisor. A seniority system rewards the employee's additional time in service without consideration of the quality of the employee's record. However, if an employee were performing below acceptable standards, a competent supervisor should take appropriate disciplinary action to correct the problem.

The merit increase program does not always operate as intended. Its fairness depends on supervisors' using consistent standards of performance when evaluating employees. In addition, for the past two years, the administration has not requested funds specifically for merit increases in the proposed budget. Any payments of merit increases have been provided from money available from other departmental funds.

Some people believe that having both negotiated salaries provided for in collective bargaining contracts and also in a merit increase system as outlined in the Personnel Rules is a "double dip" for those state employees involved in both systems. As noted above, however, those unions and associations which have chosen not to participate in the merit increase program have had an opportunity to bargain for other kinds of salary increases for their members. In fact, one union contract provides that its members receive a seniority increase after six months of service. The amount of the increase is roughly comparable to the difference between Step A and Step F in the salary plan. It takes five years for an employee to move from Step A to Step F under the merit increase program, provided that increases are granted each year, which is not always the case.

The commission discussed alternatives to the merit increase program. The state might choose to leave salary increases entirely to collective bargaining and repeal the merit increase program. However, this approach would not provide for employees in the partially exempt service who are presently eligible under the Personnel Rules to participate in the program. There are no partially exempt employees in bargaining units. A second alternative would be to provide that no bargaining unit member could receive merit increases. The program could thus be left intact to provide for deserving partially exempt employees.

An alternative to doing away with the merit increase program is to attempt to improve its operation. Departments could be required to develop performance-based standards, using position descriptions as basic criteria for establishing necessary achievements that incumbents should meet. Supervisors would be trained in developing and implementing these standards. This would help to insure that annual personal evaluations were meaningful. Then, merit increases granted on the basis of standard performance criteria would also be valid recognition of performance and not simply rewards for being present at one's place of work.

If the legislature decides to limit the eligibility for the merit increase program, the commission strongly recommends that an alternative system be developed to reward outstanding employees. The state needs to maintain some system which recognizes and rewards exceptional service. Establishment of a system linking performance and compensation can help pinpoint accountability, increase productivity and improve service to the public, thus increasing returns to taxpayers from the salaries they provide to state employees.

A "meritorious service award program" is one alternative. The program could provide a one-time bonus to those employees chosen by an established selection procedure. The sum could be varied, depending on the achievement of the individual in question. The program should recognize examples of outstanding service or special acts or accomplishments. The commission believes that this area needs additional investigation and study.

COST OF LIVING ADJUSTMENTS

Cost of living adjustments are granted in two forms--either percentage increases in the salaries of all employees or in lump-sum increases for all. In addition, variations of these two basic forms are possible. Those in lower salary ranges can receive greater percentage increases or larger lump-sum increases than those in higher ranges to reflect the fact that in times of inflation, it may be harder for them to remain solvent.

Either system has inherent problems. Across-the-board increases have a tendency to compress salary schedules, thus blurring distinctions between supervisors and their subordinates. Percentage increases have a tendency to expand differentials between the top and bottom of pay scales. The commission recommends that cost of living adjustments be considered on an annual basis to determine which type is most appropriate. In some years, the economic situation may dictate across-the-board increases; and in other years, percentage increases may be more appropriate.

LABOR RELATIONS AGENCY

The duties of the state's Labor Relations Agency are comparable to the National Labor Relations Board. The agency determines the unit in which positions are placed, holds and certifies elections in bargaining units, considers when to permit employee strikes, and determines whether bargaining units or employers have engaged in unfair labor practices. It also has the authority to adopt regulations necessary to carry out its missions. The agency may appoint mediators to assist in negotiations where impasses have occurred. It is a volunteer agency, which maintains a neutral role in labor relations.

By statute, members of the Labor Relations Agency are the members of the Personnel Board. AS 23.40.260(3). These same three citizens are also, by statute, members of the Public Employee Retirement System Board. AS 39.35.030.

The Personnel Board is responsible for adopting Personnel Rules and for holding hearings initiated by employees in cases of Personnel Rule violations. The number of these hearings has decreased substantially since the advent of collective bargaining. The P.E.R.A. requires that all contracts include procedures for resolving grievances between employees and their employer. These grievance procedures (which do not involve either the Personnel Board or the Labor Relations Agency) cover almost all employee disputes.

The Retirement Board is responsible for reviewing investment of the state's retirement funds and for adopting regulations governing the program recommended by the administrator. The board acts as an appeals board at the request of an employee, a surviving spouse or a beneficiary on decisions made by the administrator, and it prescribes the rate of interest which shall be credited to employee accounts each year. AS 39.35.040.

The commission questioned whether it is necessary to require that all of these boards be composed of the same individuals, as the statutes presently provide. The commission recommends that the Legislative Audit Division review the membership and the functions of the three boards and report to the legislature on the results of its audit.

The commission also considered the staffing situation of the Labor Relations Agency, which is more active than the other two boards. At present, there is a part-time staff assistant whose functions have included conducting hearings for the board, as well as being responsible for the office and paperwork, and an attorney on contract to provide legal advice as needed.

The commission finds that the Labor Relations Agency can work satisfactorily within its present staff and structure as long as its members are, and continue to be, completely neutral and the workload of the agency does not substantially increase.

CHAPTER III
STRUCTURE OF THE PERSONNEL & LABOR RELATIONS DIVISION

The Division of Personnel and Labor Relations is one of seven divisions within the Department of Administration. It is responsible for the operation of the state's personnel system and for representing the state as an employer in collective bargaining matters. The other six divisions are: Administrative Services, Data Processing, Finance, General Services & Supply, Pioneers' Benefits, Retirement & Benefits, and Equal Employment Opportunity.

As the commission reported to the legislature last year, the tasks of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations and the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity differ significantly from the kinds of tasks of the other divisions within the department. The orientation of the other divisions is towards fiscal matters, and the commissioner of the department must be skilled in those areas. It is less likely that the commissioner will be selected because of his familiarity with labor relations, personnel administration or equal employment laws. The Director of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations must educate new commissioners on issues concerning the division's activities, and during this time, the Governor is probably less well informed about these topics. Given the significant impact labor relations negotiations have on the state's budget, the commission considered this to be undesirable.

The events surrounding the pay bills during the last regular session and the special session further emphasize the importance of labor relations issues.

The commission recommended that a Department of Employee Relations be created. The functions of the new department would include administering the state personnel system, representing the state in its labor relations activities, coordinating safety and training programs for state employees and coordinating all executive branch activities involving equal employment opportunity in state government.

The commission continues to support the elevation of personnel and labor relations to departmental rank. In addition, as an interim measure, the commission recommended to the Department of Administration that the department be restructured into two major divisions, one for personnel related matters, and the other for administrative matters, each division to be headed by a Deputy Commissioner. The department has recently initiated steps to accomplish this reorganization.

The commission anticipates that the state's experience with this structure for the Department of Administration will justify future creation of a Department of Employee Relations.

CHAPTER IV
PERSONNEL MANAGEMENT

Personnel management is the responsibility of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations together with the personnel offices in the separate departments. The state constitution requires that t merit principles govern the employment of persons by the state. Article XII, Section 6. The question of what the "merit principle" includes is discussed in Chapter II, "Merit Principles of Employment," page 8.

CLASSIFICATION

DELEGATION OF CLASSIFICATION AUTHORITY

Classification is the process by which a position is assigned to a job class, given a position control number, and assigned the appropriate salary range. The process can be cumbersome, leading to delays in filling positions and in implementing new programs.

Classification of new positions involves some duplication of efforts. Under the present system, the governor's proposed budget sets classifications and salary ranges for all new positions. This information is considered by the legislature in its review. However, the authorized new positions are not necessarily assigned to the classifications approved in the budget.

After the budget has been adopted, the department submits a request for position authorization to the governor's

Division of Budget and Management. The division gives its authorization after ascertaining that the legislature provided funds for the position and that its establishment is consistent with the missions and objectives of the department. The staff time required is minimal, but in the past, departments have encountered delays because Budget and Management placed greater emphasis on other tasks and therefore did not begin work on position authorizations immediately after receiving them.

There are some questions over which both the Division of Personnel and the Division of Budget and Management appear to have jurisdiction. This can lead to confusion for the personnel officer and other managers responsible for the position classification. The commission notes that this confusion and delay has led to the frustration of legislatively enacted programs in the past. Therefore, the commission recommends that the legislature direct the Division of Budget and Management to immediately prepare and distribute a procedures manual to assist personnel officers and other managers in understanding the process and to identify which agency to consult when questions arise.

After the Division of Budget and Management authorizes the establishment of the position, then the Division of Personnel examines the proposed classification to decide whether the department has placed the position in the most appropriate job class. If so, it approves the placement, and the department can then proceed to fill the position. If the division does not agree with the department, then considerable time can be spent while they discuss the matter and come to an agreement.

The Division of Personnel has begun to share authority for assigning classifications with some personnel offices in the departments. The department staff is responsible for determining the proper classification for a new or changed position. The division routinely approves the department's decisions without reviewing each step taken by the department. This sharing of responsibility serves to speed up the implementation of new programs and to aid necessary restructuring of existing programs.

The commission recommends that the division continue to extend responsibility for classifying positions to departments and encourages the division to consider granting departmental personnel offices full authority as well as responsibility in that area. This is an area that needs further investigation. Care should be taken that the departmental personnel office staff are trained in the standards to be applied. With an increase in delegation of authority, the post-auditing activities of the Division of Personnel must be expanded so that mistakes will be identified and corrected quickly. The division will continue to be responsible for insuring that comparable positions are placed in the same classification, regardless of the department in which they occur.

CLASSIFICATION SYSTEM REVIEW

The state currently has 1,281 job classifications in the classified service. During the past year, the Division of Personnel has eliminated 186 classifications either by merging existing classes or by eliminating obsolete ones. The commission has heard testimony both that the state has too many classifications with unnecessary distinctions between different classes and that present classifications are too broad, making it difficult to find applicants who are qualified for a vacancy on the register.

In addition, the commission has heard that although supervisors are directed to review position classifications each year, existing positions are not properly classified. The duties of positions change over time, but the positions may not be reclassified, particularly when the appropriate new classification is set at a lower salary range than the present one. The commission discussed recommending that a comprehensive review of the classification system be undertaken to consider both of these questions. While most commission members believed that a study could be beneficial, some felt that who performed the study was crucial to its usefulness.

These members felt that contracting with a private firm for this information would be expensive and would not provide results which could be implemented by the state. They explained that other government entities which have used reputable firms have discovered that implementing the recommendations led to chaos. Personnel management for governments is different from private industry systems, and this difference was apparently not appreciated when the private firms' recommendations were prepared. Those commission members who opposed recommending the study did so on this ground.

The Division of Personnel and Labor Relations has the authority, but not the staff, to perform this kind of audit. In addition, since they are part of the existing system, some commission members considered that while they should be closely involved in the preparation of the materials, they should not have the overall responsibility for the report and recommendations.

The commission members who recommended that the study be performed thought that the state could receive the results of the study and then evaluate whether any attempt should be made to implement the proposals as presented. They considered that it was important for the state to know whether the classification system is viable and reasonably accurate. The commission presents these differing views to the legislature for its consideration.

If the legislature decides to authorize a thorough review of the classification system, the information gathered by the audit could be used to develop comprehensive classification guides. These guides would help establish and maintain uniformity in the classification of positions, particularly if departments are granted greater independence in this area.

A comprehensive classification guide identifies the level of responsibility expected to be exercised by employees of a particular job classification. It would identify the differences between the different steps in a job series (Accountant I, II and III for example). The commission is concerned about the disparity of responsibility for positions within the same job class, particularly in the Administrative Assistant and Administrative Officer series.

SELECTION

REGISTER CLOSURES

During 1978, the Division of Personnel received some 60,000 applications from an estimated 28,000 applicants. The staff of the Recruitment and Examining Section spent an average of only 12½ minutes on each application, rating the applicant's training and experience and recording the resulting score. This is not enough time for a thorough review. However, if they spent more time on each application, they would not be able to process all the applications in a timely fashion. In order to limit the number of applications received, the division closed some of the registers. The division selected registers on which sufficient applicants were listed to meet the state's expected needs. The division planned to open each register for a period of 30 days at least once every year.

Commission members were concerned that closing the registers denied Alaskans the opportunity to compete for jobs in the state and that the best qualified candidate interested in an opening might be unable to apply for the position. While recognizing that the division's workload is excessive, the commission believed that another solution should be found. The Director of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations advised the commission that four additional positions would be necessary to handle the expected workload if all registers remain open continuously. Accordingly, the commission recommends that the legislature fund these positions and that all registers remain open to new applicants.

MULTIPLE APPLICATIONS

An applicant who wishes to be considered for a number of positions with the state must submit a separate application for each. The Division of Personnel explained that separate applications are necessary because the raters evaluate applications on a production-line basis for each job classification rather than rating one individual for numerous classes. This method conserves staff time because it alleviates the problem of organizing evaluation materials repeatedly for each application. It takes more time to rate all of the applications from one individual and then rate all from another person than it takes to rate all those applying for one job classification and then changing the rating guides to evaluate all those applying for the next job class.

The commission considered that it was burdensome to ask applicants to provide numerous applications, and urges the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations to develop a system in which only one application is necessary for each class series (e.g. Accountant, Supply Clerk, or Administrative Officer series). The division has indicated that it is investigating a computer system to handle applications for positions in the clerical classes. In this proposed system, only one application would be filed by each applicant. The commission endorses the division's approach.

VETERANS' PREFERENCE SYSTEM

After applications are rated for training and experience, the division may add additional points to the applicant's score in two situations. Current state employees receive employee credits based on their length of service and on the quality of their performance as established by their yearly performance evaluations. Veterans receive additional points based on their previous service to the nation.

The veterans' preference system is created by statute. AS 39.25.150(23). A veteran is entitled to five additional points each time he or she applies for employment not within the area of promotion, provided that the individual meets the minimum qualifications of the position. Disabled veterans are entitled to a ten-point bonus.

The majority of commission members believe that while the state should recognize the service which veterans provided to the nation by granting some advantage to them when applying for state employment, the present preference system is too extensive. The majority recommend that the system be changed to award a five-point bonus to veterans for a three-year period following their discharge from the armed services of the United States. This proposed three-year limitation on the exercise of these rights is equitable since it provides a reasonable period to assist those discharged from military service to readjust to civilian life and establish themselves in the civilian work force. The commission recommends that the preference system for disabled veterans remain as it is.

The commission also notes that the legislature has not acted to establish a date for the ending of the hostilities in Vietnam for the purposes of the veterans' preference system.

RELEVANT WRITTEN EXAMINATIONS

The commission received a number of complaints that the written examinations given to applicants were not job-related. Federal and state laws require that tests be constructed to fairly rate applicants. The state must be able to demonstrate that those who perform best on the tests are most likely to perform best on the job. While supporting the concept of fair, relevant tests, the commission believes that there is more than adequate legislation in existence regulating employment examinations. Therefore, the commission makes no recommendations to the legislature on this issue.

BLOCK SCORING OF APPLICATIONS

After applications are scored, the names of successful applicants are placed on registers in order of the score they received. The state has traditionally used a Rule of Five.

The top five interested applicants on a register and all who tie with the fifth score must be considered for a position before an agency may consider anyone below that group. The agency must also justify any selection below the top five by establishing that there were unique or unusual circumstances which made the person selected more qualified for that particular position than the others who ranked above him or her.

Commission members found that in some instances, the qualifications of the first five applicants were not significantly different from the next group. For registers with a large number of applicants, five is an unreasonably small number. In other cases, the first three applicants may be significantly more qualified than the remaining applicants in the top group.

The Division of Personnel has begun to move towards a system of block scoring some registers. In block scoring, the division reviews the performance of previous applicants to determine how their raw scores group together. Dividing lines and standard scores are established for the different groups. Then raw scores are converted to standard scores. All eligibles are ranked according to their final scores. Eligibles with the same final scores have the same rank. Therefore the highest rank certified most often exceeds five eligibles qualified for appointment. This approach gives more flexibility to the Rule of Five, since all those whose raw scores are closely similar will fall within the same rank and be entitled to equal consideration. The commission recommends that the state continue its efforts to establish a block scoring system for the ranking of applicants.

REVIEW OF "UNIQUE OR UNUSUAL CIRCUMSTANCES"

The Personnel Rules permit selection of an applicant who scores below the top five interested and available candidates for a position in "unique or unusual circumstances." In most cases when a department wishes to select an eligible person ranked lower than fifth on the list, it must record the circumstances justifying the appointment and file a copy with the Division of Personnel. The full responsibility for the appointment lies with the department. The division is not directed by the Personnel Rules to review or evaluate the explanation given. PR 5 02.4.

For positions subject to the Federal Standards for a Merit System of Personnel Administration, the procedures are more stringent. The Director of the Division of Personnel must grant approval of the criteria for possible selection of an applicant ranking below the top five prior to the department's receiving the register showing qualified applicants. The department must then record an evaluation of the applicant selected and of each applicant standing above him or her based on the unique or unusual circumstances which justified selecting below the top five. The person selected must rank among the top five available applicants based on the duties of the position. PR 5 02.5. For a discussion of the Federal Standards, see Chapter II, "Merit Principles of Employment," page 8.

Because there is no review of the department's justification for hiring below the top five applicants for most positions, the system permits abuse. The commission recommends that the Division of Personnel review the justifications furnished by departments, and that the Division be authorized to forbid hiring under the "unique or unusual circumstances" exception to the Rule of Five when the department cannot substantiate the reasons.

JOB INTERVIEWS

The agency which has a vacancy is responsible for the final selection from applicants on the register. The agency requests the appropriate register from the Division of Personnel, notifies the eligibles of the open position, and asks whether they wish to be considered. Those interested respond, and the agency then usually selects from the top five interested in the position. Frequently, agencies fill positions without any further communication with the unsuccessful applicants. When this happens, those who have expressed an interest may question the agency's fairness and the criteria used for selection.

The commission recommends that each of the top five interested applicants be advised that they may request a meaningful interview with the person responsible for making the hiring decision prior to the final selection for the position. The interview may be in person or by telephone. Except in unique cases any travel expenses should be the responsibility of the applicant. This recommendation does not address the question of interviews for the top applicants on registers which use a block scoring system, since there may be substantially more than five applicants who would have to be considered. However, the commission does suggest that, where feasible, interviews be offered to those applicants as well.

1363 SCOMM 51: BLUE RIBBON COMN. ON STATE PERSONNEL ACT 1978-1983

REGIONALIZING REGISTERS

Filling positions in rural areas can be time consuming. Applicants for state employment indicate the locations in which they will accept employment. Many specify that they are interested in positions anywhere in the state. However, it frequently turns out that the "anywhere" shown on the application does not include the places in which vacancies occur. The Personnel Rules require that when an eligible list (register) exists for a position (most positions have registers) those on the register must be considered before the agency may specially recruit for the position. Therefore, the agency must work the register, even when it expects on the basis of past experience that it will not find anyone interested, before it can take special steps to fill the position through local recruitment.

The commission discussed a variety of solutions, but none were without substantial disadvantages. Special registers for rural areas would not necessarily reduce the number of applications from people looking for work, and would require extra staff time for the Division of Personnel. Limiting applicants to regional registers, on which only residents of the area could appear, would violate equal employment opportunity laws, and would be unfair to applicants who wanted to move from one part of the state to another. Therefore, while noting that this can be a severe problem for an agency trying to fill a position in a timely fashion, the commission makes no recommendations without further study.

OTHER PERSONNEL PRACTICES

RECOMMENDATIONS AGAINST REHIRE

A final Performance Evaluation Report is prepared when an employee in the classified or partially exempt service ends his or her state employment. The evaluation is prepared by the employee's immediate supervisor, called the rater. The supervisor rates the employee's performance in the indicated areas and states, on the line for Recommended Action, whether or not the employee should be considered for rehire by the state. The evaluation is reviewed by the Division Reviewer (the division director or his or her designee) and by the department reviewer.

Before either of these reviewers considers the form, the rater is supposed to explain the evaluation to the employee, who is to receive a copy. The employee also has an opportunity to indicate whether or not he or she agrees with the Report and to add comments. The "Performance Rater's Guide to Performance Evaluations" indicates that if any disagreements between Reporting Officers lead to changes in the evaluation, then a new report should be prepared and the changes made known to the employee.

None of the Personnel Rules or Division of Personnel Director's Memoranda speak to the issue of when it is appropriate to recommend against rehire, except in the case of an employee who leaves without giving 14 calendar days notice. The Personnel Rules require that for an employee to separate in good standing the notice must have been given unless the department chooses to waive that requirement. PR 11 02.0. In other situations, it is left to the management of each department to set the policy for when to recommend against rehire. If an employee's conduct has been so unsatisfactory that he or she has been dismissed, the rater will usually recommend against rehire.

An employee who separates in good standing from a permanent or probationary position may be re-employed without re-examination and without having to be hired through the register. The department may consider only that applicant when a vacancy becomes available. In addition, the former employee's name may be added to the eligible list for the job class from which he or she separated without re-examination.

A Memorandum from the Director of the Division of Personnel dated September 11, 1969 indicates the effects of separation not in good standing. It states in full:

> A former employee of the State who resigned in good standing may be re-employed without certification or re-examination under the provisions of Personnel Rule 5 12. However, if an employee did not leave State service in good standing he cannot benefit from the above Rule and is not eligible for re-employment with the State.

"Good standing" means separation under circumstances other than:

1. Dismissal.
2. Resigned in lieu of dismissal due to unsatisfactory job performance.
3. When supervisor has stated on the separating Personnel Evaluation "Not Recommended for Re-Hire."

An employee who did not resign in good standing is not categorically barred forever from State employment. He may be considered for re-employment by way of open competition provided he has demonstrated satisfactory full time paid employment elsewhere for a period of time equalling the probationary period for the job class.

The Division of Personnel reviews the Performance Evaluation Reports which recommend against rehire to establish whether the report is internally consistent: is the recommendation supported by the comments in the narrative section and do the employee's comments raise questions about the appropriateness of the recommendation? If the report is internally consistent, then no further review is undertaken, and the staff remove the employee's name from the registers on which it previously appeared.

If there are questions about the recommendation, the division reviews the employee's personnel file to determine whether past evaluations tend to support the present recommendation and they talk with the reviewers about the circumstances of the case. If the unsatisfactory performance related to only one facet of the position, then the employee may be removed only from those job classes in which those skills are important. For example, a poor supervisor might be removed from registers requiring supervisory skills but be left on registers not requiring those skills. In cases in which a recommendation against rehiring suggests that a personality conflict influenced the poor work performance, the employee's name might remain on open competitive registers, permitting him or her to compete with other applicants for positions, but he or she might be denied the preferences given through rehire rights.

The consequences of separation not in good standing, as would occur with a recommendation against rehire, are severe. The commission has heard testimony from individuals placed in this situation and believes that recommendations against rehire should be made only after careful review of the facts of each case. The commission recommends that each performance evaluation which includes a recommendation that the employee not be rehired be reviewed by the staff of the Division of Personnel prior to its becoming part of the employee's personnel file to establish that the circumstances warrant the recommendation given.

TRAINING

The need for training is a frequently misunderstood area of personnel management. It does not mean that the state is hiring unqualified employees. Training adds to the basic knowledge of an employee. Through training employees increase their value to the state.

For a more extensive discussion of the reasons for providing training and the system which should be used see Appendix F.

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY AND PROMOTION

The commission has heard testimony that the merit principle which favors filling positions through promotion limits the opportunity for minority persons to fill higher-level positions.

While the commission is sympathetic to equal employment opportunity goals and is concerned that the state have an effective program, the Equal Employment Opportunity Division has the expertise and authority to address these issues, and therefore the commission makes no recommendations.

FILLING PERMANENT POSITIONS

Testimony was presented that many permanent positions were left vacant, while the work was performed by temporary employees at a savings to the state but at a cost to the employees. This is a potential abuse of merit principles of fair employment practices. Therefore, the commission sponsored its nonpermanent bill during the last regular session. With the passage of the bill, which effectively restricts employment of nonpermanents, the commission expects that agencies will fill their permanent positions.

CREDIT FOR LEVEL OF WORK PERFORMED

Some state employees find that they are doing tasks which are not reflected in their job description and that they do not receive credit for the level of their performance when they apply for promotion. The commission believes that adequate methods exist now to solve this problem.

Each job description is reviewed during the yearly personnel evaluation. If the duties of the position have changed, then the supervisor is supposed to initiate a reclassification action so that the job description accurately reflects the duties of the position. If this is done, then employees will receive credit for their performance. Procedures also exist for documenting short-term work on projects which are outside an employee's normal duties. The commission recognizes that keeping position descriptions current is an important management responsibility.

AUDITS OF THE PERSONNEL SYSTEM

The operation of the state's personnel system should be reviewed periodically to identify areas in which changes are needed. The commission discussed whether the audits should be performed by the Division of Personnel or whether the Budget and Audit Committee of the legislature should be given this responsibility. The Budget and Audit Committee lacks expertise in personnel matters and its procedures are also more cumbersome. If the Division of Personnel is able to delegate more of its primary tasks to user departments, then its staff should be able to review and audit the departmental actions more thoroughly.

The commission recommends that either the Division of Personnel or the Legislative Budget and Audit Committee should periodically audit the operation of the personnel system of the state. The results of that audit should be presented to the legislature.

DISCIPLINARY MEASURES

The Personnel Rules permit an appointing authority to suspend (PR 11 03.0), demote (PR 11 05.2) or dismiss (PR 11 06.1) an employee for delinquency or misconduct. Just cause must be established in cases of dismissal or involuntary demotion, but not for suspension. In addition, the Rules state that any person who willfully violates any provision of the Personnel Rules is guilty of a misdemeanor and that anyone convicted immediately forfeits his or her office or position. PR 13 18.0. The Director of the Division of Personnel has authority to act when the head of the affected department has failed to take action within a reasonable time. PR 13 18.1. Any employee found in violation of the prohibitions in Rule 13 shall be dismissed, whether or not criminal charges have been filed. PR 11 05.2. Rule 13 forbids various kinds of political activity, bribery for state employment, engaging in illegal discrimination, and certain kinds of financial conflict of interest situations.

The collective bargaining contracts with classified employee unions have not modified these Rules, although some address cause for discipline. Therefore, the provisions of these Rules apply to all classified employees. They also apply in part to employees in the partially exempt service.

The requirement that violation of the Rules be considered a misdemeanor is not applied because in many instances, the penalty is too harsh. The commission recommends that a graduated system of penalties be devised to include penalties appropriate to the seriousness of the offense. This should be accompanied by policies indicating when it is appropriate to admonish an employee, when suspension should be considered, when a fine should be assessed, and in what cases the more severe dismissal or involuntary demotion should be imposed.

CHAPTER V
PERSONNEL LAWS & REGULATIONS

REVISION OF THE LAWS AFFECTING PERSONNEL

Many of the statutes which provide for employees of boards, commissions and authorities are found only in the statutes which create those entities. There is no cross-reference in the State Personnel Act. A comprehensive revision of all these laws should be undertaken by the Blue Ribbon Commission so that the State Personnel Act is the authority for all personnel-related matters.

REVISION OF THE PERSONNEL RULES

The Personnel Rules should be revised to reflect existing employment practices and to indicate to what extent the Rules have been affected by collective bargaining. This review should be undertaken by the Blue Ribbon Commission after it completes its revision of the State Personnel Act so that the Personnel Rules will be in accordance with the revised act.

STATUTE ON PARTIALLY EXEMPT POSITIONS

Section 39.25.120. Partially exempt service. The following positions in the state service constitute the partially exempt service and are subject to this chapter and the rules adopted under it only as specifically provided in this chapter. Positions in the partially exempt service shall be included in the position classification plan established under this chapter, and these positions shall be compensated according to the pay plan. Persons holding positions in the partially exempt service are not required to take examinations, qualify or earn a place on a register, nor are they eligible for a hearing by the personnel board in case of dismissal, demotion, or suspension. APPENDIX F
TRAINING FOR STATE EMPLOYEES

The commission has considered the question of the training provided by the state to its employees and recommends that the approach of the state towards training be reevaluated and that the following recommendations be implemented. The commission finds that the state has neglected this important area of personnel management for a considerable time in the mistaken belief that training is a luxury which can be cut from budgets without affecting the quality or the cost of the services provided to Alaskans. Training should not be indiscriminately provided however. The state should develop a system of evaluating the training needs of its employees and of monitoring the effectiveness of the programs in which it participates, so that training is vocationally oriented, effective and cost efficient.

REASONS FOR PROVIDING TRAINING

The hiring process establishes which candidates meet the minimum qualifications for a position and from those, which one is the best qualified to do the job. The standard is based on minimum qualifications for the position. Most new employees will need to improve some skills which the particular position emphasizes or become familiar with additional areas in which they lack knowledge. Furthermore, almost all jobs grow and change as new developments in the industry or field of study changes the appropriate methods and skills and also as programs shift emphasis from one area to another. In order to meet the challenge of new technology or of changed focus, appropriate training must be provided.

A distinction should be made between training and orientation. All employers must orient new employees to their expectations about conduct, performance, and benefits (leave, insurance, retirement, etc.). Employers must also explain the structure, missions and objectives of the program in which employees will work.

Training, on the other hand, provides or enhances knowledge and skills which, for a variety of reasons, an employee does not have when selected for the position. Employees need training to keep pace with change, to improve existing skills, to develop new skills, to relate their tasks to the entire program, and to better supervise or manage other employees. Supervisors must be informed of equal employment opportunity laws and requirements.

1. Keeping pace with change. Employees in fields experiencing rapid technological advances need training to remain current in their areas of expertise. Otherwise, they are not able to do the job that is required by the state. For example, if the state wishes to use more advanced computer technology, it must either train its employees or hire new employees who are well versed in the science. Since data processing continues to change, the state can expect to continuously replace data processing employees if it does not provide an adequate training program. New employees may have the necessary technical skills, but they will have no background experience with specialized state programs. Therefore, the state will have to train the new employees in those aspects of the job instead of training incumbents in new technology.

The Department of Transportation and Public Facilities has developed a training program for mechanics of both light and heavy duty equipment. Employees take a competency-based test which consists of both written and performance components. The test was developed by a national testing organization to use nation-wide. There are four skill levels, and employees receive a certificate for each test they successfully complete. The agency's goal is to have all of its mechanics fully certified through this program. They are a long way from reaching that level of knowledge and performance. Test performance also helps the department to identify areas in which employees need training.

The department provides training for the mechanics through a variety of methods. For job-related courses offered by community colleges, the department provides a portion of the costs of books and tuition. Sometimes vendor programs, generally offered out-of-state, are the most economical alternative. In other cases, the department may have an employee who is competent to train others in a particular skill. Occasionally, the department contracts with an outside firm to provide inhouse training in a specialized area.

Given the changes in automotive technology, no mechanic, however competent, can keep abreast of all developments without on-going training. With training, the agency hopes to perform their duties in a reasonable and cost-efficient fashion with an acceptable quality of performance, and to make their services competitive with or better than those of private industry.

Employees also need training in any program where legal standards frequently change. For example, unemployment insurance appeal employees attend a nation-wide program sponsored by the U.S. Department of Labor every two years to learn the developments in the laws, regulations and procedures governing the unemployment insurance program. Similarly, the state must plan to provide funds to train its employees whenever it significantly changes the standards and procedures of a program.

2. Improving existing skills. The Division of Personnel used to hold a training session in Better Writing Skills which was directed to state employees at a variety of levels who were responsible for writing documents as part of their job duties. This program has stopped because the division's training budget was not funded.

Courses for improving skills are provided at minimal cost to the state by equipment retailers. For example, IBM sponsors training sessions for state employees who use the complex word processing equipment to enable them to take advantage of special features available on the machines.

3. Developing new skills. The state has created trainee positions in order to hire people who need training to qualify for the beginning level of a job class. These trainee positions enable the state to provide an affirmative action program, as required by state and federal laws, and to open career fields to citizens of the state for whom the educational or experience requirements of the first level in the job class would be an insurmountable barrier. The trainee positions are structured with the expectation that the state will provide substantial on-the-job training to the people hired.

4. Interdisciplinary training. Interdisciplinary training serves to advise employees of developments outside their primary field and to inform them of the entire picture in which they have a part. It is important in areas where many agencies have overlapping responsibility, as is the case in the natural resources area or in insurance, banking and economic development. In the data processing field, programs to cross-train managers and data processing programmers about each others' needs would improve the state's use of data processing.

Interdisciplinary training can serve to meet administrative needs of the state. Program managers need to know how to prepare proposed budgets for review by the executive branch and for action by the legislature. They also need to develop skills in budgeting their resources in order to avoid cost overruns.

Employees who deal directly with the public in potentially tense situations can better diffuse hostility if they have some knowledge of transactional analysis. During the winter of 1977-78, the unemployment insurance office in Anchorage had to have uniformed guards in the building during working hours because of the intensity of feelings. The Department of Labor contracted with a Seattle firm to provide on-site training in transactional analysis to the staff to help them cope with the stressful situation.

5. Supervisory training. In its investigation of the state personnel system, the commission has found that many problems would be avoided or solved by better management practices. Effective managers and supervisors who accept, understand and persist in their decision-making roles are the key to avoiding or reducing turnover, absenteeism, and non-productivity of their employees. Training for supervisors, especially those without previous supervisory experience, should be one of the highest priorities on the state's training agenda. Supervisors must know and apply the Personnel Rules and the terms of collective bargaining agreements which govern the working conditions of their employees. They must know how to properly evaluate and, when necessary, discipline employees by applying contract terms accurately and by building a clear record of what steps they have taken to correct problems. In addition to this technical side, supervisors must know how to motivate their work force. They need to develop leadership skills, communication skills and ability to measure job performance.

Supervisors are required to write annual performance evaluations of their employees. To make the experience benefit both the employees and the program, the evaluations should point out the strengths and weaknesses of the employee's past performance, identify areas in which the employee's skills or knowledge need to be improved and the resources to accomplish that, and examine the duties of the position to determine whether the position is classified properly. Evaluations can be emotionally difficult for both employees and supervisors. To improve the evaluations done, supervisors should be required to participate in a program designed to improve their skills.

Managerial employees are selected for their skills in their program area and are expected to assimilate the knowledge needed to supervise their employees when they accept their appointment. To the extent that this does not happen, the state creates problems for itself which can lead to union grievances and monetary awards, poor morale, rapid turnover and poorly run programs. All of these increase the costs of government to the citizens of Alaska. Better supervisors would reduce this cost, and training would help to improve the performance of supervisors.

6. Complying with Equal Employment Opportunity programs. To avoid violation of the laws of the land and large monetary awards from litigation, supervisors must comply with the federal and state statutes on hiring and promoting their employees. These complex requirements can be difficult to adhere to. Records need to be maintained to demonstrate compliance. The Division of Equal Employment Opportunity in the Department of Administration offers a course to supervisors on the legal requirements which apply, and on the unconscious ways in which people may discriminate. It is designed to insure that the state meets the minimum standards. This training should be made mandatory for any supervisor responsible for hiring employees.

7. Employee development. Some agencies will partially reimburse employees for the cost of relevant college courses they successfully complete. This varies depending on the policy of the department and the funds available. Course-work may make the employee eligible for promotion or provide insight into related areas.

CONCLUSION AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Because Alaska has not recognized the worth of training programs, the state has not developed a comprehensive policy for training for state employees, nor has it attempted to coordinate and evaluate what training is presently received by employees. The state needs a central training office. Responsibilities of the office should include arranging training sessions and programs on those subjects common among the departments and agencies, including supervisory skills, interdisciplinary training, clerical skills, and labor relations and Personnel Rule courses. This central office should identify general training needs, evaluate courses and develop a system to record each employee's training history in his or her personnel file. The annual evaluation session could be used to consider what training each employee needs. The supervisor would be responsible for suggesting training programs to be developed either by the agency or by the central training office.

Because there is no coordinated program, the departments duplicate some courses, while ignoring other needs which could be economically provided to the larger pool of all state employees. Coordination should not usurp the prerogatives of the departments or their responsibility to provide programmatic training. The departments are best able to evaluate the need for training in their particular areas of expertise and to decide which kind of training best fills those needs. The coordinating center should advise and assist the departments when requested. It should also determine when departments were unnecessarily offering duplicate courses and should make information available to all departments on the training courses being offered so that interested staff of other departments can attend any department's courses as space permits.

Providing training effectively will insure that the state gets the most for its personal-services dollar, and will encourage employees who have become skilled in their areas to remain with the state, thus building on the investment which the state makes in any long term employee, even now, when training is neglected.

INTRODUCTION

In 1978 the Alaska State Legislature created the Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act and charged it with making a comprehensive review of the state personnel system. The commission was directed to consider refinements in light of collective bargaining and the growth of the number of state employees, to examine the question of the decentralization of the hiring of state employees, and to consider the deficiencies which had been revealed in reports from the Division of Legislative Audit and from the Ombudsman. See Appendix A, Legislative Resolve No. 27, 1978.

Since its inception, the commission has worked on the issues it was directed to consider, sponsoring legislation and making its recommendations known in annual reports to the legislature. In 1980, at the request of the commission, the legislature extended its life for another year, noting that because of the complex, inter-related nature of the issues facing the commission, more time was needed to resolve them. See Appendix B, Legislative Resolve No. 38, 1980.

Membership on the commission includes representatives from the groups and persons most concerned about the state personnel system. In addition to legislators, there are representatives from the public employee unions and associations representing state employees, from the Department of Administration and the Division of Personnel, from the Ombudsman, from state agencies, and from the public. This diversity and expertise enables the commission to fully consider the questions before it.

During the past year, the commission has focused on two main areas. It has concluded a comprehensive review of the State Personnel Act and also is recommending changes in the nepotism law of the state. In addition, testimony from retired Alaskans raised issues about the state retirement systems which the commission considered. As a result of this work, the commission is sponsoring three bills amending the retirement systems.

There are issues which the commission was unable to address this year which are discussed briefly in this report. Further study is needed before recommendations can be made on these topics. Because its work is not ended, the commission is requesting that the legislature extend its life for another year.

CHAPTER I

Bills Amending the State Personnel System and the Retirement Systems

The commission is proposing two bills amending the personnel system. The first is a comprehensive revision of the State Personnel Act, to make changes in personnel practices, to expand the protections granted employees in the exempt and partially exempt services, and to make the Act consistent with the Public Employment Relations Act. The second bill amends the nepotism statute to give statutory authorization to support the present language of the Personnel Rules.

The commission is sponsoring three bills amending the state's retirement systems. The first limits the state's power to adjust retirement benefits where, through no fault of the retired state employee, the state has been making overpayments for more than two years. This measure is proposed because the resulting total overpayment can be substantial and the mandatory reduction of the retired person's monthly check can cause serious financial difficulties. The second bill sponsored by the commission makes changes in the membership of the Public Employee Retirement Board. The third bill requires that regulations adopted for both the Public Employee Retirement System and the Teachers Retirement System be subject to the Administrative Procedure Act.

SENATE BILL 193: AMENDING THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT (AS 39.25)

PURPOSE

The amendments proposed to the State Personnel Act are the result of work done by the commission over the past two years. The bill makes several major changes in the Act as well as making it more comprehensive, more consistent with the Public Employee Relations Act, and more clearly written.

The bill provides that those Personnel Rules which are matters of public policy are subject to the rule-making requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act. This will offer an increased opportunity for public comment before adoption of rules affecting the public.

The commission resolved the question of whether the state should move towards a centralized or a decentralized system of personnel administration by placing the present decentralized system in the Act. However, the bill limits the authority personnel officers presently have to operate independently from the Division of Personnel. Decentralization provides the best working relationship between the departments and the division.

Partially exempt and exempt employees of the state are granted increased protection from discrimination, including the right to appeal to the Personnel Board should they believe that they have been disciplined on the basis of unlawful discrimination.

However, the bill limits the authority personnel officers presently have to operate independently from the Division of Personnel. Decentralization provides the best working relationship between the departments and the division.

Partially exempt and exempt employees of the state are granted increased protection from discrimination, including the right to appeal to the Personnel Board should they believe that they have been disciplined on the basis of unlawful discrimination.

In addition to these major changes, the bill makes a number of other amendments which are discussed in the analysis below.

SECTION BY SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1. AS 39.040 is amended to read:

Sec. 39.25.040. DIRECTOR OF PERSONNEL. The head of the division of personnel is the director of personnel appointed by the commissioner of administration and responsible to the commissioner of administration for the execution of the duties and responsibilities imposed by this chapter and the rules adopted under this chapter. The director of personnel shall (MUST) have at least three years of practical working experience in the field of personnel administration.

(SB 193, page 1, line 9)

Comment

This section makes a stylistic amendment to conform to the Manual of Legislative Drafting. The substance is not changed.

Sec. 2. AS 39.25.060(b) is amended to read:

(b) Members of the board may not be (SHALL BE QUALIFIED ELECTORS OF THE STATE WHO ARE NOT) employees (OR OFFICERS) of the state. Not more than two members of the board may be members of the same political party.

(SB 193, page 1, line 17)

Comment

This section deletes the obsolete requirement that members of the Personnel Board be qualified electors of the state. It also eliminates the reference to officers. The definition of state employees in section 18 includes state officers. (See section 18, page 34 infra)

Sec. 3. AS 39.25.070(1) is amended to read:

(1) approve or disapprove amendments to the personnel rules in accordance with AS 39.25.140 (THE ORIGINAL RULES OR A PART OF THEM WITHIN 60 DAYS OF THEIR SUBMISSION TO THE BOARD AND APPROVE OR DISAPPROVE AMENDMENT TO THE RULES WITHIN 30 DAYS OF SUBMISSION TO THE BOARD, AND IN CARRYING OUT THIS DUTY, THE BOARD, IF REQUESTED, MAY HOLD THE PUBLIC HEARINGS IT CONSIDERS NECESSARY);

(SB 193, page 1, line 22)

Comment

The bill transfers all of the substantive requirements for amending the Personnel Rules to AS 39.25.140 and proposes changes in those procedures. (See section 12, page 16, infra)

Sec. 4. AS 39.25.070(3) is amended to read:

(3) hear and determine appeals by employees (IN THE CLASSIFIED SERVICE) as provided in AS 39.25.170;

(SB 193, page 1, line 29)

Comment

Members of the partially exempt service may appeal to the Personnel Board in certain situations by case law. In addition, appeal rights are granted to partially exempt and exempt employees in cases of prohibited discrimination in the proposed amendments to AS 39.25.170. Therefore, the reference to the classified service in this paragraph is deleted.

Sec. 5. AS 39.25.070 is amended by adding a new paragraph to read:

(7) employ staff members, who shall be in the classified service.

Comment

The Personnel Board does not have statutory authority for employing staff members at present. The proposed language places any employees of the board in the classified service. The members of the commission considered that Personnel Board employees should be protected from the possibility of arbitrary action or undue influence to which they might be exposed if they were placed in the partially exempt or exempt service.

Sec. 6. AS 39.25.080 is repealed and reenacted to read:

Sec. 39.25.080. PUBLIC RECORDS. (a) State personnel records, including employment applications and examination materials, are confidential and are not open to public inspection except as provided in this section.

(b) The following information is available for public inspection, subject to reasonable regulations on the time and manner of inspection:

(1) the names and position titles of all state employees;

(2) the position held by a state employee;

(3) prior positions held by a state employee;

(4) whether a state employee is in the classified, partially exempt or exempt service;

(5) the dates of appointment and separation of a state employee; and

(6) the compensation authorized for a state employee.

(c) A state employee has the right to examine his own personnel files and may authorize others to examine his files.

(d) An applicant for state employment who appeals an examination score may review written examination questions relating to the examination unless the questions are to be used in future examinations.

Comment

Current law provides that the state personnel records are public except for those which the rules require to be kept confidential. The Personnel Rules provide that except for examination materials, performance evaluations, personal history or other confidential materials so designated by the Director of Personnel, employee records are public records. (PR 14 07.0) The commission decided that it was more appropriate to indicate what materials actually are open to the public, and to make the remaining records confidential. The public materials are listed in subsection (b).

Subsections (c) and (d) set out new material to confirm a person's right to examine his own files and to establish when an applicant may review written examination materials.

Sec. 7. AS 39.25.090 is amended to read:

Sec. 39.25.090. COVERAGE OF CHAPTER. This chapter and the rules adopted under it apply to all positions in (1) the classified service, and (2) the partially exempt and exempt services (SERVICE) as specifically provided.

(SB 193, page 2, line 26)

Comment

Since amendments proposed to AS 39.25.170 extend limited appeal rights to members of the exempt service, the coverage of the chapter has changed.

Sec. 8. AS 39.25.110 is repealed and reenacted to read:

Sec. 39.25.110. EXEMPT SERVICE. Unless otherwise provided by law, the following positions in the state service constitute the exempt service and are exempt from the provisions of this chapter and the rules adopted under it:

(1) persons elected to public office by popular vote or appointed to fill vacancies in elected offices;

(2) justices of the supreme court, judges of the court of appeals, judges of the superior court, and judges and magistrates of other state courts established by law;

(3) employees of the state court system, and employees and members of the Judicial Council;

(4) employees of the state legislature and its agencies;

(5) the head of each principal department in the executive branch;

(6) officers and employees of the University of Alaska;

(7) certificated teachers and noncertificated employees employed by a regional educational attendance area established and organized under AS 14.08.031 - 14.08.041 to teach in, administer, or operate schools under the control of a regional educational attendance area school board;

(8) patients and inmates employed in state institutions;

(9) persons employed in a professional capacity to make a temporary or special inquiry, study or examination as authorized by the governor, the legislature, or a legislative committee;

(10) members of boards, commissions, or authorities;

(11) the officers and employees of the following boards, commissions and authorities:

(A) Alaska Commercial Fisheries Entry Commission;

(B) Alaska Gas Pipeline Financing Authority;

(C) Alaska Permanent Fund Corporation;

(D) Alaska Energy Center;

(E) Alaska Industrial Development Authority;

(12) the executive officer of the Alaska Commission on Post-secondary Education;

(13) the ombudsman and his staff;

(14) the executive secretary and legal counsel of the Alaska Municipal Bond Bank Authority;

(15) licensed physicians, as defined in AS 47.30.340(9), employed by the division of mental health and developmental disabilities, Department of Health and Social Services;

(16) petroleum engineers and petroleum geologists employed in a professional capacity by the Department of Natural Resources except for those employed in the division of geological and geophysical surveys;

(17) officers, agents, and employees of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board granted limited peace officer powers by the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board under AS 04.06.110;

(18) persons employed by the division of marine transportation as masters and members of the crews of vessels who operate the state ferry system and who are covered by a collective bargaining agreement provided in AS 23.40.040.

Comment

The phrase "unless otherwise provided by law" is added to the introductory section. Obsolete or redundant paragraphs have been deleted and the list has been reorganized for clarity.

Judges of the Court of Appeals have been added to paragraph (2). In paragraph (9), the wording has been changed from "temporary and special inquiry" to "temporary or special inquiry". For a table comparing the order and content of the new sections with the existing statute, see Appendix C.

Sec. 9. AS 39.25.120 is repealed and reenacted to read:

Sec. 39.25.120. PARTIALLY EXEMPT SERVICE. (a) Positions in the partially exempt service are included in the position classification plan established under this chapter and are compensated according to the pay plan (AS 39.27.011).

(b) A person holding a position in the partially exempt service is not required to take an examination or qualify or earn a place on a register, and is not eligible for a hearing by the personnel board in case of dismissal, demotion, or suspension, except as provided in AS 39.25.170. Positions in the partially exempt service are specifically exempt from the rules established under AS 39.25.150(3) - (10), (13), (14), and (17).

(SB 193, page 4, line 25)

Comment

The bill restructures AS 39.25.120 and changes the references to other sections of the State Personnel Act to conform to amendments made since this section was adopted and amendments proposed in the bill. The substance of the beginning section is not changed.

(c) The following positions in the state service constitute the partially exempt service:

(1) deputy and assistant commissioners of the principal departments of the executive branch, including the assistant adjutant general of the Department of Military Affairs;

(2) the directors of the major divisions of the principal departments of the executive branch and the regional directors of the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities;

(3) attorney members of the staff of the Department of Law and of the public defender agency;

(4) one private secretary for each head of a principal department in the executive branch;

(5) employees of the Office of the Governor and the office of the lieutenant governor, including the staff of the governor's mansion;

(6) the executive director and deputy director of the Alaska Public Utilities Commission;

(7) the state forester in the Department of Natural Resources;

(8) the director, deputy director, staff legal counsel, and hearing officers of the Alaska Transportation Commission;

(9) not more than two special assistants to the commissioner of each of the principal departments of the executive branch;

(10) the principal executive officer of the following boards, councils or commissions:

(A) Alaska Public Broadcasting Commission;

(B) Professional Teaching Practices Commission;

(C) Parole Board;

(D) Board of Nursing;

(E) Real Estate Commission;

(F) Alaska Royalty Oil and Gas Development Advisory Board;

(G) Alaska Historical Commission;

(H) Alaska State Council on the Arts;

(I) Alaska Police Standards Council;

(J) Council on Science and Technology;

(11) Alaska Pioneers' Home managers;

(12) hearing examiners in the Department of Revenue;

(13) the comptroller in the division of treasury, Department of Revenue;

(14) investment officers in the Department of Revenue;

(15) the chief of subsistence in the Department of Fish and Game;

(16) airport managers in the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities employed at the Anchorage and Fairbanks International Airports;

(17) the deputy director of the division of tourism and the deputy director of the division of insurance in the Department of Commerce and Economic Development;

(18) the executive director and staff of the Alaska Public Offices Commission.

(19) the director, deputy director, personnel analysts II, labor relations analysts I, labor relations analysts II, senior negotiators, research directors of the division of labor relations in the Department of Administration.

(SB 193, page 5, line 8)

Comment

The bill adds deputy commissioners to paragraph (1) and makes specific reference to the assistant adjutant general of the Department of Military Affairs and to regional directors in the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities.

Paragraph (2) places all division directors in the partially exempt service. The State Personnel Act currently provides that division directors who are listed in the paragraph and any others designated by the Governor are members of the partially exempt service. Since the Governor designates all division directors to be partially exempt, the commission considered the change to be appropriate.

Paragraph (9) is a new provision placing special assistants to commissioners in the partially exempt service. This reflects current practice. The commission considered that the number should be limited to two special assistants. If a commissioner needs more than two, the Personnel Board has the authority under AS 39.25.130 to add additional positions. (See section 10, page 16, infra)

Paragraphs (10)(A) - (E) and paragraphs (11) - (16) add several positions to the section. These positions are now in the partially exempt service but are not listed in the State Personnel Act. Similarly, paragraph (17) places the deputy director of insurance in the partially exempt service.

Paragraph (19) places those employees responsible for representing the state in collective bargaining negotiations in the partially exempt service. They are now in the classified service but are not members of any collective bargaining unit. The majority of the commission considered that it was important for these employees to be directly responsive to the policies of the administration.

For a table comparing the statute with the provisions of the bill, see Appendix D.

Sec. 10. AS 39.25.130(a) is amended to read:

(a) The (AFTER JUNE 30, 1961, THE) personnel board, upon written recommendation of the commissioner of administration, may extend the partially exempt service to include any position (WHICH WAS) in the classified service (ON APRIL 19, 1960,) which, in the judgment of the board:

(1) involves principal responsibility for the determination of policy;

(2) involves principal responsibility for the way in which policies are carried out; or

(3) involves responsibilities and duties of a type not susceptible to the ordinary recruiting and examining procedures.

(SB 193, page 7, line 7)

Comment

The Personnel Board exercises the power to move positions from the classified service to the partially exempt service over positions created after April 19, 1960, as well as over positions created before that date. The commission considered this exercise of power to be appropriate and therefore the bill amends the statute by deleting reference to the dates.

Sec. 11. AS 39.25.130(c) is amended to read:

(c) The (AFTER JUNE 30, 1961, THE) personnel board, upon written recommendation of the commissioner of administration, may extend the classified service to include any position (WHICH WAS) in the partially exempt service (ON APRIL 19, 1960).

(SB 193, page 7, line 19)

Comment

As in section 10 above, the reference to dates in

AS 39.25.130(3) has been deleted since the Personnel Board has traditionally acted to change positions created after April 19, 1960, as well as those created before that date.

Sec. 12. AS 39.25.140 is repealed and reenacted to read:

Sec. 39.25.140. AMENDMENT OF PERSONNEL RULES. (a) The director of personnel shall prepare and submit proposed amendments of the personnel rules to the commissioner of administration for review and approval.

(b) The commissioner of administration shall review the proposed amendments and if he approves them, he shall submit them to the personnel board.

(c) When the proposed amendments are submitted to the personnel board, the commissioner of administration shall post notice in public buildings throughout the state that the personnel board has the proposed amendments under consideration.

(d) If the proposed amendments concern matters of public policy, the personnel board shall adopt them in accordance with the Administrative Procedure Act (AS 44.62).

Comment

The bill makes several changes in AS 39.25.140. In subsections (a) and (b), the Commissioner of Administration is given the power to approve or disapprove amendments proposed by the Director of Personnel. In paragraph (d) those amendments which concern matters of public policy are made subject to the rule-making provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act. The State Personnel Act presently exempts adoption of the Personnel Rules from the APA. The commission found that additional opportunity for public notice and comment should be provided over those subjects which affect the public and therefore recommends the change in the rule-making procedures. (Note that subsection (f) sets out topics which are included within "matters of public policy".)

(e) If the proposed amendments relate only to the internal management of the state agencies

(1) notice of the proposed amendments shall be posted for at least 30 days;

(2) if requested by the commissioner of administration or by a person receiving notice of the proposed amendments, the personnel board may hold public hearings on the proposed amendments and may appoint a hearing officer to conduct the hearings;

(3) the personnel board may amend the proposed amendments;

(4) the proposed amendments become effective 45 days after they are submitted to the personnel board unless the board has disapproved them;

(5) the amended rules shall be published in the Alaska Administrative Register and Code for informational purposes.

(SB 193, page 8, line 9)

Comment

Those amendments to the Personnel Rules which relate only to the internal management of state agencies are adopted under the procedures of this subsection. These procedures are substantially identical to those now set out in the State Personnel Act.

In paragraph (2) the bill permits the Personnel Board to appoint a hearing officer to conduct hearings on amendments. The Personnel Board is granted the power to amend the proposed rules in paragraph (3), a power which it does not now have.

The bill provides in paragraph (4), that the amendments take effect 45 days after submission to the Board, rather than the present 30 days. The additional time gives the board an opportunity to consider any written or oral testimony received from the public. Paragraph (5) requires that the amended rules be published in the Alaska Administrative Register and Code. Publication of the rules in the Code is discretionary now.

(f) In this section "matters of public policy" include, but are not limited to, matters concerning

(1) recruitment;

(2) examinations;

(3) selection methods;

(4) prohibitions and penalties;

(5) public records;

(6) eligible lists;

(7) hours of work;

(8) merit increases; and

(9) hearings and appeals relating to matters listed in (1) - (8) of this subsection.

(SB 193, page 8, line 23)

Comment

The topics listed are those which the commission believed were of most concern to the public. Personnel Rules on recruitment, examinations, selection methods, and eligible lists all affect members of the public if they apply for state employment. The prohibitions and penalties applying to state employees define their conduct and are important to all citizens of the state. The hours which state employees work are similarly of widespread concern as are merit increases.

Sec. 13. AS 39.25.150 is repealed and reenacted to read:

Sec. 39.25.150. SCOPE OF THE RULES. The personnel rules shall provide for

(1) the preparation, maintenance, and revision by the director of personnel, subject to approval of the commissioner of administration and the personnel board, of a position classification plan for all positions in the classified and partially exempt services; the position classification plan shall include

(A) a grouping together of all positions into classes on the basis of duties and responsibilities;

(B) an appropriate title, a description of the duties and responsibilities, training and experience qualifications, and other necessary position specifications for each class of positions;

(2) the preparation, maintenance, revision and administration by the director of personnel of a pay plan for all positions in the classified and partially exempt services; the pay plan (A) shall be based upon the position classification plan; (B) shall provide for fair and reasonable compensation for services rendered, and reflect the principle of like pay for like work; (C) may be amended, approved, or disapproved by the legislature in regular or special session; after the pay plan is in effect, a salary or wage payment may not be made to a state employee covered by the plan unless the payment is in accordance with this chapter and the rules adopted under this chapter or unless the payment is in accordance with a valid agreement entered into in accordance with AS 23.40;

(SB 193, page 9, line 6)

Comment

The bill restructures paragraphs (1) and (2) to make their content clearer. In addition, paragraph (2) is amended to refer to the Public Employment Relations Act and to set out that it is legal for the state to pay employees in accordance with a collective bargaining agreement even if the agreement does not conform to the state pay plan.

Provisions in the State Personnel Act which specify that the pay plan be prepared after consultation with appointing authorities and employee representatives and that commissioners' salaries are not the maximum limit for the pay plan are deleted. There is nothing in the law to prevent the pay plan from providing for salaries exceeding those of commissioners. Since collective bargaining agreements between the state and employee representatives now set pay levels for almost all the classified employees, there is considerable consultation with employee representatives before salary levels are established.

(3) the use of employee selection methods which will fairly test the capacity and fitness of the person examined to efficiently discharge the duties of the class in which employment is sought;

Comment

This paragraph is rewritten to more clearly state the standards for employee selection methods which the Personnel Rules will implement.

(4) the establishment and maintenance of eligible lists for appointment and promotion providing the names of eligible candidates in order of their relative performance in the examinations;

(5) the procedure for certifying eligible candidates;

(6) promotions from within the state service when there are qualified candidates in the state service; vacancies shall be filled by promotion whenever practicable and in the best interest of the state service and promotion shall be by competitive examination whenever possible; in considering promotions, applicants' qualifications, performance record, seniority, and conduct shall be evaluated;

(7) a period of probation not to exceed one year before an appointment to a position becomes permanent, except that a permanent employee receiving a promotional appointment retains permanent status in the service and job class from which appointed for the duration of the probationary period and may be demoted to a former class without right of appeal, notwithstanding AS 39.25.170, but if the employee is dismissed from the service the appeal rights under AS 39.25.170 apply;

(8) nonpermanent and emergency appointments to positions in the state service in accordance with AS 39.25.195 - 39.25.200;

(9) provisional appointment without competitive examination when appropriate eligible lists are not available;

(10) transfers from one department to another and from another merit system jurisdiction to the state service;

(11) transfers from one area of the state to another;

(12) the payment of transportation costs when an employee transfers from one area to another at the request of the employer;

(13) the reinstatement of a person who resigns in good standing;

(14) layoffs for reason of lack of money or work, abolition of positions, or material changes in duties or organization; both performance and seniority records shall be considered in the development of layoff orders;

(15) the development, maintenance, and use of employee performance records;

(SB 193, page 10, line 6)

Comment

The bill reorders and rephrases paragraphs (4) - (15). The substance is unchanged. For a table comparing the bill with the Act, see Appendix E.

(16) the establishment of disciplinary measures which may include disciplinary suspension without pay;

Comment

The State Personnel Act currently limits the imposition of disciplinary suspension without pay to 30 days in any 12-month period. The bill deletes that limit. The commission is continuing to work to develop a comprehensive framework of graduated disciplinary measures which will be more effective than the present system.

(17) the procedures for review of disputed personnel actions, and for resolving employee and interagency grievances, and for resolving grievances of the general public concerning the operation of the state personnel system;

Comment

This paragraph is amended to require that the Personnel Rules include procedures for resolving grievances of the public concerning the state personnel system. These would include problems arising out of applying for state employment, state employment examinations, and the selection process.

(18) hours of work for all employees in the state service;

(19) methods and procedures covering overtime work and pay;

(20) the granting of employment preference rights to a veteran at each time application is made for employment not within the area of promotion, when the veteran possesses the necessary qualifications in the job classification applied for under this chapter; in the examination to determine the qualification of applicants for entrance into the classified service under merit system examination, five additional points shall be added to the passing grade of a veteran and ten additional points shall be added to the passing grade of a disabled veteran; if a position in the classified service is eliminated, employees shall be released in accordance with rules which give due effect to all factors; if all job qualifications are equal, the veteran shall be given preference over the nonveteran and the veteran shall be kept on the job; in this paragraph

(A) "veteran" means a person with 90 days or more active service in the armed forces of the United States who has been honorably discharged after having served during any period between April 6, 1917, and December 1, 1919, between September 16, 1940, and December 31, 1947, or between June 27, 1950, and November 7, 1975;

(B) "disabled veteran" means a veteran who is rated by the United States Veterans' Administration as having at least a 10 percent service-connected disability;

(21) the employment of persons in permanent positions on a part-time basis of 15 hours or more a week, including the employment of two persons to fill one permanent full-time position; these employees shall be designated as permanent part-time employees;

(22) the granting of employment preference to severely handicapped persons; this includes the right to provisional appointment without competitive examination for periods up to four months and the granting of eligibility to a severely handicapped person provisionally appointed under the rules who demonstrates ability to perform the job for permanent appointment without competitive examination; provisional employment under this paragraph may not exceed four months during a 12-month period; "severely handicapped" as used in this paragraph means persons certified by the director of the division of vocational rehabilitation to be severely handicapped;

(SB 193, page 11, line 17)

Comment

The bill reorders and rephrases paragraphs (18) - (22). The substantive content is unchanged. For a table comparing the bill with the Act, See Appendix E.

(23) the establishment of programs facilitating the employment of disadvantaged persons, including limitation of competition for appointment and promotion to individuals who meet the program requirements;

(SB 193, page 12, line 26)

Comment

This paragraph is added to the State Personnel Act to provide statutory authority for the adoption of Rules to implement programs such as the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA) or the Senior Community Service Employment Program (SCSEP). The language is taken from the Model Public Personnel Administration Law.

(24) the delegation, when feasible, of personnel responsibilities and duties to the principal departments of the executive branch;

(25) other rules and administrative regulations, not inconsistent with this chapter, which are necessary for its enforcement.

(SB 193, page 13, line 1)

Comment

The bill renumbers these paragraphs. They are identical with provisions in the State Personnel Act.

Sec. 14. AS 39.25.153 is repealed and reenacted to read:

Sec. 39.25.153. PERSONNEL OFFICERS. (a) If a principal department of the executive branch has a personnel officer, the personnel officer shall be employed by and located within that department.

(SB 193, page 13, line 5)

Comment

Subsection (a) of the bill provides that personnel officers shall be departmental employees. This resolves the question of whether they should be centralized as employees of the Division of Personnel stationed in the individual departments, or whether they should be decentralized as employees of the departments they serve,in favor of decentralization. The commission considered that the working relationship of the personnel officer with the commissioner and staff of the department was crucial to his or her effectiveness and that this relationship could be impaired if he or she were not an employee of the department. Since not all departments have a personnel officer (the Department of Law does not), the bill does not require each department to have one.

(b) Subject to the provisions of (d) of this section, the personnel officers for the Departments of Transportation and Public Facilities, Fish and Game, Education, Labor, and Health and Social Services, have the following powers with respect to the classes of positions unique to their departments:

(1) to assign positions to an existing class in the state classification plan and to the salary range for that class as established by the state pay plan or by a valid agreement entered into in accordance with AS 23.40;

(2) to administer and score examinations and to place successful applicants on the eligible lists;

(3) to certify those eligible to the appointing authorities.

(SB 193, page 13, line 9)

Comment

This section of the State Personnel Act grants to the personnel officers for certain departments the power to amend the Personnel Rules for classes of employees unique to their departments. This power has never been used. The commission recommends that the actions which a departmental personnel officer may take independently from the Division of Personnel be more clearly and more narrowly defined and that they no longer have the power to amend the Personnel Rules.

This section does not change which personnel officers are granted authority to act under AS 39.25.153 except to delete reference to the Department of Highways and to substitute the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities. However, instead of giving the named personnel officers the power to amend the Personnel Rules, subsection (b) sets out the actions they may take. The commission considered that these are the areas where the ability to act quickly is most likely to be crucial to the success of a departmental program.

During the past year the Director of Personnel has delegated the classification authority for some classes to certain personnel officers. This has been done under AS 39.25.150(21), which permits delegation of personnel functions, rather than under this section. The agreement extends beyond the scope of AS 39.25.153 which is limited to positions unique to the department.

(c) The initial determination of classes of positions unique to the departments listed in (b) of this section shall be made by the personnel officer of the department in consultation with the commissioner of his department subject to the approval of the director of personnel in the Department of Administration.

(d) The assumption of a power set out in (b) of this section must be approved by the commissioner of administration and must be in harmony with the merit principle of personnel administration (AS 39.25.-010).

(SB 193, page 13, line 21)

Comment

Subsection (c) is taken from existing language in AS 39.-25.153. Subsection (d) is new language giving the Department of Administration some control over the actions of the personnel officers and emphasizing the importance of the merit principle of employment.

Sec. 15. AS 39.25.160 is repealed and reenacted to read:

Sec. 39.25.160. GENERALLY. (a) A classified employee or an exempt employee in a position named in AS 39.25.110(3) may not take an active part in the management of a political party above the precinct level.

(b) A person may not give, render, pay, offer, solicit, or accept money, services, or other valuable thing in connection with securing or making an appointment, promotion, or advantage in a position in the classified service.

(c) A person may not require an assessment, subscription, contribution, or service for a political party from a state employee.

(d) A person may not seek or attempt to use a political party endorsement in connection with an appointment or promotion in the classified service.

(e) An employee in the classified or partially exempt service who seeks nomination or becomes a candidate for state or national elective political office shall immediately resign any position held in the state service.

(SB 193, page 13, line 29)

Comment

That part of the existing AS 39.25.160(a) which grants political rights to state employees is placed in section 19 of the bill. (See page 35, infra)

All of these subsections have been rephrased for style, but their content is unchanged except as noted in the following comments.

The bill adds the phrase securing or making to subsection (b). The scope of subsection (c) is expanded to cover all state employees, not just those in the classified service. Subsection (e) extends the requirement for resignation when seeking nomination to political office to members of the partially exempt service.

(f) Action affecting the employment status of a state employee or an applicant for a position in state service, including appointment, promotion, demotion, suspension, or removal, may not be taken or withheld on the basis of unlawful discrimination due to race, sex, color, religion, national origin, age, or handicap.

(g) Action affecting the employment status of an employee in the classified service or an applicant for a position in the classified service, including appointment, promotion, demotion, suspension, or removal, may not be taken or withheld on the basis of unlawful discrimination due to political beliefs.

(SB 193, page 14, line 18)

Comment

Protection against discrimination in employment is extended by subsection (f) not only to classified service employees but to members of the partially exempt and exempt service. The categories of unlawful discrimination are increased from race and religion to include sex, color, national origin, age and handicap. The provision which protects members of the classified service from discrimination based on political beliefs is placed in subsection (g). The bill prohibits only unlawful discrimination.

(h) A person may not knowingly make a false statement, certificate, mark, rating, or report with regard to a test, certification, or appointment made under this chapter or in any manner commit a fraud preventing the impartial execution of this chapter and the personnel rules adopted under this chapter.

(i) A person may not obstruct the right of another person to examination, eligibility, certification, appointment, or promotion under this chapter.

(SB 193, page 14, line 28)

Comment

A requirement that a person act knowingly is added to subsection (h). Otherwise, these two subsections are not substantively changed.

Sec. 16. AS 39.25.170 is repealed and reenacted to read:

Sec. 39.25.170. HEARINGS AND APPEALS UPON DISMISSAL, DEMOTION, OR SUSPENSION. (a) An employee may be dismissed, demoted, or suspended by delivery of written notice of the proposed action and the reason for it from the appointing authority to the employee.

(SB 193, page 15, line 7)

Comment

This subsection adds to the statute a requirement that the notice of disciplinary action given to the employee be in writing. It also requires that the notice set out the reasons for the action.

(b) A permanent employee in the classified service who has been dismissed, demoted, or suspended may appeal the action to the personnel board.

(c) An employee who has been dismissed, demoted, or suspended due to unlawful discrimination based on race, sex, color, religion, national origin, age, or handicap may appeal the action to the personnel board.

(d) An employee in the classified service who has been dismissed, demoted, or suspended due to unlawful discrimination based on political beliefs may appeal the action to the personnel board.

(e) A permanent employee in the classified service who holds probationary status in his present position may appeal a dismissal from the classified service to the personnel board.

(f) An employee who is on leave without pay from a position in the classified service and who is employed by the state in another capacity, either in the exempt or partially exempt service, may appeal a dismissal from the classified service to the personnel board.

(SB 193, page 15, line 12)

Comment

These subsections set out the employees who are granted appeal rights.

Subsection (b) repeats the existing statutory provision.

Subsection (c) is based on the expanded scope of AS 39.25.160(f) which extends protection from unlawful discrimination to partially exempt and exempt state employees and expands the classes of people protected from discrimination.

Subsection (d) extends protection against disciplinary action based on political beliefs to classified employees who are not in permanent status as well as to permanent classified employees.

Appeal rights granted by AS 39.25.150(7) are repeated in subsection (e). Subsection (f) is based on current practice and is consistent with the rationale of subsection (e).

(g) An employee begins an appeal by filing a written request for review of the action with the personnel board within 15 days of receiving written notice of the action from the appointing authority.

(h) If requested by the employee at the time of filing an appeal, the personnel board shall hold a hearing to determine the reasonableness of the the action taken by the appointing authority. If the employee requests it, the hearing shall be open to the public. The employee may be represented by another person and has the right to present evidence. Technical rules of evidence do not apply to the hearing.

(SB 193, page 15, line 28)

Comment

These subsections set out existing provisions of AS 39.25.-170(a). The new language makes clear that an employee must request his appeal in writing, that the employee has the right to determine whether the hearing is open to the public, that the employee's representative need not be an attorney, and that the technical rules of evidence do not apply to the proceedings.

(i) If the personnel board finds that the actic complained of was due to unlawful discrimination based on race, sex, color, religion, national origin, political beliefs, age, handicap, or in violation of the provisions of this chapter or the personnel rules, the employee shall be reinstated to the position without loss of pay or leave benefit for the period of dismissal, demotion, or suspension. In all other cases, the board shall report its findings and recommendations to both parties.

(SB 193, page 16, line 9)

Comment

The substance of subsection (i) is found in AS 39.25.170(b). The new subsection repeats the expanded classes protected from discrimination to all of those listed in the new AS 39.25.160.

Sec. 17. AS 39.25 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 39.25.175. PROCEDURE. (a) A subpoena shall be issued at the request of a party to a proceeding begun under AS 39.25.170.

(b) If a person refuses to respond to a subpoena issued under this section, or refuses to testify at a hearing authorized by AS 39.25.170, the personnel board may apply to the superior court for an order requiring the person to respond to the subpoena or to testify.

(c) Failure to obey the order of the superior court requiring response to a subpoena or testimony at a hearing may be punished as contempt of court.

(SB 193, page 16, line 17)

Comment

The power to subpoena witnesses is already granted to the Personnel Board in AS 39.25.070(6). This new section sets out the procedures which the board may follow should a person refuse to comply with the subpoena.

ALASKA LEGISLATURE SPECIAL COMMITTEE / SUBJECT FILE 8672
1364 SCOMM 51: BLUE RIBBON COMN. ON STATE PERSONNEL ACT 1978-1983

Sec. 18. AS 39.25 is amended by adding new sections to read:

Sec. 39.25.181. DEFINITIONS. In this chapter,

(1) "fraud" means for a person to knowingly

(A) create or confirm another's false impression which the person does not believe to be true, including false impressions as to law or value and false impressions as to intention or other state of mind;

(B) fail to correct another's false impression which the person previously has created or confirmed;

(C) prevent another from acquiring pertinent information;

(2) "knowingly" means for a person to be aware with respect to conduct or to a circumstance described by a provision of law that his conduct is of that nature or that the circumstance exists; when knowledge of the existence of a particular fact is required, that knowledge is established if a person is aware of a substantial probability of its existence, unless he actually believes it does not exist;

(3) "precinct" means the territory within which resident voters may cast votes at one polling place;

(4) "state employee" means a person employed by the state who is paid a wage or salary, but does not include a person hired by the state to work as an independent contractor.

(SB 193, page 16, line 27)

Comment

The definition for "fraud" is taken from the Criminal Code definition of "deception", AS 11.81.900(b)(14), and is rewritten for use within the State Personnel Act. The definition for "knowingly" is also taken from the Criminal Code, AS 11.81.-900(a)(2), with amendments for use within the State Personnel

Act.

The definition for "precinct" is taken verbatim from the State Election Code, AS 15.60.010(17). The bill includes a new definition for "state employee".

Sec. 19. AS 39.25 is amended by adding a new section to article 6 to read:

Sec. 39.25.192. EMPLOYEE POLITICAL RIGHTS. A state employee may

(1) be a member of a national, state, or local political party;

(2) take part in a political campaign;

(3) express political opinions;

(4) register party preference;

(5) serve as a voting or nonvoting delegate to a party convention;

(6) be appointed, nominated, or elected to nonpartisan public office in a local government unit; and

(7) make contributions to a political party or a candidate for public office.

Comment

This section sets out the political rights listed in the present AS 39.25.160(a) with amendments for style. Paragraph (7) is added to clarify that state employees may make contributions to a political party or candidate.

Sec. 20. AS 39.25.180 is repealed.

(SB 193, page 18, line 5)

Comment

The Revisor of Statutes has determined that this section, which provides for the transfer of territorial employees to state employees, is obsolete. The commission agrees with her. Therefore, the bill repeals the section.

Sec. 21. This Act takes effect July 1, 1981.

(SB 193, page 18, line 6)

Comment

The commission recommends an effective date to insure a smooth transition from the existing practices to those set out in the bill.

SENATE BILL 194: RELATING TO NEPOTISM IN STATE EMPLOYMENT.

PURPOSE

The present statute prohibiting nepotism in state employment is directed at relatives of the executive head of a department or agency. It prohibits the employment of anyone related within the second degree of kindred to the executive head. However, the Personnel Rules also prohibit the employment of persons related within the second degree of kindred to the head of the division or subdivision within which the person is working. (PR 13 09.2). In addition, the Rule requires that before a person may be employed in the same agency with a close relative, that the Director of Personnel and the appointing authority for the department or agency must give express approval to the appointment. (PR 13 09.3)

The scope of the Personnel Rules is broader than the scope of the statute. The Attorney General has advised the Division of Personnel that the Rules are therefore not completely enforceable. The commission considered the issue and the majority recommends that the scope of the statute be enlarged to include the provisions of the Personnel Rules. While provisions against nepotism limit the opportunities of some Alaskans to find employment with particular offices in the state, the disadvantage to those people should be weighed against the appearance of impropriety and favoritism which is created if relatives of the head of a division or department are working within that division or department.

The Director of Personnel advised the commission that in the past he has routinely approved waivers for relatives to work in a non-supervisory status in the same office. The majority of the commission recommends that requirement for review of these situations be placed in the statute to provide a mechanism for review should an instance of abuse arise.

SECTION BY SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1. AS 39.10.010 is repealed and reenacted to read:

Sec. 39.10.010. NEPOTISM PROHIBITED. (a) A person may not be appointed to a position in a state department or agency, whether in the legislative, judicial, or executive branch, if that person is the spouse of or is related by blood or marriage within and including the second degree of kindred to the commissioner or a deputy or assistant commissioner of the principal department, or to the executive head of the agency.

Comment

This subsection prohibits the employment of a person related to the top-level managers of a department or agency. It encompasses the present substance of AS 39.10.010 and extends it to include deputy and assistant commissioners.

(b) A person may not be appointed to a position in a division of a state department or agency, whether in the legislative, judicial, or executive branch, if that person is the spouse of, or is related by blood or marriage within and including the second degree of kindred to, the executive head of the division.

(c) A person may not be appointed to a position in a state department or agency in the executive branch, if that person is the spouse of, or is related by blood or marriage within and including the second degree of kindred to, an employee in the department or agency unless the director of personnel and the person who makes the appointment approve the appointment in writing. An appointment prohibited by (a) or (b) of this section may not be approved under this subsection.

Comment

These subsections extend the scope of the statute to include the provisions of the Personnel Rule. Subsection (b) prohibits the employment within a particular division of persons related to the division director. It applies to all three branches of government.

Subsection (c) provides that before two close relatives may work in the same office in the executive branch of government, the Director of Personnel and the person who is making the hiring decision must both approve the appointment in writing.

Section 2. This Act takes effect immediately in accordance with AS 01.10.070(c).

Comment

Because the state is operating without an effective nepotism law, the commission recommends that the bill take effect immediately.

SENATE BILL 195: LIMITING THE ADJUSTMENT OF RETIREMENT BENEFITS.

PURPOSE

This bill remedies a problem which the commission was advised of in testimony from a retired state employee. When the employee retired in 1976, she had been advised on four separate occasions by the staff of the Division of Retirement and Benefits that she was eligible for more than nine years of credited service with the state. Shortly after she retired the legislature amended the retirement laws and she was told that she would receive credit for an additional three years because of her military service. She began receiving retirement benefits on that basis.

In 1979 the division wrote to advise her that their original computations had been in error and that her years of employment with the University of Alaska could not be included in her credited service. Therefore, she had received over $5000 in benefits which she would have to repay. They reduced the amount of her check by $100 to be credited towards that overpayment, in addition to reducing the check to the amount she was actually entitled to receive. The basis for denying credit for the employee's period of service with the University of Alaska was a regulation adopted by the Division of Retirement and Benefits in 1978 -- two years after she had retired.

The employee appealed to the Public Employee Retirement Board, which can waive collection of overpayments in cases of hardship. In determining whether there would be hardship to the employee, the board considered her family's financial situation and found that she was not entitled to the waiver.

Commission members discovered that this was not an isolated instance. A number of retired state employees have undergone similar experiences. They relied on assurances from the division of retirement and benefits only to discover a considerable time later that errors had been made and that their benefits would be reduced.

The commission recommends that a two-year statute of limitations be placed on the collection of overpayments. Two years gives the Division of Retirement and Benefits ample time to audit its records and find and correct any errors made. After that period of time, a retired person should be freed from the burden of having to pay back the state for mistakes of the state's employees. This protection should be available only in cases where the retired person did not contribute to causing the error. It should not apply to persons working for employers other than the state, since those employers may not be in a financial position to absorb the cost of errors made by state employees.

SECTION BY SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1. AS 14.25.173 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(b) An adjustment which requires repayment of benefits may not be made under this section if

(1) the incorrect benefit was first paid two years or more before the member or teacher or beneficiary was notified of the change or error; and

(2) the change or error was not caused by the member or teacher or beneficiary.

Comment

This section amends the Teachers Retirement System by prohibiting the Division of Retirement and Benefits from decreasing benefits in order to collect for a previous overpayment if two conditions are met. The first condition is that the overpayment began two years or more before the division told the retired teacher of the error. The second condition is that the teacher did not cause the error.

Sec. 2. AS 39.35.520 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(b) An adjustment which requires repayment of benefits may not be made under this section if

(1) the incorrect benefit was first paid two years or more before the employee or beneficiary was notified of the change or error;

(2) the change or error was not caused by the employee or beneficiary; and

(3) the change or error relates to the employee's credited service with the state and not with another participating employer.

Comment

This section amends the Public Employee Retirement System in the same way that section 1 amends the TRS. However, in this section there is an additional condition. The error in computation must relate to the employee's credited service with the state, and not with another participating employer.

Sec. 3. This Act is retroactive to July 1, 1979.

Sec. 4. This Act takes effect immediately in accordance with AS 01.10.-070(c).

Comment

Section 3 makes the Act retroactive in order to include the retired person who testified before the commission. Section 4 provides that the Act takes effect immediately in order to address the hardship to retired state employees.

SENATE BILL 196 : RELATING TO THE MEMBERSHIP OF THE PUBLIC EMPLOYEES RETIREMENT BOARD.

PURPOSE

This bill amends the Public Employees Retirement Act to change the membership of the Public Employees Retirement Board. The law presently requires that the three members who are appointed to the Personnel Board shall also serve on the PERB. AS 39.35.030. Those three individuals are also, by statute, appointed to the Labor Relations Agency, which is involved in collective bargaining issues. AS 23.40.250(3). The activities of both the LRA and the PERB have grown considerably recently. In the last legislative session, the PERB was made responsible for overseeing the supplemental employee benefit program and the deferred compensation program for state employees. AS 39.35.040(9) and (10). The increase in the number of state employees who are members of collective bargaining organizations has led to additional work for the LRA. The three members of the Personnel Board are citizen volunteers appointed by the Governor who are not employed by the state.

While the issues which are addressed by the Personnel Board are related to some of the issues addressed by the Labor Relations Agency, this is not the case with the subjects of concern to the Public Employees Retirement Board. Therefore, the commission recommends that the members of the Personnel Board continue to serve as the members of the LRA and that they be removed from the PERB.

The PERB should be composed of four elected members and one member appointed by the Governor. In addition, the commission recommends that one of the elected members should be a retired person to insure that those most directly affected by the system have a voice in the decision-making body.

SECTION BY SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1. AS 39.35.030(b) is amended to read:

(b) One (THREE) board member (MEMBERS) shall be appointed by the governor and shall serve at his pleasure (MEMBERS OF THE PERSONNEL BOARD OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ADMINISTRATION). The remaining four (TWO) board members shall be members of the system (AND) elected by the members of the system, and at least one of the elected board members shall be retired.

Comment

Section 1 of the bill sets out the changes in membership of the PERS board which are discussed above.

Sec. 2. Notwithstanding AS 39.35.030(b), as amended by sec. 1 of this Act, a person serving on the Public Employees Retirement Board on the effective date of this Act who was from the personnel board of the Department of Administration shall continue to serve until his successor is elected or appointed by the governor.

Comment

Section 2 is a temporary measure to enable the board to continue to act until new members have been selected according to the new method.

SENATE BILL 197: APPLYING THE ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE ACT (AS 44.62) TO ADOPTION OF REGULATIONS BY STATE RETIREMENT SYSTEMS.

PURPOSE

This bill amends the law to require that both the Public Employees Retirement Board and the Teachers Retirement System administrators comply with the Administrative Procedure Act when adopting regulations. Both retirement systems are presently exempted from the APA. The commission recommends the change because of concern that regulations have been adopted in the past without adequate opportunity for public comment. Although rule-making under the APA may be more time-consuming than rule-making under the present methods of the retirement systems, the improved public notice requirements outweigh that disadvantage. In instances in which either retirement system is faced with a need for immediate change in regulations, the APA provides for emergency rule-making. AS 44.62.250.

SECTION BY SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1. AS 39.35.042 is repealed and reenacted to read:

Sec. 39.35.042. REGULATIONS. Adoption of regulations under this chapter is subject to the Administrative Procedure Act (AS 44.62).

Comment

Section 1 of the bill amends the Public Employees Retirement System statute to make the PERS subject to the APA rule-making requirements.

Sec. 2. AS 14.25.022 is repealed and reenacted to read:

Sec. 14.25.022. REGULATIONS. Adoption of regulation by the administrator under this chapter is subject to the Administrative Procedure Act (AS 44.62).

Comment

Section 2 amends the Teachers Retirement System statute to make the TRS subject to the APA rule-making requirements.

CHAPTER II

UNRESOLVED PERSONNEL ISSUES

A number of the issues in the state personnel system continue to be of concern to the commission. There has not been time to address them fully during the past year.

NONPERMANENT CATEGORY OF EMPLOYEES

The passage of the nonpermanent law ended many of the difficulties which had existed with the temporary category of employees. However, the nonpermanent law brought about a significant change in the system for employing short-term workers for the state. Problems remain to be resolved in the fine-tuning of that system. Recently, the commission was advised of one aspect of these problems.

The Department of Fish and Game employs a number of people during the summer months to inventory the wildlife resources of the state. The length of employment can be as short as three weeks. Before the nonpermanent law was passed, these positions were classified as temporary positions. Last year, the department changed them to permanent seasonal positions. With the change from temporary to permanent seasonal, the department was, for the first time, required to fill the positions from the state's registers (the list of eligible applicants for positions). In the past, many of these positions had been filled by local residents. However, the local residents are not as likely to apply for the positions and to be placed within the top five candidates on the register as are college students looking for summer work. This had led to a decrease in local hire.

The issues which this situation raises include whether positions of this kind should be classified as permanent seasonal, and, if not, how they should be incorporated into the nonpermanent category of employees. The commission expects to discuss these issues during its ensuing meetings and to fully review the state's experience with the nonpermanent law.

APPLICATION PROCESSING BY THE DIVISION OF PERSONNEL

It takes an average of about six weeks for an application for state employment to be evaluated and the applicant advised whether he meets the minimum qualifications and to be scheduled for any examination required for the job class applied for. This is an average time and the actual time varies considerably based on the job class applied for and the place where the application is submitted. While the six weeks delay is lower than previous averages, it is longer than it should be. In addition, the division expects to receive an increased number of applications during the summer months, and this increase will probably lead to a longer processing time.

The division has advised the commission of steps it is taking to automate part of the application system, so that record keeping will be done automatically and it will be easier to track the progress of an application. The commission encourages the division to do all that it can to improve the situation. The commission will continue to consider the issue.

MEMBERSHIP IN THE EXEMPT AND PARTIALLY EXEMPT SERVICES

Membership in the exempt and partially exempt services is established by the State Personnel Act. In its revision of the Act, the commission does not make substantial changes in that membership. However, it continues to be concerned about agencies whose employees might more appropriately be placed in the classified service and subject to the merit principle of employment. The commission has urged the Governor to continue to examine this question, and where appropriate, to move employees into the classified service.

DISCIPLINARY SYSTEM FOR STATE EMPLOYEES

Neither the State Personnel Act nor the Personnel Rules provide a comprehensive system of disciplinary measures for state employees. The Act does include a statement that the Rules shall provide for the imposition of disciplinary suspension without pay for not longer than 30 days in a 12-month period. AS 39.25.150(17). The Act also makes willful violation of the State Personnel Act or the Personnel Rules grounds for conviction of a misdemeanor. Following conviction, a state employee immediately forfeits his office or position. AS 39.25.210.

The commission is working towards the development of a disciplinary system which would guide supervisors so that all state employees receive fair and consistent treatment which corrects problems where possible and encourages an effective, motivated work force.

REVISION OF THE PERSONNEL RULES

The commission continues to recommend that the Personnel Rules be comprehensively revised to bring them into accord with modern personnel practices. Issues which should be addressed in the revision include the use of block scoring and the application and selection procedures for state employment, especially for rural positions. The Rules should also indicate the extent to which they are affected by collective bargaining.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 10: EXTENDING THE LIFE OF THE BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT.

PURPOSE

As noted in the previous sections, there are a number of issues which the commission has not been able to resolve in the time available to it. The commission requests that its operation be extended for another year so that it can continue with the projects it has begun. Therefore, it is introducing Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 10. A fiscal note for the resolution is included as Appendix F.

TEXT

WHEREAS in 1978 the legislature through Legislative Resolve No. 27 authorized the Legislative Council, in cooperation with the director of personnel, to form a "blue ribbon" commission to study the State Personnel Act; and

WHEREAS the commission was formed as authorized by the resolution, made its report to the First Session of the Eleventh Legislature, and, in response to the commission's request for additional time to study problems it had identified, was funded by the legislature for a second year; and

WHEREAS in 1980 the commission made its second report to the legislature, and the legislature through Legislative Resolve No. 38 authorized the commission to continue to perform the assignments made to it by 1978 Legislative Resolve No. 27; and it has identified and more time is needed to complete the task which it was assigned;

WHEREAS the commission is continuing to develop answers to the issues

BE IT RESOLVED by the Alaska State Legislature that the Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act is authorized to continue to perform the assignments made to it by 1978 Legislative Resolve No. 27, through June 30, 1982.

THE LEGISLATURE

Directing the Legislative Council to carry out certain studies.

BE IT RESOLVED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

The legislature has determined that the laws of the state found in Title 4, Alaska Statutes, and relating to the sale and dispensing of alcoholic beverages, are in serious disarray. This disarray is the result of patchwork amending over several decades and as a result the laws are very difficult to administer effectively and defy constructive amendment on a piecemeal basis. This small but important body of law is overdue for a substantive revision. A revision project would involve a thorough review of the policies involved and a comprehensive rearrangement and rewording of the laws to make effective administration possible and to facilitate legislative amendment in the future.

The Senate Special Committee on the Revision of Title 4 of the Alaska Statutes (Alcoholic Beverages) will expire with other special committees at the end of the regular session, but the legislature finds that the subject matter before it will require interim attention between adjournment and the convening of the next legislature.

BE IT RESOLVED by the Alaska State Legislature that under provisions of AS 24.20.090 and Uniform Rule 48(c) the Legislative Council is directed to establish a joint interim committee of the council to continue the special committee's work and accomplish a substantive revision of Title 4, Alaska Statutes (Alcoholic Beverages) during the 1978 interim; and

WHEREAS the State Personnel Act (AS 39.25) of the State of Alaska represents a considerable and vital body of law which has not undergone substantive revision and is consequently vastly out of step with personnel developments of the last decade; and

WHEREAS the advent of collective bargaining and the tremendous growth in the number of state government employees require refinement of the personnel system; and

WHEREAS investigations by the legislative audit division and the office of the ombudsman have revealed major deficiencies in the present personnel system; and

WHEREAS it is impossible during the course of a legislative session to devote the necessary time required to study and refine the Personnel Act;

BE IT RESOLVED by the Alaska State Legislature that the Legislative Council, in cooperation with the director of personnel, is authorized to form a "blue ribbon" commission to study and refine the State Personnel Act and to investigate the feasibility of decentralizing the hiring of employees and a method for regularizing the hiring of specialists who, because of higher comparable salaries in the private sector for the skills involved, must be paid at levels in excess of the salary schedule, and to submit to the First Session of the Eleventh Legislature a proposed revision of the State Personnel Act based on the commission's recommendations; and be it

FURTHER RESOLVED that the membership of the commission should be representative of all persons and groups vitally concerned with the personnel system; and be it FURTHER RESOLVED that the Legislative Council is authorized to contract with a competent person or firm knowledgeable in the varying aspects of personnel administration to oversee and direct the work of the commission.

INTRODUCTION

The Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act was established by the Legislature in 1978. It has considered a number of issues concerning the state's employment practices and experience since then. In 1981, the First Session of the 12th Legislature passed Legislative Resolve No. 37, directing that the Commission consider the employment of women and minorities in the executive branch of state government, particuarly the classified service employees.

The Commission has held public hearings in Anchorage and Juneau on this question and has received written testimony as well. In addition, members of the Commission have been approached privately concerning experiences of some who were unwilling to come forward publicly.

The Commission is composed of individuals representative of persons and groups closely concerned with the state's personnel system. In addition to legislators, membership on the Commission includes representatives from public employee unions and associations, from the Department of Administration and the Division of Personnel, from the Ombudsman's office, as well as managerial state employees and public members.

The Commission believes that the subject of possible discrimination against individuals is a very sensitive one, and that the individual testimony received may not be entirely representative of the feelings of many people who were unwilling to come forward for fear of reprisal in their work situation.

To questions of employment practices which may have a discriminatory effect on members of racial, ethnic and sexual groups should be added consideration of more general problems in the personnel system. These general problems exacerbate the experience of minorities and women while also hampering other individuals. Accordingly, this report addresses both policies designed to improve the employment situation for members of protected classes and also problems which, while not directly related to that question, could serve to improve the experience of those people if they were remedied. The Commission urges the Legislature to consider the information presented here and to support the steps necessary to insure that the State of Alaska continues in its commitment as an employer accessible to all citizens of the state.

CHAPTER I

BACKGROUND

Under the state constitution, Alaska is committed to providing equal employment rights to all. The Alaska Human Rights Law states that it is unlawful for an employer to discriminate against a person because of race, religion, color or national origin; or because of the person's age, physical handicap, sex, marital status, changes in marital status, pregnancy or parenthood when the reasonable demands of the position do not require a distinction on that basis. The definition of employer specifically includes the state.

The state's equal employment opportunity policy is set out in Administrative Order No. 59, which provides in part:

> The policy of the executive branch of the State of Alaska is equal opportunity and nondiscrimination in all of its employment decisions, programs, and activities. The state shall take affirmative steps to implement this policy in the internal affairs of state government, as well as its relations with the public.

The Division of Equal Employment Opportunity in the Department of Administration has the major responsibility for carrying out this policy. It assists each department in the executive branch to evaluate its employment situation and to prepare the annual departmental affirmative action plan. The division then monitors the progress made by the departments throughout the year. In addition, the division provides training in EEO matters to managers, supervisors and employees to strengthen their knowledge and understanding of state and federal anti-discrimination laws and subjects, and works with the Division of Personnel to insure that the state personnel system operates in a nondiscriminatory manner and provides tools to help agencies meet their affirmative action goals. The division also works with the Division of Labor Relations to address EEO concerns raised within the collective bargaining process.

Policies to promote equal employment opportunity must mesh with the personnel system to be effective. Questions of classification of positions, pay, selection, promotion, training opportunities, and discipline concern both the personnel system and equal employment opportunity. Because most of the state's employees are members of a bargaining unit and subject to the provisions of a collective bargaining agreement, the state's equal employment policies must also be considered in the labor relations area, which addresses the same topics in contract negotiations. These three approaches to personnel management must work together to insure that the state's employment needs are fairly and efficiently met.

General problems in the personnel system will have an impact on members of minorities and women which may be greater than their impact on the general workforce. Therefore, the commission considered it important to continue its general review of the personnel system, as well as focusing its attention to the particular situation of women and minorities employed by the state.

According to the 1980 preliminary census figures, the State of Alaska has 400,481 people, 23.7% (or 95,198 *) of whom are members of a minority group. Alaska Natives are the largest ethnic minority group, making up 16% of the population. There are 188,160 women which represents 47% of the total population.

In considering employment questions, working age population is a better comparison than total population. According to the 1980 census, women compose 46.4% of the population over 20 years of age. Women are 43.6% of the executive branch workforce. The following table provides information on minority representation in the state workforce.

Taken from the "1980 Census of Population and Housing in Alaska, Advance Reports" and from Computer Run AEO-3600-R02 dated December 31, 1981. For more detailed information on population and on the state workforce, see Appendices B, C, D, and E.

° Alaska Native includes American Indian

* Since the 1980 census may count persons of Spanish origin in a race category as well as in the Hispanic category, some persons have been counted twice in computing the total minority population.

Table I shows a marked difference in Alaska Native employment as compared with their representation in the working age population. There is some difference in the employment figures for Blacks, Asians and Hispanics as well.

In considering employment questions, however, comparisons of population figures with the overall percentages of minorities and women in the employer's workforce is of very limited value. The figures show nothing about the cause of the discrepancies, nor whether there is actual underutilization of those groups by the state. To determine that, it is necessary to establish availability figures for minorities and women in the relevant recruitment area based on more specific occupational groupings such as Professional Accountants, Biologists, Civil Engineers, etc. In otherwords, it is necessary to estimate how many qualified minorities and female Accountants, Biologists, Civil Engineers, etc., can personally be expected to be available in the employer's surrounding labor market.

Availability information is prepared by the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity for use by each department when it prepares its Affirmative Action Plan. The standards used in the 1981 Affirmative Action Plans have been based on the state working age population derived from 1970 census information. The division recognized that those figures presented a somewhat simplistic view of workers available, but it was the best information at the time. For the 1982 Affirmative Action Plans, the division is preparing availability information derived from state unemployment figures as well as data on the state and local workforce, school employment, and private industry employment and the 1980 census statistics. Where appropriate, availability standards will also take into account union membership and participation in apprenticeship programs. The new computations should give a more accurate standard against which to compare the state workforce.

The standards are prepared for eight EEO-4 job categories. Job categories are groups of job classes which have similar duties, responsibilities, skill-levels or educational requirements, or work in a particular field of endeavor. Each category includes entry level, mid-level and senior level job classes and spans many salary ranges. The categories therefore do not reflect divisions of the work force by salary ranges. The standards count all minority groups together. For 1980-81, the Utilization Standards were:

TABLE II. MINORITY AND FEMALE EMPLOYMENT UTILIZATION STANDARDS 1980-81

EEO-4 Job Category	Minority Standards	Female Standards
Officials/Administrators	19.3%	44.0%
Professionals	19.4%	49.0%
Technicians	20.1%	43.7%
Protective Service	23.6%	44.0%
Para-Professionals	21.3%	54.7%
Office Clerical	21.1%	79.6%
Skilled Craft	29.5%	43.7%
Service Maintenance	35.1%	43.9%

Definitions for EEO-4 job categories are included in Appendix B.

As a whole, statistics indicate that state workforce does not now meet the 1981 standards for minority employment. To the extent that the availability standards overstate or understate the people available, however, the comparison will be inaccurate.

Testimony before the Blue Ribbon Commission revealed that some people are concerned not only about whether the state workforce reflects the composition of the population, but also whether minority group members and women are comparably represented in positions in the higher salary ranges. Wage information is of limited significance because it does not address the career areas for employees in each salary range. Conclusions that can be drawn from wage information are further limited by the lack of wage information for minorities and women in Alaska with which to draw meaningful comparisons. In the following table the count for women includes women of all races. The count for minority persons includes both males and females.

TABLE III. WOMEN AND MINORITY EMPLOYEE BY SALARY RANGES

5-11	3,265	461	14.1%	2547	78.0%

Taken from Computer Run R01-02W-3700 dated September 30, 1981

Comparing employment by salary range with the utilization standards set for 1980-81 is not directly possible, since the EEO-4 job categories overlap salary ranges. Generally speaking it can be said that women and minorities employed by the state are grouped more predominantly in the lower salary ranges and are not proportionately in upper salary ranges.

CHAPTER II

CLASSIFICATION AND PAY

The classification system is the basis for the state personnel system. All positions in the classified and partially exempt services of the executive branch are placed into job classes. Each class is composed of positions with similar duties and responsibilities. Classification of a position is therefore a comparison of one job with other jobs in the state. Each job class is assigned to a pay range, either in the regular salary structure (Ranges 5-30) or in the shipboard, public safety or labor trades and crafts salary structures. The actual salary paid within the range is dependent on union contracts, area differentials, and other considerations. All salary plans, regardless of how dollar amounts are assigned, are based on a classification plan; therefore the basic salary for a position is determined by the job classification. Currently there are 1204 job classes within the state personnel system.

REVIEW OF THE CLASSIFICATION SYSTEM

The Blue Ribbon Commission heard testimony that the state classification plan contains many instances of inaccurate job classifications. Information presented to the commission indicated that an individual classified as an Administrative Assistant I (salary range 12) actually had greater responsibilities for the program she was working on than a person working on another program whose position was classified as an Administrative Officer II with a salary range of 19. The department was not successful in having the Administrative Assistant position upgraded to an Administrative Officer.

Problems in classification may arise if a position is initially inappropriately classified or if the responsibilities and duties of a position change over a period of time. The personnel system requires that the duties of a position be reviewed annually during each employee's performance evaluation, but this does not always result in a reclassification to reflect changes which have occurred. Reviews of individual positions do not have the scope to address more general misclassifications.

The state personnel system will not work fairly for all employees until all classifications are appropriate and consistent. The Blue Ribbon Commission recommends that a review of the state's entire classification system be done.

ENTRY LEVEL CLASSIFICATIONS

Job classes are typically grouped into series, with an entry level position followed by one or more advanced positions in the career ladder. The commission received information about the Department of Health and Social Services' effective use of this structure to staff positions in rural Alaska.

In 1978 the department reviewed its social worker positions. In cooperation with the Division of Personnel, tasks which required less training and experience were identified and separated from those which required the full social worker skills. These less complex duties were grouped into a new job series, called the Social Services Associates. The training and experience requirements for Social Services Associates were less demanding than those for the social worker series, and the job classes within the associate series were set at lower salary ranges than the social worker series. The department provided that associates would be closely supervised by social workers and their work reviewed. In addition, the changes were made so that three years of satisfactory performance as a social services associate would meet the training requirements for the Social Worker I position, thereby providing an advanced career ladder for the Social Services Associate series. In November of 1981, the department reported that Native persons from the region were staffing all of the Social Services Associate positions in the Bethel region.

The structuring of duties in the social work field into two related job series provided a vehicle for individuals in the rural areas of Alaska to gain experience and training which would then enable them to advance into better paying, more challenging positions. It also enabled the state to take advantage of those employees' familiarity with the language and customs of the majority of the population the department was providing services to, and therefore to better serve its clients.

COMPARABLE WORTH

The State Personnel Act provides that the state pay plan "shall be based on the state classification plan, shall provide for fair and reasonable compensation for services rendered, and shall be based on the principle of like pay for like work." AS 39.25.150(2).

The commission received information about the principle of comparable worth. The principle states that work of comparable value to an employer should be compensated at a comparable rate. It differs from the principle of equal pay for equal work (or like pay for like work) in that it compares different kinds of work in setting pay levels. The equal pay principle can be applied where the duties of two employees are similar and can be directly compared to each other.

Comparable worth attempts to provide a framework by which jobs with dissimilar duties can be compared and salaries set for them equitably. The framework is created by the employer, based on a rating system which assigns points to such factors as the knowledge and training required to perform a job, the specific demands and responsibilities of the job, accountability for decisions, and working conditions. Each employer can decide which factors are most important within the context of its goals, so the value of the same job for two different employers may be different.

After the rating scale has been prepared, the employer reviews the duties of each job and calculates the point value for the job. This point value is then used in setting salaries for all of the employer's workforce. Since the rating scale assigns values for all of the factors which the employer considers important in deciding on compensation for a position, the system permits very dissimilar jobs to be compared. Many women's groups see existing classification and pay systems as perpetuating societal undervaluation of women's work. They believe that the comparable worth system breaks the reliance on historically discriminatory pay structures and is therefore a better system.

Changing to a comparable worth system can present a substantial disruption to an employer's pay system. The relative values of positions may change considerably. To the extent that it is difficult to reduce salaries for positions which are found, under the new system, to be overpaid, the employer may be faced with raising salaries for many employees, should it choose to implement its findings. If the employer completes a comparable worth study but decides not to implement its findings, workers whose jobs have been determined to be underpaid may well press to have their salaries increased to the new level. The Blue Ribbon Commission has not had time to fully consider this complex issue and therefore makes no recommendation on it.

CHAPTER III

SELECTION PROCESS

The selection process for classified positions is a cooperative effort between the agency in which a vacancy occurs and the Division of Personnel. The Division accepts applications from individuals interested in working for the state, evaluates them to insure that they meet the minimum qualifications for the job class for which they are applying, ranks them relative to all others who are eligible for that job class and places them on the appropriate eligible lists. When an agency has a vacancy, it requests the division to issue the eligible list for that job class. The agency then contacts the applicants on the list and makes its selection decision. The Personnel Rules require that, absent a special circumstance, selection be made from the highest five individuals who are interested and available.

MINIMUM QUALIFICATIONS FOR POSITIONS

The minimum requirements which applicants must meet to be considered for a job class are set by the Division of Personnel after consultation with the departments which have positions in that job class. These requirements can be reviewed and changed, should that prove desirable. Generally, the minimum requirements for job classes are not reviewed unless a department requests it.

The commission heard testimony indicating that in some cases, changes in educational programs have not led to changes in the minimum requirements established for job classes within that educational field. The individual had discovered that the minimum requirements for the Regional Health Officer job class require that applicants hold a degree either as a medical doctor, a dentist or a veterinarian. She intended to pursue a Ph.D. in the field of health policy and management, but despite the appropriateness of that training for the responsibilities of a health officer, she would be ineligible for the job class unless the minimum qualifications were brought up-to-date, as has been done in other states.

A second problem in the area of minimum qualifications occurs when the standards are set without awareness of an adverse impact on one group of people. For example, in the past, height requirements for Public Safety officers were found to unfairly preclude individuals of some races from consideration for positions without proving to be essential to the effective performance of the job. Possible future issues in this area include studying whether it is appropriate to include the ability to read and write as a minimum qualification in some job classes.

To the extent minimum qualifications for a job class do not accurately reflect the skills actually needed to perform the work, the state may be unfairly eliminating individuals from being considered. It is also denying itself the opportunity to select from the most appropriately constructed pool of applicants. If the minimum qualifications set for a position unfairly remove from consideration a disproportionate number of a protected class, the state may also find those standards challenged in court as a denial of equal employment opportunity.

RECRUITMENT

The state does not actively recruit applicants for most positions in the classified service. Those individuals who wish to apply may do so, and vacancies will be filled from the pool of those found qualified. The state accepts applications for most positions year-round, whether or not there are expected to be vacancies in that job class and regardless of the number of applicants who have already been found qualified. Recruitment for some job classes has been closed except for a 30-day period each year because of the large numbers of qualified applicants and also to reduce the numbers of applications which the Division of Personnel must handle. However, closing job classes limits the opportunity afforded to Alaskans to apply for state employment.

There is a conflict between the cost effective use of limited resources and the limiting of opportunities to Alaskans to apply for state jobs. Closing registers has an especially hard impact on local hire in the rural areas of the state. Unfortunately, in the past adequate resources have not been provided to the Division of Personnel. They have not been able to handle all of the applications received when all job classes were open year-round.

To the extent that there is little effort to encourage individuals from race/ethnic or sexual groups who are under-represented in the state workforce to apply for work with the state, these groups are less likely to be well-represented in the applicant pool. Hiring authorities will have fewer members from those groups to consider when filling vacancies and it will be more difficult for the state to meet affirmative action goals. Limiting recruitment periods can also work a greater hardship on rural Alaskans than on people closer to centers of state employment.

Recruitment efforts can help to increase the numbers of members from groups who do not usually consider seeking employment with the state on the registers. The Department of Health & Social Services and the Division of Personnel have been cooperating in an active recruiting effort for Youth Counselors for the new Nome Youth Center. Teams have traveled to the Nome area to accept and evaluate applications and conduct and score examinations. The department hopes to encourage people in the area to work in the facility. Instead of the usual practice of scoring tests first and then holding oral exams, the department and the division held open the scoring of written exams until the oral exams had been completed. This kind of recruitment effort may also be appropriate for the new prison facility in Nome which is scheduled to open in two years. According to information presented in the draft of the "Prisoner Profile Study" prepared by the Department of Health & Social Services, Division of Adult Corrections, Alaska Natives are disproportionately represented in the state's prison population, making up 32% of the total while they compose 16% of the total state population. The Division of Personnel has worked with other departments on similar cooperative recruitment efforts.

There are other sources available to the state to expand its recruitment efforts. Job Service Centers around the state can provide assistance. Most villages now have cable television and job openings can be announced through these scanners. Native Corporations may provide help in reaching their shareholders with information.

BILINGUAL CRITERIA AND GEOGRAPHICAL PREFERENCE FOR POSITIONS

Alaska is a state in which several languages are spoken. Work performed by some state employees requires close communication with people who are not fluent in English. The commission heard testimony concerning a position in the Dillingham area in which the employee's duties included gathering information from clients and advising them of their eligibility for a program. The testimony indicated that there was strong community feeling that the state employee should be someone from the area who understood the local culture and language. The individual testifying recommended that a regional preference be given when filling rural positions to address this concern.

The commission recommends that knowledge of the predominant language be a job requirement for rural positions requiring communications and knowledge of the cultural background. The commission also notes that in jobs with no emphasis on communication, the regular requirements for that job class should be the basis for evaluating qualifications of applicants.

By putting bilingual ability into the position description, the hiring authority will be able to most effectively and efficiently use the register when seeking to fill the position. The hiring authority will be able to select from the highest five eligibles interested in the position who have ability in the language specified. He or she will not have to consider applicants who do not meet this necessary qualification. It would be inappropriate to add a bilingual requirement to the minimum requirements of the job class, since many positions within the class will not require ability in a second language. The commission also noted that it is important to recognize that a bilingual requirement can only be added to those positions in which the duties genuinely include a need to communicate with people who are not fluent in English.

The commission further recommends that for appropriate job classes, the Division of Personnel should establish a preference for hiring local residents for positions in rural areas of the state. The division should consider whether there is a benefit to be received if competition for the position is on a statewide basis or whether the requirements for the position can be readily met within the local applicant pool. The division should consult with the departments affected in developing the local preference system.

EXPANDED CERTIFICATIONS

On March 26, 1981, the Director of Personnel ruled that hiring authorities could use a variation of an existing procedure to correct underutilization of employees of racial or sexual groups. The procedures are called expanded certifications, affirmative action certifications or five-plus-five registers. To use the system the department must have shown in its Affirmative Action Plan that the group in question is underutilized for that job class. Underutilization is shown when the agency determines that it employs fewer members of a racial or sexual class, or both, in a job classification within a specific job group (for example, entry professional, mid-level professional, senior professional, etc.) than the proportionate number of qualified persons of that racial or sexual class in the relevant job market. The standards in use for determining the availability of qualified persons in the job market are the availability standards set by the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity.

When the agency decides to use the expanded certification procedures to fill a vacancy, it first requests authority from the Division of EEO to appoint from below the highest five available candidates in order to correct the demonstrated underutilization. If the Division of EEO finds that the agency determination of underutilization is documented, it concurs in the request and sends it to the Division of Personnel which then issues a register. With the register, the agency can either hire from the highest five eligible applicants or from the highest five eligibles from the underutilized minority, racial or sexual group. In either case, the department is not permitted under these procedures to select applicants lower on the register. (There may be other circumstances which would justify a lower selection, but those require different procedures.)

As of February 16, 1982, the Division of EEO reported that seven departments had used authorization to hire from an expanded affirmative action certification and the other seven had not yet used those procedures. All departments have shown underutilization in some job classes for both minorities and women. Out of some 1500 register requests for the quarter from October 1, 1981 through December 31, 1981, departments requested 551 affirmative action certifications. Many departments are not yet returning completed hiring reports to the Division of EEO so it is not possible to accurately follow the results of these procedures yet. The division will be working with the departments to improve the reporting of hiring results. It will also meet with departmental officials from the departments not yet using the procedures to explain the system and encourage its use when justified by the department's workforce composition.

It should be noted that the affirmative action certifications are not a hiring quota system. They permit consideration of additional applicants from a group which is shown to be underrepresented in the workforce. There is no requirement that the vacancy be filled by selecting a member of that group. The Attorney General's memorandum of January 21, 1981, on the Procedure for Affirmative Action Plan states:

> Under these procedures, no applicant is to be denied employment solely on the basis of race or sex, and none is to be hired solely on that basis. Rather, these procedures are designed to correct, so long as it may exist, any underutilization of racial or sexual groups which may have resulted from pre-existing selection procedures or from their misapplication. These procedures may be utilized only where underutilization is documented by an agency's Affirmative Action Plan and not otherwise. When documented underutilization of a class has been corrected, these procedures no longer apply.

By not requiring that selection occur from an underutilized group, the procedures stay within the framework of the merit system. Appointments to positions are still made on the basis of ability, and the selection is not to occur solely on the basis of race or sex. However, the procedures provide hiring authorities with a tool for correcting past recruiting, selection and promotion devices which resulted in fewer members of racial or sexual groups finding employment with the state than were available in the labor market.

The Blue Ribbon Commission recommends and encourages the executive branch to make use of affirmative action certifications to improve employment opportunities for members of underutilized groups.

HANDBOOK FOR APPLICANTS

The commission has frequently heard questions from individuals wanting to work for the state which indicate that they do not fully understand the state hiring process. They do not understand that the role of the Division of Personnel is to provide a pool of interested candidates for positions in the departments of the executive branch. The division does not make hiring decisions except for its own staff. Each hiring authority is responsible for selecting an individual to fill a vacancy within its agency.

Some applicants appear to be overly optimistic about the possibilities of being offered a position when they file an application with the Division of Personnel. Some job classes have very few positions and many applicants, so the likelihood of an applicant finding a job in that class is very limited. Other job classes have very little turnover, which also reduces the likelihood that an applicant will be offered a job.

The commission recommends that the Division of Personnel prepare a simple, short, inexpensive information sheet which provides an overview of the state hiring process to applicants. This sheet should be widely distributed throughout the state both at locations where people seek information about state hiring and through organizations which represent or involve members of groups from whom the state is seeking applications such as Native Corporations, women's groups and racial or ethnic organizations.

CHAPTER IV

PERSONNEL MANAGEMENT

There were several issues brought to the attention of the commission concerning facets of the employment situation for employees.

TRAINING OPPORTUNITIES

Agencies have limited funding to provide training for their employees. Testimony indicated that these funds are generally made available to employees whose positions are in higher salary ranges. Training programs may take the form of in-house presentations, conferences or seminars on a state, regional or national level, or training contracts between the employee and the agency. The contracts may provide that the employee will be reimbursed for educational expenses for satisfactory completion of coursework which the agency considers to be directly beneficial to the agency and directly related to the employee's job performance.

The Blue Ribbon Commission discussed recommending that part of the training funds be reserved for employees in lower salary ranges proportionate to their representation in the agency's workforce. The commission urges that agencies be responsive to career needs of employees in lower ranges by providing appropriate career advancement and improvement opportunities within their budget limitations. The commission recognizes that it may be more economical for midmanagement individuals to participate in training outside the agency and then conduct in-house training sessions based on the information they have received.

The commission recommends that the state give priority to training displaced employees to enable them to find other employment opportunities. The state should assist employees disabled on the job in gaining any needed skills to qualify for other work. In addition, the state should assist in training employees whom it has laid off from one agency to qualify for other positions. The second priority in allocating training funds should be to improve the performance of current employees. The third priority should be to assist employees in gaining skills needed for career advancement. The commission notes that the less Alaska spends in training its own employees, the more frequently it will have to search outside the state to fill its employee needs.

FLEXTIME

The geography of Alaska covers four time zones. In order to promote the ability of people everywhere in the state to do business with state agencies, the commission strongly recommends that the Administration continue to develop the use of flextime. Offices should be open both during lunch hours and Juneau offices should remain open for at least most of the working day of more western parts of the state. In setting up the system it is important to insure that individuals who can make decisions about issues which may be raised are available in the later hours.

EEO TRAINING FOR SUPERVISORS

The Division of Equal Employment Opportunity has the responsibility for providing training to state employees on EEO matters. The division provides training courses to supervisors and managers to increase their knowledge of the laws prohibiting employment discrimination and to familiarize them with their responsibilities under these laws. All supervisors are required by executive order to attend EEO classes given by the division and in the past two or three years, approximately 1500 people have participated in the courses which are offered statewide. The programs are focused primarily on attitude and behavior.

The commission heard that some supervisors are unfamiliar with procedures such as the affirmative action certifications to be used to correct underutilization of protected classes. Supervisors and managers make the individual decisions which determine whether the state's equal employment opportunity policy is successful or not. They are the individuals who select employees, authorize training opportunities, promote and discipline the state employees. They are also responsible for setting the workplace environment. To the extent these individuals are unfamiliar with the developments in the state personnel system, they will be unable to respond to the opportunities the system provides.

The commission recommends that, subject to available staffing, the Division of EEO provide information to supervisors on how to resolve the practical questions of providing equal employment opportunity within the state workforce in addition to the training programs which are presently offered. The division should also consider whether offering a refresher training course to supervisors and managers who have received the initial course would be beneficial within present budget and staffing constraints. Division programs should include information on the affirmative action certification hiring procedures so that the system may be fully utilized by the state.

EVALUATION OF SUPERVISORS' EEO PERFORMANCE

The Personnel Rules require that each employee receive an annual performance evaluation. Supervisors are required to be rated on their EEO performance as well as on other aspects of their job performance. The EEO rating requirement is satisfied if the rater checks one of the boxes indicating the supervisor's level of performance. It has been suggested that a narrative review should be required, in addition to the simple ranking provided by the present system. The commission discussed this suggestion. The narrative section is reserved for comments which reflect outstanding performance or achievements or for presentation of areas in which the subject needs to make improvements. If a supervisor's EEO performance is average or if, within the framework of the supervisor's duties, there has been little opportunity to address EEO concerns, then a narrative would be inappropriate.

WORKPLACE ENVIRONMENT

The commission heard testimony concerning an innovative approach to creating a positive workplace environment. A supervisor hired a new state employee, the first Black person to work in that office. Concerned that the new employee have access to someone to talk with about his concerns, the supervisor asked another Black employee of the department to take an interest in the new employee. The relationship was informal and required little time but did provide the new employee with a sounding board. Having someone to talk with can allay fears of discrimination and show that a new policy is affecting all employees, or that one individual has the same manner with everyone, not just the minority employee.

On the other hand, the commission heard testimony of one state employee who was seriously adversely affected by a destructive workplace environment. She was the only minority employee at her level in the agency and another employee of the agency was in the habit of making derogatory comments concerning her racial group. In addition, when work assignments were given, she frequently received the less demanding tasks although she was rated as being an above average worker. These experiences had a negative affect on her productivity.

The commission strongly recommends that supervisors and managers be sensitive to the informal exchanges which occur among the employees in their agencies and that steps be taken to insure that action is taken whenever negative situations such as the one described occur. Supervisors and managers should encourage employees to relate their concerns about discrimination. However, since many employees may fear retaliation should they speak out, supervisors and managers need to be particularly sensitive to what is going on around them. They should make clear that discriminatory conduct towards any racial, ethnic or sexual group or other legally protected class will not be tolerated in state employment.

Conclusion

The Blue Ribbon Commission has begun the task of reviewing the state's employment of women and minorities. With the limited information presently available it is not possible to truly evaluate the extent of any discrimination in the state system, either by racial or ethnic group or by gender. However, the commission has begun in a manner in which we believe we can identify problems and make recommendations to correct certain practices which have discriminatory affects if given the time to complete the task. The commission therefore requests that the Legislature extend its life for an additional year.

WHEREAS the commission was formed as authorized by the resolution, made its report to the First Session of the Eleventh Legislature, and, in response to the commission's request for additional time to study problems it had identified, was funded by the legislature for a second year; and

WHEREAS in 1980 the commission made its second report to the legislature, and the legislature through Legislative Resolve No. 38 authorized the commission to continue to perform the assignments made to it by 1978 Legislative Resolve No. 27; and

WHEREAS the commission is continuing to develop answers to the issues it has identified and more time is needed to complete the task which it was assigned;

LETTER OF INTENT

to

LEGISLATIVE RESOLVE NO. 37

It is the intent of the Senate Rules Committee that the Blue Ribbon Commission address the question of hire of women and minorities within the Alaska State Division of Personnel. Included in the final report presented to the Second Session of the Twelfth Legislature will be an analysis of the current hiring practices of minorities and women, a statistical breakdown of the number of minorities and women within state government, and recommendations to the Legislature.

STATE WORKFORCE BY DEPARTMENT

The following tables show the change in the racial and sexual composition of the state workforce from December 31, 1980 to December 31, 1981 grouped into EEO-4 job categories. The information is taken from Computer Runs AEO-3600-R02 for those two dates. Figures for Alaska Natives include Eskimo and Aleut individuals.

The Division of Equal Employment Opportunity has modified definitions for each of the EEO-4 job categories into which job classes and positions are placed to make them more consistent with the State Classification System. The Division of Personnel assigns job classes to EEO-4 categories by determining the major tasks and duties performed by the positions within the job class and then assigns the class to the appropriate job category. These assignments are reviewed and approved by the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity.

Abridged definitions for each of the EEO-4 job categories used in the tables follow:

A. OFFICIALS AND ADMINISTRATORS

Definition: occupations in which employees:

1. set broad policies for a major governmental unit; i.e., a department, division, commission or board, and/or exercise overall responsibility for executing broad policies and establishing regulations for enacting these policies;

2. direct individual departments or administer special phases of the department's operations, specifically commissions, boards, and divisions; and/or

3. provide specialized consultation on broad policies and/or overall management on a regional, district, or area basis.

B. PROFESSIONALS

Definition: occupations which require a theoretical and specialized knowledge of a specific subject area or field of activity. Such knowledge usually is acquired through:

1. college education; or

2. work experience or training providing comparable knowledge.

Occupations in the professionals category are concerned with the theoretical aspects and practical application of principles in such fields of human endeavor as: architecture; engineering; mathematics; physical sciences; social sciences; medicine and health; education; museum, library, and archival sciences; law; theology; the arts; recreation, administrative specialities; and management.

C. TECHNICIANS

Definition: occupations which require a specialized combination of a basic knowledge of a scientific or mechanical field and a manual skill. The applied knowledge and manual skill may be acquired through either specialized post-secondary school education or equivalent on-the-job training or a combination of the two.

D. PROTECTIVE SERVICE WORKERS

Definition: occupations in which workers are entrusted with public safety, security and protection from destructive forces.

E. PARAPROFESSIONALS

Definition: occupations in which workers perform some of the duties of a professional or technician in a supportive role. Paraprofessional positions generally fall into one of two groups:

1. upwardly mobile: paraprofessional positions which occur within an identified pattern of staff development and promotion (i.e., line of progression). Upon successful completion of the trainee program, the employee is promoted to a professional, technician, or higher level paraprofessional position; or

2. nontransitory: paraprofessional positions which, while they may offer promotional opportunities inherently are not mobile in design, employees are not expected to promote to a new position after the completion of a set period of on-the-job training. Incumbents in these positions generally perform duties and responsibilities which demand very little increased knowledge or ability.

F. OFFICE AND CLERICAL

Definition: occupations in which employees perform routine tasks and duties related to internal and external communication; recording and retrieval of data and/or information; and other transactions in an essentially supportive role, most generally in an office environment.

G. SKILLED CRAFT WORKERS

Definition: occupations in which employees are engaged in machine, benchwork, or structural work trades where such trades are defined as:

1. machine trades: occupations concerned with the operation of machines that cut, bore, mill, abrade, print and similarly work such materials as metal, paper, wood, plastics and stone;

2. benchwork trades: occupations concerned with using body members, handtools, and bench machines to fabricate, inspect, or repair relatively small products, the work is usually performed at a set station, such as a bench, worktable or conveyor;

3. structural work trades: occupations concerned with fabricating, erecting, installing, paving, painting, and repairing structures and structural parts, such as buildings, bridges, roads and combustion engines.

Positions in the skilled craft workers category may fall into one of three subcategories:

1. journeyman position; i.e., a position which requires a combination of special manual skill and a thorough and comprehensive knowledge of the processes involved in the work;

2. apprentice position; i.e., a position held by a trainee who is learning a trade by practical experience under the direction of a journeyman skilled craft worker; or

3. general laborer; i.e., a position held by a worker who performs manual labor in support of construction activities or in support of the operation and maintenance of equipment.

H. SERVICE/MAINTENANCE

Definition: occupations in which workers perform duties which result in or contribute to the comfort, convenience, hygiene or safety of the general public or which contribute to the upkeep and care of buildings, facilities, grounds, or other public property.

Racial Groups Used in the 1980 Census

RACE. Counts of the population by race as well as Spanish origin in this report are provisional. Information on race was obtained through self-identification; therefore, the data represent self-classification by people according to the race with which they identify themselves. Population counts in this report are shown for five racial groups: White; Black; American Indian, Eskimo, and Aleut; Asian and Pacific Islander; and other.

The category "White" includes persons who indicated their race as White, as well as persons who did not classify themselves in one of the specific race categories listed on the questionnaire but entered a response suggesting European origin such as German, Italian, or Polish.

The category "Black" includes persons who indicated their race as Black or Negro, as well as persons who did not classify themselves in one of the specific race categories listed on the questionnaire but reported entries such as Jamaican, Black Puerto Rican, West Indian, Haitian, or Nigerian.

The category "American Indian, Eskimo, and Aleut" includes persons who classified themselves as such in one of the specific race categories. In addition, persons who did not report themselves in one of the specific race categories but reported the name of an Indian tribe were classified as American Indian.

The category "Asian and Pacific Islander" includes persons who indicated their race as Japanese, Chinese, Filipino, Korean, Asian Indian, Vietnamese, Hawaiian, Guamanian, or Samoan.

The category "Other" includes Asian and Pacific Islander groups not identified separately (e.g., Cambodian, Indochinese, Pakistani, Indonesian, Fiji Islander) and other races not included in the specific categories listed on the questionnaire.

SPANISH ORIGIN. Counts of the population by Spanish origin in this report are provisional.

Persons of Spanish origin or descent are those who classified themselves in one of the specific Spanish origin categories listed on the questionnaire -- Mexican, Puerto Rican, or Cuban -- as well as those who indicated that they were of other Spanish/Hispanic origin. Persons of Spanish origin may be of any race.

HOUSE CS FOR CS FOR SENATE BILL NO. 198

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

ELEVENTH LEGISLATURE - FIRST SESSION

A BILL

For an Act entitled: "An Act relating to the hiring of nonpermanent employees in the state personnel system; and providing for an effective date."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

* Section 1. LEGISLATIVE FINDINGS AND INTENT. The legislature finds and declares that certain inconsistencies and abuses in the hiring of nonpermanent employees have jeopardized the integrity and efficiency of the merit system as well as the morale of employees. The legislature intends to curb the widespread administrative practice of using nonpermanent state employment to evade departmental accountability and mask poor planning. The legislature further intends that nonpermanent employees be used only to the extent that it is impractical to meet the need with permanent employees and that the burden of proof shall fall upon the department or agency which proposes nonpermanent hire.

* Sec. 2. AS 39.25.150(9) is amended to read:

(9) nonpermanent [TEMPORARY] appointments to positions in the state service in accordance with AS 39.25.195 - 39.25.200 [WHICH ARE DETERMINED TO BE OF A SEASONAL OR TEMPORARY NATURE];

* Sec. 3. AS 39.35.680(21)(C)(iii) is amended to read:

(iii) casual or [,] emergency [OR TEMPORARY] workers or nonpermanent employees as defined in AS 39.25.200;

* Sec. 4. AS 39.25 is amended by adding new sections to article 6 to read:

Sec. 39.25.195. APPOINTMENT OF NONPERMANENT EMPLOYEES. (a) An individual may not be appointed as a nonpermanent employee in the state service without prior written approval of the director except as an emergency employee.

(b) Every appointment to state service except an emergency appointment, shall be made from an applicable eligible list or dispatching register unless in appropriate circumstances the director has waived this requirement.

(c) No appointment of a nonpermanent employee may be made unless the request for authorization is approved by the director, adequate money is available for the anticipated duration of the appointment, and the director determines that

(1) the hiring department or agency has certified that the legislature has appropriated money for the work in question knowing that it is to be performed by a nonpermanent employee;

(2) the hiring department or agency has certified that there is an immediate need to fill an authorized, permanent position and it is impractical either to establish the position or to make certification within a reasonable time;

(3) the hiring department or agency has certified that an immediate need exists and the director determines that the hiring department or agency could not reasonably have been expected to anticipate and meet through the creation of a permanent position; or

(4) the hiring department or agency has certified that a program or project exists and the director determines that the needs for employees can most appropriately be met through the use of program or project employees.

(d) The director may not authorize the appointment of a nonpermanent employee if he determines that

(1) the need for the nonpermanent employee can practicably be met through establishing and filling an authorized permanent position;

(2) the need for the nonpermanent employee would be more appropriately met through an emergency appointment; or

(3) the need for the nonpermanent employee is not immediate and could reasonably have been anticipated and met by the appointing authority through the creation and filling of a permanent position.

(e) A nonpermanent employee may not be placed on the state payroll unless the director has first approved the personnel action for the employee's appointment.

(f) Nothing in this section prevents the director from adopting regulations to provide for timely substitution for permanent employees on medical or personal leave or other situations in which the appointment of an emergency or permanent employee would be inappropriate or when delay in making a temporary replacement would cause serious disruption.

(g) A department or agency may not use nonpermanent employees to perform a given work assignment for more than 120 calendar days in a 12-month period. A department or agency may not employ any individual as a nonpermanent employee for more than 120 calendar days in a 12-month period. In appropriate circumstances the director may authorize an extension of the limit imposed by this subsection if he finds that there is an immediate need for the extension. The limit imposed by this subsection does not apply to program or project employees or to substitutes appointed under (f) of this section.

(h) The director shall present a report on nonpermanent and emergency hire practices in state government to the legislature within the first 10 days of each regular legislative session. A hiring department or agency shall certify to the director within 15 working days following the appointment its reasons for appointing an emergency employee. The report shall include information on the number of nonpermanent employees authorized under this section and the number of emergency employees hired in each department, a description of the procedures used in authorizing the hiring of nonpermanent employees, and any recommendations for legislation required to implement the intent of this section.

Sec. 39.25.197. TERMINATION OF NONPERMANENT EMPLOYEES. When the director determines that an employee has been appointed as a result of a false certification under AS 39.25.195, he shall immediately notify the head of the affected department or agency in writing and the department or agency shall terminate the employee from state service within one working day after receipt of notice.

Sec. 39.25.198. CIVIL LIABILITY. A person who makes a false certificate under AS 37.25.195 is personally liable in a civil action to an individual terminated under AS 37.25.197 for any resultant damages and for punitive damages of an amount not to exceed three times the gross monthly salary at which the nonpermanent employee was appointed.

Sec. 39.25.200. DEFINITIONS. In AS 39.25.195 - 39.25.200,

(1) "certified" means signed by the head of a department or agency or by a responsible person designated by him;

(2) "director" means the director of the division of personnel and labor relations;

(3) "emergency employee" means an employee appointed for period not to exceed 30 calendar days, whose appointment was made under conditions requiring immediate action to carry on work that is required in the public interest;

(4) "nonpermanent employee" means a person who is employed in state service in a position which is not in the exempt or partially exempt service and who is not a permanent or an emergency employee;

(5) "permanent employee" means an employee who has been appointed to an authorized, permanent full-time or part-time or permanent seasonal position in the classified service and who is in the process of completing or has successfully completed the required probationary service in that position;

(6) "program or project employee" means a nonpermanent employee, including a student intern, who is employed in state service with prior written understanding that employment in that position will continue for at most the duration of a specified program or project which is not a regular and continuing function of a department or agency and which has an established probable date of termination.

RE: Fate of Legislation Sponsored by the Blue Ribbon Commission

SB 499 and HB 909 - Four new positions for the Division of Personnel

Neither bill passed, but the four positions were added to the FCCS HB 556, the operating and capital budget, which was then incorporated into HB 1002 and adopted by both houses at the end of the session.

SB 500 and HB 907 - Legislative Review of Collective Bargaining Agreements

Neither of these bills left the house of origin. House State Affairs proposed a Committee Substitute, but it did not reach the House floor.

SB 501 and HB 906 - Veteran's Preference

The House adopted a Committee Substitute, deleting the language in the bill which required that the preference be used within three years of discharge from the service. The Senate State Affairs Committee did not act on either the House or the Senate Versions. However, the legislature did adopt the Revisor's Bill, SB 277, which includes language amending AS 39.25.150(23) to specify the date which ends the period in which eligibility for an employment preference may be earned for military service during the Viet Nam hostilities. The bill passed the legislature on May 29th.

SB 502 and SCS HB 908 - Merit Principle of Employment. Chapter 46, Session Laws of Alaska, 1980

The Senate amended the House bill by changing the language relating to retention of employees and to discipline. The amended version states that permanent employees have a right to retention based on the adequacy of their performance and that reasonable efforts of a temporary duration must be made before separating an employee from state service because of poor performance. The House concurred in the Senate amendments.

SCR 49 and HCR 57 - Procedures Manual by the Division of Budget and Management

Both houses passed HCR 57 without amendment. The Governor read the Resolution on May 13, 1980.

RE: Meeting with Bruce Cummings and Mike Mitchell.

Mike Mitchell, a research assistant to Senator Mulcahy, is gathering information on the Blue Ribbon Commission bills which are before the Senate State Affairs Committee. He asked Bruce Cummings to meet with him to talk about the commission's recommendations. Mr. Cummings asked that I sit in on the meeting. The following is a summary of the comments and suggestions which he made:

SB 499: Appropriating funds for 4 positions in the Division of Personnel.

It presently takes an average of 6 weeks for the Division of Personnel to process an application. They received approximately 3000 applications in December, 1979. In January, 1980, they opened 6 of the 170 or 180 registers which had been closed and received a total of 4500 applications during the month - an increase of 50%. Based on that experience, Mr. Cummings felt that even with 4 additional positions he could not promise to open all the state's registers without adding significantly to the time which it takes to process each application.

He also indicated that he disagrees philosophically with open recruitment for all of the state's job classes.

Some job classes have so many names already on the eligible list and so few vacancies during the year, that for a large number of those on the list, there is little likelihood of even being offered an opportunity for an interview, much less being offered a position. For example, there are about 300 names on the Fish Biologist I register and last year the Department of Fish and Game had only 10 vacancies in that job class.

Mr. Cummings indicated that he felt that, in those kinds of situations, it was unfair to the applicants to appear to be indicating that there was a vacancy for which they might apply. Getting on a register does not mean that there is a vacancy but applicants frequently fail to understand that and become disillusioned with the state employment system when they sit on registers for a year or two without hearing anything. In addition, the state spends time and money processing those applications which in reality are not likely to significantly improve the candidate pool for a particular job class. Also, open recruitment makes it possible for a program manager hiring for a position to "preselect" the person whom he or she wishes to hire. In a closed recruitment situation, the manager would have to select from those who had previously shown an interest in that job class. When open recruitment is possible, the manager can request a list, determine that the person in whom he or she is interested is not on the list, advise that person to apply for the job class, wait a bit, ask for a second list because there were no satisfactory applicants on the first one, and work the register to reach the "preselected" person. This is much more difficult in a closed recruitment situation, since the Division of Personnel has to be convinced to open a job class to accept new applications, and they can then examine the department's experience with the register more closely.

Mr. Cummings indicated that he would welcome the addition of 4 new positions, but that unless he were advised otherwise by the legislature he did not plan to open all of the registers should they be funded. Instead, he indicated that he would use them to improve the time it takes to process those applications which the division presently receives, and to help set up registers for people interested in nonpermanent positions. There is an unanticipated need for additional staff to do this. The Department of Fish and Game was looking for a nonpermanent clerk typist in Juneau and was unable to find anyone on the clerk typist register who was willing to accept the nonpermanent position. Therefore, a special register needs to be created for nonpermanent clerk typists and a recruitment effort launched to fill it.

Mr. Cummings did indicate that should he be directed by the legislature to open all of the job classes, he would, of course, follow that public policy decision. However, for the reasons indicated above, he does recommend against that policy.

SB 500: Collective Bargaining and legislative review.

Mr. Cummings had little comment on this bill, recommending that Mike Mitchell talk with Sandy Withers, instead. He did say, however, that based on his experience in trying to negotiate a Local 71 contract this year, he believes that there are serious problems in setting up a hard and fast schedule for presentation of agreements to the legislature. He said that he supported the provisions concerning the funding of multi-year contracts which are set out in the second section of the bill.

SB 501: Veterans' Preference System.

Mr. Cummings indicated that he believed it was good public policy to set a cut-off date for the ending of eligibility for service in the Vietnam conflict, and that he does not care particularly what date is selected.

On the question of limiting eligibility for a veteran's preference for three years after discharge, he indicated that that was a public policy question on which he would be happy to follow whatever policy the legislature chose to adopt. He did note that since the ranking on some registers is quite tight, the five points granted to veterans can make a significant difference in where an applicant ranks.

Mike asked whether I had researched the veterans' preference system in other states. I told him I had not, although, when reading materials from Michigan I had noticed that a 3 year cut-off had been recommended there as well.

Would a review of other states laws be helpful?

SB 502: Merit principle of employment.

Mr. Cummings supported spelling out the concepts included within the merit principle of employment, particularly since this will then apply to union contracts negotiated by the state. Because of that use, however, he was concerned that some of the terms used in the bill might be subject to ambiguity, so that unions might disagree as to the meaning of the term. He gave as examples the phrase "open consideration of qualified applicants for initial appointment" in lines 12-13. "Open consideration" might be subject to different interpretation, and therefore, might permit a hiring hall system to continue. Another example concerns the third paragraph, lines 18-19, relating to separation of those employees whose work cannot be corrected. The bill does not include a statement that reasonable efforts only need to be made to correct inadequate performers. Therefore, it is quite possible that a union would insist that a nonperforming employee could not be terminated, since the employer could have done more to improve that employee's performance.

Rather than try to change the language of the bill, Mr. Cummings suggested that a Letter of Intent be attached which would address these issues. The language first and third paragraphs of the bill are taken from the federal standards. Mr. Cummings suggested that the Letter of Intent make clear that they reflect the intent of the federal standards and should be interpreted and implemented with that in mind.

RE: Senate Bill 499

Making a special appropriation to the Department of Administration for new positions in the Division of Personnel to process applications for state employment; and providing for an effective date.

Senate Bill 499 implements Recommendation 10 of the Blue Ribbon Commission's Report to the Alaska Legislature concerning keeping the state job registers open for recruitment.

This bill appropriates $92,600 for the Division of Personnel in the Department of Administration to increase their staff to enable them to process additional applications from persons seeking employment with the state. The breakdown of the funding request is as follows:

Personal Services

1. Personnel Technician I (2 positions) @ $2,102/mo. x 12 months = $25.2K per annum x 2 = $50.4K

2. Clerk II (2 positions) @ $1676/month x 12 months = 20.1K per annum x 2 = $40.2K

Equipment & Commodities

Desk, chair, miscellaneous supplies @ $500 each x 4 = $2K

For the five year period ending June 30, 1979, the number of applications received by the Division of Personnel increased 106.9%, from 28,993 to 59,991. During that same period, staff increased to process the applications at a rate of only 12.8%, from 282 man-months to 318 man-months. (In addition 2 CETA positions were assigned, which increases the man-months to 342 and the rate of growth to 21.3%.) This disparity of growth placed the division in a crunch, and, in order to keep the division's head above water, it was decided that some of the job classifications should be closed and no new applications accepted for those classes. The division intended that each of the 173 classes would be opened for at least 30 days each year.

Commission members were concerned that closing the registers denied Alaskans the opportunity to compete for jobs in the state and that the best qualifed candidate interested in an opening might be unable to apply for the position. While recognizing that the division's workload is excessive, the commission believes that an alternative solution should be found. Therefore, the commission recommends that the legislature fund these four positions so that recruitment for the classes which have been closed can be reopened without overwhelming the staff.

MEMORANDUM

To: Teresa B. Cramer
Administrative Assistant
Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act

Date: February 14, 1980

From: Bruce A. Cummings
Director
Division of Personnel
Department of Administration

Subject: BRC Recommendation 10

You have asked that I provide you with the fiscal data needed to fund the four positions advocated for addition to this division by Recommendation 10 of the "Report of the Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act" (dated January 9, 1980). On the presumption that a budget amendment to implement this recommendation may not exceed four positions, I am identifying direct costs as noted below for FY 81. However, I am also attaching a memorandum from Carole Burger, Chief, Recruitment and Examining, which I believe presents a more accurate projection of the manpower required to implement Recommendation 10 without a corresponding deterioration in the level of application processing service currently provided.

My funding request is:

Personal Services

1. Personnel Technician I (2) @ $2,102 mo.
   x 12 = $25.2K per annum x 2 = $50.4K

2. Clerk III (2) @ $1,676 mo x 12 = $20.1K per annum x 2 = $40.2K

Desk, Chair, Miscellaneous Supplies @ $500 ea. x 4 = $2K

Personal services costs are based on FY 81 rates, for 12 man months. Should the appropriation be effective prior to 7/1/80, please compute personal services costs at $4,204 per month for two Technician positions, and $3,352 per month for the two Clerk positions.

I appreciate that at this late date it is unlikely that Recommendation 10, or any other Commission recommendation, can be altered. However, I must note my strong professional opinion that it is not in the best business interests of the State to keep all job classifications open for continuous recruitment, without regard for the adequacy of existing registers. If possible, I ask that the attached comments from Ms. Burger be included in any further information on this subject which may be presented to Senator Ray.

Notwithstanding our reservations regarding Recommendation 10, I wish to assure you that this agency will make every effort to comply with legislative policy in this area.

SUBJECT: Continuous Recruitment

FROM: Carole J. Burger
Chief
Recruitment & Examining Section
Division of Personnel
Department of Administration

In view of the recommendations of the Blue Ribbon Commission I feel it is only a matter of time before this division is compelled to open recruitment for all job classes on a continuous basis. Therefore, it is imperative that you and all others concerned are aware of the impact this decision will have on our ability to process the anticipated volume of applications resulting from this decision.

I cannot recommend open continuous recruitment as the best course of action. Without increased resources to meet the increased demand for service, we will, at best, be able to only partially meet the needs. At worst, we could face a total system breakdown. My recommendation that recruitment should be scheduled based on employee needs, available workforce, projected turnover and the like still stands. I believe it to be counter-productive and poor management practice to expend the resources to recruit applicants far in excess of State needs. It is not necessary to reiterate here the reasons for this division's decision to close recruitment for certain job classes. They are fully explained in the attached report.

Should it be the decision that continued recruitment is the policy this division will pursue, I will of course do everything possible to carry out that policy. To this end, I propose the following staff increases, based on application flow and performance data over the last five years, be requested:

Anticipated volume of applications based on average 20% increase per year for the five year period ending June 30, 1979.

	Juneau	Anchorage	Fairbanks*
FY 80 (Providing cont. recruitment)	60,800	10,800	1,500
FY 81	72,000	13,000	1,800

* Estimated - no full year data available for Fairbanks.

Past experience has shown that a fully trained, full-time examiner can process approximately 7,000 applications per year (this figure allows for vacations and illness, but does not include turnover requiring training time for new examiners). The addition of 4.5 examining positions will enable this division to examine the anticipated volume of applications with minimal "lag time." Lag time is defined as the average time in work days from receipt of application until an examiner completes review of that application. Current experience shows that without EDP support, minimal lag time with a manual processing system (including clerical time for receiving, logging, pulling necessary information and distributing) is four to seven work days. More realistically, turnover and lower productivity during training will result in an estimated average lag time of nine to ten working days.

Examining Positions (Personnel Technicians):

	Juneau	Anchorage	Fairbanks
Current	6.5	1	.5
New positions required *	3.5	1	--	Total Increase
TOTAL	10	2	.5	4.5

* Anticipates a total volume of 86,800 applications in FY 1981.

It must be kept in mind that an increase in application volume also increases the clerical support necessary to receive, record, distribute, file, place candidates on eligible lists, schedule and administer examinations and other myriads of duties associated with our current manual system.

Again, historical staffing and productivity data indicates the following clerical support/application volume ratio necessary to handle the massive paper flow.

Clerical Support/Applications		Current Positions All Offices	New Positions Required*
Examining	1/ 6,000	9	5
Files	1/10,000	5.5	3
Certifications	1/15,000	5	1
TOTAL		19.5	9

* Anticipates a total volume of 86,800 applications in FY 1981.

While this is an estimate and it is probable that we could "make do" with fewer clerical positions, it is totally unrealistic to plan on an increased examining staff without a substantial increase in clerical support, particularly in view of the lack, at this time, of electronic processing capability.

It is obvious from this data that proper staffing is critical if we are to be able to receive and process applications with any degree of timeliness. The result of inadequate staffing would be an increase in lag time. This increase would be greater than a strict numerical progression. As lag time increases, so do the volume of inquiries seeking information about the progress of individual applications. Staff time required to locate the application and respond to the individual is taken away from the needed examining function, causing even greater dalays and more inquiries. A vicious cycle ensues whereby examining time is drastically reduced. With an anticipated volume of 86,800 applications and with current staff, we could expect an average lag time of approximately 30 to 40 working days.

One additional factor that must be kept in mind is the equipment and space necessary to store and file the incoming applications as well as desks and other equipment for new staff. Presently, we neither have the funds for new equipment nor available space to add desks, files, etc.

Finally, I would recommend that continuous recruitment be phased in over a period of several months. This is to avoid the chaotic situation inherent in opening all job classes at the same time without adequate staff trained to process the applications.

CJB/ch

RECRUITMENT PRACTICES

ALASKA DIVISION OF PERSONNEL & LABOR RELATIONS

I thank you for the opportunity to comment on our program budget situation in regard to examining applicants for State employment.

The volume of applications in recent years has increased at an annual rate of 20%. As this volume increase has been going on, additional demands to document all actions to show compliance with union contracts and equal employment regulations have also increased. Requested increases in staff and resources to meet these demands have received limited sympathy and less support.

For the five-year period ending June 30, 1979, the annual rate of applications increased from 28,993 to 59,991. An increase of 106.9%. During the same period staff increases to cope with the volume went from 282 man months to 318. An increase of 12.8%.* Certainly some internal efficiencies and adjustments have been made to cope with the increased applications. However, without increased staff the needs could only be partially met.

During this period the number of vacant permanent positions and appointments have been decreasing. In several occupational areas we were, and are continuing to spend resources to examine applicants which far exceed the State's needs. Such action defies justification consistent with any sound business principles.

Serious problems on timely response to applicants began to develop.

During 1978 the measured time from receipt of an application until an Examiner reviewed it was averaging up to a month. This delay caused applicants to increase their inquiries seeking acknowledgement that their application had, indeed, been received. Staff time required to locate the application and respond to the individual was taken away from the needed examining function, which caused even greater delays and more inquiries. Thus a vicious cycle began, which, if allowed to continue, would have lead to an ultimate total system breakdown. Considerable thought was given to alternatives. These considered included:

1. GREATER DELEGATION TO OPERATING DEPARTMENTS. Although the personnel staffs of several departments expressed a desire for the authority, none of them believed they could adequately take on the increased work without an increased staff. There was also concern that applicants would become more confused as the variety of places and the necessary procedures to apply for State employment increased.

* Two CETA positions have also been assigned to the application filing work unit which increases the man months to 342; and a growth rate of 21.3%.

2. GREATER USE OF DATA PROCESSING SUPPORT. The Division of Data Processing did not have the staff or the resources to give assistance without reimbursement. The Division of Personnel and Labor Relations' requests for funds for this purpose have been turned down.

3. REVISE RECRUITMENT PRACTICES. This option appeared to be mostly within the control of the Division and was selected.

Reasons considered in selecting this option included:

1. The most common public and private recruitment practices are based on the employer's need for employees. The State's previous practice of examining applicants for everything at all times was highly unusual.

2. Examining applicants for jobs where no identified need existed or eligibles far in excess of the State's identified needs already existed, appeared wasteful of resources and denied an opportunity to concentrate on jobs that were difficult to fill.

3. During summer and fall months high numbers of applications are received from individuals seeking immediate employment. Many of the applicants have recently arrived in the State and their commitment to remain is highly questionable. A majority of these applications were for jobs that eligibles already exceeded needs. It was desirable to decrease the number of impulse and transient applicants.

4. Some efficiency of batch processing could be gained.

The recruitment closures were not what is typically considered a recruitment closure by public employers. The most typical cycle is to open recruitment for a specific time, close recruitment "until further notice," establish an eligible list and not reopen recruitment until that list is exhausted. The Division of Personnel and Labor Relations' closures announced when recruitment would be reopened and followed a self-imposed constraint that no job class would be closed for longer than eleven months.

 Since the establishment of the Department of Highways, the authority to recruit, examine and certify for several engineering job classes has been delegated to that Department and its successor; the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities. A 1977 Legislative Audit of the Division of Personnel recommended that all examining and certification functions should be centralized in the Division of Personnel for reasons of greater efficiency and less duplication. The delegation has not been rescinded.

The closures applied only to those jobs where an excessive supply of eligibles existed. Of over 900 job titles for which an individual could apply, only 173 were rescheduled for recruitment during the winter months. At the time of closure the 173 job classes covered 1,055 positions, of which 197 were vacant. During the previous year 527 appointments had been made. The eligible lists contained 12,883 applicants.

Allegations of union contract violations were resolved when an arbitrator ruled that the State's action did not violate the General Government or the Supervisory agreements between the State and the Alaska Public Employees Association.

Closure notices were issued in March, May, and September.

Through the first ten months of 1979, the number of applications received for examination were 1,300 less than the same period of 1978. A decline of 2.8%. However, without exercising some control over recruitment, an additional 10,830 applications were expected.

The average time from receipt until review by an Examiner for the period of June through October was nine working days less in 1979, than for the same period of 1978. This was a 54.0% reduction in time.

The scheduling of recruitment for certain job classes for specific months of the year makes it possible to take advantage of efficiencies of batch processing. An Examiner can review and rate 500 applications for Fisheries Biologist I received at one time much more rapidly than the same number of applications spread out over a twelve month period.

There is no basis to believe that this change in recruitment practices will of itself, have any impact on Equal Employment Opportunity practices. The Division of Equal Employment Opportunity has cited data which indicates that women and minorities are underrepresented in many job classes. Because the recruitment closures are so recent the E.E.O. data can only reflect the results of the previous unrestricted recruitment practices. The change in recruitment practices can be viewed as an opportunity to concentrate on affirmative action recruitment where needed without having to contend with numerous unsolicited applications which have resulted in a workforce that is not representative of the percentage of women and minorities in the labor market. The success of the recently completed recruitment program which concentrated on soliciting applications from minorities and women for "State Trooper Recruit" illustrates this point.

SUBJECT Policy Budget Comments

My memo of October 15 forwarded several comments concerning your policy budget submission. The following comment was erroneously ommitted and should be considered as part of the original memo:

The BRC is concerned that the practice of closing selected employment registers is violative of sound EEO and public management practices. We recognize the desire of the Division of Personnel to resolve what fairly may be described as a paper management crisis, however, we strongly recommend that in the interest of preserving our EEO standing and insuring our ability to retain the most competent individuals in public employment, that other alternatives be throughly considered.

RE: Senate Bill 499

Making a special appropriation to the Department of Administration for new positions in the Division of Personnel to process applications for state employment; and providing for an effective date.

Senate Bill 499 implements Recommendation 10 of the Blue Ribbon Commission's Report to the Alaska Legislature concerning keeping the state job registers open for recruitment.

This bill appropriates $92,600 for the Division of Personnel in the Department of Administration to increase their staff to enable them to process additional applications from persons seeking employment with the state. The breakdown of the funding request is as follows:

Personal Services

1. Personnel Technician I (2 positions) @ $2,102/mo. x 12 months = $25.2K per annum x 2 = $50.4K

2. Clerk II (2 positions) @ $1676/month x 12 months = 20.1K per annum x 2 = $40.2K

Desk, chair, miscellaneous supplies @ $500 each x 4 = $2K

For the five year period ending June 30, 1979, the number of applications received by the Division of Personnel increased 106.9%, from 28,993 to 59,991. During that same period, staff increased to process the applications at a rate of only 12.8%, from 282 man-months to 318 man-months. (In addition 2 CETA positions were assigned, which increases the man-months to 342 and the rate of growth to 21.3%.) This disparity of growth placed the division in a crunch, and, in order to keep the division's head above water, it was decided that some of the job classifications should be closed and no new applications accepted for those classes. The division intended that each of the 173 classes would be opened for at least 30 days each year.

Commission members were concerned that closing the registers denied Alaskans the opportunity to compete for jobs in the state and that the best qualifed candidate interested in an opening might be unable to apply for the position. While recognizing that the division's workload is excessive, the commission believes that an alternative solution should be found. Therefore, the commission recommends that the legislature fund these four positions so that recruitment for the classes which have been closed can be reopened without overwhelming the staff.

RE: Senate Bill 500

Relating to collective bargaining; and providing for an effective date.

Senate Bill 500 addresses the issue of legislative involvement in the collective bargaining process and implements Recommendation 4 of the Blue Ribbon Commission's Report to the Alaska Legislature.

ANALYSIS OF BILL

The purpose of this bill is to provide a system for legislative consideration of the monetary terms of the collective bargaining contracts negotiated by the state and its employees's organizations.

Section one of the bill amends the Public Employment Relations Act to implement the system of review. It provides that -- the monetary terms of collective bargaining agreements must be approved by the legislature in order for those terms to take effect;

-- agreements between the employee organizations and the state shall be submitted to the legislature within the first 30 days of a regular session;

-- legislative review is limited to the monetary terms of the agreements;

-- the legislature approves those terms by passing the appropriation bills to fund the agreements;

-- the legislature may reject the monetary terms by adopting a Concurrent Resolution; and

-- the legislature may not adjourn a regular session until it has either accepted or rejected the monetary terms of any collective bargaining agreements which have been brought before it.

Section two of the bill addresses funding for multi-year collective bargaining agreements. It provides that the legislative appropriation which will establish legislative approval for the monetary terms is to be an appropriation for the entire life of the agreement. The legislative enactment constitutes a contract by the state not to repeal or reduce the appropriation during that time. This provision for multi-year funding applies only to agreements which make no provision for reopening and negotiating adjustments to the monetary terms during the life of the agreement.

Section three of the bill provides that the bill takes effect immediately.

DISCUSSION

The commission considered the question of how to provide a more active role for the legislature in considering the fiscal impact of collective bargaining agreements while retaining a viable negotiating system within the executive branch. The commission considered that for the legislature to negotiate directly with the public employee organizations would be excessively time-consuming, and that therefore this task was more appropriately left to the Division of Labor Relations of the Department of Administration. The commission believes that the system proposed in this bill is the most appropriate vehicle for legislative review.

The commission recommends that action on the agreements submitted to the legislature be taken expeditiously. This would insure that if the legislature rejected an agreement, there would remain time within the session for the parties to renegotiate, should they choose to do so. If they agreed to an alternative agreement, the second agreement could be submitted for legislative review of the monetary terms. Nothing in this bill precludes the parties from taking any other action they might deem appropriate, including seeking approval of a strike by an organization's membership.

Should this bill be enacted, an interim system would have to be agreed to by the parties for contracts presently in force.

Senate Bill 501 addresses Recommendation 12 of the Blue Ribbon Commission's Report to the Alaska Legislature, concerning the veterans' preference system in the State Personnel Act.

This bill proposes two changes in the veterans' preference system statute. The first, a housekeeping measure, designates November 7, 1975, as the final date for eligibility for preference as a veteran of the Vietnam era. This date was selected on the basis of President Ford's proclamation that the Vietnam era ended on May 7, 1975. See attached copy.

The second change limits eligibililty for veterans' preference points to a period of three years following discharge from the armed forces of the United States. The majority of the commission considered three years to be a reasonable period to assist veterans in their readjustments to civilian life and in their reentry into the civilian work force.

The Congress has provided that entitlement to certain veterans benefits be limited to persons serving in the Armed Forces during the period, beginning August 5, 1964, referred to as the Vietnam era. MEMORANDUM December 7, 1978

SUBJECT: Work Order #5791: Constitutional and Federal Requirements on a Merit System.

TO: Senator Bill Ray, Chairman
Legislative Council Commission on the State Personnel Act

FROM: Richard A. Bradley
Legislative Counsel

The "blue ribbon" commission established under L.R. 27, 1978 has asked that I provide it with an exploration of the meaning of the term "merit system" in the context of the Alaska Constitution and of Federal law. For purposes of this analysis, I have divided my comments into three parts: First, an analysis of the constitutional debates; second, some brief comments on the usual understanding of the meaning of the term, and third, any Federal requirements that need to be considered.

I. The 1955 Constitutional Convention Debates.

The 1955 debates reflect that the drafters of the constitution had a good understanding of the characteristics of a merit system. The debate at the convention on what became Article XII, Section 6 focused on only two questions:

(1) Shall the language read that

> The legislature shall establish a system under which the merit principle will govern the employment of persons by the State or shall it read

> The legislature may establish a system [etc.]

and

(2) If the section is phrased in the latter formulation, whether it is needed in the constitution at all.

The initial debate on the section appears at pages 2798 - 2800 of the Proceedings of the Alaska Constitutional Convention. In these pages, the earlier, original formula of "shall" was changed to "may."

The reasons for the change reflect a concern that "shall" would oblige the legislature at statehood to establish a merit system immediately. Use of "may" would reflect, under this hypothesis, a decision by the Convention that such a system would be useful, but also that it would not need to be implemented immediately.

Thus Delegate Johnson [at 2799] stated that the Territorial Legislature had been concerned about the situation for a number of years but had been unable to adopt a measure:

> If you put in the word "shall" it seems to me that then [the legislature is] confronted with the necessity of doing it right now and not getting a good system. [Id., at 2799.]

Delegate Taylor stated that there was a modified merit system in effect at that time as to ESC and Health and Welfare employees; as to the use of certain Federal funds, a merit system was required. [Id., at 2799.] Delegate Nordale noted that there was no Territorial merit system. Rather, the merit system then applicable to the listed agencies was derived from Federal law. [Id., at 2800.]

> As far as the working of a civil service system, there are always exempted positions such as part-time employment and various types of employment that usually, I imagine, are always exempted; and it does not ordinarily apply to elected or appointed officials and there is a certain group at the top level of government that are completely exempt from the operation of a civil service system. Many others are classified, and there are the other exemptions at the lower level. [Id., at 2800.]

The more substantive debates occurred later on a motion to rescind the action substituting "may" for "shall." [Id., at 2887 - 2895.] Thus Delegate Sundborg described the merit principle at 2887 - 2888:

> I don't think anybody is, in principle, opposed to the merit system. * * * It is a system by which persons who are to be employed by the state are employed on the basis of their ability rather than who they might know or what pull they might have or how they voted in a recent election. * * * Persons who desire employment are treated alike. They are given written and oral examinations to determine whether they are qualified for the positions to which they aspire. There is a regular integrated program of salaries as between various positions so that not the legislature, not the head of an agency, can say that this person shall get so many dollars per year and that one so many, without any reference to what the person is doing or what he is producing. The converse of the merit principle is the spoils system, and anyone who doesn't want to have a merit principle incorporated in our state government system must, I think, be in favor of a spoils system.

Responding to debate, Delegate McCutcheon asked :

> How does Mr. Barr substantiate his assertion that this is keeping employees out of politics. * * * You are not inferring that this is a small Hatch Act?

Delegate Barr responded [at 2889 - 2890]:

> It is setting up a framework of government for the state and it is dealing with the employees and the officers of the state only; and it was felt that it would be better to have a merit system to keep the employees out of politics. It was recognized, of course, that the governor should have his appointees serve as department heads, so he could work with his own team.

Delegate Ralph Rivers discussed the application of a merit system to temporary employees [at 2890]:

> I would like to speak on the point of law: would this necessarily cover temporary employees. * * * This language speaks only of the establishment of employment by a merit principle. Now, I regard that as a general directive to establish a merit system, but all the details would be spelled out by the legislature, and I want the record to show that if I vote for the word "shall" it is not on the theory that every temporary employee is going to be under the merit system. It is going to be on the theory that the legislature has the power to spell out the details.

Delegate McLaughlin spoke on the general question [at 2891 - 2892]:

I would concur in the statement made by Mr. Sundborg as to the merit principle. If we substitute here the word "shall" all we are doing, in substance, is providing that we won't be under a spoils system. I think, perhaps, there is a misapprehension in the Convention as to what the merit principle consists of. The merit principle, in substance, merely determines that political considerations will not be the determinant for the selection, and all we are doing is repudiating the idea of the spoils system. From somewhat limited knowledge, I know in most states of the Union, not only do they have, if they so desire, if you adopt this can you have a large exempt class, but you can have many varieties of what they call classifications and not necessarily even that. But you can have classifications classifying all applicants for service into various categories, some of them not requiring examinations, some possibly limited, but you can adopt the merit principle without examination, and it is certainly not my intent when I vote for "shall" to blanket in any large group of individuals permanently into the civil service. Another problem that has arisen is the question many people complain about embedding public employees into their jobs. You have poor civil service systems and you have good ones. That is something that should be left entirely to the legislature. When you vote for "shall" you merely vote for the principle that you are opposed to the spoils system, and if you are in favor of some method of selection whereby you won't have on your payrolls people whose only obligation to government is to vote for those in power on election day. They shall be secure in their jobs, and not subject to political dismissal.

Delegate Sundborg spoke last [at 2894]:

May I close, briefly? Mr. President, I think practically everything that can be said about this has been said. I can say definitely that it is in language > which I think is identical with this or at least is very similar to that of the three agencies which now operate on the merit principle in our Territory which were ordered to do so by the federal government, and that system, the Alaska Merit System, does provide exemptions of all temporary employees, all part-time employees and the heads of agencies. * *

> * On this matter of perpetuating in their jobs, people who will not be sympathetic or will not be able to do the work as the heads of the agencies desire, any employee under a merit system can be discharged for cause. A man isn't frozen into his job permanently just because he is hired under a merit system. If he isn't working in the way that the head of the agency and the merit agency of the state requires, according to job specifications, he can be relieved of his responsibilities in very short order, and that is as it should be.

In summary, several points relative to the constitutional mandate that a merit system be established may be made:

> Though not all positions in state government need be covered under a merit system, the law establishing the system should be the source of the exceptions. Thus part-time employees or temporary employees may be excluded; elected or appointed officers are necessarily excluded.
> Appointments to positions are based on the tested ability of employees rather than on whom they may have known.
> Salaries are based on the nature of the work, as established by the classification of the position.
> Employees have tenure during the time they are efficient and perform their work well, without regard to political considerations.

II. General Understanding of the Meaning of Merit System.

When a merit system bill was introduced in the First Legislature, it was referred to the Legislative Council for interim review. Its analysis of the meaning is brief and to the point:

> A merit system is designed essentially to promote efficiency in government through the continuity of > employment of qualified personnel. At the same time it can serve to protect the employee, guarding him against political raid and allowing him job tenure as long as he meets the qualifications for his position and performs in an efficient manner. [Staff Memorandum on House Bill 188, First Legislature; December 9, 1959.]

Note that House Bill 188 was described in the December 9, 1959 Memorandum of the Legislative Council Staff as comprehending both personnel practices and merit principles.

I understand that Ken Humphries has provided the Commission with an analysis of other merit systems; I agree that his analysis is accurate on the characteristics of merit systems.

Public Law 91-648, 84 Stat. 1909, the Inter-governmental Personnel Act of 1970, contains a generally agreed-on list of merit principles:

> (1) recruiting, selecting, and advancing employees on the basis of their relative ability, knowledge, and skills, including open consideration of qualified applicants for initial appointment;
> (2) providing equitable and adequate compensation;
> (3) training employees, as needed, to assure high-quality performance;
> (4) retaining employees on the basis of the adequacy of their performance, correcting inadequate performance, and separating employees whose inadequate performance cannot be corrected;
> (5) assuring fair treatment of applicants and employees in all aspects of personnel administration without regard to political affiliation, race, color, national origin, sex, or religious creed and with proper regard for their privacy and constitutional rights as citizens; and
> (6) assuring that employees are protected against coercion for partisan political purposes and are prohibited from using their official authority for the purpose of interfering with or affecting the result of an election or a nomination for office.

I believe that all of these principles are contained within the debate quoted earlier in this memorandum with the possible exception of training which, at least in my view, is more a good personnel practice than a merit principle.

III. Federal Requirements.

The Federal government imposes no requirements on state government generally or on the state government in Alaska as to its views on the desired constituent parts of a merit system.

Rather the Federal government imposes its view that certain state or local agencies shall abide by the merit principle, regardless of their practices generally, when they employ individuals in "various grant-in-aid and other intergovernmental programs using Federal funding." See the notice of proposed rule-making at 43 Fed. Reg. 20996 [May 16, 1978], proposing regulations which will be located at 5 CFR §900.61 et seq.; the regulations will replace earlier regulations found at 45 CFR part 70.

The proposed rule making sets out various principles which will guide state action. Because the proposals seem fairly clear [and have some 38 years' history], it does not seem necessary to comment on them individually.

The appendix to the proposed rule-making, 43 Fed. Reg. at 21103, sets out the various Federal programs which are viewed as subject to the merit principles.

If I can assist further, please advise.

RE: Senate Bill 502

Relating to the merit principle in state employment.

Senate Bill 502 addresses Recommendation 1 of the Blue Ribbon Commission's Report to the Alaska Legislature concerning recognition of the components of the merit principle of employment.

The Alaska Constitution directs, in Article XII, Section 6, that "(t)he legislature shall establish a system under which the merit principle will govern the employment of persons by the state." The constitution does not identify the components of the "merit principle." During the constitutional debates, the delegates identified concepts which they believed were encompassed by that term. See Proceedings of the Alaska Constitution Convention, pages 2886-2895. The legislature incorporated those concepts into the State Personnel Act which was adopted in 1961, but did not identify specifically the essential elements. This bill places the five components of the merit principle identified during the Constitution Convention in the State Personnel Act.

Since the Public Employment Relations Act requires that all collective bargaining agreements conform to the merit principle of employment, the designation of these components of the merit principle would serve to insure that the parties to collective bargaining agreements were on notice as to the state's interpretation of that language.

These five principles are consistent with the federal Standards for a Merit System of Personnel Administration, 44 F.R. 10238. The federal standards must be met for employment of persons in any federal grant-in-aid program. In addition, to the five areas addressed in this bill, the federal standards include a merit principle which requires that employees be trained as needed to assure high quality performance.

RE: House Concurrent Resolution 57

Relating to the preparation and distribution by the Division of Budget and Managment, Office of the Governor, of a personnel procedures manual.

House Concurrent Resolution 57 implements Recommendation 9 of the Blue Ribbon Commission's Report to the Alaska Legislature by requesting that the Division of Budget and Management prepare and distribute a procedures manual for use in the classification and re-classification process.

Before a new position can be filled, the Division of Budget and Mangement must authorize the expenditure of funds for the salary and the Division of Personnel in the Department of Administration must classify it. The department in which the position occurs is responsible for preparing the documents to support these activities. There are no written guides for the departmental personnel to use in that preparation. This Concurrent Resolution asks the Division of Budget and Management to prepare a procedures manual for the use of the departments in this process.

There are some areas in the establishment of a new position or the reclassification of an existing position over which both the Division of Personnel and the Division of Budget and Management appear to have jurisdiction. This overlap can lead to confusion for the departmental staff responsible for preparation of the documents. The confusion can lead to delays in establishing the position and therefore to delays in implementing new programs. Where time is of the essence, these delays can frustrate the purpose of legislatively enacted programs.

Therefore the commission recommends that the legislature request the Division of Budget and Management to prepare and distribute a procedures manual to assist the departmental personnel officers and program managers in the steps necessary to establish a new position or to reclassify an existing position. The manual should identify which agency to consult when questions arise.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 49 implements Recommendation 9 of the Blue Ribbon Commission's Report to the Alaska Legislature by requesting that the Division of Budget and Management prepare and distribute a procedures manual for use in the classification and re-classification process.

WHEREAS the commission was formed as authorized by the resolution, made its report to the First Session of the Eleventh Legislature, and, in response to the commission's request for additional time to study problems it had identified, was funded by the legislature for a second year; and

WHEREAS additional time is needed to study the complex, interrelated problems which the commission has identified;

Senate Concurrent Resolution 50 addresses Recommendation 19 and 20 of the Blue Ribbon Commission's Report to the Alaska Legislature and asks the legislature to continue the commission's existence through June 30, 1981.

The Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act has taken significant steps in its consideration of the complex problems in the personnel system of the state. However, the commission has not yet reached conclusions in a number of these areas, most significantly, in the questions of whether to centralize or to decentralize authority for personnel actions, in concluding a thorough review of statutes affecting personnel matters, and evaluation of the Personnel Rules. The commission believes that its work has been worthwhile and that a hasty tinkering with this area could do considerable harm. Therefore it hopes that the legislature will endorse its considered approach by extending its life through June 30, 1981.

For a more complete discussion of the commission's work, see the 1980 Report of the Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act of the Eleventh Alaska State Legislature, Second Session.

RE: Conversation with Bruce Cummings

I met with Bruce Cummings at his suggestion to review what progress the Division of Personnel is making towards the Blue Ribbon Commission's recommendations from our 1980 report. The following summarizes his comments.

Recommendation 1. Merit Principles. The legislature passed SCS HB 908 identifying the merit principles and adding them to the State Personnel Act. He views this as a very helpful change for the state. It clarifies the reasons why he cannot give some departments or individuals special treatment and may make his insistance on treating all alike easier to justify to those who approach him for special treatment.

Recommendation 2. Keeping positions in the classified service. He agrees with the commission position that any positions which are removed from collective bargaining should be kept in the classified service.

Recommendation 3. Exempt and Partially Exempt services. Bruce wholeheartedly supports the commission's recommendation that the placement of positions in the exempt and partially exempt services be reviewed.

Recommendation 4. Legislative role in Collective Bargaining. This is a matter for the Division of Labor Relations to comment on.

Recommendation 5. Merit Increase program. The collective bargaining contracts now all contain some provision for merit increases or seniority raises for their employees, so the question is no longer one which the Division of Personnel is involved with. The Division of Labor Relations handles any issues which arise under the contract terms. It has been his experience that no matter what kind of system is in place for merit increases or other pay raises, there are always problems with how it is administered. There are other more effective management tools for encouraging employees to perform well.

Recommendation 6. Cost of Living Adjustments. This is a collective bargaining issue.

Recommendation 7. Membership on the Personnel Board, the Labor Relations Agency, and the Public Employees Retirement Board. As a result of legislation passed last session, the Personnel Board members have been made members of the Deferred Compensation Board and of the Supplemental Benefits Board. With these added responsibilities, those individuals may be over-extended, and therefore it is appropriate for their duties to be reviewed.

Recommendation 8. Departmental rank for Employee Relations. The Hammond administration continues to hold the opinion that employee relations should remain part of the Department of Administration.

Recommendation 9. Budget and Management Procedures Manual. I spoke with Jim Stey, Deputy Director of the Division of Budget and Management last week. He said that the division will begin working on the manual after they have finished processing the new budget and that it would not be done for several weeks. Bruce Cummings indicated that his division still hears complaints about problems with the processing of the papers for position classifications and reclassifications by Budget and Management.

Delegation of classification authority to departments. Bruce said that the division is continuing to expand their delegation to departments. He is in the process of developing a program in which the departments will be offered an opportunity to take on classification authority for positions within their departments paid at Range 18 or lower, provided that they have at least one other position in the same classification. It will be up to the departmental personnel officers to decide whether to accept the delegation or not. There will also be a classification workshop scheduled in the fall to assist personnel officers in making classification decisions. The Division of Personnel would retain an auditing role for the departmental decisions. The program would be reviewed after 6 months operation to consider whether it was working properly.

Recommendation 10. Four positions for the Division of Personnel. The legislature added four positions to the division, and they will be used initially to process the backlog of applications. Bruce has asked the Recruiting and Examining Section to review their experience with register closures to evaluate whether it saves time or increases the time taken to process applications.

Recommendation 11. One application for each job class. The division is developing an innovative computerized application process for the clerical classes in which one application can be used to apply for some 40 different positions. The computer would be able to score the applications, shortening the processing time required for getting the successful applicants on the registers. Since a substantial number of the applications the division receives are in the classes covered by this system, getting the system operational should mean that it will take less time for other applicants to have their applications processed and their names to appear on registers. If the computer program works, it can be expanded to include other classes as well.

One spin-off of the computer program is that a number of classifications have been identified which might be consolidated, thereby reducing the number of job classifications used by the state.

Recommendation 12. Veteran's Preference System. The legislature set a date for the end of the Viet Nam hostilities in the Revisor's bill.

Recommendation 13. Block Scoring. The division uses each review of its rating devices (either written examiniations or evaluations of training and experience) to establish the blocks for a block scoring system for the job class. Bruce wants to eventually be able to use a block scoring system for all job classes.

Recommendation 14. Review of Unique or Unusual Circumstances. To implement this recommendation would require a change in the Personnel Rules. Bruce has some concern that moving in this direction (requiring more Division of Personnel involvement in the personnel actions of the departments) is counter to the direction most of the other Blue Ribbon Commission recommendations are going in.

Recommendation 15. Interviews for the top five applicants. Bruce has no objections to this recommendation - it is something that has to be carried out at the departmental (or program manager) level.

Recommendation 16. Not Recommended for Rehire. Like recommendation 14, this recommendation would require more Division of Personnel involvement in the personnel actions of the departments rather than moving towards decentralizing. In addition, supervisors can write recommendations to effectively recommend that an employee not be rehired without directly saying so, and therefore having the division review those which state specifically that an employee should not be rehired would not protect those others. The unions through their grievance procedures can better protect an employee from unfair recommendations than can the Division of Personnel.

Recommendation 17. Audits of the Personnel System. Bruce supports this recommendation and would like to see the division move in this direction, especially as the delegation of personnel responsibilities to the departments increases.

Recommendation 18. Graduated System of Penalties. This is a complicated area, and one in which providing more stringet structures will not really help in the process. The unions can protect employees from unreasonable penalties, and the contracts limit what the state can do, anyway, so this area is one which he sees as a collective bargaining issue.

Recommendation 19. Comprehensive revision of the laws affecting personnel. Bruce supports this recommendation, and thinks it would be helpful for the commission to do this.

Recommendation 20. Revision of the Personnel Rules. Bruce supports this recommendation.

No. 1J11-79-538

COMPLAINT

The Alaska Public Employees Association complains and alleges as follows:

1. Plaintiff, Alaska Public Employees Association (hereinafter "APEA"), is a nonprofit Alaska corporation in good standing, having paid its annual corporate tax and having filed its annual report for the last fiscal year. APEA is an organization representing public employees in collective bargaining with the State of Alaska and pursuant to the Public Employment Relations Act (AS 23.40). APEA is the exclusive bargaining representative for State employees in the General Government and Supervisory Bargaining Units.

2. As bargaining representative for the General Government Unit, APEA negotiated a collective bargaining agreement on behalf of the aforesaid bargaining unit with the State of Alaska. The Agreement Between the State of Alaska and the Alaska Public Employees Association Covering General Government Unit Employees, 1977-1979, was signed on May 2, 1977, and provides that it shall be effective from January 1, 1977, through December 31, 1979. The contract was executed for the State of Alaska by the then Commissioner of Administration, B. B. Allen, and by the spokesman and negotiators for the State of Alaska. A copy of the agreement with the General Government Bargaining Unit is attached as Appendix "A".

3. As bargaining representative for the Supervisory Unit, APEA negotiated an Agreement Between the State of Alaska and Alaska Public Employees Association Covering Supervisory Unit Employees 1979. The agreement was signed on December 28, 1978, by B. B. Allen, Commissioner of Administration, and by the spokesperson and negotiators for the State of Alaska. It provided that the agreement became effective on January 1, 1979, and would remain in effect until December 31, 1979. A copy of this agreement is attached as Appendix "B".

4. This action is brought by APEA on behalf of the supervisory and general government employees covered by the aforesaid collective bargaining agreements.

5. Defendant State of Alaska is the employer of the employees whom the plaintiff represents, and, as such, has the responsibility to abide by the agreements negotiated with plaintiff.

6. Defendant William R. Hudson is Commissioner of the Department of Administration and has overall responsibility for the administration of the collective bargaining agreements negotiated by the State of Alaska.

7. Jay S. Hammond is the governor of the State of Alaska and the chief executive officer of the State.

COUNT I

8. Article 24, Section 1, of the General Government Agreement sets forth salary schedules for General Government employees, including provisions for cost of living increases based on the Consumer Price Index.

9. In 1977 the legislature had the General Government

Agreement before it and appropriated funds sufficient to pay all salaries, benefits and other obligations of the State under the contract, including a prepaid cost of living increase for 1978.

10. In reliance upon that legislative action, ratification and endorsement of the contract, the General Government employees continued to work, providing services to the State of Alaska, and did not seek to negotiate different contractual terms, exercise their right to strike or enforce the other rights granted to them by AS 23.40. The State of Alaska accepted the services of these employees and the benefits of these services and promised to pay for those services as provided in the General Government Agreement.

11. In 1978 the legislature again reviewed the General Government contract and appropriated all necessary funds to meet the State's obligations under the contract, including cost of living increases based on the Consumer Price Index. The General Government employees again relied on their contract with the State and the action of the legislature as alleged in paragraph 10.

12. In 1979 bills were introduced in the Alaska Legislature to appropriate funds to cover moneys due and owing for 1978 and 1979. The House of Representatives passed the necessary appropriations. The Senate took no action.

13. The State of Alaska entered the agreement with the General Government employees with full knowledge of its terms. It elected to base the salaries of the employees on a formula tied to changes in the cost of living index rather than providing for salaries at a fixed dollar level, or salaries calculated on a particular percentage change from salaries under an earlier contract, or salaries based on any other factor or formula. The legislature was aware of the terms of the General Government Agreement and twice endorsed and ratified those terms. The State accepted the services of its employees with full knowledge of the terms of this agreement. The employees relied on this State action as alleged in paragraph 10. If the cost of living had not increased or had increased by only a small amount, the State's employees would have been bound to accept salaries based on the contractual terms agreed to by the State. In 1978, however, through no fault of the employees, the cost of living increased substantially. As a result, the State now seeks to renege on its agreement and, despite having entered into an agreement and having received the services agreed to, it now refuses to pay the employees as agreed either for past services rendered or for future services. The State is bound by its contractual agreements and the specific provisions of the contracts must be enforced.

COUNT II

14. Article 18, Section 1, of the Supervisors' Agreement sets forth the salary schedule for Supervisory employees, including provision for 3.5% increases which are within approved Presidential wage guidelines. Other articles of the contract provide for other pay and benefits to Supervisory employees.

15. Based on this agreement, entered in late 1978, the Supervisory employees continued to work after January 1, 1979, and the State of Alaska accepted the services of those employees. These services were provided in reliance on the contract agreed to by the State of Alaska. The Supervisory employees, in reliance on that agreement, did not attempt to negotiate different contractual terms, exercise their right to strike, or to exercise other rights granted to them in AS 23.40.

16. In 1979 a bill was introduced in the Alaska Legislature to appropriate funds to provide salaries and benefits as called for in the Supervisory contract. The House of Representatives passed the necessary appropriations. The Senate took no action.

17. The State of Alaska, having entered into an agreement with the Supervisory employees, and having accepted their services rendered in reliance on the agreement, is now bound to abide by the terms of its contract.

COUNT III

18. APEA repeats and realleges the allegations in paragraphs 1 through 17 of this complaint.

19. The Alaska Legislature has already appropriated sufficient funds to pay all or part of the agreed salaries and benefits of the General Government and Supervisory employees, specifically including the salaries and cost of living increases for services already rendered.

20. The Governor and the Department of Administration may not let these appropriations lapse or refuse to use those moneys to pay the amounts due under the contract. The State is required to abide by the terms of the contract and to use those appropriated moneys to carry out the terms of its collective bargaining agreements.

COUNT IV

21. APEA repeats and realleges the allegations in paragraphs 1 through 20 of this complaint.

22. If the moneys appropriated by the Alaska Legislature are not sufficient to pay all the employees of the State of Alaska at the present level of service as required by the contracts which the State has entered, the State is required to reduce its obligations by reducing the amount of services it receives rather than by refusing to honor its salary commitments to the employees.

COUNT V

23. APEA repeats and realleges the allegations in paragraphs 1 through 22 of this complaint.

24. The Governor of the State of Alaska and his administration have failed to use their best efforts to obtain legislative appropriations.

25. The Governor of the State of Alaska has publicly stated his disagreement with the collective bargaining process and with the provisions of AS 23.40. He has failed to act in good faith to support, explain and seek legislative appropriations to fund the provisions of the collective bargaining agreements entered into by his administration. His actions reflect a determination to subvert the collective bargaining process rather than to enforce the laws of the State of Alaska as required by the Alaska Constitution.

26. The Governor is bound to seek administrative alternatives and remedies to the fullest extent of his power to enable and ensure compliance by the State of Alaska with its collective bargaining agreements. The Governor may not simply default on his obligations because of legislative inaction. If, despite the Governor's best efforts at the executive level, the State is unable to fulfill its contractual commitments, then the Governor is obliged to call a special session of the legislature to seek legislative action to enable the State to comply with its collective bargaining agreements.

COUNT VI

27. APEA repeats and realleges the allegations in paragraphs 1 through 26 of this complaint.

28. The State of Alaska, having accepted the services of its employees rendered in good faith and in reliance upon the contracts agreed to by the State of Alaska, will be unjustly enriched if it is allowed to retain the benefits of those services without paying the employees as agreed for those services. The employees are entitled to be paid the reasonable value for their services as set forth in those contracts.

COUNT VII

29. APEA repeats and realleges the allegations in paragraphs 1 through 28 of this complaint.

30. The State of Alaska (including its employees and agents in both the executive and legislative branches) is estopped from taking any action or presenting any argument which would facilitate default on its collective bargaining agreements upon which its employees have relied and pursuant to which they have already provided services.

COUNT VIII

31. APEA repeats and realleges the allegations in paragraphs 1 through 30 of this complaint.

32. The State of Alaska may not refuse to honor its collective bargaining agreements or take any action to facilitate default on its collective bargaining agreements because to do so would violate the United States and Alaska Constitutions, including the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution; Article I, Section 7, of the Alaska Constitution prohibiting the taking of property without due process of law; Article I, Secton 1, of the Alaska Constitution guaranteeing equal protection of the laws and the right of every individual to the rewards of his own industry; and the prohibitions on impairment of contracts in Article I, Section 10, of the United States Constitution and Article I, Section 16, of the Alaska Constitution.

WHEREFORE, the Alaska Public Employees Association asks this court to enter an order requiring:

1. Specific performance by the State of Alaska of its obligations under the General Government and Supervisory contracts;

3. In the alternative, requiring the State of Alaska to pay non-monetary damages or compensation for breach of said contracts;

4. Such other legal and equitable relief, including the entry of appropriate mandatory equitable orders, as will ensure maximum compliance by the State of Alaska with said contracts; together with costs, attorney fees and such other relief as may be just and proper.

MEMORANDUM

April 20, 1981

TO: Senate State Affairs Committee

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer TBC
Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: SB 194: Relating to Nepotism in State Employment

The present statute prohibiting nepotism in state employment is directed at relatives of the executive head of a department or agency. It prohibits the employment of anyone related within the second degree of kindred to the executive head. However, the Personnel Rules also prohibit the employment of persons related within the second degree of kindred to the head of the division or subdivision within which the person is working. (PR 13 09.2). In addition, the Rule requires that before a person may be employed in the same agency with a close relative, that the Director of Personnel and the appointing authority for the department or agency must give express approval to the appointment. (PR 13 09.3)

The scope of the Personnel Rules is broader than the scope of the statute. The Attorney General has advised the Division of Personnel that the Rules are therefore not completely enforceable. The Blue Ribbon Commission considered the issue and the majority recommends that the scope of the statute be enlarged to include the provisions of the Personnel Rules. While provisions against nepotism limit the opportunities of some Alaskans to find employment with particular offices in the state, the disadvantage to those people should be weighed against the appearance of impropriety and favoritism which is created if relatives of the head of a division or department are working within that division or department.

The Director of Personnel advised the commission that in the past he has routinely approved waivers for relatives to work in a non-supervisory status in the same office. The majority of the commission recommends that requirement for review of these situations be placed in the statute to provide a mechanism for review should an instance of abuse arise.

SECTION BY SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1. Subsection (a) prohibits the employment of a person related to the top-level managers of a department or agency. It encompasses the present substance of AS 39.10.010 and extends it to include deputy and assistant commissioners.

Subsections (b) and (c) extend the scope of the statute to include the provisions of the Personnel Rule. Subsection (b) prohibits the employment within a particular division of persons related to the division director. It applies to all three branches of government.

Subsection (c) provides that before two close relatives may work in the same office in the executive branch of government, the Director of Personnel and the person who is making the hiring decision must both approve the appointment in writing.

Section 2. Because the state is operating without an effective nepotism law, the commission recommends that the bill take effect immediately.

Undoubtedly there will be some costs to the retirement system, but they cannot be measured. In most instances the individual adjustment would be small.

SUBJECT: Senate Bill 195: Limiting the Adjustment of Retirement Benefits

BACKGROUND

This bill remedies a problem which the Blue Ribbon Commission was advised of in testimony from a retired state employee. When the employee retired in 1976, she had been advised on four separate occasions by the staff of the Division of Retirement and Benefits that she was eligible for more than nine years of credited service with the state. Shortly after she retired the legislature amended the retirement laws and she was told that she would receive credit for an additional three years because of her military service. She began receiving retirement benefits on that basis.

In 1979 the division wrote to advise her that their original computations had been in error and that her years of employment with the University of Alaska could not be included in her credited service. Therefore, she had received over $5000 in benefits which she would have to repay. They reduced the amount of her check by $100 to be credited towards that overpayment, in addition to reducing the check to the amount she was actually entitled to receive. The basis for denying credit for the employee's period of service with the University of Alaska was a regulation adopted by the Division of Retirement and Benefits in 1978 -- two years after she had retired.

The employee appealed to the Public Employee Retirement Board, which can waive collection of overpayments in cases of hardship. In determining whether there would be hardship to the employee, the board considered her family's financial situation and found that she was not entitled to the waiver.

Commission members discovered that this was not an isolated instance. A number of retired state employees have undergone similar experiences. They relied on assurances from the Division of Retirement and Benefits only to discover a considerable time later that errors had been made and that their benefits would be reduced.

The commission recommends that a two-year statute of limitations be placed on the collection of overpayments. Two years gives the Division of Retirement and Benefits ample time to audit its records and find and correct any errors made. After that period of time, a retired person should be freed from the burden of having to pay back the state for mistakes of the state's employees. This protection should be available only in cases where the retired person did not contribute to causing the error. It should not apply to persons working for employers other than the state, since those employers may not be in a financial position to absorb the cost of errors made by state employees.

SECTION BY SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1 amends the Teachers Retirement System by prohibiting the Division of Retirement and Benefits from decreasing benefits in order to collect for a previous overpayment if two conditions are met. The first condition is that the overpayment began two years or more before the division told the retired teacher of the error. The second condition is that the teacher did not cause the error.

Section 2 amends the Public Employee Retirement System in the same way that section 1 amends the TRS. However, in this section there is an additional condition. The error in computation must relate to the employee's credited service with the state, and not with another participating employer.

Section 3 makes the Act retroactive in order to include the retired person who testified before the commission.

Section 4 provides that the Act takes effect immediately in order to address the hardship to retired state employees.

MEMORANDUM

April 3, 1981

TO: Senate State Affairs Committee

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer TBC
Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: SB 196 Relating to the Membership of the Public Employees Retirement Board.

This bill amends the Public Employees Retirement Act to change the membership of the Public Employees Retirement Board. The law presently requires that the three members who are appointed to the Personnel Board shall also serve on the PERB. AS 39.35.030. Those three individuals are also, by statute, appointed to the Labor Relations Agency, which is involved in collective bargaining issues. AS 23.40.250(3). The activities of both the LRA and the PERB have grown considerably recently. In the last legislative session, the PERB was made responsible for overseeing the supplemental employee benefit program and the deferred compensation program for state employees. AS 39.35.040(9) and (10). The increase in the number of state employees who are members of collective bargaining organizations has led to additional work for the LRA. The three members of the Personnel Board are citizen volunteers appointed by the Governor who are not employed by the state.

While the issues which are addressed by the Personnel Board are related to some of the issues addressed by the Labor Relations Agency, this is not the case with the subjects of concern to the Public Employees Retirement Board. Therefore, the Blue Ribbon Commission recommends that the members of the Personnel Board continue to serve as the members of the LRA and that they be removed from the PERB. The PERB should be composed of four elected members and one member appointed by the Governor. In addition, the commission recommends that one of the elected members should be a retired person to insure that those most directly affected by the system have a voice in the decision-making body.

Section 1 of the bill sets out the changes in membership of the PERS board which are discussed above.

Section 2 is a temporary measure to enable the board to continue to act until new members have been selected according to the new method.

TO: Senate State Affairs Committee

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer

SUBJECT: SB 197 Applying the Administrative Procedure Act (AS 44.62) to Adoption of Regulations by State Retirement Systems.

This bill amends the law to require that both the Public Employees Retirement Board and the Teachers Retirement System administrators comply with the Administrative Procedure Act when adopting regulations. Both retirement systems are presently exempted from the APA. The Blue Ribbon Commission recommends the change because of concern that regulations have been adopted in the past without adequate opportunity for public comment. Although rule-making under the APA may be more time-consuming than rule-making under the present methods of the retirement systems, the improved public notice requirements outweigh that disadvantage. In instances in which either retirement system is faced with a need for immediate change in regulations, the APA provides for emergency rule-making. AS 44.62.250.

Section 1 of the bill amends the Public Employees Retirement System statute to make the PERS subject to the APA rule-making requirements.

Section 2 amends the Teachers Retirement System statute to make the TRS subject to the APA rule-making requirements.

III. ANALYSIS (See Fiscal Note Preparation Instruction, Section III)

Sections 11, 12 and 13 of HCS CSSB 913 (Jud) provides the procedures for adoption of amendments to the Personnel Rules. New publication requirements, mandatory publication in the Alaska Administrative Register and Code, and optional public hearings are provided. HCS CSSB 193 (Jud) makes several minor changes to the Personnel Act that will require amending the Personnel Rules. The major costs for FY 83 are:

1) contracting with the Department of Law for an attorney for four months to:

- rewrite the current Personnel Rules to AAC standards
- draft amendments incorporating changes in the Personnel Act

- modify amendments based on hearings
- file the amended rules with the Lt. Governor
- compile a Personnel Act - Personnel Rules cross-reference
- identify forms needing revision to reference the appropriate AAC provisions instead of the former rule
- Revise Administrative Manual and Operating Procedures to properly reference revised Personnel rules

($19.2 Thous.)

2) Personal Services to employ Regulations Specialist to revise existing procedures, manuals, forms and letters to properly cite revised Personnel rules. Position would be half-time after first year.

($42.2 Thous.)

3) travel and per diem for attorney and the Personnel Board for two hearings to adopt the rules and amendments under AAC standards.

($2.8 Thous.)

4) public notice of the hearings and proposed amendments. ($ .6 Thous.)

5) typing of drafts, revision and filing version. ($2.0 Thous.)

6) printing of forms incorporating AAC references. ($1.0 Thous.)

In subsequent years, one two-day hearing by the Personnel Board to adopt amendments is budgeted. Travel is inflated 10% annually and public notice costs at 8%. Personal Services inflated at 7% per year.

Section 14 of HCS CSSB 193 (Jud) contains a significant change in the definition and preference accorded to veterans. In addition to the need to amend the Personnel Rules accordingly, there is a need to incorporate the new provision in the automated Applicant Tracking System. This one time contractual service cost is estimated at $4 thousand.

III. ANALYSIS (See Fiscal Note Preparation Instruction, Section III)
Section 12 of CS SB 913 (Jud) am provides for adoption of amendments to the Personnel Rules that concern public policy under the Administrative Procedures Act, and for amended Rules (including those not concerning public policy) to be published in the Alaska Administrative Register and Code. CS SB 193 (Jud) am makes several minor changes to the Personnel Act that will require amending the Personnel Rules. The major costs for FY 83 are:

1) contracting with the Department of Law for an attorney for four months to:

- rewrite the current Personnel Rules to AAC standards
- draft amendments incorporating changes in the Personnel Act

- modify amendments based on hearings
- file the amended rules with the Lt. Governor
- compile a Personnel Act – Personnel Rules cross-reference
- identify forms needing revision to reference the appropriate AAC provisions instead of the former rule
- Revise Administrative Manual and Operating Procedures to properly reference revised Personnel rules

($19.2 Thous.)

2) Personal Services to employ Regulations Specialist to revise existing procedures, manuals, forms and letters to properly cite revised Personnel rules. Position would be half-time after first year.

($42.2 Thous.)

3) travel and per diem for attorney and the Personnel Board for two hearings to adopt the rules and amendments as Code.

($2.8 Thous.)

4) public notice of the hearings and proposed amendments. ($ .6 Thous.)

5) typing of drafts, revision and filing version. ($2.0 Thous.)

6) printing of forms incorporating AAC references. ($1.0 Thous.)

In subsequent years, one two-day hearings by the Personnel Board to adopt amendments is budgeted. Travel is inflated 10% annually and public notice costs at 8%. Personal Services inflated at 7% per year.

Section 13 of CS SB 193 (Jud) am contains a significant change in the definition and preference accorded to veterans. In addition to the need to amend the Personnel Rules accordingly, there is a need to incorporate the new provision in the automated Applicant Tracking System. This one time contractual service cost is estimated at $4 thousand.

Section 16 of CS SB 193 (Jud) am duplicates AS 18.80 providing hearing and appeal rights to partially exempt and exempt employees of the Executive Branch for actions alledgedly in violation of the employees' Civil Rights. It is assumed that these employees will file appeals in the same proportion to their numbers as other executive branch employees file complaints under AS 18.80 for the same actions. Each will require a two day hearing before the Personnel Board. Travel and per diem costs for FY 83 are $4.8 thousand. They are inflated 10% annually. On this basis, four complaints per year are projected. Each complaint will require two days of Personnel Board business.

Dear Friend of the Opera:

This is the year of Juneau's Centennial, which all of us hope to make a special time. The Juneau Lyric Opera Association has set for itself an ambitious program which needs your help. We are producing Offenbach's comic opera, Orpheus in the Underworld, next month. Opening night is Thursday, April 17th, and the show will run through the weekend. Jane Stewart is the musical director and Marvin Borgmier is the dramatic director. Preparations are well under way and the performers have been rehearsing with Mrs. Stewart for several months. The production should be delightful!

The board of directors is also planning for the 1980 - 1981 opera session. The opening production will be Engelbert Humperdinck's Hansel and Gretel. Amahl and the Night Visitors, by Giacomo Menotti will follow during the Christmas season, and for the Spring production we have selected the lovely Mozart opera, Cosi Fan Tutte. These are all operas in which the talents and abilities of local Juneau singers can be drawn on to the best advantage.

The Juneau Lyric Opera Association was formed in 1975 with the purpose of producing both grand and lyric opera. Since its beginnings, we have presented one full scale production each year: Die Fledermaus, Kismet, Carmen, and, in 1979, Mozart in May which featured Mozart's one-act comic opera, The Impressario. Each of these productions presented Juneau performers in the orchestra, chorus, and in the operatic roles. Only in Carmen did professional lead singers participate.

In planning for this year and for next season, we are relying on the support of Juneau's people, both to perform in and to work on the productions, as well as to help with financial contributions. The production of Orpheus in the Underworld is supported by a grant from the Greater Juneau Arts and Humanities Council, and includes financial support from a grant from the Alaska State Council on the Arts, the City and Borough of Juneau, and the National Endowment for the Arts, a federal agency. This grant has enabled us to begin the work on the production. However, it will pay for only a portion of the production expenses, and direct support from the community is still essential to the success of the show.

Enclosed with this letter is our Membership and Contribution Form. May we ask for your tax deductible contribution? Help us to make opera an enjoyable part of Juneau's theater season.

Thank you for your generous support.

Sincerely,

George Rogers
President

Section 7. AS 39.25.110. EXEMPT SERVICE.

The bill was amended to include changes made to this statute during the First Session of the Legislature. In addition, the staff of the Governor's and Lieutenant Governor's offices are moved from the partially exempt to the exempt service except for those who are employees of councils, boards and commission. (See AS 39.25.110(20) and 39.25.-120(5).) Paragraph (7) continues to place correspondence teachers and teachers in skill centers in the exempt service.

Sections 11, 12 and 13. AS 39.25.140. AMENDMENT OF PERSONNEL RULES.

The amended bill requires additional public notice when there are proposed amendments to the Personnel Rules. The original bill required that amendments affecting matters of public policy be adopted in accordance with the Administrative Procedure Act, but this requirement has been deleted. The amended Rules are required to be published in the Administrative Code for informational purposes.

Section 14. AS 39.25.150. SCOPE OF THE RULES.

Paragraph (19) changes the language concerning the veterans' preference system, but does not change the basic structure of the system. Paragraph (24) adds language to provide for a transition period for employees whose positions are moved from the exempt or partially exempt service into the classified service. The transition period is intended to assist them in finding employment in the classified service.

Section 16. AS 39.25.160. GENERALLY.

Subsection (e) has language added to make clear that when a classified or partially exempt employee becomes a candidate for state or national office, his or her resignation is automatically effective on the date of filing a declaration of candidacy.

In addition to these changes the Legislature also deleted some recommendations of the Commission. Exempt and partially exempt employees will not have rights of appeal to the Personnel Board in cases of unlawful discrimination. The staff of the Division of Labor Relations is not placed in the partially exempt service. Those employees remain in the classified service.

CCS HB 697. LOCAL PREFERENCE

This bill in its original form would have eliminated most of the hiring system controls for nonpermanent positions lasting 120 days or less. The Conference Committee Substitute provides instead for a streamlined hiring process for nonpermanent and permanent seasonal positions when there are no local residents on the register. The hiring authority may select an individual from referrals made by the job service office of the Department of Labor serving the area.

RETIREMENT AND NEPOTISM LEGISLATION

The bills sponsored by the Commission to make changes in the retirement laws did not pass the Legislature, nor did SB 194, amending the nepotism laws.

RE: HCS CSSB 193 (Jud) - Amending State Personnel Laws

The Blue Ribbon Commission sponsored Senate Bill 193 as a comprehensive revision of the State Personnel Act. It makes changes in some personnel practices, clarifies some provisions of the Act and makes it consistent with the Public Employment Relations Act. The State Personnel Act was written in 1961 and has not been revised as a whole since that time.

Section 6. Amending AS 39.25.080. PUBLIC RECORDS.

This section sets out those personnel records which will be open to public inspection. All other personnel records will be kept confidential.

The current law provides that all records are public except those which the Personnel Rules make confidential. In fact, the amendment would not change the existing practice since those items listed are the only personnel records now open to the public.

Section 7. Amending AS 39.25.110. EXEMPT SERVICE.

This section adds statutory reference to employees of the Citizen's Advisory Commission on Federal Areas in Alaska (11)(G), petroleum engineers and petroleum geologists employed by the Oil and Gas Conservation Commission (14), employees of the state who reside in foreign countries (17), employees of the Alaska Seafood Marketing Institute (18), and firefighters employed by DNR for a fire emergency (19).

The House Committee Substitute adds paragraph (20) which changes employees of the Office of the Governor and the Lt. Governor from the partially exempt to the exempt service. Employees of councils, boards, or commissions established by statute in those offices are left in the partially exempt service.

Section 8. Amending AS 39.25.120. PARTIALLY EXEMPT SERVICE.

There was considerable debate about whether to place the employees of the Division of Labor Relations who are responsible for negotiating labor relations contracts into the partially exempt service. The current House Committee Substitute does not place them in the partially exempt service.

The Department of Administration recommended that these employees remain in the classified service to encourage career employees who would develop expertise in the area and to shield them from undue political pressure.

They are currently classified employees who are not members of any bargaining unit. At one time they were members of the Confidential Employees Association.

Line 25

Paragraph (5) provides that employees of councils, boards and commissions established in the Office of the Governor or the Lt. Governor are in the partially exempt service. This retains current law. Other employees of the Office of the Governor are moved into the exempt service by the amendment to AS 39.25.110(20) (page 4, line 28 above).

Section 11. Amending AS 39.25.140(c). AMENDMENT OF PERSONNEL RULES.

The House Committee Substitute retains the existing procedures for amendment of the Personnel Rules. It adds requirements in paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) for greater notification to the public and to those Alaskans who have expressed an interest in the subject.

The Blue Ribbon Commission heard testimony from individuals that existing procedures on notification of rule changes were inadequate. People who wished to raise issues about the effect of some proposals did not learn of the amendments before the Personnel Board until after they had been adopted.

Section 12. Amending AS 39.25.140(e). AMENDMENT OF PERSONNEL RULES.

This section changes existing law to provide that the Personnel Rules shall be published in the Alaska Administrative Code. Currently the law provides that they may be. Publication of the Rules will provide better notice to Alaskans concerned about state employment of the regulations governing that system.

Although collective bargaining has limited the application of the Rules to state employees they still remain effective in part for the state workforce. Any limits on their application could be indicated at the time of publication.

Section 13. Amending AS 39.25.140(e). AMENDMENT OF PERSONNEL RULES.

Two subsections are added. Subsection (f) is a safeguard in case someone who has requested notification of rule changes inadvertently is omitted from the mailing list.

Subsection (g) retains current law that amendments are effective 30 days after approved by the Personnel Board.

Line 16

Section 14. Amending AS 39.25.150. SCOPE OF THE RULES.

This section remains basically the same as the current law with the following exceptions:

(15) no longer sets a limit of 30 days to a period of disciplinary suspension.

Line 23

(16) adds a requirement that the Personnel Rules include procedures for resolving disputes from the general public.

Line 1

(19) sets out the provisions for veterans' preference in state employment in different form. The substance of the preference is basically unchanged. The definition of veteran is amended to require that an individual have served 181 days in active service instead of the present 90 days. This is in conformance with federal veterans' preference system. The definition of disabled veteran is also changed slightly. It no longer requires that an individual have a 10% service connected disability but instead specifies that the individual be entitled to compensation from the Veterans' Administration.

(22) provides that the Personnel Rules shall include procedures for programs which may be set up to facilitate the employment of disadvantaged persons. These programs may require some changes in usual personnel procedures.

Line 16

(24) adds a requirement that the Rules provide for assistance in finding work to partially exempt or exempt employees whose positions are moved into the classified service. Classified employees must pass examinations to be hired. Exempt and partially exempt employees do not have to meet these merit system standards and may be unable to qualify for the positions which they previously held.

Section 19. AS 39.25.192. EMPLOYEE POLITICAL RIGHTS.

The political rights listed here exist in current law, as part of AS 39.25.160.

Paragraph (7) is new language to put into statute existing law permitting state employees to make political contributions.

TO: Members of the House Judiciary Committee

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer TBC
Administrative Assistant, Blue Ribbon Commission

SUBJECT: Amendment to HCS CSSB 193(Jud)

House Judiciary has proposed deleting the portion of the bill amending the State Personnel Act which had provided that those Personnel Rules which addressed matters of public policy should be adopted in accordance with the Admininstrative Procedures Act. One of the major concerns of members of the Blue Ribbon Commission in proposing this procedure was to insure that people affected by those rule changes would be notified of the proposals and have an opportunity to make their comments known to the Personnel Board before any changes were made. Accordingly, I would suggest that if the Rules are not made subject to the Administrative Procedures Act, that additional notice requirements be added to the State Personnel Act. The provisions suggested below are taken from the notice requirements of the APA with some changes to reflect the particular situation of the Personnel Rules.

Insert a new section 11 before the present Section 11 (page 7, lines 22-26 in the May 10, 1982, work draft):

Section ___. AS 39.25.140(c) is repealed and reenacted to read:

(c) At least 30 days before the adoption, amendment, or repeal of a Personnel Rule, the secretary to the personnel board shall provide notice that the personnel board has the proposed action under consideration. The notice shall be

(1) posted in public buildings throughout the state;

(2) published in one or more newspapers of general circulation throughout the state;

(3) mailed to every person or group who has filed a request for notice of proposed action with the secretary to the personnel board;

(4) furnished to all incumbent State of Alaska legislators and the Legislative Affairs Agency.

Section ___. As 39.25.140 is amended by adding new subsections to read:

(d) The failure to mail notice to a person as provided in this section does not invalidate an action taken by the personnel board.

(e) The amendments have the effect of law 30 days after they are submitted to the personnel board. The board, if requested, may hold public hearings on the amendments.

Section ___. As 39.25.140(e) is renumbered and amended to read:

(f) The rules adopted under this chapter relate to the internal management of state agencies and their adoption is not subject to the Administrative Procedure Act. The rules shall [MAY] be published in the Alaska Administrative Register and Code for informational purposes.

TO: Representative Ramona L. Barnes

You have asked for an analysis of the changes made by the Judiciary Committee in the proposed Judiciary committee substitute for SB 193. The changes and the effect of the changes are as follows: (References are to the May 14, 1982 draft of the committee substitute)

1. In *Sec. 11, the proposed AS 39.25.140 has been deleted. This means that the comprehensive amendments to personnel rules adoption procedures that were passed by the Senate have been eliminated in favor of existing law on the subject. The Judiciary committee substitute changes AS 39.25.140(e) by making publication of personnel rules in the Alaska Administrative Register and Code mandatory instead of permissive.

2. In *Sec. 12, the proposed AS 39.25.150(3) has been changed to add language requiring open competitive examinations, when appropriate, in the employee selection process under the personnel rules. This change encourages the use of open competitive examinations in the state employee selection process without requiring them that they be used.

3. In *Sec. 12, the proposed AS 39.25.150(5) has been changed to add language to encourage the hiring of local residents. Since local hire provisions face constitutional difficulties the added language does not make local hire mandatory, instead providing for local hire "when appropriate".

4. In *Sec. 12, the proposed AS 39.25.150(22) deletes language that would allow personnel rules to provide for limitation of competition in state employment hiring decisions for disadvantaged persons. The deletion of this language does not mean that the personnel rules could not include a limited competition plan, but the legislative affirmation of such a plan has been removed.

5. In *Sec. 17, the proposed AS 39.25.192(3) has been changed by adding language to more clearly delineate what political conduct a state employee not engage in while engaged on official business of the state.

6. The proposed amendment to AS 39.25.170 has been deleted in the committee substitute, which means that the existing law regarding hearings and appeals upon dismissal, demotion or suspension of a state employee would continue to apply. The effect of this change would be to eliminate the expansion of employee hearing and appeal rights that is contemplated in the Senate passed version of the bill.

SUBJECT: Possible Amendment to HCS CSSB 193(Jud)

Since the House Judiciary Committee is considering deleting the section of SB 193 which provided that the Personnel Rules be adopted according to the APA, I thought it might be possible to propose language to them which would require that notice of any proposed Rule changes be widely published. I think that this was one of the major reasons why members of the Blue Ribbon Commission wanted the Rules to be adopted through the APA procedures. The language which I suggest below is taken from the notice requirements of the APA (AS 44.62.190), with changes to reflect the particular situation of the Personnel Rules. Honorable Bill Ray
Alaska State Senate
Pouch V
Juneau, Alaska 99811

Dear Senator Ray,

This letter is in response to your recent telephone call to Deputy Commissioner Fred Muller regarding the Administrative Procedure Act (APA) requirement in SB 193 (amendments to the State personnel laws).

Our difficulty with Section 12 of the bill, which requires that amendments to those personnel rules that involve matters of public policy be adopted in accordance with the APA, is a concern that while considerable resources would be consumed by this process other needed improvements to the personnel system could not be addressed.

With the increased desire of the legislature and ourselves to make the personnel system more responsive to the public, our direction has been to streamline the process making it faster and more accurate. We have been automating functions that historically have been very labor intensive. My direction has been to continue these efforts toward a more objective personnel system based on merit principles that is responsive to the needs of both state managers and the public.

Because less than 16 employees are wholly covered by the personnel rules, we are concerned about the efficient use of limited resources to follow a process that will have such limited impact. We do not dispute the idea that those people who want to know what the rules are should have greater access to them. To accomplish this we have proposed an interim compromise where the rules would be formatted and published in the Alaska Administrative Register and Code. This would address the need for public access, and allow us to continue making the system more timely and responsive.

You have asked Fred Muller to review those rules and procedures, that due to their nature, are internal and should be excluded in law from the APA. He did consult with the Attorney General's office on your request. Assistant Attorney General Art Peterson has prepared a memo on this subject which I have enclosed with this letter. In summary, Mr. Peterson concludes that based on the language of the bill, the intent of the drafters (the Blue Ribbon Commission), and the intermingling of related concepts throughout the personnel rules, there are no rules that can stand alone.

SB 193, with the few changes that have been made, is a good bill and a tribute to you and the Commission. We have, and will continue to work positively and professionally with you in the best interests of the State. If the bill is to become a reality this session we need your help. All we ask is that you give us the opportunity to see if the public's need is satisfied by publishing the rules in the register and code. We invite the Commission to review and scrutinize our efforts during this period. If this doesn't work, we will join with the Blue Ribbon Commission in further addressing this critical issue.

Respectfully,

SUBJECT: Handling of personnel rules under various versions of SB 193

Questions

On your behalf, Deputy Commissioner Fred Muller orally requested, today, this department's comments concerning:

1. the interpretation of proposed AS 39.25.140(c), in CSSB 193 (Jud) am, the Senate-passed version, and HCS CSSB 193 (SA), the latest House version; that statute would provide that personnel-rule amendments concerning matters of "public policy" would have to be adopted under the Administrative Procedure Act (APA);

2. interpretation of a variation on that idea, which would require personnel-rule amendments on certain statutorily specified subjects to be adopted under the APA;

3. interpretation of a proposal to require publication of the personnel rules in the Alaska Administrative Code (AAC), but not to require that their adoption or amendment be handled under the APA.

Under the wording of the Senate-passed bill and the latest House version, identified above, two kinds of problems immediately arise: (1) Does the language really intend to distinguish between all of the current personnel rules plus adoption of new ones, on the one hand, and amendments to the rules, on the other hand? Would a new rule adopted in its entirety after the effective date of this Act be considered an amendment for the purposes of this provision? (2) What does the term "public policy" mean, and which of the personnel rules would fall within that term? Related to this first problem is subsection (h) of proposed AS 39.25.140, which requires "the amended rules" to be published in the Alaska Administrative Register and Code for informational purposes.

It makes little sense to have the current personnel rules published as they are now while having any amendments to them published in the AAC following the APA procedures. Such a split-publication approach would be confusing to the public as well as to the employees covered by those rules and the people charged with administering those rules. In addition, if a new rule is adopted, the confusion would be compounded by publishing it in only one or the other of the two possible places; yet duplication would be wasteful. This leads to the conclusion that all of the current personnel rules plus new rules plus amendments to both the current ones and the new ones should be published in the Alaska Administrative Code.

Having reached that conclusion, it would make little sense to adopt new rules without following the APA procedures, and to adopt "amendments" under the APA. The current rules could be placed in the AAC without going through the APA procedures, but even that would require a substantial effort to review them, put them in appropriate style and format, and weed out material that is not appropriate to the AAC. If all new personnel rules, and amendments to the current ones and the new ones, are to be adopted under the APA, one may question whether the delays necessitated by AS 44.62.060 (legal review and approval by attorney general), 44.62.180 (standard 30-day effective date), and 44.62.190 -- 44.62.210 (public notice and hearing) are worth the effort when so few people, considering the extent of coverage by collective bargaining agreements, are still covered by these general personnel rules.

The reference to "public policy" presents an interpretation question not too much different from that presented by the phrase "affects the public" in existing AS 44.62.640-(a)(2), the definition of "regulation". In applying both terms, our advice would be to err on the side of over-inclusion rather than under-inclusion. This is consistent with a long and growing line of supreme court decisions. Following the APA helps assure an opportunity for public involvement and eliminates an issue for potential litigation.

In the present context, it would be very difficult to distinguish between those personnel rules which "concern matters of public policy" and those which do not. In information furnished to this department by Director of Personnel Ken Kareen, the Blue Ribbon Commission on personnel matters has suggested nine subjects that are matters of public policy, but they specifically state that the list is not all-inclusive. For example, the list includes recruitment and examinations. But where does that leave the personnel rule on classification. This department would have to answer that question by saying that classification is so integrally related to recruitment and examinations that the "amendment" of the personnel rule on classification would indeed be covered by the APA. The interrelationship of the subjects covered by the various personnel rules is such that there would be virtually nothing that could be dealt with in isolation and declared simply to be a matter of "internal management" that the proposed AS 39.25.140(d) would exempt from the APA procedures.

The conclusion in the preceding paragraph pretty well suggests the answer to the second question posed by Deputy Commissioner Muller. If the statute were to attempt to enumerate certain personnel-rule subjects to be covered by the APA, your department would have to recognize that, although there might be a specific rule on examinations, for example, other rules containing provisions which affect examinations would have to be treated the same way as the rule which is primarily concerned with examinations. This interweaving of various related concepts throughout the personnel rules would make such a list difficult to write and difficult to administer. Again, erring on the side of including too much in the APA procedures would be the safest course. It is certainly the course least likely to inspire litigation.

In Keith Specking's May 5, 1982 letter to Representative Ramona Barnes, Chairwoman of the House Judiciary Committee, where the bill now resides, he proposed an amendment to existing AS 39.25.140(e), which would require (instead of merely authorize) the personnel rules to be published in the Alaska Administrative Register and Code for informational purposes. If the idea behind some of these proposals is to increase public awareness and opportunity to read the various personnel rules, perhaps requiring that they be published in the AAC would do the job. I do not know the motivation behind these various proposals, so I cannot comment in depth on the likely success of this proposal. Again, given the current limited applicability of these general personnel rules, one may ask whether the value of this publication of them would be worth the effort and expense.

Additional Comments

The proposed AS 39.25.140 presents some additional problems.

Subsection (d), with its reference to "internal management," appears to be distinguishing the provisions of that sort from those covered by subsection (c) regarding "public policy," somewhat similar to existing AS 44.62.640(a)(2). However, that distinction could be made clearer, and the exemption of these "internal management" provisions from the APA could be made clearer.

Subsection (e) refers to "the proposed amendments" without saying whether it is talking about the public policy ones or the internal management ones. Subsection (e), authorizing the personnel board to hold public hearings, would not make sense if applied to the public policy amendments, because, under subsection (c), they would already be covered by the mandatory hearing provisions of the APA.

Subsection (f) also uses the ambiguous "the proposed amendments," saying that the board may amend them. Does that mean that the board may amend them before they are adopted, which would seem to go without saying (especially under AS 44.62.210(a), with regard to the public policy ones), or after they are adopted, which would also seem to go without saying?

Subsection (g), also referring to "the proposed amendments," is similarly ambiguous. Is it the intent of its 45-day effective date provision to supersede AS 44.62.180, or does it only apply to the "internal management" regulations? This whole section (proposed AS 39.25.140) needs attention and should be rewritten.

SUBJECT: House Judiciary Action on SB 193

The House Judiciary Committee heard HCS CSSB 193(SA) yesterday afternoon. They asked that a workdraft be prepared with four amendments proposed by the Governor, three of which are contrary to Blue Ribbon Commission recommendations.

Amendment 1. Labor Relations Division Employees.

House Judiciary voted to delete paragraph (17) of AS 39.25.120. The paragraph adds the employees of the Labor Relations Division who are responsible for negotiating on behalf of the state to the partially exempt service. The effect of the Judiciary Committee amendment is to leave those employees in the classified service. Fred Muller advised the committee that he had spoken with Senator Ferguson who was initially in favor of placing them in the partially exempt service. According to Fred, Senator Ferguson now regrets having made the amendment on the Senate floor which added this paragraph.

A majority of the Blue Ribbon Commission had recommended that these employees be placed in the partially exempt service. There was not unanimity on the question. Those who favored the recommendation believed that these employees should be made more responsive to the policies of the Governor.

Amendment 2. Adopting the Personnel Rules according to the APA.

Line 1

House Judiciary voted to require only that the Personnel Rules be published in the Administrative Code. The amendment does not require that the Rules be adopted in accordance with the APA. Fred Muller testified that there would be a tremendous slow-down if the Rules had to be amended through APA procedures. It could require six to eight months to change procedures in the Division of Personnel. He suggested that publishing the Rules would let people know what was in them. He did not address the question I had raised of letting people have an opportunity to comment on changes which they believed inadvisable before the Rules were adopted.

Amendment 3. Local Hire.

Line 2

This amendment is the same as the one proposed for HB 697 (the nonpermanent bill) and the commission favors it. The House Judiciary Committee adopted it.

Amendment 4. Appeals to the Personnel Board in Cases of Unlawful Discrimination.

Line 20

The Committee voted to delete the entire section concerning appeals (Section 16) and leave the law as it is now, which limits appeals to classified employees. Fred pointed out that the Human Rights Commission already has jurisidiction over these cases and would probably be better able to process the cases than the Personnel Board. The Committee felt that it was unnecessary to have two avenues of appeal for partially exempt and exempt employees who are discriminated against. They apparently did not agree that it was desirable to have an in-house review mechanism.

The Honorable Ramona Barnes
Chairwoman, House Judiciary Committee

Dear Chairwoman Barnes:

HCS CS SB 193 (SA) is now before your committee. It is my understanding that amendments previously requested by the Governor were included by the House State Affairs Committee. It has also come to my attention that Commissioner Hudson had requested amendments which were not included. These amendments are fully supported by this office.

Please amend HCS CS SB 193 (SA) as follows:

opposed by majority of BRC

Amendment 1:

Change semi-colon to period so that line reads:

Offices Commission (;) .

Delete paragraph 17. (places LR negotiators in partially exempt service)

Amendment 2:

Delete existing section 12 and insert new section 12 to read:

Sec. 12 AS 39.25.140(e) is amended to read:

(e) The rules adopted under this chapter relate to the internal management of state agencies and their adoption is not subject to the Administrative Procedure Act. The rules (may) shall be published in the Alaska Administrative Register and Code for informational purposes.

Amendment 3:

Add language to paragraph 5 so that it reads:

(5) the procedure for certifying eligible candidates (;) including preference for local residents under appropriate circumstances ;

Amendment 4:

BEC did not intend to limit appeals presently ~~that~~ ~~does~~ does not preclude two

Change existing Section 16(c) to:

(c) An employee in the executive branch of state governments who has been dismissed, demoted, or suspended due to unlawful discrimination based on race, religion, color, or national origin, or because of age, handicap, sex, marital status, change in marital status, pregnancy, or parenthood may appeal the action to the State Commission for Human Rights or the personnel board.

The first requested amendment would result in Labor Relations working-level staff remaining in the classified service. Retaining this status maintains the integrity of the ongoing relationship between the State and labor organizations representing State employees, and provides a buffer from union applied political pressure on the professional staff. Retention of knowledge of the intricate workings of the State provides a continuity at the bargaining table that takes years to develop. The director of this division is already in the partially exempt service and is therefore subject to replacement at the discretion of those in higher authority.

Amendment two represents a compromise between present law and the current proposal. This amendment would command the publication of Personnel Rules in the Administrative Code thus providing greater public opportunity for review. It would also provide a period of time for the State to assess the impact of placing the Personnel Rules in the Administrative Code.

Amendment three is offered with the intent of providing more employment opportunities for rural residents.

Amendment four is also a compromise between the proposed act and current practice. This amendment would have the effect of legally assuring an administrative hearing for employees who believe they have been discriminated against but avoiding the costs of redundant administrative processes. The employee could exercise the choice of appealing the action through AS 18.80 with the Human Rights Commission or pursuing relief from the personnel board.

Thank you for your consideration of these amendments.

Sincerely,

Keith W. Specking

MEMORANDUM

April 30, 1982

TO: House Judiciary Committee

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer TBC
Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: HCS CSSB 193 (SA) Amending State Personnel Laws

The Blue Ribbon Commission sponsored Senate Bill 193 as a comprehensive revision of the State Personnel Act. It makes changes in some personnel practices, expands the protections granted to employees in the exempt and partially exempt services and makes the Act consistent with the Public Employment Relations Act.

Those sections of the bill which present significant changes are analyzed briefly below.

Lines 6-25

Section 6. Amending AS 39.25.080. PUBLIC RECORDS.

This section sets out those personnel records which will be open to public inspection. All other personnel records will be kept confidential.

The current law provides that all records are public except those which the Personnel Rules make confidential. In fact, the amendment would not change the existing practice since those items listed are the only personnel records now open to the public.

Line 27 ff.

Section 7. Amending AS 39.25.090. COVERAGE OF CHAPTER.

This amendment provides that the State Personnel Act applies to exempt positions as specifically provided. The Committee Substitute gives added rights of appeal to exempt employees of the executive branch in cases of unlawful discrimination. (See Section 16)

Section 8. Amending AS 39.25.110. EXEMPT SERVICE.

The House Committee Substitute adds paragraph (20) which changes employees of the Office of the Governor and the Lt. Governor from the partially exempt to the exempt service. Employees of councils, boards, or commissions established by statute in those offices are left in the partially exempt service.

In addition, this section does add statutory reference to employees of the Citizen's Advisory Commission on Federal Areas in Alaska (11)(G), petroleum engineers and petroleum geologists employed by the Oil and Gas Conservation Commission (14), employees of the state who reside in foreign countries (17), employees of the Alaska Seafood Marketing Institute (18), and firefighters employed by DNR for a fire emergency (19).

Line 7 ff

Page 7

Section 9. Amending AS 39.25.120. PARTIALLY EXEMPT SERVICE.

In paragraph (17) the bill adds those employees of the Division of Labor Relations who are responsible for negotiating labor contracts with state employee organizations to the partially exempt service. These employees are currently members of the classified service but do not belong to any bargaining unit and are not members of any union or employee association. At one time they were members of the Confidential Employees Association.

Line 1 ff

Section 12. Amending AS 39.25.140. AMENDMENT OF PERSONNEL RULES.

The Committee Substitute requires that those amendments to the Personnel Rules which are matters of public policy shall be adopted according to the Administrative Procedures Act. (Subsection (c), page 7, line 28) The current law entirely exempts the Personnel Rules from the APA.

For those rules which are not matters of public policy, the Committee Substitute maintains the current system of adoption, but adds that the Personnel Board may amend rules proposed to it (Subsection (f)). The Committee Substitute also requires that amended rules shall be published in the Administrative Code, (Subsection (h)).

Line 29 ff

Section 13. Amending AS 39.25.150. SCOPE OF THE RULES.

This section remains basically the same as the current law with the following exceptions.

(15) no longer sets a limit of 30 days to a period of disciplinary suspension.

Line 4

(16) adds a requirement that the Personnel Rules include procedures for resolving disputes from the general public.

Line 10

(19) sets out the provisions for veterans' preference in state employment in different form. The substance of the preference is basically unchanged. The definition of veteran is amended to require that an individual have served 181 days in active service instead of the present 90 days. This is in conformance with federal veterans' preference system. The definition of disabled veteran is also changed slightly. It no longer requires that an individual have a 10% service connected disability but instead specifies that the individual be entitled to compensation from the Veterans' Administration.

(22) provides that the Personnel Rules shall include procedures for programs which may be set up to facilitate the employment of disadvantaged persons and permits the procedures to limit competition for hiring for those programs.

(24) adds a requirement that the Rules provide for assistance in finding work to partially exempt or exempt employees whose positions are moved into the classified service. Classified employees must pass examinations to be hired. Exempt and partially exempt employees do not have to meet these merit system standards and may be unable to qualify for the positions which they previously held.

Page 13 Line 4 ff

Section 14. Amending AS 39.25.153. PERSONNEL OFFICERS.

Subsection (a) provides that all personnel officers shall be employees of the department in which they serve.

Subsection (b) amends the powers granted to the personnel officers listed in the statute. These powers have never been exercised. They are retained in limited form by the Committee Substitute.

Section 15. Amending AS 39.25.160. GENERALLY.

Most of this section remains unchanged. The following subsections have been amended.

Subsection (c) extends protection from being required to make a political contribution to all state employees. The current law protects only classified employees.

Subsection (e) adds a requirement that partially exempt employees resign from state employment when seeking political office. The subsection also clarifies when the employee's position becomes vacant.

Subsection (f) extends protection from unlawful discrimination to all state employees and applicants for state service. The current law is limited to members of the classified service.

Section 16. Amending AS 39.25.170. HEARINGS AND APPEALS UPON DISMISSAL, DEMOTION OR SUSPENSION.

This section changes the statutes to reflect caselaw and adds that employees in the executive branch of state government who have been unlawfully discriminated against may appeal to the Personnel Board. The current law limits the protection of the State Personnel Act and the scope of appeals to the Personnel Board to members of the classified service. (Subsection (c)).

The Committee Substitute provides in Subsection (i) that executive branch employees who the Personnel Board finds have been unlawfully discriminated against will be reinstated without loss of pay. This remedy is currently available only to classified employees. The Committee Substitute adds that the decision of the Personnel Board may be appealed to the Superior Court.

III. ANALYSIS (See Fiscal Note Preparation Instruction, Section III)
Section 12 of CS SB 193 (Jud) am provides for adoption of amendments to the Personnel Rules that concern public policy under the Administrative Procedures Act, and for amended Rules (including those not concerning public policy) to be published in the Alaska Administrative Register and Code. CS SB 193 (Jud) am makes several minor changes to the Personnel Act that will require amending the Personnel Rules. The major costs for FY 83 are:

1) contracting with the Department of Law for an attorney for four months to:

- rewrite the current Personnel Rules to AAC standards
- draft amendments incorporating changes in the Personnel Act

- modify amendments based on hearings
- file the amended rules with the Lt. Governor
- compile a Personnel Act - Personnel Rules cross-reference
- identify forms needing revision to reference the appropriate AAC provisions instead of the former rule
- Revise Administrative Manual and Operating Procedures to properly reference revised Personnel rules

($19.2 Thous.)

2) Personal Services to employ Regulations Specialist to revise existing procedures, manuals, forms and letters to properly cite revised Personnel rules. Position would be half-time after first year.

($42.2 Thous.)

3) travel and per diem for attorney and the Personnel Board for two hearings to adopt the rules and amendments as Code. ($2.8 Thous.)

4) public notice of the hearings and proposed amendments. ($ .6 Thous.)

5) typing of drafts, revision and filing version. ($2.0 Thous.)

6) printing of forms incorporating AAC references. ($1.0 Thous.)

In subsequent years, one two-day hearings by the Personnel Board to adopt amendments is budgeted. Travel is inflated 10% annually and public notice costs at 8%. Personal Services inflated at 7% per year.

Section 13 of CS SB 193 (Jud) am contains a significant change in the definition and preference accorded to veterans. In addition to the need to amend the Personnel Rules accordingly, there is a need to incorporate the new provision in the automated Applicant Tracking System. This one time contractual service cost is estimated at $4 thousand.

Section 16 of CS SB 193 (Jud) am duplicates AS 18.80 providing hearing and appeal rights to partially exempt and exempt employees of the Executive Branch for actions allegedly in violation of the employees' Civil Rights. It is assumed that these employees will file appeals in the same proportion to their numbers as other executive branch employees file complaints under AS 18.80 for the same actions. Each will require a two day hearing before the Personnel Board. Travel and per diem costs for FY 83 are $4.8 thousand. They are inflated 10% annually. On this basis, four complaints per year are projected. Each complaint will require two days of Personnel Board business.

Senate votes to change state personnel rules

By The Associated Press

The state Senate voted Wednesday to revamp the State Personnel Act, which is the set of rules governing the state work force.

One change made by the bill (CSSB193 Judiciary amS) deals with preference rights granted to veterans who apply for state jobs. To be granted preference, a veteran must have completed 181 in active service, rather than 90 days as is required under current, law. The change was made to conform with federal law.

Another change made in the bill was to place several sensitive positions — including certain petroleum geologists, firefighters employed in emergencies and employees of the Alaska Seafood Marketing Institute — in the "exempt service" category. That basically means the employees cannot belong to collective bargaining units and can be hired and fired at will.

Sen. Frank Ferguson, D-Kotzebue, successfully proposed an amendment on the Senate floor to include negotiators and other members of the state Division of Labor Relations in the partially exempt category, which means they also could not belong to state unions.

Ferguson argued that all collective bargaining agreements for state employees are negotiated by division officials. "So they're negotiating for themselves" under the present system, Ferguson said. He said such action constitutes a "conflict of interest."

The bill also defines which personnel records are public, and states that all other personnel records are to be confidential.

Section 16. Amending AS 39.25.170. HEARINGS AND APPEALS UPON DISMISSAL, DEMOTION OR SUSPENSION.

This section changes the statutes to reflect caselaw and adds that employees in the executive branch of state government who have been unlawfully discriminated against may appeal to the Personnel Board. The current law limits the protection of the State Personnel Act and the scope of appeals to the Personnel Board to members of the classified service. (Subsection (c)).

The Committee Substitute provides in Subsection (i) that executive branch employees who the Personnel Board finds have been unlawfully discriminated against will be reinstated without loss of pay. This remedy is currently available only to classified employees. The Committee Substitute adds that the decision of the Personnel Board may be appealed to the Superior Court.

TERRY CRAMER FOR COMMENT

MEMORANDUM State of Alaska

TO: W. R. Hudson, Commissioner
Department of Administration

DATE: March 3, 1982

FILE NO:

TELEPHONE NO: 465-4100

FROM: Ronald O. Skoog, Commissioner
Department of Fish and Game

SUBJECT: Amendments to 39.25.199

Your memo dated February 11, 1982, expressed concern about representatives of my Department testifying on CSSB 193 in contradiction to the recommendations of your Department. You realize, of course, that this is an area where our Departments disagree and, since we have not been able to resolve our differences, I believe it necessary to represent the concerns of Fish and Game .

You point out also that our testimony "...was done without notifying or coordinating your effort with this Department." I regret we did not do so, and I apologize for that lack. However, I wish to point out myself that your Department did not notify us of your recommendations nor attempt to coordinate your position with ours. Frankly, I would have expected you to do so, considering your role and responsibility in providing administrative services to the line Departments. This issue and the existing law has had considerable adverse impact on my Department, and I presume it has on other Departments as well. In that light, it seems logical to presume you would have negotiated a State position among the Departments concerned.

Our recent testimony is not the first time that we have brought forward concerns about non-permanent/seasonal hires. Russell H. Clark, our former Director of Administration, testified before House Resources on February 12, 1981, at their request. He also sent a letter to Senator Ray of the Blue Ribbon Commission on March 6, 1981, and one to Sandra Withers on March 24, 1981. The memo to Ms. Withers specifically requested that Labor Relations negotiate a letter of understanding with APEA to allow more flexibility in hiring 120-day-or-less non-permanents. APEA was in agreement with this action. As far as I can determine, no action was taken. I also have been told informally that APEA is still willing to make the necessary changes. You and I and our respective Deputies discussed the problem several months ago. It was brought up by Representative Fuller at the last Blue Ribbon Commission meeting.

Beverly Reaume, our current Director of Administration, brought up the problem at a meeting of the Directors of Administration "subcommittee on personnel" and your staff in December 1981. During the past year we have offered many suggestions ranging from minor changes to exemption of some provisions for employees working less than 120 days ("short-term" hires). Unfortunately, each time we are told that we are guilty of poor planning and that we are not making a good faith effort to abide by the law.

I have to disagree strongly on both counts--we have made adequate plans and we have made a good faith effort to hire under the system. We now have spent two field seasons under the system and what we are telling you is that "Yes, we can hire according to the existing law but the product is not worth the cost." We are faced with ever increasing demands from the public and fewer dollars to meet those demands. It is intolerable to me to spend these scarce resources on recruiting short-term employees. Furthermore, the public has made it very clear that they are tired of bureaucratic red tape, of which the current system is a prime example.

Let me respond specifically to the five recommendations contained in your February 11, 1982, memorandum.

First: You suggest we use non-permanent employees instead of permanent seasonals for less-than-120-days positions.

Fish and Game decided to establish these short-term positions as permanent seasonals based on two premises:

1. AS 39.25.195(c)(3) states the criteria to be used for establishing non-permanent positions.

> "The hiring department or agency has certified that an immediate need exists and the director determines that the hiring department or agency could not reasonably have been expected to anticipate and met through the creation of a permanent position;...."

Fish and Game determined that its needs not only could be anticipated but also that these positions do occur each year and, therefore, we were obligated to establish "permanent seasonals" to comply with the law.

2. Furthermore, the red tape and possible civil penalties inherent in hiring non-permanents makes that option extremely unattractive.

Second: You suggest centralized recruiting as a means for achieving greater efficiency and for resolving the problem of competition between Divisions.

1. We have suggested to your Director of Personnel that the Department be given a master list of each classification used for short-term employment on a periodic basis. This list then could be worked for openings anticipated during that period and all hires made from that copy. Although Mr. Kareen has expressed support for centralized working of registers, he thus far has insisted on a separate register for each PCN. We can use responses from some previous register but we must contact all the additions to each new register, as well as discard potential candidates among responses from previous registers because they have been removed from the register for one reason or the other. There still remains a gray area for people who failed to respond the first time, but are still on the register. Failure to respond runs about 80% when working most of the registers for short-time positions. Sometimes the candidates do not receive our letter until after the response date so they do not bother to respond. A good many of these not only may be available but desirable for the job. In other words, we need some modifications in procedural requirements on your part before greater centralization on our part is worthwhile.

2. Our short-term jobs are found predominantly in the following classifications: Fish and Game Technician II, III, IV; Fish Culturist I, II, III; and Fishery Biologist I. It is not at all unusual to find the same person on all seven registers. Just because someone is not interested in a Fish and Game Technician I job does not relieve us of having to contact him for a Fish and Game Technician III position, so we end up contacting the same person several times as various positions are to be filled.

3. Competition for the same people is due partly to the same person being on multiple registers. I do not believe we can say to a person that has just accepted a Fish Culturist I job that he is now not eligible for consideration as a Fish Culturist II. Likewise, we cannot tell a person that once he has accepted a one-month job that he is not eligible for consideration for a three-month job, nor that once he has accepted a job in Juneau he cannot consider an opening in Ketchikan, which might be his home. It is such factors as these that cause "competition" within the Department and defy resolution.

Third: You presented several suggestions for solving the "local hire" problem.

1. Local hire is indeed a problem under the current regulations. Many of our potential local hires are from the Fish Culturist I and Fish and Game Technician I, II, and III registers. Each of these registers contains 400-600 names of people who say they will work anywhere in the State. The ability to reach a given person in a local area by working the register in a legitimate manner--i.e., top five or five by five--is pure chance and good fortune. These classifications require little more than a warm body, a willing mind, and some paid work experience of any kind to get on the register. I have to believe you were misled by your personnel people to suggest seriously that we use "potential safety in the field" as a selection criterion. How do you measure that in an open recruitment effort? And where is it proven that a local resident will be safer in the field? The only realistic way to obtain local hire while using a register is to allow appointment without regard to placement on the register--a suggestion that we have made numerous times.

2. There is still a continuing problem with getting local residents, particularly minorities, onto registers. On this point your Personnel Division recently agreed to open registers for continuing recruitment, provided turnaround on application examination is no more than three weeks. We agree that this time-frame is workable.

Fourth: You suggested that your Department would be willing to assume the selection responsibility for short-term hires.

I am sure that I need not tell you that I am no more willing to allow your Department to serve as a placement bureau for my personnel than you would be to allow Fish and Game to select your personnel.

Fifth: You suggested training to my managers in "recruitment and selection."

Believe me, my managers have had much long experience and are quite capable in recruitment and selection. The problem is getting people on registers, and would be resolved by open recruitment.

There are other questions raised during our recent testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee, and on other occasions, that I believe appropriate to mention:

1. Both amendments proposed by Senator Rodey and Representative Bylsma would leave intact the requirement that persons hired meet the minimum qualifications of the classification. Fish and Game has never proposed otherwise.

2. It has been pointed out rather frequently that Fish and Game seems to be the only Department with a problem. Could be! You must keep in mind, however, that Fish and Game has 800 or more seasonal positions which are filled sometime during the April to October period each year. These are located throughout the State. It is not at all surprising that Fish and Game has problems with the present system and gets attention on the subject.

3. Then there is the "no-win situation" that we have been placed in. In a letter dated February 6, 1981, to the Governor, Senator Ray in referring to Fish and Game said that > "In the past these positions (seasonals) were classified as temporary positions and filled primarily by local residents. With the implementation of the non-permanent law, the Department reclassified these jobs as permanent seasonals and filled them through hiring from a list of eligibles.

Unfortunately, this meant that many experienced local residents were not hired for the past season, either because they had not applied in time to be considered for placement on the register or because, when their applications were evaluated, they failed to place within the top five interested eligible candidates."

During our recent testimony, Senator Ray responded that one of the reasons the non-permanent hire law was enacted was because Fish and Game hired college students and sent them to rural areas rather then hire local residents. You tell me, which one we are guilty of? I do know that now we are far more likely to have to hire the college student simply because he ranks high on the register. Our preference has been and remains to hire the local resident wherever possible.

This memorandum is already far longer than I intended but, as you might surmise, it is a subject of considerable importance to the Department. It becomes all the more significant as we face possible budget reductions. Bill, in all fairness I believe we have brought our problem to your Department on a number of occasions. We have not received the help we need, and our problem remains. Thus, we have little alternative but to seek help elsewhere. The interest in the Legislature has been brought about partly by us, partly by legislators' constituents complaining about the system.

I have enclosed for your information a copy of our testimony presented to the Senate Judiciary Committee and the House Labor and Commerce Committee on their request in response to amendments to the law, and to the House Finance Committee in response to their request. I support the pertinent changes proposed in Senate Bill 193 and House Bill 697, and I believe they will be beneficial to other agencies as well as to the public.

MEMORANDUM

February 18, 1982

TO: Senator Bill Ray, Chairman

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer
Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: Fish and Game Seasonal Positions

I met with Beverly Reaume, Director of Administration for Fish and Game, and with Mary Jablonski, Special Assistant to the Commissioner, to discuss problems they identified in testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee. Fish and Game is seeking changes in the nonpermanent law for positions which last less than 120 days. As a result of making these short-term appointments permanent seasonal, the department believes that it pays excessive amounts in benefits and also believes that having to hire from the registers causes excessive expense and delay without providing any benefit.

A. Classification of Positions as Permanent Seasonal

The department believes that these positions must be classified as permanent seasonal under the nonpermanent law adopted in 1979. They believe that the definition of a program or project (as not a regular and continuing function of a department or agency and as having a probable date of termination) forbids the classification of these positions as nonpermanent positions. They point out that the work is regular and continuing in that they do it every year and expect to continue to do so into the forseeable future. So far as I could tell, they had not considered using AS 39.25.195(c)(1) which states that a nonpermanent position can be authorized when the legislature has appropriated money for the work in question knowing that it is to be performed by a nonpermanent employee. I would expect that the department could make sufficiently accurate forecasts of its staffing needs to permit presenting the legislature with the request for authorization of nonpermanent employees for these positions during the regular budget process.

The department could either request that the positions be established as regular nonpermanent appointments or that they be established as project nonpermanents, should the situation justify that classification. If the positions were regular nonpermanent positions, then they would be limited to 120 days duration. If they were found to warrant classification as project or program positions, then the length of employment would be determined by the expected length of the project or program involved. The department has stated that its concerns are for positions which last less than 120 days, so the time limit should not raise a difficulty for them.

Apparently what the department believes would work for them is a system like the one developed in HB 697, which sets up a category on nonpermanent employees who would be exempt from all the requirements of the nonpermanent law except for the limit that employment last no longer than 120 days. The committee substitute proposed by the House Labor and Commerce Committee adds a prohibition against appointing the same employee to two consecutive special nonpermanent positions. The proposed amendment to the State Personnel Act places no restrictions on the commissioners of each department in the management of the system they set up except for the 120-day limit. They only have to make an initial determination that compliance with the nonpermanent law is too costly or is adverse to local hire. They are free to set minimum qualifications for the positions by departmental regulation, to evaluate applicants and to hire without regard to the relative qualifications of those applicants.

B. Cost of Benefits.

The department states that most of the positions which last less than 120 days are not career appointments. They do not usually find that individuals return year after year to the same job. Therefore, the department does not believe that it is appropriate to provide the kinds of career benefits which are part of the permanent seasonal package. The cost of providing for retirement, leave, and health insurance is excessive. The department would not have to provide them if the positions were reclassed as nonpermanent, whether or not the law were amended.

C. Problems With Working the Registers.

This is a major problem area identified by the department. As Ms. Reaume testified to the Senate Judiciary Committee, they have found working the registers extremely cumbersome, costly and fraught with delays. Recently she and Ms. Jablonski met with the Director of the Division of Personnel, and did arrange for two changes which they believe will address some of their concerns. The following is a list of their difficulties with the registers together with a discussion of each of the items raised.

(1) The registers have too many names of people who are not really interested in the particular vacant positions Fish and Game has.

Some of the registers frequently used for these positions have 400 or more names on them. The department says that in some cases it is necessary to contact each of those listed in order to end up with one person who will actually accept the position. In order to limit the number of new applications for these registers, the Division of Personnel has closed these job classes. The department believes that if the classes are kept open, many of the applicants who are not really interested in that kind of employment will not apply. They apply now because they have only one short period in which the state will accept applications.

At its own request the department has been delegated authority to evaluate applications in these job classes. According to Mr. Kareen, they are about 3-1/2 months behind. He has agreed that when the department catches up with the evaluations, the job classes will remain open. The department hopes that then the number of applications will be reduced.

I do not know whether keeping the registers open will reduce the number of marginally interested applicants. Presumably the department has the expertise to evaluate the likelihood of success of this arrangement.

If the department's preferred hiring system were in place, then it would not matter how many applicants were on the register since the hiring authorities would not have to use one.

(2) Multiple Contacts to One Individual

The department has said that they have to contact the same individual many times during their peak hiring season. They fill a large number of positions in the same job class and must contact the people on the top of the list about each vacancy. This has resulted in one college student complaining to them that he received and had to reply to over 100 communications about job openings.

In the meeting between the department and Mr. Kareen, they agreed that for these positions, the department would receive one register for each job class and could hire all the vacancies in that job class from that single list for the whole month. This means that the department can coordinate its hiring notices to applicants for that period of time. This should reduce the burden on the department and also the obligations on the applicants to respond to an excessive number of job notices.

(3) Cost of Recruiting.

The department indicates that it spent $14,000 in long distance telephone calls and telegrams when it recruited for the 175 nonpermanent positions in 1980. In 1981 the cost was $28,000. These costs should be substantially reduced if the department was able to plan enough time to communicate with applicants by letter instead. The Personnel Rules require that an individual be given five working days to respond to a telegram, 10 calendar days to respond to a written inquiry when the applicant lives in Alaska, and 14 calendar days when the applicant lives outside Alaska. PR 4 04.3. It would appear that by planning three or four additional weeks in advance, the department should be able to conduct the bulk of its recruiting effort by mail rather than by the more expensive telegraph and telephone methods presently used.

(4) Unreliability of Advance Commitments to Work.

The department's experience has been that for many of these very short jobs, people are not reliable about showing up for work if they accept the job too far in advance. This means that the department cannot make job offers in April or early May and count on having employees coming to work in June or later. In some instances at least, the problem has been that two divisions within the department have received commitments from the same individual.

With the new system of having the register be valid for an entire month, it may be possible for the department to record those who have accepted positions already and then to delete their names from consideration of subsequent job offers in that classification. This could reduce the number of "no-shows" which the department has experienced and enable them to make their staffing decisions earlier while still using the register system.

(5) Local Hire.

The department has said that it is difficult to persuade local people to apply for positions with the state, especially when the registers are only open for a short period of time. As discussed in Number (1) above, the registers will remain open once the department has reduced the backlog of job applications which are not yet evaluated. In addition, the department and the Division of Personnel could work together to recruit individuals from the areas where Fish and Game has vacancies, so that local individuals do appear on the registers.

The department still believes that it would be difficult to reach the local person when the registers are so full. Even using the five-plus-five certification system, they say that there are likely to be minority group members who fall with the top five minority persons but who are not local to the area in which the vacancy occurs.

One solution would be for the department to offer to pay transportation only from the nearest community of any size to the actual job site. In many cases now, the department pays transportation from Anchorage or Fairbanks out to the community and then out to the salmon stream of whatever. These short-term jobs would be much less appealing to individuals not from the area if they were responsible for paying the cost of transportation to, for example, Unalaska, and then work for a short time and have to pay for their own return air fare. The problem is to insure there are local individuals on the registers.

D. Possible changes to the Nonpermanent Law

If the kinds of suggestions made above are not sufficient to resolve the difficulties of the department, it would be possible to make some changes in the nonpermanent hiring system without losing all controls. The following is one suggestion of how that might be done.

(1) The department may waive hiring from the register for nonpermanent positions only if the following are established:

a. The department has presented proposed recruiting and selection procedures to the Division of Personnel and to the Division of EEO and each division has approved them.

b. The positions which the department proposes to fill without hiring from the register have been approved by the Division of Personnel. The Director of Personnel shall consider the practicability of filling the positions from the register, the need of the department for speed in the selection process, and the effect on the state's merit system and commitment to equal employment opportunity.

c. The hiring process shall be conducted from the community job site. (By this I don't mean the salmon stream or whatever, but the nearest community of reasonable size -- I don't know how to define it.)

d. Each individual must meet the minimum qualifications for the job class.

e. The department may not pay transportation costs for any individual hired under this system to the community job site. It may pay transportation from the community job site to the actual job location.

f. The department shall report to the Director of the Division of Personnel and the Director of EEO on all positions filled under this system. The report shall include:

(i) actual recruiting and selection procedures used,

(ii) duration of work of each employee,

(iii) EEO profile of workforce selected, and

(iv) statement of qualifications for each individual selected.

This system would leave the department subject to all of the nonpermanent regulations except hiring from the register. It should be noted that at the Constitutional Convention, the debate about setting up the merit system included a statement by Mr. Sundborg, one of the most vocal supporters of the constitutional provision in which he said on page 2888:

> Every merit system, including the United States Civil Service, is set up so as to have certain exceptions from it. . . . There are usually exceptions for those who work by the day, for those who have only temporary employment.

In the discussion, Mr. Ralph Rivers pointed out that the language proposed left to the legislature the directive to spell out the details, and that the legislature could decide to leave temporary employees outside the controls of the merit system if it wished to do so. Therefore, it would appear to be within the intent of the constitutional convention that temporary employees could be exempted from the merit system.

This leaves a policy question of whether it is advisable to do so. The nonpermanent law addressed the problems in the temporary hiring system and any system which changes that should make an effort to insure that those problems do not return. Before the nonpermanent law was passed, temporary employees were supposed to be hired from the registers when practicable. Many were not.

In this proposal, the department would still be required to plan for the positions it wished to exempt from the register requirement. There would be oversight from the Division of Personnel, and the limitations on payment of travel expenses might be sufficient to restrict the operation of hiring your buddy or your aunt's cousin. Individuals hired would be required to meet the minimum qualifications of the position, although this might be difficult to effectively review and enforce. However, since the Division of Personnel and the Division of EEO have oversight and approval powers, if there were any substantial abuse of the system, then presumably there would not be a second approval for the department in subsequent seasons.

This proposal does not address the effect of the collective bargaining agreement which presently applies to these employees.

MEMORANDUM

February 9, 1982

TO: Senator Bill Ray, Chairman

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer
Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: Department of Administration's Recommended Changes to CSSB 193(SA)

The Department of Administration has proposed a number of changes to CSSB 193(SA). Many fall within the area of clarification or insuring consistency and appear to me to be noncontroversial. Others would make a substantive change to the bill sponsored by the Commission. I have quoted each of the changes below, followed by the department's reasoning, and then discussed its effect on the bill.

Line 29

Recommendation: Delete exempt and Department reason: The rules pertain only to classified and partially exempt employees. By definition, exempt employees are excluded from personnel rules.

Discussion: The State Personnel Act and the Personnel Rules do currently pertain only to partially exempt and classified employees. However, changes proposed in SB 193 would extend certain provisions to include exempt service employees, notably by giving them appeal rights from acts of unlawful discrimination. The department proposes that these changes be deleted from the bill.

Lines 9-13

Recommendation: Substitute for clarification and renumber

(2) justices, magistrates, judges and employees of the judicial branch including the Judicial Council.

Department reason: None given

Discussion: The change proposed would combine two paragraphs of AS 39.25.110 for clarification purposes. The existing paragraph (2) lists separately the judges and justices of those courts which are established by the State Constitution as well as those which are established by statute. I don't suppose that this is a necessary distinction to make in this context.

Lines 23-25

Recommendation: Substitute (8) certificated teachers employed by the Department of Education as classroom teachers;

Department reason: Correspondence teachers do not teach in classroom setting. They function as any classified employee.

Discussion: Correspondence teachers are presently members of the exempt service. The Commission, in its initial work on the State Personnel Act, inadvertently deleted them from the exempt service. The State Affairs Committee Substitute placed them back in, largely, I believe, at the request of the correspondence teachers themselves. They are currently negotiating as a separate bargaining unit with the State under the Public Employment Relations Act. While the correspondence teachers work in an office in the State Office Building and do not have classroom responsibilities, they do serve as teachers in another sense. The Commission has not directly considered the merits of removing them from the exempt service.

Line 29

Recommendation: Delete ...the legislature, or a legislative committee

Department reason: Legislative employees by definition AS 39.25.110(4) are exempt.

Discussion: The department is correct and this language can be removed without changing the substance of the law.

Line 12

Recommendation: Delete [paragraph (12)]

Department reason: Legislative employees by definition are exempt.

Discussion: The department is correct. Since the Ombudsman and his staff are legislative employees, they are placed in the exempt service by AS 39.25.110(4). If they need to be addressed separately, paragraph (4) could be amended to include specific reference to the Ombudsman's office.

Lines 16-17

Recommendation: Delete: division of mental health and developmental disabilities, Department of Health and Social Services Department reason: All licensed physicians employed by the State should be exempt not just those working for mental health.

Discussion: The Commission has not discussed this proposed change. It would extend the exempt service to include all licensed physicians employed by the state. It is my understanding that the state placed mental health physicians in the exempt service in order to offer salaries in excess of the regular pay plan. It was not possible to find satisfactory candidates to work as physicians in the mental health field within the limit of the pay plan.

Line 30

Recommendation: Add section
(22?) emergency firefighters employed by the Department of Natural Resources whose employment is limited to a fire emergency.

Department reason: Current and past use of firefighters warrants placing them into exempt status.

Discussion: The Blue Ribbon Commission did not consider this issue but it appears to make sense. In case of a fire emergency, the department cannot take the time to prepare paperwork for nonpermanent positions and the emergency may last longer than the 30 days to which an emergency appointment is limited.

Recommendation: Delete: except as provided in AS 39.-25.170.

Department reason: Partially exempt employees should not have the same rights as classified employees. Sufficient protection is provided under current anti-discrimination laws.

Discussion: The issue raised by this recommendation is whether state employees in the partially exempt service should have an in-house appeal to the Personnel Board or whether that entity should deal exclusively with classified state employees. This issue is addressed in the discussion following the department's recommended changes to AS 39.25.170, page 14, line 14 through page 15, line 27.

Line 1

Recommendation: Delete [paragraph (7)]

Department reason: This position is currently held by the Director, Division of Forestry who is partially exempt.

Discussion: This change was not discussed by the Commission, but it appears to be a noncontroversial clean-up of the Act.

Line 27

Recommendation: Delete [paragraph (15)]

Department reason: This position has been reclassified to a Director status and is partially exempt.

Discussion: At the time that the Commission was drafting SB 193, the reclassification of the Chief of Subsistence had not been completed. Therefore, the Commission did not consider this change. It appears to be noncontroversial.

Recommendation: Delete and substitute existing language of AS 39.25.140(c)-(e).

Department reason: In addition to the fact that current law excludes personnel rules from being subject to the Administrative Procedures Act (APA) if the new language becomes law, it will remove the protection and flexibility so that almost every change instituted by the Division of Personnel, whether a new test, recruiting effort, the awarding of preference points for veterans et al, would fall under lengthy public scrutiny through APA. This will cause increasing and lengthy delays in placing applicants on registers and reduce flexibility to make the system better.

Discussion: The language of CSSB 193 provides that amendments to the Personnel Rules which concern matters of public policy would be adopted in accordance with the Administrative Procedure Act. The department indicates that the change would require new tests, recruiting efforts and the awarding of preference points for veterans to be subject to adoption through the APA. This appears to be a misunderstanding of the APA. Only in those instances in which the proposed change required amendment of a Personnel Rule concerning matters of public policy would hearings under the APA be required. But in those instances, the public would have an opportunity to comment to the Personnel Board before it acted on the question. This should not affect the time it would take to place applicants on registers, so far as I can see.

Recommendation: Delete the word "position" ...necessary position specifications....

Department reason: Specifications for classes are general. Each position in a class could have a different description.

Discussion: This appears to be a reasonable recommendation.

Lines 18-19

Recommendation: Delete [paragraph (12)]

Department reason: By longstanding practice this is accomplished by the State Administrative Manual, Section 7642-7684. Additionally, it only covers approximately 14 positions.

Discussion: This appears to be a reasonable recommendation. The 14 positions covered are those which are in the classified service but not within an existing bargaining unit. Members of bargaining units who transfer at the request of the state are reimbursed in accordance with union contract provisions.

and
Lines 1-3

Recommendation: Delete [paragraph (20)]: Replace with Blue Ribbon recommendation as contained in original SB 193.

Department reason: This will reduce confusion and provide a better vehicle for veteran hire.

Discussion: The Senate Judiciary Committee discussed this paragraph at its last meeting and addressed the substance of the department's recommendation in the amendments it agreed upon. One change made by the State Affairs Committee Substitute which was not addressed occurs in the definition of "veteran". The original version of SB 193 and also the State Personnel Act define a veteran as a person who has served for 90 days. The Senate State Affairs Committee Substitute increased that to 181 days.

Recommendation: Delete existing [paragraph (25)] substitute

The establishment of transition periods of up to 12 months for an employee to be reappointed to a classified position which his position is withdrawn from the partially exempt or exempt service and placed in the classified service.

Department reason: The bill language provides guarantees that far exceed any current rules, statutes, or collective bargaining agreements and it is unlimited by time.

Discussion: Paragraph (25) was added by the Senate State Affairs Committee. The Blue Ribbon Commission considered the issue but did not recommend any changes to the present law, which provides no direct protections to employees whose jobs are withdrawn from the partially exempt or exempt service and placed in the classified service. The problem is that positions in the partially exempt and exempt services do not have to be filled by using merit system standards. Individuals selected do not have to meet minimum qualifications for the positions nor does the hiring authority have to select from the five highest ranking available eligibles on registers. The language proposed by the Department of Administration appears to be a compromise between the proposal of the State Affairs Committee and the existing situation.

Recommendation: Change "the" to "departments" so that ... applicants on [THE] department eligible lists.

Department reason: This section deals with departmental personnel officers who do not test and place applicants onto a statewide list.

Discussion: The proposed change appears consistent with the Blue Ribbon Commission's recommendation concerning this section.

Lines 26-27

Recommendation: Delete - (... or an exempt employee in a position named in AS 39.25.110(3)) ....

Department reason: Separation of powers.

Discussion: The people who would be removed from the scope of this section, which limits partisan political activity by state employees, are employees of the Judicial Council. Since they are part of the judicial branch, the separation of powers doctrine could be held to preclude the executive branch from interfering in personnel policies for them.

Recommendation: Add - In the absence of a resignation, the appointing authority shall accept written evidence of candidacy as a resignation.

Department reason: An employee may not immediately inform his supervisor regarding nomination or candidacy for a state or national elective office. In the absence of a formal resignation, the employer should be able to effect a resignation.

Discussion: This recommendation would make running for state or national elective political office a self-executing resignation from employment in the classified or partially exempt service. It does not appear to change the intent of the language in the bill.

Department reason: This section deals with classified employees only not employees of the legislative and judicial branches.

Page 14 Line 15 — Recommendation: Add "...applicant for classified state service...."

Department reason: This section deals with classified employees only not employees of the legislative and judicial branches.

Page 15 Lines 6, 12 and 27 — Recommendation: An employee in the classified service...

Department reason: This section deals with classified employees only not employees of the legislative and judicial branches.

Discussion: The Blue Ribbon Commission proposed amendments to the State Personnel Act which would extend to partially exempt and exempt employees the right to appeal to the Personnel Board in cases of unlawful discrimination which affected their employment status. The changes which the department recommends would limit those appeal rights to classified state employees, as is the law now. The department gives as its reason that the section should deal only with classified employees and not those of the judicial or legislative branches. However, by limiting appeal rights to classified state employees, the department's recommendations would also preclude employees of the executive branch who are members of the exempt or partially exempt service from appealing. If the separation of powers doctrine makes it unwise to provide judicial, University of Alaska, and legislative branch employees an opportunity to bring cases before the Personnel Board, there still remains the issue of whether partially exempt and exempt executive branch employees should have that right. As the department noted earlier, all state employees are covered by the state's human rights' provisions which provide protection from employment discrimination.

Recommendation: Delete "by the employee" ... superior court.

Department reason: The decision of the board should be appealable by both the employer and the employee.

Discussion: The Senate State Affairs Committee added the language which the department proposes to change. The existing law does not provide for appeals by either party to the Superior Court. If the action complained of was due to discrimination or was in violation of the State Personnel Act or the Personnel Rules, then the Board has the power to order remedies on behalf of the employee. The Blue Ribbon Commission's bill retained the Board's powers as does the State Affairs Committee Substitute.

The existing law and the Blue Ribbon Commission's bill provide that in all other cases, the Board shall report its finding and recommendations to both parties. The State Affairs Committee added language to provide that in those instances, the employee can appeal the decision of the Personnel Board to the Superior Court. It is not clear to me what an employee would gain by such an appeal, since the Personnel Board has no power to provide for remedies in those cases.

Line 29

Recommendation: Reword - express political opinions, provided that while engaged on official business, an employee may not display or distribute partisan political material in any form or manner.

Department reason: None given.

Discussion: The existing language permits a state employee to express political opinions. The department recommends language to make clear that an employee may not exercise that right while conducting state business. The section applies to all state employees, whether in the classified, partially exempt or exempt service. As worded, the recommendation would forbid any state employee even from wearing a campaign button while on the job. The Blue Ribbon Commission did not discuss whether the Act should address any limitation of political expression or how far such a limitation should go.

Recommendation: Delete sections 20 and 21

Department reason: Exempt and partially exempt employees do not compete for their positions. Their knowledge, skills, abilities and salary range could differ considerably from their corresponding class and range in this classified service.

Discussion: The Senate State Affairs Committee added these two sections which provide that the employees of the Commercial Fisheries Limited Entry Commission and of the Postsecondary Education Commission be placed in the classified service. The Blue Ribbon Commission discussed this issue but did not recommend making any changes. The Senate Judiciary Committee has recommended deleting these two sections.

Page 18 Line 29 — Recommendation: Effective date should be changed to July 1, 1982.

Discussion: This makes sense.

MEMORANDUM

January 27, 1982

TO: Members of the Senate Judiciary Committee

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer
Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: CSSB 193(SA) Amending the State Personnel Act

The Blue Ribbon Commission sponsored SB 193 to make a comprehensive revision of the State Personnel Act, to change personnel practices, to expand protections granted employees in the exempt and partially exempt services, and to make the Act consistent with the Public Employment Relations Act. Last session, Senate State Affairs considered and amended the bill.

The State Personnel Act establishes the state personnel system and implements the constitutional requirement that the merit principle govern employment of persons by the state. Article XII, Section 6. Some of its provisions are superseded by provisions of collective bargaining agreements between the state and employee organizations. It provides the entire personnel system for the 19 or 20 classified service employees who are not members of a bargaining unit and for all partially exempt employees to the extent it applies to them.

The major changes proposed in CSSB 193(SA) are discussed briefly below. I have noted also some of the amendments made by the State Affairs Committee.

Section 6: AS 39.25.080. PUBLIC RECORDS.

Line 6

The amendment lists those parts of the personnel records which are to be considered public records and is consistent with the current Personnel Rules. The law presently says that all records except those which the Rules require to be held confidential are open to public inspection.

Section 12: AS 39.25.140. AMENDMENT OF PERSONNEL RULES.

Line 25

Subsection (c) of this section changes current law to require that those Personnel Rules which concern matters of public policy be adopted in accordance with the Administration Procedure Act. (Page 8, line 3) Subsection (f) empowers the Personnel Board to amend the Rules presented to it. (Page 8, line 17)

Section 13: AS 39.25.150. SCOPE OF THE RULES.

Page 11 Line 1 — Paragraph (17) adds new language to provide that the Personnel Rules shall include procedures for resolving grievances of the general public concerning the operation of the state personnel system. Grievances might arise from the state application and testing process or the selection process. There is presently no system in place for addressing these grievances, although they are handled on an informal basis by the Division of Personnel.

Page 11 Line 7 — Paragraph (20) addresses veterans' preference. The original bill did not change the substance of the existing preference system. The State Affairs Committee adopted amendments which do change the existing system.

Page 12 Line 18 — Paragraph (23) adds new language to provide that rules be adopted permitting the state to establish programs facilitating the employment of disadvantaged persons. These might include CETA programs and the Senior Community Service Employment Program (SCSEP).

Page 12 Line 24 — The State Affairs Committee Substitute adds paragraph (25) which would guarantee that an employee's salary would not be reduced if his position were moved from the partially exempt or exempt service and placed into the classified service.

Section 14: AS 39.25.153. PERSONNEL OFFICERS.

Page 13 Line 1 — Subsection (a) provides that if a department has a personnel officer, he or she shall be an employee of the department rather than of the Division of Personnel. This keeps in force the current practice. As employees of the department, personnel officers are better able to maintain an effective working relationship with the staff of the department they serve.

Subsection (b) limits powers now given certain personnel officers to amend the Personnel Rules when dealing with employees in job classes unique to that department.

Section 15 AS 39.25.160. GENERALLY.

Line 25

Subsection (c) extends the protection from being required to make contributions to a political party to all state employees. (Page 14, line 5). Only members of the classified service now have that protection.

Subsection (e) adds a requirement that members of the partially exempt service resign from state employment when seeking political office. (Page 14, line 10)

Subsection (f) extends protection from unlawful discrimination to all state employees. It applies now only to members of the classified service. (Page 14, line 14)

Section 16: AS 39.25.170. HEARINGS AND APPEALS UPON DISMISSAL, DEMOTION, OR SUSPENSION.

Subsections (c) and (i) provide that employees who have been unlawfully discriminated against may appeal to the Personnel Board, whether or not they are members of the classified service. This implements the expanded protection granted in Section 15, which amends AS 39.25.160(f). Other paragraphs of Section 16 codify current case law.

Appeals by employees in the classified service who are members of bargaining units will be governed by the labor agreement in force rather than by the State Personnel Act, so this section applies to partially exempt employees and to those classified employees who are not members of a union.

Section 20: AS 14.40.913(a).

Line 8

The Committee Substitute amends the Postsecondary Education Commission statutes to provide that all of its employees except the executive officer will be members of the classified service. They are presently members of the exempt service.

Section 21: AS 16.43.080(a).

Line 22

The Committee Substitute amends the Alaska Commercial Fisheries Limited Entry Commission statutes to place all employees except the executive officer into the classified service. They are presently members of the exempt service.

Section 23: EFFECTIVE DATE.

Line 29

The effective date proposed in the bill is now out-of-date and should be amended to July 1, 1982.

May 19, 1981

TO: Members of the Blue Ribbon Commission

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer
Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: Analysis of CSSB 193 (SA)

TITLE

Line 6

The Committee Substitute amends the title because it adds sections 20 and 21 which amend personnel laws not found in the State Personnel Act.

Line 6

Section 8: AS 39.25.110. EXEMPT SERVICE

Lines 23/25

The Committee Substitute adds a paragraph placing correspondence teachers and teachers in skill centers operated by the Department of Education back in the exempt service. The remaining paragraphs are renumbered.

SB: Pg 4

CSSB: Pg 4
Lines 3 & 10
and Pg 18
Line 22

The Committee Substitute removes the Alaska Commercial Fisheries Entry Commission from the list of boards whose staff are all members of the exempt service. It adds paragraph (14) which places the executive officer of the Limited Entry Commission in the exempt service. The Committee Substitute also adds Section 21 which amends the Limited Entry Commission statutes to specify that employees of the commission except the executive officer are in the classified service.

SB: Pg 4

CSSB: Pg 4
Line 28

The Committee Substitute adds paragraph (21) which places the officers and employees of the state who reside in foreign countries in the exempt service.

Section 9: AS 39.25.120. PARTIALLY EXEMPT SERVICE

SB: Pg 7
Line 3

CSSB: Pg 7
Line 7

The Committee Substitute deletes paragraph (19) of the Senate Bill, which places the staff of the Division of Labor Relations responsible for representing the state in collective bargaining negotiations in the partially exempt service. These employees would therefore remain in the classified service.

Section 12: AS 39.25.140. AMENDMENT OF PERSONNEL RULES

SB: Pg 8
Line 2 to Pg 9
Line 5

CSSB: Pg 8
Lines 3-22

The Committee Substitute amends the Senate Bill by deleting subsection (f) which defined "matters of public policy". It also reorganizes the remaining subsections, so that subsection (c) of the Committee Substitute requires that if the proposed amendments concern matters of public policy, they are subject to the APA. The Senate Bill placed this provision in subsection (d). The Committee Substitute does grant the Personnel Board the power to amend the rules and provides that the amended rules shall be published in the Administrative Code for informational purposes.

Section 13: AS 39.25.150. SCOPE OF THE RULES

Line 4

CSSB: Pg 9
Line 21

The Committee Substitute deletes the word "efficiently" from paragraph (3) which requires that employee selection methods test the capacity and fitness of the person examined.

The Committee Substitute amends the veterans preference paragraph to require that the veteran may only use the points once, at a time to be selected by the veteran. This is a change from the existing system (which the Senate Bill retained) which permits the points to be added to all of the job classes a veteran applies for until he is hired by the state. At that time the points are removed from his scores. The Committee Substitute retains the requirement that the preference may not be used within the area of promotion.

The Committee Substitute also amends the definitions of "veteran" and "disabled veterans".

CSSB: Pg 12 Line 24

The Committee Substitute adds paragraph (25) to guarantee partially exempt or exempt employees a similar job class assignment if their positions are moved to the classifed service. The Committee Substitute renumbers the remaining paragraph.

Section 15. AS 39.25.160. GENERALLY

CSSB: Pg 14 Line 18

The Committee Substitute adds to subsection (f) prohibitions against discrimination based on the following reasons: marital status, change in marital status, pregnancy, parenthood, or other reason not related to merit.

Section 16. AS 39.25.160. HEARINGS AND APPEALS

CSSB: Pg 15 Line 13

The Committee Substitute makes the same changes to the protected classes in AS 39.25.170(c) as it did to AS 39.25.160(f) in section 15 above.

SB: Pg 16 Line 7
CSSB: Pg 16 Line 6

The Committee Substitute amends subsection (h) to make clear that in a hearing before the Personnel Board an employee has the right to confront and cross-examine witnesses. The Committee Substitute retains the provision that technical rules of evidence do not apply to the hearing, but adds language requiring that all testimony shall be taken under oath.

SB: Pg 16 Line 10
CSSB: Pg 16 Line 10

In subsection (i) the Committee Substitute repeats the additions to protected classes which are found in Section 15, AS 39.25.160(f), and Section 16, AS 39.25.170(c).

Section 20. AS 14.40.913(a)

CSSB: Pg 18 Line 8

The Committee Substitute adds this section to the Senate Bill. It amends the Postsecondary Education Commission statutes by providing that all of the commission's employees except the executive officer are members of the classified service. Those employees are presently placed in the exempt service.

Section 21. AS 16.43.080(a)

CSSB: Pg 18 Line 22

The Committee Substitute also adds this section to the Senate Bill. It amends the Alaska Commercial Fisheries Limited Entry Commission statutes to place only the executive officer of the commission in the exempt service. All of the other employees of the commission are moved from the exempt service to the classified service.

RE: Proposed CS for Senate Bill 193

Adopted 5/19/81 moved bill out w/ new recs

Proposed Amendment:

In section 39.25.140 at page 8, line 3 of the proposed CS insert subsection (d) of Sec. 39.25.140 of the original SB 193 found at page 8 lines 6 through 8. This subsection to become subsection (c) in the proposed CS to read:

> (c) If the proposed amendments concern matters of public policy, the personnel board shall adopt them in accordance with the Administrative Procedure Act (AS 44.62).

The present subsection (c) at page 8 line 3 of proposed CS should become subsection (d) and read:

> (d) If the proposed amendments relate only to internal management of the state agencies [when the proposed amendments are submitted to the personnel board,] the commissioner of administration shall post notice in public buildings throughout the state that the personnel board has the proposed amendments under consideration. The notice required by this subsection shall be posted at least 30 days before any decision is made to amend the personnel rules and shall include an address for the receipt of written comments.

Subsections (d), (e), (f) and (g) should be respectively relettered as subsections (e), (f), (g) and (h).

BASIS

As drafted, Sec. 34.25.140 of the proposed CS presumes that amendment of personnel rules is a matter of concern only to state employees and management. In fact, many procedures, such as recruitment, examination, selection methods and eligible lists directly impact members of the general public. It is safe to say there are as many people who would like to be state employees as those who are. We receive many complaints concerning state hiring practices. The Administrative Procedures Act is the established vehicle for insuring participation by members of the general public.

SUBJECT: Work Draft for CSSB 193 (SA) -- Amending the State Personnel Act

I have received a work draft for the Senate State Affairs Committee Substitute to SB 193. The changes from the bill are noted below, with references given to both the Senate Bill as introduced by the Blue Ribbon Commission (SB) and to the work draft (CSSB). There is a hearing scheduled on the bill on Tuesday, May 12th, at 1:30 p.m. in the Behrends Building.

AS 39.25.110. EXEMPT SERVICE.

Line 23

The committee substitute returns correspondence teachers and teachers in skill centers in the Department of Education to the exempt service. They were inadvertently deleted from the exempt service when the commission removed language in the State Personnel Act which placed teachers in schools operated by the state in the exempt service. The personnel office in the Department of Education had advised me that there were no longer any such employees. They overlooked correspondence teachers and skill center teachers in making that statement.

Because the committee substitute adds this new paragraph, the remaining paragraphs are renumbered.

SB: Pg 4

CSSB: Pg 4
Line 28

The committee substitute adds a new paragraph placing "officers and employees of the state who reside in foreign countries" in the exempt service.

AS 39.25.120. PARTIALLY EXEMPT SERVICE.

CSSB: Pg 7 Line 7

The committee substitute deletes language proposed in the bill which would have placed the employees in the Division of Labor Relations who are responsible for representing the state in negotiations with unions in the partially exempt service.

AS 39.25.140. AMENDMENT OF PERSONNEL RULES.

SB: Pgs. 8-9 Line 6
CSSB: Pg 9 Line 6

The committee substitute deletes the provisions of SB 193 which would have made Personnel Rules which concern matters of public policy as defined in the bill subject to the Administrative Procedures Act. It also retains the deletion of language in the statute which describes the rules as matters of internal management and exempts them entirely from the APA. It would therefore appear that the rules are made subject to the APA and that only those rules which fall within the APA definition of internal management of state agencies would be exempt from the hearing process of the APA rule-making.

There is language which might suggest a contrary interpretation to the committee substitute. It provides that the amended rules shall be published in the Administrative Code for informational purposes. This retains language from the statute but suggests a conflict with the APA, since regulations which are adopted under the APA are required to be filed with the Lt. Governor who publishes them in the Code. (AS 44.62.040 and 44.62.130)

The committee substitute retains language proposed in SB 193 which gives the Personnel Board the power to amend proposed rules and which provides that the Board may appoint a hearing officer to conduct hearings on rule changes.

AS 39.25.150. SCOPE OF THE RULES.

CSSB: Pg 9 Line 18

The committee substitute deletes the word "efficiently" from the language of paragraph (3). Testimony at the hearing on the bill suggested that it would be hard to create a system to measure whether an employee could be expected to efficiently discharge the duties of a job.

SB: Pg 11
Line 19

CSSB: Pg 11
Line 4

The committee substitute redrafts language on veterans preference. It provides that the additional points awarded to a veteran may be used only once, at a time selected by the veteran. The present system permits the points to be added to all of the applications for job classes a veteran has applied for before he is employed by the state. The limitation against a veteran using his or her preference points to secure a promotion is retained. The committee substitute also adds that the paragraph may not be interpreted to amend terms of a collective bargaining agreement.

The committee substitute amends the definition of veteran and disabled veteran.

Line 2

CSSB: Pg 12
Line 21

The committee substitute adds a new paragraph to provide for rules to guarantee a partially exempt or exempt employee whose job is placed in the classified service an opportunity for work in the same or similar job class.

AS 39.25.160. GENERALLY.

Line 21

CSSB: Pg 14
Line 14

The committee substitute adds prohibitions against job action based on marital status, change in marital status, pregnancy, parenthood or other reasons not related to merit to the protected classes listed in the Senate Bill.

AS 39.25.170. HEARINGS AND APPEALS UPON DISMISSAL, DEMOTION, OR SUSPENSION.

SB: Pg 15

CSSB: Pg 15
Line 14

The committee substitute adds the same protected classes listed in AS 39.25.160 into AS 39.25.170(c).

SB: Pg 16
Line 7

In paragraph (h) the committee substitute adds reference to an employee's right to confront and cross-examine witnesses and specifies that all testimony shall be taken under oath.

CSSB: Pg 16
Line 7

In paragraph (i) the committee substitute repeats the same additions to protected classes. In addition, it specifies that the Personnel Board shall report its findings and recommendations in writing within 30 days of a hearing. It also adds language to provide that the employee may appeal the decision of the Personnel Board to the superior court.

Enclosure

SB 193
4/9/81
mp

465-2200

April 6, 1981

Ms. Nancy Groszek
Administrative Assistant
Senate State Affairs Committee
Alaska State Legislature
Pouch V
Juneau, Alaska 99811

Dear Ms. Groszek:

Re: SB 193

This is to reiterate the concerns expressed by Bruce Cummings, Director of Personnel, before the Senate State Affairs Committee on March 31, regarding SB 193.

The Department of Administration is particularly concerned with the amendments to AS 39.25.140 proposed in Section 12 of the bill, which would require that certain amendments to the Personnel Rules are subject to the Administrative Procedure Act (AS 44.62). It is our opinion that the enactment of this proposal would simply limit the flexibility we now have to modify the Rules - while at the same time increasing the cost of their administration - without providing any substantive benefits to the State, its citizens, or its employees.

As you may be aware, the Legislature determined at the time of Statehood that the Personnel Rules "relate to the internal management of State agencies and their adoption is not subject to the Administrative Procedure Act." [AS 39.25.190(c)] We believe that this was a proper acknowledgement that the Division of Personnel exists only to provide services to other State agencies -as opposed to being a direct public service agency - and that the procedural rules for the management of the State's work force are properly an internal matter.

To exempt the Personnel Rules from the requirements of AS 44.62 does not suggest that the substance of the Rules is of no interest to the public. Indeed, existing statutes require that notice of proposed amendments be posted in public buildings throughout the State, that a thirty day waiting period elapse, and that the Personnel Board may hold hearings upon request [AS 39.25.140(c)]. These provisions insure that there is at least an opportunity for public input.

However, as a result of the enactment of collective bargaining for State employees in 1972, even the existing provisions for public comment are largely meaningless. To now require a costly procedure which would ostensibly provide for greater public comment is only to deceive the public; comments received as the result of amendments via the Administrative Procedure Act would have little or no substantive effect on the rules governing State employment.

The matters defined as "public policy" in the proposed subsection (f) for AS 39.25.140 are now matters on which the State negotiates with public employee organizations under AS 23.40. The agreements we reach supercede the Personnel Rules, and their terms vary among bargaining units. For example:

1. We recruit for classifications in some bargaining units, but in others we do not;

2. Hours of work vary between bargaining units;

3. We examine for positions in some bargaining units, but in others we do not;

4. Some bargaining units provide for merit increases, but others do not;

5. "Prohibitions and penalties" vary among bargaining units; and,

6. Hearing and appeal procedures differ between bargaining units.

In recent years, amendments to the Personnel Rules have become an after-the-fact reflection of employment conditions pevailing for most classified employees. Where the Rules differ from the terms of a collective bargaining agreement, the agreement prevails.

At this time, there are only thirteen out of State employees whose terms and conditions of employment are wholly subject to the Personnel Rules and AS 39.25 (three are in the Division of Personnel, and ten are in the Division of Labor Relations). These are classified employees who are not presently covered by a collective bargaining agreement. While we must continue to maintain Personnel Rules for this handful of employees, we do not believe that public interest is sufficient to subject those Rules to the Administrative Procedures Act.

Further, the proposed amendment to AS 39.25.140 may work to impair the collective bargaining process. AS 23.40.250(7) currently provides:

> " 'terms and conditions of employment' means the hours of employment, the compensation and fringe benefits, and the employer's personnel policies affecting the working conditions of the employees; but does not mean the general policies describing the function and purposes of a public employer."

It would appear that the proposed changes in AS 39.25.140 would conflict with AS 23.40.250(7) and thereby make those matters of "public policy" not subject to collective bargaining.

It was suggested in Committee hearing that this apparent conflict may be resolved by amending SB 193 to expressly provide that the Rules which would be subject to the Administrative Procedure Act are not matters of "public policy" for purposes of AS 23.40. Should this occur, we remain with the paradox of soliciting public comment on issues which have already been determined across the bargaining table.

Attached is a copy of our bill analysis of SB 193. We respectfully request that the changes recommended in Section 5 of the analysis be made. Should the Senate State Affairs Committee decide not to adopt these recommendations, we ask that they do adopt the attached fiscal note.

On another subject within SB 193, we recommend that Section 8 of the bill be expanded by adding the following:

> (19) Officers and employees of the State employed in positions in foreign countries.

Presently, these positions are in the partially exempt service. The Director of Personnel is required by AS 39.27.020(c) to establish equitable pay differentials for these positions, to be derived from the basic salary schedule provided in AS 39.27.011. To do so in an equitable manner is virtually impossible. There are several factors affecting the actual cost-of-living in foreign countries which cannot be adequately addressed in formulating a standard salary schedule. This reality is acknowledged by federal and private employers in that they do not tie overseas salaries directly to standard pay schedules. Placing these positions (there are currently only two) in the exempt service would enable the State to set compensation on a formula analagous to that used by the federal government.

Thank you for the opportunity to comment on SB 193. Should you desire additional information, please do not hesitate to ask.

Respectfully,

W. R. Hudson
Commissioner

Re: Veterans' Preference for State Employment (SB 193, SB 104)

I would like to begin first with an acknowledgement to Sen. Bradley, because I know that his hard work in this area has been done in good faith and out of a sincere concern for the welfare of those men and women who made personal sacrifices for the sake of our country's safety.

I also want to point out that I personally grew up in the military. My father, godfather, and father-in-law were all career officers in the armed services, and my husband and brother were both active in the military during the Vietnam war. I had planned at one time to make the Navy a career. I also wnat to point out that the new Alaska division president of A.A.U.W. is herself a vetran.

A.A.U.W. feels that we must bring to the attention of the legislature that while the goals of preference are legitimate, and while the current state statute may not have been enacted for the purpose of discriminating against women, the exclusionary impact upon women is so severe as to require the state to further its goals through a more limited form of preference.

Looking at the current law as too broad, please consider who is covered: a person with a minimum of 90 (181 is a change currently being proposed) days active service serving during World War I, World War II, and Vietnam or Korea who has been honorably discharged. According to the Veterans' Preference Act of 1944, such preference was designed to reward veterans for the sacrifice of military service, to ease the transition from military to civilian life, to encourage patriotic service, and to attract loyal and well disciplined people to civil service occupations. In terms of the last reason, it should be pointed out that preference itself has little if any relevance to actual job performance. The first two reasons for preference seem the most pertinent to Alaska - reward for sacrifice and ease of transition into civilian life. Both reasons are valid, but as lifetime preferences, they are subject to the objection that they give the veteran more than a square deal. Certainly, upon returning to civilian status, a veteran should have access to his or her job, and perhaps for 5 years or so after returning, preference could be given as reward and help for veterans, but there should be some sort of limit on the length of time one can reap rewards for what can be a brief and unhazardous term of service.

Because the extent to which the status of veteran is one that few women have been permitted to achieve, every hiring preference for veterans, however modest or extreme, must admit inherent gender-bias, and therefore legislated preference must be considered with due caution and careful consideration. The 5 points for veterans and 10 points for disabled veterans comes directly from the 1944 Federal Veterans' Preference Act. These points are added to a veteran's score after other writen tests are administered. In Alaska where mere hundreths of a single point can separate job applicants, the system is overly weighted, especially when compared with other handicapped, disadvantaged or suspect classes of people.

Conceding that the goal here is to benefit the veteran, there is no reason to absolve the legislature from awareness that the means chosen to achieve this goal reserves a major sector of public employment to an already established class, which, as a matter of historical fact, is already 80% male in catagories other than the clerical and para-professional jobs. The current point system and lifetime preference, only compounds and contributes to sex bias in all levels of state employment.

Women have been overtly excluded from the military, and not just by tradition and culture. During WW I for example "a variety of proposals were made to enlist women for work in the Army as doctors, telephone operators, and clerks, but all were rejected by the War Dept." Navy women did achieve military rank and status during this time, and were the first women to do so. While the Army Nurse Corps was the first official military unit for women, they were not granted full military rank until 1944 - forty-three years later. During the Second World War several temporary women's units were formed including WAAC (Women's Army Auxiliary Corps), WAVES (Women Accepted for Voluntary Emergency Service), and WASP (Women Airforce Pilots). These women, however, were in fact civilians and had no regular military status, and thus no veteran status. In fact, although the WASP personnel were filling some of the most hazardous of flying jobs, that of towing targets for air gunnery practice, and testing planes fresh out of repair depots, they were denied commissions based on the fact that "the authority of the act of September 1941, to make temporary appointments as officers in the U.S. Army 'from among qualified persons' refers to and contemplates men exclusively, and may not be regarded as authority for commissioning women as officers...." These women finally won their hard earned veterans' status in September 1976, but other women who had been active in the war have not.

Women's services were finally established on a permanent basis in 1948, however quotas were placed on the numbers that could enlist. Women were not to exceed 2% of the total enlisted strength, their eligibility requirements were more stringent than were those for men, and career opportunities were also limited. In addition women were involuntarily removed from service for pregnancy, parenthood, and even marriage. These strictures have carried on into the '60's and '70's. Not until 1967 was the 2% quota lifted, and the many restrictive policies concerning women's participation in the military were not modified or eliminated until the 1970's. Amazingly, or perhaps not so, once the barriers were down women joined in large numbers.

In just three years from 1973-1975 the percentage of enlisted women in the military had doubled.

There are two ways to ameliorate the effects of the veterans' preference on women and minorities. One is to modify the point system and to place a time limit on prefential access to jobs. The other solution is to look to expanding what is considered by the word veteran, and thereby include in this law others who have served their country every bit as well and as patriotically as have those on "military active duty". Other states include language that recognizes nurses and other women who were discharged and so served in any "corps or unit of the United States established for the purpose of enabling women to serve with, or as auxiliary to, the armed forces of the United States..." Language should also recognize those who underwent severe hardship because of the war. In WW II both the Aleut Americans and the Japanese Americans were uprooted and forced into relocation camps. We have never rewarded their sacrifices with jobs or appeasements of any sort. In expanding the concept of who is a veteran, we need also to look at the men and women who served in civil defense jobs, with the American Red Cross, the Civil air patrol, as war correspondants, and in the merchant marine (who incidentally were in the same waters as navy destroyers and also under attack, but receive no reward in terms of their patriotism, personal sacrifice and danger).

Looking again at the contributions of women to the war effort, we are but slightly aware of the sacrifices and contributions of over 2 million World War II women who took the places of the absent men working in the American war industries: in shipyards, aircraft plants, ammunition plants. The call to "inlist" in the factories was every bit as organized and strong as for men in the armed forces. Concern about dangerous working conditions and long hours took a back seat to America's call to keep up the production to supply the war with weapons, and ammunition. For the short-handed women in the farm communities, the call was to get out the crops to feed the troops. If personal sacrifice, patriotism and danger is a standard for preference, then these women deserve veterans' status every bit as much as the service veterans. One amazing statistic of which you may be unaware is that during the war period "more deaths occurred from industrial accidents than from combat." Where was and is their reward? For their commitment and patriotism, they received not preferred lifetime access to civil service jobs, but firings. No one helped them with their transition back into "civilian" jobs. For many minority women who were even then the major financial support for their families, this transition meant leaving highly skilled, well paying jobs to go back to the dead end drudgery and poverty wages of domestic work.

It is interesting to note that the Federal Veterans' Preference Act of 1944 included in its preference the wives of disabled service personnel and the unmarried widows of deceased ex-service personnel. We tend to look at patriotic service and personal sacrifice as being a military male perogative, but I feel we need to look hard at the patriotism and sacrifice of the service personnel spouses who held the country and family together as essentially single parents, frequently having to hold down another job to support their families because the salary range for enlisted personnel in the military is so low that those families qualify for government assistance. Vietnam vets, in addition, currently have the highest divorce rate of any class of Americans. a rate that is generally high among all military personnel. This means, for example, that those women who held families together during the father's service, and who now must have full time employment to support themselves and their children (of whom women still usually have custody), who traditionally are not educated for well paying jobs, and who have traditionally been denied many levels of employment advancement, now in addition find that the men to whom they gave support are receiving preferential treatment in the jobs the women need to support their families.

As you can see, equitable expansion of the term veteran would be a formitable legislative task, but should be attempted so that families of veterans and those who served alongside veterans can be recognized. As it now stands, the Alaska statute exacts a substantial price from a group of individuals who have long been subject to employment discrimination, and who, because of circumstances totally beyond their control, have had little if any chance of becoming members of the preferred class. Admitting that any hiring preference for veterans does at this time have a severe impact on the public employment opportunities of women, we nevertheless recognize the sacrifice and hardship of military veterans must not be ignored. Through workable modifications in the law, we can strive together to discover solutions that recognize the needs, sacrifices, and contributions of both the military veteran groups and the groups of minorities and women which are so impacted by historical discrimination.

MEMORANDUM

March 31, 1981

TO: Members of the Senate State Affairs Committee

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer
Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: SB 193 - Amending the State Personnel Act

Senate Bill 193 makes a comprehensive revision of the State Personnel Act, to change personnel practices, to expand the protections granted employees in the exempt and partially exempt services, and to make the Act consistent with the Public Employment Relations Act. The major changes made in the bill are noted below:

Section 6. Amending AS 39.25.080. PUBLIC RECORDS.

This section amends the current law to provide that only those personnel records listed are available for public inspection. In fact, the materials listed are those which are presently made available under existing law for public inspection. The law now states that except for those materials made confidential by the Personnel Rules, state personnel records are public.

Section 8. Amending AS 39.25.110. EXEMPT SERVICE.

The bill deletes the material in the existing paragraph (8) which states that "certificated teachers employed by the state to teach in schools operated by the state" are in the exempt service. After being advised by the Personnel Office of the Department of Education that there were no employees of schools operated by the state, the commission deleted the paragraph. In fact, there are employees considered to fall within this group. They are employed as correspondence study teachers in Juneau and in the Alaska Skills Center in Seward. The commission has not had an opportunity to consider whether it wishes to change its initial action of deleting paragraph (8).

Section 9. Amending AS 39.25.120. PARTIALLY EXEMPT SERVICE.

Paragraph (19) of this section of the bill adds a group of employees to the partially exempt service who are presently members of the classified service but do not participate in collective bargaining. These are the employees of the Division of Labor Relations within the Department of Administration who are responsible for representing the state in collective bargaining. The majority of the commission recommends that these employees be placed in the partially exempt service in order to insure that they are directly responsive to the policies of the administration.

Section 12. Amending AS 39.25.140. AMENDMENT OF PERSONNEL RULES.

The bill proposes that those Personnel Rules which fall within areas of concern to the public be required to be adopted in accordance with the Administrative Procedures Act to insure an opportunity for public comment. All of the Personnel Rules are presently exempt from the requirements of the APA.

Section 13. Amending AS 39.25.150. SCOPE OF THE RULES.

Paragraph (16) of the bill no longer sets a limit of 30 days for disciplinary suspension.

Paragraph (17) of the bill provides that the Personnel Rules shall include procedures for resolving disputes from the general public.

Paragraph (23) of the bill is added to permit the adoption of Rules relating to special employment programs for the disadvantaged.

Section 14. Amending AS 39.25.153. PERSONNEL OFFICERS.

Subsection (a) provides that all personnel officers shall be employees of the department in which they serve.

Subsection (b) amends the powers granted to the personnel officers listed in the statute.

Section 15. Amending AS 39.25.160. GENERALLY.

Subsection (c) extends protection from being required to make contributions to a political party to all employees. The existing subsection applies only to those employed in the classified service.

Subsection (e) adds a requirement that members of the partially exempt service resign from state employment when seeking political office.

Subsection (f) extends protection from unlawful discrimination to all state employees, not merely to members of the classified service.

Section 17. Amending AS 39.25.170. HEARINGS AND APPEALS UPON DISMISSAL, DEMOTION, OR SUSPENSION.

Subsections (c) and (i) repeat the expanded coverage from unlawful discrimination which was granted in AS 39.25.160(f).

MEMORANDUM

March 27, 1981

TO: Senator Bill Ray, Chairman

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer Terry
Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: SB 193 - Amending the State Personnel Act

I recently received a phone call concerning SB 193 which the commission is sponsoring. The inquiry concerned why the commission had deleted paragraph 8 of AS 39.25.110 (which is the section setting out the membership of the exempt service). The paragraph deleted places "certificated teachers employed by the state to teach in schools operated by the state" in the exempt service. At the time that the commission was considering this section I spoke with the Personnel Office of the Department of Education. They advised me that there were no longer any state operated schools and that therefore there were no employees who would fall within this paragraph. All of the teachers in rural schools are now covered by the paragraph pertaining to employees of regional educational attendance area school boards (AS 39.25.110(18).

There are, contrary to the initial information I was given, certificated teachers who are considered to be employed by the state to teach in schools operated by the state. These teachers fall into two groups - those employed in the Correspondence Study section of the Department of Education in Juneau and those employed in the Alaska Skills Center in Seward. These teachers are placed in the exempt service by the language of AS 39.25.110(8). The commission did not act with the intention of placing them in the classified service when it deleted this paragraph. However, some of the commission members may believe that it is better to place these employees in the classified service, and therefore would oppose changing the bill.

What should I do concerning this in the State Affairs Committee hearing next Tuesday? Unless you recommend something else, I will explain the facts given above and say that the commission has not met to authorize proposing an amendment to the bill.

SUBJECT: State Personnel Act Revisions

I want to start drafting the commission report to the Legislature and I thought I would do so anticipating that the amendments which we have talked about are adopted by the commission. Therefore, to insure that I know what I'm doing, I thought I'd check them with you.

If you have thought of any other amendments which I would need to set out in an analysis of what the commission is proposing, I'd appreciate knowing about them. Thanks.

Page 1 Lines 27 & 28 — Add an amendment to AS 39.25.070(3) to delete reference to classified employees, since partially exempt and exempt employees are also granted appeal rights in some instances by this draft.

Page 2 lines 21 & 22 — Add amendment to AS 39.25.090 (Coverage of Chapter) so that it reads something like:

> "This chapter and the rules (should this be regulations?) adopted under it apply to all positions in (1) the classified service, and (2) the partially exempt and exempt service as specifically provided."

Pages 4 & 6 — See my earlier communication on AS 39.25.120

Page 8 Line 14 — Change to read: (1) - (8) of this subsection.

Page 8 Line 28 — Change to read: tions;

Page 17 Line 15 — Perhaps add an effective date clause - you don't need to anything about this until the commission says to, but I'll ask them if they want one.

Because of changes made to AS 39.25.120 by Executive Order, I think we need to redraft that section for our bill. If you agree with the version below, I'll do a memo for the commission to accompany the materials I'll send out before the next meeting.

* Sec. 7. AS 39.25.120 is repealed and reenacted to read:

Positions in the partially exempt service are specifically exempt from the rules established under AS 39.25.150(3) - (10), (13), (14), and (17).

(c) The following positions in the state service constitute the partially exempt service:

Dear Ms. Cramer:

In response to your letter of November 24 regarding the deputy positions in the Divisions of Insurance and Tourism, I feel they should remain in the partially exempt service. A deputy of a division should serve at the pleasure of the director or commissioner since they are continually required to make decisions in the absence of the director and, in effect, are an extension of that position.

Dear Ms. Cramer:

In response to your recent letter regarding the partially exempt status of the Chief of Subsistence position, the Department has also been reviewing this position, but from a different perspective. The Subsistence Section which was established in 1978 as a new function within the Department of Fish and Game was a relatively small unit and therefore, we established the top position as a salary range 24 Section Chief. Due to the sensitive nature of the position and its impact on Departmental policy we requested and the Personnel Board approved, that the position be placed in the partially exempt service.

Recently the Department has been reviewing the role of the Subsistence Section in the Department and we have decided to change it from a Section to a Division with the top position being a range 26 Division Director. We feel this designation is more appropriate with the role this unit fills in the organization. The target date for this reorganization is January 1, 1981. At the same time we make this change in the Subsistence Section we will be doing the same in the Habitat Protection Section.

The Department's Personnel Officer, Mr. Fred Cook, will be available for questions on this matter at your December 4, 1980, meeting.

Re: Concerning whether employees of the Alaska Renewable Resources Corporation should be placed in the classified service

Dear Commission Members:

Thank you for the opportunity to address the Commission on the question of whether employees of the Alaska Renewable Resources Corporation should be placed in the classified service. We are submitting this letter at the invitation of your staff instead of presenting testimony, since unfortunately our board members and president are unable to attend the meeting scheduled for December 4, 1980.

We understand that your inquiry as it pertains to ARRC is limited to the question of whether the employees of the corporation, as opposed to the board members, should be placed in the classified service; we will, however, address the status of the board members as well, in case our understanding is not correct.

As you know, members of the corporation's board of trustees are placed in the exempt service by virtue of AS 37.12.060. There is no feasible alternative to exempt status for board members in view of statutory provisions concerning the appointment, term of office and removal of board members. AS 37.12.030, .035 and .040. That last provision allows the removal of board members only for cause and with the consent of the legislature. The exempt status of the board members is entirely consistent with the legislative intent upon which the exempt service is founded; AS 39.25.110 provides exempt status for, among other positions, elected officials, judges and all employees of the judicial branch, commissioners, and members of "boards, commissions, or authorities."

The corporation's enabling legislation also provides that all of its employees are in the exempt service. AS 37.12.060. This is also consistent with the rationale underlying AS 39.25.110, which designates the groups of state employees which are in the exempt service.

The basic thrust of the State Personnel Act is to distinguish between those state employees within the executive branch with similar terms and conditions of employment, and those state employees within both the executive branch and the other two branches of government whose terms and conditions of employment differ in one or more of a variety of ways. The most significant distinction between classified and exempt employees is the merit system principle which applies to classified, but not to exempt, employees. AS 39.25.010 states that the primary purpose of the Act is the establishment of "a system of personnel administration based upon the merit principle," in order to encourage "an effective career service." It is not likely that a "career service" will be, or should be, developed at ARRC, since every two years one of the three board memers may be replaced. Due to this frequent change in the composition of the board, as well as to the small size of the board's staff, a career service is neither practical nor wise.

One other point based on the legal status of the corporation should be considered. The corporation, according to its enabling legislation, is "an instrumentality of the state," but it has "a legal existence independent of and separate from the state." AS 37.12.010. The Alaska Supreme Court has observed that one of the possible reasons the legislature provided for the legal separateness of this and similar corporations is to "insulate the state from potential liabilities." Alaska State Housing Authority v. Dixon, 496 P.2d 649, 651 (Alaska 1972). Placing the employees of the corporation under the State Personnel Act would be a first, and significant, step in eroding that legal insularity. There is no other public corporation in this or any other state with the responsibilities that have been placed upon ARRC by the legislature; in view of the legal uncertainties associated with the corporation's work, the arguments in favor of maintaining its separate legal identity are particularly compelling.

There are also strong practical arguments for preserving the exempt status of the corporation's employees. The sensitivity of material which comes under ARRC's control and the substantial sums of money requiring personal handling and superintendence creates a need to establish the most rigorous standards for employees, and the need to act immediately and without cavil when even the appearance of violation of those standards is in evidence. The corporation's very existence depends upon a high level of confidence on the part of potential applicants that confidential business information, trade secrets, inventions, processes, competitive material and the like are not disclosed or even referred to. The corporate executive must be able to act immediately and effectively even on the basis of suspicion, and without fear of the substance of the incident being debated in personnel actions.

Dear Senator Ray:

This is a follow-up to my September 19 letter concerning recommendations I wish to make for improving our application processing system. Since writing to you in September, I have had extensive conversations with Fred Muller and Bruce Cummings about the problems we face in the application process and the solutions (both long and short-term) to those problems in areas where we control the process.

My recommendations at this time are as follows:

1. Automate to the fullest extent possible. As you may know, the existing processing system is a manual labor intensive operation. Each application accepted by the Division of Personnel is generally handled by at least six people prior to its ultimate disposition in the files (later, of course, it must be purged from the files). This manual processing system is substantively the same process used in the 1960's when we were a relatively small employer.

   In analyzing the process, we find that a great deal of the application handling is for no purpose beyond recordkeeping and tracking while in process. It is extremely important (and legally required for the most part) to keep the records maintained by Personnel. However, we believe that there is considerable room to improve the tracking process by utilizing data processing systems.

   To this end, the Division of Personnel has issued a Request for Proposals to automate the application processing system to the fullest extent possible within the next nine to ten months. What we envision -- and what we have requested -- is essentially a highly interactive on-line to the classified service. Our policy in this regard was to place these employees in the classified service unless the respective commission members raised strong objections. It is interesting to note that the Legislature seems to have a great penchant for placing in the Governor's Office each board and commission it wishes to create. Last session we strongly resisted these efforts and will do so in the future.

We are currently reviewing the structure and staffing of the Governor's Office to determine if further changes should be made. Among the issues we will address is the question of whether any of the staff should be placed in the classified service.

If I can provide additional information to you, please do not hesitate to contact me. I know that your Commission has tackled some difficult problems over the last few years. From my observation of the Commission's work, you have done an outstanding job and performed a valuable public service.

Dear Senator Ray:

This is a follow-up to my September 19 letter concerning recommendations I wish to make for improving our application processing system. Since writing to you in September, I have had extensive conversations with Fred Muller and Bruce Cummings about the problems we face in the application process and the solutions (both long and short-term) to those problems in areas where we control the process.

My recommendations at this time are as follows:

1. Automate to the fullest extent possible. As you may know, the existing processing system is a manual labor intensive operation. Each application accepted by the Division of Personnel is generally handled by at least six people prior to its ultimate disposition in the files (later, of course, it must be purged from the files). This manual processing system is substantively the same process used in the 1960's when we were a relatively small employer.

However, we believe that there is considerable room to improve the tracking process by utilizing data processing systems.

   To this end, the Division of Personnel has issued a Request for Proposals to automate the application processing system to the fullest extent possible within the next nine to ten months. What we envision -- and what we have requested -- is essentially a highly interactive on-line recordkeeping system. Such a system would enable us to monitor the disposition of applications throughout the process, to produce reports identifying specific process problems (e.g., disparate impact on minority applicants) and to eliminate much of the manual recordkeeping. This system will not screen applications per se. However, it should provide for immediate entry, updating and retrieval of key information via CRT. In addition to simply storing data, the desired system should automate several features of the system; it should produce standardized letters, schedule testing, generate notices of examination results, and issue eligible lists upon request. We are hopeful that it will cut average processing time in half.

Our RFP calls for full implementation of an automated system by August 1, 1981. Frankly, our time frames may be unreaslistic. However, similar systems already exist in a few other jurisdictions and we anticipate that a quick modification of systems already developed will give us a usable and expedient -- if not perfect -- system here.

To some extent we view this design as an intermediate system which may be modified in three to five years. Ultimately, an application system should be only one element in a large personnel data base system. In addition to the functions we envision in the system to be implemented, a comprehensive system might be able to at least partially machine score applications, score tests, compute employer credits, add veterans' points, record address changes from the payroll file, etc. To design such a system from scratch might take five years. We appreciate the need for speedy action and believe that we can address the larger issue of a data base system in coming fiscal years.

We anticipate awarding a design contract by mid-December. If you wish, I would be happy to advise you of the outcome from the RFP.

2. Increase delegation of recruitment and examination authority. The Division of Personnel is actively encouraging departments to assume authority for recruitment and examination of applications (and certification of eligibles in some cases) for all job classes which are unique to a given agency. By delegating this authority among the departments, more employees are made available to examine applications and agencies are given greater control over recruitment scheduling.

At this time, the delegation of recruitment and examining authority has been accepted only on a limited basis. Unfortunately, most departmental personnel offices are not adequately staffed to assume significant increase in workload. Nevertheless, we anticipate increased delegations in coming months.

The Divisio.. of Personnel has also assigned many more job classes to its Anchorage and Fairbanks offices for application processing. Although this has extended the turnaround time in those offices (now about four weeks), it has reduced the number of applications which would otherwise be processed in Juneau. It also provides applicants from those areas an opportunity to speak directly to the staff who process their applications.

I must note that while decentralization may be expedient, it can also be costly. Other agencies will undoubtedly seek additional staff to handle the workload delegated by Personnel. Additionally, each of them must develop their own recordkeeping systems to support the application process. We may ultimately find it more efficient to allocate all or a portion of those resources to the Division of Personnel.

3. Continued recruitment closures. Whenever the number of qualified applicants for a job class greatly exceeds the number of anticipated vacancies for the class, continuous recruitment should be closed. Although this practice may be undesirable to the candidate who cannot submit an application during a closed period, recruit closures simply make good business sense. To continue to solicit applications when there is no reasonable need is a disservice to the public; it slows the process by increasing the application flow and gives the candidate an illusion of prospective employment when there is no realistic probability of an employment offer.

However, we will open recruitment for almost every job class for at least thirty days in every twelve month period. This will ensure that candidates will have an opportunity to apply for classes at least once a year and that eligible lists will be updated with new candidates annually.

4. Consolidation of job classes. Every job class in the classified service (excepting those in the Labor, Trades and Crafts bargaining unit) requires some sort of examination device to screen applicants. The more job classes we have, the more examination devices we must use; consequently, the more complicated and time-consuming the application process becomes.

   The Division of Personnel has a longstanding objective to eliminate unnecessary classifications whenever possible. As of November 1, 1980 we had 1,217 classes in the Executive Branch, for a ratio of one class for every 10.11 positions. Although this is the lowest ratio of classes to positions in State history (even a year ago the ratio was 1:8.22), we believe there is still considerable room for consolidation.

   Parenthetically, consolidation of job classes should also greatly enhance the timeliness of classification actions.

5. Increased utilization of valid written examinations. The use of valid written examinations can greatly improve application processing. When a written examination is shown to be a statistically valid predicator of performance abilities in a given job, an applicant's previous training and experience can be considered moot; the results of the written examination may be used to determine the levels for which an individual is qualified within a class series. Taken to extremes, valid written tests can eliminate the need to screen even for minimum qualifications; any individual who applies is simply scheduled for the appropriate test.

   Unfortunately, statistically valid written tests requires a large amount of time and money for their development. Further, with so many job classes, most of our classifications have so few employees working in them that we cannot get a sufficient sample size for acceptable validation. And, even when fully staffed, our Test Development and Validation unit consists of only three employees; at the most, they cannot reasonably do more than five validation studies per year. However, we will continue to develop valid written examinations as quickly as circumstances permit.

6. Develop multi-titled applications. In their last report, the Blue Ribbon Commission recommended that the Division of Personnel develop a system in which only one application is necessary from each applicant for each class series for which the applicant wishes to be considered. We are now attempting to do just that. In conjunction with the implementation of a new clerical testing battery which has just been developed, we plan to experiment with a multi-titled application for clerical classes (these account for 30-40% of our application flow).

It is our objective to have average application processing time reduced to ten working days or less by the end of FY 82 (current average processing time is twelve weeks). Undoubtedly, the foregoing recommendations are not the only actions which would improve the application process; the simplistic approach of throwing more staff at the work would "improve" the process, at least to the extent of reducing processing time. However, we prefer to emphasize these enhancements which will produce greater returns at lesser cost to the State.

To this end, I welcome any suggestions for improvement which may be made by the Commission.

Thank you again for the opportunity to comment.

Respectfully,

W. R. Hudson

Walter Parker, of hte Energy Center

The center is in the process of developing options on staffing. Their options are:

1. Remain in the exempt service
2. Establish thier own PR's under the Energy Center charter as a corporation
3. Operate without rules entirely - this he did not recommend.

The energy center board is emphasizing the charter intent in the legisation that it be independent of hte state but part of it - whatever that may mean.. They desire as much flexibility as the enabling legislation allows.

Ed O'Hare

He is taking over from Walt Parker. He was in Juneau last week and talked with Tom Farnana and Elaine O'Day about personnel matters. It appears that the Energy Center will go their own way - and not be part of hte state personnel system for the present. It is possible for them to do this in their character as a private corporation. They can in future return to the exempt service of hte state, but once they do so, they cannot get out. They will try, as they gain experience , to determine the needs and desires of their Alaskan employees and follow through later.

They have learned that they can take the major percentatge of the employee's contributions on their benefits apchkage and apply it later to the state benefits program if they electe to go inot hte exempt service. They will genreally follow the state's salary schedule in order to ease a future transition in to the state service.

They don't have that many employees yet - about 20 by June and then add another 10 by the end of summer. They hope to plan the FY 1982 budget based on 30 employees. Much of hte work will be done by subcontractors initially. All of these plans will be presented to the Energy Center board at their meeting on the 18th and 19th of December, so that's when things will be clearer.

Dear Ms. Cramer:

In response to your recent letter regarding the partially exempt status of the Chief of Subsistence position, the Department has also been reviewing this position, but from a different perspective. The Subsistence Section which was established in 1978 as a new function within the Department of Fish and Game was a relatively small unit and therefore, we established the top position as a salary range 24 Section Chief. Due to the sensitive nature of the position and its impact on Departmental policy we requested and the Personnel Board approved, that the position be placed in the partially exempt service.

Recently the Department has been reviewing the role of the Subsistence Section in the Department and we have decided to change it from a Section to a Division with the top position being a range 26 Division Director. We feel this designation is more appropriate with the role this unit fills in the organization. The target date for this reorganization is January 1, 1981. At the same time we make this change in the Subsistence Section we will be doing the same in the Habitat Protection Section.

The Department's Personnel Officer, Mr. Fred Cook, will be available for questions on this matter at your December 4, 1980, meeting.

Dear Senator Ray:

Thank you for your recent letter regarding the matter of partially exempt/classified employees who work for boards and commissions in the Governor's office. As Governor Hammond is out of town, I am taking the liberty of responding for him.

It appears that the focus of your Commission's concern is on employees who work for boards and commissions which are located in the Governor's Office. I share that concern and last year we conducted an analysis of the boards and commissions then located in this office. The objective of this analysis was to identify those commissions which should more appropriately be located in a line agency. It became apparent to me soon after I moved into the Governor's Office that there were several commissions which should be located elsewhere. One of the Governor's major management objectives has been to trim the functions of the Governor's staff to those which are truly staff-related in nature.

At the beginning of the last legislative session, Governor Hammond submitted executive orders to transfer from his office to line agencies the following commissions: Alaska Public Offices Commission, Public Defender Agency, Alaska Historical Commission, Alaska State Council on the Arts, Alaska Police Standards Council, and the Alaska Council on Science and Technology. In addition, by executive action the Governor transferred the State Pipeline Coordinator's Office and the Criminal Justice Planning Agency to line departments. Dear Ms. Cramer:

This is in reply to your letter of October 22, 1980 inquiring as to whether or not it was necessary for employees of the Alaska Industrial Development Authority to remain in the exempt service.

The Alaska Industrial Development Authority is established as a public corporation of the state and a body corporate and politic constituting a political subdivision within the Department of Commerce and Economic Development, but with separate and independent legal existence (Sec. 44.61.020). As you may know, the Authority is charged with the responsibility of importing funds through sale of tax exempt bonds. In order to insure that the liabilities of this corporation do not pass through to the state, it is essential that a separate organization be created. Any action, which by construction, can infer that the State of Alaska rather than an independent agency thereof, is an issuer of bonds, can create a situation whereby the state is not insulated from the liability or liabilities of the Authority.

I believe it is essential that the employees of Alaska Industrial Development Authority remain in the exempt category. This will insure the separation of the Authority from the State of Alaska and thus continue to keep the state insulated from the debt characteristics of this Authority.

Sincerely,

to the classified service. Our policy in this regard was to place these employees in the classified service unless the respective commission members raised strong objections. It is interesting to note that the Legislature seems to have a great penchant for placing in the Governor's Office each board and commission it wishes to create. Last session we strongly resisted these efforts and will do so in the future.

We are currently reviewing the structure and staffing of the Governor's Office to determine if further changes should be made. Among the issues we will address is the question of whether any of the staff should be placed in the classified service.

If I can provide additional information to you, please do not hesitate to contact me. I know that your Commission has tackled some difficult problems over the last few years. From my observation of the Commission's work, you have done an outstanding job and performed a valuable public service.

Warmest regards.

ALASKA LEGISLATURE SPECIAL COMMITTEE / SUBJECT FILE 8672
1371 SCOMM 51: BLUE RIBBON COMN. ON STATE PERSONNEL ACT 1978-1983

SUMMARY OF RECOMMENDATIONS

The Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act recommends that:

1. The merit principles identified during the state constitutional debates should be specifically set forth in the State Personnel Act. These principles are fundamental to fair employment and should be recognized and adopted. (Page 11)

2. If any positions are removed from collective bargaining units, that they remain in the classified service but be prohibited from collective bargaining activity. (Page 15)

3. The legislature should re-examine the placement of positions in the exempt and partially exempt services. Where necessary, statutes should be amended to correct any errors identified. (Page 17)

4. If the legislature wishes to increase its role in the collective bargaining process, it do so by formally considering and approving or rejecting the agreements entered into between the bargaining units and the employer before they take effect. The agreements would be presented to the legislature by a specified date. The legislature would then be required to consider and act on the agreements within 30 days. The law should state that the legislature could not adjourn before having acted. If the agreements were ratified by the legislature, they would become binding contracts. (Page 18)

Honorable Bill Ray, Chairman Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act

Dear Senator Ray:

This is a follow-up to my September 19 letter concerning recommendations I wish to make for improving our application processing system. Since writing to you in September, I have had extensive conversations with Fred Muller and Bruce Cummings about the problems we face in the application process and the solutions (both long and short-term) to those problems in areas where we control the process.

My recommendations at this time are as follows:

1. Automate to the fullest extent possible. As you may know, the existing processing system is a manual labor intensive operation. Each application accepted by the Division of Personnel is generally handled by at least six people prior to its ultimate disposition in the files (later, of course, it must be purged from the files). This manual processing system is substantively the same process used in the 1960's when we were a relatively small employer.

   In analyzing the process, we find that a great deal of the application handling is for no purpose beyond recordkeeping and tracking while in process. It is extremely important (and legally required for the most part) to keep the records maintained by Personnel. However, we believe that there is considerable room to improve the tracking process by utilizing data processing systems.

   To this end, the Division of Personnel has issued a Request for Proposals to automate the application processing system to the fullest extent possible within the next nine to ten months. What we envision -- and what we have requested -- is essentially a highly interactive on-line recordkeeping system. Such a system would enable us to monitor the disposition of applications throughout the process, to produce reports identifying specific process problems (e.g., disparate impact on minority applicants) and to eliminate much of the manual recordkeeping. This system will not screen applications per se. However, it should provide for immediate entry, updating and retrieval of key information via CRT. In addition to simply storing data, the desired system should automate several features of the system; it should produce standardized letters, schedule testing, generate notices of examination results, and issue eligible lists upon request. We are hopeful that it will cut average processing time in half.

Our RFP calls for full implementation of an automated system by August 1, 1981. Frankly, our time frames may be unreaslistic. However, similar systems already exist in a few other jurisdictions and we anticipate that a quick modification of systems already developed will give us a usable and expedient -- if not perfect -- system here.

To some extent we view this design as an intermediate system which may be modified in three to five years. Ultimately, an application system should be only one element in a large personnel data base system. In addition to the functions we envision in the system to be implemented, a comprehensive system might be able to at least partially machine score applications, score tests, compute employer credits, add veterans' points, record address changes from the payroll file, etc. To design such a system from scratch might take five years. We appreciate the need for speedy action and believe that we can address the larger issue of a data base system in coming fiscal years.

We anticipate awarding a design contract by mid-December. If you wish, I would be happy to advise you of the outcome from the RFP.

2. Increase delegation of recruitment and examination authority. The Division of Personnel is actively encouraging departments to assume authority for recruitment and examination of applications (and certification of eligibles in some cases) for all job classes which are unique to a given agency. By delegating this authority among the departments, more employees are made available to examine applications and agencies are given greater control over recruitment scheduling.

At this time, the delegation of recruitment and examining authority has been accepted only on limited basis. Unfortunately, most departmental personnel offices are not adequately staffed to assume significant increase in workload. Nevertheless, we anticipate increased delegations in coming months.

The Division of Personnel has also assigned many more job classes to its Anchorage and Fairbanks offices for application processing. Although this has extended the turnaround time in those offices (now about four weeks), it has reduced the number of applications which would otherwise be processed in Juneau. It also provides applicants from those areas an opportunity to speak directly to the staff who process their applications.

I must note that while decentralization may be expedient, it can also be costly. Other agencies will undoubtedly seek additional staff to handle the workload delegated by Personnel. Additionally, each of them must develop their own recordkeeping systems to support the application process. We may ultimately find it more efficient to allocate all or a portion of those resources to the Division of Personnel.

3. Continued recruitment closures. Whenever the number of qualified applicants for a job class greatly exceeds the number of anticipated vacancies for the class, continuous recruitment should be closed. Although this practice may be undesirable to the candidate who cannot submit an application during a closed period, recruit closures simply make good business sense. To continue to solicit applications when there is no reasonable need is a disservice to the public; it slows the process by increasing the application flow and gives the candidate an illusion of prospective employment when there is no realistic probability of an employment offer.

However, we will open recruitment for almost every job class for at least thirty days in every twelve month period. This will ensure that candidates will have an opportunity to apply for classes at least once a year and that eligible lists will be updated with new candidates annually.

4. Consolidation of job classes. Every job class in the classified service (excepting those in the Labor, Trades and Crafts bargaining unit) requires some sort of examination device to screen applicants. The more job classes we have, the more examination devices we must use; consequently, the more complicated and time-consuming the application process becomes.

   The Division of Personnel has a longstanding objective to eliminate unnecessary classifications whenever possible. As of November 1, 1980 we had 1,217 classes in the Executive Branch, for a ratio of one class for every 10.11 positions. Although this is the lowest ratio of classes to positions in State history (even a year ago the ratio was 1:8.22), we believe there is still considerable room for consolidation.

   Parenthetically, consolidation of job classes should also greatly enhance the timeliness of classification actions.

5. Increased utilization of valid written examinations. The use of valid written examinations can greatly improve application processing. When a written examination is shown to be a statistically valid predicator of performance abilities in a given job, an applicant's previous training and experience can be considered moot; the results of the written examination may be used to determine the levels for which an individual is qualified within a class series. Taken to extremes, valid written tests can eliminate the need to screen even for minimum qualifications; any individual who applies is simply scheduled for the appropriate test.

   Unfortunately, statistically valid written tests requires a large amount of time and money for their development. Further, with so many job classes, most of our classifications have so few employees working in them that we cannot get a sufficient sample size for acceptable validation. And, even when fully staffed, our Test Development and Validation unit consists of only three employees: at the most, they cannot reasonably do more than five validation studies per year. However, we will continue to develop valid written examinations as quickly as circumstances permit.

6. Develop multi-titled applications. In their last report, the Blue Ribbon Commission recommended that the Division of Personnel develop a system in which only one application is necessary from each applicant for each class series for which the applicant wishes to be considered. We are now attempting to do just that. In conjunction with the implementation of a new clerical testing battery which has just been developed, we plan to experiment with a multi-titled application for clerical classes (these account for 30-40% of our application flow).

It is our objective to have average application processing time reduced to ten working days or less by the end of FY 82 (current average processing time is twelve weeks). Undoubtedly, the foregoing recommendations are not the only actions which would improve the application process; the simplistic approach of throwing more staff at the work would "improve" the process, at least to the extent of reducing processing time. However, we prefer to emphasize these enhancements which will produce greater returns at lesser cost to the State.

To this end, I welcome any suggestions for improvement which may be made by the Commission.

Thank you again for the opportunity to comment.

Respectfully,

W. R. Hudson

SUBJECT: Redraft of the State Personnel Act
WO 12-0067, Asper

At its last meeting, the Blue Ribbon Commission reviewed the redraft of the State Personnel Act and agreed on some changes. Please incorporate these changes into a second work draft to be reviewed by the Commission sometime at the end of November or the beginning of December.

I have noted the changes on the enclosed copy of the first draft. Some are explained in the enclosed copy of the Minutes and others are explained below. If there are problems with the language suggested, please make any corrections necessary.

If I can assist in any way, please let me know.

PROPOSED CHANGES TO THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT

Page 8 Lines 5-19 — I am working with Senator Ray on what distinction the commission wants to make between matters of public policy and matters relating to the internal management of state agencies. I will let the bill drafter know of how this is resolved as soon as possible.

(g) Action affecting the employment status of an employee in the classified service or an applicant for a position in the classified service, including appointment, promotion, demotion, suspension, or removal, may not be taken or withheld on the basis of unlawful discrimination due to political beliefs.

Page 15 Line 1 (d) An employee in the classified service who has been dismissed, demoted, or suspended due to unlawful discrimination based on political beliefs may appeal the action to the personnel board.

Page 15 Line 18 A question: Given the changes with respect to protection against various kinds of discrimination, do there need to be two subsections concerning what happens if the personnel board finds there was unlawful discrimination, or can it all be lumped together in one subsection?

Page 17 Line 6 The commission requested definitions of knowingly (take from the Criminal Code), fraud, local precinct level (take from the Election Code perhaps). I have added a request for a definition of state employee, but perhaps that is not necessary.

On the question of state employee, I had spoken with Linn Asper before he left concerning whether the phrase "state officer or employee" would include anyone not included in the phrase "state employee". It was his belief that it would not, but I have thought about that since the commission meeting, and it occurs to me that people appointed to boards and commissions who are not paid employees might be state officers, as might legislators and other elected officials. If this is so, then no change should be made in AS 39.25.060(b), page 1, line 18 nor should any change be made in AS 39.25.080, page 2, lines 14, 16 17, 20-21, 22, and 24.

Suggested definition of "state employee". "State employee" means any person in state service who is paid a salary or wage, whether in the classified, pattially exempt or exempt service.

November 4, 1980

TO: Members of the Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer TBC

SUBJECT: Standards for "severely handicapped"

At the last commission meeting, a question was raised concerning whether the definition of the term "severely handicapped" in the State Personnel Act should be changed. It is found in AS 39.25.150(22) which permits the granting of employment preference for the severely handicapped. The definition reads:

> "Severely handicapped means persons certified by the director of the division of vocational rehabilitation to be severely handicapped."

I spoke with Mike Morgan, the director of the division, about whether a more complete definition of the term should be included in the Act. He explained that certifying a person as severely handicapped is a two-step process. The first step considers whether the individual has a physical disability which seriously impairs him. The list of conditions includes blindness, deafness, quadraplegia and paraplegia as well as severe cardiac problems. In addition, the first step may be met if a person has a combination of physical disabilities which, when added together, severely limit the possibilities open to him.

The second step evaluation is more subjective. The division considers whether, given the individual's background and training, the physical impairments seriously constrict his ability to find employment. Mr. Morgan suggested the following example. Assume an individual holds a state administrative job and has an extensive educational background and a good work history in his present employment. He is involved in a serious automobile accident and loses both his legs. While he would meet the physical test for being severely handicapped, he would probably not, in fact, have any difficulty retaining his present position. The division would offer him counseling services to help him come to terms with the emotional trauma, but he would probably not need any employment assistance. However, if you change the background of the individual in the example to a fisherman who does not have the education to take on a desk job immediately, then you do have someone who will need considerable assistance in finding employment. That person should be considered severely handicapped.

Because of the subjective part of the evaluation, Mr. Morgan recommends that the definition in the State Personnel Act remain as it is.

Dear Ms. Cramer:

This is in reply to your letter of October 22, 1980 inquiring as to whether or not it was necessary for employees of the Alaska Industrial Development Authority to remain in the exempt service.

The Alaska Industrial Development Authority is established as a public corporation of the state and a body corporate and politic constituting a political subdivision within the Department of Commerce and Economic Development, but with separate and independent legal existence (Sec. 44.61.020). As you may know, the Authority is charged with the responsibility of importing funds through sale of tax exempt bonds. In order to insure that the liabilities of this corporation do not pass through to the state, it is essential that a separate organization be created. Any action, which by construction, can infer that the State of Alaska rather than an independent agency thereof, is an issurer of bonds, can create a situation whereby the state is not insulated from the liability or liabilities of the Authority.

I believe it is essential that the employees of Alaska Industrial Development Authority remain in the exempt category. This will insure the separation of the Authority from the State of Alaska and thus continue to keep the state insulated from the debt characteristics of this Authority.

Sincerely,

David A. Rose

SUBJECT: Commentary on Work Draft of the State Personnel Act

Page 1 Line 8 — Section 1. AS 39.25.040. Director of Personnel.

There is one minor change proposed in line 14 to improve it stylistically. The content is not affected.

Page 1 Line 16 — Section 2. AS 39.25.060(b). Personnel Board.

As discussed at the last Commission meeting, the requirement that members of the Personnel Board be qualified electors of the state is deleted by the amendment proposed here.

Page 1 Line 21 — Section 3. AS 39.25.070(1). Powers and Duties of the Personnel Board.

This amendment makes stylistic changes. All of the substantive requirements for how the Rules are to be amended are relocated to AS 39.25.140.

Page 1 Line 28 — Section 4. AS 39.25.070(6). Powers and Duties of the Personnel Board.

The amendment to this section identifies AS 39.25.170 as the section of the State Personnel Act which provides for hearings.

Page 2 Line 3 — Section 5. AS 39.25.070. Powers and Duties of the Personnel Board.

This is a new subsection which the commission had discussed some months ago. It provides statutory authority for the Personnel Board to hire employees and, in this draft, requires that the employees be members of the classified service. The Commission in its previous discussions had not decided whether the employees should be members of the exempt service or the classified. If this subsection remains in the draft, the Commission may wish to consider whether the statute should specify which service Personnel Board employees shall be in.

Section 6. AS 39.25.080. Public Records.

The existing statute makes personnel records open to the public unless specifically designated as confidential by the Personnel Rules. This amendmen changes the approach so that the state personnel records are confidential unless included in the list made public by this section of the statutes. In lines 8 and 9 the phrase "are confidential and are not open to public inspection" is used to insure that other state employees can consult personnel records when there is a valid reason.

In subsection (b), lines 14-23, reference to state employees should be a consistent phrase. Subsection (4) now says only "state employee" while the other subsections say "state officer or employee". Linn Asper, the drafter, recommends that all of the references be changed to "state employee". Whichever phrase is used in subsection (b) should also be used in subsection (c).

The materials which are made public records by this section are those which the Personnel Rules now identify as public records.

Section 7. AS 39.25.110. Exempt Service.

Subsection (a) of this draft sets out standards for positions which should be in exempt service. The Legal Division of the Legislative Affairs Agency has some concerns about this whole subsection which are stated in the memo from Linn Asper.

Subsection (b) sets out those positions which are placed in the exempt service by the State Personnel Act. The draft does not add any new positions to the exempt service. It seeks to eliminate redundant or obsolete paragraphs. Subsection (11), page 4, line 12, identifies the boards, commissions and authorities whose employees and officers are presently in the exempt service by statute. If the Commission recommends a change in the status of the employees of any of these entities, then this paragraph should be changed. Paragraph (12) states that the executive officer of the Postsecondary Education Commission is in the exempt service, which is consistent with the phrasing of the present statute. In fact, the executive officer and all of the employees are in the exempt service. If the Commission does not recommend a change in the present allocation, then paragraph (12) should be deleted and the Alaska Commission on Postsecondary Education should become subparagraph (F) of paragraph (11).

Subsection (18) places marine transportation employees in the exempt service. The Commission requested a letter from Greg O'Claray on the question of whether it would be more appropriate to place these state employees in the classified service.

Section 8. AS 39.25.120. Partially Exempt Service.

Subsections (a) and (b) of the draft are derived from the first part of the existing statute. Although the draft changes the reference to the subsections of AS 39.25.150 from which employees in the partially exempt service are exempt, the exemptions are not substantively changed. The reference in the existing statute to other sections of the Act is deleted, but partially exempt employees remain exempt from those sections.

Subsection (c) lists the positions placed in the partially exempt service. Paragraphs (1)-(8) and part of (17) encompass the existing language although in some instances the phrasing is changed. Paragraphs (9)-(16) and the rest of (17) are added to include in the statute those positions which are identified as in the partially exempt service by the Commission memo on the subject. I have set them out for purposes of discussion. The Commission may decide that placing some or all of these positions in the partially exempt service by statute is undesirable since it limits flexibility. The Personnel Board has the authority to add or delete positions in the partially exempt service.

& 17

Sections 9 and 10. AS 39.25.130(a) and (c). Extension of Partially Exempt and Classified Services.

The draft removes the reference to dates which the existing language has. The substance of the Personnel Board's authority is not changed.

Line 22

Section 11. AS 39.25.140. Amendment of Personnel Rules.

The draft sets out two methods for amendment of the Personnel Rules, depending on whether they are matters of internal management or of public policy. The Legal Division of the Legislative Affairs Agency raises questions concerning the distinction between these two areas in the memo from Linn Asper.

The draft requires that for Rules concerning matters of public policy the Administrative Procedures Act must be followed. For Rules concerning internal management, the existing system is set out with some modification. The time limits in subsection (e), page 8, line 8, were transferred from AS 39.25.070. The existing statute states that the Rules become effective 30 days after submission to the Personnel Board rather than 45 days.

The draft states in subsection (e)(2), page 8, line 14, that the Personnel Board may hold public hearings if requested. The wording should be changed to shall if the Commission wishes to limit the Board's discretion about whether to hold hearings.

In subsection (e), I inadvertently added paragraph (3), page 8, line 16, which gives the Personnel Board the power to amend the Rules proposed to it. This is a power which is granted to the comparable body in the Model Personnel Administration Law, but which Alaska has not granted to the Personnel Board. Unless the Commission wishes to extend the authority of the Personnel Board, this paragraph should be deleted.

Subsection (d) of the statute, which states that the Rules may provide for exemptions and modifications necessary to assure federal grants, is deleted. Thre is no need to spell out this power, since nothing prohibits it.

Line 22 Section 12. AS 39.25.150. Scope of the Rules.

As presently set out, this section of the Act does more than list the items which the Rules shall contain. It includes some substantive provisions, such as the sections on veteran's preference, on the classification plan and on the pay plan, which might be more appropriately set out as separate sections. This draft follows the state's traditional structure and also the structure suggested in the Model Personnel Administration Law, so there are reasons not to change it as well as reasons to change it.

In general, this section has not been significantly changed in the draft. The order of some subsections was changed for the sake of clarity, and subsections (1) and (20) were restructured to make their content easier to discover.

In subsection (2), page 9, lines 16-17, reference to collective bargaining agreements was added.

The existing subsections (8) and (9), concerning nonpermanent and emergency appointments were combined in subsection (8) of the draft, page 10, line 9, since AS 39.25.195 - 200 sets out requirements for both kinds of appointments.

Subsection (16) of the draft, page 10, lines 26-27, is a rephrasing of the existing subsection (17).

As mentioned earlier, subsection (20) has been restructed. Its content is unchanged.

Subsection (23), page 12, line 10, is a proposed addition taken from language found in the Model Personnel Administration Act (Section 3, paragraph (9)). The Commission should consider whether to leave this language in the bill or remove it.

All of the other sections of the bill are to be found in the Act, although the order is changed.

Page 12

Section 13. AS 39.25.153. Personnel Officers.

The draft changes both the structure and some of the content of the existing statute. Subsection (a) of the draft provides that each of the principal departments of the executive branch shall have a personnel officer, rather than limiting the reference to the named departments.

Subsection (b) of the draft provides that the personnel officers for those departments named in the existing statute shall have the powers set out in paragraphs (1)-(4). The existing statute gives the personnel officers the power to amend the Personnel Rules covering a number of topics. In the draft I have tried to identify more specifically the areas in which it may be desirable to give departmental personnel officers authority to act independently of the Personnel Division.

Subsection (c) of the draft takes language presently placed in subsection (b) and moves it to a separate subsection. Subsection (d) of the draft is new language.

The Commission may wish to consider granting the powers provided in Subsection (b) to all personnel officers. On the other hand, the Commission may decide that the authority which the Director of Personnel has to delegate his powers provides sufficient opportunity for the departmental personnel officers to work on unique job classes separate from the Division of Personnel. If this is the Commission's decision the subsections (b)-(d) should be deleted.

Page 13

Section 14. AS 39.25.160. Generally.

The first subsection of the existing statute has been removed from this section and placed in a new section, AS 39.25.192. It grants rights to state employees rather than addressing prohibitions. The remaining subsections of the existing statute have been relettered and rewritten for clarity. The only substantive change in the draft is to add, in subsection (3), page 14, line 2, a requirement that partially exempt employees resign their positions when they seek nomination or become a candidate for state or national elective political office.

Subsection (f) includes prohibitions against acting on the basis of sex, color, and national origin as well as on the basis of race, religion or political beliefs to make the statue conform to the scope of the Personnel Rules and to constitutional requirements.

Page 14 Line 20 — Section 15. AS 39.25.170. Hearings and Appeals Upon Dismissal, Demotion, or Suspension.

This section has been restructed and its contents revised to conform to court rulings on the right to hearings. Subsection (a) follows the present statute and requires that the appointing authority who is dismissing, demoting or suspending an employee must give written notice of the proposed action and the reasons for it.

Subsections (b)-(e) set out those classes of employees who presently, by statute or by case law, have a right to appeal. There is a drafting error in subsection (c), page 14, line 27. The phrase "in the classified service" should be deleted, since partially exempt employees may now appeal if the action is based on those prohibited reasons.

Subsection (f), page 15, line 9, makes clear how an employee commences an appeal.

Subsection (g) follows existing language but clarifies the employee's right to decide whether the hearing shall be open or closed to the public. The draft also clarifies that the employee's representative need not be an attorney, that the employee has the right to present evidence and that the technical rules of evidence do not apply.

Subsection (h) follows the existing language of the Personnel Rules, which are based on the statute, but include provisions required by case law. Personnel Rule 12 01.22.

The Personnel Board is granted the power to subpoena witnesses and documents in the existing AS 39.25.070(6). For clarity, this power is set out following the section on hearings in the draft. In addition, the authority of the Personnel Board is clarified, and the draft adds that if a witness refuses to comply, the Board may apply to the Superior Court for an order requiring the person to respond.

Page 16 Line 6 — Section 17. AS 39.25.185. Employment of Federal Employees.

The substance of this new section is taken from the Personnel Rules which are based on AS 39.25.180. It is a rarely used provision, and the Commission may wish to consider whether it is necessary or desirable. As a technical matter, it is placed as a new section in the draft rather than an amendment of AS 39.25.180 because the primary purpose of sec. 180 was to settle matters at the transition from Territory to State. Since that was accomplished long ago, the Revisor of Statutes recommended repealing AS 39.25.180 and setting up this as a separate section.

Section 18. AS 39.25.192. Employee Political Rights.

As mentioned in the discussion of AS 39.25.160(14), this new section takes existing statutory language and sets it out separately to make clear its content. Some redrafting for style was done, but the substance was not changed.

Section 19. AS 39.25.180. Status of Present Employees.

As mentioned in the discussion of Sec. 17, AS 39.25.185, this section is repealed but its provision for hiring federal employees is placed in a separate section of the statutes.

SUBJECT: Comments on work draft for state Personnel Act revisions. (Work Order No. 12-0067)

TO: Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act
Attn: Teresa B. Cramer, A.A.

FROM: Linn H. Asper
Legislative Counsel

I have prepared a work draft in bill form based on your work with the commission. We discussed the proposed Personnel Act revisions earlier, but I think two sections of the legislation should be reconsidered by the commission.

The proposed revision of AS 39.25.110 includes [subsection (a)] a policy statement about the kind of positions which should be placed in the exempt service. Since this subsection will have no legal effect, I suggest that it be placed in the committee report on the legislation rather than in the body of the bill itself.

The second section which poses problems is AS 39.24.140(d) and (e) dealing with separate procedures for amending the personnel rules depending on whether the proposed amendments are matters of public policy or matters of internal management of the state agencies. The difficulty is that the distinction between"matters of public policy" and "matters of internal management" is unclear. I am not able to tell from the present wording what purpose is to be served by the different amendment procedures or how the board is to distinguish between public policy amendments and internal management amendments. There appears to be no prior usage of these terms in the statutes or cases which would clarify their meaning in the legislation. I think this section needs a further definition of the terms used. Also, if I knew why the commission wants different amendment procedures for different matters, I think I could draft language that will be less ambiguous.

Some changes have been made in your draft, but they are generally limited to style and not substance. Please call on me if you want to discuss anything about the legislation.

SUBJECT: Work Order Request - Revision of the State Personnel Act

Enclosed are revisions of sections of the State Personnel Act which the Blue Ribbon Commission discussed at its last meeting. The Commission would like the bill drafter assigned to this project to review the Act and make suggestions or additional changes which appear advisable from a technical or legal approach. The work draft will be reviewed by the Commission before this needs to be put in final form.

In the revisions which I am enclosing, I have occasionally suggested alternative approaches which the Commission may wish to follow. Either the work draft should include each alternative or amendments should be drafted for the Commission's consideration.

If there are questions, I would be happy to respond.

RE: Revision of the State Personnel Act

In the 1980 Report to the Legislature the commission recommended that the State Personnel Act be reviewed and, where necessary, revised. This memorandum sets out the sections of the Act followed by commentary where it seemed appropriate. Many of the topics which have concerned the commission in the past are implemented by the Personnel Rules rather than by the State Personnel Act itself, and therefore discussion of those issues might be more appropriate during a review of the Rules.

ARTICLE 1. ADMINISTRATION.

Sec. 39.25.010. Purpose of chapter. It is the purpose of this chapter to establish a system of personnel administration based upon the merit principle and adapted to the requirements of the state to the end that persons best qualified to perform the functions of the state will be employed, and that an effective career service will be encouraged, developed and maintained.

(b) The merit principle of employment includes the following:

(1) recruiting, selecting, and advancing employees on the basis of their relative ability, knowledge, and skills, including open consideration of qualified applicants for initial appointment;

(2) regular integrated salary programs based on the nature of the work performed;

(3) retention of employees with permanent status on the basis of the adequacy of their performance, reasonable efforts of temporary duration for correction in inadequate performance, and separation for cause;

(4) equal treatment of applicants and employees with regard only to consideration within the merit principles of employment; and

(5) selection and retention of an employee's position secure from political influences.

Comment: This section was amended by Chapter 46, SLA, 1980 (SCS HB 908) which the commission sponsored.

Sec. 39.25.020. Appointing authority. The authority to appoint to positions in the state service is as follows:

(1) The legislature is the appointing authority for all officers and employees of the legislature and the legislative agencies, but the authority to make appointments may be delegated.

(2) The governor is the appointing authority for all officers and employees of the executive branch, but the authority to make appointments may be delegated.

(3) The chief justice of the supreme court is the appointing authority for all administrative and clerical personnel of the state judicial system, but the authority to make appointments may be delegated.

(4) The board of regents is the appointing authority for all employees of the University of Alaska, but the authority to make appointments may be delegated.

Sec. 39.25.030. Division of personnel and board. There is established within the Department of Administration a division of personnel. There is established within the division of personnel a personnel board.

Sec. 39.25.040. Director of personnel. The head of the division of personnel is the director of personnel appointed by the commissioner of administration and responsible to the commissioner of administration for the execution of the duties and responsibilities imposed by this chapter and the rules adopted under this chapter. The director of personnel must have at least three years of practical working experience in the field of personnel administration.

Comment: There is no similar provision for the director of labor relations, either in the State Personnel Act or in the Public Employment Relations Act. In SB 256, the bill sponsored in 1979 by the Commission to create a Department of Employee Relations, the following language was proposed:

> The head of the division of labor relations is the director of labor relations appointed by the commissioner (of the Department of Employee Relations, in the bill). The director of labor relations shall have at least three years of full-time experience in labor relations, either in the public or private sector.
> The head of the division of personnel is the director of personnel, appointed by the commissioner. The director of personnel shall have at least three years of full-time experience in personnel administration either in the public or private sector. (See SB 256, page 1, line 23 to page 2, line 3.)

Sec. 39.25.050. Powers and duties. The director of personnel shall direct and supervise the administrative and technical activities of the division of personnel. In addition to the other duties imposed on him, he shall

(1) administer this chapter and the personnel rules;

(2) encourage and exercise leadership in the development of effective personnel administration in the state government;

(3) develop, in cooperation with appointing authorities and others, programs for the improvement of employee effectiveness and morale;

(4) attend meetings of the personnel board and serve as secretary for the board;

(5) establish and maintain a roster of employees subject to this chapter;

(6) prepare the rules, not inconsistent with this chapter, which are required to implement and administer this chapter;

(7) perform other lawful acts which he considers necessary or desirable to carry out the purposes of this chapter.

Sec. 39.25.060. Personnel board. (a) The personnel board is composed of three members appointed by the governor and confirmed by the legislature meeting in joint session. Initial appointments to the board are for terms of two, four, and six years. Subsequent appointments are for six-year terms. A vacancy in an unexpired term shall be filled by appointment by the governor for the remainder of the term. The appointment is subject to confirmation in the same manner as a full-term appointment.

(b) Members of the board shall be qualified electors of the state who are not employees or officers of the state. Not more than two members of the board may be members of the same political party.

(c) A board member holds office at the pleasure of the governor notwithstanding the member's term.

(d) A member of the board may receive a per diem allowance and transportation expenses incurred in carrying out his duties.

Sec. 39.25.070. Powers and duties of personnel board. In addition to the other duties imposed by this chapter, the personnel board shall

(1) approve or disapprove the original rules or a part of them within 60 days of their submission to the board and approve or disapprove amendment to the rules within 30 days of submission to the board, and in carrying out this duty, the board, if requested, may hold the public hearings it considers necessary;

(2) consider and act upon recommendations for the extension of the partially exempt service and the classified service as provided in § 130 of this chapter;

(3) hear and determine appeals by employees in the classified service as provided in § 170 of this chapter;

(4) establish its own rules of procedure (two members constitute a quorum for the transaction of business and two affirmative votes are required for final action on matters acted upon by the board);

(5) elect a chairman from its membership;

(6) have the power to administer oaths, subpoena witnesses, and compel the production of books and papers pertinent to a hearing authorized by this chapter.

Comment: The Personnel Board has become much less active since many of its functions have been taken over by collective bargaining agreements. However, the members of the board serve on the Labor Relations Agency and the Public Employee Retirement Board which, as a result of legislation passed last session, has been made responsible for setting policies and serving as an appeals board for both the supplemental employee benefit program and the deferred compensation program for state employees.

Sec. 39.25.080. Public records. The state personnel records, except those records which the rules require to be held confidential for reasons of public policy, are public records and are open to public inspection, subject to reasonable regulations as to the time and manner of inspection.

ARTICLE 2. COVERAGE OF PERSONNEL.

Sec. 39.25.090. Coverage of chapter. This chapter and the rules adopted under it apply to all positions in (1) the classified service, and (2) the partially exempt service as specifically provided.

Sec. 39.25.100. Classified service. The classified service consists of all positions in the state service not included in the exempt service or in the partially exempt service.

Sec. 39.25.110. Exempt service. The following positions in the state service constitute the exempt service and are exempt from the provisions of this chapter and the rules adopted under it:

Comment: This section provides no standards for the legislature to consider when adding new positions to the exempt service. For a list of positions in the exempt service on October 23, 1979, see Appendix B to the 1980 commission Report to the Legislature.

Sec. 39.25.120. Partially exempt service. The following positions in the state service constitute the partially exempt service and are subject to this chapter and the rules adopted under it only as specifically provided in this chapter. Positions in the partially exempt service shall be included in the position classification plan established under this chapter, and these positions shall be compensated according to the pay plan. Persons holding positions in the partially exempt service are not required to take examinations, qualify or earn a place on a register, nor are they eligible for a hearing by the personnel board in case of dismissal, demotion, or suspension. Positions in the partially exempt service are specifically exempt from the rule established under § 150(3)—(11), (14), (15), (18) of this chapter. They are also specifically exempt from §§ 170 and 180 of this chapter and as stated in § 160(a) of this chapter:

(1) assistant commissioners of the principal departments of the executive branch;

(2) the directors, division of personnel, division of public health, division of medical assistance, and those other directors of the major divisions of the principal departments of the executive branch as are specifically designated by the governor;

(3) attorney members of the staff of the Department of Law;

(4) one private secretary for each head of a principal department in the executive branch;

(5) all employees of the Office of the Governor and the lieutenant governor, including the staff of the governor's mansion and the attorney members of the staff of the public defender agency, but not including the nonattorney members of the staff of that agency;

(6) Repealed by § 4 ch 78 SLA 1971.

(7) Repealed by § 9 ch 47 SLA 1974.

(8) the director and deputy director of the division of tourism in the Department of Commerce and Economic Development;

(9) regional directors of the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities.

(10) the executive director and deputy director of the Alaska Public Utilities Commission.

(11) the state forester, in the Department of Natural Resources.

(12) the director, deputy director, staff legal counsel, and hearing officers of the Alaska Transportation Commission.

Comment: Partially exempt positions are specifically excluded from the Personnel Rules governing the following topics as set out in the indicated subsection of AS 29.25.150:

(3) employee selection methods, including open competitive exams;
(4) filling positions through promotion whenever practicable;
(5) eligible lists for appointment and promotion;
(6) a procedure for certifying eligibles;
(7) probation before an appointment becomes permanent;
(8) emergency appointments;
(9) nonpermanent appointments;
(10) provisional appointments;
(11) transfers from one department to another;
(14) reinstatement of a person who resigns in good standing;
(15) layoffs for lack of funds based on performance and seniority; and
(18) grievance procedure.

In addition, partially exempt positions are exempt from AS 39.25.170 (Hearings and Appeals upon Dismissal, Demotion or Suspension) and from AS 39.25.180 (Status of Present Employees).

The topics for which AS 39.25.150 directs that Personnel Rules be adopted and which do apply to the partially exempt service include:

(1) the classification plan
(2) the pay plan
(12) transfers from one area of the state to another
(13) payment of transportation costs when an employee transfers at the request of the employer
(16) performance records
(17) disciplinary suspension
(19) hours of work
(20) methods and procedures for overtime work and pay
(21) delegation of personnel duties to the principal departments;
(22) other rules which are necessary;
(23) employment preference rights to veterans;
(24) permanent part-time employment; and
(25) employment preference for the severely handicapped.

For a list of positions in the partially exempt service on September 27, 1979 see Appendix D of the 1980 commission Report to the Legislature.

Sec. 39.25.130. Extension of partially exempt and classified services. (a) After June 30, 1961, the personnel board, upon written recommendation of the commissioner of administration, may extend the partially exempt service to include any position which was in the classified service on April 19, 1960, which, in the judgment of the board:

(1) involves principal responsibility for the determination of policy;

(2) involves principal responsibility for the way in which policies are carried out; or

(3) involves responsibilities and duties of a type not susceptible to the ordinary recruiting and examining procedures.

(b) No positions may be included in the partially exempt service under this section if the inclusion is inconsistent with federal requirements for state agencies supported in whole or in part by federal funds.

(c) After June 30, 1961, the personnel board, upon written recommendation of the commissioner of administration, may extend the classified service to include any position which was in the partially exempt service on April 19, 1960.

Comment: A strict reading of this section would limit the authority of the Personnel Board to act only on positions which existed on April 19, 1960. It is my understanding that the board acts on positions created after that date as well. The commission may wish to propose an amendment to this section to clarify their authority.

ARTICLE 3. PERSONNEL RULES.

Sec. 39.25.140. Amendment of personnel rules. (a) The director of personnel shall prepare and submit to the commissioner of administration any proposed amendments to the personnel rules for all positions and employees subject to this chapter.

(b) The commissioner of administration shall review the amendments and submit them to the personnel board.

(c) At the time he submits the amendments to the personnel board, the commissioner of administration shall, by posting in public buildings throughout the state, give notice that the personnel board has the amendments under consideration. The amendments have the effect of law 30 days after they are submitted to the personnel board if not disapproved by the personnel board. The personnel board, if requested, may hold public hearings on the amendments.

(d) The rules may provide for exemptions and modifications which are necessary to assure the continuity of federal grants to agencies supported in whole or in part by federal contributions.

(e) The rules adopted under this chapter relate to the internal management of state agencies and their adoption is not subject to the Administrative Procedure Act. The rules may be published in the Alaska Administrative Register and Code for informational purposes.

Comment: In SB 256, the bill sponsored by the commission to create a Department of Employee Relations, amendments were proposed to this section to eliminate the exemption from the Administrative Procedures Act. (See SB 256, Section 14, page 5, line 28 to page 6, line 6).

Sec. 39.25.150. Scope of rules. The personnel rules shall provide for

(1) the preparation, maintenance, and revision by the director of personnel, subject to approval by the commissioner of administration and the personnel board, of a position classification plan for all positions in the classified and partially exempt services; in the position classification plan all positions shall be grouped together into classes on the basis of duties and responsibilities; the position classification plan shall include for each class of position an appropriate title, a description of the duties and responsibilities, training and experience qualifications, and other necessary position specifications;

(2) the preparation, maintenance, revision, and administration by the director of personnel of a pay plan for all positions in the classified and partially exempt services; the pay plan shall be prepared after consultation with the appointing authorities or their designee, and with representatives of interested employee groups; the pay plan shall be based upon the position classification plan, shall provide for fair and reasonable compensation for services rendered, and shall be based on the principle of like pay for like work; commissioners' salaries are not the maximum limit for the pay plan and in exceptional circumstances higher salaries may be specified; the pay plan may provide for uniform starting pay, increments, and area and time differentials; the pay plan prepared under this section may be amended, approved or disapproved by the legislature in regular or special session; after the pay plan is put into effect, no salary or wage payment may be made to a state employee covered by the pay plan unless the payment is in accordance with this chapter and the rules adopted under this chapter;

(3) the use of sound employee selection methods, including open competitive examinations to test the fitness of applicants for positions in the state service;

(4) promotions from within the state service when there are qualified candidates in the state service; vacancies shall be filled by promotion whenever practicable and in the best interest of the state service, and promotion shall be by competitive examination whenever possible; in considering promotions, applicants' qualifications, performance record, seniority, and conduct shall be evaluated;

(5) the establishment and maintenance of eligible lists for appointment and promotion; the names of eligible candidates shall be placed on eligible lists in order of their relative performance in the examinations;

(6) the procedure for certifying eligibles;

(7) a period of probation not to exceed one year before an appointment to a position becomes permanent, except that a permanent employee receiving a promotional appointment retains permanent status in the service and the job class from which appointed for the duration of the probationary period, and may be demoted to his former class without right of appeal, § 170 of this chapter notwithstanding, but if dismissed from the service he has appeal rights under § 170 of this chapter;

(8) emergency appointments to positions in the state service;

(9) [Effective January 1, 1980] nonpermanent appointments to positions in the state service in accordance with AS 39.25.195 — 39.25.200;

(10) provisional appointment without competitive examination when appropriate eligible lists are not available;

(11) transfers from one department to another and from another merit system jurisdiction to the state service;

(12) transfers from one area of the state to another;

(13) the payment of transportation costs when an employee transfers from one area to another at the request of the employer;

(14) the reinstatement of a person who resigns in good standing;

(15) layoffs for reason of lack of funds or work, abolition of positions, or material changes in duties or organization; both performance and seniority records shall be considered in the development of layoff orders;

(16) the development, maintenance, and utilization of employee performance records;

(17) the imposition of disciplinary suspension without pay for not longer than 30 days in any 12-month period;

(18) the procedures for review of disputed personnel actions and for resolving employee and interagency grievances;

(19) hours of work for all employees in the state service;

(20) methods and procedures covering overtime work and pay;

(21) the delegation, where feasible, of personnel responsibilities and duties to the principal departments of the executive branch;

(22) other rules and administrative regulations, not inconsistent with this chapter, which are necessary for its enforcement;

(23) the granting of employment preference rights to a veteran at each time he applies for employment, not within the area of promotion, when he possesses the necessary qualifications in the job classification for which he applies under this chapter; the term "veteran" means a person with 90 days or more active service in the armed forces of the United States who has been honorably discharged after having served during any period between April 6, 1917, and December 1, 1919, between September 16, 1940, and December 31, 1947, or between June 27, 1950, and November 7, 1975 [A DATE TO BE DETERMINED BY THE LEGISLATURE WHICH SHALL BE ON OR ABOUT SIX MONTHS AFTER THE TERMINATION OF HOSTILITIES INVOLVING FORCES OF THE UNITED STATES IN VIETNAM]; the term "disabled veteran" means a veteran who is rated by the United States Veterans' Administration as having at least a 10 percent service-connected disability; in the examination to determine the qualification of applicants for entrance into the classified service under merit system examination, five additional points shall be added to the passing grade of a veteran and 10 additional points shall be added to the passing grade of a disabled veteran; if a position in the classified service is eliminated, employees shall be released in accordance with rules which give due effect to all factors; if all job qualifications are equal, the veteran shall be given preference over the nonveteran and the veteran shall be kept on the job; [.]

(24) the employment of persons in permanent positions on a part-ti basis of 15 hours or more a week, including the employment of tv persons to fill one permanent full-time position; these employees shall be designated as permanent part-time employees.

(25) the granting of employment preference to severely handicapped persons; this includes the right to provisional appointment without competitive examination for periods up to four months and the granting of eligibility to a severely handicapped person provisionally appointed under the rules who demonstrates his ability to perform the job for permanent appointment without competitive examination; provisional employment under this paragraph may not exceed four months during a 12-month period; "severely handicapped" as used in this paragraph means persons certified by the director of the division of vocational rehabilitation to be severely handicapped.

Comment: This section sets out the topics which must be included in the Personnel Rules. Its requirements are general and permit the Division of Personnel flexibility in implementing them. The commission may wish to consider whether the statute gives sufficient guidance on the topics covered, whether additional topics should be required for inclusion in the Personnel Rules or whether there are some topics now included which should not be part of the Rules.

Sec. 39.25.153. Personnel rules for certain departments. (a) Each personnel officer for the departments of highways, fish and game, education, labor, and health and social services shall be permanently employed by and located within that department.

(b) The personnel officers specified in (a) of this section are authorized to adopt regulations providing for the activities specified in §§ 39.25.150(1)—(10), (13)—(18), (20) and (22) of this chapter for those classes of employees which are unique to the respective departments specified in (a) of this section. The initial determination as to which classes of employees are unique within the respective departments shall be made by the personnel officer in consultation with the commissioner of his department and subject to the approval of the director of personnel within the Department of Administration. Regulations adopted under this subsection relate to the internal management of state agencies and their adoption is not subject to the Administrative Procedure Act (AS 44.62).

(c) The personnel officers within the departments specified in (a) of this section are subject to all provisions of this chapter not in conflict with this section.

Comment: This section raises questions about the location of the personnel officers for departments. The commission debated whether personnel officers should be employed by the individual departments or by the Division of Personnel in its first year of operation. This section states that the personnel officers for some departments "shall be permanently employed by and located within that department." (Note that the reference within subsection (a) to the department of highways is obsolete.)

None of the personnel officers of the stated departments have used their authority to classify positions unique to their department or to adopt regulations concerning those positions. The director of personnel has the authority under AS 39.35.150(21) to delegate personnel responsibilities and duties to the principal departments and that has been the basis of the recent effort to delegate classification authority.

The commission may wish to consider whether the authority granted in this section should be extended to all of the principal departments or whether, in light of the authority to delegate given the director of personnel, this statute should be restricted in some manner.

The regulations which the personnel officers are empowered to adopt are exempted from the Administrative Procedures Act by subsection (b). In SB 256, the bill creating the Department of Employee Relations, this exemption was deleted.

> Sec. 39.25.155. Vocational substitution program. (a) It is the purpose of this section to establish a liberal system under which Alaskan residents not employed by the state who do not meet the minimum educational or experience criteria for state employment may demonstrate their abilities and achieve temporary or permanent state employee status. This program is intended for use primarily in remote or underemployed areas where the opportunity to gain required hiring qualifications does not exist, but where there is a local need for employees with certain vocational skills. The provisions of this section apply notwithstanding the provisions of § 150(3) of this chapter.
> (b) The director of personnel shall establish vocational standards as alternatives for educational or experience levels now required for nonprofessional occupational areas under the state personnel system and incorporate these alternatives into the state classification plan.
> (c) Applicants shall be placed on eligible lists for the vocational classification indicated in their applications submitted to the division of personnel in the order of their relative ranking based on an assessment of their technical ability, place of residence and without written examination. Aptitude or occupational tests may be given if a position requires a specific ability.
> (d) The director of personnel shall establish rates of pay for the selected vocational substitution classifications in relation to the beginning entry classification pay rates. However, vocational substitution personnel may not be classified lower than one pay range below the range to which the classified position is allocated.
> (e) The director of personnel shall embody a concept combined of technical ability, place of residence, local hire and area unemployment in the personnel rules to accomplish the intent of this section.
> (f) Applicants selected under this section are subject to the provisions of § 160 of this chapter.
> (g) In this section "resident" means a person who has been domiciled in Alaska for at least one year immediately before filing his application.

Comment: The state has created job classes to meet the requirements of this section, but, with the advent of collective bargaining, the Labor, Trades and Crafts bargaining unit has taken over most of the positions which would fall within the intent of the statute and their hiring system is now used for employing people.

ARTICLE 4. PROHIBITIONS

Sec. 39.25.160. Generally. (a) A state employee may be a member of a national, state, or local political party, may take part in a political campaign, and may exercise his right as a citizen to express his opinion, register his party preference, if any, serve as a delegate to party conventions, and cast his vote. This section also permits appointment, nomination, or election to nonpartisan public office in a local government unit. However, this section may not be construed as permitting an employee in the classified service or in those exempt positions named in § 110(3) of this chapter to take an active part in the management of a political party above the precinct level.

(b) No person may give, render, pay, offer, solicit, or accept money, service, or other valuable thing in connection with an appointment, promotion, or advantage in a position in the classified service.

(c) No person may require an assessment, subscription, contribution, or service for a political party from an employee in the classified service.

(d) No person may seek or attempt to use a political party endorsement in connection with an appointment or promotion in the classified service.

(e) An employee in the classified service who seeks nomination or becomes a candidate for state or national elective political office shall immediately resign his position in the state service.

(f) No action affecting the employment status of an employee in the classified service or applicant for a position in the classified service, including appointment, promotion, demotion, suspension, or removal, may be taken or withheld for racial, political or religious reasons.

(g) No person may make a false statement, certificate, mark, rating, or report with regard to a test, certification, or appointment made under this chapter or in any manner commit a fraud preventing the impartial execution of this chapter and the personnel rules adopted under this chapter.

(h) No person may defeat, deceive, or obstruct another person in his right to examination, eligibility, certification, appointment, or promotion under this chapter.

Comment: The exempt employees referred to in subsection (a) who are not permitted to manage a political party above the precinct level are employees of the state court system and employees and members of the Judicial Council.

Note that the prohibitions contained in subsections (b) through (f) apply only to classified employees.

ARTICLE 5. HEARINGS.

Sec. 39.25.170. Hearings and appeals. (a) An employee in the classified service who is dismissed, demoted, or suspended for more than 30 working days in a 12-month period shall be notified in writing by his employer of the action and the reason for it and may be heard publicly by the personnel board and may be represented by counsel at the hearing. In order to be heard, the complainant shall request a hearing within 15 days of dismissal, demotion or suspension.

(b) If the board finds that the action complained of was taken for a political, racial or religious reason, or in violation of this chapter or the rules adopted under this chapter, the officer or employee shall be reinstated to his position without loss of pay or leave benefit for the period of his dismissal, demotion, or suspension. In all other cases, the board shall report its findings and recommendations to both parties.

Comment: This section has been interpreted to apply only to permanent classified employees. The courts have declared that neither provisional nor probationary employees have a right to appeal under this section and the Division of Personnel has extended that reasoning to apply also to temporary (and presumably non-permanent) employees as well. In any case, since employee disputes are now governed by collective bargaining contracts for all union members, appeals through this statute are unlikely to occur.

ARTICLE 6. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

Sec. 39.25.180. Status of present employees. (a) A state employee with permanent status on April 19, 1960, under the merit system applying to the agencies receiving federal grants-in-aid is continued without examination and is not required to serve a new probationary period.

(b) A state employee with probationary status on April 19, 1960, under the merit system applying to the agencies receiving federal grants-in-aid, is continued without examination, but must satisfactorily complete his probationary period in order to achieve permanent status.

(c) An employee under the jurisdiction of this chapter and holding positions in the state service on April 19, 1960, may be continued in his position without examination if he meets the minimum qualifications for his position and if he has been in the state service for at least six months. An employee who does not meet the minimum qualifications for a position is subject to examination under this chapter and the personnel rules.

(d) A federal civil service employee may transfer to a position in the state service without examination if he meets the minimum qualifications for his position and has been on permanent status under federal civil service for not less than six months immediately preceding his transfer. The employee may be required to serve a probationary period of employment.

(e) This section does not preclude the reclassification or reallocation of a position held by an incumbent as provided in this chapter and the rules adopted under this chapter.

Sec. 39.25.190. Conflict with federal requirements. If any part of this chapter conflicts with federal requirements which are a condition precedent to the allocation of federal funds to the state, the conflicting part of this chapter is inoperative solely to the extent of the conflict and with respect to the agency directly affected, and does not affect the operation of the remainder of this chapter in its application.

ARTICLE 6A. NONPERMANENT EMPLOYEES.

Sec. 39.25.195. Appointment of nonpermanent employees [Effective January 1, 1980]. (a) An individual may not be appointed as a nonpermanent employee in the state service without prior written approval of the director except as an emergency employee.

(b) Every appointment to state service, except an emergency appointment, shall be made from an applicable eligible list or dispatching register unless in appropriate circumstances the director has waived this requirement.

(c) No appointment of a nonpermanent employee may be made unless the request for authorization is approved by the director, adequate money is available for the anticipated duration of the appointment, and the director determines that

(1) the hiring department or agency has certified that the legislature has appropriated money for the work in question knowing that it is to be performed by a nonpermanent employee;

(2) the hiring department or agency has certified that there is an immediate need to fill an authorized, permanent position and it is impractical either to establish the position or to make certification within a reasonable time;

(3) the hiring department or agency has certified that an immediate need exists and the director determines that the hiring department or agency could not reasonably have been expected to anticipate and meet through the creation of a permanent position; or

(4) the hiring department or agency has certified that a program or project exists and the director determines that the need for employees can most appropriately be met through the use of program or project employees.

(d) The director may not authorize the appointment of a nonpermanent employee if he determines that

(1) the need for the nonpermanent employee can practicably be met through establishing and filling an authorized permanent position;

(2) the need for the nonpermanent employee would be more appropriately met through an emergency appointment; or

(3) the need for the nonpermanent employee is not immediate and could reasonably have been anticipated and met by the appointing authority through the creation and filling of a permanent position.

(e) A nonpermanent employee may not be placed on the state payroll unless the director has first approved the personnel action for the employee's appointment.

(f) Nothing in this section prevents the director from adopting regulations to provide for timely substitution for permanent employees on medical or personal leave or other situations in which the appointment of an emergency or permanent employee would be inappropriate or when delay in making a temporary replacement would cause serious disruption.

(g) A department or agency may not use nonpermanent employees to perform a given work assignment for more than 120 calendar days in a 12-month period. A department or agency may not employ any individual as a nonpermanent employee for more than 120 calendar days in a 12-month period. In appropriate circumstances the director may authorize an extension of the limit imposed by this subsection if he finds that there is an immediate need for the extension. The limit imposed by this subsection does not apply to program or project employees or to substitutes appointed under (f) of this section.

(h) The director shall present a report on nonpermanent and emergency hire practices in state government to the legislature within the first 10 days of each regular legislative session. A hiring department or agency shall certify to the director within 15 working days following the appointment its reasons for appointing an emergency employee. The report shall include information on the number of nonpermanent employees authorized under this section and the number of emergency employees hired in each department, a description of the procedures used in authorizing the hiring of nonpermanent employees, and any recommendations for legislation required to implement the intent of this section.

Sec. 39.25.197. Termination of nonpermanent employees [Effective January 1, 1980]. When the director determines that an employee has been appointed as a result of a false certification under AS 39.25.195, he shall immediately notify the head of the affected department or agency in writing and the department or agency shall terminate the employee from state service within one working day after receipt of notice.

Sec. 39.25.198. Civil liability [Effective January 1, 1980]. A person who makes a false certificate under AS 39.25.195 is personally liable in a civil action to an individual terminated under AS 39.25.197 for any resultant damages and for punitive damages of an amount not to exceed three times the gross monthly salary at which the nonpermanent employee was appointed.

Sec. 39.25.200. Definitions [Effective January 1, 1980]. In AS 39.25.195 — 39.25.200,

(1) "certified" means signed by the head of a department or agency or by a responsible person designated by him;

(2) "director" means the director of the division of personnel and labor relations;

(3) "emergency employee" means an employee appointed for a period not to exceed 30 calendar days, whose appointment was made under conditions requiring immediate action to carry on work that is required in the public interest;

(4) "nonpermanent employee" means a person who is employed in state service in a position which is not in the exempt or partially exempt service and who is not a permanent or an emergency employee;

(5) "permanent employee" means an employee who has been appointed to an authorized, permanent full-time or part-time or permanent seasonal position in the classified service and who is in the process of completing or has successfully completed the required probationary service in that position;

(6) "program or project employee" means a nonpermanent employee, including a student intern, who is employed in state service with prior written understanding that employment in that position will continue for at most the duration of a specified program or project which is not a regular and continuing function of a department or agency and which has an established probable date of termination.

Comment: The commission may wish to review the state's experience with the nonpermanent law to consider whether changes should be proposed. The law has not yet been in effect for a full year and figures comparing its operation with the state's experience under the old laws and regulations for temporary employees are not yet readily available.

ARTICLE 7. GENERAL PROVISIONS.

Sec. 39.25.210. Penalties. (a) A person who wilfully violates a provision of this chapter or of the personnel rules adopted under this chapter is guilty of a misdemeanor.

(b) A state employee who is convicted of a misdemeanor under this chapter or the personnel rules adopted under this chapter immediately forfeits his office or position.

Sec. 39.25.220. Short title. This chapter may be cited as the State Personnel Act.

OTHER RELATED STATUTES

Comment: The statute prohibiting nepotism is narrower than the Personnel Rules on the same topic and has been determined by the Attorney General to restrict valid implementation of the Rule. Therefore, the commission may wish to propose legislation which would support the Rule in full.

STATUTE:

Sec. 39.10.010. Nepotism prohibited. It is unlawful for a person who is the spouse of or is related by blood within and including the second degree of kindred to the executive head of a principal state department or agency to be employed in that department or agency.

PERSONNEL RULE:

13 09.0 Nepotism

13 09.1 No person may be employed in a position in any agency who is the spouse of or is related by blood or marriage within and including the second degree of kindred to the appointing authority of the agency.

13 09.2 No person may be employed in a position in any division or subdivision of any agency who is the spouse of or is related by blood or marriage within and including the second degree of kindred to the head of the division or subdivision of the agency.

13 09.3 No person may be employed in a position in any agency who is the spouse of or is related by blood or marriage within and including the second degree of kindred to any other employee in the agency without the expressed approval of the appointing authority and the Director.

RE: Exempt Status of Vessel Employees

Dear Senator Ray:

In response to your inquiry with respect to the classification of vessel employees of the Marine Highway System the following information is provided.

In the 1962 Legislative Session enabling legislation was passed permitting the Commissioner of Public Works to deal with labor unions for the manning of ferry vessels that would be operating in the State's expanded system. Prior to this time the State had operated two small shuttle ferrys between Haines, Alaska and Tee Harbor north of Juneau.

The manning of those two vessels, the M/V Chilkoot and the M/V Chilkat, was accomplished by contracting with the vessel operator Captain Gitkof, and he in turn contracted with the Inlandboatmen's Union to provide qualified Engineers, deck hands, cooks, and Mates.

In passing the enabling legislation that established the first collective bargaining relationship between the State and it's employees the Legislature recognized several unique circumstances under which the vessels would have to operate.

1. The vessels would be under the jurisdiction of the United States Coast Guard for safe operation, navigational laws, manning, and examination and certification of vessel personnel.

District Union, Seafarers International Union of North America

All employees would be required to possess U.S. Merchant Mariners documents endorsed for the proficiency ratings required by the United States Coast Guard Certificate of Inspection.

2. All Merchant Mariners (American Seamen) are wards of the Federal Court and covered by several Acts of Congress covering their employment rights, health, safety, and other conditions of employment.

3. The ships of the Marine Highway System would operate around the clock with schedules subject to wind and tidal conditions leaving little room for delays or layovers of any length of time. This requirement would demand that qualified personnel be available for immediate dispatch to the vessels should the need arise for a relief for any of the crew members onboard since under Coast Guard regulations the vessel may not sail without the proper complement of personnel.

4. All employees recruited from the Maritime Unions would be covered by private Taft-Hartley health and welfare, and retirement trust, and would not automatically participate in the Public Employees Retirement System, or State Health and Welfare benefit coverage without a considerable loss of benefits.

5. Merchant Seamen, Engineers, and Mates recruited from the private sector would be difficult to obtain if the wage classification system of the State was adhered to.

6. Inclusion of vessel employees under the State Personnel rules was determined to be undesirable in the areas of recruitment, assignment, and promotion of personnel as the Union contracts provided the Employer more flexibilty in these areas. This flexibilty is an absolute necessity for the type of operation the Marine Transporation vessels are involved in.

None of the above circumstances has changed since the inception of the expanded system in 1963. In review of the above I can find no substantive compelling motivation for changing the status of Marine Highway System employees from the exempt service to classified service and therefore I recommend no change in status.

Sincerely,

INLAND BOATMEN'S UNION

MEMORANDUM

June 21, 1983

TO: House Labor & Commerce Committee

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer
Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: CS for Senate Bill No. 55 (Rules)
Relating to Collective Bargaining

The Public Employment Relations Act provides that the monetary terms of any agreement entered into between the state and an employee representative are subject to funding through legislative appropriation. AS 23.40.215. The PERA does not set out a system of legislative review for the monetary terms. If the legislature is dissatisfied with the negotiated terms, there is no formal vehicle to explain to the parties to the agreement (the Administration and the employee union or association) the substance of the legislature's concerns. Therefore, the parties do not have a concrete set of limitations from which to work should they decide to renegotiate the original agreement. Furthermore, legislative delay and rejection of negotiated contracts has, in the past, led to the calling of a Special Session, which is an expensive way to resolve the issue.

The Blue Ribbon Commission recommends legislation to encourage legislative review of collective bargaining agreements early in the session. If the legislature is dissatisfied with the monetary terms, the parties may choose to renegotiate before the session adjourns with a clear understanding of the legislature's concerns.

Bill Analysis

Line 9

The first section requires that the monetary terms of a collective bargaining agreement be submitted to the legislature within 10 days of agreement by the parties. If the parties reach an agreement while the legislature is not in session, then the monetary terms are to be submitted within 10 days of the convening of the next regular session. The legislature is given 60 days to consider the agreement and express its opinion by concurrent resolution.

Line 17 — Any approval given by the legislature is a "nonbinding, advisory expression of legislative intent." This language makes clear that the resolution does not take the place of an appropriation bill to fund the contract and permits the legislature to change its mind, should circumstances warrant.

Line 19 — If the legislature dissapproves the negotiated agreement, the parties may resume negotiations.

Line 23 — The second section adds a definition of "monetary terms of an agreement" to the Public Employment Relations Act to set out those items which are subject to legislative review.

Line 29 — The third section provides for an immediate effective date.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Senate Finance Committee

FROM: Senator Vic Fischer

RE: CSSB 55 (Finance)

DATE: June 2, 1983

SB 55 was before the committee on May 19. The consensus of the committee, at that time, was to review committee substitutes to address constitutional and other problems.

Two CS versions of SB 55 are attached. Version 1 of CSSB 55 (Finance) follows the suggestion made by Senator Mulcahy that the legislature make a positive action to express agreement of the monetary terms. Version 2 of CSSB 55 (Finance) was drafted by the Department of Law at the request of Senator Ray, and follows more closely the original intent of the bill.

Both make some changes from the Judiciary CS. The substantive changes are:

a) In both proposed committee substitutes, the Department of Administration submits the monetary terms only after the agreement has been entered into; in the Judiciary version of SB 55, the monetary terms would be submitted to the legislature before the state and an organization entered into an agreement.

b) Both proposed committee substitutes add a sentence that legislative action taken by resolution on the monetary terms of an agreement is a non-binding advisory expression of legislative intent.

c) Both committee substitutes also change the period of time in which the legislature can act on the submitted terms from 30 to 60 days.

d) Both committee substitutes contain a provision enabling parties to resume negotiations if the monetary terms are not supported by the legislature.

The differences between the two proposed committee substitutes are:

a) Version 1 requires an approval by concurrent resolution to express that the monetary terms of an agreement are acceptable to the legislature (lines 14-17). In version 2, the monetary terms of the agreement shall be considered acceptable to the legislature, unless a concurrent resolution expressing rejection of the monetary terms of the agreement is passed (lines 14- 18).

b) Regarding negotiations, version 1 of the bill states that the parties may resume negotiations if the legislature does not pass a concurrent resolution approving the monetary terms of the agreement (lines 19-23). Version 2 of the bill states that the parties may resume negotiations if the legislature passes a concurrent resolution rejecting the monetary terms of the agreement (lines 20-23).

Dear Senator Ray:

Attached please find a proposed substitute for CSSB 55 which does not raise the legal concerns identified in our letter of May 18, 1983. As you will note, the substitute provides for the prompt submission of the monetary terms of an agreement to the legislature. The legislature, acting in its advisory capacity, will be considered to approve the monetary terms, unless a contrary concurrent resolution is adopted within 30 days. Any action under this new review procedure does not disturb any legislatures prerogatives with respect to the funding of an agreement.

We apologize that the Department of Law did not provide you with a prepared substitute for SB 55 at an earlier date. If you have any questions, please feel free to call.

Thursday, May 26th

Senator Ray -

Two Committee Substitutes have been prepared for SB 55 - the collective bargaining bill. One comes from Jon Rubini of the Attorney General's office and has been sent to you already. The other was prepared at Senator Mulcahy's request. There are some problems with this second CS, the major one being that it provides that a collective bargaining agreement may take effect only if the monetary terms are approved by the legislature within 60 days of being submitted.

The problem with this approach is that, in fact, the legislature may fail to meet the 60-day deadline but still be willing to fund the agreements. This leaves employee representatives and the executive branch to second guess whether the legislature has serious disagreements with the terms proposed or whether there were timing problems which delayed legislative action. It ~~takes~~ reduces the pressure ~~to act off (the legislature)~~ on to make its views known promptly.

Should I talk with Senator Mulcahy's office about the CS he is proposing?

RE: CSSB 55 (Jud)

DATE: May 18, 1983

CSSB 55 (Jud) adds a new subsection to AS 23.40.210.

Section 1 Lines 9-16 states that when a proposed agreement is reached between an organization and the state, the agreement shall be submitted to the legislature within 10 days after agreement or 10 days after the convening of the legislative session for consideration of the monetary terms of the agreement.

Lines 17-19 state that the agreement may take effect if the monetary terms of the agreement are not rejected by concurrent resolution within 30 days after submission of the agreement to the legislature.

Section 2 provides for an immediate effective date.

SB 55 was waived to the Judiciary committee from the State Affairs committee because there seemed to be some problems with the bill that could best be taken care of in that committee. No senators in the Senate State Affairs Committee disagreed with the concept of the bill.

The Judiciary Committee adopted a Committee Substitute which called for a proposed agreement to be submitted to the legislature as opposed to a signed agreement as outlined in the original version of the bill.

I requested an opinion from the Attorney General for possible constitutional and other legal problems that might be associated with this bill. The opinion of May 18, 1983 is enclosed in your backup material. John Rubini from the Attorney General's office will be here to testify on these constitutional problems.

The Department of Administration position is also included in your backup. Also included in your backup is the original version of the bill.

POSITION PAPER
CS SB 55 (Judiciary)

This bill would add a new subsection to the Public Employment Relations Act providing: 1) for submission of a "proposed" collective bargaining agreement which has been "approved by the organization and the State" to the Legislature within ten (10) days "after the agreement of the parties", or ten (10) days after the regular session convenes; 2) that the Legislature is to consider the agreement's monetary terms; 3) that if the Legislature does not reject the monetary terms of the agreement by concurrent resolution within thirty (30) days of the agreement's submission the agreement may take effect.

Amendments to this bill have so altered it as to cause us to withdraw our conditional support for the original version. That support was based upon a belief that the underlying objective of the bill was a worthy one, and was achievable with minor modifications to the bill's language. But the committee substitute places the original objective out of reach.

We have two major concerns with the present version of the bill. First, we believe that the legislature may by the provisions of the bill, be unduly restricting its own actions. Second, the bill now seems to involve the legislature in the actual collective bargaining process! We strongly oppose any requirement that the parties submit a "proposed" agreement to the legislature for approval before actually entering into the agreement. Since the legislature's role is to fund or not fund the monetary terms of the agreement, legislative involvement prior to actual agreement would be premature.

Re: CSSB 55 -- Collective bargaining agreements
Our file no.: 366-612-83

Dear Senator Fischer:

In your letter of May 18, 1983, you have asked whether the procedures proposed in CSSB 55 to effectuate approval of a collective bargaining agreement raise constitutional concerns. As we discussed below, the bill raises substantial constitutional questions and, as a consequence, will almost undoubtedly foster extensive litigation. In light of the limited time available for our response and the complexity of the matter, we limit our response to identifying the legal questions posed by CSSB 55.

As you know, present law provides that the monetary terms of an agreement do not take effect without legislative approval. AS 23.40.215. In practical application, monetary terms take effect only when an appropriation to fund the agreement is adopted. The effective dates of other provisions in an agreement are not, however, contingent on legislative review and approval. CSSB 55 proposes, in contrast, that monetary terms of an agreement would take effect unless the legislature adopts within 30 days a concurrent resolution which disapproves of the monetary terms. Further, the effective date for other items in the agreement would be contingent on the monetary terms taking effect through legislative inaction.

We first question whether CSSB 55 proposes a permissible exercise of legislative powers. The novel feature of the legislation is the significance of the legislature's failure to act. In State v. A.L.I.V.E. Voluntary, 606 P.2d 769 (Alaska 1980), the Alaska Supreme Court considered the constitutionality of a statute, AS 44.62.320(a), which provided for the annullment of administrative regulations through adoption of a concurrent resolution. The Court observed that "[t]he Alaska Constitution defines with specificity the mechanics of legislation. Each provision has a purpose 'designed to engender a responsible legislative process worthy of the public trust.'" Id. at 772, quoting Plumley v. Hale, 594 P.2d 497, 500 (Alaska 1979). With respect to the regulation annullment procedure at issue, the court concluded that the adoption of a concurrent resolution was an impermissible method to exercise legislative power. Indeed, since CSSB 55 infers legislative action through an absence of action, the bill arguably exacerbates the procedural deficiencies identified at length in A.L.I.V.E. Voluntary. Further, the A.L.I.V.E. Voluntary court also noted that where the legislature acts through the adoption of a concurrent resolution, the governor is deprived of an opportunity to exercise a veto of the legislative action. That concern is equally applicable to the procedures established under CSSB 55.

The bill also raises substantial questions with respect to the appropriation process. Article 9, section 13 of the Alaska Constitution provides that "no money shall be withdrawn from the treasury except in accordance with appropriations made by law." Clearly, legislative inaction cannot suffice to permit the expenditure of public money without an appropriation. The bill, therefore, should not be construed to permit a "de facto appropriation" of public money to fund the agreement. And, if the monetary terms of an agreement became effective through legislative inaction, the terms of any outstanding appropriations would be determinative of whether the executive branch had authority to expend public money to fund the agreement. Of course, as a practical matter the use of a preexisting appropriation may require the dismissal of public employees to provide sufficient money to fund the agreement. A related, and more difficult problem is that once the monetary terms are effective, contractual obligations are established. We cannot opine with any certainty what ramifications would follow were the state in the difficult posture of being subject to contractural obligations, yet without the requisite appropriation to enable the expenditure of public money. We note that it is arguable that the legislature's continuing obligation to fund the monetary terms of an agreement pursuant to AS 23.40.215 may, ultimately, be compromised in this instance.

If you have any further questions on this matter, please feel free to call.

MEMORANDUM

March 3, 1983

TO: Senate Finance Committee

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer Teresa B Cramer
Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: CS SB 55 (Judiciary) - Collective Bargaining

The Public Employment Relations Act provides that the monetary terms of any agreement entered into between the state and an employee representative are subject to funding through legislative appropriation. AS 23.40.215. The Act does not set out how the legislative review should occur.

The Blue Ribbon Commission has discussed the problems which can arise if the Legislature fails to act expeditiously on collective bargaining agreements submitted to it. Delay followed by legislative rejection can preclude the parties from completing any renegotiations before the Legislature adjourns. There would then be no funding for the new agreement and the Legislature might have to convene in special session, an expensive alternative.

The commission recommends that legislation be adopted to encourage prompt legislative review of collective bargaining agreements.

Bill Analysis

Page 1 Line 9 — The first section of the bill requires that proposed agreements be submitted to the Legislature within 10 days after the parties have agreed for consideration of the monetary terms. The Legislature then has 30 days to review those terms.

Line 17 — If the Legislature finds the terms unacceptable, then it may reject the agreement by concurrent resolution. If the Legislature fails to act within 30 days, then the contracts will be considered to have legislative approval. The proposed legislation does not address the introduction or passage of an appropriation bill funding the agreements.

Line 20 — The second section of the bill contains an immediate effective date clause.

SB 56: Nepotism in state employment

History - IN THE SENATE

State Affairs: There is no history. The bill had no hearings.

Note: This bill is unlikely to move, partly because Nancy Groshek, Sen. Vic Fischer's aide, does not believe in nepotism restructions.

Companion bill: HB 49 began as the companion bill to SB 56. It had hearings in State Affairs (which adopted a committee substitute) and in Judiciary. See notes and back-up information in that file if the Senate version ever moves.

MEMORANDUM

January 25, 1983

TO: Senate State Affairs Committee

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer TeresaBCramer

SUBJECT: Senate Bill 56 - Nepotism in State Government

The existing statute prohibiting nepotism in state employment forbids only the employment of anyone related to the executive head of a department or agency. AS 39.10.010. The Personnel Rule is more extensive, prohibiting the employment of relatives of the head of a division or subdivision within that division or subdivision. In addition, the Rule prohibits the employment of two related persons in the same agency unless express approval is given by both the appointing authority and the Director of Personnel.

The scope of the Personnel Rule is broader than the statutory authority granted in AS 39.10.010. In addition, the rule-making authority given to the Personnel Board by the State Personnel Act may not extend to nepotism, since the nepotism statute is placed outside the Act. The Attorney General has advised the Division of Personnel that the nepotism rule may exceed the scope of statutory authority. A lawsuit has been filed challenging the Department of Transportation's implementation of nepotism prohibitions.

The Blue Ribbon Commission recommends that legislation prohibiting nepotism in state employment be adopted to provide statutory authority for the Personnel Rule. The prohibition against employing relatives does limit the opportunities for some Alaskans to find state jobs. The disadvantage to those people should be weighed against the appearance of impropriety and favoritism which is created by people working for a close relative. Problems can also arise if relatives are working in the same office so it is appropriate that the hiring decision be scrutinized with the potential for personnel problems in mind.

Bill Analysis

Line 9 The first section of the proposed legislation codifies the Personnel Rule. The first paragraph retains the existing nepotism prohibition and extends it to include relatives of deputy or assistant commissioners. The prohibition against employing a person related to the executive head of an agency applies to all legislative, judicial and executive branch agencies.

Line 17 The second paragraph adds new langage based on the Personnel Rule to prohibit appointment of a relative of the head of a division within that division. It applies to positions in the legislative, judicial or executive branch.

Line 22 The third paragraph prohibits employment of two relatives within the same executive branch department or agency unless the appointing authority and the Director of Personnel approve the second appointment in writing.

In each of the paragraphs, relatives include spouses and persons within the "second degree of kindred", which the Personnel Rules define as:

> father, mother, son, daughter, brother, sister, husband, wife, grandfather, grandmother, grandson, granddaughter, uncle and aunt including those involving half or step relationships.

Line 29 The second section of the proposed legislation provides for an immediate effective date.

SUBJECT: Nepotism Regulations

I received a telephone call from a state employee concerning the effect of nepotism regulations. She reported that a man wanted to work for the Juneau Job Service Office but was told that he could not while his niece by marriage was employed there as a secretary. She had recently moved to Juneau and he had met her only a few weeks before. The niece found another secretarial position so he was hired. There would not have been a direct supervisory relationship between the man and his niece. The caller also said that she had thought of transferring from Juneau to Ketchikan but that she could not because her sister-in-law already worked in the Job Service Office there. She did not believe their personal relationship would have affected their work.

The Personnel Rules permit the departmental appointing authority and the Director of Personnel to waive the prohibition in these situations. Apparently the Job Service Center policy was against requesting nepotism waivers.

She has observed, however, that personal relationships can cause employee problems. A person and his mistress were employed in an office where she worked and when they were having a quarrel outside work it affected their behavior at work and caused tension in the whole office. Nepotism regulations do not address this situation at all.

CSSB 57: Limiting the adjustment of retirement benefits

History - IN THE SENATE

State Affairs	Hearings 2/8 & 4/19. Committee Substitute adopted at later meeting. Bill passed out of committee 4/26. Committee Substitute makes some technical language changes and adds a new paragraph providing that overpayments will be waived only if the members had no reasonable grounds to believe that the benefit paid was in error (i.e. a letter saying the benefit amount would be at one level and then a check for a different (and larger) amount.) See my memo to Senator Ray dated March 7 for a detailed listing of the changes.
FLOOR	5/5/83 - passed the Senate 19-0-1. Reconsideration (from Senator Halford) not taken up.

IN THE HOUSE

State Affairs	Hearing 5/13/83. Passed out with individual recommendations - hearing was originally scheduled for the House version of the bill (HB 51) and the committee added this bill at the last minute. I have not done a memo on the CS.
Rules	Referred to Rules on 5/17. Someone should probably prepare a short explanation of the bill for use by whoever carries the bill on the floor (if it gets to the floor).

Companion bill: HB 51 remains in House State Affairs and should be inactive since this bill moved.

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer TBC

SUBJECT: CSSB 57 - Limiting the Adjustment of Retirement Benefits

I have reviewed the Committee Substitute prepared by the Division of Retirement and Benefits. It makes a number of language changes which appear to be uncontroversial:

SB 57 Reference	Change Made
Lines 11 & 19	Substitute "recovery" for "repayment".
Lines 14-15, 16, 22 & 24	Delete "change or". Phrase reads "notified of the error".
Lines 14 & 16-17	Delete "or teacher". Phrase reads "the member or beneficiary". (Note that teachers are included in the definition of members.)
Lines 16 & 24	Substitute "the result of erroneous information supplied by" for "caused by".
Lines 22 & 24	Substitute "member" for "employee".

The proposed Committee Substitute also makes substantive changes, some of which may be undesirable:

Lines 17 & 25	Adds a new paragraph to provide that the overpayment will be waived only if the member or beneficiary had no reasonable grounds to believe that the benefit was in error.

NO!

SB 57 Reference	Change Made
Lines 17 & 26	Adds a new subsection which:
CSSB 57 Page 1, Line 18 Page 2, Line 10	1. Requires the administrator to report any overpayments waived to the appropriate retirement board.
CSSB 57 Page 1, Line 21 Page 2, Line 13	2. Provides that if the board finds that the conditions requiring waiver of the overpayment are not met then the administrator begins collecting for the overpayment.
CSSB 57 Page 1, Line 25 Page 2, Line 17	3. Provides that the member may appeal to the board for waiver of the overpayment.
CSSB 57 Page 1, Line 27 Page 2, Line 20	4. Provides that there will be no adjustment of the member's retirement benefit during any appeal.
Lines 26 & 28	The Committee Substitute deletes Section 2, paragraph (3), which limits application of the bill to credited service with the state. Therefore, the limitations against collection of overpayments would apply also to municipalities and other employers participating in PERS.
Page 1, Line 29	The Committee Substitute deletes Section 3, which made the bill retroactive to July 1, 1979. According to information from the division, there are no appeals pending.

What should the Blue Ribbon Commission respond to the Committee Substitute?

Dear Senator Fischer:

At the February 8 meeting of the Senate State Affairs Committee on SB 57, I was asked to provide information on appeals for a waiver of adjustment in the Public Employees' Retirement System (PERS) and the Teachers' Retirement System (TRS) over the last few years. The enclosed chart gives basic information on the seven appeals for waiver of overpayment that have come before the boards since July 1, 1979.

As you can see, more than two years had elapsed in every case before the error was discovered and in every case except one the board waived the adjustment of the overpayment. None of these errors occurred after 1976.

I have also been asked to prepare a draft committee substitute which would address the division's main concerns and still preserve the primary intent of SB 57. I have enclosed such a draft but suggest that the committee might wish to delay action briefly to provide members of the two retirement boards an opportunity to comment.

Please let me know if you have an further questions or would like more information.

MEMORANDUM

January 25, 1983

TO: Senate State Affairs Committee

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer Teresa B Cramer
Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: Senate Bill 57 - Limiting the Adjustment of Retirement Benefits

On several occasions the Blue Ribbon Commission has heard testimony about problems created by overpayments of retirement benefits. Retired state employees may have substantial difficulties if they are required to repay retirement benefits improperly received because of errors made by the Division of Retirement and Benefits or because of a change in law. The commission is proposing legislation to limit the authority of the division to collect amounts paid improperly through no fault of the beneficiary or retired person if the error is not corrected within two years.

One woman testified to the commission that before she retired she asked the division to verify her years of credited service. Several years later a court-ordered change in retirement regulations reduced the number of years for which she received credit. Her employment with the University of Alaska could no longer be counted as credited service in PERS. As a result she had received more than $5000 in benefits to which she was not entitled. The division reduced her benefit to the correct amount and began withholding an additional $100 per month to be applied to the overpayment. She appealed to the Public Employees Retirement Board asking that collection of the overpayment be waived.

Both the Public Employees' Retirement Board and the Teachers' Retirement Board have authority to waive collection of overpayments, but the uncertainty of an appeal can cause considerable stress to people on fixed incomes. Both boards are required to determine whether there would be undue hardship imposed by requiring repayment. AS 14.25.175 and AS 39.35.522. In establishing whether there is financial hardship, the entire family financial situation is considered, not just the resources of the petitioner.

The commission recommends that a two-year statute of limitations be placed on the collection of overpayments which resulted from errors which were not caused by the retired state employee. Two years provides ample opportunity for the division to audit its records and correct any errors. After that period, a retired person should not be required to repay benefits erroneously received if he or she did not cause the error. The division would still correct the amount of future benefits paid to the retired person.

Bill Analysis

Page 1 Line 9	The first section of the proposed legislation adds the two-year statute of limitations to the Teachers' Retirement System.
Line 18	The second section adds the same provision to the Public Employees' Retirement System. The amendment to PERS is applied only to state employees because the Blue Ribbon Commission considered that requiring other participating employers to pay for errors made by the state was inappropriate.
Line 29	The third section makes the bill effective retroactively to July 1, 1979, in order to apply to those individuals whose situations came to the commission's attention.
Page 2 Line 2	The fourth section of the bill contains an immediate effective date clause.

SB 58: Prohibiting duplicate Teachers' Retirement benefits for Alaska BIA service

History - IN THE SENATE

HESS: Hearing 2/7/83. Ken Humphries, Director of Retirement & Benefits, testified that the division had no need for the legislation since it had the power to adopt those regulations without additional legislation. He also advised the committee that the regulations were being promulgated. The committee took no action on the bill. Regulations were adopted effective March 31, 1983.

Companion bill: HB 53 passed through 2 committees and is currently in House Finance. With regulations in place, the justification for either bill is that it will insure that future directors do not change their minds and rescind the regulations.

Copies of the TRS & PERS regulations are in the HB 53 file.

SUBJECT: SB 58 and HB 53 - Prohibiting Duplicate Teachers' Retirement Benefits for Alaska BIA Service

I spoke with Ken Humphreys, director of the division of retirement. He advised me that the PERS and TRS boards have adopted regulations to require continued reporting from retired members about the amounts of any federal benefits they receive. These regulations are available for comment until March 31st, at which time they will become final unless amended by the appropriate retirement board. The regulations were promulgated because of the questions raised by the Blue Ribbon Commission bills on this issue. Copies of the proposed regulations are attached.

RE: SB 58 - Prohibiting Duplicate Teachers' Retirement Benefits for Alaska BIA Service

Dear Senator Josephson:

I have spoken with Senator Ray, chairman of the Blue Ribbon Commission, concerning the committee's question of whether this legislation is necessary given the possibility that the same thing can be accomplished by regulation. Senator Ray pointed out that, in fact, the Division of Retirement and Benefits has not yet adopted regulations on this issue. Therefore it appears to him to be advisable for the Legislature to act to make its wishes known.

Please let me know if I can be of further assistance.

Yours very truly,

Senator Ray -

The Senate State Affairs Committee heard testimony on SB 58 (Prohibiting Duplicate Teachers' Retirement Benefits for Alaska BIA Service) yesterday. Senator Vic Fischer asked Ken Humphreys, the Acting Director of Retirement and Benefits, whether the legislation is necessary or whether the same thing could be accomplished through regulations. Ken said that he thought that the division has the power to require annual reporting from teachers about any federal retirement benefits for BIA service already. He suggested that the bill is a good idea but probably a little redundant. Senator Fischer asked that Ken check with the Attorney General's office and that I check with the Blue Ribbon Commission about whether the bill was necessary if the division already has the power to accomplish the same thing by regulation. What should I tell him?

MEMORANDUM

January 26, 1983

TO: Senate Health, Education and Social Services

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer Teresa B Cramer
Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: Senate Bill 58 - Prohibiting Duplicate Teachers' Retirement Benefits for Alaska BIA Service

The Blue Ribbon Commission heard testimony from the Division of Retirement and Benefits that a loophole exists in the Teachers' Retirement System statutes which permit receiving TRS credited service for federal employment in Alaska BIA schools. Teachers who qualified for federal retirement from a BIA school and who then worked for the state in a position covered by the Teachers' Retirement System could receive benefits for the same years of service from each system.

Under TRS, teachers may receive credit for Alaska BIA service by contributing 7% of their entry TRS salary for each year of BIA service to be credited. The law provides that state retirement benefits for Alaska BIA service will be reduced by the amount received from the federal government for the same service. However, this is verified only at the time of applying for retirement.

Credit from both retirement systems is possible if the teacher who has worked for both employers buys TRS credited service for BIA employment and takes a lump sum payment of his or her federal retirement contributions before retiring from the state. At the time of state retirement, the teacher reports being eligible to receive no federal retirement benefits for Alaska BIA service. After establishing state benefits, the teacher could repay the lump sum to the federal government and claim a federal retirement. The teacher would then be drawing from two retirement systems for the same period of service.

The commission recommends that language be added to the TRS statutes to permit the Division of Retirement to require retired members to verify annually any federal benefits received for Alaska BIA service.

Bill Analysis

Page 1 Line 9	The first section of the bill deletes material concerning treatment of duplicate benefits from the current authorization for claiming BIA service.

Page 2 Line 4	The language deleted in section 1 is moved to AS 14.25.169 by the second section of the bill.
Line 7	Section 2 also provides authorization for the Division of Retirement and Benefits to request annual verification of the amount of any federal retirement benefits for Alaska BIA service for which state benefits are also received.

THE ALASKA COUNCIL ON SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

November 19, 1982

Senator Bill Ray, Chairman
Blue Ribbon Commission on the Personnel Act
Alaska State Legislature
Pouch YG
Juneau, Alaska 99811

Dear Senator Ray,

Based upon discussions held at our November 17, 1982 meeting, I am sending suggestions for consideration for the draft legislation entitled "An Act Relating to Government Interests in Intellectual Work Products Developed at the Expense of the State."

The Council suggests that this act be written similarly to the statutes adopted by the federal government. These statutes differ somewhat according to application for specific agencies, but generally all follow the same general philosophy, particularly related to patents. Also, the University of Alaska has an existing policy that works well and has stood the test of time, having been in effect for more than a decade. A general state policy might consider the university approach as well.

These various federal and university policy statements or statutes contain several key elements and philosophical tenets which may be helpful to you. In summary these are:

1. Recognition that patentable inventions produced in the line of work duty may be primarily owned by the sponsoring agency, but that, depending upon the specific circumstances, the originator might rightfully have a partial ownership interest, or at least that it is in the public welfare to award such partial ownership;

2. Recognition that in accepting ownerships of a potential invention, the government or agency accepts responsibility to pursue patenting and management of the patent in a fashion that promotes its usefulness to society;

3. Recognition than in order to promote employee intellectual pursuit, to avoid infringement upon individual freedom, to avoid unnecessary litigation, and to avoid much needless work on the part of agency personnel, that the policy statements or statutes are written to pertain strictly to patentable inventions. (We suggest that the existing wording in the draft bill, specifically the wording "intellectual work product" and its definitions as given in Section 39:52.099 are too broad to be effective and may well be challengeable on Constitutional grounds. The proposed statute, we suggest, should pertain to patentable inventions only.); and

4. Recognition, also that for every "idea" that eventually leads to a patent deemed desirable for agency ownership, there are dozens that do not. (Hence, we suggest that the state needs an inexpensive, effective mechanism to weed out ideas of an unpatentable nature or which, if patented, have no economic value to the state. Examination of established procedures will show that the process must start as close to the inventor as possible--specifically, within the agency wherein the employee works. Determination of patentability and/or desirability of patentability should be conducted within the employee's agency. Determination of desired state ownership should be made by the employer's agency acting in conjunction with the Attorney General's office. It may be appropriate to specify in the proposed bill that the ACST would act as a participant in the decision regarding appropriate share of state ownership, once desirability of patenting has been determined.)

A useful guide to framing a patent regulation for Alaska may be the enclosed copy of patent regulations used by the U.S. Department of Interior. Additionally, as earlier stated, another useful guide could be the patenting policy of the University of Alaska. The process used there involves initial internal determination of patentability, followed by a review made by a specialized non-profit patenting organization which then takes a percentage of ownership in payment for its services should all agree that the pursuit of a patent is desirable. In this case the shares in the ownership of the patent between the non-profit corporation, the university, and the inventor are negotiated.

We trust these comments are useful to you. As this bill proceeds in the legislation process we would be pleased to offer further information for your consideration or testify upon your request.

Sincerely,

David M. Hickok

Subpart A—Inventions by Employees

§ 6.1 Definitions.

As used in this subpart:

(a) The term "Department" means the Department of the Interior.

(b) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior.

(c) The term "Solicitor" means the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior, or anyone authorized to act for him.

(d) The term "Commissioner" means the Commissioner of Patents, or any Assistant Commissioner who may act for the Commissioner of Patents.

(e) The term "invention" means any new and useful art, process, method, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof, or any new variety of plant, or any new, original and ornamental design for an article of manufacture, which is or may be patentable under the laws of the United States.

(f) The term "employee" as used in this part includes a part time consultant, a part time employee or a special employee (as defined in 18 U.S.C. 202) of the Department insofar as inventions made during periods of official duty are concerned, except when special circumstances in a specific case require an exemption in order to meet the needs of the Department, each such exemption to be subject to the approval of the Commissioner.

(g) The term "governmental purpose" means the right of the Government of the United States (including any agency thereof, state, or domestic municipal government) to practice and have practiced (made or have made, used or have used, sold or have sold) throughout the world by or on behalf of the Government of the United States.

(h) The "making of the invention" means the conception or first actual reduction to practice of such invention.

§ 6.2 Report of invention.

(a) Every invention made by an employee of the Department shall be reported by such employee through his supervisor and the head of the bureau or office to the Solicitor, unless the invention obviously is unpatentable. If the invention is the result of group work, the report shall be made by the supervisor and shall be signed by all employees participating in the making of the invention. The original and two copies of the invention report shall be furnished to the Solicitor. The Solicitor may prescribe the form of the report.

(b) The report shall be made as promptly as possible, taking into consideration such factors as possible publication or public use, reduction to practice, and the necessity for protecting any rights of the Government in the invention. Although it is not necessary to withhold the report until the process or device is completely reduced to practice, reduction to practice assists in the preparation of a patent application and, if diligently pursued, protects the interests of the Government and of the inventor. If an invention is reduced to practice after the invention report is filed, the Solicitor must be notified forthwith.

(c) For the protection of the rights of the Government and of the inventor, invention reports and memoranda or correspondence concerning them are to be considered as confidential documents.

(d) An invention report shall include the following:

(1) A brief but pertinently descriptive title of the invention;

(2) The full name, residence, office address, bureau or office and division, position or title, and official working place of the inventor or inventors;

(3) A statement of the evidence that is available as to the making of the invention, including information relative to conception, disclosures to others, and reduction to practice. Examples of such information are references to signed, witnessed and dated laboratory notebooks, or other authenticated records pertaining to the conception of the invention, operational data sheets, analysis and operation evaluation reports pertaining to a reduction to practice, and visitor log books, letters and other documents pertaining to disclosures to others. These need not be submitted with the report, only the identifying data is required, e.g., volume and page number in a laboratory notebook;

(4) Information concerning any past or prospective publication, oral presentation or public use of the invention;

(5) The problem which led to the making of the invention;

(6) The objects, advantages, and uses of the invention;

(7) A detailed description of the invention;

(8) Experimental data;

(9) The prior art known to the inventor(s) and the manner in which the invention distinguishes thereover;

(10) A statement that the employee:

(i) Is willing to and does hereby assign to the Government:

(a) The entire right foreign and domestic) in the inventio..;

(b) The domestic rights only, but grants to the Government an option to file for patent protection in any foreign country, said option to expire as to any country when it is decided not to file thereon in the United States, or within six months after such filing;

(ii) Requests, pursuant to § 6.2(e), a determination of the respective rights of the Government and of the inventor.

(e) If the inventor believes that he is not required by the regulations in this subpart to assign to the Government the entire domestic right, title, and interest in and to the invention, and if he is unwilling to make such an assignment to the Government, he shall, in his invention report, request that the Solicitor determine the respective rights of the Government and of the inventor in the invention, and he shall include in his invention report information on the following points, in addition to the data called for in paragraph (d) of this section:

(1) The circumstances under which the invention was made (conceived, actually reduced to practice or constructed and tested);

(2) The employee's official duties, as given on his job sheet or otherwise assigned, at the time of the making of the invention;

(3) The extent to which the invention was made during the inventor's official working hours, the extent use was made of government facilities, equipment, funds, material or information, and the time or services of other government employees on official duty;

(4) Whether the employee wishes a patent application to be prosecuted under the Act of March 3, 1883, as amended (35 U.S.C. 266), if it should be determined that he is not required to assign all domestic rights to the invention to the Government; and

(5) Whether the employee would be willing, upon request, to voluntarily assign foreign rights in the invention to the Government if it should be determined that an assignment of the domestic rights to the Government is not required.

§ 6.3 Action by supervisory officials.

(a) The preparation of an invention report and other official correspondence on patent matters is one of the regular duties of an employee who has made an invention and the supervisor of such employee shall see that he is allowed sufficient time from his other duties to prepare such documents. The supervisor shall ascertain that the invention report and other papers are prepared in conformity with the regulations of this part; and, before transmitting the invention report to the head of the bureau or office, shall check its accuracy and completeness, especially with respect to the circumstances in which the invention was developed, and shall add whatever com-

(b) The head of the bureau or office shall make certain that the invention report is as complete as circumstances permit. He shall report whatever information may be available in his agency concerning the governmental and commercial value of the invention, and the foreign countries in which it is likely that the invention would be most useful and would have the greatest commercial value.

(c) If the employee inventor requests that the Solicitor determine his rights in the invention, the head of the bureau or office shall state his conclusions with respect to such rights.

(d) The head of the bureau or office shall indicate whether, in his judgment, the invention is liable to be used in the public interest, and he shall set out the facts supporting his conclusion whenever the employee's invention report does not contain sufficient information on this point.

§ 6.4 Action by Solicitor.

(a) If an employee inventor requests pursuant to paragraph (e) of § 6.2, that such determination be made, the Solicitor shall determine the respective rights of the employee and of the Government in and to the invention. His determination shall be subject to review by the Commissioner in proper cases under Executive Orders 10096 and 10930 and the rules and regulations issued by the Commissioner with the approval of the President.

(b) If the Government is entitled to obtain the entire domestic right, title and interest in and to an invention made by an employee of the Department, the Solicitor, subject to review by the Commissioner in proper cases, may take such action respecting the invention as he deems necessary or advisable to protect the interests of the United States.

§ 6.5 Rights in inventions.

(a) The rules prescribed in this section shall be applied in determining the respective rights of the Government and of an employee of the Department in and to any invention made by the employee.

(b)(1) Except as indicated in the succeeding paragraphs, (b)(1)—(4), of this section, the Government shall obtain the entire domestic right, title, and interest in and to any invention made by an employee of the Department (i) during working hours, or (ii) with a contribution by the Government of facilities, equipment, materials, funds, or information, or of time or services of other government employees on official duty, or (iii) which bears a direct relation to or is made in consequence of the official duties of the inventor.

(2) In any case where the contribution of the Government, as measured by any one or more of the criteria set forth in paragraph (b)(1) of this section, to the invention is insufficient equitably to justify a requirement of assignment to the Government of the entire domestic right, title, and interest in and to such invention, or in any case where the Government has insufficient interest in an invention to obtain the entire domestic right, title, and interest therein (although the Government could obtain same under paragraph (b)(1) of this section), the Solicitor, subject to the approval of the Commissioner, shall leave title to such invention in the employee, subject, however, to the reservation to the Government of a nonexclusive, irrevocable, royalty-free license in the invention with power to grant sublicenses for all governmental purposes, such reservation, in the terms thereof, to appear, where practicable, in any patent, domestic or foreign, which may issue on such invention.

(3) In applying the provisions of paragraphs (b)(1) and (2) of this section to the facts and circumstances relating to the making of any particular invention, it shall be presumed that any invention made by an employee who is employed or assigned (i) to invent or improve or perfect any art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or (ii) to conduct or perform research, development work, or both, or (iii) to supervise, direct, coordinate, or review Government financed or conducted research, development work, or both, or (iv) to act in a liaison capacity among governmental or non-governmental agencies or individuals engaged in such work, falls within the provisions of paragraph (b)(1) of this section, and it shall be presumed that any invention made by any other employee falls within the provisions of paragraph (b)(2) of this section. Either presumption may be rebutted by a showing of the facts and circumstances in the case and shall not preclude a determination that these facts and circumstances justify leaving the entire right, title and interest in and to the invention in the government employee, subject to law.

(4) In any case wherein the Government neither (i) obtains the entire domestic right, title, and interest in and to an invention pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (b)(1) of this section, nor (ii) reserves a nonexclusive, irrevocable, royalty-free license in the invention, with power to grant sublicenses for all governmental purposes, pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (b)(2) of this section, the Solicitor, subject to the approval of the Commissioner, shall leave the entire right, title, and interest in and to the invention in the employee, subject to law.

(c) In the event that the Solicitor determines, pursuant to paragraph (b)(2) or (4) of this section, that title to an invention will be left with an employee, the Solicitor shall notify the employee of this determination and promptly prepare, and preserve in appropriate files, accessible to the Commissioner, a written signed, and dated statement concerning the invention including the following:

(1) A description of the invention in sufficient detail to identify the invention and show the relationship to the employee's duties and work assignment;

(2) The name of the employee and his employment status, including a detailed statement of his official duties and responsibilities at the time the invention was made; and

(3) A statement of the Solicitor's determination and reasons therefor. The Solicitor shall, subject to considerations of national security, or public health, safety, or welfare, submit to the Commissioner a copy of this written statement. This submittal in a case falling within the provisions of paragraph (b)(2) of this section shall be made after the expiration of the period prescribed in § 6.6 for the taking of an appeal, or it may be made prior to the expiration of such period if the employees acquiesces in the Solicitor's determination. The Commissioner thereupon shall review the determination of the Solicitor and the Commissioner's decision respecting the matter shall be final, subject to the right of the employee or the Solicitor to submit to the Commissioner within 30 days (or such longer period as the Commissioner may, for good cause, shown in writing, fix in any case) after receiving notice of such decision, a petition for the reconsideration of the decision. A copy of such petition must also be filed by the inventor with the Solicitor within the prescribed period.

§ 6.6 Appeals by employees.

(a) Any employee who is aggrieved by a determination of the Solicitor pursuant to § 6.5(b) (1) or (2) may obtain a review of the determination by filing, within 30 days (or such longer period as the Commissioner may for good cause shown in writing, fix in any case) after receiving notice of such determination, two copies of an appeal with the Commissioner. The Commissioner then shall forward one copy of the appeal to the Solicitor.

(b) On receipt of a copy of an appeal filed pursuant to paragraph (a) of this section, the Solicitor shall, subject to considerations of national security, or public health, safety, or welfare, promptly furnish both the Commissioner and the inventor with a copy of a report containing the following information about the invention involved in the appeal:

(1) A copy of a statement containing the information specified in § 6.5(c), and

(2) A detailed statement of the points of dispute or controversy, together with copies of any statements or written arguments that may have been filed, and of any other relevant evidence that the Solicitor considered in making his determination of Government interest. Within 25 days (or such longer period as the Commissioner may, for good cause shown, fix in any case) after the transmission of a copy of the Solicitor's report to the employee, the employee may file a reply thereto with the Commissioner and file one copy thereof with the Solicitor.

(c) After the time for the employee's reply to the Solicitor's report has expired and if the employee has so requested in his appeal, a date will be set for the hearing of oral arguments by the employee (or by an attorney whom he designates by written power of attorney filed before, or at the hearing) and the Solicitor. Unless it shall be otherwise ordered before the hearing begins, oral arguments will be limited to thirty minutes for each side. The employee need not retain an attorney or request an oral hearing to secure full consideration of the facts and his arguments. He may expedite such consideration by notifying the Commissioner when he does not intend to file a reply to the Solicitor's report.

(d) After a hearing on the appeal, if a hearing was requested, or after expiration of the period for the inventor's reply to the Solicitor's report, if no hearing is set, the Commissioner shall issue a decision on the matter, which decision shall be final after the period for asking reconsideration expires or on the date that a decision on a petition for reconsideration is finally disposed of. Any request for reconsideration or modification of the decision must be filed within 30 days from the date of the original decision (or within such an extension thereof as may be set by the Commissioner before the original period expires). The Commissioner's decision shall be made after consideration of the statements of fact in the employee's appeal, the Solicitor's report, and the employee's reply, but the Commissioner, at his discretion and with due respect to the rights and convenience of the inventor and the Solicitor, may call for further statements on specific questions of fact or may request additional evidence in the form of affidavits or depositions on specific facts in dispute.

§ 6.7 Domestic patent protection.

(a) The Solicitor, upon determining that an invention coming within the scope of § 6.5(b) (1) or (2) has been made, shall thereupon determine whether patent protection will be sought in the United States by the Department for such invention. A controversy over the respective rights of the Government and of the inventor in any case shall not delay the taking of the actions provided for in this section. In cases coming within the scope of § 6.5(b) (2), action by the Department looking toward such patent protection shall be contingent upon the consent of the inventor.

(b) Where there is a dispute as to whether paragraphs (b)(1) or (2) of § 6.5 applies in determining the respective rights of the Government and of an employee in and to any invention, the Solicitor will determine whether patent protection will be sought in the United States pending the Commissioner's decision on the dispute, and, if he determines that an application for patent should be filed, he will take such rights as are specified in § 6.5(b) (2), but this shall be without prejudice to acquiring the rights specified in § 6.5 (b) (1) should the Commissioner so decide.

(c) Where the Solicitor has determined to leave title to an invention with an employee under § 6.5(b) (2), the Solicitor will, upon the filing of an application for patent and pending review of the determination by the Commissioner, take the rights specified in that paragraph, without prejudice to the subsequent acquisition by the Government of the rights specified in § 6.5(b) (1) should the Commissioner so decide.

(d) In the event that the Solicitor determines that an application for patent will not be filed on an invention made under the circumstances specified in § 6.5(b) (1) giving the United States the right to title thereto, the Solicitor shall subject to considerations of national security, or public health, safety, or welfare, report to the Commissioner promptly upon making such determination, the following information concerning the invention:

80-147 O—81—11

(1) Description of the invention in sufficient detail to permit a satisfactory review;

(2) Name of the inventor and his employment status;

(3) Statement of the Solicitor's determination and reasons therefor.

The Commissioner, may, if he determines that the interest of the Government so requires and subject to considerations of national security, or public health safety, or welfare, bring the invention to the attention of any Government agency to whose activities the invention may be pertinent, or cause the invention to be fully disclosed by publication thereof.

§ 6.8 Foreign filing.

(a) By Government. (1) In every case where the employee has indicated pursuant to § 6.2(d)(10), his willingness to assign the domestic patent rights in the invention to the Government, or where it has been determined pursuant to § 6.5 that the Government shall obtain the entire domestic patent rights, the Government shall reserve an option to acquire assignment of all foreign rights including the rights to file foreign patent applications or otherwise to seek protection abroad on the invention.

(2) The Government's option shall lapse as regards any foreign country:

(i) When the Solicitor determines after consultation with the agency most directly concerned, not to cause an application to be filed in said foreign country or otherwise to seek protection of the invention, as by publication;

(ii) When the Solicitor fails to take action to seek protection of the invention in said foreign country (a) within six months of the filing of an application for a United States patent on the invention, or (b) within six months of declassification of an invention previously under a security classification, whichever is later.

(b) By Employee. (1) No Department employee shall file or cause to be filed an application for patent in any foreign country on any invention in which the Government has acquired the entire (foreign and domestic) patent rights, or holds an unexpired option to acquire the patent rights in said foreign country, or take any steps which would preclude the filing of an application by or on behalf of the Government.

(2) An employee may file in any foreign country where the Government has not exercised its option acquired pursuant to § 6.2(d)(10), to do so, or determines not to do so.

(3) The determination or failure to act as set forth in § 6.8(a)(2) shall constitute a decision by the Government to leave the foreign patent rights to the invention in the employee, subject to a nonexclusive, irrevocable, royalty-free license to the Government in any patent which may issue thereon in any foreign country, including the power to issue sublicenses for governmental purposes or in furtherance of the foreign policies of the Government or both.

§ 6.9 Publication and public use of invention before patent application is filed.

(a) Publication or public use of an invention constitutes a statutory bar to the granting of a patent for the invention unless a patent application is filed within one year of the date of such publication or public use. In order to preserve rights in unpatented inventions, it shall be the duty of the inventor, or of his supervisor if the inventor is not available to make such report, to report forthwith to the Solicitor any publication or use (other than experimental) of an invention, irrespective of whether an invention report has previously been filed. If an invention report has not been filed, such a report, including information concerning the public use or publication, shall be filed at once. If an invention is disclosed to any person who is not employed by the Department or working in cooperation with the Department upon that invention, a record shall be kept of the date and extent of the disclosure, the name and address of the person to whom the disclosure was made, and the purpose of the disclosure.

tion, specification, plan, or drawing of such invention be furnished to anyone other than an employee of the Department or a person working in cooperation with the Department upon that invention, unless the Solicitor is of the opinion that the interests of the Government will not be prejudiced by such action. If any publication disclosing the invention, not previously approved by the Solicitor, comes to the attention of the inventor or his supervisor, it shall be the duty of such person to report such publication to the Solicitor.

§ 6.10 Publicity concerning the invention after patent application is filed.

In order that the public may obtain the greatest possible benefit from inventions in which the Secretary has transferable interests, inventions assigned to the Secretary upon which patent applications have been filed shall be publicized as widely as possible, within limitations of authority, by the Department, by the originating agency, by the division in which the inventor is employed, and by the inventor himself in his contacts with industries in which the invention is or may be useful. Regular organs of publication shall be utilized to the greatest extent possible. In addition, it shall be the duty of the Solicitor, upon being advised of the issuance of any patent assigned to the Secretary, to take steps towards listing the patent as available for licensing, where feasible.

§ 6.11 Condition of employment.

(a) The regulations in this subpart shall be a condition of employment of all employees of the Department and shall be effective as to all their inventions. These regulations shall be effective without regard to any existing or future contracts to the contrary entered into by any employee of the Department with any person other than the Government.

(b) If a patent application is filed upon an invention which has been made by an employee of the Department under circumstances that entitle the Government to the entire domestic right, title and interest in and to the invention, but which has not been reported to the Solicitor pursuant to the regulations in this subpart, title to such invention shall immediately vest in the Government, as represented by the Secretary, and the contract of employment shall be considered an assignment of such rights.

Subpart B—Licenses

§ 6.51 Purpose.

It is the purpose of the regulations in this subpart to secure for the people of the United States the full benefits of Government research and investigation in the Department of the Interior (a) by providing a simple procedure under which the public may obtain licenses to use patents and inventions in which the Secretary of the Interior has transferable interests and which are available for licensing; and (b) by providing adequate protection for the inventions until such time as they may be made available for licensing without undue risk of losing patent protection to which the public is entitled.

[31 FR 10796, Aug. 13, 1966]

§ 6.52 Patents.

Patents in which the Secretary of the interior has transferable interests, and under which he may issue licenses or sublicenses, are classified as follows:

(a) Class A. Patents, other than those referred to in paragraph (c) of this section, which are owned by the United States, as represented by the Secretary of the Interior, free from restrictions on licensing except such as are inherent in Government ownership;

(b) Class B. Patents in which the interest of the United States, as represented by the Secretary of the Interior, is less than full ownership, or is subject to some express restriction upon licensing or sublicensing (including patents upon which the Secretary of the Interior holds a license, patents assigned to the Secretary of the Interior as trustee for the people of the United States, and patents assigned to the Secretary of the Interior upon such terms as to effect a dedication to the public);

(c) Class C. Patents and patent rights acquired by the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to the Act of April 5, 1944 (58 Stat. 190; 30 U.S.C. 321—325), and any amendments thereof.

[29 FR 260, Jan. 10, 1964, as amended at 31 FR 10796, Aug. 13, 1966]

§ 6.53 Unpatented inventions.

The Secretary of the Interior may also have transferable interests in inventions which are not yet patented. In order to protect the patent rights of the Department, for the eventual benefit of the public, a license may be granted with respect to such an invention only if (a) a patent application has been filed thereon; (b) the invention has been assigned to the United States, as represented by the Secretary of the Interior, and the assignment has been recorded in the Patent Office; and (c) the Solicitor of the Department is of the opinion that the issuance of a license will not prejudice the interests of the Government in the invention. Such licenses shall be upon the same terms as licenses relating to patents of the same class, as described in § 6.52.

§ 6.54 Use or manufacture by or for the Government.

A license is not required with respect to the manufacture or use of any invention assigned or required to be assigned without restrictions or qualifications to the United States when such manufacture or use is by or for the Government for governmental purposes. A license or sublicense may be required, however, for such manufacture or use in the case of Class B patents or patent rights when the terms under which the Secretary of the Interior acquires interests therein necessitate the issuance of a license or sublicense in such circumstances.

[31 FR 10796, Aug. 13, 1966]

§ 6.55 Terms of licenses or sublicenses.

(a) No license or sublicense shall be granted under any patent in which the Secretary of the Interior has transferable interests, except as set forth under these regulations, the terms and conditions of which shall be expressly stated in such license and sublicense. The terms of licenses and sublicenses issued under this subpart shall not be unreasonably restrictive.

(b) To the extent that they do not conflict with any restrictions to which the licensing or sublicensing of Class B patents and unpatented inventions may be subject, all licenses and sublicenses relating to Class A and Class B patents and unpatented inventions shall be subject to the following terms and provisions, and to such other terms and conditions as the Solicitor may prescribe:

(1) The acceptance of a license or sublicense shall not be construed as a waiver of the right to contest the validity of the patent. A license or sublicense shall be revocable only upon a finding by the Solicitor of the Department that the terms of the license or sublicense have been violated and that the revocation of the license or sublicense is in the public interest. Such finding shall be made only after reasonable notice and an opportunity to be heard.

(2) Licenses and sublicenses shall be nontransferable. Upon a satisfactory showing that the Government or public will be benefited thereby, they may be granted to properly qualified applicants royalty-free. If no such showing is made, they shall be granted only upon a reasonable royalty or other consideration, the amount or character of which is to be determined by the Solicitor. A cross-licensing agreement may be considered adequate consideration.

(3) Licensees and sublicensees may be required to submit annual or more frequent technical or statistical reports concerning practical experience acquired through the exercise of the license or sublicense, the extent of the production under the license or sublicense, and other related subjects.

(4) A licensee or sublicensee manufacturing a patented article pursuant to a license or sublicense shall give notice to the public that the article is patented by affixing thereon the word "patent", together with the number of the patent, or when, from the character of the article, this cannot be done, by fixing to it, or to the package in which it is enclosed, a

SUBJECT: Draft Bill Relating to Government Interests in Discoveries and Inventions

I am enclosing a copy of the draft bill on patents and have noted below the discussion at our last meeting. The commission will meet on October 15 to review a second draft to the bill and would welcome any comments the Council on Science and Technology cares to make. I am enclosing a memorandum about the time and place of the meeting for your information.

The following are the changes proposed to the draft bill at the last Blue Ribbon Commission meeting. The language which was discussed may be revised by the bill drafter, Jim Lear, as he prepares the next draft, but until then it stands.

There was considerable discussion about whether "information" was clear enough. Some commission members were concerned that an insignificant item of information gained on the job might trigger the state's claim to a discovery or invention which was otherwise the independent work of an employee. Other members pointed out that under AS 39.52.010(c) on page 2, lines 13-22, the council could elect to waive the state's interest in the discovery or invention in those circumstances. Mr. Lear may decide to redraft the language on line 20 or it may remain in its present form.

If the state realizes internal savings from use of the patent, the employee will not be entitled to 20 percent of the savings.
Page 3 Line 10	Insert between "employee" and "who": or contracting party Explanation: The additional language makes clear that independent contractors will be governed by the terms of their contracts.
Page 3 Lines 25-27	Mr. Lear will check the provisions of Alaska's Arbitration Act and probably provide that the council will abide by those terms rather than giving the council the power and responsibility of adopting its own system of arbitration.

Explanation: The commission decided that all state employees should be governed by the same policy on patents. Mr. Lear will add a section to this bill repealing the statutes which currently give the Energy Center and the Resources Corporation the right to hold patents.

ADDITIONAL LANGUAGE

The commission also recommended that new employees be made aware of the state's patent interests and that they be required to sign a statement acknowledging the state's rights to employment-related discoveries and inventions. Mr. Lear will be drafting language to include in the bill.

Mr. Lear was also requested to draft legislation to protect the state's interests in copywrites, particularly in computer programs. When he has completed a draft bill, I will send you a copy.

Dear Ms. Cramer:

I have worked for the Department of Fish and Game since March 30, 1976. My position is the Regional Hatchery Manager for Southeast Alaska. I accepted this position with a very positive attitude and was happy to be a part of the major aquaculture development effort in Alaska - namely the F.R.E.D. Division. I believe I have the aptitude to be an outstanding employee in my professional field, and one of my goals and desires is to do just that - perform in an outstanding way for the State of Alaska.

In 1976 I encountered a challenge on this job which was particularly interesting to me. This challenge was the need to develop a production scale salmon incubator. The nature of this task dictated that it be accomplished by private enterprise. Had I cooperated with private enterprise in this effort and profited in some way, I would have violated State conflict of interest rules, since my job was closely related to the task of developing the incubators.

I approached my supervisors with the dilemma and asked for advice. I was advised to seek a ruling on the matter. This I did, and in 1977 the state Personnel Board and the Attorney General's Office examined the request and granted me permission to proceed with the patent and development of the incubator. I was given strict guidelines to follow relative to reporting any income and separating personal interests from my state position. After receiving this ruling I proceeded to patent and, in cooperation with a private corporation, develop an incubator and a fish rearing system.

This action on my part caused an abrupt change in the way I was treated by my supervisors. This is documented in a voluminious report comprised of many letters and memos. To make a long story short, I was harassed in many ways, my performance evaluations went from highly acceptable to unacceptable with a recommendation for termination, citing conflict of interest issue as a major reason. I was prohibited from attending professional meetings. In one case I had my annual leave changed to leave without pay retroactively. I have not received a merit increase for over two years. I have been passed up for two promotions to two jobs for which I was qualified.

I have made many attempts at resolving this conflict directly with my supervisors. All efforts have failed. I finally sought assistance from APEA and have received tremendous support from Dianne Corso, the Field Representative. In spite of my efforts and Dianne Corso's as well, my supervisors are unwilling to resolve the conflict. To date, I have two years of performance evaluation's which are pending without resolution and I am facing what I believe to be retalatory layoff on August 15.

Some other points of interest are three reports which are being generated at my request. These relate to ancillary problems caused by the lack of a timely resolution of the above conflicts. These reports are a result of extensive investigations by the Office of the Ombudsman, the internal auditors of the Governor's Office and the Consumer Protection Division of the Attorney General's Office. All three reports relate to purchasing violations and or conflict of interest relative to my plight. The Governors Office report is complete and available, the Ombusman's report remains confidential until the Commissioner of Fish and Game has had an opportunity to respond to it, and the Attorney General's report is in the final stages of completion.

During investigations of these reports it was informally estimated by the auditors that the administrative costs of this conflict have exceeded a quarter of a million dollars. I would estimate that in addition to that the State is suffering unnecessary capital and operational costs in excess of several million dollars.

If possible I would like to discuss the following issues relative to the above case:

Conflict of Interest, Retaliatory Layoff, Performance Evaluations, Accountability for Violation of Standard Operating Procedures.

Sincerely,

Dale Young

MEMORANDUM

January 25, 1983

TO: Senate State Affairs Committee

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer TeresaBCramer
Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: Senate Bill 59 - Government Interests in Intellectual Work Products Developed at the Expense of the State

The Blue Ribbon Commission is proposing legislation to create and protect the state's interest in inventions, discoveries and creations developed by state employees or contractors during their employment or developed with the use of state facilities or resources.

The commission became interested in the issue when an employee of the Department of Fish and Game testified about employment problems arising from his patenting of a production scale salmon incubator. He had begun developing the incubator before he accepted employment with the state. He began working for the department and continued his project after securing advice from the Department of Law concerning avoiding the potential conflict of interest. His job for Fish and Game was closely related to the development of incubators. The employee stated that he created the incubator on his own time. He then patented it and sold the patent to a private corporation which marketed it. Thereafter, the department was required to pay royalties for use of the process.

The employee has filed several grievances over poor performance evaluations, lost promotional opportunities, and an alleged retaliatory layoff which he believed resulted from his patenting the invention. The department testified that there had been considerable morale problems because other employees believed that they had contributed to the development of the process. They thought it unfair that one individual could secure a patent and potentially profit from an invention in which others had participated and in which the state should have an interest.

The Blue Ribbon Commission is concerned that there is no statute protecting the state's interest in the inventions, discoveries and creations made by its employees or made through the use of its facilities. Legislation for the Alaska Energy Center and the Alaska

Resources Corporation gives each agency the authority to hold patents. Nothing in either chapter spells out how the state acquires that interest.

While the proposed legislation does not specifically address the situation which occurred in the Department of Fish and Game, the commission believes that this system would alleviate similar problems in the future. Information about the number of conflict of interest hearings before the Personnel Board indicates that there will probably be no more than two or three applications of the bill per year.

Bill Analysis

Page 1 Line 10	The first section of the proposed legislation gives the state all right, title and interest in any intellectual work product developed during working hours or with the use of state facilities or by employees whose duties include responsibility for research.
Page 4 Line 12	"Intellectual work product" is broadly defined later in the bill to include anything which is subject to patent, trademark or copyright laws.
Page 2 Line 8	A state employee or person under contract with the state is obliged to disclose the development of an intellectual work product to the Alaska Council on Science and Technology and to assign any interest in it to the state. If requested, the person is required to assist the Council in applying for a trademark, patent or copyright. The commission believes that the Council is the most appropriate existing state agency to administer the program.
Page 2 Line 21	The Council is given broad discretion to decide whether to pursue patenting, trademarking, or copyrighting the invention after consultation with affected state agencies. The Council may waive any state interest in the discovery or may waive all interest but retain a royalty-free license in the intellectual work product so that the state would not have to pay for its use in the future. If the state waives its interest, then the inventor would be able to pursue protection of his own interest in the discovery.
Page 3 Line 3	The proposed legislation gives the Council authority to grant monetary recognition to employees who develop an intellectual work product. The recognition could be in the form of a cash award, a share in any royalties generated by the invention, or in any other manner the Council found appropriate. Payment would, of course, be subject to legislative appropriation. The commission believes that the Council should have wide discretion in implementing the monetary award system in order to best encourage employees in their work and serve the state's interests.

Page 3 Line 13 — Any disagreements between an employee and the state pertaining to ownership of an intellectual work product would be subject to voluntary arbitration if the parties agreed to be bound by the result. If not, then the disagreement could be settled in court. In addition, the state and the employee or contractor may enter into an employment contract which requires compulsory arbitration.

Page 3 Line 29 — Legislators and employees of the University of Alaska are exempted from the chapter. The University has its own policy on intellectual property developed at its expense which is codified in section 2 of the proposed legislation.

Page 4 Line 5 — The Council is granted rule-making authority for the chapter in accordance with the Administrative Procedure Act.

Page 4 Line 24 — Section 2 of the legislation adds language to codify the University of Alaska's right to intellectual work products developed by its employees.

Page 5 Line 7 — Section 3 requires state employees to waive their interest in intellectual work products developed at the expense of the state as set out in section 1 of the bill. The waiver is not subject to negotiation under the Public Employment Relations Act.

Page 5 Line 29 — Section 4 amends the Alaska Council on Science and Technology statutes to add the powers and responsibilities granted by the proposed legislation.

Page 6 Line 7 — Section 5 repeals the patenting powers currently granted to the Alaska Energy Center and the Alaska Resources Corporation. The commission believes that there should be a single system which applies to all legislative, judicial and executive branch employees of the state.

Stan Moberly (now Comr of Fish & Game) has been interested in this bill & has had info about ways to handle the state's interests & about how other states & universities & foundations share the results of discoveries etc.

Dale Young was the employee whose activities sparked this legislation? I think he no longer works for the state.

The AG's Office had some info about Dale Young's lawsuit against the state - Tom Johnke handled it for awhile and then John Gaguine. They've also hired outside counsel because of the patent aspect.

State Affairs Hearing 4/19 but no action taken.

Note: The Council on Science and Technology, which the bill makes responsible for carrying out the protection of the state's interest in patents, copyrights and trademarks, has been drastically reshaped by the legislature this session. If this bill goes anywhere, some alternative may have to be found for carrying out the functions assigned to the Council.

I met with Suzanne Tryck(Senator Vic Fischer's aide on this bill) several times to discuss problems. She indicated that the committee would be working on the bill during the interim.

SUBJECT: Intellectual work products
(Work Order No. 13-0041)

TO: Senator Bill Ray
Chairman, Blue Ribbon Commission on Personnel Act

FROM: James H. Lear
Legislative Counsel JHL

I have been asked by Terry Cramer of the Blue Ribbon Commission staff to review and comment on the attached letter from David M. Hickok, Chairman of the Alaska Council on Science and Technology (ACST) regarding the draft legislation entitled "An Act relating to government interests in intellectual work products developed at the expense of the state". The Alaska Council on Science and Technology summarizes several key elements and philosophical tenets that underlie the various federal and university policy statements on the subject of inventions by public employees. I shall address the summarized elements individually.

The first issue raised is whether or not the originator of an intellectual work product rightfully has a partial ownership interest in the product when it is developed at state expense. It is clearly within the prerogative of the legislature to provide a statutory entitlement on the part of a public officer or employee to participate in the ownership of an intellectual work product developed at the expense of the state. Conversely, the legislature may legitimately reserve to the state ownership interests as contemplated in the proposed bill draft without violating the constitutional rights of the originator of an intellectual work product, so long as the product flows from the originator's association or employment with the state.

The second issue surrounds the responsibility of the state to pursue patenting of an invention and to manage the patent in a fashion that promotes its usefulness to society. This is a policy decision of the legislature. If the state truly owns an intellectual work product developed at state expense, then it has no obligation to the originator to develop the work product unless the legislature imposes an obligation. Accordingly, Sec. 4 of the bill draft empowers the Alaska Council on Science and Technology "consistent with the provisions of AS 39.52 [to] retain, assign, license, transfer, sell, or otherwise dispose of, in whole or in part and upon terms that the council may direct, any and all rights to, interests in, or income from intellectual work products acquired by the council under AS 39.52"; and Sec. 1 of the bill draft (creating AS 39.52) requires the originator to assist the council in the prosecution of an application for a trademark, copyright, or patent and authorizes the council to either waive all rights to an intellectual work product or waive rights but reserve a royalty-free license for governmental use. These provisions are a legitimate exercise of legislative prerogative that, nonetheless, demonstrate a concern for the development of intellectual work products for the benefit of society.

The third issue raised by the council is the scope of intellectual work products subject to coverage under the proposed bill. It is suggested that the definition of "intellectual work product" is too broad and thus is challengeable on constitutional grounds. It is further suggested that the bill be structured to pertain only to patentable inventions. The proposed draft, however, would not be subject to a constitutional challenge of being overbroad since the substantive provisions of proposed Sec. 39.52.010 make it clear that regardless of how "intellectual work product" is defined, the bill would only apply if the intellectual work product were subject to trademark, copyright, or patent.

The fourth issue involves the process for determining whether an intellectual work product is owned by and of value to the state. The bill draft contemplates broad discretion on the part of the Alaska Council on Science and Technology to adopt rules implementing the bill but also requires the Alaska Council on Science and Technology to consult with affected agencies before relinquishing ownership interests. The language of the proposed bill draft would not preclude the Alaska Council on Science and Technology from adopting a rule that would require the various agencies of the state to perform a screening function on behalf of the Alaska Council on Science and Technology. Similarly, the Alaska Council on Science and Technology could adopt rules similar to the detailed federal rules adopted by the Department of the Interior not inconsistent with the bill as it may be enacted. It would not be necessary, or perhaps advisable, to codify such details where the administrative rule process would afford greater flexibility in this area of the law where there is so little legal precedent in statutory form.

Juneau, Alaska 99811

Dear Senator Ray,

Based upon discussions held at our November 17, 1982 meeting, I am sending suggestions for consideration for the draft legislation entitled "An Act Relating to Government Interests in Intellectual Work Products Developed at the Expense of the State."

The Council suggests that this act be written similarly to the statutes adopted by the federal government. These statutes differ somewhat according to application for specific agencies, but generally all follow the same general philosophy,particularly related to patents. Also, the University of Alaska has an existing policy that works well and has stood the test of time, having been in effect for more than a decade. A general state policy might consider the university approach as well.

These various federal and university policy statements or statutes contain several key elements and philosophical tenets which may be helpful to you. In summary these are:

1. Recognition that patentable inventions produced in the line of work duty may be primarily owned by the sponsoring agency, but that, depending upon the specific circumstances, the originator might rightfully have a partial ownership interest, or at least that it is in the public welfare to award such partial ownership;

2. Recognition that in accepting ownerships of a potential invention, the government or agency accepts responsibility to pursue patenting and management of the patent in a fashion that promotes its usefulness to society;

3. Recognition than in order to promote employee intellectual pursuit, to avoid infringement upon individual freedom, to avoid unnecessary litigation, and to avoid much needless work on the part of agency personnel, that the policy statements or statutes are

written to pertain strictly to patentable inventions. (We suggest that the existing wording in the draft bill, specifically the wording "intellectual work product" and its definitions as given in Section 39:52.099 are too broad to be effective and may well be challengeable on Constitutional grounds. The proposed statute, we suggest, should pertain to patentable inventions only.); and

4. Recognition, also that for every "idea" that eventually leads to a patent deemed desirable for agency ownership, there are dozens that do not. (Hence, we suggest that the state needs an inexpensive, effective mechanism to weed out ideas of an unpatentable nature or which, if patented, have no economic value to the state. Examination of established procedures will show that the process must start as close to the inventor as possible--specifically, within the agency wherein the employee works. Determination of patentability and/or desirability of patentability should be conducted within the employee's agency. Determination of desired state ownership should be made by the employer's agency acting in conjunction with the Attorney General's office. It may be appropriate to specify in the proposed bill that the ACST would act as a participant in the decision regarding appropriate share of state ownership, once desirability of patenting has been determined.)

A useful guide to framing a patent regulation for Alaska may be the enclosed copy of patent regulations used by the U.S. Department of Interior. Additionally, as earlier stated, another useful guide could be the patenting policy of the University of Alaska. The process used there involves initial internal determination of patentability, followed by a review made by a specialized non-profit patenting organization which then takes a percentage of ownership in payment for its services should all agree that the pursuit of a patent is desirable. In this case the shares in the ownership of the patent between the non-profit corporation, the university, and the inventor are negotiated.

We trust these comments are useful to you. As this bill proceeds in the legislation process we would be pleased to offer further information for your consideration or testify upon your request.

Sincerely,

David M. Hickok

Subpart A—Inventions by Employees

§ 6.1 Definitions.

As used in this subpart:

(a) The term "Department" means the Department of the Interior.

(b) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior.

(c) The term "Solicitor" means the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior, or anyone authorized to act for him.

(d) The term "Commissioner" means the Commissioner of Patents, or any Assistant Commissioner who may act for the Commissioner of Patents.

(e) The term "invention" means any new and useful art, process, method, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof, or any new variety of plant, or any new, original and ornamental design for an article of manufacture, which is or may be patentable under the laws of the United States.

(f) The term "employee" as used in this part includes a part time consultant, a part time employee or a special employee (as defined in 18 U.S.C. 202) of the Department insofar as inventions made during periods of official duty are concerned, except when special circumstances in a specific case require an exemption in order to meet the needs of the Department, each such exemption to be subject to the approval of the Commissioner.

(g) The term "governmental purpose" means the right of the Government of the United States (including any agency thereof, state, or domestic municipal government) to practice and have practiced (made or have made, used or have used, sold or have sold) throughout the world by or on behalf of the Government of the United States.

(h) The "making of the invention" means the conception or first actual reduction to practice of such invention.

§ 6.2 Report of invention.

(a) Every invention made by an employee of the Department shall be reported by such employee through his supervisor and the head of the bureau or office to the Solicitor, unless the invention obviously is unpatentable. If the invention is the result of group work, the report shall be made by the supervisor and shall be signed by all employees participating in the making of the invention. The original and two copies of the invention report shall be furnished to the Solicitor. The Solicitor may prescribe the form of the report.

(b) The report shall be made as promptly as possible, taking into consideration such factors as possible publication or public use, reduction to practice, and the necessity for protecting any rights of the Government in the invention. Although it is not necessary to withhold the report until the process or device is completely reduced to practice, reduction to practice assists in the preparation of a patent application and, if diligently pursued, protects the interests of the Government and of the inventor. If an invention is reduced to practice after the invention report is filed, the Solicitor must be notified forthwith.

(c) For the protection of the rights of the Government and of the inventor, invention reports and memoranda or correspondence concerning them are to be considered as confidential documents.

(d) An invention report shall include the following:

(1) A brief but pertinently descriptive title of the invention;

(2) The full name, residence, office address, bureau or office and division, position or title, and official working place of the inventor or inventors;

(3) A statement of the evidence that is available as to the making of the invention, including information relative to conception, disclosures to others, and reduction to practice. Examples of such information are references to signed, witnessed and dated laboratory notebooks, or other authenticated records pertaining to the conception of the invention, operational data sheets, analysis and operation evaluation reports pertaining to a reduction to practice, and visitor log books, letters and other documents pertaining to disclosures to others. These need not be submitted with the report, only the identifying data is required, e.g., volume and page number in a laboratory notebook;

(4) Information concerning any past or prospective publication, oral presentation or public use of the invention;

(5) The problem which led to the making of the invention;

(6) The objects, advantages, and uses of the invention;

(7) A detailed description of the invention;

(8) Experimental data;

(9) The prior art known to the inventor(s) and the manner in which the invention distinguishes thereover;

(10) A statement that the employee:

(i) Is willing to and does hereby assign to the Government:

(a) The entire rights (foreign and domestic) in the invention;

(b) The domestic rights only, but grants to the Government an option to file for patent protection in any foreign country, said option to expire as to any country when it is decided not to file thereon in the United States, or within six months after such filing;

(ii) Requests, pursuant to § 6.2(e), a determination of the respective rights of the Government and of the inventor.

(e) If the inventor believes that he is not required by the regulations in this subpart to assign to the Government the entire domestic right, title, and interest in and to the invention, and if he is unwilling to make such an assignment to the Government, he shall, in his invention report, request that the Solicitor determine the respective rights of the Government and of the inventor in the invention, and he shall include in his invention report information on the following points, in addition to the data called for in paragraph (d) of this section:

(1) The circumstances under which the invention was made (conceived, actually reduced to practice or constructed and tested);

(2) The employee's official duties, as given on his job sheet or otherwise assigned, at the time of the making of the invention;

(3) The extent to which the invention was made during the inventor's official working hours, the extent use was made of government facilities, equipment, funds, material or information, and the time or services of other government employees on official duty;

(4) Whether the employee wishes a patent application to be prosecuted under the Act of March 3, 1883, as amended (35 U.S.C. 266), if it should be determined that he is not required to assign all domestic rights to the invention to the Government; and

(5) Whether the employee would be willing, upon request, to voluntarily assign foreign rights in the invention to the Government if it should be determined that an assignment of the domestic rights to the Government is not required.

§ 6.3 Action by supervisory officials.

(a) The preparation of an invention report and other official correspondence on patent matters is one of the regular duties of an employee who has made an invention and the supervisor of such employee shall see that he is allowed sufficient time from his other duties to prepare such documents. The supervisor shall ascertain that the invention report and other papers are prepared in conformity with the regulations of this part; and, before transmitting the invention report to the head of the bureau or office, shall check its accuracy and completeness, especially with respect to the circumstances in which the invention was developed, and shall add whatever com-

(b) The head of the bureau or office shall make certain that the invention report is as complete as circumstances permit. He shall report whatever information may be available in his agency concerning the governmental and commercial value of the invention, and the foreign countries in which it is likely that the invention would be most useful and would have the greatest commercial value.

(c) If the employee inventor requests that the Solicitor determine his rights in the invention, the head of the bureau or office shall state his conclusions with respect to such rights.

(d) The head of the bureau or office shall indicate whether, in his judgment, the invention is liable to be used in the public interest, and he shall set out the facts supporting his conclusion whenever the employee's invention report does not contain sufficient information on this point.

§ 6.4 Action by Solicitor.

(a) If an employee inventor requests pursuant to paragraph (e) of § 6.2, that such determination be made, the Solicitor shall determine the respective rights of the employee and of the Government in and to the invention. His determination shall be subject to review by the Commissioner in proper cases under Executive Orders 10096 and 10930 and the rules and regulations issued by the Commissioner with the approval of the President.

(b) If the Government is entitled to obtain the entire domestic right, title and interest in and to an invention made by an employee of the Department, the Solicitor, subject to review by the Commissioner in proper cases, may take such action respecting the invention as he deems necessary or advisable to protect the interests of the United States.

§ 6.5 Rights in inventions.

(a) The rules prescribed in this section shall be applied in determining the respective rights of the Government and of an employee of the Department in and to any invention made by the employee.

(b)(1) Except as indicated in the succeeding paragraphs, (b)(1)—(4), of this section, the Government shall obtain the entire domestic right, title, and interest in and to any invention made by an employee of the Department (i) during working hours, or (ii) with a contribution by the Government of facilities, equipment, materials, funds, or information, or of time or services of other government employees on official duty, or (iii) which bears a direct relation to or is made in consequence of the official duties of the inventor.

(2) In any case where the contribution of the Government, as measured by any one or more of the criteria set forth in paragraph (b)(1) of this section, to the invention is insufficient equitably to justify a requirement of assignment to the Government of the entire domestic right, title, and interest in and to such invention, or in any case where the Government has insufficient interest in an invention to obtain the entire domestic right, title, and interest therein (although the Government could obtain same under paragraph (b)(1) of this section), the Solicitor, subject to the approval of the Commissioner, shall leave title to such invention in the employee, subject, however, to the reservation to the Government of a nonexclusive, irrevocable, royalty-free license in the invention with power to grant sublicenses for all governmental purposes, such reservation, in the terms thereof, to appear, where practicable, in any patent, domestic or foreign, which may issue on such invention.

(3) In applying the provisions of paragraphs (b)(1) and (2) of this section to the facts and circumstances relating to the making of any particular invention, it shall be presumed that any invention made by an employee who is employed or assigned (i) to invent or improve or perfect any art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or (ii) to conduct or perform research, development work, or both, or (iii) to supervise, direct, coordinate, or review Government financed or conducted research, development work, or both, or (iv) to act in a liaison capacity among governmental or non-governmental agencies or individuals engaged in such work, falls within the provisions of paragraph (b)(1) of this section, and it shall be presumed that any invention made by any other employee falls within the provisions of paragraph (b)(2) of this section. Either presumption may be rebutted by a showing of the facts and circumstances in the case and shall not preclude a determination that these facts and circumstances justify leaving the entire right, title and interest in and to the invention in the government employee, subject to law.

(4) In any case wherein the Government neither (i) obtains the entire domestic right, title, and interest in and to an invention pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (b)(1) of this section, nor (ii) reserves a nonexclusive, irrevocable, royalty-free license in the invention, with power to grant sublicenses for all governmental purposes, pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (b)(2) of this section, the Solicitor, subject to the approval of the Commissioner, shall leave the entire right, title, and interest in and to the invention in the employee, subject to law.

(c) In the event that the Solicitor determines, pursuant to paragraph (b)(2) or (4) of this section, that title to an invention will be left with an employee, the Solicitor shall notify the employee of this determination and promptly prepare, and preserve in appropriate files accessible to the Commissioner, a written signed, and dated statement concerning the invention including the following:

(1) A description of the invention in sufficient detail to identify the invention and show the relationship to the employee's duties and work assignment;

(2) The name of the employee and his employment status, including a detailed statement of his official duties and responsibilities at the time the invention was made; and

(3) A statement of the Solicitor's determination and reasons therefor. The Solicitor shall, subject to considerations of national security, or public health, safety, or welfare, submit to the Commissioner a copy of this written statement. This submittal in a case falling within the provisions of paragraph (b)(2) of this section shall be made after the expiration of the period prescribed in § 6.6 for the taking of an appeal, or it may be made prior to the expiration of such period if the employees acquiesces in the Solicitor's determination. The Commissioner thereupon shall review the determination of the Solicitor and the Commissioner's decision respecting the matter shall be final, subject to the right of the employee or the Solicitor to submit to the Commissioner within 30 days (or such longer period as the Commissioner may, for good cause, shown in writing, fix in any case) after receiving notice of such decision, a petition for the reconsideration of the decision. A copy of such petition must also be filed by the inventor with the Solicitor within the prescribed period.

§ 6.6 Appeals by employees.

(a) Any employee who is aggrieved by a determination of the Solicitor pursuant to § 6.5(b) (1) or (2) may obtain a review of the determination by filing, within 30 days (or such longer period as the Commissioner may for good cause shown in writing, fix in any case) after receiving notice of such determination, two copies of an appeal with the Commissioner. The Commissioner then shall forward one copy of the appeal to the Solicitor.

(b) On receipt of a copy of an appeal filed pursuant to paragraph (a) of this section, the Solicitor shall, subject to considerations of national security, or public health, safety, or welfare, promptly furnish both the Commissioner and the inventor with a copy of a report containing the following information about the invention involved in the appeal:

(1) A copy of a statement containing the information specified in § 6.5(c), and

(2) A detailed statement of the points of dispute or controversy, together with copies of any statements or written arguments that may have been filed, and of any other relevant evidence that the Solicitor considered in making his determination of Government interest. Within 25 days (or

(d) After a hearing on the appeal, if a hearing was requested, or after expiration of the period for the inventor's reply to the Solicitor's report, if no hearing is set, the Commissioner shall issue a decision on the matter, which decision shall be final after the period for asking reconsideration expires or on the date that a decision on a petition for reconsideration is finally disposed of. Any request for reconsideration or modification of the decision must be filed within 30 days from the date of the original decision (or within such an extension thereof as may be set by the Commissioner before the original period expires). The Commissioner's decision shall be made after consideration of the statements of fact in the employee's appeal, the Solicitor's report, and the employee's reply, but the Commissioner, at his discretion and with due respect to the rights and convenience of the inventor and the Solicitor, may call for further statements on specific questions of fact or may request additional evidence in the form of affidavits or depositions on specific facts in dispute.

§ 6.7 Domestic patent protection.

(a) The Solicitor, upon determining that an invention coming within the scope of § 6.5(b) (1) or (2) has been made, shall thereupon determine whether patent protection will be sought in the United States by the Department for such invention. A controversy over the respective rights of the Government and of the inventor in any case shall not delay the taking of the actions provided for in this section. In cases coming within the scope of § 6.5(b) (2), action by the Department looking toward such patent protection shall be contingent upon the consent of the inventor.

(b) Where there is a dispute as to whether paragraphs (b)(1) or (2) of § 6.5 applies in determining the respective rights of the Government and of an employee in and to any invention, the Solicitor will determine whether patent protection will be sought in the United States pending the Commissioner's decision on the dispute, and, if he determines that an application for patent should be filed, he will take such rights as are specified in § 6.5(b) (2), but this shall be without prejudice to acquiring the rights specified in § 6.5 (b) (1) should the Commissioner so decide.

(c) Where the Solicitor has determined to leave title to an invention with an employee under § 6.5(b) (2), the Solicitor will, upon the filing of an application for patent and pending review of the determination by the Commissioner, take the rights specified in that paragraph, without prejudice to the subsequent acquisition by the Government of the rights specified in § 6.5(b) (1) should the Commissioner so decide.

(d) In the event that the Solicitor determines that an application for patent will not be filed on an invention made under the circumstances specified in § 6.5(b) (1) giving the United States the right to title thereto, the Solicitor shall subject to considerations of national security, or public health, safety, or welfare, report to the Commissioner promptly upon making such determination, the following information concerning the invention:

80-147 O—81—11

(1) Description of the invention in sufficient detail to permit a satisfactory review;

(2) Name of the inventor and his employment status;

(3) Statement of the Solicitor's determination and reasons therefor.

The Commissioner, may, if he determines that the interest of the Government so requires and subject to considerations of national security, or public health safety, or welfare, bring the invention to the attention of any Government agency to whose activities the invention may be pertinent, or cause the invention to be fully disclosed by publication thereof.

§ 6.8 Foreign filing.

(a) By Government. (1) In every case where the employee has indicated pursuant to § 6.2(d)(10), his willingness to assign the domestic patent rights in the invention to the Government, or where it has been determined pursuant to § 6.5 that the Government shall obtain the entire domestic patent rights, the Government shall reserve an option to acquire assignment of all foreign rights including the rights to file foreign patent applications or otherwise to seek protection abroad on the invention.

(2) The Government's option shall lapse as regards any foreign country:

(i) When the Solicitor determines after consultation with the agency most directly concerned, not to cause an application to be filed in said foreign country or otherwise to seek protection of the invention, as by publication;

(ii) When the Solicitor fails to take action to seek protection of the invention in said foreign country (a) within six months of the filing of an application for a United States patent on the invention, or (b) within six months of declassification of an invention previously under a security classification, whichever is later.

(b) By Employee. (1) No Department employee shall file or cause to be filed an application for patent in any foreign country on any invention in which the Government has acquired the entire (foreign and domestic) patent rights, or holds an unexpired option to acquire the patent rights in said foreign country, or take any steps which would preclude the filing of an application by or on behalf of the Government.

(2) An employee may file in any foreign country where the Government has not exercised its option acquired pursuant to § 6.2(d)(10), to do so, or determines not to do so.

(3) The determination or failure to act as set forth in § 6.8(a)(2) shall constitute a decision by the Government to leave the foreign patent rights to the invention in the employee, subject to a nonexclusive, irrevocable, royalty-free license to the Government in any patent which may issue thereon in any foreign country, including the power to issue sublicenses for governmental purposes or in furtherance of the foreign policies of the Government or both.

§ 6.9 Publication and public use of invention before patent application is filed.

(a) Publication or public use of an invention constitutes a statutory bar to the granting of a patent for the invention unless a patent application is filed within one year of the date of such publication or public use. In order to preserve rights in unpatented inventions, it shall be the duty of the inventor, or of his supervisor if the inventor is not available to make such report, to report forthwith to the Solicitor any publication or use (other than experimental) of an invention, irrespective of whether an invention report has previously been filed. If an invention report has not been filed, such a report, including information concerning the public use or publication, shall be filed at once. If an invention is disclosed to any person who is not employed by the Department or working in cooperation with the Department upon that invention, a record shall be kept of the date and extent of the disclosure, the name and address of the person to whom the disclosure was made, and the purpose of the disclosure.

(b) No description, specification, plan, or drawing of any unpatented invention upon which a patent application is likely to be filed shall be published, nor shall any written descrip-

If any publication disclosing the invention, not previously approved by the Solicitor, comes to the attention of the inventor or his supervisor, it shall be the duty of such person to report such publication to the Solicitor.

§ 6.10 Publicity concerning the invention after patent application is filed.

In order that the public may obtain the greatest possible benefit from inventions in which the Secretary has transferable interests, inventions assigned to the Secretary upon which patent applications have been filed shall be publicized as widely as possible, within limitations of authority, by the Department, by the originating agency, by the division in which the inventor is employed, and by the inventor himself in his contacts with industries in which the invention is or may be useful. Regular organs of publication shall be utilized to the greatest extent possible. In addition, it shall be the duty of the Solicitor, upon being advised of the issuance of any patent assigned to the Secretary, to take steps towards listing the patent as available for licensing, where feasible.

§ 6.11 Condition of employment.

(a) The regulations in this subpart shall be a condition of employment of all employees of the Department and shall be effective as to all their inventions. These regulations shall be effective without regard to any existing or future contracts to the contrary entered into by any employee of the Department with any person other than the Government.

(b) If a patent application is filed upon an invention which has been made by an employee of the Department under circumstances that entitle the Government to the entire domestic right, title and interest in and to the invention, but which has not been reported to the Solicitor pursuant to the regulations in this subpart, title to such invention shall immediately vest in the Government, as represented by the Secretary, and the contract of employment shall be considered an assignment of such rights.

Subpart B—Licenses

§ 6.51 Purpose.

It is the purpose of the regulations in this subpart to secure for the people of the United States the full benefits of Government research and investigation in the Department of the Interior (a) by providing a simple procedure under which the public may obtain licenses to use patents and inventions in which the Secretary of the Interior has transferable interests and which are available for licensing; and (b) by providing adequate protection for the inventions until such time as they may be made available for licensing without undue risk of losing patent protection to which the public is entitled.

[31 FR 10796, Aug. 13, 1966]

§ 6.52 Patents.

Patents in which the Secretary of the interior has transferable interests, and under which he may issue licenses or sublicenses, are classified as follows:

(a) Class A. Patents, other than those referred to in paragraph (c) of this section, which are owned by the United States, as represented by the Secretary of the Interior, free from restrictions on licensing except such as are inherent in Government ownership;

(b) Class B. Patents in which the interest of the United States, as represented by the Secretary of the Interior, is less than full ownership, or is subject to some express restriction upon licensing or sublicensing (including patents upon which the Secretary of the Interior holds a license, patents assigned to the Secretary of the Interior as trustee for the people of the United States, and patents assigned to the Secretary of the Interior upon such terms as to effect a dedication to the public);

(c) Class C. Patents and patent rights acquired by the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to the Act of April 5, 1944 (58 Stat. 190; 30 U.S.C. 321—325), and any amendments thereof.

[29 FR 260, Jan. 10, 1964, as amended at 31 FR 10796, Aug. 13, 1966]

§ 6.53 Unpatented inventions.

The Secretary of the Interior may also have transferable interests in inventions which are not yet patented. In order to protect the patent rights of the Department, for the eventual benefit of the public, a license may be granted with respect to such an invention only if (a) a patent application has been filed thereon; (b) the invention has been assigned to the United States, as represented by the Secretary of the Interior, and the assignment has been recorded in the Patent Office; and (c) the Solicitor of the Department is of the opinion that the issuance of a license will not prejudice the interests of the Government in the invention. Such licenses shall be upon the same terms as licenses relating to patents of the same class, as described in § 6.52.

§ 6.54 Use or manufacture by or for the Government.

A license is not required with respect to the manufacture or use of any invention assigned or required to be assigned without restrictions or qualifications to the United States when such manufacture or use is by or for the Government for governmental purposes. A license or sublicense may be required, however, for such manufacture or use in the case of Class B patents or patent rights when the terms under which the Secretary of the Interior acquires interests therein necessitate the issuance of a license or sublicense in such circumstances.

[31 FR 10796, Aug. 13, 1966]

§ 6.55 Terms of licenses or sublicenses.

(a) No license or sublicense shall be granted under any patent in which the Secretary of the Interior has transferable interests, except as set forth under these regulations, the terms and conditions of which shall be expressly stated in such license and sublicense. The terms of licenses and sublicenses issued under this subpart shall not be unreasonably restrictive.

(b) To the extent that they do not conflict with any restrictions to which the licensing or sublicensing of Class B patents and unpatented inventions may be subject, all licenses and sublicenses relating to Class A and Class B patents and unpatented inventions shall be subject to the following terms and provisions, and to such other terms and conditions as the Solicitor may prescribe:

(1) The acceptance of a license or sublicense shall not be construed as a waiver of the right to contest the validity of the patent. A license or sublicense shall be revocable only upon a finding by the Solicitor of the Department that the terms of the license or sublicense have been violated and that the revocation of the license or sublicense is in the public interest. Such finding shall be made only after reasonable notice and an opportunity to be heard.

(2) Licenses and sublicenses shall be nontransferable. Upon a satisfactory showing that the Government or public will be benefited thereby, they may be granted to properly qualified applicants royalty-free. If no such showing is made, they shall be granted only upon a reasonable royalty or other consideration, the amount or character of which is to be determined by the Solicitor. A cross-licensing agreement may be considered adequate consideration.

(3) Licensees and sublicensees may be required to submit annual or more frequent technical or statistical reports concerning practical experience acquired through the exercise of the license or sublicense, the extent of the production under the license or sublicense, and other related subjects.

(4) A licensee or sublicensee manufacturing a patented article pursuant to a license or sublicense shall give notice to the public that the article is patented by affixing thereon the word "patent", together with the number of the patent, or when, from the character of the article, this cannot be done, by fixing to it, or to the package in which it is enclosed, a l such notice.

(c) Licenses and subl to Class C patents an shall be granted upon conditions as may be pr ant to sections 3 and April 5 1944, and an thereof.

(4) The purpose for which he desires a license;

(5) His experience in the field of the desired license;

(b) It shall be the duty of the Solicitor, after consultation with the bureau most directly interested in the patent or invention involved in an application for a license, and with the Evaluation Committee if royalties are to be charged, to determine whether the license shall be granted. If he determines that a license is to be granted, he shall execute on behalf of the Secretary, an appropriate license.

§ 6.57 Evaluation Committee.

At the request of the Solicitor, an Evaluation Committee will be appointed by the Secretary to recommend royalty rates with respect to any patents or inventions for which royalties may be charged.

SUBJECT: Draft Bill Relating to Government Interests in Discoveries and Inventions

I am enclosing a copy of the draft bill on patents and have noted below the discussion at our last meeting. The commission will meet on October 15 to review a second draft to the bill and would welcome any comments the Council on Science and Technology cares to make. I am enclosing a memorandum about the time and place of the meeting for your information.

The following are the changes proposed to the draft bill at the last Blue Ribbon Commission meeting. The language which was discussed may be revised by the bill drafter, Jim Lear, as he prepares the next draft, but until then it stands.

Explanation: Make the language consistent with language on page 2, line 5

There was considerable discussion about whether "information" was clear enough. Some commission members were concerned that an insignificant item of information gained on the job might trigger the state's claim to a discovery or invention which was otherwise the independent work of an employee. Other members pointed out that under AS 39.52.010(c) on page 2, lines 13-22, the council could elect to waive the state's interest in the discovery or invention in those circumstances. Mr. Lear may decide to redraft the language on line 20 or it may remain in its present form.

Page 2 Line 9	Insert between "the" and "entire": public officer's or employee's Line to read: (2) assign to the state the public officer's or employee's entire right, title, and interest in and to the discovery or invention; and Explanation: Clarification
Page 2	Change citation to: AS 39.52.010(b) Explanation: Identify the particular subsection which applies.
Page 2 Line 23 to Page 3 Line 8	Mr. Lear will be redrafting Sec. 39.52.020 to make clear that state employees are entitled to 20 percent of the net proceeds only if the state actually receives revenues from the patent. If the state realizes internal savings from use of the patent, the employee will not be entitled to 20 percent of the savings.
Page 3 Line 10	Insert between "employee" and "who": or contracting party Explanation: The additional language makes clear that independent contractors will be governed by the terms of their contracts.
Page 3 Lines 25-27	Mr. Lear will check the provisions of Alaska's Arbitration Act and probably provide that the council will abide by those terms rather than giving the council the power and responsibility of adopting its own system of arbitration.
Page 4 Lines 1-2	Delete: , the Alaska Energy Center (AS 46.12), or the Alaska Resources Corporation (AS 37.12) Line to read: sity of Alaska. Explanation: The commission decided that all state employees should be governed by the same policy on patents. Mr. Lear will add a section to this bill repealing the statutes which currently give the Energy Center and the Resources Corporation the right to hold patents.

ADDITIONAL LANGUAGE

The commission also recommended that new employees be made aware of the state's patent interests and that they be required to sign a statement acknowledging the state's rights to employment-related discoveries and inventions. Mr. Lear will be drafting language to include in the bill.

Mr. Lear was also requested to draft legislation to protect the state's interests in copywrites, particularly in computer programs. When he has completed a draft bill, I will send you a copy.

B. Conduct of Outside Activities: Outside activities which will increase the effectiveness and broaden the experience of employees in relation to their functions at the University or which will be of service to the community or the state, are encouraged, provided outside activities do not interfere with the performance of the employee's regular University duties; and provided the outside activities do not involve the appropriation of University property facilities, equipment, or services. GENERAL INFORMATION

Outside Activities 04.08.03

A. Scope

1. Teaching, research, application of research findings, preparation and publication of articles and books (whether for royalty or not), preparation and delivery of lectures, serving on advisory bodies, memberships and activities in professional societies, participation in artistic performances or activities, when said activities are related to staff members' professional fields and no compensation or honorarium (other than royalties from publication) is received, are considered to be within the regular work duties of University employees.

   Examples of activities considered to be outside the regular work or duties are: consulting for or providing other services to individuals or firms, serving on boards of directors, or as officers of business organizations, and engaging in commercial operations and practice except as noted above.

2. Outside activities may be of one-time nature, intermittent or occasional, or regularly recurring. They may involve little or considerable amounts of compensation.

3. For purposes of this regulation "employee" is intended to include all personnel of the University, including both staff and faculty enrolled on the University payroll records and receiving compensation from the University of Alaska (no matter what the basic fund source) for the performance of regular staff or academic duties. It includes part-time as well as full-time employees. Nothing contained herein shall be considered applicable to any outside activities of employees during the period of time for which they are not compensated as University employees, except insofar as the use of University name, property, equipment, etc., is concerned.

B. Conduct of Outside Activities

1. Prior to engaging in any outside activity, as defined herein, the employee concerned shall secure approval of his/her immediate supervisor. Department heads, deans, and directors or equivalent level are designated as representatives of the University to grant such approval for employees under their jurisdiction. If the approval is denied, the individual shall have the right to appeal the decision as set forth below.

(a) In making these determinations the chief consideration shall be whether the employee's current or proposed outside activities, taken individually or cumulatively, would substantially interfere with the performance of his/her regular duties. The fact that the outside activity involved compensation or the amount of such compensation will not be a reason for a refusal.

(b) In some cases the outside activity of an employee may be in the interest of the University or contribute to a significant enhancement of the employee's professional standing or competence, even though engaging in the outside activity would substantially interfere with the employee's performance of his/her regular duties. In such cases the University may, upon consideration, determine that a re-allocation of the employee's duties is justified. Heads of departments and offices should process such cases through regular channels for approval.

2. Review

Heads of offices, departments, deans, and other supervisors may, from time to time, review a case if, in their judgment, reasonable evidence suggests that:

(a) The outside activity or activities, individually or cumulatively constitutes in fact a substantial interference with the satisfactory accomplishment of the employee's regular University duties, or

(b) The employee may otherwise be violating the provisions of this policy.

3. Community, State and Governmental Service

Community, state and governmental service is encouraged by the University as a function of citizenship, provided it does not constitute deterimental interference with the employee's discharge of his/her regular work duties. If community, state or governmental service duties, whether compensated or not, in fact substantially interfere with the employee's discharge of his/her regular work duties, then it becomes an outside activity.

4. Use of the University Name

(a) In conducting outside activities for compensation, the employee will make it clear to his/her employers or associates that he/she is serving in an individual capacity and that the University accepts no responsibility in connection with the outside activities.

(b) Official stationery of the University will not be used in connection with consultant's reports, bills for services or correspondence relating to the fulfillment of the staff member's performance of the outside activity.

(c) Employees whose names are included in commercial listings or other public documents, the purpose of which is to draw attention to the employee's availability for compensated services, will not list University buildings as an address, or list a University telephone number.

5. Purchase Through the University for Private Purposes

Individuals are not permitted to purchase supplies or equipment for personal use through institutional channels.

6. Use of University Property, Equipment, Facilities, or Services

The use of University property, equipment, facilities, or services by employees for purposes not directly related to their University duties is prohibited. Exception will be made for the use of specialized equipment not available to industry or individuals through any private source within the state for which a pre-determined fee or rate has been established. The individual staff member may use such equipment on the same basis as other members of the public. (05-18-79)

Patents 04.08.04

The President shall appoint a Patent Committee of at least five members, a majority of whom shall be from the teaching and/or research faculty of the University. This Committee shall advise the President in the administration of the patent policy. However, at his/her discretion, the President may assign this function to some other established committee having membership requirements specified for the Patent Committee.

The agreement which it is recommended that the University make with Research Corporation should provide that a staff member of the University may agree to assign an invention to Research Corporation, with the understanding that Research Corporation, if it accepts the assignment, is to carry out the patenting and commercialization of the invention without any expense to the inventor; that Research Corporation is to pay the inventor a share (15 per cent) of the gross income which Research Corporation receives from the invention; that the balance, after the special expenses in connection with the patent have been met, is to be divided equally between the University and Research Corporation.

Any member of the staff of the University may bring his/her patentable invention or discovery to the Patent Committee for consideration.

When the question of the patenting of a particular invention is brought to the attention of the Patent Committee, the Committee will consider the soundness of the scientific basis of the invention and advisability of patenting according to University policy. If the Committee reaches a negative conclusion, it will so advise the inventor and the President. If the Committee reaches a positive conclusion, or is in doubt, it will recommend that the President of the University refer the matter to Research Corporation to ascertain its opinion and whether Research Corporation desires to accept assignment of the invention. If Research Corporation is unwilling to accept such an assignment, the staff member offering the invention should be notified and the University relinquish all claim to it.

A member of the staff of the University may obtain a patent on his/her own responsibility, whether or not the Patent Committee has been consulted, but shall notify the Patent Committee of such action within sixty days after the date of application. The Committee may raise the question of whether the University has an equity in the proceeds of the invention either because work leading to the patent was done on University time or because University facilities were used. It is expected that the determination of the character and amount of the University's equity in any such invention will be established in conference between the Patent Committee and the staff member or members concerned. It is expected that the same procedures will be followed in connection with any other question arising out of the patent policy. Decisions of the Patent Committee are to be referred to the President for appropriate action.

If two or more staff members together produce a patented invention or discovery, they shall share equitably the "inventor's share" of the proceeds of the patent.

The handling of inventions which grow out of contract research will be governed by the terms of the contract; except that, if the contract assigns resultant inventions to the University or does not specify their assignment, the patent policy of the University will apply. (05-18-79)

Abuse of Office for Political Purposes 04.08.06

Any employee seeking an elected public office shall:

1. Campaign completely on his/her own time, without adversely affecting his/her duties at the University; and

2. Be subject to any general University procedures governing appearances and activities of political candidates on the campus.

Any employee, who acquires a state or federal public office or a full-time local government office which is legally not permitted to be held by a University employee, will resign from University employment. Such resignation shall be without prejudice if adequate notice has been given by the employee and mutually satisfactory arrangements have been made concerning possible replacement of the employee. The council shall pay from its operating budget annually a minimum of 20 percent of the amount of the net revenue to a public officer or employee who solely develops an intellectual work product or in shares to two or more public officers or employees who jointly develop an intellectual work product in a proportion determined by the council. The council in its discretion may increase the amount by which a public officer or employee may participate in the net revenue.

(b) The provisions of (a) of this section do not apply to a person under contract with the state or to a public officer or employee whose contract of employment with the state includes contrary terms.

(c) The provisions of (a) of this section do not apply if the intellectual work product is not used to generate actual revenue to the state, such as an intellectual work product used to reduce operating costs.

Sec. 39.52.030. ARBITRATION OF DISAGREEMENTS. (a) Disagreements between a public officer or employee or person under contract with the state and the council pertaining to ownership of an intellectual work product, obligations of the respective parties, or the extent of participation by a public officer or employee in the net revenue of the intellectual work product shall be disposed of by

(1) voluntary arbitration of all relevant issues, if the disagreeing parties agree to be bound by the decision upon arbitration;

(2) compulsory arbitration if that is provided for in any applicable contract between the disagreeing parties; or

(3) recourse to the court if arbitration cannot be resorted to.

(b) The council is authorized to make contracts for compulsory arbitration on behalf of the state.

(c) If arbitration is used to settle disagreements, the provisions of AS 09.43 (Uniform Arbitration Act) shall govern.

Sec. 39.52.040. UNIVERSITY OF ALASKA EXCEPTED. The provisions of this chapter do not apply to public officers or employees associated with or persons under contract with the University of Alaska. Those persons shall be governed by the provisions of AS 14.40.345.

Sec. 39.52.050. ADOPTION OF RULES. The council may adopt rules implementing the provisions of this chapter in accordance with the Administrative Procedure Act (AS 44.62).

Sec. 39.52.099. DEFINITIONS. As used in this chapter, unless the context otherwise requires,

(1) "council" means the Alaska Council on Science and Technology established in AS 44.21.241;

(2) "intellectual work product" means any product of the mind including but not limited to the following:

(A) discovery, inventi or idea;

(B) process, system, or method;

(C) machine, manufacture, or product;

(D) composition of matter;

(E) design or composition in letters, art, or graphics;

(F) literary, dramatic, musical, educational, or artistic work;

(G) certification mark, trademark, patent, or copyright.

* Sec. 2. AS 14.40 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 14.40.345. INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY DEVELOPED AT THE EXPENSE OF THE UNIVERSITY. All right, title, and interest in and to an intellectual work product developed by a public officer or employee associated with or a person under contract with the University of Alaska is the property of the university in accordance with a general policy established by the university. The policy adopted by the University of Alaska may provide for ownership, control, management, and disposal of intellectual work products by an independent foundation created for the purpose of obtaining intellectual work products, receiving gifts, administering or disposing of interests in intellectual work products, and promoting research.

* Sec. 3. AS 44.21.242(b) is amended by adding new paragraphs to read:

(9) consistent with the provisions of AS 39.52, retain, assign, license, transfer, sell, or otherwise dispose of, in whole or in part and upon terms that the council may direct, any and all rights to, interests in, or income from intellectual work products acquired by the council under AS 39.52;

MEMORANDUM

January 25, 1983

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer

SUBJECT: Senate Bill 64 - Licensed Physicians in the Department of Health and Social Services

An unintended change created by an amendment to the State Personnel Act last session has caused some question in the Department of Health and Social Services. Prior to the amendment, licensed physicians employed by the Division of Mental Health and Developmental Disabilities were placed in the exempt service. Other physicians working for the department were members of the classified service. This system worked well. The exception for those working in the mental health field was necessary in order to attract and pay qualified staff.

The amendment placed all licensed physicians, as defined in AS 47.30.340(9), employed by the state into the exempt service. Title 47.30 addresses mentally ill and insane persons but the definition section defined "licensed physician" in general terms. The department brought to the commission's attention an unforeseen situation. There were two employees in the Division of Public Health serving as Regional Health Officers. One was a medical doctor and the other a licensed veterinarian. Under the amended version of the State Personnel Act, the doctor could be placed in the exempt service and the veterinarian would remain in the classified service. Both have the same duties, though in different locations.

The commission recommends that legislation be adopted to return all medical doctors except those employed by the Division of Mental Health and Developmental Disabilities to the classified service.

Bill Analysis

The bill amends the section of the State Personnel Act which lists membership in the exempt service to place only those physicians employed by the Division of Mental Health and Developmental Disabilities in the exempt service.

Subject: Licensed Physicians - Department of Health & Social Services

Dear Senator Ray:

Subsequent to the December 7 meeting of the Blue Ribbon Commission, and at its direction, the Department of Health & Social Services considered the circumstances surrounding the statutory language relating to licensed physicians employed by the state. The original purpose for the inclusion of licensed physicians in the exempt service under AS 39.25.0110 (19) was to provide for recruitment and retention of qualified and competent staff within the Division of Mental Health & Developmental Disabilities. That situation has worked well since that time.

The amendments to that statute as adopted under HCS CSSB 193 in 1982 eliminated that particular distinction. As presently written, that statute could be interpreted to include licensed physicians in the Division of Public Health. That action is not adjudged to be in the best interests of the state and those employees. It should be noted that in 1981, AS 47.30.340 was repealed in its entirety and AS 47.30.915 was added. That section again defined "licensed physician" in the legislative reference to mental health programs.

It is therefore respectfully requested that the language in AS 39.25.110 (13) be amended to read as follows: "licensed physicians, as defined in AS 47.30.915 (11), employed by the Division of Mental Health & Developmental Disabilities, Department of Health & Social Services.

TO: Senator Bill Ray

FROM: Russ Josephson RJ
Legislative Counsel

I have tried to reach Terry Cramer at the Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act to inquire about a problem I encountered while drafting the enclosed bill.

The draft varies from the request you sent us because it adds the term "mental health professionals" to the bill. The reason for this is that AS 47.30.915(11), which was requested to be in the draft, defines "mental health professionals" and not "physicians". In order to use the requested approach, I felt it was necessary to add the phrase "mental health professionals". If it is your desire to limit the scope of the exempt service so that it includes the physicians employed by the Division of Mental Health and Developmental Disabilities, Department of Health and Social Services but excludes the other mental health professionals employed in that division, I certainly can draft the bill accordingly. To do so, we will have to modify the requested language "licensed physicians, as defined in AS 47.30.915(11)".

Please let us know how you want this handled and we will proceed accordingly.

SB 83 - Court Leave for Nonpermanent Employees

History - IN THE SENATE

State Affairs: Hearing 3/16 - Redcommended do pass

Finance: No hearing held. Assigned to Senator Ferguson. Talked with Kathy Hathaway to ask that she let me know if any more information was needed.

Companion bill: HB 135 is identical and resides, at the moment, in House Finance.

Sec. 09.20.020. Disqualification of jurors.

NOTES TO DECISIONS

Mere service in another case in which a guilty verdict was returned does not disqualify a juror. Vail v. State, Sup. Ct. Op. No. 1922 (File Nos. 3309, 3382), 599 P.2d 1371 (1979).

Sec. 09.20.025. Limitation on jury service. No person may be required to serve more than a total of three months as a juror during any consecutive two-year period. However, if a person is serving as a juror at the conclusion of the three months period, that person shall complete the trial then in progress. In this section, a person is "serving as a juror" whenever that person is in attendance in court as a member of a jury or a jury panel. (§ 1 ch 147 SLA 1968; am § 2 ch 66 SLA 1981)

Effect of amendments. — The 1981 amendment, effective July 11, 1981, added "a total of" preceding "three months" in the first sentence, substituted "that person" for "he" preceding "shall complete" in the second sentence and added the third sentence.

JURY SERVICE

Sec. 09.20.030. Exemptions [Effective January 1, 1982]. A person may claim exemption and may be excused from service as a juror if it is shown that his health, the health or proper care of his family, a permanent physical or mental disability, or other substantial hardship expected to last more than two years makes it necessary for him to be excused, or if he is a judicial officer. (§ 2.03 ch 101 SLA 1962; am § 1 ch 8 SLA 1964; am § 1 ch 70 SLA 1981)

Effect of amendments. — The 1981 amendment, effective January 1, 1982, deleted "jury service will cause him to suffer material injury or destruction to his property or to the property entrusted to him, or if" preceding "his health," substituted " a permanent physical or mental disability, or other substantial hardship expected to last more than two years" for "or the sickness or death of a member of his family" preceding "makes it necessary" and deleted former paragraph designation (1) preceding "a judicial officer." The amendment also deleted paragraphs (2) — (7) which read "(2) any other civil officer of the state or United States whose duties are at the time inconsistent with his attendance or service as a juror; (3) an attorney; (4) a minister of the gospel or priest of any denomination; (5) a teacher in a university, college, academy, or school; (6) a practicing physician; (7) a practicing dentist."

Sec. 09.20.035. Deferral of jury service [Effective January 1, 1982]. A person may have his jury service deferred if he shows that jury service at the time for which he is summoned will cause hardship to himself or others, or that transportation problems make it temporarily impossible for him to serve. Jury service may be deferred under this section only if the person seeking the deferment agrees to a deferred date. Jury service may not be deferred for more than 10 months from the date the initial jury service was to begin. (§ 2 ch 70 SLA 1981)

MEMORANDUM

March 24, 1983

TO: Senate Finance Committee

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer Teresa B Cramer
Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: Senate Bill 83 - Granting Court Leave to Nonpermanent Employees

The Blue Ribbon Commission received a request that it consider whether nonpermanent employees should receive court leave benefits. Nonpermanent employees are short-term classified service employees. By statute their period of service is limited to 120 calendar days or to the duration of a program or project. Nonpermanent employees are not entitled to receive state leave, health or retirement benefits. Short-term employees in the partially exempt and exempt services are called temporary employees.

Most state employees continue to receive their regular salaries while serving as jurors or when they are subpoenaed to serve as a witness in a court proceeding. In return, the employee gives the state his or her jury service fee (currently $25 a day) or witness fee. Nonpermanent and temporary employees are not entitled to this benefit. They must take leave without pay since they do not earn annual, sick or personal leave, and their only compensation is the jury service or witness fee provided by the court.

Collective bargaining agreements set out the leave provisions for their members. The statutory leave benefits set out in AS 39.20 do not apply to state employees covered by contracts. AS 39.20.810(8) and (9). Amending the law to permit nonpermanents and temporaries to receive court leave would therefore apply only to short-term employees in the exempt and partially exempt services and to those few classified service nonpermanent employees who are not members of collective bargaining units. Extending leave benefits to unionized employees would remain the subject of possible negotiation between the state and employee representatives.

Jury service is a civic duty. All state employees should be treated equally while meeting this obligation. The Blue Ribbon Commission strongly recommends that the Alaska Statutes be amended to provide that nonpermanent and temporary employees are entitled to receive the same court leave benefits as other state employees.

Bill Analysis

Paragraph (7) of AS 39.20.310 exempts temporary employees from all leave benefits granted to other state employees by statute. The proposed legislation amends the court leave statute to nullify the general exclusion. Temporary and nonpermanent employees would therefore be eligible to receive the court leave benefits provided other state employees.

SUBJECT: Senate Bill 83 - Granting Court Leave to Nonpermanent Employees

The Blue Ribbon Commission received a request that it consider whether nonpermanent employees should receive court leave benefits. The person who called was working as a nonpermanent employee on a project which was expected to last for nine months. She was summoned to serve on a jury for a criminal trial. The proceedings lasted two weeks.

Nonpermanent employees are short-term classified service employees. By statute their period of service is limited to 120 calendar days or to the duration of a program or project. Short-term employees in the partially exempt and exempt services are called temporary employees. Nonpermanent employees must be hired based on their relative ability from the lists of eligibles maintained by the Division of Personnel for that job class. They are paid according to the pay rate assigned to that job class. They are not eligible for state leave, health or retirement benefits.

Most state employees continue to receive their regular salaries while serving on juries or when they are subpoenaed to serve as a witness in a court proceeding. The employee gives the state his or her jury service fee (currently $25 a day) or witness fee. Nonpermanent and temporary employees are not entitled to this benefit. RE: HB 207, HB 209 and SB 116 - all about emergency guards in the Department of Public Safety and miscellaneous other matters

There are three bills which originally proposed placing guards used by the Department of Public Safety in emergencies into the exempt service: HB 207 (sponsored by the Blue Ribbon Commission), HB 209 (sponsored by Rep. Bussell and modelled after the Senate version of the Blue Ribbon Commission bill), and SB 116 (the Blue Ribbon Commission Senate version).

HB 207 - this bill had no hearings because House State Affairs took up Rep. Bussell's bill, HB 209, instead. It is still, untampered with, in House State Affairs.

HB 209 - This bill went through numerous changes, some desirable and some less so, and currently may be found [as SCS CSHB 209 (SA)] in Senate Finance.

SB 116 - This bill was amended in Senate State Affairs and passed the Senate. It has been referred [as CSSB 116 (SA)] to House Judiciary and has had no hearings there.

SCS CSHB 209 - Relating to the classification of personnel

Bill history

3/11/83 State Affairs heard the bill and adopted a CS changing the placement of the guards to the partially exempt service rather than the exempt service at the suggestion of Frank Raye, the director of personnel. The change leaves the positions as part of the state classification plan and pay plan, which insures that the division of personnel can watchdog salary to insure pay equity for incumbents.

3/25/83 Hearing in House Finance. The division of personnel and the Blue Ribbon Commission jointly recommended adding language to require that the Department of Public Safety report to the Division of Personel about emergency appointments made under this legislation. House Finance adopted that language in its CS. The language was originally developed for the Senate version, SB 116.

5/3/83 Hearing in House Rules in which the Department of Natural Resources proposed that young people employed in the youth employment/student intern programs be placed in the exempt service. The Division of Personnel had no problem with this admendment - there is a memo on the change in the file.

Rep. Bussell proposed adding correctional superintendents I & II to the partially exempt service because they should reflect policy (and unspokenly, should be subject to firing if a prisoner escapes, presumably). The hearing went quickly and both amendments were adopted. The Division of Personnel was not in support of Bussell's amendment although they did not testify at the hearing.

5/10/83 CSHB 209 (Rules) passed the House 33-6-1. Rep. Duncan moved for reconsideration and the bill passed on reconsideration on 5/13/83, 26-9-3-2.

6/9/83 Hearing in Senate State Affairs. Sen. Ray moved that the correctional superintendents be deleted from the bill and the motion passed.

I did not write a memo for Senate State Affairs since they had heard SB 116 earlier, but I did testify and raise questions about the correctional superintendents since the Blue Ribbon Commission had long been concerned about maintaining the merit system standards, which apply to the classified service and not as much to the partially exempt service (which is exempt from selection and firing standards and rules). I told them I had no information on the changes requested by the Department of Natural Resources.

6/13/83 SCS CSHB 209 (SA) was referred to Senate Finance. No hearings were held on the bill before adjournment.

* * * * * * * * *

CSSB 116 (SA) - Placing emergency guards employed by the department of public safety in the partially exempt service.

Bill history

3/11/83 Hearing in Senate State Affairs. Suzanne Tryck, staff to the committee, and Frank Raye, Director of Personnel, and I met and developed language to require reports from the department on the use of the legislation and also to change the placement of the guards from the exempt to the partially exempt service. Partially exempt postions remain part of the state's classification and pay plans and therefore are guaranteed pay equity for their work. The CS adopted by State Affairs included both of these changes.

3/11/83 Judiciary waived referral of CSSB 116 (SA)

3/21/83 Passed the Senate, 18-0-2

3/23/83 Referred to House Judiciary - there's a memo for them in the file. The House held no hearings.

* * * * * * * * * *

Comment - the Senate State Affairs Committee Substitute for HB 209 is probably what should be the final language for whichever of these three bills makes it through the legislature, at least under ideal circumstances.

MEMORANDUM

March 25, 1983

TO: Members of the House Judiciary Committee

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer Teresa B Cramer
Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: CSSB 116(SA) - Placing Emergency Guards Employed by the Department of Public Safety in the Partially Exempt Service

In 1979, the Blue Ribbon Commission sponsored legislation to place greater restraints on the employment of both nonpermanent and emergency classified state workers. These restrictions have created some difficulties for the Department of Public Safety because of the large number of emergency guards they hire. In 1982 the department hired 495 emergency guards. There were only 112 other emergency appointments in the state.

An emergency employee is defined as "an employee appointed for a period not to exceed 30 calendar days, whose appointment was made under conditions requiring immediate action to carry on work that is required in the public interest". AS 39.25.200(3). Departments are required to report the reason for hiring an emergency employee within 15 working days of the appointment. Personnel practices require that departments prepare Personnel Action forms at the beginning and ending of an emergency appointment. In addition, employment forms from the Division of Payroll and the Division of Retirement and Benefits must be prepared for each appointment.

For some communities with frequent need for emergency guards, the department employs the same individuals each time the need arises. There were 136 individuals who filled the 495 emergency guard appointments during 1982. These employees guard prisoners or seized property in rural areas where a one- or two-person post prevents a trooper from maintaining 24-hour per day watch. The period required for the emergency service is between arrest and either arraignment or transportation to a correctional facility or until other arrangements are made to maintain custody of the seized property. According to the Department of Public Safety, typical appointments last from two to four days.

Placing emergency guards in the partially exempt service will substantially reduce the paperwork burden placed on the Departments of Public Safety and Administration. Those employees who are repeatedly hired when an emergency occurs can remain on the payroll indefinitely, preparing time sheets for each period they actually work. Making the positions part of the partially exempt service means that the positions remain part of the state's classification plan and are paid according to the state's pay plan. This will insure pay equity for those employees.

The Blue Ribbon Commission recommends placing these positions in the partially exempt service. It will reduce the paperwork burden on the department with little effect on the employee. (The protections for emergency appointments in the classified service are not much greater, if at all, than for partially exempt employees.) The continuing need for these appointments has been adequately documented.

Bill Analysis

Line 10 Section 1 amends the section of the State Personnel Act which lists positions placed in the partially exempt service to include emergency guards.

Line 14 Section 2 amends the chapter which creates the Department of Public Safety by requiring the department to report to the Director of Personnel on the number and description of appointments of emergency guards. Departments are currently required to report the number of classified service emergency appointments they make. This will retain that requirement for emergency guards after they are moved to the partially exempt service.

In its report, the Division of Personnel states that the conditions for making emergency appointments place a significant paperwork burden on the Department of Public Safety, and on the Divisions of Personnel, Finance, and Retirement and Benefits in the Department of Administration. TO: Senator Bill Ray, Chairman

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer

SUBJECT: HB 207, HB 209 and SB 116 - Placing Emergency Guards Employed by Public Safety in the Exempt Service

HB 207 and HB 209

The House State Affairs Committee considered HB 209, sponsored by Representative Bussell, yesterday. It is identical to HB 207 and SB 116, sponsored by the Blue Ribbon Commission, and moves emergency guards from the classified service to the exempt service. The bill was introduced at the recommendation of the Division of Personnel made in its 1982 "Report on Nonpermanent and Emergency Hire Practices in State Government". I attended the hearing at the request of the staff of State Affairs.

I talked with Frank Raye, Director of Personnel, prior to the meeting. He recommended that emergency guards be placed in the partially exempt rather than the exempt service. Partially exempt positions are part of the state classification plan and are paid according to the pay plan, so there is some restraint on the department from either overpaying or underpaying those employees. He proposed these changes to the House State Affairs Committee and I said that I believed the commission would have no objection. The goal of the bill is to reduce the paperwork which the department has to process when making the large number of emergency appointments. This goal would not be affected by the amendment which was adopted.

Suzanne Tryck, professional assistant to the Senate State Affairs Committee, met with Frank Raye, Mike McMullen (Deputy Director of Personnel) and with me this morning to discuss SB 116. Mr. Raye proposed the same amendment to SB 116 which was made to HB 209 -- placing emergency guards in the partially exempt rather than the exempt service. Ms. Tryck was concerned that there are few controls over the length of service of partially exempt or exempt temporary employees (they are not covered by the nonpermanent law) and that there is not even any requirement that the departments report on the length of time they work as temporaries. We discussed the problem and arrived at a possible solution which she will suggest to Senator Fischer for inclusion in a Committee Substitute. In addition to amending the bill to place emergency guards in the partially exempt service, she will suggest adding a new section to the bill amending the nonpermanent law to require the Department of Public Safety to report quarterly on the emergency guards it hires. (The vase majority of the paperwork requirements will be eliminated by moving the positions to the partially exempt service.) The new section would read something like:

> Section 2. AS 39.25.195 is amended by adding a new paragraph to read:
> (i) The department of public safety shall submit to the director a quarterly report of each emergency for which an employee under AS 39.25.120(c)(19) was employed. The director may request more frequent reports. The director shall include this information in the report on nonpermanent and emergency hire practices in state government.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION NO. 3

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

THIRTEENTH LEGISLATURE - FIRST SESSION

Extending the life of the Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act.

BE IT RESOLVED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

WHEREAS in 1978 the legislature through Legislative Resolve No. 27 authorized the Legislative Council, in cooperation with the director of personnel, to form a "blue ribbon" commission to study the State Personnel Act; and

WHEREAS the commission was formed as authorized by the resolution, made its report to the First Session of the Eleventh Legislature, and, in response to the commission's request for additional time to study problems it had identified, was funded by the legislature for a second year; and

WHEREAS in 1980 the commission made its second report to the legislature, and the legislature through Legislative Resolve No. 38 authorized the commission to continue to perform the assignments made to it by 1978 Legislative Resolve No. 27; and

WHEREAS in 1981 the legislature, through Legislative Resolve No. 37, found that additional time was needed for the commission to complete the task to which it was assigned and authorized the commission to continue to perform its assignments until June 30, 1982; and

WHEREAS in 1982 the legislature, through Legislative Resolve No. 17 found that additional time was needed for the commission to complete the task to which it was assigned and authorized the commission to continue to perform its assignments until June 30, 1983; and

WHEREAS the commission has now identified problems relating to personnel issues but is unable to adequately address those problems before

June 30, 1983;

BE IT RESOLVED by the Alaska State Legislature that the Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act is authorized to continue to perform the assignments made to it by 1978 Legislative Resolve No. 27 through June 30, 1984.

SCR 3 - Extending the Life of the Blue Ribbon Commission

The Blue Ribbon Commission has been working for the past four and one-half years on issues in the personnel area. During that time it has recommended legislation to address the problem created by temporary state employees; it has prepared a thorough review of the State Personnel Act which passed the Legislature last session; and it has addressed other issues in the personnel and retirement areas with legislation and with suggestions to the appropriate agency where legislation was unnecessary.

The Blue Ribbon Commission has pending before it a number of questions which it has not had time to resolve. These questions include consideration of the state's written examinations for applicants for state jobs, other issues concerning the state's hiring practices, and examination of the conflict of interest regulations which apply to state employees and limit their political activities. There are also questions pending before the commission about the state's retirement systems. The commission needs more time to consider these issues and make recommendations on them. SCR 3 extends the life of the commission for one year, to June 30, 1984. The fiscal note is based on last year's budget with a slight increase for inflation.

The commission has a membership of 15 people. Members include legislators, representatives of the Department of Administration and the Division of Personnel, representatives from employee unions and associations, program managers from state agencies, and the public. There are two vacancies - one from the House of Representatives (to be filled by appointment by the Speaker of the House). The second vacancy will be filled by vote of commission members from people who have expressed an interest in serving on the commission.

MEMORANDUM

March 10, 1983

TO: House Finance Committee

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer Teresa B Cramer
Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: SCR 3 - Extending the Life of the Blue Ribbon Commission

The Alaska State Legislature created the Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act in 1978 and directed it to review the personnel system and make recommendations to improve it. Since then, the commission has worked on the issues it has identified, sponsoring legislation, making recommendations to appropriate state agencies and reporting its progress to the legislature each year.

In its first year, the commission studied the temporary employee issue extensively and sponsored a bill creating the nonpermanent employee system. The bill intended to curb the administrative practice of using temporary state employees to evade departmental accountability and mask poor planning. The legislation became effective on January 1, 1980.

The commission continued to address personnel issues and also addressed issues in collective bargaining during its second year. It studied and made recommendations to the Division of Personnel concerning the state's application process, testing practices, and identified and began discussion of problems which it was not able to act on because of time constraints. In its third year, the commission sponsored a comprehensive revision of the State Personnel Act as well as several other pieces of legislation in the personnel and retirement areas. The revision of the State Personnel Act became effective in 1982.

The commission reviewed the state's practices on employment of women and minorities during its fourth year. It recommended that a local hiring preference system be implemented particularly for state government positions in rural Alaska. It identified administrative changes to address issues presented to it and made recommendations to the Governor and to the Department of Administration. The legislature extended the existence of the commission until June 30, 1983, so that it could continue to perform the assignments made to it.

During the past year, the commission has considered a variety of issues and topics which were identified in public testimony and inquiries. It has sponsored legislation this session addressing seven of these issues, including amending the nepotism statute to provide statutory authorization for the current Personnel Rule, proposing a system of legislative review of labor agreements between the state and employee unions and associations, addressing issues in the retirement statutes, creating and protecting the state's interests in the discoveries and inventions of its employees when they are job-related, and resolving issues in the personnel system.

The commission is currently considering issues in the retirement and personnel fields which it has not had time to fully investigate and make recommendations on. These include questions concerning the appropriateness of some of the written tests used to evaluate applicants for state jobs, studying conflict of interest regulations which limit state employees' right to speak on public issues relating to their job duties, problems with disability retirement and other personnel issues.

The commission is composed of representatives from groups and persons most concerned about the state personnel system. In addition to legislators, the membership includes representatives from the unions and associations representing state employees, from the Department of Administration and the Division of Personnel, from the Ombudsman, other state agencies and the public. The breadth of expertise insures that a diversity of viewpoints is heard on the issues raised before the commission.

The commission has been unable to resolve all the questions it has considered. It therefore requests that the legislature authorize the Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act to continue to perform the assignments delegated to it through June 30, 1984.

Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: Work Order Request to Extend the Life of the Blue Ribbon Commission

I am enclosing a copy of SCR 44 from last session. Please prepare a similar resolution for introduction in both houses to extend the commission until June 30, 1984. If you have questions, please give me a call. The resolution should be delivered to Senator Ray's office.

The commission's activities this past year focused on personnel issues, and several have been identified for which the commission has been unable to recommend solutions in the time available to it.

Thanks.

Attached is the fiscal note you requested January 4.

In studying the actual expenditures for FY 82 and reviewing the expenditures for the first half of FY 83 and providing for a slight inflation factor, it appears that the $100,800 will be enough to cover your operations for FY 84.

SUBJECT: HCR 13 - Extending the Life of the Blue Ribbon Commission

The Alaska State Legislature created the Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act in 1978 and directed it to review the personnel system and make recommendations to improve it. Since then, the commission has worked on the issues it has identified, sponsoring legislation, making recommendations to appropriate state agencies and reporting its progress to the legislature each year.

In its first year, the commission studied the temporary employee issue extensively and sponsored a bill creating the nonpermanent employee system. The bill intended to curb the administrative practice of using temporary state employees to evade departmental accountability and mask poor planning. The legislation became effective on January 1, 1980.

The commission continued to address personnel issues and also addressed issues in collective bargaining during its second year. It studied and made recommendations to the Division of Personnel concerning the state's application process, testing practices, and identified and began discussion of problems which it was not able to act on because of time constraints. In its third year, the commission sponsored a comprehensive revision of the State Personnel Act as well as several other pieces of legislation in the personnel and retirement areas. The revision of the State Personnel Act became effective in 1982.

The commission reviewed the state's practices on employment of women and minorities during its fourth year. It recommended that a local hiring preference system be implemented particularly for state government positions in rural Alaska. It identified administrative changes to address issues presented to it and made recommendations to the Governor and to the Department of Administration. The legislature extended the existence of the commission until June 30, 1983, so that it could continue to perform the assignments made to it.

During the past year, the commission has considered a variety of issues and topics which were identified in public testimony and inquiries. It has sponsored legislation this session addressing seven of these issues, including amending the nepotism statute to provide statutory authorization for the current Personnel Rule, proposing a system of legislative review of labor agreements between the state and employee unions and associations, addressing issues in the retirement statutes, creating and protecting the state's interests in the discoveries and inventions of its employees when they are job-related, and resolving issues in the personnel system.

The commission is composed of representatives from groups and persons most concerned about the state personnel system. In addition to legislators, the membership includes representatives from the unions and associations representing state employees, from the Department of Administration and the Division of Personnel, from the Ombudsman, other state agencies and the public. The breadth of expertise insures that a diversity of viewpoints is heard on the issues raised before the commission.

The commission has been unable to resolve all the questions it has considered. It therefore requests that the legislature authorize the Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act to continue to perform the assignments delegated to it through June 30, 1984.

CS HB 49 (SA): Nepotism in state employment

History - IN THE HOUSE

State Affairs: Hearings 1/26, 2/10, 2/22 and final passing out of committee on February 28.

Judiciary: Hearings 4/13 and 4/25. Rep. Bussell (and others - perhaps Rep. Liska?) wanted to try to address the relationship between non-married state employees living together. John Rubini of the AG's office pointed out that there could be constitutional problems related to invasion of privacy but said he would work on the question. Nothing happened after that.

John also said that the Division of Personnel may, contrary to the earlier AG's opinion, have authority to adopt nepotism regulations which are more comprehensive (and restrictive) than the nepotism statute, which (if it were true) would make this bill unnecessary.

Note: Senator Ray wanted, at one time, to try to include non-married people living in a marital-style relationship within the nepotism prohibitions. See my short note to him dated February 7th.

At one time, there was discussion of changing the language so that "close relatives" were prohibited from employment situations, rather than prohibiting "spouses or persons related by blood or marriage within and including the second degree of kindred" and then providing, in the bill, a definition of "close relatives." This might make the bill more readable, and could be pursued later if the bill goes anywhere.

A copy of the case which has been filed, challenging DOT's implementation of nepotism regulations, is enclosed. John Rubini said that it wasn't going anywhere, the last time I spoke with him about it. The case may be assigned to someone else.

Compainion bill: SB 56 is identical to the original HB 49. It had no hearings last session, largely because Nancy Groshek, Sen. Vic Fischer's aide, does not believe in nepotism restrictions. From what I can tell, she is unlikely to change her mind.

The Honorable Charlie Bussell
Chairman, House Judiciary Committee
Alaska State Legislature
Pouch V
Juneau, AK 99811

Re: CS for HB 49
Our file no.: 366-568-83

Dear Representative Bussell:

This letter responds to the several questions relating to the nepotism restrictions proposed in the CS for HB 49, now pending before the House Judiciary Committee.

As discussed at the prior committee hearing, the state is presently a party to litigation which questions the permissible scope of any nepotism prohibition established under the Personnel Rules. Public Employees Local 71 v. State, Case No. 82-4931 Civ. (Third Judicial District). The complaint, filed in June 1982, alleges, in pertinent part, that the director of the division of personnel exceeded statutory authority in adopting Personnel Rule 13 09. The state's position in the litigation is that the personnel Rule was adopted under the authority of AS 39.25. At the present time, the parties are pursuing settlement negotiations.

A brief summary of the legal questions posed in the litigation may prove helpful to the committee. Directly at issue in the litigation is whether AS 39.25.150 confers the requisite statutory authority for the promulgation of any Personnel Rules which relate to a nepotism restriction. See AS 44.62.020. See also Kelly v. Zamarello, 486 P.2d 906, 910 n. 19 (Alaska 1971). If adoption of a nepotism restriction is authorized under AS 39.25, the inquiry turns to whether the rules are "in accordance with standard prescribed by other provision of law." AS 44.62.020. See Boehl v. Sabre Jet Room, Inc., 349 P.2d 585 (Alaska 1960). Our research has not as yet disclosed any Alaska case authority which offers a direct answer to whether it is permissible to adopt under the authority of the enabling statute a regulation which extends, but is not inconsistent with, the policy expressed in a separate statutory provision. Two factors may prove relevant were the litigation to proceed to a judicial resolution. First, regulations are typically accorded a presumption of validity. Alaska Intern Industries, Inc. v. Musarra, 602 P.2d 1240 (Alaska 1979). Second, the legislature has amended AS 39.25 subsequent to the enactment of AS 39.10.010, as recently as last session, presumably with knowledge of the long-standing nepotism prohibition in the Personnel Rules. However, since the matter is presently in litigation, any further comment on the merits of the pending litigation would be inappropriate. If, ultimately, the matter is not resolved in the immediate litigation, the Department of Law will review whether the director of personnel enjoys the authority to establish reasonable nepotism restrictions beyond the scope of AS 39.10.010. We are in formed that in the interm the division of personnel does not intend to enforce Personnel Rule 13 09. See 1979 Inf. Att'y Gen. Op. (Feb. 13; J-66-191-79).

The committee also questioned whether any legislative action to amend AS 39.10.010 would unduly prejudice the state's position in the litigation. That the propriety of Personnel Rule 13 09 is questioned in pending litigation should not, in our view, impair the Legislature's ability to address this matter. Any inference drawn from the legislature's action or, alternatively, inaction would be speculative at best, and would not be a determining factor in the litigation. Moreover, an appropriate letter of intent would dispel whatever inference may be suggested due to prospective legislative reform.

The committee also raised several questions broadly relating to the scope of CSHB 49. The proposed bill establishes nepotism restrictions specific to state "department[s] or agenc[ies]." Absent specific statutory provision to the contrary, the nepotism restrictions would not apply, for example, to the appointment of members or employees of regulatory boards and commissions, such as those regulatory bodies established in Title 8 of the Alaska Statutes. Further, in its most expansive scope the restrictions concern only the relationship between a prospective employee and the commissioner, deputy commissioner or executive head of a particular agency or department. The bill does not, therefore, address the situation of a relationship between two persons not employed within the same department or agency. The example raised at the prior committee hearing, the appointment of a legislator's spouse or child to a position in a state agency or, for that matter, to a position on any legislator's personal staff, would not be within the ambit of the present bill. Of course, other rules adopted by the legislature to manage internal affairs may address such a situation. Finally, a question was raised as to whether it would be appropriate to limit the coverage to persons related by blood or marriage. More specifically, the question concerned the possible extension of the nepotism prohibition to persons in a meretricious relationship. Without addressing any policy implications, we caution that amending the bill to obtain the contemplated policy objectives would render the legislation extremely vulnerable to challenge as violative of the constitutional guarantees to equal protection, due process and personal privacy.

Please let us know if we can offer any further assistance on this matter.

You have asked whether the relationships included in the "second degree of kindred" as that term is defined in the proposed committee substitute for HB 49 are the same relationships that are traditionally associated with that phrase. The term "degree of kindred" is not defined in the Alaska Statutes. In other jurisdictions the "degree of kindred" between one person and another is normally determined as follows: Take the closest common ancestor of the two persons and count the generations back to that ancestor from each; each generation represents a degree of kindred. Thus, the first degree of kindred to a person includes the parents and children of that person, the second degree includes brothers and sisters, grandparents, and grandchildren, and the third degree includes nephews and nieces and aunts and uncles. In proposed CSHB 49 aunts and uncles are included within the definition of "second degree of kindred" although they would normally be considered to be in the "third degree of kindred". In other respects the statutory and common law definitions are the same.

It should be pointed out that since the definition of "second degree of kindred" in the proposed CSHB 49 only applies to the section in which it appears, the term can include any relationships that the legislature sees fit to include. You can also use a different term, such as "close relationship" if you feel that use of the traditional "degree of kindred" terminology will cause confusion.

Senator Ray -

I looked for a definition for people living together but not married and came up with the following from AS 18.66.900(3):

> "domestic violence" means a crime specified in AS 11.41 when the victim is a spouse or a former spouse of the defendant or a member of the social unit comprised of those living together in the same dwelling as the defendant.

I called the Council on Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault to ask whether they had anything which would explain "social unit." They don't but they are working on a definition and will let me know if they develop something satisfactory. Is this the language you were interested in adding to the nepotism statute?

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This is a follow up to my testimony given before the House State Affairs Committee on January 26, 1983. At your request I am reducing to writing some of my concerns about House Bill 49.

At the outset I wish to express my support for a nepotism bill for the Executive Branch of Government. At the present time AS 39.10.010 only prohibits spouses and close relatives of "... the executive head of a principal state department or agency..." from being employed. Therefore the need for additional prohibitions is obvious.

There are, however, some potential problems with House Bill 49 which I would like to point out:

1. Concepts of Nepotism - There are two concepts of nepotism, one of which should be decided on:

    a. The Narrow Concept - Nepotism is the prohibition of a high official from using his or her influence to hire a spouse or other close relative.

    b. The Broader Concept - Nepotism is the prohibition of spouses or close relatives working together.

Under the first concept, it would be permissible for two people to continue to work together provided they were married after being employed. Under the second broader concept, when two employees got married, one of them would have to quit because of apparent conflict of interest.

I recommend the narrower concept to allow people who meet on the job and decide to live together to have the choice of marriage.

It is my understanding that the phrase "A person may not be appointed..." incorporates the narrower concept only. I support this interpretation. However, I feel it is arguable. There-

Honorable Mitch Abood
Chairman
House State Affairs Committee
Alaska State Legislature

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This is a follow up to my testimony given before the House State Affairs Committee on January 26, 1983. At your request I am reducing to writing some of my concerns about House Bill 49.

At the outset I wish to express my support for a nepotism bill for the Executive Branch of Government. At the present time AS 39.10.010 only prohibits spouses and close relatives of "... the executive head of a principal state department or agency..." from being employed. Therefore the need for additional prohibitions is obvious.

There are, however, some potential problems with House Bill 49 which I would like to point out:

1. Concepts of Nepotism - There are two concepts of nepotism, one of which should be decided on:

    a. The Narrow Concept - Nepotism is the prohibition of a high official from using his or her influence to hire a spouse or other close relative.

    b. The Broader Concept - Nepotism is the prohibition of spouses or close relatives working together.

Under the first concept, it would be permissible for two people to continue to work together provided they were married after being employed. Under the second broader concept, when two employees got married, one of them would have to quit because of apparent conflict of interest.

I recommend the narrower concept to allow people who meet on the job and decide to live together to have the choice of marriage.

It is my understanding that the phrase "A person may not be appointed..." incorporates the narrower concept only. I support this interpretation. However, I feel it is arguable. Therefore, I recommend that the intent of the legislation be clear in the bill so that it will not be administered on the basis of an Attorney General's Opinion.

2. Possible conflict with Title 18 - Alaska law prohibits discrimination on the basis of marital status or change in marital status. To prohibit one from working with a spouse could be argued to be discrimination. The counter argument is that the discrimination is based on who a person is married to (that is a state employee) not on marital status per se (that is if a person is married or single). Again, I believe the argument should be settled prior to the adoption of the legislation.

3. Approval by the Director of Personnel - Paragraph C of House Bill 49 prohibits a person from being appointed to any executive branch, department or agency if they are the spouse or close relative to any other employee in that department or agency "...unless the director of personnel and the appointing authority approve the appointment in writing."

I recommend that language be changed to permit the executive head of a department or agency to give written approval. I see no need to have the Director of Personnel give approval. Furthermore, you may wish to state in the bill conditions under which commissioners and agency heads may give their approval. For example, it may be desirable to prohibit one spouse from supervising another.

4. Definition - I also suggest the bill provide a definition of "second degree of kindred". This is a term which, as I understand it, comes from probate law and which does in fact have a legal definition. However, that definition is not commonly understood nor readily available.

Thank you for the opportunity to give testimony before your committee and for considering these points. I will be glad to appear before you again to answer any questions or discuss any of these issues further.

Sincerely,

Frank Raye

MEMORANDUM

March 2, 1983

TO: House Judiciary Committee

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer Teresa B Cramer
Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: Committee Substitute for House Bill 49 (State Affairs)
Nepotism in State Government

The existing statute prohibiting nepotism in state employment forbids only the employment of anyone related to the executive head of a department or agency. The statute states in full:

> It is unlawful for a person who is the spouse of or is related by blood within and including the second degree of kindred to the executive head of a principal state department or agency to be employed in that department or agency. AS 39.10.010.

The Personnel Rule is more extensive, prohibiting the employment of relatives of the head of a division or subdivision within that division or subdivision. In addition, the Rule prohibits the employment of two related persons in the same agency unless express approval is given by both the appointing authority and the Director of Personnel. A copy of the Rule is attached.

The scope of the Personnel Rule is broader than the statutory authority granted in AS 39.10.010. The rule-making authority given to the Personnel Board by the State Personnel Act may not extend to nepotism, since the nepotism statute is not part of that Act. The Attorney General has advised the Division of Personnel that the nepotism rule exceeds the scope of statutory authority. A lawsuit has been filed challenging the Department of Transportation's implementation of nepotism prohibitions.

The Blue Ribbon Commission recommends that legislation prohibiting nepotism in state employment be adopted to provide statutory authority for the Personnel Rule. The prohibition against employing relatives does limit the opportunities for some Alaskans to find state jobs. The disadvantage to those people should be weighed against the appearance of impropriety and favoritism which is created by people working for a close relative who is a highly-placed state official.

Bill Analysis

Page 1 Line 9 — The first section of the Committee Substitute is based on the existing statute and Personnel Rule. The first paragraph prohibits the appointment of relatives or the spouse of the commissioner, assistant or deputy commissioner of a department or the relatives or spouse of an executive head of an agency. The reference to AS 39.25.020 means that the prohibition will extend to departments or agencies in all branches of government.

Paragraph (a) differs from the existing Personnel Rule and the statute by including reference to assistant and deputy commissioners and by its application to departments and agencies which are not part of the executive branch of government. It also differs by prohibiting the appointment rather than the employment of relatives. Prohibiting appointments of relatives permits people whose relationship is created (by marriage or adoption) after both are employed within a department to continue their employment even if one is the commissioner, deputy or assistant commissioner. However, the relative could not be promoted while related to the commissioner, since a promotion is an appointment to a higher position.

Line 16 — Paragraph (b) prohibits the appointment of relatives of a division director to a position within that division. Like the first section, this prohibition extends to all branches of government through reference to AS 39.25.020.

Line 21 — Paragraph (c) requires that before two relatives may be employed in the same department, the commissioner must approve the appointment in writing. This prohibition is limited to the executive branch.

Line 27 — The commissioner may not approve an appointment if one of the people will be working in a direct supervisory relationship to the other spouse or relative.

Page 2 Line 1 — The commissioner may not approve an appointment which is prohibited by paragraphs (a) or (b).

Line 3 — Paragraph (d) defines "second degree of kindred" as it is defined in the current Personnel Rule. The definition extends beyond the normal definition by including aunts and uncles, who are usually defined as being third degree kindred. The definition applies only to the nepotism statute.

"Second degree of kindred" is defined to include full, half, and step relationships. It does not include in-law relationships.

Line 7 The second section of the Committee Substitute provides for an immediate effective date.

MEMORANDUM

January 20, 1983

TO: House State Affairs Committee

SUBJECT: House Bill 49, Relating to Nepotism in State Employment

The existing statute prohibiting nepotism in state employment forbids only the employment of anyone related to the executive head of a department or agency. AS 39.10.010. The Personnel Rule is more extensive, prohibiting the employment of relatives of the head of a division or subdivision within that division or subdivision. In addition, the Rule prohibits the employment of two related persons in the same agency unless express approval is given by both the appointing authority and the Director of Personnel.

The scope of the Personnel Rule is broader than the statutory authority granted in AS 39.10.010. In addition, the rule-making authority given to the Personnel Board by the State Personnel Act may not extend to nepotism, since the nepotism statute is placed outside the Act. The Attorney General has advised the Division of Personnel that the nepotism rule may exceed the scope of statutory authority. A lawsuit has been filed challenging the Department of Transportation's implementation of nepotism prohibitions.

The Blue Ribbon Commission recommends that legislation prohibiting nepotism in state employment be adopted to provide statutory authority for the Personnel Rule. The prohibition against employing relatives does limit the opportunities for some Alaskans to find state jobs. The disadvantage to those people should be weighed against the appearance of impropriety and favoritism which is created by people working for a close relative. Problems can also arise if relatives are working in the same office so it is appropriate that the hiring decision be scrutinized with the potential for personnel problems in mind.

Bill Analysis

Line 9 The first section of the proposed legislation codifies the Personnel Rule. The first paragraph retains the existing nepotism prohibition and extends it to include relatives of deputy or assistant commissioners. The prohibition against employing a person related to the executive head of an agency applies to all legislative, judicial and executive branch agencies.

Line 17 The second paragraph adds new langage based on the Personnel Rule to prohibit appointment of a relative of the head of a division within that division. It applies to positions in the legislative, judicial or executive branch.

Line 22 The third paragraph prohibits employment of two relatives within the same executive branch department or agency unless the appointing authority and the Director of Personnel approve the second appointment in writing.

In each of the paragraphs, relatives include spouses and persons within the "second degree of kindred", which the Personnel Rules define as:

> father, mother, son, daughter, brother, sister, husband, wife, grandfather, grandmother, grandson, granddaughter, uncle and aunt including those involving half or step relationships.

Line 29 The second section of the proposed legislation provides for an immediate effective date.

SUBJECT: Nepotism Regulations

I received a telephone call from a state employee concerning the effect of nepotism regulations. She reported that a man wanted to work for the Juneau Job Service Office but was told that he could not while his niece by marriage was employed there as a secretary. She had recently moved to Juneau and he had met her only a few weeks before. The niece found another secretarial position so he was hired. There would not have been a direct supervisory relationship between the man and his niece. The caller also said that she had thought of transferring from Juneau to Ketchikan but that she could not because her sister-in-law already worked in the Job Service Office there. She did not believe their personal relationship would have affected their work.

The Personnel Rules permit the departmental appointing authority and the Director of Personnel to waive the prohibition in these situations. Apparently the Job Service Center policy was against requesting nepotism waivers.

She has observed, however, that personal relationships can cause employee problems. A person and his mistress were employed in an office where she worked and when they were having a quarrel outside work it affected their behavior at work and caused tension in the whole office. Nepotism regulations do not address this situation at all.

The Personnel Rules permit the departmental appointing authority and the Director of Personnel to waive the prohibition in these situations. Apparently the Job Service Center policy was against requesting nepotism waivers.

She has observed, however, that personal relationships can cause employee problems. A person and his mistress were employed in an office where she worked and when they were having a quarrel outside work it affected their behavior at work and caused tension in the whole office. Nepotism regulations do not address this situation at all.

SUBJECT: CONTROL OF NEPOTISM WAIVERS

DIVISION	SECTION	CHAPTER TITLE
Support Services	Personnel	General

PURPOSE:

To establish a standard procedure to control the approval of nepotism waivers for all employees of this Department, including employees of Marine Highways.

POLICY:

It is the policy of this Department to not hire or commit to hire employees which require a nepotism waiver prior to its approval. It is further the Department's policy to approve all legal waivers where employees are not in the same division. Requests for nepotism waivers for employees within the same division are not encouraged; however, it is recognized that in areas where we have critical shortages of candidates in certain job classifications, it may be necessary; this will normally be a last resort consideration after all other possibilities have been explored. Under no circumstances will we consider the hire of relatives within and including the second degree of kindred (see Personnel Rule No. 1) who would have a direct supervisory/subordinate relationship.

DISTRIBUTION:

All holders of the Policy and Procedures Manual and posting on bulletin boards to the extent of insuring proper notice to all employees of this Department.

PROCEDURE:

Request for nepotism waiver for a position is initiated by completing the form shown on page 2 for classified positions or the form shown on page 3 for vessel employees. Care will be taken to be sure that justification for hire is logical and adequate. If the request is for nepotism within a division, the justification must explain the extraordinary circumstances which necessitate the request and must indicate that no supervisory/subordinate relationship exist or is likely to exist in the future.

After initiation and signing by immediate supervisors, the form will be processed through normal administrative channels to the Deputy Commissioner for the unit wanting to hire the new employee. The form should then be submitted to the Department Personnel Officer who will be responsible for forwarding approved requests for classified positions to the Division of Personnel for final approval. If time is of the essence and the Deputy Commissioner has delegated the authority, request may be made for non-intra divisional waivers by a telephone call to the Department Personnel Officer who will prepare the form and secure final approval.

Requests denied will be returned indicating reasons therefore. Requests for vessel employees will be returned to the Division of Marine Highways indicating approval or denial. A copy of each approved nepotism waiver will be placed in each employee file.

HB 50: Collective Bargaining

History - IN THE HOUSE

L & C — I met with staff of the committee (Steve Levy?) on 1/26. He suggested that there be some provision added to the bill to insure that there would be floor action on approval or disapproval of a collective bargaining contract, rather than permitting inaction by the legislature to indicate anything. He suggested looking at the Sunset provisions as an example of how to do that. Senator Ray was not enthused so I did not pursue the suggestion.
No hearings were held in committee.

Companion bill: SB 55 is the companion and has been amended (CS), passed the Senate, passed House Labor & Commerce, which adopted its own CS, and is in House Finance.

February 1, 1983

Senator Ray -

I met with a staff person for House Labor and Commerce to talk about the Blue Ribbon Commission bills which are in their committee. He suggested that the collective bargaining bill include some provision to insure that any resolution disapproving a labor agreement actually makes its way through the committee process and is voted on by the whole body. The sunset laws may provide an example for doing that. They require that Shall I follow up on this idea?

MEMORANDUM

January 25, 1983

TO: House Labor and Commerce Committee

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer Teresa B Cramer
Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: House Bill 50 - Collective Bargaining

The Public Employment Relations Act provides that the monetary terms of any agreement entered into between the state and an employee representative are subject to funding through legislative appropriation. AS 23.40.215. The Act does not set out how the legislative review should occur.

The Blue Ribbon Commission has discussed the problems which can arise if the Legislature fails to act expeditiously on collective bargaining agreements submitted to it. Delay followed by legislative rejection can preclude the parties from completing any renegotiations before the Legislature adjourns. There would then be no funding for the new agreement and the Legislature might have to convene in special session, an expensive alternative.

The commission recommends that legislation be adopted which would encourage prompt legislative review of collective bargaining agreements.

Bill Analysis

Page 1
Line 9 — The first section of the proposed legislation requires that negotiated agreements be submitted to the Legislature within 10 days of signing by the parties and that the Legislature have 30 days to review the monetary terms. If the Legislature finds the terms unacceptable, then it may reject the agreement by concurrent resolution. If the Legislature fails to act within 30 days, then the contracts will be considered to have legislative approval. The proposed legislation does not address the introduction or passage of an appropriation bill funding the agreements.

Line 18 — The second section of the bill contains an immediate effective date clause.

HB 51: Limiting the adjustment of retirement benefits

History - IN THE HOUSE

L & C	Hearing 2/7 and 3/25. At first hearing, Ken Humphreys, Director of Retirement & Benefits, testified that current law provides that the boards of retirement may waive collection of an overpayment where there is hardship. He added that in fact, the boards have been generous in waiving overpayments (as they have been). Committee staff urged passage of the bill & compared its provisions to federal requirements which are imposed on private pension funds.
State Affairs	Hearing 4/29. The Senate version, SB 57, arrived in State Affairs just before the hearing, and the committee acted on that bill rather than this one.

Companion bill: CS SB 57 is the companion and is the one which moved out of House State Affairs. This bill is therefore inactive. The administration prefers CS SB 57 to the original bill.

Dear Representative Abood:

You requested further written clarification of the Department of Administration's position on HB 51. The department, as well as the Public Employees' and Teachers' Retirement Boards, feel that adequate and equitable mechanisms already exist (AS 14.25.175 and AS 39.35.522) to grant relief in the form of waivers of adjustments to retirees who have been overpaid as a result of errors.

However, if the legislature feels that some change is appropriate, we feel that two major deficiencies in HB 51 should be addressed. First, the bill would prevent recovery of an overpayment even if the recipient of the overpayment knew or had reason to know an error had occurred. The language on page 1, lines 16 and 17 and on page 2, lines 8 and 9 of the attached CSSB 57 addresses this problem. Second, HB 51 makes no provision for oversight by the boards or for a hearing by the boards if it appears that a waiver of overpayment may not be justified. The language on page 1, lines 18-29 and on page 2, lines 10-21 of CSSB 57 addresses this problem.

Please let us know if you need further information.

MEMORANDUM

April 14, 1983

TO: House State Affairs Committee

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer Teresa B Cramer
Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: House Bill 51 - Limiting the Adjustment of Retirement Benefits

Retired state employees may have substantial difficulties if they are required to repay retirement benefits improperly received because of errors made by the Divisic of Retirement and Benefits or because of a change in law. The commission is proposing legislation to limit the authority of the division to collect amounts paid improperly through no fault of the beneficiary or retired person if the error is not corrected within two years.

One woman testified to the commission that before she retired she asked the division to verify her years of credited service. Several years later a court-ordered change in retirement regulations reduced the number of years for which she received credit. Her employment with the University of Alaska could no longer be counted as credited service in PERS. As a result she had received more than $5000 in benefits to which she was not entitled. The division reduced her benefit to the correct amount and began withholding an additional $100 per month to be applied to the overpayment. She appealed to the Public Employees Retirement Board asking that collection of the overpayment be waived. The Board agreed.

Both the Public Employees' Retirement Board and the Teachers' Retirement Board have authority to waive collection of overpayments, but the uncertainty of an appeal can cause considerable stress to people on fixed incomes. Both boards are required to determine whether there would be undue hardship imposed by requiring repayment. AS 14.25.175 and AS 39.35.522. In establishing whether there is financial hardship, the entire family financial situation is considered, not just the resources of the petitioner.

The commission recommends that a two-year statute of limitations be placed on the collection of overpayments which resulted from errors which were not caused by the retired state employee. Two years provides ample opportunity for the division to audit its records and correct any errors. After that period, a retired person should not be required to repay benefits erroneously received if he or she did not cause the error. The division would still correct the amount of future benefits paid to the retired person.

Bill Analysis

Page 1 Line 9	The first section of the proposed legislation adds the two-year statute of limitations to the Teachers' Retirement System.
Line 18	The second section adds the same provision to the Public Employees' Retirement System. The amendment to PERS is applied only to state employees because the Blue Ribbon Commission considered that requiring other participating employers to pay for errors made by the state was inappropriate.
Line 29	The third section makes the bill effective retroactively to July 1, 1979, in order to apply to those individuals whose situations came to the commission's attention.

History - IN THE HOUSE

Judiciary This bill had no hearings in the House.

Note: The Council on Science and Technology, which the bill makes responsible for carrying out the protection of the state's interest in patents, copyrights and trademarks, has been drastically reshaped by the legislature this session. If this bill goes anywhere, some alternative may have to be found for carrying out the functions assigned to the Council.

Companion bill: SB 59 is the companion. It had one hearing in committee and I met with Suzanne Tryck(Senator Vic Fischer's aide on this bill) several times to discuss problems. She indicated that the committee would be working on the bill during the interim.

MEMORANDUM

January 25, 1983

TO: House Judiciary Committee

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer Teresa B Cramer
Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: House Bill 52 - Government Interests in Intellectual Work Products Developed at the Expense of the State

The Blue Ribbon Commission is proposing legislation to create and protect the state's interest in inventions, discoveries and creations developed by state employees or contractors during their employment or developed with the use of state facilities or resources.

The commission became interested in the issue when an employee of the Department of Fish and Game testified about employment problems arising from his patenting of a production scale salmon incubator. He had begun developing the incubator before he accepted employment with the state. He began working for the department and continued his project after securing advice from the Department of Law concerning avoiding the potential conflict of interest. His job for Fish and Game was closely related to the development of incubators. The employee stated that he created the incubator on his own time. He then patented it and sold the patent to a private corporation which marketed it. Thereafter, the department was required to pay royalties for use of the process.

The employee has filed several grievances over poor performance evaluations, lost promotional opportunities, and an alleged retaliatory layoff which he believed resulted from his patenting the invention. The department testified that there had been considerable morale problems because other employees believed that they had contributed to the development of the process. They thought it unfair that one individual could secure a patent and potentially profit from an invention in which others had participated and in which the state should have an interest.

The Blue Ribbon Commission is concerned that there is no statute protecting the state's interest in the inventions, discoveries and creations made by its employees or made through the use of its facilities. Legislation for the Alaska Energy Center and the Alaska

Resources Corporation gives each agency the authority to hold patents. Nothing in either chapter spells out how the state acquires that interest.

While the proposed legislation does not specifically address the situation which occurred in the Department of Fish and Game, the commission believes that this system would alleviate similar problems in the future. Information about the number of conflict of interest hearings before the Personnel Board indicates that there will probably be no more than two or three applications of the bill per year.

Bill Analysis

Page 1 Line 10	The first section of the proposed legislation gives the state all right, title and interest in any intellectual work product developed during working hours or with the use of state facilities or by employees whose duties include responsibility for research.
Page 4 Line 12	"Intellectual work product" is broadly defined later in the bill to include anything which is subject to patent, trademark or copyright laws.
Page 2 Line 8	A state employee or person under contract with the state is obliged to disclose the development of an intellectual work product to the Alaska Council on Science and Technology and to assign any interest in it to the state. If requested, the person is required to assist the Council in applying for a trademark, patent or copyright. The commission believes that the Council is the most appropriate existing state agency to administer the program.
Page 2 Line 21	The Council is given broad discretion to decide whether to pursue patenting, trademarking, or copyrighting the invention after consultation with affected state agencies. The Council may waive any state interest in the discovery or may waive all interest but retain a royalty-free license in the intellectual work product so that the state would not have to pay for its use in the future. If the state waives its interest, then the inventor would be able to pursue protection of his own interest in the discovery.
Page 3 Line 3	The proposed legislation gives the Council authority to grant monetary recognition to employees who develop an intellectual work product. The recognition could be in the form of a cash award, a share in any royalties generated by the invention, or in any other manner the Council found appropriate. Payment would, of course, be subject to legislative appropriation. The commission believes that the Council should have wide discretion in implementing the monetary award system in order to best encourage employees in their work and serve the state's interests.

Line 13

Any disagreements between an employee and the state pertaining to ownership of an intellectual work product would be subject to voluntary arbitration if the parties agreed to be bound by the result. If not, then the disagreement could be settled in court. In addition, the state and the employee or contractor may enter into an employment contract which requires compulsory arbitration.

Page 3
Line 29

Legislators and employees of the University of Alaska are exempted from the chapter. The University has its own policy on intellectual property developed at its expense which is codified in section 2 of the proposed legislation.

Page 4
Line 5

The Council is granted rule-making authority for the chapter in accordance with the Administrative Procedure Act.

Page 4
Line 24

Section 2 of the legislation adds language to codify the University of Alaska's right to intellectual work products developed by its employees.

Page 5
Line 7

Section 3 requires state employees to waive their interest in intellectual work products developed at the expense of the state as set out in section 1 of the bill. The waiver is not subject to negotiation under the Public Employment Relations Act.

Page 5
Line 29

Section 4 amends the Alaska Council on Science and Technology statutes to add the powers and responsibilities granted by the proposed legislation.

Page 6
Line 7

Section 5 repeals the patenting powers currently granted to the Alaska Energy Center and the Alaska Resources Corporation. The commission believes that there should be a single system which applies to all legislative, judicial and executive branch employees of the state.

HB 53: Prohibiting duplicate Teachers' Retirement benefits for Alaska BIA service

History - IN THE HOUSE

L & C	Hearings on 2/7/83 and 4/18/83. Passed with individual recommendations. Ken Humphries, Director of Retirement & Benefits, testified that the division had no need for this legislation since it has the power to adopt regulations of this sort without additional authorization but the committee passed the bill anyway. (I responded that the commission chairman recommended the bill because future directors might see the matter differently.)
State Affairs	Hearings 4/29 and 5/10/83. A technical amendment was proposed by Ken Humphries at the earlier meeting but the committee did not amend the bill.
Finance	No hearings were held before adjournment.

Companion bill: SB 58 had one hearing in Senate HESS and then came to a stop. With regulations in place, the justification for either bill is that it will insure that future directors do not change their minds and rescind the regulations. Copies of the regulations are in the file and also are attached to my memo to House Finance. That committee got 12 or 15 copies of the memo.

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

THIRTEENTH LEGISLATURE - FIRST SESSION

A BILL

For an Act entitled: "An Act prohibiting duplicate teachers' retirement benefits for Alaska BIA service."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

* Section 1. AS 14.25.107 is amended to read:

Sec. 14.25.107. CREDIT FOR ALASKA BIA SERVICE. A member who joins the system on or after July 1, 1978, who has Alaska BIA service may claim all of that service as credited service. [A RETIREMENT BENEFIT PAYABLE UNDER THIS CHAPTER FOR ALASKA BIA SERVICE SHALL BE REDUCED BY AN AMOUNT EQUAL TO THE RETIREMENT BENEFITS PAID TO THE MEMBER BY THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT FOR THE SAME SERVICE.]

* Sec. 2. AS 14.25.169 is amended to read:

Sec. 14.25.169. DUPLICATE BENEFITS. (a) If payments from this retirement system are due to a teacher or to the teacher's spouse under more than one provision of this plan, the teacher or spouse shall elect under which provision and which benefit the teacher or spouse wishes to receive and no payments may be made under any other provision. However, benefits under AS 14.25.155, 14.25.157, 14.25.-160, 14.25.162, 14.25.164, and 14.25.167 shall be paid in addition to those benefits or that service credit a person is entitled to receive because of the person's own membership in the retirement system.

(b) A teacher may not receive

(1) duplicate credit under this system for the same period of service,

(2) more than one year of service credit in the course of a school year, or

(3) a benefit while accruing service credit under this system, except as provided in this section.

(c) A retirement benefit payable under this chapter for Alaska BIA service shall be reduced by an amount equal to the retirement benefits paid to the member by the United States government for the same service. Before appointment to retirement under this chapter, and once each year thereafter, the administrator may require a member who has received credit for Alaska BIA service under AS 14.25.107 to produce verification of the benefit amount the member is receiving from the United States government for that same service or verification that the member is not entitled to receive a benefit from the United States government for that same service.

MEMORANDUM

May 17, 1983

TO: House Finance Committee

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer Teresa B Cramer
Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: House Bill 53 - Prohibiting Duplicate Teachers' Retirement Benefits for Alaska BIA Service

The Blue Ribbon Commission heard testimony from the Division of Retirement and Benefits that a loophole exists in the Teachers' Retirement System statutes which permit receiving TRS credited service for federal employment in Alaska BIA schools. Teachers who qualified for federal retirement from a BIA school and who then worked for the state in a position covered by the Teachers' Retirement System could receive benefits for the same years of service from each system.

Under TRS, teachers may receive credit for Alaska BIA service by contributing 7% of their entry TRS salary for each year of BIA service to be credited. The law provides that state retirement benefits for Alaska BIA service will be reduced by the amount received from the federal government for the same service. However, this is verified only at the time of applying for retirement.

Credit from both retirement systems is possible if the teacher who has worked for both employers buys TRS credited service for BIA employment and takes a lump sum payment of his or her federal retirement contributions before retiring from the state. At the time of state retirement, the teacher reports being eligible to receive no federal retirement benefits for Alaska BIA service. After establishing state benefits, the teacher could repay the lump sum to the federal government and claim a federal retirement. The teacher would then be drawing from two retirement systems for the same period of service.

The commission recommends that language be added to the TRS statutes to permit the Division of Retirement to require retired members to verify annually any federal benefits received for Alaska BIA service. The division has adopted regulations which permit requiring members of TRS and PERS to report annually about whether they are receiving a retirement benefit from the United States Government for the same period of service for which they are receiving a state retirement benefit. Copies of the regulations are attached. The commission continues to recommend passage of HB 53 to place authorization for the regulation in statute.

Bill Analysis

Page 1 Line 9	The first section of the bill deletes material concerning treatment of duplicate benefits from the current authorization for claiming BIA service.
Page 2 Line 4	The language deleted in section 1 is moved to AS 14.25.169 by the second section of the bill.
Line 7	Section 2 also provides authorization for the Division of Retirement and Benefits to request annual verification of the amount of any federal retirement benefits for Alaska BIA service for which state benefits are also received.

House State Affairs Committee Amendment

At the request of the Director of Retirement and Benefits, the House State Affairs Committee adopted the following amendment:

Page 2, line 5: Between the words "service" and "shall" insert:
claimed under AS 14.25.107

The amendment makes clear that those who qualified for TRS benefits before July 1, 1978, when the statutes were amended to require offsetting state benefits by the amount of any federal benefits received, are not affected by this amendment.

I spoke with Ken Humphreys, director of the division of retirement. These regulations are available for comment until March 31st, at which time they will become final unless amended by the appropriate retirement board. The regulations were promulgated because of the questions raised by the Blue Ribbon Commission bills on this issue. Copies of the proposed regulations are attached.

Dear Senator Josephson:

I have spoken with Senator Ray, chairman of the Blue Ribbon Commission, concerning the committee's question of whether this legislation is necessary given the possibility that the same thing can be accomplished by regulation. Senator Ray pointed out that, in fact, the Division of Retirement and Benefits has not yet adopted regulations on this issue. Therefore it appears to him to be advisable for the Legislature to act to make its wishes known.

Please let me know if I can be of further assistance.

MEMORANDUM

January 25, 1983

TO: House Health, Education & Social Services Committee

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer Teresa B Cramer
Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: HB 108, Licensed Physicians in the Department of Health and Social Services

An unintended change created by an amendment to the State Personnel Act last session has caused some question in the Department of Health and Social Services. Prior to the amendment, licensed physicians employed by the Division of Mental Health and Developmental Disabilities were placed in the exempt service. Other physicians working for the department were members of the classified service. This system worked well. The exception for those working in the mental health field was necessary in order to attract and pay qualified staff.

The amendment placed all licensed physicians, as defined in AS 47.30.340(9), employed by the state into the exempt service. Title 47.30 addresses mentally ill and insane persons but the definition section defined "licensed physician" in general terms. The department brought to the commission's attention an unforeseen situation. There were two employees in the Division of Public Health serving as Regional Health Officers. One was a medical doctor and the other a licensed veterinarian. Under the amended version of the State Personnel Act, the doctor could be placed in the exempt service and the veterinarian would remain in the classified service. Both have the same duties, though in different locations.

The commission recommends that legislation be adopted to return all medical doctors except those employed by the Division of Mental Health and Developmental Disabilities to the classified service.

Bill Analysis

The bill amends the section of the State Personnel Act which lists membership in the exempt service to place only those physicians employed by the Division of Mental Health and Developmental Disabilities in the exempt service.

Subject: Licensed Physicians - Department of Health & Social Services

Dear Senator Ray:

Subsequent to the December 7 meeting of the Blue Ribbon Commission, and at its direction, the Department of Health & Social Services considered the circumstances surrounding the statutory language relating to licensed physicians employed by the state. The original purpose for the inclusion of licensed physicians in the exempt service under AS 39.25.0110 (19) was to provide for recruitment and retention of qualified and competent staff within the Division of Mental Health & Developmental Disabilities. That situation has worked well since that time.

The amendments to that statute as adopted under HCS CSSB 193 in 1982 eliminated that particular distinction. As presently written, that statute could be interpreted to include licensed physicians in the Division of Public Health. That action is not adjudged to be in the best interests of the state and those employees. It should be noted that in 1981, AS 47.30.340 was repealed in its entirety and AS 47.30.915 was added. That section again defined "licensed physician" in the legislative reference to mental health programs.

It is therefore respectfully requested that the language in AS 39.25.110 (13) be amended to read as follows: "licensed physicians, as defined in AS 47.30.915 (11), employed by the Division of Mental Health & Developmental Disabilities, Department of Health & Social Services.

Thank you for your consideration of this matter.

MEMORANDUM

March 24, 1983

TO: House Finance Committee

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer Teresa B Cramer
Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: House Bill 135 - Granting Court Leave to Nonpermanent Employees

The Blue Ribbon Commission received a request that it consider whether nonpermanent employees should receive court leave benefits. Nonpermanent employees are short-term classified service employees. By statute their period of service is limited to 120 calendar days or to the duration of a program or project. Nonpermanent employees are not entitled to receive state leave, health or retirement benefits. Short-term employees in the partially exempt and exempt services are called temporary employees.

Most state employees continue to receive their regular salaries while serving as jurors or when they are subpoenaed to serve as a witness in a court proceeding. In return, the employee gives the state his or her jury service fee (currently $25 a day) or witness fee. Nonpermanent and temporary employees are not entitled to this benefit. They must take leave without pay since they do not earn annual, sick or personal leave, and their only compensation is the jury service or witness fee provided by the court.

Collective bargaining agreements set out the leave provisions for their members. The statutory leave benefits set out in AS 39.20 do not apply to state employees covered by contracts. AS 39.20.810(8) and (9). Amending the law to permit nonpermanents and temporaries to receive court leave would therefore apply only to short-term employees in the exempt and partially exempt services and to those few classified service nonpermanent employees who are not members of collective bargaining units. Extending leave benefits to unionized employees would remain the subject of possible negotiation between the state and employee representatives.

Jury service is a civic duty. All state employees should be treated equally while meeting this obligation. The Blue Ribbon Commission strongly recommends that the Alaska Statutes be amended to provide that nonpermanent and temporary employees are entitled to receive the same court leave benefits as other state employees.

Bill Analysis

Paragraph (7) of AS 39.20.310 exempts temporary employees from all leave benefits granted to other state employees by statute. The proposed legislation amends the court leave statute to nullify the general exclusion. Temporary and nonpermanent employees would therefore be eligible to receive the court leave benefits provided other state employees.

SUBJECT: House Bill 135 - Granting Court Leave to Nonpermanent Employees

The Blue Ribbon Commission received a request that it consider whether nonpermanent employees should receive court leave benefits. The person who called was working as a nonpermanent employee on a project which was expected to last for nine months. She was summoned to serve on a jury for a criminal trial. The proceedings lasted two weeks.

Nonpermanent employees are short-term classified service employees. By statute their period of service is limited to 120 calendar days or to the duration of a program or project. Short-term employees in the partially exempt and exempt services are called temporary employees. Nonpermanent employees must be hired based on their relative ability from the lists of eligibles maintained by the Division of Personnel for that job class. They are paid according to the pay rate assigned to that job class. They are not eligible for state leave, health or retirement benefits.

Most state employees continue to receive their regular salaries while serving on juries or when they are subpoenaed to serve as a witness in a court proceeding. The employee gives the state his or her jury service fee (currently $25 a day) or witness fee. Nonpermanent and temporary employees are not entitled to this benefit. They must take leave without pay since they do not earn annual, sick or personal leave, and their only compensation is the jury service or witness fee provided by the court.

Bill Analysis

Paragraph (7) of AS 39.20.310 denies temporary employees the leave benefits granted to other state employees. The proposed legislation amends the court leave statute to nullify the general exclusion. RE: HB 207, HB 209 and SB 116 - all about emergency guards in the Department of Public Safety and miscellaneous other matters

There are three bills which originally proposed placing guards used by the Department of Public Safety in emergencies into the exempt service: HB 207 (sponsored by the Blue Ribbon Commission), HB 209 (sponsored by Rep. Bussell and modelled after the Senate version of the Blue Ribbon Commission bill), and SB 116 (the Blue Ribbon Commission Senate version).

HB 207 - this bill had no hearings because House State Affairs took up Rep. Bussell's bill, HB 209, instead. It is still, untampered with, in House State Affairs.

HB 209 - This bill went through numerous changes, some desirable and some less so, and currently may be found [as SCS CSHB 209 (SA)] in Senate Finance.

SB 116 - This bill was amended in Senate State Affairs and passed the Senate. It has been referred [as CSSB 116 (SA)] to House Judiciary and has had no hearings there.

SCS CSHB 209 - Relating to the classification of personnel

Bill history

3/11/83 State Affairs heard the bill and adopted a CS changing the placement of the guards to the partially exempt service rather than the exempt service at the suggestion of Frank Raye, the director of personnel. The change leaves the positions as part of the state classification plan and pay plan, which insures that the division of personnel can watchdog salary to insure pay equity for incumbents.

3/25/83 Hearing in House Finance. The division of personnel and the Blue Ribbon Commission jointly recommended adding language to require that the Department of Public Safety report to the Division of Personel about emergency appointments made under this legislation. House Finance adopted that language in its CS. The language was originally developed for the Senate version, SB 116.

5/3/83 Hearing in House Rules in which the Department of Natural Resources proposed that young people employed in the youth employment/student intern programs be placed in the exempt service. The Division of Personnel had no problem with this admendment - there is a memo on the change in the file.

Rep. Bussell proposed adding correctional superintendents I & II to the partially exempt service because they should reflect policy (and unspokenly, should be subject to firing if a prisoner escapes, presumably). The hearing went quickly and both amendments were adopted. The Division of Personnel was not in support of Bussell's amendment although they did not testify at the hearing.

5/10/83 CSHB 209 (Rules) passed the House 33-6-1. Rep. Duncan moved for reconsideration and the bill passed on reconsideration on 5/13/83, 26-9-3-2.

6/9/83 Hearing in Senate State Affairs. Sen. Ray moved that the correctional superintendents be deleted from the bill and the motion passed.

I did not write a memo for Senate State Affairs since they had heard SB 116 earlier, but I did testify and raise questions about the correctional superintendents since the Blue Ribbon Commission had long been concerned about maintaining the merit system standards, which apply to the classified service and not as much to the partially exempt service (which is exempt from selection and firing standards and rules). I told them I had no information on the changes requested by the Department of Natural Resources.

6/13/83 SCS CSHB 209 (SA) was referred to Senate Finance. No hearings were held on the bill before adjournment.

* * * * * * * * *

CSSB 116 (SA) - Placing emergency guards employed by the department of public safety in the partially exempt service.

Bill history

3/11/83 Hearing in Senate State Affairs. Suzanne Tryck, staff to the committee, and Frank Raye, Director of Personnel, and I met and developed language to require reports from the department on the use of the legislation and also to change the placement of the guards from the exempt to the partially exempt service. Partially exempt postions remain part of the state's classification and pay plans and therefore are guaranteed pay equity for their work. The CS adopted by State Affairs included both of these changes.

3/11/83 Judiciary waived referral of CSSB 116 (SA)

3/21/83 Passed the Senate, 18-0-2

3/23/83 Referred to House Judiciary - there's a memo for them in the file. The House held no hearings.

* * * * * * * * * *

Comment - the Senate State Affairs Committee Substitute for HB 209 is probably what should be the final language for whichever of these three bills makes it through the legislature, at least under ideal circumstances.

MEMORANDUM

February 24, 1983

TO: Members of the House State Affairs Committee

FROM: Teresa B. Cramer
Administrative Assistant

SUBJECT: House Bill 207 - Placing Emergency Guards Employed by the Department of Public Safety in the Exempt Service

The Blue Ribbon Commission is recommending that emergency guards employed by the Department of Public Safety be moved from the classified service to the exempt service. In 1979, the coommission sponsored legislation to place greater restraints on the employment of both nonpermanent and emergency classified state workers. These restrictions have created some difficulties for the Department of Public Safety because of the large number of emergency guards they hire. In 1982 the department hired 495 emergency guards. There were only 112 other emergency appointments in the state.

An emergency employee is defined as "an employee appointed for a period not to exceed 30 calendar days, whose appointment was made under conditions requiring immediate action to carry on work that is required in the public interest". AS 39.25.200(3). Departments are required to report the reason for hiring an emergency employee within 15 working days of the appointment. Personnel practices require that departments prepare Personnel Action forms at the beginning and ending of an emergency appointment. Departments are not required to report as extensively for an appointment to an exempt position.

According to the Division of Personnel's "Report on Nonpermanent and Emergency Employment 1982", the Department of Public Safety made 495 emergency guard hires in 1982. These employees guard prisoners or seized property in rural areas where a one- or two-person post prevents a trooper from maintaining 24-hour per day watch. The period required for the emergency service is between arrest and either arraignment or transportation to a correctional facility or until other arrangements are made to maintain custody of the seized property. According to the Department of Public Safety, typical appointments last from two to four days.

In its report, the Division of Personnel states that the conditions for making emergency appointments place a significant paperwork burden on the Department of Public Safety, and on the Divisions of Personnel, Finance, and Retirement and Benefits in the Department of Administration. The division and the department recommend that emergency guards working for the Department of Public Safety be placed in the exempt service. The division points out that there are similarities between these positions and emergency firefighters in the department, who are already included in the exempt service by statute. AS 39.25.110(19).

The Blue Ribbon Commission agrees with the recommendation. Emergency guards are typically employed repeatedly in the locations which need them, but for short times each time. The paperwork burden on the department would be substantially reduced with little effect on the employee because the appointments are of such short duration. (The protections for emergency appointments are not much greater, if at all, than for exempt employees.) The continuing need for these appointments has been adequately documented.

The problem for the Department of Public Safety derives from the large number of emergency guards which they must hire. The following table shows the five job classes in which emergency appointments were most frequently made in 1982.

JOB CLASSIFICATION	DEPARTMENT	NUMBER OF APPOINTMENTS
Guards	Public Safety	495
Fish Culturist I	Fish and Game	30
Fish & Game Tech II	Fish and Game	17
Psychiatric Nurses Ass't I	Health & Social Services	12
Fish & Game Tech III	Fish and Game	9

FROM: Esther C. Wunnicke
Commissioner
Natural Resources

SUBJECT: Proposed Amendments to CSHB 209

The Department of Natural Resources would appreciate the House Rules Committee's consideration of two amendments to CSHB 209.

The first amendment is to add a subsection (22) to AS 39.25.110 which would place young people employed by DNR in the youth employment-student intern programs in the exempt service. The Department proposes this amendment to ensure that these programs may employ youths at minimum wage as proposed under the funding placed by House Finance in DNR's budget. Previously the Youth Conservation Corps program was basically federally funded and thus fell under federal wage restrictions provided for in AS 39.25.190.

The second amendment is to clarify the status of certain petroleum geologists and petroleum engineers working for the Division of Geological and Geophysical Surveys (DGGS). Current statute (AS 39.25.110 (14)) provides all petroleum engineers and petroleum geologists employed by DNR are in exempt service except those in DGGS. This exception has created ongoing administrative difficulties resolved in the past by the Governor specifically approving the appointments of the DGGS petroleum engineers and petroleum geologists. The proposed change would place all the petroleum engineers and petroleum geologists in the exempt service.

Line 13 - Add
(20) correctional superintendents I and II employed by the Department of Health and Social Services.

The "Executive Head" of Corrections is ultimately responsible for all actions, or inactions, taken by his Correctional Superintendents who are responsible for direct management of correctional institutions.

Correctional Superintendents are responsible for the planning, general administration, operations, maintenance and logistics of correctional facilities with the distinctions of I and II being related to the size of the facility being managed. These personnel establish policies, procedures and programs within the institutions in conformity with agency and department regulations.

The intent of this amendment is not to infer the impression that the Superintendents who presently manage correctional institutions are not doing a good job. It is felt, however, if these positions are placed in the partially exempt service that timely implemention of new policies and directions will be assured.

On April 22, 1984 the Cleary vs Bierne law suit was expanded to encompass all correctional institutions in the state and any additional facilities which may open during this calendar year. The State has managed to continue the trial date until January 1983 and has until that time to show the court that the state is making a concerted effort to improve conditions in correctional facilities. During this time of critical observation by the court the smooth and continuous reorganization of the correctional system will be most advantageous to the state.

Placing Correctional Superintendents in the partially exempt service will enhance the coordination within Corrections and will contribute to an orderly and systematic implementation of new policies and directives leading to a comprehensive development of corrections within the state.

SUBJECT: HB 207, HB 209 and SB 116 - Placing Emergency Guards Employed by Public Safety in the Exempt Service

HB 207 and HB 209

The House State Affairs Committee considered HB 209, sponsored by Representative Bussell, yesterday. It is identical to HB 207 and SB 116, sponsored by the Blue Ribbon Commission, and moves emergency guards from the classified service to the exempt service. The bill was introduced at the recommendation of the Division of Personnel made in its 1982 "Report on Nonpermanent and Emergency Hire Practices in State Government". I attended the hearing at the request of the staff of State Affairs.

I talked with Frank Raye, Director of Personnel, prior to the meeting. He recommended that emergency guards be placed in the partially exempt rather than the exempt service. Partially exempt positions are part of the state classification plan and are paid according to the pay plan, so there is some restraint on the department from either overpaying or underpaying those employees. He proposed these changes to the House State Affairs Committee and I said that I believed the commission would have no objection. The goal of the bill is to reduce the paperwork which the department has to process when making the large number of emergency appointments. This goal would not be affected by the amendment which was adopted.

Suzanne Tryck, professional assistant to the Senate State Affairs Committee, met with Frank Raye, Mike McMullen (Deputy Director of Personnel) and with me this morning to discuss SB 116. Mr. Raye proposed the same amendment to SB 116 which was made to HB 209 -- placing emergency guards in the partially exempt rather than the exempt service. Ms. Tryck was concerned that there are few controls over the length of service of partially exempt or exempt temporary employees (they are not covered by the nonpermanent law) and that there is not even any requirement that the departments report on the length of time they work as temporaries. We discussed the problem and arrived at a possible solution which she will suggest to Senator Fischer for inclusion in a Committee Substitute. In addition to amending the bill to place emergency guards in the partially exempt service, she will suggest adding a new section to the bill amending the nonpermanent law to require the Department of Public Safety to report quarterly on the emergency guards it hires. (The vast majority of the paperwork requirements will be eliminated by moving the positions to the partially exempt service.) The new section would read something like:

> Section 2. AS 39.25.195 is amended by adding a new paragraph to read:
> (i) The department of public safety shall submit to the director a quarterly report of each emergency for which an employee was hired under AS 39.25.120(c)(19) was employed. The director may request more frequent reports. The director shall include this information in the report on nonpermanent and emergency hire practices in state government.

SUBJECT: Classification Study

At the direction of the legislature, the Division of Personnel is engaged in the development of a new classification system. In addition to providing a sound evaluation method that promotes consistency and equity in classification, we will look for a system that is capable of responding to comparable worth questions. I have formed a Steering Committee for this project composed of the following:

Representative Mitch Abood
Barry Best, EEO Director
Al Eagle, representing OMB
Ben Harding, Governor's Office
Janet Jaron, Classification and Pay Section
Senator Bill Ray, Senator Jan Faiks (alternate)
Frank Raye, Director of Personnel

One of the first tasks of the Steering Committee is to develop communication links with all groups and individuals who should receive information and/or comment on the project steps and progression. In addition, the Committee will determine policies, evaluate proposals, establish processes and review deliverables.

Your cooperation in this process will be critical to its success. While involvement of your personnel staff is a constart (though not demanding their full time), there will also be stages when employees will be asked for updated information on their job duties, and managers will be asked to review a high volume of class specifications and recommended series designs.

As I mentioned, the Division of Personnel will need assistance from your personnel staff to complete this project. Our preference is to train all people classifying positions, whether in the central division or under delegated authority, at the same time. By active involvement in the rating and classifying of positions, personnel officers can best convey special knowledge regarding department jobs and assist us in tailoring the new system to State needs.

A draft timeline for the Classification Study is attached. Phase I includes all preliminary steps leading to contracting for a factor evaluation system. Key dates and tasks in this phase are:

1. Draft Request for Proposal (RFP) in early December
2. Publication of RFP in January
3. Consultants "on board" in June of 1984

During this eight-month period your personnel officer will have an opportunity for input into the process, will be invited to attend any relevant training arranged for Classification and Pay staff, and may be asked to sit on subcommittees with specific assignments in support of the Study. Phase II, the data collection and evaluation period, may require substantial revision to tasks and timelines once the consultant is selected. If projected timelines are accurate, the eight-month period from June of 1984 to February of 1985 will require the most intensive work of classification staff.

To facilitate communication, I am requesting that one employee from each department be designated as the Steering Committee's primary contact. This person should be able to disseminate information through the department's hierarchy, understand personnel issues, and represent departmental views and operating concerns to the Steering Committee. These individuals will be placed on the Committee's mailing list immediately, and a meeting with the Steering Committee will be scheduled at a later date. The name of your designee should be sent to Janet Jaron, Chief of Classification and Pay.

Please advise me or my staff if you wish additional information at any time about the process or content of this Study. I will be contacting you in 1984 with specific requests for support from your staff as tasks and the approach for the review process are better defined. Thank you for the help of your department in this project.

Dear Ms. Shelley:

The Division of Personnel budget for the 1984 fiscal year contains $500,000 for development of a new classification system. In addition to providing a sound evaluation method that promotes consistency and equity in classification, we will look for a system that is capable of responding to comparable worth questions. I have formed a Steering Committee for this project composed of the following:

Representative "Mitch" Abood
Barry Best, Equal Employment Opportunity Director
Al Eagle, representing Office of Management and Budget
Ben Harding, Governor's Office
Janet Jaron, Classification and Pay Section
Senator Bill Ray, Senator Jan Faiks (alternate)
Frank Raye, Director of Personnel

One of the first tasks of the Steering Committee is to develop communication links with all groups and individuals who should receive information and/or comment on the project steps and progression. In addition, the Committee will determine policies, evaluate proposals, establish processes and review deliverables.

A draft timeline for the Classification Study is enclosed. Phase I includes all preliminary steps leading to contracting for a factor evaluation system. Key dates and tasks in this phase are:

1) draft Request for Proposal in early December;
2) publication of RFP in January;
3) on-site, open-to-observation presentations by finalists in April of 1984; and
4) consultants "on board" in June of 1984.

Phase II is the data collection and evaluation period. This section may require substantial revision when the contract is negotiated with the selected consultant. However, provisions for training interested union staff in the new system and forwarding d[illegible] material to unions for comment will remain components. Phase III provi[illegible] for collection of pay data which, along with information from the internal evaluations, will result in recommendations to the Governor's Office. Phase IV allows a considerable period of time for hearing any appeals which result from the Study and recommended allocations.

You will be receiving additional information from the Steering Committee in the future. The next meeting of this group will be in Anchorage on December 8 at 1:00 p.m. at the Legislative Information Office, 1024 West 6th, first floor conference room. The intent of this particular meeting is to allow observation rather than hear public testimony.

Please advise me, Labor Relations or Personnel staff if you wish additional information at any time about the process or content of this study.

Sincerely,

Lisa Rudd

MEMORANDUM State of Alaska

SUBJECT: Classification Study

FROM: Frank Raye
Director
Division of Personnel
Department of Administration

The Steering Committee for the Classification Study focused on communication networks at the first meeting. The role of departmental personnel staff in the Study will be varied and extensive. At various times it will include staffing committees, training, reviewing drafts, and the rating and allocation of positions. Because of the critical role you have and your experience with the State system, the Steering Committee would like your comments at the beginning of this process. Your responses will be consolidated and considered by the Steering Committee when making decisions.

Replies can address the process, content and/or desired outcomes of the Classification Study. The timeline sent with correspondence from Commissioner Rudd provides the tentative plan. Some of the areas you may want to speak to are:

- What the Study should accomplish
- Specific concerns the Study should address
- Elements that are critical to Study success
- Elements to be avoided
- How often and in what manner you would prefer receiving information
- The kind of information most needed by departments and employees

Please have your written response to Janet Jaron by December 2. This allows time to prepare and present this information at the December 8 meeting of the Steering Committee. This will be an open meeting held in Anchorage at the Legislative Information Office, 1024 West 6th, first floor conference room. The intent of the open meeting at this time is to allow observation rather than hear public testimony.

Additional actions planned by the Steering Committee include:

- Creation of a mailing list
- Publication of the open meeting in Anchorage papers
- Publication of the Study's existance and invitation to comment in Juneau, Anchorage and Fairbanks papers
- A future Steering Committee meeting in Fairbanks

Thank you for your "front-end" assistance. Please contact Janet or me if you have questions about the Study at any time.

INTRODUCTION

The State of Alaska Legislature has funded a Classification Study of the State's workforce. The goal is to provide consistency and equity in classification. The new system must be legally defensible by complying with all state and federal regulations regarding employment. It will also be rationally defensible by improving response time for classification review and increasing the ability of personnel staff to explain the evaluation method to employees and others.

The intent of this Study is to replace the existing method of evaluation with factor evaluation and provide a quantitative base for allocating positions. Additionally, the new system must provide for internal comparison across occupational lines.

The State seeks a consulting firm to provide a factor evaluation system and work cooperatively with State personnel staff to develop an integrated classification and pay plan. The tasks and respective roles envisioned are detailed in this document. It is anticipated that proposals will be in the $250,000 to $350,000 range, including Task #6. This is a realistic estimate of the funds the State has available for the consultant component of this study.

A Pre-proposal Conference will be held on February 9, 1984 in Room 707, State Office Building, Juneau, Alaska. The intent of this Conference is to identify, prior to proposal submittals, areas or statements in the RFP that would benefit from clarification. Questions submitted in advance will be read and answered first. Oral questions and responses will follow.

A transcript of the Conference will be mailed to each firm who has requested a copy of the Request for Proposals. Written questions to be addressed at the Conference must be received by February 7. Attendance will not be taken at the Conference. No questions will be answered following this Conference.

This RFP is issued by the State of Alaska, Department of Administration, Division of Personnel. The issuing office is the sole point of contact in the State for this RFP. Mail questions for the Pre-Proposal Conference to:

BACKGROUND

Alaska Statute, Title 39 Section 25.150 charges the Director of Personnel with the preparation, maintenance and revision of a position classification plan for all positions in the classified and partially exempt services. By law, positions are to be grouped into classes based on duties and responsibilities and the plan must include for each class a title, a description of duties and responsibilities, training and experience qualifications, and other necessary position qualifications.

Attachment A highlights some of the historical aspects of the Classification and Pay Plan for the State of Alaska. Studies occurred in 1965 and 1982 but were not implemented. The 1965 Study recommended a pay matrix which was unacceptable because it deviated considerably from the existing matrix. The 1982 Study was not completed when funds were exhausted. No further funding was sought because communication channels for the Study had not been sufficiently open to all elements of the workforce, and the method being developed was occupationally specific. The only integrated classification and pay plan which reviewed all positions and was implemented occurred in 1961. The following explains the system in use, size and nature of the workforce, and additional factors that require consideration.

A. THE CURRENT SYSTEM

Whole job evaluation is used to determine appropriate classification. While analysts consider elements such as responsibility, knowledge, reporting relationships, complexity and work environment, there are no weights assigned to these components. How each element influences the classification outcome varies from review to review. Complaints are received regularly from employees, management, unions and classifiers that the system is hard to understand, inconsistent, subjective, and non-responsive to new information. There is also the charge that classification reviews take an unreasonable amount of time.

Pay schedules are negotiated with respective unions during collective bargaining. Usually adjustments to the pay schedule occur annually. Several schedules result: the Public Safety unit has 7 ranges and the Labor, Trades and Crafts unit has 12. However, the majority have approximately 25 ranges, each with six progressive steps and additional longevity steps. The ranges and steps vary by a few dollars across schedules for partially exempt, non-represented, and employees in the General Government, Supervisory, and Confidential bargaining units. All units work a 37.5 hour week except the Supervisory unit, which has a 40 hour week. The current schedules appear as Attachment B.

Ranges for partially exempt and non-represented classified jobs are recommended by the Classification and Pay Section. During the contract year, this Section also recommends: 1) ranges for new classes identified and 2) increases and decreases to existing classes when data indicates pay ranges need adjustment.

Common practice is followed in recommending ranges: internal comparisons are considered, and market information adjusted to Alaska's cost-of-living is evaluated. Again, no weight has been determined for these elements, and consistency in pay recommendations is questionable. The potential problems are compounded by the number of new classes added one-at-a-time since the complete review in 1961.

Class specifications have been developed and individually revised over 23 years. While specifications contain similar sections, they are not all uniform in format or content. Additionally, no attempt has been made to validate the Minimum Qualifications section or to analyze the system for consistency in existing Minimum Qualifications.

B. THE WORKFORCE

There are 13,414 classified positions in the State. An additional 484 positions are designated as "partially exempt." The latter are not governed by the selection process mandated for classified staff but do have pay rates recommended by the Classification and Pay Section. Of the 1137 class specifications in existence, 45 are specific to partially exempt positions. 700 positions in the Marine Transport system which are essentially without written descriptions will be included in the Classification Study. Lastly, 459 exempt positions in the Court System will be evaluated and described in the Study context. Total filled and vacant positions for evaluation = 15,057.

In the Study group there are approximately 3600 positions in Juneau, 5300 in Anchorage and 1750 in Fairbanks. The balance are distributed across the State. 13,984 positions, or 93% of the study group, are represented by one of seven unions. With few exceptions, all positions in the classified service, including Personnel Analysts and Personnel Officers, are represented by a union. The distribution and unions are:

Positions	Unions
9314	Alaska Public Employees Assn., General Govt. Unit
1126	Alaska Public Employees Assn., Supervisory Unit
434	Public Safety Employees Association
2215	Public Employees Local #71, Labor, Trades & Crafts
195	Confidential Employees Association
560	Inlandboatman's Union
70	Intl. Organization of Masters, Mates and Pilots
70	National Marine Engineers Beneficial Association

Note: The Alaska Public Employees Association has two staff positions designated as Classification Officers.

State Departments and the number of positions per department are: Administration (1050), Law (300), Revenue (325), Education (360), Health and Social Services (1780), Labor (620), Commerce and Economic Development (300), Military Affairs (90), Natural Resources (810), Fish and Game (1040), Public Safetly (800), Environmental Conservation (210), Community and Regional Affairs (170), and Transportation and Public Facilities (3270). A new Department of Corrections is recommended and would include 800 employees from the Health and Social Services total. Besides a full complement of clerical, administrative, labor/trades, public safety, scientific and technical positions, the State staffs a ferry system, hospitals, correctional institutions, homes for the aged, libraries, museums, airports and a telecommunications system.

C. ADDITIONAL FACTORS

1. Decentralization

A central Personnel Division consisting of Classification and Pay, Recruitment and Examining, Certification and Records and Training is located in Juneau. There are Personnel Division offices in Anchorage and Fairbanks that serve applicants and service departments and employees in those areas.

The central Personnel Division has delegated authority to most departments for major personnel functions, including classification. There are presently seven analysts in the Juneau Personnel Office and two in the Anchorage Personnel Office doing some classification work. 31 departmental personnel complete classification reports as their major duty or one of several duties. In full-time equivalents, approximately 19.0 positions are classifying jobs. While all work is submitted to the central personnel office for review, it is impossible because of time restraints and the size of central staff to do more than a cursory review of this work. In addition, a thorough review by central staff defeats the intent of delegation. Because of this structure, a large number of people must receive training in any new system. Also, a quantitative system that allows inter-rater reliability checks is mandatory to assure consistency in allocations.

2. Geography

Alaska is the largest State in the Union in area with 589,757 square miles. Of 460,850 people, population in the three major cities is approximately 200,500 for Anchorage, 59,200 for Fairbanks and 22,000 for Juneau. Attachments C and D show Alaska's relationship in size to other states and a detail of the State. Note that transportation in the Southeast Region, which includes Juneau, is by air and water only south of Haines. Many locations in other regions are not tied into a road system.

3. Working Conditions

In addition to isolation, working conditions in some locations include:

-below freezing temperatures

-18 to 24 hours of darkness in winter months
-delays in receiving goods and information

MINIMUM REQUIREMENTS

The State will review only those written proposals of firms which have:

-developed and utilized a factor evaluation system which allows comparisons across occupational lines;

-experience in data collection and the application of factor evaluation systems in public sector environments;

-experience working with government senior management;

-experience training employees in the use and maintenance of the evaluation method.

SCOPE OF THE WORK

The scope of work defined here is to provide guidance to those firms submitting proposals and is insufficient for the legal purposes of entering into a contract with a management consultant. Full details of any resulting offer will be explained in the contract negotiated.

The final product of this Study will be an integrated classification and pay plan proposal. It will include a complete set of classification specifications, a schematic, recommended pay matrices, training manuals for evaluating jobs and using the system selected, automated support to sustain the system, and an appeal process for employees.

The selected firm will work with Division of Personnel, a Steering Committee and departmental personnel staff in developing recommendations and assisting in the process of gathering and analyzing information.

Task #1. Provide a factor evaluation system to the State for use in the classification and compensation of all occupational groups.

The consultant will:

(a) Adapt the wording and/or weight of factors to accommodate State needs.

(b) Train approximately 45 personnel professionals in the use of the rating system.

(c) Explain the factor evaluation system to department management.

(d) Recommend a class specification format which reflects the rating system and is consistent with requirements in the Personnel Rules, Attachment E.

Task #2. Recommend and oversee data collection methods during the Study.

The Division of Personnel will identify the study group, address on-going maintenance needs of the existing system, allocate internal staff resources, and coordinate data collection and review.

The Consultant will:

(a) Provide and adapt as necessary a position description questionnaire.

(b) Provide and adapt other forms for collecting rating information.

(c) Train personnel staff in relevant interviewing techniques if audits will be used.

(d) Train personnel staff in committee techniques or other group or presentation techniques needed for data collection.

(e) Review a sampling of ratings completed by State staff to assure accuracy; retrain as necessary for consistency.

Task #3. Develop a communication system that will involve employees, management and unions and increase acceptability of final product.

With direction from the Steering Committee, the Consultant will:

(a) Identify stages of the process and recommend communication methods for each stage and group involved.

Task #4. Recommend methods of automating data collection which facilitate reviews, revisions and comparisons during the Study and system maintenance following the Study.

The Classification and Pay Section has an IBM Personal Computer and a terminal accessing a mainframe. The State's computer system consists of several IBM computers with MVS and VM operating systems linked by a VTAM network. RAMIS, XEDIT, and SAS are available for report generation, statistical analysis and file manipulation. Attachment F provides technical specifications. These resources are not available for Consultant use.

The Consultant will:

(a) Identify any applicable software developed by the firm for use with the factor evaluation system and assess its applicability to the State of Alaska system.

(b) Advise the State regarding the best use of the above resources to support this Study and maintain the resulting system, taking into account the decentralized nature of classification reviews in the State.

(c) Provide documentation to allow automated maintenance of the pay formula following implementation.

Task #5. Project a pay table consistent with existing pay schedules and project implementation costs based on internal analysis. Existing schedules are provided as Attachment B.

The Consultant will:

(a) Display information by class within occupational groups, recommend pay grades and show costs.

(b) Recommend options for implementing any anticipated costs.

Task #6. Evaluate and recommend ratings, series and pay based on points for personnel, partially exempt, medical care, and law enforcement, corrections and public safety positions. (See Task #5 for instructions on pay format.)

NOTE: SUBMIT A SEPARATE COST PROPOSAL FOR THIS ITEM. INDICATE A DOLLAR AMOUNT FOR EACH OF THESE FOUR GROUPS AND A TOTAL FOR ALL FOUR.

Attachment G gives a detail of the current classifications for these groups, and indicates location and department. Summarized:

CATEGORY	# OF DEPTS. WITH POSITIONS	# OF TITLES	LARGEST CLASSES	# OF POS.
Law enforcement, Corrections and Public Safety	10	69	Probation Officer I-IV, Youth Counselor I-III, Corrections Officer I-III, State Trooper, Corporal, Sgt., Airport Safety Officer II-V	1471
Partially exempt	all	78	Division Director, Special Asst. to the Commissioner, Deputy Commissioner, Attorney I-V	486
Medical care	5	64	Nurse I-IV, LPN I-II, Public Health Nurse I-V, Psych. Nurse Asst. I-IV, Nursing Aide, Mental Health Clinician I-IV, Resident Aide I-IV	702
Personnel	all	20	Personnel Tech., Personnel Asst., Personnel Officer and Analyst II-V	130

The Division of Personnel will coordinate data collection.

The Consultant will:

(a) Identify and rate classes of work using the same data collection techniques as State staff reviewing the workforce.

(b) Draft class specifications using the format as agreed upon in Task #1(d).

(c) Present recommendations including class and rating displays consistent in format with those prepared by State staff.

DATE: January 23, 1984

FROM: Kenneth R. Ryals
Director
Division of Administrative Services
Department of Administration

SUBJECT: FY 84 Supplementals
And Lapse Dates

I have reviewed the Department of Administration operations and after implementing several operating efficiencies find that only the following divisions need supplemental '84 funding to operate without serious program impacts. This supplemental request is essentially the same as the request forwarded to Gary Bader on November 10, 1983. The changes are in the Personnel Applicant Tracking System and in Telecommunications Systems' attorney fees. The other item of importance is to procure an extension on the lapse date for the Classification Study ($500.0; Sec. 30, Chapter 107, SLA 83). This study will continue into FY 85 and the funding lapse date should be extended to June 30, 1985 to reflect this plan.

1. Retirement Systems - 560.1

As we have discussed, supplemental budget requests are necessary for both the TRS State Match and Elected Public Officers Retirement System (EPORS) to meet FY 83 obligations. Funding for the TRS State Match is required by AS 14.25.080. Funding for the EPORS is required by AS 39.37.110.

To fully meet the FY 83 obligations requires a supplemental for the TRS State Match of $161.5; and a supplemental for the EPORS of $28.9. These monies are needed to fully meet the actuarially determined benefit costs of each system.

It is estimated at this time that FY 84 obligations would require supplementals of $267.9 for the TRS State Match and $101.8 for the EPORS.

2. Public Defender - 78.0

The budgeted office in Anchorage was required to move to new space, due to very cramped space and concerns of neighboring bank which had become an overflow waiting room. The new field office was closer to OSHA space standards.

02-001A(Rev. 10/79)

3. Information Resource Management - 2,250.0

As part of a data center consolidation, there will be costs of getting out of the existing purchase contract on the IBM 3033A computer in Juneau. Even if there were no consolidation, the State would require a larger computer so there would be a need to get out of the existing purchase contract. While this item is a budgetted FY 85 Capital Request, it is advantageous to begin in FY 84 if possible.

4. Pioneer's Homes - 380.1

This program budget was initially submitted to the legislature at less than full funding needed to run the Anchorage Nursing Wing and to fund contractual services. Supplemental funding is necessary to prevent relocation of residents to other Homes, Senior Centers, relatives, etc.

5. Personnel - 100.0

To fund repair and maintenance of the Automated Personnel Applicant Tracking System. Contractor is completing DMS version. State will bear the expense for parallel testing and installation of the new system. Funds needed to RSA to CUS for the effort. Funds were inadvertently cut twice during the 1983 Legislative Session. There are no funds budgeted to maintain this system. The system has developed unanticipated problems in December, which will require more funding to expeditiously repair. This system must keep running or Personnel will have to pull staff away from other duties to run a slower manual system. If the manual system is in operation, the hiring processes will slow down, applicant waiting time will increase and public services may suffer as needed positions remain vacant.

6. Telecommunications Systems - 75.0

An additional 75.0 is necessary for attorney fees covering representation of Alaska in Washington D.C. on Telecommunication matters. Most recently, active protection of Alaska citizens' interests on the nation-wide unbundling of telephone toll tarrifs is an example of these activities.

I would be glad to discuss this request and to forward any further documentation as you request it. I look forward to continuing to provide solid public and administrative services to other departments.

PERSONNEL OFFICERS' COMMENTS
February, 1984

The following organizes the major categories Personnel Officers addressed. Those recommendations or concerns listed most frequently appear first. In summary, those issues mentioned most are:

-need for good communication

-desire to remove inequities in the existing system

-problems in the clerical classes.

Communication

-Provide for frequent and on-going input and involvement for personnel officers.

-Encourage "up-front" and continuing involvement of Governor's Office, Legislature and unions; don't ignore input of any affected/interested group.

-Involve managers, respect departmental concerns, expertise, and input.

-Provide step-by-step progress reports at least once a month.

-Have an open environment and free flow of information; avoid misleading information.

-Use personnel officers as key information disseminators.

-Try to identify and inform employees in advance of the goals, timeframe and effects of this Study.

-Make it clear that the Study will not solve all problems but will improve the quality of decision-making.

-Use memos to send information but call personnel officers if there will be a delay in sending a memo.

-Use Personnel Council meeting to provide information.

-Avoid surprises.

-Sell the Study to users.

Structuring Classes/Class Series

-Provide clear distinctions between levels in a series, particularly in the clerical group.

-Remove inequities in the clerical classes.

-Identify significant factors common to many jobs and use them to classify positions.

-Look for more generic classes.

-Review the existing flex-staffed classes, eliminate flex for those that are not appropriate for flexing, develop specific criteria for all flex-staffed positions.

-Emphasize responsibility of a position, do not consider volume.

-Straighten out the Administrative Assistant and Administrative Officer series.

-Clearly identify clerical vs. administrative classes.

-Have a clear definition of classes, eliminate the need for "clarification memos."

-Allocate secretaries based on duties.

-Remove restrictions, allow movement through and across related classes.

-Study Labor/Trades and Crafts positions.

-Consider a general Deputy Director class, similar to Director I and II classes.

-Establish clear responsibilities for supervisory jobs.

-Recognize classification differences between Departments and work assignments.

-Consider highly skilled specialists vs. a generalist supervisor.

Class Specifications

-Identify key elements of the class.

-Update specifications to reflect any new technology or skill not reflected now.

-Make sure minimum qualifications are minimum and realistic.

-Remove subjective elements in class specifications.

-Use simple duty statements.

Timing

-Need advanced notice and adequate lead time to complete tasks.

Pay

-Be able to compare across occupational groups and pay accordingly.

-Address pay inequities caused by movement between bargaining units.

-Review pay evaluations for clerical classes.

-Explain thoroughly the method used to determine pay recommendations.

-Bring pay in line with current recruitment needs.

-Stress objectivity and defensibility in the pay plan.

-Explain differences in range relationships for professional and paraprofessional positions, or make them uniform.

-Consider paying on the basis of internal values and recruitment needs instead of on practices in California, Washington and Oregon.

Data Collection

-Training for departmental classifiers is critical.

-Review each position in the system, correct inaccuracies in current classifications.

-Scrutinize jobs equally, regardless of current pay range.

-Review the salary range of each class.

-Simplify writing job descriptions.

-Use desk audits at every level.

-If committees are used, select employees with a background in the personnel system.

Staffing

-Increase the Class and Pay staff for the Study, remember the maintenance work will still have to be processed.

-Suggest an arrangement for generalists to assume some personnel officer responsibilities to free time for officers to do the Study.

Related Personnel Functions

-Review all Training and Experience rating sheets as part of the Study.

-Provide a mechanism for reviewing and resolving any disputes.

-Review the examining process.

-Use the Study information to help applicants identify classes they qualify for.

-The new system should reduce the time spent to classify jobs.

INTRODUCTION

This Work Plan details the tasks, time frames, roles and responsibilities for accomplishing a State-wide study to update the classification system, design and implement a new job evaluation system and conduct a market survey. The final report resulting from the study must be delivered to the Governor's office in August 1985.

The Work Plan contains fourteen major tasks, each having a number of subtasks. These tasks are to be performed by a large number of State employees, with specific tasks assigned to a Consultant. The project extends over a fifteen month time frame and many of the tasks must be performed sequentially. Thus the scope and complexity of the study necessitated the development of a detailed plan for proper management and control.

The Work Plan was developed in June 1984 by the study's Project Manager and Consultant, with considerable assistance from a committee established especially for this purpose. The Work Plan Committee consisted of managers and personnel staff from representative departments:

Bob Rehfeld	Director, Admin. Services	Community & Regional Affairs
Judy Knight	Director, Admin. Services	Labor
Frank Raye	Personnel Director	Administration
Kay Schilz	Personnel Officer	Education
Roger Thayer	Personnel Officer	Transportation & Public Facilities

Karrold Jackson	Personnel Director	Court System
Janet Jaron	Chief, Class & Pay	Administration
Kate Larson	Personnel Analyst	Adminstration
Patty Judson	Personnel Analyst	Administration

This Committee helped identify necessary tasks and appropriate time frames.

The Work Plan is designed to be used by the Project Manager to ensure that all necessary tasks are accomplished successfully. The tasks that occur in the next several months are described in detail, while those occurring towards the latter part of the study are only broadly outlined. The Work Plan will be reviewed monthly to ensure that scheduled tasks were performed, to identify tasks to be performed in the upcoming month, and to add detail as tasks become more imminent. Thus, it is a working document that will be revised as the study progresses.

INTRODUCTION

This Communications Plan details the communications needed during the performance of a State-wide study to update the classification system, design and implement a new job evaluation system, and conduct a market survey. The final report resulting from the study must be delivered to the Governor's office in August 1985.

The development of a Communications Plan was undertaken to ensure that those individuals and groups who need information about the study receive it in a timely fashion. The Plan was developed in June 1984 by the Project Manager and Consultant, with considerable assistance from a committee established especially for this purpose. The Communications Committee consisted of managers and personnel staff from representative departments:

Beverly Reaume	Director of Administration	Fish & Game
Ervin Jones	Director, Admin. Services	Revenue
Frank Raye	Personnel Director	Administration
Tom O'Donnell	Personnel Officer	Health & Social Services
Alice Blumenshine	Personnel Officer	Labor
Karrold Jackson	Personnel Director	Court System
Janet Jaron	Chief, Classification & Pay	Administration
Patty Judson	Personnel Analyst, Classification & Pay	Administration

Linda Lowe	Personnel Analyst, Classification & Pay	Administration
Fran Rose	Special Staff Assistant	Administration
Harry Gamble	Information Officer	Education

This Committee helped ensure that the Plan is comprehensive in coverage; that it identifies all parties with a "need to know" and the appropriate communication mechanism for reaching them.

The Communications Plan is designed to be used by the Project Manager to ensure that the study is accomplished successfully. Communication of the study, its objectives, tasks, dates, potential outcomes, roles and responsibilities are essential to the study's success. The Plan will be reviewed monthly to ensure that planned communications were accomplished, to identify communication activities for the upcoming month, and to identify new forms of communication that appear to be needed. Thus the Plan is a flexible document that will guide, but not restrict, communication about the study.

ALASKA QUANTITATIVE EVALUATION SYSTEM COMMITTEE

July 23, 1984

Purpose: Establish the factors and weights that will be used to evaluate State jobs.

The Committee will review a set of draft factors (.e.g. knowledge, complexity, responsibility, working conditions) and factor definitions prepared by the consultant. These will be discussed, and the Committee will make a final decision on the factors and the number of levels needed to compensate the range of State employees. The Committee will also rank the factors in relation to each other and will review and decide on the final system to be used.

CLASSIFICATION: WHAT COUNTS

These things count in classifying positions:

Authority and responsibility exercised

Extent of supervisory controls over the work

Nature and variety of work

Guidelines available and individual judgment required

Qualification requirements of the work

Working conditions

These do not:

Personality

Relative efficiency

Length of service

Volume of work

Scarcity of new employees

Unusual diligence or overtime

Financial need

Reasons for a Classification Study

Age of State Classification System

- o No comprehensive review of classes implememented since Statehood.
- o No comprehensive salary review implemented since Statehood.

Method of Classification

- o Current method is subjective. Individual departments do classification - consistency in the use of the system can't be assured.
- o Existing method is time-consuming and labor intensive.
- o Current method is hard to explain and subject to abuse.

Legal Issues

- o Need to show consistency in classification and pay.
- o Need to assure compliance with Equal Pay Act.
- o Need to assure compliance with Title VII and guarantee no adverse impact in classification system.

Additional Problems in Existing System

- o 25% of positions involve automatic promotion. Doubt exists regarding the consistency and supportability of this practice.
- o There are 294 one-position classes and 136 two-position classes, which equals 40% of the existing 1,075 classes. 20% for one- and two-position classes is a public sector average.

of
CHANGING COMMITMENT INTO ACTION
EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN AND MINORITIES IN ALASKA STATE GOVERNMENT

- A Report of the Alaska Advisory Committee to the United States Commission on Civil Rights

PREFACE

The report, "Changing Commitment into Action -- Employment of Women and Minorities in Alaska State Government" is the product of a study by the Alaska Advisory Committee to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights. The study commenced in 1977 and ended September 22, 1978. The report of the study was not released until September 22, 1980.

While there was a substantial amount of time, effort and expense that went into both the study and report the final observations and recommendations are, at this late date, of limited value. A majority of the reports' recommendations had either been implemented or were "in the works" long before the report was released.

In addition, the report makes several assumptions which appear to be based on uninformed testimony gathered during the study. As a result the report is, in some respects, inaccurate and tends to mislead.

The following review of the committee's report attempts to "set the record straight" with regard to equal employment opportunity within the executive branch of Alaska State Government by responding to applicable portions of relevant chapters, the recommendations, and by the inclusion of replies from several executive branch agency officials to Mr. Brook's requests of December 3, 1980, for reviews of "Changing Commitment into Action."

Chapter 1

INTRODUCTION

This chapter of the report includes the background of the study with excerpts of a letter from the chairman of the Alaska State Commission for Human Rights to the Governor, a description of the area of Alaska, its population, Alaska Labor Market Information for Affirmative Action Programs - 1976, and workforce statistics.

The letter from the chairman of the Alaska State Commission for Human Rights to Governor Hammond dated February 9, 1978 was partial information furnished to the committee during its study. Since the information in the letter was "already a matter of public record" there apparently was no effort to check its accuracy either during the study or prior to releasing the report.

The letter stated:

> There is an embarrasing absence of minorities at all levels. One could go blind looking for women (24) and minorities (1) in the recently released list of 457 State employees making over $40,000.00.
> Alaska's equal employment monitoring and auditing efforts since the EEO program was established six years ago have been ill-conceived failures...(We wish to stress that our criticism of the State's efforts is not directed solely at the program's present employees. The worst which could be said about them is that they have failed to correct faulty program concepts which were adopted by other than staff long before the present staff began work.)

The above quotation implies that the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity is the agency responsible for equal employment opportunity for all three branches of State government (Executive, Legislative and Judicial) and the University of Alaska; whereas, the Division is responsible solely for the executive branch.

It is not known where the statistics for "the recently released list of 457 State employees making over $40,000.00" was obtained. But we question their reliability because, in the executive branch alone, 275 classified employees made $40,000.00 plus in February, 1978. Of this total, 21 were women and 4 were minorities. In February, 1979 a total of 252 employees made $40,000.00 or more, 29 were women and 5 minorities. During December 1980 a total of 690 classified employees were making $40,000.00 and over, 101 women and 45 minorities. It is evident that, in spite of statements to the contrary, statistics maintained by the Division of EEO show a fairly small but steady improvement in the numbers of women and minorities at this level within the executive branch of State government. And, at least three of the minority employees within the executive branch were not included in the list of those making $40,000.00 or more in 1978.

Chapter 2

AGENCIES RESPONSIBLE FOR EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY IN ALASKA

This chapter describes the agencies responsible for Equal Employment Opportunity in Alaska. It is interesting to note that although staff of the U.S. Commission were provided with copies of Administrative Order No. 59, the report used outdated information from the State of Alaska Affirmative Action Plan dated March 16, 1977 and an interview on December 13, 1977 with a former director of the EEO Division to describe the Governor's commitment and the Division of EEO respectively.

Administrative Order No. 59, which was signed by Governor Hammond June 20, 1980 is printed below. All aspects of this Administrative Order have been implemented.

STATE OF ALASKA

Office of the Governor

Administrative Order No. 59

In further pursuit of the State of Alaska's commitment to human rights as expressed in the State Constitution and Alaska Statute 18.80.200, as amended, I, Jay S. Hammond, Governor of the State of Alaska, under the authority granted by Article III of the Alaska Constitution and by Alaska Statute 44.17.060, order the following as the equal employment opportunity policy of the executive branch of the State of Alaska:

1. Statement of Policy; General Requirements

1.1 The policy of the executive branch of the State of Alaska is equal opportunity and nondiscrimination in all of its employment decisions, programs, and activities. The State shall take affirmative steps to implement this policy in the internal affairs of State government, as well as its relations with the public.

1.2 All departments or appointing authorities shall have affirmative action programs and written plans to conform with this order. All affirmative action programs and plans shall be reviewed by the Department of Administration, Division of Equal Employment Opportunity, established in part 2 of this order.

1.3 Affirmative action requires that steps be taken in all departments to eliminate discriminatory barriers to employment on the grounds of race, religion, color, national origin, age, sex, handicap, marital status, changes in marital status, pregnancy or parenthood, when the reasonable demands of the position do not require a distinction. It also requires positive, aggressive measures to ensure that all terms and conditions of employment including, but not limited to, the areas of recruitment, hiring, assignments, evaluation, promotion or transfer, layoff, termination, training, compensation, and treatment are not arbitrarily discriminatory on the grounds listed.

2. Responsibilities

2.1 The Commissioner of the Department of Administration is responsible for the Equal Employment Opportunity Program. Specific responsibility and authority for administering and implementing the State's Equal Employment Opportunity Program is assigned to the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity, established within the Department of Administration.

2.2 The Director of the State Division of Equal Employment Opportunity shall administer the Equal Employment Opportunity Program for employment within the executive branch, and shall carry out the State's policy on nondiscrimination, equal employment opportunity, and affirmative action in employment within the executive branch. The Director shall:

(1) Develop and implement guidelines, standards, and procedures governing the preparation, timely submission, and review of affirmative action plans by all departments within the executive branch;

(2) Give final approval or disapproval of all affirmative action plans submitted by each department;

(3) Conduct an ongoing review of affirmative action plans and their implementation to assure that programs are in compliance with this administrative order;

(4) Establish a uniform compliant procedure which is to be included in all affirmative action plans and available to all persons subject to this administrative order, including applicants as well as employees. This procedure must be used to investigate, determine, and resolve issues covered by this Administrative Order or related to affirmative action plans. This procedure is a means by which persons may bring issues covered by this order to the attention of responsible officials for the purpose of investigation, determination, and resolution. However, a failure to comply with this procedure does not deny a person any right he would not otherwise have under the United States and Alaska Constitutions and statutes.

(5) Maintain contact with State agencies, employees, or applicants and any State or federal enforcement agency in connection with all issues covered by this administrative order.

(6) Cooperate with the director of the Division of Personnel to ensure that the State personnel system is operated in ways which provide assistance to appointing authorities in meeting affirmative action goals and that all personnel system policies, practices, and regulations comply with this administrative order.

(7) Monitor employment practices and policies and take necessary measures to ensure that all conditions of employment, including but not limited to, the areas of recruitment, hiring, assignment, evaluation, promotion, demotion, transfer, layoff, termination, training, compensation and treatment are not arbitrarily discriminatory on the grounds listed in sections 1.3 of this order.

(8) Review all employee collective bargaining agreements on a continuing basis to ensure compliance with this administrative order and advise the director of the Division of Labor Relations on EEO matters as they pertain to contract negotiations and management.

(9) Provide training to management, supervisors, and employees to strengthen knowledge and understanding of State and federal anti-discrimination laws and subjects covered under this administrative order.

(10) Prepare the overall State affirmative action plan which is to consist of this administrative order, the annual plan, and the annual report. The State affirmative action plan must be submitted to the commissioner of administration, the governor, and the legislature each year.

2.3 The commissioner of each department or the authority in agencies of the executive branch that are not in departments shall:

(1) Have an affirmative action plan setting forth goals and timetables, identifying problem areas, outlining remedies, and specifying reasonable measures to eliminate the effects of any past or present discriminatory practices and terms, conditions, and privileges of employment.

(2) Select an official of the department at the level of director or above who is to be designated the department equal employment opportunity representative. The department equal employment opportunity representative shall supervise development and implementation of the department's affirmative action plan and program.

This administrative order takes effect immediately.

DATED June 20, 1980, at Juneau, Alaska.

Jay S. Hammond, Governor

There are two additional errors in this chapter: (1) The EEO Committee was not established by executive order of the governor. Members of the committee were appointed by the governor and, (2) The Alaska Equal Pay for Women Act, AS 23.10.155 was repealed in 1980 during the eleventh session of the Alaska Legislature.

Chapter 3

STATE EEO RESPONSIBILITY
DIVISION OF EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY

The purpose of Chapter 3 of the Advisory Committee report was to describe and assess the responsibilities of the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity as listed by the Advisory Committee in Chapter 2 of their report.

Restating what has already been said in the review of Chapters 1 and 2:

- The responsibilities of the Division of EEO extend to the executive branch of State government only,
- The limited value of a report covering three and four year old material, and
- The questionable accuracy of the information furnished.

Rather than continue to comment on Chapter 3, further discussion will be limited to the major accomplishments of both the Division of EEO and the executive branch since early 1979.

- The Division of EEO completely revised and rewrote the affirmative action plan for the executive branch. It is entitled, State of Alaska Affirmative Action Workbook and includes a section on each of the essential components required to be in all approved plans of each department within the executive branch.

  This plan was published July 1, 1980 and copies were distributed to the EEO representatives and personnel officers of each department during a 3-day Affirmative Action Plan Workshop conducted by Division of EEO staff July 23, 24 and 25, 1980.

  All departments now have plans which, in addition to other components, contain short term and long term hiring goals for minorities and women in job groups where they are underutilized. To assist departments to attain their goals the Division of EEO and the Division of Personnel have developed a procedure. This procedure enables department hiring authorities to consider the top five minorities and the top five women in addition to the top five on an eligible list whenever filling a position. The procedure may be used for classifications in which minorities and/or women are under-represented and is due to go into effect in the near future.

  Monitoring of program progress including attainment of goals and other affirmative actions under department plans is being carried out by staff of the Division.

- Administrative Order No. 59 was signed by Governor Hammond June 20, 1980. The order is in this review under the previous section (Chapter 2).

- Staff of the Division of EEO continue to conduct workshops for managers, supervisors and EEO representatives in Juneau, Anchorage and Fairbanks. Three additional workshops have been added: Employment Law and the Handicapped, Upward Mobility for Employees, and EEO for Employees. Approximately 850-900 executive branch employees have attended these workshops since April 1979.

- Targeted, outreach recuitment is conducted by staff of the Divisions of Personnel and EEO to encourage minorities and women to apply for jobs within the executive branch. During recruitment trips tests have been administered in rural and bush areas of the State. The Division of Personnel is attempting to utilize the services of other agencies to administer examinations in rural communities.

  The Alaska Resource and Recruitment Directory -- of Minority, Women, Handicapped and The Elderly Organizations and Agencies was published in April 1980. The directory is distributed state-wide and is used by executive branch agencies and by the Division of Personnel as a recruitment aid.

  Division of Personnel recruitment staff regularly attend job fairs and career days throughout the State and at the University of Alaska in special recruitment efforts.

  Recruitment bulletins are distributed to all Job Service offices throughout the State, and to Minority, Women, Handicap and Elderly Organizations. For promotional purposes recruitment bulletins are posted conspicuously throughout all offices of agencies of the executive branch.

- The Division continues to operate the Talent Bank based in the Anchorage office of the Division.

- The Division of Personnel received funding from the legislature to establish an automated applicant flow data system which is targeted operational in October 1981.

- The Division of EEO has submitted a capital budget request to the legislature which if appropriated, will enable the Division to establish an automated employee tracking system. This system will track all the promotions, transfers, terminations both voluntary and involuntary, position realocations and reclassifications, etc., by race and sex of all employees in all departments of the executive branch.

SUBJECT: Reply to Letter From Commission on Civil Rights

RECEIVED
JAN 9 1981
Dept. of Administration

The following is my reply to the letter from Joseph T. Brooks, Regional Director, United States Commission on Civil Rights, for incorporation into the executive branch response.

Finding #5 and Recommendation.

Impartial interview board to interview applicants instead of individual interviewer and varying interviews.

It would, in most cases, be impractical to use a "board" for reviewing. The use of a preplanned interview guide sheet, which can be used for interviewing all applicants equally is more favorable. The "EEO for Supervisors" training session suggests this guide sheet, and this department is moving for compliance in this manner.

Promotions and Upward Mobility.

Problem - No strong positive steps to ensure equal access to jobs and promotions within the department. Also vacancy announcements for promotions not circulated to all employees across all departments.

A procedure bulletin is being formulated which will itemize the necessary steps for filling a vacant or soon-to-be vacant position. Steps include encouraging known minorities within the department to seek certification to specific job classifications, prior to calling for the register. When a departmental register is not used, an open register is called, which makes the job vacancy available to anyone who is qualified and on that register.

Problem - Alaska Natives restricted account of required formal education which they may lack.

Reclassification to reflect true minimum qualifications instead of "ideal" qualifications is a current on-going consideration, as is substitution of related work experience for educational requirements. Further, the department will pay the expense of training when funds are available, and division directors are encouraged to request training funds in their annual budget.

02.001 A (Rev. 10/79)

Problem - No contract compliance nor affirmative action program to encourage participation of minority and women's firms in State contracts.

Within the department, minority firms (mostly Alaska Native) are currently asked to bid and are awarded contracts over majority bidders. This is due in part to the fact that the projects involved are largely in Native communities. Women's firms are directed to the proper division and are sent bidding information.

Comment:

At present the Department of Commerce and Economic Development is recruiting for EEO Affirmative Action Committee members. Once appointments are announced, the committee will meet to identify the objectives which will be handled in an expeditious manner to bring the department even more into compliance. Among the top priorities will be implementation of EEO evaluation within the normal performance evaluations for supervisors. Also, an updated awareness that minorities ranked below number five on a register may be utilized when EEO division indicates underutilization.

With regard to underutilization charts, we have made good progress in our goals to utilize the female and minority work force. We have recently hired a severely handicapped person, thereby further improving our utilization of all the available work force.

Dear Mr. Brooks:

Your letter of December 3, questioned whether Community and Regional Affairs had implemented recommendations made by the Alaska Advisory Committee to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights in a publication entitled "Changing Commitment Into Action -- Employment of Women and Minorities in Alaska State Government.

I fail to find any specific recommendations or findings made for Community and Regional Affairs, one section does state that "The advisory Committee hopes that with technical assistance...the Department will be able to improve its statistical "picture" of presentation of Women and minorities at all levels". (Based on 1978 employee statistics). Community and Regional Affairs has one of the highest minority profiles in the state departments -- 17%. This figure is only 2% under the standard for minority employment. We continue to rank high, 65%, for female employment

The 1980-81 Department Affirmative Action Program (enclosed) provid[illegible] an up-to-date look at our employment profile, specific employment goals and objectives, problems and corrective actions, responsibilities of our Affirmative Action Committee, etc.

MEMORANDUM State of Alaska

FROM Marshall L. Lind, Commissioner
Department of Education

SUBJECT Letter from U. S. Commission on Civil Rights

RECEIVED
JAN 16 1981
Dept. of Administration
Commissioner's Office

We have reviewed the recommendations to our department in the study of the Alaska Advisory Committee to the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights. The following is our update on our action regarding these recommendations.

Recommendation 1

This recommendation speaks to the need to develop a career ladder for upward mobility from mid-level to upper-level management positions and to review minimum qualifications so that various kinds of administrative experience can be translated formally to school administration experience.

Action

Upon further analysis, the Department of Education has determined that, organizationally at least, a career ladder does exist between mid-management (ranges 19-21) and upper-management (ranges 22-26). Overall in the Department, the ratio of mid-management positions to top-management positions is 129:15 or approximately 9:1. Since most top-level positions are filled by within-department promotions, it would appear that adequate access is afforded to mid-management level employees.

However, while the percentages of women and minorities represented in mid-management positions are 41% and 5% respectively, percentages of the same groups in upper-management are 20% and 0% respectively. Since the advisory committee report, an additional woman has been appointed to a top-management position, raising the number of women in top-management from three to four.

Part of the difficulty is the low turnover in top-management positions. In the past two years, only four such positions were open. Two were filled with women (one as a lateral transfer; thus the statistics did not change); one had no women applicants at all, and the fourth required an extensive background in school finance and contract procedures, which the few women applicants did not have.

In an attempt to provide more expanded opportunities for women and minorities to gain the experience which would enable them to meet the qualifications for top-management positions, the Commissioner has reworked the current position of Special Assistant to the Commissioner to provide a short term (i.e., one to two year) internship experience for women and minority candidates within the department. Because incumbents of this position in the past have been promoted to top-management positions within the department, it is felt that the proposed use of this position exclusively for women or minority candidates would allow such candidates to be groomed for higher-level administrative positions.

Some work is continuing on review of minimum qualifications for professional positions within the department. It seems likely for the near future that many professional positions will continue to require a teaching certificate. However, the department has begun to review applicant experiences on a case-by-case basis and to allow credit for administrative experience - both paid and volunteer - outside of the more normal principal/superintendent experience.

Recommendation 2

This recommendation asked the department to study and implement criteria for alternative methods of teacher certification.

Action

The Department spearheaded a two-year study of teacher certification requirements, including alternative routes to certification beyond the normal baccalaureate degree in teacher education. The study was followed by proposed regulatory changes in several areas of certification. Strong public resistance to the proposed regulations, given at extensive public hearings, caused the State Board to withdraw the proposed regulations.

In a time of nationwide teacher surplus, which is felt in all but the most isolated parts of Alaska, it seems questionable if any effort to open up alternative routes to full certification will be successful. No such alternative is planned again for the near future in Alaska.

However, although it does not carry with it all of the benefits of full certification (in particular those of tenure and membership in the Teachers Retirement System), Alaska's Recognized Expert Certificate does allow persons with recognized skills to teach on a limited basis.

Recommendation 3

This recommendation asked the Department to work with the University of Alaska and others to develop appropriate teacher training programs for bilingual aides.

Action

In the past two years, significant studies have been made by individual school districts, the University of Alaska system (in particular, the community colleges) and the state's two private colleges and universities to expand the career ladder for bilingual teacher aides. Since most programs are delivered on-site to persons who are employed full or part-time, progress along the career ladder to full certification is slow. It is not unusual for a village resident to take between six and eight years to complete a degree under these circumstances. On the other hand, asking villagers to leave the village for four years in campus study has never been a very effective route to a degree. It appears likely that the current system - time consuming as it may be - is the more effective approach.

The Department also sponsors short-term, for-credit, workshops and training experiences for bilingual aides that can help speed up the time required to get a degree.

The letter and enclosure received from Mr. Joseph T. Brooks, Regional Director, U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, made only one very general recommendation to this department; i.e., "The Department should be taking affirmative steps to correct the under-representation of minorities and women.

This recommendation leaves a great latitude for interpretation. We believe the Department has acted within the intent and spirit of the Equal Employment Opportunity laws in our recruitment and employment practices.

The Department has:

1. Filled a vacancy in the upper management level with a white female.
2. Hired minorities when available.
3. Hired the handicapped through the Division of Vocational Rehabilitation.
4. Provided opportunity for upward mobility through "in house" recruitment, training, and tuition payments.
5. Recruited through trade journals and national publications.
6. Rewritten Class Specifications and task descriptions to provide for upward mobility, promotional opportunity, and easier entry into our specialized job class.
7. The Department has suffered no grievances resulting from recruitment or hiring practices.

Mr. Joseph T. Brooks

Dear Mr. Brooks:

Thank you for your recent letter regarding the study conducted by the Alaska Advisory Committee to the U.S. Commission of Civil Rights entitled "Cnanging Commitment Into Action -- Employment of Women and Minorities in Alaska State Government."

We have thoroughly reviewed and analyzed the report and the recommendations made by the Alaska Advisory Committee, and would like to take this opportunity to respond.

As of November 19, 1980, there were 1,816 employees in the Department of Health and Social Services. Of these, 338 were minorities, and 1,478 were women. In salary ranges 16 and above, 53 were minorities and 238 were white women, and 236 were white men, for a total of 527 employees. A comparison was made of the employment status of male and female minorities in FY 78, the period of time the report was based on, and FY 80. The comparative statistics are displayed in Table I, and show increases in the employment of both male and female minorities in all salary ranges. In summary, for ranges 22-28, there was an increase of 100% employment for male minorities; in ranges 16-21, employment for male minorities increased 41.6%, and female minorities increased 70.5%. In ranges 10-15, employment for male minorities increased 26.8%, and in ranges 5-9 there was an increase of 56.5%. The employment rates for female minorities do not reflect as high an increase, but are significant. In response to the specific findings and recommendations made in the report, we would like to address each of these separately.

TRAINING

The Department has increased its recruitment and training of Alaska Natives in technical programs, and includes persons providing services as well as employees of the State.

This is accomplished through the training provided by several divisions; namely, the Division of Public Health, the Office of Alcoholism and Drug Abuse, the Division of Mental Health, the Division of Corrections, and specifically the Division of Social Services, reorganized as the Division of Family and Youth Services. These programs offer training to providers and consumers of services throughout the state and prepare them to understand and cope with situations arising in their villages and communities, especially in the absence of state-funded positions to provide the services. In addition, training for state employees has increased considerably in order to broaden the base of bicultural-bilingual skills needed to more appropriately serve Alaska Natives and other minorities. Attached is an outline of the training offered by the Division of Family and Youth Services for FY 81, and gives you an indication of the types of training being offered the social workers in thier division.

In FY 80, the Department sponsored 107 employees in training appropriate to their employment, and of this number 82 were women or minorities. In the first quarter of FY 81, 36 employees were sponsored in training by the Department, and of this number, 22 were females and 8 were minorities.

We are also providing you with Department's Affirmative Action Plan for 1981, and call your attention to Section VIII: Identification of Problem Areas, page 151-158, and the emphasis on training for upward mobility, targeting females and minorities. In fact, throughout the plan you will find a strong Department commitment to the advancement of those protected class members the Department presently employs, and the recruitment of those identified as underutilized.

IMPARTIAL REVIEW COMMITTEES FOR PROMOTIONAL EVALUATIONS

The Department's response to assuring that each employee considered for promotion receives equal opportunity is the establishment of several "checkpoints" in the Department. First, the Personnel Section of the Division of Administrative Services is responsible for the individual career development of trageted employees--those identified as underutilized. Specific training plans are developed with the employee and the supervisor and if variable scheduling of work hours is required, that can be accomplished. For example, the Department presently has Permanent Part-time Positions established, which allow the employee to work flexible or shorter hours, or even part-year in some cases. For example, one employee attends college nine months of the year and works in the summer, while her alternate works the nine months she is in school.

The Department has always had Equal Employment Opportunity Representatives for each division and separate office in the Department. However, that responsibility has formalized in the creation of an Affirmative Action Committee this year. This committee serves as "an impartial review committee" in situations where the Department deems it is needed. It is not considered appropriate for non-State employees to be involved in the selection of supervisors for State employees, and in fact would violate both the General Government and Supervisory Agreements with Alaska Public Employees Association. The closest situation that would parallel the Alaska Advisory Committee's recommendation made to use community residents in the selection of employees for promotion might be unsolicited recommendations made by the Department's board or commission members regarding the appointment of a partially exempt director. even in that situation, there are personnel rules which must be followed, as well as equal opportunity and affirmatie action principles we endorse and practice, which would preclude the selectrion of any State employee based on criteria other than qualifications and merit.

DIVISION OF CORRECTIONS ALLEGED DISCRIMINATORY PRACTICES

The Division of Corrections has undertaken a very aggressive affirmative action program this year, as evidenced by their corrective action plan which is attached. This corrective action includes training for all their employees in the principles of equal opportunity and affirmative action, to insure that promotional opportunities will be made available to those minorities and females presently employed. It will also insure that hiring officials give equal consideration to all applicants.

We trust that we have adequately answered your inquiry regarding the Department's response to the report. We appreciated the work done by the Alaska Advisory Committee and felt that the recommendations were very appropriate, with the one exception noted regarding the use on non-state employees in evaluating promotional opportunities. If we may provide additional information or clarification in any area of our civil rights work, please let us know.

Sincerely,

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

MEMORANDUM

State of Alaska

TO: William Hudson, Commissioner
Department of Administration

DATE: January 30, 1981

FILE NO:

TELEPHONE NO: 465-2700

FROM: Edmund N. Orbeck, Commissioner
Department of Labor

SUBJECT: Draft Response to Report by the United States Commission on Civil Rights

Pursuant to Governor Hammond's memorandum of December 22, 1980 on this same subject, I am providing you with comments of the Department of Labor with respect to the findings and recommendations by the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights in those instances where their findings relate to activities of the Department of Labor.

Several of the recommendations made by the Alaska Advisory Committee to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights concern the need for more comprehensive labor force information. Specific data limitations were pointed out in their findings and their recommendations call for the Alaska Department of Labor to rectify those deficiencies. There is a mistaken assumption that the Alaska Department of Labor is responsible for the quality of labor force data collected by the Bureau of the Census in its decennial census or that such data deficiencies can be easily corrected. In particular, problems associated with categorical data by race were built into Census procedures. Some of these problems deal with the race categories themselves (for example, Spanish-speaking is not a race) while others deal with sampling limitations. The Department of Labor utilizes census data in order to prepare specific reports and studies, including statistical reports for affirmative action programs. Unfortunately, reports published by the Department of Labor cannot overcome basic data limitations contained within the census data sources.

Under the title "Availability of Women and Minorities in the Labor Force," recommendation number one states that the Alaska Department of Labor in conjunction with the EEO Division, Department of Administration, "should develop current data on the labor pool for urban and rural areas for the following discrete categories: white (not including Hispanic), Black, Aleut, Eskimo, American Indian, Asian American, Pacific Islander, and Hispanic." Since this detail of information was not even collected by the 1970 decennial census, the magnitude of this task could exceed the cost in Alaska of the decennial census. Further, this effort would necessarily have to be undertaken periodically to keep such information current. Neither the Department of Labor nor the Department of Administration has the resources to undertake a project of this magnitude. Therefore, future informational needs will necessarily have to be met by decennial census data. The 1980 census will provide some information in the near future, but even this data will quickly become dated. In summary, there is no acceptable data source which can be tapped to provide the requested information on a continuing basis.

02-001A(Rev.10/79)

Under the same heading (women and minorities in the labor force), recommendation three suffers a similar but more complicated fate. In addition to the lack of ongoing data sources as outlined above, labor force definitions obscure the true pattern of worker availability. The Department of Labor has long been criticized for its statistical treatment of the rural unemployed. It is felt by many Alaskan administrators that the BLS-census definition of "unemployed" is excessively restrictive in that "discouraged workers" (those who are not seeking work) are not counted as being in the labor force. Again, the 1980 census will provide some relief but it will not overcome definitional limitations. The Alaska legislature has funded a one time study of "the real unemployed" for a specific geographic area of the State. It is hoped that information gained from this study will provide additional insights regarding the definitional limitations of present labor force concepts. Unfortunately, we will not be able to establish a definitive data series from this study alone. In summary, the State Department of Labor cannot comply with recommendation number three because the data to do so is not available from any known source.

It should be noted that the Department's affirmative action plan has been revised considerably from the plan in effect at the time the review was conducted initially (presumably 1978), in accordance with directions from the EEO Division. The current plan has been processed to the EEO Division for approval as well as having been submitted to (and approval received from) the Employment & Training Administration of the U.S. Department of Labor.

The inquiry from the U.S. Commission for Civil Rights indicates some confusion in the use of racial and ethnic categories. It should be understood from foregoing comments that the problems with these categories stem from their beginnings in the census data. Within the Department, they do not cause the particular confusion cited in the Commission report. There may be some confusion in use by other agencies not familiar with the terms. It should be noted that there is a difference between the requirements of the State of Alaska EEO Office, which separates Alaska Native and American Indian, from that of the U.S. Department of Labor's Employment & Training Administration, which combines American Indian and Alaska Native into the same category.

That summarizes our response to the items which we feel fall within our purview. If there are further questions, please have representatives of your staff contact Glenn Lundell, Deputy Commissioner. Also, if significant rewrite should occur in the sections for which we have contributed information, we would appreciate the opportunity to review those prior to their being mailed as a composite report.

Mr. Joseph T. Brooks
Regional Director
United States Commission on Civil Rights
Northwestern Regional Office
915 Second Avenue, Room 2952
Seattle, Washington 98174

Dear Mr. Brooks:

This is in response to your inquiry as to whether the recommendations directed to the Department of Military Affairs, based on the findings listed in the report of the Alaska Advisory Committee to the United States Commission on Civil Rights, have been implemented. In October 1980 this Department rewrote our affirmative Action Plan, submitted and received approval from the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity, Department of Administration. The Department has implemented much of the plan already utilizing the recommendations stated in the report written by the Alaska Advisority Committee and the Affirmative Action Workshop given by the Division of Equal Opportunity. Some areas where the Department has initiated review and taken action are; 1) position classification: review of minimum qualifications unique to this Department, 2) recruitment in job classes of underutilization, 3) career counciling, 4) employee development training.

Sincerely,

Major General C.F. Necrason
Adjutant General
Department of Military Affairs.

STATE OF ALASKA

JAY S. HAMMOND, GOVERNOR

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SAFETY

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER / POUCH N - JUNEAU 99811

December 30, 1980 465-4322

Joseph T. Brooks
Regional Director
United States Commission on Civil Rights
Northwestern Regional Office
The Federal Building
915 Second Avenue, Room 2852
Seattle, Washington 98174

Dear Mr. Brooks:

At the outset, the publication "Changing Commitment into Action," and the accompanying letter dated September 15, 1980, referencing the publication and indicating a news conference to be held on September 22, 1980 was received after the press release date. Therefore, this department did not have an opportunity to attend.

The information contained in the publication is somewhat dated in that the statistical data and other related information is over two years old. I am sure you will recall that the department was not pleased with the interviews conducted by one of your staff members and thus did not attend the open meeting of "The Employment Status of Minorities and Women in Alaska State Government." This of course was not an indication of the department's attitude toward the subject matter but rather a show of indignation, but that is past history.

The department is pleased to respond to the reports contents as related to its activities in the area of "Employment of Women and Minorities in Alaska State Government" and the measures taken toward that end even though there were no recommendations incorporated in the report directed specifically toward this department.

Affirmative Action

In fiscal year 1980 the department developed and distributed an Affirmative Action Plan. The plan has been updated and expanded upon for this Fiscal Year.

Upper Mobility

Upper mobility is being addressed through a career path package being developed by the Personnel section of the department's Administrative Services Division. The package will contain job descriptions in related fields and times of competative examination openings. Distribution of the package, which is behind schedule as a result of position vacancies in the personnel section, will be department wide. During the recruitment drives for State Trooper and Fish & Wildlife Protection Officers, members of the department, and in particular women and minorities, were encouraged to apply.

The department is continuing to provide training opportunities to its members to the full extent possible.

Recruitment

The department in the last two years has conducted its recruitment campaign for the Trooper recruit class with accelerated emphasis toward minorities and women with the added assistance of the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity. During this deparment's 1979 recruitment program personal contacts were made, letters and brochures mailed, and advertisements in various medias were conducted statewide. Out of the 789 applicants received in 1979, 37.2% were from women and minorities.

For the 1980 recruitment drive the approach zeroed in more on minorities and women with emphasis on rural (bush) areas. Teams of recruiters from the Department of Aministration's Divisions of Personnel and Equal Employment Opportunity traveled to various and numerous areas throughout the state recruiting and testing at the same time. This enabled an applicant to take the written test for the position without having to travel at their own expense to central areas for testing, as had been done in the past.

As of this writing, the department has not received the requested results of the recruitment, such as number of applicants and of those the numbers of minorities and women, the numbers that took the test and the pass/fail ratio.

Of the number of those entering the department's last recruitment academy, 32% were minorities and/or women.

Native Village Assistance

To meet the public safety needs for native villages in Alaska, as was referenced by Dr. John Angell's March 1979 report to the Alaska Criminal Justice Planning Agency, the department developed the Village Public Safety Officer (VPSO) program.

This program in essence establishes a position in a village who is trained in law enforcement, fire prevention and emergency medical assistance and given the material to be effective. VPSO personnel are not members of this department. Through contractual arrangements, the personnel are selected and supported by various Native non-profit corporations. The department trains, assists and monitors the VPSO's in the field and administers the pass-through State funds supporting the program.

The program was implemented this fiscal year and some 40 villages within 5 native corporations were targeted for the VPSO program. Expansion will continue to other villages in succeeding years.

Enclosed is statistical data from the State's EEO-4 Report of June 30, 1980 related to this department.

In the final analysis, the department has made good progress and expects to accellerate that progress in the years to come in the effort to realize full equal employment opportunities for all.

Sincerely,

William R. Nix
Commissioner

Dear Mr. Brooks:

In response to your letter of December 3, 1980, since your report did not contain specific recommendations for our department, I think that our Affirmative Action Plan contains the most complete picture of our efforts concerning minority and female employment. This plan, copy attached, spells out the duties and responsibilities of the people within the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities in this area. If, after your review of this plan, you have any specific areas that are still of concern, please contact Ron Lind, Deputy Commissioner for Administration, Department of Transportation and Public Facilities.

Chapter 5

CONCLUSIONS, FINDINGS, AND RECOMMENDATIONS*

* Source: "Changing Commitment into Action," Chapter 5 - A report of the Alaska Advisory Committee to the United States Commission on Civil Rights - July 1980.

Availability of Women and Minorities in the Labor Force

Recommendation 1

The Alaska State Department of Labor, in conjunction with the Equal Employment Opportunity Division of the Department of Administration, should develop current data on the labor pool for urban and rural areas for the following discrete categories: White (not including Hispanic), Black, Aleut, Eskimo, American Indian, Asian American and Pacific Islander, and Hispanic. Data should also be gathered and published on the presence of the older and disabled (handicapped) workers in the State work force. This data should be displayed by job classification and pay levels.

Response

The Alaska State Department of Labor, in conjunction with the Division of EEO, developed labor pool statistics for White, Black, Hispanic, Alaska Native (Eskimo, Aleut, etc.), American Indian, and Asian and Pacific Islander. These available labor pool statistics were distributed to departments of the executive branch in September 1979. They are updated annually.

Current work force data is collected by job classification and pay level for all departments. This work force data system was automated in February 1977 and has been distributed to departments of the executive branch on a quarterly basis by the Division of EEO ever since. Data on the presence of the older and handicapped worker will be displayed and published in the same report if funds are appropriated by the legislature.

Recommendation 2

The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights should recommend to the Bureau of the Census that measures be taken in the 1980 census to obtain an accurate count of Alaska Natives.

Response

Same as response for recommendation #3.

Recommendation 3

The State Department of Labor should revise its population and work force figures to reflect accurately the number of Alaska Natives and their employment status.

Response

The Alaska Department of Labor updates its population and work force data annually. See memorandum of January 30, 1980 from Department of Labor Commissioner Orbeck to Department of Administration Commissioner Hudson under Chapter 4 of this review.

Recommendation 4

Increased efforts must be made by the Department of Administration and all other departments to recruit and fill positions in rural areas with Alaska Natives.

Response

Efforts are made by departments to fill State jobs in rural areas with Alaska Natives. Not all departments have positions in rural areas but those that do are encouraged to recruit Alaska Natives.

Division of EEO conducts targetted recruitment in the rural areas.

Recruitment

Recommendation 1A

The Cook Inlet Native Association (CINA) has developed a comprehensive program for access to State hiring; other groups testifying before the Alaska Advisory Committee apparently have not developed this kind of liaison mechanism yet. The plan is included in this report as appendix B. The Advisory Committee feels that the State's endorsement of the proposed voluntary plan would serve as a model for other Alaska Native associations and minority advocacy groups. The State EEO Division should initiate this program and maintain routine contact with minority groups.

Response

The Divisions of EEO and Personnel do maintain routine contact with minority groups. Publication and dissemination of The Alaska Resource and Recruitment Directory is a part of this effort as are targetted recruitment, outreach testing and participation in "career" day events.

Recommendation 1B

The Department of Administration, as the State's recruiter, and each department that recruits for jobs requiring special skills should develop a recruitment program to enlarge their labor pool to include a nationwide search for minorities and women.

Response

It is the policy to hire Alaskans whenever possible. If workers with special skills are not available within the State, the Department of Administration and affected departments do recruit nationwide for workers with the necessary special skills.

Recommendation 2

The University of Alaska should work with the EEO Division, Department of Administration, and the State Department of Labor to identify those areas where there are few women and minorities available in the labor pool to develop programs for training women and minorities in these job skills, using funding available from Federal, State, and local programs. Where this approach is deemed unrealistic, recruitment efforts outside the State should emphasize women and minority sources of workers.

Response

When recruiting is conducted out-of-state emphasis is placed on sources of minorities and women if women and/or minorities are underrepresented in the work force within the classifications for which recruitment is being conducted.

Hiring

Recommendation 1

The Department of Administration should make assistance available to persons filling out applications for State employment. Instructions should be clarified, should be as bias free as possible, and should specify that voluntary, job-related experience should be included and will be considered. The EEO Division should work with minority and women's advocacy groups to assist minorities and women in applying for State employment.

Response

Assistance has been provided to minorities and women in applying for State employment since early 1978. Voluntary job-related experience is included and considered.

Recommendation 2

The EEO Division should develop a tracking system for job applicants that could be used to determine the number of women and minorities placed in jobs in State government and the length of time it takes to obtain a position after initial application. Such a system could also be used to identify barriers to State employment by documenting the points at which applicants drop out of the application, placement on the register, or interview processes.

Response

An applicant flow system is being automated by the Division of Personnel. The system is targetted to be operational in August 1981.

Recommendation 3

The Department of Administration should continue to analyze job classifications and should utilize findings from Federal and other State studies, where possible, to avoid additional costs and duplication of efforts.

Response

The Department of Administration, Division of Personnel does utilize findings from other State and Federal agencies and continues to analyze job classifications.

Recommendation 4

The Department of Administration should make testing available in locations throughout the State when at all feasible.

Response

Testing is available in rural areas of Alaska in connection with targetted recruitment.

Recommendation 5

The Advisory Committee encourages the EEO Division to continue to contact as many managers and supervisors as possible throughout the State on an ongoing basis. Impartial interview boards that include minorities and women should be used where feasible to reduce individual bias in selection procedures.

Response

The Division of EEO is continuing to conduct workshops for managers and supervisors which include emphasis on interviewing techniques. Interview panels are used where feasible.

Recommendation 6

The departments should consider using an interpreter for examinations for those positions in which English language facility would not be a requirement for performance of the job.

Response

Interpreters are used for examinations whenever needed.

Recommendation 7

A contract compliance program should be established by the State legislature for departmental purchasing and contract awards to ensure participation of minority and women's firms.

Response

N/A .

Promotions and Upward Mobility

Recommendation 1

The EEO Division must assist departments in identifying problem areas, in developing analyses as a part of their affirmative action plans in problems relating to the underutilization of minorities and females. Each department should create a plan for improving utilization of minorities and females.

Response

The Division of EEO has been assisting departments in all of these areas. They will continue to do so.

Recommendation 2

The departmental EEO Division should ensure circulation of vacancy announcements to all employees.

Response

Vacancy announcements are posted on bulletin boards throughout departments and employees are encouraged to apply for promotions. The Division of Personnel receives more applications from among current employees than it does from non-employees.

Recommendation 3A

The EEO Division should conduct a study of the status of female employees throughout State government related to advancement and equal pay to develop recommendations to address these problems.

Response

The Division of EEO plans to conduct such a study as soon as resources are available to do so. In the meantime the hiring and promotion of women into jobs where they are presently under-represented is a major affirmative action goal for all departments.

Recommendation 3B

The EEO Division should work with each department to develop training for advancement and upgrading of skills through management intern programs, tuition reimbursement programs, and other employee development programs as appropriate.

Response

This is addressed in current department affirmative action plans. The Division of EEO will monitor progress.

Recommendation 4

The Division of EEO and the Division of Personnel in the Department of Administration should develop a plan for ensuring that qualification requirements described in vacancy announcements are realistic and accurately reflect the qualifications that are necessary to perform the job. They should also allow for substitution of relevant experience for educational requirements and should encourage development of on-the-job training programs in all departments that would lead towards academic accreditation.

Response

The Division of Personnel by decentralizing many of the classification functions has placed more burden on departments to insure accurate and realistic minimum qualifications. Minimum qualification requirements do allow for the substitution of relevant work experience for education virtually in all classifications.

Affirmative Action Plans and Enforcement

Recommendation 1

EEO performance must be included in every manager's and supervisor's job evaluation. Managers and supervisors should be evaluated on their efforts and on results in this area.

Response

EEO performance is one of the factors on the Performance Evaluation Report which is considered when evaluating managers and supervisors. However, the use of this factor has not been closely monitored.

Recommendation 2

The Alaska Advisory Committee endorses the continuation of affirmative action and EEO responsibilities resting within the upper level of departmental authority.

Response

EEO and affirmative action responsibilities continue to rest with personnel in the upper levels of department authority.

Recommendation 3

Selective certification of qualified minority or female candidates should be used in all cases where they are under-represented.

Response

A procedure for selective certification of qualified minority or female candidates has been designed and is scheduled for implementation in the near future.

Recommendation 4

The Advisory Committee recommends that impartial interview panels that include representatives of minority groups and women be used for initial hire and promotions.

Response

This is a good method for conducting interviews which is used by some departments, but not all. The Division of EEO will encourage more extensive use of panel interviewing in all departments for initial hire and promotion.

Recommendation 5

The Division of EEO should work with each department to develop a program for counseling all State employees on the options available to them for promotion and upward mobility. Goals and timetables should be established for each EEO-4 job category. The EEO Division should monitor and evaluate the implementation. It should review all promotions, and if any result in disparate impact on minorities and women, it should be given the authority to deny the promotions until good faith efforts for remedy are demonstrated.

Response

Goals and timetables are established -although not specifically for upward mobility. The Division of EEO is not sufficiently staffed or funded at this time to monitor all internal procedures. If the capital budget request to fund an automated employee tracking system is appropriated during this legislative session this recommendation will be implemented.

Recommendation 6

The development of career ladders and plans for lateral movement giving a greater experience base should be required of each department and should be an integral part of each department's affirmative action plan. This information should be communicated to all staff and be included in the orientation of new employees.

Response

This is provided for in most current departmental affirmative action plans.

ALASKA LEGISLATURE SPECIAL COMMITTEE / SUBJECT FILE 8672

1380 SCOMM 51 BLUE RIBBON COMN. ON STATE PERSONNEL ACT 1978-1983

Recommendation 7

A job reclassification analysis system should be developed by the EEO Division for use in each department. This system should produce information on the number of reclassifications made during the year, who received them, and whether there was a salary adjustment made that resulted in increased pay. In addition, it should describe the preparation the individual was given leading to the promotion. If the analysis shows that there is an adverse impact on minorities and women, then affirmative action should be instituted.

Response

This will be done if funding is appropriated for the employee tracking system mentioned in #5 above.

Recommendation 8

The legislature should reconsider the legislation on child care facilities in State office buildings.

Response

N/A

Recommendation 9

Departments should increase their recruitment efforts to provide the opportunity of permanent part-time positions and advertise the possibility of filling specific jobs in this way.

Response

Departments do have permanent part-time positions which are advertised as such.

Recommendation 10

The Governor should issue an executive order prohibiting sexual harassment of State employees, with provisions for disciplinary action.

Response

This is being considered. Sexual harassment is a growing area of concern.

State Departments

Responses to these recommendations are included in the section on Chapter 4, State Departments and Offices.

WOMEN AND CONSTRUCTION

A Hearing by the Alaska Commission on the Status of Women

Summary

On Friday, March 20, 1981 the Alaska Commission on the Status of Women held a public hearing on "Women and Construction" as part of its effort to identify, deal with and recommend ways to remove the artificial barriers which might prevent women from moving into skilled and responsible pipeline jobs. Representatives from Northwest Alaskan Pipeline Company; the Office of the Federal Inspector; the State Pipeline Coordinator's Office; the Alaska Department of Labor; and the Alaska Human Rights Commission were invited to testify regarding affirmative action goals, proposed training programs and anticipated equal employment opportunity monitoring responsibility for the gas pipeline.

Alaska Department of Labor statistics, presented by deputy commissioner Glenn Lundell, show that 10 to 15 percent of the members of the Laborers, Teamsters and Operating Engineers are women. Despite this fact, the affirmative action plan proposed by Northwest Alaskan Pipeline Company would establish a goal of only 5.7 percent women in the lucrative craft positions. In another area, that of female business enterprise goals, Northwest's goal for 1981 actually decreased from its 1980 affirmative action plan, dropping from 4% to 2.25% of total projected contractable opportunities to be let to female operated businesses. Al Kuhn, director for governmental affairs for Northwest Alaskan Pipeline Company, said that during the peak of pipeline construction twelve to thirteen thousand jobs would be available and thus should provide significant opportunities for women for new entry through the union halls. But several of the Commissioners pointed out that if affirmative action goals are low, and if these programs continue to rely only on the traditional structures of training and union enrollment, nothing will change and women will continue to have minimal access to non-traditional jobs.

John Alexander, director of the Office of Equal Employment of the Office of the Federal Inspector, provided the Commission with information regarding his office's responsibilities with regard to the gas pipeline. His office has been negotiating with the three prime sponsors over their affirmative action plans and has approved two of them. Once they agree upon a plan with Northwest for the Alaska segment it will be the Federal Inspector's responsibility to see that Northwest lives up to its affirmative action responsibilities.

Mr. Alexander and Mr. Kuhn were both questioned closely about enforcement and monitoring of women and minority hire. Commission members expressed serious concern over whether, given the size, the projected equal employment opportunity staff would be capable of ever emerging "from under a mountain of paperwork to get out into the real world and deal with the questions of whether real people are getting real jobs..."

Charles Behlke, State Pipeline Coordinator, discussed the draft socioeconomic stipulations which his office has prepared to attach to the state right-of-way lease. Participation by various interested public groups is planned to oversee the manner in which socioeconomic impact is mitigated. In addition, the state plans to require that Northwest fund impact information centers at various locations along the pipeline in order that information can flow as quickly as possible. When asked if it might be desirable for the state to have provisions in the socioeconomic stipulations which provide it with a separate enforcement mechanism to enforce equal employment opportunity, Mr. Behlke agreed that it would.

Neil Thomas and Cathi Carr-Lundfeldt of the State Human Rights Commission were fairly optimistic about the ability of the state of Alaska under its laws against discrimination to deal with whatever problems of discrimination may come up on the gas line. They indicated that the primary barrier for women who wish to work on the pipeline is tradition. They urged that project labor agreements be negotiated to include access for women to union apprenticeship programs and to union membership to offset the traditional barriers.

While harassment and discrimination on the job can be expected, the Human Rights Commission is in a much better position to investigate complaints than it was during construction of the oil pipeline. In addition, constructive use of union grievance procedures was recommended. Finally, Human Rights Commission staff expressed the need for attitudinal change regarding affirmative action; that is, that employers be committed to developing the resources of women and minority labor rather than approaching it as something they are compelled to do.

In addition to the issues of affirmative action goals and enforcement procedures, Commission members questioned a number of the participants about proposed training opportunities for women. Answers indicated that no major training effort exists now, nor is one planned, to prepare and qualify women for construction jobs.

In addition to the testimony heard from the government agencies, personal experiences were related by women who had worked on the oil pipeline. The majority of the women who testified described a variety of difficulties encountered by women who enter the world of non-traditional labor, ranging from the merely uncomfortable to the dangerous and violent.

Copies of the entire transcript are available for review at the Commission office.

AIR CARGO

There are three types of air cargo flights flying in and out of the Anchorage and Fairbanks International Airports: intrastate cargo distribution flights, international air cargo refueling flights, and flights carrying Alaskan trade.

Traditionally, Alaska has imported most of its essentials and air cargo has been the lifeline to many bush communities. Intrastate air travel has been visualized in a complete service manner by the state. The state has realized the bush community need for the Anchorage and Fairbanks International Airports, so landing fees and expenses have been maintained as much as possible. This state of equilibrium might not be as well maintained if the Anchorage and Fairbanks communities managed their own airports without the broad scope of the whole intrastate transportational network.

The refueling of the international cargo flights has been a changing market in the last two years, with the availability of fuel and the CAB deregulation. Anchorage has been catering to and has developed an infrastructure for this market for quite some time, because of the relationship to the transpolar flight plan and the two refineries in the Kenai. Fairbanks, up until two years ago, was used as the alternate landing field for the flights. This situation changed with the addition of the North Pole Refinery and the availability of competitively-priced fuel in Fairbanks. As of FY '80 there were 2463 international air cargo flights into Fairbanks and only 38 of those flights were diverted flights scheduled for Anchorage. This is compared to two years ago when there were no scheduled international air cargo flights into Fairbanks. This could become a competitive market between the two airports, since each flight qualifies as a revenue landing and provides a source of commerce within the respective communities. The competition between the communities might result in lowering of landing fees in Anchorage before Fairbanks is able to develop the needed infrastructure to support the additional traffic being developed between the orient and the european markets.

Until 1978 the amount of Alaskan trade transported by the international flights was negligible. Since then the air cargo industry has been deregulated and the poundage has increased five hundred percent. Most of the present cargo being exported is fresh fish to the orient from Anchorage, but as Alaska's renewable and nonrenewable resources develop there will be an increase in traffic between Alaska and the lower 48, oriental, and european markets. This will require the management of both airports to develop the proper warehousing and ramp space to meet the increased needs.

MS. VON DOHRMANN: Here.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Did I miss anyone? (No response.) This is a hearing this morning on women and construction. I might take a few moments to explain the Commission on the Status of Women and our legislative purpose.

The Commission was formed in 1978 under State legislation. And I might quote to you the purpose of the Commission, which is "To implement the recommendations contained in the Preliminary Study on the Status of Women in Alaska, which was mandated in the Legislature in 1976; and to improve the status of women in Alaska by conducting further research and by making and implementing additional recommendations on the opportunities, needs, problems, and contributions of women in Alaska including, but not limited to, education, homemaking, civil and legal rights, labor and employment." And today, of course, we're going to be looking into the employment field, particularly nontraditional jobs for women, women in construction.

We have invited a number of people to speak to us this morning. And I could give you a rundown of who we expect to be testifying and the approximate times, even though we're running a little bit late. Glen Lundell, who is with the State Department of Labor, we expect to be testifying first; Elston Lawson, or someone from the State Pipeline Co-ordinator's Office at approximately 10:20 -- well, in approximately 20 minutes, I guess; John Alexander of the Office of the Federal Inspector; Al Kuhn of Northwest Alaska Pipeline Company; and Cathy Carr-Lundfeldt of the Human Rights Commission.

We hope to break for lunch at about 12 or 12:30, and come back for questions and answers and further testimony from private people in the afternoon, particularly women who worked on the Trans-Alaska -- or the oil pipeline and hear some of the problems that they encountered; and their suggestions of how those problems might be avoided in the future.

The Commission doesn't necessarily want to look only at construction jobs on this gas pipeline project. We foresee that there will be a lot of construction work in the State in the future; and that this is really a chance for women to become involved, to get experience, to get training. And so we do -- we're looking beyond this pipeline project, but we think that it's important to encourage women to take advantage of whatever opportunities there might be to obtain employment on this project.

MS. JONES: Barbara?

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yes, Dorothy.

MS. JONES: You mentioned that the questions would occur this afternoon. If we have any burning questions in our mind as a speaker concludes, can we ask them at that time?

MS. SCHUHMANN: Well, yes. In fact, I'm going to ask your indulgence and perhaps even let us interrupt as you are giving your testimony today so that we can make sure that as you are testifying that we can get to the heart of what we're really after in these hearings.

We -- the Commission wrote letters of invitation to the various people that I just named and asked the people to answer specific questions so that I imagine that the people that will be speaking this morning will be looking directly at those -- at answering the questions that we directed to them. In addition, I would ask that if you have further comments on the socio-economic impact that the gas pipeline is likely to have in Alaska and how the painful and the bad effects of the socio-economic impacts can be met or avoided -- if you have any comments in that regard, we would certainly appreciate it. For instance, we would anticipate that additional domestic violence, additional crime is going to occur along the pipeline corridor because of this project; and if anything is being planned or could be planned to try to address those problems now, we would appreciate hearing your suggestions along those lines as well.

Are there any other preliminaries that I need to take care of? (No response.) Mr. Lundell. We are now in a Committee of the whole. I apologize to everyone for being a little bit late in getting started this morning and late in getting our coffee ready. We anticipate that that will be done in the next few minutes. Mr. Lundell.

MR. LUNDELL: Thank you Miss Schuhmann. I guess you want for the record identification and things, right?

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yes, please.

MR. LUNDELL: My name is Glen Lundell, L-u-n-d-e-l-l; and I am the Deputy Commissioner of the Alaska Department of Labor.

I had received letter a few days ago inviting us to be represented and inviting me to come. I'm very happy to do so to attempt to respond initially to the questions here. I may have some additional comments as well, most of which your Executive Director will have heard in the past and when we were also fellow members of the Alaska Manpower Services Council and used to share some of these things in those discussions.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Can everyone in the back hear? If you could speak a little bit louder. And you might want to move up. I think if people in the back have trouble, you might want to move up closer to the front.

MR. LUNDELL: I'll try to speak up a little bit. Perhaps that'll help. The letter which I received actually directed itself more toward employment opportunities, nontraditional employment opportunities, for women in connection with the construction of the gas pipeline. And it began by mentioning statistics from the previous construction work on the oil pipeline as far as the concentrations of women in different types of occupations and what had taken place at that time.

The reference was made to some information which I -- as you indicated in the letter I had previously provided and when a study was being done in a different capacity when I was gathering those statistics in a program at -- working for Alyeska at the time. And so obviously, I must state those statistics are correct; no question about it in my mind.

The information does reflect that concentrations can occur in the service industries, and in the clerical industries as opposed to in various construction occupations themselves. I should point out that Alaska is the leader in the United States as far as the participation of women in the construction industry. To the best of my knowledge, there is no state that matches the progress that has been made in this area here in Alaska. I think a large part of this was based upon the Affirmative Action Plans from the oil pipeline and the progress that took place during that period of time.

One of the questions which I was asked to respond to said based on its analysis of women in the work force, has the Department of Labor determined the potential labor pool of women who would be qualified or seriously interested in construction jobs. If yes, what are these figures; if no, what are the Department's plans and schedule for obtaining and publicizing this information prior to the finalization of the Affirmative Action Plan for the gas pipeline project.

Let me respond in reverse. We do have some figures. The answer is between yes and no. I can't do it on a straight basis.

As far as the plans and schedule for obtaining and publicizing this information, I'm sure that you're aware of the expense that would involved in a detailed survey that would really give the full information. Most of what we derive will come from things such as the 1980 census; it will come from unemployment figures; it will come from registration with our Job Service offices. This type of information is what we do to determine what type of information is available and to compile it.

As far as publicizing it, it is publicized rather regularly. Among other documents, there is one called "The Alaska Economic Trends" that is published by the Department's research and analysis section. In October, 1980 there was this specific topic, Women in the Labor Force. We participated, and in fact, developed in May, 1980 the publication "Women in Alaska's Labor Force", which was put out; and many people will say I haven't seen this; why haven't I. I don't know the answer to the second part of the question -- you know, the question as to why haven't you, because there are thousands of copies that are distributed throughout the State of Alaska to schools, libraries, to any organization that requests -- any individual may request to be on the mailing list for the publications from the research and analysis section; and they will receive them directly.

That is the nature of how we compile and how we publicize the information on women in the labor force, minorities in the labor force. All of these cover the different -- unemployment status of the different areas of the State in each of the issues. So there's a lot of information in these. They are used not only by governmental people working with them; they're not only requested by individuals; but many commercial institutions, banks and businesses subscribe to these and use them in the compilation of their economic forecasts for the State.

So I cannot say that we have the figures. This is the way in which we do it. I would have to say that there is no intent to specifically compile a pool of people by skills and by qualifications, women or others, totally that would be available. We will use information that comes from the sources that I have indicated; our labor economist would analyze this and make these reports. They will do special projections and things. From time to time we have requests for this. But it will always be based on the existing data. Much of this is getting better because the research and analysis section has been designated as the State data center for demographics. We have a demographer, which is a particular profession and skill, on our staff now. We are the contact with the census people, and thus have the in-roads back and forth with them about data; in addition to all the normal Bureau of Labor statistics information and the general things that we compile in the interest of the unemployment data, etcetera, in the State.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Mr. Lundell, before you go on to the next question, you say that there's no intent to undertake a study to determine the pool of eligible or interested workers in the State. Is that because of the expense involved?

MR. LUNDELL: There is not the intent -- that's right -- to undertake a specific survey to do that. Not only the expense -- frankly, from past experience, doing a survey like that is almost meaningless when you come down to the actual facts of employment and training at the time. That sounds a strange statement to make.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Such studies have been undertaken in the past, I take it or...?

MR. LUNDELL: For -- in -- let's say in a specific geographical area covering a particular group that might have expressed an interest, things have been done in the way of surveying it. But when you come down to offering the training and employment opportunities, it doesn't always follow that the people that said yes, we'd like to do that will then accept and do it. I -- there is -- could be a viewpoint that if 2 or 3 do, it was worthwhile to do the study. Looking a budget in the face, I can't say that with any responsibility. I think there has to be a benefit that comes from it that offsets the costs to it.

So the information that is -- there is very, very much useful information that is there. It does not get down to the level of -- and I think this is what -- some what you may be doing in asking the question, the level of who, by name, located where is interested in what. That's the level of information that we really could not possibly get to with anything we have available. And that's when I say we don't have the intent to do that.

We will compile this, we will expand these to the greatest extent of the available information. (Pause). Do you have further on the subject, or do you want...

MS. SCHUHMANN: You can go on, please.

MR. LUNDELL: The second question that I was asked was would the Department of Labor be able to provide the Commission and all other interested parties with a current inventory of pertinent training and apprenticeship programs which presently exist in the State. This inventory would hopefully include such items as total capacity; duration of program; percentage, if any, of assured positions for women; and the type of certification such programs provide upon completion. The answer is is the information available; yes, it is. I wish I could say that we had compiled it and thus we could take the credit for it. It was actually done as a joint effort of the Alaska State Advisory Council on Career -- Vocational and Career Education and the State Manpower Services Council. The latest full scale study was done in the latter part of 1978.

There, also, is a document which was issued at about the same time by the Institute of Social and Economic Research under a contract that they had with the Vocational Education people, I believe, with the Department of Education. It was done by Lynn Wright under the direction of Judith Kleinfeld, dated November, 1978.

I guess to paraphrase Ed McMann, everything you ever wanted to know about a vocational training institution in Alaska is probably in these books as of that time. The updating of it is not directly -- we contribute to it, again, through our research and analysis; and we will keep some of the information or provide some. It is not a direct function of the Department of Labor.

The councils that we've mentioned in here are involved in that as is the Department of Education,and to some extent, the CETA division of the Department of Community and Regional Affairs. But these -- well, they happen to be the only ones I have. I can make reference to them, or I can leave them with you; and I'm sure I can find some more somewhere. But there's one of them available right in Fairbanks. So I will provide those.

As far as updating, I don't have any idea of whether there has been any updating taking place directly involved with those.

Asked whether the Department of Labor has estimated the number and kinds of jobs which will be available on the gas pipeline project, and the amount and degree of training and experience which these jobs will require. The Department is engaged, by arrangements that have been going on for some time, as information on the project is developed by the sponsoring company, Northwest Alaskan Pipeline Company, we have agreed that as they develop what types are there that we would provide information on the labor supply from that which we developed these publications from. And that has been an ongoing exercise for quite some time. As they are able to refine their needs and update them, they are communicating with us. And we make every effort to provide back the information. I'm sure that some of it has been of use to them in the preparation of their Affirmative Action plans.

It was indicated that you'd like to have something that was prepared. And I do have something that I would like to add here, and I don't want -- if I'm running over, tell me and I'll stop, but...

MS. SCHUHMANN: No, go ahead.

MR. LUNDELL: I'm working from a memorandum which was prepared out of our research and analysis section, which I will leave you for the record with the attachments that are there.

In essence, the research and analysis section has prepared quite a few studies on women in the work force, and I cited these as being a couple of them. Our major data source on industry information is a Bureau of Labor Statistics 790 Survey. That's the title of the program under which the information is obtained.

The percentage of women in the construction industry has actually declined from 1979 to 1980, according to our figures. In 1979 women, according to the data available, comprised approximately 8 percent of the labor force in the construction industry. According to our figures in 1980, that comes out about 6.6 percent. That's defined not only from participation, but also from those who apply for different types of jobs; for example, at the Job Service; those statistics that come from unemployment insurance statistics; and all these indicators indicate -- or show that there has been an actual decline in the availability of women in the construction work force in the last year.

I'm sorry to report that, but according to our information that is a fact.

Now, bear in mind these jobs include all the occupations within an industry; and they don't separate it out by specific trade skills, electrician to plumber to carpenter and things. That's -- this is an overall statement. It may not apply in a particular trade.

We have tried to gather some additional data within that construction sector using other data sources than those that would be used for the basic reports usually. For example, the Alaska Plan and Policy Board releases minority breakouts by different crafts and skills, also for women in the construction industry. There -- an example of this is attached to my report that I'm leaving with you for one of the months, like in November, 1980.

This -- the information that's covered in their report is probably about 50 percent of the overall construction work force as they deal --

MS. SCHUHMANN: I'm sorry, it's 50 percent did you...?

MR. LUNDELL: 50 percent. There are elements of construction, for example the home builders and things like that, that are not covered within the purview of the Alaska plan. They deal specifically with State and Federal contractors, not with other things; unless they happen to -- unless the companies involved provided across the board instead of just for those contracts. So it would be about 50 percent of the potential work force.

The most current report of this type reflected women comprising approximately 3 percent of all working craft people. And it would indicate over the previous 12 months that that approximate 3 percent has been fairly well maintained. They'll be some fluctuations, but it's been generally at that level. And, again, there's a --

MS. SCHUHMANN: What would be a definition of working crafts? What would that cover?

MR. LUNDELL: People in all of these various crafts who are actually at work. As you'll see from this report, it actually gets down to work hour participation, too, as a cross check to just sending somebody to the job to say you did and let letting him go the next day. So the work hours are also reported, which give you a pretty good cross check on how effective the program really is.

Interestingly enough, female work hour participation is above the level of average participation, which means they're getting at least as much overtime and staying on the job at least as long as the average person in ratio to the percentage of the work force.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Which crafts would that cover?

MR. LUNDELL: Do you have someone from the Alaska Plan appearing at this, or just ...

MS. SCHUHMANN: I don't think ... We have someone here in the audience, apparently.

MR. LUNDELL: Not making a report, okay. Because I didn't want to take somebody else's thunder or whatever, but there is a complete list of the various crafts that are covered ranging alphabetically from asbestos workers to teamsters. So it's all on the sheet, craft by craft. I don't think it'd be -- I'd rather have you do it as a part of the report than list them individually here, I think, with the time constraints.

Another indicator of potential labor supply for the construction trades are the enrollments with major unions that might be involved in dispatching workers to a project such as the gas pipeline. There was an informal survey on the telephone done last week by the people who prepared this report in order to help me have information for you today.

They talked with the Laborer's Union, the Teamsters, the Hotel, Motel, Restaurant Construction Camp Employees Union, the Operating Engineers in both Fairbanks and Anchorages, those unions; those 2 locations. According to the information they received from that survey and covering the others that they didn't call, the smaller ones that they didn't call, they estimated 5,831 women who are enrolled within those various unions. That doesn't mean they're all members in good standing. They are enrolled; they may not have kept up their membership, which is an important thing to remember for someone who really wants to get dispatched from a union hiring hall. If the membership isn't current, you're way at the back of the list. And that has to be remembered.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yes, Dorothy.

MS. JONES: What proportion of total enrollees is 5,831? Or estimated?

MR. LUNDELL: Let's see if I got a total. Let me do it by large group, if I may, in the course of this; because otherwise it's distorted because there's such a high registration factor and membership factor in the Hotel, Restaurant -- the Culinary trade that I -- the others would be distorted if I tried to answer it on an overall. I'd have to do some addition; and that's my way of avoiding doing that arithmetic right here. But I'll give it to you if necessary.

The proportion of women vary considerably amongst the different unions. Again, in that -- in the Culinary trade the percentage was between 60 to 65 percent in those 2 locals in Anchorage and Fairbanks of women. The others, Laborors, Teamsters, Operating Engineers, the registration or enrollment factor runs from 10 to 15 percent. You see, that's the wide disparity I was speaking of there in trying to respond to you.

There is always the question of whether the -- whether a skilled labor pool for any particular group, women as an example, would be expanded through immigration of workers. It's something that we are very concerned about because we don't want people coming -- prematurely migrating to Alaska because that causes problems with unemployment factors. There are the vocational educational programs that we spoke of that can expand that pool.

Mentioning apprenticeship programs, this is somewhat interesting in that according to the information obtained in summarizing the programs, 9 percent, which would be 91 women, 9 percent of the overall apprentices, were women this year that are enrolled in the apprenticeship training programs. Of this 91, they're in various states of these anywhere from 3 to 4 year programs; and there are 6 that are graduating of that 91 during this year. In -- oh, let's see, in 1978, which is the latest total figures that were available, the largest number of women enrollees were clustered in the electrical, pipefitting, and painting trades.

You must bear in mind that not all the apprenticeship programs are currently operating, because they have such a high factor of unemployment on their regular rolls, that they are not always operating the apprenticeship programs. Recruitment is open today for the 1982 programs only in the electrical and sheetrock trades, for example. The others really have a problem with maintaining it. This is according to the apprenticeship schools and to the outreach coordinator that works on that program.

Another strong possibility are things such as the Seward Skill Center, which has a great deal of coverage of programs. Pertaining to things like gas line employment, some of these include mechanical training, building trades, oil field technology, and the culinary trades.

In 1980 there were 4 women graduated as mechanics. And that's -- I don't know the percentage exactly, but there probably weren't more than about 20 or 25 total that graduated from those mechanical programs; 4 of them were women. The oil field technology course, there were 6, which again it's a fairly good percentage. The building trades, there were 5. Now, that's not a facility, again, of the Department of Labor. I'm providing information that we obtained from them.

The people who are interested in that can contact the Center directly down in Seward. It actually can accommodate about 250 people in any given time. It's a first come, first serve type of thing as far as applying there.

In addition to people who can be funded there through public programs, it is possible to go to the Seward Skill Center and pay your own tuition. Or it's my understanding you can also use an Alaska Scholarship Loan to go there just the same as you can to a university. And many, many people have taken advantage of that since that option was open to them.

I close of any formal remarks. I'm open to questions, but I would like to mention one thing in general. And I guess it's a plea from observation; not to let a project, gas line project or any other project, occupy your thought processes more than it should. There are so many things going on; and there's so much danger to preoccupation with a project alone, putting it in a fishbowl, if you will, as far as people and how they work. I can't tell you how many people I saw leave a good job in town and go to work temporarily on the oil pipeline; and then come back and say you mean you won't fire them and put me back in my job. And an employer in town isn't going to do that. That's how we gained a lot of people in the state who took the jobs in town when they couldn't get to work on the pipeline. And then the longer term resident wasn't able to get back to the job. I guess

I'm just asking you to keep it all in perspective as opposed to direct -- more than necessary attention to a single project. And I'm open to other questions.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Is your Department looking ahead, then, in trying to figure out what jobs in construction are going to be available beyond this pipeline? So that, for instance, if this Commission were to give any advice in the form of a pamphlet or whatever for long term job opportunities, not just on this pipeline, does your Department have any statistics or any projections along those lines?

MR. LUNDELL: Yes, it's something we are actively working on. They may not be to the specific craft level, as we are -- as Northwest Pipeline has been asked to provide, we might not be at the specific level, let's say for the capital projects program of the State, for example. There's probably almost as much work in any given year out of that as you might be looking at in the beginning years of the pipeline. In fact, what we have done is attempted to gauge the availability of work force in the information we're trying to provide to Northwest by doing kind of a sliding scale thing as projects are announced under the state's capital funding. We try to adjust the curve as far as the work -- overall labor force is concerned so that we can better identify when shortages may occur and when surpluses may occur. It's certainly of value in planning any projects roll within that. So, yes, we would like -- we do pursue that as much as possible.

MS. SCHUHMANN: It's been our impression that the type of study or survey on either qualified people who may not have a job or even those that just simply would be interested in learning more about or obtaining a construction job would be of assistance, particularly in trying to formulate Affirmative Action Plans. And so I would ask that your Department at least try to keep an open mind on that question as we have heard that that's the very information that really is quite necessary.

MR. LUNDELL: It certainly is. And we are trying our best to develop better and better sources and compile this. And if you wish to, at any time, raise any questions please contact us, and we'll do our best to work -- if you have a special study requirement or anything like that, we'll certainly do it as quickly and as best we can. And if there's something missing, we'll tell you what it is. If there's some way to help go get it, then maybe we can work together on it.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Do you have your statistics broken out also by way of minority women; for instance, native women, black women, or all women more or less counted as one group?

MR. LUNDELL: A considerable part of the information is broken out as you suggest. Unfortunately, the census didn't use exactly the same breakout as everyone else when they do it. And it -- we get the blame for not having this very detailed data. And the only real source is the census, which is not compliled in a way to really do it. And I'm afraid we don't set the rules for the U.S. Bureau of Census. Considerable -- to answer your question, considerable information on the racial or ethnic mix, as opposed to just male - female, is available. And we're still -- we're trying to sharpen that up as best we can from all sources.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Any of the Commissioners have any questions? (No response.) Well, thank you very much. I imagine that we will be back in touch with you. We appreciate very much your cooperation to date, and look forward to working together with you in the future.

MR. LUNDELL: Let me -- I'll leave these with you for the record, and a copy of what I was working from. There are some other booklets, "The Alaska Resource and Recruitment Directory" that was put out by the State of Alaska's Division of Equal Opportunity, which could be obtained. I'll just leave that as another example. There's a pamphlet from the Adult and Continuing Education Division of the Department of Education. I'll leave those and I'll leave the stand so you can get on with the program.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Okay. Could you be available at 1:30 if we do have any further questions? I think that we had scheduled a question and answer period at that time.

MR. LUNDELL: I certainly can be available then. I would request that I be able to finish by 3:00 as I'm planning to catch the 3:55 airplane, so...

MS. SCHUHMANN: Okay, fine. Thank you.

MR. LUNDELL: As I'm standing up doing this, let me mention something that I think an organization or at least some of your membership should consider. At one time there was a chapter of the American Society for Personnel Administration in Fairbanks. It disappeared through lack of the folks who had started it and after the pipeline years, oil pipeline. There are -- this is one of the issues -- this is part of the regular thing that comes from it. There's excellent articles on women in the work force -- these are national articles -- women in management, special seminar availability and things like this that I think your organization would be very interested in. I think it would fine if you had the opportunity to have chapters. There is one in Anchorage. They're just begun one in Juneau. There was one in Fairbanks; it could be revitalized. And I think you would be well advised to individually participate. You can't participate as an organization, but individually participate in something like that. It'll give you additional new sources of data that might be of interest to you.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you very much. I wonder, Chris, could you come up and sit with the Commission. This is Chris Callahan, who is a member of our staff. And I haven't introduced Katie Hurley, either, who is our Executive Director. Chris is our research analyst. Is Elston Lawson here, or someone from the State Pipeline Co-ordinator's Office? (No response.) Okay. Is Mr. Alexander here, or someone from the Federal Pipeline Co-ordinator's Office.

MR. ALEXANDER: Yes, I am someone from the Federal Inspector's Office. The... First of all, let me say it's a pleasure to be home. I've been in the State since last Sunday. And I think I've met with practically everyone that felt like they wanted a meeting between Juneau and here. And we're not finished yet. We have a meeting scheduled for practically everyday next week in Anchorage, including one with my old friend, Katie, who I haven't seen for awhile. And I promised I'd come in and spend some time with her when I got back.

It's always a pleasure to come home, even though there are problems, questions, sometimes upsets, arguements, disagreements, and once in awhile there's a compliment.

But it's always good to come home, anyway.

I got the questionnaire. And we were in a state of confusion, due to a severe personal crisis I had just prior to leaving to come back. And so I was -- a little bit sheepishly had to ask for a copy of the letter from Chris this morning. But at any rate, we do have it and we will respond.

I think that I'd like to approach this a little differently and then work into the questions you ask me. I'd like to give you just a bit of background, what we do, so you can get the complete picture of where I fit with regard to the pipeline.

First of all, let me say that I agree in part with Glen Lundell, that I think -- I get the impression that there will be so much work going on here in 1982, '83, and so forth that we may have a problem filling all the jobs that we want to fill with residents. I don't necessarily regard that as a problem at this point. But it would certainly please me to find that we've met and exceeded all our goals, we've run out of people, and now we've got to go get some other people from someplace else to get our work done.

What we're doing now and what we've been engaged in, which leads into the first question in my letter, is we've been negotiating with the sponsors, the 3 sponsor companies for the 3 various legs on the pipeline, over their Affirmative Action Plans. Two of those plans have been approved. The third one, there's a question with regard to that that I'll get to a little later. And you have representatives from Northwest who are here who may touch on it, too, and I think I will defer that to them.

But our job is to--according to the regulations regarding equal opportunity for the Alaska Gas Pipeline system, our job is to negotiate with the sponsors to see that the requirements under the regulations are addressed in their Affirmative Action Plans. And sometimes we get a bit more. But that is our basic job. Once the plan is approved and in place, then we are charged also with the responsibility for monitoring those plans to see that there is compliance, that there is -- the goals are being at least approached and met, and hopefully, again, exceeded.

As I said, two of those have been approved. I have -- I didn't bring copies of the entire plans. I did bring copies of what you would probably be more interested in; and that is the goals for the eastern and western legs. I will leave those here. I thought I had enough copies to pass out, but you can probably get some copies for the Commission members.

Once we agree on a plan with Northwest, once their basic plan is agreed upon, then we'll see that you receive copies of those also.

The goal setting process is a little bit involved; again, leads into the first question, which is giving the Commission a summary of the facts and figures and identifying the data upon which they were based. That would take me probably from now until Sunday, because the information submitted to our office was about so much with regard to how they did the data; where they got it from; how they used it.

What they did was use the population statistics. Included in those regulations is an eight factor analysis that they go through in coming up for goals in hiring and so forth. It, again, is very involved. I can leave with you a copy of those regulations. And it will explain it so you will be an expert on it just like I am.

The second question you asked is is it reasonable to assume that the Affirmative Action goals for the Alaskan segment will be similar. Yes, they will be similar. And let me qualify that by saying that the Alaskan segment is one of the largest segments. They will be similar. They may be somewhat larger -- or higher, that is. But they will be similar to the ones that have been approved on the other two segments.

When you talk of a goal, keep in mind a goal very often means the minimum that you will do. A goal means something that you will strive for. If you exceed that goal, then that's wonderful. And I think one of the sponsors, and I won't give it away, has exceeded for 1980 their goal for minority and female contracting. They're exceeded what I thought they would do, even. So sometimes those things do happen, if you watch them.

Upon what data will the Affirmative Action goals be based. As I mentioned earlier, the data will come from the population statistics; it will come from the eight factor analysis that they do as they go through the steps in drawing up their plans.

Is this data base subject to revision as census or other figures become available; yes, it is. We have the responsibility -- or maybe not the responsibility, but we do have enough leeway to go back in a year, review the figures, review the plans that were submitted to us, and put into place this year and make such revisions as are deemed necessary. So there is -- they're not set in concrete forever and a day.

The census material, of course, we don't know when that's going to be available in any useable form.

When do you anticipate approval of the Affirmative Action Plan for the Alaskan segment? Will this be a final approval or subject to revisions in the future? They're all subject to revisions in the future, as I just mentioned. Within a year after they're put into place, they're subject to revision. Whether there will be revision, of course, will have to come from our experiences over the first year. I would suspect that there will be some revisions in all three of them.

When do we anticipate approval of the Affirmative Action Plan for the Alaskan segment? I think someone asked me that the other day, and I said that we would like to try to do it within the next month, if that's possible. We think we are that close. I won't say any more about it; we think we are that close.

The next question I think I would like to defer to Mr. Kuhn, who will follow me. What numerical and financial requirements, if any, do you anticipate establishing with regard to Northwest Alaskan Pipeline Company's responsibility to provide training for both minorities and women to prepare them for employment on the pipeline? This is something right now, -- Just for my part here, it's something now that is being negotiated. It will be discussed at our next meeting. And I'd prefer not to go any further at this point. But it will be talked about at our next meeting between OFI and Northwest.

Will all requirements for such programs as Affirmative Action and other training clearly identify women as a separate target group? What other target groups are identified, if any? Our charge is to see that women and minorities are provided opportunities for contracting and employment on this project. And I said that in that manner because that's the way the regulations read: women and minorites. They're listed in separate categories.

The sponsors, the three sponsors, have broken out and identified other minority groups. They're identified women, blacks, Hispanics, Orientals, native Alaskans, and so forth. So the goals that are listed are broken out in that fashion. So women are most certainly identified as a separate target group.

Someone is probably going to ask me on counting, if they will be counted as both; no.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Which will they be counted as, then?

MR. ALEXANDER: This was a debate that was going on in my own office when I left, between my secretary and my assistant. So I don't know; I'll have to get into that one when I go back and decide. But they will not -- we decided that we didn't want the double count system. It looks good on paper, but...

One other thing in my staffing in my own office, I will be coming back here quite often, I suppose, if I'm able to hire the other two people that I'm authorized. As of right now, we have three people. And we jokingly said that three people are really all we need. We've only got three legs on the pipeline to be responsible for, so, what, a leg apiece.

I can tell you that my leg will be the Alaska leg. One of my assistance is enamorate of San Francisco, so she can have that one. One will be going into Omaha quite often; I don't think -- I think we'll probably have to draw straws for that one. Alaska will be my own special interest.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yes, Dorothy.

MS. JONES: I may have missed something, but did you say that you have approved the Affirmative Action and minority female business enterprise goals for the eastern leg?

MR. ALEXANDER: Eastern and western legs.

MS. JONES: And what are those goals?

MR. ALEXANDER: I just handed those to Katie. I don't have those now.

MS. JONES: Oh. What -- is there an estimate?

MR. ALEXANDER: I can't give it to you, Ma'am, it's there in the fact sheet. I didn't keep a copy myself.

MS. SCHUHMANN: It looks like, from this first page, that the total female would be 3.8 percent. And it's broken out; officials and managers would be .7 --

MR. ALEXANDER: You're looking at the company goals, I think.

MS. SCHUHMANN: I'm sorry?

MR. ALEXANDER: Are those the company goals or the construction goals?

MS. SCHUHMANN: These are the percentage goals for contractor construction work force.

MR. ALEXANDER: Okay, I think you have all 3 of them there, construction, pre-construction, and company goals.

MS. SCHUHMANN: What would be the -- when does pre-construction end and construction begin?

MR. ALEXANDER: That's a good question. I think it would take an engineer to really explain that to me. I think what is going on -- Al, you'll probably pull my coat if I'm wrong. I think what is going on now here is considered pre-construction, is that correct?

MR. KUHN: Yes, this this the pre-construction--

MR. ALEXANDER: Preparation for construction and so forth; your site clearing and that kind of stuff.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Then is there a third period of time after construction, also, or at the end -- when does the construction end?

MR. ALEXANDER: The post construction? I don't -- I haven't heard anyone mention post construction yet, but you have, you know, your site clearing and all that; then the actual construction. I don't know what the period -- clean up, I guess.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Did you have a follow up?

MS. JONES: Well, I just feel baffled because I don't have a concept of what, in general, the goal that's been approved is; if it would average 4 percent or 12 percent or 20 percent, it would make a big difference. And I guess I'm not analyzing this. I mean, I don't know how to respond if I think --

MR. ALEXANDER: I can tell you what the contracting goal is. The contracting goal is 10 percent for -- you're talking about eastern leg; 10 percent for minorities, 1 percent for female business enterprises. The hiring goals, you know, I'd have to tell you again that they're in there. I don't have them.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yeah, maybe I'll give it back to you so...

MS. JONES: I mean, it's hard to have a response about whether this is awful or wonderful.

MR. ALEXANDER: Well, I think that we have to realize is that regardless of whether we perceive it as awful or wonderful, you have to remember that in doing this analysis there was a factor such as availability that they had to crank into this. And we argued with them for months over these goals before they finalized them.

MS. SCHUHMANN: But if I heard Mr. Lundell correctly, the availability studies aren't really in existence, at least in Alaska, --

MR. ALEXANDER: No.

MS. SCHUHMANN: -- a total availability study.

MR. ALEXANDER: Well, the sponsor here has had to do an availability study. He's had to do that on his own. He's had to hire that done. And all 3 of the other -- both the others have had to do the same thing.

MS. JONES: Well, excuse me if I'm pressing a point, and just maybe I'm having difficulty grasping it. The report on the status of women in Alaska, I think, indicated there were 11 percent of women employed in the -- on the oil pipeline in construction work. Is that one of the guides you use? I mean, I would assume it's not going to be less than what existed then.

MR. ALEXANDER: No doubt it will be; no doubt that will be considered. But here, again, I'm stealing Northwest's thunder when I tell you that. We're still discussing these goals.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Are there other questions from the Commissioners, or followup? (No response.) Would you be available at 1:30?

MR. ALEXANDER: I can come for about an hour; and then I've got a 2:45 meeting, a 3:00 meeting, a... Yes.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Okay, great. We'd appreciate that very much.

MR. ALEXANDER: Thank you very much for allowing me to appear.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you. How about if we take, say, a 5 minute break and try to reconvene at about 11:15 promptly. There is coffee in the back, now.

OFF THE RECORD

ON THE RECORD

MS. SCHUHMANN: I'd like to call the meeting back to order. We'd like to welcome Mr. Al Kuhn of Northwest Alaskan Pipeline Company.

MR. KUHN: Thank you, Mrs. Schuhmann, Commission members. For the record, I'm Edwin Alan Kuhn, Director of Governmental Affairs for Northwest Alaskan Pipeline Company. I also happen to chair an in-house task force that was charged with the responsibility of developing our Affirmative Action Plan.

I'm very pleased to be here this morning to focus on some of the specifics in that plan, particularly as they relate to women. And I want to go on beyond that and say I'm not only pleased to be here, but I'm very proud to be here as a representative of Northwest Alaskan Pipeline Company, a firm that I believe has made very substantial and honest efforts to become a good Alaska citizen. And I'd like to give you a few specifics.

We have about 530 plus or minus employees in Alaska at this time. Now, these include not only Northwest Alaskan employees, but our contractors and including the Fluor Corporation, our major project management contractor. Of these 530 employees approximately 83 percent are local Alaska hires. And of this 530 employees, approximately 24 percent are women.

Now, it's always interesting to look at some of the key categories, also. And I might single out officials and managers.Of our 530, roughly, Alaskan work force 22 percent are women. Now, we're proud of these numbers. And I would contrast them with some of the other numbers you've heard this morning. But forgive me for getting ahead a little bit here. Some of these facts are perhaps not well appreciated by people generally.

I have some prepared remarks, which I'll leave with you, and including statistically information and data that will be of interest along with a number of other items in these packets. And we do have enough for all of the Commission members, and I think we have enough for at least part of the audience.

I'm not going to go into an awful lot of background here, and I'm not going to read my statement. I might just skim through some of the highlights of it. We do have, I think, some very good numbers for you to look at, tables, and pie charts, and that sort of thing that will bring a lot more lucidity to some of these things.

The whole Affirmative Action requirement for us started in 1976 with the passage of the Alaskan Natural Gas Transportation Act. And as you know, that mandated certain affirmative actions to be taken by all federal officers and agencies to insure that equal opportunity was accorded everybody without regard to sex, national origin and so on. The Act also required the promulgation of specific regulations to set out the specifics of what we were to do. And in addition, there was the President's decision and report to Congress of September, 1977, which very specifically mandated that we develop and affirmative action plan and submit it to the federal inspector for approval.

Well, in due course, the regulations were developed. And they were published on May 12, 1980, just about a year ago, by the Department of the Interior. And that was done after consultation with the State, other federal agencies, local governments, they had public hearings, all sorts of things. These regulations provided detailed procedures for our development of goals and timetables both for hiring and for minority and female contracting. It told us precisely how to proceed in developing those things. It gave us a certain amount of time in which to act, which we took. And in September of last year we submitted our initial Project Affirmative Action Plan. It's a thick document about, oh, I'd say 3 inches thick. And we had, as John Alexander observed, a mountain of detailed backup studies and statistically information to support it.

After our initial submission, there was a series of discussions with the Office of the Federal Inspector. And we submitted a revised Affirmative Action Plan for the entire project in the middle of December, 1980. Now, I might say what's really in there. Well, what is in there is -- or was specific goals for 1980. Of course, we were, you know, well into 1980. But it had specific goals for the year 1980. And it had projections for the following years through the entire construction period, that is out through 1986.

The regulations, the federal regulations, also require that we update our Affirmative Action Plan on an annual basis. Now, since we only have -- we are at this point approaching goals on an annual basis. We -- and we are on an annual budget cycle, so we really need that kind of information -- that input early in the year. We have set as a timetable to update our plan annually and submit it by the first of March.

Well, we, in fact, did that. It happened to be on Monday, the 2nd of of March, we submitted to the Office of the Federal Inspector, our 1981 annual update for the Affirmative Action Plan. And in that plan, we comment on how well we did in 1980 in reaching our goals. And we set out our specific goals for the balance of the year 1981. We commented on any shortcomings and our plans for the future, and so on. As John Alexander said, that's under consideration at this point.

I think it's important for everyone to recognize just what these Affirmative Action Plans -- these Project Affirmative Action Plans amount to. Right now, in our Alaskan work force, Northwest Alaskan Pipeline Company itself represents about 8 percent of our total employment. The rest of it is our contractors. And at the peak year of our project in the construction phase, on the current schedule -- and that, incidentally, would be the year 1984 -- Northwest Alaskan itself would represent but 4 percent of the total work force in Alaska. So we're only a small part of it.

The Affirmative Action Plan, however, by the regulations is applicable to all of our contractors. And we make that a part of our contracts. We pass down contractually to a prime contractor. And he is bound to pass down these requirements to all of the subcontractors. So the chain is maintained in that manner.

I might add there are certain size limitations on that. We're talking about contracts in the amount of $50,000 or more and contractors employing 50 persons or more. The important thing to recognize is that when a contractor who's above those size thresholds gets a contract, he is obliged to follow our goals. He is also required to develop an affirmative action plan saying how he's going to carry out the work and meet the goals.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Barbara.

MS. DALE: Excuse me, is that required by law?

MR. KUHN: Yes, if you construe it all in a broad sense as including the regulations and contract law, certainly, if I understand you correctly.

MS. DALE: Thank you.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Herb.

MR. BERKOWITZ: How does Northwest Alaskan plan to enforce compliance with such clauses in their contracts with their contractors and in their contractor's contracts with their subcontractors?

MR. KUHN: Well, we require reports on a very frequent basis. And we work with them to see if they're carrying out the commitments that they have made. But I'm perhaps jumping ahead a little bit. Before we ever award a contract, in our request for proposal, request for bids, we require that they give us some specifics as to how they think they're going to meet our goals. We include a summary of our Affirmative Action Program in our bid packages so they know right at the beginning exactly what it is they're going to have to do. And they have to tell us how they're going to do it. And our evaluation of one bid vis a vis another certainly takes into consideration what they tell us they're going to do in these areas.

MR. BERKOWITZ: If their reports show noncompliance with their contractual commitments in that regard, what's Northwest's policy going to be? Is it going to terminate those contracts?

MR. KUHN: Well, there's always a difference of opinion, perhaps, about whether somebody's in compliance or not. But if there is -- if somebody is clearly not meeting their contractual commitment in this area, it would be no different than not meeting their contractual commitment in any other area. I don't care whether it's in, you know, meeting the schedule or doing the job according to specifications, whatever. It's -- we're going to hold them accountable to their -- the contract terms.

MR. BERKOWITZ: And terminate?

MR. KUHN: That would be an extreme remedy. There are other steps that could be considered before, you know, terminating a contract. That would -- when you have, you know, a work force mustered in the field and so on.

MR. BERKOWITZ: Well, Mr. Kuhn, you've said that they can throw a bunch of numbers at you to solicit a contract. Don't you think it's a perfectly reasonable remedy that termination be --

MR. KUHN: I would not rule that out as an extreme eventuality. You don't -- you wouldn't start with that, though.

MS. DALE: Have you ever taken action against any of the subcontractors for not complying with the Affirmative Action Plan?

MR. KUHN: Well, when you say taken action, we have applied moral suasion, if you will, to encourage them to do what they're supposed to do. And we've provided them additional help where that appeared appropriate.

MS. JONES: Does that work?

MR, KUHN: Yes. I'll give you some specifics. Continuing on and kind of a little more general background here, we expect the construction project to be a union job. And certainly a major factor in our ability to attain the Affirmation Action goals that we set out are going to be the labor unions. Now, we expect that there will be an agreement between the project sponsors and the labor unions. And that agreement will contain certain nondiscrimination requirements and Affirmative Action requirements, and a commitment that the unions will dispatch minorities and females in sufficient numbers to insure that we meet the Project Affirmative Action goals.

I'd like to now make sure that some of these key considerations are -- and these are important considerations. I'd like to just kind of summarize a few things here, maybe in slightly different words. A) Our hiring is going to be decentralized. It's not going to be done largely by Northwest Alaskan Pipeline Company. It's going to be done by those execution contractors. And some of them are going to have billion dollar contracts. So we're talking about joint ventures for the most part. It's going to be done by them; not us. They will have to adopt our Affirmative Action goals, or they're never going to get the contract. And I've indicated that Northwest Alaskan itself, at the peak, we're going to be doing about 4 percent, you recall.

All right, B), the second point; hiring of craft labor will be through the union halls, the union halls in Alaska.

And the third point, as you -- and I haven't raised this yet, we are required by law to endeavor to use fixed price contracts in contrast, distinct contrast, to the approach used by Alyeska. Now, if we're going to use fixed price contracts, and there is a mechanism for obtaining exceptions under certain circumstances from the Federal Inspector. But, in good faith, we're endeavoring to use fixed price contracts for our execution contractors, the heavy work in the field.

Now, if we're going to do that, we have to give a large measure of control of labor relations to the execution contractors. However, I want to emphasize that we, as project sponsors, will act strongly to insure that there is no discrimination and specifically no sexual harassment.

Another point along the same line is that it necessarily follows with this sort of a scheme that there's no way that we reasonably could be expected to be highly specific at this time about how many, for example, individuals will be hired from a given village, or a specific location in the State, or anything like that. We're simply not at that stage yet, and there's just no way to really, you know, get down to that level of detail. Yes.

MS. JONES: Do you have a figure to represent your goal for women?

MR. KUHN: I'm coming to that. Still, in a little -- I'll get to some specific numbers, I promise. And it's all in the document that will be in front of you in a few minutes here. What are the real oppor-- this is one of the specific questions you raised. What are the real opportunities for women on this project? When you get my document, you will see a table 6. And on table 6, it's projection in Alaska -- and this is Alaska only, not -- we'll have certain activities in the Lower 48, but Alaska manpower projections 1982 through 1986. And certain things will pop out at you.

Obviously 1984 is going to be the peak year based on our current schedule. 1984 would be the peak year in Alaska. And we're talking about a total of twelve to thirteen thousand people. Now, that's less, considerably less than the oil pipeline, just incidentally. Twelve to thirteen thousand people, and of that total, craft workers will be about -- call it nine thousand. So the bulk of our employment opportunities are going to be in the craft labor area, as you might expect.

Now, I also have another table in the document that breaks it down a little further, breaks down that craft area so you can see specifically what trades are involved. And the thing that immediately pops out is that there are four, four categories: laborers, operating engineers, pipefitters, teamsters. That's where the bulk of the employment's going to be on this project.

Now, another point you specifically asked about is job entry requirements. And there's only two job entry requirements that Northwest Alaskan itself is going to establish. And one of those is a pre-employment physicial examination for everybody. And we're going to take steps to have that occur not just in one location in this State, but we'll endeavor to work out a way that will suit the convenience and proximity to homes of others. We haven't got all the specifics on that yet. But in any event, that is one.

And the other is a certification for mainline welders, a very critical operation. Those are our only two requirements. Now, some of the individual employers may have further requirements of their own as long as they are reasonable and nondiscriminatory there should be no problem on that.

Now, I would hasten to add that, keeping in mind that this is going to be a union job in the craft area, the unions have certain qualification requirements for certain of the jobs. Now, the -- and I don't have the specifics on those to give you. I think they're pretty well known. They're available from the unions.

I can assure you that we will be monitering the operation of this whole system to make sure that there are equal opportunities; that it's carried out in an nondiscriminatory way.

Now I'd like to get to some of the specifics. In all categories of hiring and contracting for minorities and females, Mr. Alexander -- and I haven't seen those papers myself, but I'm told that in all categories, we substantially exceed in our goals those of either the eastern leg or the western leg. And you'll be able to judge those numbers for yourself.

I'd like to -- and we -- do you have this document in front of you yet? You don't; all right. When you get it, you'll see a Table 5, which gets down to our specific goals for 1981, not yet approved by the Federal Inspector I would hasten to add. This is what's in our document, though, both for hiring and for contracting.

Now, I want to talk a little bit about how we got to those goals, which you'll see here. And I'd like to take contracting first. I know, Miss Schuhmann, that you didn't have much emphasis in your letter on the female contracting, but I presume you are interested in that --

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yes, we are.

MR. KUHN: -- and would like to hear about that. We have a -- what I believe to be a very innovative approach to minority and female contracting. We have a computerized bank of names of minority, female, and other contractors who are interested in doing work on this project. We have actively solicited the identification and interest of minority and female firms. As a matter of fact, we sent out approximately 18,000 questionnaires and invited responses. And in this package, which you will have shortly, you will find a copy of the questionnaire that was sent out. It's a multipage questionnaire set up for machine coding.

And it asks a person, are you interested in doing business, what have you got to offer, how big of job can you handle, etcetera; and breaks down into different categories. All of this is computer coded.

And whenever we are preparing to let out a request for bid or proposal, we punch the button for that particular contract and get the names of all of the people -- the firms that might be interested in bidding. And then we don't just, you know, advertise in a general publication or something like that, we directly solicit from -- a response from those firms that are on the list.

Now, the -- I asked our people to give me the number of female business enterprises that are in our computer bank. And it totals 174 on a nationwide basis. And of that number, 57 are in Alaska. And we would be pleased to have additional firms identified, because we don't have frankly very many to draw from in the female business enterprise area.

MS. SCHUHMANN: What would be the definition of -- you know,what requirement would there be to meet the requirements of a --

MR. KUHN: The definition?

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yeah, the definition.

MR. KUHN: Yes, the business must be at least 51 percent owned and operated by a female. It can't be just owned; it's got to be actively managed, also.

MS. SCHUHMANN: So I take it you're soliciting other female business enterprises to let you know that they exist so that you can put them on your computer bank?

MR. KUHN: That's right. That's right, we are. And now I might add of the 18,000 solicitations, you know, we got back some saying sorry, we're not interested, you know, for whatever reason; and some -- there was non-response, a certain percentage. I don't have those numbers at my fingertip. But we would welcome additional female business enterprises.

MS. JONES: Do you give preferential consideration to a female business enterprise in the contracting process?

MR. KUHN: I would say that we would give equal consideration to all prospective bidders. I don't like to say preferential consideration. But we have certain goals to meet. And we're encouraging bids. And a person -- to get a bid, just because a person is representing a minority or female firm doesn't mean that they can come in with the high bid and expect to get the contract. We still have to make our awards on an economic basis.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Herb.

MR. BERKOWITZ: Mr. Kuhn, a couple of minutes ago you made reference to our work force and the number of people working in each craft.

MR. KUHN: Um-hm.

MR. BERKOWITZ: Although a few minutes before that you'd pointed out very clearly that it's really not your work force; it's the work force of your contractors; --

MR. KUHN: Right.

MR. BERKOWITZ: -- and that really your only source of control over them is through enforcement of contractual provisions which bind them to meet certain goals. And I asked you about the means of enforcement you proposed to use. And you told me that cancellation would be an extreme means; and would probably be used seldom and very reluctantly. Could you tell me what other means the company proposes to use to see that those clauses are complied with?

MR. KUHN: Well, I think the best means is to be certain going in what you're getting. And we work actively with these contractors to be certain how things are going to be done. And we provide them assistance. We have staff assistants who are -- if something is slipping and they say well gee, we're not getting any -- we don't know how to get -- for example, if it's an Alaskan native, we don't know how to go about getting them on this job. Well, we'll suggest ways of doing it. We may make some contacts for them or whatever. There are various ways that we can do it. It's usually not a lack of desire to comply. It's often a lack of knowledge as to how to go about doing things. That's what we've found so far. We've got a pretty good record, which you'll see, in achieving results.

MR. BERKOWITZ: Are there specific active and innovative things that Northwest Alaskan is planning to do to help encourage the use by your contractors of females in nontraditional employment rolls?

MR. KUHN: Yes. I think that we have been very active in encouraging the participation of minority and female firms in joint ventures. I would single that out as a key area. A lot of these firms are by nature relatively small. And a lot of our -- even if you break down a job into smaller components that are, you know, open for bidding by smaller firms and so on, very often the level is still beyond the capability of a single minority or female firm to get in and have a chance at it.

But if they can be encouraged and given the information about what's coming down the pike, to get in and get themselves associated with a joint venture, then we have found that that is a very fruitful way to encourage the participation.

MR. BERKOWITZ: But you're talking about contracting, --

MR. KUHN: Yes.

MR. BERKOWITZ: -- and I'm talking about the employment. What steps is Northwest Alaskan proposing to take specifically to see to it that some women in Fairbanks or Anchorage, or in the bush with the interest and inclination, and talent to work on this project will be reached?

MR. KUHN: Well, you say reached. They -- keep in mind this is -- we're -- if we're talking craft area, it's going to have to be through the unions. If you're talking about information dissemination on opportunities and so on, we are already providing information, have been to the State Department of Labor and encouraging its dissemination as to what the opportunities are.

MR. BERKOWITZ: Will you be requiring your contractors to do the same in the course of the construction of this project to be making a current ongoing effort?

MR. KUHN: Keep in mind that these contractors must -- as we provided and constructed the Project Affirmative Action Plan, each of these contractors must develop his own detailed affirmative action plan. And it, too, must be approved.

MR. BERKOWITZ: But it's a plan?

MR. KUHN: It's a plan, that's right.

MR. BERKOWITZ: How do you intend to see the fulfillment of that plan?

MR. KUHN: By monitoring it. There are penalties -- if you're talking about enforcement of affirmative action requirements, that's also the job of the Office of the Federal Inspector. And there are penalties and law that can be imposed; fines. I don't think things are going to get to that point. We hope they won't, but there -- you know, there's a variety of things, which as you've suggested, that could extend to a termination of a contract, an extreme measure.

MR. BERKOWITZ: But is Northwest Alaskan itself going to be actively monitoring?

MR. KUHN: We're going to be actively monitoring contract performance, yes. And if somebody falls substantially behind and is patently not making reasonable, good faith efforts to achieve its goals, that would be noncompliance with our contract just as much as it would in any other area. There are legal remedies. We don't think it's going to come to that. We hope it won't.

MS. DALE: I have a question about the statistics that we were talking about earlier of the analysis of women in the work force; that I believe it was Mr. Lundell said that you -- the company did a study to find that information out. Is that right?

MR. KUHN: Yes. I was still on contracting. Let me just close out contracting, --

MS. DALE: Okay.

MR. KUHN: -- and I'll swing immediately to employment.

MS. DALE: Okay, fine. I have a few more questions in that area.

MR. KUHN: The -- just to give you a few specifics, in 1981 our goals for minority contracting were 16. -- are 16.75 percent of our total contractable opportunities. And for females, it's 2.25 percent of our total contractable opportunities. Now, in 1980--if you want to compare it, in 1980 we established a goal of 12 percent for minority contractors. And we actually made 22.7 percent. What I'm saying is that 22.7 percent of all of our procurement, project procurement, in 1980 went to minority firms. That's a record I'll match with anybodies.

Now, in 1980, our goal for females was -- female business enterprises was 4 percent, and that equated to 2.8 million. And in 1981 the dollar figure for female business enterprises is 4 million.

Now, how do we -- I guess one -- I need to say one more thing, how do we get those specific numbers and everything like that. Well, we start at the beginning of the year when we get our budget firm. And we know reasonably well what we expect to do during the year. We analyze the specific contracts, take them apart piece by piece and see how they can be structured in such a way that -- into smaller pieces perhaps, or whatever, and what joint venture possibilities -- and usually we've been discussing some of these things with potential joint venture firms for months before that. And we make the best reasonable effort -- estimate we can as to what a -- you know, a reasonable goal would be for that year. That's how we do it in the contracting area. Now, that's distinctly different in employment. And I will now swing to hiring.

The data base for our hiring goals posed a real challenge to us, because we had the 1970 census. And that's been a number of years, of course. And even more important, far overshadowing that, was the fact that it was obvious that the work force in Alaska had changed substantially since the 1970 census. So we didn't give much consideration to using that for our -- the people that would be up here in Alaska. We looked at that, and we decided that we had to have some outside, highly objective assistance. We went to the firm of Data Resources, Incorporated. It's a highly respected economic consulting firm; worldwide, as a matter of fact. We also obtained the services of Dr. David Rayum (ph), who had just come from a position as chief economist with the Alaska Department of Commerce and Economic Development. We obtained the services of other economists through DRI and obtained information from the State Department of Labor. We had various and sundry other studies I'd mentioned, the Larel Bland (ph) Study that may ring a bell with some of you. All of these things are referenced in our plan. In any event, in the most objective way possible, we updated or constructed a new data base regarding Alaska, the population and labor force. And we then followed-very strictly complying with the detailed regulations and,as John Alexander mentioned, the eight factor analysis and all of that; followed those procedures and came up with the goals.

Now, when you see the paper that I'll be submitting for the record here, you will find a --

MS. SCHUHMANN: Could we have a copy of that while you're testifying? Do you have an extra one or...?

MR. KUHN: Yes. Would you bring them up, please, Randy. (Pause while report is being distributed.) All right, what I would -- you'll find on my statement, toward the back, it's about the third page from the back; table 5. And this is Project Wide Employment Goals for 1981. Now, these are contained in that update to our Affirmative Action Plan that I said we submitted on March 2nd.

And if you'll look at the column on the right on Table 5 you'll see the goals for female employment in the calendar year 1981. And for the benefit of the -- those who don't have the document in front of them, I'll just read the categories and tell you what they are. Officials and managers, 17.8 percent of our total project work force; that includes Alaska and the Lower 48. Professionals, 20.5 percent; technicians, 9 percent; clericals, 55.9 percent; service workers, 31.4 percent; crafts, 5.7 percent.

MS. DALE: Could you please give us an estimate on the percentage of the people who will be hired from Alaska in these. You said in the first one that this total included Outside.

MR. KUHN: I think the numbers -- the percentages are about the same. But Aaron, is that about right, Alaska and the Lower 48; the percentages are about the same?

UNIDENTIFIED VOICE: That's correct.

MR. KUHN: Okay. The percentages -- there's no great disparity between Alaska and the Lower 48 on the percentages.

Now the -- this is going back one step, but on that same page you'll see the number I mentioned, 4 million dollars down there for the female contracting; 2.25 percent of our total contractable opportunities this year, totalling 185 million.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Dorothy.

MS. JONES: Regarding the goal for female craft workers of 5.7 percent. My memory is that it's considerably lower than the portion of female craft workers on the oil pipeline. Could you explain how you derived that figure?

MR. KUHN: Yes, it was, again, determined on the information of available qualified workers. But I'd like to go beyond that --in other words, with the 8 factor analysis -- and comment on the number that I think you mentioned earlier about 11 percent on the oil line. And I think you will find in the document,put into the record by Mr. Lundell earlier today, a table which analyzes and breaks down the peak employment on the oil line. And you will find that the peak month brought Alyeska to 12.7 percent for females, but that included a lot of other things. It included the clericals; it was everything, 12.7 percent. That included in the craft area, 1.1 percent. And it also had operators -- the categories are a little different, but operators, 6.9 percent; the labor category, 9.7 percent; service workers, 47.9. By the time you get -- you know, add it all up, it came out to the 12.7 total.

MS. JONES: What puzzles me about this when you set Affirmative Action goals, if we rely on the present structure of training opportunities; if we rely on unions for the employees, then nothing will change because there are very few women who are in the craft unions. So that if -- let's see if I can say this clearly, if you say our Affirmative Action goals will be based on the present structure of union apprentice programs and union enrollment figures, then it has to necessarily be low because women are low. And my question is, how do you break through that if you want to achieve a more meaningful representation of women in nontraditional jobs if you base it on what the present structure is?

MR. KUHN: Well, there's going to be a need, at least at the peak, for more than the -- you know, the current union membership, we believe. If you take that peak year figure of twelve to thirteen thousand, in that range, for that year at any rate, that is going to exceed the availability within the state. And there will be -- there should be opportunities for, you know, significant new entry through the union hiring halls.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Barbara.

MS. DALE: Maybe I just need a little explanation, but if you depend on the unions to use up a certain percentage of all the women that are going to be hired or to come up to your goal in the Affirmative Action Plan; and they have a low percentage, are you required, then, to train the other women to come up to that goal or are your subcontractors if there aren't women available? And if you are, wouldn't it be to your advantage to encourage the unions to get more women in their training programs so that you wouldn't have to to come up on this end?

MR. KUHN: Well, the whole area of union seniority and dispatch sequence and all of that, that's a knotty one and ultimately will be addressed in the agreement we have with the unions. And I really can't give you any more specifics on that at this point.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Herb.

MR. BERKOWITZ: Do you have a project labor agreement?

MR. KUHN: No, we do not.

MR. BERKOWITZ: What's the present status of it?

MR. KUHN: Well, that's something to be negotiated in the future.

MR. BERKOWITZ: Do you have any idea of when those negotiations are going to commence?

MR. KUHN: I can't put a specific date on it at this point.

MR. BERKOWITZ: What are the principal unions you expect to be negotiating with?

MR. KUHN: We expect to be negotiating with the Teamsters, the Operating Engineers, the Laborors, and the Welders, the four traditional pipeline unions. They'll be certain building trade unions, perhaps, in addition to that.

MS. DALE: I have another question.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Barbara.

MS. DALE: Also, it seems to me that if you are having to provide the statistical information yourself on what's available and are depending on the unions to pick up some of it, it seems to me a conflict of interest if you have to do the training for you to provide the statistics.

MR. KUHN: The statistics are, you know, available for everybody to see. Their footnoted. The references that were available, we think they'll stand scrutiny by any -- on a professional basis by anybody.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Are those contained in the packet, the -- you know, the data base that you used for your --

MR. KUHN: Oh, yes.

MS. SCHUHMANN: They're in here?

MR. KUHN: No, no. No. What we're talking about is a stack of paper that high that John Alexander was referring to. We didn't just file our plan with, you know, the summary, the end result. We gave him every piece of paper that went into it. And it's been -- believe me, it's been looked over -- we had our PhD economist and they got theirs, and they went over it very thoroughly. And theirs happened to be an Alaskan PhD economist, also so he knew what he was talking about.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Herb.

MR. BERKOWITZ: Mr. Kuhn, is Northwest Alaskan going to have some sort of department specifically assigned with the task of enforcing compliance with female hire goals?

MR. KUHN: The word enforcement has a particular sort of legal connotation. Enforcement, per se, is not the company's role because that is specifically reserved to the various agencies of the federal government, particularly the -- and that'll be done, in effect, by the Federal Inspector and his people.

Now, and if you're talking about insuring that our contracts are complied with; yes, we have -- we're going to have quite a staff. And largely our modus operandi is to have a relatively small Northwest Alaskan staff. And then to rely on our project management contractor to ride herd on the various execution contractors and to provide that detailed oversight.

MR. BERKOWITZ: Well, isn't that kind of like putting the fox in charge of the hen house?

MR. KUHN: In what way?

MR. BERKOWITZ: That contractor has as a principal responsibility the completion of your project and of necessity, I think, would put concerns of this kind in a somewhat lower priority. Your company has a permit from the federal government that stands or falls on your compliance with these requirements. And your contracts with these contractors require them to meet certain requirements. Now, you're telling me that your involvement, your company's involvement, is going to be small. I would like to understand why your company's involvement isn't going to be big, because it sounds like it ought to be.

MR. KUHN: Our involvement will be on a policy and an oversight level. And we think it is entirely effective. We think the record substantiates the results.

MR. BERKOWITZ: Well, you haven't even built your pipeline yet, how can you have any results, Mr. Kuhn?

MR. KUHN: I beg your pardon?

MR. BERKOWITZ: You haven't built your pipeline yet, so you can't have any results.

MR. KUHN: Not results, I've cited you some results about our performance to date of -- I've cited you what we're doing in the way of -- and I might add that we don't have an obligation yet, in one way of looking at it, on some of these things in that we don't have, you know, approved goals. There's no requirement, for example, on the Alaska hire yet we're up, I said, 83 percent; something like that. The -- I think that the -- this is a matter of management and organization. And we have made a conscious decision to operate at a policy and an oversight level and to use the Fluor engineers and constructors in a staff support role. Now, I can tell you that the relationship is extremely close. And they have the flexibility to draw on a worldwide organization with thousands of people and experts in any field you want and they can bring in on a specific problem on very short notice. It gives us great advantages, really, to do that. Otherwise, we'd have to hire, you know, an enormous staff of specialists that we might only use for a portion of the time.

MR. BERKOWITZ: Well, let me ask you this, Mr. Kuhn, during the anticipated height of gas line construction how many personnel does Northwest Alaskan intend to devote to this subject matter; that is, of female employment?

MR. KUHN: Okay I -- to female employment. It's going to be difficult for me to separate female and minority employment for you. (To member of audience) What's that number, we had a number?

UNIDENTIFIED VOICE: 7 for Northwest; 42 for the (inaudible).

MR. KUHN: 7 for Northwest; 42 people,full time employees,working on minority and female hiring and contracting, exclusively on that.

MR. BERKOWITZ: But 7 of yours?

MR. KUHN: That's correct. We have --

MR. BERKOWITZ: And you're going -- so you are going to enforce compliance with those contractual stipulations through 7 of your own personnel?

MR. KUHN: That is correct.

MR. BERKOWITZ: Thank you.

MS. SCHUHMANN: On Table #5, Mr. Kuhn, is it fair to say that in your availability studies that the availability of female craft workers was higher in Alaska than in the Lower 48? In other words, you know, actual construction type employment; is it fair to say that your availability studies show that more women had actually been working in those --

MR. KUHN: I don't -- I honestly don't have the answer to that question. Maybe one of my colleagues does. (To colleague). Availability of craft workers, Alaska vis a vis Lower 48? Is the availability higher of qualified workers up here? It's about the same?

UNIDENTIFIED VOICE: Craft by craft, yes, they're lower.

MR. KUHN: Up here?

UNIDENTIFIED VOICE: Actual numbers; percentage wise, males to females, I think they might be just a little bit higher.

MS. SCHUHMANN: But on Table 5 you are -- employment goals are about the same for Alaska and the Lower 48; in other words, you're not --

MR. KUHN: Okay, but -- yes, but recognize that, you know, we're not doing any craft work in the Lower 48, so this number is essentially an Alaska number. All right, let's see where I was here.

Training. We have just recently established another internal task force to deal with the question of training. And I don't have any great specifics to bring to you at this time. But I would take note of one of the requirements that is in our federal right-of-way grant; and that is that we enter into an agreement with the Secretary of the Interior and the Federal Inspector with regard to recruitment, testing, training, placement, hiring, and job counseling of Alaska natives. That is a specific requirement. And we, of course, recognize that we have a potential requirement to do other training as may be necessary to reasonably assist us in meeting our Affirmative Action goals. We would expect that anything we do in this area would be nondiscriminatory, females, other minorities and so on.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Do you have under consideration any training programs specifically for females; or is that a possibility or...?

MR. KUHN: Specifically for females? We haven't really honestly gotten to that -- at that -- to that stage yet. I ...

MS. SCHUHMANN: The native portion, then, would be open to female natives as well as males?

MR. KUHN: On a nondiscriminatory basis, right.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Barbara, did you have a question?

MS. DALE: When you get -- in your projections in regard to training, when you look at what you've done as far as the studies that you've done and your availability, your work force pool, and what you have to comply with in the Affirmative Action goals and you find that you know -- you can project what the crafts are going to give you; and you have this big open area that you have to comply with, is that how you look at your training or what you have to do to train women to be able to come up to your goals? I mean, is that what you're looking at?

MR. KUHN: Well, there's no point in training unless somebody's going to be getting a job. Now, I'm not sure what you're getting at there. And we really don't have the specifics on that yet so I really can't respond very meaningfully to this area in any detail at this point.

MS. DALE: Okay, maybe I should word my question differently. When you're looking at what you have to develop in your training programs, --

MR. KUHN: Um-hm.

MS. DALE: -- is there a special area in regards to women to fulfil your Affirmative Action goals?

MR. KUHN: We have not gotten down to that level of implementation and so on. We're really working to structure how the program will be set up right now.

MS. DALE: Okay.

MR. KUHN: Okay. One -- I might make one suggestion. As we move forward in our planning and implementation of our Affirmative Action Plan that -- for your organization specifically, we think it would be very helpful to us, and we hope helpful to you, to get information from us. If your Commission could designate somebody as a primary liaison person to interface on a continuing basis with our Affirmative Action staff. We would -- we think that would be a useful step. And we'd be pleased to, you know, enhance the communications.

I'm nearing the end of what I had in the way of intended remarks here. I would like to just say that we have a very firm policy, and it stems right from the very top of our organization, that we will take affirmative action to assure that all persons and firms have the maximum practicable opportunity to participate in this project without regard to race or sex. We have established mechanisms to insure that this occurs. And we believe that any objective assessment of what we have accomplished and what we are doing would indicate that we have an excellent record to date on this.

Finally, I guess there are just two observations I would -- maybe three -- like to make, thoughts that I'd like to leave with you; maybe a little off the track from your letter. But the first is that putting this project together has not been easy. And it has involved a considerable commitment of equity funds thus far by investors who have -- who did so with no guarantee whatsoever that they'd ever get their money back. That's the first point. And that kind of leads to two other things that I'm going to make reference to.

There was testimony before the Alaska Legislature last week; the Alaska Legislature has retained a law firm, Birch, Horton, Bittner, and Monroe. And one of the partners -- and that's been a law firm advising the Legislature since -- on gas pipeline matters since 1978. Joseph Chalmski (ph), one of the partners of that firm, testified last week on Thursday and there were several comments that he made. One of them is that -- well, it had to do with -- and I'm reading from a newspaper article. I do have his statement, but I think it's accurately quoted -- prospective lenders. And he talks about their fears that the State will impose unduly harsh regulation and taxes. Then it's -- another statement was made by him, and I can quote this one,"The accumulative record is clear; and a general consensus asserts that the State probably has much to gain if the gas pipeline is built."

We would certainly welcome the assistance of your Commission to see that the gas pipeline is built, and we'd like to work with you.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you. Barbara.

MS. DALE: I have one more question. You brought up the subject of sexual harrassment, and it was when you were talking about the contractors. Have you developed any -- obviously, you know that it existed on the oil pipeline.

MR. KUHN: Yes.

MS. DALE: And I was wondering if you have developed any way of communicating to the contractors, or what do you have in mind to do to prevent it?

MR. KUHN: I can't offer you any specifics at this time. We have very strict legal liability in this area. And I can only offer you an assurance that we're conscious of the need to take very strong action in this area. And we will not permit that sort of thing to occur.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Going through the letter that we sent earlier. I want to make sure that all of our questions were answered. One of the first ones that we asked was what the current work force projections are for the Alaska segment. Is that answered in the packet?

MR. KUHN: That's contained in one of the tables in my statement.

MR. SCHUHMANN: Okay. And are they broken down pretty much as we asked, okay.

MR. KUHN: By job classification -- I think on table... let's see.

MR. BERKOWITZ: Table 7, I think.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Is there -- do you have any breakdown for the location of jobs at this point? What jobs will be available where in the State?

MR. KUHN: Within the State, you mean? Let me comment on that. The way we're going to construct the project is by use of what we call six spreads. And a spread will cover anywhere -- and it varies, somewhere between 97 miles up to a hundred -- and I think it's 143, something like that; varying lengths. Now Fairbanks happens to be in the spread 4 area. And each spread will have one or more compresser stations and one or more camps in that area.

I would also give you a good example of that sort of breakdown by referring you to a letter in the information packet. And that letter is dated February 25, 1981, addressed to David L. Brennen, presiding officer of the Fairbanks North Star Borough Assembly. And attached to that letter, I think you'll find, incidentally, some additional general information on manpower planning, and projections, and so on; but very specifically information related to the Fairbanks area. And that's on Table 2, if you found the letter to Mr. Brennen.

And we break it down very specifically by Fairbanks headquarters, the double joining and warehousing numbers, construction camps which are located within the spread area, and a total for the section by quarter, 1982 through 1986.

Now, let me add this; we can probably develop, and we are moving to develop similar information for all of the other areas. Things are in motion on that. And I, incidentally, expect that we'll have -- I should have mentioned this earlier as one of my concluding observations, we are moving toward a much more extensive information transfer as our planning is progressing here. A lot of this information is being computerized. And we'll be able to, in the next few months, provide substantially more detailed information than we have thus far. I would take this as an example, this table that I just referred to about the Fairbanks area.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Is there an ability, say, for someone in a different location to work in one of these -- like spread 4 if you really live in a different area. Or is there going to be any kind of job availability by location along these spreads? Are you going to break it up, or is everyone just going to be able to work anywhere?

MR. KUHN: Well, I don't profess to be an expert on how union hiring halls work and dispatch works and so on. I just don't feel real qualified to answer that question in detail. But in general, I would expect that people will have some measure of control over where they work, and...

MS. SCHUHMANN: So it's really going to be -- since most of the crafts jobs are going to be union, the hiring is going to be through the union halls, that's basically--

MR. KUHN: That's correct.

MS. SCHUHMANN: What were the initial figures that you submitted to the Office of the Federal Inspector for your Affirmative Action and minority female business enterprise goals?

MR. KUHN: The initial figures?

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yes. It's my understanding that these have been updated and changed, you know, various versions you've gone through.

MR. KUHN: The December version, oh, corrected a few errors. It provided substantially more in the way of elaboration. If you're talking about the goals for 1980 itself, they were on the same order. There were no substantial changes in the goals per se. If you'll recall, I said we only established goals on an annual, firm goals that we commit ourselves to.

MS. SCHUHMANN: I think you gave us the contracting goals for 1980 and 1981.

MR. KUHN: Yes, that's in my statement. And also -- for both years, that's correct.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Right. It looks as though the female went down, the female percentage went down from 4 to 2 --

MR. KUHN: That's correct, it went down in percentage terms. It's going up in dollar value. The -- again, that's based on -- you know, on objective analysis of those firms in our computer bank and what capability they have for the particular contracts, the type of contracts we'll be letter this year. We'd love to have more female business enterprise firms in that computer bank, really.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Did you give us the goals as far as employment is concerned? I don't recall that you --

MR. KUHN: Yes, that's on -- let's see...

MS. SCHUHMANN: Is that the table that you referred...

MR. KUHN: You'll find that on Table 5. That's the one I read for females and minority goals are on there.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Did you provide us with the goals for 1980 in here as well?

MR. KUHN: I didn't break them down. My recollection is they're substantially the same, am I correct, the percentage numbers?

UNIDENTIFIED VOICE: Within two or three tenths of a percent either way.

MR. KUHN: Within a couple of tenths of percent they're unchanged. You should not expect radical changes in the percentage goals from year to year. Now, when the 1980 census information is available, we have committed ourself to taking a very objective look at that and reassessing our goals, if that's warranted.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Did you meet your 1980 Affirmative Action goals for female employment?

MR. KUHN: I believe we did. Aaron....?

ALASKA LEGISLATURE SPECIAL COMMITTEE / SUBJECT FILE 8672
1381 SCOMM 51: BLUE RIBBON COMN. ON STATE PERSONNEL ACT 1978-1983

UNIDENTIFIED VOICE: Yes, we did; in all areas.

MR. KUHN: In all areas.

MS. SCHUHMANN: At least at this point in time, it's my understanding that you don't plan to provide any training specifically directed at qualifying women for pipeline jobs, the way that you plan to qualify natives, the native training?

MR. KUHN: Our training -- the -- our plans, very honestly, haven't jelled yet in this area. And it's not going to be a unilateral decision on the native training thing anyhow. That has to be an agreement with two government agencies. But our basic thinking at this time is that any efforts along these lines would be nondiscriminatory among females, Alaskan natives, other minorities.

MS. SCHUHMANN: If I understood your statement, one thing that you mentioned was that these Affirmative Action goals for the most part are going to be carried out by your contractors rather than you; your employment through you is going to be fairly minimal in comparison to your -- the numbers --

MR. KUHN: That's correct.

MS. SCHUHMANN: -- through your contractors. So I guess I'm a little bit confused about the numbers or the goals that you're setting. It seems to me that the higher -- it's no skin off your nose necessarily if you make them a little higher than what you have because it's really your contractors that are going to have to carry them out. The majority of the employment is going to be through your contractors; not through you.

MR. KUHN: Well, no, we commit, in the first instance, to the Project Affirmative Action Plan. And we approach the goal setting very objectively and documented it and in accordance with the regulations. The -- we didn't just arbitrarily, you know, change numbers without reason. And sure, there are judgements that came in based on, you know, experienced people knowledgeable about the various job groups and the different craft areas, all of that sort of thing. But the goals are, in all cases -- in all cases -- the goals that we have set are in excess of the number that you would get strictly looking at the available, qualified workers in a given category.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yeah, I guess that's part of the problem from the Commission's standpoint is that we're not satisfied with some of the studies that have been undertaken to show what the available female work force is. And that's why we were questioning Commissioner Lundell earlier. We would like to see that kind of study undertaken. Apparently, the State Department of Labor doesn't intend to undertake it. We've asked for money to do it ourselves, and have not been funded to do it. It probably would be quite expensive. But how can you really gauge a goal unless you really have that information, unless you really know the available work force; the women that are interested that are qualified, that may never have worked before and would not show up on the unemployment lists or, you know, the union lists right now. This is a problem that the Commission has, anyway, with the goals. We question the data base upon which they, you know, were formed. And we also question, looking at the last oil pipeline here, why the figures aren't higher anyway; because apparently on the last pipeline the percentages were much higher than what your goal is for 1981, in any case.

MR. KUHN: Well, I'd -- that -- I would take issue with that. I went through those numbers, the numbers that you have in the record, on the peak -- the very peak in the Alyeska employment, the breakdown, for example, of crafts, 1.1 percent. The categories may not be exactly comparable. But we have -- some of our numbers are way up there; officials and manager, 17.8 percent; professionals, 20.5 percent. These are not inconsiderable numbers. A lot of these crafts, as I understand it, do have experience requirements. There's certain...

MS. CALLAHAN: Does your table of page 5 include crafts, operatives, and laborers; or is it simply crafts?

MR. KUHN: Crafts would include the -- all of the trades; the building trades, the pipeline unions...

MS. CALLAHAN: In the labor statistics, crafts is 1.1 percent, but there are others such operatives at 6.9, --

MR. KUHN: That's correct.

MS. CALLAHAN: -- and laborers at 9.7. If the categories aren't exactly the same, then those may all be included in your figures in crafts.

MR. KUHN: Um-hm, but their bottom line was -- I don't -- those are percentages, and you'd have to go by the -- look at the absolute numbers and multiple it to see what you really were getting as an overall total. There may be -- some of those categories may have been small.

MS. SCHUHMANN: I wonder, would you be able to come back at 1:30 to finish up the -- for some more questions?

MR. KUHN: I'd be glad to.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Okay.

MR. KUHN: Now, I, like several others, am on that 3:55 plane, so...

MS. SCHUHMANN: Um-hm.

MR. KUHN: But I'd be pleased to.

MS. SCHUHMANN: What is the feeling of the Commission, do you want to break for a quick lunch and try to get back here at 12:30 (sic). Since everybody's going to have to leave fairly shortly after we come back, maybe we could make the questioning as short as possible so nobody misses a plane or anything. We do have at least one other -- two other speakers that we didn't get to from the morning. Okay, Mr. Behlke, I understand, came in. Is Mr. Behlke -- oh, would you be able to come back at 1:30? (No audible response.) And the Human Rights Commission people, would you be able to come back at 1:30? (No audible response). Thank you. We'll try to start just as quickly as we can at 1:30, then. Thank you.

OFF THE RECORD

ON THE RECORD

MS. SCHUHMANN: I'd like to call the meeting back to order. And I wonder if we could ask the 3 people that spoke already this morning, all 3 of you maybe, to come up to the table. And then that way get the remaining questions that have not yet been answered. Mr. Alexander, could you also join the front table, and we could maybe...

MR. ALEXANDER: Sure. Do you want (indiscernible).

MS. HURLEY: And pass -- if you wouldn't mind passing the mike back and forth so that the recorder can pick it up.

MS. SCHUHMANN: One of the questions that I wanted to follow up with you, Mr. Kuhn, was on what reporting requirements you're going to have for your contractors. Will you ask them to keep their statistics by job description instead of, you know, an overall -- like female hire, that could be clerical, craft, or whatever?

MR. KUHN: The answer is yes. We have in our Affirmative Action Plan, in one of the appendices, the original December submission, set forth the forms that each contractor will be obliged to send into us, I think it's monthly. It may be more frequent than that, I'm not certain offhand. And it is a -- it's an extensive breakdown.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Will it have -- will it be broken down even by the hours worked so that if someone's called out, but only works, say, 1 hour of the day --

MR. KUHN: We do collect information by hours, that is correct.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Okay. Yes, Herb?

MR. BERKOWITZ: Mr. Alexander, I take it your title is the Director of the Office of Equal Employment within the Office of the Federal Inspector?

MR. ALEXANDER: You take it correctly.

MR. BERKOWITZ: So that means it's your responsiblity to see to it that Mr. Kuhn's company lives up to its responsibilities under the federal permit?

MR. ALEXANDER: Yes.

MR. BERKOWITZ: And that includes their equal employment opportunity responsibilities?

MR. ALEXANDER: Let me explain. I'm responsible for seeing that Mr. Kuhn lives up to -- you know, permit or no, lives up to his Affirmative Action responsibilities, period.

MR. BERKOWITZ: Now, Mr. Kuhn has indicated, if I understood his testimony correctly, that during the time of peak pipeline construction when, if I understand the statistics correctly, there will be over a 3 year period a minimum of 7,000 positions filled and as many as 12,000 positions filled; that during that 3 year interim Northwest is going to be dedicating 7 of its own employees to see to it that Northwest, as the federal government's permitee, is living up to its responsibilities in the area of equal employment opportunity; and that includes both women and minorities. So that's 7 to cover both women and minorities. Do you consider that to be an adequate number, Mr. Alexander?

MR. ALEXANDER: I don't think I'd prefer to answer that question at this time because we don't know what's adequate until they do get to that peak. If it isn't adequate, then we certainly will so advise Mr. Kuhn, and I'll certainly have to beef my own staff up. I just don't think that that's a fair question at this point.

MR. BERKOWITZ: Well, Mr. Alexander, if -- a simple division. If you have 7 employees monitoring both with respect to women and minorities 7,000 positions, which is the low number over the 3 year period. That's 1 employee per 1,000 positions. Now is -- can you conceive of a basis under which that would be considered an adequate ratio?

MR. ALEXANDER: I don't -- again, I can't answer that question at this time. If it isn't adequate, then we'll have to make adjustments. What --

MR. BERKOWITZ: Is there something you don't know, Mr. Alexander, that if you knew it --

MR. ALEXANDER: No, I'm not going to say that I don't know it. Let me explain it to you further. There will be other people involved in monitoring and enforcement, which will raise that number considerably. We have, at present, enforcement regulations that have been caught in the President's hold on regulations that include a memorandum of understanding between our office, the State Human Right's Commission, the EEOC, and in addition to the monitoring that will be done by the company's themselves. So at this time I can't give you any information because it's caught in that freeze. I can't give you any further information. I don't know how many people that EEOC, for instance, is going to dedicate to monitoring. I don't know how many Neil Thomas will have for monitoring. So I really can't say at this time. I would if I could.

MR. BERKOWITZ: I'm still not sure I understand the thrust of your -- what you're saying is, Mr. Alexander, that if a sufficient number of federal and state bureaucrats are employed to deal with this problem, then that will make the seven private sector employees of Mr. Kuhn's company a sufficient number?

MR. ALEXANDER: No, what you're overlooking is that the federal and state bureaucrats, as you refer to them, have also a certain responsibility for enforcement. In fact, the prime responsibility lies in my office. So, you know, I will be looking over Mr. Kuhn's shoulder, so to speak.

MR. BERKOWITZ: Well, Mr. Alexander, it's the project of Mr. Kuhn's company. They have conceived it; they presumeably will engineer it; they will contract for it; and they will see to it that it is constructed. No one will have better or more intimate knowledge of what this project is going to consist of than Northwest Alaskan. Now, I still can't understand why it would not be a major concern of your Department to see to it that Northwest Alaskan itself lives up to its responsibilities by hiring sufficient personnel to monitor that area of endeavor.

MR. ALEXANDER: You are -- you're chopping the whole problem of enforcement up into segments. It will be my responsibility to see that he hires a sufficient number, as you say. Right now I'm not prepared to give you what will be a sufficient number. I will certainly be talking with Mr. Kuhn or anyone else with the company who has responsibility in that area if I see that they don't have a number of people in the field to see that these responsibilities are carried. But, you know, it's not a two part problem, just like the training is not a two part problem where you're doing your thing over here and I'm doing mine there.

MR. BERKOWITZ: It strikes me, Mr. Alexander, if you'll forgive me for saying this that you're being remarkably unassertive in asking Northwest Alaskan to live up to the terms of their permit.

MR. ALEXANDER: You don't -- you're not aware of what we've asked them at this point. That's what I'm trying to say, that negotiations on certain things here are still going on. So you can't say that we haven't asked or demanded or requested. I'm just not at liberty right now to go into the whole thing in detail with you.

MR. BERKOWITZ: And you have no theories, no philosophy, no thinking --

MR. ALEXANDER: I don't want to theorize --

MR. BERKOWITZ: -- on whether or not seven is a sufficient number of people to honor this contract?

MR. ALEXANDER: No, I don't --

MR. LUNDELL: Madame Chairman, I think that Mr. Alexander is being pursued beyond what would be the norm.

And I'd like to ask Mr. Berkowitz a question as a person that's not involved in the enforcement or the administration of it. What does he mean by monitoring? Does he mean 1 person watching 10; or does he mean a review of figures; or does he mean a plan that encompasses outreach and training, and encompasses working with the unions to see that women and minorities do come through those channels? Those are far more important than how many people are monitoring on a project line. And I guess the question -- the answer to his question is a question, what is monitoring to you, Mr. Berkowitz?

MR. BERKOWITZ: Well, as best I can respond, and once again, Mr. Kuhn knows Mr. Kuhn's project better than I do, so to that extent I deal from ignorance. It sounds like there's going to be a substantial volume of paper produced as part of this equal opportunity employment effort. It's going to be involved in the contracting process. After the contracting process apparently there's going to be some form of fairly frequent reporting. And this reporting is ultimately going to involve these seven to twelve thousand positions over this period of time. I have difficulty of conceiving of how these 7 people are ever going to be able to get out from under that mountain of paperwork to get out into the real world and deal with the questions of whether real people are getting real jobs rather than whether numbers on pieces of paper are the numbers that people want to see.

MR. ALEXANDER: I see where you're coming from, really. It's just that I'm saying I can't give you the solution to the entire problem at this point because I feel that enforcement and monitoring are very important aspects of the whole thing. If you don't have that, then we're just talking about an exercise. I just am not able at this time to tell you exactly whether 7 is sufficient, or 47, or whatever. You know, I don't -- I can't give you a number, I could just -- I'd only be speculating. We got into a terrible problem with speculation on the other 2 legs, and I'd like not to do that.

MR. BERKOWITZ: Let me ask you this question, Mr. Alexander. Do you believe that Northwest Alaskan in and of itself, putting aside its contractors, and putting aside your office, has an independent responsibility and a legal and more obligation to see to it that a program for appropriate female hire is carried out?

MR. ALEXANDER: Certainly, and they will be -- they have that in their draft Affirmative Action Plan.

MR. BERKOWITZ: Well, it says that.

MR. ALEXANDER: Yeah.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Mr. Kuhn, you had --

MR. ALEXANDER: They're required to do that.

MR. KUHN: Miss Schuhmann, I just want the record to be clear. I made a prior statement that in addition to the 7 Northwest Alaskan employees there will be 42 full time employees under their -- under the direction supervision of those 7 engaged exclusively in affirmative action matters. In addition, our contracts require certain additional people to be provided working exclusively with them on equal opportunity matters. There is a comprehensive program. Each of the execution contractors, moreover, must prepare his own affirmative action plan. And he is going to be held liable for his enforcement of that -- his performance of that.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Will the affirmative action goals that you eventually reach agreement upon, will they apply both to the -- what you have been calling pre-construction as well as the construction?

MR. KUHN: There's really no -- we make no distinction there. I mean, it flows 1981 through '86, the work -- in the hiring area. It changes somewhat as you use up certain minorities, so to speak, and there are few available from a ... But the percentages do not radically change. Insofar as the contracting is concerned, all we have at this point is projections and obviously you're going to have an awful lot more as you move toward the peak.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Does Northwest plan, at this point, to have any support services, for instance, in your training of natives which is, I understand, required. Do you anticipate any, say, child care services. It's going to be difficult for people to leave the village if they're the only person that's in charge of the family to come into town for training as well as to go to work. Do you have any anticipation or any plans for any kind of support services?

MR. KUHN: We haven't really addressed that level of detail yet.

MS. SCHUHMANN: What influence will you have over the unions? Will you be directly contracting with the unions or will your contractors?

MR. KUHN: There -- we anticipate an agreement with the unions, directly with the unions. And I want to emphasize that'll be the local unions. We'll be heavily involved in that at some point.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Do you have any plans to try to make sure that the unions have affirmative action plans?

MR. KUHN: Well, it's not our task to, you know, insure that they have an affirmative action plan per se. But our -- what we would hope to come out of the -- and we would expect that the government will be involved in these negotiations, would be an understanding that the unions will provide minorities in the requisite number and females in the requisite number to meet the affirmative action goals set forth in our plan.

MR. LUNDELL: Excuse me Madame Chairman, there's one thing missing in the middle of that answer and to your question itself. There is no possible legal way that a private company can have any sway over that union dispatch thing except in accordance with rules that are established by the federal government, because it's strictly a National Relations Board to Equal Employment Opportunity Commission or Office of Federal Contracts Compliance program type relationship. The unions have reporting requirements as well to those federal agencies. As long as they dispatch in accordance with an agreement and follow the terms of an agreement, a private company doesn't have anything it can do to that union. And that should be understood, I think, as part of that answer.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Barbara.

MS. DALE: Did I understand you to say, Mr. Kuhn, that you will expect the unions to come up to bring your requirements -- to bring up the requirements set forth by your Affirmative Action Plan. Are you depending on the unions to fill up your quota for women on your Affirmative Action --

MR. KUHN: In the craft area, there is no alternative.

MS. DALE: Okay. Just exclusively in the craft area, the 5 percent that you have listed on your...?

MR. KUHN: Well, the craft area is the unionized employment areas.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yes, Herb.

MR. KUHN: Predominately.

MR. BERKOWITZ: Mr. Kuhn, do you anticipate that the project labor agreement will deal with the question of female affirmative action?

MR. KUHN: It will deal with the question of dispatch of females as much as it does dispatch of minorities to meet the goals in the plan. I would have to answer that yes.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Are there any other questions the Commissioners have?

MR. BERKOWITZ: I'd just like to make one comment, and I think my concern has been pretty obvious from the outset. I think we would like to know where the buck stops on this issue. And it's sometimes a little bit hard to pin down with lots of people delegating responsibility to others or looking to others to carry out the responsibility. I think that we would like to see some more certainty in that regard so that we know who to turn to as who's responsible rather than to have it turn out to be an Alfonse Gastone (ph) routine where everyone points the finger at someone else and says that that person is the one that laid down on the job. We don't -- we want the job done, not undone.

MR. ALEXANDER: Madame Chairman.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yes.

MR. ALEXANDER: If I might respond to that in part. I will see that you get a copy of the regulations that -- immediately, that govern what we're supposed to be doing. It should fairly clearly outline who will be doing what, who has this responsibility for what. You asked the question earlier about goals. There is a provision in the regulations that the sponsor may say that I will set a 25 percent hiring goal, period. If that sponsor is hiring 6 contractors, he may assign a portion of that goal to be reached by that contractors. If it appears in the contract, it's his responsibility. And, you know, the responsibilities are spread around, and I could go on and on with them. Just like enforcement falls -- it starts with my office and flows through the system. I will give you a copy of the regulations. Some of the answers are vague at this point. I will tell you that I would be willing to come back to a meeting of the Commission when the plan is completed and approved and lay it out for you and perhaps clear up some of the areas that you have questions about.

MR. BERKOWITZ: I, for one, will be more than happy to follow up on this.

MR. ALEXANDER: I would also immediately, if not sooner, provide you what information my office can as to what we're doing without violating any confidences at this point of what we expect to be doing, what we have done, and so forth so you'll know a little bit about what operation is; where some of our responsibilities lie; who we will be looking to to provide this type support. For instance, I could speculate that we will be hiring "X" number of contractors to assist in the monitoring effort. That's been a plan, but it hasn't been finalized at this point. But I will send you the information I can and I have at this time. It may clear up some of the areas where the Commission has questions.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you. That would be very helpful

MS. DALE: I just wanted to -- my concern lies in this -- and I don't feel totally comfortable with the information I have, the area of training, of -- you know, we have our figures of women that are in -- already trained and available. If -- there's an increasing number of women who are becoming heads of households. I think we could take the people who are already trained and put them to work. But I think what I'm interested in doing is increasing the training opportunities so that more women will be, -- you know, will be trained and be able to get something out of this.

MR. ALEXANDER: I understand your concern, but I can't say that the training issue has not been fully addressed, either. The reason for -- you know, so many of these things are not finalized at all, and some haven't even begun for one reason or another. In the middle of all this, we have a freeze on hiring, which limits my staff; a freeze on regulations, which holds my enforcement regulations that were ready to come out. You know, these are the type things that we have to face. So a number of the things have not been set in concrete yet and allowed to flower. They will be -- again, I'll -- we can start the information flow to keep you posted on where we are and what we're doing.

MS. DALE: Good.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Mr. Lundell, in the -- is the-- are the state apprenticeship programs worked out so that they track the union apprenticeship programs? In other words, if you go through the Seward Skill Center, is that going to help you get a union position, you know, get union hire...?

MR. LUNDELL: Pursuant to existing statutes, there is no state apprenticeship program. The apprenticeship programs that are run by the labor and management trusts that operate them jointly, hire a director of the school or program, exist under the Federal Department of Labor Apprenticeship and Training plans. Some states have -- where they have huge work forces have also adopted state apprenticeship plans; that is, where there is a formal program. And the actual -- the term apprenticeship is a rather formal one. It means a certain thing. An indentured apprentice enters into the program under certain ground rules, stays in for a certain period of time at certain wages, percents of wages per hour of a journeyman level and moves through the program that way. And they're under very strict rules as to how they are operated. And these, again, are the Federal Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training standards. The state doesn't happen to have any. When you make reference to the Seward Skill Center, in a sense that's like your Hutchinson Career Development Center here except it's a residential one; and it has a little more flexibility; was set up on that basis. I think there was recently set up on the northwest part of the state, Kotzebue, a small training center to deal with certain things there that is residential, I believe. Those are the only ones that are residential. Others are in the community college system or private schools, such as the Anchorage Business College, you know, things like that. In the area of the crafts they are run under the Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training programs. And a group can apply to them and then they can follow the same rules. But that's -- so it's -- there isn't a direct answer; the state apprenticeship doesn't link because there isn't one.

MS. SCHUHMANN: The training that you might receive, though, say at Hutchinson or at the Seward Skill Center would not necessarily qualify you for ...?

MR. LUNDELL: It won't qualify you for journeyman status, generally speaking. Those schools are one of the best means of insuring success once you enter an indentured apprenticeship program. They also suffice for the creation of what someone might make a living, not as an apprentice but working for a company that is not affiliated with organized labor by agreement. They might produce some people that can build some houses and can do some work and things, but are not fully trained as is a full fledged apprentice, that's the basic difference that's involved there.

MS. CALLAHAN: This is a question for any or all of you. Do you know if it's anticipated at all that there might exist some kind of a clearing house of information for women and minorities to help in matching up interested people with available training programs with available jobs. It's a maze of information with the involvement of so many different agencies and companies. I just was wondering if that had ever been discussed in any of your negotiations of some kind of a possibility.

MR. ALEXANDER: Not specifically. However, in the area of training there has been talk of that type situation, how to disseminate information and so forth. So maybe in our deliberations that could be tied in somehow, or could be an adjunct somehow. It has not been addressed, but I don't see that there'd be any problem with it.

MR. LUNDELL: If you're talking outside of the jobs that we dispatched by organized labor, I think you could say that the cooperative effort, that it does exist now; not with respect to this pipeline project, but in general between the CETA program and the Job Service program does provide a great deal of what you're asking. And, in fact, we have had discussions among the sponsoring company, the Federal Inspector, and the State Pipeline Co-ordinator's Office about doing some type of co-ordinative activity like this. And it's very likely that something like that will occur. There's a question of where, what's it cost, how does it tie in, and what real benefit can it give other than making someone feel good by being on a list. If it will actually achieve putting them in a job somehow, then we'll proceed. If it isn't, then there's no real benefit to be gained from it.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Um-hm. Any further questions or comments; any further from your folks?

MR. KUHN: I have one, Miss Schuhmann. I gave you one incorrect number this morning and I want to correct it for the record. I said that our total Alaskan employment was 530, and I quoted certain percentages. All of the percentage numbers that I quoted were exactly right, and they're as reflected on the written statement. The actual correct total for our employment in Alaska is 641, which is also reflected on the sheet you had. I just picked the wrong column off one of the tables.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you. On behalf of the Commission I'd like to thank all 3 of you for your testimony and your graciousness under fire. We -- I want to assure you, on behalf of the Commission, that we do want to work together to try to see that women do have a fair opportunity on the -- to get jobs on this project as well as other construction projects. But I think you do have to understand our concern and what we consider to be rather low affirmative action goals; declining percentages for the female business contracting; and the lack of training in any -- in your stipulations or -- you know, I'm sure a lot of this was done under federal law. And there's not a whole lot that any of you can do about it now except that we would, in the best of all worlds, like to have seen it be included.

MR. LUNDELL: We hope you're all pleasantly surprised when the project is going on.

MS. DALE: So do we.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Katie.

MS. HURLEY: I just wanted to say is it possible that before final decisions are made that the Commission, you know, could be consulted and, you know, asked whether this meets the kind of goals that the Commission has before finding out afterwards that the goal has been set and it's low. Is that unrealistic to ask that kind of chance for input?

MR. ALEXANDER: I'll take that under serious consideration remembering that the goals are very likely to be -- or let me not say very likely because that implies certainty, but the goals could possibly be adjusted as a result of the census information later on. What I want, and I'll reiterate, are reasonable obtainable goals. I want -- in the best of all worlds, I'd like to see them exceeded. I'm not giving -- attempting to give the sponsors that charge, but I certainly would like to see them exceeded; and I think we all would. But I'll reiterate that I certainly will be in touch with you. I certainly will be talking to you. I'll be giving you the information that I can. I don't want it to be a one-way street. If there's something that you want to get, some information you need, Mr. Roy Rule (Ph) is here in town. If you can't reach him, then you can reach me in Washington. And we'll certainly see that it's provided. I'm going to leave this copy of the regulations now. I do realize that later on we probably will come under fire for one reason or another, just because somebody's mad or whatever. There may be disagreements and so forth, but the one thing that I'd like not to get any fire for is these; they're in place and there's nothing I can do about them. You know, I would like to have seen some other things included or maybe excluded or amended or whatever, but --

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you.

MR. ALEXANDER: -- we can't do that now. So the best we can do is try to do the best job under the regulations we have. And, you know, the next time around we'll do even better. We don't want to make the mistakes that were made on the oil line. But if there were good things that happened, we want to build on those good things.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you very much.

MR. LUNDELL: Thank you. Miss Schuhmann?

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yes.

MR. LUNDELL: I wanted to mention one thing. And since the subject of apprenticeship and things like that came up, I did ask one of the people from our Department to come down here today; and she would be available if you needed -- if you wanted some explanation of that or if people wanted a 1 on 1 discussion of what is apprenticeship, how do you go into it, how does it work. I'm speaking of Adele Bagin (ph) who is an inspector with our Division of Wage and Hour and Mechanical Inspection. She was an apprentice plumber, is a journeyman plumber, and is a full fledged inspecting plumber at this time. And if she could be of help to you in describing these things, she has offered to do so. I asked her if she would mind coming down, and she said she'd be happy to come down and see you.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you. What is her name again? Adele?

MR. LUNDELL: Adele Bagin.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you. Mr. Behlke, I know that you've been waiting. I saw Mr. Lawson earlier this week downtown, and I think he was being teased while he was on vacation that your office had told -- had planned on him coming unbeknownst to him. He found it --

MR. BEHLKE: Well, really we had, yeah. You've heard I think most of what's important for you to hear about female women hire on the pipeline. The State is pretty largely pre-empted by the federal government in relation to EEO and MBE on this pipeline and by federal law. It doesn't mean we intend to ignore it, but we feel that the prime responsiblity is with John Alexander's group and their promulgating regulations and so on for that.

MS. SCHUHMANN: We don't have a public announcement system, so if you could speak up. That's just for the transcript, that microphone.

MR. BEHLKE: Okay, yeah. I think that -- I wasn't here this morning for very long, but I think that it's important for everyone who is hanging his or her hat on the pipeline to know what the status of the pipeline is because I think there's a good deal of speculation; perhaps some misinformation. I think people are telling each other this and that. And after they've told each other this for several go-arounds they begin to believe it.

At present, the pipeline is under very, very heavy design. And it's in a very heavy design and planning stage. The Northwest Pipeline Company has, as Mr. Kuhn told you, several hundred people working in Alaska, many of them in the field.

Last week I drove down from Prudhoe with my deputy and we stopped in each of the 4 fly camps that Northwest has between Prudhoe and here. And those are 78 person camps, and one of them was not running full, but the others were pretty full. So they're in the field doing a lot of bore hole work, doing stream studies, stream flow studies; doing pipeline alignment studies and so on. But this is only the design phase. And so far there's only money in hand for design. There isn't money in hand for construction. I think it's extremely important that everyone recognize this. This is different from Alyeska where the sponsors could write out the checks, and they were only too willing to write out the checks; and it didn't appear that the overruns worried them at all.

Northwest Pipeline Company is working valiantly and has been working for a number of years now attempting to line up the total financing package for the pipeline. This is rather complicated because first, a conditioning plant is required at Prudhoe Bay to condition the gas before it can go into the pipeline. That's a three or four billion dollar item. Then financing has to come together for roughly eight billion dollars worth of pipeline. That's eight billion up front.

We don't know what it ultimately will go. That's in 1980 dollars.

At present that financing is not in place. So Northwest isn't going ahead right now, today, with the project. They haven't ordered pipe; they have not yet put into operation the Alyeska construction camps and so on. And I would caution you that you not get your aspirations too high on an immediate basis. I'm quite certain the pipeline will probably be constructed. But I'm not absolutely certain that darn thing's going to begin next summer. It's possible that it could slip a year. It depends upon financing. And if that financing isn't in place probably by summer it will, indeed, slip a year. And you should be aware of that. Don't run out and quit your jobs and go out and attempt to get a pipeline job, because I think by the end of summer if there isn't financing in place, the pipeline jobs could, indeed, dry up very considerably because the field work will be pretty much done on the design basis.

With regard to camps, I -- and field activities, I have our people give me verbal impressions of what they see in the field in regard to EEO and MBE. And I have the perceptions that, and my own observations are that, Northwest is doing fairly well in regard to female hire, native hire, and so on. I haven't kept track of it, but I know in all the camps that I visited and stayed in there were 3 or 4 women out of approximately 78 people who showed up at that camp that night.

The federal government and the state government have females on our field crews. So they're out there monkeying around in the snow and the mud and so on just the same as the males are.

I've had something come through to me. I'm a Fairbanks resident, and I've had something come through to me which I want to pass on to you that I think is extremely important. I have long wondered why on a project of any consequence -- as the engineer -- I'm an engineer, so I wondered why the engineering hasn't been done in Alaska. We have lots of experienced engineers, how come. And I've been very -- and since becoming involved in this project, though, I've been very impressed and I suppose depressed to an extent, but anyhow, impressed by the fact that large numbers of people have to be mobilized very quickly for specific jobs on design of a project this size. And I'll give you an example. The conditioning plant; there was no design in operation last summer. The design began this last fall. And it was necessary for Northwest who represents the design and engineering board to get to a large company which could mobilize 400, let's say, 400 engineers to go to work on this job within a week; get the job finished; and then phase off of that job after perhaps 6 months work. Well, there's no place in Alaska where you find any organization like that. There's just no way. So you have to go out to America to have this happen.

Now, the unions are very similar to this, I think. We would like to have certain quotas met in regard to minorities and regard to females and so on through union hirings. But I think we have to remember that Northwest has to hire through unions. There is virtually no way -- that is Northwest contractors; Northwest probably wouldn't do very much of this. But there's virtually no way that Northwest can field a project of this magnitude unless it's a union project; there's just no way. And the unions, therefore, are similar to these large design firms. They have a large body of people that they can throw at the job, and they can get mobilized in a hurry. That's a big plus for a union, really, or for a group of unions.

Now, Northwest doesn't run those unions, as you've heard; Northwest doesn't run those unions. In the project labor agreement, they can, indeed, get in and try to get as much as they can out of those unions. But that's a negotiating process also. One of the things that has concerned me since I first came into this position is 798. I remember the stories of 798 during the last pipeline. They came in from somewhere out in America and they just really tore up the State as far as I was concerned and as far as many people were. And they came in with white people from the south, principally. There weren't blacks, there weren't natives, there were very few women as I understand it, that had anything to do with 798. And I've asked the question since I came onto my job, what about 798. Is 798 going to have 15 percent natives, and so many percent blacks and so on. And I really haven't gotten an answer. I've raised hell about this, I think, in various federal meetings. And it's easy for me to do that because I'm not responsible for EEO and MBE, but I certainly can ask the questions. And I don't really know, is John still here?

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yes, he is.

MR. BEHLKE: I guess I could toss the question back to you, John. What do you think about 798, is it going to get black or...?

MR. ALEXANDER: Not much. They certainly will have to be dealt with. I can't tell you how, at this point because the labor issue (inaudible) I can't give you a master plan.

MR. BEHLKE: Well, you begin to see the point here, I think. Politicians don't want to deal with labor unions if they can help it because labor unions are large; and they're, of course, a political entity. That's the working man. And yet Northwest has to deal with those labor unions. And Northwest doesn't really have all that much control over labor unions. It's easy to say that the federal government has control over Northwest; and Northwest is spending the money so it has control over labor unions and can call the shots. But I think Northwest is going to have a -- it's my perception they probably will have a tough time with that. And I think we have to recognize that and realize that maybe it's not all Northwest's fault that this happens.

Mr. Kuhn in relation to that mentioned that there would be 7 Northwest people and 42 or 44 project management people who would be dealing with EEO-MBE. I think it is fair to say that it's 7 plus 42 or whatever, rather than just 7 because the project management and Northwest have to work very closely together. And that's the way it's been working on the pipeline so far as far as the quality assurance and quality control is concerned. We have difficulty who's Northwest and who's the project management, Fluor, because they work together very well and we don't see -- I'm sure Northwest sees some differences but we don't see a lot of differences in this. So I think they have a team there that -- you may not agree it's large enough, but anyhow I think that's really what it consists of is 7 plus rather than just 7.

The State is in a bit of a strange position on the pipeline in that it is a project in which the federal government rattles into very heavily. Northwest has to cross State lands, it has to cross native lands, some private lands, and a lot of federal lands with its pipeline. Northwest does have a federal right-of-way grant from the Department of Interior for the pipeline. It doesn't have permits yet for any other sites, such as material sites and so on. But for the pipeline and compresser stations it has a permit on federal lands. It has not approached the State yet for a right-of-way lease from the State of Alaska for the pipeline itself. It has approached the State for a land lease for the conditioning plant at Prudhoe Bay. It's presently the State's position that that is a pipeline system, and that the two probably should go together. But we don't know whether that will be the ultimate outcome or not of that.

Northwest has, I think to an extent, ignored the State in certain matters and really paid a lot more attention to the federal government. And we've sort of felt that in many things we're perhaps being strung along a little while. And then when the right time comes and Northwest needs something very quickly, it will be the State's responsibility to give it to them quickly; otherwise, the State will be responsible for holding up the project. Now, I don't think that has much credibility in Alaska, because we've all waited for a long time and not much has happened on the actual construction of the pipeline. But we still have not been approached for our right-of-way lease yet for on State lands and the federal government was approached last summer.

The State has prepared a set of socio-economic -- draft socio-economic stipulations to attach to the right-of-way lease. These have not been negotiated with Northwest yet. Some of the salient features, though, of those draft stipulations are indeed some precipitation -- precipitation, I'm caught in my own misnomer. Some participation by various interested public groups and by various interested and involved State and federal agencies into Northwest's socio-ecio plans for its activities.

One of the things that we have put into those stips is that Northwest would fund impact information centers at various locations along the pipeline. These have not been negotiated yet. I'm sure Northwest will probably not want to be involved in those impact center anymore than it needs to be. But we have felt that that is a very important aspect of socio-economics for the pipeline; that impact centers be in place in Barrow, in Tok, Fairbanks, and various other places along the highway route in order that information can flow as quickly as possible to the impacted people; and information can flow back to us and to Northwest as quickly as possible from impacted people. This is something that we feel is extremely important and we'll hang in a long time on. I think I've come to the end of the line on -- yes.

MS. JONES: One of the -- I missed a few minutes, and this may have been discussed, but one of the problems that you've talked about is that the recruit -- the goals for female hire are based on what might be available and that Northwest has to contract with the unions. Is it within the State's prerogative to establish legislation that could eliminate some of the union requirements that discriminate against women? For example, age requirements so that women re-entering the labor market are ineligible for apprentice -- John Alexander's shaking his head.

MR. BEHLKE: Which way is he shaking it, yes or no? He probably knows the answer to that --

MR. ALEXANDER: (Inaudible) because I think Glen Lundell mentioned earlier that unions are under federal jurisdiction, so the State wouldn't have that prerogative.

MR. THOMAS: I'd appreciate me answering the question.

UNIDENTIFIED VOICE: Do you want to answer it? Neil would like to --

MR. THOMAS: Well, I'll wait until I get up there.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Well, why don't you answer it now. This is Neil Thomas with the State Human Rights Commission.

MR. THOMAS: Well, this issue has come up in the Legislature already.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Could you come up to a microphone so that we're sure to catch this.

MR. THOMAS: This issue of women in the apprenticeship programs came up in the Alaska Legislature just a couple of years ago, and it came up in this context. Women and minority group people typically may be trying to get into an apprenticeship program at an older age. You know, they're coming into the job market typically at an older age and running up against an age barrier where a union's apprenticeship committe, by its own rules, will not admit anybody into an apprenticeship program who's over a given age; and that tends to be a pretty young age, 27, 28, 29. And so allegations were brought before the State Human Rights Commission to the effect that this constitutes sex discrimination. It's a kind of an effect analysis. The effect of that rule is more disadvantageous to women than to men. It's the idea of the effect of different policies being discriminatory is something that's been inshrined in equal employment law for basically the last 8 years.

As those cases were being considered administratively before the Human Rights Commission, even before findings had been entered or cases had reached the hearing stage, a bill was introduced in the Alaska Legislature to exempt union apprenticeship programs from the Alaska Human Rights Law. The Alaska Human Rights Law prevents age discrimination as well, so of course, inherent in this case in addition to the effect argument that could be made about sex discrimination was that it was on its face age discrimination. So the bill created an exemption to the general principal of age discrimination specifically for union apprenticeship programs. And it's important to remember how narrow that is. That is to say, it did not create an exemption for any other type of employment in any other context by any other type of employer from the general provisions against age discrimination. That bill passed overwhelmingly.

About a year later, the issue came up again. And one of the people who had the most to say about it was a former member of the State Human Rights Commission who was then representative Lisa Rudd. And when that bill was pending before the House -- it may have been in the same year now that I think about it, but I do remember Representative Rudd speaking very forcefully on the House floor against a bill of that type, and I think garnered about 14 or 15 supporting votes in the House. It wasn't enough to keep the bill from passing. Since that time there have been various requests. I remember one Senator Orsinni (ph) writing us a couple of years ago asking why that law was on the books. Now, the argument that gets made in support of allowing this kind of legislation or this kind of practice is that it all falls within the federal jurisdiction and the State of Alaska can't say a thing about it. That issue has been coming up at the federal arena. And when you really get down to the bottom of it, what you find is an administrative rule in the Federal Labor Department -- that's really not supported by any federal statute at all; we can haul those out for you -- which says that it's okay for unions to have rules of this type.

Well, since that time, jurisdiction over age discrimination cases was transferred by the Carter administration to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. And they now handle all age discrimination complaints. And I've been seeing some material recently where the EEOC is raising serious questions about why this rule exists, recognizing that there's no federal statute or anything that explains to it. And it's one of those sort of motherhood issues where everybody sort of says it's all federal and they control it; and the State can't do anything about it; and it's all carved in stone; and unions only answer to the Federal Labor Department. It sounds good but it isn't true. It's one of those arguments that gets raised before us from time to time. And again, once you get down to it, the courts don't even listen to it. It was argued a couple of years ago that the Alaska Human Rights Law doesn't apply to labor unions because the National Labor Relations Act does that. Well, the Supreme Court of the United States wouldn't even listen to it. And the Lonzelle (ph) case held very clearly that the regulation of labor unions through a state law against discrimination is not contrary to the principles of the National Labor Relations Act.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yes, Cathy?

MS. CARR-LUNDFELDT: I have some further information on this if you want to hear it.

MS. SCHUHMANN: This is Cathy Carr-Lundfeldt, also of the State Human Rights Commission.

MS. CARR-LUNDFELDT: In addition to being the Assistant Director here in Fairbanks, I'm also a member -- sort of semi-active -- of a national task force on women in construction. I'm semi-active because I don't get back to D.C. as often as the task force tends to meet. But the fact is that on the age discrimination issue, there are suits pending against the U.S. Department of Labor on the age discrimination issue, alleging again that it aids in sex discrimination and bars women from participating in apprenticeship programs.

And as a result of that, the U.S. Department of Labor issued a memorandum out to the Bureau of Apprenticeship Training Programs a year ago in the fall which urged them to get unions to rescind those specifications. You will find, if you check with local unions that a number of the locals have rescinded the age requirement. Some of them have considered it and said they don't want to rescind it; it isn't in their best interest. But some of them have taken that step. So it is not something that's written in concrete; it's not something which is federally pre-empted.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you.

MR. BEHLKE: I didn't mention one important aspect in the socio-economic stips; and that is that we have worked for, oh, about a year in looking at local hire. You'll recall that local hire was struck down by the Supreme Court out in America some time ago. And we wanted to know more about that. I couldn't accept that, you know, that this thing just went dead and there was nothing you could do about it. So I wanted to look at that pretty hard. And we have attempted with our AG lawyers to look at it pretty hard this last year. And I think we have a local hire provision in there now which will probably fly in the big time. It does not provide automatic employment for each and every Alaskan. It has to do with unemployed Alaskans, chronically unemployed Alaskans, and so on. So it's much more restricted than any other local hire law. And the reason it is, of course, is the other one did not fly. We think we know why it didn't fly, and so we tried to take care of that in our stipulations this time.

I think perhaps there will be a bill in the Legislature that will be patterned on what we've done so far here; in other words, the Legislator who's doing this has been working with the AG's office in an attempt to get a local hire law that will stand the test and will mean something to Alaskans. That local hire law, however, doesn't relate specifically to women, it relates to Alaskans of various other categories.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Herb?

MR. BERKOWITZ: Dr. Behlke, you mentioned that the State and Northwest haven't really gotten together yet on the subject of a right-of-way lease over the State lands.

MR. BEHLKE: Right.

MR. BERKOWITZ: When that day comes, do you anticipate the State including in that right-of-way lease provisions regarding female employment and affirmative action?

MR. BEHLKE: No, I don't anticipate that. I think that we'll use the federal regulations. The federal government, I think, pre-empts us in this.

MR. BERKOWITZ: I think I'd like to question that conclusion, Dr. Behlke, because I think the State has as free a right to assert its jurisdiction over a lease over its lands as the federal government has a right to assert its jurisdiction of a lease over federal lands. Obviously, a great deal turns on the performance of Mr. Alexander's office in carrying out its mandate. But in this day of budget cutting there can be no assurance that they'll be a large federal presence over the next few years. I would urge you to consider whether or not it might be desirable in the State stipulations to have provisions that are not inconsistent with the federal provisions; they ought to be consistent, but which provide the State with a separate enforcement mechanism in the event that the federal government, for one reason or another, doesn't follow through. I don't think there's anything to be lost by doing that; and I think there is something to be gained.

MR. BEHLKE: I agree with you. It's a good idea. We can attach what he asked. It's a good suggestion.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Barbara.

MS. DALE: You were talking about a draft of you socio-economic plans that you're working on now --

MR. BEHLKE: Yeah.

MS. DALE: -- that have not been negotiated with Northwest.

MR. BEHLKE: No.

MS. DALE: And you were talking about getting input from different groups or organizations.

MR. BEHLKE: No, in the -- not for the socio-economic plans as they exist today. Let me go through the process now of a right-of-way lease. We negotiate -- Northwest has to apply for the right-of-way lease. When Northwest applies for the right-of-way lease, we began -- we begin, in the Pipeline Co-ordinator's Office, to develop the lease. We've done a lot of development, obviously, already. But anyhow, in the normal course of events we develop the right-of-way lease with the various stipulations, technical, environmental, socio-ecio, whatever special provisions; negotiate these with Northwest on a preliminary basis. And then we have to go to public hearings with such a right-of-way lease.. At that time, the public has a crack at whatever stipulations and what have you that it wants to. Now, within the existing stipulations we have, on a draft basis, required Northwest to do certain things in relation to its pipeline. And there's working groups or this, and working groups on that, and so on. And within these working groups to develop Northwest's plans for the handling of various phases, socio-economic phases of their pipeline, we would then get some public participation -- qualified people who really are into something; in a specific area; not just someone who comes off the woodwork or out of the woodwork -- but anyhow, someone who's qualified to give information or discuss in a specific area; someone who has some experience in that area; and the various State and federal agencies that are into that; not just every State and every federal agency.

MS. DALE: Is --

MR. BEHLKE: Actually, this process has worked out extremely well, I think, in the technical and environmental stips that were developed for the federal right-of-way grant and which will probably be attached to the State right-of-way lease almost verbatim.

MS. DALE: Is it possible when it's appropriate that the Commission have an opportunity to give some of the information that they've gathered to these plans?

MR. BEHLKE: Oh, yeah.

MS. DALE: Good.

MS. SCHUHMANN: You have an advisory committee or group that you're already working...?

MR. BEHLKE: We've had -- again, one of the stipulations which we would attach to a right-of-way lease is that there be a socio-economic committee. We have had an interim committee of about 6 people working, 2 from Barrow; 2 from Tok; 1 from Delta; and the remainder from the Fairbanks area, 3 people from the Fairbanks area, working on a permanent charter -- or charter, I should say, for a permanent socio-economic committee in relation to the pipeline. And they develop that charter and this group has worked very hard in assisting us in development of socio-economic stipulations. This has been a very good group because it's been one way we've been able to gather information from the local communities about what are your problems; and what are you worried about; and so on and also to feed some information back. It's been very effective. And it's an interim group that has worked very hard. Leslie Corvola (ph) is the -- I'll call her chairman, I don't know if she wants to be called that of the group, anyhow.

UNIDENTIFIED VOICE: I hope not.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Chairperson. Yes, Herb?

MR. BERKCWITZ: I wonder if I could ask Mr. Kuhn, since he's still here, whether he anticipates there'd be any difficulty from the Northwest Alaskan side with including female hire provisions in the State right-of-way lease when that lease is finally negotiated?

MR. KUHN: I think it's a legal question, pre-emption by federal law or not.

MR. BERKOWITZ: But if it turns out that your counsel tell you that it's lawful to do so, do you anticipate that you'll do so?

MR. KUHN: It's -- if it's, in essence, the same requirement. I might add that the -- I think you're, perhaps, missing the point on that. The EPO regulations, the Affirmative Action regulations, our plan, applies without regard to land ownership. It applies regardless of whether you're on State land or federal land. There are certain other things as far as a right-of-way lease or a right-of-way grant from the federal government;that is land related. The Affirmative Action Plan is not.

MR. BERKOWITZ: The reason I raise the point, Mr. Kuhn, is that we've had a very mixed experience in Alaska with looking to the federal government to protect our rights in various areas. And therefore, I think we'd feel more secure with another arrow in our quiver with the State government having the same parallel responsibility. And I'm glad to see that Northwest appears to be forthcoming, and if it's lawful to do so apparently will.

MR. KUHN: Let me say that's a question to be resolved between the lawyers in the State, and the lawyers of the federal government; and we don't want to be involved in that sort of a...

MR. BERKOWITZ: But you will be a party to the lease, won't you? Won't Northwest be a party to the lease?

MR. KUHN: We're going to do the same thing, not matter what, so far as the Affirmative Action Plan goes. We're going to implement it either way. So it really isn't going to make any difference from our viewpoint.

MR. BERKOWITZ: So it doesn't really matter to Northwest that the State has an independent enforcement possibility, if not actuality?

MR. KUHN: Well, we, you know, have to see the specifics of what's involved.

MR. BERKOWITZ: Well, what if they were essentially the same terms that you've agreed to with the federal government?

MR. KUHN: You're asking, you know, a hypothetical question about the -- insofar as the legal things not yet resolved. I think that -- my own opinion, I'm not a lawyer, is that there would be considerable difficulty in entering into a field that is already well established by federal statutes and regulations. That's an opinion; not a legal opinion.

MR. BERKOWITZ: Do you have any policy difficulties with that?

MR. KUHN: Well, we wouldn't want to see conflicts between the State government and the federal government that would in some way cause difficulties or unnecessary litigation just because we've got two different governmental enforcing agencies. If I thought about it long enough there might be, you know, considerably other problems with it. But it's really not an issue for, though. Whatever is legal and is worked out between the federal and State government is -- we'll live with that.

MR. BEHLKE: I might say that our group, the State Pipeline Co-ordinator's Office, and the State agencies that work with us, all we do is co-ordinate State agencies. We don't have a super agency like the Federal Inspector, who takes permits and then supervises them. We have Fish and Game; DEC; DNR; AG; we'll have the Department of Labor; we have DOT-PuF representatives right in our office and we just work together as one group; so the agency gives the permit. And then in essence, that agency really surveils its permit under our ages (ph). But we have had awfully good working relationships with the OFI, the Office of the Federal Inspector, very good. And in some areas we've said we'll stay out of it; you go ahead and do it; you have better expertise. And in other areas, we're taking the lead as far as pre-construction design survey, and this sort of thing is concerned. So our relationships have been very good. It's been almost like one government rather than two.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Mr. Kuhn, did you have another comment?

MR. KUHN: Yeah. The more I think about it, if there are parallel or duplicate enforcement structures set up, where the heck does an employee go, to the federal, State? I can see some practical problems on that.

MR. BERKOWITZ: I wouldn't anticipate the State having any enforcement structure at all. I would anticipate that the federal government will live up to its responsibilities, and you'll live up to your responsiblilities, and you'll meet your goals. My only concern is if the federal government completely falls down on its enforcement responsibility and you don't meet your goals in which case I expect the State -- if it is deemed to be in the public interest of the State -- will create the necessary enforcement authority who would only be a last resort. As I say, it's a question of retaining some measure of local control over what is essentially a local problem, and that is the hire of female Alaskans.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Do the Commissioners have any other questions?

MR. BEHLKE: Thank you.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you. The next people scheduled on the agenda are the Human Rights Commission representatives, Neil Thomas and Cathy Carr-Lundfeldt.

MR. THOMAS: Thank you. Cathy and I are going to share the time today, and try not to trench on the time of -- I know you have quite a considerable group of witnesses you probably have coming.

I'm in a position to share with you some statewide concerns and issues. But Cathy's office was the one that was on the scene during the Alyeska project. And to the extent that -- anything that happened during the Alyeska project is instructive as to what should not happen during the gas line project, Cathy has that information.

I'm going to paint for you a fairly optimistic picture, I think, of the ability of the State of Alaska under its laws against discrimination to deal with whatever problems of discrimination may come up under the gas line. But I don't want to leave the impression by some of the things that I'm going to say that discrimination has gone away in the State of Alaska.

In fact, I just heard a story at breakfast this morning about some company evidentally that announced to a women that it had a firm and unfailing policy against hiring women to run chain saws. When the woman pressed the point, it seems that they did back down a bit and offer to let her work a 10 day trial period for free.

Discrimination is alive and well in Alaska. And it could very well surface during the gas line. But I think Commissioner Berkowitz's point is well taken when he indicates that there are a lot of things that appear to be underway, both at Northwest Pipeline and at the federal level, which if it all works could minimize the numbers of issues that would come up; could minimize the numbers of complaint situations that would happen. And I think we're all kind of sitting, at least at the State level, hoping that there is nothing like the Alyeska project mess that we found ourselves in late in 1974 when many of us came on the scene at the Alaska State Commission.

However, even as things do come up and come to our attention, I think the State of Alaska is far better prepared to meet any of these things than it was 6 years ago. Six years ago, the State laws against discrimination had never been interpreted in the form of an order by the State Human Rights Commission. There had been no development of Alaska case law because no case had ever found its way to court. The agency administering law didn't even know how many complaints it had and was being inundated by a new flood of complaints right at the time it had only about 5 State funded staff people and 2 people on federal funding to deal with the issue.

In the meantime, in the last 6 years, virtually all of the major questions of discrimination that sort of exist in this body of law known as anti-discrimination law have been addressed and resolved by the Alaska courts, by the federal courts, and by opinions issued by the State Human Rights Commission. We are about to publish a report which summarizes how the law of discrimination has developed in the State of Alaska in the next 6 years; it's a rather remarkable article by the Commission's attorney; and with it the first index to Human Rights Commission decisions that have been issued which should be helpful to everybody practicing law in this area. And the central point of the article is that Alaska's laws against discrimination have been construed for the most part as being stronger than federal law, broader than federal law, and most of the legal jigsaw puzzle is now complete. So just from a pure law sense, I think the State of Alaska is very well equipped to deal with just about any issue of discrimination that may come up under the gas line or anywhere else, including most of the issues of women in construction.

We do owe this much, I think, to the Alyeska project in that its sponsors and its labor unions played a very important role in the development of this law. They were the respondents, they were the cases. And so to that extent,

I guess we owe them a thank you.

Now, you can have a law in the books that says something, and then the question is is there any way to respond to all of that. And, again, I think I can give you a pretty optimistic picture in terms of the administrative ability of State government to respond to issues, to respond to complaints. Again, I think much of that picture is now in place. You have a State Human Rights Commission with a lot of experience and people who have been there for some period of time who know how to do this kind of a case; and an agency with 27 permanent positions plus a few CETA positions and other sorts as long as those fundings still remain. You have an agency which has passed muster in a very intensive audit, performance audit, by the State Legislature with a favorable report coming from that process with budget cuts having been restored for the most part. You have federal performance measures that are used for agencies of this type that show that Alaska Commission is at or near the top of agencies of its type around the country. And you have pretty sophisticted case processing systems. The agency's legendary backlog is very close to being eliminated. There is -- the total case load is back at the level that it was at in 1974 as the pipeline boom was coming up. And certainly by the time the gas line comes the case load is going to have been well under control probaby for some time. So just administratively, I think, the State of Alaska is in a pretty good position to respond to that type of thing.

The question of where -- whether this is awful or wonderful, as one Commissioner said, needs to be answered, I think, in the context of where things were back in 1974. And the recognition that's inherent, I think, in some of your questions that the State of Alaska really does have an independent responsibility. It has taken that responsibility seriously knowing full well that, for instance, during the Alyeska project the federal response was very hard to come by if not almost nonexistent. And so the State of Alaska did have to carry the ball and did respond to the need.

Therefore, I think as a general rule we are in a good position to respond as to specific and issues and things that have come up. I can answer questions, and I think I'd prefer to turn it over to Cathy and let her share with you some more specific kinds of experiences.

MS. CARR-LUNDFELDT: I kept by me the list of questions that you asked me in your letter. And I will try to address them as briefly as I can, but as concisely.

MS. JONES: A little louder, please.

MS. CARR-LUNDFELDT? Speak up?

MS. JONES: A little louder.

MS. CARR-LUNDFELDT: Get the thing closer here. The first question is what barriers exist for women who are interested in obtaining employment on the Alaska natural gas transportation system. Basically, the barrier is tradition. And because of that stereotyping what should be said is that there is now, coming into my office today, complaints involving very traditional sorts of attitudes and behaviors from women who are having difficulty with employment situations on the pre-construction portion.

So, it is starting now. It is not something that's going to start when the financing begins or whatever; it is happening today. The attitudes are quite similar to what went on before.

The other problem with this -- excuse me?

MS. DALE: Are those employed women or women who are looking for employment on the pre-construction...?

MS. CARR-LUNDFELDT: Both, these are women who have obtained employment and women who have not obtained employment; and that's why they're talking about it.

There is also the situation involving apprenticeship and access to the unions. The economic condition has necessarily limited working opportunities in construction. So as a consequence, you heard about the limitations in apprenticeship opportunities. What no one is saying is that there are other opportunities for gaining access to unions other than apprenticeship programs. That's also traditional, but it's not widely advertised.

Certainly labor agreements could be negotiated to include access to those kind of programs. The other thing you should know that in terms of attachment to the right-of-way leasing, in other words land attachment which was referred to, there are ongoing training programs for native people. I specifically heard one mentioned the other day involving the Teamsters, which already has graduates from last year, and is employing the graduates in the program. So although the negotiations are not complete for passage over the native lands, the company has engaged in negotiating training programs for native people through unions.

You asked what conditions can women expect to find when they obtain nontraditional jobs on the pipeline. Well, let me give you a couple of interesting examples. The first time I ever got out on the line to investigate a case and to make contact with people in the camps, I was housed in a women's section of the dorms. It was the oldest section of the trailers which were used for housing women. Women were doubled up in that section when there were men who were in singles throughout the rest of the camp. Over the doorway of the trailer was a painted sign of a woman in a bikini. Women were required to, in that particular instance, bullcook their own rooms. They didn't have to bullcook the bathrooms, but they did have to do their own rooms. In other words, change their own sheets, empty the wastebaskets, that kind of thing.

There were other things that we encountered at different times. One of them was, for instance, a meeting held in a camp for women only involving instruction about how to keep from spreading VD. No men ever attended those meetings. And the women were under the impression that the meeting was mandatory, even though it was denied subsequently.

You asked were there problems with such subjects as housing and facilities. I doubt this arguments going to come up again, but the first argument made on the line about hiring women was that there were no facilities. And that wasn't resolved until late '74, I think you may remember.

As far as sexual harassment, yeah, they can expect it. They can expect to be harassed if they want to room with a man on the pipeline, or they can expect to be harassed if they don't want to. They can expect it on the job. There were numerous instances of testimony from women who said that the way they got to keep their jobs was to sleep with the superintendent, the foreman, and so on. And one particular charge we had a superintendent who was charged individually with harassing 11 different women. And then they were criticized because they didn't take the complaint through the company, and he was the highest level employee in that camp.

If women encounter such problems in the future, what are their options? Well, the option I'm most familiar with, of course, is the agency for whom I work. And I would urge women who have those kind of problems to come to us. We don't act quickly in the sense of tomorrow because that's not the way we operate. We're required to investigate impartially. But we're much better skilled at what we do than we were back then. I was brand new. And we are familiar with issues and problems and situations. We've seen them before. We've even heard some of the names before. So we're in a much better position to investigate this time around.

There are other options I would like to see. For instance, women be able to make constructive use of union grievance programs. There should be more action on that line. Unions are more aware--we understand, by working with them upon occasion, more aware of their responsibilities in this direction. And we have had some cases solved through direct intervention by union B.A.'s. It's not consistent, but it's much better than before.

What constructive suggestions would you make for employers and unions to avoid such past problems? Well, the first one would be for this to be a key issue in the negotiation of the labor agreement process. There isn't any reason why this can't be made a key issue. It won't be if it isn't made one.

The other thing I would like to see is a real commitment to go out and to recruit, hire, train, and employ women and minorities rather than the viewpoint that we must do it because we have to. If there is the real commitment to do so, then there will be -- develop management systems and personnel responsibilities.

Recently the Commission saw a wonderful memo come through from a construction type firm specifying two foreman on the line that evaluations of their job performance would be based on whether they could meet their goals of recruiting, hiring, training, and retaining women and minorities. Now, when you have that kind of specification for performance evaluation from the top to the bottom, you get results. That's true for any management question, any business question. If you attach money and incentive to do it, and specify that that is the goal, it will happen.

And I would like to speak specifically to a union program, which I had no idea -- I was not involved in encouraging them to do this, they did it on their own. It could be used as a model for other unions and for getting women into programs. Dave Rasley of the Operating Engineers observed that they'd had some difficulty in recruiting and retaining natives as members of the Operating Engineers. He worked specifically with a man over at the Tanana Chiefs Conference by the name of Richard Frank. The two of them, using union funds and Tanana Chiefs' funds traveled to villages to meet with potential apprenticeship applicants to explain union procedures, to urge persons who had been members to reinstate membership, to explain that instead of quitting on the line because conditions became tough to stay there and make use of the union grievance process. That certainly could be used as a model if there was a real commitment to increase membership.

Based on your knowledge of the difficulties some women may have experienced with previous pipeline employment, can you suggest any alternative and future construction efforts that would alleviate these conditions. I think I did that. But you specifically ask, for instance, should there be an EEO officer or counselor at each construction site in whose employ. If it is to follow the pattern that was followed on the oil pipeline, I would recommend that there not be such an arrangement because it was our experience for the most part -- there were exceptions, I will allow that -- but for the most part the EEO office or personnel who were generally employed by the subcontractors, there were some by the major contractor, spent a great deal of time investigating situations in order to protect the company image rather than to determine whether or not something fair, unreasonable, or discriminatory had gone on. But that was simply to be expected because they were in the employ of a person who had an interest in doing that. Now, on the other hand, I'm not sure that it would be effective at all to have an EEO type person in each camp hired by anybody else because who would do the monitoring, what would be the process for training. Many of the EEO people on the line didn't have any prior construction or oil line or camp experience either. And many of them had very limited experience as far as exposure to enforcement of discrimination law.

It is still not widely understood that discrimination law also is based on the theory of the effect of an act rather than a specific -- in other words, people understand that you can discriminate by doing it overtly; they understand that you can discriminate by treating people differently. But they don't understand that by establishing a neutral rule, say, such as having a high school diploma, you can arbitrarily bar certain people of certain groups from employment opportunities. And, of course, the age in apprenticeship programs is one of those types of things. I think I've answered your questions.

MS. DALE: Are there any questions of the Commissioners? Herb.

MR. BERKOWITZ: Neil, I ask you this question because you live in the Human Rights enforcement world every day, and I see it very much from a distance. Also, have you --

MR. THOMAS: Not on some weekends.

MR. BERKOWITZ: Right. Also, you are responsible for the interests of women and minorities, while this Commission's legislative mandate is to deal with women's issues. In looking at Northwest Alaskan's projections with respect to, for example, minority and female business enterprise goals -- and the reason I raise this point at all is that the words minority and female seem to be treated as they're almost one word, they always seem to be lumped together. In Mr. Kuhn's discussion of how enforcement was going to be handled, it was all going to be handled by one group. But when you look at the relative breakdown between minority and female in the contracting area, the female is 4 million dollars and the minority is 31 million dollars, which is greater by a factor of 7, a number which seems to recur today. I guess my question is do you think that females and minorities are, to a certain extent, competing with each other for opportunities in these projects? And do you think that this commission has an independent responsibility to be the sales force for the needs as perceived on the female; and rather than to relatively passively be lumped in with minorities in an overall equal opportunity context?

MR. THOMAS: Well, there's several questions inherent in that. But let me give you a general answer and some specifics. I think competition among out groups generally is unhealthy and is definitely to be avoided. And for that reason, if minority business enterprises and female business enterprises were lumped together and one goal were established for the whole group, you run into that potential problem. And, in fact, that happened in the first year of the federal Public Works Act Program, which was the first of those federal statutes that had this minority - female business enterprise concept built into it with a fixed percentage of the total federal Public Works Act money supposedly going to female minority owned businesses. What happened during the first year was that a lot of white owned contractors rolled the titular ownership of those same companies over to some female relative; billed themselves as a minority business enterprises, and gobbled up the whole quota, so to speak, thus shutting minority business enterprises out of the picture almost exclusively.

Well, Congress wised up to that pretty quickly. And in the second year of the program,and in general,in programs of this type ever since, it's been thought essential one set of goals for minority business enterprises and separate goals for female business enterprises. And from what I can see, I'm not terribly familiar with their methodology, it looks like Northwest is doing that and I think should be encouraged to.

As to whether or not the dollar level for female business enterprises is appropriate, again, I think you'd have to go back and see -- double track over Northwest's methodology to see whether it's sound. It looks like what they have done is to get a computer to tell them how many businesses seem to be available; and they're setting goals more or less in proportion to that. That's probably an appropriate methodology in which case they are probably in order by coming in here, as they did today, and say that's an acceptable methodology. But there's the possibility that we don't know where those firms are and who they are; and so they come here to a public forum and say let's get those names in here. It's just like an employer recognizing an under-utilization of women in an executive level, for instance, and doing affirmative recruitment to try to find qualified people to bring them into -- applicants. And I think Northwest has a duty to recruit, much in the fashion that we, to an extent, saw them do here today by saying we need to know who the female business enterprises are because the more of them we know about, the higher we can set goal levels. I hope that answers what you're -- does that get to what you were asking?

MR. BERKOWITZ: Well, let me ask you this. Don't you think that a factor of 7 to 1, when you have on the one hand groups that are denominated as minorities -- we know that they're a minority of the population -- versus another group that is probably a numerical majority of the population or anything pretty close to a majority of the population, don't you think that that's inherently suspect?

MR. THOMAS: I would make the comparison between, you know, the 4 percent figure and the total population. Now, I think that's saying the same thing that you're saying in much the same way. I mean, if over half the population is female, how come only supposedly 4 percent of the known businesses that are available to do work on the gas line -- and that's what they're saying their definition of it is -- is female. I wouldn't express it in ways which imply that there's some competition for a limited piece of the pie between minority owned firms and female owned firms because I don't think that's what happens. I think Northwest has a duty to set a goal level for female owned businesses that's rational. And I think it's rational to set that at a level which is proportionate to that dollar volume of businesses which female owned businesses are prepared to do.

Now, if they don't know who those businesses are, and they haven't done an adequate job of finding that out, you know, they've opened themselves to criticism.

MS. DALE: Yes.

MS. JONES: Along these lines, and I think it came out both in terms of setting quotas for employment and for contracting, there seems to be an inherent tautology. We say we need to increase the employment of women and the contracting to women because they are under-represented. We then use the status quo figures of that unrepresentativeness to determine what the quota should be. So it strikes me that we go around in a circle on that.

MR. THOMAS: That, I think, is inherent in the kind of questions we were asking earlier today about to what extent availability can be used as that level.

MS. JONES: Yeah.

MR. THOMAS: Well, that's a constant fight. The courts generally accept, unless you can put something better up there in the context of discrimination cases, reasonable and rational availability figures. There's not a body of EEO law yet which says that an employer has a legal duty to prepare people for occupations for which they're otherwise unqualified. Now, how you define qualifications gets you into another body of law, because a lot of qualification standards are questionable and flat out illegal. But if you accept that certain qualifications are consistent with the needs of a position, the body of EEO law at this point does not create upon an employer a legal duty to bring people up to a level where they can perform. And employer does not have a legal duty to take someone and give them a typing course, and subsequently hire them for a typing job. An employer does have a duty not to discriminate among people who are capable of typing for a typing job. And so you're going into the next logical step in this whole social area; but you're raising a question that's socially logical and has equities on your side when you say, you know, society has disadvantaged certain people and therefore society collectively, including private employers, has some moral obligation to help people along. Unfortunately not all of that concept is, you know, enshrined in the legal principals of this country at this point. But I think it's a direction it's going and is inherent in a lot of our activities.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Barbara?

MS. DALE: What happens, then, when -- and maybe you can answer this question for me, I haven't gotten it answered yet -- what happens, then, if they have not -- if, let's say Northwest does not comply, can they come up -- with their affirmative action goals, can they come up and say well, there just weren't enough people qualified. I mean, who has the responsibility to make sure that, at this point in time in the planning stage, you know, that there are people who are qualified?

MR. THOMAS: That's where the big if's come in in these availability studies. In the EEO court fights, almost -- in the big pattern and practice cases, it frequently comes down to an availability question. It's happening with us in our negotiations with different companies in context of class action complaints we might file. And we're negotiating something that we think is reasonable and they're coming back and saying the availability isn't there; you can't force it on us and so on. So, you know, the same process occurs here. There's a certain amount of guesswork involved, there's -- particularly at this point right before our new census is going to come out. And therefore, it is a negotiating process. Now, sometimes you can pin it down. I had a case once where an employer didn't reach a particular level. And because of the records that were set up under the agreement were such that they were, we could go back and discover literally every single person who applied and make a determination about whether every person who was qualified was, in fact, offered a job and whether they turned it down or not. That's because that whole system had been set up in the context of an agreement, and we could go back, track and see whether the agreement had been lived up to.

MS. CARR-LUNDFELDT: Can I speak to your question, too? The thing that you need to remember above and beyond the EEO standards, because that is one set of things that's being considered, you're also talking about affirmative action. Availability statistics is only one element in that so-called 8 factor analysis. I am assuming they're using the one from the revised order #4 put out by the Office of Federal Contract Compliance. One of the elements in that 8 factor analysis is population. So certainly you could lobby for higher statistics on that basis.

I also wanted to add there's a historical reason for those low female goals. They started back on the pipeline. I don't know whether you were aware of the fact that there were no federally prescribed goals or project goals for women signed off on on the oil pipeline. None, I mean zero. They talk about the percentages, but there were no goals to begin with. And so those percentages would come up without goals. There was a great deal of lobbying. There were groups that tried to get goals formulated. There was an agreement drawn up which had goals of about 7 percent specified. But the thing was never signed off on by the U.S. Department of Labor, which apparently had the authority to do so.

Now, one of the things about the task force that I was involved with -- or am involved with is that some women's groups, including the National League of Women Voters sued the Secretary of Labor and said you have a responsibility under law, it's right there in your responsibilities, to set those goals in construction. And this was nationwide. It was not just the pipeline. And they had to sue the secretary in order to get the U.S. Department of Labor to look at those kinds of goals. So what you are looking at essentially is goals that would have been established back in 1974, and yet were sat on, neglected. And as a consequence, women in construction throughout the nation have been victimized by those low goals.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yes, Herb.

MR. BERKOWITZ: Neil, this is another question which I ask for the benefit of your experience. It seems like the EEO process can pretty much function as an independent game bearing a limited relationship with what's going on in the real world of any given project with huge reams of paper flying back and forth and ultimately no outcome. Do you have any feelings for what it takes in a practical sense to get the people you're dealing with to do the right thing? In other words, how do you break away from this paper chase and mold the people in the direction of doing something which they ought to feel is the right thing to do and to help them believe that and carry it out in that spirit, because I think that's in everyone's best interest.

MR. THOMAS: There's a couple of things, and it runs to what I sort of call our theory of the business, at least where I work. I think the reason people pay their taxes is because they think they'll get caught and they think it'll go hard on them if they get caught. In other words, the enforcement process is visible, near at hand in the sense that that great computer in the sky is near at hand. And it's credible. And one of the theories of the business of people like me who work in this business is to create that same kind of client about EEO; to make enforcement a credible, nearby -- not in Seattle or Washington, D.C. -- reality. And I think that sort of what is developing here in Alaska, and has developed maybe farther than many of us since in the last 6 years. I think there's far more discrimination that doesn't happen these days than would have happened in the past. And I think the reason it does is because people generally know that there's some discrimination laws out there and they read about it in the paper all the time. And Cathy-Carr Lundfeldt goes around to meetings; and her office is right down the street. It's not the EEOC in Seattle or some acronym full of letters off in Washington, D.D. someplace. And these stories get around. And Alaska's one big small town. And I think that kind of credibility is really what does it. And I think that's basically where we're headed with it. It's making the enforcement process credible and close at hand.

Now, I think there are still some links to establish credibility, and in that regard I'd like to say something about 798, which came up for discussion earlier. 798 will be, apparently from statistics we've seen here, one of the major dispatchers of people to the pipeline. A portion of 798's work force is basically not that complex welding job which takes a certain amount of certification and such. Over half of those people, if it goes like it did during the oil line, will be known as helpers, which is described as basically monkey see monkey do kind of work; carry coats, welding rods, and that type of thing. There is a case now pending before the State Commission very close to a decision. We think that the examiner, Joan Katz (ph) who has already circulated a preliminary opinion of some 78 pages or something -- we had oral argument on that case yesterday and we think there's an opinion going to be forthcoming from her very shortly which is in the form of a recommendation to a three member panel of the State Commissioners.

That puts the State Commissioners in a position, and I'm guessing here, to put an order out involving 798's future dispatching practices in the next few months; an order which is appealable to Superior Courts, but an appeal process which arguably can be completed to the Alaska Supreme Court or to possibly the Supreme Court of the United States within a time frame that still would encompass 798's dispatching practices on the gas line.

The staff which has argued this case -- my staff which has argued the case before the Commission has basically been advancing a remedy which would put something of a quota involving females as well as blacks into 798's dispatching practices in the future. Oral argument yesterday focused on at what level that quota should be fixed, which goes right back to this availability question with the Commission staff arguing that since 798's membership is drawn from the deep south, that availability should be in consideration. And this goes not to the female quota which is easier to reason with, but the quota for blacks; and 798 predictably arguing that the Alaska black population is what's relevant. We don't know what the final order's going to be, but I think the 7-- and when I filed this clase action case against 798 years and years ago, it was with the clear understanding that this case was going to take a long time; raised some very heavy issues; be hotly litigated; and ultimately show that when you want to get down to making the enforcement process credible in a real way, as you say, you want to make things happen. State law can do it. It's not going to do it overnight. But it will establish a body of principles, which in a period of time will have to be uniformly respected. That's why I think you rarely hear the argument anymore,and it doesn't last for long, that an employer can get out of hiring women by simply claiming they don't have any facilities. Now, those first cases started in 1974 with women picketing the Culinary Union hiring hall here; and with the Alaskan Ferry System claiming that they couldn't rebuilt the boats to accommodate women working on the deck. It took years for those cases to get pinned down, but at least in 1981 that's not really a serious issue anymore.

I think cases like 798, even though they may take a total of 8 years, and that's really what we could be looking at altogether maybe, will establish certain kinds of principles about union dispatching practices and about how State law can regulate the dispatching practices of labor unions that will get to what everybody had been saying up to that point was an issue that nobody could face. Labor unions are controlled by the federal government; the employers can't control labor unions; and all of these kind of arguments that you hear. I don't believe their true. I think the State law can reach these issues; I think it will. It's just going to take time, but we're getting there.

MS. CARR-LUNDFELDT: One of the things that was interesting to me to hear today was a suggestion that there would be a problem with the contractors trying to handle State law -- State enforcement versus federal enforcement if they're different. Well, they already are. Our State law covers a number of areas that are not covered specifically by federal law. Our State law specifies that you can't discriminate on the basis of pregnancy, on the basis of marital status, on the basis of parenthood, on the basis -- other basis; age, the age section is open-ended. So they're going to have to be dealing with those differences to begin with.

The other interesting thing that has come up recently, and I don't know that anybody's tried it out yet, but there has been a legal opinion out lately that suggests that an employer may, under Title 7, sue a union for engaging in practices which cause it to discriminate by not employing the people which is an interesting idea.

MR. THOMAS: The other remedy is, of course, the principle that an employer can't use a recruitment source that's discriminatory; so the employer has to recruit more broadly. If my recruitment source is only people living in that part of town, all of whom are white -- picture a city down in the South 48, say, where neighborhood patterns are clear -- and I recruit only here, I can be legally enjoined from recruiting in that fashion. I can be ordered to recruit in a rational way around my place of business; in a way which includes black neighborhoods, hispanic neighborhoods, and such. Well, as a matter of law, there isn't any difference between that principle and the idea that an employer using this labor union can be ordered to broaden the recruitment base. Now, labor unions hate to hear that, and you'll always have people jumping up and down about the National Labor Relations Act, and their contract and so on and so forth. Well, you and I can't enter into a contract to do something that's illegal. Well, an employer can't enter into a labor agreement which is illegal; and it's illegal to discriminate. I mean, these issues have come up in the courts for years. And there's no court in the country that's ever said that a labor agreement which is discriminatory can be enforced. So as I say, that's one of those arguments that gets thrown up that sounds kind of logical on its face, and it's just -- it's legal nonsense, really.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Any further questions from Commissioners? (No response). Thank you very much. Why don't we take a break for just about -- only 5 minutes. And then we come back, we're going to have an open session, and any member of the public that wishes to testify about -- and in particular we have asked the women who worked on the last pipeline might share some of their suggestions with us on suggestions on how to avoid problems that women found in working on the last pipeline. Could I -- could we have a show of hands of the number of people that intend to testify this afternoon that were planning on it, if we twist your arm? Okay.

OFF THE RECORD

ON THE RECORD

MS. SCHUHMANN: I'd like to call the meeting back to order and invite whoever would be interested in addressing the Commission to come forward and announce your name; and if you could spell your name so that we get it for the record; and maybe give us your address as well. (Pause) Don't be bashful.

MS. WIKE: Well, I know I only raised my hand halfway, and someone was counted three times.

MS. SCHUHMANN: You could start.

MS. WIKE: My name is Linda Wike, and I'm from Fairbanks. Do you need a home address?

MS. SCHUHMANN: A mailing address would be fine.

MS. WIKE: P.O. Box 73824.

MS. SCHUHMANN: And how do you spell your

MS. WIKE: W-i-k-e. And I don't have a prepared statement, and I came here not -- I wasn't even going to testify or anything. I really came just to see what the condition on the status of women is all about; and the first time I'd ever even heard about it. And after listening to what has been said by the gentlemen earlier and the lady, I found out that I'm in the position where I think -- Miss Jones kept making statements that would kind of poke a pin in my head over here, and Dale, too -- also Miss Dale, and found out that I'm in that position of being a 40 year old lady that doesn't have any craft skills; and in prior years was kept out of any training in the construction trades because of being female. Now I find I'm kept out of any apprenticeship programs because I'm 40.

It seems to me like when I was younger and had to raise children I was allowed to do traditional female clerical work if I had a high school diploma, which I didn't have so I was thrown into the manual labor market of which I couldn't get a job that would pay me enough to support children; because even though I was perfectly qualified to do strenuous manual labor a lower wage scale, for some reason when it came to higher wage scales that would afford me an opportunity to support children I either became -- I don't know what happened. I could do it when they didn't want to pay very much, but when they wanted to pay a living wage well then suddenly I wasn't capable of doing it.

I found out that when I talked to people who are in union position -- not union management positions, but people who are generally in the union, and I find that most of the ones I run up against -- in fact, all of them I have come in contact with happen to be male. And it's very hard to get them to tell you how to join -- get into the union, how to join it. It's either an apprenticeship program, which I've been excluded from for the reasons I have, or they -- or I don't have any experience. If I don't have any experience, then I'm on some obscure list where I'll never have a chance of getting to the top to get into the job force.

And when you were talking about training now, I'm wondering -- they keep saying we haven't discussed that yet; we haven't discussed that yet. Well, when they finally do discuss it, is there enough time to train someone like me to get into a position. If so, when will that be; where will it be; how do I find out about it? What do I do? I'm sitting around here trying to get somewhere.

I have applied to a union. My main goal for applying to the union was to learn a trade so that when I once learned it, that I could become a contractor and hire people that would probably be hired through a union and proceed onward and get someplace. And I find out that I'm stymied wherever I go. Now, I may stymie myself by saying I don't know exactly what to do so therefore I'm scared to do it. But I don't know where to take the first step. This, today, has been my second step. The first step was to go to the market and try and find a niche and realized that I either cannot ask the correct questions;or I'm not coming to the right people; or there's nobody inbetween them and me to go -- to follow any steps through. And I think that's about all that I have to ask.

They keep talking about contractors, women contractors, how do I get the experience to become a contractor. At that stage in the game, is right now, I have to do what they have frowned upon. I would have to do what they frowned upon; go out and say George, or somebody else, do you have the skills to know whether something's, you know, being done right or wrong; and if so, would you merge with me as I take my life's savings and we'll proceed to bid on a contract or going on a joint venture with seven or eight smaller companies and go on. It seems like time is... Maybe I want to run before I can walk, but I've been walking for 40 years trying to figure out how in the devil I'm going to run. You know, that's the whole -- that's where I'm sitting. And I guess that's all I have to say.

MS. SCHUHMANN: I'm not sure that we have much of an answer.

MS. WIKE: Yeah, I know; I don't, but I figured, you know I might as well say it.

MS. SCHUHMANN: I think, though, that one of the problems that we've identified today is that the next step would be to approach the unions that will be involved with this project and other construction projects around the State and try to get an answer to questions like that were asked this morning by the Commissioners and questions that you're raising.

MS. WIKE: I agree that the way it appeared to--and I'm not at all learned in what is really going on -- and from the feedback I've got and what the way my mind shows me now -- and you see, our problem is with the union in general. It seems like it kind of got passed around and passed around, and now it's over there with the union who -- or unions who are not represented or are not here so we couldn't direct any questions to them. And I thank you for allowing me to voice my...

MS. JONES: I think what you're describing is a system that has all of these parts that prevent you from getting there. And my only regret would be to see anyone take that personnally, because it's beyond a person's initiative; the system is set up and operating.

MS. WIKE: I have gone past it.

MS. JONES: Okay, good.

MS. WIKE: I have gone past taking it really personally and realized that it definitely is the system. But I can only relate it to myself, you know. Thank you.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you.

MS. ANDER: I'd like to say (inaudible). My name's Karen Ander, and I have been living down in Homer for the last 5 years.

MS. SCHUHMANN: How do you spell your last name?

MS. ANDER: Ander, A-n-d-e-r.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you.

MS. ANDER: And my P.O. Box number is 768. I thought there were gonna be a lot more women here who had real complaints and accounts of vicious occurances going on during pipeline construction. But I worked on the pipeline as a Teamster surveyor, just being a chainperson on a four or five-man crew. And let's see, I started work in 1975 and worked for about 5 months. And then I went back on the job in 1976. And I worked for a couple of different contractors in different capacities as a chainman.

I didn't really had any bad experiences while I was working. I found that everything that occurred while I was on the job was basically positive in regards to employee-employer relationships. There was some politics involved, but they were mostly of a personal nature that you're going to encounter in any job situation, men or women. And I think I was real lucky being around in the State at the time that the pipeline started up. And I had a few friends who joined the Teamsters

Union and decided to become surveyors because at the time they needed people to do the survey work; and there wasn't enough qualified people to go around, so they were hiring anybody. All you had to do was pass a test. And the test that they gave was a 25 question multiple quess thing. And my friends, when they took it, it was open book. You could take books, notes, you know, everything. And they give you an hour or so to study all the questions and look them up and write down the answers. And so --

MS. CALLAHAN: Who gave the test?

MS. ANDER: The Teamsters Union.

MS. CALLAHAN: The Teamsters.

MS. ANDER: Um-hm, the Business Agent for the tech engineers, as they're called. So...

MS. SCHUHMANN: How did you hear about the opening, to begin with? How did you know to join and...?

MS. ANDER: My friends. They -- I had friends just in town or in Anchorage who had been working surveying the haul road when it was contructed. And they'd come into town and they'd be just loaded down with money, you know. And I was pretty poor, and they said oh well, gee, you should go sign up and take the exam and you'll get out no problem. And the only thing I had to overcome in myself was sort of intimadation by the whole construction world, you know. I mean, it was all men; you'd have to somehow work up the courage to go out there and be a single woman. And you know that you're going to get hassled -- or you expect it because you do in any phase of life, you know. So -- but I decided that it would be worth it for the money. And I just didn't have any problems. I went and took the test. And the day that I took the test they decided it wasn't open book anymore. So I lucked out and passed it anyway. But I'd done my homework.

And when I finally got a job I went up north to Happy Valley. And the day that I arrived, the Chief of Parties -- that's the person who is head of all the survey crews --

MR. BERKOWITZ: It's not what it sounds like.

MS. ANDER: I realize that. You have party chiefs and then you have chief of parties. And he delegates the different portions of the work to the different survey crews. He was out of camp for the weekend. But somebody told me right away that he didn't like women on the job and that I was the first woman to come work for Arctic Constructors, at least at that camp; and that if he'd been around, he would have sent me right back because he insisted on having very qualified people, you know. But he wasn't there. So the other men who were in the office just took me out to a crew out in the field. And there I was, I was a chainman. And I was introduced to the other guys on the crew. And we started working and they just showed me -- you know, they knew I didn't have a lot of experience. I probably looked kind of bewildered. But they understood because a lot of the guys who were working out there didn't have any experience either. And so by the time the Chief of Parties got back I'd already been working for 2 days and it was too late for him to send me home. But, you know, so it was just all -- it was easy from then, really, except for a few personal relationships with the guys who had sensitive ego problems, you know. But that's... And I noticed -- there weren't a lot of women in camp, but the women that were in camp were all very different. And it seemed like a lot of them came from the Laborer's Union; and they got out on a special minority dispatch, which the Teamster's Union didn't have for at least the tech engineers.

ALASKA LEGISLATURE SPECIAL COMMITTEE / SUBJECT FILE 8672

And I heard all sorts of stories; everything from, you know, specific incidents of harassment to situations where I could see that women were perfectly willing to let the men give them lightweight jobs because they were women. And, you know, they just sort of went along with it because it was real easy. Like when the weather was bad and a lot of the laborers would be out working in the rain and the snow and the mud, you know, this one fairly pretty young gal -- she was right out of high school -- the foreman stuck her in the warehouse right away doing something, handing out parts or something that was real simple, you know. It was just -- you'd see that there's discrimination in all phases. And it's not always the men who are at fault, either. Sometimes the women just accept it because it's easier.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Herb, did you have a question?

MR. BERKOWITZ: Do you have any personal theory to account for your good experience? You know, for example, do you feel that, you know, the fact that there were women there before made your showing up on the scene no big deal. Do you feel that the people you were working with were unusually good forward thinking people? Just what -- how do you explain to yourself the fact that other people had bad experiences and yet you had a good one?

MS. ANDER: Well, I could guess that 90 percent of it's just one's own personal attitude. You know, if you're willing to meet people halfway and be nice about it in tense situations, you can usually work things so that everybody's happy without having to compromise your own particular values. I tried really hard to get along with everybody, you know. And I suppose my own background, my upbringing had a lot to do with that. I saw a lot of people who weren't trying at all to get along with anybody. And that always creates conflicts. But I couldn't afford to be like that because I was there to make a lot of money; you know, I couldn't afford to lose my job. I didn't have to compromise any of my morals. But I had to keep my mouth shut a lot of times when I felt that things were wrong because I was low man on the pole. You know, I couldn't say, well, so and so isn't doing his job; you know, what are you going to do about it. I had some horrible days where I thought that the guys I was working with were just intolerable in their behavior, in the way that they were doing their work. You know, they weren't good workers. But they got -- they were still out on the job because they were in the union. You know, there's a lot of power just in being in the union.

MR. BERKOWITZ: All things considered, having had your experience, what's your feeling about unions from the point of view of women in construction; do you view them as positive institutions or as negative institutions?

MS. ANDER: Well, since my experiences have all been of a fairly positive nature, I don't have any complaints about the union. In fact, since I have been living down in a small village and there's not a union local in my town, I was signed up with one in a nearby town. And I had withdrawn from the union a few years ago when there wasn't much work on the horizons and I didn't want to keep paying dues after my benefits had run out, so I withdrew. And last summer there was some union work that came up. And I found out about it and called them up, and they put me back to work right away. And, you know, it seemed like they made things easy for me. It's a real small branch of the union. And they sort of -- I think they just look out for people, you know.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Would you have any recommendations for other women that might be thinking of going into construction type work? Where do they go; where do they start; what would you recommend?

MS. ANDER: Well, right now -- I asked the Business Agent's office not too long about about what they want for qualified people to take their surveyor's exams and to get into the union. And they said they wanted people who'd had one to two years field experience and -- or some semesters of college work in surveying and engineering. And then I've also heard that they'd like to have people like that, but they don't check your qualifications when you go to take the exams. So, you know, if you can fake it... I guess it all depends on how you want to do it.

The Carpenter's Union, I know they have an apprenticeship program going on. I think every year they put new people into it. I don't know what their age restriction is on that, though. I applied a couple of years ago; and let's see, I had to take a 2 hour math test. And then there were 4 of us who passed the test. This was in Juneau. And there were 2 people who were accepted into the program,and I wasn't one of them. But I'm not sure, I decided that I didn't want to go into that program, anyway.

MS. JONES: Just a comment, and not at all to discredit your experience; but when I studied restrictions, union restrictions, against minorities and women in Anchorage, one of the things that came out was that where the men want the jobs, that's where there are the greatest restrictions against women. You fell into something where there wasn't a lot of competition for men. And so there were opportunities for women. But most of the trades that I found in Anchorage were preserved; that men who had worked in them for a long time and wanted to hang onto. And that's why these unions that are run by men have regulations that do restrict minorities and women from getting into them. And it sort of reminds me of during World War II when there were lots of opportunities for women because they were needed. And after World War II those opportunities sort of dried up fast because they wanted the jobs for the veterans.

MS. ANDER: Um-hm.

MS. JONES: And I think it's that -- you're making a good point. Where there is a need, that's one place women can enter. But I don't think that denies the point that where there's competition for a certain craft, we have to try to do something about the regulations that are discriminatory.

I also wanted to just make another comment that struck me so forceably as a sociologist; that when we were talking about the big designs for all this, this room was crowded with men. And when women started to talk about their real live experience, all the men took a powder, and I couldn't help but be struck by it.

MR. BERKOWITZ: Almost all the men.

MS. JONES: I'm referring to the audience, not the Commission, Herb.

MS. ANDER: Well I -- you know, just getting back to that question about what women should do if they want to get into the trades, you have to contact the union to find out what their programs are, and it takes an effort. And a lot of times, gee, the Seward Vocational Center, the skill center down in Seward, they accept women into their programs. That doesn't guarantee you a job, but that's one source of training. I've had some luck in working in, you know, other construction fields doing some carpentry and plumbing business. Like, those are things that I sought out for myself. I don't know generally how to recommend to other women that they go about getting into a chosen trade that's -- there's so many factors that are involved. So... Anyway, that's about all I have to say.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you.

MS. ANDER: Thank you.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yes.

UNIDENTIFIED VOICE: I just want to ask you a question. Do I understand you're going to meet with the unions later on --

MS. SCHUHMAN: No -- well, I think we will have to vote on it. But my own personal feeling is that it's so obvious after this meeting today where we're going to have to go next; and that's the unions. And so if we're going to have any follow-up, I think -- you know, the Commission will have to vote on it, but I think it's pretty obvious where the next move is.

UNIDENTIFIED VOICE: I think (indiscernible) if you go to see the unions. Because you can encourage women to talk to the unions. But they're going to be put on the C list they're going to lose their number and not work. A C list is --

MS. SCHUHMANN: Could you come -- you're with the Alaska Plan, aren't you?

UNIDENTIFIED VOICE: Right.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Why don't you come up and introduce yourself, if you don't mind, and...

MS. JONES: You can help inform us.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yes, tell us what you know. That's what this is all about.

MS. GUTIERREZ: I am Eleanor Gutierrez (ph). I work for the Alaska Plan, their labor relations person. I work both sides of the fence; I work with minorities, females, the unions and the contractors. Their all signatory to the Alaska Plan. But our understanding at this point is that the unions that have had apprenticeship programs have been very few. Apprenticeship programs are started with anticipation of more work.

On the onset right now, they feel that their unions can just hold the people they have right now and put them off to work the remainder of the year. If they don't see more work anticipated, they're not going to open up more apprenticeship programs. If they do put apprenticeship programs, and you have women follow-up with this apprenticeship program, she can out as an apprentice for 4 years.

You do have people that right now -- women, in particular, that have gotten off the rolls in unions that would have to be reinstated again. Again, their hours at the union has -- they ask for 6,000 hours to be on an A list. And you're talking of memberships of over 2,000 people. If this woman becomes a C-list member, even a B-list person, which was in the last oil line, she never did go out; or neither did the male for that fact, minorities or otherwise. The chances get slimmer and slimmer as they go down this list.

Each individual union has a collective bargaining booklet. It would be wise to read it before you go talk to these business agents. You'll find a lot of your answers right there on the collective bargaining booklet.

And they can tell you all they want about expertise people, everyone's an expertise person. But that's the first thing that'll come up; and no one has defined an expertise person in any trade. So they have the answers; and they have the stumbling blocks. They will set up people so they can fail, and turn around and say they just couldn't make the grade.

There's a lot of things that entail not only unions, but contractors. And again answers, a lot of people have the answers but do they want to answer them to you. That's all I have to say.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yes, Carla.

MS. SLAUGHTER: I wanted to ask whether or not the Alaska Plan still employed -- had the money to employ people who actually go out in the field and sort of count heads, and see what's happening out there --

MS. GUTIERREZ: We have project moniters. There's a big thrust that we have had for the past 2 years, is actually making (ph) on sites... We do have the percentages. And our biggest problem, of course, in various unions is not having the personnel there. If a contractor particularly is using electricians and he has 3 female electricians, and 10 minority electricians, he's not going to come up with 28 percent or 6.9. And you'll see that as the disparity in each union.

MS. JONES: I didn't get that...?

MS. GUTIERREZ: Our goals in the Alaska Plan is 28 percent minority, and 6.9 female. And again, if you go out and specifically look at a contractor, and his heavy contracting is with electricians or a expertise (ph) like our workers, you're not going to find these people there. And you're not going to have them unless you have apprenticeship programs. And they're not going to open apprenticeship programs unless they anticipate more work. And you go around in the circle again.

MS. SLAUGHTER: I know that there was some difficulties in years past when the project moniter would go out in the field to count heads and all of a sudden all the minorities peoples who were supposedly employed on this project were either out to lunch, or in the bathroom; you know, they all of a sudden just were not there; or some blond haired, blue eyed person was held up to be an American Indian; that that was happening a lot, especially during the years when there was heavy pipeline construction. And I was wondering if you were still seeing that kind of thing happening?

MS. GUTIERREZ: No, I think --

MS. SLAUGHTER: Or are the numbers really reflecting the bodies that are there?

MS. GUTIERREZ: No, a project moniter, before he even goes out, has to see; and the contractor knows that before he even goes out there that he visually has to see this person. They're progressing lots and lots more. I think the fact that we are always on top of these contractors that do get these jobs, pre-job conferences that we attend, we attend personalized management and going down and talking to supervisors; foremens and let him know what we're looking for. The awareness, just the awareness that we're really looking for females and minorities does a lot to bring up that contractor to compliance. Again, sometimes you get short-changed because the unions do not specifically have them. And that would be versus getting them from down in the Lower 48 and with what Alaska has to offer. I mean, you do have union jurisdictions.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you very much. Oh, could you spell your last name so that we have it in the record?

MS. GUTIERREZ: G-u-t-i-e-r-r-e-z.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you. Would you like to come...?

MS. AIKEN: My name is Annette Aiken, A-i-k-e-n. Am I supposed to give an address, also, or something?

MS. SCHUHMANN: A mailing address, if you don't mind.

MS. AIKEN: Mailing address, 675 7th Avenue, Station H, Fairbanks. I worked on the pipeline for awhile. I really don't know what you want to know right now. Do you want, you know, horror stories, or you know... I mean...

MS. SCHUHMANN: If you've got 'em, we'll listen.

MS. AIKEN: Everybody can -- well, you've heard quite a few. And I think that's kind of -- just the way it is, not only on the pipeline, but just in real life. And we can always kind of put blinders on and just pretend that it doesn't exist, which is what seems like is kind of happening.

But I also think that -- you know, I could just go down the list, because I was a laborer. I was the only female on a 60 man crew. And that was quite bizzarre. But I think some of the problems are that -- or some of the problems that the Commission and our Commission, I work for the Human Rights Commission, and the Legislators, and everybody needs to be concerned with this is this he said - she said stuff that you saw sitting right in front of you, you know, with the Department of Labor; and then you have a prime contractor; and then you have the sub; and then you have the union. And they're all saying oh well, you know, it's not really our responsibility, you know. We're really trying and we have the rules. And unfortunately legislation and project labor agreements and handshakes and things like that don't change minds; and they also don't change actions to a certain extent. And I think that one of the most important things to do is to break that -- the facility for them to just kind of pass the buck back and forth.

And I don't know, I -- and this is -- this perspective, is it only because of my, you know, work with the Commission; but it appears to me that once you start charging certain parties, then they start singing stories about the other person who they said, oh, gee, we don't know about them, you know, we don't have any authority over that. Like the one gentleman who told you that he didn't have any authority -- he didn't have any enforcement authority, right. And then when it got down to the bottom line, well, we kind of do, you know. Well, things like that I think are probably the most important things.

But I also think we, as women, and then of course because I'm the double minority -- minorities, need to accept some of the responsiblity for breaking the stereotype. I think that you have to get out there and show them that you are not equal, but just capable, that's all. That's all you have to do, you know. And I think that the stereotype is reinforced by a lot of women and/or minorities that are content to be either hired through a minority program or in the case of women get a couple of extra hours on their time sheets, you know, for sexual favors or something like that; or those who see these things happening and that don't come up and say something about them. You know, you're part of the problem if you're not part of the solution. So I think that kind of needs to be instilled in settings like this where we're sitting around talking about the things that have happened to us. But we're talking -- you know, who am I talking to now? A bunch of women, right, who have been -- who have experienced the same things that I have. And they know, and they can sit and nod; but, you know, if they're not telling someone else like their business agent look, I'm not going to put up with this at all. If you can't handle it here within the union, I'll see you in court. I think that's the only way that we can maybe stop some of the problems. And as Neil was saying, when you have -- when they know that you have the right you can't change their minds specifically, but at least then you do have something to hold up to them and say, well look, this says that you can't do that. You know, and I think that's partly our responsibility to make sure that that happens.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yes, Herb.

MR. BERKOWITZ: I don't quite share Neil's philosophy analogizing equal employment opportunity to paying your taxes; because I think that living up to your responsibilities in the equal employment opportunity area is something that a person ought to believe in and consider a moral obligation. I don't think a person ever need feel happy about paying their taxes.

MS. AIKEN: But -- excuse me, do you feel happier about driving on paved streets?

MR. BERKOWITZ: Well, I -- my problem in the testimony I've heard this morning was looking for some connection between all of the words that we were hearing and real human beings. And I'm still not sure that that connection was made. And as I'm sure you heard, there was an awful lot of saying that it's somebody else's responsibility to take charge.

MS. AIKEN: Right.

MR. BERKOWITZ: And I think what we're trying to do is be an obstacle to business as usual in that regard and demand positive commitments for somebody to be responsible and be answerable and to do something.

MS. AIKEN: Sure. That wasn't directed to me, was it?

UNIDENTIFIED VOICE: Was that a question?

MS. SCHUHMANN: Did you actually work out in a camp or were you working in Fairbanks?

MS. AIKEN: No, I worked for awhile as a security guard, the only black female north of the Yukon. And after having gone back to school for awhile, I then was dispatched as a laborer, the only black female -- and the only female at all -- in a 60 person crew -- 60 man crew.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Were the living conditions -- privacy, was that a problem where you were?

MS. AIKEN: Well, no, not the living conditions. We were the road crew so it was difficult to find a place to use the bathroom while you were working because you were out away from camp, you know; and you could either deal with the four-legged bears or the two-legged animals, you know, so... But, to me it wasn't that big of a problem, I guess, because I grew up with 8 brothers, and I, you know, just dealt with it. I just dealt with it. I made sure that -- because it was such a large crew, we also had kind of little core crews, also. And I made sure that I channeled myself to be in the crew -- at least by the crew that was really kind of doing the most work. And they liked me for that because I refused to, you know, just kind of kick back and let them do my work for me. I think they would have really hated me if I did something like that. Or probably just kind of started to find reasons to get rid of me or to bother me, I guess.

MS. SLAUGHTER: Were you hired out of this local here in town?

MS. AIKEN: Yes; Laborer's, yes.

MS. SLAUGHTER: Okay.

MS. AIKEN: Was, not anymore.

MS. SLAUGHTER: Was that right out of the Hall or was it a request?

MS. AIKEN: It was out of the Hall.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Do you have any recommendations either for construction contractors or for the labor unions or for us to follow up on to try to avoid any problems that you had to face when you were working in those positions?

MS. AIKEN: I think the main problem is making each entity responsible for number one, dealing with females and/or minorities. And when I say dealing with them, I mean have some person,or some agency, or some kind of internal process for that person to go to and make a complaint; you know, other than on a state or federal level, you know -- or than to wait 6 years and say well, gee, what happened, you know. I think that immediate response and immediate action is very necessary if only for the other people who are around to see that -- for the contractors and the unions to see that it won't be tolerated. And for the person who happens to be disadvantaged, or who may have been disadvantaged but scared to say anything; for them to see that they are going to actually do something; because that's the main reason why people don't say anything, you know. Because they figure well, gee, you know, I'm making a couple of grand a week, you know, I can kind of deal with it. Well, that may very well be true, but you shouldn't have to I don't think. But I think the main thing is to making each entity responsible and to have it spelled out in all these project labor agreements penalties for harassment, and to make sure that this is filtered down to the general labor pool; you know, like the general foreman and the individual craft foremen that may be from Tennessee or wherever, you know. A lot of them can't even read, so how are they going to know what's in the agreement. No, I'm just being facetious. But I think that they need to -- I think that people like the head of Northwest, Fluor-Northwest, or whoever, and all those guys, they know what things are against the law. But as he said well, gee, you know, I really don't know anything about the unions. Well, that sounds kind of weird to me, you know. This is your company; and you're dealing with the union; you don't know how they dispatch. Well, maybe you should, you know. So I think that each person needs to be -- each particular little segment needs to be responsible and that there needs to be some facility to deal with that, some responsive facility.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Mr. Berkowitz? Oh, Karen?

MS. PERDUE: I'd like to testify.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Oh, okay. (To Ms. Aiken) Thank you.

MS. AIKEN: Thank you.

MS. PERDUE: I'm Karen Perdue, P-e-r-d-u-e. And I live in Juneau now, and I hadn't planned to testify, but listening to Annette and some of these other ladies I thought I might do so. I worked on the oil line from -- I started in April of '75. I was a Teamster dispatched out of the 959 hall here. And I worked there for 2 -- I guess 2 construction seasons and started out as -- I guess April, '75 was pretty early. At the camp I was at on the Yukon River, there were really no other Teamsters or union women there when I got there. There were some bullcooks -- I guess there were some bullcooks, but there were no other Teamsters or Laborers, or so on.

I guess the point I want to make is in your dealings with the unions is that I really felt that in my personal experience that the union really protected me and other women I know that were in the Teamster craft. The abuse I saw was in the women who were not in the unions and who worked for management on the Alyeska project. The women who worked in the office who were getting paid $5 an hour to work on our paychecks, which I thought was a terrible job; and the women who were, you know, typing and everything. They were really subject to lots of abuse from men in terms of asking for extra special favors or so on and so forth. And if they didn't comply, I saw many of them that were gone; they were fired. But the stewards in my union more than once protected women that I know from problems. I know one particular case where a woman was attacked by a guy from -- literally attacked by a guy one evening. And the stewards from the 2 unions got together, and the guy was gone the next day from camp. So that, you know, the unions really did serve a good purpose in the sense that they protected us.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yes, Herb?

MR. BERKOWITZ: There was one particular union local that was mentioned by number about a hundred times before; but I think our record ought to reflect its name, which I am not sure I want to be technical.

MS. HURLEY: 798.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Is that the pipefitters or the welders?

MR. BERKOWITZ: It's the pipeliner's union based in Tulsa, Oklahoma, if I remember.

MR. THOMAS: Officially it's called Pipeliners 798 United Association.

MR. BERKOWITZ: From Tulsa?

MR. THOMAS: It's based in Tulsa. They did maintain an office in Fairbanks for some period during the pipeline. But it really wasn't a dispatching office.

MS. PERDUE: They were a different union. The Team -- I really only talking, I guess, about the Teamsters because that was the only union I worked in. So I wouldn't -- The 798ers were a different breed of union.

MR. BERKOWITZ: My understanding is that 798, for some reason or another, has worldwide jurisdiction over all pipelines built anywhere that involved American contractors, which is extraordinary when you think about it. So Tulsa, Oklahoma, in that sense, rules the world.

MS. SLAUGHTER: There's a frightening thought. It is.

MS. PERDUE: Yeah, it is. And another thing I would just add as a suggestion. I don't know by law how this is governed or jurisdicted or whatever, but some unions had different kinds of hiring procedures than others, and that often created a barrier. For instance, I know that in the Teamsters Union it's all -- most of the hiring, except by request, is done by out of work date so that there are calls at the hall, and it's a fairly open process. With some unions to go up to a window and you ask the dispatcher what have you got today. Well, if the dispatcher doesn't care for you or if, you know, something's gone wrong or something he can say, you know -- he or she can say I'm sorry, but we don't have anything in that particular area for you today. So I think some unions were -- because probably of their size and their volume were more open in that sense than others.

MS. DALE: Open for discrimination or to be able to discriminate?

MS. PERDUE: Yeah, right; right.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yes, Herb?

MR. BERKOWITZ: If I hear what you're saying, what you're saying is that there are unions and unions; and you can't paint them all with the same brush. Where do you think we ought to turn to get good information concerning, you know, where problems exist and where they don't exist in terms of the various unions that are likely to be involved?

MS. PERDUE: I don't know. I have no idea. I guess everyone has their own personal experience, that makes it kind of tough to compile a record. I don't know if anyone has ever really taken the time to really try to publicize a large -- get together a large group of people who worked in various unions throughout the State during the line and ask them -- kind of compile a sense of their history and then get a sense of how a union has operated. You know, some unions there are a lot of complaints against; and some unions there may not be so many complaints against. I don't know. I guess I don't have an answer.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you. Rebecca, were you going to respond?

MS. MILLER: I just wanted to suggest, Madame Chairman -- oh, I don't like the hotseat (indiscernible). I just wanted to suggest, Madame Chairman, that there is a considerable amount of information available locally about unions, and the unions that are looking at trying to get females and minorities into their programs. And I would suggest that you deal with people like the CETA Division. And I think there's a lot of information with dealings that we had during the oil line on pipeline impact money. We have had a lot of dealings with them in the past few years on pre-apprenticeship programs. I think that there's a lot of homework that you as a Commission need to address yourself to before you even approach a union about why are certain tests required and why are they valid as opposed to other unions' practices. But I would suggest that there is a wealth of information available through apprenticeship outreach, which is now housed under HREI in Achorage. I believe Pat Smutz (ph) is the person in charge of that, Madame Chairman. And I know that your Executive Director is very (inaudible) with Lois Lind (ph) the Director of the CETA Division, who I'm sure will be very happy to provide that information to you.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you. That was Rebecca Miller, for the record. She's Operations Manager, CETA Division here in Fairbanks, Department of Community and Regional Affairs.

MS. SLAUGHTER: Before you get too comfortable again, can you do some explaining about the Step Program and this hopefully soon-to-be-introduced piece of legislation regarding training programs?

COURT REPORTER: Excuse me, would you step up to the microphone.

MS. MILLER: Carla, I think that issue is a lengthy issue, and I would be pleased to address it tomorrow if I may. I am running late for an appointment that I have at 4:45 that I put off so that I could attend the meetings today. If you would like, I would make it a point to be here to answer any of those concerns you may have tomorrow; or I would be happy to address a meeting with you later this evening or early in the morning.

MS. HURLEY: Do you have to leave right now?

MS. MILLER: I have a meeting at 4:45, and it takes me about 5 minutes. I can just cover it very lightly if you wish, but I wouldn't have time to entertain a lot of questions. And I'm sure you're going to have them.

MS. HURLEY: I think that would -- that's about what we need, I think.

MS. SLAUGHTER: Well, I don't know if it'd be okay because I've never heard of it.

MS. MILLER: Okay, a quick and dirty (ph) analysis. The Department of Community and Regional Affairs has been contacted by several legislators on a draft bill. And as I know, Carla, it has not been introduced. There was talk it would be introduced today. I have later heard that it's not going to be introduced until Monday. The intent behind that program is a local hire economic development package. I think you heard that alluded to earlier today. The gentleman who drafted the residency requirements for that bill is a gentleman who argued the residency before the Supreme Court under the Zobel Case. It is an attempt to employ native Alaskans, and I do not want that interpreted as Alaska natives, but native Alaskans and residents of Alaska in private enterprise wherever possible. It's a complimentary package to the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act, which has been primarily during the past few years, publicly oriented. It is not designed to take away anything from the CETA Act. It is designed primarily to serve a segment of the population that we feel is under-represented.

MS. SLAUGHTER: And that would be in the private sector, then, as opposed to public employment, I see.

MS. MILLER: It is geared towards the private sector, as I understand it.

MS. SLAUGHTER: Okay.

MS. MILLER: The last draft I saw was a third draft and that was last month. So the Lord only knows how many times it's changed, Carla.

MS. SLAUGHTER: Okay.

MS. MILLER: My understanding was it was clearly the intent of the drafters of the bill to aim that at the private profit sector wherever possible. And if, in fact, it was felt that a public sector bill was needed that the funds would be restricted to no more than 25 percent in the public nonprofit sector. That's at least my understanding. I don't know what you have in front of you.

MS. SLAUGHTER: Okay. Thanks.

MS. MILLER: Dirty enough?

MS. SLAUGHTER: I think so.

MS. HURLEY: Thank you.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you.

MR. WOODS: My name is Jerry Woods. I'm with the Alaska State Commission for Human Rights in Anchorage. I am the Assistant Director of Rural Programs. And I think that's basically what I want to emphasize to your Commission is that through my travels during the last 3 months I've had the opportunity at firsthand to go through and assess and identify some of the major concerns and needs of individuals in rural Alaska, including those that are being faced by women.

I have two examples that I would like to bring to your attention; and I'm sure that you're aware of. This is in Dillingham and then in Bethel during the oil -- construction of the oil line. There were, if any, hardly anyone there represented during the construction doing the actual work. And even today, when you travel to those different localities, you will note that there aren't any union representation there. And that is a major problem that people out in the bush are concerned with and are making efforts to try to get representation so that when the actual construction of the gas line occurs that they will have an opportunity to also enjoy some of the benefits of the gas line. So I think because some of these people are not able to come into Fairbanks to make this testimony, I would like to at least make that -- emphasize that. And if there are any questions that maybe I might be able to answer concerning that. I know in Dillingham, through the Bristol Bay Native Association, they've had several people from Dillingham and the surrounding villages come in to complain, basically, that although there is construction work going on in those localities, most of that work is union. And, therefore, although they may be qualified, because they are not members of a union, they cannot obtain jobs.

In Bethel, another example is there is a lot of different federal and state contracts being awarded there for different serves. And at one point there could have been maybe 700 workers during the peak of construction and no female representation. So I think that in your role to contact the unions that if there's any information or any assistance that perhaps the people from rural communities can give in support of your attempt, that through my program and also those individuals that are located out there who are working on the same thing, if there's some type of coordination on this I think that would be extremely helpful.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Any questions?

MR. WOODS: That's all I wanted to mention.

MS. SLAUGHTER: Thank you.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you, very much. Oh, did you have one?

MS. SOCKPEALUK: I don't have a question, but the type of situation you just gave, it was going to happen in Shaktoolik, but the -- our mayor told the contractor that he had to hire a certain amount of the village people. And it was okay, he did have union people working.

MR. WOODS: Sometimes it is successful. Other times, though, you'll find that it isn't. And, you know, again like in communities like Bethel and Dillingham I know that they've had a terrible time getting qualified females to work in the construction trade. And I found that very surprising because prior to the rural program and traveling over there, I hadn't been really aware of the fact that there was hardly any representation from the Dillingham or the Bethel region when it came to the construction of the oil pipeline. And even at this time now, there isn't any union representation over there. But I think at this time there's some planning being taken here to work toward getting that type of concern resolved.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you.

MR. WOODS: Thank you.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yes.

MS. McNEIL: My name is Pat McNeil, M-c-N-e-i-l.

MS. SLAUGHTER: You have an awfully soft voice.

MS. McNEIL: My mailing address is 3805 Indianna, Anchorage. I worked on the pipeline during '76-'77 at Pump Station 8, and I got my training through the Teamsters; and we were sponsored by Cook Inlet Native Association. And I worked at Pump Station 8, right down the road here. And the only -- it was generally a positive experience all around. I didn't really have any problems, you know, other than adjusting to working with 600 men in a construction yard every day.

MS. SLAUGHTER: That's a fair adjustment.

MS. McNEIL: I just hadn't experienced that before. It took a little while to get used to working with men all the time. But generally they were pretty good guys; all those red necks aren't that bad. I learned about out there. I learned a lot about construction in general. I worked as a tech engineer in the Teamsters. We did the layout for all the other crews. We told them where to put things, you know, how high to put the pipe and center line and things like that. And the only thing that I see wrong with the unions is their hiring hall procedure in that when there's not too many jobs available, usually it goes by name request, which means that no one can bid on it. You can't -- even if you have an A card and you're at the top of the list you won't necessarily get a job because of the way they request it. I talked to the business agent about it and he said well, actually the only thing -- the only way you could get a job during the slack season is if you know someone who owns the company, and then they can request you; or if your parents own a company then they have, in the hiring hall agreement, they have provisions whereby people can be requested if they're nephews or somehow related to someone who owns the company. This is just with the Teamsters, so I'm not really sure about how the other unions operate.

Most of the women that I worked with were native. There were 7 women in the yard and 5 of us were native women. I was hired by a special provision whereby 1 out of 4 calls out of the Teamsters were native to make up for a disparity where -- because there was an out of court settlement between the Teamsters and an individual who had filed a suit against them because of their procedures; natives weren't given the opportunity to get jobs. Otherwise, I probably would have gotten a job on the pipeline. But once I did start working and adjusted to, they pretty much accept you if you do the job, they really-- if you perform everyday and show up. But there's really not much, you know, they can do about taking a job away. And I was laid off when we just ran out of work. There was just no more work for us to do. But I enjoyed construction. It's good work.

MS. SLAUGHTER: Do you know if there's a provision in the hiring hall agreement that a certain percentage of the calls have to be open calls; there can't be a preponderance of request calls?

MS. McNEIL: Not that I'm aware of. Sometimes all they are is requests.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Herb?

MR. BERKOWITZ: How did you find out about the job in the first place?

MS. McNEIL: Cook Inlet Native Association was training natives in different areas in construction. And I was just looking into what was available and a surveying program was started. And so I just signed up for it. And we were going to the University of Alaska; we had 4 party chiefs who actually conducted the class. And we got credit through the University, also.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Are you still on the -- are you still enrolled with the union or did you drop out?

MS. McNEIL: No, I'm not working with them now. They're just -- after a certain period of time you just lose your A card if you don't work over -- you have to have so many hundred hours in to maintain your A card. And I think that's the problem that a lot of people have with the unions, you know, why keep paying your dues if there's no jobs. So subsequently a lot of people, you know, drop out. Especially if you don't have that much money to begin with.

MS. SLAUGHTER: Did you say this statistic-- I'm sorry, the statistic was 1 out of every 4?

MS. McNEIL: Yeah, it was a special agreement during the pipeline.

MS. SLAUGHTER: Okay. Was there any agreement that those people had to be one -- that they had to be male or female, or just --

MS. McNEIL: Just native.

MS. SLAUGHTER: -- Alaska Native, okay.

MS. McNEIL: It was administered through the Alaska Federal of Natives.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you very much. Is there anyone else that -- yes, please come forward.

MS. DEAN: My name is Shirley Dean, and I'm currently an A card holder at the Laborer's 942. And I worked on the pipeline during 1975-'76. And it was basically a negative experience for me. I came up from Ketchikan, I was born in Ketchikan, with high hopes of working on the pipeline. So I moved to Fairbanks which was where they said you could get a job. It took me about a year and a half to get out. And during the course of that, I saw women who had to sleep with the dispatcher so they could get out. Certain people that weren't citizens, even American citizens, that would pay the dispatcher anywhere from a thousand to two thousand, they could get out. And so a group of us from southeast started getting excited about that and we complained and got threatened to get thrown out of the union; so we didn't complain anymore. We all finally got out. And I don't know. I had a real hard time up there. And the only thing I see as a suggestion -- 798ers were terrible up there. They were violent. I was at Happy Valley and they were so bad that 798ers had to eat at a separate time. They weren't allowed with the regular people because of all of the violent situations. And it was real hard. I know of 2 people that worked as laborers for 798ers, and it was -- and they were both males, and they couldn't stick it out.

I guess the main suggestion I would have is for next time to see a task force possibly appointed by your Commission that would be nonunion, nonconstruction person where you could feel safe to go make a complaint, where you wouldn't get thrown out of the union, and the construction company couldn't come down on you in some fashion. That was the problem we had where I was, the union job steward who was supposed to be responsible for that, when you would complain to him if you were a woman, you had to do a sexual favor before it would come to town, your complaint. And when you're first hired, you have to put in -- I forget what it is, it's several thousand hours, which makes you stay up there 12 weeks without coming back to town. And if you don't stay up there, you won't get on the A list so you'll never get another job again. So it's kind of like being in jail for 12 weeks. And I would really like to see a task force up there, because there was lots of violence. Lots of it was never reported. There's still people running around with scars, I being one just from the experience up there. And I think that would help.

I think the other thing that would help is to deal with the unions, and to let the unions know that there's a lot of corruption. I think people would testify if they would feel safe about that, and that this time around Alaska won't tolerate it.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Shirley, could you spell your last name for the record and give us some mailing address?

MS. DEAN: D-e-a-n, and it's Box 2541, Fairbanks.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yes, Dorothy?

MS. JONES: We would welcome anonymous statements from people who had experience--

MS. DEAN: You would? I was going to ask you about that. I've been talking -- I'm on -- I'm an A list holder right now. And I've been trying to get out -- I'm responsible for 2 children. One of the main problems with that union is if you have any children the -- especially if you're a women, they want you to go out in the camps. And local jobs have been available,and I've never been able to get them because they give preference to males who they say have a family and should stay in town. And I don't know how to stop that, you know, but I think it should be stopped. And the other thing is I worked for Ken Brady Insurance -- I mean Ken Brady (ph)

Construction Company last year on a short call to get my hours in. And when I went there, they told me that I was the second woman that had been on that job, it's the new bank building downtown. And the only reason they hired me -- they made it sound like it was a full time job, and I lasted 4 days to meet the EEOC requirement, then they let you go. And then on the stats it says yeah, there were 2 women weren't there. In reality, there were 2 women that worked a total of 8 days on a local project.

MS. JONES: Well, I'd like to understand that point, that it is difficult if you're a card holder to -- you jeopardize your job if you speak out, but that if we received a sufficient number of anonymous --

MS. DEAN: Yeah, well see, there's never been a safe outlet that I know of. And I've talked to lots of people at the union with similar problems, both male and female, both minorities and white, that -- you know, especially if it's your life line, if that's your support system, it's real hard for people to come forward and say things against the union. The union's a real powerful thing, and they can do terrorizing mind trips as well as physical abuse. And I think people are scared.

MS. JONES: Could you -- when you mentioned the violence, is that primarily -- I would assume it's primarily violence between men because so many of the workers are men, or is there a considerable violence against women, too?

MS. DEAN: Men and women. The camp I was at, one incident that I can testify to was there was a woman who was brutally gang raped by 4 798ers at our camp. And what they did is they called the police, but those 4 were never taken to court. All they did was switch then to another camp, which, you know -- that woman will never be the same. And there was 16 people, 798ers, in there eating dinner when it happened, and not one person tried to stop them. You know, but there were only 4 of them transferred. The rest of those 16 stayed at the camp. That was one of the reasons they separated the meal times is because there was a lot of outrage about that.

But, I don't know, it was ugly. And I don't want to see it happen again. I think it ruined a lot of lives. And there was gambling, you were -- especially if you were a woman, if you didn't go to their dances, their social dances, and you didn't participate in their social activities that the Alyeska Recreation Director had set up, then they sort of thought you were wierd and harass you. The other thing they did to the women in the camp I was at is they would have the women live in the barracks with the supervisors. You didn't live with the other workers. They had an A camp and a B camp, and the women lived with the supervisors, all the men crew foremen, which put a lot of pressure -- because then you'd have to see them after hours; and you know, they would threaten you with their your job, or you would have to do a tacky job if you didn't go to the dance or whatever. You know, I don't think it's proper that the women have to live in the same dorm with the supervisors. You know, it was like the supervisor's gratuity or something, I don't know.

MS. SLAUGHTER: Was there a problem in the housing in that there really wasn't much privacy afforded? When you locked your room door -- well, first of all, could you lock your room door?

MS. DEAN: You could lock it, but all the... what were they called, with the Culinary Union?

MR. BERKOWITZ: Bullcooks.

MS. DEAN: Yeah, the bullcooks, they had a key.

MS. SLAUGHTER: Were they men for the most part, or female?

MS. DEAN: Men and women. But, I mean, several times my room was opened up by the bullcook. I worked night shift, so he would come in on day shift and decide he wanted to socialize, and it was real hard to throw him out and make much complaint. He did stop doing it just because he turned out to be a human. But, I mean, it could have went the other way.

MS. SLAUGHTER: Were the security people in the camp employed by whom? By the construction company?

MS. DEAN: The camp I was at the security was done by Wackenhut. Some of the camps, the security was done by Nenana (sic).

MS. SLAUGHTER: Did they seem reluctant to respond to things? I mean -- in other words, did they have the same kind of problem that Laborers and Teamster employees in the camp had, that if they reported problems; they created trouble; that they might lose their positions?

MS. DEAN: Um-hm, and if they reported certain things on certain people, like when they would wreck vehicles -- when the supervisor would get drunk and wreck a vehicle, and they would send someone out to bury it with a Cat. If the security guard tried to report an incident like that, the security guard would get sent back to town, not the guy who wrecked the truck or the guy who buried it with the Cat.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Why didn't the State Troopers get involved in --

MS. DEAN: The State Troopers would come, but by the time they would get there, people already had their stories. And basically, the 2 women I know who were raped, the guys were never charged and all that happened was they were transferred camps and never allowed to come to the camp again.

MS. JONES: Did the women file complaints?

MS. DEAN: I don't know if they did or not. They were in so much trauma at that time... I think they felt helpless, too, because there was no safe place to go. I mean, nothing felt safe. And you're so many miles away from everybody. And like I, myself, you know, you've given up a lot to get up there and just the determination to stay your 12 weeks to make the A list gets you crazy after awhile and you sort of lose perspective. The Troopers were there, but I think there needs to be official law enforcement, not just security next time. Private sector police can get too corrupt, and I think they did. And I think the union perpetrates that. The union -- Laborer's union hires the security guards. And I went through an experience myself, because that's my background and my original -- what I originally wanted to do on the pipeline was be a security guard, and that's hired through the Laborers. And they're real tied together. And I don't think it's a proper policing.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Herb?

MR. BERKOWITZ: Based on your experience, do you think that we should pay special attention to 798 in terms of its role in the pipeline?

MS. DEAN: Definitely.

MS. JONES: What should we do?

MS. DEAN: I don't know. I don't know what you can do other than have a -- I think there needs to be a safe place for all people to be able to report ugly incidents where they know that action will happen, where they know that if a 798er does something like that that, you know, there will be criminal action without repercussion of them losing their job or whatever. And they did keep them in a separate dorm, that's essential. They would only allow them out during times when we weren't out. I mean, it was a real separatist thing.

MS. SLAUGHTER: But, you know, it was also preferential, and it's completely inequitable and unfair --

MS. DEAN: Exactly, they got the food first --

UNIDENTIFIED VOICE: That's why they did it.

MS. DEAN: Yeah, they got the food first.

MS. SLAUGHTER: Like naughty children.

MS. DEAN: You know, and they got to dance; they would have private dances. It was awful, it really was. And for the most part, most of them were pretty ugly humans, you know. I can't say all of them were, but the ones I saw it was terrible.

MS. ANDER: The young ones. The older men were real nice.

MS. DEAN: Some of them. But I don't know, I think the other condition for women is somehow that the living condition, that you don't have to live with the supervisors. That's a real hard thing. And the men never had to do that. And it was --

MS. SLAUGHTER: Did that happen because they didn't have --

MS. DEAN: I don't know. I was at Happy Valley. I don't know if every camp was like that, but I know it was like that there.

MS. SLAUGHTER: Well, what I mean was was there no other place for the women to live, so they put them in with the supervisors?

MS. DEAN: Oh no, there were lots of dorms. I think it was like a treat for the supervisors because they got to watch the women go to the shower; and they were always hanging out in the hall; and, you know, they would be next door to you so you could --

MS. SLAUGHTER: Yeah, bonuses.

MS. DEAN: Yeah. And I think also there should be nonunion people up there to head count the camps to insure of EEOC compliance. And the other thing is the unions with their training programs, right now they have an age limit which is 26 with most of the unions; and I'm too old right now. I mean, most people are too old to get in. And the other reality -- I listened to the testimony this morning, and he said the peak -- or the gas line, the peak was going to be 2,000 laborers; and right now there's 2,480 laborers on the A list in Fairbanks. So, you know, I think it's real grim for anyone to think that they can get out on this line if it's all going to be union; because they're telling our B list members that they're not going to get out. And I don't know how to change that other than possibly -- I would like to see if they can't comply within the membership that nonunion people, nonunion minorities and women be allowed to get the training and go up and join the union after they get up there. Otherwise, I don't see how they're ever going to get up there.

MS. SLAUGHTER: What kind of calls come out of the Laborer's hall? When was the last...

MS. DEAN: Lately it depends -- I haven't been to call in 3 or 4 months, but I go in and check in once in a while. They're mostly request calls like that one testimony. Laborer's operates the same way, and I've been trying for 2 years to get a local job because of kids. And -- well, they said one day that no -- women have to go to the camps, we prefer the women in the camps and the men in town. And I asked what I could do about that, and there's really nothing you can do about that because it's preferential. If they want to request you they can. Union rules say you could be requested.

MS. SCHUHMANN: They meaning...?

MS. DEAN: The company.

MS. SLAUGHTER: Contractor.

MS. DEAN: Contractor.

MS. SCHUHMANN: The companies like the women out in the camps rather than in town?

MS. DEAN: Yes. Well, yeah, for obvious reasons. And that's what I was told. You know, they really don't want you to have a family life and be a union person and work in town. They try to discourage that. I don't know, I just -- I guess I'm sort of prejudiced, anyway, because I see the unions as getting so corrupt and I don't know of a way to stop them. And I see them getting huge billion dollar contracts like this, and I just think it's going to get worse before it gets better unless people take a hard core stand, you know, to stop the corruptness. Because there were lots of people that couldn't even speak English on laborer crews from Yugoslavia and all over. And they got out there because they had enough cash to give the dispatcher. And they would tell you about it not knowing that, you know, that there was something wrong with that when they first went there.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yes, Dorothy?

MS. JONES: I don't understand the role of the State Pipeline Coordinator or the Federal Pipeline Coordinator, but do they have any responsibility -- I'm asking this question to anyone how knows -- for looking into some of the issues that you've raised, the violence, the crime, and the discrimination?

MS. DEAN: I don't know.

MS. JONES: I mean, what are they coordinating?

MS. DEAN: The only one I know is when there's 2 investigators -- if you remember a few years ago when the Teamsters -- those 2 guys were killed, 2 investigators that I know of tried to solve that and have disappeared. I mean, it's heavy. And nobody's really looking at it seriously, and nobody that knows enough about unions is going to do that unless they're assured some sort of safety into stopping corruption in unions. And I don't know, I don't think Northwest takes it that serious. So I don't know what the solution is, but I hope it gets better next time.

MS. JONES: But you know what the problems are.

MS. DEAN: Yeah.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Okay, thank you.

MS. DEAN: Sure.

UNIDENTIFIED VOICE: When you said what you did about those people watching you go to the shower, were you saying that you didn't have private washroom facilities?

MS. DEAN: Oh no, you do have private washrooms, but there's like a little curtain there. (Inaudible, away from microphone).

MS. HURLEY: She can't get that.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Oh, could you...

MS. HURLEY: Come back to answer that, and the question, too. She couldn't get that.

MS. DEAN: There's 3 different bathrooms; in the camp I was at, there were 3 different bathrooms. Two of them were for men and women, and all there was was a shower curtain. And that was for the couples that lived together. I don't know, for the supervisor's benefit. But if you got stuck in that shower, you were subject to having the curtain ripped open at any time unless you had a friend standing there while you took a shower. The other ones, they had doors on them, but one was women only, which was -- and that was the only bathroom people tried to use. But on both sides of that bathroom, there was the head supervisor on one side, and the other supervisor on the other side playing loud music and sticking their speakers around by the doors, you know, trying to get the women to come to parties.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Any other testimony? Yes.

MS. LANGAN: My name is Mary Langan (ph), and I worked on the pipeline between '76 and '78. I went out 5 times to 5 different camps, and I worked a total of just about 3 months. So I think I have kind of an overview. I went out in -- I tried to get out for a year and a half, the 3 unions. I finally got out with the Laborer's, who I felt were the fairest to women. I had a chance to go out through the Culinary if I had paid the guy a few hundred dollars, and I would have but I didn't know that's what he wanted. That was explained to me later. And I worked with the National Organization for Women a year as chairman of our employment task force in '74 trying to help women get better jobs in construction, being one of them.

I'm a freelance writer, and I'm working on a book about my pipeline experience, which I finally got a chapter finished recently. And I know there were a lot of women up there, and a lot of women were writing, but I have yet to see a report written of the woman's viewpoint, and I want to hopefully be the first to get it done.

What I came here to say today, first I think your Commision -- it would be more helpful to the public if you could have your meetings at a time when more people could come. I had to ask to get off work a half hour early, and I wouldn't have been able to do it except we had a very slow day. To stop at 5 o'clock, if you really want to reach the public, it's not realistic to reach working women.

The main thing I wanted to say, I found on the pipeline going out there -- 41 years old, never having done heavy work before, I worked in my camp with a woman in her 60's. She was doing Culinary in the kitchen. Another time there was a woman in her 70's, and a lot of younger women. And I didn't see any problem in doing the work for any of us. The work in construction today is mainly handling tools. The heavy work is done by machine. There is no reason the average woman couldn't do any job out there, or a majority of the jobs. There are still a few guys that like to lift a hundred, two hundred pounds to show off, but that's not required and most of them don't do it. And I think the main problem in helping women get these better paying jobs is in recruiting them and making them, in their own heads, want the jobs, making them realize they can do it, that it isn't a disgrace to do a man's work. A lot of the women I talked to and ladies I've talked to, there was a Teamster organizer, the problem is in their own heads. I think the job of the Commission -- what you might -- could do to help women is to do public relations work to show more women doing this work, so it becomes public accepted in the minds of the women who most need these better jobs.

And the second thing, what was it; two items... Well, sitting here listening to the other ladies' testimony, I was also at Happy Valley for 6 weeks in '77. The job was winding down there, but there were still quite a few pipeliners, 798ers. I didn't have at all the impression that she had. I'm not saying those things didn't happen. Oh, I know the second thing I wanted to say, yeah, what women have to learn -- this is my personal opinion, I may be wrong, but I think part of the problem some of the ladies had up there, and I know there were some, but I didn't see any personally -- the problem that women have to overcome is acting, and thinking, and dressing feminine as geishas. And I think we were all taught that since we were young. I learned previously to the pipeline working with men that it was to my advantage to act very unfeminine, to dress unfeminine, to blend in and look and act as much like a man as I could. And I think it helped me, because I never had any problems with men anymore than I'd have here in town.

I was in barracks half the time where we shared the bathrooms, we had just the curtain over the shower. Nobody ever bothered me, and I never saw another woman bothered. I worked in billeting one job up there, and I think the reason they put the women in with the supervisors is because they were men of more education and background that would more likely accept a woman in these traditionally male roles. And I never saw anybody enjoying the women going to the shower any more than they enjoy women walking down the isle at church. Men like to look at women. And I really didn't get that impression. It was the best opportunity I ever had to work and make money on a short term without a lot of training. And the union was good to me. And it was corrupt, yeah, but everything's corrupt, what isn't. I've seen corruption in government, private industry, and everywhere. But I do think women need to be educated and taught in these kind of jobs to dress like men do. Men could dress sexy, too. Men have dressed in history sexy and with tights and satin and showing themselves off, but they don't on those jobs. They wear dark clothes, they cut their hair. The Roundheads did that in England against the Cavaliers, who were fancy and frilly and liked to sit around drinking and writing poetry. If you want to go to the construction world, I think you'll have to dress and act like a man. Otherwise, you insult them and you tease them and they get angry, and then they lash back, which is what is happening. A lot of this lashback, anyway, even under the best of circumstances, the men are confused and don't understand what's happening, and the world is changing; and they hate women for it. So that a double effort to educate the women to want to have these better jobs, and then how to fit into them; that you can't fit in there and be feminine and be accepted. You have to -- when I came back, I was so into this trip of being masculine and tough a lot of my friends didn't recognize me. It took me almost a year to get back into being a little feminine so I could enjoy some of the social benefits. But I think it was very important and protected me from having any problem. And I think a lot of girls did have a problem, especially the younger ones, which would be natural. But I think a lot of it they could have prevented had they -- and I talked to some of them about it. And they said I'm not going to change and not wear a t-shirt just because I've got breasts, that's not my fault; and you know, they could have worn a jacket, but they wouldn't. And I think it's important that they have to realize -- I think psychologically a lot of these rape problems are caused by the type of personality of the woman who gets raped. She's helpless, and seductive, and she gets it. And if you're independent, and they know you're going to maybe kill them before they rape you, they don't want to attempt it. And I've found all over the world I've never been bothered, New York City, in Italy. I've had some good times and enjoy meeting men, but no one has ever threatened me.

MS. SLAUGHTER: Mary, are you talking more about projecting and attitude?

MS. LANGAN: A projection of -- I think women have to change their whole personalities, change in their heads. And I think it's very important, and nothing will progress unless it first happens in the women's heads. And I've worked in this thing for 10 years thinking very seriously about feminism and having experience working with men, and having problems in filing discrimination suits, and working NOW and WIC. And I think that's where the Commission-- I've seen Commissions come and go, and people come and go, and nothing changes, and we all know that. And it's infuriating. Until we start saying like the blacks started saying, black is beautiful and standing up in their Afros -- and I remember when that happened in 1969 the first Afro I saw, I was amazed. And the little girl that wore it, the young lady, they started standing up and being proud of themselves and knowing what they could do. And they wouldn't step off the sidewalk for anyone anymore. And since then I think they've made a lot of gains. And until women start saying hey, I am woman, I can do anything; nothing's going to change. Until the Commission can help them do that, somehow promote those things, promote the public relation, promote the education, the little young girls, the ones on the pipeline, set up a hotline to call -- to be reported, anonymous reports of situations. I think that would help.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you very much. I might say as to the time of the meeting that we had discussed trying to have it on a Saturday. And we discovered that to try to get the governmental people that were here this morning, that it would have practically been impossible to have this type of meeting over a weekend. And so we knew--you know, we always try to have at least one day of our meeting on a weekend, which we're going to do tomorrow, to try to get people that work to, you know, at least have an opportunity to be at our meetings.

I might also add that I don't think that the Commission totally shares your view particularly on rapte and the causes of rape. And I want the record to be clear on that. But we do appreciate your comments.

MS. LANGAN: One of the ladies -- did you want to ask a question?

MS. JONES: I think Barbara just said it. You used an analogy about when blacks got some pride in who they were that it produced some changes. One of the things I as a woman is prideful about is my body. And I don't believe that if I feel like revealing my body in a t-shirt that that excuses any man from treating me like a sex object. And I have very strong feelings about that, that the onus is on the male; not on the women because she happens to have breasts. I mean, it's like saying men are animals and if they see a breast they go crazy.

MS. LANGAN: Well, I'm talking about a situation like that lady on the pipeline camp that was gang raped by 4 men. I'm sure that happened, and I don't know the situation, but I'm suspecting that having seen those guys and talked to them, and had similar experiences myself, not to the degree of rape, but just knowing the mentality. I agree with how your -- where you're at. But all I'm saying is when you're going into construction, there are a lot of uneducated men. As was said to me one time when a whole bunch of guys got up and walked away from a table I was sitting at because I said some feminist thing I thought was perfectly innocent. And I couldn't understand. And one of the girls said to me, Mary, you're not on the frontiers of social development here. These guys haven't even heard of the things you're talking about, see. When you're going to be working in construction, you have to see where they're at just to protect yourself. And you can come back and come out of your cocoon and be your real self when you get into town where you're not going to be gang raped because you're isolated; that's all I was saying. And until women realize that, it's fine to be -- but the realities of how it is with a certain type of person when you're isolated, until they realize that, they're going to be gang raped. And once it happens to you, then you might change your mind and the next time not wear a t-shirt; or you drop out of construction completely, which is too bad because it doesn't have to be if you play by their rules because it's their game. And enough women get out there -- that's what I'm saying about the recruitment. I saw a lot of improvements. I heard the Alyeska men report they didn't have the problems they expected and they had a lot of benefits from the women in the camps, better morale, cleanliness, probably less fighting than there was before. But get more women out there, I think it will change and it will help in construction. It will the safety, it will the injury. Women are more demanding of the safety standards. But until you get them out there--the biggest problem in the pipeline that I found in talking to the unions, the women didn't come in. They didn't want to go. If enough of them had stood, they would have had to take them. It's hard to recruit them; they didn't want to. And then we could play by our rules, not their rules. That's all I was saying.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you.

MS. ANDER: Could I just say one more thing?

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yes. Could you come up and identify yourself again, so that we have it on the record.

MS. ANDER: I'm Karen Ander from Homer, Alaska. And in regards to the union policy of making -- of dispatching people by request, it's my understanding that they only do so if that person who is requested has worked for that particular contractor before. And I've -- I know personally of an instance where a friend of mine was -- he'd worked for a contractor for one particular -- let's see, what am I trying to say. One guy was an engineer on a project with one contractor. This engineer went to another contractor. And they needed qualified surveyors, and he knew of my friend. And he tried to get him requested onto the job. But because my friend had not worked for that contractor before, the union would not dispatch him on request. And so they had to put it open call, and the call went to somebody else.

MS. SLAUGHTER: That was my concern. I know some of the women who go to the Labor hall here fairly regularly. And the problem lately has been an incredible preponderance of request calls. And what I was trying to get at was if jobs are so scarce, if opportunities are almost nil, why can't the unions tell the contractors no, we're going to put it through as an open call; not a request call so people have an opportunity to bid on a job, depending on what their number is.

MS. ANDER: Um-hm. They will defend the right of the contractor to rehire people that they felt were good workers. And that's generally when they will request somebody back, is if they've been -- if they had to take a layoff for a couple of weeks or a month, and then the work picked up again. They'll want to hire those people back so that they have their former crews if they know that it was a good crew. And that's what the union would tell you, you know, and me. And that's all I know about it, and that one incident. That's all. I'm just saying how the Teamsters run that.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you. Is there anyone else that would like to testify?

MS. WIKE: I have a question.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Yes.

MS. WIKE: Do you want me to come up there, it's just a quick one. It seems to me like there's been a lot of psychological mixups that have been going on in projects of that size. I know that when I discussed it with lots of people that had worked on the oil line in the pre-construction and afterwards, that there were a lot of families split up; a lot of people from just the isolation of being in camps and that got goosey, you know, just from not being in with civilization. Is there any provision in camps or is there any testing being done -- you know, they test conservation of the soil, and the animals (indiscernible) but I mean, as to human beings, is there any testing done or results or research done on what happens to human beings? What's going on? I mean, there has been just enormous upheaval and it doesn't stop with the one project. It goes through broken families on down, you know.

MS. JONES: If I can answer that.

MS. SCHUHMAN: Um-hm, Dorothy.

MS. JONES: I can't recall the name of the organization, but there is an organization that was set up by the pipeline companies in Anchorage to deal with the emotional problems that resulted from stress from pipeline jobs. Does that.... ?

UNIDENTIFIED VOICE: Is there a study?

MS. SCHUHMANN: Is there a study, Dorothy, or was it just more of a service organization.

MS. JONES: I wrote a proposal, but they didn't fund it.

MS. DALE: What's the guy -- Behlke --

MS. SCHUHMANN: Chuck Behlke.

MS. DALE: -- Chuck Behlke, who was here today, the State Pipeline Coordinator, was talking about and I was asking him, talking about the socio-economic impact plan that's being negotiated right now. And after it's negotiated, then they'll get public input. So be on the lookout for that so that you can -- you know, you can go in and -- and apparently they were talking about impact centers that would be where people could go if they had been impacted.

MS. SCHUHMAN: Yes, sir

MR. FINEBERG: I don't want to take up much of your time. My name is Richard Fineberg. I've been a freelance reporter, and had a chance to watch the oil pipeline at great length. And I think that as a Commission, I was -- I think that you should be aware of the size of the audience and the makeup. When the first female testimony from the camps came at about 3:10, Cathy Carr-Lundfeldts -- I think I have my notes of who had already departed--Behlke, Alexander, and Kuhn I think heard a part of Neil Thomas. But they did not hear Cathy Carr-Lundfeldt. From there -- well, I think that you see the composition.

MS. SLAUGHTER: Um-hm.

MS. SCHUHMANN: Thank you.

MS. DALE: Thank you very much. That's important to have on the record.

UNIDENTIFIED VOICE: We all noticed.

MS. SCHUHMANN: I would like to end this portion of the meeting so that we can have Margaret end the tape. There's no further testimony so we can go off that record.

REPORT
TO Joint Special Committee on Legislative Salaries

Consultant:Frank Bickford
Date: October 29, 1985

INTRODUCTION

As consultant to the Joint Special Committee on Legislative Salaries, I researched and analyzed all methods of legislative salaries, per diem and allowances. I as consultant also provided recommendations for selection of public members to the committee as well as serving as counsel to committee meetings.

The State of Alaska through the Legislative Affairs Agency, the Division of Legal Services, the Alaska State Legislature (House of Representatives) Research Agency, the Council of State Governments, and the State of Alaska Library System provided me with information concerning legislative salaries, per diem, and allowances in Alaska and the other 49 states.

The recommendations of this report were based on the research and analyses of all the data acquired in regards to legislative pay.

Conclusion

After researching and analyzing the methods of legislative salaries, per diem, and allowances in Alaska and in the other 49 states I recommend the following proposal.

Alaska legislators should be paid $24,000 a year plus a $6,000 a year expense budget, and per diem should be re-instated at $109 a day with each presiding officer receiving an extra $7,000 per year; the majority leader of each house receiving $5,000 a year on top of their salaries and the chairs of each standing committee receiving an extra $3,000 per year; and House and Senate minority leaders receiving $2,500 extra a year.

The examples of the above findings are used in many other states. Lawmakers in leadership positions are given special alllowances and legislators with additional duties are paid extra as well.

Basically my recommendations would cut legislative pay approxiamately $20,000 a year, but they would be granted extra allowances for leadership responsibilities. The base salary of legislators would be cut from $46,800 per year to $24,000 a year.

I believe that the Alaskan public will look at the recommendations provided with a better understanding than the present system of paying legislators. Legislative pay would be broken down by actual tasks performed rather than a lump sum that does'nt clearly define compensation.

MEMORANDUM June 13, 1985

SUBJECT: Joint Special Committee on Legislative Salaries (CSSCR 19(Fin) am H)

TO: Senator Mitch Abood, Chair,
Joint Special Committee on Legislative Salaries

FROM: Tamara Brandt Cook
Deputy Director
Division of Legal Services

The legislature established a Joint Special Committee on Legislative Salaries last session in CSSCR 19(Fin) am H. You have asked several questions regarding that committee.

1. The resolution provides that three public members are to be selected by the Joint Special Committee on Legislative Salaries and you have asked how these public members should be chosen. Rule 21 of the Uniform Rules under which the joint special committee was established does not address the possibility of people serving on a legislative committee who are not legislators. The selection process, therefore, is a matter for the appointed legislator members of the committee to decide and the process should be approved by a majority vote of a quorum of the committee. Since the resolution requires that the public members are to be selected by the joint special committee, individuals finally chosen should be approved by majority vote of the committee, rather than simply appointed by the chairman, for instance.

2. What is a public ex officio member? Black's Law Dictionary defines ex officio as follows:

> From office; by virtue of the office; without any other warrant or appointment than that resulting from the holding of a particular office.

The term "ex officio" clearly contradicts the notion of public membership which is not based upon the holding of a particular office, but, instead, is based upon a need to represent the public at large. Since there is no indication in the resolution from which office an ex officio member would come, it seems clear that the intent is to include three public members rather than three ex officio members.

A public member of a body is generally considered to be an individual who is not a member of the group regulated and does not have a direct financial interest in the activity being regulated or considered by the body. (See AS 08.01.025). A public member of the joint special committee under this reasoning cannot be a member of the legislature, an employee of the legislature, or a person with a direct financial interest involving the legislature, for example, a person under contract to perform services for the legislature. However, a person from another branch of state government, such as a judge, would probably have so few direct ties to the legislature that the person could qualify as a public member of this committee.

3. Can the public members vote? Since the Uniform Rules do not address the question of public members on legislative committees no guidance is provided by the Rules on this. The resolution itself provides for public members and does not indicate that these are to be members with fewer rights than the other members, although the resolution could have done so. Therefore, the best interpretation appears to be that the public members have all the rights of other members, including the right to vote.

4. What is the quorum for the Joint Special Committee on Legislative Salaries? There are nine members on the committee: three senators, three representatives, and three public members. Mason's Legislative Manual, Sec. 500(2) provides

> The majority of the membership of a body constituted of a definite number of members, constitutes a quorum for the purpose of transacting business.

Sec. 502(3) provides further

> Where the number required by statute or other rule to constitute a quorum is fixed at a definite number the diminution of the members of the body will not change the number necessary for a quorum.

Therefore, a quorum for the committee is 5 members, even if public members have not yet been selected or if a vacancy should occur for another reason. A particular number of senator members and representative members is not required to constitute a quorum. Sec. 665 provides in part

> A quorum of a joint committee is a majority of its combined membership and when a quorum is present a majority of that quorum is capable of transacting business.

MEMORANDUM August 12, 1985

SUBJECT: Relation of initiative petition and statute

TO: Frank Bickford
Legislative Salary Commission

FROM: Billy G. Berrier
Director
Division of Legal Services

You have asked whether a vote on an initiative may be precluded by enactment of legislation and if so what is required in the statute.

If before the election substantially the same measure has been enacted the initiative petition is void.

Section 4 of Art. XI of the Constitution of the State of Alaska provides:

> SECTION 4. INITIATIVE ELECTION. An initiative petition may be filed at any time. The lieutenant governor shall prepare a ballot title and proposition summarizing the proposed law, and shall place them on the ballot for the first statewide election held more than one hundred twenty days after adjournment of the legislative session following the filing. If, before the election, substantially the same measure has been enacted, the petition is void.

The determination of whether the enactment voids the petition is made by the lieutenant governor with formal concurrence of the attorney general under AS 15.45.210 which provides:

> Sec. 15.45.210. DETERMINATION OF VOID PETITION.
> If the lieutenant governor, with the formal concurrence of the attorney general, determines that an act of the broader the reach of the subject matter, the more latitude must be allowed the legislature to vary from the particular features of the initiative.

The court in that case also held constitutional the delegation of the power to determine whether the petition was void to the lieutenant governor and the attorney general.

The case was decided on a 3 to 2 vote with the dissent taking the position that the act was not substantially the same measure.

A copy of the case is enclosed.

It is clear that an act need not be identical in order to void a petition. However, the degree of deviation allowed is a factual matter that must be determined by comparing the petition and the statute enacted.

Enclosure

> legislature that is substantially the same as the proposed law was enacted after the petition had been filed, and before the date of the election, the petition is void and the lieutenant governor shall so notify the committee.

The question of what constitutes "substantially the same measure" has been before our Supreme Court in Warren v. Boucher, 543 P.2d 731 (Alaska 1975). In that case an initiative regarding campaign financing had been filed and an act was passed in the session following the filing on the same subject. The court held that the act, despite some differences, voided the petition saying:

> The words "substantial" or "substantially" are relative, inexact terms. Their meaning is quite elusive.
> Application of Scroggins, 103 Cal. App.2d 281, 229 P.2d 489 (1951). The meaning of such terms can be derived only be reference to all the circumstances surrounding the context in which they are used. Atcheson, T. & S.F. Ry. v. Kings county Water District, 47 Cal.2d 140, 302 P.2d 1, 3 (1956). So here, we believe that the term "substantially the same measure" must be viewed against the total structure contemplated in Art. XI of our constitution in the matter of direct legislation.
> It is clear that the legislative act need not conform to the initiative in all respects, and that the framers intended that the legislature should have some discretion in deciding how far the legislative act should differ from the provisions of the initiative. The question, of course, is how great is the permitted variance before the legislative act becomes no longer substantially the same.
> Upon reflection we have concluded that the legislature's discretion in this matter is reasonably broad. If in the main the legislative act achieves the same general purpose as the initiative, if the legislative act accomplishes that purpose by means or systems which are fairly comparable, then substantial similarity exists. It is not necessary that the two measures correspond in minor particulars, or even as to all major features, if the subject matter is necessarily complex or if it requires comprehensive treatment. RE: Legislative Salaries and Expense Allowances
Research Request 85-145

You requested this agency to provide information on two issues:

- the adoption date of a $4,000 expense allowance for legislators; and
- the per diem limitations imposed by the proposed initiative on legislative salary and per diem.

Expense Allowance

Alaska Statute 24.15.030 states that each member of the legislature is entitled to receive an annual allowance for postage, stationary, stenographic services and other expenses. Allowances amounting to $4000 became effective in 1970. These allowances have not increased since that date. The following table provides the legislative history of expense allowances:

Session Law	Action
§3 ch 193 SLA 1961	Established AS 24.15.030 (Additional Allowances) and prescribed $300 as the annual allocation.
§1 ch 8 SLA 1970	Increased the allowance to $1,000.
§10 ch 193 SLA 1970	Increased the allowance to $4,000.
§8 ch 263 SLA 1976	Substituted "prescribed in accordance with AS 39.23" for the specific figure of $4,000.
§37 ch SLA 1980	Repealed AS 39.23, thereby eliminating the commission responsible for determining the allowance.

With the repeal of AS 39.23 in 1980, the legislature eliminated the Alaska Salary Commission. Among other duties, the commission was responsible for prescribing the amount of the expense allowances mentioned in AS 24.15.030. According to Bill Berrier, Director of the Legal Services Division of the Legislative Affairs Agency, the repeal of AS 39.23 did not repeal the allowances or prevent the distribution of the allowances. Although the commission no longer functions, the $4,000 allowance will stand until the legislature either specifically sets a new dollar figure or develops a new method to prescribe allowances.

Legislative Per Diem

The initiative "An act relating to the compensation for State legislators" will reestablish legislative per diem (legislative per diem was repealed by 7 ch SLA 1983) and amend AS 24.15.020 to decrease the salary of legislators. This initiative does not breach the topic of changing the methodology for determining per diem levels for State workers. Under regulatory authority set out in AS 39.20.160 (as amended), per diem for State officials and employees of State agencies is prescribed and determined by the Commissioner of Administration in consultation with the heads of agencies concerned.

Per diem levels can be raised following enactment of this initiative.[1] Per diem rates can be raised by the Commissioner of Administration at any time if the commissioner determines that increases are justified. In addition, methods for prescribing per diem rates can be modified by amending the initiative or by session law reinstating or amending statutes addressing legislative per diem.

I hope that this review is useful. If you need additional analysis or would like to discuss the initiative or HB 48 and its effects, please call.

RW

[1]Enactment of HB 48 (or similar legislation reinstating legislative per diem) would make the initiative void (Article XI, Sec. 4, Alaska Constution). The discussion also applies to the enactment of HB 48.

Compensation and Turnover in State Legislative Lower Chambers

Abstract

It has long been assumed by students of U.S. state legislatures that there is a strong relationship between levels of compensation and rates of turnover in those bodies. This paper analyzes the relationship between compensation and turnover in forty-one state legislative lower chambers in 1976. No correlation between salary levels and turnover rates existed in these states in 1976. Given the possibility that a bias may arise from using a single year's data, data from 1968 are used to test the hypothesis. The data from the states used in this study failed to support a general hypothesis that increasing compensation will lower voluntary retirement from state legislatures.

High rates of turnover among legislators have long troubled writers and reformers concerned with state government in the United States [1, pp. 8-10; 3, p. 40; 5, pp. 21-31; 6; 7, pp. 13-24; 8; 11]. Average turnover per session in state lower houses between 1963 and 1971 was 30.4 percent. From Charles Hyneman's writings in the late 1930s to William Keefe and Morris Ogul's speculations of the 1970s, a recurring suggestion for reducing voluntary retirement from the state legislature has been to increase legislative compensation. Keefe and Ogul put the thesis persuasively:

> The best short-run answer for breaking the turnover cycle lies, we believe, in what is by now a part of the "conventional wisdom" of political scientists. The tenet holds that a seat in the legislature may become a fulltime career for members if they are given a salary that is more in line with those available in business and professions [6, p. 130].

Hyneman made essentially the same point in 1938. He wrote, "I am of the opinion that the chief reason why legislators find one or more terms enough is a financial one; their experience proves . . . that it is money out of the pocket to serve in the legislature" [5, p. 30]. Hyneman, Keefe and Ogul, and numerous others assume that a relationship exists between low compensation and voluntary turnover. Voluntary turnover means a decision to terminate one's career in the legislature; involuntary turnover means that caused by election loss or death.[1] It is assumed that if compensation were to rise, then turnover would decrease.

This paper looks at voluntary turnover and compensation in forty-one state lower chambers during the 1975-76 session and attempts to discover whether a relationship exists between these two variables. If indeed states with higher levels of compensation have lower turnover rates than do states with lower compensation, then one could conclude that compensation rates appear to influence turnover. Data on this issue is presented in Table 1 and summarized in Table 2.

Tables 1 and 2 do not support an assertion that higher compensation will result in lowered turnover. Using Spearman's coefficient of rank correlation, the correlation between turnover and compensation is +0.24. Statistically there is no correlation between compensation and turnover for the states for which data are available in 1976.

California and New Hampshire have the same rates of turnover, yet California pays over $65,000 more biennially than does New Hampshire. Indeed, five of the top ten states in compensation are among the states listed in the lower half of Table 1.

*Compensation is computed as it generally is in the Book of the States, that is, compensation scales are taken from those offered during the 1975-76 session. In those states which pay per diem, the current rates are multiplied by the number of days in the 1973-74 session, since the total days of the session are not yet available. Compensation figures are derived from salary, per diem, and unvouchered compensation paid during or between sessions. Compensation for special sessions or vouchered expenses is not included.

Turnover rates are taken from 1975.

High levels of compensation may have helped lower turnover in states like Hawaii which is eighth in salary and lowest in turnover or Michigan which is fifth in salary and fourth in turnover. At the same time, low compensation may have caused high levels of turnover in states like Montana or Utah which have extremely low levels of compensation and very high rates of turnover.

The above data could be criticized on the grounds that turnover patterns from a single year might vary from traditional norms. In order to adequately understand the impact of a compensation policy on lowering turnover, it is necessary to compare a given state's current turnover at a higher compensation with past turnover at a lower compensation.

Unfortunately, few studies are available which distinguish between voluntary and involuntary turnover on a longitudinal basis. The present research is based on voluntary turnover data from the twenty-two states for which the 1976 data were available. The year 1968 was chosen because it provides an essentially tranquil election after the uncertainty created by Reynolds v. Sims, 377 U.S. 533, 12 L. ed. 2d. 506, 84 S.Ct. 1362. Forty states[2] reapportioned their legislatures between 1964 and 1966. Obviously such major shifts in legislative districts could have artificially created high numbers of voluntary turnover because of fear of running in new districts. Therefore, the 1968 election was chosen because it, like the 1976 election, had legislators seeking reelection from the same district in which they were elected. If the traditional hypothesis concerning the impact of compensation on turnover were to be supported, then those states which had the greatest increases in compensation between 1968 and 1976 should have had the greatest decreases in turnover.

Table 3 compares compensation and turnover between 1968 and 1976. The results are mixed. Using percentage changes in compensation and turnover, the rank correlation, r = +0.42, indicates a slightly positive relationship between the two variables. However, using absolute changes in compensation and turnover percent, the rank correlation, r = -0.43, indicates a slightly negative relationship. All twenty-two states had changes in compensation. Increases varied from about $2,000 to about $30,000 per biennium; however, not all states had corresponding turnover reductions. Indeed, some of the results appear to be rather confusing if it is assumed that the major cause for turnover is insufficient compensation. For example, between 1968 and 1976 New Mexico increased legislative compensation from $1,800 to $3,600 biennially. This was accompanied by a turnover drop of 43 percent. It seems unlikely that an $1,800 compensation increase over an eight-year period is sufficient inducement to result in a 43 percent decline in turnover. In these situations, nonmonetary factors must be examined in attempting to understand the causes for legislative retirement.

While compensation may not have affected turnover in all states, in Hawaii, Tennessee, and particularly Iowa, salary increases may be the major causes for reduced turnover because major reductions in turnover occurred concomitantly with major increases in compensation. However, there are no clear patterns for the entire group. California and Illinois had major increments in compensation with simultaneous increases in voluntary turnover. Indeed, the five states which had the greatest increases in compensation also had increased turnover. The data from the above states offer no support to a general hypothesis that if compensation rises, even at quite impressive rates, turnover will decline. Turnover may very well lessen, but there is no clear evidence to indicate that it will, or that, if it does, it does so because of a compensation policy.

A Speculative Overview of Turnover and Salary Questions

When considering the problem of legislative turnover at the state level, several factors should be taken into account. Some of these have been detailed elsewhere [3, 4, 6, 8] and will not be considered in this brief summary.

Two important variables which influence turnover have not been given the attention they deserve:

1. For most new members of the state legislature, especially the lower chamber, this is their entry into politics [13]. Invariably there is the problem of adjustment. For some the psychological adaptation is difficult, and this frequently results in voluntary retirement. According to Barber, some legislators are too rigid to adapt; others cannot accept a beginner's place in the system; and still others cannot adjust to the hectic schedule or the instrumental rather than consummatory social relations in the legislature [1, pp. 151-154; 8]. For these legislators salary is of little or no importance and rarely inhibits their decision to retire.

2. Many potential politicians find the lower house of the state legislature a good place to experiment with politics. Most state legislatures have limited sessions, and this allows a potential politician to minimize the interruption from a full-time occupation when experimenting with politics. Additionally, a legislative district of the lower house is frequently small enough for a newcomer to conduct a campaign without necessarily incurring the major expenses needed for other state, or even state senatorial, positions. Thus, the lower house of the state legislature is frequently well-suited for young and ambitious legislators to experiment with politics without seriously jeopardizing their full-time careers or incurring major debts when running for office. If they find legislative politics rewarding, they will probably remain in the lower chamber only temporarily, since they seek to move up politically. As they see it, the lower chamber is their initiation into politics and not their final destination [1, pp. 67-115; 8, pp. 147-200]. Thus, these legislators also rank compensation of slight importance when they consider leaving the lower chamber.

Conclusion

This research offers no general support to the belief that a close relationship exists between compensation and turnover. Generally speaking, states with higher levels of compensation do not have lower voluntary turnover than do states with lower levels of compensation; nor do the results indicate that states which increase compensation will ipso facto reduce their rates of turnover. In the states for which comparison data were available, compensation levels increased in all of them, but turnover both increased and decreased. In some states, compensation increases may possibly have helped to lower turnover, but in others, despite major increases in compensation, voluntary retirement increased. Turnover is a complex phenomenon induced by numerous factors of which compensation is only one, and to many considering retirement, it may be of relatively slight importance.

Financial Disclosure

Outside Earnings Swell Wealth of Congress

Senators think of themselves as members of the "upper chamber" of Congress. Their personal financial disclosures show that most senators are upper income as well.

The Senate clearly is a club of the wealthy. Possibly a third of the 100 senators can claim net worths of $1 million or more. Moreover, two-thirds of the senators count on outside incomes of $20,000 or more to supplement their $57,500 congressional salaries.

The House, too, has its share of wealthy members. Probably 30 or more House members are millionaires, and nearly 100 have outside incomes of more than $20,000. But the House is the lower chamber of Congress when it comes to personal finances, because the proportion of wealthy members is much lower in the House than in the Senate.

This year, for the first time ever under the 1978 Ethics in Government Act, all members of Congress were required to publicly disclose their sources and general amounts of income for the previous year — 1978.

Last year members of both houses of Congress disclosed all their financial holdings for the first time. Previously, only House members had been required to disclose some of their financial interests.

The new disclosures revealed, in detail never before available, that most members of Congress are financially much better off than most Americans. Their $57,500 congressional salaries alone put them far above the economic state of most workers. But the difference goes beyond this. Most members of Congress would be financially secure with other income and financial interests even without their government salaries.

Financial Interests

With few exceptions, members of Congress were successful lawyers or businessmen before coming to Washington. Most members kept and expanded their lucrative financial investments after election to Congress. Many of the wealthiest members of Congress, however, inherited their fortunes.

With few exceptions, members of Congress were successful lawyers or businessmen before coming to Washington. Most members kept and expanded their lucrative financial investments after election.

The personal financial interests of members of Congress span the world of business. But far and away the most prevalent are investments in real estate, banks and agriculture, and stocks in major businesses. Most popular among members are blue chip stocks such as IBM, General Electric, General Motors and American Telephone and Telegraph. Only three members reported stock holdings in the financially troubled Chrysler Corp. (Box, p. 1836)

All but a handful of members own at least a few stocks or bonds, in addition to bank savings accounts and personal residences. The heaviest financial burden for many members is maintaining two residences, one in the home state or district, and one in the Washington, D.C., area. Some members rent their residences back home and stay in hotels or with relatives when visiting constituents. In 1977, some members said that heavy expense helped justify the congressional pay raise from $44,600 to $57,500.

Outside Jobs

A dwindling number of members continues to receive sizable salaries for part-time jobs back home. But a new earned income limit in the House has forced most of those members to abandon their jobs, or at least to seek new ways to receive the same income. Several members apparently have tried to avoid the income limit by changing their income from "salaries" to "dividends" or some other unearned income. (Income limit, p. 1841)

Although more than half of all members of Congress are lawyers by training, most have given up their private practices. (Lawyers in Congress, p. 1832)

Senate rules virtually prohibit legal practices by senators. Only 23 House members who served in Congress during 1978 actively practiced law. The new earned income limit in the House will force most of them to quit, or substantially curtail, their legal work.

At least three dozen members of Congress are partners in real estate investment firms, and 26 House members serve as directors of banks or savings and loan associations.

Although few members devote significant amounts of time to their outside jobs, some received large salaries.

Jack Brooks, D-Texas, for example, received more than $46,000 in salary as director of two banks in which he is a major stockholder. House Minority Leader John J. Rhodes, R-Ariz., was paid $32,573 as vice president of an insurance company.

Cecil (Pete) Heftel, D-Hawaii, reported earned income of $870,987 and unearned income of over $180,000 from various business investments, including radio and television stations he owns.

Unearned Income

All but 75 House members and five senators supplement their congressional incomes with "unearned" income such as dividends on stocks or rent from investment real estate.

Senators, on the average, received about $53,000 in unearned income during 1978. The average was boosted by the enormous unearned incomes of the Senate's wealthiest members. Ketchup and pickle heir John Heinz, R-Pa., reported unearned income of $437,101 to over $836,000. John C. Danforth, R-Mo., of the Ralston Purina Co. family, had unearned income of $230,801 to over $385,000.

House members, by and large, received much smaller unearned incomes, but 29 of them have unearned incomes of at least $10,000. As in the Senate, members who inherited their wealth had the largest unearned incomes. For example, Tennessee heir James T. Broyhill, R-N.C., received over $1,000,000 from family investments and drug company heir Richardson Preyer, D-N.C., received over $127,000 from various holdings. (House income chart, p. 1837, Senate income chart, p. 1840)

Honoraria

Seventy-five senators and 249 House members accepted "honoraria" payments for speeches to outside groups, usually lobbies interested in legislation. Nineteen well-known members and senior committee members received the $25,000 maximum in honoraria permitted by federal law. Unlike campaign contributions, honoraria payments are personal income for members of Congress. (Honoraria background, p. 1827)

As in previous years, big lobbies such as the American Bankers Association, the Grocery Manufacturers of America and the Food Marketing Institute provided the bulk of honoraria. The bankers paid more than any other group, $28,000 to 16 members of Congress. The interest probably was spurred by congressional consideration and passage in 1978 of a major banking regulation bill. (Box, p. 1829)

Conflicts of Interest

By the very nature of their positions, members of Congress face frequent conflicts of interest between their personal lives and their responsibilities in Congress. They are as affected by taxes and most other legislation as all Americans.

But there are other, potentially more serious conflicts, that involve members' particular personal finances and their roles as public servants. A member with substantial holdings in oil company stocks, for example, may have to reconcile his own financial interests with a wider but divergent public interest, especially if he serves on a committee that writes energy legislation.

Congress has taken few steps to curtail conflicts, on the assumption that it is up to each member and his constituents to judge what is proper. Many members of Congress have said that the disclosure of possible conflicts is a sufficient deterrent. (Conflict of interest background, 1978 Weekly Report, p. 2311)

Many members have avoided direct conflicts of interest with their congressional committee assignments by declining to invest in businesses that might be affected by legislation before those committees.

But in a limited survey, Congressional Quarterly counted 54 senators and 105 House members who face possible conflicts between their own holdings and committee assignments.

In most cases, the potential conflicts involve members with limited holdings that are infrequently affected by legislation. But some of the most prominent members of Congress deal almost daily with legislation that could have a direct impact on their financial interests.

In the Senate, for example, Agriculture Committee Chairman Herman E. Talmadge, D-Ga., owns a 2,388-acre farm worth $1 million-$2 million. Other members of the committee with farm holdings are Richard G. Lugar, R-Ind., and John Melcher, D-Mont.

Talmadge is facing charges before the Senate Ethics Committee of improper financial dealings. But no conflict of interest charge has been raised against him. (Talmadge case, Weekly Report, p. 1657)

Senate Finance Committee Chairman Russell B. Long (D-La.), whose committee writes key energy tax legislation, owns $1.2 million in oil and gas property. His oil earnings in 1978 topped $100,000. Other members of his committee with oil holdings are Lloyd M. Bentsen, D-Texas, Harry F. Byrd Jr., Ind.-Va., William V. Roth Jr., R-Del., Danforth and Heinz.

Danforth is an example of a wealthy member whose widespread financial interests are affected by virtually every bill before Congress. His personal and family trust portfolios include stocks in defense contractors, oil companies, communications firms, banks and several other businesses that are directly concerned with federal laws and regulations. Danforth sits on two committees — Finance and Commerce, Science and Transportation — that write much of the legislation that affects business.

Some committees are heavily weighted with members who have personal interests in legislation before those committees.

In the House, for example, 18 of the 43 members of the Agriculture Committee own farms or other farm interests, including: Berkley Bedell, D-Iowa; David R. Bowen, D-Miss.; Glenn English, D-Okla.; Floyd Fithian, D-Ind.; Charles E. Grassley, R-Iowa; Tom Hagedorn, R-Minn.; Kent Hance, D-Texas; Jerry Huckaby, D-La.; James P. Johnson, R-Colo.; Ed Jones, D-Tenn.; Richard Kelly, R-Fla.; Ron Marlenee, R-Mont.; Charlie Rose, D-N.C.; Ike Skelton, D-Mo.; Steven D. Symms, R-Idaho; Charles W. Stenholm, D-Texas; James Weaver, D-Ore.; and Charlie Whitley, D-N.C.

One possible way of eliminating at least the appearance of a conflict of interest is to establish a blind trust, completely controlled by independent trustees. But few members have taken that step.

Only three senators have blind trusts: Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.; Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn.; Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio. In the House, Margaret M. Heckler, R-Mass., and Steven J. Solarz, D-N.Y., said they have part of their holdings in blind trusts. The wife of Robert Dole, R-Kan., also has a blind trust.

Millionaires

Because the disclosure system is so vague, especially in the House, it is impossible to determine exactly how many millionaires serve in Congress. But it is possible to make a general determination of which members probably have net worths of $1 million or more.

The two wealthiest senators are Pennsylvania's Heinz, heir to the H. J. Heinz Co. fortune, and Missouri's Danforth, an heir to the Ralston Purina Co. family fortune.

According to rough calculations based on their disclosures, Heinz could be worth at least $30 million and possibly more than $50 million. Danforth's net worth could be worth between $5 million and $17 million.

One senator, Louisiana's Long, revealed a net worth of $2.8 million.

Other senators who qualify as millionaires are: William L. Armstrong, R-Colo.; Bentsen of Texas; Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn.; Byrd of Virginia; Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz.; John Glenn, D-Ohio; Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz.; S. I. (Sam) Hayakawa, R-Calif.; Nancy Landon Kassebaum, R-Kan.; Kennedy of Massachusetts; Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio; Claiborne Pell, D-R.I.; Charles H. Percy, R-Ill.; Richard Stone, D-Fla.; Talmadge of Georgia; Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo.; John W. Warner, R-Va.; and Lowell P. Weicker Jr., R-Conn.

Index to Special Report

For this special report, Congressional Quarterly examined the financial disclosure reports covering 1978 for all 535 members of Congress and the four non-voting House members.

This report is in two major parts: stories and charts on specific aspects of the disclosures, and lists of honoraria paid to representatives and senators, and financial interests of representatives and senators.

The following is a guide to the report:

- The Wealth of Congress, p. 1823, summarizes CQ's findings. Most members of Congress are financially much better off than most other Americans.
- Honoraria Payments, p. 1827, Hundreds of organizations, especially lobbies, pay members of Congress for making speeches. This story explains the practice.
- The Richest Members, p. 1834, contains brief profiles of the 30 members of Congress who may have had the highest incomes for 1978.
- Draw of the Conventions, p. 1835, shows how the U.S. Chamber of Commerce drew 10 members of Congress to its 1978 annual convention.
- House's Top Honoraria Collectors, p. 1827, lists the 25 House members who earned the most in honoraria in 1978.
- Senate's Top Honoraria Collectors, p. 1827, lists the 25 senators who earned the most in honoraria in 1978.
- Top Honoraria Providers, p. 1826, lists the 15 organizations that gave the most in honoraria to members of Congress in 1978.
- Earned Income Evasion, p. 1841. Starting this year House members are limited to $8,625 in outside earned income. This story shows how members are coping with the limit, and how some members are trying to get around it.
- Lawyers in Congress, p. 1832, lists all members of Congress who received legal fees in 1978. With each passing year, fewer members engage in part-time legal practices.
- Chrysler Interests, p. 1836, indicates that only three members of Congress reported financial interests in the troubled Chrysler Corp.
- Outside Income Totals, lists 1978 outside income for all members of Congress. The House chart is on p. 1837; the Senate chart starts on p. 1840.
- Outside Jobs, lists all outside business positions for all members of Congress. The Senate list starts on p. 1844; the House list starts on p. 1845.
- Disclosure that Doesn't Disclose, p. 1830, examines weaknesses of the financial disclosure system.
- Disclosure Requirements, p. 1828, lists the legal requirements of financial disclosure for members.
- Honoraria, lists all honoraria paid to all members of Congress, broken down by the types of organizations making the payments. The House list starts on p. 1849; the Senate list starts on p. 1862.
- Financial Interests, lists the financial interests of members of Congress in 14 categories, and shows which members have interests that might be affected by their committee responsibilities. The House list starts on p. 1871; the Senate list starts on p. 1884.

Other senators who may qualify as millionaires include Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn.; Henry L. Bellmon, R-Okla.; Bill Bradley, D-N.J.; Howard W. Cannon, D-Nev.; Lawton Chiles, D-Fla.; Thomas F. Eagleton, D-Mo.; Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore.; Charles McC. Mathias, R-Md.; Sam Nunn, D-Ga.; Ribicoff of Connecticut, and Adlai Stevenson, D-Ill.

Two financially secure, but non-millionaire, senators listed their exact net worths. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y. ($450,000) and Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C. ($437,163).

The richest House member probably is Fred Richmond, D-N.Y., who is the majority stockholder in Walco National Corp., a manufacturer of small machinery and electrical equipment. Richmond owns approximately 748,000 shares of Walco stock, valued at more than $10 million.

Other probable House millionaires are: Glenn M. Anderson, D-Calif.; Jonathan B. Bingham, D-N.Y.; Richard Bolling, D-Mo.; Brooks of Texas; Broyhill of North Carolina; Tim Lee Carter, R-Ky.; James C. Cleveland, R-N.H.; James M. Collins, R-Texas; Robert W. Daniel Jr., R-Va.; Millicent Fenwick, R-N.J.; Bill Green, R-N.Y.; Heftel of Hawaii; Robert J. Lagomarsino, R-Calif.; Jim Leach, R-Iowa; Stewart B. McKinney, R-Conn.; Richard L. Ottinger, D-N.Y.; Preyer of North Carolina; James H. (Jimmy) Quillen, R-Tenn.; William H. Rover, R-Calif.; Harold Runnels, D-N.M.; Harold S. Sawyer, R-Mich.; James H. Scheuer, D-N.Y.; and Fortney H. (Pete) Stark, D-Calif.

Other House members who may be millionaires include Bedell of Iowa; William E. Dannemeyer, R-Calif.; Robert H. Mollohan, D-W.Va.; Bill Nelson, D-Fla.; Ray Roberts, D-Texas; Gene Snyder, R-Ky.; James Weaver, D-Ore.

The Non-Wealthy

In contrast to the millionaires, a handful of members of Congress reported little or no outside income and virtually nothing in the way of financial assets.

Sen. Spark M. Matsunaga, D-Hawaii, for example, said he had no outside business earnings, aside from $7,000 in honoraria. His only financial interest was his home in Washington, D.C., purchased in 1965 for $46,000.

Lee Aspin, D-Wis., said he had no outside business earnings and no financial interests. He did accept $1,000 in honoraria payments.

Generally, the least wealthy members are young House members in their first or second terms. An example is David E. Bonior, D-Mich., a Vietnam veteran in his second term, who reported no outside income and no holdings.

Spouses

Congressional rules require members to disclose the financial interests of their spouses, unless they do not benefit from or maintain control over their spouses' holdings. Members also were required to reveal the sources, but not the amounts, of their spouses' incomes.

Although most members did disclose information about their spouses, a few refused to do so. Senators, but not House members, were asked to indicate if they withheld information about their spouses.

One senator who refused to disclose the financial assets of his spouse was John Tower, R-Texas. He said, "I have no knowledge whatever" of the estate of his reputedly wealthy wife Lilla Cummings Tower, whom he married in 1977.

Virginia's senator, Warner, said he has no control over the property of his wife, actress Elizabeth Taylor. Warner is a millionaire by virtue of a divorce settlement with his previous wife, heiress Catherine Mellon.

Other senators who did not report the holdings of their spouses were Wendell H. Ford, D-Ky. and Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y.

The wives of at least five members are congressional staff aides. Four work directly for their husbands.

Elsie J. Hawkins, the wife of Rep. Augustus F. Hawkins, D-Calif., works for her husband in two paying jobs. As a clerk on his personal staff, she earned approximately $8,624 in 1978, according to clerk of the House records. She earned approximately $22,200 as a clerk for the House Administration Committee's printing subcommittee, which Hawkins chairs.

Martha A. Ford, the wife of Rep. William D. Ford, D-Mich., is an assistant clerk for the House Administration Committee. She earned $12,000 in that post in 1978, according to House records. Ford is not a member of the committee.

Yvonne Rousselot is executive secretary on the staff of her husband, Rep. John H. Rousselot, R-Calif. According to clerk of the House records, she was paid at the rate of $22,000 in 1978.

Jeanette S. Williams is a senior staff member on the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, chaired

House

The 1976 Federal Election Campaign Act limited to $25,000 annually the amount a representative could earn by giving speeches or writing articles. In 1978, the top 25 House earners of honoraria were:

Thomas L. Ashley, D-Ohio	$25,000

by her husband, Harrison A. Williams Jr., D-N.J. She earned $53,500 in 1978, according to Senate records.

Patricia B. Young is executive secretary on the staff of her husband, Sen. Milton R. Young, R-N.D. Young reported her 1978 earnings as $24,677.

Ford and Rousselot did not mention their wives on their financial disclosure forms.

The federal anti-nepotism law, adopted in 1967, prohibits federal officials, including members of Congress, from appointing, promoting or recommending for appointment or promotion, a relative to serve in the same agency or department. However, the law does not prohibit a member from marrying a staffer and keeping his spouse on his payroll. (1967 Almanac p. 591)

Compliance

Although most members generally complied with the letter and spirit of the disclosure rules, a few members in each house filed disclosure forms that were seriously incomplete, inaccurate or misleading.

Ethics committees in both houses attempted to correct the most serious errors, but committee aides admitted they did not have the time or staff to strictly enforce the rules.

The Senate voted in March to discontinue General Accounting Office spot audits of forms filed by senators and their top aides. (Weekly Report p. 1746; disclosure that doesn't disclose, p. 1850)

Some members voluntarily revealed much more than the rules required. Rep. Morris K. Udall, D-Ariz., revealed his entire 1978 federal income tax form. Rep. Paul Simon, D-Ill., continued his long-standing practice of disclosing in detail his finances and those of all his aides.

Honoraria Payments

Members of Congress were paid almost $2.3 million in 1978 by businesses, trade associations, educational and ideological groups, publications and other organizations eager to hear the members' insider views on issues facing the federal government.

Of the total honoraria payments, $1,086,451 went to 75 senators and about $1,180,000 to 245 representatives, according to financial disclosure forms filed by all 100 senators, all 435 voting representatives, the resident commissioner representing Puerto Rico, and the three non-voting

c) from which the member neither derived, nor expected to derive, any economic benefit.

House delegates. (House honoraria list, p. 1849; Senate honoraria list, p. 1862)

Twenty-five senators and 130 House members reported receiving no honoraria for speaking engagements or writing fees in 1978.

The total paid senators in 1978 was not slightly less than the record for honoraria payments set in 1977. To that year, 81 senators earned $1,081,648 in honoraria, while 12 reported receiving none.

Senators have been required to disclose their earnings from honoraria since 1969.

The slight decrease in 1978 probably was due to 20 senators leaving office at the end of that year. Those senators were not required to file details of their 1978 finances with the Senate. But the 20 freshmen who took their seats at the beginning of 1979 were. As candidates during 1978, these individuals couldn't command the high speaking fees normally given incumbent senators.

Because 1978 was the first full year for which House members were required to disclose their honoraria payments, no figures for earlier years are available for comparison purposes.

Time-Honored Practice

The payment of honoraria is a time-honored way to entice representatives and senators to provide various groups with an "insider view" of Washington through speeches, personal appearances or published articles. In addition to the honoraria, members of Congress often receive expenses-paid trips to the sites where the speech are given, as well as lodging and meals.

Most of the honoraria payments are in return for speeches to conventions held by trade associations and other business groups. Others are for briefings or addresses to educational groups, ideological organizations, religious and ethnic groups and think tanks.

Some are for intimate meetings over dinner or lunch with a corporation's board of directors, or a small group of businessmen, lawyers and lobbyists such as the Washington Discussion Group. These small groups say a meal and a chat with a prominent senator or representative is worth the $1,000 or $2,000 payment because of the opportunity it provides for an off the record discussion of Washington goings on.

Honoraria are perfectly legal, but most of the groups that provide such payments also are interested in legislation before Congress. The most harsh critics of honoraria payments say the system is little more than legalized influence buying. Less harsh critics contend that the groups making the payments are more interested in gaining the friendship of elected officials and easy access to them in the future than in hearing the comments of the senators and representatives.

Organizations that give honoraria — and members of Congress who accept them — deny any impropriety.

Many freely admit, however, that sending a member of Congress to address a convention, a board of directors or a trade association's annual meeting — and paying him for his appearance — can have important benefits. It can give top management a better understanding of the Washington scene, provide an occasion to get to know an important member, or ensure better access to the member in the future. It also can be used to let the member know that he has a supporter on the "outside."

Groups Target Payments

An examination of the honoraria paid members of Congress in 1978 indicates that interest groups often concentrated their payments on members in a position to help them with their concerns. This is the pattern that has been present in other years, also. For example, the Outdoor Advertising Association gave a total of $7,000 in honoraria to five members of the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee which in 1978 rewrote the Highway Beautification Act of 1965, weakening key provisions regulating outdoor advertising. (1978 Almanac p. 539)

While the House Ways and Means Health Subcommittee considered hospital cost containment legislation, its chairman, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., received $14,000 in honoraria from health groups. (1978 Almanac p. 490)

The American Bankers Association funneled five honoraria totaling $10,500 to five Democratic members of the House Banking Committee in 1978, while five state banking associations provided one senator alone — Jake Garn, R-Utah, ranking Republican on the Senate Banking Committee — with $8,000 in honoraria for five different speeches.

The banking committees worked on a number of major revisions in federal legislation regulating banking practices during 1978. (1978 Almanac p. 300)

Banking Industry Honoraria

Banking groups gave heavily in 1978. The American Bankers Association gave more honoraria to members of Congress than any other group during that year, paying out a total of $28,000 to 16 different senators and representatives. At the same time, various state banking associations paid out $20,100 to 17 different senators and representatives in the same period.

"We hold over 800 meetings a year," commented Edward E. Smith, a spokesman for the American Bankers Association, explaining why his group gives honoraria to members of Congress. "You can't get away with always using only [the trade association's] staff. You need a big name. And you can't ask them to take time off and not give them something."

Smith said the association seeks out members of the congressional banking and tax committees to address its meetings because those members are most familiar with the industry's legislative concerns. He added that the association was proud of its record on honoraria payments.

"We're not opposed to it [paying honoraria]," he said. "We're not like some trade associations who try to hide under a bushel. I'm glad we're on top. I'm only sorry we don't have more money to spend on this."

The Unwealthy in Congress

Disclosure That Doesn't Disclose

The extensive disclosure requirements imposed on Congress in recent years have given voters more information than ever before about the financial dealings and personal wealth of elected representatives.

But, ironically, the methods of disclosure can distort the true picture of a member's wealth, moreover, the structure of the disclosure forms, in certain cases, presents an open invitation for members to obfuscate or to conceal information.

These problems make an exact calculation of a member's net worth impossible unless the individual voluntarily supplies additional information.

Several members have been doing this for years, most notably Rep. Paul Simon, D-Ill., who released his 24th annual public financial disclosure statement this year. It has been his practice since first taking public office in 1955 as a member of the Illinois state House. Rep. Philip M. Crane, R-Ill., a presidential hopeful, filed a statement over 100 pages in length. Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., released 67 pages of financial information, the most lengthy statement in the Senate.

Categories of Value

The financial disclosure rules require a member to reveal the "category of value" owned by him or his spouse and dependents. Each category represents a "range" of wealth and not an actual amount. Examples are "between $15,001-$50,000" and "between $100,001-$250,000." (Rep. p. 1528)

The misleading nature of the categories can be shown in the disclosure of Sen. Russell B. Long, D-La., who listed all his income and holdings, and voluntarily showed a net worth of $2,81[illegible],731. Using the categories, however, Long's net worth could be anywhere between $2,127,000 and $4,760,000.

Walter (Dee) Huddleston, D-Ky., gave the exact amount of his unearned income as $14,901. Using the categories, his income could be $12,201 to $30,000.

For most members, the most serious distortion is in the $15,001-$50,000 category.

If a member had three holdings of about $16,000 each, the actual total would be $48,000. But under the category system, those would total $47,000-$150,000.

Another distortion inherent in the category system is the largest category value. In the House it is over $50,000; in the Senate it is over $1 million.

Rep. Fred Richmond, D-N.Y., reported his holdings in Walco National Corp. as "over $250,000," which is all that is required by law for House members. Richmond held 250,000 shares of stock in Walco National in 1977, and sold 2,000 shares in June 1978, leaving him with 248,000 shares. At current stock market value, his financial interest in Walco National should be about $16.5 million — $16.25 million more than he had to disclose.

Problems With the Forms

The structure of the disclosure forms also permitted errors.

The House forms for 1978 were short on space for anything but the most minimum of holdings for an individual member. The instructions were short on detail and briefly printed on the reverse side of each member's disclosure cover sheet. House Ethics Committee staffers were deluged with questions on procedures for filling out the forms.

On the other hand, the Senate Ethics Committee published a 43-page manual for senators and employees, and received far fewer procedural questions.

The different forms allowed the accuracy of information to vary, especially the value of financial interests.

The Ethics in Government Act requires members to disclose "the current value" of their real property holdings unless the current value "is not ascertainable without an appraisal." If the latter case is true, members could use different calculation methods to determine the value, providing the method used is explained.

Because of limited space on the House forms and the brevity of instructions, information about real property holdings was more likely to be reported at fair market value than through other methods.

The Senate forms provided a separate column for senators to list the method used to value their property. This appeared to invite senators not to report the current value. Hence, Sen. Long reporting an interest in "[illegible]33 acres of timberland, Winn Parish, La." at a value of "not more than $5,000" purchase price in 1935.

The county assessor's office in Winn Parish, La., told a reporter that timberland there is valued between $300 and $700 per acre. This suggests that the current value of Long's timberland might be between $66,900 and $101,000. If the timber on the land is top quality southern pine, the value could be as high as $1,500 per acre, which means Long's holding could be worth as much as $[illegible]91,000.

Long also reported 888 acres of timberland in Livingston, La., at a 1935 purchase price of $[illegible]6,216. Based on the U.S. Forest Service's assessment that suitable timberland in the United States today is worth less than $500 per acre, 900 acres would be worth at least $[illegible]450,000 and could be worth over $1 million.

Although this avenue of disclosing assets is open to the public, it was used by all members, few took advantage of it. Only six senators listed most of their real estate holdings at acquisition cost.

Filling out the Forms

Some members simply filled out the forms incorrectly or incompletely.

Several, such as Rep. Harold Runnels, D-N.M., reported income from dividends but listed no stockholdings. Rep. Charles Wilson, D-Texas, reported rental income without listing an interest in real property.

The winner of the "most illegible handwriting award" this year goes to freshman Rep. Ron Paul, R-Texas, who filled out his form himself in longhand. Paul is a doctor.

Informing Management

Two companies that only began in 1978 to pay members of Congress for speaking engagements told Congressional Quarterly they did so to keep their firms' managers informed of important Washington activities.

One firm, Rexnord Inc., a Milwaukee, Wis., manufacturing company, paid out $4,585 in 1978 to four members of Congress for addressing Washington seminars. The sessions were set up to educate management on "how the process works," according to company spokesman John Bartels. A fifth member of Congress was paid $1,000 plus travel expenses to address the firm's annual meeting.

Bartels said the company had been holding Washington seminars for at least five years, but before 1978 had brought company officials to the Capitol to meet with members. In 1978, the company decided to invite to dinner the members it wanted to meet. The dinner meetings were intended "to get to know them better," Bartels said. They were paid honoraria because to leave the Capitol in order to attend a dinner was "overtime," he explained.

The Dana Corp., a Toledo, Ohio, automotive parts manufacturing firm, also paid out honoraria to members of Congress for the first time in 1978. The firm paid $5,500 to eight members for the year. The members were paid to address a Washington seminar for Dana's middle management, according to the firm's Washington vice president, Howard Haugerud.

"Many people believe government workers are not the swiftest in the world," Haugerud explained. "It's important for our employees to see that, in the upper echelons, at least, this is not the case."

Honoraria Limitations

The 1976 Federal Election Campaign Act (PL 94-283) limited to $25,000 annually the amount of money a senator or representative could earn in honoraria in a year. The law also limited each individual honorarium payment to a maximum of $2,000. (1976 Almanac p. 459)

A stricter limitation on the amount of money a senator may earn in outside income was to have gone into effect in 1979, but the Senate voted in March to delay enforcement of that rule for four years. (Weekly Report p. 585)

A similar House rule was unaffected by the Senate action. The House rule placed a ceiling of 15 percent of a representative's annual salary on all outside earned income — including honoraria — and a ceiling of $1,000 on each individual honorarium, beginning Jan. 1, 1979.

The House approved the 15 percent cap and a ceiling of $750 on each honorarium as part of its ethics code adopted in 1977. However, the $750 limit was raised to $1,000 in January 1979 after the House Democratic Caucus recommended the increase at the end of the 95th Congress. (1977 Almanac p. 786; 1978 Weekly Report p. 168)

At the current annual salary of $57,500, the limitation means that, as of 1979, a representative can earn no more than $8,625 a year in outside income, including honoraria. In 1978, 45 representatives and 48 senators earned more than $8,625 in honoraria alone.

Lugar Is 1978 Champion

Sen. Richard G. Lugar, R-Ind., was the honoraria champion in both House and Senate in 1978, earning $38,500. He donated $13,500 of his honoraria earnings to charity in order to comply with the $25,000 limitation.

"We're aware that he was No. 1, but he's still here for every vote," commented Lugar spokesman Lou Gerig. He said Lugar ranked third in attendance in the Senate in 1978, and gave no outside speeches on Senate time.

The 1976 law permits members to deduct any funds donated to charity or used to pay for out-of-pocket expenses from their total honoraria earnings in order to comply with the $25,000 limitation.

In 1978, six senators — Lugar, Jake Garn, R-Utah, Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., Robert Dole, R-Kan., and Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y. — earned more than $25,000 in honoraria and either donated some of the money to charity or used some of it for expenses related to speech giving in order to comply with the $25,000 ceiling.

Javits stated in his financial disclosure report that, in order to comply with the $25,000 ceiling, he had deducted some money from his total speechmaking earnings to pay members of his staff who "in non-working hours helped me with the speeches and writings that earned the honoraria."

This deduction is not permitted by the 1976 law. Spokesmen for both the Senate Select Ethics Committee and the Federal Election Commission refused to discuss the matter.

Javits' executive assistant, Gregory G. Jones, told a reporter the senator's accountants felt the deduction was proper. He added, "If we are advised that it is improper by either the Ethics Committee or the Federal Election Commission, then we will do anything that is necessary to clean it up."

In all, 13 senators and six representatives donated all or a portion of their honorarium income to charity.

Members donating all their honoraria to charity were Sens. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash. ($25,000), Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio ($500), Claiborne Pell, D-R.I. ($5,200), Strom Thurmond, R-S.C. ($5,550) and Reps. Carlos J. Moorhead, R-Calif. ($1,000), and Mary Rose Oakar, D-Ohio ($3,146).

No Limit on Number

Though members were limited by the 1976 election law to $2,000 for any one speaking engagement, some members managed to earn more than $2,000 from one source by making repeat appearances.

Javits, for example, was paid a total of $8,000 for four speeches to Touche Ross & Co., an accounting firm. Lugar was paid $4,000 for two speeches to the U.S. League of Savings Associations. Rep. Guy Vander Jagt, R-Mich., was paid $3,000 by Dow Chemical Co. for three speeches, while Rep. James J. Howard, D-N.J., was paid $3,000 for three speeches to the American Public Transit Association.

Overall, senators drew larger speaking fees than House members, probably because of greater national fame.

Financial Disclosure in Congress

Tougher Ethics Standards in Congress . . .

The part-time lawyer is now an endangered species in Congress.

Toughened ethics standards have all but eliminated the once widespread practice among members of accepting thousands of dollars for part-time legal work.

Financial disclosure reports show that only 23 House members who served in Congress during 1978 received fees from actively practicing law. And many of those members have withdrawn from their law practices because of the new House ethics code. Under that code, no member of the House can accept more than $8,625 per year in outside earned income, starting in 1979. The Senate postponed the effective date of a similar rule until 1983. Senate rules, however, effectively prevent senators from practicing law.

Twenty-one House freshmen and five freshman senators reported collecting legal fees in 1978, before entering Congress. All five senators and at least four of those House members have since withdrawn from their law practices.

The House earned income limit will force some members to take substantial cuts in legal fees. Freshman Frank J. Guarini, D-N.J., for example, reported $624,129 in legal fees for 1978. He has said he will continue to practice law, but will accept only the $8,625 allowed by the House rule. (Earned income limit story: p. 1841)

Five members of the House continued in 1978 to allow their names to be used by their law firms, even though they no longer actively practiced with the firm. The American Bar Association Code of Professional Conduct expressly forbids such "false front" law firms.

The code states that a lawyer who becomes a judge or public official "shall not permit his name to remain in the name of a law firm or to be used in professional notices of the firm during any significant period in which he is not actively and regularly practicing law as a member of the firm." An ABA opinion modifying the rule said a public official may allow the partnership to retain his name if he intends to remain in public office "only temporarily."

Although the ABA code does not say so, the intent of the rule is to prevent law firms from using the name of a prominent public official to attract clients.

House members who did not actively practice law in 1978, but who permitted their names to be used by law firms are Charles A. Vanik, D-Ohio; James C. Cleveland, R-N.H.; Robert C. McEwen, R-N.Y.; John W. Jenrette Jr., D-S.C.; and Claude Pepper, D-Fla.

REPRODUCTION PROHIBITED IN WHOLE OR IN PART EXCEPT BY WRITTEN PERMISSION

Although the total paid all members in honoraria was slightly less in 1978 than in 1977, the average amount earned by those senators accepting honoraria increased by about $14,000 in 1978 from about $13,400 in 1977. For House members, the average amount earned by those accepting honoraria was $4,700 in 1978.

Spouse or Aide Often Invited

A side benefit often provided members delivering speeches is an invitation to take along one's spouse or staff aide at no personal expense.

Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., for example, took his wife with him on trips to Albuquerque, Des Moines, Las Vegas, Los Angeles (twice), Phoenix and Reno (four times) in 1978, according to his financial disclosure form. In each case, her travel expenses were paid for by the groups he addressed. The Laxalts make their home in Reno.

Howard W. Cannon, D-Nev., reported accepting payment for his wife's travel expenses on four different speech-making trips to Las Vegas in 1978. The Cannons' home is in Las Vegas.

S.I. (Sam) Hayakawa, R-Calif., reported taking along aides on speech-making trips to Providence, Miami, Tuscaloosa, Los Angeles (twice), San Francisco (twice), Albuquerque, Columbus, Kansas City, Tucson, Jacksonville, Fresno and Palm Springs in 1978. Most of the trips were to make campaign speeches for other Republican office-seekers.

Speechmaking trips can lead a member and his spouse far from home, often to glamorous vacation spots. James McClure, R-Idaho, for example, was able to take his wife along with him on a speech-making trip to Honolulu at the expense of the National Association of Realtors. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., had his wife's way paid to Tel Aviv by the American Jewish Committee in return for a speech by the senator.

Top Earners in Congress

This year, for the first time, all members of Congress were required to disclose the sources and general amounts of their outside incomes for the previous year. But because congressional disclosure requirements are so vague, it is impossible to determine exactly which members had the highest incomes.

Members were required to disclose the exact amounts of earned income, such as salaries, but were required to disclose unearned income, such as stock dividends, only in broad categories, such as $101-$1,000.

However, Congressional Quarterly compiled the following list of the 15 senators and 15 House members who had the highest minimum incomes for 1978. In compiling the list, CQ added the exact amounts of earned income and honoraria to the total minimum value for each member's unearned income.

At least half of the top 30 members inherited all or more of their wealth and are able to count on $100,000 or more each year in dividends on stocks and bonds. Two senators are wealthy because of high-visibility careers — former astronaut John Glenn and former professional basketball player Bill Bradley. Several members, who were successful lawyers or businessmen before joining Congress, continued to receive large incomes from their previous careers.

Senate

The following 15 senators topped the earnings list in the Senate during 1978.

John Heinz, R-Pa.: An heir to the H. J. Heinz food-products fortune, Heinz reported unearned income of $477,101 to over $830,000 during 1978. He reported no earned income and accepted no honoraria. At least $200,000 of the income was in the form of dividends on Heinz Co. stock; another $100,000 came from real estate partnerships, and the rest came from various oil royalties, rents and interest payments.

Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.: Kennedy reported unearned income of $286,401 to over $581,500. The bulk of that — over $200,000 — came in payments from five family trusts established by his father and mother, and a blind trust Kennedy established himself. Kennedy also received $50,000-$100,000 as his share of income from the family-owned Merchandise Mart office building in Chicago. He accepted $3,000 in honoraria, and donated all but $25 of it to charity.

John Glenn, D-Ohio: After his 1962 space flight, the former astronaut went to work for Royal Crown Cola and amassed a sizable personal fortune. His investments produced unearned income in 1978 of $288,000 to over $412,000. Among his investments are partnerships which own Holiday Inns and other real estate. Glenn received unearned income of more than $100,000 each from two partnerships — Interstate Resort Corp. and Friendship Management. Glenn also received $50,000-$100,000 from Leanda Inc., which manages two Holiday Inns owned by Friendship Management. He reported no earned income.

Claiborne Pell, D-R.I.: A member of a wealthy East Coast family, Pell reported unearned income of $267,401 to over $524,000. He also earned $3,200 in honoraria, but donated all of it to charity. Most of Pell's personal fortune is managed by the U.S. Trust Co. and the Chemical Bank, which pay him dividends and interest on numerous stock holdings. Pell earned over $100,000 in capital gains on sales of securities during 1978. Pell also is a beneficiary of eight family trusts from which he earned at least $19,500.

Sam Nunn, D-Ga.: Nunn reported a gross unearned income of $247,501 to over $371,000 for 1978 — nearly all of it from a 1,400-acre farm in Perry, Ga. He did not reveal his net income from the farm. Nunn also received small dividends from numerous stocks and profits from real estate investments. He accepted $4,400 in honoraria.

Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore.: Perhaps more than any other member of Congress, Hatfield has taken advantage of the booming real estate market in Washington, D.C. At the end of 1978, he owned two apartment buildings, a commercial building and four townhouses as investments. His wife, Antoinette, is a realtor who reportedly sold more than $1 million worth of real estate in 1978. Hatfield himself reported unearned income of $529,001 to over $787,500. That included more than $250,000 in capital gains on the sale of real estate. He also accepted $22,400 in honoraria.

Charles H. Percy, R-Ill.: The son of a bank teller, Percy worked his way up to the presidency of Bell & Howell and now enjoys a comfortable income from the trusts he established during his career. He reported unearned income of $230,161 to $863,500 from dividends, interest and capital gains on numerous holdings. He reported no single source of income over $100,000, but did have a $50,000-$100,000 capital gain on the sale of stock in the Sullair

V 37/35 SE 1 79 UMI

Corp., which manufactures compressors and drilling equipment. Percy also earned $7,500 in honoraria.

John C. Danforth, R-Mo.: Next to Heinz, Danforth probably is the wealthiest member of the Senate. He inherited much of the Ralston Purina Co. family fortune. His unearned income for 1978 ranged from $240,901 to over $386,500. Over $100,000 of that came from a blind trust and another $181,000-$700,000 came from two family trusts. Danforth also received $15,001-$50,000 directly from Ralston Purina dividends. He accepted $6,500 in honoraria, but reported no earned income.

Wendell H. Ford, D-Ky.: Two family insurance firms paid Ford more than $200,000 in 1978, making up the bulk of his total $208,201 to $219,500 unearned income. Ford also accepted $12,000 in honoraria.

Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn.: Nearly all of Baker's $187,100 to $328,000 unearned income came from installment payments and interest charges on the sale of his interest in a real estate and investment partnership. Baker also accepted $27,750 in honoraria.

Bill Bradley, D-N.J.: Bradley continues to receive substantial payments from his days as the star forward of the New York Nicks. In 1978 he received $144,876 in deferred compensation and other basketball income, and a $6,667 fee as consultant to Madison Square Garden in New York City. Bradley also received $5,000 from the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation for serving on a commission studying higher education. He also had interest and dividend income from various investments totaling $41,801 to $89,000.

Lloyd M. Bentsen, D-Texas: Helped by family money, Bentsen turned investments in real estate, banks and other businesses into a sizable fortune which produces substantial income each year. For 1978, Bentsen's unearned income was $162,600 to $441,000. His largest single source was a $50,000 to $100,000 dividend from Productive Properties of Edinburg, Texas.

William L. Armstrong, R-Colo.: Armstrong owns Armstrong Broadcasting Corp., which owns two radio stations in Colorado and which paid him an unearned income of over $100,001 in 1978. Armstrong received other interest and dividend income of $52,500 to $106,000.

Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio: Metzenbaum built an airport parking lot business into a nationwide chain that he sold to ITT for several million dollars. Dividends from ITT, real estate interests and other investments put his unearned income for 1978 between $147,100 to over $256,000.

Thomas F. Eagleton, D-Mo.: Eagleton inherited a sizable interest in Missouri Pipe Fittings Co., a family corporation that makes pipe fittings and nipples. He is vice president of the company, but draws no salary. Eagleton's unearned income from the firm, however, totaled more than $100,000 for 1978. His other unearned dividends and interest income from various businesses and municipal bonds brought $27,301 to $90,500. Eagleton also accepted $13,000 in honoraria payments.

House

The following 15 House members topped the House earnings list during 1978.

Cecil Heftel, D-Hawaii, a wealthy broadcasting executive, topped the House income list by a wide margin. He reported earned income of $878,967 from radio and television stations he owns, and unearned income of $189,800 to

Chamber of Commerce Honoraria

In an attempt to write a new agenda for "human progress" in three days in the spring of 1978, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce was able to call on 27 members of Congress to give it a hand.

The members' attendance at the Chamber's annual meeting in Washington April 30-May 2 cost the group $7,050 in honoraria, according to financial disclosure forms filed by the members who attended.

The Chamber paid honoraria to more members of Congress than any other group for a single meeting that year, the disclosure records revealed.

Here is what a Chamber publication, the Washington Report, said the members did at the meeting and what they were paid for their appearances:

Baker. Sen. Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., delivered the opening address of the 1978 meeting. He warned an audience of more than 2,500 of "the possibility that the U.S., like her ally Great Britain, might slip into state socialism," the Washington Report said. Baker was paid an honorarium of $2,000 for the speech.

Heckler and Allen. Rep. Margaret M. Heckler, R-Mass., and Sen. James B. Allen, D-Ala. (1969-78), spoke during a program entitled "America's Religious Principles." Heckler was paid $500. Allen, now deceased, did not file a financial disclosure form.

Goldwater. Rep. Barry M. Goldwater Jr., R-Calif., provided "an update on the status of privacy legislation" in Congress, according to the Report. He was paid an honorarium of $1,000.

Muskie. Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D-Maine, told a meeting that congressional spending estimates for new federal programs ran as high as $416 billion over the next five years while estimates of new funds amounted to only about $90 billion. Muskie did not report an honorarium for his participation.

Shuster. Rep. Bud Shuster, R-Pa., was a panelist in a discussion of "Congress, business and elections '78." The Washington Report did not report Shuster's remarks. He was paid a $500 honorarium.

McCormack. Rep. Mike McCormack, D-Wash., told an energy panel that the administration was partially to blame for the nation's energy problems because of its weak leadership, "based on opinion polls rather than scientific facts and the realities of life." McCormack received no honorarium for his participation, according to his financial disclosure form.

Hatch and Williams. Sens. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, and Harrison A. Williams Jr., D-N.J., participated in a panel discussion on labor "reform" legislation. Hatch argued that the "reform" bill would harm small businesses while Williams said the legislation would not. Each was paid $1,000.

McClure. Sen. James A. McClure, R-Idaho, in a speech on "organization leadership," called on business to "realize that a permanent solution to its problems requires the election of a congressional majority that believes in the workings of the free enterprise system." He added that business can affect the way even "entrenched liberals" vote on many issues by "supporting a strong conservative opponent" against them. He was paid $1,000 for his speech.

$40,000. Much of his CPA-unearned income came from the sale of stock in various broadcasting and other companies. One major source was the congressman's interest in the Kidd Corp. from which he received between $11,000 and $12,000 in dividends, interest and a capital gain. Heftel sold an Idaho television station to Kidd several years ago.

Frank J. Guarini, D-N.J., reported gross income of $64,120 in 1978 from his private law practice in Jersey City, N.J. Guarini did not report his net income from the firm. He also reported $15,000-$34,000 unearned income from assorted investments.

Harold S. Sawyer, R-Mich., reported unearned income of $525,149 and earned income of $29,167. Most of the unearned income came from a $506,071 capital gain from the sale of West Michigan Telecasters, Inc., which owns a radio station. Sawyer's dividend income came to more than $18,000, including $15,000 from Citation Companies, Inc., for which he was a director until his July 1978 resignation. Sawyer also received a $3,583 salary from Citation, $20,778 in past legal fees from the Grand Rapids, Mich., law firm of Warner, Norcross and Judd and a $5,200 salary from Kysor Industrial Corp., of which he was a director until July 1978.

S. William Green, R-N.Y., heir to the Grand Union Co. grocery chain fortune, took in at least $453,000 in unearned income for the year, none directly related to Grand Union. The income included several capital gains and a number of dividends. The most lucrative investments were in oil and real estate. Green reported earned income of $16,317, including $6,900 as a director of Grand Union.

James M. Collins, R-Texas, realized at least $304,000 for 1978, much of it in dividends from stock in companies that manufacture consumer products — B.F. Goodrich, Dennison, Woolworth, Simplicity Pattern, Singer. Other sources of wealth included income from a farm he owns and from silver futures. Before coming to Congress, Collins derived much of his wealth from insurance and other ventures. Collins reported no earned income.

Fred Richmond, D-N.Y., a wealthy businessman long before his 1974 election to the House, Richmond derived more than $100,000 in dividends from his own company, Walco National Corp., which produces machinery, some plastic products and burial supplies. Richmond earned $175,000 as board chairman of Walco in 1978, but resigned at the end of the year in order to comply with the new House earned income limit.

Bill Nelson, D-Fla., another member of a wealthy family, received $194,000 to $326,000 in unearned income, nearly all from real estate investments. Nelson owned several mortgage notes, which produced more than $130,000 of his total unearned income. Nelson also earned $10,253 in 1978 as a Florida state representative.

Jack Brooks, D-Texas, realized at least $107,100 in unearned income last year. The main source was a capital gain from the sale of stock in the Guaranty National Bank. Brooks also received dividends from that and another bank, a holding corporation and the W.F. Brooks estate. Brooks also had $56,685 in earned income, primarily as director of two Texas banks of which he is a major stockholder.

Gene Snyder, R-Ky., earned $177,491 from three Louisville, Ky., enterprises in 1978: $120,250 from his River City Coal Sales; $55,163 from his real estate business; and $2,069 from a part-time law practice. He also had $15,880 in unearned dividends and interest from various business investments and municipal bonds.

Congressional Chrysler Investors

Members of Congress will have to decide soon whether to back the financially troubled Chrysler Corp. with taxpayer money.

But the nation's lawmakers have already voted with their own money — against the number three automaker.

According to their financial disclosure statements, only three of the 535 voting and non-voting members had personal investments in Chrysler as of the beginning of 1979. Twenty-five members had invested in General Motors and five had put money into the General Motors Acceptance Corp.

All three Chrysler investors are Republicans: Rep. Robert F. McEwen, of New York (who owns $1,000-$5,000) and freshmen senators Nancy Landon Kassebaum of Kansas (under $5,000) and Gordon J. Humphrey of New Hampshire ($50,000-$100,000 in the Chrysler Financing Co.). Both Kassebaum and Humphrey also own General Motors stock.

The Ford Motor Co. isn't much more popular than Chrysler among members of Congress — only eight members have invested in Ford.

Claude Pepper, D-Fla., no longer actively practices law, but the Miami Beach law firm he started paid him $148,730 in 1978 for advice and the use of his name on the front door. Pepper also earned $1,200 as director of Washington Federal Savings and Loan Assn., and $7,944 in other earnings, including $6,584 from Social Security. In addition, Pepper reported $16,700 to $54,500 in unearned income from banks, business investments and rent.

Sam B. Hall, D-Texas, earned $129,785 from various businesses during 1978. Most of that — $107,433 — was payment by Dorchester Gas Co. on a note. Hall also earned a $12,917 commission on the sale of cattle. His unearned income was in the $15,000 to $48,000 range.

Stewart B. McKinney, R-Conn., reported receiving $140,541.60 in unearned income for the past year. Most of the sum, $104,040, was income from a trust fund set up by the family of McKinney's wife, Lucie Cunningham. The congressman also derived $6,000 from rentals and $15,000 from another trust fund. He reported $3,000 in honoraria.

Fortney H. (Pete) Stark, D-Calif., a successful real estate investor, earned $134,808 during 1978. The major sources were $74,000 from his own Stark Investment Co., which owns real estate and gas wells and $49,000 from a partnership which owns a Columbus, Ohio, shopping center. Stark reported unearned income of only $500 to $5,000.

James T. Broyhill, R-N.C., made at least $133,200 in unearned income last year. Broyhill's major sources were furniture interests that bear his family name and related enterprises. For instance, he reported a capital gain of between $5,000 and $15,000 from timber sales during 1978, and dividends of between $1,000 and $2,500 from the Southern Furniture Exposition Building.

Robert J. Lagomarsino, R-Calif., took home a combined income of more than $120,000 from citrus and real estate holdings. Lagomarsino reported earned income of $57,865 from Lagomarsino's Citrus and L. & L. Citrus. Profits from those firms and real estate investments produced another $70,400 to $109,000 in unearned income. ■

Most Members Have Income Beyond Salaries

Members of Congress each year are paid $57,500 from the U.S. Treasury — and all but a handful have outside sources of income to help them meet expenses.

Congressional Quarterly compiled the following lists of the outside incomes members reported for 1978. Only two senators and 16 House members reported no income from outside businesses, speechmaking or investments. Another 19 House members reported outside incomes of less than $1,000.

The lists include freshmen members who were not serving in Congress in 1978.

Generally, the lists show:

- House members were more likely than senators to have earned income from outside jobs;
- Senators, many of whom are nationally known, take home substantially more money in honoraria from speechmaking than House members, and
- Virtually all members of Congress have at least a few thousand dollars in unearned income from stocks, savings or other investments.

The following charts show earned income from outside positions, honoraria and unearned income during 1978 for all House and Senate members. The list does not include House and Senate salaries of $57,500 each or income for spouses and dependents of members, except in those cases where spouse or dependent income could not be separated from that of the member.

Earned income includes salaries, wages, and other income received as the result of performing a service outside the House or Senate, for example, salaries from a family farm. Honoraria are payments received from outside groups, such as lobbies, in return for making a speech or appearance, or writing an article.

Unearned income includes rent, interest, dividends, profits, capital gains, and partnership distributions. In some cases, the unearned income was one-time income during 1978, for example, a capital gain from the sale of a house.

Members of Congress were required to report the exact amounts of honoraria and earned income, but were required to show unearned income only in broad categories such as "$101-$1,000." The top unearned income category is "over $100,000." Exact amounts for unearned income are shown when available.

An asterisk (*) next to honoraria income indicates that the member donated all or part of that income to charity.

Financial Disclosure

Some Members Avoid Income Limit Rule

With a little imagination, a few House members are finding that they needn't make any financial sacrifice in order to comply with a new limit on their outside earnings that went into effect in January.

Many others, however, have taken substantial pay cuts in order to comply with the limit.

But an examination of financial disclosure reports for 1978 shows that even with the cuts in outside pay, a number of representatives in 1979 may be capitalizing on loopholes in the new House rule in order to comply with the letter but not the spirit of the new limitations. The rule was intended to limit members' outside business activities and potential conflicts of interest.

"I'm sure before it's all over we're going to be seeing some very imaginative situations," commented a staff aide to the House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct.

The Standards Committee is charged with enforcing the House rule.

A better idea of whether members are complying with the rule will not be possible until May 1980, when members file their disclosure reports covering 1979 financial activities. Even then, the Standards Committee will be hampered in its enforcement efforts because members are not required to provide the committee with copies of their tax returns. Moreover, members do not routinely provide the Standards Committee with copies of their returns voluntarily. In many cases, only an examination of a tax return could show whether a member was complying with the rule or not.

A Standards Committee aide said that panel had provided advice on how to comply with the rule to House members who requested it. But he declined to identify members who had sought advice, the details of the members' requests, or the advice actually given.

Origins of Rule

At the heart of the new House rule is a ceiling on outside earned income. The limit went into effect on Jan. 1, 1979, and thus did not affect the earnings reported in financial disclosure statements for 1978. The ceiling was approved as part of the House's new code of ethics in 1977. (1977 Almanac p. 766)

The ceiling was placed at 15 percent of a representative's annual salary. At the current annual salary of $57,500, this means that, as of 1979, a representative can earn no more than $8,625 a year in outside income, including honoraria.

In 1978, 167 representatives reported earning more than $8,625 in outside earned income. Of those, 45 representatives reported earning more than $8,625 in honoraria alone.

A similar ceiling for senators also was to have gone into effect in 1979. However, the Senate voted in March to delay enforcement of that limitation for four years. (Weekly Report p. 583)

This means that, in contrast to House members, senators can earn as much as they want in outside income other than honoraria. The 1976 Federal Election Campaign Act (PL 94-283) limits honoraria earnings of members of Congress to no more than $25,000 annually. (1976 Almanac p. 469)

Full-Time Attention to Congress

When it was adopted by the House in March 1977, the ceiling on outside earned income was the new ethics code's most controversial provision.

To its supporters, the income limit had two purposes:

- To ensure that members devote their full-time attention to their congressional duties rather than to any outside business activities.
- To minimize the potential for conflicts between a member's financial interests and legislative activities.

Acceptance of the limit also was seen as a trade-off for an increase in congressional pay, which in early 1977 went from $44,600 to $57,500.

Those opposing the ceiling noted that it would not affect unearned income such as dividends, interest, rent and capital gains.

In debate, these members argued that curbing earned income while leaving unearned income alone favored wealthy members and harmed those who depended more on such activities as speechmaking and the practice of law for their income.

"People who sit on boards of directors have their interests protected," commented Rep. Shirley Chisholm, D-N.Y., at the time.

Converting Earned Income

When the income limit rule was drafted, its supporters called it "clear-cut." But the official interpretation of the rule, published by the House Select Committee on Ethics in October 1978, left some room for members to make adjustments in their finances that apparently will enable them to continue to make substantial sums of outside income and to remain active in their outside businesses.

The Select Ethics Committee disbanded at the end of the 95th Congress, leaving further interpretation of the rule to the Standards Committee.

One way to evade the income limitation may be the ability to convert what a member formerly considered "earned income" into a return on investment.

—By Irwin B. Arieff

The Select Ethics Committee's interpretation stipulated that income may not be recharacterized in order to circumvent the rule. Income should be considered earned, the interpretation said, if it represented "compensation for personal services actually rendered."

If, however, the income were "essentially a return on equity, then it would generally not be considered to be earned income." The interpretation added that if a member were not active in a business yet had invested in that business, the member also could engage "in the general oversight and management or protection of his investment" without recording his earnings from that business as "earned income."

A handful of members seem to have seized on the qualifications in the interpretation in order to "recharacterize" their income and avoid the limitation on it. Others are in a position to do so, but may or may not actually do so.

Financial Disclosure in Congress

Hefner. Rep. W. G. (Bill) Hefner, D-N.C., for example, has in past years been taking the money from the two North Carolina radio stations he owns in the form of "salary" (in 1977) or "salary/compensation" (in 1978), according to the financial disclosure forms he filed with the House for those years. Hefner is president and owner of Hefner Radio Inc., which owns WRKB-AM and WRKB-FM in Kannapolis, N.C.

For 1979, however, "he'll now take it as dividends," explained press secretary James Lewis. Hefner later clarified this statement to explain that he would be awarding himself a dividend only "if there are any profits" from his radio firm in 1979.

Hefner said he decided to stop taking a salary from the firm because he was no longer actively involved in the company. In 1978, he explained, he "felt free" to participate in station affairs, while in 1979, "I'm not doing any work. I think I've only been to the station once this year."

However, C. W. Biggerstaff Jr., general manager of the two stations, said in a telephone interview in June that he has "detected no change in Hefner's management responsibilities in 1979. The congressman continues to "oversee" the stations' operations in the same manner as he did in earlier years, Biggerstaff said.

Mattox. In 1977, Rep. Jim Mattox, D-Texas, reported income from his law partnership of $37,542.72. In 1978, however, he reported $30,314.82 in "law firm return on equity and salary."

In an interview, Mattox said he did not know how much he was going to make in 1979. He added he did not expect to be as active in the firm in 1979 as he was in 1978, but that any money he was paid beyond $8,625 would not be in earned income.

"I don't know how much my return in equity will be this year," he commented. "But I will not earn more than $8,625 in earned income." He maintained a return on his equity had always been a part of his income from the firm. He put his equity in the firm at "around $80,000."

Shuster. Rep. Bud Shuster, R-Pa., reported "income" of $41,406 for the fourth quarter of 1977 and $29,570 for 1978 from BTI Investments Inc., the tire store and real estate business he founded. Shuster, however, maintained through spokesman Julian Barber that the money represented a return on the investment he had made in the firm before joining Congress. Barber added that the Standards Committee agreed with this interpretation. Shuster "has no active role in the management of BTI" except to oversee his investment, Barber said.

Gradison. Bill Gradison, R-Ohio, was paid a "salary" of $20,000 in 1977 and 1978 by Gradison & Co., a stock brokerage, according to his financial reports. He also reported 1977 and 1978 dividend income from the brokerage, of which he is vice president and a director.

In a January 1979 letter to the House Standards Committee, however, Gradison said the $20,000 payments were "in no way a payment for personal services on my part. I do not solicit clients, give opinions, make contacts or sell service that would generate income for Gradison & Co. The $20,000 was agreed upon as fair compensation for the substantial equity that I have with the company. That equity interest in Gradison and Company approaches $300,000. I do from time to time attend board of director meetings for the sole purpose of protecting my equity."

The Standards Committee informed Gradison in February that the payments were "not subject to the earned income limitation."

Quillen. Rep. James H. Quillen, R-Tenn., was paid $48,570 in "salary" in 1978 by five companies, according to his 1978 financial disclosure report. The report also noted that, of the five companies, he is board chairman of two and president of three.

"Since these companies were begun by the congressman," explained Rebecca C. Masters, Quillen's press secretary, "he has the ability to reduce the salaries to the level necessary to meet the earned income limitation." However, there is no limitation on unearned income, Masters noted. "You don't know what the earnings will be ye', so you can't say what the dividends will be." Quillen's positions with the companies are "honorary ones," Masters said. She added that the congressman is not active in their management at the present time.

Bedell. According to his 1978 financial report, Rep. Berkley Bedell, D-Iowa, received a salary of $70,000 from the fishing tackle and marine products firm of which he is chairman and majority stockholder. But much of this income actually was a "bonus," Bedell press secretary Stephen K. Cook told a reporter. Bedell also reported receiving a dividend from the firm in 1978.

In any case, Bedell will comply with the limit by cutting his salary, Cook said. Since he entered Congress in 1974, Bedell has had an "inactive" role in the firm, which he plans to continue, Cook said.

Active Company Role

A number of House members control or own their own companies. In order to comply with the earned income limit, they said they would reduce their salaries while maintaining the same level of activity with the firm.

Such total control gives a member increased authority in hiring employees, determining the company's dividend payments, and setting the salaries paid other company employees. This gives a member more opportunity to take income in the form of dividends instead of salaries, or to hire a spouse or dependent.

Brooks. Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Texas, was paid "salary and director fees" totaling $56,367 in 1978 by two Texas banks he owns, according to his disclosure report. Within the past two years, however, his wife was appointed to the banks' boards of directors, according to the Dallas Times Herald. In 1978, the banks began paying his wife salary and director fees, according to Brook's report. The exact amount she was paid, however, cannot be determined because House rules require only that the source and not the exact amount of the spouse's income be reported.

The Times Herald also noted that Brooks reported more than $22,000 in credit insurance commissions for the last quarter of 1977. In 1978, however, Brooks reported none. For the first time, though, his wife was reported as receiving a salary from the insurance company — of which Brooks is listed as a director — which sells the credit insurance for Brooks' banks.

Brooks and his staff aides declined to return numerous telephone inquiries concerning his plans for complying with the earned income limit and his wife's financial activities. One aide commented only that "his standard response has been that he will comply with the rule." The aide added that it was not the congressman himself but the boards of the two Brooks-owned banks which had appointed Brooks' wife a director and decided to pay her a salary and fees.

Guarini. One of the major losers in the House because of the income limit could be Rep. Frank J. Guarini, D-N.J., who reported $634,129 in "gross fees" in 1978 from the law firm of Guarini & Guarini. The congressman is the sole partner in the firm founded by his father, but has a staff of 11 attorneys working under him.

In order to comply with the earned income limit, he will take only up to $8,625 in salary in 1979, according to Daniel P. Dean, an aide. He will not change his workload, however. Anything Guarini earns over the income limit, Dean said, he will donate to charity.

Richmond. Another major loser in the House will be Fred Richmond, D-N.Y., who will do without an annual salary of $175,180 from the Waldo National Corp. in order to comply with the earned income limit. In addition to dropping his salary, Richmond resigned as chairman of the company at the end of 1978. He will continue to receive dividends and will remain active in the firm, however. "If you own 51 percent of the company, they can call you the janitor, but what's the difference," he commented in an interview. "I'm on the phone weekends and nights, spending the necessary time whether I get paid or not."

Heftel. Rep. Cecil Heftel, D-Hawaii, earned $78,250 from Heftel Broadcasting Corp. in 1978. In 1979, he will maintain the same level of activity in the firm but will donate any earnings over the limit to a scholarship fund he has established in Hawaii.

Brown. Clarence J. Brown, R-Ohio, was paid $27,014.56 in 1978 as chairman of the Brown Publishing Co. He said he would retain the same duties for the firm but cut his salary in order to comply with the income limit. The result: "I will not be paid for some of the things I do," he said in an interview.

Rep. Cecil Heftel

Face Big Salary Cuts

Edwards. "I'll just reduce the salary," Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., said of the $41,960 he paid himself in 1978 as founder and principal owner of Valley Title Co. He said he would retain the same duties with the firm in 1979 as he had in 1978.

Runnels. Rep. Harold Runnels, D-N.M., lowered his salary from the Runt'o Acidizing and Fracturing Co. in 1978 to $8,400 in order to comply with the 1979 limit. "a little bit early," Runnels said in an interview. He said he could not predict what he would pay himself in dividends in 1979 until the year was over. Runnels, who has had a series of cancer operations in the past year, said he would be reducing his activities with the firm in 1979.

Mollohan. Rep. Robert H. Mollohan, D-W. Va., reported a "salary plus bonus" of $72,901 in 1978 from Interstate Fabricators & Constructors, Inc., of which he is chairman and a stockholder. He declined to explain how he planned to comply with the earned income limit.

"The only statement he wants to make is that he is aware of the rule and he is making arrangements and he will be in compliance with it," explained spokesman Timothy L. McDonough.

Businesses and Law Practices Sold

A number of House members said they would sell their law practices or suspend the practice of law in order to comply with the income limit.

Among those who did so (followed in parentheses by the earnings they reported from their law practice in 1978) were Reps. Ed Bethune, R-Ark. ($36,448.01); Mario Biaggi, D-N.Y. (between $50,000 and $100,000); Marc L. Marks, R-Pa. ($27,500); Morgan F. Murphy, D-Ill. ($51,441, including some real estate fees); George M. O'Brien, R-Ill. (between $15,000 and $50,000); Ike Skelton, D-Mo. ($55,617); Gene Snyder, R-Ky. ($7,000 and John W. Wydler, R-N.Y. ($40,175).

Handling fewer cases in his law practice will be Rep. William E. Dannemeyer, R-Calif., who reported earning $9,443 in 1978. "He will take no new cases," an aide reported. He just doesn't have time.

Reps. Richard T. Schulze, R-Pa., and William Lehman, D-Fla., passed on family businesses to other family members in order to comply with the income limit. Schulze is selling a home appliance business to his brother, while Lehman has passed ownership of a Buick dealership to his son.

One in Three Members Have Other Jobs

Although the House and Senate have widely differing regulations governing outside employment of their members, the proportion of members in each house actually holding positions outside Congress is remarkably similar.

Income disclosure reports for 1978 showed that 33 percent of the House's members held positions outside of Congress, 37 percent of the Senate's members held outside positions. In numbers this amounted to 143 representatives and 37 senators who were engaged in employment activities in addition to their duties as public officials. (These figures cover all outside employment reported by members except for law practices. Members practicing law, p. 1528)

Some of these positions are actually paying jobs; others are nonpaying relationships such as company directorships.

The average member engaging in outside employment held only one position. Sen. Herman Talmadge, D-Ga., held eight outside positions, the most among senators.

In the House, Rep. Jim Courter, R-N.J., held 12 positions, the largest number among House members.

Although no one activity dominated, the most prevalent appeared to be in real estate and agricultural ventures. In the House, bank directorships were numerous.

Differences between House and Senate outside employment activities may stem partly from demands inherent in the jobs of senators and representatives. But a more important reason probably is the different employment restrictions in the two houses.

Members of the House are bound by relatively few limitations on their outside private employment. Although there is no statutory provision or House rule to specifically prohibit a member from engaging in outside activity which could cause a possible conflict of interest, ethical standards serve to restrict members in certain aspects of outside employment.

House rules limit the amount of income a member can earn outside his official salary to 15 percent of the salary ($8,625 at the current annual salary level of $57,500). (Story on outside income limits, p. 1841)

In addition, there are these restrictions on outside employment for members of the House:

- The official position of a representative may not be used as a means for making personal gain.
- A member of the House may not receive compensation for services rendered before federal agencies or departments.
- Direct or indirect contracting with the federal government is prohibited.
- There is a prohibition against "self-dealings" with private foundations without incurring specific tax penalties.
- A House member may not receive emoluments or compensation of any kind from a foreign government.

Outside of these basic guidelines, members of the House have been generally free to decide whether or not they might be involved in conflicts of interest.

Senate rules, on the other hand, specifically prohibit senators from engaging in outside employment for compensation if the work creates a conflict with their official duties.

A 1977 Senate Ethics Committee report on the Senate's ethics code said the rules "should be read to prohibit any outside activities which could represent a conflict of interest or the appearance of a conflict of interest." These rules apply to all employees of the Senate. The Senate ethics code also bans members of the Senate from practicing professions for more than 90 days in a calendar year. Professional services included under this rule are "engineering, real estate, insurance, legal, medical, architectural, consulting and other services."

Members of the Senate also are restricted in serving as officers or members of the board of any publicly held or publicly regulated corporation, financial institution or business entity. (1977 Almanac p. 778)

The Political Ambitions of Local Legislators: A Comparative Perspective*

William H. Dutton
University of California, Irvine

Professor Dutton compares San Francisco area data with data of his own on Buffalo area local legislators' political ambitions, on the assumption that desire to remain in elective politics constitutes a significant element in securing accountability (response) to the voting public. Statistical analysis of interview responses reveals that most councilmen do, in fact, want to continue in office, and Dutton spells out a number of distinctions among legislators that may be expected to affect their hopes for reelection or advancement.

William H. Dutton has his Ph.D. from the State University of New York at Buffalo. He is assistant research political scientist with the Public Policy Research Organization of the University of California, Irvine.

Electoral accountability theories[1] view elections as a method for controlling elected officials. Public officials respond to the demands and interests of the public, interest groups, and parties because they want their support in the next election. This linkage mechanism between the public and actions of public officials assumes that these elected officials: (1) want to remain in office or advance to a higher office; (2) believe that acting according to the preferences of constituents, interest groups, and parties will advance their office goals; and[2] (3) act rationally in the sense that they do those things which they believe will help achieve their office goals.[3] This paper focuses on the first assumption. Is it empirically correct to assume that elected public officials have political ambitions? If elected officials do not wish to remain in office, what of the electorate's capacity to restrain its officials?

This assumption is tested by comparing findings from two studies of the political ambitions of local legislators.[4] The political ambitions of nonsalaried nonpartisan legislators of the San Francisco Bay area are compared with those of the salaried partisan legislators of the Buffalo area. Three hypotheses are evaluated as explanations for the differences in political ambitions discovered between the two areas. These alternative explanations provide a set of conditions which relate to the empirical validity of the assumption that public officials want to be reelected and advanced.

* This study draws on data from my dissertation research. I would like to thank the members of my dissertation committee; Lester Milbrath, Roberta Sigel, and James Stimson, for their assistance. I am also grateful to the State University of New York for providing computer time and to the individuals I interviewed for their cooperation. An earlier version of this paper was delivered at the 1973 Annual meeting of the Midwest Political Science Association, Chicago.

1. For example, Robert A. Dahl, Who Governs? (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1961); and Lewis A. Froman, Congressmen and Their Constituencies (Chicago: Rand McNally, 1963).

2. The exact mechanism of linkage varies with different works. Norman R. Luttbeg, "Political Linkage in a Large Society," in Luttbeg, Public Opinion and Public Policy (Homewood, Illinois: The Dorsey Press, 1968), pp. 1–9, has described several models of the linkage process evident in the literature on representation, such as the "rational activist," "pressure groups," and "political parties" models. Each model is based upon somewhat different beliefs regarding who can advance the public official's office goals.

3. These do not exhaust the assumptions of linkage models. A test of other conditions of a specific linkage model is presented in John L. Sullivan and Robert E. O'Connor, "Electoral Choice and Popular Control of Public Policy," American Political Science Review (December, 1972), pp. 1256–68.

4. Published results of interviews with city councilmen of the San Francisco Bay area are compared with interview data collected by the author with the town and city councilmen of metropolitan Buffalo, New York.

The San Francisco area data were collected from January 1966 to June 1967 in over 400 cities ranging in population from 310 to 385,700 other than San Francisco. The study was conducted as the City Council Research Project, Institute of Political Studies, Stanford University. The principal published works utilized are: Kenneth Prewitt, The Recruitment of Political Leaders (Indianapolis: The Bobbs-Merrill Company, Inc. 1970); Prewitt, "Political Ambitions, Volunteerism, and Electoral Accountability," American Political Science Review (March, 1970), pp. 5–17; Gordon S. Black, "A Theory of Political Ambition," American Political Science Review (March, 1972), pp. 144–159, and Heinz Eulau and Kenneth Prewitt, Labyrinths of Democracy (Indianapolis: The Bobbs-Merrill Company, 1973).

The Buffalo area data were gathered from July to December of 1972 in the twelve cities and towns of Erie County, New York over 10,000 in population and over fifteen percent urban according to the 1970 census. This sample is basically Buffalo and its surrounding suburbs. Five councilmen were not interviewed, which resulted in a total sample of 64 councilmen.

I. The Distribution of Political Ambitions

Numerous theoretical formulations of electoral accountability assumed without empirical verification that elected officials desire reelection and/or advancement. It was considered a safe, realistic assumption. However, recent interviews with San Francisco Bay area city councilmen reported by Kenneth Prewitt[6] have thrown the generality of this assumption into question. Among the more than four hundred councilmen interviewed in eighty-two cities, Prewitt found: (1) a number of interview responses suggesting a lack of concern by councilmen over their reelection, (2) a high frequency of appointment to and voluntary retirement from elected office,[6] and (3) a sizeable proportion of councilmen (18 percent) who intended to retire from office.[7]

Prewitt summarized the consequences of his findings,

> If periodic elections make democracy a workable form of government by holding the officeholder accountable to the public, then it is indeed very important to determine how many officeholders plan on standing for reelection. The burden of the chapter thus far is that the city councilman in the San Francisco area who expects or hopes for long political tenure is in the minority. A clear one-fifth already are serving their last term; among the majority who will run again for the council but do not have ambitions for a higher post are many who anticipate voluntary retirement from office within a term or so. If political ambition or the desire for reelection is the key element serving as a restraint upon public officials, then the voters in our municipalities frequently are being denied the means of democratic control.[8]

Operationally, volunteerism refers to a high frequency of appointments to and voluntary retirements from public office. While many qualifications are made, the thrust of Prewitt's analysis is clear: "volunteerism" is prevalent because many councilmen have no political ambitions and, hence, the public lacks one theoretical means for controlling the behavior of its local officials.

Prewitt cited no comparable data on other local legislators. However, he suggested that probably "the rate of indifference to reelection (in the neighborhood of 50 percent) is higher in the communities studied here than in other parts of the United States and other levels of government."[9] He suggested that officials of partisan municipalities and higher levels of government would demonstrate less indifference over their public careers.

5. Prewitt, "Political Ambitions, Volunteerism."

8. Ibid., p. 200.

The Political Ambitions of Buffalo Area Councilmen: Interviews with town and city councilmen of the partisan municipalities of the Buffalo area tend to confirm this prediction.[10] Table I compares the ambitions of San Francisco area councilmen with those of the Buffalo area. In the Buffalo context those who wish to retire are few and the assumption of electoral accountability theories appears realistic. Buffalo area legislators desire reelection or advancement. In terms of Joseph Schlesinger's typology of political ambitions, "static," wanting reelection; and "progressive" ambitions, wanting to advance; are far more prevalent than "discrete" ambitions, wanting to retire.[11]

Table I. Proportion of Buffalo and San Francisco Bay Area Councilmen Having Different Political Ambitions.[a]

POLITICAL AMBITIONS[b]	SAN FRANCISCO AREA[c]	BUFFALO AREA
Want to retire	18%	6%
Want to be reelected	53	33
Want to advance	29	61
	100%	100%
	(N=433)	(N=64)

[a] The .12 difference of proportions in those who wish to retire is significant at the .01 level. Chi square for the table equals 26.3, which is significant at the .001 level.

[b] San Francisco Bay Area councilmen were asked, "Do you expect to continue to run for the city council?" and "Are there any other political or governmental positions—local, state or federal which you would like to seek?" Buffalo area councilmen were asked a slightly different version of the first question, "Would you like to continue to run for the council?" For both surveys, councilmen answering "no" to both questions were classified as "wanting to retire." Those not answering "no" to the first but answering "no" to the second were classified as "wanting to be reelected." Those answering "yes" or "perhaps" to the second question were classified as "wanting to advance."

[c] These figures were obtained from Prewitt, The Recruitment of Political Leaders, Table 8–1, p. 176.

9. Ibid., p. 201.
10. See note 4.
11. Joseph Schlesinger, Ambition and Politics (Chicago: Rand McNally, 1966), p. 10.

A look at the careers of the four Buffalo councilmen who say they would not like to run for reelection or seek another office does not show people who "treat council service as a 'citizen duty' in much the same manner as they treat service in the Chamber of Commerce, the PTA, the Library Board, and other such community service organizations." [12] One retiring councilman had served as a county legislator, a building code commissioner, district councilman, city council president, and congressman, beginning his career in 1941. The other councilmen will retire after 19, 18, and 8 years of service in the council. The careers of these men testify to the generalization that Buffalo area councilmen desire reelection or advancement.

Frequency of Appointments: Prewitt utilized frequency of appointment to the councils as an indicator of volunteerism. An appointment indicates that there has been a retirement for reasons other than electoral defeat and that a man has been placed in office without facing the electorate. Both factors detract from electoral accountability. In this respect also, Buffalo area councils appear less volunteeristic. While twenty-four percent of the San Francisco area councilmen were initially appointed to their office[13] only twelve percent of the Buffalo area councilmen were initially appointed.

Looking more closely at the appointed councilmen indicates that appointment rates may be a poor indicator of volunteerism in the Buffalo area. Six of the eight appointed councilmen filled a vacancy which arose from the incumbent advancing to a higher office. The remaining two vacancies were due to death or retirement after long tenure in office. Appointment rates supply little evidence of volunteerism in the Buffalo area councils. Nor does appointment circumvent the election process. One appointee in the Buffalo area faced a primary prior to appointment, and all faced general elections the first November following their appointment.

A generally known story was related by an incumbent councilwoman who had earlier been refused an appointment to a town board:

> My husband was a councilman. He died in an automobile accident two years through his four-year term. At his wake I could hear people talking about how they were going to try to take his place on the Board. I told a good friend of mine then that I'd be councilman. . . . I asked to be appointed to his seat and even promised to resign before the elections. But the Board was two Republicans and two Democrats then and they refused my request. Then I asked my > own party for the endorsement and said that if I didn't get it I'd run in the primary. They refused—so I ran in the primary against two men and won. I managed to get the Conservative party endorsement also and won the general election . . . I love it!

In general, appointments are difficult to receive, requiring a record of service to the party and/or public career experience. Only one appointed councilman in the Buffalo area did not serve as a committeeman. However, he was previously a village mayor and earlier a trustee. Only three of the eight appointees did not hold a public position prior to appointment.[14]

Frequency of Voluntary Departure: In the Buffalo area, as in the San Francisco area, voluntary departure from office is more common than defeat in the general election. Table II indicates that in only ten percent of all elections in the Buffalo area for city and town councilman since 1951 was the incumbent defeated in the general election. This is equivalent to defeat of the incumbent in 15 percent of the elections in which he ran. This rate is five percent lower than in the San Francisco area councils, but five percent higher than in Congress.[15] Election defeat in the San Francisco Bay area is relatively frequent although in absolute terms defeat is clearly the exception.[16]

The reasons for an incumbent not running in the general election are so varied, however, that this rate of voluntary departure carries no clear implications regarding the extent of volunteerism. Included in these figures are primary defeats, decisions to retire fearing defeat, running for other offices, retirement due to age or poor health, as well as more volunteeristic reasons, such as "having done one's duty." For example, at least twenty-seven percent of the nonincumbent races in the city of Buffalo

14. This evidence suggests that frequency of appointments would not be a valid indicator of volunteerism in the Buffalo area. However, the relationships discovered between "volunteerism" and dependent variables related to accountability theory provide some checks of construct validity in the San Francisco study. Construct validity suggests that "volunteerism" is adequately measured in that setting. See Ibid., Table 5, p. 11.

15. See Prewitt, "Political Ambitions and Volunteerism," p. 9. Time periods are different for each estimate. San Francisco data cover ten years, Buffalo data are since 1951 and the congressional data are from 1924–1956 taken from David Leuthold, Electioneering In a Democracy (New York: John Wiley and Sons, 1968), p. 127.

16. Better comparative data to that offered by Prewitt are not presented because it was not clear exactly how Prewitt's estimates were obtained. "Political Ambitions, Volunteerism," p. 10.

resulted from the incumbent running for a higher office.[17] Also, in about one-third of all the nonincumbent races, the incumbent's party was defeated. This suggests that anticipation of defeat may account for a large number of decisions not to seek reelection.

In the Buffalo setting, the basic assumption of accountability theory appears realistic. Councilmen want to be reelected or advanced to a higher office. The "norm of volunteerism" is clearly less prevalent in the Buffalo area councils. However, an important fact remains. More than eighty percent of the San Francisco area councilmen planned to seek another term or a higher office. In any statistical sense, therefore, the Bay area councilmen also tend to desire reelection and advancement.

II. Explaining the Different Political Ambitions of Buffalo and San Francisco Area Councilmen

What accounts for the different political ambitions of councilmen in the two systems? Here, some of the major explanations are examined. On the basis of this analysis, speculations are made about the conditions associated with different political ambitions. Because political ambitions are central to accountability theory and most easily measured at the individual level, the analysis focuses on ambitions as the dependent variable.[18] Two measures of political ambitions are utilized. (See Appendix.) A static ambition scale taps the degree councilmen desire reelection. A progressive ambition scale measures the degree councilmen desire advancement to another office.

17. The count is based on councilmen I knew had advanced. A complete check of all primary and general election data was not deemed necessary.

The most salient differences are those between the nonpartisan, nonsalaried, San Francisco area councilmen and the partisan, salaried councilmen in the Buffalo area. Also, in the Buffalo area, councilmen were not sampled from towns below 10,000 population, while the San Francisco sample includes cities with populations approaching 300.

Opportunity Structure Hypothesis: The "opportunity structure" refers to the chances for achieving different offices. Determination of opportunity structures is a question of defining the social and political career patterns of an office. According to Schlesinger, those individuals who enjoy relative political advantages, who have relatively greater chances of achieving a particular office, are also more likely to desire it.

> My basic inference, then should be clear: the ambitions of any politician flow from the expectations which are reasonable for a man in his position.[19]

In this respect, Prewitt found that about two-thirds of the city councilmen in cities with county seats (and relatively more political opportunities) "have political ambitions while only one-forth of the councilmen in other cities think in terms of moving to a higher level office." [20] There are no comparable within-system differences in the Buffalo area.[21]

A more salient factor relating to the opportunity structure is the nonpartisan nature of the San Francisco area councils. Partisan councils exist

18. An alternative would be the use of "volunteerism" indicators such as frequency of appointment to and voluntary retirement from each council. These indicators are based on the council as the unit of analysis.

19. Ambition and Politics, p. 9.

20. Recruitment of Political Leaders, p. 186.

21. Here, "within-system relationships" refer to relationships among the various properties of councilmen within each of the two metropolitan areas. The relationship between age and desire for reelection among Buffalo councilmen is a relationship within the Buffalo system utilizing individuals as the unit of analysis.

When this study utilizes the Buffalo area as a unit of analysis in comparison to the San Francisco area, we refer to "between-system relationships." Here we have only two objects, corresponding to each area or "system." For example, Buffalo area councilmen tend to be younger than Bay area councilmen.

These terms are more generally discussed by Adam Przeworski and Henry Teune, The Logic of Comparative Social Inquiry (New York: John Wiley and Sons, 1970).

in a context of horizontal and vertical links to other political units and politicians. According to Prewitt:

> From the viewpoint of the councillor, the structural picture is one in which the council is the natural terminus for his career. In this regard a councilman is unlike elected officials in partisan positions. . . . The organized political world in which ward committeemen or state legislators live clearly points them to the next level of officialdom. Generally, councilmen have no such clear lines to the next higher office; they are not on a career ladder for which the next rung is identified by an organizational chart.[22]

While the nonpartisan councils of San Francisco are a natural terminal point, the Buffalo area partisan councils are closely nested within reasonably clear career lines. As one partisan town councilman noted:

> Politics is being in the right place at the right time and you never really know what's ahead. I wouldn't be afraid to run for any office. If you study their careers you'll find that a number of congressmen served as local councilmen or in the State legislature prior to moving to Congress. There are many examples locally of that. . . .

Although objective opportunities for advancement from a local council are not excellent,[23] they are probably better than opportunities in a nonpartisan council. Therefore, while not always the case, one would expect the partisan office to be intrinsically more desirable to the politically ambitious and contribute to a higher probability of developing "progressive" ambitions (desiring advancement) than a nonpartisan

23. I have done an analysis of the structure of opportunities in New York State quite similar to Schlesinger's study at the national level, Ambition and Politics. If one simply looks at the percentage of various office-holders whose immediately prior office was local elective (councilman, supervisor, mayor, trustee) some indication of objective opportunities can be found. Following the careers of United States congressmen from 1968–1972 in all of New York State and from 1948–1972 in Erie County, New York; 14 percent of them had a local elective office immediately prior to their election to Congress. 22 percent of those serving in the New York State Senate or Assembly from 1968–1971 served in a local elective office immediately prior to the state position. A bleaker picture is gained from other careers. Only 2 percent of those officials serving in either state executive positions (governor, lt. governor, comptroller, or attorney general) 1948–1972 or judicial positions (Court of Appeals or Claims judges) 1970, or as state administrative department or commission heads 1970, served as local elective officials prior to their higher office. The sources for this information were volumes of the New York State Red Book, and Congressional Directory.

office. The opportunity structure hypothesis thus provides one plausible explanation for the San Francisco-Buffalo differences. The partisan councils of the Buffalo area provide relatively greater opportunities for advancement to other offices; hence, relatively more ambitious councilmen are found in the Buffalo area councils.

The opportunity structure hypothesis also leads to the expectation that a politician's age will relate to his ambitions.[24] As noted above, three of the four Buffalo councilmen with discrete ambitions had served long careers in public office. Each had reached that stage of his life cycle in which future opportunities were diminished and each had made plans for retirement. Prewitt discovered a negative relationship between age and political ambitions in the San Francisco area.[25] Table III presents the relationships between various life-cycle indicators and the two types of political ambitions in the Buffalo area.[26] Within-system findings for Buffalo match those for San Francisco. Age has a depressing effect on ambitions. Older and more tenured councilmen are less likely to desire reelection or advancement. Age seems to be the determining factor; the partial correlation between tenure in office and progressive ambitions when controlling for age is positive. Relatively young councilmen with longer tenures in the council want to move up.

Table IV compares age distributions for the two systems. The San Francisco area councilmen are significantly older as a group than Buffalo area councilmen. This age difference between the two samples could be an important explanation of the different distribution of political ambitions. Both factors, age and partisanship, suggested by the opportunity hypothesis fit theoretical expectations. The younger partisan councilmen have relatively more career opportunities and are more likely to desire reelection or advancement.

Cost Hypothesis: Gordon Black has used two surrogate measures of the risk sustained in seeking office (size of city and competition for office) to reflect the relative investment costs of San Francisco area councilmen. Black reasoned that the larger the city and greater the competition for the office the more the individual must invest in achieving the office. Hence only those people with real commitment to a political career would take the risks involved. Therefore, in the more competitive seats, in larger municipalities, the incumbents have probably made (and were willing to make) greater investments to reach their office and are thus less likely to give it up willingly. Black found these relationships to hold in the San Francisco area councils,[27] the incumbents in more competitive seats in larger cities being more likely to desire reelection or advancement.

To evaluate these relationships within the Buffalo setting, Table v presents the relationships between several measures of competition, constituency size, town or city size, and the dependent ambition variables. The zero-order relationships between the size-competition variables and the ambition scales are low, and several relationships between competition and ambitions are in the wrong direction. For example, the higher the incumbent's percentage of the vote the more (not less) likely he was to desire reelection. However, controlling for age, the partial correlations suggest that councilmen in larger, more urbanized towns and cities, with more voters in their district are more likely to desire advancement to a higher office. This total pattern of relationships suggests that the cost hypothesis does not hold up. The more competitive districts do not spawn more officials with static and progressive ambitions. In contrast, the opportunity hypothesis is possibly more applicable. The councilmen in the larger more urban areas may have more opportunities. They are generally located in the seats of power within county party organizations. They are also likely to become better known, get more news coverage, and thus have a public image. This adds up to a somewhat better opportunity for advancement and greater likelihood of progressive ambitions.[28] While expectations based on the cost hypothesis do not appear, the observed pattern of relationships is reasonable in terms of the opportunity hypothesis.

Benefits Hypothesis: John Soule speculated that the greater willingness of Michigan state legislators to return to the legislature as opposed to Connecticut legislators (82 percent to 65 percent) was related to the relatively higher salaries, expense accounts, larger offices, greater secretarial help, and the full-time position of Michigan legislators.[29] Possibly, the difference between the Buffalo and Bay area samples is a function of greater benefits being provided Buffalo area councilmen. The nonpartisan councils of the San Francisco area are nonsalaried while all town and city councilmen of Buffalo are salaried, varying from $2,000 to $23,000 per year. The benefits hypothesis would predict some covariation between salary and ambitions within this range of salaries. Table VI presents the observed relationships. Surprisingly, there is no positive relationship between salary and desire for reelection. Controls for age and city size do not alter that finding. There is a positive relationship between salary and desire for advancement. But the benefits hypothesis does not lead to such a prediction. This finding reflects the higher salaries of councilmen in the larger cities and towns whom we have just discussed as having somewhat greater opportunities—hence, greater desire for advancement. Keep in mind that his relationship, as well as that for city size, has been examined within a limited range. Beyond this range the relationship may change.

28. While city size is positively related to political ambitions, the differences in political ambitions between the two samples can not be explained away on this basis. Comparing councilmen in both samples from cities and towns over 30,000 indicates that San Francisco area councilmen are still less ambitious. Fifteen percent more Bay area than Buffalo area councilmen in large cities answered "no" to the question: "Are there any other governmental positions—local, state, or federal which you would like to seek?" The responses of Bay area councilmen from large cities can be found in Black, "Ambition Theory," Table 7, p. 157.

[b] The range of salaries is from $2,000 to $23,000 per year depending on council and formal position. The average salary is around $8,200.

Table VII summarizes the predicted and observed relationships between independent variables discussed above and political ambitions. Only a few of the most plausible explanations of the between-system differences in political ambitions have been examined. Other explanations such as systematic differences in the authority and prestige of council office between the two systems could be entertained. However, the Buffalo data used in conjunction with published materials rising out of the San Francisco area study do not readily address other hypotheses.

Table VII indicates that the best explanation of the different distributions of political ambitions is the opportunity hypothesis. All observations tend to correspond to expectations derived from this hypothesis. Also, inconsistencies in testing the cost hypothesis can be explained by relating city size to opportunities for advancement. Thus added support is given opportunity theory, advanced by Schlesinger who attempted to speculate indirectly on ambitions by examining the structure of political opportunities.[30]

III. Conclusions.

Do elected public officials want to remain in office or advance to a higher office? On the basis of data presented here on local legislators in two different metropolitan areas, the answer is yes. Most councilmen in both systems desire to remain in office. Beyond this, there are conditions under which this assumption of accountability theory is more likely to hold. Public officials are more likely to desire reelection or advancement if they have better career opportunities. The younger legislator in a heavily populated area of a partisan system is more likely to have political ambitions than his older counterpart in a less populated nonpartisan municipality. Data did not support hypotheses that councilmen investing more to achieve office or receiving greater benefits from office would be more likely to have political ambitions.

From the data presented here, "the norm of volunteerism" would possibly lead explanations of the linkage process between citizens and public officials in the wrong direction. If linkage fails, the reason is not likely to be that public officials do not work to gain their positions or wish to retain them. While voluntary retirement is the "norm" or most frequent method of retirement in Congress, as well as in the San Francisco and Buffalo area councils, accountability theory can not be rejected on that basis. "A desire to remain in public office" tends to be the norm in every public arena in which the ambitions of incumbents have been tapped.[31] There will be variations. These differences in the distribution of political ambitions have here been used to provide some guidelines for speculation as to when the desire for reelection or advancement will be more prevalent.

31. This desire is not a burning passion that consumes the thoughts and lives of politicians. Rather, most councilmen simply like their position, would be disappointed if defeated and would like to have a higher office if the opportunity arose.

The above items were precombined to form the following variables and variables were combined to form the following scales by summating standardized scores, then restandardizing to a mean of 50 and standard deviation of 10.

3	Like to Advance	Progressive Ambition Scale
4	Level Like to Seek
5	Level like to Achieve
Average Desirability Rating of items (7 thru 20)	Desirability of Advancement

It was determined that static ambitions, desiring to remain in office, and progressive ambitions, desiring to move to another office, were independent of each other and properly formed separate scales. Correlational analysis shows that the static and progressive variables clearly form identifiable clusters of interrelated variables. Factor analysis also supports the finding of two statistically independent types of political ambitions. Cronbach's alpha for the Static Ambition Scale equals .86, and for the Progressive Ambition Scale equals .93. The correlation between the two scales is .21.

"War is too important to be left to the Generals." This much-quoted aphorism of Clemenceau obviously will require some alteration for the "era of peace" we now allegedly are entering, or the era of mutual deterrence or mutual assured destruction (MAD). If the threat of World War III is to be less and less obvious, can deterrence simply be left to the deterrent?

There is definite evidence that the academic, like the man on the street, is devoting less attention to strategic questions now than in the late 1950's and early 1960's. The number of journal articles about such topics is
