BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
Capitol Building, Juneau
January 9, 1980

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order at 1:35 p.m. He asked for testimony from the public. Connor Sorenson addressed the commission on the issue of how the Division of Personnel computes credit for graduate study when evaluating applicants. The individual for whom he was concerned applied for a position which required 7 years of experience. The job announcement indicated that graduate study could be substituted for the experience on a year for year basis. Although the person had more than 7 years of graduate study, the Division of Personnel indicated that a formula must be applied to the education which resulted in education being worth less than the 7 years of experience. The division therefore found that the person did not qualify for the position.

Ken Kareen explained that the division does evaluate the amount of graduate study an applicant has on a semester or quarter hour basis. To be credited with one year of undergraduate study, an applicant must have either 28 semester hours or 45 quarter hours. To receive credit for one year of graduate study, an applicant must show 24 semester hours. Mr. Sorenson replied that this was not the policy which had reduced his friend's credited years of education.

Senator Ray asked Mr. Sorenson to provide the staff with additional information on the situation and directed the staff to find out whether there were any discrepancies and to establish what the division's practices are in rating the educational background of applicants.

The commission considered the second revised draft of the report and made changes. The commission voted without objection to release the report as amended.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 2:40 p.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Office Building, Juneau
November 28, 1979

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order and introduced Alexander "Bill" Gillespie, a Finance Officer employed by the Department of Education. Mr. Gillespie was invited to the meeting to address a complaint filed by Lillian Austin regarding a "not recommended for rehire" evaluation she received from the Department of Education.

Ms. Austin filed a complaint with the Human Rights Commission stating that: "I have applied and am eligible for Accounting Clerk II & III positions with Respondent (the State of Alaska), Tlingit & Haida Central Council, Sealaska, and the Bureau of Indian Affairs but have not been hired. I believe that my last evaluation by Respondent which rated me as unsatisfactory and not recommended for rehire is the reason that I am not being hired. I hereby certify that Respondent has violated AS 18.80.220 by unfairly providing me with an unsatisfactory evaluation. I have been employed in different capacities by Respondent for nine years and was rated as satisfactory until the last evaluation which occurred four months after a transfer. I was criticized for not getting along with co-workers, two Caucasian females; but to my knowledge the co-workers were not criticized for not getting along with me. These same co-workers also did not get along with an Oriental co-worker who eventually transferred to another department. I am an Alaska Native female."

Senator Ray stated that the commission is interested in receiving an explanation of the situation because a "black mark" such as not recommending for rehire is a very severe action that usually precludes any chance of being rehired - either in private or state employment.

Mr. Gillespie explained that he is familiar with Ms. Austin as a former employee of the Department of Education. Although he was not Ms. Austin's immediate supervisor, Mr. Gillespie believed that the recommendation had been phrased differently: Ms. Austin was recommended for rehire in a less complex job. Senator Ray responded that if this could be proven with documentation, the problem would be alleviated. Mr. Gillespie elaborated that this information could be found on Ms. Austin's evaluation in Department of Personnel files.

Senator Ray instructed the staff to obtain Ms. Austin's personnel file from the Department of Personnel. Terry Cramer explained that this would be possible if Ms. Austin signed an authorization form to release such confidential material. Senator Ray asked whether the personnel files could be altered. Mr. Gillespie replied that this would be highly unlikely once they are in the personnel system.

Senator Ray pointed out that Ms. Austin had supplied sworn testimony about her evaluation. He asked how she terminated her employment. Mr. Gillespie responded that one day, Ms. Austin became very agitated, told him that she was leaving, and walked out of the office, without supplying a letter of resignation.

Greg O'Claray asked whether Ms. Austin's evaluation was written after she left, or if it was discussed with her. Mr. Gillespie responded that it was written following her termination in 1978. She received a copy of the evaluation and could have discussed it with her supervisor, Merle Flemming, or could have placed a rebuttal in her personnel file.

Ken Kareen asked if there had been any difficulties or complaints about Ms. Austin prior to her termination. Mr. Gillespie replied that she had never spoken with him about any problems and, to his knowledge, had never spoken with anyone else. Mr. Kareen asked how her resignation was recorded on the final evaluation and personnel action. Mr. Gillespie did not recall. Mr. Kareen stated that an employee is normally expected to give 14 days notice, although the requirement can be waived.

Senator Ray again commented that the commission's concern is whether Ms. Austin was not recommended for rehire. Mr. Gillespie stated that everyone must fill out a termination form when leaving, and Ms. Austin's form must be in her personnel file. In order to receive her last paycheck, Ms. Austin would have had to return to the office, although she probably went to see the departmental personnel officer.

Senator Ray stated that the staff would contact Ms. Austin and investigate the situation. He added that black listing is a very drastic step to take against an individual, especially in Juneau. Ms. Austin must have had a good working relationship with someone after being employed by the state for nine years. Ms. Austin points out that her coworkers were never criticized for not getting along with her. Senator Ray concluded that it is easy to ignore this type of situation. He thanked Mr. Gillespie for attending the meeting, and Mr. Gillespie departed.

Senator Ray recessed for an executive conference, and the staff left the room.

Senator Ray called the meeting to order. Mr. O'Claray moved that the commission extend permanent employee benefits to the staff effective with the hiring of new personnel. There were no objections, and the motion passed.

The commission reviewed the Certification, Classification and Recruitment section of the draft report and corrected errors, made other changes, and added sections on review of recommendations against rehiring terminating state employees and on comprehensive classification guides.

The commission decided to meet next on Wednesday, December 12 at 1:30. Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 4:00.

MERIT SYSTEM/COLLECTIVE BARGAINING &
BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION MEETING
November 15, 1979

MINUTES

Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order and introduced Steve Halfling, Chairman of the Alaska State Personnel Board and Labor Relations Agency, and member of the Retirement Board.

Mr. Halfling briefly described his background as a 40-year Alaska resident and presented a summary of his views on the functions of the three boards. He believes that the Labor Relations Agency (LRA) is one of the most misunderstood operations in the state. It is effective and very frugal. A summary of the LRA's activities in 1979 was handed out to members.

Mr. Halfling was first appointed to the Personnel Board in 1960, when the agency met only three or four times annually to handle final steps in employee grievances. Following the adoption of the Public Employment Relations Act (P.E.R.A.) in 1972, the members of the Personnel Board were given additional duties as members of the LRA. The LRA has been meeting 30 to 35 times annually ever since. The first major task of the LRA was action on petitions to place positions in bargaining units. Since then, it has been responsible for refereeing disputes between the administration and collective bargaining units, hearing unfair labor practice allegations, monitoring strike votes, and generally performing functions similar to those of the National Labor Relations Board. In 1976, the agency heard over 250 disputes and held 60 hearings to make determinations. The LRA now spends an average of two days each month on hearings, investigations and research. Six or seven LRA decisions have been challenged in court, and all of them have been upheld.

Pat Murphy commented that the three members of the boards are volunteers who are not reimbursed for their assistance and that the subcommittee had questioned whether the agency should be given the support of a full-time staff or have full-time members. Mr. Murphy added that the present members have always impressed him with their performance. Mr. Halfling explained that the boards are funded by the state, but members don't work for any department. Therefore, members and staff can remain absolutely objective. The other two members of the boards, Morgan Reed of Skagway and Ron Henry of Fairbanks, and Mr. Halfling are longtime Alaskan residents and volunteers. The agency has a part-time secretary who handles office functions and who works on a contract basis for $2,000 monthly. A consulting attorney in Anchorage, who is a former Assistant Attorney General, Mark Ertichek, is also contracted on an hourly basis. He receives approximately $24,000-30,000 annually, which is half the cost of the former agency attorney, who lived out of state.

Mr. Halfling asserted that there is insufficient work on a continuing basis to justify having full-time agency members or staff. He doesn't believe that offices should be encouraged to justify their existence by creating work. As an example of this problem, Mr. Hafling cited the Labor Relations Office in the Municipality of Anchorage as a full-time office that appears to have created a lot of labor turmoil. The only unsolved business before the LRA for this year is the dispute between the University of Alaska and community college teachers. The LRA does not look for problems, and the law is written in such a way as to allow the agency to refuse cases that are frivolous.

Lois Jund commented that the members wear three hats. Mr. Halfling elaborated that as Personnel Board members, they have practically no workload since the advent of collective bargaining. The board holds semi-annual meetings to review changes to the Personnel Rules. The Retirement Board meets only occasionally to hear appeals. Their only real workload is as members of the LRA, and it is difficult to predict what the future volume might be. If all contracts are administered properly, the volume will decrease. Mr. Murphy stated that all states with numerous public employee unions have full-time labor relations agencies. He added that these positions are extremely vulnerable to political appointments and preconceived ideas and asked what will happen when present members choose to resign. Mr. Halfling responded that the boards must remain neutral--neither pro-union nor pro-administration.

Senator Ray asked whether the LRA's attorney's fees were excessive. Mr. Halfling replied that the Commissioner of Administration has questioned the expense of the legal consultant. Mr. Halfling believes that the finished product must be able to stand up in court, and the cost of a professional with experience in labor relations is therefore justifiable. Any inexperienced employee would be incapable of handling the demands of the position, and anyone on the state's payroll would have to be loyal to her or his employer. The LRA's secretary is also on contract for this reason. The total cost of services provided by the agency last year totalled under $40,000.

Ms. Jund asked how members of the boards are presently appointed. Mr. Halfling replied that the Governor appoints members for six-year terms, although he wasn't sure what criteria are used in the selection process. The appointments are confirmed by the legislature. Ms.. Jund asked what the duties of the Personnel Board include, and Mr. Halfling explained that the board did promulgate the initial Personnel Rules and acted as an appeals board in employee disputes. Senator Ray questioned whether the Personnel Board functions are obsolete. Mr. Halfling replied that the board hears only two or three appeals per year but must still act on changes to the Personnel Rules and changes in employee status from the partially exempt service to the classified service or vice versa.

Ms. Jund asked whether the Personnel Board or the Department of Administration would be responsible for a comprehensive revision of the Personnel Rules. Mr. Halfling replied that the Personnel Board only has authority to accept or reject Personnel Rule changes proposed by the Commissioner. The Board cannot write them nor modify them.

Senator Ray questioned whether the LRA has received inquiries or complaints regarding the hire of applicants from outside of Alaska. Mr. Halfling explained that in the early part of statehood, the Personnel Rules gave a five-point preference to anyone who had been an Alaskan resident for at least one year. Senator Ray commented that he has heard complaints about agencies and commissions hiring outside of the state without considering Alaskan applicants. Mr. Halfling stated that there is a Superior Court ruling that preferential treatment of state residents is in violation of the interstate commerce clause of the constitution. Senator Ray cited a written complaint he received from a long-time Alaskan who was not considered for a position with the Renewable Resources Corporation, even though he was extremely qualified. Mr. Kareen stated that the Renewable Resources Corporation is exempted by statute from the merit system hiring practices set out in the Personnel Rules. Mr. Halfling asserted that if the legislature could reenact the residential preference hiring system in Alaska, the Personnel Board would adopt it immediately if it were legal.

Mr. Halfling added that the Personnel Board must approve positions being placed in the partially exempt service, and the agency has turned down requests in the past which were unjustified. The board has also witnessed cases where partially exempt employees were dismissed without any appeal rights. He hopes that the commission can review these appointments to the exempt and partially exempt services.

Mr. Murphy asserted that preference for Alaskans might be provided for in collective bargaining contracts. Senator Ray stated that for strictly state-funded positions, the legislature might require a hiring preference towards individuals who had paid a state income tax during the previous year. Mr. Kareen commented that the argument for a preferential hiring system was turned down by the state's own Supreme Court, and federal funding did not enter into the question or the final decision. He added that he would be in favor of such a system, but there are exceptions when it is necessary to hire out-of-state applicants. He also pointed out that federal law requires that any minimum qualifications for positions be job-related. Ms. Jund stated that she would also favor the system when state applicants are better qualified. She proposed that agencies be required to justify the hire of out-of-state applicants in writing. Mr. Halfling asserted that employee turnover rates are increased when applicants are recruited from outside of the state. Mr. Kareen commented that this argument was raised in the state's unsuccessful court case.

Mr. Halfling concluded his discussion by reiterating his opinion that the LRA can maintain its neutrality by keeping its present structure. Mr. Kareen asked whether the agency would want additional staff if their workload increased. Mr. Halfling responded affirmatively, but said that he would not want the employees placed in the classified or partially exempt service. He also commented that an ideal candidate for board member would be someone who is retired, financially independent (to resist temptations) and objective.

Since the LRA formed, it has reached 55 formal decisions which were almost all unanimous. The most controversial of its decisions have gone to court and have been upheld.

Senator Ray summarized the situation of the LRA: The agency can work satisfactorily with its present contract attorney and part-time office staff as long as members are and continue to be completely neutral. He thanked Mr. Halfling for being candid in testifying before the commission and extended the commission's appreciation for his service on the boards.

The commission proceeded to review the Merit System/Collective Bargaining section of its draft report to the legislature, discussed changes, and added a section on positions in the partially exempt and exempt services which might be more appropriately placed in the classified service.

Senator Ray scheduled the next meeting for November 26 at 1:30 and adjourned the meeting.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
Capitol Building, Room 124, Juneau
October 17, 1979

MINUTES

Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order. He said that the commission's report to the legislature should contain recommendations on which there is a consensus. He added that each member is welcome to submit a minority report on any issue. The staff was directed to prepare a draft of the report to be reviewed by the commission at its next meeting.

Senator Ray asked if any conclusions had been drawn on the issue of the partially exempt and exempt services. He was advised that the Categories of Employees subcommittee is waiting for additional information on positions in the exempt service before making any recommendations.

Senator Ray asked whether there is evidence of problems with the nonpermanent law. Lynda McCurry stated that it will be difficult to implement the procedures set out in the law, but it will force action that should have been taken long ago. John Pugh added that it will alleviate the problem of by-passing the registers by hiring temporaries and will increase equal opportunity amongst applicants.

Senator Ray stated that there should be a section in the report addressing problems with maintaining open registers. He added that he hopes the commission will be able to make some recommendations on the issue. Pat Murphy pointed out that the Certification, Classification and Recruitment subcommittee voted in favor of recommending that the Division of Personnel receive additional funding for recruitment and examination functions. Senator Ray stated that the report should also recommend that departments request only needed positions in the budget submitted to the legislature. Legislators require more input from agencies on their operating needs.

Members discussed other topics, including: the veteran's preference system, conflicting roles of supervisors who are also union representatives, meeting equal employment opportunity goals, and providing aggrieved employees with protection from those implicated in grievances.

Senator Ray scheduled the next commission meeting for Thursday, November 15. He adjourned the meeting at 4:10.

In the absence of Representative Buchholdt and Frank Flavin, Lynda McCurry chaired the meeting. Ms. McCurry referred to the issue of contractual services and employees discussed at the last meeting. Terry Cramer pointed out that the legislative resolution creating the commission specifically directs members to address the feasibility of establishing "a method for regularizing the hiring of specialists who, because of higher comparable salaries in the private sector for the skills involved, must be paid at levels in excess of the salary schedule".

Ken Kareen explained that the state is supposed to use Internal Revenue Service guidelines to distinguish between employees and contractors. Exceptions are made for attorneys and for part-time medical doctors. Teacher contracts are covered by special provisions, and they are technically the only contract employees in the state. All others are considered contractors.

Pat Murphy described his experiences with state contracts used by the Department of Education. In 1971, the Department of Education was delegated the authority to contract out for teacher services, and this privilege was abused when employee services were contracted even though they did not fulfill teaching requirements. Mr. Murphy commented that it took four or five months to straighten out the problem after bringing it to the Commissioner's attention. He added that there are also problems arising in the Division of Data Processing. There are 35 PCN's in the Division, and 16 are vacant because they are being filled with contract employees. There appears to be a question of contracting for services that can be performed by classified employees.

Mr. Kareen explained the procedure for justifying the need for contractual services: When an agency intends to contract for services, it must fill out a form requesting authorization. The request is submitted to the Division of Finance for presentation before a committee of three individuals for consideration. No contract is binding until approved by the Division of Finance. Construction contracts let on bids are exempted from this process. Mr. Kareen added that Mr. Murphy's concerns are universal between any management and union, whether private or public. Mr. Murphy asserted that the issue should be reviewed, citing the Department of Education as an example of 40-45 positions being placed back in the classified service following the 1971 review of contracts. The issue is not necessarily a union/management question, and it should be considered by the commission.

Ms. McCurry pointed out that data-entry services were contracted out for some time by the Division of Data Processing. She asked if there is a cost analysis done prior to contracting. Lois Jund stated that the Department of Administration makes a determination on whether they will approved contracting from what agencies submit. The problem in the Division of Data Processing became evident when that division could not finish a project in time to meet federal deadlines. There was insufficient staff to get the job done, and the division recommended contracting for services. Pat Murphy responded that at least some of the Data Processing contractors were state employees who were terminated and immediately place under contract with the Division.

Ken Kareen explained that development and modification of soft-ware is also considered a contractual job in the Division of Data Processing. John Pugh commented that contracting has also increased recently in the Department of Health and Social Service's Medicaid Program. Mr. Pugh added that he believes there should be some procedure for determining whether contracting is in the best interests of the state. Mr. Kareen commented that contractual services are identified in agency budgets, and inquiries on such expenditures vary from one legislative session to the next. However, the issue is never really ignored because the costs must be justified in the budget process. The subcommittee decided to ask the Director of the Division of Finance to address members on his division's practices in approving contracts. There was no further discussion on the topic.

Referring to the memos on partially exempt positions, Terry Cramer stated that the last memo distributed showed positions placed in that service. There was general agreement that a list of exempt positions would contain the positions on which the subcommittee has questions. Lois Jund commented that the partially exempt list did not appear to be complete. She knew of additional Division Directors in the Department of Health and Social Services who did not appear on the list. Mr. Kareen pointed out that Directors, Deputy Directors and their secretaries are in the partially exempt service by statutory definition. There are criteria set out in the statutes giving the Personnel Board authority to extend the partially exempt service. Positions responsible for the formulation or implementation of policy and those whose duties are not susceptible to normal methods of recruitment and examination may be placed in the partially exempt service.

Pat Murphy mentioned that changes to the classified and partially exempt services handled by the Personnel Board are performed without any advance notice to either the bargaining units or to incumbents. He objected to the methods in which positions are being moved from the classified to partially exempt service. When the Older American Program General Government Unit positions in the Department of Health and Social Services were placed in the partially exempt service, APEA wasn't notified of the action until two weeks after it was taken. Mr. Kareen explained that the Division of Personnel received verbal directions from the Personnel Board following the incident to notify unions and incumbents of such actions in the future. Mr. Murphy pointed out that the Personnel Board consists of volunteers who have no formal staff to perform such functions. Mr. Kareen stated that the statutes were written from a model over 20 years old which did not anticipate collective bargaining in the state. The allocation of positions to the classified or partially exempt service is treated by the Act as a management prerogative. The Commissioner of Administration is petitioned for changes in services, and he/she submits the proposal to the Personnel Board, which has discretion as to whether a notice of the change is posted. The Division of Personnel has always understood that hearings are held at the Personnel Board's discretion. In a few instances, Mr. Kareen mentioned that the Personnel Board has called an incumbent in a position being changed, but that has not been an established procedure. Mr. Murphy commented that in one situation, a Director was moved from the classified to partially exempt service and was then terminated the following day. The procedure can be used to the detriment of state employees.

Lynda McCurry suggested recommending that a procedure manual be written for the Personnel Board. Mr. Murphy stated that it would be helpful to have guidelines for everyone to follow. Terry Cramer pointed out that the Personnel Board has the authority to adopt its own rules of procedure, which are exempt from the Administration Procedures Act. John Pugh stated that the Personnel Board has the authority to adopt its own procedures.

Mr. Kareen asserted that there is another area in the service which is recognized by the federal government as partially exempt: employees who don't promulgate or interpret policy but who must advocate existing policy. There is no provision in the statutes for placing these employees in the partially exempt service. Mr. Pugh responded that the subparagraph permitting positions with responsibility for policy implementation would include those required to advocate the policy.

Mr. Pugh stated that it is critical to reconcile the clash between rights granted to management under the Personnel Act with rights granted to unions under the P.E.R.A. Unions have a right to those positions which fall within their units as established by the Labor Relations Agency. Therefore, they have an interest in changes of positions within each unit from classified to partially exempt. Mr. Kareen commented that in comparison to other states, Alaska has a very low percentage of partially exempt employees. He added that there is concern about excluding career employees with major responsibilities in administering contracts from collective bargaining practices. Mr. Pugh commented that he doesn't believe that this mid-level management group should be removed from the classified service, although it should be prohibited from collective bargaining. Those employees are career service employees. There are dangers to politicizing those positions--they need protection from removal every time a new boss comes in. They should therefore remain in the classified service. In addition, incumbents in positions whose service is changed by the legislature should have appeal rights to the Personnel Board. Ms. Jund asserted that there is a need for another service providing the benefits of the classified service but not collective bargaining. Terry Cramer commented that Mike McMullen in the Classification and Pay Section had informed her of five state employees who are in this situation. However, their right to bargain has not been affected: The Labor Relations Agency held that they were not within any existing units, but they were not forbidden from organizing a separate bargaining unit.

The subcommittee decided to examine the list of exempt positions before making a recommendation on the partially exempt service. There were no objections. Ms. McCurry adjourned the meeting.

CERTIFICATION, CLASSIFICATION & RECRUITMENT
Capitol Building, Juneau

MINUTES

Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order and referred to the memo on partially exempt employees prepared by Terry Cramer. She explained that partially exempt employees do not belong to collective bargaining unions because they have never petitioned for representation. Under current statutes, all employees in the Governor's Office are in the partially exempt service, unless their positions are federally funded.

The subcommittee reviewed the list of partially exempt positions in the memo and raised questions on the following:

DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE
- Revenue Hearing Examiners
- Investment Officers I-III

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH & SOCIAL SERVICES
- Staff Psychiatrist

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE
- Executive Officer of the Nursing Board
- Executive Secretary of the Real Estate Commission
- Regional Loan Manager

DEPARTMENT OF FISH & GAME
- Special Assistant

DEPARTMENT OF ENVIRONMENTAL CONSERVATION
- Administrative Officer I

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION & PUBLIC FACILITIES
- Special Assistant

Senator Ray stated that he would discuss with Governor Hammond the possible removal of some partially exempt positions from his office and the addition of policy-making supervisors to the partially exempt service. Pat Murphy pointed out that it is possible for employees to have the protection of the classified service while being excluded from collective bargaining. Employees in this special class are not subject to termination each time a new Governor is elected. Mr. Murphy added that he is sure there will be a bill introduced next session to remove Deputy and Assistant Directors from bargaining units. Senator Ray pointed out that Deputy and Assistant Directors should be in the partially exempt service because they make policy decisions. If they were placed in the classified service as career employees, they would be less sensitive to implementing the Governor's policy.

Lois Jund cited her experiences in being offered a partially exempt position and her reluctance to accept it because of the possibility of making unpopular policy decisions and the unsure tenure of the partially exempt service. She believes that Deputy and Assitant Directors should be part of the career ladders in the classified service, but should not be part of the collective bargaining process. Ms. Jund recommended that these employees be moved into the special class Mr. Kareen referred to. Ken Kareen explained that the Governor has already proposed that these positions be removed from the collective bargaining process.

Senator Ray mentioned that he had received a complaint regarding APEA representatives being employed in policy-making positions with the state. Pat Murphy commented that this has not been a problem, but John Pugh, for example, resigned as President of APEA because the Commissioner of the Department of Health and Social Services felt that the office might conflict with his job responsibilities.

Ken Kareen stated that because of unique requirements, he feels that the Governor's staff should remain in the partially exempt service. However, there is a question about why some agencies are placed in the Governor's Office. Lois Jund pointed out that the public sector often applies pressure to have certain functions placed under the Governor's Office for visibility purposes. Ken Kareen added that there are instances when there is no logical place to put agencies other than in the Office of the Governor.

Senator Ray addressed the issue of auditing the personnel system. Lois Jund commented that audits of state agencies should be a role of the Division of Personnel. Senator Ray asked whether there is an internal audit function in the Department of Administration, and Ken Kareen responded that the internal audit function was deleted from the department's budget and reestablished under the Office of the Governor. The Department of Administration does have some audit responsibilities. Senator Ray suggested that a departmental ombudsman position might be created to handle such studies. Lois Jund mentioned that the Civil Service Commission's Personnel Branch performs personnel audits in agencies, examines specific positions, training and EEO functions, and writes reports containing recommendations for improvement. Ken Kareen elaborated that the Personnel Branch is then audited by the General Services Administration, which has a similar function.

Senator Ray moved that the subcommittee recommend that audits be performed in agencies by the Division of Personnel and that the Legislative Budget and Audit Committee determine the scope of the audits and be the recipient of reports. There were no objections.

Lois Jund asked who would be responsible for auditing the Division of Personnel, and Ken Kareen suggested that the study be performed jointly by the Division of Legislative Audit and the Department of Administration. Senator Ray pointed out that current legislative audit methods are time consuming, and reviews are not performed annually. Presently, the Legislative Audit Division reviews the system and reports findings to the Legislative Budget and Audit Committee, which submits the report to the department involved. The department then considers the report and submits a reply to the Legislative Audit Division. Mr. Kareen stated that legislative audits performed on the Division of Personnel are extremely time consuming. Mr. Murphy asserted that the Division of Personnel would be capable of handling performance audits on agencies if other functions were decentralized and the Division was responsible for administering the personnel system. Senator Ray moved that the subcommittee recommend that there be annual audits of the personnel system performed either by the Division of Personnel, the Legislative Audit Division or a combination of both. Lois Jund amended the motion by deleting reference to "annual". There were no objections.

On the issue of creating more effective disciplinary measures for violation of Personnel Rules, Senator Ray observed that supervisors are apparently lacking selfdiscipline. Ms. Jund stated that the U.S. Civil Service Commission has rules on offenses and publishes a table of penalties covering each offense. Mr. Kareen commented that under the present system, violations of Alaska's Personnel Rules are considered misdemeanors. He remembered only one prosecution in the history of the state.

Senator Ray cited an example of problems arising when the desire to prosecute is lacking. Ms. Jund commented that employees found violating the Personnel Rules should have an opportunity for hearing or appeal. Pat Murphy explained that collective bargaining unit representatives are responsible for representing employees in all disciplinary actions. All employees are responsible for abiding by the Personnel Rules, and if it is proved that they are willfully violating them, management has the right to take disciplinary action. Senator Ray asked whether the subcommittee agreed that the present disciplinary system is ineffective. Pat Murphy did not concur. Ms. Jund asserted that disciplinary measures are not applied consistently, because they are left to the supervisor's discretion and because there are no established guidelines. Ken Kareen stated that there are many parties involved when violations occur who are concerned with assisting the employee. He advocates uniform application of disciplinary measures and penalties less severe than misdemeanors. Senator Ray suggested that the subcommittee recommend an amendment to the Personnel Act to provide disciplinary action commensurate with the seriousness of violations. There were no objections.

Senator Ray brought up the issue of recommending comprehensive revision of both the Personnel Act and the Personnel Rules. The subcommittee had already voted affirmatively on recodifying the State Personnel Act. Senator Ray suggested that the decision on who should conduct the recodification process be left to the legislature's discretion. Members concurred, and suggested that the Personnel Rules be redrafted following revision of the statutes.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 11:45.

MERIT SYSTEM/COLLECTIVE BARGAINING
Capitol Building, Juneau
October 17, 1979

MINUTES

Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, called the subcommittee meeting to order and raised questions on the topic of merit increases. Lynda McCurry explained that merit increases are provided to employees in accordance with step-increase plans. For most state employees, merit increases (steps B-F in the pay plan) constitute the only raises provided by the state. Once the top step has been reached, there are no raises except for the longevity increments provided by statute. Pat Murphy commented that raises are provided in a number of ways by collective bargaining contracts. APEA has incorporated merit increase steps into its contracts. Mr. Murphy distributed copies of another union's pay plan which has two steps (APEA has six) and a service bonus plan as an alternative to the statutory longevity increments. The two steps provided for in the other union's contract represent salary increases equivalent to APEA's six steps (A-F). However, the other union contract provides it's members with a lump-sum increase after six months of employment, and APEA's are available on an annual basis at management's discretion.

Lois Jund asserted that concerns over merit increases arise when the system is abused. She added that merit increase awards should be based on specific performance criteria. Ken Kareen elaborated that agencies have no performance-based standards established. Even if there were, each supervisor would interpret them differently. Senator Ray stated that present practices are unfair, and merit increases are being applied indiscriminately. Mr. Kareen stated that he is in favor of developing performance standards and maintaining the merit increase system, although he is skeptical of the results.

Ms. Jund commented that it is easier to evaluate employees who have lower-level functions than those in the higher echelons. There is nothing precluding supervisors from setting up performance standards, and the Division of Personnel encourages agencies to do so. Mr. Kareen observed that there will always be a certain amount of subjectivity involved in the evaluation of employees.

Senator Ray stated that the legislature is dissatisfied with the lack of uniformity in the granting of merit increases and is convinced that it is not the best way to reward employee performance. Unions can bargain about providing their members with raises. He added that the merit system is not compatable with collective bargaining on the issue of merit increases. Senator Ray asserted that if an employee's performance is exemplary, that employee should receive an annual bonus at the discretion of the employer. Bob Mourant pointed out that a state supervisor cannot grant a bonus. Ms. Jund asked whether the legislature would be in favor of merit increases if some method could be devised for granting increases for meritorious service only. Senator Ray responded that the legislature apparently does not care for the terminology and would be more receptive to a system of rewarding longevity or seniority.

Senator Ray commented that few legislators are actually familiar with collective bargaining contracts, and they don't understand why the state provides raises to employees based on both the cost of living clause in contracts and merit increse provisions of the merit system. Mr. Kareen stated that there are not very many employees who advance through the final merit increase step. There is a 60% turnover rate of employees in the first three steps. Senator Ray responded that the turnover rate is decreasing as state employment becomes more popular because of benefits provided by both the merit system and collective bargaining unions.

Ken Kareen explained that merit increase steps A through F were originally provided for in Title 39, and steps J through M were added to provide for longevity in state service. Not all employees are hired at the initial step because there are instances when it is difficult to recruit for positions. Positions beginning at advanced steps are used as inducements to recruit valuable skills from the private sector. Ms. Jund commented that merit increases are necessary for recruiting and retaining valuable employee services, as well as for rewarding exceptional performance. She recommended that performance-based standards be mandatory for granting merit increases. Mr. Kareen asserted that a multi-step pay plan is better than granting a flat rate. Senator Ray stated that he doesn't believe employees should be hired at anything other than the beginning step. Ms. Jund added that if an employee in the private sector is earning more than step A, the state must compete with private industry for professional skills.

Senator Ray pointed out that although the economy in Juneau is dependent upon state and federal job income, government employees are minorities in other parts of Alaska. Mr. Murphy responded that government employees make up about 40% of Alaska's workforce, and 60-65% of the state's economy is impacted by government expenditures.

Senator Ray repeated that the legislature believes merit increases to be incompatable with collective bargaining. Ken Kareen stated that merit increase plans are presently negotiated, and changing the Personnel Act will not affect most classified state employees. Pat Murphy added that the only employees who would be affected by legislative changes to the Personnel Act, unless collective bargaining is restricted, would be partially exempt and exempt employees. Mr. Murphy pointed out that although some believe that merit increases are automatically granted on an annual basis, they have not been funded by the legislature for the past year. Therefore, departments have been applying them inconsistently depending upon how much is left in the budget because of vacancy factors, etc. Some departments are better able to supply merit increases than others. Senator Ray suggested that the subcommittee list the alternatives in the commission's report to the legislature and that current practices be explained. The report will address: a bonus for meritorious service, collective bargaining impact, step increase plans, performance standards, etc. There was no further discusssion of the issue.

On the topic of amplifying the merit principles in the Public Employment Relations Act (P.E.R.A.), Senator Ray commented that one essential principle is the concept of basing merit on ability and performance. Mr. Kareen elaborated that the evaluation of employees and retention in state service are also essential merit principles. He pointed out that although merit increases are not specifically defined under the merit principles, almost every state provides employees with increases for meritorious service. Alaska's problems with the system are not unique to state government. Terry Cramer commented that a memo from Commissioner Hudson states that merit increases are almost universally granted to public employees and include graduated pay plans.

Senator Ray asked what principles are essential to Alaska's personnel system. Mr. Kareen replied that the five principles outlined in Terry Cramer's memo (selection and retention of employees based on ability, including examination for positions; equal treatment of those seeking employment; regular integrated salary programs based on the nature of the work to be performed; selection or retention of one's position to be secure from political influences; and tenure during the time that employees perform well) should be applied to all public employees. Senator Ray observed that equal treatment of applicants seeking state employment is especially important according to recent testimony.

Senator Ray stated that the five merit principles should be defined in the Personnel Act. Mr. Kareen explained that collective bargaining impacts merit principles by implementing alternative provisions for each unit. The state does not comply with the principle of equal pay for equal work, for example, given that each unit bargains for a different pay plan. Unless the Collective Bargaining Act is revised, statutory changes to the Personne Act will cover only partially exempt and exempt employees. Senator Ray and Mr. Murphy agreed that merit principles should be statutority defined.

Senator Ray was advised that the Categories of Employees subcommittee had discussed the issue of statutory changes to the membership of the Labor Relations Agency, Retirement and Personnel Boards. Mr. Murphy pointed out that the Personnel Board meets only occasionally, and members do not have enough time to get the job done. An executive assistant has been holding hearings for members. Senator Ray asked whether there is a need for the boards. He was informed that the Personnel Board is the only agency authorized to adopt changes to the Personnel Rules, and it consists of three voluntary members. Terry Cramer explained that the statutes provide for the same three volunteers to be members of both the Personnel Board and the Labor Relations Agency. The Retirement Board consists of five members, three of whom must be the members of the Personnel Board and the Labor Relations Agency. Mr. Kareen commented that it is difficult for the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations to provide staff support for the boards, because of their involvement in labor relation disputes.

Senator Ray suggested that statutory requirements on the membership of the Labor Relations Agency, the Personnel Board and the Retirement Board be reevaluated, and recommended that the Legislative Budget and Audit Committee review the overall functions of the Boards to consider whether they should continue. There was a consensus that the Labor Relations Agency should be provided with a staff of classified employees.

Senator Ray directed the staff to prepare additional information on the topic of adopting Personnel Rules in accordance with the Administrative Procedures Act.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 2:40.

CERTIFICATION, CLASSIFICATION & RECRUITMENT
Capitol Building, Juneau
October 11, 1979

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the subcommittee meeting to order and invited Ron Lehr, Director of the Division of Budget and Management, to address questions on the role of his division in the classification and reclassification proccesses. Karen Corey was also present, representing the Governor's Office.

In the classification of new positions, the Division of Budget and Management is responsible for preparing position authorization forms, known as SA 21's. The agency requests that the division authorize the creation of a new position. This form is returned to the agency, which submits it with a position description (P402) to the Division of Personnel for their action on the proposed classification. The role of Budget and Management is to verify that funds are available for the position and to insure that the position is in accordance with the operations plan of the agency.

Senator Ray commented that the subcommittee has heard testimony regarding frequent delays in the classification process that was attri--buted to Budget and Management. Mr. Lehr responded that in most instances, SA21's are prepared by the division in May or June, well before the beginning of the fiscal year. Senator Ray mentioned the subcommittee's concern over Budget and Management's veto powers. Mr. Lehr explained that the Division of Budget and Management staff acts as the staff of the Governor's Budget Review Committee during the preparation of the Governor's budget, just as the Legislative Finance Division serves as staff of the Legislative Finance Committees during their review. In neither case do the staff members have decision-making powers. He added that there were some delays this year, since the legislative cut-back on the proposed budget required agencies to revise their operational plans. To insure that this was done, the division held up processing other documents for each agency, including authorizing expenditures for new positions, until the operations plan of the agency had been cleared.

Lynda McCurry commented that in the Department of Labor, the establishment of new positions doesn't present a problem. However, there have been problems in reclassifying positions, from seasonal to part-time for example. Ms. McCurry cited delays in the delete/reestablish process of up to several weeks. She was informed by Budget and Management analysts that reclassification actions were low on the division's list of priorities. She does not feel that agencies should be responsible for calling the division to expedite the process. Mr. Lehr stated that reclassification actions should not take more than a few days. The division only has to verify that funding is available and that the reclassification is in accordance with the operation plan intended in the budget.

Ms. McCurry stated that from the program manager's point of view, it is difficult to obtain answers to questions over which Budget and Management and the Division of Personnel have authority. Mr. Lehr responded that the division revised its procedures manual, in August or September, and it may help in identifying the source for answers.

Senator Ray pointed out that there are some who feel that the Division of Budget and Management consists of a group of elitists who give everyone a bad time. Apparently, some staff members act as though they have more authority than is actually the case. Mr. Lehr replied that he would have to hear specific complaints to respond to the accusation.

Senator Ray asked whether each analyst in the division is assigned to one department. Mr. Lehr explained that each analyst works on a budget category, and there is one category for each department, with the exception of Natural Resources. He added that the division's task is quite simple, and it is easy to complete authorization forms, which are not very complex.

Senator Ray noted that personnel officers and agencies do not care to call the division whenever they have difficulties, because this often leads to being labeled as a trouble-maker. Mr. Lehr stated that the division has a control function responsible for excercising the Governor's authority. Some friction is inherent, given that role. Lynda McCurry observed that one on the problems appears to be a lack of communication between the division and the user agencies.

There are only certain instances when the division has to get involved in the classification process, such as in the delete/reestablish actions and when reclassifications require additional money. Doryce Eggleston stated that there are no clear operating procedures outlined for personnel officers, thus there is confusion as to the role of the division. Senator Ray suggested that the first step in the process, submitting the forms to the Division of Personnel, could be eliminated. Thus, P402's and SA21's could be sent directly to the Division of Budget and Management for authorization. Mr. Lehr stated that the Division of Personnel serves as a screening function, and his division would be overrun with requests if that step were eliminated.

Senator Ray recommended that the division write a handbook outlining procedures for all entities coming in contact with the division.

Mr. Lehr stated that the division has been writing a procedures manual for internal use, but it is a time consuming task and not a high priority. Senator Ray suggested that a short-form manual be prepared in the meantime in collaboration with the Division of Personnel and some of the agencies experiencing difficulties. There were no more questions for Mr. Lehr. Senator Ray expressed the commission's thanks for his participation in the meeting and offered congratulations on his recent promotion to the position of Director. Mr. Lehr and Ms. Corey left.

Lois Jund suggested that agencies could expedite the process by preparing position descriptions prior to receipt of SA21's. Ms. McCurry noted that APEA representatives have referred to problems in the process of upgrading classifications. Ken Kareen explained that their problems are results of grievances over position reclassifications. When the Division of Budget and Management receives requests for upgrading, they have to verify that funds are available and in accordance with legislative intent. Often, funds have not been appropriated for the elevated classifications, and the Division must delay authorization until funds have been approved.

Senator Ray addressed subcommittee members, stating his hopes that the commission can remain objective on issues that members are personally involved with. He informed the subcommittee that he had made a report to the Legislative Council on the commission's activities and their lack of action on the merit system/collective bargaining issues. The council indicated that the collective bargaining issue is a priority for commission consideration. Senator Ray assured the council that all information researched and all public testimony heard on the topic will be placed in the final report to the legislature. He invited members to prepare their own reports on any of the issues discussed during meetings. Senator Ray asserted that the commission is a legislative entity that is responsible for disseminating whatever information it acquires to the legislature.

On the issue of multiple applications, Ms. Jund commented that in the civil service system, an application may be submitted for all levels in a job series. Sandra Withers stated that the Division of Personnel operates with a limited number of employees and is designed to utilize their time and effort in the most productive manner. Senator Ray asked whether it would be possible to save time by accepting one application for a series, and then if an individual passed a test for the highest level, he or she could be scored for the lower levels accordingly. Ken Kareen explained that the Division of Personnel is working on computer backup that would allow for this in some instances. However, different values are assigned to experience and skills at different levels. Final scores are based on a combination of experience and knowledge of applicants, and individuals with both should be the best candidates for the job.

Senator Ray commented that individuals from academic backgrounds fare better on tests than those who have had more actual on-the-job experience. Mr. Kareen pointed out that the Division of Personnel is trying to develop a detailed questionnaire to evaluate experience in a more efficient manner. Evaluating experience described on applications and resumes can be difficult. Some applicants write autobiographies, and some scribble only a few lines. The recruitment responsibilities of the Division of Personnel are becoming more complicated because of state and federal regulations. The division cannot, at this time, interview an applicant for a position unless there is statistical documentation that the interview is nondiscriminatory.

Senator Ray moved that the subcommittee recommend that the Division of Personnel be encouraged to get away from the necessity of multiple applications, provided that the process doesn't become more labor intensive than it is presently. There were no objections.

The issue of test validation was addressed, and Ken Kareen asserted that the commission should not address the issue because of the complexity of state and federal regulations. Presently, a competent professional is required to study jobs and then construct validated tests. There are many alternatives, such as multiple choice, essay and combination tests. The Division must show statistically that people performing well on tests will perform best on the job. Lois Jund asked if there is an agency that validates tests nation wide. Mr. Kareen explained that there are a number of consulting firms that do, but there is no one agency involved. The leader in this area is the U.S. Civil Service Commission. Ms. Jund asked whether it would be possible to obtain validated tests to be used in Alaska. Mr. Kareen replied that the test couldn't be used unless it was validated for use in Alaska. The test on which the Civil Service Commission (Office of Personnel Management) spent the most money is currently being challenged in the courts because there is some question of its validity. The state is required by federal regulation to validate tests, but only some have been at this time. Ms. Jund asked if additional funding is necessary to complete the task. Mr. Kareen stated that he has mixed feelings on requesting additional funds because he doesn't believe that the state will ever be able to validate all tests. The subcommittee took no action on the issue.

On the issue of the veteran's preference system, Senator Ray suggested that it be abolished. Mr. Kareen stated that the Division of Personnel receives applications from career military people who are drawing retirement benefits from the federal government, and they expect to receive preference in state employment as well. Senator Ray suggested that the subcommittee recommend that veterans be given preference when applying for positions within a three-year period following discharge from the service. He believes that the present ten-point preference system for disabled veterans should not be changed. There was general agreement on the issue.

Referring to the topic of regional registers, it was pointed out that limiting registers to applicants from one region would restrict competition. Applicants presently have the option of choosing the area in which they are willing to accept employment on application forms. Ken Kareen pointed out that certification of some registers are handled in Anchorage. However, individuals indicate on applications that they are willing to work anywhere in the state but frequently turn down interviews for openings in rural areas. The state is required to hire from among the best available applicants, and limiting applicants to just one area would conflict with equal employment opportunity policies. Mr. Kareen stated that the U.S. Civil Service Commission (Office of Personnel Management) has regional registers requiring one application for each region. This type of system would increase the influx of paperwork in the Division of Personnel drastically. Lois Jund suggested that the state might be able to give hiring preference to residents in some rural areas. Senator Ray moved that the issue be noted in the commission's report and identified as a problem. There were no objections.

Members addressed the issue of interviewing the top five interested applicants on a register. Senator Ray suggested that requiring a cursory interview could alleviate some grievances from individuals who believe that they should have such opportunities. Lois Jund stated that appointing authorities work under time constraints, and a requirement would present difficulties. The procedure for requiring interviews for those on block scored registers was discussed. On some registers using block scoring, there are as many as 70 applicants in the top group. Terry Cramer commented that an individual had presented his views to her on an interview at the University of Alaska. He had been told that the position might be filled by promotion, and he felt that the interview was a waste of time. Senator Ray moved that the subcommittee recommend that the top five interested applicants be notified of position openings and given an opportunity to request a meaningful interview. The recommendation does not address registers using block scoring. There were no objections.

Senator Ray mentioned that the commission's recommendations on filling authorized permanent positions with only permanent employees had been taken care of in the new nonpermanent hiring law. He made a presentation on the new law to the Council of State Government's meeting, and it has been printed in their publication as a model for other legislatures. The staff is preparing a memo on the changes being implemented by the state.

On the issue of training, Senator Ray stated that the staff is preparing a report designed to inform the legislature of the commission's views.

There was general agreement that the issues of promotion and equal employment opportunities are matters for Division of Equal Employment Opportunity consideration. Ken Kareen elaborated that the subcommittee is sympathetic tc EEO philosophies and believes that the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity provides adequate representation of the issues.

Sentor Ray commented that on the topic of documentiny tasks performed above class specifications, there are sufficient means for promotional advancement and compensation. Documentation procedures are available, which are the responsibilities of supervisors and managers. The issue is also a bargainable item. Senator Ray moved that the subcommittee recommend that thi, continue to be a bargainable item. Mr. Kareen added that it is management's responsibility to insure that the position description of their employees are current. There were no objections.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 11:50.

MERIT SYSTEM/COLLECTIVE BARGAINING
AND BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION
October 11, 1979

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order and referred to Senate Bill # 256, creating a Department of Employee Relations. He suggested that the commission consider recommending the separation of labor relations and personnel functions from others in the Department of Administration as an alternative to the creation of a new department. A Deputy Commissioner would be appointed to head each division. If the structure showed an improvement, the argument for a separate department would be substantiated. The commission could recommend to the legislature that it provide funding for the separation of functions to alleviate problems evidenced in the operation of the personnel system. Senator Ray moved that the commission include the recommendation in its report to the legislature. There were no objections.

On the issue of the legislature's involvement in collective bargaining, Senator Ray stated that the legislature doesn't appear to want to be directly involved in the bargaining process at this time. However, it must meet constitutional requirements of appropriating money to fund the contracts, and legislators want some form of veto power over unreasonable contracts in the name of the public. Senator Ray asserted that there should be some provision for legislative action on negotiated contracts within a specific time frame. A deadline for legislative action has been proposed, and if contracts are not acted upon within the time allotted, unions would be able to take any steps they believe are necessary.

Greg O'Claray stated that a legislative veto would be preferable to no legislative action. He added that he does not believe the legislature should be given two chances at approving or rejecting contracts. Sandra Withers pointed out that it is not uncommon for a government body to review contracts and order renegotiations. Mr. O'Claray responded that he doesn't believe contracts should be looked at piecemeal because the legislature would then be able to procrastinate in making a decision.

Sandra Withers commented that unions would have two opportunities to strike if the legislature had the authority to order renegotiations. Presently, all state contracts contain "no strike" clauses which provide that there will be no work stoppages during the life of the contracts. Therefore, when negotiations reach an impasse, unions are precluded from petitioning the Labor Relations Agency for striking authority until the existing contracts expire. If all contracts were to expire on December 31, and negotiations reached an impasse, unions would be able to strike if mediation was unsuccessful. If negotiations resumed and an agreement was reached, it would then be submitted to the legislature. Unions would again be able to petition for a strike vote if the contract was not funded, unless the agreement had some legal force during the interim and also contained a "no strike" clause.

Senator Ray stated that agreements should be negotiated and transmitted to the legislature by a date convenient to the parties. The legislature would then have 30 days to either accept or reject the negotiated contract. If all contract expiration dates were changed to June 30, the unions would not be able to petition for a strike vote until after adequate time for renegotiations. The Department of Administration would thus only be responsible for handling negotiations, and strikes would have to be handled by the legislature. Mr. O'Claray questioned how a strike would be resolved. Senator Ray replied that either the Governor or the legislature would call a special session. Ms. Withers suggested that the commission research other state statutes that address legislative procedures for funding negotiated contracts. Senator Ray responded that public employee strikes are not uncommon, and they should be accepted as a possibility when the legislature does not approve the monetary terms.

Senator Ray asserted that the legislature is only interested in the monetary terms of the contracts. Mr. O'Claray reiterated his belief that the legislature should not be able to exercise a line-item veto over contracts. Ken Kareen commented that there are two large cost items: wages and benefits. Senator Ray stated that the legislature is only interested in the total price tag. Mr. O'Claray suggested that the commission recommend that the legislature be required to vote on negotiated contracts between the 90th and 120th day of the session. Senator Ray suggested that the legislature be required to take action by March 15 or within 30 days after receipt of contracts or before adjournment.

Ms. Withers pointed out that the expiration dates of contracts are currently considered bargainable items. Senator Ray stated that the commission should recommend that contracts coincide with the fiscal year. He added that language could be drafted to provide for multi-year contracts.

Senator Ray moved that the commission recommend that a time limit be set for legislative action on negotiated contracts. There were no objections. He added that the discussion should include alternatives to the procedure such as: negotiations being handled by the legislature, by a private negotiator hired by the legislature, or by the Department of Administration.

Mr. O'Claray stated that there should be a mechanism in the law for resolution of disputes if the legislature rejects a negotiated agreement. The method presently provided in the statutes is a strike. However, Mr. Kareen pointed out that some bargaining units are precluded from striking by statute. Lois Jund commented that if the timetable for legislative action was early enough, it could allow for renegotiation of contracts prior to the end of the session. Ms. Withers asserted that the legislature's role in collective bargaining is not unique to Alaska, and she suggested that other statutes be examined to get ideas on timetables. Mr. O'Claray stated that if the Finance Committee can give consideration to contracts in 30 days, then a negotiated agreement should be submitted by February 15. Mr. Kareen voiced concerns about the transition period on contracts, and Senator Ray responded that special provisions have to be made for implementing any new law.

On the issue of excluding policy-making supervisors from collective bargaining, Senator Ray commented that the partially exempt service appears to be another classification problem. Ken Kareen responded that some supervisors are responsible for policy making and others are required to enforce policy and collective bargaining contract terms. Mr. O'Claray mentioned that APEA representatives had testified at a House Committee meeting that they were willing to remove 90 supervisors from collective bargaining units. Senator Ray directed the staff to call the Governors Office to find out which classifications were proposed for removal from collective bargaining.

Senator Ray addressed the topic of a non-negotiable management rights clause and asked what would be included in such a clause. Terry Cramer explained that statutes in other states include hiring, promotion, tranfer, and the establishment of personnel rules as management rights. Mr. Kareen elaborated that the issue relates to problems that arose when the Department of Administration negotiated with a collective bargaining union on hiring hall practices, which do infringe upon management's ability to recruit and examine applicants. He added that merit principles must be adhered to by both parties. The fundamental question is what should and what should not be bargainable. Ms. Withers stated that the Commissioner of Administration is attempting to define what is bargainable. Currently, the classification, recruitment and examination processes are bargainanble, and a management rights clause would be a vehicle for setting out things that should remain consistent for all state employees. Ms. Withers added that the state negotiated an alternative to the statutory longevity system with one union. The only thing presently exempted from collective bargaining is retirement benefits. Changes to the Personnel Act are bargainable items.

Senator Ray recommended that the commission advise the legislature that certain items which are currently negotiable such as health benefits, classification, recruitment and examination might be exempted from collective bargaining. He instructed the staff to make clear in the draft of the commission's report that collective bargaining has created inconsistencies in employee's health insurance and medical benefits. Mr. O'Claray pointed out that each union placed emphasis on different contract components. He added that IBU is tied into Taft-Hartley Act retirement trusts, and the state would have to amortize should it decide to require ferry workers to belong to the state's retirement system. Senator Ray directed the staff to point out in the commission's draft report that unions trade in different ways and place varying degrees of importance on increasing wages or benefits. This has prompted some discussion within the commission on the possibility of adopting a management rights clause to exclude certain topics from the collective bargaining process. Further investigation and study is needed before the commission will be prepared to make any definitive recommendations.

On the issue of cost of living adjustments, Senator Ray observed that there are two ways to go about it: lump sum or percentage increases. Mr. O'Claray suggested that there is no single answer to the question. The legislature is against percentage increases, but across-the-board increases create problems with compression of salaries. Senator Ray concurred that both systems have inherent problems. He suggested that this might be a topic for review each year. Ms. Withers commented that the country's economic situation will determine the continuation of such increases. Senator Ray stated that in the public's viewpoint, a hamburger costs the same amount for the guy who runs the elevator as it does for a commissioner. He does not believe that life styles should determine the allocations of increases. Lois Jund suggested that a third alternative is possible: varying percentage increases so that lower salary levels receive larger increases. Senator Ray reminded members that cost of living adjustments are not actual salary increases. They are not tied to geographical differences or anything else.

On the issue of merit increases, Senator Ray stated his belief that they should be done away with. Ken Kareen pointed out that they are currently negotiable items. Lois Jund commented that without merit increases, employee productivity is not encouraged. Senator Ray responded that a meritorious service award could be granted by a committee to deserving employees. The panel/committee could consider recommendations from supervisors and could have discretion on the amount of awards. Ms. Jund stated that it is not fair to pay a long term employee who is extremely productive the same amount that a new employee with no experience would receive. In addition, there are some positions in specialized fields where there is no career ladder and therefore no opportunity for advancement. She recommended that performance standards be created for evaluation of meritorious service, so that merit increases would not be considered "living and breathing" awards. Senator Ray asserted that collective bargaining is not compatable with the merit system, and it is perceived as a double dip for state employees. Ken Kareen stated that he believes there should be performance evaluations, but that it would be impossible to have a uniform system of application because of the subjectivity inherent in any evaluation system. Mr. O'Claray pointed out that most labor organizations don't believe in merit increases, because it provides supervisors with a method for "playing favorites". He stated that a seniority system does not allow for favoritism. Senator Ray repeated that the legislature is seriously considering the incompatability of the merit system and collective bargaining.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 4:25.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE
STATE PERSONNEL ACT
Capitol Building, Juneau
October 5, 1979

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order and requested reports on subcommittee recommendations.

CATEGORIES OF EMPLOYEES SUBCOMMITTEE

The Categories of Employees subcommittee voted to recommend to the full commission that all personnel sections of the Alaska Statutes be codified into a cohesive form located in one chapter. The commission voted to pass the recommendation without objection.

Ken Kareen mentioned that the implementation of the nonpermanent law initially sponsored by the commission would be delayed in some areas, but all departments would be in compliance by January 1, 1980. Previous issues relating to temporary employees were reviewed. Senator Ray elaborated that nonpermanents will not receive fringe benefits, health insurance or retroactive credit for retirement under the law and that the commission should not address those issues.

On the topic of contracting, Senator Ray asked if the commission should recommend that rules be adopted to prohibit state employees or corporations composed of state employees from subcontracting with the state while employed by the state. Frank Flavin pointed out that this is already in the Personnel Rules and is considered a "conflict of interest". Complaints have been received about how state contracting is handled and the rule that bids do not have to be solicited on jobs costing less that $2,000. John Pugh pointed out that many of the problems have been cleared up. The state's practice of contracting for services which could be performed by state employees should be left to collective bargaining between the state and the employee unions. Senator Ray stated that he would provide the staff with additional information on the subject if he receives any more complaints.

The subcommittee requested the staff to study the exempt and partially exempt classes in the state and to present a list of those positions and their locations as soon as possible.

The issue of reviewing all vacant PCN's had been brought up during subcommittee discussion. One area of concern is the legislature's "red lining" of vacant positions that have not been filled because of classification and recruitment time delays. John Pugh added that there may be a number of vacant PCN's this year because of underfunding for personal services. Ken Kareen suggested that the problems may dwindle, because under the nonpermanent law, permanent position dollars cannot be used for hiring temporaries and therefore vacancies in permanent positions may be reduced.

CERTIFICATION, CLASSIFICATION & RECRUITMENT SUBCOMMITTEE

The Certification, Classification and Recruitment Subcommittee voted to recommend to the full commission that the Division of Personnel move towards broader classifications. Ken Kareen elaborated that the Division has been in the process of doing so since the beginning of the year. The commission voted in favor of recommending this to the Division.

Regarding the topic of closing recruitment, John Pugh stated that it was a difficult issue for the subcommittee. If there are no eligibles on registers willing to work in rural locations, appointing authorities must first work the registers and then request authority to recruit locally, which can be a time consuming process. Sandra Withers stated that there are complaints whether the registers are open or closed. To keep registers open, there must be sufficient staff to examine and test applicants in the Division of Personnel. Maintaining access to promotional lists in classes in which the registers are closed has been taken to arbitration. Ms. Withers stated that it would take another four staff members in the Division of Personnel to handle open recruitment at all times.

John Pugh suggested that the commission request that the legislature appropriate more funds to increase the Division's staff. Greg O'Claray concurred that additional staff should be funded and registers should remain open, giving the state the opportunity to choose from the most qualified when a vacancy opens. Sandra Withers pointed out that the new nonpermanent law will inundate the Division with applications from temporaries trying to get on registers for permanent positions, and nonpermanents will have to be hired off registers in accordance with the law. There was a general consensus that recruitment should remain open and that the Division of Personnel should be provided with additional staff funding.

Frank Flavin commented that there appears to be too much paper work involved in the application process and that one solution would be to reduce the submissions to one per applicant, regardless of the number of classes she or he was applying for. Ken Kareen responded that the Division has alleviated some problems by offering to give passing grades for lower classifications within a series to applicants who have passed an advanced level test. In many cases this is not possible because at various levels of classifications, different skills are required, and different tests must be used to evaluate those skills.

Applicants who want to be placed on registers by this method are placed in a single group. The division does not try to rank them with the applicants who were tested for the lower level position. Mr. Kareen elaborated that the Division has abolished 183 classes. by merging them with other similar classes or by eliminating them completely. There are now fewer than 1,300 classes in the state.

Mr. Flavin suggested that the commission design the ideal personnel system for 1981, burn everything in existence now and start out all over again. John Pugh asked if the Division has tried using a single application for multiple classifications. Ken Kareen explained that the Division had tried accepting up to five class titles on a single application. The number of positions applied for increased, and the staff still had to review each title separately. Staff members ended up making extra copies of applications themselves to avoid confusion. Sandra Withers elaborated on the ideal system, which would be computerized so that information could be keyed in, applications could be tracked, and classifications for which an individual qualified would print out. Ken Kareen commented that the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities has been working on a system for evaluating and classifying all the planner classes in the department. To date, the department has had to bring in consultants, psychologists and an expert in data processing, and they still don't have a workable system.

Senator Ray asked what role the Division of Budget and Management plays in the classification process. Sandra Withers replied that the Division of Personnel cannot work on a position before there is assurance that it has been funded. The Personnel Rules provide this method for monitoring compliance with legislative changes in the budget. The Division of Budget and Management certifies the availability of funds and has done so since the office was physically located in the Department of Administration. At that time it was an interdepartmental review. The subcommittee had directed the commission staff to invite representatives of the Budget and Management and Governor's office to attend its next meeting (October 11).

Returning to the topic of multiple applications, Ken Kareen commented that the Division of Personnel has come very close to having a production line set up in its offices to handle the large volume of applications. All applications for one classification are gathered together and evaluated at one time. Greg O'Claray observed that the public feels that there is too much paperwork and it doesn't perceive the requirements of the Division of Personnel as reasonable. Sue Greene asked how the Division should be perceived--as an employment agency or as a group of employees performing state functions. The Division's resources are restricted. Is it unreasonable to make things easier for state employees? How far should the Division go to please the public? Which is the top priority--performing services for the user departments or providing services to the public? There have been many changes in the time needed to perform evaluations of applications in the past few years, but there have been no increases in the number of staffing services. Ken Kareen stated that the state has more records than any private industry would dream of because of it is required to account for its actions.

Senator Ray scheduled the next commission meeting for Thursday October 11, and adjourned the meeting at 4:20.

Frank Flavin, Vice Chairman, called the meeting to order and asked members if there were issues other than those outlined in the September 26 summary they wished to address. There were no additions.

On the nonpermanent hire law, Mr. Flavin asked if part-time temporaries are limited to 120 days of employment or the equivalent in hours. He also asked if the law applies to exempt employees. The law limits part-time temporaries to 120 calendar days as it does full-time temporaries (nonpermanents). Ken Kareen responded that it does not apply to partially-exempt or exempt employees.

On the issue of state practices in obtaining services or goods by contract, Mr. Flavin pointed out that there are two components to the issue: contractual employees and contractual services. Darlene Livermore stated that the state is drastically expanding areas of contracting and cited the Division of Data Processing as an example of where this is taking place. Mr. Flavin commented that he has found instances where contracted employees should actually be employed by the state, under Internal Revenue Service regulations. Ken Kareen explained that the the Division of Finance in the Department of Administration monitors contracting practices. The procedure calls for their authorization before a contract is negotiated and again before a contract is entered. The standards for distinguishing between someone whose services are contracted for and a state employee are the same as those followed by the IRS. Mr. Kareen believes that the number of contracts entered into by the state has diminished. The Division of Personnel doesn't usually get involved in the procedure. However, in some instances, the Division of Finance does request input from the division. The Department of Education did request assistance from the Division of Personnel on teachers' contracts when there was some question as to the legitimacy of the practices.

Mr. Flavin asserted that the subcommittee could recommend that there be more enforcement of contracting regulations. Mr. Kareen explained that the Division of Personnel does not monitor contracts and not all agencies are subject to review by the Division of Finance.

Darlene Livermore stated that the Division of Finance is responsible for reviewing only monetary terms of contracts to verify that they are consistant with IRS standards. Mr. Flavin asked if the forms used by the Division of Finance question whether services could be performed by a state employee. Mr. Kareen explained that there are different forms, and one is used only by the Department of Education for teachers. At one point, the Department of Education form was used improperly for administrative employees.

Ms. Livermore pointed out that there are former employees of the Division of Data Processing who are now performing the same functions for the division under contracts. Mr. Kareen stated that these employees are now working for contractors used by the state. John Pugh asserted that the Division of Data Processing is a good example of an agency that is contracting for personnel services ineffectively. Mr. Flavin suggested that monitoring contracting practices could be another function of a Department of Employee Relations. Abusing contracting privileges is already illegal, but there is an apparent lack of monitoring and enforcement.

Ms. Livermore commented that some collective bargaining contracts contain provisions regarding contracting and subcontracting. In response to Mr. Flavin's question on the extent of state policy, Mr. Kareen stated that policies differ from agency to agency. Mr. Pugh cited a need for planning of future personnel and program requirements. This should be done on a long-term basis as a cost saving mechanism. Mr. Kareen pointed out that there is another committee studying the practices of the Division of Data Processing.

Mr. Flavin asked whether there are personnel planners to perform such functions. Ms. Livermore replied that there are people who specialize in staffing. Mr. Kareen stated that each manager in the state has responsibility for program planning. The state does not employ any manpower specialists because in addition to the knowledge of personnel planning, they must have expertise in various fields. The state is too small to support such a function. Mr. Flavin commented that there is a need in the budget process for review of new projects to justify their objectives. He asked whether the Division of Budget and Management could question personnel projections and examine the cost efficiency factors. Mr. Pugh observed that presently, only monetary terms are considered in determining what is most economical for a single fiscal year. There is no consideration given to long-term planning of staff and funding requirements. Ms. Livermore pointed out that the federal system has a personnel management office that provides specialists who consult with agencies on program objectives.

Mr. Pugh asked what type of studies are required prior to the authorization of contracts. Mr. Kareen responded that one collective bargaining contract provides that a study be performed to verify the ability of the contractor to provide services at less cost to the state than could state employees. Otherwise, there must be justification through the budget process that contracts are more economical. Mr. Kareen commented that the theory of obtaining the best and most economical services is good. However, it is difficult to identify how services can be accomplished and the costs of alternatives. The ideal would be providing the highest quality and quantity of service to the public at the least expense. He added that there will always be disagreement on whether the proper choice was made. John Pugh suggested that there needs to be more than a study of the financial aspects of contracts. The best alternative for one year isn't necessarily the best alternative in the long run. Mr. Kareen commented that many agencies operate with federal monies and therefore cannot plan for a long-term program.

The subcommittee took no position on the issue.

On the issue of excluding policy-making supervisors from collective bargaining, Ms. Livermore stated that there are many employees in the partially exempt service who have little policy-making authority, but are excluded from bargaining. A number of these positions were assigned to the partially exempt service by legislative action that was not based on policy-making criteria. In the Limited Entry Program, for example, there are 40 or 50 employees who are classified as such without those responsibilities. Mr. Flavin stated that there are some supervisors in the classified service who should be in the partially exempt service. He suggested that the subcommittee review both services. Mr. Pugh commented that any changes made in those services would require statutory revisions.

Mr. Kareen explained that there are three ways in which positions are placed in the various services. The State Personnel Act initially placed legislative and court system employees in the exempt service. Employees in the Office of the Governor, unless their positions are federally funded, are in the partially exempt service, as are attorney members of the Attorney General's Office. Commissioners are exempt, and their secretaries are partially exempt.

The second method by which positions are placed in the exempt or partially exempt service is as a result of case-by-case legislative action. The legislature enacts laws which state that a certain position (s) will be exempt or partially exempt. For example, the Director of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations was recently placed in the partially exempt service. The legislature does not appear to follow clear standards in making its decisions about which service positions should be in.

The third method is created by the State Personnel Act. By action of the Personnel Board, following petitioning of the Commissioner of the Department of Administration, a position may be moved from the partially exempt to the classified service or the other way around. The petition must demonstrate that certain criteria are met before the Personnel Board may act. The Personnel Board has no jurisdiction to change the status of those positions which have been placed in one service by legislative action. Ms. Livermore added that the employees of the Limited Entry Commission has all been placed in the exempt service by legislative action. Mr. Flavin recommended that the subcommittee initiate a study on the numbers of positions in the partially exempt and exempt service to determine placement patterns. The staff was directed to present an overview on the subject.

On another issue, Mr. Kareen stated that someone from the Legislative Affairs Agency had searched through the statutes to isolate references to the personnel system. The results were lengthy, and he feels that the Personnel Act is not codified well. He added that the Personnel Act makes no mention of those scattered positions which are to be in the partially exempt and exempt services. Mr. Flavin moved that the subcommittee recommend that all personnel sections in the statutes be codified into a cohesive form located in one chapter. There were no objections, and the motion passed.

The subcommittee addressed the issue of initiating a study of PCN's remaining vacant for excessive lengths of time. Mr. Pugh stated that because of underfunding in many agencies, there would be difficulty in studying vacant PCN's at this time. Lynda McCurry pointed out that vacant PCN's are going to be used when reclassifying temporaries under the nonpermanent hiring law. Mr. Flavin suggested that the subcommittee table the issue until it has seen the reaction to the new law.

Mr. Flavin adjourned the meeting at 9:30.

CERTIFICATION, CLASSIFICATION & RECRUITMENT SUBCOMMITTEE
Capitol Building--Juneau
October 5, 1979

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order and referred to the September 26 issues summary as an agenda for discussion. Items IIA1 (creation of a Department of Employee Relations) and IIA2 (adopting the Personnel Rules in compliance with the Administrative Procedures Act) were reviewed by members. Under language drafted into SB256, Personnel Rules would no longer be exempted from Administrative Procedure Act requirements. Under the present law, the Personnel Board has discretion as to whether a public hearing is held on proposed changes.

On the issue of a block scoring system (IIA3), Ken Kareen explained that the subcommittee's previous recommendation was viewed by the Division of Personnel as an encouragement to continue moving in that direction. He stated that currently, almost all clerical examinations are block scored. There are numerous federal requirements for compliance with examination regulations, and it is possible that further subcommittee refinements would not be in compliance. The federal government permits the use of block scoring in its own system where there is sufficient statistical information available.

Sue Greene stated that the "rule of five" is restrictive for some classes and not so for others. There are certain types of positions that require employee qualities that do not show up through testing. Ken Kareen commented that to meet this need, there are provisions in the Personnel Rules where an appointing authority has discretion to hire below the top five. When an exception is made, the burden is placed on the appointing authority to supply a reasonable explanation for such action.

Senator Ray stated that people's expectations of getting hired when within the top five are being thwarted, written examinations are ambiguous, experience is erroneously evaluated and "buzz words" are the most significant factors in evaluations. Darlene Livermore responded that final ratings are usually based 60% on experience and 40% on test scores. There are inherent difficulties in classifying people, and there is always a question of subjectivity. On another topic, it was noted that after an individual is tested and hired, the emphasis on training is dependent upon the position. If a classification is for training purposes, the examination is created to predict which individual has the greatest learning potential.

John Pugh pointed out that the Division of Personnel has improved certain classifications by consolidating them into larger classes. When his department needs a program coordinator, it requests the specific qualifications necessary. The Division of Personnel provides an eligible list of those persons on the general program coordinator list who meet the specific qualifications requested. However, this can be very time consuming for the Division of Personnel, and generalizations cannot always be made in classifications.

Senator Ray elaborated on existing classification problems, such as requests for accountants, when a position only requires an accounting clerk. Sue Greene responded that the Division of Personnel relies on information from supervisors, who are required to review each of their employees' position descriptions during the annual performance evaluations. There is a need to improve the system. Ken Kareen pointed out that a recommendation to create a stronger audit function in the Division of Personnel would make the division even less popular than it is now. Members discussed some possibilities for reviewing the classification system. Washington contracts with a consulting firm on an ongoing basis. Alaska has previously contracted with a firm to examine and make recommendations on the system. Although the firm was well respected, their recommendations were unpopular and not acted upon. Ken Kareen agreed with Sue Greene that a study performed by an outside firm would be more objective, but credibility would be better from the Division of Personnel. If a study were to be done, it would be important for the current division staff to work with the firm conducting the study because they would be responsible for maintaining the revised system.

Lynda McCurry stated that several agencies have highly developed classification review plans. However, there is a lack of resources for all departments to do so. Departments and personnel sections should be more responsible for position classifications. John Pugh suggested that register ranking could be better handled by departmental personnel, especially unique classes which some departments are responsible for now. Some classification problems can be attributed to the departmental employees who write evaluations and minimum qualifications. How much authority for independent action should personnel officers have? Personnel officers in some departments are classifying positions. In various agencies, employees are responsible for writing their own job descriptions and evaluations, which are reviewed by supervisors and then sent to personnel sections. Lynda McCurry stated that if an incumbent is familiar with the work, he or she will usually be able to write a very honest job description. In the Word Processing Center, for example, it was found that almost universally, the staff rated its work with fewer points than actually earned. John Pugh mentioned his belief that "padding" is more prevalent for positions in Juneau offices than those located in other parts of the state. Positions with a higher level of decision-making authority are better paid in the state than are those with less authority but more daily responsibilities.

Senator Ray asked the subcommittee whether personnel officers should be centralized or decentralized. Darlene Livermore replied that it would appear to be easier to have them congregated in one central location. However, good logic dictates a decentralized system to the maximum degree possible, where the personnel officers have a great amount of authority and some type of uniformity in regulation application. John Pugh commented that there are some functions that need to remain in the Division of Personnel. He recommends a centralized system to establish and maintain policies and procedures, with a strong audit function. Lynda McCurry added that the Confidential Employees Association recommends that personnel officers with classification authority be located in each department and that there be a strong audit function in the Division of Personnel.

Sue Greene said that there are two points of concern in maintaining a cohesive system of equitable application. In the long term, fragmentation can occur in a decentralized system. She recommends that personnel officers be hired and managed by departments and be delegated different levels of authority, depending upon their capabilities. Presently, each department has a personnel section, and the Division of Personnel employs individuals to service all the departments. Employees in the division distribute some activities to departments and ask for assistance in various tasks. Ms. Greene advocates moving in the direction of greater delegation of tasks to the departments at the discretion of the Division of Personnel.

Senator Ray observed that the decentralization of personnel officers appeared to be favored by members and that the biggest argument against such an action would be the veto power of the Divsion of Personnel. Classification procedures could be performed by personnel officers in agencies, but the Division of Personnel would have the final word. Ken Kareen explained that there are many variables that must be taken into consideration when delegating tasks to departments such as different management skills, personalities, general abilities and knowledge of procedures of personnel officers and their staffs. The Division of Personnel responds in proportion to the input and performance qualifications of departments.

Senator Ray commented on complaints the commission has received regarding reclassifications that originate in departments, are approved by personnel officers and then denied by the Division of Personnel. Ken Kareen responded that this problem relates to control at the commissioner's level. How much authority should they have in the process? Even if personnel officers were employed by the Division, they would still be subjected to pressure from commissioners and would have to consider priorities. Darlene Livermore recommended the delegation of functions from a centralized division, responsible for overseeing rules and regulations on how to distribute tasks. That is how the Department of Labor is working now. Ms. Livermore stated that delegation of responsibilities could work on a performance basis to the benefit of all. Those personnel offices incapable of performing could be dealt with by providing training to the staff or by whatever action became necessary.

John Pugh cited the prompt classification of new positions as being a major problem. New positions are assigned to a class in the budget enacted by the legislature and should be handled by departments so that programs can start on time. Ms. Livermore stated that the problem in classification of new positions is created by the Division of Budget and Management. In a study initiated by Senator Croft two years ago, it was found that delays are most often due to delays in receiving position descriptions or in Budget and Management's authorization process. Once a department has written a job description (P402), after the budget has been authorized by the legislature and signed by the Governor, the entire mass of paperwork must be submitted to Budget and Management so that the source of funding can be identified and documents can be coded into the budget process.

Senator Ray asked why Budget and Management is involved in the process. It was explained that they must verify the existence of funds appropriated to agencies for their classifications and that the use of funds is consistent with the legislature's intent. The staff was directed to request that a representative of the Office of Budget and Management attend the next subcommittee meeting.

On the question of reviewing all existing classifications, Senator Ray stated that he would prefer to have someone other than the Division of Personnel perform the study. It was noted that there is presently insufficient staff in the division to perform a comprehensive review. Darlene Livermore commented that she had been in contact with other states that had hired personnel consulting firms to investigate the feasibility of utilizing their services. The responses she received on some of the most respected firms were not favorable. The state or municipalities involved experienced extreme difficulties with the recommendations of the firms that were implemented.

Senator Ray suggested to the subcommittee that it recommend that the legislature fund a comprehensive review of existing classifications to identify troubled areas. Ms. McCurry stated that dealing with outside consultants had been disastrous in the past and that funds could be better spent by giving the Division of Personnel additional resources. Other options such as utilizing the Civil Service Commission (Office of Personnel Management), the Legislative Audit Division or the Division of Personnel were mentioned. Senator Ray modified his recommendation: A study should be performed by either the Division of Personnel, Legislative Audit, the Civil Service Commission, an outside consulting firm or a combination of the above. A vote was taken. Two were in favor and two opposed. The motion failed.

John Pugh moved that the subcommittee recommend that the Division of Personnel head towards broader classifications. There were no objections, and the motion passed.

On the topic of closing eligibility registers, Ken Kareen stated that the issue has gone to arbitration, and a decision has not been made. The grievance is based on the fact that once registers are closed, unionized employees are precluded from promotional openings because they cannot get on registers. John Pugh stated that open recruitment on all positions is ridiculous. The grievance arose when permanent employees were denied access to promotional lists. Mr. Pugh added that it makes sense to limit recruitment because of the insufficient amount of employees in the Division of Personnel.

Ken Kareen pointed out that the Division of Personnel is trying to schedule recruitment and staff workloads so that every job classification will be open for a minimum of 30 days per year. Senator Ray observed that applicants might be allowed to test for closed positions at any time. From the public standpoint, testing should be available at all times. Lynda McCurry pointed out that there are instances where only four positions exist in one classification, yet the Division of Personnel receives 185 applications annually. Ken Kareen stated that the state is spending funds on recruitment that is unnecessary. Last year, the Division of Personnel processed 60,000 applications from approximately 28,000 individuals. Mr. Kareen stated that the present Division of Personnel policy is to close recruitment for a maximum of 11 months when there are sufficient numbers of eligibles on registers to meet the state's needs for one year. Mr. Pugh asserted that registers should not be closed to permanent employees. Senator Ray asked why a present employee should be treated better than a citizen.

Senator Ray moved that the subcommittee recommend the continuation of open registers in a modified form. There were no objections, and the motion passed.

Members agreed to hold a meeting next week to receive testimony from Ron Lehr of Budget and Management and possibly from a representative of the Governor's Office.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 12:10.

MERIT SYSTEM/COLLECTIVE BARGAINING SUBCOMMITTEE
Capitol Building, Juneau
October 5, 1979

MINUTES

Greg O'Claray, Vice Chairman, called the meeting to order and referred to the September 26 issues summary as the topic of subcommittee discussion. The meeting was recessed briefly to prioritize the issues to be addressed (issue numbers in parenthesis reflect those in the summary). Mr. O'Claray reconvened the meeting.

1. The legislative role in collective bargaining. (IIIB1)

The only place where the legislature's involvement in collective bargaining is addressed in the statutes is in AS23.40.215 of the Personnel Employment Relations Act. Presently, the legislature takes no active role in the bargaining process. The Constitution requires that the legislature enact all appropriations, including those for collective bargaining contracts. The result is that unions must deal initially with the Administration at the negotiation tables and then with the legislature to encourage appropriation of funds. John Pugh commented that the legislature appears to want more information about contracts and a better method of communication from the administration.

In discussing alternatives, Terry Cramer stated that Wisconsin has a joint committee consisting of the leadership of both houses and parties that is consulted by state negotiating teams. Sandra Withers commented that the legislature is considering taking a more active role in negotiations through a legislative employee at the bargaining table. The legislative representative could have either a moderating or approval role, but in either case it would be impossible. If the legislature sits at the table, it should take the entire responsibility for bargaining. Otherwise, the unions would be asked to bargain with people (Department of Administration staff) who do not have authority to make any committments. Ms. Withers added that in some states, an elected body passes on both monetary and contract terms.

Greg O'Claray stated that he doesn't believe that the legislature should be involved in the process at all. Right now, it is not clear what role they play, and he does not feel that they want to bargain at the negotiating table. Sandra Withers suggested that the topic is beyond the subcommittee's purview. Mr. O'Claray disagreed, stating that the legislature is seeking information and direction on the topic from the commission. Darlene Livermore recommended that legislative involvement not be changed because 95% of collective bargaining contracts do not deal with monetary terms and could be divorced from the legislative process. John Pugh commented that this is a constitutional issue that may be resolved in the courts.

Sandra Withers stated that if it is a legislative concern, there should be a vehicle for communicating concerns. Has the commission received any directives? Ken Kareen concurred and added that this is a relationship between the legislature and the Governor. Frank Flavin suggested that the subcommittee ask some legislators how they perceive the problem if the commission is going to address this issue. Greg O'Claray tabled the issue for discussion at a future subcommittee meeting.

2. Amplification of merit principles in the Personnel Employment Relations Act. (IIIB7)

John Pugh commented that Pat Hunt, former Director of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations, had suggested placing merit principles in the statutes. Frank Flavin suggested that the subcommittee consider what part of the merit system or what merit principles are bargainable. It had been Mr. Hunt's belief that all principles are bargainable. There is a constitutional requirement for a merit system, but it may be provided for by collective bargaining contracts.

Ken Kareen stated that neither the state Constitution nor the statutes defines the principles. In practice, Alaska generally follows those of the federal government. Sandra Withers pointed out that the Personnel Act sets out the operation of merit principles. Mr. Flavin commented that this also relates to whether Alaska should adopt a management rights clause. Greg O'Claray asked whether merit principles should be spelled out in the P.E.R.A. John Pugh stated that they have been written out in the Model Personnel Administration Law.

Greg O'Claray tabled discussion of the topic for future subcommittee deliberation.

3. Membership of the Labor Relations Agency, the Personnel Board and the Retirement Board. (IIIB8 and IIIB9)

The subcommittee is on record as recommending the establishment of a full-time Labor Relations Agency. The issue was brought about due to concerns based on accessibility to the agency. The Labor Relations Agency is established by statute as a three member board and members serve on a voluntary basis, operating on limited resources. Both John Pugh and Greg O'Claray stated that they had never experienced problems with accessibility to the agency, but Darlene Livermore stated that bargaining unit changes end up being delayed for months due to the infrequency of agency meetings. The agency has never spoken before the subcommittee on problems.

Frank Flavin questioned the interrelationship of the three boards, and it was explained that membership overlaps. The three members of the Labor Relations Agency are required by statute to be the three members of the Personnel Board. Three of the five members of the Retirement Board are required to be the Personnel Board members. Ken Kareen explained that the function of the Retirement Board is to oversee the retirement system, to make decisions on investment of retirement funds and to act as an appellate board on claims, such as early retirement. The staff was asked to invite a member of the Labor Relations Agency to attend its next meeting and to research the function of the three boards. Ken Kareen mentioned that Title 39 does outline the agencies' duties.

4. Methods of adopting Personnel Rules and standard operating procedures. (IIIB10)

Sandra Withers pointed out that the Personnel Rules are exempted from the Administrative Procedures Act review. However, SB 256 as currently drafted deletes the exemption. Ken Kareen elaborated that the issue relates to concerns that the Personnel Rules do not detail procedures for implementation, and departments have been writing their own standard operating procedures. In many instances, the procedures differ and have impacted employees differently.

Mr. Kareen added that standard operating procedures are also subjects of collective bargaining. Frank Flavin commented that there is nothing in the Administrative Procedures Act that prohibits collective bargaining on the issue. The A.P.A. requires that before rules are adopted, they must be subject to public comment. Contracts are not considered rules and are therefore not subject to the A.P.A. Mr. Flavin added that those standard operating procedures which affect the public would be required to conform to the A.P.A. Those procedures which are solely concerned with internal management are excluded. Lynda McCurry asked if there is a problem in how standard operating procedures implement the Personnel Rules. Does the subcommittee want to recommend a review of the departmental standard operating procedures to determine whether there is consistency of treatment of state employees in various departments?

Greg O'Claray tabled the issue for future subcommittee consideration.

5. Exclusion of policy-making supervisors from collective bargaining. (IIIB2)

John Pugh stated that all supervisors are involved in some form of policy making, whether it be in disciplinary actions for subordinates or actual regulation formulation. However, it is possible for supervisors to be in the classified service and exempt from collective bargaining. They would not have to be removed from the classified service and placed in the partially exempt service. However, this exclusion from bargaining would have to be provided for in the P.E.R.A. John Pugh stated that APEA has already agreed to the removal of some supervisors from collective bargaining.

Greg O'Claray tabled the topic for future subcommittee discussion and adjourned the meeting at 2:45.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE
STATE PERSONNEL ACT
Public Hearing
September 12, 1979

Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, called the hearing to order and presented a telegram from Wasilla to commission members regarding complaints about the 120-day limit on temporary employment. It was decided by members that no action could be taken because of legislation passed on nonpermanent hire. Also presented was a letter from Catherine Hubbard concerning summer employment for students going to school outside of the state. (See attached copies of correspondence.) Don Fisher stated that the Division of Personnel permits submission of applications from students outside of the state, and therefore this shouldn't be a problem.

Senator Ray requested public testimony, and there being no response, brought up the topic of collective bargaining. Is the legislature going to continue giving the responsibility of negotiations to the Department of Administration? What will be the method for transmittal of agreements to the legislature for consideration? One proposed change involves requiring that all contracts expire on July 1. At some time prior to adjournment, there would be a deadline by which the Department of Administration and the unions would have to make a presentation to the legislature on negotiated agreements. The legislature would then have the option of approving or disapproving the contracts, and the unions would take whatever action they required to meet their interests.

Senator Ray asked whether the commission would like to make recommendations on the topic. Ken Spray responded that the problems recently encountered could be a catalyst for the establishment of a Department of Employee Relations. Senator Ray stated that the bill in question (SB256) did not receive affirmative action during the last session, and the consensus was that a separate department was unnecessary. However, the fiasco of the regular and special sessions may have changed some opinions. Mr. Spray suggested that the commission support its passage once again.

Senator Ray elaborated on the legislature's desire to take a more active role in the collective bargaining process. Alternatives under consideration include having the legislature directly responsible for the negotiations on behalf of the state, either through staff hired for that purpose or through a standing committee. However, when the legislature was responsible for negotiating with unions in the past, the outcome depended on which organization contributed the most to lobbying efforts. The system was unsuccessful at that time, and the legislature voted to opt out of direct involvement in negotiations. The current system was successful until this last year. He suggested that some legislators consider the added cost of the second and third years of multi-year contracts to be like paying for a "dead horse".

Senator Ray requested public testimony, and Maria Iverson, Leasing Officer with the Division of General Services and Supply, responded. On the topic of collective bargaining versus the merit system, Ms. Iverson stated that she believes employee unions are necessary to correct management neglect of employee needs and morale.

Ms. Iverson went on to discuss a public notice she had seen posted regarding a new APEA by-law giving the union president the right to fire members who do not honor picket lines. She said that other issues of concern to her and other state employees include the widespread discrimination and retaliation actions of management happening when employees speak out on issues. She added that there is a need for incentive programs to encourage talented state workers.

Senator Ray questioned the ability of any union to fire an individual for crossing a picket line. If this were true, management rights would be negated, as well as constitutional rights to express opinions. The state hires in accordance with the merit system, and a union has neither the right to hire nor fire employees. Senator Ray asked Pat Murphy to speak to the issue. Mr. Murphy stated that it was not true to his knowledge and that the notice may have been posted by someone other than an APEA representative. He added that in any case, by-laws have no control over an employee unless they are included in contract provisions.

Ms. Iverson stated that she has reviewed many laws on equal employment opportunity and human rights, and there is little in the Personnel Rules addressing those issues. She said provisions should be adopted to punish supervisors who willfully discriminate against women and minorities. Anyone found guilty of discrimination should be fired, be banned from further state employment for two years, and be made liable for punitive damages. She added that women in all levels of employment, from clerks to managers, are being discriminated against.

Senator Ray observed that complaints have been received stating that women are given advantages over men in the state. Frank Flavin responded that there is a lack of disciplinary actions to punish those who are proven to be discriminating against minorities. Taxpayers pay for rewards in discrimination cases, not the individuals responsible. The state needs to put a new emphasis on making those who discriminate illegally responsible for their actions.

Senator Ray pointed out that the greater percentage of personnel officers in the state are women, and they must therefore have control over discrimination in the hiring and firing of women. Lynda McCurry responded that personnel officers do not have authority to hire or fire. Ms. Iverson asserted that even top administrators often cannot do anything about discriminatory actions. Mr. Flavin pointed out that the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity only conciliates problems, and the Human Rights Commission cannot take disciplinary action. The only one who can take action is a supervisor or manager. Mr. Murphy commented that if it is proven that an individual in engaged in discriminatory practices, and the case can be substantiated, this would be just cause for dismissal under the present Personnel Rules. The method is available, but proving discrimination is difficult. Senator Ray suggested that the women on the commission form a subcommittee to look into the matter. Ms. Iverson expressed concern over the operation of the Word Processing Center. Ms. Greene responded that both the Commissioner of Administration and Sandra Withers are reviewing the operation of the center. Senator Ray stated that the operation is successful in one department and not in the other. Ms. Iverson added that she constantly finds errors in work done by the center and that production rates and quality are poor. Ms. Iverson also objects to the piece-rate standards set by the center and the lack of monetary rewards or incentives to perform well.

Senator Ray noted that the commission has discussed the merit system and the monetary aspects of merit increases. One remedy is to award merit increases in lump sums for outstanding service as decided by a board composed of members from various agencies. The commission is still reviewing the relationship between the merit system and collective bargaining. Ms. Greene pointed out that there is incentive award legislation still in committee, but that there is a question about whether funding will be provided.

Peggie Loken addressed the commission regarding her concerns on the merit system, and suggested that pending legislation on incentive awards may resolve many problems. Senator Ray commented that the legislature considers merit increases as a double-dip for state employees. He feels that if the merit system exists, it should be directed towards hiring practices and performance incentives and suggests that performance evaluations only be submitted on below or above average employees. Requests for increases could then be submitted to an incentive board for consideration. Ms. Loken asserted that there is great concern about granting increases to "chair warmers" for average service.

Ms. Loken stated that there are too many job classifications for the state to accomodate. The system can be circumvented in numerous ways. Senator Ray pointed out that this problem is not unique to Alaska. The commission has also heard testimony that the present classifications are too broad. Ms. Loken stated that some employees are getting paid for functions they are not performing. Individuals can also be performing tasks well above what they are being compensated for. As an example of this problem, Ms. Loken said that it might take two or three months to fill a supervisory position through registers, and when the position is filled, subordinates are responsible for training the supervisor. She also mentioned that examinations do not test for skills actually needed to perform jobs. Ms. Loken concluded that the system doesn't encourage productivity and wastes time and effort in hiring employees.

Senator Ray commented that III's on registers may be willing to accept II vacancies, but they are considered over-qualified and never notified of such vacancies. He added that there are many applicants applying for as many registers as possible, thus flooding the system. Ms. Loken commented that "running" the registers is already excessively time consuming. She added that she would never succeed in hiring an individual if she had to consider all applicants on registers in a job series. Senator Ray asked Ms. Loken if she felt that there are too many classifications that are inconsistent with actual job functions. As an example, Ms. Loken said that accountants are performing work that does not meet class specifications. Senator Ray suggested that the reason behind this is that in prior years, the need for an accountant was valid. Although the duties have changed, the position has not been reclassified and the agency has maintanined this classification to justify its existence to the legislature.

Ms. Greene explained that there is a backlog in reviews of classifications and job descriptions in the Division of Personnel. Mr. Spray commented that it is disturbing to have classifiers in the Classification and Pay Section downgrading positions in which they lack elemental knowledge of the work. He added that he has heard that the problem is in funding and that employees are being demoralized.

Mr. Flavin stated that improvements can be made in the certification area. One subcommittee came up with a recommendation to have block scoring for eligible lists. He added that there is no way to prove who is more qualified within a certain range or category, and the block scoring approach would allow supervisors more flexibility in hiring eligibles.

Cynthia Butler presented testimony on her experiences in trying to get a job in the state system as a double minority--black and female. She submitted her first applications almost a year ago and is now on 26 registers. Ms. Butler suggested that this might be evidence of problems with the system, and especially with having three sets of eligibility lists used in hiring applicants: open competitive, departmental and interdepartmental. The employer has the option of hiring from any of the three lists, which makes it difficult for new people to get into state service. Ms. Withers responded that departmental and interdepartmental promotional lists are composed of persons eligible for promotion and that they are a necessary part of the merit system.

Ms. Butler gave an example of an instance where a white male with a Bachelor's degree and a test score of 85 received a job she had interviewed for, despite the fact that her score was 95 and she has a Master's degree with honors from Yale University. Ms. Butler believes that the applicant was hired over her because he had been in Alaska some three months longer than she and was not female or black. Ms. Butler's response to this episode was a feeling of abuse and frustration. She stated that she was hoping that it would not be necessary to continue waging a "civil rights battle".

Ms. Butler continued, explaining that she is currently working two jobs as a part-time administrative assistant with the state and as a full-time nurse in the evenings. Between the two jobs, she said that she is still not making enough to live and that this is a sad commentary on the personnel system. Ms. Butler added that she had testified before the commission previously regarding her difficulties with the system.

Certification of eligibles and testing are two areas cited by Ms. Butler as needing attention. Her experiences indicate that the people who evaluate an applicant's experience respond to familiar "buzz words" and lack the technical knowledge of at least some fields of work to properly score an application. For one job classification for which she applied, she was given no credit for having a masters degree in that field, because the title of her academic program was not the commonly used title, which the evaluator would have recognized. The evaluator suggested that Ms. Butler write her resume and application for the layperson, rather than using technical terms. Ms. Butler suggested that an applicant should be able to explain qualifications for technical positions with appropriate technical terms. A resume should not have to be written at an eighth-grade level to be understood by the evaluators. She added that she has also found the state tests are not job related.

Mr. Flavin asked whether she had been offered interviews during her search for a job with the state. Ms. Butler replied that she had had one or two, but of rather unusual characther. The positions she applied for were in the health field. She was told that she would be interviewed by one doctor, but received an appointment with another. During her conversation with this second doctor, he asked her a number of "baiting" questions, and the placement of chairs in which they sat suggested that he was trying to intimidate her. He made comments such as "Natives have taken over too much" and "You have three strikes against you: you're a health planner and a Yalie". She did not reply in kind.

Ms. Butler's next encounter in interviewing for a job was an invitation to dinner at the house of the first doctor. He informed her that the department had hired someone else. These were the two interviews which she had during her search for employment with the state.

Ms. Withers pointed out that being on 26 eligible lists does not mean that there are vacancies in all of those classes. There is a low turnover rate in higher salary ranges, and often a list is open for recruitment because there are so few applicants on registers. She added that the Division of Personnel does publish lists of vacancies, but because of the extensive time and work required to create the list, it is difficult to keep current. Ms. Butler presented a different opinion: She believes that she has not been hired because she had not been in Alaska long enough and employers perceive her as being an aggressive and outspoken black female.

Pearl Ancheta, an employee with the Department of Health and Social Services, presented testimony concerning eligible lists and how they discriminate against minorities. She expressed concern over Personnel Rule 4 01.3, which states that the Director of the Division of Personnel may prepare an appropriate list for a vacancy for which there are not appropriate eligible lists from one or more existing related lists. Senator Ray responded that under the merit system, incentives must be given to employees to progress in state service. Ms. Ancheta questioned whether giving preferential treatment to employees was in accordance with equal employment opportunity philosophy. Senator Ray asserted that the EEO system must given equal opportunities to people applying for positions as well as to employees within the system.

Aaron Isaacs, Director of the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity, addressed the commission. He stated that the responsibility of the Division is not only for people in government, but for those trying to get into government employment. Senator Ray responded that competitive lists as well as interdepartmental lists provide equal opportunities. Mr. Flavin suggested that discrimination problems can be attributed to lack of disciplinary measures and the attitudes of people working registers; or, in other words, the "male and pale" syndrome. He stipulated that there is nothing wrong with the lists: Personnel responsibilities of providing equal employment opportunities are being shunted aside and not given proper emphasis. Senator Ray agreed that there is apparently a weakness in supervisory personnel.

Ms. Greene stated that there is a need to monitor supervisory decisions in the hiring process. The Division of Equal Employment Opportunity offers training to supervisors on its policies and procedures which is mandatory for some and optional for others. Mr. Spray commented that the commission should meet with the Chief of the Classification and Pay Section of the Division of Personnel.

Senator Ray pointed out that there is also a problem of supervisors not recommending employees for rehire and issuing unsatisfactory evaluations, as was the case with Charles Dockery in the Division of Data Processing. Again, Mr. Flavin suggested that these problems support an the establishment of a Department of Employee Relations.

Ms. Withers observed that the downgrading of positions is considered negatively, but it is a possibility when identifying actual work being performed by employees. Senator Ray suggested that desk audits may be needed for every position in the system. Ms. Butler asked if there is any way to make sure that any eligible minority person would be considered for any vacant position. In a recent survey taken in the Department of Health and Social Services, Ms. Butler found that only one minority person is employed above range 22, and only about 15% of all departmental employees are minorities.

Marie Darlin, a member of the Juneau Intergovernmental Training Council, testified regarding employee training in state government. (See attached statement.) The Council's main concern is providing education, training and employee development within government. The Council has been in operation since 1967, and with the help of a grant from the Civil Service Commission, some attempts have been made to develop training programs in the state.

Senator Ray asked whether supervisors have guidelines and why they need additional training. Ms. Darlin explained that people need only meet minimum qualifications to be hired, but they have to be trained in the special aspects of jobs. In addition, training teaches employees new developments in their fields and makes them more capable and efficient. She also pointed out that there are no state forms to record an employee's on-the-job or special training. There is training going on, but there is no criteria established to measure results. Senator Ray cited the Word Processing Center as an example of an agency that has established forms for recognition of training and on-the-job performance. Ms. Darlin commented that these are subjective performance evaluations from supervisors.

Senator Ray stated that when the legislature, and especially the Finance Committee, looks at a request for training funds, there is a feeling that an employee should be capable of performing job functions when hired without additional training. He suggested that the staff prepare a draft position paper on the issue of the value and need for training of state employees for submission to the legislature. The commission will review it at a future meeting.

Ms. Darlin stated that training has been addressed in labor agreements and affirmative action plans, but that is the only place where upward mobility and career ladders are addressed. Lynda McCurry suggested that a subcommittee investigate the need for training further. Mr. Isaacs pointed out that the nature of EEO's responsibility is to educate supervisors and managers on the ever-changing nature of laws and regulations. New people in state government must be informed of the technical aspects of equal employment opportunity.

Mr. Fisher added that supervisors in charge of programs have to continue necessary training, even without specific allocations in the budget. He cited data processing as a good example of a field where individuals must keep up-to-date on new aspects of the job. Mr. Flavin observed that the legislature creates training needs whenever they change the laws.

Mr. Spray stated that in hiring program managers, Wisconsin places more emphasis on management skills than on knowledge of actual job functions. Ms. Greene pointed out that the question is what should be expected from supervisors and what status is intended to be given to them: What do we ask of them and how much would be expected in the private sector without additional training and instruction? Don Fisher reiterated that employees need to remain current on new skills, concepts and duties.

In answer to a question on the Intergovernmental Training Council, Ms. Darlin stated that it is composed of state, local and federal agency staff. The objective of the Council is to coordinate training resources available in government agencies. There are not very many individuals responsible for training programs, and training is normally given low priority. Once a year, the Council tries to hold a session in cooperation with the Office of Personnel Management for people in government.

Senator Ray asked what the merit system provides for and what recommendations the commission should make regarding eligible lists: Should we recommend that all lists be open competitive in light of testimony heard? Ms. Withers responded that one merit principle states that employees shall be promoted and encouraged to perform above average. The Personnel Act incorporates the merit principles into the state personnel system. Senator Ray directed the staff to research the merit system and merit principles referred to in the Constitutional Convention in Alaska.

There being no further testimony, Senator Ray adjourned the hearing at 11:30.

Senator Ray called the afternoon session to order at 1:30 and asked if anyone wished to present testimony. There being no response, Senator Ray mentioned a vacancy or the commission and suggested inviting Lois Jund to join. There was unanimous consent.

On the issue of the role of the legislature in collective bargaining, Senator Ray invited discussion on the following recommendation:

1. All contracts should go into effect as of July 1.

2. Notice should be given to the legislature of the findings of the negotiating teams by March 15.

3. The legislature would have to act on the results of the negotiations within 30 days or by the end of the session, whichever came first. The system could provide either that a contract did not take effect unless approved by the legislature, or that the contract would become effective unless disapproved.

Ms. Greene suggested that the commission consider the administration's proposal making the monetary terms of the contract take effect as of July 1, but permit the other terms to take effect whenever the parties specified. Mr. Spray added that effective dates of contracts are a topic of negotiation. He also pointed out that this system may preclude reflection of the quarterly Consumer Price Index in the pay scales negotiated for state employees, since the CPI is figured on a calendar year rather than a fiscal year.

Mr. Spray added that if there was a sudden rise in inflation, state employees would suffer if the contracts did not provide for a pay scale which responded to the CPI. Senator Ray suggested that the legislature might be willing to approve lump sum cost-of-living increases based on figures from the previous quarter.

Mr. Flavin asked where these suggestions originated: Are they from the public or the legislature? He commented that they appear to originate from legislators, negotiators, labor organizations and the administration. Public testimony should be asked for.

Senator Ray noted other areas of legislative concern. One is the issue of cost-of-living adjustments. Many legislators feel that those increases should be in lump sums rather than in a percentage increase. In addition, there is a problem in the funding of multi-year contracts. Can one legislature bind another to continue appropriating money for the later years of a contract? The issue is being researched. Legislators are not in favor of retroactive contract terms and would prefer that all contracts take effect at the beginning of the fiscal year following legislative review.

Returning to the issue of the legislature's role in collective bargaining, Senator Ray listed other proposals which the commission might consider:

1. Return the responsibility of negotiations to the legislature, either through a legislative committee or through staff hired for that purpose.

2. Hire legislative staff to sit with the Department of Administration and the public employee unions in the bargaining process.

3. Require approval by the voters for each contract before it takes effect.

4. Do away with collective bargaining altogether.

5. Present neither recommendations nor proposed legislation on the issue.

6. Recommend that the legislature retain the present system.

Ms. Greene asked if there had been any commission meetings to receive public testimony on the issue. If not, she stated that she hoped the commission would clarify these options and solicit public opinion. Ms. Greene also stated that the administration is backing a proposal for monetary terms to become effective as of July 1, following contract negotiations. Mr. Murphy asked if the commission could work on the proposals from the administration as a starting point. Mr. Spray pointed out that the bill introduced by the House State Affairs Committee during the special session addressed these proposals.

Mr. Murphy moved: If it is the intention of the Blue Ribbon Commission to study changes in the Collective Bargaining Act to make it more compatible, that we consider the two bills proposed by the administration and the Ad Hoc Committee to use in work sessions and for public testimony to come up with a bill to make a change. A vote was taken, and the motion failed.

Ms. Greene suggested that the administration's proposals could be used as a springboard for the commission, but not to limit the discussion to those two. She was also unsure if the commission had decided to make any specific recommendations. Mr. Flavin stated that he was not in favor of presenting only two options to the public and moved that hearings be held on all of the options enumerated. Mr. Fisher spoke in favor of the motion.

Ms. Withers asked what the purpose of the Collective Bargaining subcommittee was and whether this would be within their functions. Senator Ray responded that the issue of collective bargaining is past the point of just subcommittee involvement. He stated that the legislature is appreciative of the commission's efforts and that we have been commended for our activities. The legislature has also made it abundantly clear that collective bargaining and the merit system are concerns we should address. The commission can go forward and create alternative recommendations to present to legislators who do not understand collective bargaining.

Mr. Spray asserted that the merit system should be the number one topic for commission consideration. Senator Ray replied that collective bargaining is the number one issue at the moment but that the merit system deserves attention as well. Ms. Withers pointed out that provisions for a merit system are contained in the state constitution. Senator Ray instructed the staff to research the meaning of the merit system as discussed at the Constitutional Convention.

Phil McMurry, an employee with the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities, presented testimony on the merit system. He stated that after being employed by the state for three years, he and others in the department believe that the merit system should be maintained. In his opinion, cost-of-living increases are important in keeping salaries in balance with inflation, and merit increases are supposed to provide incentives to increase employee productivity.

On the question of merit increases versus seniority ranking, Mr. McMurry stated that the seniority system does have merit. He approved of the way APEA's general government unit contract states that the merit increase and evaluation system will be modified to make it more meaningful to employees. He believes that the longer an individual remains in service, the greater her or his value. He added that a seniority system that rewards longevity makes sense, but increases should not be given without consideration of productivity. Senator Ray asked if Mr. McMurry believed that merit increases should be part of the collective bargaining process. Mr. McMurry replied that the more contained in contracts, the better. For example, Mr. McMurry suggested that discrimination should be addressed in contracts. Then, an individual would have access to grievance procedures in case of discriminatory actions, rather than having to file a complaint with the Human Rights Commission.

Senator Ray said that the biggest opposition to the merit increase system is due to the way the statutes are presently drafted. Increases are almost automatic and left to the supervisor's discretion. Labor organizations have argued that increases should be incentives to achieve high performance standards. Mr. McMurry asserted that there is a need for better procedures and rules for supervisors to follow. Currently, supervisors discuss performance standards with employees only when writing annual evaluations. This often causes frustration on the employee's behalf, especially when the evaluation is inconsistent with the employee's views. Senator Ray stated that evaluations should be made on either unsatisfactory or above average performance. If there was disagreement on an unsatisfactory evaluation, then the matter could be referred to a commission or board for final decision. Mr. McMurry again pointed out that the only time employees receive feedback from supervisors is at evaluation time. He feels there is a need for better communication between supervisors and employees.

Mr. McMurry stated that in some instances, supervisors must receive approval of evaluations written on subordinates from their supervisors. This often leads to rewritten evaluations and hard feelings. Ms. McCurry pointed out that this relates to the real concern of the lack of funding for both training and merit increases. She stated that personal satisfaction and communication between supervisors and subordinates is needed to improve morale. The present evaluation system has its drawbacks, and we should look at expansion of the system to make it more valuable. Ms. McCurry added that the probationary period could be used more effectively to weed out unsatisfactory performers and suggested that this, as well as consistent application of personnel rules, should be priorities of the commission.

Ms. Withers commented that three terms were being discussed: merit increases, the merit system and merit principles. One of the merit principles of the federal system is that there must be systematic job-related evaluations of employees. Mr. Fisher pointed out that as bad as the evaluation system is, it does require that the employer review and discuss employee performance. However, supervisors are not prepared to do so. Senator Ray asked how employees who are average performers should be provided for. He said that it is not a question of rewarding good employees or punishing bad, but a question of where to draw the line. Mr. Fisher responded that supervisors are inconsistent in evaluations and in making determinations as to who is and who isn't outstanding. Senator Ray again questioned where the line should be drawn. Ms. Withers commented that if this were to become a bargainable item, the legislature would have to grant negotiating authority to the administration.

Ms. Greene stated that there must be concrete criteria for evaluations, which means developing agreed-upon standards of employee performance. That entails skill development in evaluating performance and giving supervisors direction on how to evaluate. Mr. Flavin commented that we could do away with the evaluation forms because they have become automatic. Thus, the process that has changed from a management responsibility to a Personnel requirement could be fitted to each agency in accordance with management needs. This would create a need for stronger audits by the Division of Personnel for enforcement. Mr. Flavin believes that evaluation forms are worthless in most instances, and a personal memo to an employee would be an improvement. Senator Ray responded that judging by personal experiences, he believes communicating with employees is a much better approach. Mr. Spray commented that there should be some method to get away from the negative aspects of the evaluation process, such as supplying better instructions on how to use them. Ms. McCurry pointed out that the probationary period evaluation of employees takes a lot of time and consideration, and it doesn't have to be negative. It can be an effective means of presenting agency objectives and the performance standards expected of an employee. Mr. Flavin thought that beefing up the evaluation of supervisors could solve some problems.

Mr. McMurry told commission members that when his supervisor gets letters of commendation from agency users, he makes it a policy to show them to employees. He also writes personal comments on evaluations, which are very helpful and informative. Supervisors perceive evaluations as a yearly task, but keeping in touch with employees requires more than an annual form. Senator Ray asked if the commission wants to recommend that each state employee get a quarterly "report card". Ms. Withers responded that each employee should have a reasonable expectation of the status on their job, and supervisors are obligated to supply this information. A "report card" or another form is not the key. She stated that the answer is in establishing better communications between people. Senator Ray noted that supervisors are not taking that facet of their jobs into consideration. Mr. Flavin suggested that this was another argument substantiating the need for a Department of Employee Relations responsible for audit functions. Mr. Murphy concurred that there is a need to improve the personnel structure with a strong audit function.

Mr. Fisher pointed out that one of the items asked on evaluation forms is whether position descriptions are correct. In his experience, he has found P402's dating back to the 1960's. He asked why the descriptions are not more current if they are being reviewed annually. Ms. Greene responded that there is a backlog on classification revisions, and it is recognized as a problem. Ms. Withers added that the reason for the position description is to show what an employee is actually doing. It is assumed that supervisors filling out evaluations will inform the Division of Personnel of changes in duties. Senator Ray suggested that the scope of audits be defined. Mr. Fisher elaborated on the different types of audits: operational, program and personnel audits. The topic was left to future consideration.

On the topic of merit increases, Don Fisher said that they are currently a management prerogative. Mr. Murphy pointed out that other unions have chosen to incorporate merit increases into longevity bonus programs. He added that APEA's membership wants to maintain merit increases, and this may mean placing the Personnel Rules into contract provisions. Merit increases are currently addressed in the contract, but if the legislature decides that there is a conflict between bargaining and granting increases, the unions should be allowed the option of bargaining on increases. Mr. Murphy asserted that Pat Hunt, when serving on the commission, agreed that the Personnel Rule provisions should be included in contracts. Senator Ray commented that neither the administration nor the Governor believe the two are compatible. It is the commission's responsibility to explore the two and define the problems that exist.

Senator Ray pointed out that conditions during next year's legislative session are ripe for changes, due to it being an election year. He added that he would like the commission to receive recommendations from the public to present to the legislature. Mr. Murphy stated that during his last meeting with Pat Hunt, they discussed Oregon and New Hampshire statutes that exclude employees who are members of collective bargaining units from the scope of the Personnel Rules. The contracts must be consistent with merit principles. He said that this is an issue that will be negotiated. Senator Ray pointed out that there are many different positions on the subject in other states.

Mr. Flavin asked how members would like to plan the next meeting. Senator Ray responded that the staff would prepare a list of proposals made by subcommittees that have not yet been acted upon. The date was set for Friday, October 5. Subcommittees will meet prior to a full commission meeting.

Ms. McCurry appointed Doryce Eggleston, Personnel Officer in the Department of Public Safety, as her official alternate.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting.

Senator Bill Ray, Chairman
Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act
Pouch AG, Mail Stop 0123
Juneau, Alaska 99811

Dear Senator Ray:

The purpose of this letter is to offer a couple suggestions concerning the hiring practices of the State of Alaska. The two suggestions that I have are student exemptions related to temporary hiring and that agencies respond to all job applications submitted to them.

Part b, sec. 39.25.195 of the proposed Act HCS CSSB 198, chapter 67 says that every appointment for state service shall be made from an applicable eligible list or dispatching register, except for emergencies. This law would eliminate college students seeking summer employment. The time required to get on the register is approximately six weeks, a goodly portion of the summer season. This law would discriminate against Alaskan students and the states future professionals. Because of this, I strongly recommend that students (especially college) be exempt from this law.

My second recommendation is that all state agencies respond to all job applications that they receive, even if a form letter is sent. When an individual applies for a job it takes time, effort, and money. Common courtesy dictates that a response is made, even from the government.

Although the Alaskan student is a minority, we are a part of Alaska's future, therefore, I urge you to consider my recommendations.

Sincerely,

C.A. Hubbard

JUNEAU INTERGOVERNMENTAL TRAINING COUNCIL

September 12, 1979

TO: The Blue Ribbon Commission

RE: Employee Development and Training

Our training council wishes to express to your group the following concerns:

State government seems to be giving less and less attention and priority to employee development and training.

A few years ago an attempt was made to develop and training system for the State and yet none of that was ever implemented.

Currently with no coordinated system for state training efforts:

1. Supervisors and Departments have no guidelines for their training efforts.
2. No recognition of training accomplished or attended is given when no permanent records are kept in the employee's file. (other than what a dept. might elect to do on their own)
3. There is no requirement that training being done by each dept. is being evaluated against any objectives or criteria to show value received.
4. Employees changing careers or jobs are provided no assurance that they will be given help in learning new methods or skills. If a greivance is filed by them should they be terminated, against what standard of performance has the supervisor evaluated them?

Training will still be done by the different departments, particularly those with federal funds and perhaps federal requirements that certain training be done, and the study done by Becky Smith for the Dept. of Education shows that much could be gained from a coordinated effort of State training and employee development.

This presentation is merely to call your attention to the fact that recognition of the important aspect of developing human resources is not spoken to anywhere in the State Personnel rules and regulations, except in the state Affirmative Action Program, and in the negotiated labor agreements.

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order and invited testimony from individuals present. He stated that the Commission requires information from people regarding all sides of the issues it is considering. The commission feels strongly that people should be able to speak freely without fear of repercussions from their supervisors or others. Members will weigh all information and opinions expressed in making their decisions.

TESTIMONY

Lynda McCurry presented testimony on the question of centralization/decentralization. In her estimation, it would be possible to decentralize personnel functions to some departments without additional cost to the state. Many unique job classes are presently examined and classified by personnel officers who are experienced in working with departmental job classifications.

Ms. McCurry believes that personnel officers should be employed by departments rather than by the Division of Personnel to assure access to departmental commissioners. Regarding the placement of personnel officers in departments, Ms. McCurry recommended as her personal opinion either placement in the commissioners' offices or at least as supervisors in offices of directors of administrative services one level below. It is essential for personnel officers to have a direct line of communication with the commissioners' offices in order to keep the chief executives up-to-date.

Senator Ray asked if there are instances when there is not ready access to the commissioners. Ms. McCurry responded that this is the case in some instances, and she does not believe that commissioners are fully aware of the problem.

Senator Ray questioned whether changing the statutes to require that personnel officers be administrative assistants for labor relations in order to have direct access to commissioners would eliminate this problem. Ken Kareen asked if a law stating that personnel officers shall have access to the commissioners would improve the situation. He added that there are a wide variety of commissioners and that the Personnel Rules are subject to different interpretations by them. Ms. McCurry stated that it is not uncommon for division directors to take action without the knowledge of personnel officers.

Senator Ray inquired if a change in the law would lessen the number of problems and complaints received by the Ombudsman's Office. Frank Flavin responded that if it were the specific intent of the law, commissioners would be more likely to give the personnel officer's position the responsibility needed. Pat Hunt said that the responsibilities of the positions are diminished in some instances. If positions were put into the law, they would become partially exempt because of policy role. Ms. McCurry stated that this could upset the personnel officers' departmental status if positions were placed in law as part of the commissioner's office. The change in the law might not have the desired effect.

Senator Ray commented that he could not comprehend a personnel officer not having access to the department's commissioner. Ms. McCurry recommended that centralization/decentralization should be based on the cooperation of the Division of Personnel and agencies, depending on the abilities of the individual department. Personnel officers who abuse the authority given them should be held accountable for their actions, and the delegation of authority should be removed to correct the situation if necessary. This would require a strict audit system to be developed by the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations.

Ken Kareen elaborated that in the State Personnel Act, delegation of this authority is discretionary rather than mandatory. Testimony from Wisconsin indicated that when their Department of Employment Relations withdrew delegation of authority, they also withdrew funding for departmental personnel office staff. Should the same thing be possible in Alaska?

Senator Ray pointed out that the non-permanent employee bill is moving through the legislature and that the section on punitive damages is an innovative approach to discouraging abuses of rules and regulations. He has recently been appointed to the Council of State Governments. If the Commission so wishes, he will present this approach to the Council so that other states may consider it.

Doryce Eggleston, Personnel Officer for the Department of Public Safety, presented testimony regarding her department's Personnel Office, which is in the Division of Administrative Service. The office does have access to the commissioner, deputy commissioner and division director.

The question of centralization vs. decentralization can be broken dwon into two separate issues: personnel officers and personnel functions. These two aspects may have direct impact on the general public, applicants and on the departments.

On the centralization or decentralization of personnel officers, Ms. Eggleston stated that there would be great impact on departments if personnel officers were made employees of the Division of Personnel. As indicated in the Commission's report, the goals of this move include better communication between the Division of Personnel and departments, uniformity of application of the Personnel Rules and control by the Division of Personnel. These can be achieved within the present structure. The Personnel Rules need to be clarified and redrafted in accordance with changes in the statutes to limit the many different interpretations within departments. There is no reason why regular meetings cannot be held between the Division of Personnel and the departmental personnel officers to discuss various aspects of labor relations and personnel administration such as arbitration proceedings, union contracts, negotiation results and ambiguous Personnel Rules. These meetings would insure better communication and more uniform interpretation of the Personnel Rules by the departments.

Possible problems for personnel officers moved into the Division of Personnel would include loss of credibility and trust of employees within departments and difficulties in remaining part of departmental management teams. Personnel officers would be considered outsiders, and this might lead to departmental staff circumventing them on some matters. For example, she would not have been included in the Director's staff meeting where strategy and planning were discussed with the new Commissioner if she had been an employee of the Division of Personnel. No one can successfully serve two masters. It would be possible to be caught in the middle of problems between the two. Problems could also arise in funding for the position, performance evaluations, training, approval of leave, etc. Impact upon applicants would be minimal, but user agencies would be affected by the change.

On the centralization or decentralization of personnel functions, Ms. Eggleston agrees with Ms. McCurry that functions cannot be decentralized across the board. She believes that this type of program should be optional for each department, depending on the feasibility of operating the system with present staff. There would be a significant impact on applicants and the general public as well as on the departments if functions were decentralized.

Recruitment and advertising could be performed by departments with information, assistance and review provided by the Division of Personnel. These could be made more selective, especially for regional positions. This would also be an advantage for rural areas.

Ms. Eggleston advocates the review of unique job applications by user departments. The Division of Personnel reviewed over 55,000 applications in 1978. If this responsibility was shared with departments, more time could be spent on those applications, and better judgements could be made. The departmental staff have more technical knowledge on the positions unique to their departments. The register process, placment on eligible lists and hiring would also be expedited. The Division of Personnel could provide guidance and oversight when necessary.

Classifications could be performed by departments with guidance and oversight from the Division on general job classes. The departments could work directly with the Office of Management and Budget on funding. The processes could be speeded up through departmental participation.

There should be no adverse impact on the number of staff in the Division of Personnel. Staff functions could be changed to guidance and oversight roles by the Division, and studies could be done on employee turnover, career ladders, classification, counseling, minority recruitment, etc. One of the reasons for the lengthy delays in the Division of Personnel is the time needed for examination and recruitment. The result of decentralization would be less frustration on the part of applicants, the general public and the departments. All must work together to resolve time problems.

Senator Ray suggested a hypothetical situation. What if a department decided to reclassify its Personnel Officer positions to some other classification and to ask the Division of Personnel to handle all its personnel functions for it. That would provide the department with two positions for other work and yet insure that the necessary personnel functions were performed without using departmental funds. This possibility is one reason why he favors providing for personnel officers in departments by statute.

Pat Murphy pointed out that each department should have a personnel officer. The Commission has already put together a bill on the Department of Employee Relations. Problems can develop when trying to be too specific in legislation. Each department in the bill will have a personnel officer. Not all departments are ready for decentralization. He leans towards an audit function within the Department of Employee Relations.

Pat Hunt added that he wouldn't mind seeing jobs in the statutes and that it would be important to specify the level of responsibility as well as the titles. Frank Flavin asked if the intent was for the departmental personnel officers to have the responsibility of recruiting, advertising and examining for unique positions. Would the departments be in a position to do this better than the Division of Personnel? Ms. Eggleston replied that an employee in her office could handle the paperwork faster in regard to unique job classes. Mr. Flavin rephrased his question to general terms: Is a personnel officer in a department more capable of making decisions? Ms. Eggleston responded affirmatively.

Pat Murphy stated that the Commission has received a number of complaints in the area of rating education and training where people believe they have been judged erroneously. The Division of Personnel has no time to check these areas. If unique job classes were handled through the departments, more time would be spent on these evaluations. Technical job classes cannot be handled by generalists. Mr. Murphy asked how applicants would be routed to the correct departments in a decentralized system. Ms. Eggleston replied that the Division could act as a receiving agency for applicants and direct forms to the proper agencies. Ken Kareen pointed out that this is being done now in the Department of Education.

Senator Ray pointed out that the Commission has received testimony regarding the difficulties of "fighting city hall" and the adverse results this may bring about. One concern is the "black marks" individuals receive for speaking out about problems encoutered within the state system. Frank Flavin elaborated that he does receive cases of this type, but that they are difficult to verify. Senator Ray referred to previous testimony before the Commission where one individual's score had been changed noticably by the Division of Personnel after she complained to them.

Ken Kareen countered that in the central office of the Division of Personnel, everything is documented. Those individuals responsible for rating applicants have practically no influence over selection of applicants. There is little chance that the hiring authority will know about problems in the Division. Therefore, problems in ratings will not influence final hiring decisions. Senator Ray asked if this meant that there is no communication between the Division and departments. Mr. Kareen stated that this type of communication would not be tolerated in his office.

Mr. Flavin quesitoned what role personnel officers play in the evaluation of merit violations. Ms. Eggleston responded that personnel actions, such as selection from eligible lists, are reviewed before they are returned to the Division of Personnel for placement of the person selected on the state payroll.

All material is checked before it is sent out by personnel officers. Advice may be sought from the Division of Personnel and commissioners, deputy commissioners or directors where questionable circumstances appear.

Senator Ray asked what happens if a commissioner or deputy commissioner asks a personnel officer to break the rules. Ms. Eggleston replied that there are legal implications, and steps may be taken. She gave an example of one individual who was fired because he refused to do what the director requested. Through a grievance procedure, he was reinstated. Personnel officers can and do refuse to certify anything illegally. The commissioner and deputy commissioner are each certifying officers and can sign positions authorizations (PA's) thereby taking responsibility for any impropriety if they insist on pursuing the matter over the objections of the personnel officer. Frank Flavin asked if Ms. Eggleston's personnel files have ever been audited. She replied that there is a post-audit procedure. Lynda McCurry commented that the Department of Labor has been subject to numerous federal audits. Ken Kareen stated that there are certain review procedures handled by the Division of Personnel, but there are no audits in that sense.

Wells Gabier, a state employee for over seven years and current employee of the Alaska Occupational Information Coordination Committee (AOICC) testified regarding his experiences with the committee, the Department of Health and Social Services, the Department of Labor and the state Manpower Service. He addressed the topic of his PCN and gave a brief description of his background.

In 1970, Mr. Gabier was hired out of Colorado for a position in Alaska, and his relocation expenses were paid by the state. Upon arrival, he was classified as an Employment Counselor III. One year later, he was reclassified as State Counseling Supervisor for the Department of Labor, and spent five years in that capacity. During this time, he communicated with the Division of Personnel frequently on the subject of upgrading the Counselor-level positions by one range. He worked with Lee Antrim (the Departments of Labor's representative in reviewing tests for employment interviewers) on the reclassification.

Mr. Gabier then took a voluntary demotion of one range step to go to work for the Department of Health and Social Services. One year later, he retired from state employment and moved to Mississippi for a short period of time. Upon his return to Alaska, he experienced the trials and tribulations of applying for state employment and of having his experience rated. He was subsequently placed on 18 registers, and was asked to interview with the AOICC for his present position. The following is description of events that took place after his initial interview:

March 10, 1978--The position description was first written by committee member Phyllis Woodman, Personnel Officer for the Department of Education which controls the funding of the state AOICC.

March 14, 1978--The position description was transmitted to Mike McMullen in the Classification Section of the Division of Personnel as that of a Social Research Coordinator at range 20. Both Ms. Woodman and committee members supported this classification level.

April 6, 1978--A decision was returned to the department that the classification should be at the Research Analyst III level. It appears that the Social Research Coordinator class was being eliminated, and this was considered an equitable substitute. Wishing to get started on the program, the committee decided to accept the classification given by the Division of Personnel and requested the Analyst III register. Unable to find a qualified applicant for the position on this register, the committee requested parallel registers which required approximately the same range and job functions. Mr. Gabier was within the top five on two of these and was hired for the position.

Mr. Gabier pointed out he had qualified for these registers without receiving employee credit or veteran's preference points. Prior to his appointment, he had applied for the Research Analyst II and III registers. His examination results came back as below passing. The committee had hired him for a position that the Division of Personel had deemed him to be ineligible for. Entering the position, Mr. Gabier realized that the responsibilities were not consistent with the Research Analyst III level. The committee had indicated during a meeting that they would push for a reclassification of the position at a later date.

November 20, 1978--The committee submitted a reclassification request to the Division of Personnel.

December 28, 1978--The delete/establish form was sent to Budget and Managment by the Division of Personnel.

February 9, 1979--Mr. Gabier checked with the Division of Personnel on the status of his reclassification, after having waited for a response for a number of months. The Division advised him that the request would be signed within a week by the Office of Budget and Management.

The position description and authorization came back listed as a Project Coordinator. Again, the advice of Phyllis Woodman had been ignored, although she had supplied first-hand information on the job functions. It had been stated on the request that if the position came back as anything other than a Program Coordinator, a desk audit would be requested. Ms. Woodman was advised that more detailed paperwork would have to be supplied to justify a desk audit performed by the Division of Personnel.

April 12, 1979--A request was submitted for a desk audit.

Due to the fact that the position remains classified improperly after a period of over one year, Mr. Gabier felt that the matter should be brought to the attention of the commission.

Ken Kareen spoke from the vantage point of the classifier. The personnel officer came to him seeking advice and assistance on the best way to get the job filled. In this instance, the classification of Research Analyst III was not appropriate, and alternate lists were suggested by Mr. Kareen, such as Project Coordinator.

Mr. Flavin asked for the definition of a desk audit. Mr. Gabier explained that a classification specialist actually goes to the place of employment and gets a verbal description of the job. In his experience, Mr. Gabier feels that the Division of Personnel has difficulty in interpreting anything that is not in writing. Ken Kareen responded that the demand for desk audits cannot be satisfied by the Division of Personnel, given the limited amount of staff available. There is a reluctance on the Division's part to conduct an audit unless the need is perceived. Quite often, the Division receives inadequate position descriptions.

Pat Murphy stated that the commission has heard a lot of testimony along similar lines, where employees and technical authorities have different opinions. It is very difficult to ascertain who is right and who is wrong.

Mr. Kareen pointed out that there is also a third party involved in this type of dispute: the collective bargaining union. Mr. Gabier commented that he has never felt that this is a problem for grievance procedures. It should have been handled when it was initially brought to the Division's attention. If the system were decentralized, this responsibility would be given to the personnel officers who are more qualified to make judgements.

Fred Cook, Personnel Officer with the Department of Fish and Game, testified on the question of centralization/decentralization. He believes that personnel officers should be a part of the management teams of departments. Fisheries Biologists are convinced that the Department of Administration is a regulatory agency rather than a service-oriented agency. This is consistent with the feeling of the troops in the field.

Mr. Cook feels that personnel functions should be delegated to the departments if they are willing to accept the responsibility. Personnel officers would not be able to supervise their staff members if they were centralized in the Division of Personnel. If there were instances where opinions differed, it would be difficult to argue with supervisors in the Division of Personnel.

Mr. Cook does not see any way that centralization would make the personnel system more efficient. If a person is not employed by a department, they are left out of policy-making decisions and information is then relayed down to them. The Division of Personnel should have more positions assigned to them, and he urged the Blue Ribbon Commission to make that recommendation.

One suggestion Mr. Cook presented was to have personnel officers exchange positions with staff in the Division of Personnel intermittently. This is something that has been discussed in the past and seen by many as workable. This might relieve the schism between Personnel and the departments by increasing the awareness of each others' problems.

Frank Flavin asked which functions personnel officers in departments could perform better than the Division of Personnel, assuming adequate resources exist. Mr. Cook suggested that the Department of Fish and Gaeme could rate applicants for positions in technical areas generally above range 16. In the case of biometricians, for example, a committee consisting of other specialists in that field would be better qualified to make evaluations than generalists in the Division of Personnel.

Mr. Flavin pointed out that past testimony has revealed problems on the rating of biologists: Is an adequate job being done? Mr. Cook responded that in higher-level classes, the departmental personnel officers could do a better job, assuming the department has the staff to do so.

Mildred Zenger, Personnel Officer with the Department of Natural Resources, concurred with testimony presented. She expressed the following, representing her personal opinions:

Ms. Zenger stated that the Division of Personnel could better handle rating and examinations if they were given additional funding. Her department lacks staff to handle decentralization, but is in a better position to handle certain unique job classes. Ms. Zenger does not believe that qualified judgements are made by the Division of Personnel examiners in those cases. The Department of Natural Resources specialists used to help the Division of Personnel rate applications in the more technical fields.

Over the years, personnel officers' access to the commissioner has varied. At present, access is more limited than in the past. Access and support are essential for providing back-up to personnel officers when program managers disagree with their decisions. Ms. Zenger also made it clear that though the Department of Natural Resources is under fire for many reasons, some accidental and some intentional, she is not defending those who hire illegally. She has never certified a document illegally in her 30 years of state service.

Ms. Zenger believes that some functions handled by the Division of Personnel could be delegated to the individual departments. A better means of communication between personnel officers and the Division is one solution. Removing personnel officers from departments would cause problems. It would then be difficult to convince employees in the department that personnel officers are actually working for them and trying to help the department. This might also lead to the belief that personnel officers were regulatory oriented.

Frank Flavin asked if the problems within the department were geographical in nature, due to the large number of staff in field offices. Ms. Zenger answered they are due to the influx of new employees who don't understand the system and lack education in the standards of the system rather than poor intent. Ms. McCurry concurred that cycles do run good and bad depending on who's who in the zoo. Ms. Zenger reiterated that there are many new people who do not understand what they are supposed to do. Senator Ray pointed out that this might call for some type of statutory identification.

Mr. Flavin asked Ms. Zenger if she has access to personnel files in departmental field offices as a personnel officer. Ms. Zenger answered that her travel is limited. She did not have a large staff until the past year. The central office does perform a monthly audit on departmental personnel actions.

Senator Ray commented that this is ample reason to have a trouble shooter to take care of these matters. As an example, he mentioned two Public Safety officers who are responsible for presenting informational programs in schools to juveniles.

Frank Flavin stated that in his experience, problems were more prevalent in agencies where personnel officers do not have high status. There are significantly fewer personnel problems in those departments with strong personnel officers. Pat Murphy agreed that certain departments have more problems than others. The departments of Health and Social Services, Transportation and the Division of Corrections have strong commissioners or directors who typically insist on independence, which can lead to union grievances. APEA has been able to resolve problems before they develop into major crises by negotiating with personnel officers with stronger positions in their departments. Another aspect of the problem is that in departments with high turnover rates, the management staff is less well informed about the requirements of union contracts and the Personnel Rules.

Senator Ray pointed out that the reorganization of the secretarial staff of the Department of Administration into a typing pool is a topic which the commission has overlooked. Pat Murphy commented that there is general agreement that the program has created a mess.

Ken Kareen responded that a previous commissioner of Administration thought that if the equipment were upgraded and typists were combined in one location, there would be more work performed at less cost to the state. Many of the people in the pool have fallen behind on the typing requirments set by the program. Mr. Kareen also asked about Don Fisher's report to the commission on the subject. Pat Murphy replied that APEA is doing investigative work on the matter and that information will be available at a later date.

Senator Ray requested a resume of the information available to date and said that he was interested in pursuing the matter personally. Experimenting with state employees is not an acceptable procedure. Pat Murphy commented that the coordinator of the typing pool program has been on contract with the state for two or three years. He believes that this should be a permanent position.

Frank Flavin requested that the staff prepare a breakdown of where personnel officers are located in each department and to whom they report. Lynda McCurry offered to supply this information to him. Senator Ray directed the staff to write to each department advising them that attempts to keep individuals from testifying at commission meetings or to punish them for speaking will not be tolerated.

Lois Wingo, Personnel Officer for the Department of Military Affairs, concurred with testimony heard. She stated that employee/personnel officer relationships are stronger when the personnel officer is in the department. Ms. Wingo acts as Training Coordinator, EEO Officer and Payroll Supervisor in addition to her functions as the department's personnel officer. She does have access to the commissioner's office and receives support from high-level management. She is not expected to circumvent the Division of Personnel in fulfilling her duties. The department was audited once, about a year ago, by the Legislative Audit Division. Leave records were checked against the files, and employee records were spot-checked.

Senator Ray asked whether Ms. Wingo had ever been in a catch-22 sitaution where her superior asked her to do something contrary to her beliefs. Ms. Wingo replied that this happens very rarely.

Frank Flavin asked if there was any conflict of interest in being an EEO Officer and a Personnel Officer. Ms. Wingo answered that some perceive a conflict between the two functions, and some don't. It depends on who is the Director of EEO. Lynda McCurry pointed out that there is a problem with adding EEO funcitons to the duties of personnel officers in departments. However, this function must be placed in a position where the person will do the job. When EEO functions were taken out of the Personnel Office of the Department of Labor and given to someone else, no progress was made on the reports required to be filed. Eventually, the EEO responsibilites returned to the personnel officer. Ms. Wingo stated that she doesn't have hiring authority, so there is not a direct conflict. She does encourage the hiring of women and minorities. Frank Flavin asked if she has "double clout" with the additional EEO responsibilities. Ms. Wingo said that this did give her additional authority.

Senator Ray asked for input from commission members on the continuation of additional meetings. He stated that they will have to be after the legislative session is over.

Ken Kareen offered his thoughts on the decentralization issue. An employee starts his employment by pledging his loyalty and credibility to a department. The supervisor giving direction may severely test the loyalty of the employee to do the job and advance his career vs. state rules and compliance with the laws. Elements of regulation and compliance should be built into Personnel. This would serve to limit the flexibility, but would avert capricious and arbitraty proceedings. At what cost should the state encourage dedication to the department? What is the cost to the state for decentralization? In some cases, 18 departments could be working on 18 different systems. There has to be some uniform application of rules to give employees constants. Employees do not know where these lines are. Mr. Kareen offered an observation: There are tremendous variations based on the personality of the personnel officers and personality of their supervisors. Senator Ray elaborated that it is a question of either having a cut and dried or a flexible system. Ken Kareen stated that an employee starts with an investment in state employment. If a new boss gives a questionable direction, that will severely test the loyalty of the employee to his or her career vs. the state rules. Some stand up to the tests, and some don't. The problem does exist.

Mr. Kareen expressed his feelings that examination and review boards do not work well, judging by his past experiences. One of the most frequent problems encountered is in rating applications. For example, his staff is instructed not to make assumptions in rating applicants. What is judged is the information provided in writing. A review board may be tempted to consider information not on the record, thereby favoring applicants they know over those they do not. This could cause problems if the decision were ever audited. There will always be errors and mistakes.

Responding to Mr. Gabier's testimony, Mr. Kareen stated that Mr. Gabier has two options open to him: to go through the union or through supervisory channels. Bob Mourant commented that as a former union negotiator, he has had problems with the Division of Personnel. There are no checks made on the ethics of the Division of Personnel staff. There is no assurance that a check will be made if there is no violation of union contract. An individual has no assurance of ethics in force.

Mr. Gabier addressed the philosophical difference between himself and Mr. Kareen. He observed that the attitude seems to be "If you don't like it, fight it". What happened to settling these matters fairly? If he followed the proper channels, he would be told in two months that his complaint is not a grievable matter. He believes that this is an example of violation of merit principles. In his opinion, the Division of Personnel thinks only in terms of dollars rather than in terms of people.

Senator Ray asked commission members if they would agree to his making a personal investigation into the word processing center problems. There was no dissent.

Senator Ray suggested another meeting in Anchorage following the end of the session. Pat Murphy commented that issues might best be dealt with in subcommittee meetings on particular problems, followed by a full commission meeting to review subcommittee suggestions. Meetings to receive public testimony are also necessary. No decision was made on a future schedule.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION
March 13, 1979

MINUTES

Senator Ray called the meeting to order.

The commission considered the draft bill on the hiring of non-permanent employees.

Mr. Humphreys explained that the non-permanent bill made four changes from the draft temporary hiring bill: A language change, replacing the word temporary with the word non-permanent; changes in the intent section; addition in section 4 (b), page 2, lines 4 and 5, of the words "dispatching register"; and addition of provisions for a program or project employee, section 4 (c)(4), page 2, lines 21 through 23; and a definition of program or project employee, page 4, line 26 through page 5, line 2.

Mr. Spray objected to the language appearing on page 2, line 5, which appeared to indicate that the director could waive the union contract requirement that temporaries be hired through a dispatching register.

Mr. Hunt pointed out that according to the memorandum prepared by Ken Rosenstein, dated March 9, 1979, this statute would not bind future collective bargaining agreements without the addition of a statement of intent. Mr. Humphreys agreed that according to the memorandum, the safest course to follow if the commission wished to bind all employees would be to include a section spelling out that the bill applied to collective bargaining unit members.

Mr. Murphy moved that the commission sponsor the bill. Mr. Spray objected for the reasons stated above. There were no further objections.

The commission considered the draft of the Department of Employee Relations bill.

Mr. Hunt stated that he was concerned about requiring that the Personnel Rules be adopted under the Administrative Procedures Act given the small group of people to whom the Rules apply. He has heard from several sources that it takes six months to process rules through the A.P.A. Mr. Rosenstein's opinion makes it clear that the rules do not apply to those covered by collective bargaining.

Mr. Murphy stated that the Rules do apply to the employees his union represents. Perhaps 50% of the work life of those employees is covered by the Rules. He objected to the commission adopting the position taken by the memorandum without further research on the matter.

Senator Ray informed the commission that he opposed the introduction of this bill during the current session.

Mr. Flavin objected to the present draft as not what was intended by the commission's vote taken at the February 24 meeting. The bill should simply repeal those references to the adoption of the Personnel Rules being exempt from the Administrative Procedures Act.

Senator Ray asked whether the Rules were required to be adopted under the A.P.A. at present. Mr. Flavin replied that they are not.

Since the commission voted at the February 24 meeting to sponsor this bill, no further vote was taken.

The commission discussed the preliminary draft of the report to the legislature. Changes were made. The commission agreed to continue the meeting on Wednesday, March 14, to conclude its review of the draft report.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting.

Senator Ray called the meeting to order.

The commission continued to review the draft report to legislature.

The review was concluded, and Greg O'Claray moved and asked unanimous consent that the report as amended be released. The motion carried without objection.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION
February 24, 1979

MINUTES

Don Fisher chaired in the absence of Senator Ray. A quorom was not present, and the Commissior met in work session until additional commission members arrived. There was discussion of whether the time limit on temporaries should be shortened from 6 months to 120 days.

Ken Kareen, alternate for Pat Hunt, arrived and a quorum was present. Mr. Fisher called the meeting to order.

Niel Thomas moved that the commission amend the Temporary Hire bill, page 1, line 26, by adding the words "or dispatching register" between the words "eligible list" and the words "unless in exceptional circumstances". A vote was taken. Seven members were in favor, one abstained. The motion failed.

Frank Flavin moved that a sentence be added to page 3, line 2, subsection (g) to read: "No work assignment may be performed by a temporary employee for more than 120 calendar days in a 12-month period." A vote was taken. Six members were in favor, one opposed and one abstained. The motion failed. Mr. Spray served notice of reconsideration.

Mr. Fisher called a recess. The meeting reconvened.

Mr. Flavin asked that the staff prepare a minority report to reflect the views of those in favor of the actions taken today. Mr. Fisher proposed that the staff be directed to prepare the minority report. Mr. Spray objected. Mr. Thomas stated that the commission should make a record and that at a later meeting, the amendments not adopted in the present meeting could be proposed.

Mr. Flavin moved that the draft bill be amended to add a requirement to subsection (h), page 3, line 7 through 13, that the director report to the legislature each year on the hiring of emergency employees as well as on temporary employees. A vote was taken. Eight members were in favor, none opposed. The motion carried.

Mr. Fisher called a break. The meeting was reconvened.

Pat Murphy moved that the commission adopt the draft bill on temporary hire as amended. A vote was taken. Seven members were in favor, and one opposed. The motion failed.

Mr. Murphy moved that members in favor of the draft bill sign the draft copy prepared by Ken Humphreys, containing amendments adopted, in order to place the votes on the record. A roll call vote was taken. Don Fisher, Ken Kareen, Frank Flavin, Lynda McCurry, Pat Murphy, Niel Thomas and John Pugh were in favor. Ken Spray opposed, and Ken Humphreys abstained. The motion failed.

Mr. Flavin moved that the commission recommend to the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations that Section 2 (a) through (e) of the draft bill, adding new sections to the law relating to the methods for hiring temporary employees, be adopted as Personnel Rules by the Personnel Board. A vote was taken. Seven were in favor, two abstained. The motion failed.

Mr. Flavin moved that the commission recommend to the legislature that a Department of Employee Relations be established. A vote was taken. Eight were in favor, none opposed. The motion carried.

Mr. Flavin moved that the Department of Employee Relations to be proposed to the legislature be structured as in the draft bill, without language relating to exemption from the Administrative Procedures Act, which appears on page 3, lines 13 though 16 and page 6, lines 16 through 19. A notation should be made in the report of the commission to the legislature that the section on decentralization of personnel functions, AS39.25.153 (which appears on page 6, lines 8 through 19), is amended only to make the necessary nomenclature changes and that the commission is still considering what course to recommend on the question of centralization or decentralization. Pat Murphy moved to amend the motion to include the language adopted at the meeting on February 23, 1979, relating to the experience required of the Commissioner of the Department. Mr. Flavin agreed to include this amendment in his motion. A vote was taken. Eight members were in favor, one abstained. The motion carried.

The report should include a statement recommending that the legislature consider moving other closely related divisions from the Department of Administration into the Department of Employee Relations.

Mr. Murphy moved to amend the motion to require that the commissioner of employee relations have a total of at least three years of experience in the fields of labor relations and personnel administration. Mr. Spray stated that five years should be the minimum. Mr. Humphreys suggested that the language concerning the experience of the commissioner would be interpreted broadly by the governor making the appointment. Mr. Murphy withdrew his amendment.

Mr. Flavin moved that AS39.25.153 be amended to read as follows:

Section 39.25.153 Personnel Rules for Departments

(a) Each department shall appoint a personnel officer to be located within that department.

(b) The personnel officer specified in (a) of this Section shall adopt regulations providing for the activities specified in Secs. 39.25.150 (1)-(10), (13)-(18), (20), and (22) of this Chapter for those classes of employees which are not common to other departments. The determination as to the classes of employees which are common to the various departments shall be made pursuant to regulations adopted by the director.

(c) The personnel officers within the departments specified in (a) of this Section are subject to all provisions of this Chapter not in conflict with this Section.

(d) The Governor may exempt any department with (a) of this Section containing less than 200 employees from the provisions of this Section.

(e) All regulations adopted pursuant to this Section are subject to the Administrative Procedures Act (AS 44.62).

Mr. Thomas moved to table the motion and place it as the first item on the agenda for the next commission meeting. A vote was taken. Nine members were in favor, none opposed. The motion carried.

Lynda McCurry moved that the commission try to resolve all the questions which are before it by June 30, 1979.

Mr. Spray spoke against the motion. He stated that he could not imagine that the commission could reach an adequate resolution of the issues before it in that time. Most of the commission's time so far has been spent in public hearings, receiving and digesting information presented to it. He believed that it is necessary to continue the work of the commission into the next legislative session. He indicated that he believes that the legislature will resolve the issues on finances, and the budget and adjourn within 120 days, especially given the mood of the Senate.

Mr. Thomas explained that the motion would give the commission a goal to try to resolve the questions before it. The commission has considered the major concepts which it confronts. Four months remain in which the commission can work on its recommendations on the remaining issues. The comssion has only been meeting for a period of four months, so that may be adequate time to resolve the rest of its work.

Mr. Flavin moved to amend the motion to read that the commission does not seek funding beyond June 30, 1979. Ms. McCurry accepted the amendment. A roll call vote was taken. Don Fisher,

Frank Flavin, Ken Kareen (voting as alternate for Pat Hunt), Lynda McCurry, Pat Murphy, John Pugh and Niel Thomas were in favor. Ken Spray opposed, and Ken Humphreys abstained. The motion failed.

Mr. Spray requested the privilege of the floor. He stated that in regard to the employee relation bill, special interests have been reflected in many issues. The same courtesy has not been extended to the issue of collective bargaining negotiations. Special concerns and interests of Local 71 have been ignored, with preference being given to APEA.

John Pugh responded that Local 71 has a maximum of 1,500 members, whereas APEA represents 10,000 employees. He stated that Mr. Spray received more than his share of time and courtesy from the commission.

Mr. Spray pointed out that Local 71 is affiliated with AFL-CIO in the organized labor movement which represents more than 10,000 employees. The AFL-CIO was instrumental in the enactment of the Public Employment Relations Act.

February 23, 1979

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order. He proceeded to recommend that the commission submit its report outlining the problems which have been identified thus far and as Wisconsin did, wait until an entire legislative package is ready before proposing any substantial changes. He pointed out that the sentiment in the Finance Committees of the legislature may cause trouble for any measures with sizeable fiscal notes attached.

The commission discussed the temporary hire draft bill. Senator Ray recommended adding a provision for a program or project employee. Project employees should receive medical and leave benefits but not be eligible for retirement benefits. He stated that the bill, as drafted, is not ready for introduction to the legislative process.

Frank Flavin suggested changing the language in subsection (g), page 3, line 2, to read at the beginning of that section: "No position may be occupied by a temporary employee..."

Ken Spray suggested three amendments:

In section (b), page 1, line 27, add between the words "eligible list" and "unless" the words "or dispatching register".

On page 3, line 28, to subsection (2), add the words "unless otherwise provided for in a collective bargaining agreement" between the word "means" and the words "an employee".

On page 3, line 2, section (g), Mr. Spray stated that he objected to the inclusion of that section in the draft bill entirely on the grounds that the matter should be left to the arena of collective bargaining.

Senator Ray suggested that the term "temporary" be eliminated, using the term "casual" as a substitute. Ken Spray commented that in Local 71's contract, casual employees are limited to 15 days. Senator Ray offered a word of caution that there are many individuals dependent upon temporary employment who must be taken into consideration. By eliminating temporary employment, budgets may be cut, forcing many employees back into the job market. Representative McKinnon commented that one problem encountered in the House is the reluctance of the Finance Committee members to turn away from temporary hire because of the additional funding demand this would create for permanent PCN's.

Frank Flavin moved that the bill be passed out of the commission and introduced in the legislature under the commission's sponsorship. Pat Murphy moved to table Mr. Flavin's motion. The motion was tabled.

The commission discussed the contents of the report to the legislature. The report should include a discussion of the tasks of the subcommittees, the problems identified, and indication of proposed solutions which the commission is considering. The Issue Summaries should provide the basis of the discussion. It is important to explain to the legislature the nature of the problems which the commission has examined. The report should indicate that the commission is requesting that its existence be extended so that it may fully address the issues presented in the report. There was a general concensus that the report be drafted for presentation to the legislature.

The commission decided to meet on Saturday, February 24, in the conference room of the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities.

CATEGORIES OF EMPLOYEES
Work Session Summary
February 23, 1979

Representative McKinnon chaired the work session. A summarization follows:

SUBCOMMITTEE DISCUSSION

Ken Humphreys presented a revised copy of the Temporary Hire Bill, pointing out changes that had been made to the draft in accordance with amendments discussed at the last work session.

Pat Hunt asked what would happen if a department tried to have a permanent position authorized but the legislature refused to fund the position: Would the director be able to authorize the department to hire a temporary for this position, assuming the department had other funds availabe? Mr. Humphreys explained that the bill, as drafted, might prohibit the hiring of temporaries in such cases. Authorization could be granted if either the legislature authorized the work to be done by temporaries or if an urgent program need unexpectedly developed and permanent staff could not handle the workload. (Page 2, line 3, subsection (1) and line 10, subsection (3).) However, the Director could find under subsection (3) that the department could not reasonably meet the program need through a permanent position since the authorization was denied and therefore could permit hiring a temporary. These cases would have to be addressed as they arise, considering the individual facts. In addition, if the department had requested that new positions be created, but the Governor refused to include them in the budget, the director might then be able to provide for them. If funding is made available for personal service, but the legislature refuses to authorize permanent positions, then the director will have to authorize the department to hire temporaries.

If the legislature provides a personal services appropriation to a department, then this act sets a priority on permanent positions, and the department should hire permanent employees instead of temporaries.

Pat Murphy questioned whether only the legislature can create a permanent position. He referred to Kelly vs. Hammond, where a position was authorized by the executive branch. Representative McKinnon clarified Mr. Murphy's reference, stating that the Office of Management and Budget may authorize a permanent position during the legislative interim, which automatically becomes a request for a new permanent position for the next legislative session.

Discussion followed on a proposed effective date for the draft bill. There was a general concensus that the subcommittee recommend to the Commission that the effective date be September 30, 1979. This would not coincide with the peak temporary employment period and would allow sufficient time for notification of departments.

Niel Thomas brought up the topic of violations of the 120-day limit on temporary employment. He asked what provision is made for federally funded programs and projects which exceed that time frame. Ken Humphreys expressed doubt that the limit would be violated because the director would have the authority to decide whether a temporary position could be extended, as would be the case in projects of limited duration exceeding 120 days. In this instance, an employee would have to be informed of the duration of the project in advance. The civil liability section (page 3, line 19) applies only to appointments of temporaries and not to violations of the time limit set.

The topic of benefits provided to temporaries was introduced by Niel Thomas: What is the subcommittee's intent? Pat Murphy explained that a bill is in the House State Affairs Committee which, if passed, would provide medical (health) insurance to temporaries after a 90-day employment period. The bill originally read after a 30-day employment period, but has been changed by the Committee. There was general agreement that the topic should be addressed at the Commission work session.

The Legislative Affairs Agency has researched the question of what effect changes in the Personnel Act (AS39.25) have on the scope of collective bargaining. Their informal opinion is that if the Personnel Act amendment is clearly intended to apply, then it would control contract negotiations in the future, though it would not amend existing contracts. If the draft temporary hire bill were introduced and passed by the legislature, then it would establish the limits within which collective bargaining could occur. A contract could further limit the times permitted. Personnel Rules are changes which are made without legislative action and therefore do not affect the scope of collective bargaining, except to the extent that the rules are implementation of statutory direction. Representative McKinnon requested a memo from Legislative Affairs on that subject.

Frank Flavin moved that the subcommittee recommend to the Commission that the Personnel Rules be made subject to the Administrative Procedures Act (A.P.A.). This would open the process and would provide the legislature with an opportunity to consider changes made in the rules. A member of the public (or an employee of the state or a union representing employees) could petition for a rule change, but the department cannot be required to propose rules. There is no recourse if the department refuses to act on a suggested change.

The A.P.A. requires that a notice of intent to adopt rules be given and that an opportunity for testimony be provided, although that opportunity can be in the form of accepting written comments only. The comment time is a minimum of 30 days. Then, before the rules can become effective, they must be filed with the Lieutenant Governor's office for 30 days. In emergency situations, the department can adopt emergency rules which have effect for 60 days, and also begin the process of adopting permanent rules. If the rules govern only the internal management policy, then they are exempted from the process. To the extent the rules affect the general public, they would not be exempt. The Department of Law provides advice to the other departments on what is and is not exempt, but the departments are free (as is any attorney's client) to ignore that advice. The question arises only when the department has labeled a rule as an internal matter and someone has challenged that ruling.

CLASSIFICATION, CERTIFICATION & RECRUITMENT SUBCOMMITTEE
February 23, 1979

Don Fisher chaired the meeting in the absence of Senator Ray.

Ken Spray provided information to the subcommittee on SB194, an act relating to public employment. The bill would disallow payment of differentials based on geographic location in the state or cost-of-living differences in an attempt to increase the appointment of residents in rural locations where there is relatively severe unemployment in jobs which are located in their home locations. The bill proposes amendments to the Vocational Substitution Program.

Mr. Thomas suggested that a better way to accomplish the goals of Senator Sumner's bill would be to invigorate recruitment taking place in rural areas for positions in rural areas. The state's selection processes are questionable in evaluating the skills of applicants, but they do appear to be effective in screening out native Alaskans.

Mr. Spray suggested that the Blue Ribbon Commission might wish to consider the problem and propose a committee substitute to the present bill.

CERTIFICATION OF ELIGIBLES

MOTION: Frank Flavin moved that the subcommittee recommend to the commission that a pass/fail certification system be adopted until a reliability based broad band certification system could be developed.

Subcommittee discussion followed. The fundamental idea of the merit system is to select the best qualified applicant for the position, not simply to select someone meeting minimum qualifications. Ms. McCurry said that a pass/fail system would present problems in meeting constitutional requirements for a merit system and could jeopardize federal funding. Mr. Thomas responded that the broad band certification system is acceptable to the federal government.

John Pugh asked how this system would affect the system which the commission had recommended of requiring interviews for the top five applicants.

Ken Humphreys pointed out that while the tests given by the Division of Personnel may not be wholely accurate, they do have a considerable degree of accuracy in ranking the skills of those who achieve first place on the list versus those who place last. He suggested that the subcommittee might wish to consider a system of five grades, in which all those who scored within a range on the test would receive an equal score; for example, A-B-C-D-E.

Mr. Pugh added that he has worked for five years as a supervisor, and during that time has hired approximately 150 to 200 employees. Initially, he had thought that the top five was not meaningful, but experience has demonstrated that the system does test with accuracy for the kinds of skills needed to fill the position. (Verbal skills are a necessity for the positions he recruits for.) However, some tests are irrelevant and need to be updated.

Mr. Thomas replied that this belief in the system may be misplaced. The troopers were required, two years ago, to use a rule of the whole list in order to remedy past discriminatory practices. Hiring has been done from all parts of the list, and no one has yet argued that the standards or efficiency of the services of the employees hired under this system have been lower. The commission should not be closed to the idea of change.

Mr. Murphy suggested that if the object of Mr. Flavin's motion was to increase the openinings for women and minority applicants, the the commission could consider adopting the kinds of systems of Wisconsin or Minnesota without doing away with the state's rating system.

Mr. Spray pointed out that this dilemma is one reason why his members favor a seniority system.

Ken Kareen defended the concept of the top five. It is an integral part of the merit system. There is a misapprehension among some that the top five is limited to five individuals. In fact, all of those whose score equals that of the fifth person on the list are included in the group. The majority of appointments made in state service are, in fact, made from the top five eligibles, so there is less tampering with the system than testimony may have indicated.

Mr. Kareen added that the majority of job classes do not require written testing. There are 147 state tests of which only seven or eight have been validated. Validating tests has been slow because the process is time consuming and there are only two staff members available to do the work.

The question of whether a pass/fail system would increase possible political abuses in hiring decisions was raised. Ms. McCurry warned that the system might lead to no control and utter chaos. There will always be some instances in which who you know will be instrumental in obtaining employment. Just because there are laws against such preferential hiring does not mean that violations are not going to occur.

Mr. Humphreys pointed out that while it would be much more difficult to justify not hiring within the certified group if a pass/fail system were implemented, there would be fewer controls and less opportunity to review and regulate who was selected from that group.

VOTE: A vote was taken. Four were in favor, and four opposed. The motion failed.

MOTION: Niel Thomas moved that the subcommittee recommend to the commission that some alternative be adopted which would broaden the rule of the top five. There was brief discussion.

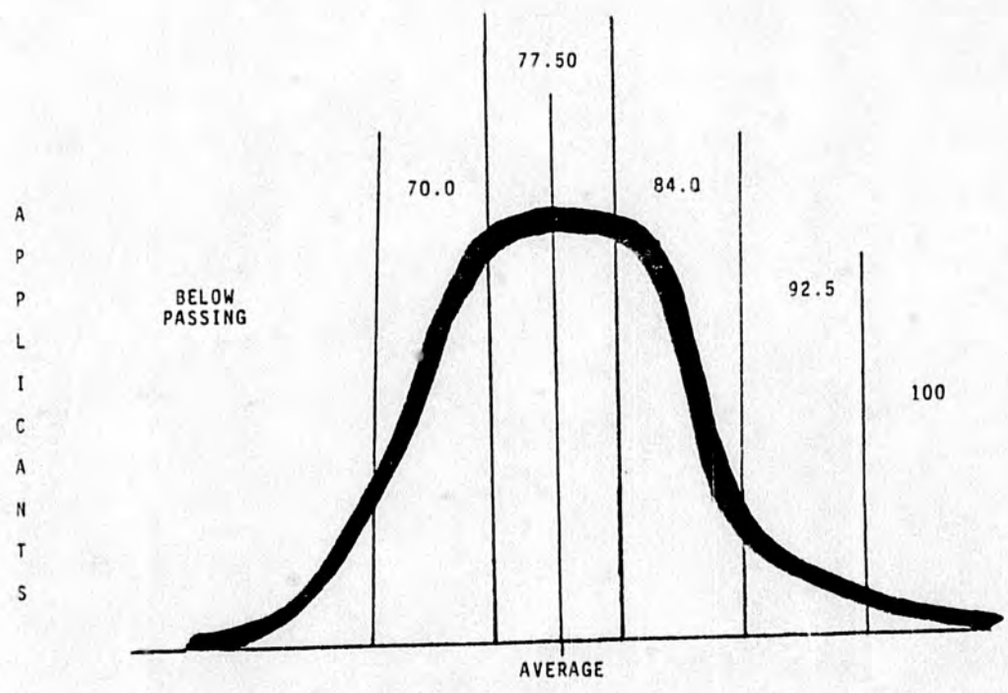
VOTE: A vote was taken. The motion passed unanimously.

Discussion followed on alternative systems. Mr. Flavin suggested that the sumbcommittee consider the structure used by the court system. Applicants are evaluated and placed in one of three categories: outstanding, acceptable or unacceptable.

In answer to Mr. Spray's question of what's wrong with hiring the first person on the list, and if that person is found unacceptable, then requiring that the second person be hired, and so on, Mr. Kareen explained that the broad classifications used for many classes prohibit that sort of system. For example, if the state wants to hire a medical examiner, it is probably looking not just for someone qualified to be a medical examiner, but someone with a specialty in a particular field and background in the same. That person best qualified might well appear below the top five on the list of those qualified to be medical examiners.

Mr. Thomas added that becaused the selection devices are inaccurate, the best person on the list might actually appear at number 16 instead of number one.

Mr. Flavin reviewed the types of evaluation systems which Ken Humphreys enumerated in his memorandum. The rule of the whole list was rejected by previous action of the subcommittee. The rule of __ number is the present system, and has been found wanting. The other two alternatives presented are zone or category scoring, and block scoring. Mr. Humphreys explained that zone scoring occurs when a list is created from the ranked applications and then divided into zones. All those within a zone are then treated as having performed equally on the evaluation device. Block scoring, on the other hand, is a system in which blocks of scores are pre-established without regard to the new list, but based on prior experience with the performance of previous applicants. The new applicants are evaluated and placed in one of the groups or blocks based on the raw score they receive.



All those within a particular block are treated thereafter as having secured identical scores.

Mr. Murphy reminded the committee that the lists which the state uses are not solely ranked in order of performance, but include preference points for prior state service, for previous service in the military, and for being a resident of the state.

Mr. Kareen explained the system which the state now uses in evaluating applicants for those classes in which it has sufficient experience in testing to be able to establish averages. Once the average is established, general score ranges are determined. All applicants who fall within that range receive the same score on the register. If there are six who fall within the top range, they are all consider number one, and their names all appear as such on the register. The next name on the register would be number 7, and all of those who appeared within the second range of scores would appear as number 7. This system can be represented here graphically.

DIVISION OF PERSONNEL

Method of Assigning Scores for Certification

The bell-shaped curve represents the number of applicants who achieve a particular score on their evaluation of experience, training and any written test given. The numbers above the line represent, in the example, the converted scores given to all applicants whose score falls within the range indicated. Those who recieve an average score, for example, receive 77.50 points. The average for that particular class may have been 80 or it may have been 60, but all who tested as average will be credited with 77.50 points.

MOTION: Frank Flavin moved that the commission recommend to the Department of Administration that they move away from a rule of five system towards a system of block scoring. He indicated that his motion intended to leave the question of the number of blocks to the discretion of the department.

VOTE: A vote was taken. The motion pass unanimously.

Mr. Fisher adjourned the meeting.

MERIT SYSTEM/COLLECTIVE BARGAINING
Work Session Summary
February 23, 1979

The session was chaired by Ken Humphreys in the absence of Representative Buchholdt and Greg O'Claray.

DEPARTMENT OF EMPLOYEE RELATIONS DRAFT BILL

The subcommittee received copies of the Department of Employee Relations draft bill and discussed adding provisions concerning the structure and functions of the Labor Relations Agency, the Personnel Board, and the Retirement Board. These agencies should be structured and staffed to insure insularity from pressure and independence of action. Pat Murphy pointed out that the subcommittee should focus on establishing the new department and avoid opposition where possible. Changes to those agencies can be proposed in another measure.

Pat Hunt suggested amendment to Section 10, page 4, line 21, to reflect that the P.E.R.A. limits the ability of the division to remove people from collective bargaining units. The subcommittee agreed to amend the section by adding "Except as provided in AS23.40.090" to the beginning of the sentence.

The subcommittee discussed the qualifications for the commissioner of Employee Relations (Section 1, page 1, lines 13 and 14). John Pugh moved that the qualifications for the commissioner read: "shall have experience in both personnel administration and labor relations either in the public or private sector. The commissioner shall have a total of at least five years of full-time experience in those fields." The motion was adopted unanimously.

Changes were also made to the bill to require that the director of the Division of Labor Relations have at least three years of practical working experience in the field of labor relations. Pat Hunt moved that the subcommittee recommend to the Commission that this bill be submitted to the legislature. The motion passed unanimously.

Ken Humphreys presented a draft bill providing for a bargainable merit system. Pat Murphy pointed out that what is bargainable will remain discretionary between the parties involved. He also expressed his reluctance to be responsible for personnel functions such as training, recruitment, etc. Ken Kareen moved that the subcommittee recommend to the Commission that the bill be introduced in the legislature. The motion passed unanimously.

Ken Humphreys explained that this bill, if enacted, would exempt all employees covered by collective bargaining from AS39.25. If the temporary hire draft bill was passed along with this, temporary hire rules would not apply to bargaining unit members. Bargaining agreements would therefore have to contain language addressing AS39.25 or offer alternatives. The statute would not apply to people covered by collective bargaining.

NON-CERTIFIED SCHOOL DISTRICT EMPLOYEES

Ken Spray requested the subcommittee recommend that the Commission support SB213, introduced by Senator Bennett, allowing non-certified school district employees the opportunity to bargain collectively under the P.E.R.A. Pat Hunt pointed out that the legislation addresses those employees not in the state system. It is not within the Division's nor the Commission's purview. Ken Spray moved that the subcommittee recommend that the Commission support SB213. Three (3) were in favor. Four (4) opposed. The motion failed.

SENATE BILL NO. 213

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA

ELEVENTH LEGISLATURE - FIRST SESSION

A BILL

For an Act entitled: "An Act relating to labor relations between school boards and other public employers and their employees."

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

* Section 1. AS 23.40.100(b) is amended to read:

(b) If the labor relations agency has reasonable cause to believe that a question of representation exists, it shall provide for an appropriate hearing upon due notice. If the labor relations agency finds that there is a question of representation, it shall direct an election by secret ballot to determine whether or by which organization the employees desire to be represented and shall certify the results of the election. Nothing in this section prohibits the waiving of hearings by stipulation for the purpose of a consent election in conformity with the regulations of the labor relations agency or an election in a bargaining unit agreed upon by the parties. The labor relations agency shall determine who is eligible to vote in an election and shall establish rules governing the election. In an initial election for representation held under this section, one of the choices on the ballot shall be "no representation". In an election in which none of the choices on the ballot receives a majority of the votes cast, a runoff election shall be conducted, the ballot providing for selection between the two choices receiving the largest and the second largest number of valid votes cast in the election. If an organization receives the majority of the votes cast in the election it shall be certified by the labor relations agency as exclusive representative of all the employees in the bargaining unit.

* Sec. 2. AS 23.40.200(c) is amended to read:

(c) The class in (a)(2) of this section is composed of public utility, snow removal, sanitation, and [PUBLIC SCHOOL AND OTHER] educational institution employees, except noncertificated employees of school boards. Employees in this class may engage in a strike after mediation, subject to the voting requirement of (d) of this section, for a limited time. The limit is determined by the interests of the health, safety or welfare of the public. The public employer or the labor relations agency may apply to the superior court in the judicial district in which the strike is occurring for an order enjoining the strike. A strike may not be enjoined unless it can be shown that it has begun to threaten the health, safety or welfare of the public. A court, in deciding whether or not to enjoin the strike, shall consider the total equities in the particular class. "Total equities" includes not only the impact of a strike on the public but also the extent to which employee organizations and public employers have met their statutory obligations. If an impasse or deadlock still exists after the issuance of an injunction, the parties shall submit to arbitration to be carried out under AS 09.43.-030.

* Sec. 3. AS 23.40.250(5) is amended to read:

(5) "public employee" means any employee of a public employer, whether or not in the classified service of the public employer, except elected or appointed officials or certificated [TEACHERS OR NONCERTIFICATED] employees of school boards [DISTRICTS];

* Sec. 4. AS 23.40.250(6) is amended to read:

(6) "public employer" means the state or a political subdivision of the state, including without limitation, a town, city, borough, district, school board, board of regents, public and quasi-public corporation, housing authority or other authority established by law, and a person designated by the public employer to act in its interest in dealing with public employees;

* Sec. 5. AS 23.40.250 is amended by adding a new paragraph to read:

(8) "school board" includes a regional educational attendance area school board.

* Sec. 6. Notwithstanding sec. 4, ch. 113, SLA 1972, a school board, including a regional educational attendance area school board, may not reject having the provisions of the Public Employment Relations Act apply to its relations with its noncertificated employees.

* Sec. 7. Nothing in this Act terminates or modifies a collective bargaining unit, recognition of exclusive bargaining representative, or collective bargaining agreement if the unit, recognition, or agreement is in effect on the effective date of this Act.

February 15, 1979

MINUTES

Representative Buchholdt, in the absence of Senator Ray, chaired the hearing. She invited public testimony.

PUBLIC TESTIMONY

Lois Jund, retired Deputy Commissioner of the Department of Health and Social Services, was the first speaker. She introduced her remarks to the Commission by noting that the staff of the Division of Personnel has a very tough job to do. They are subject to many pressures from many sources and are understaffed for the job they must do in a centralized system of personnel administration. The state personnel system can be improved--and must be.

Ms. Jund gave a brief summary of her own background. From 1948 to 1956, she was the personnel officer for the Alaska Territorial Health Department, which was then operated under the merit system of personnel administration because it was a federal program. From 1957 to 1958, she was a management consultant with the U.S. Public Health Service in personnel and other areas in Region VII and provided services for five states in that region.

From 1962 to 1974, Ms. Jund had overall responsibility for management of the Artic Health Research Center, a federal installation, including personnel administration. In that capacity, she had appointment authority through the level of G.S. 15 and classification authority to the G.S. 11 level. She became familiar with the state personnel system when, in 1974, she became Assistant Chief of the Division of Public Health of the state. From 1975 to her retirement in 1978, she held the positon of Deputy Commissioner in the Department of Health and Social Services.

There are four major areas of the state's personnel system which Ms. Jund addressed: the classification process, the examination process, the recruitment process, and one very serious aspect of the career service. These areas are the major problem areas as she sees them.

1. CLASSIFICATION

Ms. Jund noted that this is one of the state's greatest problem areas. There is a great disparity in pay ranges based on the level of responsibility, both within and between departments. She is a firm believer in equal pay for equal work. In the state personnel system the only consistency is inconsistency. She gave examples of this problem.

A Clerk IV, which is not a high level position, was handling the entire responsibility for a state-wide program, supervising a tremendous staff including two regional offices. She had this responsibility for many years. In 1974, after great effort, she was finally given the position of Administrative Assistant I. Administrative Assistant III's were heading programs with none of the responsibility that this individual had. She is still responsible for the entire program, and is presently classified as an Administrative Assistant II.

There is disparity of salaries between PHN's and Sanitarians within the same department, and between PHN's and Physician's Assistants. PHN's work much more on their own, with tremendous responsibility, yet are several pay ranges lower. There is also disparity between sanitarians working for the Department of Health and Social Services and those working for the Department of Environmental Conservation. In fact, the Department of Environmental Conservation is recruiting sanitarians away from the Division of Public Health. There are cases where an Administrative Officer I heads up a large project in the same department where an Administrative Officer III has few responsibilities.

The cause of this disparity is that the Division of Personnel has no standard classification guide, as does the federal government. In the federal system, the level of responsibility is equated with the range of the job. This would go a long way to do away with this tremendous disparity throughout the state government.

The Division of Personnel, in some instances, analyzes jobs and compares them with similar positions in other states. They fail to realize that--for example--comparing positions in California with positions in Alaska is like comparing apples to oranges. California has a wide-spread county government system, with responsibility for service delivery. A person here would be responsible for a state-wide program.

Few desk audits are presently done, and cannot be done without the assistance of a classification guide. After four years with the state government, Ms. Jund could not recall a single desk audit being done, so how can the Division of Personnel ascertain whether proper levels were set for positions?

Ms. Jund made the following recommendation, recognizing that it would cost money initially, but would save a lot of money in the long run: The Division of Personnel should prepare a standard classification guide immediately, equating levels of responsibility with qualifications and pay ranges. This then would permit a greater use of desk audits and would insure that personnel is functioning at its proper level. However, staffing in the Division of Personnel is insufficient to accomplish this project, but there are many things they could use to initiate such a classification guide.

The second greatest problem in the state personnel system is the inordinate amount of time it takes to classify a position once it has been authorized by the legislature. This leads to positions which desperately need to be filled being left vacant; it leads to the hiring of temporaries; and it leads to tremendous frustration on the part of administrators trying to run programs in the state. Ms. Jund has often heard legislators say that since you didn't fill a position, you evidently didn't need it. That isn't true. The position could not be filled.

One of the causes of the inordinate time to classify positions is that all positions must have individualized position descriptions. This is true in the federal government as well. With few exceptions, all positions must be classified by the Division of Personnel in the Department of Administration. One department may have its own classification authority. Unless pressure is brought to bear (and it is brought to bear by commissioners, by legislators, and by the office of the governor), the position will wait the normal classification process, no matter what the urgency of filling the position.

Ms. Jund recommended that we use standard position descriptions in the state. This would require the existence of a standard classification guide. For example, a Clerk Typist II in one department does practiclaly the same thing as a Clerk Typist II in another department, yet each one has to have an individual position description. PHN I's do the same work, wherever they are stationed. The few parts of a job which might be different could be noted on a cover sheet attached to the standard position description. This would cut down the classification time. The federal government has implemented this practice effectively for some clerical positions and for accountant positions.

There should be a decentralization of classification authority with positions and funding provided. Some departments have the authority to do so now; however, few take advantage of this authority because they do not have the positions and funding. This decentralization would be for large agencies only and for professional positions in those agencies, using the standard classification guide. A job analysis should be required to be written for each job to be classified in the department, and sent to the Division of Personnel. They would then assume their proper role of setting standards and monitoring departmental practices. This would call for a greater use of the desk audit mechanism of the Division of Personnel to insure proper alignment of positions.

The next point may be controversial. Qualifications are too low in many instances, due to substitutions, to get the job done. Ms. Jund stated that she firmly supports the principles of equal employment opportunity and believes that substitutions should be permitted for entry-level positions, up to and including sub-professional level positions. At the professional level, substitutions should not be required, as they are now by the Division of Personnel.

Ms. Jund gave an example of how ludicrous this can become. She referred to a position that she held as Assistant Director in the Division of Public Health. The job description calls for someone with a college degree, with two years of graduate study in public health administration or a closely related field, plus five years of administrative experience, one of which must be at the level of Administrative Officer I with the State of Alaska or an equivalent position elsewhere and one of which must be in public health. Those requirements are reasonable, and a person with those qualifications could do the job. However, additional experience may be substituted for the requirements of college education on a year-for-year basis.

The result (and this did happen on the register) was that an individual with eleven years of administrative experience, with only one year in public health at any level and one year in a position comparable to Administrative Officer I, could be placed on the register. The minimum qualification of eleven years of administrative experience did not specify at what level this experience must be. Many applicants qualified for the register who could not possibly perform the job functions.

Ms. Jund recommended that substitutions either not be required for professional positions or that they be permitted only to the extent that would be realistic.

2. EXAMINATION PROCESS

The staff in the Division of Personnel responsible for rating the training and experience of applicants is not always sufficiently knowledgeable of the field to properly rate an application. This is understandable, given the large number of jobs with a wide variety of qualifications. This leads to well-qualified individuals being rated ineligible and conversely, poorly-qualified individuals may receive high ratings because of the way an application is written.

As an example, Ms. Jund told of her own experience in filling a position for a Health Facilities Surveyor in Life Safety. They had located an individual who was fully qualified and urged him to get on the register. They were aghast to learn from the Division of Personnel that the person was not qualified because the examiner did not understand that being a fire inspector for an insurance company fully qualified the applicant as a life safety surveyor. That is the type of experience that they really needed. They did manage to get the situation straightened out.

Ms. Jund suggested that professional review panels composed of professionals serving in a volunteer capacity be created to rate applicants for professional positions. The data processing field is an example of the areas where this is most needed. She witnessed its effective use during the time she served on the U.S. Civil Service panel and helped to rate applicants in the professsional field of public health.

3. RECRUITMENT

On recruitment, Ms. Jund mentioned only one point: the inordinate amount of time and money spent by agency personnel in working registers. Frequently, the same names appear on registers where the individual has been reported to the Division of Personnel as not available, out of state, not interested and so forth. Yet, when the agency calls for another register in the same category, the same names appear. It is imperative that there be a central clearing of the common registers used by many agencies.

The recruitment process, after a position is classified, is extremely time consuming. Agencies must first advertise in the state, and for certain positions valuable time is lost in having to do so. You don't get doctors usually by advertising in Alaskan newspapers. You get doctors by advertising in the professional journals.

Ms. Jund recommended that there be concurrent advertising for hard-to-fill categories, both within and outside the state. There are many hard-to-fill categories in addition to physicians. This would save time and effort.

Ms. Jund raised another potentially controversial point. The Alaska Hire Law sometimes impedes state agencies from obtaining the best qualified person for the job to be done. She stated that she supports the Alaska Hire Law implicitly, but raised the question: Is the object of the law to give preferential treatment to an Alaskan who is equally or more highly qualified than someone from outside, or is the object to give preferential treatment to Alaskans no matter where they are on the registers (in other words, to foster employment)? She added that she would prefer to think that it was the former, but it doesn't work that way in the Alaska personnel system.

On the state's registers, all Alaskans are ranked ahead of all applicants from elsewhere. She worked a register for a very high-level position. The highest qualified applicant, with a rating of 95, was 18th on the register. The person was the highest rated applicant from outside the state. The first applicant on the register had a rating of 80, and five points had been included in her score because she was already a state employee. All things being equal (references and so forth), she stated that she would much prefer the applicant with a score of 95 than an applicant who would have rated 75 on appropriate training and experience. The applicant with the score of 95 on the register was not within reach. No wonder agencies are criticized on occasion when they are forced to employ individuals who cannot possibly do the job.

Ms. Jund recommended that all applicants be ranked on the registers by grade, based on qualifications and experience, and not by location of residence. Alaskans who are more highly qualified or who are equally qualified should be and must be given preference by agencies.

4. CAREER SERVICE

Ms. Jund recommended that the commission give attention to merit increases for deserving employees. She distinguished these merit increases from longevity increases. It is argued by some that state employees receive pay increases; so why should the state also give them any more money? However, there is not much incentive for most employees to do an outstanding job for three years when a person hired tomorrow will be receiving the same pay range. This is not the case in private industry, and it leads to a terrible morale problem.

Ms. Jund recommended that agencies prepare standards for performance on which to base merit increases, so that they are given only to deserving employees who are performing at a consistently high level. She also recommended that the legislature specifically allocate funds for merit increases.

It is imperative that personnel functions be decentralized to large agencies. The Division of Personnel should then set standards and monitor performance.

That concluded Ms. Jund's remarks. She stated that she believed she had chosen areas of the greatest concern to most employees of the state of Alaska.

QUESTIONS

In answer to questions on decentralization from Lynda McCurry, Ms. Jund stated that the Division of Personnel will always have to assume classification functions for the smaller agencies. Some decentralization is the way to go. There is reluctance on the part of the Division of Personnel to relinquish classification authority.

Janet Bradley asked about the apparent difference of opinion on the standard position description. In the classification walk-through, Ken Kareen explained that the position description forms the basis for the Division of Personnel's classification, performance standards and employee evaluations. Because they are frequently out of date, the Division of Personnel is unable to do its job.

How do you reconcile this need for a description tailor-made for each employee with your recommendation for standard descriptions to speed the classification process?

Ms. Jund explained that standard forms could be used only for those positions common to many agencies and in which there was very little variance between the duties of those in the positions, such as Clerk Typist I. Standard descriptions would also be appropriate for Public Health Nurse I's. Pat Murphy pointed out that both employees and managers write position descriptions in order to achieve particular results: for example, eligibility for overtime and placement in a particular bargaining unit.

In answer to a question from Pat Murphy, Ms. Jund explained the way the classification system works in the federal government. The personnel officer for the agency classifies a position in accordance with the standard classification guide. An analysis is written of how the personnel officer chose that classification, and it is sent with the position description to the central headquarters for review. If they believe it to be incorrect, they advise the personnel officer of the error. In addition, there would be periodic audits in which the employee describes actual duties to the auditor, and these are compared with the position description. If an error is found in the classification assigned, then the personnel officer receives a written report advising the corrective action needed. This system retains the proper authority and responsibility appropriate while allowing a faster process. It is appropriate that the people in the field make the initial classification, since they have more knowledge about the position than someone in the Division of Personnel possibly can, especially when personnel is responsible for classifying all positions within the state.

If the corrective action leads to a downgrading of the position, Ms. Jund stated that she believes that federal procedures allow the incumbent of the affected position to remain at his or her existing salary for one year before being placed at the lower pay rate, although the position would be shown as the lower level from the time that action to correct the error was taken. It is important to remember that it is not what the employee is qualified to do that matters. It's what the job calls for the employee to do.

DIVISION OF DATA PROCESSING

Mr. Dwayne Herrick, an employee in the Division of Data Processing, identified a number of problems within that division.

The agency has in the past neglected to budget for travel for training, and yet training is necessary if employees are to keep their skills current in the rapidly changing data processing field. The division head justifies hiring new employees from outside Alaska because present employees lack this training. Money which has been appropriated for travel is spent on recruiting trips to the lower 48 to hire new employees rather than sending existing employees to programs to increase their skills. Such training programs are not available in Juneau. Training money has also been used to purchase equipment instead of to provide training. There are self-instruction manuals for new computer systems, but they are not sufficient and should not be considered a replacement for more formal and extensive training programs.

Employees who are brought up and whose moving expenses are paid by the state are then obligated to work for the state for two years or else to pay back a portion of their moving expenses. This increases their allegiance to the head of the division. The director is not concerned with complying with the Personnel Rules and has ignored hiring freezes in order to provide a job for a friend.

The staff of the Division of Personnel is unfamiliar with the fields in which they are rating data processing applicants, and they make mistakes. There is now some communication between the Division of Data Processing and Personnel on how applicants should be rated, so the mistakes are decreasing.

There have been a number of desk audits in the Division of Data Processing without any perceptible results.

Lynda McCurry explained that for positions in the field of data processing there is continuing authorization to accept out-of-state applications, unlike most other positions in the state. The person hiring can then use the justification of unique and unusual circumstances to select the applicant he or she is most interested in, regardless of the applicant's ranking on the register.

Charles Dockery, a Systems Analyst II in the Division of Data Processing, gave an example of the kinds of abuses which are occuring in the division. In late 1977 or early 1978, the director and one of his managers decided that they would avoid hiring any of the "dolts on the register" by specifying that the position for which they were hiring require specialized knowledge. People were hired from the lower 48, but they have not had to use this specialized knowledge, except for one employee who helped with the primary election. In addition, the division has since asked another employee to resign. The present staff of the division has the talent to learn the new skills, but they are not being given the opportunity to do so.

Mr. Herrick added that the director has failed to establish his priorities and to set realistic goals.

Mr. Dockery suggested that the Division of Personnel should audit the appointments of outsiders to attempt to establish whether the unique and unusual circumstances which provided the basis for making the hiring decision actually exist.

Representative Buchholdt pointed out that in the last session, there was a bill before the legislature to increase the funding for training, and that Pat Hunt testified that there was adequate training available.

Mr. Dockery asserted that there should be action taken against program managers who violate the Personnel Rules when making their hiring decisions.

Another facet to the training problem is that the state pays for moving a family from the lower 48 to Alaska, instead of paying for a three-day training session offered through IBM for an existing employee. Training would cost substantially less than moving expenses.

Lynda McCurry stated that the Department of Labor hires data processors from the same registers that the Division of Data Processing uses, and that the department hires from below the top five only when they need a programer skilled in COBOL as opposed to scientific language.

Pat Murphy pointed out that this is an example of the problems created by having the head of personnel at a division level instead of at a departmental commissioner level. He or she should have independent authority to function effectively and to stand up to commissioners of other departments.

Darlene Howard said that APEA studied the use of training funds by the Division of Data Processing. Ninety-five percent of the training money was used by one percent of the staff--the rest did not participate in training programs. There did not appear to be any relationship between the people selected to attend training programs and the need for training in the particular program. Training sessions are used to reward employees, not to increase their skills.

Carl Nelson, a Console Operator II with the Division of Data Processing, testified. Several months ago, Mr. Nelson's supervisor advised him that he was due for a merit increase. The forms were returned, and he was told that he would have to wait another two years. He is pursuing this matter through APEA.

In 1972, the person who was then director of data processing decided that the console operators were overpaid, and initiated action to have the salary ranges lowered by two pay ranges. There was, at that time, no one to speak on behalf of the employees, and the action went through. Since then, the equipment has become substantially more complex. A new CPU unit is capable of handling five programs at one time, and there are only two people working on it at any one time. The workers agreed to a 12½ hour shift, so that the system is constantly operating, and the state is obligated to pay only a minimum of overtime to these employees.

There have been two attempts to have the positions reclassified since the 1972 action. Neither was successful. Morale is very low, and when the positions are compared with similar positions in Washington, Oregon and California, it becomes evident that Alaska salaries are not competitive.

There is a Data Processsing Job Classification Task Force which has been organized to draft a complete set of new flexible, modern, well-defined data processing job classifications. A questionnaire has been developed to gather information to that end. Mr. Nelson supplied the commission with a copy of his completed questionnaire. Lynda McCurry explained that the task force was created to identify problems within that agency. Membership consists of Data Processing managers and representatives from the Division of Personnel and the Department of Labor. Carolyn Hinkey and Dick Kind, employees in the Division of Personnel, are responsible for compiling this information.

Mr. Nelson has worked for the state for nine years, and he has received only one merit increase during that time. In the absence of merit increases, and since he has reached the top of the pay scale for Console Operator II's, there is no incentive for outstanding performance. There used to be four levels of operators, and that number has now been reduced to two. Therefore, no viable career ladder is provided to Console Operators.

Charles Dockery elaborated on the absence of career ladders available to Data Processing employees. There is a 60% turnover rate in the division caused, in part, by the absence of promotional opportunities and merit increases. Some of the best qualified employees are leaving.

Thousands of dollars are spent on recruiting trips to the lower 48, yet there is no money available for training the existing staff, either for travel to programs offered elsewhere or to provide needed training to Alaskans. The division has continuing authority to accept applications from out of state for the positions of Programmer III or Systems Analyst II--both at Range 17. The division hires people from out of state into these positions, and then promotes them to whatever vacancy the director intended to put them in. There is a need for the state to address the problems of enforcing the Personnel Rules when they are violated, particularly when intentionally violated by state program managers.

The staff of the Division of Personnel lacks the skills to rate applications in the data processing field. Mr. Dockery submitted an application for System Analyst I, and received a score on his training and experience of 80. Two weeks later he submitted a xeroxed copy of the application, this time for Systems Analyst II which is two salary ranges higher than Systems Analyst I, and received a score of 85. There would be problems in having the Division of Data Processing score its own application, since there is no committment by the manager to abide by the Personnel Rules and treat applicants or employees fairly.

The division does not permit its employees to obtain training or to use what training they have; yet, in order to be considered for promotion, employees are required to have received additional training. This is one of the causes for the high turnover rate in the division.

Mr. Dockery expects that he will recieve some retaliation from the division for testifying before the commission. He gave an example of one individual who resigned, stating his reasons for leaving very tactfully. The program manager "vindictively" black listed him for doing so. There are many ways in which to seek revenge, such as finding fault and accumulating material in personnel files. Mr. Dockery added that there are many people who make mistakes in the division.

An example of the problems of the division concerns a bright, 20 year old employee. He was the only person with the skills to broadcast the general election results for the past elections. Despite his ability and the fact that he got along well with his supervisor and the other employees of the division, he has submitted his resignation, stated mildly and tactfully. His letter of resignation was pulled from his personnel file so that managers would not have access to his account of problems encountered. The head of the division has indicated that he will see that the employee does not receive another state job.

Mr. Nelson testified that console operators are classified at Range 14. Mr. Dockery stated that that was unacceptable. The data processing salaries of the state do not meet the national standard, except for the salaries of the Operations Manager and Director. The others are at least two ranges too low. Data processing salaries in Alaska are equal to those avialable in the lower 48, but the cost of living in Alaska is much higher.

There was a position which was filled without any public announcement of the vacancy. The person hired was called a resident based on his having worked in the state some years before for a period of six months. The division paid for relocation expenses.

Some of the problems result from poor management. Some are the result of problems in the personnel system. When employees are hired initially, they are placed at advanced steps in the salary schedule in order for the state to compete for the best qualified people, but incumbents are not given the same considerations.

Kit Stewart, a Finance Officer III with the Department of Environmental Conservation, agreed with most of the points made by Ms. Jund. She disagreed on the question of limiting opportunities for substituting experience for college degrees. She felt it was appropriate to allow substitution, except in cases of life and death skills. As an example, engineers who have practiced for 20 years in Alaska are by statute to be treated as though they held engineering degrees.

Small agencies should be able to handle decentralization, just as large agencies are. Specifically, Ms. Stewart indicated that the Department of Environmental Conservation has existing staff with skills to perfrom classifications capably.

Training is a major problem in her department. For example, one employee felt that a particular training course would be beneficial and offered to pay transportation expenses and to take annual leave for the time required to attend, but asked the department to pay the $500 entrance fee. The request was denied; and later, the employee was rated as failing to perform tasks which could have been performed had the training been authorized. At least one department has paid full college tuition for one of its employees.

In answer to a question from Don Fiser, Ms. Stewart indicated that the registers are cumbersome. Almost never are all five of the top candidates available for a position. For lower level positions, about 90% of those on the register are not available.

The Division of Personnel should adopt a policy of handwriting memos on personnel matters so that time would not be lost in waiting for typing to be completed.

Cynthia Butler, Administrative Assistant to Representative Buchholdt, concurred with most of the statements made to the commission. She has had personal experience in difficulties with the raters in the Division of Personnel. She read a position description for a job for which she believed herself well qualified. She submitted her application and a resume in November. As of December, she had not yet been placed on the register. When she was finally placed on the register, she had received a score of only 80.

Ms. Butler inquired about the standards used by the rater in making that evaluation and was told that the information could not be released. Finally, she spoke to the person who had performed the evaluation. She learned that the rater had given her no credit for education or for specific training which she had received that was relevant to the position for which she was applying. She was told that if she had written her application for a lay person, it could have been evaluated to show that experience. She asked a reading expert to evaluate the application, and the expert told her that the language contained nothing above an 8th grade level.

Ms. Butler asked that her application be re-evaluated. The rater said that perhaps that could be done if she would document her education and provide evidence of the field work she had done. Ms. Butler supplied the information, and on inquiry a week later about whether the re-evaluation had occurred, was told that whenever the rater reached that information in her stack of work, it would be done.

Ms. Butler became angry at the time required to correct what she believed to be a mistake on the part of the Division of Personnel staff, particularly since the position for which she had applied was going to be filled soon. She called the Deputy Director to arrange for a personal interview. Subsequently, her application was re-evaluated, placing her from number nine on the list to number one. Because of her inquiries and persistence in asking that the errors of the division be corrected, she now believes that she has been blackballed from working for the state, without ever having held a state position. She was advised that in having her application re-evaluated and having her positionn on the register moved, the division had made an exception. Normally, the applicants must suffer the consequence of a division error without any recourse.

Ms. Butler indicated that she had been told that the division was severely understaffed; and if that is so, then she can understand the inordinate amount of time required to process her application. The state should insure that the division has adequate staff to handle its workload.

In answering questions of commission members, Ms. Butler stated that the positon for which she had applied was for Emergency Medical Services Coordinator. She had not had a formal interview, but she had spoken by telephone with the manager who was making the hiring decision and with another employee. She had not been to the job site.

Darlene Howard gave an example of another applicant who had had problems similar to Ms. Butler's. The applicant had decided not to testify before the commission for fear that she will be blackballed from state employment. The applicant applied for about 17 jobs, and is highly competent, possessing a B.A. and additional education as a media specialist with an emphasis in library work and three years in other related fields with tremendous research experience in private industry.

When the individual applied for a state librarian position, the division found the applicant unqualified because of the techniques used in evaluating teaching experience. If an applicant has a number of years of teaching experience within the same school system, then the division counts all summer vacation periods as experience, whether or not the teacher works during the summer. If the applicant has changed school districts, then the division only counts the time of the school year, or approximately nine months. Therefore, the applicant in question failed to meet the teaching requirements of the position.

The same individual is a professional artist who has tutored in the field of graphics, owned and operated an art business for several years, has had personal art exhibitions and has one year of professional art education. The division concluded in an evaluation that the individual lacked formal art education, despite the public recognition of the artist's talent, and therefore was unqualified for a position involving art work for the state's publications.

The applicant was also not credited with any experience in management or administration, even though the individual had successfully operated a business for income.

The individual encountered the same problems Ms. Butler discussed when appealing the decisions made by the raters. One position had been advertised as being open until a particular date, and the applicant pushed the division to re-evaluate to meet that deadline, only to learn that despite public notices, a register had already been sent out to the hiring department. The register had been issued ten days before the publicized closing date for applicants, and the individual's name did not appear on the register for the position.

Written testimony was presented to the commission by Marcella Stutte concerning the eligibility requirements for longevity increases. A copy is attached.

STAFF REPORT

1. Summary of Correspondence

a. Testimony was received from Mr. Scott Semans, Architect, advising that the personnel system is overloaded with red tape which ties the hands of the people who are making hiring decisions, resulting in losing the best qualified applicants. He advocates speeding up the certification process and allowing those hiring to exercise greater judgement in making their selections of employees.

b. Ms. Margaret Clark, an Administrative Officer with the state troopers, testified as follows:

More than once, a desk audit to upgrade a position has resulted in the position being placed in a totally different classification. The incumbent, who is satisfactorily performing the work, therefore may not be technically qualified. If a person is in the position in such a case, no tests should be required to continue holding it.

She disagrees with requiring people to retake tests after two years on a register. In some positions, there are few vacancies, and an applicant can be on the register for the entire two years without receiving notification of an opening.

Tests don't apply to the work done in daily jobs. She recommends testing a person only once prior to hiring him, and then promoting on the basis of experience and performance, as the federal government does.

She has no complaints about the services of the Division of Personnel--it takes a long time to get anything processed, but that's the fault of the system, not the staff.

c. Ms. Gaile Haynes, who testified before the commission in Anchorage on January 27, wrote in regard to the ratings of promotability. A person who appeals or grieves a matter tends to be regarded as a troublemaker, and is therefore regarded as non-promotable. To have a process not subject to normal review is in effect to insure that boat-rockers will not be promoted, thereby producing a degree of mediocrity in state employees.

2. A work session schedule was set for February 23 and 24.

3. Budget for 1979

Warren Endicott of the Administrative Services Division of Legislative Affairs has inquired about the commission's budget for next year.

4. Theresa Hurt, a student from Juneau-Douglas Community College, is working on a project for the commission as part of a Law Practicum course which she is taking. She will be reviewing the Personnel Rules and the collective bargaining contracts to determine the impact the contracts have upon the Rules.

5. Division of Legislative Finance Computer

Terry Cramer spoke with Jay Hogan, who indicated that the computer programming for tracking vacant permanent positions will not be finished for about six months.

6. USCSC Conference, February 28 and March 1

The commission will be responsible for paying for travel and perdiem for those members attending the U.S. Civil Service Commission Conference on Public Personnel Management Reform. Representative Buchholdt may attend in Senator Ray's place. Greg O'Claray and Pat Murphy will also attend.

I went to work for the old Dept. of Highways in 1968. After working for over five years I became seriously ill and left work. After my sick leave ran out, I resigned because I thought I had to. After a two year recovery period, I went back to work for the Department of Highways in my old job, in my old grade and in step F where I was when I resigned. I thought I was returning to the position and status I had before I became ill. It was the intention of my employing department to rehire me under the circumstances that existed prior to my leaving. Later I was told that because of the wording of the Alaska Statutes

> "Sec. 39.27.022. Pay increments for longevity in state service. (a) Pay increments, computed at the rate of 3.75 per cent of the employee's base salary, shall be provided for an employee after he has remained in the final step within a given range for two years, provided that the employee has worked continuously for the state for seven years and provided that his current annual rating by his supervisors is designated as "good" or higher."

I would be ineligible for longevity increases for a period of seven years.

I have been back at work for 3 1/2 years and have not received a longevity increase although my evaluations are outstanding.

I don't believe this is fair. Had anyone realized the significance at the time of my resigning, of this situation, I may have been permitted LWOP during my illness and would not have inadvertently lost my eligibility.

What recourse do I have to correct this inequity?

CATEGORIES OF EMPLOYEES
Work Session Summary, February 6, 1979

Representative Joe McKinnon chaired the work session. A brief summary of the subcommittee discussion follows:

A. Review and discussion of the draft bill on hiring of temporary employees.

1. Add language to subsection 2 (c) (2), page 2, line 6, concerning the hiring of temporaries where new positions have been created but have not yet been authorized by the Division of Budget and Management and the Division of Personnel to read:

(2) there is an urgent need to fill an authorized permanent position and it is impractical to complete the establishment of that position, or there is an urgent need to fill a vacant, permanent position and it is impractical to make certification within a reasonable time because of a lack of eligibles for that position; or

2. The penalty section (page 3, line 6) was discussed briefly. The approach is to establish a rebuttable presumption that an illegally hired temporary can recover from the supervisor who authorized the hire personally for the amount of past wages.

3. Goals of the bill: (1) to provide maximum controls on the hiring of temporaries without (2) stepping over the bounds of the separation of powers, and (3) without ham-stringing the executive branch from operating its programs effectively.

4. Technical amendments were suggested:

Page 1, line 17, add "permanent seasonal" to "permanent full-time and permanent part-time".

Page 3, line 5, substitute the word "terminate" for the word "dismiss".

Page 3, line 18, substitute the word "employee" for the word "person".

5. There was discussion of the effect of the bill. It may serve to aid collective bargaining negotiation, since there will be one readily identifiable person authorizing all temporary positions.

The bill would give considerable discretion to the Director of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations in making a determination that a temporary position should be authorized. The Director is required to consider the standards provided, but there is no review of his decision.

There was concern expressed that the review of requests for temporary employees by the Director must be immediate, so that delays do not occur.

Ken Humphreys will redraft the bill and bring it to the next subcommittee meeting for further consideration.

B. Imposing a maximum on the number of temporaries a department may hire.

It was suggested that the subcommittee propose that a limit of 10% of the departmental PCN's be established.

Opposition to the proposal pointed out that this should be left in the collective bargaining arena.

If the Director of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations is required to report each year on the number of temporary employees he has authorized, then there will be review and consideration of the issue each year.

It is more important to evaluate the effectiveness of departmental hiring practices than to focus on the numbers of temporaries hired.

C. Imposing a maximum time limit on the length of temporary service.

Mr. Murphy moved that a section be added to the work draft of the bill on temporary hiring to set a maximum of 120 days on the service of a temporary, with a provision that under extenuating circumstances, justified to the Director in writing, he may approve the extension of that time limit.

Mr. Spray proposed an amendment: That the issue of time limits of temporary employment be left in the arena of collective bargaining.

Mr. Murphy objected to the proposed amendment on the grounds that it was a new motion, not an amendment.

VOTE: A vote was taken on Mr. Murphy's motion. It was adopted four (4) to two (2).

D. Scope of Commission activity: Concern was expressed that the Commission avoid intrusion into collective bargaining issues. The Commission risks jeopardizing its effectiveness and credibility if it enters into this area, and may create increasing divisiveness both internally and within the legislature. Commission time would be better spent on other matters.

E. Issue of Contract Employees: When the subcommittee considers this issue, it should request information from the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities on Deputy Commissioner Scoogil's memo stating that the department should limit the size of the state work force by contracting out jobs where possible.

F. Issue of Vacant Permanent Positions: Staff was requested to check with Jay Hogan, Director of the Division of Legislative Finance, on the computer programming which his division is implementing to track vacant PCN's.

G. Scope of Exempt and Partilly Exempt Categories: There was some discussion of this topic. The subcommittee should consider this subject at a later time.

STAFF NOTE:

Terry Cramer checked with Jay Hogan, Director of the Division of Legislative Finance, on the computer program to track vacant PCN's. He indicated that the program should be completed in about six months. It has been held in abeyance because of a change in computers. When completed, the program will track the source of the money used to fund a position and whether the position is vacant.

CLASSIFICATION, CERTIFICATION & RECRUITMENT SUBCOMMITTEE
Work Session Summary, February 5, 1979

Don Fisher chaired the work session in the absence of Senator Ray.

ISSUES DISCUSSED (See Issue Summary, dated January 21, 1979)

1. Centralization or decentralization of Personnel Administration.

There was general discussion on this topic and of the questions raised in the issue summary. Some of the points mentioned follow:

Collective bargaining has acted as a centralizing force in personnel matters. Where disputes arise, the grievance procedure which, in step IV, results in a decision by the Commissioner on the question, creates uniformity of application for all members of that bargaining unit.

Decentralization would further diversify the state's personnel practices. The state must be concerned with providing fair and consistent treatment for all of its employees. Decentralization increases the likelihood of abuse by departmental staff. Increased auditing would be required of the Division of Personnel. Decentralization may also require an increase in departmental personnel staff and therefore be more expensive. A decentralized system could result in a more cumbersome application process if each department maintained its own application files.

In a centralized system, there will be fewer checks on the authority of the head of that system. The Division of Personnel and Labor Relations has unclear authority to set uniform policies in some areas of personnel procedure which has been delegated to departments, leading to a diversity of practices among the departments.

Some of the problems which have been identified in the personnel system (for example, the time required to evaluate applications) result from inadequate staffing and budget within the Division of Personnel. Providing increased funding to the Division would resolve a number of these.

It is possible to decentralize the authority to perform certain tasks while leaving the policy setting and interpretation role in a centralized agency.

The question of whether to centralize or to decentralize should be resolved after the Commission makes its decisions on what kind of system it wishes to recommend. For example, if the Commission recommends that the state adopt a broad-band classification system and a Department of Employee Relations, then those decisions would lean towards a centralized system. The Commission needs to recognize in its debate that parts of the personnel system are people oriented (examination and application processes) and that parts are management oriented (classification and pay).

The Commission should analyze personnel functions and ask for each whether the present vehicle works well or whether changes are needed. If changes are indicated, is the problem a result of understaffing or do the methods need to be stream-lined or the priorities re-defined?

Departmental Personnel Officers. Whether the system is centralized or decentralized, there will still have to be departmental personnel officers, either employed by the department or by the central agency. The kinds of tasks they do and the skills they need will depend upon the decisions the Commission reaches on the question of centralization or decentralization.

At present, personnel officers can be caught in a battle between the departmental commissioners, who may want to do something in conflict with the rules, and the Director of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations. A centralized system, with personnel officers as employees of the Division, would require the commissioners to argue directly with the Director instead of placing the personnel officer in the middle.

Wherever the personnel officers are employed, they will still be subject to two sources of authority, and between those two will still be an undefined area, the limits of which will have to be resolved in a case-by-case manner.

The question of who should employ departmental personnel officers deserves a full subcommittee hearing to which each of the personnel officers of the departments should be invited.

Department of Employee Relations. There was general agreement that the subcommittee should recommend the creation of a new Department of Employee Relations for Commission consideration. Some of the points raised in discussion follow:

The Commissioner of the new department should be required by statute to have labor relations experience, either in the public or private sector. The Commissioners of Administration of the state have not understood the intricacies of labor relation prior to assuming their posts, which required that there be a time spent in gaining the necessary background.

Functions of the new department:

1. Labor Relations
2. Personnel
3. Benefits - The negotiation of benefits would be part of the labor relations functions of the new department. The running of the Public Employees Retirement System would remain the responsibility of the Department of Administration, as would the details of the Blue Cross-Blue Shield contract and the record keeping for credit under the retirement programs of the state.
4. Safety and training programs - See discussion in the Merit System/Collective Bargaining issue summary.
5. Equal Employment Opportunity. The subcommittee suggested that the new department would be a logical place to house the state's EEO office.

The Human Rights Commission has adopted a position that wherever the state EEO office is located, it should receive the prestige, support, budget and technical advisors it needs to be effective. It has been recommended that the office be located in the Office of the Governor. Given the increased status that a Department of Employee Relations would have when compared to a division within the Department of Administration, the Human Rights Commission might be receptive to the placement of the EEO office within the new department, provided that its importance and effectiveness were recognized and maintained.

The Department of Administration would be left with the following divisions: Data Processing, Finance, General Services and Supply, Pioneer's Benefits, Retirement and Benefits, and Internal Audit.

Ken Kareen doubted that there is any other state where government employment has as great an impact on the state's economy as is the case in Alaska, and where the state is as deeply involved in collective bargaining. What rank should the person in charge of these functions hold in state government?

Cost of the new department. The existing staff of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations would be transferred, as would the staff of the EEO office, should that office be placed within the new department. A commissioner's salary would have to be added to the budget.

When the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities was created, there was a zero increase fiscal note acompanying the legislation.

It is possible that ultimately, the state would save money by creating the new department, since the increased authority and access to the Governor by the Commissioner of the department would result in a more consistent application of the terms of the collective bargaining agreements and lead to fewer arbitrations.

Some federal programs in which the state participates identify a portion of the funding to be used for administrative services. The state's practice is to charge the department for support services provided by the Department of Administration but to place those portions of the federal funds into the general fund rather than to transfer them directly to the Department of Administration.

Ken Humphreys was requested to review statutes of other states (such as Hawaii and Pennsylvania, as well as Wisconsin) when drafting the statutes for the Department of Employee Relations.

2. Audits of the personnel system. There was general agreement that annual audits of the system would be useful. Discussion revolved around who should perform the audit, what the scope should be, and to whom the auditor should report.

Scope

1. Audit against the goals adopted by the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations.

2. The Blue Ribbon Commission should set goals of the audit, identifying different functions for different audits.

3. The Blue Ribbon Commission should set the scope for review of its recommendations so that there would be identification of problems or non-compliance with its proposals.

4. Audit according to the standards established in the Personnel Rules and the labor contracts.

By Whom

1. Legislative Audit - There would need to be guidelines for the audit clearly stated so that Legislative Audit would know the intent of the audit.

2. Internal audit office within the department.

3. An outside CPA firm.

1. The legislature.

2. A special committee of the legislature, for example, composed of the commissioner from another department and the chairperson of the State Affairs Committee. This committee should have the authority to define the annual audit as they felt necessary and to delegate audit responsibilities accordingly. They should have an adequate budget for this purpose.

There was general concern that the audit be non-political and be performed against standards that were valid for the conditions in Alaska. The scope should be defined to make the topic manageable and useful. As the Commission adopts recommendations, it should consider defining the results it expects so that these would be the basis for future audits.

The subcommittee decided to hold the questions of the audit until the Commission has decided what it wishes to recommend on other topics. It was generally agreed that some provision should be made for audits to evaluate the effectiveness of the Commission's recommendations and the effectiveness of the personnel system as a whole.

Committee consideration of EEO matters. The subcommittee will invite Karen Cory, the Director of the state's EEO office, to join in discussions when it is ready to consider the state hiring practices in detail. Her comments will be most useful and important in that context.

Word processing centers. The subcommittee will also arrange for a later meeting with John Mitchell, Coordinator of Word Processing, on the question of the word processing centers and the selection of supervisors for those centers.

MERIT SYSTEM/COLLECTIVE BARGAINING
Work Session Summary, February 5, 1979

The session was chaired by Representative Thelma Buchholdt. The Issue numbers, as follows, refer to the Summary of Issues dated January 21, 1979.

Issue 1. Structure of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations.

SUBCOMMITTEE MOTION: Pat Murphy moved that the subcommittee request the Legislative Affairs Agency to draft a bill for further subcommittee review to create a Department of Employee Relations encompassing the functions of personnel, labor relations, training, and for the purposes of this bill, equal employment opportunity and affirmative action. Ken Spray requested that the functions include safety and training. Mr. Murphy agreed.

DISCUSSION

Retirement functions. Responsibility for maintaining the retirement system should remain in the Department of Administration.

Budget. The budget for the new department should result from the transfer of the budget of the existing divisions plus appropriation of additional funds for the creation of the position of the new Commissioner.

Safety. Safety should be included in the new department because there needs to be central coordination of safety programs. The system now is that user departments are supposed to coordinate with the Department of Labor, which supplies trainers on request. The requirements of OSHA, which directs that the state provide safety training for its employees, are not being met.

Pat Hunt suggested that money for safety and training programs could be provided by the user departments, who would compensate the Division or the new department for the cost of materials used. The training which the Division of Personnel has been able to provide to date (given limited staffing and funding) has been very well received. Money allocated for training is one of the first items to be cut in a lean budget year.

CLARIFICATION OF MOTION: The question of which state agency has the authority and responsibility to negotiate with the Marine Transit unions is not resolved. The state Supreme Court has ruled that those unions are now covered by the Public Employees Relations Act, and that therefore, they negotiate with the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations. Prior to that decision, the Commissioner of Public Works held that authority.

It was generally agreed that the motion applied to those unions representing employees of the University of Alaska.

Affirmative Action/EEO. At present, the state EEO office is in the Department of Administration, having moved from the Office of the Governor. In addition to this central EEO office, each department has its own EEO officer, who is responsible for providing information to and counseling employees within that department as well as for preparing and monitoring the departmental affirmative action plan. There is a need to have trained, sensitive people who are aware of legal requirements in the departments. The departmental EEO officers hold other jobs within the departments and usually place priority on those other duties.

The central EEO office has placed a priority on providing training to supervisors and managers in state agencies, as well as reviewing the personnel practices and procedures of the state and monitoring Division of Personnel compliance, revising the affirmative actions plans, and gathering statistics on the state's work force.

Placing the central EEO office as a division of the new Department of Employee Relations would ensure that there was communication between that division and the divisions of personnel and labor relations. Much of the functions of those divisions (recruitment, examination, certification and training) is of great concern to the EEO office, and therefore having an opportunity to affect decisions in those areas as they are made is important. Making the EEO office a division would ensure that it had the status necessary to act effectively and would help emphasize the state's committment to equal opportunity.

Departmental Personnel and Training Officers. The creation of this new department does not address, at this stage, the placement of the departmental personnel officers. They could either remain departmental employees or become employees of the new department. Training officers in the departments could also

Training. The state's training programs, like the safety and EEO functions, need central coordination, which could be achieved by making the new department responsible for that role. Individual departments would continue to provide their own, specialized programs, but the central office in the new department would provide information on what programs were being offered and would provide technical assistance in programs as its own staffing and expertise permitted. Having one central person in charge of that oversight would help to ensure that training programs which the state was required (by union contract, for example) to provide would take place. If the programs did not occur, then there would be one person to whom the union could turn to question why they had not.

Training is often misunderstood in Alaska. There is a feeling that employees should know all the intricacies of their jobs at the time that they are hired. But government procedures are different from those in private industry - for example, in accounting - and the unique orientation to governmental work means that there will have to be an orientation for the new employee, whether that person is just out of school or has worked for a number of years in that field in private industry.

The efficiency and productivity of state employees depends in a large part upon the intial training they receive.

Orientation of the New Department. There is a hope that the Department of Employee Relations would be people oriented, rather than fiscally oriented, as the Department of Administration is. Most of the programs within the Department of Administration are financial in nature, while those programs proposed for transfer to the new department concern people directly: What happens to a new employee on entering and while serving in state government?

Model. The Department of Employee Relations should be modeled along the lines of the Anchorage Municipal ordinance, but without creating separate divisions for the separate functions in the Division of Personnel. There should be provision for the Commissioner of the department to delegate some personnel functions to the individual departments.

VOTE ON THE SUBCOMMITTEE MOTION: A vote was taken on the motion. It carried unanimously, nine (9) members voting.

Issue 2. Relationship of collective bargaining contract terms to statutes, Personnel Rules and departmental standard operating procedures.

SUBCOMMITTEE MOTION: Pat Hunt moved that staff be directed to design language to add to Title 39 which limits application of Title 39 to those not covered by collective bargaining units and to define merit principles which must be negotiatied in all collective bargaining agreements. The draft should be brought to the subcommittee for further review.

DISCUSSION

There is confusion about what standards govern employees covered by both collective bargaining contracts and the Personnel Rules. The language suggested by the motion would clearly make each union contract the operating system for determining all conditions of work for covered employees, while ensuring that merit principles would be recognized in each agreement and complied with. The Rules would then apply only to those solely affected by them. (At the work session on February 7, Mr. Hunt indicated that there are five classified employees in the state who are not members of a union. Ken Kareen represents 20% of that group.) The Rules are therefore needed to set out the conditions of employment for those five employees, as well as for any employees added to the group in the future.

At present, to chage a Personnel Rule, the Personnel Board must consider not only the merits of the proposed change but also how that rule affects each contract. If the scope of the rule has been partially affected by any contract, then a change would have to be agreed to by the union in question.

Unions have established different systems to implement the merit principles (which are made applicable to union contracts by AS23.40.070:

> The legislature further finds that the enactment of positive legislation establishing guidelines for public employment relations is the best way to...strengthen the merit principle where civil service is in effect...)

For example, employees hired for positions in APEA bargaining units are hired from the eligibility lists maintained by the state. Employees hired for positions within Local 71's bargaining unit are hired from eligibility list maintained by the union, except that OSHA inspectors are hired from the state's registers. The Marine Transit unions maintain their own retirement program, whereas APEA and Local 71 members participate in the program administered by the state.

There are also differing views on the policy of hiring by seniority. Local 71 members strongly support seniority hiring while members of APEA support hiring of the most qualified without direct consideration of seniority. If supervisors are responsible about disciplining and firing unsatisfactory employees, then a policy favoring seniority should ensure that fully-qualified individuals are at the top of the eligibility lists.

Wages negotiated by unions are ususally passed on to non-unionized employees by management. This policy is followed by almost all states.

CLARIFICATION OF AMENDMENT OF MOTION:

Ken Humphreys suggested two amendments: that a section be added requiring that any contract negotiated must meet federal merit principle standards, and that a savings clause be added, saying that if the contract does not comply with those standards, then the parties will renegotiate to provide for compliance.

General Policy Statement. There should be a policy statement identifying those topics which are essential to a merit system and which must be covered by all contracts. The list would include promotion, selection of the most qualified, career ladders, employee development potential, an agreed guiding principle on classification, and like pay for like work. Section 1 of the Model Public Personnel Administration Law is an example:

> The general purpose of this act is to establish a system of personnel administration that meets the social, economic and program needs of the people of the state. This system shall provide means to recruit, select, develop and maintain an effective and responsive work force, and shall include policies and procedures for employee hiring and advancement, training and career development, job classification, salary administration, retirement, fringe benefits, discipline, discharge and other related activities. All appointments and promotions in the state service shall be made without regard to sex, race, religion or political affiliation, and shall be based on merit and fitness.

Legislative Concern. The legislature is concerned about how the merit system and collective bargaining intertwine. The Commission should explain the two systems in its report as well as why it is important to retain each of them.

Exempt and Partially Exempt Employees. Janet Bradley expressed her personal concern that partially exempt employees have none of the benefits or protections of permanent employees, even though many of those placed in that category are not holding jobs appropriately considered political. The Categories of Employees Subcommittee should consider this issue.

VOTE ON SUBCOMMITTEE MOTION: The motion was adopted, eight (8) members of the subcommittee voting in favor, and one (1) opposed.

Issue 3. Method of adopting Personnel Rules and departmental standard operating procedures. (Discussion of this topic was postponed until the report of the group examining departmental standard operating procedures is prepared.)

Issue 4. Membership of the Alaska State Labor Relations Agency, the Personnel Board and the Retirement Board.

Issue 5. Scope of authority of the Labor Relations Agency and the Personnel Board.

These issues were combined for purposes of discussion. The subcommittee requested that Ken Humphreys research two bills introduced in previous sessions concerning the Labor Relations Agency. The subcommittee will discuss these issues in a later meeting.

Issue 6. Inclusion of non-certified school district employees under the Public Employment Relations Act.

A bill was introduced last session to include non-certified school district employees within the Public Employment Relations Act. It passed the House, but not the Senate.

Dwayne Carlson, the lobbyist for the AFL-CIO has indicated that passage of legislation in this area is priority number 2 of the AFL-CIO this session. Ken Humphreys will research the past bills in this area, and the subcommittee will then consider this issue.

Issue 7. Inequity of wages between union members and non-union state employees. This issue is incorrectly stated in the Issue Summary. It should read inequity of wages between members of two different unions.

The subcommittee decided to table this issue.

Issue 8. Due process rights for temporary employees.

This issue is within the scope of the Categories of Employees Subcommittee. The Merit System/Collective Bargaining Subcommittee decided to leave the topic for their consideration.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION HEARING
January 27, 1979

MINUTES

Don Fisher, Vice Chairman, called the meeting to order and invited public testimony.

PUBLIC TESTIMONY

Daniel DeNardo, a Revenue Auditor with the Anchorage Office of the Department of Revenue, read a prepared statement regarding violations of state Personnel Rules. (Attached is a copy of Mr. DeNardo's statement with supporting documentation.)

Don Fisher suggested that the situation presented by Mr. DeNardo warranted further review by the Ombudsman's Office. Ken Spray suggested that because of the legal implications, Mr. DeNardo should bring the matter to the District Attorney's attention.

Ann Lacey, an employee of eight years with the Alaska Transportation Commission, presented problems she has experienced after being placed in a word processing center. Since 1974, Ms. Lacey had been a Secretary I at salary range 10. She has recently been placed in a word processing center, which is the equivalent of a typing pool. Employees in the center are graded on the type of work being done on a minute-by-minute basis. The supervisors assign work to each typist, and points vary for different types of assignments. This leaves the supervisor with substantial control over how many points an employee can obtain. Ms. Lacey pointed out that the work could be compared to that of a Clerk Typist. She started working 11 years ago as a Clerk Stenographer III, and feels that by being placed in the word processing center, her position has been downgraded.

Ms. Lacey stated that though she is on several registers, she has never been offered an interview for a position. She was on the register for the position of Word Processing Supervisor, but another applicant from the same range and classification was appointed. Ms. Lacey stated that the individual hired was informed of the expected vacancy and given an opportunity to take courses relating to the postion. The individual was thus able to get on a promotional list for the position, even though possessing less time and experience with the state.

Darlene Howard explained that classifications at the clerical level have recently been altered to Correspondence Secretary and Administrative Technician levels to accomodate the word processing system. With the assistance of IBM, a matrix of positions was developed. Values were given to various forms of typing on piece-rate basis for work flow and count factors. Grounds for promotion and demotion are based on the points a typist earns, which are figured by multiplying the time spent in typing a particular item by the difficulty factor assigned to that type of work. A supervisor can therefore control the points available to each typist, by the assignment of high or low-value work. As the use of word processing centers expands, morale problems may develop.

The state justifies shifting to a word processing system by pointing out that with such a system, specialized equipment can be used, typing time can be expedited and greater accuracy can be provided. However, only one specialized unit is in use in the Juneau center. All of the other centers are supplied with Mag Card II's, which are commonly used in all state offices. Despite this lack of specialized units, salary ranges of word processing employees are not comparable to those of clerical and secretarial employees using the same equipment.

Questions arise in regard to career ladders for word processing employees. They are no longer exposed to the day-to-day management of the programs for which they type, and therefore have less opportunity to learn the operation of those programs. Thus, they are less likely to be able to advance beyond the secretarial/clerical level.

Pat Hunt explained that the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations has been closely involved in the development of the word processing centers. The idea originates as a management decision, and the Division is responsible for the reclassification of the positions affected.

Pat Murphy asked how eligibility lists are used in hiring for word processing centers: Are applicants competing on registers for word processing center classifications or are they being transferred? Pat Hunt gave an example of seven positions taken out of the Division of Personnel's budget and placed in the word processing center. Pat Murphy commented that the system is in the process of being implemented within other departments. He believes this will affect employees state-wide.

Niel Thomas suggested that the Commission request information from John Mitchell, Word Processing Specialist with the Department of Administration. Don Fisher added that he would be interested in knowing how the supervisor Ms. Lacey referred to was selected.

Fred Jones, Director of the Department of Employee Relations for the Municipality of Anchorage, testified on the structure of the Department of Employee Relations at the request of the Commission.

Prior to the creation of the department, the Municipality of Anchorage had a division of personnel, but did not employ staff for its labor relation's activity. The Municipality contracted with private attorneys to handle its labor negotiations and grievance proceedings.

In June of 1977, the Mayor formed the Department of Employee Relations, consisting of the personnel division and adding a labor relations staff. Each of the major divisions report directly to Mr. Jones. He listed the divisions as: recruitment, examination, compensation, records, benefits, training, plans and programs (which is headed by the former personnel director) and labor relations. The Municipality has found that this system offers flexibility while maintaining control. The personnel functions and labor relations are combined because of the close relationship of the issues for which they are responsible. He indicated that 87% of the employees of the Municipality are covered by collective bargaining agreements. Mr. Jones, as head of the department, reports directly to the Mayor. This structure is similar to that of those organizations for which he has worked in priviate industry. This direct line to the chief executive is especially critical in the labor relations area.

Pat Hunt asked if the Municipality has a personnel ordinance. Mr. Jones replied that there is a labor relations ordinance that covers all aspects of labor relations as well as creating an Employee Relations Board. The Municipality chose to adopt its own system rather than be covered by the state's system.

The Employee Relations Board has functions similar to the National Labor Relations Board. Representative Buchholdt questioned what had been gained by opting out the the state system and adopting the present ordinance. Mr. Jones responded that matters can be handled more expeditiously with the Municipality's own system. Department heads are informed of the structure of the Employee Relations Department through a manual prepared on the subject. An Employee Relations manual is also being prepared.

The Municipality is obligated to provide for a merit system by statute. Personnel rules are in the form of an ordinance. Prior to the creation of the new department, the Municipality had various regulations.

Pat Hunt asked whether user departments have personnel officers. Mr. Jones replied negatively. The personnel division and department heads interface, and if a problem in personnel arises, it is brought to the attention of the division head. Niel Thomas explained that the Commission is considering the decentralization of unique job classes and asked for Mr. Jones' thoughts on the subject. Mr. Jones stated that this might lead to problems in proper control and that he is a believer in centralized authority for consistency in personnel and labor rela-

Mr. Thomas asked if the Department of Employee Relations has a defined audit function. Mr. Jones stated that the Municipality has centralized headquaters to maintain the consistent application of personnel rules and labor contract provisions. Mr. Thomas expressed interest in where the internal equal employment opportunity function was placed. Mr. Jones responded that it is located in a separate department. There is question as to where the function should be placed. He believes that it should be within personnel and labor relations, but it may be placed in the legal department.

Representative McKinnon asked what the application process is. Mr. Jones explained that there is a regular screening and examination process depending on types of positions. Police and Fire Department applicants are subject to sophisticated testing programs. For other positions, the personnel division screens and matches qualifications of applicants with job specification requests. An eligibility list is then created. This list is referred to departments or divisions for interviewing and hiring. Representative McKinnon asked how long it takes for an applicant to be rated and placed on the list. Mr. Jones said that this would depend on the number of applications received for the position. A vacant position must be posted internally for seven days prior to recruiting. If there is no response from Municipality employees, an eligibility list is usually created and issued within three days. Mr. Jones emphasized that there are hiring halls covering two large organizations that supply qualified applicants within 24 hours.

In answer to Mr. Hunt's questions on the Municipality's recruitment practices, Mr. Jones indicated that most of the applicants for positions with the Municipality live in the immediate area. Very few applications are mailed to the department. When the Municipality has to look outside its immediate area to fill a position, as is the case with the present opening for a Director of Public Works, the process for filling a position takes considerably longer. Typically when an individual applies for work with the Municipality, he is interviewed by one of the well-trained examiners who evaluate the skills of the applicant against criteria supplied by the departments on the job. The city does not solicit applications for positions in which it has no openings, although it does maintain active applicant files.

Mr. Spray questioned whether there were any changes made in regard to personnel plans and programs. Mr. Jones replied that procedures have been implemented that were not formerly a part of recruitment and training. As an example, the Personnel Director has created an employee handbook and is working on an employee relations manual for supervisors.

Mr. Spray requested information on arbitration caseloads. Mr. Jones responded that in 1978, there were a total of 19 cases recorded for 3,000 Municipality employees. Mr. Spray explained that Local 71 had approximately 50 to 60 arbitration cases last year, out of 1,500 members. Mr. Jones commented that the percentage seemed high.

Mr. Spray asked how Mr. Jones would prepare for negotiations on new contracts. Mr. Jones responded that the personnel division would be contacted for statistics and technical information. Otherwise, data is gathered from each user department head on possible improvements, refinements, changes, etc. The negotiating committee consists of various members: labor relations, plans and programs, compensation and classification staff.

Don Fisher asked if the Municipality uses a large number of tests for evaluating applicants. Mr. Jones stated that tests are given to typists, and police and fire department applicants only. He believes that testing should be given only to entry-level and clerical applicants. All others can be evaluated by performing reference checks. John Pugh asked whether there is a requirement to choose from the top five applicants on eligibility lists. Mr. Jones replied that there is a maximum of five applicants on the lists sent to departments. The applicants are not ranked and the department can hire anyone on the list. Don Fisher questioned what reason would be given for rejection of an entire list. Mr. Jones answered that a position can be reannounced, in which case a new list of five applicants would be sent to the department. Reasons would have to be based on in-depth review with the specifics and unique requirements of the job taken into account.

Darlene Howard asked what type of methodology is used to determine who is best qualified and which names should be sent to departments. Mr. Jones replied that interviewers are supplied with in-depth descriptions on each position. There are minimum qualifications that each applicant must meet. Once this is determined, they are matched up with job specifications. The skill of the interviewer is the key. Subjective evaluation is used by the interviewers, and the final selection is made by the user departments.

In answer to a question from Mr. Spray, Mr. Jones explained that all appeals from employees are handled by the labor relations staff, whether or not the employee is a union member. The personnel staff may become involved to answer questions or to provide statistical help.

Ken Humphreys asked how many staff members are in the Employee Relations Department to handle 3,00 employees and how many applications are processed each year. Mr. Jones stated that there are 22 staff members, and approximately 5,000 applications are processed annually.

Darlene Howard asked whether an individual who is not selected as one of the top five for a position can appeal. Mr. Jones replied that any appeal would be made directly to him and that there would be many recourse actions available.

Niel Thomas questioned how new positions are created. Mr. Jones explained that two forms are used (P1 and P2) supplying a description of the actual job functions, which are submitted to Classification and Compensation for review. Once approved, the forms are sent to the Office of Budget and Management and then on to the Mayor. The process is not limited to budget time, but is usually heavier during the beginning of the fiscal year. Mr. Jones also stated that he does not recommend the use of temporaries and cannot understand why the state's classification process takes so long.

Pat Hunt asked who would be responsible for drafting job descriptions for each position. Mr. Jones responded that this is the responsibility of the Compensation and Classification Section. Position descriptions are prepared based on input from departments (P1 and P2 forms) that is included with a supervisor's request.

Ardith Healan, a Park Technician I with the Department of Natural Resources, presented testimony regarding her experiences working in the CETA program. She explained that to become a Park Technician requires certification on a CETA eligibility list. In order to get on the CETA list, an individual must be unemployed for four months. This seems contrary to the goal of the program, which is to reduce unemployment. Ms. Healan mentioned that there is a general concern of departmental employees that $16.00 monthly union dues are being charged unfairly. Don Fisher pointed out that federally funded CETA programs are classified as temporary positions by the state.

Pat Murphy commented that CETA employees are being used to supplant permanent employees, rather than to supplement the permanent work force. There is a state register for Park Technician I's, but the department has decided not to request positions in that class, since CETA workers are available. Ms. Healan is on the state's register, the application and certification process having taken 15 weeks, yet cannot be hired in that job capacity unless as a CETA.

Ms. Healan also pointed out salary inequities. She is earning $1,128 monthly ($6.90 hourly) as a CETA Park Technician yet Park Rangers doing the same tasks are earning $10.00 hourly. Ken Spray added that at the same time, CETA employees are being told that the basis of the program is to help individuals find permanent positions. Niel Thomas stated that federal money is allocated for a certain period of time to help make applicants more competitive for permanent positions. He added that CETA's cannot receive preference over permanent employees. Mr. Spray pointed out that departments make a committment to train and retain a certain percentage of CETA's as permanent employees. Ms. Healan stated that almost everyone in her department is a CETA employee.

Lynne Woods, the Executive Director of the Alaska Commission on the Status of Women, presented testimony on pertinent sections from the Preliminary Study: The Status of Women in Alaska. (Copies may be obtained from the Human Rights Commission.) She explained that the Commission is in the process of recommending status and implementing guidelines on the roles of women and minorities in the Alaska state system. A report is to be released in April.

Representative Buchholdt commented that the draft report on the U.S. Civil Rights Commission suggests that the Blue Ribbon Commission will address the subject of equal opportunity employment and affirmative action. However, Senator Ray mentioned that the Commission will not address these topics. Don Fisher suggested that the concept of incorporating studies on EEO and affirmative action could be included in discussion of merit system principles and hiring from state registers. Niel Thomas stated that there are a variety of approaches in allowing for EEO and affirmative action hire. He cited the following as examples: (1) selective certification - giving priority consideration to minorities. (2) increasing bands of certification to encompass more applicants. Mr. Thomas suggested that one way to address the topic would be to suggest that the Certification, Classification and Recruitment Subcommittee research the options available. Mr. Thomas informed the Commission of an existing Attorney General's opinions on EEO and affirmative action hiring practices.

Ms. Woods said that she had heard of sex discrimination within the state. As an example, she mentioned hearing of women in the state working at range 16 through 20 who are responsible for the same functions as men at range 24 through 26.

Beverly McCartney, an employee with Community and Regional Affairs, testified regarding problems with CETA programs. She believes that permanent positions are filled by CETA employees because they are less expensive to the state and departments are unable to identify funding for permanent positions.

As a solution, Ms. McCartney suggested that rules be adopted to allow a department to fill a position with a CETA employee only once.

Al Carson, Deputy Director of the Division of Lands, Department of Natural Resources, presented a written statement on two areas of major concern: The state's hiring procedures and the use of temporary employees. (Attached is a copy of Mr. Carson's testimony.)

Don Fisher, in response to Mr. Carson's testimony, asked who should be responsible for deciding on the qualifications of an applicant if they are not ranked. He added that the state is required to abide by merit principles. Mr. Carson responded that presently, an applicant must be hired from the top five and justification must be supplied for not hiring within that group. Scoring the abilities of applicants does not accurately relate to job requirements. Mr. Carson added that he has worked with Ken Kareen in the Division of Personnel trying to make the system work. Mr. Carson stated that individuals in the top five are there because of longevity of service within the state and are not the type of people he wishes to hire. Don Fisher suggested that a system to develop criteria based on input from program managers would identify special job requirements and reliability of tests.

Richard LeFevere and Claude Hoffman (a Cadastral Engineer), both employees of the Department of Natural Resources, presented testimony to Commission members. Discussion revolved around registers that are classified too broadly and do not take into account special qualifications necessary for positions in the Department of Natural Resources. Mr. LeFevere suggested that program managers hire temporaries to extend the probationary period and to circumvent registers to hire individuals most qualified for particular positions.

STATE
of ALASKA

MEMORANDUM

TO: Blue Ribbon Commission on the Personnel Act
Chairman: Senator Bill Ray

DATE : 27 January, 1979

FROM: Daniel DeNardo
Revenue Auditor
Department of Revenue
Anchorage Office

SUBJECT: Violations of Personnel Rules and State Law

I would like to thenk the Blue Ribbon Commission on the Personnel Act for the opportunity of addressing them on serious violations of the State Personnel Rules that have been and are now taking place in the Department of Revenue.

My name is Daniel DeNardo and I am employed as a revenue field auditor by the Department of Revenue. I have been employed by the department since 1974 with a break in service for the period April-October 1978.

I have direct knowledge of the facts I will present and they are all documented. The Blue Ribbon Commission presents a unique opportunity that insures action will be taken to correct the grave violations that have been perpetrated. The scope of the facts presented will be confined to those people still employed by the Department of Revenue.

Case No. 1. In 1975 when the Department of Revenue was located at 509 3rd Avenue, a business license number 56874 was taken out under the name Aardvark Interiors of Alaska. The applicants were Larry Williams, Louis E. Nelson, and Mrs. Donna Crawford. All three were revenue auditors.

Mr. Nelson and Mrs. Donna Crawford are sto;; employed by the Department of Revenue in the Petroleum Revenue Division.

The purpose of the business license was to allow the principals of Aardvark to award themselves a contract for remodeling work of the audit division office at 509 3rd Ave. The remodeling was performed by Aardvark and reimbursement was granted by Gary Jenkins, Audit Director.

No prior approval by the Commissioner of Administration was granted. These actions are in violation of Rule:
13.15-Purchases of Commodities and Services
13.16-Conflicts of Interests
13.18-Penalties
13.18.1-Action to be taken by the Director
11.05.1-Dismissal for violation of Rule 13

In these violations there was complicity upon the part of management and full knowledge of the personnel rules violated.

Mr. Williams has left State employment but Mr. Nelson and Mrs. Crawford are still employed by the Department of Revenue in the Petroleum Tax Division.

Case No. 2. Mr. Louis E. Nelson and Mrs. Donna Crawford continually violated State personnel rules by leaving the State Revenue office for extended periods on unofficial business. Many times these extended periods were spent consuming alcoholic drinks at various bars .

These numerous and continual violations also included returning to the State office in an intoxicated condition both during and after business hours.

These violations have occured over an extended period of time since 1975 and still continue.

These facts were brought to the attention of the Department of Revenue at a grievance hearing in March 1978 in the Diane Painter vs. Louis Nelson case. Mr. John Messenger, Deputy Commissioner of Revenue was in attendance.

Case No. 3. Mr. Nelson was in violation of State of Alaska and Federal law by keeping a secret file on Mrs. Diane Painter. Mr. Messenger so informed Mr. Nelson at the March 1978 hearing. Mr. Nelson was given a new supervisory position in the Petroleum Revenue Division.

Case No. 4. On an audit trip to California in the summer of 1976, circumstances led to the cancellation of a scheduled audit which Mr. Nelson did not report but instead took a weeks leave before proceeding to Los Angeles for the next scheduled audit. Mr. Nelson applied for and received perdiem and never submitted a leave slip.

This is a violation of the fraud Statutes and Personnel Rules.

Case No. 5. Gross violations by revenue auditors and management in the fraudulent misuse of travel funds have come to my attention. Because of the location of the records in Juneau, I do not have access to them. I would be willing to sit with the Commission and share what I know.

The grave abuses and violations I have presented are known to the management of the Department of Revenue in particular Mr. Gary Jenkins-Director of Audit, Mr. Thomas Williams-Director of Petroleum Revenue, Mr. Mike McCormick-Director of Enforcement, and Mr. John Messenger-Deputy Commissioner.

It should be reprehensible to the citizens of Alaska that an agency given the responsibility of enforcing law should be operating on another set of principles.

With the sensitivity of the whole subject of taxes, our Alaskan citizens deserve principled, unbiased, and lawful service from those hired to serve them.

The few because of their position have put the Department of Revenue in an untenable position of enforcing the law while those in command ignore and violate the law.

Attached are memos.

STATE of ALASKA

MEMORANDUM

TO: Daniel DeNardo
Revenue Field Auditor I
Petroleum Revenue Division

DATE : January 22, 1979

FROM: Thomas K. Williams TKW
Director
Petroleum Revenue Division

SUBJECT: Your Request for a Meeting about Personnel Rules Violations

Your memorandum of January 19th presents allegations of serious misconduct on the part of someone in this division. However, you do not indicate who the alleged miscreant is, nor do you indicate the nature of the conduct which you assert to have been in violation of the State's personnel rules. Thus, while I do not wish you to underestimate the gravity of my concern in this matter, yet no clear course of action presents itself for me to take because of the unspecific nature of your memorandum.

On the one hand, if the misconduct has been by someone under Lou Nelson's supervision, you should raise this matter with him as your immediate supervisor, since that is the standard procedure under both the personnel rules and prudent management. The importance of talking with Lou is even greater if Lou is the person you are referring to in your memorandum. Communication in an employee-supervisor relationship is the most effective means of resolving differences in opinion, managerial style and other matters of personal incompatibility. If this fails and no resolution of such differences can be achieved through discussions with the supervisor, then is the better time to bring the difference to the attention of the supervisor's supervisor. For the higher echelon supervisor to perform his own tasks effectively, it is imperative that he ordinarily work through, not around, his subordinate supervisory staff.

On the other hand, if the misconduct has been by someone outside Lou's supervision, then you are correct to come immediately to me. If this is in fact the case, I would appreciate your giving me another memo, going into more specific detail about the misconduct. Then I can discuss it with you further in a meeting before deciding what course of action I should take.

Thank you for bringing the matter to my attention.

TKW

Tom Williams
Director, Petroleum Revenue

Dan DeNardo

This is a response to your memo of January 22, 1979, and our conversation in your office the morning of January 24, 1979.

The course of action subscribed to by me was a confidential meeting. You chose to ignore this request as you did my verbal request for a meeting on October 23, 1978. The October 23, 1978, request was explicitly in reference to Mr. Nelson.

Your insistence on perceiving my requests as a problem of personal incompatibility is to ignore the allegations of personnel rules violations of a serious nature. To discuss and seek amendment of the violations with the violator is not my responsibility. That responsibility is explicitly given to the Director of the division.

Your comment to me in your office on January 22, 1979, referencing "Aardvark" indicated to me that you already knew about Mr. Nelson's and Mrs. Crawford's violations of the personnel rules which were of a serious nature.

Mr. Messenger should be aware of Mr. Nelson's violation of the personnel rules with regard to an employee's privacy under Federal and State law since both Mr. Messenger and of course, Mr. Nelson, were in attendence at the hearing on that and various other violations which culminated in the total reinstatement of Diane Painter.

Discussion at the hearing also focused on Mr. Nelson's and Mrs. Crawford's unauthorized absences from their place of duty while employed as tax auditors by the Department of Revenue.

It is not a case of the violations not being known, but rather a case of the failure of appointed officials to carry out the rules and regulations in an unbiased manner.

The Department of Revenue should be above reproach if we are going to enforce our Statutes and maintain compliance of the law. As public employees, this is a large part of our responsibility to the citizens of Alaska.

DEPARTMENT OF NATURAL RESOURCES STATEMENT

TO THE BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION

ON STATE EMPLOYMENT ACT

Ladies and gentlemen of the Blue Ribbon Commission,

As a representative of the Alaska Department of Natural Resources, I appreciate this opportunity to discuss two items of critical concern to both the Commission and to the Department: state hiring procedures, and the use of temporary positions. My statement will attempt to identify some of the concerns that program managers within a line agency have, and which we feel should be taken into account in this committee's deliberations and recommendations that may be made regarding changes in State Personnel Act legislation. I will identify suggested courses of action which we think would help alleviate some of the problems that have been presented to this committee and which will still allow us to accomplish the many and varied programs that we as managers are hired to do. There are several other line program managers from the Department of Natural Resources in attendance here today who may be able to answer specific questions you may have at the end of this statement.

It is important that this Commission make recommendations which retain sufficient flexibility in the hiring system to allow the program manager to make the choice as to which person he wants to hire to do the job that he or she is responsible for. In order to accomplish this, current state hiring procedures require revisions. We recommend that the Commission consider the following changes in hiring procedures:

1. That applicants no longer be ranked on hiring registers. Applicants should meet certain minimum qualifications to get on the register, but then the program managers should be allowed to select whoever they feel best qualified for the particular vacancy's responsibilities.

2. Establish a review panel for each professional job class. The function of the panel would be to establish criteria for the job class and to hear appeals from individuals denied certification by the normal process. Individuals who are not certified as being qualified for that job class would have the ability to appeal the decision of the analyst to the review panel. The panel could consist of approximately five individuals: two representatives from the Division of Personnel, specifically the Personnel Analyst responsible for certifying eligible candidates for that job class, and the personnel supervisor responsible for that job class; two representatives either working in that job class within State government or in a similar position in the private sector; and a representative program manager who supervises people in that job class.

3. Permanent fulltime probationary personnel should be evaluated in writing on their job performance quarterly for the length of their probationary period. Quarterly evaluations will assist the program manager in determining if the new employee can perform as needed.

DEPARTMENT OF NATURAL RESOURCES STATEMENT

TO THE BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION

ON STATE EMPLOYMENT ACT

Ladies and gentlemen of the Blue Ribbon Commission,

As a representative of the Alaska Department of Natural Resources, I appreciate this opportunity to discuss two items of critical concern to both the Commission and to the Department: state hiring procedures, and the use of temporary positions. My statement will attempt to identify some of the concerns that program managers within a line agency have, and which we feel should be taken into account in this committee's deliberations and recommendations that may be made regarding changes in State Personnel Act legislation. I will identify suggested courses of action which we think would help alleviate some of the problems that have been presented to this committee and which will still allow us to accomplish the many and varied programs that we as managers are hired to do. There are several other line program managers from the Department of Natural Resources in attendance here today who may be able to answer specific questions you may have at the end of this statement.

It is important that this Commission make recommendations which retain sufficient flexibility in the hiring system to allow the program manager to make the choice as to which person he wants to hire to do the job that he or she is responsible for. In order to accomplish this, current state hiring procedures require revisions. We recommend that the Commission consider the following changes in hiring procedures:

It is my opinion that many of the problems and abuses of temporary hires stem from the current hiring procedures that many times do not allow program managers to hire the people they feel are best qualified to do the work. Therefore, by taking care of these state hiring procedures problems, we will also go a long way toward solving the problems associated with temporary hires in state government.

I have the following recommendations regarding temporaries:

1. They should be hired from the unranked registers (as described above.)

2. The State should provide full fringe benefits for temporaries.

3. A category of project temporaries should be established to be used for carrying out one-time, limited duration tasks with a maximum duration of 36 months. These positions should be used for specific tasks mandated by the legislature or the federal government.

4. Temporaries should be able to work up to a maximum of nine months.

I recognize that there have been cases of temporary hire abuse in the past. However, these abuses can be most effectively dealt with at the departmental or program manager level rather than making sweeping changes in procedures and rules because of isolated cases of abuse.

CONCLUSION

In summary, I feel that there are revisions in state hiring procedures and in the use of temporary employees that should be made to make the system more equitable to the employers, the employees, and the taxpayers of the State of Alaska. I have identified some of these recommendations in a general way in this statement, but recognize that much more work and review is needed. Since any proposed revisions of the State Personnel Act will have a profound impact on our ability to accomplish our job, I suggest that future position papers/draft proposals be circulated within state government for review and comments. Thank you for your time and attention.

Statement presented by Al Carson, Deputy Director, Division of Lands

WORK SESSION SUMMARY
CATEGORIES OF EMPLOYEES SUBCOMMITTEE
Anchorage, January 26 & 27, 1979

The following are points raised in response to an APEA proposal passed out at the meeting (copy attached):

POINTS RAISED

1. Restricting temporary employment time to 60 days would be too restrictive on departments. A more appropriate solution would be to audit departmental use of temporaries.

2. Legislative finance committees should be informed of the problems inherent in using temporaries, so that they will be willing to create additional permanent positions.

3. The Department of Health and Social Services' policy on hiring temporaries was discussed. A subcommittee will review the policy and make a presentation. Appointed to the subcommittee were John Pugh, Lynda McCurry and Ken Humphreys. In the review, the subcommittee should research the possibility of requiring that temporaries be assigned salary ranges comparable to those assigned to similar permanent classifications.

4. There was discussion of the effects of Kelly vs. Hammond: What effect will the case have on legislative authority? Can the legislature require that departments create and fill permanent rather than temporary positions? Ken Humphreys will research the question and report to the subcommittee.

5. There was discussion on problems within the CETA program. CETA employees are being used by the state as an inexpensive work force. However, under federal regulations, CETA's cannot replace permanent employees. A letter was received from Jean S. Conway dated January 8, 1978 (copy attached). Also attached is a copy of CETA regulations.

The subcommittee adjourned and reconvened on Saturday afternoon. The following are motions adopted:

MOTIONS ADOPTED

1. Pat Murphy moved that the subcommittee recommend legislation on temporaries be introduced this session. The motion was adopted: One member opposed.

2. Don Fisher moved that the subcommittee shall recommend that a maximum time limit be required on temporary employment. The motion was adopted: Two members opposed.

There was discussion on the question of whether the Commission should recommend modification of the Collective Bargaining Act. It was decided that subcommittee proposals should be presented as joint legislative resolutions to have the effect of a policy statement, except where statute amendment is clearly necessary.

3. Don Fisher moved that all temporaries shall be hired from eligibility lists (registers). The motion was adopted: One member opposed.

4. Pat Murphy moved that the number of temporaries shall be limited to 10% of the previous fiscal year's man-months worked, based on permanent classified positions within each department. The motion was adopted. Three members opposed.

Paddy Moriarty amended the motion that the number of temporaries shall be limited according to future figures, after futher research. The amendment was adopted. Three members opposed.

5. Representative McKinnon moved that the subcommittee shall adopt a resolution to support the bill sponsored by Senator Ray on retroactive retirement benefits for permanent employees for prior temporary employment. The motion was adopted. Two members opposed.

6. Pat Murphy moved that the subcommittee shall adopt a resolution to support legislation introduced in the Senate recommending health insurance benefits for all employees after 30 days in service with the State of Alaska. The motion was adopted. Two members opposed.

DISCUSSION

The subcommittee discussed requiring Division of Personnel authorization before any department could hire a temporary. Justification for hiring a temporary rather than a permanent employee would be required, as is currently required by the Department of Health and Social Services. Pat Hunt and Ken Kareen will present their evaluation of the proposal at a later subcommittee meeting.

The subcommittee work session was chaired by Representative McKinnon.

MEMO

To: Members, Blue Ribbon Commission on the Personnel Act

From: Paddy Moriarty
Deputy Ombudsman

Subject: Ombudsman position on APEA's 1/22/79 proposal

At the meeting of the Subcommittee on Categories of Employees this morning, it was requested that Subcommittee members express their agreement or disagreement with an APEA recommendation of January 22, 1979, proposing specific statutory changes.

For the record, the Ombudsman is in support of this proposal (See Mr. Flavin's January 11 memo attached). Mr. Flavin would prefer that the APEA proposal #2 read: (6) the procedure for certifying eligibles to any position in state service other than interim or emergency positions.

The specific language in APEA's proposal #3 and #4 may need some further review, but in substance and intent it has Ombudsman support. Perhaps an administrative appeal mechanism could be devised to address those few exceptions mentioned at this morning's meeting which do not fall within language in #3 or #4. It will not be possible to draft these sections to encompass each set of meritorious special circumstances.

MEMO

Date: Jan. 11, 1979

To: Interested Folks

From: Frank Flavin

Subject: Eliminating the concept of temporary employees

1) add to AS 39.25.150 (6) so it reads:

(6) the procedure for certifying eligibles ~~for~~ to any positions in the state service other then interim or emergency positions.

OR

(6) the procedure for certifying eligibles for full-time, part time, project or seasonal positions in state service.

2) Expand AS 39.25.150 (8) to read:

(8) emergency appointments to positions in the state service for a period not to exceed thirty days, made under conditions necessitating immediate action to provide for carrying on work that must be continued in the public interest. Successive emergency appointments or more than three emergency appointments for one person within one calendar year are prohibited.

3) Eliminate reference to temporary and seasonal appointments in AS 39.25.150 (9) and replace it with an interim appointment concept:

(9) interim appointments to positions in the state service for a period not to exceed sixty days, made where appropriate eligible lists are unavailable. Successive interim appointments to the same position are prohibited. No position in the state service shall be filled through ~~an~~ interim appointments for a period in excess of sixty days. Interim appointments may be made without competitive examination.

4) Repeal AS 39.25.150 (10) dealing with provisional appointments.

WORK SESSION SUMMARY
CERTIFICATION, CLASSIFICATION & RECRUITMENT SUBCOMMITTEE
Anchorage, January 26, 1979

1. There was discussion on the decentralization of responsibilities for unique job classifications to departments.

a) Staff was instructed to arrange a "walk through" showing the process for classifying a position in a chosen department, Division of Personnel and Budget and Management.

2. Three subcommittee members, Ken Humphreys, Lynda McCurry and John Pugh, will examine the Department of Labor's Standard Operating Procedures Manual and advise the subcommittee on how that department has interpreted Personnel Rules.

3. Staff was instructed to find out how difficult it would be to identify unique job classes within departments.

4. The subcommittee proposed (not by formal motion) that the Commission should recommend that topics covered by Personnel Rules be negotiable through the collective bargaining process.

The subcommittee work session was chaired by Don Fisher.

WORK SESSION SUMMARY
MERIT SYSTEM/COLLECTIVE BARGAINING SUBCOMMITTEE
Anchorage, January 26, 1979

The subcommittee discussed recommending the following to the Commission:

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. Creation of a new department composed of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations. This would ensure that the Governor would receive prompt notification on Labor Relation's activities, since there would be a Commissioner in his cabinet. The state of Wisconsin has adopted such a system. The subcommittee will consider whether to make a formal recommendation after hearing from a representative from Wisconsin at the conference on February 6.

2. Composition and duties of Labor Relations, the Personnel Board and the Retirement Board. The Labor Relations Agency has no permanent staff and relies on the Labor Relations section to provide support. Its workload is increasing, and a need for permanent staffing has been indicated. The Personnel Board meets only two or three times a year and is not very busy.

Ken Humphreys will research bills from the last two legislative sessions on the creation of a full-time Labor Relations Agency. He will also compile examples of Labor Relations Agencies in other states and in federal government.

The subcommittee work session was chaired by Don Fisher, upon the request of Representative Buchholdt, Chairperson.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
Capitol Building, Juneau
January 10, 1979

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the hearing to order and invited public testimony.

PUBLIC TESTIMONY

Ivan Lewis, Record and Archives Center Manager, presented testimony concerning problems he has experienced in having his position reclassified and his salary range upgraded. He believes that his classification should be placed in the supervisory unit, in accordance with job responsibilities. Mr. Lewis, under direction of the State Archivist, is responsible for managing the entire Center and supervising Record Handlers. Mr. Lewis' position is at the same range as that of a Records Analyst II, but he must be knowledgeable in the duties of a Records Analyst III to function on a day-to-day basis (attached is the Division of Personnel's job description for Records Center Manager and Records Handler, pertaining to Mr. Lewis' testimony).

Since 1972, Mr. Lewis has been submitting P402's to the Division of Personnel explaining the responsibilities of his position and justification for reclassification. The most recent submission was a total of eight pages, describing his supervisory functions and all other aspects of managing the center. The paperwork was approved by John M. Kinney, State Archivist, and received by the Personnel Department in July, 1978. By October, it reached Carolyn Hinkey, an employee in the Classification and Pay Section of the Division of Personnel. Mr. Lewis pointed out that Ms. Hinkey is a Registered Nurse, but because of general educational requirements, she has been classified as a Register Analyst III. Ms. Hinkey and Mr. Lewis frequently discussed the subject of his reclassification, and Ms. Hinkey eventually requested information on other comparable positions. Mr. Lewis supplied her with information on positions within other states, which were at much higher salary ranges. He also provided detailed information from Robert Martin, President of the Anchorage Records Center, in writing. Mr. Lewis' responsibilities are the equivalent of Mr. Martin's, the only exception being accounting functions which Mr. Martin handles. The state's range 21 would be the equivalent of Mr. Martin's salary.

On January 1, Mr. Lewis was informed by the Division of Personnel that he was reclassified at range 15 at longevity step "J". Mr. Lewis' response to this was discouragement. He has been in this professional position for eight years, yet is being compared to a Mail Run Supervisor. Mr. Lewis stated that Ms. Hinkey misquoted information on comparable positions, and she flatly refused to take information received into consideration. He was told that he should be satisfied with a one step increase even though his range is below that of a Central File Clerk at range 16.

Senator Ray asked Mr. Lewis how long it would take to retrieve a normal record from the center. Mr. Lewis responded that it would be done within five minutes and that he directly supervises three employees responsible for receiving, classifying controlling and storing a variety of office records. The files are organized according to needs and systems are audited regularly. All records entering the center must be inventoried daily. Mr. Lewis and two other employees are authorized to handle security files.

Mr. Lewis mentioned his concern about testifying, stating that he had testified before the legislature in 1976. Following his testimony, he submitted a P402 for a salary increase. It was recommended that his position be downgraded two steps. Commissioner Allen questioned the topic of his testimony before the legislature. Mr. Lewis responded that it was in regard to Executive Order 28, on dividing the archives and placing records under Surplus Property.

Senator Ray asked how many employees were involved in the center's operation. Mr. Lewis replied that there are four people who pull and hand deliver files. The central mail system is not used because of the records' importance. Senator Ray asked if there was an active file retention system. Mr. Lewis responded that files are kept active for six months before going into dead storage and that 2,000 searches are done every month.

Mr. Lewis stated that he had tried to bring this matter to the attention of Pat Hunt, but a Personnel Officer refused to give him permission, even if he took a day of annual leave. Pat Hunt responded that he is concerned about the testimony heard. He stated that Mr. Lewis is apparently responsible for heavy supervisory duties and that he should be compensated accordingly. He suggested that there was a discrepancy between what his functions are and how they have been recorded. Mr. Lewis informed the Commission that all the correspondence he received was signed by Mike McMullen, Chief of Classification and Pay. Mr. McMullen reports to Ken Kareen, who reports to Pat Hunt. Senator Ray commented that the problem should have been brought to Pat Hunt's attention. Pat Hunt asked if Mr. Lewis had spoken with the director of his division. Mr. Lewis stated that he was sent to the Deputy Director, who responded in a negative manner. The matter has since been turned over to APEA.

Greg O'Claray pointed out that it is not the Commission's function to become involved in grievances. Senator Ray responded that it is a concern to maintain an open door policy in all departments. Commissioner Allen concurred.

Mr. Lewis mentioned another problem regarding the elimination of a Micro Film Operator III position. It should be classified at a manager level, and upgrading of the position has been stopped in Classification and Pay. Because of a budget cut of $3,000, the center would be unable to fill the position even if it were classified at a higher range. Mr. Lewis continued, stating that the position could have been filled if the Division of Personnel had acted within six months in reclassifying to a management level. Senator Ray pointed out that if the Finance Committee doesn't hear justification for the existence of a position, it will be cut.

Commissioner Allen stated that he had heard a different version of the story: The Micro Film Operator position was advertised, without any response. Mr. Lewis stated that there had been a response and that if the specifications had been completed for the management reclassificatuon, the applicant would have qualified. There are three individuals employed by the state as Micro Film Operator III's who would seek a management position in that field. This ended Mr. Lewis' testimony.

Bruce Kindred, a temporary employee with the state, suggested that the Commission should recommend that court leave be made available to temporaries. The Personnel Rules state that temporary employees hired for periods of less than 12 consecutive months are not eligible to receive compensation for time spent on jury duty. Section 4 of Article 29 of the APEA contract provides that employees who are called to serve as jurors or subpoenaed as witnesses shall be entitled to court leave. The contract defines the word "employee" as a person in state service who is paid a salary or wage and holds probationary, permanent, or provisional status. The Division of Labor Relations has refused to interpret the definition to include temporaries.

Mr. Kindred pointed out that after being on active jury duty for one week, he lost a sizeable portion of his salary, even though minimally compensated by the court system. He feels that serving on a jury is a civic responsibility and that temporaries should not be treated differently from permanent employees.

Senator Ray suggested that the Commission should recommend that this section of the law be changed. Niel Thomas responded that this might also be applied to military leave for reserve members. Senator Ray pointed out that one chooses to enter the reserves. The question was referred to the Category of Employees Subcommittee.

Don Kinderis, an Alaskan resident, presented his problems in trying to obtain work with the state for over two years. Prior to his relocation to Juneau, he owned a business in mechanical systems balance for commercial enterprises. This work involved knowledge of building mechanics and engineering.

Mr. Kinderis has been on 28 registers during the past two years and is number one on several. He has never had an interview. On many occasions, he has received notification of interviews two or three days after the date of the interview. In some instances, classifications that he has been registered for have been eliminated.

Pat Hunt stated that vacant positions should be sought out by individuals. Often, applicants are unemployed for so long that they are extremely agressive in presenting themselves to prospective employers. He suggested that Mr. Kinderis let the departmental personnel offices know of his availability. He emphasized that the Division is responsible only for sending out registers, and that Mr. Kinderis should find out who is looking for employees by stopping by the Division to look at the lists of vacant positions.

Mr. Kinderis mentioned that he knows many people in the design management and energy conservation fields working for the state. He is listed as number 8 out of 24 applicants on the register for Design Manager I, but there are no others in the state with his level of expertise in mechanical systems balance. He is aware of Building Manager Specialist I, II and III positions that have been open in the state, but he has never been notified or interviewed.

Commissioner Allen asked Mr. Kinderis if he knew whom to speak with in the appropriate divisions where the openings had occurred. Mr. Kinderis responded that he knew of one in the Division of Public Works or Buildings. After going to the Division of Personnel and presenting his problems, he never received a response or the service he expected. He has even been sent to the wrong locations at times. Frank Flavin stated that he has seen this type of problem while working in the Ombudsman's Office. It happens because departments are not required to interview each applicant within the top five on a register. Ken Spray noted that because Mr. Kinderis had been on the top five of numerous registers for some time, program managers are probably avoiding any contact with him, believing that he has been judged an undesirable employee.

Pat Murphy stated that an applicant should not have to be an aggressive job seeker to find a position. That would be losing track of the entire register concept. He believes that each of the top five applicants should have the chance to be interviewed. A prospective employer can get a much better perspective of an applicant through a personal interview.

John Pugh interjected that the Department of Health and Social Services is interviewing applicants on the registers in chronological progression, starting with number one. The interviewing process continues until an applicant is hired. He believes that this should be a state requirement.

Niel Thomas questioned Mr. Kinderis on the times he had received notification of interviews too late to be able to attend: Could the delays be attributed to RCA or the postal system? Lynda McCurry responded, stating that there are serious delays in deliveries made by both. Mr. Thomas suggested that either calling applicants or giving them more time to respond would solve the problem.

Frank Flavin pointed out that program managers have previously testified that registers are not valuable because individuals have been on registers for long periods of time and are therefore not qualified for positions. Mr. Kinderis has presented another side of the situation. Senator Ray stated that someone is needed within the Division of Personnel to follow through on service to applicants. Commissioner Allen supported the concept that all five applicants should be offered interviews and that sufficient time should be given for response to notification of interviews. The departments should not rely on RCA or the postal system.

Frank Flavin added that these matters could be handled much faster if the Department of Administration had a grievance person or trouble-shooter. Not all employees or applicants are aware of the concept of the Ombudsman's Office.

Ken Spray brought up the subject of the state paying travel expenses for initial interviewing of applicants. He related examples of non-residents being brought to Alaska at the state's expense to fill high-level positions. John Pugh suggested that one way to avoid travel expenses would be to use outside locations: There is a need to encourage departments to hold interviews state-wide. One particular complaint is that Anchorage residents are never considered for positions in Juneau.

Niel Thomas suggested that telephone interviews could be a solution, especially for rural residents and where there are no staff members to handle interviews in isolated locations. This would eliminate paying for transportation until an initial screening process had been completed.

Ken Spray responded that, because of Local 71's experiences, he believes initial telephone interviews to be an exercise in futility. John Pugh stated that an individual has the right to be interviewed at least by phone.

Senator Ray commented on the tendency to believe that the Division of Personnel is the "bad guy", responsible for the system's problems. The Division's functions are entirely different from what is generally understood by the public.

Frank Flavin stated that when departments avoid filling vacancies, the Ombudsman's Office receives complaints from applicants not being interviewed. If there was a requirement to interview the top five, the Office would lose this indicator. Commissioner Allen responded that an applicant would be able to distinguuish the difference between a cursory and a meaningful interview. Pat Murphy suggested that a written record of interviews be maintained consisting of general comments and reason for not hiring. Senator Ray concurred that some type of procedure would have to be implemented to justify not hiring. Commissioner Allen commented that the summaries would be the subjective opinions of each interviewer and that putting this information on the register or within the applicant's personnel file would be unfair to the applicant.

Mr. Kinderis suggested that mandatory interviewing of the top five with a short evaluation given to the person being interviewed as a possibility. There would then be an understanding reached when the applicant is not hired.

Commissioner Allen suggested that frequently, when a name is on a register for long periods of time, an interviewer's attitude toward that applicant may be negative before an interview actually takes place. This may have been Mr. Kinderis' problem in finding employment.

Niel Thomas discussed the possibility of supplying a written explanation for not hiring, which would be available to the applicant upon request. This could be based solely on job requirements and an applicant's qualifications. It would do away with paperwork and complaints.

Ken Spray indicated that with Local 71's preferential hiring system, the union contract specifies that the employer must present justification to both the union and the applicant for not hiring. This justification points out an applicant's strengths and weaknesses for future reference. Mr. Spray elaborated that the public looks upon the Division of Personnel as a service-oriented agency. However, the initial concern of the Division is to provide management with positions.

Frank Flavin stated that when discrepancies or problems are brought to the Division's attention, they respond well. The audit and grievance role has not been emphasized and some type of monitoring system should be initiated. Senator Ray concurred that someone should be placed within the Division to monitor the operational procedures to see that people and registers are treated fairly.

Pat Murphy suggested that the audit function be assigned to an outside group, thus ensuring compliance with set guidelines. Commissioner Allen stated that he would like to be in a position to receive complaints within the Department before they are brought to the attention of other agencies.

John Pugh expressed his belief that the audit and grievance functions are very important within private businesses and are treated accordingly. He recommended the creation of a proper audition role. Pat Hunt stated that people represented by unions have adequate means of representation. Senator Ray disagreed, stating that representation is only adequate after a complaint has been filed.

Pat Murphy asserted that APEA cannot, at this time, provide representation until a complaint is filed with them. Senator Ray agreed that action can only be taken after the fact by these agencies. Therefore, an active monitoring system is needed. Ken Spray pointed out that the option of filing grievances and going into binding arbitration is open to employees. He added that Local 71 has represented individuals neither employed by the state nor members of that union. Some are reluctant to pursue grievances. Niel Thomas suggested that case-by-case review of past grievances could possibly identify a number of problem areas, which would be helpful in devising recommendations.

Commissioner Allen commented that the discussion had not focused on a solution. He asked if requiring all top five eligibles be interviewed was something the Commission would like to implement. Senator Ray responded that specific recommendations be drafted and prepared for presentation at the next meeting in Anchorage. Commissioner Allen agreed to consider implementing a pilot program requiring interviews for all top five applicants on registers.

Jim Donner, a temporary Correctional Officer at the Lemon Creek facility, testified regarding his reactions to the state's hiring system. He finds that there are insufficient opportunities for temporaries to fill permanent positions. The time it takes to be tested and to have an application processed is a deterrent to applying for permanent positions. Mr. Donner, after working as a temporary in many departments, is an advocate of Local 71's preferential hiring system.

On one occasion, Mr. Donner was hired in an emergency situation, worked for two weeks and was then hired as a temporary. One month later, he was informed that he owed the state money because he had been overpaid. The money he was offered initially was an inaccurate figure, and he was forced to pay the difference back.

Mr. Donner has been a temporary at the Lemon Creek Facility three times in the past, as a Correctional Officer and as a Chief Steward. Each time, he has been paid at an entry-level range 13, while others in the same permanent positions were at much higher ranges.

Mr. Donner believes that Division of Personnel's tests are discriminatory and do not relate to actual job requirements. Too much emphasis is placed on educational requirements and vocabulary testing. He stated that tests should be based on job descriptions and the actual duties to be performed in each class.

Senator Ray asked if the educational requirements are too high, or if there is too much emphasis placed on requirements rather than experience. Mr. Donner responded that enty-level requirements and credit for experience are fine. Sometimes, credit is not given for experience in particular positions. Pat Hunt explained that the Division of Personnel has created many substitutions for requiremerts and that the Division develops tests from descriptions supplied by departments. Lynda McCurry added that personnel officers have direct input into the makeup of examinations. Mr. Donner expressed his concern that educational requirements are particularly rigid for women and that the entire application and evaluation process is time consuming. Applicants are not given sufficient time to respond to notification of available positions and registers are circumvented continually.

Senator Ray asked if there is some type of pool of permanent employees within the state to fill in when the need arises. This would be particularly useful in supplying an employer with someone while in the process of filling a permanent position.

Dan Haynes, an employee with the state for ten years, testified concerning his recent termination for insubordination. He explained that there was a personality conflict with his supervisor and that he was not recommended for rehire on his evaluation. As a result, he must work for six months as a temporary or in the private sector before he is eligible for testing and placement on registers. Mr. Haynes pointed out that if he were able to work for another six years, he would be able to retire.

Senator Ray asked if a supervisor has the authority to recommend on a termination evaluation that an employee not be rehired. Ken Spray replied that it is possible. Niel Thomas questioned if this meant that the individual's name would be removed from all registers. Senator Ray asked if the decision could be appealed. Pat Hunt replied that it is grievable and that most often, a terminated employee will not be recommended for rehire for a certain period of time. Commissioner Allen asked why, if Mr. Haynes had been terminated in June, he could not be placed on the registers again, since the time limit had expired. Mr. Haynes responded that he is not eligible because the rule requires that an individual be employed for six months before being considered for rehire.

Senator Ray pointed out that not recommending rehire within the same department would be reasonable, but on a state-wide scope it isn't. Mr. Haynes said that his union did take the matter to the Commissioner's level and then recommended no further action. Ken Spray stated that Local 71 has, in some instances, negotiated "not recommended for rehire" into "voluntary termination". However, clear-cut insubordination is a different story.

Senator Ray expressed concern that one supervisor can stipulate that an employee not be rehired statewide for a certain amount of time. Commissioner Allen agreed that this option should not be used lightly, but said that it seems inconsistent for the state to be able to rehire immediately as a temporary.

Senator Ray suggested that cause for termination should be clearly documented. Frank Flavin stated that he could see no reason for removing an individual from the registers, but did see the need to explain the termination. Niel Thomas pointed out that in state service, everyone has the right to see their written performance evaluations. Ken Spray added that an employee has the right to a rebuttal of any evaluation which is to be included in a permanent employee file. Senator Ray suggested that employee evaluations be reviewed at interviews. He asked if record files follow an employee from job to job. Pat Hunt responded that the Division of Personnel has master files which are maintained for the duration of employment with the state. Departments maintain personnel files for a period of six months, after which they are sent to the Archives Center for storage. Commissioner Allen stated that many employees wish to see evaluations on past performance and that they can be pulled from Division of Personnel's files for review.

Don Kinderis testified again. Three years ago, he worked for the Department of Fish and Game. After ten weeks, he was informend that there was insufficient work to keep him on, and he was dismissed. Two years later, he received a copy of his evaluation, which he had requested many times. The evaluation, dated the day he left, stated that he had too many personal problems to be a state employee and did not address the quality of his work. Mr. Kinderis believes that this information is on his record and is one reason that he has been unable to find a job. Mr. Kinderis explained that his supervisor disliked the fact that he had his own methods of performing his duties, despite the proficiency he displayed. Mr. Kinderis had not seen the evaluation before it was mailed to him, had never signed it and was offered no reason for why it was not discussed at the time of his dismissal.

Senator Ray suggested that this would be a good reason for considering a trouble-shooter or auditor within the Division of Personnel to look into these matters. Don Fisher stated that an evaluation should be made available before an employee leaves a position as well as a statement of the reason for dismissal. Commissioner Allen requested that Mr. Kinderis see Ken Kareen to discuss the discrepancies between his evaluation and the reasons he was given for dismissal.

COMMITTEE BUSINESS

NCSL Conference

Don Fisher brought up the subject of an honorarium for Dr. Couturier. Frank Flavin made a motion that the Commission approve the honorarium in the amount of $500.00. Don Fisher added that Dr. Couturier might come for less. The motion was adopted for an honorarium in the amount of $500.00. Senator Ray and Greg O'Claray opposed. Pat Hunt asked why Wisconsin and Minnesota speakers were chosen to present their state personnel procedures. Don Fisher explained that the two states had recently revised their personnel structures and can offer innovative alternatives for the Commission's consideration.

USCSC Meeting in Washington:

Terry Cramer advised the Commission that there will be a meeting of the USCSC in Washington. NCSL is a co-sponsor and would like to invite three Commission members to attend. Senator Ray appointed himself, Greg O'Claray and Pat Murphy to represent the Commission. Niel Thomas also expressed a desire to attend the meeting at his own expense.

Commission Expenses:

Senator Ray stated that he wishes to be advised of anticipated unusual travel expenditures for Commission members (i. e. car rentals). The Chair or the full Commission must approve those expenditures prior to incurring them.

Subcommittee Reports:

John Pugh recommended that the subcommittees prepare reports to use in drafting the Commission's report to the legislature. The Commission agreed to hold a work session in Anchorage on January 26 for individual subcommittees to prepare recommendations. Senator Ray directed the staff to use the postal service directly to send out summaries and material needed for the next meeting to members in Anchorage.

Niel Thomas asked whether the Commission will request continuation. Senator Ray pointed out that the work of the Commission is in its formative stages, and the Commission should justify its existence by presenting an initial report to the legislature.

Kit Stewart, a Finance Officer with the Department of Environmental Conservation, expressed her satisfaction with the state's hiring procedures. One problem that she has encountered is that an employee within the department has a criminal record, which was not revealed in the individual's application.

Senator Ray responded, stating that this is a very sensitive matter. Information on criminal convictions is confidential. Pat Hunt explained that applicants' criminal records are checked when applying for positions in Public Safety or correctional facilities. Greg O'Claray stated that he could not see why it was imprortant that Ms. Stewart nave this information. Having to reveal a criminal record could lead to discrimination against the applicant. Ms. Stewart replied that the issue that concerned her was that the applicant had falsified the application form. Ms. Stewart added that, at present, it is impossible to verify whether the employee is misrepresenting facts on an application. Senator Ray questioned the relevance of this in regard to the employee's performance.

Ron McMahon, an Ecologist with the Department of Environmental Conservation, stated that job classifications assigned by the state do not relate to actual job functions. Existing classifications cover many specialized jobs in different departments. Mr. McMahon suggested that the Division of Personnel consider reclassification studies. He is presently coordinating a project review, which has nothing to do directly with Ecologists, and feels that his title should be Program Coordinator. The Division of Personnel had received the position description and said that the closest classification would be Ecologist.

Niel Thomas asked if Mr. McMahon had read the class specifications on what his duties consist of. He also questioned whether a department hiring from that register would be looking for an Ecologist. Mr. McMahon answered that he is not doing the work of an Ecologist, but must be familiar with the field.

Senator Ray commented that possibly the department is afraid to reclassify existing positions because that might result in positions being placed at lower salary ranges.

Mr. McMahon also brought up the subject of entry-level positions for Chemists. In order to qualify for a Chemist I position, an applicant must have one year of experience. There is no Chemist Trainee classification in the state.

Pat Hunt asked whether the departments would request Chemist Trainees if the class were created. Mr. McMahon stated that it would be filled, providing a career ladder for laboratory techinicians. Ken Kareen explained that the Chemist series has been examined by the Division of Personnel, and departments stated that they need experienced applicants rather than trainees.

Niel Thomas expressed the Human Rights Commission's perspective in relation to equal employment opportunity. The state should compete with private firms for recent college graduates. The lack of trainee positions is one reason why EEO practices in the state are inadequate. To compete with private firms, Mr. Thomas suggests creating a Chemist Trainee class to provide greater opportunities for women and members of minority groups.

Senator Ray pointed out that trainee positions are looked upon adversely by Budget and Management: Why train on-the-job when applicants have received training in school? Niel Thomas responded that in higher-level positions, orientation can take up to a year, even for new employees with prior experience in the field.

Pat Hunt stated that no department has requested a Chemist Trainee position, and that it would be pointless to create a classification without justification. Mr. McMahon responded that he was not the first person to make the suggestion and that a position of this type would be used in his department. Similar fields do have entry-level starting points. Senator Ray observed that one of the easiest solutions would be to rewrite minimum qualifications to allow recent graduates an opportunity to apply. The topic was referred to the Certification, Classification and Recruitment Subcommittee for review.

CORRESPONDENCE RECEIVED

Terry Cramer presented the following summaries on correspondence received:

Mrs. James L. Sumner wrote to the Commission regarding her belief, as a foster parent, that Social Workers should be considered professionals in that field. To maintain the quality of workers, Mrs. Sumner suggests that either educational requirements be increased or training after hire be closely supervised.

A concerned taxpayer wrote in regard to examinations for semi-professional positions. Examinations were described as outmoded, inaccurate, laborious and invalid, as well as not being pertinent to the actual jobs or selection of candidates. Also mentioned was the time it takes to schedule testing in Anchorage (weeks), which is held in a room with inadequate ventilation. The attitude of Anchorage employees in the personnel office was described as "very rude". The individual concluded the letter by stating that it is hoped that the Commission's investigation will result in procedures to teach these people to act as a service organization.

Marilyn Martin attached to her correspondence a copy of a letter to Governor Hammond pertaining to citizen evaluations of Commissioners. She referred to problems experienced when her position as Wage/Hour Investigator in the Resident Hire program was eliminated. Ms. Martin was assured that she would be transferred to another Department of Labor position if the U.S. Supreme Court ruled the Resident Hire Law unconstitutional. She knew of vacancies in unemployment fraud investigator classification and was on the register for Claims Investigator I. Two positions in Anchorage and Juneau were filled by other state employee transfers. A position in Fairbanks was filled by someone who may not have been a state employee. Ms. Martin was not contacted about any of these positions. She is now unemployed and questions the ethics of the situation and the follow-through of Commissioner Orbeck's policies by the Department of Labor's staff.

A copy of a memo to Jay Hammond, Governor, was received by the staff in reference to the Anchorage Field Office of the Division of Personnel. The staff was described as being rude and condescending. The author suggested that if the Commissioner insisted on courtesy, these rotten attitudes would not have existed for the past several years.

Ms. Irene Price elaborated on her testimony before the Commission on December 1. She emphasized that she spoke only on her own behalf. Ms. Price indicated that she believes communication to be a problem between the Division of Personnel and other state agencies, particularly in the following situations:

1. Initiation of tests for a given job classification without the knowledge of the affected unit.

2. Reclassification of positions without communication with the incumbent.

Dan Crevensten wrote in support of an increase in the use of part-time positions. He identified advantages for the state:

1. The use of temporary positions would be reduced.

2. There would be a better match between available positions and the amount of work.

3. Studies have shown that part-time employees have greater productivity and less absenteeism.

4. Equal employment goals could be easier to meet.

In his experience, Mr. Crevensten felt that state agencies should take into consideration part-time work. By the time an applicant interviews with a supervisor, it is too late to implement such a program.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
Categories of Employees Subcommittee
Anchorage Legislative Information Office
January 4, 1979

MINUTES

The Categories of Employees Subcommittee hearing was called to order by Representative McKinnon. Public testimony was invited.

PUBLIC TESTIMONY

Jim Thiele, a temporary employee with the Department of Fish and Game, presented his views on the six-month limitation of temporary employment as specified in the new APEA union contract. Mr. Thiele explained that it is not economically feasible to live the whole year on six-month's salary. He feels that his position could be classified as a permenent seasonal category since it is recurrent. The new limitation on temporaries in the APEA contract denies individuals the right to return to employment within a department for a period of six months after termination from that department. The explanation provided Mr. Thiele on why the Department of Fish and Game did not reclassify his position to permanent seasonal was that each PCN number must be approved by the legislature. He does not believe temporary employees consider receiving fringe benefits as necessary as having opportunities for employment available.

Mr. Thiele is on a number of registers, but has never been hired from one. After being tested for a Fisheries Biologist I position, he worked as temporary in that classification for two years. When he took a reexamination, he received a lower score despite his additional two years of experience. Another inequity in the testing process was highlighted when Mr. Thiele took two tests, Game Biologist I and II, and scored much higher on the more difficult test for Game Biologist II. Mr. Thiele, in answer to Frank Flavin's question on whether he would prefer to become a full-time employee, stated that he preferred to have the flexibility available to temporaries.

Pam Rogers, a permanent employee with the Planning and Research Division of the Department of Natural Resources, expressed her concerns regarding the lack of opportunities available to temporaries to fill permanent positions. Temporaries working within the department are not considered for employment in newly classified permanent positions because many are not within the top five on registers, even though they have experience in working in the department. Ms. Rogers believes that time spent in temporary positions should be counted towards the probationary period for permanent postions.

On the topic of registers within the state, Ms. Rogers stated that supervisors are circumventing the eligible lists to hire temporaries. Upon initial hire in temporary positions, individuals are being promised permanent positions as soon as funding is approved and PCN's are created. These temporaries are hired at salary ranges that are inconsistent with their level of skill. People already employed by a department are given preference over others on registers in hiring.

Pat Kirschner, an employee with the Planning and Classification Section of the Department of Natural Resources, asked committee members if, after the six-month temporary has ended, whether an employee can work for another state department as a temporary. She had heard many conflicting rumors. Niel Thomas answered that you can be employed by the state again within another department. Representative McKinnon believed that was part of the new contract provisions. He stated that in the past, a temporary could go from one position to another within the department after the period had expired. Ms. Kirschner expressed her desire to continue working in a section where she is familiar with the work for more than six months.

Ms. Kirschner sees the move to severely limit the temporary employment period, or to do away with it altogether, as being undesirable. Even if additional permanent positions were created, her department would still have to use temporaries on various projects that are not recurrent but do last longer than six months. Representative McKinnon agreed that there is a valid need within the Department of Natural Resources for temporaries because of the fluctuating time periods of projects. The duration of these projects is dependent upon the time needed for completion and the funding available. As an alternative to temporary employment without benefits, Ms. Kirschner suggests that promotions and merit increases be available to temporary employees based on performance and longevity of the individual's employment on the project. Niel Thomas commented that a "project" category would also be valuable to employees within the Department of Fish and Game.

Ms. Kirschner concluded by stating that she prefers a nine-month period for temporaries, because the individuals could at least survive economically on that basis. The six-month period presents economic problems for specialists who are limited by their expertise in a particular position in only one department.

Jim Curatolo, a temporary employee with the Department of Fish and Game, presented his belief that temporaries are being taken advantage of more than ever because of restrictions imposed by the new union contract. He stated that many temporaries work in that capacity because they find it preferable to work only nine months a year, gaining experience and skills that would otherwise be unavailable to them.

Mr. Curatolo believes that salary ranges for temporaries are much lower than those of permanent employees, regardless of skills and qualifications. Temporaries can provide for their own benefits and retirement if they are compensated with higher salaries.

As previous witnesses testified, Mr. Curatolo would like to continue working on his present project for an extended amount of time. He is aware of another project that will be available after his six months has ended, but because it is within the same department, he will not be eligible. The project he is working on is federally subsidized with OCS funding. Niel Thomas asked how Mr. Curatolo's position would be classified if he were working as a permanent employee. Mr. Curatolo explained that his is a Biologist II position, but that he is being paid at a Biologist I level. Representative McKinnon asked whether the proposal for the project could have included provision for a permanent position which would terminate at the end of the project.

Mr. Curatolo said that he would rather have the option of choosing the project he wants to work on each year, and that if a permanent seasonal position classification was authorized, this choice would be eliminated. Representative McKinnon asked whether he would be required to return to the project he had last worked on. Niel Thomas asked whether there would be a number of positions within the same classification which he might apply for. Mr. Curatolo responded that his experience in a particular project would lead to being employed in the same position.

Frank Flavin inquired whether the six-month temporary period was a product of APEA bargaining or if it was a decision between the state and the Legislature. Representative McKinnon noted that judging by testimony heard, temporaries are being misused and are not given the benefits of permanent employees. Using temporaries is a way of avoiding application of merit principles. Instead of improving the abusive treatment of temporaries, the APEA contract has created many additional difficulties. Niel Thomas added that it seems there is a need for a "project" category which would not apply to seasonal recurrent positions and would allow the position to last for the duration of the project.

Claude Hoffman, a Cadastral Engineer with the Department of Natural Resources, presented his opinions as a Program Manager. Mr. Hoffman supervises 31 employees. He is involved in a departmental survey that has been funded with $7 million by the Legislature for 12 months. Permanent positions were authorized by the Legislature at the end of the last session. Mr. Hoffman has been hiring temporaries for the program who are capable of doing the job. Many of his professional staff were in the top five on the registers and were temporaries within the department. Mr. Hoffman believes that he has been hiring temporaries fairly and placing them in permanent status whenever possible. He has reduced the number of temporaries in his department by 80% over the past six months. Despite the reduction, he must retain some temporary positions, and would like to be able to offer temporary employees the same benefits as permanent employees. Mr. Hoffman does not believe that program managers should hire temporaries and promise permanent position when they are unsure whether that is a possibility. He prefers to have permanent employees in the department, but because of the process involved in writing out P402's, having them put into the budget and approved by the Division of Personnel, creating PCN's and getting registers, this is very difficut when there are immediate deadlines set. These "crash" programs leave very little time to plan for the department's employment needs. Mr. Hoffman suggests that a possible solution would be in having the Division of Personnel work jointly with the department in preparing a budget package to include positions in permanent, seasonal and temporary employment categories.

Niel Thomas asked if there would be any problem in hiring temporaries from the registers. Mr. Hoffman replied that a major problem is the time involved in the processing of paperwork to and from Juneau. Mr. Thomas suggested that temporary positions could be reduced to very short terms, with exceptions for employment on specific projects to permit time to have permanent positions classified. Mr. Hoffman also pointed out that in order to get qualified people, Department of Natural Resources had to advertise state-wide. Mr. Thomas stated that some type of incentive for Personnel to move as fast as possible in classifying permanent positions would be helpful. Mr. Hoffman agreed that the Division has problems in the extensive workload involved in filling new positions. His department has the budget for positions, but is unable to expedite the creation of permanent positions, and has had to use temporaries in the mean time.

Niel Thomas inquired whether Mr. Hoffman believes there are too many classifications. Mr. Hoffman replied that was not a problem in his department's series of positions. Frank Flavin asked what Mr. Hoffman's opinions were regarding the registers. Mr. Hoffman answered that he is please with registers and the way applicants are placed on them. He also believes they provide an adequate selection.

Mr. Hoffman also expressed his ideas on the ranking of individuals on the registers. He believes that there are inequities in scoring which result from different personnal analysts within the Division of Personnel using a variety of scoring standards. He suggested that evaluation of applications be based on qualifications and skills gained during work rather than on number of years in service. Mr. Hoffman stated that he had spent quite a bit of time with the Division of Personnel earlier in the year, and the staff members there had probably been rated on longevity and been hired from the top five on the register.

Frank Flavin asked whether working with the top five or with the top one-third on the registers would be preferable. Mr. Hoffman responded that working with the top five is not difficult. Normally, one or two eligibles will decline to take a position because of special duties they cannot handle. Sometimes, Mr. Hoffman does have to go below the top five to fill a vacancy because some applicants refuse the positions and others are still on the register although they have found employment.

Niel Thomas asked where Mr. Hoffman reports in the department. Mr. Hoffman answered that he reports to the Assistant Commissioner, who oversees three divisions. Niel Thomas asked if he had been instructed in Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action matters. Mr. Hoffman replied that the basics had been covered. Representative McKinnon inquired concerning whether restrictions are placed on hiring temporaries for new positions. Mr. Hoffman answered that no restrictions were put upon hiring of temporaries, and he initially hired temporaries and had positions classifications changed to permanent. Many temporaries have left because they were unable to get on the top of registers to be hired as permanent. He does not believe in using unethical methods to come in below budget and is not tempted in hiring temporaries to cut down on spending.

Ed Levy, an Engineering Technician with the Department of Transporation and Public Facilities, offered a different perspective. He is the only permanent seasonal employee working in his division. The majority of the employees within the division are college students who cannot complete the six-month period of seasonal employment because they have to return to school in the fall. These temporaries are being trained by the division, but cannot achieve permanent seasonal status even though they return each year. Local 71 will send them back out to the department annually because they are familiar with particulars of the work, but does not allow their classification as permanent seasonal because they are not able to finish the season. This problem is causing financial difficulties for temporaries because they are not credited with their time in service and cannot go beyond initial temporary wages. Representative McKinnon asked what happens when the students return to school. Mr. Levy explained that the division fills in as best it can until the end of the season. College students feel that they are being used by Local 71 and that they are paying dues for nothing. Mr. Thomas asked if Mr. Levy would lose his job as a permanent seasonal if he left in September. Mr. Levy answered affirmatively, and added that the Local 71 contract does not permit an employee to be considered as permanent seasonal unless the individual can work the entire duration of the season.

Patricia Fowler, a permanent employee with the Department of Natural Resources, is an Associate Planner. She presented her complaints regarding the time it takes to get on a register and the difficulties in trying to be promoted to a higher classification. Ms. Fowler was promoted from her position as a temporary Research Analyst II to her present classification. If she had wanted to try for a permanent position as a Research Analyst II, she would have been unable to get on the top of the register because her specialty is planning. Four to six weeks after Ms. Fowler applied for the position of Associate Planner, she tried to find out what her status was concerning the application. She was unable to get an answer.

Ms. Fowler pointed out that in the past, temporaries had been employed by the department for up to 18 months. This practice is only now beginning to change. Ms. Fowler began as a temporary employee and worked towards getting a permanent position. Methods suggested by her colleagues included making herself invaluable to the department. Experience as a temporary, according to Ms. Fowler, is not considered in the placement of temporaries in permanent classifications. Because of the turnover in temporaries, the department has to train employees over and over again. She has observed that in order to place temporary employees into permanent positions, her department notifies the top five applicants on the register, but discourages interest in the positions to be able to get to the people they want. Ms. Fowler has personally responded to notifications, only to be told that the position is extremely undesirable. Temporaries are one way of getting around the register.

Ms. Fowler continued, commenting on the fact that offices with a large number of temporaries are subject to recurrent turnover and have organizational problems. Most temporaries have no future with a department, and because they are aware of this, they have no incentive to perform well.

Niel Thomas asked what Ms. Fowler's position is within the department. Ms. Fowler replied that she is a Coordinator for A95, which is a permanent position where she works on casual management. Mr. Thomas also asked how the duties of the position were presented to her when she began as a temporary. She replied that the person occupying the position prior to her arrival had taken a leave of absence. Ms. Fowler took over her functions within the office and was never asked if she wanted permanent employment. She was never informed by the department that there was a vacant permanent position available. Ms. Fowler, like many temporary employees does not like short-term positions. She enjoys being able to get involved in her work and not having to spend her time constantly seeking permanent employment. She was informed at the time of her hire as a temporary that the duration of her employment would not exceed four to six weeks. At that time, she thought that it would be highly unlikely that the position would be for such a short period of time. Other employees in the department explained to her that everyone there had started out as a temporary, and that supervisors liked hiring temporaries because it gave them additional opportunity to observe an employee's performance. Ms. Fowler added that it is very difficult to terminate permanent employees because supervisors don't want to go through grievance proceedings. Another discrepancy that Ms. Fowler had noted was that permanent postions at higher ranges are not being filled. Temporaries are being hired to fill these positions at lower ranges to make up for budget limitations.

Brent Petrie, Chief of the Water Department Section of the Department of Natural Resources, testified regarding problems he has witnessed as a program manager. The problems he addressed were in hiring, administrative budgets, and putting in proposal for changes. Mr. Petrie has worked as a temporary, permanent, supervisory and general government unit employee during his tenure with the state. He currently is working under a program supplemented by a federal grant, where temporary employees are needed for more than 30 days. Some temporary positions can last for up to nine months. To put temporaries into permanent classifications, he must identify funds available. Federal programs run for specific projects that may only last for a year. By the time Budget and Management and Legislative Finance have approved the permanent classifications, only six months may be left in the fiscal year. The program would need temporaries, in that instance, for the six months spent in getting approval for permanent positions. It is difficult to plan for positions in recurrent federal grant programs subsidized by discretionary state funds since the formula application must be approved annually by Budget and Management.

Niel Thomas inquired concerning Mr. Petrie's definition of discretionary funding. Mr. Petrie explained that this funding is generally used in contracted projects. Temporary employees often do a variety of jobs on short-term projects of up to nine months. It is very difficult to get permanent classifications based on discretionary funding. Some funds are coming in annually, in which case estimates can be made of tasks to be accomplished. Mr. Petrie added that he would prefer to create permanent classifications for this need. Budget and Management can authorize the classification of positions through confirmation that funds are available. Program managers are reluctant to spend the time involved.

Mr. Petrie offered an example of the time it takes to have a permanent classification created. He wrote a P402 in May of 1978, and it took until December before he could actually request a register. Something had to be done in the interim to provide the staffing necessary to handle the project. Pressure is applied by the Legislature to complete projects on schedule, but the task is made very difficult by the lengthy procedures involved in processing paperwork through the state. Mr. Petrie suggested that the Legislature should examine a package including P402's and the departmental budget to expedite the implementation of new programs.

Mr. Petrie suggested that when a large grant or appropriation comes through, the Division of Personnel might consider adding to its staff with funds appropriated from the agency's project budget to process P402's for that program. Representative McKinnon commented that this is a fairly common practice in other states. Projects created by the Legislature are forcing departments to submit large amounts of paperwork to the Division of Personnel.

Another suggestion presented by Mr. Petrie was to create a means of compensating temporary employees for their lack of benefits through a pro-rated hourly salary adjustment that would increase depending upon the duration of employment. Mr. Petrie thought that by staggering the paperwok submitted to the Division, some of the delays might be avoided. Frank Flavin pointed out that there may be too many categories of employees and that a solution would be to combine categories. He also suggested that benefits of permanent employees be available to temporaries after 90 days.

Mr. Petrie listed a number of problems the commission should consider:

1) lower salary ranges and lower classifications put on temporary employees

2) discouraging employees from accepting positions so as to reach applicants below the top five on the register

3) Unqualified applicants being placed on registers because personnel analysts lack knowledge of skills needed for positions and their dependency on the descriptions supplied in P402's

4) inconsistent evaluations and ratings of applicant skills and experience

Representative McKinnon questioned whether the department could more accurately describe job classifications. Mr. Petrie replied that they could if personnel officers in both the Department and the Division of Personnel conferred with program managers to create lists of qualifications and backgrounds essential to the work involved. Niel Thomas asked if he was referring to the decentralization of personnel functions into individual departments. Mr. Petrie believes that the personnel offices of the departments could handle this function with additional staff.

Mr. Petrie asked how someone would go about applying to departments and how applicants could be consistently rated by each department. Niel Thomas answered that applicants would probably not know where to go and that an information pamphlet would have to be written with instructions on how to go about applying for a job. Frank Flavin pointed out that this would leave audit functions the responsibility of the Division of Personnel.

Mr. Petrie concluded his testimony by stating that he will encourage others to testify at the January 27 meeting in Anchorage.

Peggy Merritt, a temporary Game Biologist I with the Department of Fish and Game, agreed with previous testimony offered by her colleagues within the Department. In regard to recruitment, Ms. Merritt has found that the Division of Personnel often evalautes applicants incorrectly. In one case, an applicant who knew very little about the special skills involved in working in a certain position was on the top of the register. The department was forced to hire someone very low on the register to find an applicant with the skills necessary. She suggested applicants be judged by a peer group and not by the Division of Personnel. Her supervisor would like her to stay on longer than six months, but she cannot regardless of the inefficiency resulting from her termination.

There is one PCN for Game Biologist I for that division, and the position was moved to Nome. Her supervisor, who has been in the same division for many years, has been unable to get a permanent classification for anyone else in the division. The funding is unavailable, yet there is a great need for someone who is familiar with new scientific methods to renovate the archaic practices still used by the division.

Niel Thomas asked what percentage of temporaries in the department are women. She replied that there is one woman working as a permanent Game Biologist and approximately six women temporaries elsewhere in the department. Mr. Thomas also asked if the department has a hard time reaching applicants with skills necessary for the job. Ms. Merritt explained that some of the most qualified applicants are very low on registers, although their peers would rate them very highly.

Ms. Merritt continued, explaining that she resents the cut off of temporary employment to six months when the job still needs to be completed. Because of budget cuts, permanent positions are no longer available and termination of temporaries is now mandatory because of the APEA contract. The union has taken action that temporary employees do not approve of and never voted on.

One other problem not mentioned previously is the non-existence of hazard pay for temporaries. Ms. Merritt travels by air continuously in hazardous conditions, yet receives no additional compensation as do permanent employees. Niel Thomas asked if she is paid for actual hourly work. Ms. Merritt responded that once above a certain pay range, extra hours put in on the job are not compensated. Ms. Merritt would like to be compensated for this lack of benefits.

Ruth Moulton, an employee with the Department of Natural Resources, presented her questions to the committee members: Why are temporaries being penalized to eliminate abuses within the personnel system? Aren't the unions, Division of Personnel and the Legislature aware of the fact that employees become more and more valuable with time spent in positions? Representative McKinnon explained that the APEA contract with the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations sets out the rules which departments must follow. Frank Flavin stated that none of these parties has the unilateral ability to change the policies. Representative McKinnon continued by explaining that there are laws in the books stating that temporaries cannot receive benefits, retirement and annual leave. Temporaries benefit from salary increases negotiated by unions and from lobbying efforts to increase fringe benefits available to them. Therefore, they do receive some return for their dues. Ms. Moulton replied that her best interests have not been represented by the union. Frank Flavin noted that the union is concerned with the supervisory abuse of temporary employees and has tried to eliminate this problem by limiting the duration of temporary employment. Temporary employees are not receiving benefits and are working unlimited amounts of time. Ms. Moulton pointed out that one advantage of being a temporary is in being able to go from one position to another, thereby gaining valuable experience.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
Full Commission Hearing

Fairbanks North Star Public Library

MINUTES

In the absence of Senator Ray and Don Fisher, Representative Buchholdt chaired the meeting.

PUBLIC TESTIMONY

Mr. Fathy A. Elshamma moved to Fairbanks from Egypt in 1976 and worked as an Accountant with the Native Association for 13 months. During a vacation, he returned to Egypt and along with his family relocated to Fairbanks. Mr. Elshamma has been seeking employment since his return. He is listed on six registers and willing to accept employment in Juneau, Anchorage and Ketchikan, as well as in Fairbanks.

Mr. Elshamma was contacted on November 7, 1978, by Tom Lusk about a Bank Examiner I position in Juneau. In his conversation with Mr. Lusk, Mr. Elshamma indicated that he would be willing to accept immediate employment in Juneau and would be willing to take the next plane out of Fairbanks if necessary. Mr. Elshamma was instructed to wait for a response. One week later, he received a letter stating that the position had been filled. He questioned why he was never called back and brought the matter to the Governor's Office. The job was still listed as being open on that date, and the office verified the opening by phone. Mr. Elshamma had received a letter stating that the position had been filled.

Niel Thomas asked Mr. Elshamma if he had tried to contact the individual who was responsible for contacting him. He replied that he had not. Mr. Thomas suggested he call back and request an explanation. Mr. Thomas also suggested that a complaint should be filed if a satisfactory explanation was not provided.

Ms. Marianne Berry, a PHN, advised the committee of the problems they continue to have with reclassification of PHN positions throughout the state. Niel Thomas told the committee that the Assistant U.S. Labor Secretary, who is responsible for enforcing compliance with equal pay for equal work laws, has been in the state and is considering U.S. Government suit.

COMMITTEE DISCUSSION

Representative Buchholdt briefly discussed the written testimony received by a representative of the Classified Personnel Organization dated December 13, 1978. Copies will be sent out with committee minutes.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
Certification, Classification & Recruitment
Subcommittee Meeting
North Star Public Library
December 13, 1978

MINUTES

The Certification, Classification and Recruitment Subcommittee was called to order by Representative Buchholdt, in the absence of Senator Ray, Chairman.

PUBLIC TESTIMONY

Will Conwell, a Mining Engineer with the Department of Natural Resources, spoke of several state practices which he finds objectionable. The first items he brought to the committee's attention were the inequities in the hiring system and the mismanagement within individual departments rather than in the Division of Personnel. Specifically, he mentioned the lack of equal pay for equal work for similar job classifications and misuse of temporary hires. The guidelines set by the Governor are not being followed by departmental management.

Mr. Conwell gave examples of similar positions with quite broad salary range differences. Studies of these positions had been done by departmental employees, comparing them to similar positions in private industry. The findings confirmed that the jobs were similar and salary ranges should have been equal. After submitting the study to the commissioner of the department, Mr. Conwell was told that it would have to be disregarded because it should have been conducted by the Division of Personnel. The matter was taken to Ed Styer, and employee of the Division, for a desk audit. The results were never made available, nor were the recommendations on classifications. The P402's for the department had not been done since 1971.

Mr. Conwell also described an experience he had in applying for a promotion to a new position. After receiving a very high rating when tested by the Division of Personnel, he received no further indication of an opening being available. Mr. Conwell felt that he was overlooked, probably because of misues of the register, and someone else filled the position.

Other examples Mr. Conwell presented in regard to temporary employment were of up-grading or down-grading positions to appoint favored applicants, misuse of evaluation forms and the hiring of temporaries who lack minimum qualifications. He believes that there are sufficient names on the registers to hire permanent employees. The temporaries being hired stay in the positions long enough to enable them to gain minimum qualifications, and thus be hired in permanent status.

Niel Thomas stated that there is a tendency within the state to place newly created classes of positions at higher salary ranges than similar long-standing positions. This has resulted in the large number of similar classifications at different pay ranges.

Kathy Carr-Lundfelt, Assistant Director of the Human Rights Commission for the Northern Region, testified that the northern region and rural communities are neglected by the state personnel system. Employee concerns about terms of employment are constantly delayed because they have to be answered by Juneau or Anchorage. The staffing of the Personnel Department in Fairbanks is inadequate, being limited to two employees. For this reason, recruitment is insufficient, especially in the case of minorities and Alaskan natives. Program managers are not trained in recruitment, and registers do not contain people interested in working in rural areas. When the top five or ten names on the register are not available, program managers become frustrated and hire temporaries as an alternative.

One particular problem Ms. Carr-Lundfelt encountered was in organizing a Better Writing Workshop, a program given by the Division of Personnel. For a period of 18 months, she constantly arranged for classes which were then cancelled by the instructor. The delay was due to the instructor's having to be flown out of Juneau. Ms. Carr-Lundfelt suggested that the Division of Personnel should station instructional staff in Fairbanks or should contract with firms there to provide resources to state employees.

Also not to be overlooked are the range classification problems, Ms. Carr-Lundfelt asserted. "Secretaries" are made available only to supervisors at the Director level or above. Others below that level are allowed to hire only clerk typists even though the responsibilities may be equal to those of a secretary. The Division of Personnel has three secretarial classifications: Secretary I, II and III. Directors are allowed to have Secretary I's, Deputy Commissioners can hire Secretary II's and Commissioners are assigned Secretary III's. Ms. Carr-Lundfelt has had to hire temporaries in the clerical class to maintain office functions. Clerical employees are reluctant to fill permanent positions in clerk classifications when their actual duties are secretarial in nature. Ms. Carr-Lundfelt's classification and salary range were established a long while ago, and Division of Personnel is reluctant to reclassify. There appears to be more control over classifying new positions than reclassifying old.

Ms. Carr-Lundfelt pointed out the discrepancies between requirements for entry level clerical positions, where a high school degree is required, and entry level draftsman positions, where only a year of experience is required. Despite the greater educational requirement for clerical positions, draftsman positions are classified at higher salary ranges. Minimum qualifications don't accurately reflect skills necessary for the job. Artificial minimum qualifications discourage both women and minorities.

Ms. Carr-Lundfelt expressed the belief that the unions are as responsible as the Division of Personnel in taking action on these matters. Career ladders are not available to many individuals and across-the-board percentage increases in salary provide less compensation for clerical employees than for employees in different classifications at higher salary ranges. Ms. Carr-Lundfelt suggests cost-of-living increases be concentrated at lower salary ranges to compensate for this effect.

Ron Galbraith, a former Assistant Professor of English with the University of Alaska, commented on the register system. He has been seeking state employment since last summer and is on 15 registers. After being placed on the registers, he followed instructions by keeping in touch with the Personnel Department. When a program manager is filling a position, only one call is made to an applicant. If the individual is not reached at that time, no further effort is made to contact him or her.

Lynda McCurry asked whether Mr. Galbraith had ever been contacted as a result of being on a register. Mr. Galbraith answered that only once within the last few months had he been contacted, and that was a call to ask whether he wished to remain on the register.

David Giles, a Field Representative of APEA, brought to the committee's attention four distinct problems that he feels should be addressed. He sees these problems as typical within the state's recruitment, examination and hiring processes.

1) Temporary Hire. Program managers have a tendency to hire temporary employees over permanent employees and use the temporary period as an addition to the probationary period required. During their temporary employment, these individuals are encouraged to get on registers so that they may be hired and placed in the permanent position.

2) Notification of Job Openings. Individuals listed on registers are supposed to be notified of openings. Mr. Giles gave an example of one individual who was removed from a register because he had not replied to a notification of a position open in his classification. In actuality, the notification was never sent. The department claimed to have sent an RCA night but RCA indicated that no letters had been sent on the date specified.

3) Bush Positions. Within the Department of Community and Regional Affairs, individuals applying for "bush" positions are submitting applications and being interviewed, but no action is being taken in hiring. The registers are being requested repeatedly. The people interviewed from the first register were not notified that a second register had been requested. The department indicated that the position requires someone with experience in the bush, and that therefore, they were unable to hire from the first register. However, not only did one of the applicants on the first register have bush experience, but Mr. Giles also does not believe there could be any need for bush experience in these positions.

4) Applying for New Positions. One person tried to apply for a particular position for a period of two years, submitting applications to Juneau every three months. He was continually informed that they were lost. The application was finally sent by registered mail, and the individual was informed that there would be a delay in processing the application because of an overload in paperwork. Mr. Giles believes this is a typical problem experienced in the Fairbanks region.

Niel Thomas asked Mr. Giles whether he was familiar with the personnel rule of justifying hire of an applicant below the top five on the register in unique and unusual circumstances. He replied that he was not familiar with any department having used that practice in Fairbanks.

George Morrisson, a Personnel Assistant with the Department of Health and Social Services, asked that the commission not recommend tightening of rules so much that he and other supervisors cannot accomplish their duties. He has experienced many difficulties in finding qualified individuals for positions both in Fairbanks and the bush areas. Many applicants desire to relocate out of Fairbanks to Anchorage or Juneau. Many times after working an entire register, Mr. Morrisson has been unable to find an applicant qualified for a permanent position and willing to work in the bush. The only alternative left to him is to hire temporaries who may not meet minimum qualifications but who can do the job. These temporaries often cannot pass the examinations to be placed on registers, because the examinations do not test for the skills needed.

Niel Thomas inquired about the recruiting practices in the Health and Social Services Personnel Office. Mr. Morrisson indicated that he is the only personnel employee in Fairbanks. In an aside, he indicated that has salary range problems also. Because his position is classified by the number of employees dealt with, he stated that he is at a lower salary range than he should be. Mr. Thomas also asked if Mr. Morrisson was instructed to actively recruit because of the lack of applicants. Recuritment is handled by the personnel office in Juneau. Only after discovering people are not available on registers is he instructed to recruit applicants.

Representative Buchholdt questioned whether testing administered orally would be a possible solution to written tests that must be processed through Juneau. Mr. Morrisson replied that it would be difficult to administer the tests in certain areas, because there would be a problem in finding qualified people to give the tests.

Ms. Lucille Owen, a Supervisor in the Unemployment Insurance Section of the Department of Labor, testified regarding the problems in using the register in hiring permanent employees. She has a total of 21 employees in her office. Ms. Owen once sent out 49 telegrams to applicants on a register, receiving replies from only a very few. Many were already working and did not want the position, but wished to remain on the register in case a better opportunity became available. The entire process took ten days. Ms. Owen would like to see applicants removed from the register if they are holding equivalent classifactions or above. She stated that names are not being removed from the register when applicants are hired.

Niel Thomas asked when she would be permitted by Personnel to request removal of a name from a register. Ms. Owen circles "failure to respond" on the register after unsuccessful attempts to reach applicants. Lynda McCurry stated that that should be sufficient reason for a name to be removed from the register, but it is not unusual for a name to be sent out a number of times when a department requests registers for the same classification for several vacancies.

Pat Hunt explained that updating the data base within the Division of Personnel is secondary to other functions such as recruitment, certification and payroll. Eligible lists are certified for 60 days, and before one is returned, others may be sent out.

Another complaint Ms. Owen presented to the committee was that Division of Personnel no longer tests applicants for proficiency in typing and shorthand. She has had to give her own tests to applicants, and they have not met the requirements for the job classifications despite their claims on applications. Ms. Owen suggested that applicants be investigated more thoroughly by Personnel, both by experience and testing.

In hiring temporaries, Ms. Owen would like to have some means of changing the classifications to permanent once the temporary has been trained. Lynda McCurry asked how many permanent seasonal classifications were authorized within the department. Ms. Owen replied there are 18, and an additional five or six would be needed for peak workload periods if the department were to avoid hiring temporaries.

Ms. Owen also expounded on the incomplete information supplied on bulletins describing positions. They do not accurately reflect the type of work experience needed, nor the duties to be performed. She must rely on the registers when hiring, and only recruits when seeking temporaries.

Niel Thomas asked what the percentage for minority hire was within the department. Ms. Owen replied approximately 20% of her employees are minorities who have been hired from a register.

Darlene Howard asked if there is sufficient interest in the Fairbanks region to fill seasonal positions. Ms. Owen replied that because of the availability of temporaries, she assumes that seasonal positions would also be filled. The lay-off time would be in summer, which is considered a desirable time to be out of work. Ms. Howard asked if seasonal position programs were generally understood by the public. Ms. Owen answered affirmatively. Ms. Howard also asked if a cost model report on productivity based on volume versus staffing had been done. Ms. Owen replied that she can anticipate yearly lay-offs, and in the past, the attrition of temporaries handled the necessary decrease in staff.

Ms. Owen also pointed out that security checks are not made by the Division of Personnel, although she thought it a necessity when the employee would be handling cash flow. Shiela Gottehrer asked whether she meant more than verification of references. Ms. Owen answered that a total security check of an applicant's background would not be difficult. Representative Buchholdt asked for statistics on how many people were found to create problems which could have been avoided by security checks. Ms. Owen responded that there have been only a very few; only three cases where an employee was dishonest. In one instance this resulted in termination of an employee. She felt very uncomfortable with the situation and had to be very careful in handling it. Ms. Owen also stated that nonperformance had never been a problem in her office.

Bob Mourant questioned her procedures in checking backgrounds: Is the employee given a chance for rebuttal? Ms. Owen answered that she had been successful in contacting former employers either by phone or correspondence to determine and employee's past performance. Pat Hunt stated that the the Division of Personnel does not require a security check, except when the position requires that the employee be bondable.

Mr. Leo Winegar, a resident of Fairbanks for three years, presented testimony on his dissatisfaction with the state's hiring procedures. Since his arrival in the state, Mr. Winegar has put in many applications for positions he qualifies for. He is on nine or ten registers and holds a B.A. and a Master degree in Business Administration and Economics. He also has one year of study towards a Ph.D. On many of the registers, he is listed number one. Mr. Winegar has been notified only once of an opening. A number of the positions he had been registered for have been abolished over the past three years, leaving him discouraged by the system.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
Merit System/Collective Bargaining Subcommittee
Fairbanks North Star Public Library
December 13, 1978

MINUTES

Representative Buchholdt, Chairperson, called the meeting to order. There being no response to an invitation for public testimony, the hearing was opened to committee discussion.

COMMITTEE DISCUSSION

Pat Hunt began the discussion by stating that all issues covered by the committee indicate that the question of the merit system versus collective bargaining must be addressed. He asked if it is the intention of the committee to limit the scope of bargaining available to employees. What effect would the amendment of statutes have on future union contracts? Mr. Hunt also questioned the role of the legislature in the area of union contracts: Would it be politically feasible to limit bargaining rights?

Ken Spray responded by stating that he believes the committee does not want to limit collective bargaining rights. He suggested the separation of personnel and labor relations functions. At present, personnel is more regulatory than service oriented, and labor relations is influenced by this emphasis.

Niel Thomas questioned what is negotiable under collective bargaining. Pat Hunt replied that all conditions of employment are negotiable. The only exception, in accordance with an Attorney General's opinion, is retirement plans. The leave system, salary, wages, hours, insurance and classification are all negotiable.

Niel Thomas asked if anyone could conceive of a system in which the Legislature basically funds the personnel structure that emerges from the collective bargaining process without any other particular role over what is bargained. Ken Spray responded by stating that the Public Employment Relations Act is structured so that the responsibility is left to the Executive Branch. The Legislature maintains control over funding the agreement reached.

Representative Buchholdt suggested the major question appears to be the continuation of collective bargaining in conjunction with the merit system, modification of one or both, or elimination of one.

Ken Humphreys explained that as it stands, the Alaska Collective Bargaining Act is very broad in scope. The trend in other states has been towards very broad definitions of collective bargaining acts. It is within the Legislature's authority to limit and define conditions. However, he believes this would put additional constraints upon the unions and the state government, causing additional conflicts.

Pat Hunt stated that the Constitutional mandate for a merit system for state employees could be fulfilled by a statutory requirement that those principles be incorporated in each collective bargaining agreement. The Personnel Rules would then set out a merit system to govern the terms of employment of non-unionized state employees not otherwise exempt from its coverage.

Niel Thomas questioned the testimony of individuals seeing the merit system as being against their rights for freedom of expression. Ken Spray added that labor relations was created for stability of labor, and that collective bargaining draws power from the labor movement, supplying employees with individual representation.

Niel Thomas brought up the question of the cost impact of collective bargaining. Ken Humphreys stated that his research indicates employee's salaries increased more before collective bargaining was enacted. In his study, he compared the increased percentages in employee salary seven years prior to the collective bargaining act implementation and seven years after. The salaries increased a total of 35% over the 73% cost-of-living increase within the past 14 years. This averaged out to a 2.5% annual increase. The cost of fringe benefits was not taken into consideration in his analysis. Mr. Humphreys is in the process of completing additional studies which he will make available to the committee.

Mary Langan, a freelance writer with Alaska Industrial Magazine, presented her views on the state personnel system. She had experienced working in both clerical and supervisory levels as a temporary with the state. Ms. Langan pointed out five major problems she had faced while employed by the state:

1) In 80 to 90% of government jobs, employee enthusiasm, creativity and initiative are stifled. The ideal employee is one whose attendace is prompt, who does not express new ideas which are contrary to "the system".

2) The recruitment of minorities and women is very limited. In some instances, temporaries are hired for permanent positions to avoid minority hiring.

3) There are inequities in the implementation of rules and federal regulations within both management levels and within the Division of Personnel. One example Ms. Langan mentioned was a delay in receiving her paycheck after termination. Federal law requires payment within three days of employee termination. The state took two weeks in sending out her check, and when she protested, she was advised that the state was exempt from that provision of the law. Ken Spray explained that the state is not exempt from this federal statute.

4) At the job service office of the state, books on vacancies in state government are not readily available to the public.

5) The promotional ladder and the merit system are subject to misinterpretation and office politics, resulting in discrimination against women and minorities. Ms. Langan suggested that promotions be decided by a committee consisting of objective members not employed by the state.

COMMITTEE REVIEW

Representative Buchholdt directed the committee to consider the possibilities to recommend and refine during the next meeting in Anchorage. Each committee member will prepare a list of ideas for consideration. The staff will provide a summary of information presented to date.

In conclusion, Representative Buchholdt pointed out the advantages of having both the merit system--employee motivation and reward for performance--and the collective bargaining process--mandated by the Legislature to provide a voice to employees.

Niel Thomas presented his opinion that there is a general misunderstanding of the two by the public. He suggests the distinctions and definitions be clarified for the benefit of state employees.

Darlene Howard addressed the problems she sees within the systems--procedural and operational methods at the administrative level.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
CERTIFICATION, CLASSIFICATION & RECRUITMENT SUBCOMMITTEE
December 1, 1978

The meeting was called to order by Don Fisher. Public testimony was invited. A summary of the testimony follows.

PUBLIC TESTIMONY

1. Personnel Systems in Private Industry

Upon the invitation of Niel Thomas, three personnel officers employed in private Alaskan industry presented their views on personnel functions and offered suggestions to resolve state problems.

Lee Valwalt, an Employee Relations Supervisor with the Alaska Gas & Service Company, attested to her belief in a centralized personnel department. However, she emphasized the absolute necessity of an operable communication system between individual department heads and personnel officers within the personnel department. Ms. Valwalt's company is relatively small, with 100 unionized employees (technically skilled) and 45 exempt employees (management and supervisory). The union contract applies to promotions, evaluations and merit increases. The company has three categories of employment: regular (full-time), part-time (20-30 hours weekly) and casual (limited duration of six months employment). After the six month period has ended, casual help has the option of being hired on a regular employee basis (depending on vacancies)or of being laid off.

All non-exempt employees are required to become members of the union within one month of their initial hire, in accordance with contract provisions. All benefits are available to regular employees; part-time employee benefits are pro-rated. Casual help is not eligible for benefits.

Employees do receive annual increases and are subject to annual reviews. A committee of department heads evaluates the company employees in conjuction with personnel officers and decides on promotions and merit increases. Contract interpretations support a centralized control for promotions and merit reviews.

The union can request that a group of jobs/positions be reclassified. It is not clear whether a failure of the company to reclassify as requested is a grievable issue. In practice, the company consults with the union shop steward before initiating a reclassification on its own. To date, the union has been satisfied with the grade system, so the issue has not been raised.

Notice of vacant positions is posted on a bulletin board for 72 hours to give employees the opportunity to apply for promotions or transfers. If no employees are interested in the vacancy, then the personnel officer looks through the applicant files. Applications are retained for a period of two years grouped by skill level without numerical rank designations, which is similar to the register concept. If the files do not produce a qualified applicant, the company recruits from outside sources such as referrals and employment agencies.

The personnel office interviews all applicants for a position and eliminates those who fail to meet the minimum requirements. All qualifying applications are submitted to the department head, who conducts his or her own interview. The personnel officer and the department head discuss the candidates prior to the department head's decision to hire an applicant. There are no written tests for applicants--they are evaluated through a personalized interviewing system which has apparently been effective for Alaska Gas & Electric Company.

The authority to hire, fire, evaluate and promote employees is coordinated between the personnel officers and the department heads. A department cannot create, reclassify or abolish a position without personnel's consent. The decision-making process is a combined effort, where both must be aware of all activities.

Dave Eubanks, a Personnel Director with an oil and gas production and exploration company which has corporate offices in Ohio, expressed his belief that a non-structured personnel system is a major contributing factor to employee motivation. In private industry, employee productivity directly relates to the company's profit. Thus, incentives such as merit increases and promotion have an effect upon the overall budget. It is important to have ample ways and means of evaluating and providing incentives. Ms. Valwalt also mentioned that a certain percentage of her company's budget would be allocated for merit increases after discussion with department heads.

Jerry Thorn, the third witness, concurred with the other's opinions. He also added that as a Personnel Director with the Cargosteen Company (approximately 300 employees throughout Alaska), he interfaces with many established unions from time to time. His bargaining thrust is to maintain management prerogatives to retain control over operation of the business.

Mr. Thorn does not have job descriptions for every job, but does have them for management positions. The issue on classification of positions is grievable, and he checks with unions prior to classification of new positions. Standards used for determining qualifications for positions are accomplished through job analysis and qualitative evaluation. Promotions are based on proven performance and merit increases are considered upon request. The company gives a cost-of-living increase every six months and fringe benefits are taken into consideration.

2. State Employees

Mr. Albert Carson, Deputy Director of the Division of Lands, Department of Natural Resources, had four major areas of concern:

1) Class specification categories are too broad in definitions of minimum qualifications. Because of this, applicants on registers do not possess the skills necessary for positions open to them. Departments use preferential recruitment methods to avoid the process of eliminating these unsatisfactory applicants. 2) Pay levels are inconsistent for comparable positions. 3) Division of Personnel's evaluations and point systems are inaccurate in measuring experience, skills and qualifications. Professional skills are often not recognized and may be misjudged. 4) The forms used for analysis do not identify areas of expertise.

Carmen Price an employee with the Department of Transportation, testified that the performance of duties above an assigned job classification is not credited to the employee. Supervisors have the ability to document the functions being performed by an employee in order for the employee to be given credit for this experience when applying for promotions or increases. Apparently, it is not common for supervisors to verify an increase of duties and responsibilities being handled by an employee. In many cases, this is because of personality clashes and extensive amounts of time and paperwork involved.

Jo Fenety, a Leasing Officer with the Department of Transportation, had a few additional comments: Applications phrased in personnel language receive higher evaluations than applications not using those terms. She believes that the Division of Personnel presently appears to employees as a regulatory body and that it should increase its emphasis on the provision of services.

Irene Price, Right-of-Way Assistant with the Department of Transportation, agreed with prior testimony regarding the lack of interaction between departments and Division of Personnel. One problem not previously brought to the Committee's attention is the unwillingness of supervisors to fire unsatisfactory employees. There is a tendency to pass these employees from department to department, causing frustration for both the employee and the departments in addition to hindering departmental performance.

Cecilia Kleinhoff, a Social Worker with the state, offered additional testimony to the problems within Division of Personnel. She opposed the substitution of experience for accredited degrees, especially in regard to Social Workers. She feels that generalizing qualifications in that instance is objectionable and that testing is not adequate to determine professional skills.

3. Flex Time

Ms. Kleinhoff also suggested that flex time and job sharing were two methods of providing better service to the state. Darlene Howard stated that some departments are using a flex-time system and that each program manager can decide whether to allow the employees to shift their work hours. Ms. Howard also suggested that the Commission research the response to flex time and study the pros and cons of operations in other states. Senator Ray pointed out that the convenience of having offices open during lunch time and after hours would be of benefit to the public.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
CATEGORIES OF EMPLOYEES SUBCOMMITTEE
Legislative Information Office, Anchorage
November 30, 1978

MINUTES

The meeting was called to order by Representative McKinnon, Chairperson. Public testimony was invited. A summary of the points raised follows.

QUESTIONS AND ISSUES PRESENTED

1. Temporary employees working within a bargaining unit are required to belong to the appropriate union.

A. Temporaries have to pay the same union dues as permanent employees but do not receive the same benefits.

B. Employees who have philosophical disagreements with belonging to unions are required to join the appropriate union to hold a state job.

Discussion

Unions are required by law to represent all employees within the bargaining units which they represent. Union negotiating and lobbying efforts benefit both permanent employees and temporary employees, at least on the issues of salary levels. Recent APEA efforts resulted in securing holiday pay for temporary employees. Over half of the lobbying effort of APEA last legislative session was spent trying to persuade the legislature to extend to temporary employees the health and annual leave benefits provided to permanent employees of the state. The legislation passed the House but not the Senate.

C. Have temporary employees been polled or the union's negotiating priorities?

D. Have temporary employees ever been represented on the governing board of APEA?

E. Can members of the union have a prioritized list of the union's bargaining positions?

F. Has a temporary employee ever served as a member of the union negotiating team?

G. There should be a board position for a temporary employee to represent directly the concerns of other temporaries.

Discussion

Before new contract proposals are drafted, APEA polls all of its members, including temporary employees, on negotiating priorities. The questionnaire indicates the employment status of the person answering, so that issues can be identified according to class of employment. The union uses results of the questionnaire in preparing its proposals.

There is nothing to prevent a temporary employee from holding office in the APEA, although Ms. Howard is not aware of any temporary employee who has ever been elected to the board. Under the present by-laws, a temporary could be an active union member only during the time of employment for the state.

2. Benefits for temporaries.

   A. No medical leave or retirement benefits.

   B. No job security.

   C. Temporary employment does not apply to the probationary period, even if the temporary employee is hired as a permanent for the same job.

   D. Union contracts can address the inequities of benefits for temporary employees.

Discussion

Lack of medical, leave and retirement benefits can only be addressed through the legislature, and, as indicated above, APEA spent considerable effort last session attempting to have legislation passed to do so. By union contract, APEA members can have one-third of their time as a temporary applied towards the probationary period required of a permanent position provided that there is no break in service and that the jobs are the same.

Local No. 71, Public Employees union, has negotiated to increase the wages of temporary employees to compensate for the lack of benefits. Temporaries receive an additional $1.32 per hour during the first 120 days they work as temporaries. If that period is extended by agreement, then the base salary of the temporary shifts from Level A of the wage scale to Level B. This system discourages the state from hiring temporaries for positions which should be classified as permanent. The union has found cases in which the state has ignored the union contract provisions about increased pay and has had to force compliance through arbitration.

3. Time limitations on length of temporary jobs.

   A. A limit of six months as a temporary was recently instituted for positions within the APEA bargaining unit. The limit used to be nine months.

   B. Local No. 71 has negotiated a 120-day limit to temporary employment, with extensions possible by mutual agreement between the union and the state.

Discussion

The new time limit for APEA members has caused a problem where supervisors were misinformed and therefore misinformed temporaries. The problem came about partly because there were a number of new supervisors in that particular job in a short period of time.

For discussion of the Local No. 71 system, see discussion under (2) above, Benefits for temporaries.

4. Promises to temporary employees about being hired for future permanent positions.

A. Division of Personnel does not always classify a new position as the program manager may have expected.

B. The better practice is to make no promises about permanent hire to temporary employees.

Discussion

If a program manager promises a permanent position to a temporary employee and then learns that the Division of Personnel has classified that position at a lower range than expected, then the temporary must wait while the position is reclassified. The time required for that process may extend beyond the time the temporary is permitted to work. That will cause the temporary to lose the cross-over of time served toward probationary period.

No promises should be made to temporary employees about permanent employment beyond a committment to consider them as any candidate with similar experience and skills will be considered. This is to ensure that the program manager is not locked into a committment and therefore unable to hire someone more qualified, should such an applicant appear on the register at the time of permanent hire.

5. Compensation for temporary employees who take time from work to testify before this commission.

Some supervisors are refusing to consider the time that their temporary employees spend testifying to the committee as time spent working for the state. Therefore, some temporaries were unable to attend the meetings. The APEA representative in Anchorage will work with the employees who did attend and with their supervisors to ensure that they are compensated for their time. If she is unable to do so, she will advise the commission.

6. None of the temporary employees who addressed the committee had been required to be on the register before being hired for their present positions.

7. The use of temporary employees in positions for which there are permanent funds available.

A. Local No. 71 has identified some 500 unfilled permanent positions within the scope of its bargaining units which it believes should be filled or deleted from the budget.

Discussion

Local No. 71 believes that the state is hiring temporary employees rather than filling presently vacant permanent positions in significant numbers. The union secured from the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations a list showing vacant PCN's within its bargaining unit. It has identified some 500 such vacancies, some of which have been vacant since the early 1970's. (A copy of the list is available from the commission staff.)

Some of the 500 positions may be funded through the Capital Improvement Funds, and therefore, the statistics may be skewed to that extent. Sue Greene of the Governor's office indicated that perhaps 100 of the positions might be CIF positions.

Local No. 71 has received requests for temporary employees within the job classes covered by the permanent-position vacancies on the list.

The Legislative Budget and Audit Committee is programming a computer to provide information on all PCN's vacant for more than a reasonable length of time. The legislature can then delete the position from the agency's budget, should it wish to do so. There is presently a monthly list prepared by the Division of Personnel which shows all of the vacant PCN's in the state and indicates the date of vacancy. Mr. Kareen estimated that approximately 20% of the PCN's are vacant at any one time.

B. Departments contract with private firms for work which could be performed by state employees. Contracting costs more to the state and increases the risk that public services will be jeopardized through a strike.

Discussion

Departments can contract with private firms for work which state employees could perform as well without any oversight by the Division of Personnel. In some cases, contractors with the state fail to fulfill all of the contract committments, leaving the state to hire its own employees to pick up the slack. For example, one contract called for the private contractor to provide janitorial services. When the contractor failed to do so, the state had to hire a member of Local 71 to fill the gap. One private contractor submitted two bids for a construction job, one based upon using his own equipment, and the other, at about $40,000 less, based on using the state's equipment. The higher cost bid was accepted, but then the contractor used the state's equipment to perform the work.

In some cases, the higher cost of subcontracting with private firms results from the higher wages charged by members of private industry unions.

Since state statutes place limitations on public service unions' right to strike, which are not placed on unions operating in the private industry field, there is greater danger that projects will be impeded by strikes when the state contracts with employers using private industry members than when the state hires its own employees.

Albert Baffone charged that the state of Alaska was following a policy of reducing the size of the Local 71 membership with the aim of drying up that union.

8. Problems with the use of CETA program employees within the Department of Corrections.

A. As temporary employees, CETA's within the Department of Corrections are limited to a nine-month period of service and receive no benefits, as permanent employees do.

B. CETA employees are taking the place of permanent employees within the Department, in violation of federal regulations.

C. Some CETA's are placed in supervisory positions over permanent employees who are paid at a higher salary rate than the CETA's.

D. CETA's are paid much less than permanent employees doing the same job.

E. Because of the Department of Correction's reorganization of staff, the state has frozen the Correctional Officer I register, and CETA's cannot apply for permanent positions.

The Comprehensive Employment Training Act is a federal legislative program aimed at providing people who are members of groups which traditionally have difficulty finding jobs with experience to enable them to find permanent employment. Federal regulations prohibit replacing permanent employees with those paid through the CETA program. The federal government provides $1,039 maximum per month in salary for those employed under the program. States using the program are free to supplement that salary if they desire.

The Division of Corrections has a number of CETA employees, classified as temporary employees by the state, who are paid at a salary range 9. The positions were meant to be Media Appreciation and Recreation Aides. However, because the Ridgeview Correctional Center (where approximately 27 CETA's work) is severely understaffed, the CETA employees have been doing the work of Correctional Officer I's, who are classified at SR 13. These positions have just been reclassified from SR 11. CETA's are paid $2.00 less per hour than Correctional Officer I's. Since CETA's are classified as temporary employees, they have no benefits or job security. There is nothing in the federal legislation requiring that CETA's be classified as temporaries. There are non-CETA temporary employees who are paid at the Correctional Officer I salary range. There are CETA employees working in supervisory roles over Correctional Officer I's who make substantially more than they do, which is bad management practice.

Niel Thomas suggested that the commission should consider recommending that the legislature provide a supplement to CETA funds so that departments are required to pay appropriate salaries for the CETA's they employ. The federal government could also be asked to provide a wage supplement to the salary money it provides to Alaska, since the Alaskan cost of living is so much higher than the cost of living in the lower 48 states.

Aggravating the other problems faced by the CETA's employed in the Division of Corrections is the fact that the Division is undergoing reclassification of Correctional Officer positions. No job applications are being accepted for the positions of Correctional Officer I, so CETA's whose period of temporary employment must end because the six or nine-month period has elapsed cannot get on the register for a permanent position in the field in which they have been working.

The Division of Corrections has answered these problems by deciding to employ no more CETA's rather than by trying to keep the program and provide an opportunity for the underemployed to gain skills and experience to make them employable by adjusting the inequities in the present system.

At one time, there were a number of CETA positions within the bargaining unit of Local No. 71. However, by contract, the state was required to pay each CETA employee the existing wage rate for any union member. The state no longer has any CETA positions within the bargaining unit.

The CETA regulations require that people employed under that program receive equal treatment with other employees similarly situated. That language has been interpreted by the state to mean treatment comparable to any other temporary employee. The Municipality of Anchorage, which has a substantial number of CETA's, treats them as permanent employees entitled to all the benefits provided other permanent employees.

9. Problems of Program Managers in staffing programs.

   1. Time to get permanent positions filled from register and yet to meet legislative directives.

2. Treatment of temporary employees.

Discussion

Because creating new positions and hiring form the register takes a considerable amount of time, departments cannot use that system when given legislative directive to remedy a problem quickly. Last session, the legislature passed HB720, directing that by November 1, 1978, the Department of Natural Resources designate 30,000 acres of state land for disposal under the homesite entry program and the open-to-entry program. The act included other directions, and the legislature appropriated funds for 100 new positions for the department. By the time that the legislation had passed (it was approved by the Governor on July 18, 1978), enough time did not remain to both meet the legislative deadline and also to hire permanent employees from the register to fill the new positions. Temporary employees were hired and the department at the same time began the process of creating new permanent positions. (P402's had to be prepared for each new position describing the particular duties of the employee in this job, even though most fell within existing job classes.)

In order to allow the department to staff the program quickly, the Division of Personnel set aside all other tasks for four to six days to speed the paperwork. There was some delay in the Division of Budget and Management, which had to sort through four different appropriation bills affecting this program to ensure that proper authorization existed to establish these positions.

Departments may have short term projects to handle which require particular expertise. If the department lacks the time to be able to hire a permanent employee, it will hire a temporary while beginning the paperwork to establish a permanent position. The project may last beyond the six-month limit on the employment of a temporary, but it is quite possible that the permanent position may not yet be authorized. This hinders the department in the operation of its programs.

When hiring temporaries for professional positions, there is a problem using the register. Most professional people who are good candidates for a particular position are likely to already be employed and will be unwilling to leave a permanent job, with the benefits and protections it affords, for a temporary position, even if there will be a permanent position to replace the temporary one. Furthermore, it is bad management practice to advise any temporary employee that she or he will be hired for a future permanent position, since not only is there the possibility that the permanent positions will be established at a lower salary range than the department expects, but also, by the time that the department is authorized to fill the permanent position, there may be someone more qualified on the register whom the department will prefer to hire.

When filling a temporary position, the registers may be of some assistance in locating possible employees. Mr. Reed stated that it was his practice to call for a register, to review the applications of those on the register and to contact those whom he did not know personally to inquire whether they were interested in the temporary position available. Those whose situation he knew, he would not contact unless he expected them to want a change.

WITNESSES

1. Barbara Eakin, temporary Administrative Assistant II with the Division of Lands of the Department of Natural Resources since July 31, 1978. The Division of Lands is in the process of seeking classification of a permanent position of Accounting Clerk III for which she expects to be "strongly considered."

2. Karen Holser, a temporary Water Technician with the South Central Division of Water Section of the Department of Natural Resources. She is working under a program created by HB720 to reduce the backlog in water rights applications. The legislature authorized 52 permanent positions, all of which have been filled. In addition, the department created temporary positions funded from money made available problable through the vacancy of permanent positions.

3. Ruth Moulton, a temporary employee of the Division of Planning and Classification of the Department of Natural Resources. She has held temporary positions with the state three times and prefers to work as a temporary employee.

4. Al Baffone, Business Manager of Local No. 71 of the Public Employees Union.

5. Helen Collier, a temporary employee under the Comprehensive Employment Training Act (CETA), working as a Media Appreciation and Recreational Aide with the Department of Corrections.

6. Barbara Kelly, a temporary Accounting Clerk I with the Division of Lands of the Department of Natural Resources.

7. Steven Reed, Chief of the Planning and Classification Division of the Department of Natural Resources. He has held the position for one year.

8. Bob Dawkins, Journeyman Plumber with the state.

9. Eleanor Andrews, Field Representative with the Anchorage APEA.

INVITED WITNESS

Frank Flavin advised the Committee that he had invited Mike Smith, Assistant Commissioner/Director of Lands with the Department of Natural Resources. Mr. Smith was unable to attend.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
MERIT SYSTEM/COLLECTIVE BARGAINING SUBCOMMITTEE
Municipality of Anchorage Assembly Chambers
November 30, 1978

MINUTES

The meeting was called to order by Representative Buchholdt, Chairperson. Public testimony was invited.

PUBLIC TESTIMONY

Tom Phillips, an employee with the Department of Transportation, Division of Maintenance and Operation, presented his views on the implementation of Governor Hammond's policy on merit increases by the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities. Deputy Commissioner James O'Sullivan has changed previous departmental policy by requiring that the evaluation of employee performance be "outstanding" or "exceptional" to qualify the employee for a merit increase. The new policy requires that the director of each region review all evaluations. When the employee's performance justifies awarding a merit increase, the evaluation is reviewed by the Deputy Commissioner. As part of the new system, all supervisors were required to attend a training course on "Measuring Job Performance".

Apparently, the Governor's policy is not being applied consistently within state government. Mr. Phillips indicated that in the department across the hall from him, merit increases were being awarded on the basis of "acceptable" evaluations, as well as "outstanding".

Darlene Howard advised the committee that in the APEA supervisory unit contract, the contract language spells out when merit increases may be awarded. These contract provisions are consistent with Personnel Rules.

Mr. Phillips has filed a grievance after being denied a merit increase. (His supervisor, Clyde Dolly, confirmed his position and testified later in the meeting.) Deputy Commissioner Patrick Ryan has received the grievance form submitted by Mr. Phillips, and as of the meeting date had not acknowledged the situation. Mr. Phillips is awaiting further action.

In response to Representative Buchholdt's inquiry as to how many employees within his department could be considered "outstanding", Mr. Phillips replied that a very small percentage of state employees are evaluated as outstanding. He believes that employees deserving merit increases are not receiving them as a direct result of interpretation of the Governor's policy.

Albert Baffone, Business Manager of Public Employees Local No. 71, was next to testify in regard to the merit system. He regards the merit system as counter-productive and inadequate in covering all employees. Mr. Baffone suggests that the merit system be governed by a collective bargaining process. He pointed out that the legislature is burdened with many problems in labor relations and could expedite proceedings by considering solution adopted by unions.

Public Employees Local No. 71 works on a preferential hiring system. When the state calls the local seeking an applicant, the name of a qualified individual is given within 48 hours. The state provides a description of the position, classification, and any particular qualifications necessary. These specifications are taken into c nsideration by the union in referring an applicant, in accordance with contract guidelines. The employer may reject the applicant referred from the union, in which case another applicant will be recommended. There are no tests given by the union. Applicant are evaluated on the basis of their experience. Mr. Baffone stated that the system has approximately a 95% accuracy rate in placing these applicants. Under current laws, this system could be adopted by the state.

In addition, Mr. Baffone testified that despite the inference made that state employees cannot be fired, Local No. 71 has many cases of employees who were in fact fired. It is their policy to file a grievance on every case which a member brings to them, so that they have standing to investigate the matter. If their research shows that the management action was justified, then they withdraw the grievance, documenting for their own protection their reasons for doing so. Unions are liable to their members for failure to represent.

Clyde Dolly, Manager of the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities, proceeded to testify that he is in favor of employees' associations and merit increases. Merit increases are one of the tools applicable to employees for inspiring and rewarding performance.

Mr. Dolly further indicated that employee morale has declined because of the change in the merit increase policy and the inconsistent application by different departments. Because there is a lack of funding, there is also little opportunity for supervisors to recognize the abilities of their employees by promoting them.

In answer to a question, Mr. Dolly stated that if a supervisor recommends a merit increase, the evaluation form is returned to the supervisor with directions to rewrite it. In Mr. Dolly's opinion, the instructions given on how to evaluate employee performance discourage a supervisor from evalauting an employee as outstanding or exceptional. This was the basis for Tom Phillip's grievance.

Mr. Dolly continued, adding that he is in favor of the register system. Ken Spray asked how long it took him to get employees off the register. Mr. Dolly explained that it takes at least three weeks to hire through the register, but he is given the top five names to consider. As a program manager in a previous position, he had experience working with the preferential hiring system. In hiring from the union, he received a response within three days. However, he was sent one individual at a time, and had to justify not selecting the first person sent. There was no way for the supervisor to know whether the second person would be more qualified for a particular job.

Greg O'Claray asked why it took Mr. Dolly three weeks to be able to hire someone from the register. Mr. Kareen responded that it was probably a result of internal departmental procedures. Lynda McCurry indicated that it takes her department an average of two days to receive a register from the Division of Personnel once requested.

Mr. Dolly concluded that although the register system takes a minimum of three weeks to hire an employee, as opposed to 48 hours when using the preferential hiring system, he would rather be given a choice of five applicants who have been tested for qualifications and experience. With the preferential system, the first candidate to meet minimum qualifications must be hired, and the opportunity to have a choice is not supplied.

Ron Felty, an employee with the Municipality of Anchorage, stated briefly that he was present to observe proceedings because of an interest in the concept of the merit system and the application to the labor environment. Representative Buchholdt explained that the commission is designed to take an overall view of personnel practice within the state and to cover as many topics as possible, including all government entities.

Beverly McCartney, an employee with Community and Regional Affairs Department, was present to observe proceedings and offered a few comments on another problem within the state. She indicated that her department is not filling permanent positions in order to create vacancy funds to use to provide merit increases to remaining employees. For example, the Property Control office has lost staff members who have not been replaced. As a result, none of the new property received has been tagged during the last four months. This vacancy factor has not been articulated in writing, yet it is currently practiced by numerous departments.

Darlene Howard amplified this point. A November memo from the Governor indicated changes in procedures and funding for merit increases. APEA challenged the provisions of the memo and their contract now specifies how merit increases are to be awarded. In response, Niel Thomas commented that concern over expenditures controls the work force. Budgetary procedures are left to the discretion of divisional management. Misinterpretations of guidelines, insufficient funds and lack of controls lead to manipulation of budgetary allowances.

Ken Kareen pointed out that the process in itself controls the state work force and the amount of money spent. First, there are a set number of positions, designated as "man-months", authorized in the budget. Second, each department is authorized a set amount of money. The department cannot hire more than the combination of what the two permit.

Niel Thomas suggested that better management oversight would be performed by the legislature if the concentration were on the executive performance of tasks and goals set, rather than the structural aspects of the executive branch--how many people are employed and where they are placed. The legislature needs to hold the executive branch accountable for achieving the goals the legislature sets.

Representative Buchholdt questioned Ms. McCartney on whether she felt that her department was providing adequate service. Ms. McCartney indicated that because of vacancies, employees in the department are doing considerably more work and not receiving sufficient compensation for additional responsibilities and a heavier workload. State employees are becoming frustrated with their work, lack of recognition and insufficient funding for increases and promotions. There is a serious decline in employee morale.

John Pugh asked Representative Buchholdt whether, as a legislator, she had been aware that the merit increases for present employees had not been funded for the past two years. She did not recall. He asked because APEA has been castigated for seeking both merit increases and cost-of-living adjustments for its membership, while the administration uses the existence of merit increase possibilities to hold down wage increases.

Representative Eliason suggested that there are two solutions to the inequities in the present system: 1) have a single bargaining unit for all state employees, or 2) repeal the collective bargaining act.

Ken Spray pointed out that there are inequities in the private sector, where different unions representing different trades had negotiated different wages.

Representative Eliason pointed out that it is not the responsibility of the legislature to bring about equal pay scales between unions. Mr. O'Claray explained that unions that grew out of the private industry unions have philosophical problems with the concept of a merit increase system. This comes about because of the control which The Boss exercised over his work force and the resentment felt by workers towards his potentially arbitrary and unchecked discretion. Therefore, unions rely on salary increases for time in service and the promotional ladder as the way to reward competence.

Ken Foot, a State Trooper from the Fairbanks office of the Public Safety Employees Association, indicated that because of personal experiences, he believes there are not sufficient promotional opportunities available to reward service to the state. Therefore, in his opinion, merit increases should be retained to compensate for this lack of upward mobility.

After a brief discussion on possibilities for rewarding deserving employees, John Pugh suggested that President Carter's Productivity Bonus may be worth consideration.

PERSONNEL ACT REVIEW COMMISSION
November 16, 1978

The third meeting of the Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act was called to order in Room 123 of the State Capitol by Chairman Bill Ray at 1:30 p.m., November 16, 1978. Following roll call, Chairman Ray suggested that the proposed rules of procedure be considered. Adoption of rules was approved by acclaimation.

Representative Eliason stated that he had missed the previous meeting and asked for permission to distribute a statement of potential problems the commission should consider.

Chairman Ray suggested that all commission members request and invite their alternates to be present at all meetings. In this way, the alternates will be current on commission activities and can make a meaningful contribution if their principle member is absent. The Chairman asked the secretary to invite the alternates and keep them informed of all meetings. He also reminded the legislators to keep this in mind because of potential conflicts in meeting times during the legislative session.

Don Fisher told the commission about a conference he attended in Olympia, Washington, on October 18 by the National Council of State Legislatures. He explained that the Council's Project TRAIN is focusing on personnel systems and problems involved. The group is headed by Mr. Couturier, who is well known for his work in this field. He suggested that TRAIN would be able to come to Juneau and work with the commission without expense to the State. We only need to furnish a meeting room and group of interested participants for the presentation.

Mr. Fisher moved that TRAIN be invited to Juneau. It was approved by acclaimation. The Chairman and secretary will work to set up a couple of days for the presentation, to be scheduled after the legislature is in session.

The Chairman asked for a subcommittee report from the Merit System/Collective Bargaining group. Niel Thomas stated that they did not meet because of the late notification of the November 9 meeting. They will meet at a later date.

Frank Flavin moved to abolish the subcommittee on Merit System/Collective Bargaining, because the merit system question could be addressed in another subcommittee. Chairman Ray disagreed. He stated that the legislature expects to be informed on that topic.

Discussion followed concerning the areas of responsibility of each subcommittee. The commission must be sure to cover all of the important topics.

A vote on Mr. Flavin's motion was taken and failed. The Merit System/Collective Bargaining subcommittee will stand as is.

Representative McKinnon reported on the Category of Employees subcommittee. They plan to first address the problem of temporary, seasonal, and part-time employees. He also expressed a concern about overlooking certain topics because of vague subcommittee assignments. Chairman Ray referred to the October 3, 1978, meeting minutes listing topics of concern for subcommittees. Because of the over-lapping of members on each subcommittee, he feels sure that the commission will be able to cover all necessary topics.

The meeting was opened to public speakers. Roger Thayer, Personnel Officer, Department of Transportation & Public Facilities spoke first. Mr. Thayer suggested that the personnel system be decentralized to some extent. Recruitment, certification, and classification are areas that individual departments could successfully take charge of. Departmental personnel offices could classify their own unique positions, thus increasing accuracy and eliminating Division of Personnel paperwork. Classificaiton of general state-wide jobs could go through the Division of Personnel. He agreed with the concept of promotions within a department whenever possible and of hiring new people at entry-level jobs.

Discussion followed regarding the need for a person to be on several registers for classifications of the same type. Ken Kareen explained that it was necessary to operate that way because higher levels of the same type of job may require additional skills such as supervisory abilities, while placing less emphasis on technical skills.

The Division of Personnel's veto power over classification was discussed and seen as a problem. Many people see the division as impossible to work with, or through, because of the time involved.

Lynda McCurry explained that classification changes need to be looked at when a person has a change in responsibility. If you have a change in tasks, that may call for a re-classification. If you have a larger volume of work, that may call for an additional person at the same classification.

Danny Plotnik, Coordinator of the Office on Aging, addressed the commission next on the problem of workers in the federally-funded SCSEP Program being classified as temporary employees. He introduced Eileen Rehwald, who expanded on the problem. Several of her people have been terminated because of the time limitations on State temporary employees.

These employees, under the federal program, were still eligible for additional hours of work. Also, federal guidelines preclude labeling employees under the SCSEP Program. She introduced one of the employees affected by this problem, Luberta Escholt. Ms. Escholt appealed to the commission to try to do something that would help her and others in the same situation.

Chairman Ray directed the matter to the Classification of Employees subcommittee to look into establishing these as partially-exempt positions. The APEA will also look into this matter. There should be some work completed by November 30.

Mary McClinton was the next speaker. Mary presently has a case being considered by the Human Rights Commission. She was employed by the Department of Community & Regional Affairs, which reorganized its staff, and had been excluded from transfer to another job. She was the only member of the staff to be excluded. Even though she was among the top five on a large number of registers, she has not found another state job. She would like to see the system improved so that this does not happen to others.

Some discussion followed on related problems. Frank Flavin hoped that if Ms. McClinton was found to be qualified and was indeed discriminated against that some disciplinary action would be taken against those persons responsible.

LaRae Jones, Personnel Officer from the Governor's Office, spoke next. She commented on how little training there was in the state system to provide new employees with the technical training needed on the workings of the specific systems. There have been two training sessions since last May, but she felt there should be more. People could do their jobs more effectively if they didn't have to learn by trial and error.

Public participation ended.

Chairman Ray made additions to subcommittee memberships. Ken Spray, Niel Thomas, and Lynda McCurry were added to the Categories of Employees subcommittee. John Pugh was added to the Collective Bargaining subcommittee.

Chairman Ray reported that the Centralization/Decentralization subcommittee met, heard testimony, and will meet again.

Questions arose regarding the appropriate subcommittee for classification and hiring processes. The responsibility was given to the Centralization/Decentralization subcommittee. Niel Thomas asked if it would be possible to rename the committee. It was moved by acclaimation that the subcommittee be renamed "Classification, Certification, and Recruitment".

Mr. Thomas asked whether the Commission needed to investigate the other classes of state employees; namely, partially exempt and fully exempt.

Mr. Spray stated that there are presently 253 vacant permanent positions in jobs covered by APSE members. He suggested that the situation be investigated.

Chairman Ray stated that the meetings would continue in the order given previously; the subcommittees followed by the full committee. Work will be given at least one week in advance of the meeting dates. Also, note that a quorum of eight people is not necessary to hold meaningful discussions.

Representative Eliason recommended that the "Merit Increase Paper" be referred to the Merit System/Collective Bargaining subcommittee. It was agreed.

Chairman Ray read correspondence received by the Commission from Loren Jones. The letter was referred to the Certification/Classification/Recruitment subcommittee.

Meeting dates were set for the next meetings in Anchorage. They are November 30 and December 1, 1978. All members will be notified of the meeting place and can receive a T.R. from Legislative Affairs.

The next meeting was tentatively set for December 12 and 13 in Fairbanks.

The meeting was adjourned at 4:00 p.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
Full Commission Meeting
Juneau
November 16, 1978

ADDENDA

The following is an addenda to the Full Commission Minutes for the Blue Ribbon Commission hearing of November 16, 1978. The addenda was proposed by Ken Kareen, to be inserted on Page 2, as a substitute for Paragraph 5. The addenda was adopted at the Full Commission hearing on January 10, 1979:

Discussion followed regarding the need for an applicant to take different examinations when the job classes applied for are in the same class series (i.e., Accountant III, IV, V). Ken Kareen explained that different skills may be required and test contents emphasize those differences. Tests for a lower level job are concentrated on technical knowledge in aspects of the work, while higher level jobs in series make more demands on supervisory/management skills and knowledge, which are the subject of testing.

Also, Page 2, Paragraph 6, should read:

The Division of Budget and Management's veto power over classification studies was discussed and seen as a problem.

MINUTES

CATEGORIES OF EMPLOYEES SUBCOMMITTEE HEARING
November 16, 1978

The Subcommittee on Categories of Employees met at 9:00 a.m., Thursday, November 16, 1978, in Room 123 A of the State Capitol Building, Representative Joseph McKinnon, Chairperson, presiding.

Representative McKinnon suggested that the subcommittee identify short and long-term goals.

TOPICS IDENTIFIED

1. Use of Temporary Employees: The use of temporaries circumvents the merit system because departments are not required to hire from the register. Temporaries do not receive most state employee benefits and are therefore cheaper to employ. Departments can hire individuals as temporaries in order to allow them to fulfill experience or residency requirements and then hire them as permanent employees.

2. Contractual Employees: The same kinds of abuses (by-passing of tests, eligibility lists and mininum job qualifications) that occur in the use of temporaries can occur when departments contract out work that could be done by permanent employees.

3. Categories of State Employees: Is it appropriate for the state to have all of the categories presently in use--permanent full-time, permanent part-time, permanent seasonal, probationary, emergency, temporary and contractual?

4. Proliferation of Unique Job Classifications: Alaska has an excessive number of classifications when compared with other states having a similar number of state employees.

5. Equal Pay for Equal Work: Job categories which were created many years ago tend to be set at lower salary ranges than those created more recently, even though they may require the same kinds of training, experience and responsibilities. The salary ranges of some positions, such as secretarial, are tied to the salary range of the employee's supervisor rather than the requirements of the job.

6. Delays in processing applications to get on eligibility registers.

7. University of Alaska employees and court system employees are outside the state's merit system because of constitutional provisions.

8. Effect of the Rule of Five on Affirmative Action: Where EEO problems exist, affirmative action hiring can be accomplished by establishing EEO compliance as a justification for looking below the top five candidates.

9. The state's system of reclassifying positions.

SUGGESTIONS ON OPERATION OF THE COMMISSION

1. The Committee Structure: Care should be taken that problems are not overlooked because they fail to fall within existing committee structure. After more public input, the committee structure should be examined to consider modifications. Is the Merit System/Collective Bargaining Subcommittee necessary?

2. Adequate input from program managers who have particular knowledge of problems in the state's personnel system needs to be gathered. The Commission should consider preparing a questionnaire for distribution to state employees.

3. A crash course or dictionary on the terminology and paper flow in the personnel system for commission members. Staff will work on this.

JOB CATEGORIES IN THE STATE PERSONNEL SYSTEM

1. Trainees are generally employed in short term, probationary positions in which the employee involved is trained for a particular permanent job classification. Individuals employed under a federal program in which there is no assurance of continued funding (for example, the CETA program) are also classified as trainees.

2. Permanent seasonal positions are used where the job is needed for less than the full year, and departments concerned expect the individual to return to fill that job from year to year. For example, Fish & Game has salmon counters who are permanent seasonal employees. If the department does not expect to have the same individual returning to the job from year to year, then the department lists the job as a temporary position. The Personnel Division encourages departments to use the permanent seasonal category, but since there are adequate applicants for temporary jobs, departments with budget limitations will use the temporary category.

3. Emergency employees are appointed by some departments only where there is danger to life or property. Others will use an emergency appointment where it saves them money. An emergency appointment is authorized for 30 days with three one-month extensions possible. The employee does not have to meet the minimum qualifications, and the department can appoint to any job classification it wishes. Division of Personnel is notified of the appointment after it has been made. There are two categories of recurring emergency appointments: escorts for mental patients and for prisoners.

4. The temporary employee category was designed to meet the short-term needs of an agency. It can be used where a permanent position becomes vacant, and the agency needs to have someone to do the work during the selection process. Temporaries usually do only part of the work assigned to the permanent position.

A temporary position lasts for a period of six months with a possible three-month extension. Unlike emergency appointments, temporary employees must meet the minimum qualifications of the job class to which they are appointed, and the duties they are to perform must be consistent with the duties of that job classification.

The Division of Personnel does a post-audit of the departments temporary positions. Presently, the division examines about 10% of the positions. The division has the authority to remove a person improperly filling a temporary position. It gives notice to the department involved, and the department has two weeks to correct the error (for example, by reclassifying the positon to one for which the holder has the necessary minimum qualifications), or to let the employee go.

In making temporary appointments, the department is not required to consult the register for the job classification. The Department of Health & Social Services is the only department that has a policy of hiring temporary employees from the register. A system could be established to accomodate a requirement that departments hire temporaries from the register, though it would require some time to ensure that applicants on the temporary register were willing to be considered for temporary positions and to speed up the process of providing registers to departments.

Sometimes departments are put in a position of having to use temporaries because of a delay in receiving federal funds. The department makes timely application for a program to the federal government indicating, for example July 1 as the starting date of the state program. The department gets no formal response from the federal government until August 15--45 days into the program's life. In order to get the program going quickly, the department hires temporaries immediately, rather than take additional time to advertise and screen applicants for permanent positions. The department may have received verbal assurances that the funding would be approved prior to receipt of the formal approval. It could therefore have gambled on formal approval being granted, and could have begun hiring for permanent positions to permit program operation as soon as federal funds were received. However, if the federal money did not appear, the state would have to pay for salaries it had not intended to finance. Emergency appointments are not used in the same way, as an alternative to permanent appointments.

Mr. Thomas suggested that the use of emergency appointments could be expanded, but the requirements for temporary appointments should be tightened. If an agency had a vacant secretarial position, it could hire someone instantly for the five days it would take to hire a secretary from the register.

APEA has gathered information on the use of temporaries by the state, which show that many of the needs temporaries are filling are permanent needs, either seasonal or full-time. Pat Murphy presented the following data:

	TOTAL # OF TEMPS	DEPT. OF FISH & GAME	DEPT. OF LABOR
July, 1978	1,701	522	93
July, 1977	1,863	508	158
July 1976	1,887	500	112

In answer to a question about whether those needs are year-long or seasonal, Mr. Murphy provided the following figures:

	TOTAL # OF TEMPS	DEPT. OF FISH & GAME
November, 1977	1,146	163
November, 1976	1,196	177
November, 1975	1,148	109

Mr. Murphy asserted that the Department of Fish & Game appears to have a recurring need for some 500 to 525 permanent employees each summer, and the Department of Labor some 100 to 150 permanent employees.

Mr. Kareen pointed out that a temporary position stays on the payroll, whether or not it is filled by an employee, until the department fills out papers indicating that position is no longer needed. Wages are drawn only according to the time sheets turned in to the Division of Finance. Mr. Murphy indicated that his figures were not checked for whether the position was actually filled.

Mr. Murphy stated that he had no problems with managers having discretion to hire temporaries for 45 to 60 days, but did have problems with 6 to 9 month terms.

Mr. Kareen asked whether there was anything that precluded APEA from negotiations on the length of time of a temporary position. Mr. Murphy explained that Mr. Hunt held the position that the length of temporary employment was statutory, and therefore non-negotiable.

Eileen Maki, a Public Health Nurse I (PHN I) working at the Juneau Health Center, spoke. She identified problems of concern to PHN's.

1.) Classification: At present, Public Health Nurse I's are classified at Range 14, Public Health Nurse II's at Range 15, and Public Health Nurse III's at Range 17. Public Health Nurse Trainees are at Range 12. In February, 1978, the Chief of the Section of Nursing requested that all PHN's prepare P402's describing their duties and justifying reclassification of those positions to higher salary ranges. The deadline for delivering the P402's to each nurse's supervisor was March 17. The forms were reviewed, and in early April, they were sent to the Section of Nursing for further review and for the development of a uniform job description for each job class. They apparently remained in the Section of Nursing for about six months, until the end of October or the beginning of November.

On November 3, Ms. Maki and another PHN I from the Juneau Health Center, Constance Trollan, met with Mike McMillan, a Personnel Analyst with the Division of Personnel. Mr. McMillan told then that he had just received the requests for reclassification and that he would not be able to perform his evaluation until after the Division of Budget & Management had identified funding for the potential increase of the Health & Social Services budget.

At the November 3 meeting, Ms. Maki and Ms. Trollan discussed with Mr. McMillan the discrepancy between the salary ranges assigned PHN's and those assigned other positions in state employment, such as institutional nurses. In particular, they questioned Mr. McMillan about the classification of Physician's Assistants to Range 17, while PHN I's are at Range 14.

The justification for classifying Physician's Assistants reads, in its entirety:

> This new class aligns internally with the class of Associate Attorney I at SR-17. It also aligns with SR-17 pay-wise for similar jobs in private industry. (Memo from Daniel H. Morrissey, Chief, Classification and Employee Development, Division of Personnel & Labor Relations, and Lee Antrim, Personnel Analyst, April 15, 1976)

Mr. McMillan checked the PHN files kept by the Division of Personnel for a classification analysis for PHN I's to compare with that of the Physician's Assistant. Apparently, none exists, since Mr. McMillan was unable to find one.

Ms. Maki explained the educational and training requirements for PHN I's and Physician's Assistants. A PHN must have a B.A. in Nursing from a school accredited by the National League of Nursing, with course work in the public health field. She or he must be licensed as a Registered Nurse by the State of Alaska. A PHN is authorized to practice within her area of expertise without the supervision of an M.D., including diagnosis and treatment of some conditions. In addition, she or he is responsible for nursing kinds of care for some of the patients, beyond the responsibilities of Physician's Assistants. Physician's Assistant is required by the state to have a Certificate of Competency from an Physician's Assistants Program. The state does not examine the source of the certificate to evaluate its program nor is a college degree required. Some have been military medical programs, others have more extensive training. The state does not have an examination and licensing program for Physician's Assistants, as it does for Registered Nurses. Physician's Assistants are allowed to diagnose and treat conditions within the level of their training and are required to be supervised by an M.D.

Some discrepancy in range assignments may result from the fact that the PHN classification has existed since statehood, while the Physician's Assistant classification was only recently created. Of more concern is the fact that apparently all of the Physician's Assistants employed by the state are men, and all of the PHN's are women.

2. Career Ladder: At present, there is no career ladder in the PHN's field, since there are only a limited number of supervisory positions and the itinerant PHN is located only in rural areas. To advance beyond the PHN I level, an employee is forced to relocate.

The Trainee position cannot be considered an entry-level position for PHN I, since advancement to that level requires a B.A. with public health course work. Experience cannot be considered a substitute.

There is a PHN Trainee in Ketchikan who has just completed a training program in Women's Health Care, but despite the added skill she brings to her job, she remains a PHN Trainee because she lacks a four-year degree.

COMMITTEE DISCUSSION

1. Reclassification procedures: Mr. Kareen explained that the Division of Personnel policy requiring identification of funding sources before proceeding with a review of the reclassification requests was established when Joe Henry was Commissioner of the Department of Administration. Because of the magnitude of the reclassification of PHN's, the Division of Personnel can only proceed after it receives approval from the Governor's Division of Budget & Management, which will first get approval from the department in question. This ensures that the Governor is informed of the fiscal impact of proposed changes. Given its present level of staffing, the Division of Personnel can only afford to do a limited number of reclassification studies, and this system provides some insurance that those on which further action will be taken receive priority. The Division of Personnel does not have the authority to change this system unilaterally.

A member of the audience pointed out that a budget document justifying the requested reclassifications should be prepared by the department and sent with the P402's to the Division of Personnel for transmittal to the Division of Budget & Management and that if this were not done, that Budget & Management might refuse to act. Mr. Thomas pointed out that in private industry, this kind of insistance on paper flow would not hold up a valid personnel action.

Representative McKinnon asked whether a department could reclassify a position to become effective at the beginning of the next fiscal year if funding were approved by the legislature. Mr. Murphy answered that that was proposed for the position of Pioneer Home Aides, but the Commissioner of Administration refused to allow it.

It was proposed that the system be changed to provide that the Division of Personnel have the responsibility for initiating reclassifications where inequities exist. Personnel should make its recommendations to the Division of Budget & Management, which would have the responsibility for identifying funding needs. If Budget & Management determined that sufficient funds were not available in the department, then it would prepare a supplemental appropriation for submission to the legislature. Once the Division of Personnel decides that a reclassification is valid, the those positions should have to be appropriately reclassified.

At a minimum, the Division of Personnel should make recommendations on all reclassification requests submitted to it so that the Division of Budget & Management has sufficient information on which to make its decision. APEA has found a number of instances in which Budget & Management refused to ask for additional funding for what were valid reclassifications, and therefore, the legislature was never presented with the question on funding for its consideration.

2. Potential State liability for failure to reclassify: If the PHN's of the state choose to bring suit under the Federal Equal Pay Act, the state would face a potential liability in the neighborhood of $2.5 million. Assuming 50 PHN's at Range 14 earn an average of $20,000 annually, the total present salary of PHN's is $1 million. If PHN's were reclassified to Range 17 (the Physician's Assistant range) averaging $26,000 annually, the total salaries would be $1.3 million. The Federal Equal Pay Act allows consideration of the salary levels of the past two years, and if the plaintiff/employee proves willful misconduct, damages may be awarded for the pst three years. In addition, the court may award attorney's fees and interest to successful litigants. In some cases, attorneys will work on a contingent-fee basis. Instead of charging clients by the hour for time spent on the case and requiring payment as the case progresses, an attorney will charge clients a predetermined percentage of the judgement in the event the case is successful. This enables clients who cannot afford to pay attorney's fees in advance to bring suit.

The state should recognize that there is a chance that if suit were brought, the state could lose. In private industry, that kind of potential liability is enough to cause the employer to ensure that appropriate changes are made so that the employees affected do not choose to sue.

One of the reasons that the state does not respond in the same manner is the budgetary system of paying for judgements. Payment for judgements against the state is proposed by an Attorney General's bill, which the legislature rarely scrutinizes. On the other hand, increased funds for reclassifications of positions within a department become part of the department's operating budget, which the legislature may examine and question in some detail. The system therefore makes it easier to pay a more expensive judgement than for the department to act on its own initiative at a lower overall cost.

Pat Murphy pointed out that the legislature appropriates money for permanent positions (PCN's) as part of the general appropriation. Therefore, permanent positions do not decrease the funds available for departmental programs. However, temporary positions are not part of that general appropriation, and funding for temporary employees may have to come from program funds.

3. Legislative budgetary process: Representative McKinnon noted that the House automatically, in most instances, adds the necessary funds for reclassifications to the maintenance budget. Legislative oversight should not hinder valid reclassifications.

Senator Ray cautioned that a decision by a department to reclassify positions does not bind the legislature to fund all of those positions. The legislature cannot reclassify the positions, but it can refuse to fund some of them, causing the department to have to decrease the number of its employees in order to pay the increased amount.

4. Letter to the Governor: Representative McKinnon, as Chairperson of the subcommittee, will write Governor Hammond requesting his position on the reclassification difficulties experienced by the PHN's. The staff will assist in drafting the letter.

5. Future subcommittee meetings: The next subcommittee meetings will focus on temporary employees. Later meetings will consider the reclassification question.

CLASSIFICATION, CERTIFICATION & RECRUITMENT SUBCOMMITTEE HEARING

November 15, 1978

The Subcommittee on Classification, Certification & Recruitment met at 1:30 p.m. on Wednesday, November 15, 1978. Chairman Bill Ray opened the meeting to public testimony.

CENTRALIZED PERSONNEL OFFICERS

Fred Cook, a member of the Confidential Employees Association, spoke on behalf of the Association. A poll of its membership showed that the personnel officers of the state believe that the personnel functions of the state should not all be placed in the Division of Personnel. Reasons given were that the Division of Personnel regulates rather than provides services and that personnel officers employed directly by the Division of Personnel would be seen by the departments in which they worked as outsiders, owing no loyalty to the department. They would therefore be less effective in working with the departmental planning process and meeting departmental staffing needs.

Lynda McCurry spoke of her experience as a personnel officer employed by the Division of Personnel and placed in a department from 1973 to 1975. She found that there was considerable friction between the commissioner of her department and the Director of Personnel about her role. Others in her department looked upon her as an outsider, and the expectations about her duties were unclear. The stormy relationship between her department and personnel, partly caused by personality problems, led to an extensive contract being written about her position.

Under the existing system, personnel officers should be placed directly under the head of the agency in which they are working, so that they have the base of authority to operate effectively. The relationship between Personnel and personnel officers needs to be changed.

Senator Ray asked Mr. Kareen for the Division's problems with the decentralization of personnel officers. The problem is in having a personnel officer provide adequate information to the Division for the action which needs to be taken. Although the Division tries to rely on personnel officers, sometimes they have to meet with program managers to get accurate information. If the information is inadequate or incorrect, then the personnel analyst may have to return the forms to the department in question to be redone, causing considerable delay. In response to a question of whether the Division of Personnel entered into the departmental grievance collective bargaining process, Ms. McCurry's answer was negative. They had overturned an a[illegible]ement which she had negotiated, however.

TEMPORARY HIRING

Mr. Kareen explained that each department has the authority to establish job qualifications and to hire whomever they wish, provided that the employee meets the minimum qualifications for that job class, and that Alaska hire laws are complied with. Division of Personnel audits a certain number of the temporary positions after the department has acted to ensure compliance.

CLASSIFICATION

Ms. McCurry told the committee that at present the final decision on the classification of a particular position is made by the Division of Personnel. Normally, the Division can process the papers to create a new position within two days after receiving them from the department. The classification is made by a personnel analyst after reviewing the department's recommendations. She suggested that decisions about classification of unique job classes and recruitment for open positions within them become the responsibilities of the department concerned. All decisions should be made in full compliance with the merit principles of the state. General job classes should remain the responsibility of Personnel.

The commissioner of a department has the authority to abolish a particular job within the department and contract out the work, without review by the Division of Personnel. Should the commissioner decide to increase the salary range of an employee of the department, then the Division of Personnel has and should retain a reviewing and controlling role.

The Division of Personnel puts first priority on the classification of new positions, and second on reclassifications of existing jobs. Last upon their list is the updating of duties on existing jobs. All departments should review the requirements of each job every two or three years to determine whether the position should be reclassified because the duties have changed.

Frank Flavin told the committee that the Ombudsman's office has found two major problem areas: isolated instances of individual abuse which need attention, and frustration with the time consumed in going through the Division of Personnel which leads program managers to cut corners. In addition, the Division is so occupied with day to day functions, it is incapable of devoting time to its audit functions.

DELEGATION OF PERSONNEL FUNCTIONS TO DEPARTMENTS

Phyllis Woodman, Personnel Officer for the Department of Education, told the committee of the system her department uses. Staff from the department worked with the Division of Personnel to learn how to evaluate applications for the unique job classes within their department. Division of Personnel collects applications for those job classes and then sends them to the department. It takes a day or two for the department to evaluate, score and rank them. They are then returned to the Division of Personnel for inclusion on the eligibility register. New listings appear on the division's computer within five to seven days. Division of Personnel audits the department's work to ensure compliance with the merit system. Mr. Kareen pointed out that this system is available to other departments, should they choose to learn how to do it, but that Division of Personnel is responsible for insurance that the merit system principles are adhered to, and therefore that training is necessary.

Ken O'Donnell, Personnel Officer from the Department of Health & Social Services, told the committee that when Health & Social Services tried handling classification and certification for the 150 unique job classes, they found that they did not have the staff to properly handle the volume of paper and therefore they no longer use that system, except for a few laboratory and nursing assistant positions. Health & Social Services has a large number of employees and a high rate of turnover in some classes. The system used in the Department of Education would only work if the staffing in Health & Social Services was increased. The department has not had problems in making changes in its 150 unique job classes through the Division of Personnel.

Mr. O'Donnell stated that he believes that the job of personnel officer belongs within the departmental structure and that it is important for the personnel officer to have ready access to the commissioner of the department. Otherwise, too much pressure can be generated by program managers.

Roger Thayer, Personnel Officer with the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities, spoke. He indicated that Commissioner Harris of the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities favors the complete decentralization of personnel functions, with all decisions left to the individual department. Mr. Thayer, himself, favors decentralization of some personnel functions. The Department of Transportation and Public Facilities presently handles recruitment, examination and certification in more than 50 job classes which are unique to that department. Division of Personnel establishes minimum qualifications for those positions. If experience shows that the minimum qualifications either screen out all applicants by being too stringent, or fail to screen out applicants who lack the necessary skills, then the department asks the Division of Personnel to change the minimum qualifications, and the department regrades those applications in the job class. Some controls need to be kept on a department's use of redefinition of minimum qualifications to avoid abuse.

ELIGIBILITY LISTS

Ms. McCurry indicated that the major problem with the hiring process is the time it takes an applicant to get on the eligibility list. Mr. Kareen said that being put on a register can take from 10 days to 8 or 9 weeks. Evaluation of work experience and education takes longer than grading the tests given by the department, although time for notification of examinations adds to the time required for those positions tested.

The Ombudsman's office receives complaints that the eligibility lists sent to departments are irrelevant--either the list is too long to be useful or it lacks people with the qualifications to do the job.

Ms. McCurry said that the time that it takes a department to receive a list of eligibles is short, although in the case of clerical registers, the lists are usually out of date, due to failure of the people on the list to advise the Division of a change in address or status.

Mr. Thayer said that because the Division of Personnel lacks adequate staff, there is little coordination between program managers and the Division on establishing criteria to analyze the applications for a particular position. That problem would be resolved by delegating responsibility for hiring in unique job classifications to the individual departments. Ms. McCurry added that even if the department did not become solely responsible for rating applicants, that when there is a difference between the department and the division about the rating for a particular candidate in a unique job class, the department should make the final decision.

Mr. Spray stated that if an applicant uses the "magic words" in detailing his past experience, the Division of Personnel will rate that applicant much higher than someone with the same experience who hasn't used those key words.

The Ombudsman's office receives complaints from people who have been in the top 5 on the register for some time and have never been considered for a position.

The Human Rights Commission has found that minority applicants for state jobs have been having difficulty in actually being hired. Minority applicants are frequently found in the middle of the register and therefore, departments who are required to hire from the top five do not have an opportunity to consider them for open positions.

Mr. Flavin asked whether there was a meaningful distinction between the top five and the top ninety-five on the common job class registers. Mr. Thayer indicated that for the most part, the distinction is artificial. Mr. Flavin suggested that the Division of Personnel should select those applicants who are generally qualified, without ranking, so that more time could be spent on other division functions. Mr. Kareen pointed out that where a particular job takes unique skills, the supervisor can select someone from below the top five, provided that a written justification is filed. For example, in data processing there are a number of different machines, languages and systems. If the top five on the register do not have a background in the particular system in use, the the supervisor can look lower on the list for someone who does. Mr. Thomas pointed out that this system can also be used to address affirmative action, where a department has been found to have a problem in that area.

Mr. Thayer related that the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities does not use this selective certification system, although it had been used in the past. There had been problems, and the practice was dropped. Most of the department's positions are filled through promotions rather than through hiring new people, so the limitation on considering the top five has not been a problem. People on the promotional list are not counted when the top five are indicated.

Mr. Flavin suggested that the Division of Personnel should audit the use of promotional lists for hiring to ensure compliance with the merit principles of the state.

There was discussion about the requirement that applicants take the examinations for each level in a job class such as secretary or accountant. Mr. Kareen explained that one reason the state requires tests at each level is to provide a fair system for ranking candidates at lower level positions. Studies have shown that when switching to different levels, there is no consistent grouping of higher-level applicants. Further, lower levels in a job class may require more extensive technical knowledge, while the higher, supervisory level will require more managerial and supervisory skills. This is true, for example, with the positions of Accountant III and Accountant IV.

Many job applicants with the state expect to eventually be hired, once they have been placed on a register. They become upset when others, lower on the list, receive jobs before they do. Confusion may result from thinking of the register as a union-hall hiring list, although the Division of Personnel provides information explaining what being on the register means. In addition, a number of the higher level jobs within a class are filled by promotion, limiting those people who are considered and hired from the register.

RURAL RECRUITMENT AND HIRING

Representative Sally Smith addressed the committee from Fairbanks through the teleconferencing system. She pointed out that, at the regional level, the state personnel system functions even less quickly than in Juneau. Some personnel actions are routed through Anchorage offices before reaching Juneau for a decision. Job specifications may not reflect the skills needed to do the work in the regional office and therefore, the list of eligibles provided will be inappropriate.

For filling positions in the bush areas, the minimum qualifications become a more severe problem. Frequently, the educational requirements in the minimum qualifications preclude hiring someone who could do the work lacking the formal education specified. More emphasis should be placed on knowledge of the immediate community and its needs, with less emphasis on education in writing specifications for rural jobs. Recruitment of candidates for particular jobs could be handled on a decentralized basis, provided the Division of Personnel maintained an active auditing role to guard against favoritism.

Rep. Smith also said that being removed from central departmental decision-making causes other problems. While she was working for the Department of Community and Regional Affairs, she tried to fire an unsatisfactory employee. She was required by the department to schedule an interview between the employee and the department's personnel officer. The personnel officer did not come to Fairbanks until after the employee's probationary period had ended.

ALASKA PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYEES HIRING

The APSE contract with the state affects the procedures for hiring their members. When there is a vacancy, the union is notified of the position and the skills required. They search their membership list and then send over the next person on their list who is qualified for that particular job. If the department does not hire that person, then they send over a second and so on. The union is required to abide by the Department of Labor's policy of Alaska hire and of local hire.

EFFECT OF FEDERAL REQUIREMENTS

Federal regulations governing how states must hire for programs which are funded in part by federal money limit the options which Alaska can consider without losing that source of money. Originally, Alaska used a Rule of Three when hiring for a position. That proved too restrictive, and the state tried a system in which applicants were tested and ranked without limit to the numbers provided to the department. Then the U.S. Civil Service Commission stated that such a system was not consistent with the merit system required for hiring with federal monies and therefore, the state adopted a Rule of Five, with modifications permited through selective certification for unique requirements of a particular position. The state must conform to federal regulations on hiring in any program which receives federal money for its operation. The federal regulations have recently been changed.

Don Fisher moved that the committee request an Attorney General's opinion on the definition of "merit system" and the conflicts that arise from various federal regulations. The motion was adopted without objection. An opinion will also be obtained from the Legislative Affairs Agency.

Personnel Act Review Commission Meeting

The second meeting of the Personnel Act Review Commission was called to order in Room 123 of the State Capitol by Chairman Bill Ray at 1:30 p.m., October 3, 1978. Following roll call, Don Fisher reported that he had received more than fifty applications for the director's position, had interviewed just about all of those applicants and, in consultation with the chairman, was ready to make a selection in the next few days. Mr. Fisher reported that there was a possibility of using office space on the tenth floor of the State Office Building adjacent to the division of personnel, but that it would not be available until November 1. Senator Ray reviewed the actions of the last meeting and asked if anyone wanted to contribute public input concerning their problems with the personnel system.

Violet Thetford testified and was concerned with hiring practices and felt that the entire personnel system is bogged down with paper. There had been a problem with redundant testing. Mr. Hunt confirmed the basic facts.

Rosalee Walker testified on problems of in-house promotions. She felt that making political appointments to higher level positions instead of promoting long-time, career employees was bad for morale and resulted in poorly trained management. She hoped the commission might design a different system to alleviate this problem.

Gregg Erickson, director of the Research Division of the Legislative Affairs Agency, was asked to the table. Senator Ray explained formally to Mr. Erickson that he had no particular problems with the Legislative Affairs Agency staff and hoped that the issue which arose at the last meeting could be considered closed. Mr. Erickson was agreeable and thanked Senator Ray.

Chairman Ray brought up a problem which had been called to his attention in correspondence from the project coordinator for the office of the aging. The state personnel division has classified Title IX, Older American enrollees as "temporary" so they are now terminated after six months. Pat Hunt was asked to look into this problem and come back to the committee next time with either an answer or a resolution for consideration by the committee. Pat Murphy objected to the assignment. Following clarifying discussion, Mr. Murphy withdrew his objection.

Correspondence regarding priorities for the commission's work was received from Niel Thomas, executive director of the Alaska State Commission for Human Rights, Pat Murphy, executive director of the Alaska Public Employees Association and from Lynda McCurry for the Confidential Employees Association.

The commission discussed the establishment of priorities for subcommittee assignment. Chairman Ray cautioned members to take a non-partisan view on subcommittee assignments. Pat Murphy moved that three subcommittees be established and that "categories of employees" (see A.P.E.A. letter) be one of three priorities to be studied by a subcommittee. The motion passed without objection.

Pat Hunt moved that the commission make a priority of the determination whether we should have a central personnel system or whether it should be decentralized or whether it should be partially decentralized. Don Fisher proposed an amendment to the effect that recruitment, examination, classification and pay be handled separately. Following discussion, Mr. Fisher withdrew the amendment. The motion carried without objection.

Bob Gates moved that the commission make a priority of addressing the merit system and collective bargaining and their relationship. Following discussion, the motion passed without objection.

The commission discussed Equal Employment Opportunity, dress (cleanliness) code for state employees and the problems of training and job performance assessment. Bob Gates suggested that interested members inform themselves in the area of job performance evaluation and ways of dealing with instances of excellent or substandard performance and that the subject be raised again at the next meeting.

John Pugh moved that the commission recommend legislation which would provide for periodic, external audits of the personnel system like the one carried out the the Division of Legislative Audit in 1977. This motion passed without objection.

Chairman Ray raised the question of the job register. Some discussion of this, as well as the hiring of the commission's staff, followed.

Don Fisher moved to clarify the "centralization/decentralization" topic. He moved that the topic on centralization/decentralization include but not be limited to the study of the problems of certification, recruitment, classification and pay, examination, and equal opportunity and that the subcommittee consider the personnel law, the personnel rules and the existing practices and that they give their recommendations as to the solutions of any problems they might find. The motion passed without objection.

The three subcommittees were formed. They are composed of volunteers from the commission with the understanding that a member, through a representative, could serve on more than one subcommittee and that Chairman Ray would appoint a legislator on each subcommittee as chairman. Each subcommittee chairman was asked to appoint a vice chairman, with the understanding that Representative McKinnon (absent) would do so as soon as possible. Chairman Ray is an ex officio member of each subcommittee.

The subcommittees are as follows:

Centralization/Decentralization Subcommittee

Bill Ray, Chairman
Don Fisher, Vice Chairman
Myrt Charney
John Pugh

MINUTES

Personnel Act Review Commission

Meeting of September 15, 1978

The following summary minutes are arranged topically, not chronologically, to indicate the actions of the Commission.

The first meeting of the Personnel Act Review Commission (L.R. #27) was called to order at 9:00 a.m., September 15, 1978 by Jack Doyle, Executive Director, Legislative Affairs Agency for Representative Mike Miller, Chairman, Alaska Legislative Council. A list of those in attendance is attached.

Officers

Following the call to order and introductions, Senator Bill Ray was elected Chairman and assumed the chair. Don Fisher was elected Vice Chairman. Myrt Charney was elected as recording secretary.

Staff Support

It was decided that the Commission would not hire a consultant as primary staff but would reserve the option to use one for specific tasks in the future. Senator Ray felt it would not be appropriate to use Legislative Affairs Agency staff exclusively in the role of director/researcher. It was decided that Don Fisher should proceed to advertise and interview for an administrator/research staff person at salary range 20 and for a full time secretary, preferably with shorthand skills, at a salary range not to exceed 12. At the request of the Chairman, Mr. Erickson of the Legislative Affairs Agency directed Mr. Humphreys to assist the Commission with such additional research as they may require, with priorities as among the Commission's various research tasks to be determined by the Commission.

Budget Considerations

Myrt Charney indicated that $57,000 is currently available to the Commission through June 30, 1979 unless a supplemental appropriation is received or additional Legislative Council funds are made available.

Time Frame

It was suggested that the work of the Committee would probably carry on for at least eight months and possibly up to two years or so.

Office Space

Bob Gates said that permanent quarters could probably be provided through the administration. He was asked to check on that and let Don Fisher know. Senator Ray pointed out that Room 123A in the Capitol Building or other legislative space could be used for meetings, etc. even after the legislature convenes.

Scope and Priorities of the Study

There was some discussion of the scope of the study. Should it broadly embrace the entire personnel system including collective bargaining or be directed primarily toward a revision of the Personnel Act? It was decided that members who were so inclined should submit their thoughts on the scope, priorities and objectives of the Commission in writing at the next meeting. Senator Ray asked Ken Kareen and Pat Murphy to prepare presentations for the group.

There was some discussion of public hearings or meetings and the use of teleconferencing. The general conclusion was that the public needs to be made aware of the study and be given ample opportunity for input before any final product is forthcoming. It was suggested with no objection that releases be given to the press which would alert the public to the Commission's existence and intention to solicit input.

Membership of the Commission

There was some discussion of the possibility of adding additional members to the Commission. A motion by Ken Spray to add a representative from the Alaska Public Safety Employees Association failed. Senator Ray asked Myrt Charney to notify the PSEA that their informal participation was welcomed and to invite them to present their problems to the Commission.

Next Meeting

The next meeting was scheduled for Wednesday, October 3 at 1:30 p.m. in room 123 of the State Capitol, Juneau.

Ken Kareen requested that Legislative Affairs legal staff compile laws that deal with the personnel system besides those in AS 39.25. Senator Ray asked for a survey of the administrative code as well. Pat Murphy was asked to provide material on departmental personnel procedures.

At Frank Flavin's request, Myrt Charney was asked to provide Legislative Audit reports from the past. Mr. Charney was also asked to keep loose-leaf notebooks with minutes and other relevant materials for commission members.

At Janet Bradley's request, Ken Humphreys was asked to provide a copy of the various current collective bargaining agreements.

The meeting was adjourned at 10:55 a.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau, Alaska
December 15, 1982

MINUTES

Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order at 1:40 p.m. The roll call showed Senator Ray, Representative Jack Fuller, Myrt Charney, John Chenoweth, James Fisher (alternate for Commissioner Rudd), Lois Jund, Mike McMullen (alternate for Ken Kareen), Roger Thayer (alternate for Lynda McCurry), Greg O'Claray, Bob Mourant (alternate for John Pugh), and Lee Powelson (alternate for Cherie Shelley) as present.

The commission reviewed a letter dated December 14, 1982, from Allen K. Korhonen, Acting Commissioner of the Department of Health and Social Services, concerning the status of medical doctors employed by the department. Mr. O'Claray moved that the commission sponsor legislation as requested by the department to place public health doctors in the classified service. There was no objection and the motion passed by unanimous consent.

The commission considered information on the state's nepotism statute. Ms. Jund moved that the commission reintroduce the legislation on nepotism that it had sponsored in the 1981 legislative session. There was no objection and the motion passed by unanimous consent.

The commission discussed recommendations against rehire. Senator Ray suggested that perhaps a committee of impartial individuals should review every performance evaluation which recommends that an employee not be rehired before that recommendation becomes part of the employee's personnel file. Ms. Jund added that a two-step review process might be appropriate. A departmental panel would review the evaluations before they were approved by the department. A second panel would review them before they became part of the employee's personnel file. She also suggested that the information on the back of the personnel evaluation form should include more detail about recommendations about rehire. Senator Ray suggested that the commission write to the Commissioner of Administration to relate these suggestions.

Tom O'Donnell, personnel officer for the Department of Health and Social Services, pointed out that employees receive copies of the evaluation form and have an opportunity to comment before the evaluation becomes final. A review panel would probably not have enough information to act contrary to the supervisor's recommendation. The important thing to bring about is better training for supervisors in making their evaluations. They should also be held accountable for their actions. Mr. Charney replied that many supervisors and employees do not know the effect of recommendations against rehire and therefore employees do not grieve when they receive one. Senator Ray asked the staff to write to the Commissioner of Administration asking that the department consider expanding the information on the personnel evaluation form and implementing review panels for all evaluations on which that recommendation appears and asking for her response within a reasonable time.

Ms. Jund offered some comments on the memorandum on employee discipline which had been discussed at the previous commission meeting. She suggested that the levels of discipline should include verbal warnings, which should be documented by the employee's supervisor in writing;

written admonishments, which are not made part of the employee's permanent personnel file but which the employee is asked to sign;

written reprimands, which the employee is asked to sign and which do become part of the personnel file, although they may be removed at a later time; and suspensions, which the employee is also asked to acknowledge receipt of.

In the section on conduct prejudicial to the best interests of the service (F.3), she suggested that the list include soliciting gifts for political purposes. In the discussion of improper conduct related to state property or vehicles, (F.4), she suggested that operating a state vehicle while under the influence of drugs or alcohol should be listed there as well as in the section on improper use of intoxicants or drugs. Mr. O'Claray moved that the commission write to the Commissioner of Administration asking that she include this information as well as the memorandum previously sent to her when she considers the commission's request that the department adopt a written policy on employee discipline. There was no objection voiced.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 2:10 p.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau, Alaska
December 7, 1982

MINUTES

Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order at 10:00 a.m. The roll call showed Senator Ray, Representative Jack Fuller, Myrt Charney, John Chenoweth, Senator Dick Eliason, Fred Muller (alternate for Commissioner Rudd), Ken Kareen, Roger Thayer (alternate for Lynda McCurry), Greg O'Claray, John Pugh, and Doryce Eggleston (alternate for Cherie Shelley) as present. Also present were James Fisher, Mike McMullen and Bob Mourant.

Senator Ray asked the members to consider the memorandum on Minimum Qualifications for the Internal Auditor Job Series. Bob Janes, Chief of the Office of Internal Review in the Department of Transportation, addressed the commission in support of permitting work experience to substitute for the educational requirements of the job series. He said that before the auditing kinds of job classes were combined some years ago, his office was staffed by Audit Review Specialists. That job series had less extensive minimum qualifications than does the internal auditor series. When the classes were combined, employees were transferred into the internal auditor classes. If those employees, some of whom have many years of experience, were to resign and then later try to return to work in the same position, they could find that they no longer qualify because they lack the added educational requirements.

Mr. Kareen said that the Division of Personnel would review the internal auditor job series and consider whether it ought to be replaced with two parallel series.

Marcia Anne Lutterman, Internal Auditor III, testified in support of permitting work experience to substitute for the college degree requirement. She said that she was initially employed as a Fiscal Compliance Officer before that job class was deleted and her position transferred into the internal auditor series. She pointed out an additional problem with the educational substitutions presently permitted. The State of Alaska now requires that applicants for the CPA exam hold college degrees, so there is no way to qualify for an internal auditor without a college education. She will not be eligible for promotion until she completes the hours required for a college degree which is difficult to do while holding a fulltime job.

Carolyn Guess, Chairman of the Alaska Public Utilities Commission, addressed the commission concerning the associate attorney position in the PUC. The position is currently staffed on a reimbursable services contract with the Department of Law because the position needs to be in the partially exempt service, but the PUC does not have authorization to make it so. While the position is staffed through the Department of Law, it is statutorily placed in the partially exempt service. She asked that if the Blue Ribbon Commission is sponsoring amendments to the State Personnel Act, an amendment to AS 39.25.120 be included to permit the PUC to hire partially exempt associate attorneys. Mr Kareen pointed out that the PUC could request the Personnel Board to place the position in the partially exempt service without having to amend any statutes. Senator Ray added that the Blue Ribbon Commission would be happy to write to the personnel Board in support of the PUC's request.

The commission discussed and revised the memorandum on Employee Discipline. Mr. Muller suggested that the commission send a copy of the revised memorandum to the Commissioner of Administration and request that the department include the information in an employee handbook. Senator Ray asked the staff to prepare the materials to send to Commissioner Rudd.

The commission reviewed the memorandum on Recommendations Against Rehire. Senator Ray recessed the meeting at 11:45 a.m.

Senator Ray reconvened the commission at 1:30 p.m. and continued the discussion on recommendations against rehire. Mr. Charney suggested that the commission ask for a review of the memorandum from the Commissioner of Administration. Senator Ray directed the staff to ask for a response from the department for the next commission meeting.

The commission reviewed the memorandum on the Office Skills Test and the accompanying memorandum from Kaye Hogan, deputy director, Division of Equal Employment Opportunity. Mike McMullen, deputy director of personnel, explained that the Office Skills Test results have been found to be predictive of performance and the psychometrist has established its job-relatedness. The state is in the second year of a two-year experiment in which the minimum qualifications for clerical job classes are waived. The Division of Personnel will review the effect of waiving the minimum qualifications later in the study. For two or three job classes the minimum qualifications are not waived because the division believed that the experience or educational requirement was necessary. For both the retirement and benefits technician classes and the natural resource technician classes the experience requirement is still in effect. A college degree may be substituted. In addition, applicants for those classes must pass the Office Skills Test.

Chet Cottongim, personnel officer for the Department of Public Safety, said that managers in his department have found that employees who have been out of school for a long time have been getting poorer scores on the Office Skills Test than recent graduates. The department has asked the Division of Personnel to look into the situation. It is important to recognize and give credit to experienced good employees and to provide them with opportunities for promotion. The Office Skills Test may block them from qualifying for promotional opportunities. Mr. McMullen pointed out that 96.8% of the applicants who take the test pass it. Senator Ray responded that ranking can be as important as passing the test. Mr. McMullen added that long term employees will have earned employee credits which are added to their scores and a department wanting to promote a current employee can fill a vacancy using an intra-departmental register. There methods ought to provide adequate opportunities to promote deserving employees.

Mr. Chenoweth suggested that the commission review the Division of Personnel's response to the Division of EEO's request that it seriously consider making the Office Skills Test only one component in the determination of qualifications of applicants.

The commission considered correspondence received from Marilyn Martin. Mr. McMullen explained that he had met with Ms. Martin and advised her that if credits from the California Coastal University are recognized by an accredited college or university then the Division of Personnel will accept her degree. Ms. Martin is currently writing to the University to gather the necessary documents and should receive credit for the degree when she presents them to the division.

The commission considered draft legislation on Credit for BIA service under the Teachers Retirement System. Mr. Charney moved that the commission sponsor the legislation in the next legislative session. Representative Fuller asked to abstain from voting. The vote showed eight (8) in favor, none opposed and one (1) abstention. The motion carried.

The commission considered correspondence received from David Hickok, chairman of the Alaska Council on Science and Technology, together with a memorandum prepared by Jim Lear, Legislative Counsel, addressing the points raised in Mr. Hickok's letter. Mr. Hickok addressed the commission. He suggested that the legislation should provide that supervisors of inventors be made aware of the discovery at the time that the inventor discloses the invention to the Council on Science and Technology. Senator Ray responded that the Council has authority under the bill to adopt regulations which provide that the inventor do so. Mr. Hickok asked whether the Council would have authority under the proposed legislation to contract with a nonprofit corporation to develop and market an invention and to grant a share of the royalties to the corporation as well as to the employee-inventor. Senator Ray responded that on page 3, section 39.52.020 the Council is authorized to grant monetary recognition for creations in intellectual work products and that the form could be a share of the royalties.

Mr. O'Claray moved that the commission sponsor the legislation on government interests in intellectual work products developed at the expense of the state in the next legislative session. The motion carried without objection.

The commission considered the draft bill on collective bargaining. Mr. McMullen pointed out that the language on lines 14 and 15 "whichever is later" could create a problem and suggested that those words be deleted. Mr. O'Claray moved that the bill, as amended, be introduced by the commission. The motion carried without objection.

The commission considered court leave for nonpermanent employees, item B in the Staff Memo. Senator Ray asked the staff to write to the Personnel Board asking that they act immediately, at the earliest possible time. He asked whether any commission members would object to sponsoring legislation on the issue if that should prove necessary. No objections were voiced.

The commission considered the status of state-employed medical doctors, item C of the Staff Memo. Tom O'Donnell, personnel officer for the Department of Health and Social Services addressed the commission. He said that his department had not been consulted by the Senate State Affairs Committee when the committee amended the State Personnel Act to place all medical doctors in the exempt service. Senator Ray asked that the department present suggested legislation on the question for the commission's consideration at its next meeting.

Senator Ray asked that commission members review the information about the state's nepotism statute for the next meeting. He asked for recommendations about filling the vacancy on the commission. Mr. Thayer suggested that the vacancy be filled after the legislative organization has been completed. Patsy Fletcher, Assistant Director of the Human Rights Commission, spoke in support of the application of James Chase.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 3:00 p.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau, Alaska
November 9, 1982

MINUTES

Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order at 10:05 a.m. The roll call showed Senator Ray, Representative Jack Fuller, John Chenoweth, Fred Muller (alternate for Commissioner Carole Burger) Lois Jund, Ken Kareen, Roger Thayer (alternate for Lynda McCurry) Greg O'Claray, Bob Mourant (alternate for John Pugh), and Doryce Eggleston (alternate for Cherie Shelley) as present.

Senator Ray asked the commission to consider the draft bill relating to the state's interest in intellectual work products. Jim Lear, legislative counsel, explained the changes he had made at the commission's instructions and answered questions. Representative Fuller moved that the commission approve the bill as drafted for introduction in the 1983 Legislative Session. The motion carried without objection.

The commission took up the draft bill relating to collective bargaining. Don Kubley, representing IBU-Pacific and the International Order of Masters, Mates and Pilots, addressed the commission. He pointed out a problem in the present language which requires that agreements be submitted to the legislature within 30 days after the convening of the session. If negotiations are delayed past the convening of the session, then employees would have to work without a contract for almost a year, until the convening of the next regular session. He suggested that the language be changed.

Senator Ray suggested that the second sentence of the draft, lines 15-18 be deleted. Greg O'Claray read a telegram from Steve Franks of the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association in Seattle, opposing an earlier version of the bill. Roger Thayer suggested the bill be amended by deleting "30 days after the" in line 14 and adding "10 days after signing by the parties or" in its place. Mr. O'Claray moved that the second sentence of the draft be deleted and that the bill be amended as suggested by Mr. Thayer. The motion carried without objection.

The commission considered the draft relating to PERS credit for BIA service. Mr. Muller explained that the bill would preclude state employees with federal BIA service from receiving retirement benefits from both the federal government and the state for the same period of service. Mr. O'Claray asked how the credit for BIA service was funded. Mr. Muller was not sure. Further consideration of the legislature was held until the next commission meeting.

Terry Cramer read the commission a fiscal note from the Division of Retirement and Benefits for the draft bill limiting the adjustment of retirement benefits which the commission has approved for introduction. The division expects there will be some cost but they cannot be measured and in most instances they are expected to be small.

The commission considered court leave for nonpermanent state employees. Mr. O'Claray said that most collective bargaining contracts provide for jury duty pay and that nonpermanents may be the only group of employees who are not entitled to receive pay while serving on a jury. Ms. Cramer advised the commission that the Personnel Board would be meeting next week to consider amendments to the Personnel Rules. Mr. Kareen added that the Rules which the Personnel Board would be considering do not include leave provisions. The State Personnel Act does not direct that the Personnel Rules address leave for state employees. Those provisions will be placed in other regulations. Senator Ray asked Ms. Cramer to advise the Personnel Board of the commission's support for court leave for nonpermanent employees.

The commission considered the request that it recommend a preference for student-loan recipients.

The commission considered the requirement that internal auditors hold college degrees. Mr. Kareen said that the Division of Personnel reflects the views of state managers in setting the minimum qualifications for job classes. Mr. O'Claray asked for more information on how the minimum qualifications for this job class were established, since most minimum qualifications permit substitution of training and experience for educational requirements. Senator Ray asked the staff to invite the Director of the Division of Internal Audit to the next commission meeting.

The commission discussed employee discipline and recommendations against rehire. Senator Ray suggested that the problem with recommendations against rehire is that a supervisor has control of an employee's entire job future with the state. Mr. Muller explained that the Division of Personnel reviews recommendations against rehire to insure that their scope is appropriate. The recommendations can be limited to that job class, to the department as a whole, or to any state employment. Mr. Kareen added that there are adequate departmental review procedures to insure that the recommendation against rehire is imposed only in appropriate circumstances. The employee's immediate supervisor prepares the recommendation. It is then reviewed at the next level of supervision, and finally there is a department level review, frequently by the Personnel Officer for the department. Unfortunately, the reviews are sometimes cursory, and the recommendations are signed automatically. Mr. O'Claray asked whether there were any guidelines to assist supervisors. Guidelines would help insure consistency. Ms. Jund added that many supervisors do not understand what a recommendation against rehire means. Could there be something written to let them know? Senator Ray asked the staff to work with Mr. Muller on this issue.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 11:45 a.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau, Alaska
October 15, 1982

MINUTES

Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order at 10:00 a.m. The roll call showed Senator Ray, Myrt Charney, John Chenoweth, Senator Dick Eliason, Sandra Withers (alternate for Commissioner Carole Burger), William Huston, Mike McMullen (alternate for Ken Kareen), Roger Thayer (alternate for Lynda McCurry), Greg O'Claray, and John Pugh as present. Also present was Bob Mourant.

Terry Cramer, Administrative Assistant to the commission, advised the members that the minutes of the meeting held September 21, 1982, should be corrected. The second sentence of the third paragraph should read:

> With objection from the Department of Administration, the commission approved the draft bill limiting the adjustment of retirement benefits for introduction next session.

The correction to the minutes was approved without objection.

The commission considered the draft bill amending AS 14.25.107 prepared by the Division of Retirement and Benefits at the request of the commission. Senator Ray explained that the bill addressed a potential problem in the current statutes which could allow individuals to receive retirement benefits from both the federal and state governments for the same period of employment with the federal government. Greg O'Claray moved that the bill be prepared as legislation for introduction next session by the commission. The motion passed without objection.

The commission considered the draft bill relating to collective bargaining. Senator Ray suggested that the draft be amended to provide that if the legislature does not act within 60 days, then the agreement would be considered rejected. Mr. O'Claray suggested that the time for legislative consideration should be limited to 30 days. Mike McMullen asked whether the language in line 15 required that agreement reached after the legislature convened would have to wait until the next session before being considered by the legislature. Senator Ray suggested that the work should be done before the session to avoid any delays. Senator Ray asked that another draft of the bill be prepared for the commission's consideration at its next meeting.

The commission considered the draft bill relating to government interests in intellectual work products developed at the expense of the state. Jim Lear, Legislative Counsel, explained the changes he made in preparing this draft. The commission discussed the proposed AS 39.52.020, and asked that Mr. Lear prepare language providing that the Council on

Science and Technology may, subject to appropriation, either award the inventor a share of the royalties or give him or her a cash award for any discovery, regardless of whether it provides the state with net revenues or whether it is a cost-saving discovery. In addition, the commission requested that he draft language excluding the provisions of the legislation from the scope of collective bargaining and exempting legislators from the provisions of the bill.

The commission discussed standards for recommendations against rehire and for employee discipline. Senator Ray asked Sandra Withers to draft generalized standards with examples of the kind of conduct which would merit that level of discipline for the commission to consider at the next meeting.

Senator Ray announced that the commission would be meeting in November, December and January. He adjourned the meeting at 11:45 a.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau, Alaska
September 21, 1982

MINUTES

Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order at 10:10 a.m. The roll call showed Senator Ray, Representative Jack Fuller, Myrt Charney, Senator Dick Eliason, Fred Muller (alternate for Commissioner Carole Burger), Ken Kareen, Lynda McCurry, John Pugh, Darlene Livermore (alternate for Cherie Shelley) present. Bill Huston and Cherie Shelley arrived late. Also present were Roger Thayer and Jim Fisher. Jack Chenoweth, Lois Jund and Greg O'Claray were absent.

The commission considered draft legislation on government interest in discoveries and inventions made by public officers and employees of the state. Jim Lear, legislative counsel, explained the provisions of the draft and answered questions from the commission. He said that legislation from the State of Connecticut and the federal Executive Order on patents by employees formed the basis of the draft. Senator Eliason moved that page 4, lines 1 and 2 be amended to delete the exceptions for the Alaska Energy Center and for the Alaska Resources Corporation. The motion passed without objection. The commission requested other changes and also asked Mr. Lear to prepare draft legislation relating to the state's interests in copywrites, particularly in computer programs. Mr. Don Bennett of the Council on Science and Technology was present, but did not testify.

The commission held review of the draft relating to collective bargaining until the next meeting. Without objection the commission approved the draft bill limiting the adjustment of retirement benefits for introduction next session.

Senator Ray stated that selection of a new commission member would be held until the next meeting. He asked commission members to be prepared to discuss employee discipline at that meeting.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 11:45 a.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau, Alaska
August 30, 1982

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order at 10:00 a.m. The roll call showed Senator Ray, Representative Fuller, Myrt Charney, John Chenoweth, Fred Muller (alternate for Commissioner Carole Burger), Lois Jund, Mike McMullen (alternate for Ken Kareen), Lynda McCurry, Greg O'Claray, John Pugh, and Dianne Corso (alternate for Cherie Shanley) as present. Senator Eliason and Bill Huston were absent. Also present were James Fisher, Roger Thayer, Bob Mourant and Doryce Eggleston.

Senator Ray asked Chet Cottongim, personnel officer for the Department of Public Safety, to address the commission concerning correspondence received from Sgt. Richard A. Hemmen who lives in Fairbanks. Mr. Cottongim explained that a vacancy had occurred in the Fish and Wildlife Protection Division in Anchorage which required a seasoned supervisor, ideally one who was also a pilot. The department considered six sergeants and decided that Sgt. Hemmen was the most desirable. Neither Sgt. Hemmen nor the other five candidates for the position were from the Anchorage area. Although the department seldom invokes involuntary transfer, it did so in this case because of the special needs of the position. Sgt. Hemmen refused the transfer because of the financial hardship resulting from the loss of geographic pay differential and having to sell his house in the depressed market in Fairbanks. The department offered him the choice of accepting the transfer, resigning, or being suspended and, if he did not then accept the transfer, being fired. Sgt. Hemmen resigned effective August 1, 1982. He filed a grievance on the involuntary transfer which was decided in favor of the department.

Mr. Cottongim added that Sgt. Hemmen had refused a transfer once before on the grounds of financial hardship. The department accepted his refusal and he remained in Fairbanks and subsequently received two promotions. The Anchorage position actually became vacant on July 16th. Mr. Cottongim stated that so far as he knew, it had not yet been filled. He indicated that the department had hoped that Sgt. Hemmen would change his mind.

Mike McMullen explained that he had served on the contract negotiating team for the Public Safety Employees' Association labor agreement. The terms of the agreement recognize the employer's need to transfer employees, particularly commissioned officers, from one area to another. The contract provides that the employee's moving expenses will be paid by the state.

Mr. Cottongim added that the department's criteria for making transfer decisions are to provide an opportunity for officers to broaden their careers and to meet the needs of the department. The department tries to avoid imposing a hardship on employees, but the needs of the department must be met.

Senator Ray asked whether there was any evidence that the transfer was discriminatory or a disciplinary measure. Mr. Cottongim said that there did not appear to be any indication of that. He added that the department considered Sgt. Hemmen an outstanding employee. Senator Ray said that there appeared to be no further basis for the Blue Ribbon Commission to consider the matter. He was sympathetic to the situation Sgt. Hemmen had been placed in, but the transfer appeared to be the exercise of a valid management prerogative.

Dale Young addressed the commission concerning issues raised in his earlier correspondence with the commission. He was employed by the Department of Fish & Game, F.R.E.D. Division as the Southeast Alaska Regional Hatchery Manager in 1976. When he was first employed, the state needed to develop a production-scale salmon incubator. He asked his supervisor if he could work on the project privately and was advised to request an Attorney General's opinion on conflict of interest. In 1977 the Attorney General granted him permission to proceed with his work and to obtain a patent provided he followed strict guidelines. Mr. Young secured a patent, and in cooperation with a private corporation, developed an incubator and fish rearing system.

Mr. Young stated that following his patenting of the incubator, his work situation deteriorated, leading ultimately to his layoff on August 15. His performance evaluations changed from rating his work as highly acceptable to finding his work unacceptable and recommending his termination. His supervisor had not spoken with him about the change in the performance of his work or made suggestions on how he could improve. He believed the evaluations and other unfavorable situations in his employment were in retaliation for his having secured the patent.

Mr. Young added that in addition to his personal difficulties, Fish and Game had broken state and federal laws to avoid purchasing his products. The Ombudsman's office had twice investigated the department's purchasing practices and found them in violation of the applicable laws. During the second investigation, they referred the complaint to the Governor's Internal Auditors. The auditors confirmed that the department was violating purchasing procedures.

In answer to a question, Jack Chenoweth, Ombudsman, said that his office had investigated the incubator purchasing practices over the past several years. The purchases involve three agencies - the Departments of Public Transportation, Fish and Game, and Administration. Correction of the problem would require the cooperation of the administration, and therefore, his office had asked for a review by the Internal Auditors. The Ombudsman's office also made several recommendations to each department, but did not receive an entirely favorable response. The Ombudsman's investigation did not consider the employment problems which Mr. Young was raising before the Blue Ribbon Commission.

Mr. Muller asked Mr. Young whether APEA was still involved on his behalf. Mr. Young said that they were. Mr. Muller suggested that the Blue Ribbon Commission should not intervene in the matter until the pending grievances are resolved. Senator Ray replied that in his opinion it was appropriate for an individual to bring anything before the commission at any time. He also requested the commission staff to invite Deputy Commissioner Collinsworth from the Department of Fish and Game to address the commission on this matter at 1:30.

Representative Fuller asked whether Mr. Young's product was used outside the state. Mr. Young replied that there is some small use by private nonprofit concerns on an experimental basis and added that tests have proved the success of the process and equipment. It provides high quality production with a higher survival rate and is the least labor-intensive process available. In response to a question from Ms. Jund, Mr. Young indicated that he had been employed as an assistant hatchery manager by the State of Missouri prior to his coming to Alaska to accept the Hatchery Manager position. In addition, he had owned a private hatchery in Missouri where he began the development work which he continued in Alaska. He believed that his work on incubators was one of the reasons he was selected for the position, but two weeks after he began working it became clear that he would not have time on the job to continue.

Mr. Young added that Fish and Game is justifying his layoff by saying that they are responding to legislative intent that they reduce the numbers of managers in the department. He pointed out that the department has not eliminated any top-level management positions. All of the layoffs in management positions have occurred in mid-level management.

In response to a question from Greg O'Claray, Dianne Corso from APEA explained that Mr. Young has several grievances pending. The grievance addressing the reasonableness of his layoff is under consideration for filing at the Step III level. Mr. Young has the right to pursue that issue through arbitration.

Senator Ray brought a letter from Ms. Eileen Oliver to the attention of the commission and asked Mr. Chenoweth whether there were any recent developments he wished to report. Mr. Chenoweth replied that at Ms. Oliver's request his office has not proceeded further with the complaint, since the position she applied for has not yet been filled.

The commission considered the Issue Summary dated July 20, 1982, concerning issues raised recently.

A. RECOMMENDATIONS AGAINST REHIRE

Mike McMullen explained the state's system on recommendations against rehire. When employees resign in good standing, they have the right to be placed at the top of registers for job classes for which they qualify. Supervisors are not required to hire them but may select them without considering any of the top five applicants if they wish to. When an employee in not recommended for rehire, he or she loses those rehire rights. In addition, if the recommendation against rehire applies to all state employment, the employee's name will be removed from all registers and no applications will be accepted until the employee has worked for another employer for the length of the probationary period for that job class, either six months or one year.

Senator Ray suggested that the penalty is too severe. Unless an employee is dismissed for an indictable offense, a supervisor should not recommend against rehire by the state. Prospective employers should be notified of the employee's unsatisfactory conduct and be allowed to decide whether they wish to employ that person. Mr. McMullen replied that the Division of Personnel is charged with evaluating applicants to insure that they meet minimum qualifications. Part of that review should include consideration of previous work history. If the history shows that there has been a serious problem, then it is appropriate to find the applicant unqualified until he or she demonstrates that the problem has been resolved.

Dianne Corso pointed out that although the system provides for review of recommendations against rehire by the Division of Personnel, in fact employees may have to go through considerable effort to have Personnel reconsider the supervisor's recommendation. Mr. McMullen explained that the departments have an internal review system before Personnel is involved. Recommendations against rehire are part of the employee's final performance evaluation. After a supervisor prepares the evaluation, it is reviewed by the supervisor's supervisor, typically a division director. If the division director approves it, then the commissioner's office reviews it. That review is frequently delegated to the departmental personnel office. Lynda McCurry pointed out that recommendations against rehire can be attached to voluntary resignations as well as to situations in which an employee is fired. Departments do not impose them consistently and internal review is not always adequate. Ms. Corso added that some supervisors have no knowledge of the effects of the recommendation.

Mr. O'Claray asked whether the state has standards for imposing recommendations against rehire. How does a supervisor know whether it is appropriate to impose that penalty on an employee? Mr. Muller replied that there were no standards. Each case is considered separately on its merits. This allows for consideraon of mitigating factors such as a crisis in the employee's home life which is temporarily affecting job performance. Mr. O'Claray pointed out that if you notify employees of the standard which you expect them to adhere to, then in most cases they will do so. Mr. Muller answered that the issue is grievable. Ms. Corso replied that if there were standards, then there would be fewer grievances.

Representative Fuller asked whether the final performance evaluation would not be sufficient to alert future employers to the problem. John Pugh explained that, particularly for positions with high turnover, supervisors are unlikely to request that Personnel send them copies of performance evaluations. Therefore, they would be unaware of an applicant's unsatisfactory work history. Ms. McCurry said that the Department of Labor requests applicants to provide copies of their last several evaluations when they are interviewed.

Ms. Jund suggested that standards should be developed for applying recommendations against rehire within that section, agency, department, or by the state as a whole. Senator Ray said that the commission would consider the federal guidelines on penalties at its next meeting.

B. RETALIATORY LAYOFF

Mr. Pugh suggested that the commission consider both the issue of retaliatory layoffs and also the development of whistleblower legislation. He added that layoffs will become an increasingly important issue in the near future. Private employers, such as Boeing, have systems which permit considering both productivity and seniority when deciding who will be laid off. Unions favor a seniority system. Standards based on seniority tie the hands of management when it tries to improve productivity.

Mr. McMullen explained that the States uses a table to compute layoff points. Points are given based on the quality of job performance established by the employee's last three evaluations, with that figure multiplied by the length of service within the unit. Since layoffs are made by division or region, layoff points may not mean much. An employee with considerable seniority and good work performance may still be the only person within the unit and therefore may be laid off while less senior and less productive employees in other units may remain on the job. Senator Ray suggested that the layoff system should provide a forum for challenging possible discriminatory action and that the issue should be addressed on an individual basis.

C. CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Ms. Corso pointed out that the conflict of interest issue is similar to the recommendation against rehire issue in that standards of employee conduct are not clear in either case. She added that APEA is finding that the problem is coming up with increasing frequency.

Senator Ray recessed the meeting until 1:30 p.m.

Senator Ray reconvened the meeting at 1:30 p.m. and invited Don Collinsworth, Deputy Commissioner for Resource Management in the Department of Fish & Game to address the commission on the employment issues raised by Mr. Dale Young.

Mr. Collinsworth stated that it was his understanding that the commission was interested in Mr. Young's layoff and also in the issues surrounding the patenting of the incubation system. With reference to the layoff issues, he introduced Stan Moberly, Director of the F.R.E.D. Division in which Mr. Young had been employed. He added that because of funding cuts, the department would have to lay off about 11 employees, some of whom have as much as 15 years employment with the state. He pointed out that the Attorney General is investigating the patent issues raised by Mr. Young, and that the Ombudsman has investigated the issue. In addition there are grievances pending on the employment issues.

Mr. Moberly addressed the commission. He stated that he was regional supervisor of the F.R.E.D. Division from 1975 through November, 1980. He has been director of the division since this past June. As regional supervisor he had been Mr. Young's supervisor and had written favorable performance evaluations of his work. Mr. Moberly indicated that he did not know the basis for the unfavorable evaluations written after he left the division.

Mr. Collinsworth explained that in making layoff decisions, he and Mr. Moberly had reviewed the division staff, looking at positions, duties and responsibilities. They did not consider the individuals in those positions when deciding who should be laid off. Mr. Young was not laid off because of his performance, but because the department had to trim the SE program staff. Rep. Fuller asked whether any of the layoffs occurred in upper level management. Mr Moberly replied that some managerial staff were laid off in response to the Legislature's directions. In Anchorage, the managerial staff was reduced from four to three postions and in Juneau, it was reduced from three to two positions. The Anchorage office is responsible for hatcheries in all parts of the state except Southeast.

Mr. Moberly added that in 1976 when Mr. Young was hired there was just one hatchery in the Southeast region. The organization was growing fast and focused its energies on technological development. Since that time the division's task has changed to management of the existing hatcheries.

Mr. Collinsworth said that he had brought Mr. Young's personnel file and asked whether the commission had the authority to review personnel files. Mr. Young stated that he had no objection to the commission reviewing his performance evaluations. Senator Ray asked Mr. Collinsworth to summarize why Mr. Young's work became unacceptable.

Mr. Moberly explained that following Mr. Young's patenting of the incubator processes, it became much more difficult for him to function in a role of regional hatchery manager. Mr. Young's co-workers were unwilling to discuss things openly with him, so there was no free flow of ideas. At the same time the division's focus was changing from technologicial to managerial in nature. In his job as regional hatchery manager, Mr. Young was unable to recommend what incubators the department ought to install in their hatcheries because of the conflict of interest created by his holding the patent. In addition, his co-workers felt that they had contributed to the development of the incubator system and that in applying for a patent, Mr. Young had plagerized their ideas.

Mr. Collinsworth explained that when Mr. Young was first employed, the divison was developing hatcheries and various types of equipment, incubators, water systems and processes. Mr. Young was working as part of a group which was considering incubators. He had, obviously, contributed to the conception of the equipment, but his colleagues felt that they had as well. Because he took the initiative to patent the process, he is the one to benefit financially from the incubation system when the state or other purchaser pay royalties for its use.

Mr. Young replied that he had acted in good faith after securing an opinion from the Attorney General's office that it would be legal for him to proceed. He added that a person cannot patent something that is not original. The concepts involved in the incubator system were ideas that he had brought with him from Missouri. Mr. Moberly suggested that the commission should request a copy of the Attorney General's report on the conflict of interest question when it is available. In answer to a question from Rep. Fuller, he said that the work that Mr. Young had been doing on the incubator system was part of his job assignment with the state. Mr. Moberly added that whether the situation with the patent has developed into a conflict of interest has not yet been ruled on. It has caused managerial problems and finally led to Mr. Young's being asked not to serve as a member of the facility design team.

Mr. Moberly said that the divison has offered Mr. Young another position as the Snettisham hatchery manager. Ms. Corso pointed out that the position would require that he move away from Juneau without his family. Mr. Moberly explained that it was the only job that the division had open. He added that he had told APEA and the labor relations division staff that the F.R.E.D. Division would, to the extent possible, add steps in grade to the position, which is a Range 18, to have as little financial impact on Mr. Young as possible. His last position was at Range 20. Fish and Game tries to return employees who have been laid off to their previous levesla as quickly as possible. Mr. Moberly added that the Hatchery Manager job is important because the Snettisham hatchery is highly visible and has an inventory of several million fish. Mr. Young would be expected to work at the position, not just draw a paycheck while looking for other employment. Mr. O'Claray asked what the timing on the offer was. Mr. Moberly replied that the offer was made about a week ago, immediately after the position became vacant.

Mr. Young challenged Mr. Moberly's statement that there had been no other positions available. He added that when he inquired about the Snettisham hatchery manager position, the supervisor told him that he would have to work the register and that he hadn't made his final decision about how he was going to fill the position. Mr. Moberly replied that he had not been able to offer Mr. Young any other position and that the division cannot let one layoff dictate the management of the whole fisheries program. He explained that the division probably would work the register for the hatchery manager position, but that Mr. Young can be placed on it and that the department's policy is to give preference to employees who have been laid off whenever possible.

Ms. Jund pointed out that in private industry scientists have to sign a release stating that if anything develops during their work which is patentable, it is the property of the employer. She asked whether the state had any similar requirement. The answer was no. She asked whether Mr. Young would have lost his effectiveness with the division if the state had had such a policy. Mr. Collinsworth replied that he believed that Mr. Young would not have. Such a policy would be of benefit to the state and would improve the work environment for scientists.

Senator Ray stated that as chairman he believed that any more discussions by the committee would be premature. The commission will hold the matter until there have been final determinations in the proceedings presently going on. He thanked Mr. Collinsworth and Mr. Moberly for attending.

C. CONFLICT OF INTEREST (continued)

The commission returned to discussion of Conflict of Interest from the Issue Summary. Janet Bradley, Director of the Alaska State Human Rights Commission, pointed out that there is a balance between the employer's needs and the employee's First Amendment rights. Ms. Jund asked whether the conflict of interest Personnel Rules were inadequate. If they are, should the commission try to improve them and make employees aware of their terms? Roger Thayer replied that he had tried to write a conflict of interest policy for DOT/PF and the Attorney General's office had said that it couldn't be done because of First Amendment rights. Senator Ray suggested that the commission look at the issue at its next meeting.

D. ACCESS TO STATE EMPLOYMENT

Myrt Charney suggested that it was appropriate for the state to give higher priority to promotional opportunities than to give access to new employees. Ms. Corso pointed out that a supervisor can choose whether to hire from an open competitive list or from an interdepartmental promotional list. Senator Ray stated that the majority of complaints which most legislators receive is that state employment is a closed shop. Once a person finds employment with the state, he is in, but getting in is very difficult. Ms. Bradley added that the Human Rights Commission has been considering the impact of promotional registers on Affirmative Action. Give that a large proportion of the state workforce is white, limiting access to jobs to those already employed is, in fact, a barrier for other persons who include minorities.

Senator Ray summarized correspondence received from Larry Korkowski. Janet Bradley explained that when the Human Rights Commission receives complaints about its own employment practices, they refer the complainant to other organizations including the Blue Ribbon Commission, the Ombudsman, the Division of EEO and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

Senator Ray suggested that in a pure merit system there would be no Affirmative Action program. Employment decisions would be based solely on the person's qualifications. Rep. Fuller asked how many people take advantage of veterans' points. Jim Fisher, Director of the Division of EEO, replied that the state has not done any studies. In the federal government, a large percentage of the workforce - perhaps 25 or 50% - who are veterans have benefitted from the additional points. Senator Ray pointed out that the commission had sponsored legislation last session which limited application of veterans' points to one time. He added that the commission would look further at the issues of employee credits and promotional lists.

The commission considered the state's retirement system laws. Chuck Elrod, Retirement Supervisor, addressed the commission. The state actually has about six different retirement systems. Senator Ray asked whether it would be feasible to merge some of the systems into PERS. Mr. Elrod replied that that was outside his purview. Major problems in PERS are with the temporary service credit for both federal and state employment. The Attorney General has issued three separate opinions stating that temporary service cannot be considered credited service unless the statute specifically includes it. In practical terms, it is difficult to verify pre-1961 earnings and service.

The commission reviewed and discussed the PERS and TRS statutes.

AS 14.25.045. PARTICIPATION BY NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION EMPLOYEES

Mr. Elrod reported that there is an Attorney General's opinion which says that including NEA employees in TRS is unconstitutional. The Division of Retirement has identified the employees involved. Future NEA employees will not be covered under TRS.

AS 14.25.060. ARREARAGE INDEBTEDNESS

There is also a problem brewing with the state taking over responsibility for the BIA schools. What retirement arrangements will be made for the classified BIA school employees? That will depend on the terms of the participation agreements between school districts and the state, but it will probably be limited to including service from the beginning of state involvement. There will also be a large financial impact on the system from BIA teachers who retire from the state. The TRS statutes allow a teacher with five years with the state to claim up to 20 years of BIA service. A similar impact will occur in PERS if the state buys the Alaska Railroad from the federal government.

AS 14.20.107. CREDIT FOR ALASKA BIA SERVICE

Mr. Elrod pointed out a loophole in the present statute. A person may have worked for the federal government long enough to qualify for federal retirement. If he then works for the state, he is entitled to buy in five years of that federal service. The statute requires that the state reduce the amount of retirement benefit it pays by the amount of benefits which the person is receiving from the federal government for the same period of service. However, if the person takes a lump sum payment from the federal government before retiring from the state, there will be no federal retirement benefits. After his state benefits are established, he can repay the amount into the federal retirement system and then be eligible to draw retirement benefits from both systems for the same years of service.

Senator Ray asked Mr. Elrod to prepare proposed legislation to address the double credit for federal service. He announced that the commission would meet again in two or three weeks and would consider applicants for the vacancy in the commission membership as well as the other issues which have been raised.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 4:00 p.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau, Alaska
March 11, 1982

MINUTES

The meeting was called to order by Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, at 1:35 p.m. The roll call showed Senator Ray, John Chenoweth, Senator Dick Eliason, James Fisher (alternate for Commissioner Hudson), Lois Jund, Ken Kareen, Lynda McCurry, Greg O'Claray, John Pugh and Darlene Livermore (alternate for Cherie Shelley) as present. Representative Jack Fuller, Myrt Charney, and William Huston were absent. Also present were Roger Thayer and Bob Mourant.

The commission reviewed the draft of the 1982 Report to the Legislature and corrected errors and made changes. It was moved that the report as amended be presented to the Legislature. There were no objections and Senator Ray so ordered. The commission adjourned at 3:00 p.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau, Alaska
December 21, 1981

MINUTES

The meeting was called to order by Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, at 10:00 a.m. The roll call showed Senator Ray, Representative Jack Fuller, John Chenoweth, Senator Dick Eliason, Lois Jund, Ken Kareen, Roger Thayer (alternate for Lynda McCurry), Fred Muller (alternate for Commissioner Hudson), Greg O'Claray, John Pugh and Doryce Eggleston (alternate for Cherie Shelley) present. Myrt Charney and Bill Huston were absent. Also present was James Fisher.

Senator Ray asked for public testimony. Charlie Mae Moore addressed the commission. She said that she represents a conglomerate of people who asked that she speak. She works for the Department of Education and has been employed in the field of education in Alaska for 28 years. For a period from 1970 to 1978 she served on the Governor's EEO Commission. For three or four years, the Commission worked closely with the state personnel office, and conducted an overview of the personnel system. Ms. Moore worked for the division for one summer and looked at minimum qualifications and requirements for jobs. She discovered one that she hasn't forgotten. A firefighter couldn't fight a fire unless he was 5'8" tall, which she found ridiculous. The EEO Commission was able to work with the personnel office to resolve some of these instances.

In the course of her tenure with the EEO Commission, Ms. Moore said that she became very upset and disturbed for people who came to her and the other commissioners because they couldn't get on with the state system or because they had been with the system for a long time but couldn't move. The EEO Commission did not have enforcement power, so there was nothing that they could do but listen to people. She began to question what they were accomplishing. Through the personnel division, they were able to do some things. They came up with some specific recommendations which the Governor considered and implemented. They revamped the employment application. But problems still remain.

Women employed in ranges 9 to 15 are generally unaware of the possibility of a career ladder. They are provided with very little orientation to the job and they feel frustrated because they do not get enough career counseling. They aren't advised of their function, of what the state government is about and as to their role. So they become discouraged. Ms. Moore suggested that the 18 departmental personnel offices need to relate more to people, especially to women.

Minorities are underutilized in state government. Ms. Moore said that she was concerned about qualified people being hired and then being able to move forward. The buddy system has become more sophisticated in the State of Alaska but it is still used. It is disturbing to see a job advertized when there is already someone who has been chosen for the position.

On middle management, Ms. Moore pointed out that minorities seem to be trapped in ranges 9 to 21. They can never shake that 21. She said that she wasn't asking for preference, but she was talking about qualified people who are productive employees, who commit themselves to take on more to get the job done. Employees should not fear that they will be retaliated against if they speak out about problems. When setting EEO goals, women should be kept as a separate category from minorities. Advancing women does not satisfy the need to advance minority people.

Ms. Moore said that there has been some strengthening in the personnel system, particularly in career counseling. Employees understand what the requirements are for promotions and what classes they might take to become eligible for better jobs. In some cases, classes are paid for to enhance an employee's performance in his present job.

Ms. Moore said that she has talked with people who have said that all they are interested in as far as the departmental Affirmative Action Plan, is to have the plan approved. If things are going to happen, it means more than having the paper produced and getting the Governor's signature on it. Another state employee came out of an EEO meeting and said that he couldn't wait to get out of there. Attitude is what really bothers her, said Ms. Moore. She asks three things: that minority people are thought about, that they be given an opportunity, and that the Blue Ribbon Commission be endowed to do some of the things that EEOC couldn't do -- to act to correct the problems which were identified.

Senator Ray asked Ms. Moore whether she had any recommendations for overcoming the subtleness of discrimination which can happen when an office has five caucasian employees and one minority group employee and the five employees make the office a miserable place for the one minority person.

Ms. Moore replied that she didn't have an answer to that kind of sophisticated discrimination. She also worries about verbal abuse, which can destroy a person. She was once subjected to it and became so angry that tears came to her eyes, and yet, one hour later, the person who had done it was perfectly friendly. People who discriminate can stay within the guidelines so that there is no avenue of recourse open to the person injured, and yet still be effective. She said that when she has been told of problems in her office, she will act as an intermediary to tell the person who did it that the other person is upset, and that he should talk with the other person. Sometimes they are unaware of the effect of what they have done. One-on-one contact is important, to provide some encouragement and to alleviate frustration. Personnel officers or supervisors can fill this role. If minority people find only putdowns and embarrassment in their jobs, they will leave, even if its more money than they've ever made in their lives. Having someone to talk with personally can allay fears of discrimination and show that a new policy is affecting all employees, or that one individual is like that with everyone, not just the minority employee.

Promotions for minority people are another problem. Ms. Moore said that she has been asked "if I promote this person, will the people who work for them resent them because they are a minority?" If a person is a good supervisor, showing compassion and caring for people, employees will work themselves to death to make the supervisor look good.

The high turnover in jobs between ranges 9 and 15 hurts the employer because of the time invested in employees, in training them, in getting the terminology of the department or unit familiar to them. It's important to be supportive of them, to find out whether there is a problem. Senator Ray suggested that what you really need is a group of people who work for the administration who take care of problems as they crop up. Ms. Moore agreed and added that it is crucial that they work for the administration.

Senator Ray thanked Ms. Moore for her testimony. He asked for any other people who wished to testify. No one came forward at this time and the commission turned to considering the issues presented in a memo dated December 18, 1981 prepared by the commission staff.

A. PROBLEMS IN THE HIRING PROCESS

1. Classification of positions.

Lois Jund pointed out that a review of the entire state classification system is long overdue. When positions with comparable duties are classified differently, it results in a great deal of discrimination against employees. Ken Kareen said that the state is working at a slow pace toward that goal and added that it concerns two different items, the classification system and the state pay plan. Senator Ray added that other problems occur when the duties for a position change over time. When the position is finally reclassified, the person who has been fulfilling them may lack the technical requirements for the new job classification. Mr. Kareen pointed out that there are two different considerations -- fairness to the employee who developed the job vs. appearances of the "buddy system" which cases those who want the job to say "it isn't fair because I didn't have a chance to compete for that job".

Greg O'Claray asked about the use of the classification system to encourage employment of protected classes. Is the state interested in hiring the person most qualified for the job? Should the classification system be used to broaden the selection process? John Pugh explained that the Social Services Associates are entry level positions. The minimum qualifications for that job class are lower than for social workers and the state provides closer supervision of the new employee. The Social Services Associate does not do all of the social worker tasks. A career ladder has been developed and after three years as a Social Service Associate, the employee will qualify as a social worker.

Mr. Kareen added that trainee job classes assume that a training plan will be part of the job duties and that the job will be structured to provide close supervision. Where the training is haphazard, the use of trainee job classes doesn't work well. There are also some skills such as typing which are better learned away from the office. On-the-job training should be mixed with appropriate training away from the job site.

Senator Ray asked whether providing training was the state's job. Mr. Kareen responded that it was, in some cases. Most successful private employers spend time training their employees. He added that in comparing the state with private employers, it is important to remember that there is no private employer in Alaska whose workforce is as large as the states's. Senator Ray said that you can't expect the state to provide training to people applying for positions in which the registers are already full of qualified applicants.

Mr. Thayer returned to the question of using the classification system to remedy underutilization and suggested that there should be more flexible staffing of positions. Very few departments make use of the system. They hire at the highest level of a job class instead of opening a trainee position and then upgrading the position and the employee as skills are learned.

Mr. O'Claray suggested that in order to attack discrimination, you have to look at the numbers, and the numbers on underutilized classes are pretty plain. So far there has been no tool which is effective to change the numbers, because there is no mandatory requirement that anyone do anything on EEO. If you decide that you want to do something to correct past inequities then you may have to use affirmative action tools which give a preference to those who have been discriminated against. Senator Ray pointed out that those tools may not be fair to the individual who is not covered by the affirmative action plan. Mr. O'Claray asked whether there was an EEO office in every department. Mr. Kareen explained that there are individuals designated as EEO officers and there are EEO committees in the departments, but for many employees, it's a duty added on to their other job responsibilities.

Mr. O'Claray moved that the commission support a review of the classification system. Mr. Kareen suggested that until the review is made, it would be premature to suggest whether the classificaiton system should be used to encourage employment of protected classes, and that the motion should be limited as it was phrased. Mr. Pugh asked whether there were resources available either for an outside contract or for staff time within the division to accomplish such a review. Senator Ray said that he would look at the budget to find funds to at least provide a preliminary review to identify areas of great concentration in the future. The motion carried without objection.

2. Recruitment.

Representative Fuller said that he had intended to talk with Mr. Pugh about the Nome Youth Facility before raising the question in the meeting. He has heard that positions have been upgraded which has meant that some people who applied have been eliminated from consideration for the positions. Mr. Pugh explained that the positions had not been upgraded, but that there were a number of individuals who did not pass examinations conducted in Nome, so the department held a second recruitment there. The positions are what is called coupled classes. The majority are Youth Counselor I positions, and after six months on the job, the employees will be eligible for promotion to Youth Counselor II.

MEMO ON MALES AND FEMALES ON SELECTED REGISTERS

SenatoR Ray asked the commission to look at the memo on the numbers of males and females on selected registers. The commission has heard much testimony about the large number of women working in the lower salary ranges. The memo shows that there are few female applicants for higher range positions. He asked whether it would be safe to assume that if there is discrimination in the higher ranges, it is in the partially exempt and exempt services rather than in the classified service. Mr. Pugh suggested that it raises another question about why there is such a discrepancy in the numbers applying. Mr. Kareen added that as an employer, the state inherits the difficulties in society and in the educational system. Higher range jobs usually require that the applicants meet educational and work experience criteria. In the past, women have been discouraged from seeking careers in many areas, so they are unlikely to be well represented in the applicant pool for those jobs. You can't expect a balance to be achieved overnight.

Senator Ray pointed out that the memo under discussion did not show the male/female ratio of presently employed in the job classes. Therefore, it is difficult to know whether the state is doing what it should in its hiring decisions. Mr. Kareen said that the state is working to develop applicant flow data which would consolidate that information. The information is stored now, but not in a coherent form.

Representative Fuller asked how many complaints the commission has received about women not being upgraded. Senator Ray replied that the majority of people were complaining about the low number of women in executive positions. He asked the staff to prepare figures on the number of male and female employees presently employed in the job classes addressed in the memo.

Mr. O'Claray asked about the success ratio of the commission with respect to handling individual complaints. He said that he tends to believe that the most effective way of handling discrimination is on an individual basis because it shows results. Senator Ray said that he believes it is about 90 percent. Ms. Cramer added that the commission staff has not kept a formal summary of the results of the complaints received. Mr. O'Claray added that many of these cases can be better resolved on an informal basis rather than through a formal process like a charge before the Human Rights Commission. People tend to solidify their positions if they think they're going to go through legal proceedings. Senator Eliason pointed out there can be some value to having a public airing of a situation. Senator Ray agreed when the situation affects many people, but when it is an individual matter, public hearings can harm the person involved more than help.

A.3. Five-Plus-Five Certification System.

Mr. O'Claray said he has talked with a few of the people responsible for hiring in several different divisions of the state and asked them about the five-plus-five registers. Some use them and some don't seem to have any working relationship with them. Unless there is some instruction given by the division director or the commissioner of that department, the system is not going to be used. Senator Ray asked whether the register system was fair to use or constitutional within the merit system, when it results in going below the top five to reach others less qualified? Mr. O'Claray responded that if you have an affirmative action plan which says that you intend to meet certain goals, then that is the policy, whether or not it is fair. Mr. Thayer explained that each department either has or is developing an Affirmative Action Plan. Mr. Kareen added that the five-plus-five registers can only be used in job classes where underutilization has been shown to exist. Senator Ray asked whether use of the registers in those cases was mandatory? Mr. O'Claray suggested that use of the expanded registers should be mandatory where underutilization is established.

Mr Muller explained that every person on a register is qualified to do that job. Some people rank higher than others, but all are qualified. The five-plus-five register just gives qualified minorities or women a chance to be interviewed and considered for a position. The system is relatively new. On the constitutional question, he added that similar systems have been considered by courts elsewhere. The courts have recognized that under the federal constitution, where there is underutilization, employers can use instruments of this type until the employer achieves a better balance in the work force. Once that has been accomplished, then the employer returns to a system strictly based on merit principles. Mr. Muller added that it is now mandatory that departments receive the five-plus-five list. Hiring from the minority list is voluntary.

Senator Ray asked whether the commission wished to encourage use of the five-plus-five registers. Members agreed that they did. Mr. O'Claray added that according to Mr. Muller, calling for those registers is mandatory. Mr. Thayer asked for clarification because he knew of nothing which had made that the state policy. Mr Muller answered that where underutilization exists in a job class within a division or a department and the appointing authority calls for a register, the system should, as a matter of course, provide the supplementary register. The decision as to whether the appointing authority will hire from the expanded register is voluntary. Mr. Chenoweth asked whether the source for the mandatory nature of the system is the combination of the Governor's Affirmative Action Order and the Personnel Rules. Mr. Muller agreed and said that the motive force behind it is that you do have underutilization and the only way to resolve it is to allow the appointing authority to reach further down the register when hiring. Ms. Cramer read from regulations dated March 25th from Bruce Cummings which said that "when underutilization has been shown to exist the five-plus-five registers can and should request discretionary authorization to appoint from below the top five". She asked whether that regulation had been amended? Mr. Muller said that they had talked about the question at length and decided that so much confusion existed that providing the list to the appointing authority would be mandatory. He added that if the policy had not yet been implemented, it would be shortly.

Senator Ray recessed the meeting for lunch.

Senator Ray reconvened the meeting and the commission returned to discussing the Issues Memo.

A.2. Recruitment

Senator Ray asked the commission to consider the issue of recruitment. Representative Fuller said that he'd like to wait for the discussion on rural hiring before commenting on the issue. Senator Ray suggested that recruitment should be the responsibility of those in the rural areas who are interested in applying for positions, including rural organizations. Representative Fuller added that recruitment is made more difficult because the Native Corporations are actively looking for qualified employees to staff their offices. Mr. Pugh added that Sealaska Corporation has a special assistant to the president whose sole responsibility is placing stockholders in jobs with the corporation, so there is considerable competition for workers.

Senator Ray asked for public testimony. Mr. Paul Blank addressed the commission on the issues of non-resident hire and also Native hire. He was offered a job in Bristol Bay, which is mostly a Yupik village. He wanted to accept the job offer, but he talked with people in Dillingham who said that they wanted a Yupik person in the job. But according to the state policy, the department must hire from the top five applicants, no matter where they live. There is strong resentment to that in the bush.

Mr. Blank suggested that perhaps people should get extra points for living in the region where the hiring is taking place. For example, no white person could possibly go to a place like Bristol Bay and expect to understand the needs and desires of the Yupik people there, especially in a job like public assistance. Senator Ray pointed out that many of those programs are funded with federal money, so there is a problem in giving preference to anybody. Ms. Jund added that the commission had discussed having local registers but that there were tremendous problems in administering them.

Mr. Kareen said that since 1959 the state has operated under a basic philosophy that this is a State of Alaska position, and all residents of Alaska have an equal chance at being hired regardless of where they reside. The state will not distinguish between its citizens. He added that there are other states which have tried to address this problem. One remedy is to say that anyone in the state can take the test to qualify for the position, but it will only be given in the place where the job is. Senator Ray pointed out that this would work against the person in Dillingham who wanted to move to Juneau. Mr. Blank answered that there were plenty of jobs in Juneau and the other cities in the state so there isn't any problem of resentment against the outsider.

Mr. Kareen suggested that there are ways of lawfully addressing the problem. The Department of Health and Social Services in the Lower Yukon and Lower Kuskokwim had a number of positions working in villages to provide liasion between the local population and the department. If the employees were going to be able to do that job they had to speak Yupik and also have an ability in the English language. So ability in both languages was made a job requirement. The Village Council served as a review board for part of the examination and a portion of the interview with them was conducted in Yupik. The Council rated applicants on how well they would get along with the people in the village they would be servicing. The bilingual requirement was bona fide and not used specifically to promote employment of Alaska Natives.

Senator Eliason asked what job Mr. Blank had been going to take and whether the resentment against state employees from outside the village would be the same for all departments or just Health and Social Services. Mr. Blank replied that the job was as an Eligibility Technician I. There's a particular problem with the kind of job he was offered, because most of the people in the village are on public assistance for part of the year and the eligibility technician hands out the emergency funds and gives tentative approvals or disapprovals for long-term public assistance. When the Eligibility Technician can't even speak the language, there's a particular resentment. The only work available is seasonal fishing and cannery work. But the resentment would be there for anyone coming in who gets a better salary than anyone else around.

Senator Ray asked what problems would develop if the eligibility technician were a black or hispanic, for example, and wanted the job and was number one on the register. Mr. Blank replied that that would not make any difference in the village. Senator Ray pointed out that the state has a merit system of employment which must be honored. Mr. Blank replied that the tests don't necessarily show who is the most qualified to do the job. Senator Ray asked whether he meant that in some rural areas, particular job skills should not be counted as strongly as knowing the language, the people and the customs. Mr. Blank said yes.

Mr. Kareen asked Mr. Blank what the reaction would be if some of the services now provided by the state were turned over to the local government instead. He added that he did not know whether it would be possible under federal and state regulations. Senator Ray said that it would be better if there were a requirement in the job description which would correct the problem. Where there's a job in an area where the dominant language is Yupik, then for a position which is supposed to serve the people, there should be a requirement that the state employee speak Yupik.

Mr. Kareen pointed out that in order to make that requirement under the human rights laws and the federal equal employment opportunity laws, the state would have to show that speaking both languages was a bona fide occupational qualification. In villages in which almost everyone speaks English or for jobs like Fish and Game Technician which don't require talking with people as part of the job, a language requirement would probably run into difficulties. The situation is different for jobs requiring interviewing local people and gathering information from them. In answer to a question from Ms. Jund, Mr. Kareen explained that Village Safety Officers are employed by the villages under funds that are granted to them by the state. The village selects the individual who is trained by the state but remains an employee of the village.

Senator Ray proposed that the commission recommend that knowledge of the predominant language be a job requirement for rural positions requiring communications and knowledge of the cultural background. The commission should further point out that in jobs with no emphasis on communication, the regular job requirements should apply. It would be good business for the state. Mr. Blank suggested that the recommendation should go further, and Senator Ray replied that constitutionally the commission could not go any further. He added that he fought for Alaska hire, but that he would not support a situation which sets one Alaskan against another.

Senator Ray thanked Mr. Blank and asked if there was anyone else wishing to give testimony.

Sandra Borbridge spoke to the commission about discriminatory practices in the hiring of not only minorities and women, but minority women. She identified three areas: entry into state employment through the registers; the availability of unemployment benefits for women who are seeking administrative positions; and the attitude of Department of Labor employees towards Native applicants and Native organizations.

Ms. Borbridge suggested that there should be a central information clearing house for state positions. When she first went to the Juneau Employment Center a year ago, she completed an application, had an interview and was classified as eligible for an administrative position. From that time to the present she has never been informed about the state register, and she still does not know what it is.

Corrected

On the availability of unemployment benefits to women seeking administrative positions, she related her own experience. When she interviewed with the Juneau Employment Center after becoming unemployed, she was classified as seeking an administrative position. The application asked whether she could type. Before she would answer, she asked whether that would affect either referrals for employment or her unemployment benefits. She was told that it would not, so she said that yes, she could type. She was later referred to a clerical job requiring that she type 30 percent of her time and paying only 60 percent of her previous wages. She refused that job referral because it would be a waste of both her and the employer's time. One week later she received notice from the state unemployment office that her benefits would be cut.

Then she went through a second referral. She went into the Job Service Center office and spoke with the interviewer about the job requirements. When she objected to the typing, the interviewer agreed that she would be overqualified for the position and that she should not bother to go for an interview. So there were two different policies within the Center.

Ms. Borbridge appealed the denial of unemployment benefits. At the arbitration hearing the initial decision was upheld. In an appeal to the Commissioner of Labor, the decision was overturned because she should not have been referred to a clerical job. Ms. Borbridge said that many women do not have the financial means to wait for an appeals decision, and so they accept clerical jobs. Women should not be penalized for wanting challenging work even if they know how to type.

Ms. Borbridge spoke about the attitude of people working in the Juneau Employment Center and in the Department of Labor towards Natives and Native organizations. In 1975, she completed an application and stated her minimum salary requirement. She was asked whether that wasn't a little high for someone with her education and experience. She was also told that she was acting a little "spoiled". A week later she was offered a job with a private firm at a salary higher than her minimum requirement. During the hearings on her unemployment benefits, someone mentioned that Native organizations overpay their employees. She found the statement uncalled for, unprofessional, and reflective of attitudes which she and others, as Natives, encounter. Until these three different problem areas are addressed, Ms. Borbridge suggested that problems will continue to exist.

Senator Ray asked Mr. Kareen to explain the register system to Ms. Borbridge. Mr. Kareen said that when individuals apply for a job with the state, they go through an examining process. Based on the score they receive, they are posted on a register, also called an eligible list. When a vacancy opens in that job class, the Division of Personnel issues an eligible list to the department with the vacancy. The list ranks the names of all those people who are interested in that job class and have passed the test. Then the department proceeds from that point to contact the individuals on the list, interview them and make a selection.

Ms. Jund suggested that there hasn't been a central place where people can go to find out what jobs are available, how to apply for those jobs, how to get on the register and what a register is. When she was unemployed once, the unemployment office had a large screen which showed all the jobs the Center was recruiting for. There were books to find out what the requirements of the jobs were, but there was no one to explain how to use the information.

Ms. Borbridge said that she still did not know how to get on the register. Mr. Kareen explained that you complete an application for employment and turn it in or mail it to the Division of Personnel. He added that the Division has a public service counter to answer questions from people who want to apply for state jobs. However, the state does not have a job counselor to deal with the people coming in. The individual at the counter is also responsible for answering the telephone on seven incoming lines and handling some paperwork.

Barbara Fallon said that she is presently unemployed and has been applying for jobs. It would help job applicants if they understood that the Division of Personnel is not an employment service for the individual. Its task is to fill vacancies for the state. No one sits down with an applicant and asks for qualifications, experience and work history and then suggests jobs for which the person might apply. She added that the Division of Personnel staff have been very helpful, within the system.

Senator Ray added that applicants misunderstand another part of the state hiring system. When they are notified that they are on the register they automatically assume that they will be offered a job. They don't understand that they are not much closer to being employed than they were before.

Mr. Kareen said that the job service offices are federally funded, and have suffered from cutbacks so they have had to reduce their job counseling services. The new budget will not provide funds for employing job counselors. All federal funds for the offices will be contingent upon how many placements the office makes.

Senator Ray suggested that there should be a handbook or a flyer providing information about state employment. Roy Henderson, an employee of the Department of Education, commented that there is information presently available through the Career Information System at the Southeast Regional Resource Center. It tells about job descriptions and how an individual's qualifications fit into certain jobs. Senator Ray said that that system is not well known. It would still be helpful to have a short pamphlet for all prospective employees to use. Mr. Muller added that the Resource Center was for the Southeastern area. What about the Southcentral area and the bush? Mr. Henderson replied that the information is available at all Alaska Job Information Centers. Most of the information comes from the Department of Labor.

Senator Ray asked Mr. Muller to explain the state's affirmative action program and the five-plus-five certification system to Ms. Borbridge. Mr. Muller said that one of the biggest problems which the state has in terms of employing both women and minorities is potential barriers to ranking high on the registers. Everyone on the eligible list is capable of doing whatever the job is in that class. To bring people to the attention of the appointing authorities, the state developed a device which allows an appointing authority to hire a minority or a woman who ranks below the top five for jobs in any class in which that protected group is underutilized. The system is still in a formative stage, but it should be an invaluable tool to develop greater parity. Ms. Jund suggested that there still should be a pamphlet to notify applicants about what registers means, and all of the other ramifications of the employment system.

On the issue of Ms. Borbridge's unemployment benefits, Ms. Jund said that, as she understood the system, a person is not required to take employment at less than the previous level of employment. Since Ms. Borbridge had been working in an administrative position and was not interested in returning to a clerical position, they were not supposed to cut off her benefits when she refused to interview for the clerical position.

Ken Kareen handed out copies of a booklet which describe the state hiring system. Senator Ray said that he is still in favor of a one sheet flyer, which would be cheaper and could be updated as changes are made in the system. Ms. Jund suggested that the sheets should be distributed through places like women's resource centers, the NAACP and Native Corporations to get the widest distribution possible.

The commission returned to consideration of the Issues Memo. Senator Ray suggested that bilingual requirements which had been discussed with Mr. Blank should be added to the position descriptions. Mr. Kareen explained that the state has a general description of what, for example, an eligibility technician is required to do wherever the position is located. Then there are individual position descriptions, and those should reflect the language requirements of that particular position. If a position with a language requirement were open, then only bilingual applicants would be considered for that position. That decision should be made in describing the job, before the department is filling a vacancy.

Representative Fuller asked whether there was anything that could be done about the problems which Fish and Game has in filling their seasonal positions. Mr. Muller suggested that Fish and Game should open the registers in the winter and encourage people in the Bush to apply then. When summer comes and the positions need to be filled, they will have people from the local area who they can legally hire. He added that as the executive branch works with the nonpermanent law, it is becoming acceptable and understood. Senator Ray suggested that the registers could be open in February or March, and they could even make selections after that, with the job to begin the first of June. Mr. Kareen agreed. It all depends on the management attitude of the department. Senator Ray suggested that the commission write to the Department of Fish and Game, recommending that they open their registers in the winter and make their commitments then for June hire. Mr. Pugh pointed out that H&SS found that they needed some travel funds to carry out their special recruitment effort for the Nome Youth Center. The commission might want to make the legislature aware of this possibility. Representative Fuller replied that the rural areas have a responsibility too, and that the Native Corporations might be helpful in any recruiting effort.

A.5. Inclusion of handicapped individuals and people over 40 in the five-plus-five procedures.

Mr. Kareen explained that age discrimination under federal law starts at 40. He added that the state has a program to assist the severely handicapped in finding positions without having to go through the regular examination procedures. Senator Ray said that he had never received any complaints from handicapped people about discrimination.

A.6. Employee credit for any type of Alaskan employment.

Senator Ray said that the suggestion was worthwhile, but that it would not be possible to put it into effect under constitutional requirements. Mr. Pugh added that usually those with work experience in Alaska will make a better impression in the job interview, so there will be some recognition given at that time.

A.7. Credit for experience.

Senator Ray said that he favors the idea that job requirements should emphasize practical work experience and place less emphasis on educational requirements although there has to be a balance. He added that some of the test questions he has seen have no bearing at all to the job requirements.

Mr. Kareen responded that federal guidelines about tests require that first, the division study all the jobs within a class and identify what skills it takes to do them. Then they develop the test based on that information. After the test is developed, the division gives it to all those who are actually working in that job class. They evaluate the employees' test results and ask their supervisors to evaluate how well each employee actually performs on the job. Then the division compares the test results with the supervisor's rating. Those who do well on the test are supposed to be those who are rated well by their supervisors. The federal guidelines expect that the test results will be correct 94 percent of the time. The majority of the tests which the state presently uses were borrowed from other states and a number of them were provided by the federal government. Mr. Pugh suggested that the commission meet with Dr. Dilley from the Division of Personnel to learn more about the topic. Senator Ray agreed.

B. ISSUES CONCERNING PRESENT EMPLOYEES

1. Training for Supervisors

Mr. Thayer pointed out that according to a governor's directive, all supervisors have to attend EEO classes which are continuously given by the Department of Administration. Mr. Pugh suggested that the training given now is addressed more to attitudes. Most supervisors don't know about the practical questions - how to use the five-plus-five certification procedures, for example. Senator Ray suggested that a letter notifying supervisors of the procedures and where to go if they had questions about the fine points would resolve the problem.

Ms. Jund asked whether in actuality all supervisors take the EEO training. Mr. Fisher, Director of EEO, replied that in the past two or three years, 1,500 people have gone through the training offered by the division. It is focused mostly on behavior. It might be appropriate to include more emphasis on the law. Ms. Jund suggested that a refresher course for those who have had the initial program would help to provide current information. Mr. Fisher agreed, but pointed out that there is a problem of staffing within the division.

Mr. Pugh asked about the Attorney General's opinion concerning whether the five-plus-five procedures could legally be made mandatory. Mr. Muller replied that the Attorney General had said that it would not be legal to ignore all of the other people on the register when using the five-plus-five certifications, but that if all of the top five were considered as well as the top five minority applicants or women, then the problem was avoided. In regard to supervisory EEO training, Mr. Muller pointed out that the programs are given statewide, not just in Juneau.

B.2. EEO Evaluation of Supervisors.

Mr. Kareen pointed out that the present evaluation form has a box which asks about each supervisor's performance in EEO matters. Ms. Jund suggested that the supervisor's performance should be written in the narrative portion rather than just being recorded by a check mark. Mr. Kareen replied that the narrative portion of an evaluation is to address areas where a person has done particularly well or particularly poorly.

B.4. Changes in the Traditional Work System.

Senator Ray said that the commission should most strongly recommend that the Administration develop the use of flex time. The legislature passed a resolution permitting its development and the Governor was interested in it at one time. Flex time would help people in the rest of the state to do business with Juneau. Offices should also be open during the lunch hour, when people need to do business with the state.

Mr. Kareen pointed out one problem he has run into when calling a federal office in Seattle. The individual he wants to speak to is on flex time. He is never there, the office has no schedule of when he will be there because it varies from day-to-day and he is the only person in the office with the background to answer Mr. Kareen's questions.

Mr. Pugh added that he has found difficulty with employees in trying to set up flexible work schedules. Employees believe that flex time should be a voluntary scheduling and resist management forcing changes in work hours. For example, employees in Anchorage want to work from 7:00 to 3:00 p.m. so that they are off when their children are home. That does not answer management's need to keep the offices open for an hour after people are off work, from 5:00 to 6:00 p.m. Mr. Kareen added that union contracts require that the state pay a swing shift differential for employees who begin work at 10:00 a.m. or after. Senator Ray suggested that that could be changed in bargaining.

Representative Fuller added that the farther you are away from Juneau the more difficult it is to do business with the state. In the far north, there is a three-hour time difference. Juneau state employees need to remember that they provide support services for people around the state. He added that you need to have a decision-maker available. If management is not there, there is no sense in having the office open. Mr. Thayer suggested that one option to include is a four-day work week in which employees would work longer hours for four days and then have three days off. It might permit keeping state offices open for six days a week. Mr. Pugh added that the system should be uniform. If one office is open and another isn't, then the public becomes irritated.

In answer to Mr. Thayer's suggestion, Mr. Kareen said that research elsewhere has shown that flex time is desirable for management because it can increase productivity. However, in the vast majority of cases, compressing the workweek into four days results in a drop in productivity. Mr. Pugh pointed out another problem created by the number of holidays for state employees. If employees are working only four days a week normally, then they go to a three-day workweek during each of the 11 weeks in which a state holiday falls.

B.3. Training Opportunities.

Ms. Jund said that this came from Ms. Randall's testimony at an earlier meeting and that she concurred with her. It is always the top level brass that goes for training. Senator Ray pointed out that this comes down to a budget problem. The commission should mention the suggestion, but it is an administrative problem. Mr. Kareen added that when done properly, some midmanagement training will multiply when the employee who was trained shares the information with other employees. Funds spent for midmanagement training can actually benefit lower range employees too. He added that the budget could identify what level the training was to be geared for. Senator Ray pointed out that there was an Attorney General's opinion which says that the legislature infringes on the executive branch when it tries to direct how money is to be spent through Legislative Intent. Mr. Kareen asked whether the appropriation itself could be directed to a particular level of training. Senator Ray said that it could. However, that still leaves the problem of gaining legislative approval for any training funds at all.

Mr. Pugh added that because of the large turnover of employees in the lower salary ranges, he finds it difficult to justify spending the limited training funds in his division on those employees. Senator Eliason said that the person who has more responsibility should have the majority of the training. Mr. Pugh suggested that there should be a central statewide career development program. For example, he recently tried to hire a secretary, using both the Clerk Typist III and the Corresponding Secretary I registers. There were 80 names on the the two registers. Out of those 80 names, three people responded and of those three people, the highest typing skill level was 35 words per minute with 18 mistakes. The office made a provisional appointment and found two people who were not yet certified but who were taking a word processing course through the University. Both typed better than 60 words per minute with fewer than 10 mistakes. Training can be an asset to the state, but there is a question of how to accomplish it.

Ms. Jund added that in testimony before the commission a couple of years ago, a computer programmer pointed out that if he were sent to training programs it would save the state from having to bring in a new employee at a higher level from outside. Training an existing employee would save money. Senator Ray said that the way the system works, it is difficult to get training funds through the Finance Committees of the legislature. Senator Eliason suggested that it should be possible to use the community college programs to provide opportunities for students to find job-related training. Student loans are available if needed.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting.

Dear Senator Ray:

The attached document contains the testimony presented to the Blue Ribbon Commission on November 3rd by Brenda Knapp of the Central Council's staff. Additionally, the document contains three recommendations for action that were not included in the oral testimony.

The Central Council Tlingit and Haida Indian Tribes of Alaska would be pleased to work with the Blue Ribbon Commission, the Legislature or the administrative branch of government to develop and implement more equitable hiring practices for Alaska Natives.

Sincerely,

CENTRAL COUNCIL OF TLINGIT AND

TESTIMONY FOR PRESENTATION TO THE STATE'S BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE PERSONNEL ACT

ALASKA NATIVE HIRE IN STATE GOVERNMENT

CHANGING COMMITMENT INTO ACTION - ON NOVEMBER 2, 1981 THE BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT RELEASED A MEMORANDUM TITLED "COMPARISON OF ALASKA NATIVES EMPLOYMENT BY THE STATE IN 1979, 1980 AND 1981". DURING THE THREE YEAR PERIOD, A GREAT DEAL OF EFFORT HAS BEEN MADE TO CORRECT AND IMPROVE THE EMPLOYMENT REPRESENTATION OF ALASKA NATIVES (AND OTHER MINORITIES) IN STATE GOVERNMENT. REPORTS HAVE BEEN FILED, PLANS DEVELOPED, RESPONSIBILITIES PINPOINTED, ROLES CLARIFIED, DATA SYSTEMS IMPLEMENTED, POLICY EXPOUNDED AND THE BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ESTABLISHED. YET, ACCORDING TO FIGURES TAKEN FROM APPENDIX A TO THE 1979 ANNUAL REPORT TO THE HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION, IN APRIL, 1978 NATIVE PEOPLE HELD 518 JOBS IN STATE GOVERNMENT. THIS FIGURE REPRESENTED 5.4% OF THE TOTAL STATE GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES (9,635). TODAY (NOVEMBER 3rd, 1981), THREE AND ONE-HALF YEARS LATER, ACCORDING TO FIGURES JUST RELEASED BY THE LEGISLATURE'S BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT (MEMORANDUM DATED NOVEMBER 1981), NATIVE PEOPLE HOLD 694 JOBS (5.4%) OUT OF A STATE GOVERNMENT WORKFORCE OF 12,903. IN OTHER WORDS, DESPITE ALL THE DIALOGUE, MEETINGS, REPORTS, PLANS, and COMMISSION ACTIVITIES WHICH HAVE TAKEN PLACE DURING THE PAST THREE AND ONE-HALF YEARS, NATIVE PEOPLE IN ALASKA HAVE NOT IMPROVED THEIR TOTAL REPRESENTATION IN THE WORKFORCE OF STATE GOVERNMENT BY EVEN ONE TENTH OF ONE PERCENTAGE POINT.

ALTHOUGH 16 PERCENT OF THE STATE'S POPULATION IS ALASKA NATIVE, LESS THAN SIX PERCENT OF THE JOBS IN STATE GOVERNMENT ARE HELD BY NATIVE PEOPLE. MOST OF THESE JOBS ARE, AS EVERYONE KNOWS, CONCENTRATED IN THE CLERICAL, CRAFT AND PARA-PROFESSIONAL CATEGORIES. VERY FEW PROFESSIONAL AND MANAGEMENT POSITIONS ARE HELD BY NATIVE PEOPLE. THE UNDER REPRESENTATION AND UNDER UTILIZATION OF NATIVE PEOPLE AFFECTS MOST JOB CATEGORIES AND ALL DEPARTMENTS OF THE STATE GOVERNMENT. IN FACT, IN NINE OF THE FIFTEEN DEPARTMENTS OF THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH OF STATE GOVERNMENT, THE REPRESENTATION OF ALASKA NATIVE PEOPLE HAS DECLINED BETWEEN APRIL 1978 AND SEPTEMBER 1981. OF THE REMAINING SIX DEPARTMENTS FOUR INCREASED THE REPRESENTATION OF NATIVE PEOPLE BY LESS THAN ONE PERCENT OVER EARLIER FIGURES. TWO DEPARTMENTS (COMMUNITY & REGIONAL AFFAIRS AND NATURAL RESOURCES) APPEAR TO HAVE MADE SUBSTANTIAL GAINS. (WE WOULD LIKE TO KNOW WHAT THE ACTUAL CHANGES HAVE BEEN.)

IT WOULD APPEAR THAT THE COMMITMENT, SO CLEARLY STATED IN ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 59 AS EXPRESSING THE EQUAL EMPLOYMENT POLICY OF THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH OF STATE GOVERNMENT, NEEDS TO BE MORE FORCEFULLY AND IMAGINATIVELY TRANSLATED INTO ACTION. THE ACTIONS OF THE PAST THREE AND ONE-HALF YEARS HAVE PROVIDED NECESSARY AND USEFUL MECHANISMS TO HELP STATE GOVERNMENT RECRUIT, SELECT, HIRE, PROMOTE AND RETAIN MINORITIES IN STATE GOVERNMENT.

THE EXPANDED CERTIFICATION POLICY IS A PARTICULARLY USEFUL STEP IN BRINGING QUALIFIED NATIVE PEOPLE TO THE ATTENTION OF HIRING DEPARTMENTS. BUT WE BELEIVE THAT WHAT HAS BEEN ACCOMPLISHED TO DATE REPRESENTS ONLY THE FIRST FEW STEPS IN AN OVERALL PLAN THAT MUST PRODUCE RESULTS IN NUMBERS RATHER THAN RHETORIC.

ACCORDINGLY, WE WOULD LIKE TO RECOMMEND THREE MAJOR EFFORTS THAT WE BELIEVE ARE JUSTIFIED AND NECESSARY:

1. EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES. A FOUR YEAR EFFORT TO ANALYZE EXISTING JOB DESCRIPTIONS AND ACTUAL DUTIES AND TO REVISE THE JOB STRUCTURE WITHIN ALL DEPARTMENTS TO INSURE:

   A. ENTRY LEVEL POSITIONS ARE AVAILABLE TO THE MAXIMUM EXTENT POSSIBLE.

   B. CAREER LADDERS (INCLUDING ALTERNATIVES) ARE AVAILABLE WHICH PROVIDE AMPLE OPPORTUNITY FOR UPWARD MOBILITY.

   C. SUPPORT SERVICES ARE AVAILABLE INCLUDING BUT NOT LIMITED TO, DAY CARE, CAREER AND EDUCATIONAL COUNSELING, TUITION REIMBURSEMENT AND TIME-OFF-WITH-PAY FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES TO PROVIDE ASSISTANCE TO MINORITIES EMPLOYED BY STATE GOVERNMENT AND SEEKING TO IMPROVE THEIR EDUCATION AND TRAINING. THIS PROGRAM SHOULD BE FUNDED AS A SEPARATE AND HIGHLY VISIBLE EFFORT WITHIN STATE GOVERNMENT, PREFERABLY BY THE OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR. IT SHOULD BE CONTINUED UNTIL PROPORTIONATE REPRESENTATION IS ACHIEVED.

2. NATIVE RECRUITMENT. WE BELIEVE THE STATE SHOULD CONTRACT WITH EACH OF THE NATIVE REGIONAL NON-PROFIT CORPORATIONS TO PROVIDE ASSISTANCE TO THE STATE IN THE IDENTIFICATION AND RECRUITMENT OF MINORITY APPLICANTS. THE SIZE OF EACH CONTRACT SHOULD BE RELATED TO THE NUMBER OF POTENTIAL CONTACTS (THE SIZE OF THE REGION'S ENROLLMENT). SPECIFICALLY, THE CONTRACT SHOULD BE LARGE ENOUGH TO ENABLE EACH REGIONAL CORPORATION TO HIRE ONE OR MORE RECRUITERS TO SEEK OUT AND WORK WITH POTENTIAL NATIVE APPLICANTS.

3. MINORITY INTERNSHIP AND WORK-STUDY. WE BELIEVE A SPECIAL PROGRAM WHICH WOULD PROVIDE SUMMER WORK EXPERIENCE OPPORTUNITIES (WITH GOOD PAY AND REASONABLE BENEFITS) WOULD BE HELPFUL IN ATTRACTING NATIVE YOUTH INTO PUBLIC SERVICE. WE BELIEVE A SPECIAL PROGRAM NEEDS TO BE DESIGNED AND FUNDED WHICH WILL OPEN UP SUMMER JOBS IN VARIOUS AGENCIES AND DEPARTMENTS OF GOVERNMENT. THESE ARE TO BE JOBS LEADING TO PROFESSIONAL EMPLOYMENT UPON GRADUATION. IF THE JOBS TAKE STUDENTS AWAY FROM THEIR HOMES WE BELIEVE ADDITIONAL HELP IN THE WAY OF HOUSING ALLOWANCES AND TRANSPORTATION STIPENDS SHOULD BE INCLUDED. WHILE THIS PROGRAM NEEDS TO BE COORDINATED WITH THE UNIVERSITY OF ALASKA AND THE NATIVE CORPORATIONS, WE BELIEVE IT NEEDS TO BE DEVELOPED AS A HIGHLY VISIBLE PROGRAM WITHIN STATE GOVERNMENT. IF SUCCESSFUL, THE PROGRAM MIGHT GROW BY ADDING AN ADDITIONAL NUMBER OF INTERNSHIPS IN FOLLOWING YEARS.

THESE IDEAS REPRESENT JUST A FEW INITIAL SUGGESTIONS AND PROGRAM CONCEPTS FOR ADDITIONAL ACTION WHICH WE BELIEVE THE STATE MUST UNDERTAKE IF IT HAS A REAL COMMITMENT TO CORRECT THE UNDER REPRESENTATION AND UNDER UTILIZATION OF ONE OF ITS GREATEST RESOURCES - ITS NATIVE PEOPLE. EVEN IF THE COMMITMENT EXISTS, A QUESTION REMAINS AS TO WHETHER THE STATE IS WILLING TO VOLUNTARILY TRANSLATE ITS COMMITMENT INTO ACTION.

Legislative Information Office, Anchorage, Alaska
November 19, 1981

MINUTES

Senator Ray, chairman, called the meeting to order at 10:00 a.m. The roll call showed the following members present: Senator Bill Ray, Myrt Charney, Lynn Wegener (alternate for John Chenoweth), Senator Richard Eliason, Representative Jack Fuller, Kenneth Kareen, Lynda McCurry, Sandra Withers (alternate for Commissioner Hudson), Greg O'Claray, and Cherie Shelley. The following members were absent: Bill Huston, Lois Jund and John Pugh. The following were also present: Roger Thayer, James E. Fisher and Darlene Livermore.

Senator Ray announced receipt of an application for membership on the Blue Ribbon Commission from Mr. James Chase, who is a member of the Human Rights Commission. He asked the Blue Ribbon Commission members to consider extending an invitation to Mr. Chase to join the commission. Mr. Chase was not present and the question was held for later consideration.

Senator Ray opened nominations for the position of Vice Chairman of the commission. Myrt Charney nominated Representative Fuller. Senator Ray asked for other nominations. No others were received. He closed the nominations and announced that since Representative Fuller was the only candidate, he was appointed Vice Chairman of the commission.

Senator Ray called for public testimony. No one came forward at this time. He asked Cherie Shelley, executive director of Alaska Public Employees Union, to relate how APEA handles any discrimination complaints they receive. She replied that typically they receive few complaints. They refer those they do receive to the Human Rights Commission. She suggested that Darlene Livermore, who handles employment complaints from APEA members, would be better able to answer the question. Ms. Livermore explained that APEA does receive a number of contacts on issues of discrimination, both on the basis of sex (which are the more frequent) and on the basis of minority group membership. In addition, APEA receives a number of sexual harassment complaints. The staff investigates to determine whether there is a legitimate charge to take before the Human Rights Commission. If the complaint is not specious, then APEA makes a referral to the Human Rights Commission and continues to give support to the complainant through the complaint processing procedures. She added that the logic pattern of complaints from men and women is roughly the same. Where men are seeking employment in a job class typically occupied by women they use the same kinds of arguments that women use in seeking employment in job classes predominately occupied by men.

In answer to a question from Senator Ray, Myrt Charney, executive director of the Legislative Affairs Agency, indicated that he is not aware of any complaints within the agency. There was one sexual harassment charge filed against a legislator one or two years ago which was investigated and found to be without merit.

Ken Kareen, Director of the Division of Personnel, indicated that he does receive inquiries from individuals about whether they may have been discriminated against. They typically are seeking background information to show whether they have come to the wrong conclusion. In one specific instance which happened three years ago, a woman applied for a position and was interviewed. She later received a call at home from the man who had interviewed her asking for a date. She turned him down. She later learned that someone else was appointed to the position. She filed a complaint with the Human Rights Commission and did receive a damage award. Ms. Shelley added that the case was settled without an admission of guilt on the part of the state.

Mr. Kareen added that in the three months that he has been back working for the state, he has been approached by three women who have wondered whether positions which have been offered to them have been offered because of their capabilities or because the person hiring was seeking to fill a quota.

Senator Ray pointed out that it is popular to assume there is a great deal of discrimination in state hiring. However, the commission has found few instances were formalized in the face of complaint. He suggested that one area that should be scrutinized in-depth is the policy of advancement of people who work for the state to the exclusion of first-time hires. A spin-off of this policy is to exclude many members of minority groups, since they are typically not already state employees. This doesn't mean that promotion in itself is bad, since it is also important to bring people up through the ranks, so to speak. Mr. Kareen pointed out that the State Personnel Act and the Personnel Rules provide that current state employees shall receive additional consideration for promotion. The state does benefit by promoting people who know the program already. However, it can also be an advantage to have a new perspective on policies which everyone may have taken for granted, and a new employee can bring some fresh insights into the operation. It is important to balance between the two policies.

Al Baffone, Sr., Business Manager of Local 71, addressed the commission. He explained that the union is presently pursuing a case on behalf of a black member, Mr. Berkley, who was trained as an equipment operator and is now in Wage Group IV, which is one step below journeyman status. There was an opening for a higher position in the duty station in which the member worked. Under Local 71's labor agreement with the state, the employer is supposed to post vacancies before filling them. However, the state transferred another employee from a different duty station instead of posting the vacancy and filling by promotion. Local 71 took the case to arbitration, but the arbitrator ruled that the labor agreement permitted the transfer. The member will file charges with other agencies to contest the matter. He was brought into Local 71 under an affirmative action program four or five years ago and has been waiting for some time for this promotion.

Mr. Baffone added that if there is a subsequent layoff, Mr. Berkley, who has four years of duty station seniority, could be laid off because he is at a lower level than the person transferred. Senator Ray indicated that if Mr. Baffone would provide the commission with the background information on the matter, the staff would investigate it.

Senator Ray asked Senator Eliason whether he received many complaints. Senator Eliason replied that he had not received many about discrimination, probably because there are so few state employees among his constituents.

Senator Ray asked Representative Fuller whether he had received many. Representative Fuller indicated that he had not received too many, but that there are problems in the rural areas of his district. For example, where a new state employee moves to the area, usually his wife will be well qualified and therefore will end up working for the state, rather than that job being filled by someone from the area. He suggested that the only solution is to get the people trained for some of those jobs. He also addressed the question of educational requirements for state jobs. Within the Department of Fish & Game, there are positions for counting sea mammals during the spring hunting season. There are people in the villages who are well qualified to do that work, but most of the people who get the jobs are college students who have applied early and been placed on the state registers. Since they are new to the area, it takes a month or so for them to get adjusted and oriented. Representative Fuller added that times are changing and there are a number of young people in the villages who are interested in getting jobs and are willing to leave the subsistence life style. He pointed out that it does not take an educational background to do a good job. He has a friend in St. Lawrence Island who neither reads nor writes English well, but the department has been depending on him to take the walrus count. He is able to keep the job because he began about 14 years ago before there were tight educational requirements.

Mr. Kareen pointed out that the state does accept experience as a substitute for educational requirements for Fish & Game technician positions, and includes volunteer experience. Representative Fuller agreed but said that the system isn't working. You still have to get your name on a register.

Nancy Groshek suggested that the state institute a pilot project to go out to the Bush and solicit applications and explain the hiring process to the people there, particularly for jobs like the Fish & Game technicians.

Cherie Shelley pointed out that one of the complaints she hears frequently is that there is no provision permitting hiring from the immediate area in special situations. For example, when she was in Kodiak, Fish & Game needed someone to work on a boat. They hired a person from Anchorage, but as soon as he arrived in Kodiak, he took a different job on a fishing boat. Then the department hired someone from Kodiak on an emergency hire basis. The Fish & Game boat was out longer than 30 days and Fish & Game was required to get him off the boat. They spent more on helicopters than they paid the person hired. She suggested that the commission consider recommending that the Division of Personnel set up local registers for some situations. Senator Ray questioned how this would fit into the merit system.

Representative Fuller agreed that the authority to hire locally would help. In most cases, the Fish & Game supervisors would know the qualifications of the people they would be hiring. Ms. Groshek added that the state would be saving money in transportation costs for new employees and that regulations could probably be instituted by next summer.

Mr. O'Claray asked if he could return to Mr. Baffone's earlier testimony. He asked whether the grievance which Local 71 had filed with the state alleged that their member had been denied a promotional opportunity on the basis of his race. Mr. Baffone replied that the grievance filed had addressed the legality of the transfer rather than the denial of the promotional opportunity. Therefore they had not addressed the question of discrimination in the complaint. The union believes that Mr. Berkley's case is still alive. However, they have been informed that when his case is submitted for arbitration, the state will submit the decision of the transfer arbitration and say that the case has already been heard since Mr. Berkley figured in the initial case. Mr. Baffone stated that he is taking the position that they have exhausted their internal averues under the labor agreement.

Sandy Withers, Director of the Division of Labor Relations, offered a comment on the case. The underlying question in the grievance was whether there was promotional opportunity in the first place. She explained that two employees had transferred, and had they not transferred there would not have been a vacancy in the first place. Mr. Baffone replied that because the labor agreement provides for duty station seniority, Mr. Berkley will be laid off if a layoff comes, even though the transferree has less seniority. Under the new classification system, the lower guy in the equipment operator group gets laid off before the higher guy. Senator Ray asked how the situation centered into racial discrimination. Mr. Baffone replied that it did because Mr. Berkley is black and is qualified to do the job. He added that if Mr. Berkley were white, he would not be addressing the Blue Ribbon Commission.

Ms. Shelley asked Mr. Baffone what Local 71's position would have been if one of the transferrees had been black and the man seeking promotion had been caucasian. Would the union have objected to the transfer under those circumstances? Mr. Baffone replied that since there is specific language in the agreement that transfers will only take place after promotional opportunities have been exhausted, the union would have objected.

Mr. O'Claray asked again whether Mr. Baffone alleged at this time that the state acted in a discriminatory manner against the black worker. Mr. Baffone replied that he did. In answer to a question from Representative Fuller, Mr. Baffone replied that had the member not promoted been a white person, the union would have arbitrated that failure to promote, too.

Senator Ray asked James Chase to tell the commission a little about his background and why he was interested in membership on the commission. Mr. Chase replied that he came to Alaska as a result of a military assignment to a remote radar station in 1969. He later transferred to Elmendorf Air Force Base and then decided in 1972 to remain in Alaska. He retired from the Air Force in 1974 and went job hunting. His first job was with the Human Relations Commission of the Municipality of Anchorage. While he was there, the city changed to a municipality and he helped to create the Equal Rights Commission. Then he went to the Alaska Native Foundation where he traveled throughout the state working with school districts, helping them to desegregate. When it was defunded he had to seek other employment. He is now the affirmative action officer for the University of Alaska, Anchorage, and for the community college. In addition to his work, Mr. Chase said that he has been involved in community activities and is currently a commissioner on the Alaska State Commission for Human Rights. He added that that is the position he would like to represent on the Blue Ribbon Commission, since there had been a seat for the Human Rights Commission when the Blue Ribbon Commission was originally established.

Senator Ray explained that the Blue Ribbon Commission has not set aside seats for any particular representation, and that he hoped members represented their own personal convictions rather than their employment. Greg O'Claray asked Mr. Chase whether his employment with the University would offer him opportunity to attend meetings of the Blue Ribbon Commission in other cities. Mr. Chase replied that he would be able to. The University believes that activities like membership on the Blue Ribbon Commission would be ancillary to his job and that he would be permitted to attend, provided only that he met his prime responsibility of getting his job done.

Senator Ray asked whether Mr. Chase saw a pattern in state employment of discrimination on the basis of race. Mr. Chase replied that what appears to him to have happened is that there is a sort of inertia in the system. People become set in their ways and entrenched in their positions. Nothing motivates them to change. Procedures and policies meet with resistance, and unless the total management goes along with a new policy, it's very hard to implement a change. There are people who have been given an "extraordinary opportunity" because of their gender and their race and when they are asked to implement an affirmative action program, thet react to it right away because it means they have to move something. Mr. Chase added that he is stubborn enough to believe that change can come about and there can be improvement in the system.

Senator Ray pointed out that frequently what is perceived as discrimination is not understood by the person doing it as discriminatory. Mr. Chase replied that he believes that it is a requirement of all managers not only to show that there is no discrimination, but also that there is nothing perceived as discrimination.

Mr. O'Claray asked Mr. Chase how he perceived the effectiveness of the current EEO program in the state or the University system. Mr. Chase replied that the University system has changed considerably in the 2-1/2 years that he has been there. When he began, the University did not even know how many employees it had, not to mention the racial mixture. They now have a lot of information about their employees and are working with supervisors to convince them to hire minority applicants and that affirmative action is a necessary thing. The affirmative action job is multi-facted, and at the same time that he has to get the managers involved in the program, he also has to insure that people are applying for positions and that they understand how to write a resume for the University. There has been progress. He added that he knows a little about the state's EEO program and that they have also made progress.

In answer to a question from Mr. Kareen, Mr. Chase said that the University has developed a base on the availability of the workforce in his hiring area for different occupations. It is broken into the seven EEO categories and is further defined by disciplines. He explained that the University recruits locally for positions in the clerical and crafts fields and therefore they use a local base for those job categories. For executives and professional positions, they use a national base.

In answer to questions from Senator Ray, Mr. Chase indicated that he believed that the goal of anti-discrimination laws is to control a person's behavior, not his thoughts. Once behavior is modified, particularly in a hiring situation, then people who may have latent bigotries discover that "it isn't so bad after all" and their attitudes may also begin to change.

Ms. Shelley suggested that, while Mr. Chase was obviously well-qualified for membership on the commission, notice of the vacancy should be given so that others who might be interested could submit applications. She pointed out that the principal membership of the commission is composed of 10 males, one of whom is a minority person, and three females, none of whom are minority group members. Senator Ray responded that the commission has three applications for membership and that it will always accept applications, but that we are not recruiting for them. He urged members not to become sectionalized.

Senator Ray recessed the meeting at 11:30 a.m. for lunch.

The meeting was called back to order at 1:35 p.m. Senator Ray asked for public testimony.

Donna Brooks, a concerned citizen and a previous state employee, addressed the commission.

In 1974 she terminated from state employment and six months later attempted to return. The position was still available, but later the state discontinued her job classification. Since 1975 she has not been notified of the discontinuation of the job class nor has she been offered a rehire position, although she was contacted once about a 30-day emergency position. She is between first and fourth on the registers. Ms. Brooks asked whether hiring authorities automatically receive the names of rehires when they request a register and whether they have to contact the individuals on the top of the list.

Mr. Kareen replied that rehires and transfers are listed on the registers as additional candidates which a manager may consider. Managers are not required to contact those individuals, however. In fact, in working the eligible list, a manager can contact one applicant and as long as that individual is one of the highest five on the list, the manager can give that person the position without considering anyone else. The Division of Personnel recommends that managers contact all of the top five because they won't know which person is best until they make that check.

Ms. Brooks asked what is happening with the affirmative action policy of the state. Mr. James E. Fisher, the Director of the Equal Employment Opportunity Division of the state, responded. The state Division of EEO has three general functions. One is planning, another is training, and the third is handling complaints. Affirmative action is part of the planning area. The plans are goals set which the state can use to measure its accomplishments. The state has only gone through one cycle of departmental affirmative action plans. It is now in the process of revising those plans for the first time.

Mr. Fisher continued. One of things that the state service has been criticized for is not having accurate records to be able to measure precisely what is happening in affirmative action. The state is improving the records available so that it will be able to point out the actual specific problems in affirmative action.

With respect to affirmative action itself, there are ongoing activities within the state which vary from agency to agency, with turnover, and with location. The Division of EEO has an office in Anchorage where Mr. Fisher suggested that Ms. Brooks might wish to inquire for the most accurate answer to her specific concern. Senator Ray added that while all departments may have affirmative action programs, some of them don't work.

Mr. O'Claray asked about the circumstances surrounding Ms. Brooks' termination in 1975. She explained that she had been hospitalized. All her performance evaluations while she was working were above average. She was not aware of any personality conflicts which might have followed her in seeking reemployment. In answer to a question from Lynn Wegener, Ms. Brooks indicated that she is on the registers for Nurse III, II, and I. She had been working for the Department of Health & Social Services at API, the Alaska Psychiatric Institution. Since leaving there she has worked part-time for other employers and is now so employed.

Barbara Schuhmann, Chair of the Alaska Commission on the Status of Women, addressed the Blue Ribbon Commission. She stated that the Commission on the Status of Women had wanted to undertake an overall review of the state's personnel system because of testimony they received criticizing the system itself as discriminating against women. However, they lacked the money and time to undertake such a study and also believed that the study should not be limited to questions of sex discrimination, but should include questions as to other bases of unconstitutional discrimination as well. She asked that the Blue Ribbon Commission undertake the review that the Status of Women Commission would have done if it had the time and resources.

Ms. Schuhmann continued. The most recent comprehensive study of the distribution of women and minorities in state government was done by the Alaska Advisory Committee to the United States Commission on Civil Rights in July, 1980. Among the findings of that study were that: state employment "tends to be mostly white male"; the state offers no child care facilities to encourage women to work for the state; when women are hired they are "for the most part relegated to the lowest paying jobs in clerical, secretarial and technical fields"; the hiring procedures in some departments are "both consciously and unconsciously discriminatory"; and the state has not adequately communicated hiring and promotional opportunities. Ms. Schuhmann added that while there has been some progress since the release of that report, the statistics which it included have not changed significantly.

Ms. Schuhmann pointed out that persons claiming discrimination on the basis of race or sex against private employers often prove their cases by use of statistics. If a statistical case were built against the State of Alaska, the state would have a hard time showing that it has not discriminated in hiring and promotion on the basis of race and sex. A report published by the Civil Rights Commission in 1977 showed that only 8% of the people in the top salary ranges (22-28) were women, while at the same time women occupied over 85% of the positions in the lowest end of the scale (05-09). In five departments, not a single woman occupied a position in those top salary ranges. Minority women fared even worse. In all of the departments of the state government, only one solitary minority woman could be found who occupied a position in the top salary ranges.

Ms. Schuhmann added that a more recent survey of the state's affirmative action effort was released by the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity this year, and it does not show much change from this situation. These figures support what the Commission on the Status of Women believes to be the case -- that despite the fact that Alaska has a preponderance of highly educated, capable, and experienced women in the population, many of them have a tremendous difficulty in breaking into the state personnel system or rising in it once they have entered.

In testimony before the Commission on the Status of Women, women have cited repeated instances where the inflexibility of the personnel system prevented them from obtaining suitable employment or achieving upward mobility. Women in professional positions have had difficulty advancing to supervisory positions and receiving equal compensation for equal work. From the testimony, it appears that women in the lower paid clerical positions are afforded practically no incentive to learn new skills or take on additional responsibility, little on-the-job training for career advancement, and no career ladders. Ms. Schuhmann suggested that a bonus system based on performance to encourage workers to grow and develop is an essential management tool. The existing merit increase system does not fulfill this function and discriminates against those employees in lower salary ranges, since employees in ranges 05 to 09 receive between a 2.6% and a 3% increase when moving from Step A to Step B, while for positions in range 15 or above, the first increase is never less than 3.5%.

Ms. Schuhmann reported that in hiring staff for their own Commission, they found that the classifications of the state personnel system were too rigid to allow for their needs for people with very diverse skills. Too often, this inflexibility causes managers to create more exempt positions, which are outside the EEO directives which the Commission strongly supports.

On a more positive note, Ms. Schuhmann indicated that there are several efforts underway which have great potential for correcting some of the systemic problems in personnel procedures. First, the practice of expanded certification, or the "5 + 5" system, is a valuable management tool for providing managers an opportunity to interview the five most qualified women and minorities to achieve better representation in all levels of the workforce. It enables managers to go beyond paper credentials of applicants and beyond tests which may be culturally biased, neither of which may be predictive of job performance. Female state employees have testified before the Commission on the Status of Women that the main problem with the "5 + 5" system is that it is optional and many managers never request the additional names. The Commission also supports job sharing, since it provides women in particular with the opportunity to combine homemaking and careers. That program as well as flextime and part-time work options and internships or tuition reimbursement plans should be well publicized. It should not require long distance telephone calls to Juneau to find out about these programs, as is often the case today.

The Commission on the Status of Women supports two bills introduced last session. House Bill 906, sponsored by the Blue Ribbon Commission 1/ amends the veterans' preference point system. Passage of a bill limiting the duration of any veterans' preference will have a significant impact on what has been a major source of systemic discrimination against women in the state personnel system.

The Committee Substitute for Senate Bill 248 deserves attention next session. The Division of Equal Employment Opportunity now has the responsibility for carrying out the state's policy on equal opportunity, for monitoring the activities of all departments and ensuring that compliance occurs. The bill would define those responsibilities in state law. Ms. Schuhmann said that the Commission on the Status of Women believes that it is essential to have a fully functioning, adequately staffed Division of Equal Employment Opportunity. She urged the Blue

1/ Note: HB 906 was actually introduced in 1980

Ribbon Commission's support of the bill as well as support for a fiscal note sufficient to appoint an Equal Employment Officer for each department within the executive branch.

Senator Ray asked Ms. Schuhmann about the problem of having to make long distance telephone calls to Juneau instead of being able to get the information in the branch offices. She indicated that testimony they had received reported that often the local offices don't have the information readily at hand, so callers are referred to Juneau. In addition, in their own offices, they have had to call Juneau for questions they thought should be able to be answered in the branch offices. Mr. Kareen replied that on specific information concerning an application, there is only one file kept and that is in Juneau. However, for general recruitment schedules and for the process and procedures of the state, the branch offices are equipped for most questions. In addition, Anchorage does hold the records for some applications, which on occasion have to be referred down to Juneau, should an applicant move there.

Ms. Schuhmann introduced Chris Callahan to answer the questions more specifically, and explained that the reason for addressing this topic is to alert the Blue Ribbon Commission to the fact that not all of the Division of Personnel offices in every part of the state always have all the information which they might have.

Ms. Callahan stated that the majority of the primary points raised in the statement of Ms. Schuhmann are well-documented, and added that indications of difficulty in dealing with decentralized offices is not unique to this state. Senator Ray replied that in order for the commission to be constructive, we need specific information. He asked Niel Thomas, Executive Director of the Human Rights Commission how many cases of discrimination in the state personnel system their commission had on file. Mr. Thomas replied that at the last Blue Ribbon Commission meeting he had provided statistics about individual people who have complaints on file, but that does not include cases filed by the executive director on class-wide discrimination, for example.

Ms. Schuhmann added that the purpose of her coming before the Blue Ribbon Commission is to urge that someone take a look at the big picture of state employment. It is a large undertaking, but there are indications of problems. One example is the public health nurse lawsuit. That group of nurses was doing very similar, if not identical, work as were another group of state employees who all happen to be male. And the male counterparts were doing very similar, if not identical, work to the nurses, but are paid more. Another indication that there may be problems is that all women are bunched, at least according to statistics, at the low end of the pay scale.

Senator Ray pointed out that in a pure merit system, the person who had the highest score would be the person hired. On the other hand, some people have suggested that the system should allow anyone with minimal skills to be considered for jobs and then let the hiring authority select whomever he wanted. Under this system, you would have the highest instances of discrimination, both against males and females. To remedy past discrimination, people suggest reverse discrimination. Ms. Schuhmann suggested that perhaps the other side of the coin to affirmative action is the veterans' preference. In a pure merit system, you just depend on an individual's credentials. She reported that she has talked with people in Fairbanks who lost out for a state job by a tenth of a point, and usually a veteran is hired because of the 5-point preference. Senator Ray responded that the veterans' preference provides equal discrimination against males and females who are not veterans.

Mr. O'Claray asked Ms. Schuhmann whether the Commission on the Status of Women had figured the cost of a study of the personnel system. She replied that they had decided it would probably have to be done by a contract with an outside source. She doubted it would cost less than $100,000. Senator Ray pointed out that the Blue Ribbon Commission operates on less than that amount.

Senator Eliason asked whether the Commission on the Status of Women had figures on the effect of the veterans' preference on women. Ms. Schuhmann replied that they do not, and that is one of the reasons they are urging that a comprehensive study of the personnel system be done. She added that federal law is quite clear on the number of women who can be employed in the military and who can be employed in combat. Congress may have a valid state reason for limiting the numbers, but the fact remains that veterans are far more likely to be male than female.

Mr. Charney commented that there are success stories -- the women who do succeed in rising into the top salary ranges in state employment. He suggested that it might be useful to find out what contributed to their success. Ms. Schuhmann agreed and added that her own suspicion is that many of those women are professionals, such as lawyers in the Attorney General's Office.

Ms. Withers suggested that it can be misleading to look at only one part of the statistics. If all of the women who applied to work in the Attorney General's office were hired, then the 8% represents 100% of the applicants.

Ms. Schuhmann agreed. Availability studies are difficult to obtain, as the Commission on the State of Women has discovered in attempting to get studies for the pipeline workers. In addition, one thing the commission heard at least on the pipeline workers experience is that you can't have systematic discrimination against women, sexual harassment and the like, and expect women to call themselves available for those jobs.

Representative Fuller asked how the Commission on the Status of Women had collected its material. Ms. Schuhmann explained that they looked at reports from the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, the Annual Affirmative Action Report of the State of Alaska and held public hearings.

In answer to a question from Senator Eliason, she explained that her commission did not try to resolve complaints against an individual who was discriminating against someone. Those cases were referred to the Human Rights Commission. Where there appeared to be a policy in a department which had a discriminatory effect, they would contact the department head to resolve the issue, with fairly good response. Senator Ray thanked Ms. Schuhmann for addressing the Blue Ribbon Commission.

Nancy Groshek spoke for herself. She said that she is a legislative staff employee, working for Senator Fisher, and the committee aide for the Senate State Affairs Committee. She asked that the Blue Ribbon Commission endorse SB 248 which is currently in the Senate Finance Committee. It is important and addresses some of what Mr. Chase spoke of earlier in the meeting. It has teeth in it and makes merit raises depend on how well a supervisor complies with the affirmative action program. It also addresses other forms of discrimination.

Ms. Groshek suggested that the commission look at some of the forms used by the state. When she became a legislative employee, the form she was given asked for her marital status and sex. Those questions are prohibited by the equal rights amendment to the state constitution. When the forms were sent to the Division of Retirement, someone had added that information over Ms. Groshek's signature. She filed a complaint and believes that the form will be corrected. The University of Alaska also has application forms for programs such as learning to repair airplanes which ask for marital status.

Ms. Groshek also asked the commission to look at the word "qualified". It has become synonymous with "white male". For example, on the Superior Court or the Supreme Court, the Judicial Council says they cannot find any women who are experienced or qualified. But the reason is that women have not been allowed in the legal profession for that long. Ms. Groshek added that while she supports a veterans' preference for the transition period between military service and civilian life, she thought it should be limited to three or five years. People who have had careers in the military will receive credit for their work experience and the bonus of five points on top of that can make a significant difference.

Representative Fuller asked Ms. Groshek whether she believed that it makes much difference to an employer whether a person is single or married. She replied that she did, absolutely. In her own career she knew that some of the people she had interviews with had problems because of her marital status.

Senator Ray thanked Ms. Groshek for her testimony.

Senator Ray asked Mr. Baffone whether he wished to testify. Mr. Baffone replied that he did not.

Dee Lane addressed the commission on the issue of discrimination against women and minorities in state employment. She said that everyone knows that discrimination is rampant in Alaska state employment. She urged the commission to concentrate on solutions to the problems rather than going over and over the statistics. Women don't have the support of the administration. If they speak out, they get the reputation of being a complainer. If there were support in the state government to see that people were treated fairly, there would be more people coming forward to talk about the problems.

Ms. Lane said that she would relate some of her early problems, but not the current ones because she was afraid. She pointed out that retired military persons are replacing women in the upper echelons of the Division of Energy and Power Development. Outsiders are often better educated than Alaskans and are flooding the state. The Molly Hooch case insured educational opportunities for Native Alaskans, but still education in Alaska does not compete with education outside. We only have one university and a community college system that is just recently developed. Parents have to send their children Outside, which means that they must be in the upper salary ranges.

Ms. Lane reported that in 1960 she was hired to merge the records of the Bureau of Public Roads with the newly formed state records. A couple of men, earning three levels higher than she was, had been asked to do it before she was and they had not succeeded, so she was assigned the task. When she was nearly done, she asked her supervisor, a preconstruction engineer, for a raise. She pointed out that the people who preceded her had failed in the job, and that she was doing it on her own schedule and that it would be finished shortly. He replied that (1) women don't belong in the Department of Highways, and then asked (2) do you think that someone on a lower level can maintain this system when you have it completed? She replied that she had set it up so that it could be maintained simply. He then said that he would not give her a raise.

Ms. Lane pointed out that people are afraid of retaliation if they speak out. For example, she was one of the people involved in the Kevin Waring case. He was the Director for the State Division of Planning and he always chose to hire from outside the state. She indicated that she was not one of the people he hired; he overlooked her. Mr. Waring is no longer with the state, but Ms. Lane said that she knows that she has been retaliated against. Senator Ray suggested that perhaps the retaliation is because of her vocal advocacy rather than because of discrimination.

Ms. Lane continued. She suggested that the state should work with Native leaders to improve educational opportunities. It would benefit everyone in the state. In answer to a comment from Senator Ray she pointed out that in state employment, all of the upper echelons are male and the lower echelons are female. How can you possibly say that there isn't discrimination? The women want to be at the top. Senator Ray suggested that there are more men who apply for the upper echelon jobs, and that is why there are more men who get them.

Ms. Lane suggested that there should be a career ladder and definite policy statements that the administration and the Blue Ribbon Commission care about women and minorities in state employment. Many women don't even apply for state employment because they believe they won't be hired. She added that supervisors should get training on their obligation to be nondiscriminatory in hiring. There is much that can be done to establish a climate where people are made to feel that women and minorities have opportunities to be in the upper echelons, too.

A woman from the Tundra Times pointed out that the advertisement for the meeting said that it was on Tuesday rather than Thursday and perhaps that was part of the problem for the low attendance. Another woman said that if state employees knew of the meeting, they would have come to testify. She learned of the meeting through a women's club. Terry Cramer, administrative assistant for the commission, explained that the personnel officers for each department had been asked to circulate notice of the meeting to all of their employees in Anchorage.

Ed Wesley, president of the Anchorage branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People addressed the commission. He suggested that the commission should look back to the civil rights legislation and more specifically the voters' rights legislation. The burden then was not put on the state to prove discrimination. They looked at the amount of utilization and representation. Similarly, once you look at state employment numbers and the population make-up of the state, that should be a signal that more aggressive affirmative action should take place to alleviate the situation. He asked how many blacks who work for the state make more than $50,000. Senator Ray asked how many positions which pay over $50,000 are blacks qualified for, and added that he did not know how many blacks make more than $50,000. Mr. Kareen pointed out that it is difficult to answer the question of qualifications generally. The qualifications will vary greatly between, for example, a judge and a regional biologist or an engineer.

Mr. Wesley suggested that the commission should look at those figures. He agreed with Ms. Lane that until there is visible support of equal employment policy, people will not be willing to testify on the issue. Once the commission looks at the numbers and sees that there is no representation in that top range of positions, then it should use the same concept that the voters' rights legislation used, and decide that the state must take some action to do something with the heads of those departments.

Representative Fuller asked Mr. Wesley how many blacks there are in Alaska. He replied that something like 3.2% of the state's population is black and that there are approximately 9,700 blacks in Anchorage. Representative Fuller suggested that with the rapid inflow of people to Alaska, there might be few blacks in the higher paying positions because they have not been in the state long enough to work their way upwards.

Mr. Wesley reported that there was one gentleman who was a pathologist for the Department of Fish & Game. The department had something like 900 employees and one black. He had problems there from the beginning of his employment in 1976. For example, the department placed a statement that he was hired to meet affirmative action goals in his personnel file. He requested that the statement be removed from his file and from then on he had problems. Eventually the department fired him.

In the Department of Transportation, Mr. Wesley reported that there was a gentleman making over $50,000 as a facility engineer. The department reorganized and abolished his job. There were other people in the same status as he was, all of whom found jobs within the system. He was left out. Mr. Wesley said that he believes the number of blacks making over $50,000 is cut to about five or six in the state.

Senator Eliason asked how the commission can find out what causes these problems. If people are reluctant to talk about the problems, how can change be focused on the regulations which discriminate? Mr. Wesley replied that there needs to be an aggressive approach. He suggested that if the administration has adopted the "5 + 5" policy, that managers should be required to select from the list, even if they have to go Outside in order to meet their goals. Senator Eliason responded that he would not be willing to solicit applications outside the State of Alaska when only 5.3% of the state employees are Alaskan Natives.

Mr. Wesley asked whether there were any blacks on the commission. Senator Ray replied that there has been one application from Mr. Chase, who testified before the commission earlier in the meeting. Mr. Wesley suggested that in addressing a problem that affects individuals or a segment of the community, the commission should utilize members of the group to solve that problem.

He pointed out that historically there has been an overt problem of discrimination, especially with black people, in the State of Alaska back to the 60's. He explained that by discrimination, he meant actions rather than attitudes. Those problems still exist, and when people went to the streets and protested, then there was some change. He added that we know there was not a revolutionary change. The problem still exists. Senator Ray added that when he came to Alaska in 1930 there were signs in the movies "Natives here, and Whites here". There was no mixing. There was rabid bigotry against Native people.

Mr. Wesley suggested that one way to address the problem of discrimination in state employment is to refuse to fund any department that doesn't meet its affirmative action goals. It is not reverse discrimination, it is saying that the person is charged with the task, that the description of his duty to perform includes meeting the affirmative action goal. When that person doesn't carry out his duty, then you don't pay him or else you fire him.

Senator Eliason asked for suggestions which could be implemented into law or regulations to overcome some of the obstacles that have existed. What is the tool to overcome discrimination? He pointed out that APEA would probably resist any firing of a supervisor as Mr. Wesley had suggested and that the Legislature could not cut off funding a department for failure to meet its affirmative action goals.

Ms. Shelley added that it would be difficult to hold one supervisor responsible for meeting a specific affirmative action goal, since registers may or may not include minority individuals and since there might not be any turnover in an office at all.

In answer to a question from Representative Fuller, Mr. Wesley suggested that if the commission were interested in information about what was happening elsewhere in the Lower 48, the NAACP national office has all the historical data and information about problems in every state in the country. They could provide answers if the commission were to pay someone to spend time there working on the question. He added that there is a particular problem in Alaska because there aren't as many blacks here compared with the population as a whole.

Senator Ray thanked Mr. Wesley for testifying before the commission.

Niel Thomas, executive director of the Alaska State Commission for Human Rights, addressed the commission. He indicated that he had not planned to testify, but that a woman had approached him during a break. He offered to speak for her since, for reasons of shyness, she had decided not to testify herself.

She works in a state office which has a very large clerical workforce. There are three people classified at Range 12, probably as administrative assistants, more people at Range 10, probably secretaries, and a group of people who are Range 8 clerk typists. The person who he spoke with is one of the three top people, and the only one who is an Alaska Native. Every time one of the secretaries or somebody further down in the organization is out of the office, somebody has to run that machine or answer that phone. The person who always has to do that, who is in effect demoted for the day, is the Alaska Native. She has been told, "Well, I know that you were a secretary once, and frankly, I can't think of you as anything but a secretary." Mr. Thomas added that he can't help wondering whether the organization isn't losing an opportunity to take someone else and train them on something that is higher level work to cover these situations.

Mr. Thomas said that the woman he spoke with reported that one of the lower level people there is prejudiced and frequently makes disparaging remarks about a black woman who also works there. She also has told the administrative assistant things like "you people have so much cathing up to do". He said that his impression of the person he spoke with is that she is a very intelligent, forward-looking person who would like to advance hereself in state government but runs into barriers of this type from time to time. He suggested that conduct in the office probably discourages people like her from continuing in state employment. She may be the next $33,000 administrative assistant to a president of some corporation because the state has permitted people to treat other people like that.

Senator Ray asked Mr. Thomas to encourage the lady to contact him either directly or through the Human Rights Commission. Mr. Thomas replied that he had suggested that before she makes a formal complaint, she should talk with an individual who is at the top of her organization who he knows will not tolerate that kind of behavior. Senator Eliason added that you may not be able to control what people think but you certainly can control their actions when they are employed by the state government. He asked Mr. Thomas whether he had suggestions of what the commission could do through regulations or legislation to change some of the obvious vehicles used for discrimination.

Mr. Thomas suggested that the commission consider the Committee Substitute to SB 248. Its approach is in the right direction. For instance it insures that an evaluation really does address an employee's EEO performance. The commission might look at both the bill and the fiscal note to see whether they could be improved. Senator Ray pointed out that the Administration is not supporting the bill, even though they are responsible for the affirmative action program. Mr. Thomas suggested that since the commission includes so many people from the Administration, if it could come up with a substitute bill, then the bill should have the support of the Administration.

Mr. Kareen asked Mr. Thomas for suggestions for finding available workforce data which could be used by all employers in Alaska. Mr. Thomas suggested that the Department of Labor has put together a widely-used book called Data for Affirmative Action Planners. They will probably be working on another book based on the 1980 census as it becomes available. If the commission were to meet with the people in the department who are putting the new edition together, they could share any difficulties they are having in developing the material. Everybody in both the private and public sectors needs workforce availability data, so that would be one of the most helpful services the state could perform in the equal employment opportunity area.

Senator Ray advised the commission that he anticipated holding one more meeting before the legislature convenes. He thanked the participants and adjourned the meeting at 4:15 p.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau, Alaska
November 3, 1981

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order at 10:05 a.m. The roll call showed Ken Kareen, John Chenoweth, Representative Jack Fuller, Lois Jund, John Pugh, Cherie Shelley, Bill Huston, James Fisher, (alternate for Commissioner William Hudson) and Senator Bill Ray present. Myrt Charney, Senator Dick Eliason, and Greg O'Claray were absent. Also present were Roger Thayer, Robert Mourant, Darlene Livermore, and Dorothy Whitney.

Senator Ray opened the meeting by asking for public testimony. The first to testify was Niel Thomas, Director of the Alaska State Commission on Human Rights. Mr. Thomas addressed the question of how the number of employment discrimination complaints against the state compares with the number of complaints filed against private employers. He indicated that the information requested by the Blue Ribbon Commission was similar to the material that the Human Rights Commission developed recently at the request of the U. S. Civil Rights Commission. He distributed copies of a computer printout entitled "Total Statistics by Region", dated 10/17/81, RO1-GGU-0001. Based on the information on the printout and handwritten information he had added to the sheet, he reported that of the 410 cases presently pending before the Human Rights Commission, 75 are cases involving the State of Alaska, which is 18.3% of the total. He added that the 18% could be misleading, since of the 75 cases involving the state, 24 of them raise one issue, which is now pending at the public hearing state. That issue is the state's classification of public health nurses when compared with physician's assistants. Treating those 24 cases as a single case, which he indicated gives a fairer representation of the situation, the proportion of cases filed with the Human Rights Commission against the state is 13.4%.

Mr. Thomas continued explaining the handwritten numbers on the printout. Of the 3172 employment cases filed with the Human Rights Commission since the beginning of 1975 or open on January 1, 1975, 321 have been cases against the state. Two years ago the Alaska Advisory Committee to the U. S. Civil Rights Commission requested similar information. As of August, 1978, the total number of cases filed was 2162, of which 200 involved the state as the employer. The percentage of the total then was 9.3% and now is 10.1%. He added that the statistics would seem to indicate that the Human Rights Commission is getting something of an upturn in business from the State of Alaska, but that he did not know whether a statistician would consider the increase significant.

When the Human Rights Commission was preparing information for the U. S. Civil Rights Commission, they asked the Department of Labor what proportion of the total nonfarm workers in the state were employed by state government. The answer was 8 or 9%. Therefore, in 1978, the state employed 8 or 9% of the workforce and was being complained of in 9% of the employment discrimination cases filed with the Human Rights Commission. Mr. Thomas indicated that he did not know whether the proportion of the workforce employed in state government had increased since 1978. If it hasn't, then it would appear that the Human Rights Commission is getting more business from the state than before. Mr. Thomas added that he was providing additional computer printouts to the Blue Ribbon Commission which together represent all of the cases (employment, housing and everything else) filed against the state since 1975.

In answer to a question from Senator Ray, Mr. Thomas stated that of all the discrimination cases filed, about 50% allege race discrimination. He added that he did not have that percentage figured on the cases specifically filed against the state as an employer.

Mr. Thomas continued, addressing the question of what is discrimination. People customarily know that it's discrimination when someone is consciously out to get somebody saying, "I'm not going to hire this person because she is a female and women should not be doing this kind of work" or "we don't want minorities doing this work." This is overt discrimination and is only a small proportion of the cases which involve agencies or wind up in the courts. The majority of discrimination cases arise because a system of rules or a customary way of doing things works out to the detriment of a certain group of people. For example, suppose you believe that to be an effective police officer you need to be an imposing figure who commands respect. You therefore say that police officers must be over 6'6". The last thing that enters your mind is the effect of that rule, which would be to completely exclude women and to exclude most Asian people and most Alaska Natives, except possibly the Indian population. When you discover this unintentional result, you have to review the situation and come up with an alternative which still serves the legitimate purpose of the rule (hiring quality people) but which doesn't have that discriminatory effect.

One of the problems in dealing with discrimination questions is how to get data. Mr. Thomas continued using the example of the tall trooper. Suppose statistics for the Department of Public Safety as a whole indicate that 40% of the workforce is female. You might therefore conclude that the department is not liable to be sued in sex discrimination cases because women are well-represented in its workforce. However, perhaps if you had data by divisions within the department, you would discover that in hiring troopers there is a problem because there are no women. You also need that data by geography, in order to answer whether there is a problem in hiring in a particular office or location. Another kind of data which Mr. Thomas indicated it is extremely important to have is applicant flow data. It shows what happens to the applications as they are processed. In the tall trooper example, for instance, it might reveal that half the people who applied to be troopers are women but that none of those applications get past the review for height qualifications. Therefore, it would show that Public Safety did not need to increase its recruitment efforts but should reexamine the minimum qualifications for the position.

It is also useful to have availability data, which shows the numbers of people available for or interested in a particular type of work. You need that information when setting goals and percentages for each job-type. Without it, they are extremely difficult to set, and involve a certain amount of guesswork. Mr. Thomas indicated that Chuck LaViege, the counterpart to the Director of EEO in the state, has asked the Department of Labor for information to more fully develop figures on availability data. He urged the Blue Ribbon Commission to encourage the development of better population and availability data.

In answer to a question from Roger Thayer, Mr. Thomas indicated that the information provided in the computer printouts on employment discrimination against the state would indicate the types of employment discrimination: whether they arose in hiring practices, promotional practices or other situations. Senator Ray thanked Mr. Thomas for his testimony.

Dove Kull addressed the commission. She indicated that she was representing herself only, although she was a member of the Alaska Advisory Committee to the U. S. Civil Rights Commission and had represented the state at the annual planning and budget meeting. She indicated that, having lived longer than most others in the room, she had seen many changes, and noted that in 1980, the Ku Klux Klan rode for the first time in 75 years, and in the State of Connecticut, not in the South. She recently visited relatives in Mississippi and was amazed and a little frightened at the unleashing of old attitudes and beliefs. She noted that of President Reagan's appointments as reported in a June 18th document, 10% were women (38 out of 375), 4% were Hispanics (14) and 4% were Blacks (13).

She added that as a result of work she had done in the Aleutian Chain, she felt that people there were neglected and isolated. They have something to contribute. She felt that there was discrimination against dark-skinned people and pointed to the situation in the cannery workers union. Stereotyping limits the opportunities for women, too. Although she had heard one boss say that women cannot lift heavy objects, women do so all the time when raising children. She also felt that the canneries did not provide adequate day care.

Senator Ray asked for further public testimony. Florencio Q. Pax replied that he would prefer to testify in the afternoon. There was no other response.

The commission turned to consideration of the "Prisoner Profile Study" from the Division of Corrections, Department of Health & Social Services. Senator Ray asked Bill Huston to introduce it. Mr. Huston indicated that the profile is based on 100% of the prisoners of the State of Alaska on August 19, 1981. The purpose was to determine the kind of long-term facilities needed by the state and what kind of prisoners would be in prison when it opened in 1985. He reviewed the information gathered which indicates that 37% of the state's prisoners are between the ages of 20 and 24; that the highest percentage have a high school diploma and many have completed some college coursework. In 1967 the Criminal Justice Commission indicated that the average educational background for the nation's prisoners was between 8 and 9 years. The average at the correctional institution in Juneau is over 13. In addition, the average educational background of state prisoners housed with the Federal Bureau of Prisons (FBP) is even higher. Caucasians represent 54% of the state's prisoners, 9% are Black, 12% and 32% are Alaska Native, which includes American Indian (12%), Eskimo (18%) and Aleut (2%). This is twice as high as their representation in the general population, which is about 16%. Most prisoners had lived in the state at least three years before committing the crime for which they were incarcerated.

The largest category of prisoners is sentenced for a Class A felony (49%). Presumptive sentencing does not appear to have had an impact yet on the population statistics. Mr. Huston didn't expect that to show up for another few years. (Under presumptive sentencing, for the second or third felony conviction a person must serve the time sentenced, rather than being released on parole early.)

Of the crime classes, 62% of all felonies were considered violent offenses. However, that category was not defined to include property and sex offenses, so the percentage would increase where crimes in those categories which were committed with violence included. Of the state prisoners who are considered to have committed violent offenses, 43% are presently housed under the jurisdiction of the Federal Bureau of Prisons, and will be returning to the state as the FBP decreases its housing of state prisoners.

Bethel had the highest percentage of crimes in the villages. Mr. Huston suggested that this was probably because it is the hub of the Kuskokwim area which covers 85,000 square miles, with 56 villages and between 26,000 and 30,000 people.

He indicated that the report also addresses the current custody classification (maximum, close, medium or minimum) of the prison population, and rule infractions. It indicates that 150 prisoners out of the total population commit the majority of the infractions. He offered to provide Commission members with a tour of the facility if any were interested.

Mr. Huston discussed the Administrative Council which was set up at Lemon Creek following some unrest amoung the population. He indicated that he structured it differently from similar councils found elsewhere to insure representation from the whole population. He required that the prisoners write by-laws, but limited the topics which could be considered at the council to those matters which were not covered in the regulations, administrative law, departmental regulations, or in the Alaska Statutes. The council was to discuss the welfare of the community where they were at. It met about four times and then the members of the council lost interest.

In conclusion, Mr. Huston stated that there is no doubt that the state will need a new facility in 1985, and that close custody inmates will make up the majority of its population. There will also need to be provisions in the facility for some maximum custody prisoners. A discussion of parole followed.

John Pugh pointed out that while 32% of the prison population is Alaska Native, they make up only 16-17% of the total state population. He indicated that there is a new prison facility which will open in Nome in two years, and that there are a number of Alaska Natives willing to work in it. The state should be encouraged to train and provide employment opportunities for them. Representative Fuller added that attitudes in the Bush are changing. One of the best things that has happened in that regard is the Village Safety Office program. Instead of sending in a trooper or having the school teacher serve as authority figure, the program enables villagers to take responsibility for themselves in these matters. Mr. Huston indicated that cultural traditions could make it more difficult for Native people to be as aggressive as is required in correctional work.

Mr. Pugh suggested that with the reduction in federal money, and particularly federal money to Native corporations, there needs to be an increase in training programs to develop opportunities for state employment. Senator Ray pointed out that contracting with Native Corporations for services may provide a bridge between the cultures. Representative Fuller added that contracting would provide a mechanism for training in both the skills required and in cultural differences. Mr. Pugh pointed out that it would be an advantage to the state to train local individuals to fill positions in rural Alaska, since there is a large turnover in people brought in from outside to fill those positions. Often rural Alaskans don't know of employment opportunities and therefore don't apply.

The commission turned to a discussion of the difference between a pure merit system of employment and implementing affirmative action plans. James Fisher said that affirmative action plans permit a temporary variance of the merit selection system to overcome past difficulties. Lois Jund pointed out that although the commission hearings were extensively advertised few people had appeared to testify. Many people were probably afraid to come forward. She suggested that more people might speak out if the meeting were held on a weekend or if people were invited to provide written testimony and assured that the commission would hold their identities confidential. She cited figures from page 36 of the 1979 Human Rights Commission report which show that 18% of the state's minority employees held jobs classified as range 15 or above in April 1978 which rose to 22.8% in January of 1980, while 44% of the state's white employees held positions range 15 or above positions in April 1978, and 44.5% did in January, 1980. Similarly, in 1978, 18% of the state's female employees were in positions at range 15 or above, which increased to 20.6% in 1980. During these same periods, 74.8% of the state's male employees were in jobs classified as range 15 or above in 1978, while in 1980, 75.1% were.

Darlene Livermore pointed out that any complaint about discrimination is difficult to keep secret, since to resolve it, the Human Rights Commission must discuss it with the employer. Mr. Huston added that the Blue Ribbon Commission should consider a Saturday meeting, since any employee wishing to appear would be conspicuous in his or her absence from work otherwise.

Senator Ray asked members whether they had ever received confidential inquiries because of their participation in the commission. Lynda McCurry indicated that several women have spoken with her about being considered but not hired for promotional opportunities. Typically, they were within the top five on the register for the positions involved, and the individual selected was lower on the register than they were. It appears that there may be an "old boys" network, but it is difficult to resolve whether there is discrimination or not.

Mr. Huston suggested that the commission consider recommending a review of departmental and divisional registers to discover criteria which might unintentionally operate to discriminate. Many policies have existed since statehood without anyone questioning them.

Mr. Thayer explained, in answer to another question, that each annual personnel evaluation of a supervisory state employee is supposed to contain a rating on how well that employee is carrying out the department's affirmative action plan. However, he has never seen anyone comment in writing about that factor. Mr. Fisher commented that the Division of EEO is working with the departments on their affirmative action plans. Most have only been in effect for one year. They are presently being revised. The division is also putting out a package of information to encourage affirmative action committees in the departments to use the teleconference network to supplement their meetings, to enhance awareness and for training. He added that he senses a momentum in the EEO division, which was established in the fall of 1978. He hoped it would continue to encourage cooperative activities, to help with preparing the affirmative action plans, with training, and with increasing the awareness within state government.

Lois Jund asked whether the state has a positive recruitment program to help minority persons get on the registers, to encourage them to apply for positions and to advise them of what might be available. Ken Kareen answered that the Division of Personnel has no real outreach recruitment of any kind. The departments do whatever is done. The division does respond to requests for participation in public programs more often if it appears that the audience will be composed of women or minority group members.

John Pugh pointed out one positive note in that area. The Nome Youth Center will be opening in December. The Department of Health and Social Services with the cooperation of the Division of Personnel recruited extensively to encourage residents in Nome to get on the register. Instead of the usual practice of scoring the tests first and then holding oral exams, they took all of the applicants through the orals and then gave the written exams. However, this kind of change from the normal way of handling applications needs to be planned for well in advance. The department began seven or eight months prior to the time that they knew the facility would be opened. The Division of Personnel has become much more willing in the last few years to work with the departments, despite being inundated with general applications for employment. He suggested that the commission recommend to the departments that to work with the Division of Personnel to come up with creative solutions to the problem of getting minorities on the registers.

Roger Thayer added that most villages now have cable TV. The Department of Transportation uses those scanners to provide information about job openings. Lynda McCurry added that additional resources are available through the Job Service Offices of the Department of Labor.

The commission recessed at 11:55 p.m.

Senator Ray reconvened the meeting at 1:35 p.m. and asked for public testimony.

Florencio Q. Pax addressed the commission. He indicated that he was born in the Philippines and was educated under an American educational system, graduating with an accounting major and later passing the Philippine bar examination. He worked for the government as a quasi-judical hearing officer for six years and had also worked for 23 years in the accounting field. He served during World War II with American forces in the Philippines but chose not to come to the United States at the end of the war. He recently immigrated to the United States because his wife's family had moved here. He introduced Mrs. Pax to the commission.

Mr. Pax told the commission that Aaron Isaac suggested to him that he apply for the position of the director of the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity. However, Mr. Pax had never seen the vacancy advertised. Senator Ray asked James Fisher, the new director of that division, to let Mr. Pax know why there had been no advertising. Mr. Pax also indicated that he had been a finalist for the Executive Director of the Anchorage Equal Rights Commission. Although he was not finally selected for the post, he did not quarrel with that. However, he was also a finalist for the position of Affirmative Action Officer for the University of Alaska, Juneau. Another finalist for that position told him that the person finally selected was less qualified than she was, and suggested that Mr. Pax should take steps to challenge the appointment.

Mr. Pax indicated that he had reviewed the United States Constitution, and the constitutional provision of the State of Alaska as well as the State Personnel Act, various civil rights provisions, Executive Orders and the equal employment opportunity provisions in the Code of Federal Regulations. He said that he felt that there are adequate provisions of law in this area and that the problem lies in the effective implementation of those provisions. He suggested that there should be a continuing educational process so that the goals can be effectively met.

On the question of why individuals do not come forward to testify at hearings such as the present one, Mr. Pax suggested that there are a number of reasons. First, there is fear of reprisal. Also, others had suggested to Mr. Pax that individuals do not come before a group composed of white persons to complain about the actions of a white supervisor because they believe that they will not be successful. Mr. Pax added that he does not share this belief. Mrs. Pax also suggested to him that it might be helpful to educate people about the importance of the subject, to encourage them to speak out.

Mr. Pax stated that he has been placed on three registers with the state: executive director of Wage and Hour Officer, as a loan examiner and as a regulations specialist. There were a number of job classes for which he was found not to qualify because the Division of Personnel did not consider his education in the Philippines to satisfy the requirement of graduation from an accredited college or university. Mr. Pax stated that his education had been in the American system and that he is familiar with the curriculum in accounting at the University of Alaska and it is practically the same as the education he received in the Philippines. He also was not credited with his 23 years work experience in the field.

Mr. Pax advised the commission that he and his wife participated in a one-month orientation program when they were first hired by the Seattle Public School District. All persons newly hired were required to take the course which provided information on cultural and ethnic backgrounds as well as topics such as effective communications, office skills, first aid and transportation. He reported that there has been a decision by the U.S. District Court in Oklahoma declaring that a Filipino accent could not be grounds for firing an employee. The case was Karinio (?) vs. University of Oklahoma.

Mr. Pax suggested that there should be separate affirmative action goals for women and for minority persons, and that hiring women should not satisfy the goal for employment of minority persons. He added that he opposes reverse discrimination against whites. In order to meet EEO goals, Mr. Pax suggested that the recruitment system should be computerized to monitor applicants and employees so that it is possible to follow an individual through the application process into the employment history. It should show, for example, whether advanced training for an employee was appropriate and whether he was eligible for promotion. He added that a supervisor should be dutybound to recommend training for a woman or minority person who is qualified for it in order to encourage the promotion of these protected classes.

Mr. Pax concluded his testimony by offering to assist the commission in any capacity, whether as a volunteer or as an employee. Senator Ray thanked him for his testimony and asked whether any commission members wished to ask questions.

In answer to a question from Lois Jund, Mr. Pax indicated that he believed that minority persons might be more likely to bring their problems to the commission if its membership included minority persons or if there were an intake officer who was a minority person. As an example of what he was suggesting, he pointed out that the Anchorage Equal Rights Commission is composed of nine members, with representation from whites, blacks, Native Alaskans, the Filipino community, and Chicanos or those of Spanish origin, and contains both male and female members.

Verneelia Randall addressed the commission. She has worked for the state for four years, first as a Public Health Nurse and now as the Maternal Child Nurse Coordinator. She is also chairperson for the Department of Health & Social Services EEO Committee. She addressed the commission as a private citizen.

In answer to why so few people chose to speak before the commission, she related reasons given to her by other state employees. These included questioning how many women and minorities would make up the membership on the commission, whether commission members would hold positions of power which could lead to real changes, and the fact that they would have to take annual leave in order to testify. Senator Ray advised Ms. Randall that it is not necessary for state employees to take annual leave to appear before the commission. He indicated that membership on the commission includes the Commissioner of Administration, the Director of the Division of Personnel, representatives of employee unions, the Ombudsman and public members in addition to legislators.

Ms. Randall said that there are two kinds of discriminatory problems, those created by societal habits and those which arise from individual discrimination. Societal problems develop from a system which has not been changed in 30 or 40 years and which have an inadvertent discriminatory effect. Once it is in place, the system tends to resist change, rather than being open to solving the problems which it creates. She gave as an example her own situation. She has a bachelor's degree, a masters, is working on a master's in public health and intends to pursue a Ph.D. in health policy and management. Even then, she will not be eligible for the position of health officer because she is not a doctor, a dentist or a veterinarian. Those requirements were created years ago and may have been appropriate for the position then, but the department has not reviewed them since, even though the health education field has changed significantly.

Ms. Randall criticized testing and experience ratings of applications and pointed out that they work against women and minorities. Tests are culturally based and test a person's ability to take tests more than ability for a job. Experience requirements work against those who have had less opportunity to work. Anyone can learn to take a test and can therefore pass a test. The opposite is also true. For example, until an instructor worked with her on test-taking, she nearly flunked out of nursing school, despite knowing the material thoroughly. After learning how to take tests, she now does well on them. Because of these problems with tests and experience requirements, the registers work against people from different cultural backgrounds. If they appear at all, they are likely to be low on the registers.

Ms. Randall told the commission that the Governor had recently authorized a new register system in which the names of the top five applicants plus the names of the top five from a protected class are shown for those job classes in which women or minorities are underutilized. The problem with this approach is that it is voluntary. The recruiting agency should be required to hire from an affirmative action register for positions in underutilized job classes.

There is a second type of discrimination -- individual discrimination. It may be either conscious or subconscious. Ms. Randall stated that everyone is racist either consciously or subconsciously. Until we recognize that and work to change it, the implementation of any affirmative action policy will not happen on a regular, consistent basis.

Ms. Randall advised the commission of DHSS statistics on minority and women hires. She suggested that DHSS is one of the best departments because women and minority persons are most likely to be either nurses or social workers or office clerks, and DHSS hires a lot of all of those job classes. The figures are based on the department's EEO plan, which identifies the availability of minorities and women for state employment, as compared to the actual employment.

	Female	Minority
Availability of office clerks	79%	21.1%
Employment by the department	90.3%	17.8%
Availability of officials & administrators	44%	19.3%
Employment by the department	26.7%	11.3%

There is a significant difference between the available market and what is actually happening, even if the figures are off by 5%. Ms. Randall recommended that the state use computers to identify underutilized job classes. When a department requests a register in one of the identified classes, they should get an affirmative action register, whether they wanted it or not. A supervisor should have to justify not hiring a woman or minority person for a vacancy if any appeared on the register. The present system requires the supervisor to justify hiring from below the top five even when hiring for job clases in which minorities or women have been shown to be underutilizied.

Ms. Randall acknowledged that this system would be reverse discrimination but pointed out that when you have a relay race and one team started the race 15 minutes after you did, then you cannot expect them to win the race unless you provide some catch-up time. In our society women and minorities began well after the race was underway, and only those minorities and women who are far above the exception even get into the running. You cannot have equal opportunity until society provides women and minorities a chance to catch up.

Ms. Randall said that she had a personal concern for Alaska. It is unfair to group Alaska Natives with other minorities. Alaska is a state of immigration and many minorities who are highly qualified choose to come here. Statistics show that Native Alaskans, who were here first, get drowned out by blacks, Filipinos and Chicanos who immigrated. While 11.3% of the officials and administrators may be minority, 0% may be Alaska Native. Ms. Randall recommended that in underutilization figures, Alaska Natives should be broken out to insure that they have fair representation and that immigrants not be allowed to take the jobs that they would have had.

Ms. Randall shared another area of concern: that of upward mobility. One problem is the opportunity for training. DHSS provides individual training contracts for its employees. An employee can go to the agency and say "here's a course which relates to my job and will give me added skills and I want to take it." If the agency agrees, it will cover the costs provided the employee signs a contract to remain on the job for a specified length of time. Last year, DHSS had 85 such contracts. There are 71 officials and administrators in the department. Of those, 20% had individual training contracts, while only 4% of the office clerks (who number 421) had them. In answer to a question from Lois Jund, Ms. Randall indicated that she did not know how many applications had been filed for training. She did show that 79% of the officials went out-of-state for their training. None of the office clerks went out-of-state. It's the office clerks who need the training for promotional opportunities. To have affirmative action, the state has to provide opportunities for upward mobility. Therefore, training funds should be part of every budget and there should be some system to insure that a fair portion of those funds reach those on the bottom. If 60% of a department's workforce is classed as officer clerks, then 60% of those employees should be getting training.

Senator Ray pointed out that the legislative finance committees have been reluctant to pay for on-the-job training. The legislators feel that there are requirements which employees should meet before getting the job. The state should not have to pay for it. Therefore, a good share of the inservice training money gets cut from the budget. It's an area which has been abused and is still abused. Ms. Randall replied that it is short-sighted to cut training funds. Recruiting and orienting new employees is more expensive than training existing employees who have proven themselves to be loyal to the state and who will stay in the job for a longer time.

A second difficulty in providing upward mobility is that supervisors may discourage their employees from seeking promotions. If that attitude is to change, it must start at the top. She gave as an example her own promotion to her present position. Her supervisor discouraged her, saying that she wouldn't be able to do the work, and the position was vacant for a whole year.

Ms. Randall agreed with Mr. Pax's recommendations that goals for employment of women and minorities should not be grouped together. Women have different problems and circumstances from those of minorities. Problems women face arise in part from the traditional employment system which is based on the employment of men who could work knowing that their families would be cared for by their wives. That is no longer the case. Single parent families are now prevalent and two-working-parent families are a fact of life. Any employer, whether private or public, will have to recognize that the traditional system of hours of work, work days, and annual leave, was made up for the traditional family system. Day care is necessary for even two-parent working families. The employer should be responsive to that need, although the employee should expect to pay for the care provided. In addition, employers should be sensitive to the needs of working parents. For example, Ms. Randall suggested that women be allowed to take annual leave, sick leave, or leave without pay in order to breast feed children while working. This kind of small accommodation could make a family's life much easier and also free an employee to put more energy into the job.

In closing, Ms. Randall said that any program which is developed must have teeth in order to be effective, especially for those who are low on the pole.

Senator Ray asked whether Ms. Randall had been discriminated against in working for the state because she is a black. She replied that it is hard for a non-minority or a male to understand. It is not that there is clear discrimination, but little things happen. For example, when there is a question in her section, people who are above her will first go to the man who is under her and ask him. If he is not available, they will go to the white woman who is not even in her section and ask her. The end result is that those who have been asked come to Ms. Randall for the answer. Ms. Randall indicated that it is probably because of conscious or subconscious racism. In answer to another question, Ms. Randall indicated that whether the motivation is a personal, individual dislike or racism or sexism, the end result is the same. The cause does not matter. The end result for her as a woman and a black, is discrimination. Senator Ray thanked Ms. Randall for her testimony before the commission.

Brenda Randall-Sadek addressed the commission. She is an Accounting Clerk III for the Department of Transportation and has worked for the state for a year in December without promotion. She first spoke of applying for a position with the Juneau office of the Human Rights Commission. There was a vacancy for an entry level, trainee position which she saw advertised. It required a high school degree, and she has graduated from college. She applied, but received no response. The position was advertised two more times and each time she applied. Only after she went to the office did she receive a letter telling her that she was not qualified for the position.

In the time that she has worked for DOT, Ms. Randall-Sadek said that she has asked to take the state accounting course three times. Her requests have been both oral and in written memos. Although she wrote that she intended to stay with the department and hoped to be promoted into a position which would require the knowledge the course offered, the only reply she received was written on the bottom of her memo saying "we do send people when we feel that it is related."

Ms. Randall-Sadek said that she had worked at three different clerk desks in the department. When she was in the research section, she learned that her supervisor planned to hire a Tech I. She was planning to leave that section and her supervisor did not want her to leave. He said she was a good worker and encouraged her to stay in the section. However, he did not hire her for the Tech I position, explaining that she was too low on the register. The person who was hired had worked for the department for less time than she had and was a white male. Ms. Randall-Sadek told the supervisor that Tech I's are under-utilized class and he could have hired her if he had wanted to. Furthermore, in her time with DOT she has seen them hold registers for people who they want to hire and justify hiring anyone they want regardless of where they were on the register.

In the time that she has been with DOT, Ms. Randall-Sadek said that the only other minorities she has seen are Filipinos. She asked several people how long they had worked for the department and found that the three or four white people who had been with the department from four to six years all were at the Tech III or Accounting I levels. She knows of two Filipinos who do excellent work and have been with the department for more than five years, but who are still at the Accounting Tech I level.

Ms. Randall-Sadek agreed with Verneelia Randall on the register system and test-taking. Test resultsdepend on your abilities to take tests. However, she said that if that is the system the state is going to use, then they should stick by it, instead of waiting for the people they want to get on the register. Ms. McCurry added that as a personnel officer she calls the tactics Ms. Randall-Sadek mentioned "crafty techniques". All of them are legal. She suggested that the commission should zero in on these practices and fix them. She added that DOT could have called for departmental promotional lists to fill the Tech I position and that probably Ms. Randall-Sadek would have placed well on that register. A second thing at DOT could have done was use the Five-Plus-Five register and gone below the top five to select her. Ms. Randall-Sadek pointed out that DOT cannot use those registers because their EEO plan has not been accepted yet.

Mr. Thayer asked Ms. Randall-Sadek to provide him with copies of her requests to take the training course and added that it is the practice of DOT to use promotional registers. He indicated that he planned to do some checking on the situation.

Senator Ray asked whether Ms. Randall-Sadek's experiences resulted from discrimination against her because of her race or sex rather than being a situation where the supervisor was hiring a friend regardless of who the other people applying for the job were. She replied that the system seems to work most against the blacks and Filipinos and Indians. Verneelia Randall added that when the system breaks down like this, then white people get caught in it but black people, Indians, Filipinos, minorities get caught in it more. The end result of the race is that since women and minorities are 15 minutes behind to begin with, then when 10 more minutes are added to everyone's time, it makes them 25 minutes behind.

Ms. Jund suggested that the situation might have been better handled if the state's policy were to always provide an EEO register for any vacancy in a job class where underutilization had been shown. The supervisor would have to justify not hiring from that register. This would put it in the proper persepective and get away from the game of crafty techniques.

Senator Ray added that he hoped more people would come to tesity and that if anyone used an appearance in front of this commission to discriminate against a witness, that he wanted to know about it because the commission and the Governor would not tolerate that.

Mr. Pax suggested that the state should enforce laws which provide that the state as grantor to political subdivisions can withdraw funding from any grantee who violates anti-discrimination laws. Senator Ray said that he would ask the Legislative Affairs Legal Division to research the area to insure that the laws in effect were adequate.

Ms. Jund suggested that the commission propose legislative intent to insure that any training funds are used proportionately to categories of people to enhance upward mobility. Senator Ray replied that legislative intent is not enforceable and that the language could be put into a statute. He added that he expected that the departments would resist the suggestion. The commissioners would come before the legislative committee and say that where they really needed training funds is for the specialized classes.

Brenda Knapp, a planner with the Central Council of Tlingit-Haida Indian Tribes of Alaska addressed the commission. She indicated that the council would be submitting testimony in written form to the commission and that she wanted to share the introduction now.

Sealaska Advisory Committee to the United States Commission on Civil Rights produced a report and initiated a series of open meetings in the fall of 1978, including a meeting in Juneau on 11 September, 1978 and the findings of the Alaska Advisory Committee were published in July, 1980. To date, a great deal of effort has been made to correct and improve the employment representation of Alaska Natives and other minorities in state government. Reports have been filed, plans developed, responsibilities pinpointed, roles clarified, data systems implemented, policy expounded and the Blue Ribbon Commission established.

In April, 1978, Native people held 518 jobs in state government. This figure represented 5.4% of the total state government workforce. Today, November 3, 1981, 3-1/2 years later, according to figures just released by this commission, Native people hold 5.4% of jobs in state government workforce. There has been a rise in actual numbers that went from 518 to 694, but the percent of the total state government jobs has not changed, 5.4%.

In other words, despite all of the talks, meetings, reports, plans, commissions, etc., which have taken place during the past 3-1/2 years, Native people in Alaska have not improved their representation in the workforce of state government. Although 16% of the state's population is Native, less than 6% of the jobs in state government are held by Native people. Most of these jobs are, as everyone knows, concentrated in the clerical, craft and paraprofessional categories. Very few professional and management positions are held by Native people. The underrepresentation and underutilization of Native people affects most job categories and departments of state government. In fact, in nine of the 15 departments of the Executive Branch of state government, the representation of Alaska Native people has declined between April '78 and September '81. Of the remaining six departments, four increased the representation that Native people by less than 1% over earlier figures. Two departments, Community & Regional Affairs and Natural Resources appear to have made substantial gains. But, we have no information as to what really resulted in these gains.

It would appear that the commitment so clearly stated in Administrative Order No. 59 as expressing the equal employment policy of the executive branch of state government needs to be more forcefully and imaginatively translated into action. The actions of the past 3-1/2 years have provided necessary and useful mechanisms to help state government recruit, select, hire, promote and retain minorities in state employment. The expanded certification policy is a particularly useful step in bringing qualified Native people to the attention of hiring departments. But we believe that what has been accomplished to date, represent only the first few steps in an overall plan that must produce results in numbers, rather than intentions.

Senator Ray asked Ms. Knapp whether she knew how many state jobs had been contracted out to Native Corporations. These positions would therefore no longer show up in state employment figures and would probably have been held largely by Native Alaskans. Therefore, the number of Native state employees would have decreased, although the number of employed Natives would not have. Ms. Knapp replied that she did not know. However, she pointed out that since the jobs are no longer part of any of the figures on state employment, that she did not consider them relevant to this question. Of the remaining positions, the state should have been able to do better than maintain 5.4% Alaska Natives over the last three years. Good intentions are not translating into action. She pointed out that many Native people were working under CETA positions and that these programs are being eliminated as a result of the current economic trend. These trainees are available for employment.

In answer to another question from Senator Ray, Ms. Knapp said that she did not know whether the number of Native Alaskans who are applying for state jobs has increased or decreased since 1978, but that there are a significatnt number of Native people who are now unemployed and who would like to work. If their number has substantially decreased on state registers, then the important question is "why". Senator Ray agree and said that what the commission is trying to discover is whether there is a discriminatory attitude or whether there is some other problem. Ms. Knapp pointed out that the Native Corporations are able to find, recruit and employ qualified Native people. The state government should also be able to do that. She indicated that the written testimony which the council will provide will include specific recommendations on what the state might do to improve opportunities for Native Alaskans.

Senator Ray thanked Ms. Knapp for testifying.

Mary Lisack, Affirmative Action Officer for the University of Alaska, Juneau, addressed the commission. She reported that the University has been under a compliance review by the federal government since the early 1970's. If it does not show progress in affirmative action, it will lose its federal funding. The University's Affirmative Action Office is under top management rather than part of the personnel office. Her responsibility is to monitor and ensure compliance with affirmative actions plans and employment opportunities. One of the ways in which the University tries to eliminate discrimination is through ensuring that job qualifications are job related. The affirmative action officer has to approve all job qualifications for positions open at the University. The qualifications must be job related. For example, there is no reason that a secretary has to have graduated from high school to do the work. For a large portion of jobs, the qualifications are simply knowledge, skills and ability sufficient to perform the duties of the job. For example, if one of the duties is budgeting, the University will consider that handling a household budget demonstrates the person has the skill to handle that portion of the job.

The University maintains flow charts for every protected group person who applies for a job. The rejection of that person has to be justified on the flow chart. All hiring has to be approved by the Affirmative Action Officer to ensure that the selection process has not been discriminatory. According to the University Affirmative Action Plan, preference is given to members of protected groups wherever applicants are equally qualified.

This year for the first time, the University has funds for staff development. It has earmarked a portion of those funds for training for protected persons, in order to better attract, retain and promote them.

Ms. Lisack pointed out that you can't successfully force affirmative action on a hiring authority. Where a hiring authority, with the agreement of others in the office, has selected a non-protected person, the Affirmative Action Officer cannot require that a protected person be hired. The other employees in the office will say that the only reason for the hire was because of the person's race. The protected person will be made to feel extremely uncomfortable and will probably terminate early. Hiring authorities and co-workers need to be educated. The University does not hire unqualified people. But supervisors need to be trained in how to deal with these situations, how to work with the people they supervise, how to train them to deal with cultural barriers that exist. One hiring authority complained to her about a minority person who had been hired, saying that she could not do the work. But that was not the problem. When Ms. Lisack went to the office at lunch, everyone went out together leaving the protected person sitting there. The hiring authority made no effort to correct the situation. Instead they said that the person could not function.

In answer to a question from Mr. Huston, Ms. Lisack explained that the University testing is done by reviewing written applications and then interviewing the applicants. They also give typing tests where production typing is required.

Senator Ray thanked Ms. Lisack for her testimony.

A woman in the audience asked about hiring the handicapped. She asked whether the statistics in the commission memos included handicapped in the "Other" category. Ms. Cramer replied that the memo was addressed only to the racial make-up of the state workforce.

Ms. Randall pointed out that there is a problem in getting handicapped state employees to speak out. She conducted a voluntary survey and asked handicapped employees to identify any concerns they had. Few of the questionnaires were returned, and most of those said that there were no problems. Ms. Randall indicated that she suspected that handicapped individuals have a harder time and are more reluctant to identify themselves. For example, if handicapped individuals are to work at their highest capacity, they should be provided with desks and other equipment which best meets their needs. Handicapped individuals are not seen in state employment, particularly where their employment would require a change in the office environment. Perhaps the commission should try to find out why they are not there.

Senator Ray pointed out that in all the time that the commission has been in existence, there has not been one complaint from anyone representing handicapped people. John Pugh added that the Governor's Special Commission on Hiring the Handicapped is a very active group and does a very good job addressing this problem. For the Blue Ribbon Commission to look at the area would be an unnecessary duplication. Ken Kareen point out that the Division of Vocational Rehabilitation has counselors who look for job opportunities for handicapped people, either with the state or with private employers. For a position with the state, the counselor can make the referral, the person can be hired as a provisional employee and after four months on the job they can be made permanent. Ms. Jund added that Vocational Rehabilitation also provides training. Another woman asked for a definition of handicapped and wondered why alcohol and drug abuse has been added to it. Mr. Fisher responded that they have been added. The Department of Natural Resources received an award from the Governor's Council for placement of 25 handicapped persons with 80% retention since January, 1981.

Senator Ray pointed out that the Constitution of the State of Alaska provides for a merit system. The state government is supposed to employ people according to their merits. Wages and fringe benefits are attractice and many of the top class of workers in the state are applying for state jobs. The state should get the best employees they can for the money they spend. That's the way a merit system works. He added that those handicapped persons he has been associated with were the most accommodating people and the best workers. The supervisor will recognize the capabilities of the person and provide the equipment that they need.

The woman indicated that she still had a problem with the definition of handicapped. Mr. Kareen indicated that Vocational Rehabilitation uses federal guidelines because so much of their funding comes from the federal government. Senator Ray added that the legislature tried to prepare legislation to provide for free ferry rides for senior citizens and handicapped individuals, but the word "handicapped" was so hard to define to insure that it included those who should be included, but to exclude those not genuinely handicapped, that they had to give up. They have worked on the problem over the interim and developed another definition which will probably be closely examined next session.

Senator Ray asked the commission whether they wanted to hold an election for the vice chairman's seat. Mr. Huston moved that the matter be held over to a later date. The motion passed without objection.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 4:20 p.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau, Alaska
October 5, 1981

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order at 10:00 a.m. The roll call showed Ken Kareen, Senator Dick Eliason, John Chenoweth, Representative Jack Fuller, Lynda McCurry, Greg O'Claray, John Pugh, Fred Muller, Bill Huston, Darlene Livermore (alternate for Cherie Shelley) and Senator Bill Ray present. Myrt Charney and Lois Jund were absent. Also present were Roger Thayer and Robert Mourant.

Senator Ray advised the commission of the Letter of Intent passed by the Legislature when it provided funding for the commission. He asked the members to consider the question of affirmative action and minority hiring within the framework of the provision of the Alaska Constitution calling for a merit system for state employment. Ken Kareen pointed out that the constitution also requires that there be equality of citizens regardless of race, and that the framers of the Alaska Constitution would probably not see a constitutional conflict between those provisions. Jack Chenoweth commented that he found it hard to believe that the state's provisions on the merit system would exclude Alaska from having an affirmative action program. At least the constitution gives equal weight to affirmative action and probably the courts would find that helping people to apply for positions with the state would be enhanced by the provisions of the constitution.

Senator Ray added that affirmative action should mean that every citizen has an equal opportunity to apply for jobs. But what is the use of having a testing and classification system if the state is required to hire, for example, 10% Native Americans and 10% Eskimos regardless of qualifications. He added that the state should, in its approach to affirmative action and other programs, recognize the distinct cultural differences between Eskimos and Alaska Natives.

Senator Ray asked whether females should be considered a minority group. Fred Muller answered that women are classified as a "protected class" because there is an institutional bias which has resulted in lower pay for women. In the past, hey have been barred from entry to a number of positions.

Mr. Kareen suggested that for continuity, the commission should use the federal government classifications and those that the State Human Rights Commission has established. Senator Ray disagreed. He asked whether this is a first step towards eliminating the merit system.

Darlene Livermore replied that this would not be a step to either eliminate or harm the merit system. Senator Ray added that he wants to see more minority individuals employed in government, but how can that be done without reverse discrimination?

Greg O'Claray pointed out that if the state has an affirmative action program then, in effect, they are using two hiring systems -- the merit system and another.

Senator Ray commented that the majority of complaints of discrimination against women which the commission has heard appear to have resulted from personality conflict rather than from outright discrimination.

Ms. Livermore pointed out that it depends on how you define discrimination, whether you are looking at covert or overt acts. Covert discrimination is more insidious because it doesn't leap to the surface, you have to look at patterns to identify it. APEA would normally refer a charge of discrimination to the Human Rights Commission. To establish a charge of covert discrimination requires prolonged investigation. You have to consider comments made over a long period of time and work assignments given. There are certain kinds of jokes which may be accepted as humor, but may also reveal a discriminatory intent behind the surface. It is difficult to bring covert discrimination to the surface. In the case of people who are labeled trouble-makers, they frequently become trouble-makers because they want to stand up for themselves, to ease the tension they are feeling.

John Pugh suggested that the commission focus on the underutilization of women and minorities, on problems of getting on the state's registers and on looking at whether positions are overclassified.

Senator Eliason pointed out that the state does overclassify positions. What is the interest of the state -- getting the best qualified person for a job or providing equal oppportunity for all of its people?

Bill Huston added that the Department of Health and Social Services has sent directives to the correctional institutions to try to hire minority applicants, but very few appear on the state's registers. He used to believe that recruitment should be the responsibility of the Division of Personnel, but perhaps the departments should recruit on their own.

In response to the question of overclassification of positions, Mr. Kareen related that several years ago the Governor's Commission on Minority Employment formed a subcommittee which considered every classification in the state. They recommended substitutions for educational requirements in a number of classificiations, and now there are very few jobs which have an absolute requirement for educational background. Relevant experience has been substituted. But for people living in rural areas of the state, frequently there is neither the opportunity for academic training nor for gaining the substitute experience required.

Occasionally when an individual does have both the education and the training, he may still be lower on the eligibility list.

Since last spring, Mr. Kareen continued, the state has been using a new hiring system called the Five-Plus-Five system, which allows managers to consider not only the top five applicants on the eligible list but also the top five members of a protected class which has been shown by the department's Affirmative Action Plan to be underrepresented in the department's workforce. Underrepresentation deals with many things. Where the administration recognizes that they do have a shortage of women or minorities, candidates frequently do not exist in the labor force for that position or for work in that location.

Senator Eliason pointed to startling employment figures from the Annual Affirmative Action Report of 1981 which show that of a total of 10,479 employees in the Executive Branch of State Government, only about 250 are Alaska Native. (Page 13 of the Report).

Mr. Huston reported that the Department of Health & Social Services just completed a Prisoner Profile Study which was published on August 10, 1981, and shows the racial composition of the Alaska Correctional Institutions. Senator Ray directed the commission staff to request a copy of the Profile from the Division of Corrections. He also asked the staff to ask the Limited Entry Commission for a breakout on the number of permits originally issued to Natives and to Caucasians and the numbers presently held.

Senator Ray asked the commission to consider the goals it wished to pursue in this project and the things which should be looked at. Senator Eliason suggested the classification procedures and asked who writes the class specifications. Mr. Kareen answered that the position descriptions for each position in the classified service are written either by the employee holding the position or by his or her supervisor. From those position descriptions, the Division of Personnel writes the generalized class specifications.

John Pugh suggested that the commission should look more closely at underutilization of women and minorities. It is not clear how many members of those protected classes are actually on registers. Mr. Kareen pointed out that in Alaska the registers identify the race of ethnic background of applicants. The law permits that kind of identification where the purpose is permissible. It would not be permissible to show race or sex if that information was to be used for discrimination. Mr. Pugh suggested that to decide whether there has been discrimination, you have to know whether there have been minority applicants who have not been hired. It may be that the underutilization results from a limited labor pool, that minority workers are not interested in working for the state government in that job class. Then the solutions to underutilization should focus on increased job training.

Mr. Huston asked how many minorities apply for work but fail to qualify and be placed on the register. Mr. Kareen answered that the Division of Personnel hopes to be able to provide that information soon. They are developing a program to provide data on how many people have applied, how many were tested, then how many were placed on the register. All applications will be entered into the system. Mr. Muller pointed out that since the question on racial and ethnic background on state applications is voluntary, the data captured will not be an entirely true representation of those who have applied for state employment.

Mr. O'Claray noted that the Human Rights Commission Report for 1980 on page 44 shows that of the new cases filed, 51% were filed by Caucasians and 25% were filed by Blacks. Fifty-three per cent were filed by females.

Mr. Thayer suggested that it is also important to consider where the job is. Many Natives do not want to leave their villages. Rep. Fuller agreed. Many people choose to follow their cultural traditions, and prefer to be able to leave work for the spring seal hunt, for example. Mr. Muller added that temporary and nonpermanent employees are excluded from the data on state employees which the Division of Personnel is developing.

Senator Eliason asked whether it would be possible to find out the number of full time state jobs located in the Bush which are filled by Caucasians and by Alaska Natives. Mr. Kareen responded that the data exists for the executive branch, but that it would take considerable time to extract it and put it in a usable form. Rep. Fuller added that there are few state jobs in the villages. Most are located in Kotzebue, Nome, Bethel and Barrow.

Senator Ray suggested that educational requirements for state jobs are too strict. Mr. Kareen replied that the largest number of complaints which the Division of Personnel receives about minimum qualifications are from administrators who say the requirements should be stricter because the lists contain too many people who cannot do the job.

Mr. O'Claray asked about current state practices for increasing the number of women and minorities hired. Mr. Pugh explained that expanded certification is used to meet affirmative action plans. Senator Ray asked whether that short circuited the merit system. Mr. Kareen replied that the courts have disagreed about whether considering race for the purposes of meeting affirmative action goals was constitutional or not. In the Bakke case, Mr. Bakke won, but the court did say that race could be considered. Mr. Thayer added that whether a department uses the expanded certification is an individual departmental choice. If a supervisor has 10 employees who are all white males, then he may decide that for the next vacancy he will hire a woman or a minority person. He fills out a form and requests an expanded certification. He will get a person who is qualified to do the job, but not necessarily the most qualified person for that job.

Senator Eliason asked how frequently the departments evaluate the progress they are making on their affirmative action plans. Mr. Thayer replied that it depends on the individual department and the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity. For example, DOT has a large staff in their EEO section, and they provide information every month. Mr. Muller added that the EEO Division in the Department of Administration recently began to monitor the statistics closely. There may be a realistic problem in requiring that applicants from a protected class must be hired for some positions. There is also a question, however, of whether ranking on the register actually reveals an ability to perform the job. He added that there are two basic time periods to consider in looking at discrimination. The first is from the time of application to the time of hire. Once members of protected classes become state employees, then that's a separate area.

Senator Ray asked Mr. Chenoweth if he could provide the commission with a paper discussing his views on the compatability of minority hiring programs with the merit system in the constitution.

James Fisher, Director of the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity addressed the commission. Mr. Fisher explained that he is new to the EEO Division and that he is still learning what has been done, how it is done, and what the division's mission is. The division, under Administrative Order 59 of June, 1980, is to provide management assistance to the executive branch in affirmative action functions, in training functions, and in complaints procedures - to pick up errors in the system. Mr. Fisher said that he is contacting each commissioner of the state government departments to review their EEO systems and to learn how things are going.

Senator Ray asked whether there were any questions for Mr. Fisher. There were none. Senator Ray thanked Mr. Fisher for addressing the commission.

Senator Ray reviewed what the commission needs to do and suggested that one of the statistics it would be helpful to obtain is the percentage of Alaska Natives in the group of employees working in Range 16 and under. Mr. Kareen pointed out that in the information Senator Ray asked for, the Labor Trades and Crafts positions are not covered, since they are on a different salary schedule. Mr. Muller said that the state is in the process of developing statistical tools to track all employees by race, sex, and full employment history (whether they are promoted or not, for example). That statistical review is a year or two away from being operational, however.

Mr. Chenoweth suggested that perhaps the state should consider the diversity of its population. The difference between the state's approach to hiring and the Bureau of Indian Affairs' approach when each had positions in the Bush was that the BIA positions required ability to speak the local language in addition to English. Perhaps the state should consider requiring bilingual speakers for social service positions in the Bush. That would be one way of avoiding a direct consideration of race or ethnic background in hiring. Senator Ray pointed out that many of the social services positions in the rural areas have been eliminated because the state has contracted with Native Corporations to perform those services. Senator Ray asked the staff to check with the Department of Health and Social Services and the Division of Personnel on the number of state employees lost when those services were contracted out. Those positions may have previously been filled by minority group members and those employees may have remained on the job and become employees of the contractor instead of the state. Senator Ray recessed the meeting for lunch at 11:45 a.m.

Senator Ray reconvened the meeting at 1:35 p.m. and reviewed the memo on the status of the bills sponsored by the commission last legislative session. Terry Cramer advised the members that the Senate State Affairs Committee is holding a teleconference hearing in Anchorage on Monday, October 12th, to consider retirement bills.

Senator Ray asked Roger Thayer to review the memo concerning the Marine Highway System hiring procedures. Mr. Thayer explained that all applications for employment on the ferries are group scored and that hiring is done by groups. If there is an opening, then the division contacts all applicants whose scores fall in the top group. Those who respond are interviewed and the selection is made. When the top group has been exhausted, then hiring proceeds from the second group, and so on. However, it's getting harder to find work in the ferry system, and they are beginning a period of reduction in force, so there will be even fewer jobs.

Senator Ray asked why the division could not accept applications all year long. Mr. Thayer explained that there was a discrimination suit filed several years ago which resulted in an agreement that applications would be accepted only for a limited period which would occur before any selections were made. The divison advertizes in 32 newspapers around the state beginning in January of each year and accepts applications from February 15 to March 15. The applications are then graded and grouped and selection begins in late March or early April.

Mr. O'Claray asked whether they hired from any source other than those applications received during the "window period". Mr. Thayer replied that for entry level positions, those applications were the only ones considered. However, for higher level positions, the division accepts and considers applications received all year long. He added that the division has not hired an able-bodied seaman from outside the system in two years.

Mr. O'Claray added that the most frequent complaint he hears is not being able to file an application until February. Senator Ray pointed out that the division's public image would improve if the application period were longer. Mr. Thayer indicated that he thought it might be possible to extend the period from 30 days to 60 days, but that he was uneasy at making it as long as 120 days. The reason for the limited period is to insure that all applications are processed before hiring starts.

Senator Ray asked whether there were any other matters before the commission. Ms. Cramer answered that the commission had received documentation from Betsy McGuire who had applied for a Project Coordinator, Range 18 position in Juneau. Initially, the Division of Personnel advised her that she did not meet the minimum qualifications. Ms. McGuire was successful in having the division staff review her application and her score is now 103.65. She submitted this material to the commission for its information.

Senator Eliason asked whether nonresidents make more money than residents on the ferry system. People in his area believe that they do. Mr. Thayer explained that nonresidents are paid less than residents, but that within the Marine Highway System there are two different salary scales - one for the Southeast Alaska ferries and one for those in Southwest Alaska. In Southeast, the monthly wage is based on 240 hours per month while in Southwest it is based on 182 hours per month. Nonresidents are also responsible for paying their own travel expenses to and from Alaska.

Mr. O'Claray suggested that someone from the Human Rights Commission be invited to the next Blue Ribbon Commission meeting and that they be asked to compare the number and kinds of complaints they receive from the public sector as contrasted with those they receive from the private sector.

Senator Ray asked Mr. Fisher whether the Division of EEO has any outstanding complaints on file. Mr. Fisher replied that there are complaints and that the division is in the process of getting a better handle on what has been filed against the state because of the Governor's requirement that all complaints be served on the EEO Division.

Senator Ray announced that the position of Vice Chairman of the commission is vacant and asked members to consider the question so that the position can be filled at the next meeting. He asked whether there was any objection to a meeting in Juneau around the 1st of November and then a public hearing on the issues before the commission in Anchorage about two weeks later. There was no objection. Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 2:10 p.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau, Alaska
February 11, 1981

MINUTES

Senator Bill Ray, chairman, called the meeting to order at 1:30 p.m. Roll call showed all members or alternates present except Don Fisher, Representative Buchholdt, Myrt Charney, Bruce Cummings, Senator Eliason, Greg O'Claray and Fred Muller. The commission began review of the draft of the report to the legislature. Mr. Cummings, Mr. O'Claray, Senator Eliason and Representative Buchholdt arrived.

During the discussion of Section 9, amending AS 39.25.120, page 12 of the report, Mr. O'Claray raised a question concerning the status of employees in the Division of Labor Relations. Mr. O'Claray asked whether those employees negotiate their own salaries. He suggested that it might be more appropriate to place them in the partially exempt service instead of in the classified service.

Mr. Cummings replied that recently those employees had petitioned the Labor Relations Agency to be removed from membership in the Confidential Employees Association. The petition was granted and they are now members of the classified service, but not members of any of the unions which represent state employees. Their salary schedule is the same as the schedule for partially exempt employees. There are 11 or 12 employees in the state who are in the classified service but not members of any collective bargaining unit.

Lynda McCurry added that CEA had released the employees from membership after studying their request. There is nothing to prevent those employees from petitioning the Labor Relations Agency at a later time to be placed back in the CEA membership.

Mr. Cummings pointed out that membership in the classified service insured that selections were made on the basis of merit and that there were some protections for the employees from arbitrary action.

Mr. O'Claray moved that AS 39.25.120 be amended to include the director, deputy director and all of the 12 employees in the Labor Relations Division of the Department of Administration. Discussion followed. Lynda McCurry pointed out that there are clerical employees included in the motion who remain members of the Confidential Employees Association. Their job duties do not directly involve them in negotiations for the state.

Frank Flavin said that the partially exempt and exempt services were created so that the administration can set and control its management policies. It is appropriate to expect that when there is a change in administration, there will be a change in the division to reflect the new administration's policies. Senator Ray added that collective bargaining negotiations are a sensitive and important area in which the administration should have full control over policies.

Bill Huston pointed out that if the employees were placed in the partially exempt service, persons selected would not have to meet the minimum qualifications as is now the case. Lois Jund added that leaving the positions in the classified service provides a career ladder for those individuals and makes the positions more attractive to qualified people.

Mr. O'Claray amended his motion to provide that the clerical employees who are presently members of CEA should remain in the classified service. Those employees who would be placed in the partially exempt service are: director, deputy director, personnel analysts II, labor relations analysts II, labor relations analysts I, senior negotiators, and research directors. A roll call vote was taken:

Yeas: Senator Bill Ray; Representative Thelma Buchholdt; Senator Dick Eliason; Frank Flavin; Representative Jack Fuller; Greg O'Claray; John Pugh; Cherie Shelley.

Nays: Bruce Cummings; Lois Jund; Lynda McCurry; Bill Huston.

Absent: Don Fisher; Myrt Charney; Fred Muller.

The motion carried.

Bruce Cummings suggested that paragraph (9) of AS 39.25.120 in section 9 of the bill be amended to more clearly state that additional special assistants may be created by the Personnel Board pursuant to AS 39.25.130. There was no objection to the change.

Frank Flavin pointed out a problem in section 13, AS 39.25.150-(17). The word "citizen" has been interpreted to exclude resident aliens. He suggested changing the word to provide for grievances from the general public. There was no objection.

Senator Ray suggested that an effective date of July 1, 1981 be added to the bill. There was no objection.

Senator Ray asked whether the commission favored adopting this part of the report and sponsoring the bill amending the State Personnel Act as amended in the meeting. Without objection, the motion carried.

The commission turned to consideration of the section of the report on the nepotism bill. Roger Thayer advised the membership of a problem in the present draft of the bill. Subsection (a) prohibits the hiring of someone related to the person doing the hiring. That prohibition could make it impossible to find employees to fill positions in the rural areas of the state. He suggested deleting the phrase referring to the person doing the hiring. Without objection, the motion carried.

The commission discussed the draft bill limiting the adjustment of retirement benefits and the section of the report concerning that bill. Lois Jund suggested that the report be redrafted to reflect the fact that there were many retired Alaskans in the situation described. There was no objection. There were no other changes proposed for that section of the report.

The commission reviewed the section of the report on the bill amending the membership of the Public Employees Retirement Board. There were no objections to its adoption.

The commission reviewed the section concerning the bill applying the Administrative Procedure Act to the adoption of regulations by the state retirement systems. There were no objections to its adoption.

The commission reviewed Chapter II of the report, concerning "Unresolved Personnel Issues". Senator Ray advised the commission that the legislature does not presently have a classification system for their employees. He indicated that he intended to suggest to the presiding officer of each house of the legislature that the Blue Ribbon Commission be delegated the task of drafting a uniform code for hiring and employment practices for the legislature. He added that he also intended to request that the commission be extended for another year. He asked whether there were any objections. There were none.

Senator Ray introduced Chief Buehler from Kotzebue who was a guest of the commission.

Senator Ray advised the commission of correspondence concerning credit for service in the state retirement systems. The Chief of Police of Seward wrote that he was not able to purchase three years of employment with the municipality into the state retirement system. Under the current law a police officer must work for the state for three years before he is eligible to purchase prior law enforcement time into the PERS.

Bruce Cummmings explained that originally the retirement law provided that the only extra time for which retirement credit would be given was for employment with the Territory of Alaska. That service was credited without charge to the employee after he or she had worked for the state for at least five years. The period of required employment was then shortened from five years to three and other kinds of service were added to the list.

Bill Huston added that the concern of law enforcement officers is that the work is for consecutive years, and yet some of the time counts toward retirement credit and some does not, depending on the agreement between the state and the municipality.

Senator Ray suggested that Bill Huston, Bruce Cummings and Terry Cramer investigate the question and consider whether there is merit in amending the statute. Bruce Cummings suggested that it would be more appropriate to include a referral to someone within the Division of Retirement and Benefits. Senator Ray directed the commission staff to pursue the matter.

Greg O'Claray raised an issue which had been brought to his attention. An individual has been a state employee for a number of years and is now placed in the position of losing seven years of retirement credit. He worked as a vessel employee on the state ferries. Then, in 1977, he was appointed to work as port captain. When that happened, he was no longer eligible to participate in the Taft-Hartley Trust Fund which is the retirement system for marine highway employees. At the time that he accepted the position onshore, he was assured by the Division Director of Retirement and Benefits and by Bill Hudson in the Division of Marine Transportation, that he would be able to transfer his period of service with the Taft-Hartley trust into the state retirement system. He therefore accepted the appointment at reduced pay with the understanding that his retirement benefits payments would continue. The Taft-Hartley trust requires 10 years of employment before a member is vested.

In fact the information which he was given was wrong, and he has now been told that he cannot receive credit with PERS for his period of employment on the ferries which was covered by the Taft-Hartley trust. He is left having to consider suing the state.

Senator Ray suggested that Greg O'Claray and any other interested members be constituted a subcommittee to call on Mr. Hudson to ask for his statement and report to the commission. Bruce Cummings pointed out that as a trustee on the NW Marine Highway Trust he has become familiar with the case. Commissioner Hudson does not dispute the facts. He advised the individual that he could transfer his Taft-Hartley service to the PERS system and that was an error. Mr. Cummings suggested that it might be appropriate to consider amending the PERS to allow time with any other retirement system to be credited with PERS under certain circumstances.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 2:45 p.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau, Alaska
January 8, 1981

MINUTES

Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order at 10:05 a.m. The commission began consideration of the draft bill on nepotism. Senator Ray asked for objections to the commission sponsoring the bill. It was noted that APEA had registered its objections to the bill at a previous commission meeting. Bill Huston pointed out that nepotism laws will prevent a child pursuing the same choice of career with the state as his or her parent. Sandra Withers suggested that the disadvantage of that limitation should be weighed against the alternative, which is the appearance of favoritism given whenever a close family member is employed in an office headed by another family member. Frank Flavin added that he would prefer to see the statute focus on the basis of the hire rather than on the existence of a relationship. Many of the complaints which the Ombudsman receives are based on relationships which are as close as marriage without there being any formal legal tie, rather than on a relationship which the draft bill would address. Senator Ray called for objections to the commission pursuing this bill. Doryce Eggleston, Frank Flavin and Bob Mourant objected.

The commission next considered the draft bill amending the State Personnel Act and discussed the bill section by section.

In Section 4, page 2, line 2, the amendment to existing law was deleted, leaving the line reading "authorized by this chapter".

In Section 7, page 3, line 21, the word "and" was changed to "or", to make the phrase read "temporary or special inquiry".

The commission discussed the section concerning procedures for amending the Personnel Rules, Section 11, which begins on page 7, line 9, and decided to delete the material on page 8, lines 15-28 and to amend the preceding paragraph by adding eligible lists, hours of work, and merit increases to the topics which are included within "matters of public policy".

AS 39.25.150(17). In Section 12, page 11, line 7, procedures for resolving citizen grievances were added to the topics which the rules should address by adding the word "citizen" between the words "employee" and "and".

In discussion of AS 39.25.150(21), Representative Fuller raised a problem which has occurred in the conversion of Fish and Game temporary positions to permanent seasonal positions. He provided commission members with background material and explained that for positions in the bush which used to be classified as temporary positions, the change to permanent seasonal has meant that many fewer local residents are qualifying for the jobs. Permanent seasonal positions must be hired from the registers, and many residents of the villages in question (Gambell, Savoonga, Diomede, and Shishmaref, for example) either are reluctant to apply at all, or else, because they do not have much formal education, do not score as well as college students when their applications are evaluated. As a result the Fish and Game Technicians I and III who are hired for monitoring marine mammal harvest and collecting biological specimens are more likely to be from Anchorage and Fairbanks than from the local area. This costs the state more because of transportation costs and the technicians spend a substantial period of time initially becoming familiar with the area, rather than being able to begin their substantive work immediately.

Mike McMullen pointed out that the requirement that employees be hired from the register cannot be waived for permanent seasonal positions, while it could be waived by the Division of Personnel if the positions were classified as nonpermanent. Frank Flavin added that block scoring would be appropriate, since to do the job well does not require technical knowledge. This kind of job classification would benefit from essentially a pass/fail application evalution system.

Senator Ray suggested that the commission authorize him to send a letter to the Governor, perhaps with copies to the Department of Fish and Game and to the Division of Personnel explaining the situation and encouraging the hiring of local residents for these positions. The letter might also be directed to Jerry Reinwand, the Governor's special assistant who had addressed the commission on personnel matters at an earlier commission meeting. There was no objection.

In discussion of Section 15, beginning on page 14, line 28, questions were raised about whether employees who were hired in positions in the classified service only to have those positions transferred into the partially exempt or exempt service have any recourse. Members also asked whether the more routine positions which are presently in the exempt service or the partially exempt service are being transferred into the classified service. Senator Ray suggested that the commission write to Jerry Reinwand asking for a response to the latter question.

Frank Flavin noted that the present draft of the State Personnel Act does not set out a penalty clause. The present statute provides that violation of the Rules is a misdemeanor, but that is not an effective deterrent, since it is rarely enforced. Senator Ray suggested that discussion of the penalty clause should be reserved for future meetings of the commission.

In Section 18, AS 39.25.192, Senator Ray suggested that a state employee's right to make contributions to political candidates and campaigns be listed, since many state employees believe that they are denied this right under the present State Personnel Act. There was no objection. This ended discussion on the State Personnel Act amendments.

Senator Ray brought up recent correspondence to the commission from Donald E. Buehler, Chief of Police in Kotzebue. Chief Buehler has submitted his name for consideration for appointment to the Blue Ribbon Commission. However, since the membership on the commission is full, the commission decided that Chief Buehler should be invited to the next meeting as an observer.

The commission reviewed the draft bill on membership of the Public Employees Retirement Board. The draft dated December 30, 1980 was approved without objection.

The draft bill limiting the adjustment of retirement benefits was under consideration.

The commission considered the draft bill limiting the adjustment of retirement benefits. Lois Jund pointed out that the present draft would not significantly help in the cases about which the commission had initially been concerned. In those cases, the amount of overpayments had exceeded 10 per cent of the amount to which the retired person was actually entitled. Discussion followed. The commission agreed to delete AS 14.25.173(b)(3) page 1, lines 17-18, and AS 39.35.520(b)(4), page 1, lines 28-29.

The commission also decided to eliminate the phrase "which reduces benefits or" from page 1, lines 10 and 20 so that for future payments, retired persons will only be entitled to the correct amount of their payments. A question was raised concerning whether the phrase "credited service with the state' includes territorial service as well as employment after statehood. The commission decided that in order to benefit from the limitation on adjusting retirement benefits, retired people will have to meet all the requirements listed, and therefore decided to add the word "and" between paragraphs (1) and (2) of Section 1, page 1, line 14, and between paragraphs (?) and (3) of Section 2, page 1, line 25.

Paul Arnoldt, Director of the Division of Retirement and Benefits addressed the commission on the retirement bills. He began with a presentation on the bill requiring that the Public Employees Retirement Board comply with the Administrative Procedures Act in adopting future regulations. He pointed out that the intent of the APA is to insure that there is an opportunity for public comment before regulations are promulgated, to provide the Department of Law with an opportunity for review, and to insure that the Governor has input into regulations which are adopted. He indicated that these goals are met by the present system for adoption of regulations. The process of adopting regulations through the APA is involved and if those goals are met now, then it does not seem appropriate to change the system.

Mr. Arnoldt also pointed out that there is a nationwide trend for holding retirement board members personally responsible for their actions which began with the 1974 ARISA Act. It is appropriate therefore to provide the PERS board members with the tools which they will need to carry out their responsibilities. For example, last session, 10 retirement bills were combined and passed by the Legislature in the closing days of the session. These measures had to be implemented expeditiously. If the board had had to comply with the APA in adopting regulations to put the new laws into effect, then considerable time would have been lost. Lois Jund agreed that many agencies find the APA procedures cumbersome. Frank Flavin pointed out that the APA does provide for the adoption of emergency regulations for that situation.

Mr. Arnoldt continued with discussion of the bill affecting membership of the retirement board. He stated that the provisions of the bill were appropriate and he had no objection to the proposal.

On the adjustment of retirement benefits bill, Mr. Arnoldt stated that he agreed that any errors in retirement benefit payments should be found and corrected quickly, but that the two-year limit imposed by the bill was not really necessary. The appeals procedures presently in the law provide the retirement boards with an opportunity to act in consideration of the circumstances of the retired person and to provide an equitable solution to the error. Since the ARISA Act is imposing personal accountability on private sector retirement boards and since the federal government is expected to impose similar provisions on public sector retirement boards, the authority of the PERS board should not be decreased.

Senator Ray pointed out that while the retirement board has the authority to waive collection of overpayments, they can be quite slow to act. The retired person, who often has only the retirement income to live on, is put through considerable grief and uncertainty. Other procedures which do not put the retired person through that sort of experience should be developed to provide the retirement board with the information and control which it requires. Senator Ray was called away from the meeting and Don Fisher, Vice Chairman of the Commission, chaired the meeting.

Bill Huston suggested that in order to keep the retirement fund solvent, errors should be paid for out of the general fund rather than from the retirement contributions of members and employers. Frank Flavin pointed out that the ARISA provisions are aimed at penalizing board members for improper investments rather than for improper payment of benefits. Greg O'Claray replied that nonetheless, the board cannot sit as a fiduciary and condone improper payment of benefits. They would have to correct the payment and collect the improper back payment unless there were provisions to the contrary in the law. Mr. Arnoldt repeated that he felt that this bill would be taking a wrong turn in the direction of retirement legislation. The national trend is in the other direction. Frank Flavin pointed out that the bill does not take away any present powers, it just states that after two years, the board's power to act is limited. Mr. Fisher thanked Mr. Arnoldt for coming to the commission meeting and expressing his views.

Mr. Fisher asked the commission to consider when to schedule the next meeting. Wednesday, February 11 at 1:30 p.m. was selected. He adjourned the meeting at 3:40 p.m.

Since the conversion of our temporary help to permanent seasonal positions, we must now hire from a list of eligible applicants on a statewide register, rather than through local Employment Offices. The net result is that normally we must hire someone from outside of the area, as they will be on the top of the list of available applicants. As a result, we usually end up having to pay the individual travel from and back to Fairbanks or Anchorage and often have to provide a subsistence or per diem payment while on the job.

Some of the reasons this happens include:

1) Registers are usually open for recruitment for limited periods of the year.
2) The time an individual must apply to get on a register is often months away from the time the job will be available.
3) Most people indicate they will work anywhere in the State because they know most Technician jobs are of short duration during the summer, and it is an adventurous experience for them. They don't expect to take the same job more than once or twice.
4) College students are looking for these type jobs for the experience and money and they will almost always rate higher on the register than someone living say at Gambell, with limited education and work experience.

Some possible solutions include:

1) Some preference for hiring local residents.
2) More flexability in getting applicants rated and on registers, by allowing local Employment Offices to examine and rate applicants at the time jobs are actually being filled.
3) When it can be demonstrated that hiring a local resident will save the State money, measurably contribute to the success of the program, or provide a more efficient employee, that latitude be granted the employing agency.

Maybe an example will illustrate the problem. If we intended to place observers in Gambell, Savoonga Diomede, and Shishmaref to monitor marine mammal harvest and collect biological specimens this summer, here is what we would have to do. The positions would be Fish and Game Technicians I and III's and the registers are only open during December. So, during December we would have to try and contact individuals in those villages telling them to fill out State of Alaska employment applications, and be sure and turn them in for a job that won't start til May. As you know it is most likely that only a limited number of individuals in each village will actually fill them out and send in the application form. Also, anyone who happens to not get the word for whatever reason, but who would be available to work in the summer, obviously will not be on the register.

In April we ask for registers for the positions and find that there are over 100 names on the register, almost all from somewhere other than the four villages that we intend to station the positions. Even if there are individuals from the four villages, they will probably be rated much lower that several of the college students on the register, many of whom will take jobs if they are offered. So instead of hiring someone from the village, we have to hire someone out of Anchorage or Fairbanks, pay their travel to the job site and assist in locating housing for them. For the first two weeks they must spend most of their time getting to know the local hunters.

I should make it clear that I don't have anything against college students working for the Department as seasonal technicians, as they have proven to be exceptional employees, and they need the experience, not to mention money, to round out their education. There are simply some situations where local residents could be a decided advantage to the overall program.

In the past I've recommended hiring individuals in various villages, as part time Department employees to perform a variety of tasks such as, sealing furs, issuing harvest tickets, conducting subsistence surveys, recording harvest by village residents, be a contact person that residents of a village could go to for an explanation of regulations, or to voice their concerns about the effects of various Fish and Game regulations. However, I've backed off pushing the idea the last two budget submissions, because it is essential, for such a program to work, that I be able to hire residents of the individual villages.

There are several advantages to the individuals hired as permanent seasonal as opposed to the old temporaries, but the net result is that Fish and Game is less likely to hire someone from the local area now than we used to two years ago.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau, Alaska
December 4, 1980

MINUTES

Senator Ray, chairman, called the meeting to order at 10:00 a.m. and asked commission members to consider the draft bill limiting the adjustment of retirement benefits. Paddy Moriarty asked why, in subsections (b)(1) of the first two sections of the bill, the date set was after the incorrect benefit was first paid rather than after the individual had retired from state employment. It was pointed out that the purpose of the bill is to set a statute of limitations and that beginning to run the period from the first incorrect payment was a reasonable decision.

Bruce Cummings pointed out that the Public Employment Retirement System board presently has an appeals procedure to consider cases in which overpayments have been alleged by the Division of Retirement and Benefits and the retired person has difficulty in repaying the amount. However, an individual can knowingly allow an overpayment to be made, and in those cases it would be appropriate for the state to seek to recover the amount overpaid. The review system of the PERS board would permit this but the proposed bill would not.

Senator Ray asked how the state should handle the situation in which an employee retires after having received written computations from the division setting out his years of credited service and the amount of benefits to which he will be entitled and later is told that the figures were incorrectly calculated. Therefore, the amount of his benefits will be reduced. Senator Ray asked whether it would be fair to require the state to rehire the retired employee in the job from which he retired. The retired employee would then have an opportunity to earn the credits which he was initially informed he had.

Bruce Cummings suggested that this would injure the employee who had replaced the retiree on the job. The new employee might have resigned from a job to accept the new position and giving the retired person back his old job would mean injuring the new worker. Some other system for addressing the problem should be developed.

Fred Muller asked what the frequency of error in the computations of length of service credits is. Lois Jund explained that a number of cases had arisen at the same time several years ago when the Division of Retirement and Benefits performed a wholesale audit of the retirement system and discovered a number of errors. Many of the cases which were raised involved overpayments of from $1000 to $5000. It was often very difficult for the retired person to repay this large an amount. Mr. Muller asked whether any of the commission members knew how many state employees retire expecting to be eligible to receive retirement benefits and then discover that an error has been made and that they are not eligible for any benefit at all.

Paddy Moriarty replied that the Ombudsman's office has received information of several cases in which people wrote to the Division asking for a computation of their creditable service. They received a written response and then retired. Later the division reviewed their file and disallowed some portion of the service which had been previously included in the computation. Bill Huston added that some of the computation errors occur because of statutory changes. The formulas for computing creditable service are complicated so that an employee cannot simply add up the number of months he has worked for the state and know the length of creditable service or the retirement benefits he will be entitled to.

Bruce Cummings suggested that there are two possible solutions to the problem which the commission is considering. The state could offer assistance to those whose creditable service has been erroneously computed in returning to work, as has been done for Julie Issac. In addition, the PERS board has the authority to waive recoupment of overpayments in cases of hardship. Senator Ray pointed out that in Mrs. Issac's case, the appeal to the board took 2-1/2 years to reach a decision and that her petition was denied because her husband's resources were considered in evaluating whether collecting the overpayment would be a hardship to her. On that information, the board found that it would not be a hardship if she were required to repay the money to the state. The issue was finally satisfactorily resolved through the efforts of the Governor's Office and the Attorney General.

Senator Ray asked whether there was any objection to adding a statute of limitations to the adjustment provisions of the retirement benefit law. Fred Muller suggested that it would be appropriate to require that the larger cases of overpayments be reviewed by the PERS board rather than automatically waiving any recoupment. He suggested that the statute of limitations should not apply to those cases in which the overpayment had been more then 10 per cent of the monthly benefit to which the retired person was correctly entitled. Senator Ray asked whether there was consensus on Mr. Muller's proposal. There was no objection.

The commission then considered the draft bill relating to the nepotism in state employment. Terry Cramer, the administrative assistant to the commission, explained that this bill was an attempt to place the provisions of the Personnel Rules prohibiting nepotism into statutory form. The drafter changed the language of the Personnel Rule, which uses the term "appointing authority" and instead used the term "person making the appointment" in the draft.

Darlene Livermore stated that the Alaska Public Employees Association has three concerns about the proposed bill. The current statute prohibits employment of persons related to the commissioner of the department. The intent of the legislature was therefore probably to discourage political patronage in the state employment. The Personnel Rules probably were drafted with the same theory as their basis. Recently in the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, the federal government repealed a 90-year old nepotism law which had a general application. Congress retained prohibitions against abuse of power by elected officials, aiming again at political patronage. Secondly, Ms. Livermore raised the issue of whether the present draft is in opposition to laws protecting certain classes of people from employment discrimination, particularly, from discrimination based on marital status or change in marital status. The third issue which APEA is concerned about is access to employment. Unlike most locations in the Lower 48, there are a number of communities in Alaska which have only a few major employers. For example, in Valdez there are two -- the division of highways and the division of mental health. Both to provide employment opportunities for the people living in those communities and to provide a pool of employees for the state, the nepotism laws should not be unnecessarily stringent.

Bruce Cummings said that he did not disagree with the points which APEA was raising and that the provision of the Personnel Rules gives the director of the division of personnel authority to waive enforcement of the rule. He added that could not recall an instance in which he had refused to waive enforcement of the rule. However, it is appropriate to have each case of employment of close relatives considered in order to prevent abuse.

Ms. Livermore explained that she did not object to the present situation in which the statute addressed nepotism at the commissioner level and the Rules had broader application, but that putting the provisions of the Rules into the statutes would provide the courts with a greater opportunity for review and limitation. Mr. Cummings explained that the Attorney General has advised the division that the scope of the rule is broader than the rule-making authority granted by the statute. Therefore, enforcement of the rule could probably not be defended successfully in court.

Representative Fuller asked whether there were regulations for elected officials. Senator Ray replied that the State Personnel Act applies only to the executive branch of government. Representative Eliason asked whether nepotism was a lively issue. Mr. Cummings answered that there are some communities in the state in which there has been considerable public interest in the question. Senator Ray asked whether there were any objections to the commission sponsoring a bill which would put the language of the Personnel Rules into the statutes. Darlene Livermore registered APEA's objection.

The commission next considered the draft to require that the regulations adopted by the retirement board be subject to the Administrative Procedure Act. Members commented that the draft did not follow the instructions which the commission had given the drafter and decided to defer consideration of the subject until a redraft was available.

The commission considered the draft bill relating to membership of the Public Employees Retirement Board. Lois Jund suggested that the draft be amended to require that of the four members elected by the members of the retirement system, at least one must be a retired person. The amendment was adopted without objection.

The commission turned to the redraft of the State Personnel Act amendments. Several problems were noted and Senator Ray asked Jack Chenoweth, from the Legal Services Division of the Legislative Affairs Agency to meet with the commission. After reviewing the second draft of the State Personnel Act with Mr. Chenoweth, the commission discussed with him the amendments to the draft limiting adjustments to retirement benefits which had been agreed upon earlier in the meeting.

Terry Cramer advised the commission members of a telephone call from Grace Kack. Ms. Kack is concerned that individuals applying for state positions must be re-examined every two years in order to stay on the register for a job class. Ms. Kack was not concerned on her own behalf, since she is presently employed by the state, but she felt that the requirement was unfair for those who were not presently employed.

Ms. Cramer also advised the commission that several reponses had been received from agencies whose employees were placed in the exempt and partially exempt services concerning whether those employees should remain in their present status or should be transferred to the classified service.

Senator Ray stated that the commission would meet to review redrafts of all of the bills probably at the end of December.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 11:45 a.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau
October 29-30, 1980

MINUTES

The meeting was called to order at 10:00 a.m., by the Chairman, Senator Bill Ray.

John Williams, Commissioner of the Commercial Fisheries Entry Commission, testified in response to the Blue Ribbon Commission's request for information concerning whether his employees should be in the exempt service or would more appropriately be placed in the partially exempt or classified service. Mr. Williams stated that the limited entry commission is a quasi-judicial, independent regulatory body which is granted special status by the Alaska Statutes. According to an Attorney General's opinion, prepared for the Alaska Oil and Gas Conservation Commission, it is appropriate for commissions of this type to remain independent from the executive branch. Therefore, Mr. Williams believes that employees of the commission are most appropriately left in the exempt service. Placing them in the partially exempt or classified service would subject them, and the commission as their employer, to inappropriate regulation by the executive branch.

Mr. Williams stated that the commission had conducted a poll of its employees to learn what their wishes were. Of the 29 employees, 25 participated. Each of the staff was provided with a copy of the State Personnel Act prior to the poll being taken. Every effort was made to insure that the poll was secret. Of those voting, 21 favored remaining in the exempt service and four favored moving to the partially exempt service. None wished to be placed in the classified service.

Mr. Williams added the commission has chosen to follow the practices which the Personnel Rules set out for partially exempt employees.

Greg O'Claray addressed the question which the commission had posed at its last meeting about why the vessel employees of the Marine Highway System are placed in the exempt service. He provided the members with a letter explaining his reasons.

The vessels are, by federal law, under the jurisdiction of the United States Coast Guard for the safe operation, navigation, staffing and examination, and certification of personnel. These federal regulations cover employment rights, health, safety and other conditions of employment of the seamen as well as making requirements concerning the number of qualified personnel who must be on board before the vessel can sail. In addition, employees recruited from the Maritime Unions are covered by private Taft-Hartley health and welfare and retirement trusts and would not automatically participate in the state retirement system or in its other benefit coverage without considerable loss of benefits. For Merchant Seamen, engineers and mates recruited from the private sector, the state's wage classification system would not provide a competitive salary. Therefore, the state decided at the inception of its involvement in the marine transportation enterprise, that the employees should be exempt from the State Personnel Act. None of these reasons has changed and therefore Mr. O'Claray recommends that the Marine Transportation System employees remain in the exempt service.

Roger Thayer added that the ferry system receives approximately 1200 applications a year. They must be submitted to the department between February 1st and March 10th. The personnel office ranks them based on training and education, and shoreside and maritime experience. Grades range from 70 points for a person without a high school diploma and with no relevant work experience to 110, for someone with the previous shipboard experience in a field directly related to steward's tasks who also holds a Coast Guard license for lifeboatman. Hiring is usually done by late April. This system was developed as a resolution to EEO complaints claiming that the ferry system discriminated against women and minority applicants. Most positions which are above the entry level are filled by promotion.

Senator Ray raised the question of the membership of the Public Employment Retirement System board. The statutes presently require that the three members of the Personnel Board sit on the PERS board as well as on the Labor Relations Agency. He asked whether any of the commission members believed that the overlap in membership was important. Cherie Shelley pointed out that as a result of recent legislation, the PERS board is now responsible for decisions concerning the Alaska Supplemental Benefits program and the Deferred Compensation program, in addition to the retirement program. Therefore, their duties have significantly increased. It makes sense to limit the demands on the time of those board members, who are all volunteers. Without objection the commission agreed to draft a bill to change the membership of the Retirement Board. Two alternatives were proposed: to eliminate the members of the Personnel Board from membership on the PERS board and replace them with one member appointed by the Governor and two members elected from the retirement system; and to increase the size of the PERS board while leaving the members of the Personnel Board on it.

The commission reviewed the memorandum on employee service credits and then recessed for lunch.

The meeting reconvened at 1:30 p.m. Eric Yould, Executive Director of the Alaska Power Authority, addressed the members on the question of why the power authority employees are in the exempt service. Of the 16 employees, 14 have college degrees. He believes that they should remain in the exempt service. The Authority would have difficulty meeting its deadlines if it had to go through the red tape of hiring employees through the classified system.

The Alaska Power Authority was structured by the Legislature to permit it to become similar to a public utility district which is a form prevalant in the lower 48. Mr. Yould was concerned that changes which might be made in the structure of the Authority now would foreclose flexibility in the future when the Authority has developed to the extent anticipated by the legislature. He wanted to preserve those options for future employees. It is anticipated that there will be power plant operators, linemen and so on, once the structures are in operation.

In answer to a question from Darlene Livermore, Mr. Yould explained that although most of the employees have degrees, they perform general professional kinds of duties rather than highly-technical tasks. Mr. Yould added that he is not opposed to union membership for the clerical employees of the Authority.

The commission began its discussion of the review on the State Personnel Act. See attached comments and recommendations.

Fred Cook, personnel officer for the Department of Fish and Game, addressed the commission about a number of his concerns. The Personnel Division has been receiving a large number of applications for the positions available, especially for permanent seasonal positions. Changing from hiring temporary employees to hiring permanent seasonal employees has increased the Department's recruiting expenses from $8,000 - $57,000 this past year. Contacting the applicants through phone calls and telegrams has been difficult because frequently people do not reply. Therefore, the department continues to send them telegrams or to call them for other positions. He knows of one gentleman who received approximately 30 telegrams and didn't answer any of them.

Many applicants state they will accept employment anywhere in the State, but when the department contacts them, they say that they are not interested in going to such and such place. Mr. Cook suggests that if anyone rejects a job offer, he be removed from the state register at once. The application form should specify four regions of Alaska (such as Southcentral, Southeast, Central and West) to narrow down areas in which the applicant says he will work. It would speed up the process for his people and also would save the department a tremendous amount of money. He figures that the department, as a whole, spends upwards of $200,000 a year just in recruitment.

Another problem area is in insuring that applicants are Alaskan residents. No one verifies the information provided by the applicant.

The scoring of the applications is also a problem. There are approximately 100-200 applicants with the same score all ranking #1 on the register. He suggested a more sophisticated grading system to rank these applications so that the top group would have fewer applicants in it. The department then would have fewer people to consider when filling a position.

Mr. Cook also suggested changing the length of time for recruitment of bush positions. Presently it is 30 days. He would like it changed to 60 days to enable the recruiting people time to have applications corrected and the applicants time to get it done. He gave an example of a problem he had today. The department has a Fish & Game Resource Specialist II position, at range 16, open and there's an Alaska Native in Angoon that they would like to hire. They want a bilingual person. The applicant forgot to sign his application. In order to meet the application deadline, Mr. Cook had to contact him, which took five telephone calls to Angoon, take the application out to Channel Flying and instruct the pilot on what needed to be done, fly the application to Angoon for the gentleman's signature and have it returned by 3:00 p.m. that afternoon. He estimates that particular problem costs his department $200.

Jerry Reinwand, Executive Assistant to Governor Hammond, addressed the commission at its request. He explained that the Governor's Office is in the process of reviewing the separate agencies which are located within it to decide whether they should remain as part of the Office or whether it would be more appropriate to attach them to one of the departments. There are questions which make the decision difficult in some cases. For example, the Human Rights Commission should avoid even the appearance of being subject to political pressure, and therefore, it would appear to make sense that it be placed in one of the departments rather than the Governor's Office. However, it should also be insulated from the pressures of being a line agency within one department, and therefore, it may be inappropriate to place it in a department. Mr. Reinwand indicated that he has questions about whether the staff of the Division of Budget & Management and the Division of Policy Development & Planning and the Office of Internal Audit need to be in the partially exempt service. Since the review process has not been concluded, Mr. Reinwand suggested that the commission wait for its results as an expression of what the Governor recommends on the question of who needs to be in the exempt service.

The commission recessed at 3:20 p.m. until 10:00 a.m. Thursday, October 30.

Senator Ray, chairman, reconvened the meeting at 10:00 a.m. on October 30.

Kerry Romesburg, Executive Director of the Postsecondary Education Commission spoke in response to the commission's request.

The Postsecondary Education Commission has 30 permanent employees and adds four nonpermanent employees to its staff in the summer. He indicated that although the statutes place himself and the staff in the exempt service, in reality the commission uses the same pay scale as the classified service, the kinds of work which most of the employees do is similar to work done by classified employees and, except for hiring employees from the registers, the commission operates under most of the procedures of the Personnel Rules. Of the 30 employees, 16 are loan repayment, awards and collection clerks. Three others are clerical employees, two are in the administrative assistant class and the remainder are professional employees. He added that as permanent exempt employees, the commission employees receive benefits as do permanent classified employees.

There being no more questions for Mr. Romesburg, he was thanked and excused.

John Pugh commented that it did not appear that the Post-secondary Education Commission needed to be in the exempt service. He recommended that if the Blue Ribbon Commission is going to clean up the State Personnel Act, that each of the boards and commissions which presently has its staff placed in the exempt or partially exempt service be carefully reviewed.

The commission then returned to reviewing the draft of the State Personnel Act. Comments and recommendations are attached.

Senator Ray stated that when a redraft of the Act is available the commission will meet again. Without objection, the meeting was adjourned at 11:30 a.m.

COMMENTS AND RECOMMENDATIONS ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT

AS 39.25.080. Public Records.

Cherie Shelley was concerned that the Division of Labor Relations might use this section to assert that information APEA needed in preparing cases was confidential and could not be released. Senator Ray suggested adding For the purpose of this Act at the beginning of the sentence on Line 7.

In discussion of paragraphs (1)-(5) members noted that paragraph (1) provides for information on all state employees and that paragraph (2) provides for information about an individual employee. Members decided that the phrase state employee should be used rather than the phrase "state officer or employee".

AS 39.25.110. Exempt Service.

After discussing the standards proposed in subsection (a), the commission members decided to delete all of (a).

The commission will consider whether the employees of the agenices named in paragraphs (11) and (12) should remain in the exempt service after further testimony on the question.

A question was raised about the difference between the exempt and classified service. An employee in the exempt service is not hired from the register, does not get paid according to the pay plan, and can be fired at will. In the classified service there must be just cause before an employee can be fired.

Assistant Commissioners should be added to paragraph (1).

Commission members asked why the state forester, hearing examiners in the Department of Revenue and the Chief of Subsistence in the Department of Fish & Game should be in the partially exempt service. The question will be considered later.

Page 6 Line 29 — Bob Mourant pointed out that there are airport managers for smaller airports who are not in the partially exempt service. Only the managers of the Anchorage and Fairbanks International Airports are partially exempt. Paragraph (16) should be changed to reflect this.

Page 7 Line 2 — The commission will consider in the future whether the deputy director of the division of tourism and the deputy director of the division of insurance should remain in the partially exempt service.

Page 8 Line 5 — AS 39.25.140. Amendment of Personnel Rules.

The question of the distinction between public policy and internal management was raised. Paddy Moriarty suggested that instead of the phrase "public policy", that the draft should say whether it affects the public or is used by an agency in dealing with the public. Senator Ray suggested looking at the language which was used in the Alcoholic Beveral Control Board bill last session to help clarify the distinction between public policy and internal management regulations. Cherie Shelley pointed out that many of the subjects covered in the Personnel Rules have been included in the collective bargaining agreements. Therefore changes in the Rules which are contrary to the substance of the contracts would have little practical effect.

Page 8 Line 20 — The commission decided that the Personnel Rules should be required to be published in the Alaska Administrative Register and Code and therefore that the word "may" in paragraph (4) should be changed to shall.

Page 8 Line 27 — AS 39.25.150. Scope of the Rules.

The commission decided that the Personnel Board should also approve the classification plan.

Page 9 Line 18 — Senator Ray suggested finding a clearer phrase than "sound employee selection methods" for this paragraph.

Page 11 Line 4 — After considerable discussion about the veteran's preference system, the commission decided not to amend this paragraph. Under the present system, a veteran receives the five additional points only on the applications he files before he is hired. Once he has accepted a position with the state, then any applications for other positions which he has filed are rescored to remove the 5-point bonus.

Page 12 Line 7 — Senator Ray suggested investigating the definition which the director of the division of vocational rehabilitation uses in determining whether a person is severely handicapped. It might be appropriate to include that definition in the State Personnel Act.

Page 12 Line 10 — In discussion of paragraph (23), the commission questioned the definition of programs and disadvantaged persons. Senator Ray suggested adding that the programs could not be against the standards of a merit system of employment.

Page 12 Line 18 — AS 39.25.153. Personnel Officers.

Diana DeSimone pointed out that the Department of Law does not have a Personnel Officer so subsection (a) should be redrafted. It should read: If a principal department of the executive branch requires a personnel officer, then the personnel officer shall be permanently employed by and located within the department.

Page 12 Line 22 — She also suggested that the whole section be deleted since the director of the division of personnel has the authority under AS 39.25.150 to delegate authority for personnel actions to the personnel officers of the departments and since that authority has been delegated recently. Roger Thayer replied that the delegation is recent and that he would prefer to have some authorization for independent action by the personnel officers remain in the Act.

Page 12 Line 22 — The commission decided to delete the language authorizing the personnel officers to act contrary to the Personnel Rules so that subsection (b) begins with the phrase Subject to the provisions.

Page 13 Line 7 — The commission also decided to delete paragraph (4) which would have given the personnel officers authority to make rules concerning the methods and procedures for overtime work and pay.

Page 13 Line 15 — In order to provide for consistency in the personnel policies of the state, the commission decided to require that the commissioner of administration must approve the exercise of any powers under this section, rather than the commissioner of the department in which the employee worked.

Line 13 Line 17 — AS 39.25.160. Generally.

After discussion of the meaning of "precinct level" the commission decided that the phrase should be defined in the State Personnel Act.

Page 13 Line 23 — To clarify subsection (b), Senator Ray recommended changing it to read: ... in connection with securing or making an appointment....

Page 13 Line 26 — Senator Ray recommended that subsection (c) be made to apply to all state employees rather than just those in the classified service.

Page 14 Line 6 — The commission decided that protection against actions based on unlawful discrimination due to race, sex, color, religion, national origin, age or handicap should be extended to all state employees. Classified employees should be protected against discrimination based on political beliefs.

Page 14 Line 11 — Senator Ray recommended adding the word knowingly to the first line of subsection (g) so that it reads: A person may not knowingly make a false statement....

Definitions should be included in the Act for "fraud" and for "knowingly".

Page 14 Line 16 — Subsection (h) should be changed to read: "...person may not unlawfully defeat, deceive, or obstruct....

Page 14 Line 27 — AS 39.25.170. Hearings and appeals upon dismissal, demotion, or suspension.

The commission decided that all state employees should have the right to appeal actions based on unlawful discrimination. Subsection (c) should be redrafted to provide for this. Classified employees should have the right to appeal actions based on unlawful discrimination due to political beliefs.

Page 15 Line 2 — Subsection (d) was phrased unclearly. It should be redrafted to read:

A permanent employee in the classified service who holds probationary status in his present position may appeal a dismissal from the classified service the Personnel Board.

Page 16 Line 6 — AS 39.25.185. Employment of Federal Employees.

The commission decided that this new section should be deleted.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
Capitol Building, Juneau
August 19, 1980

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order at 1:35 p.m. The commission continued its discussion of the State Personnel Act begun at its meeting on Monday, August 18th.

AS 39.25.140 (Amendment of the personnel rules). Senator Ray pointed out the distinction between those rules governing the internal management of agencies and those rules which affect the public and should be considered matters of public policy. Rules which affect the public should be subject to public review before being adopted or amended. He suggested that subsection (e) be amended to limit the exemption from the Administrative Procedures Act to those rules affecting only the internal management of state agencies. A new subsection should be added requiring that those rules which affect the public must be enacted pursuant to the APA. He also directed the staff to ask the Attorney General's office and the legal staff of the Legislative Affairs Agency to prepare opinions on what legal authority the rules have.

Darlene Livermore pointed out that most of the collective bargaining agreements which the state has entered contain a clause which says that if there is a conflict between the contract terms and the Personnel Rules, then the contract terms govern. Only if the contract is silent on a subject do the Personnel Rules apply to employees who are members of collective bargaining units. Since almost all of the classified employees in the state are members of collective bargaining units, the Personnel Rules have a very limited application. Because of this, most state employees are probably not even aware that the state has Personnel Rules.

Senator Ray pointed out that the political climate is not necessarily favorable to the present public employee collective bargaining situation and that it is possible that the governor or some legislators will sponsor legislation to change the present system. Therefore, it is appropriate to be concerned about the personnel system.

The commission discussed the distinction between exempt, partially exempt and classified employees. There are about 500 employees in the partially exempt service and 5 employees in the classified service who are not members of collective bargaining units. Senator Ray asked for reasons for preserving both the partially exempt and exempt services. Bruce Cummings replied that partially exempt positions are appropriate where the work performed is essentially similar to other kinds of positions in the state. For example, the salary and job title and most of the duties of a clerk typist in the Office of the Governor are comparable to other clerk typists. However, it is appropriate for the Governor to be able to appoint and dismiss the employee with greater ease than if the position were covered by the protections of the classified service.

Positions are appropriately placed in the exempt service when the salaries which must be offered to attract skilled employees are not included in the state's pay plan, when the position is not expected to last long or requires unique responsibilities, and for the political appointments which the chief executive needs to be able to make for policy reasons.

The classified service provides salary integrity and protections from arbitrary hiring or firing decisions.

AS 39.25.150 (Scope of the rules). The commission discussed cleaning up the language of this section to delete material more appropriately included in the rules. Bruce Cummings pointed out that subsection (2) does not make provision for paying employees pursuant to a valid collective bargaining agreement, although the state has interpreted the language to permit paying employees based on pay plans adopted under union contracts. The commission agreed that language should be proposed to address this problem. Darlene Livermore added that while she agrees that the section should be cleaned up, she thinks it is important to preserve the statements of principles which are presently there, such as "like pay for like work."

On the question of crediting work experience as an alternative to formal education, and on the question of tests, Bruce Cummings explained that the laws requires employers to be able to demonstrate that any tests for employment are consistently able to predict that those who receive good scores are more likely to be successful employees than those who receive lower scores. The state is trying to develop validated tests, but it is a difficult process and there are only three employees in the division who are assigned to that project. The state has fewer than 15 tests which would be likely to withstand a challenge in court. Furthermore, the tests which the state is discarding for the validated tests have been, in fact, irrelevant. For example, there was an excellent accountant in the Division of Finance who was marked for promotion. He took the old exam five times and failed it each time. When the new, validated exam was ready he took it and was number one on the register.

Senator Ray pointed out that there is another problem - that of being sure that the job description is kept current so that the job classification actually reflects the duties of the position. The state needs a full scale desk audit program.

AS 39.25.153 (Personnel Rules for certain departments). Lynda McCurry reported that the personnel officers in the departments continue to believe that they can perform their jobs better if they are the employees of the departments in which they work rather than the employees of a centralized Division of Personnel. The Division of Personnel has recently begun to decentralize several personnel functions to the departmental personnel offices.

Bruce Cummings raised questions about subsection (b) which gives the departmental personnel officers authority to adopt regulations for those positions unique to their departments. At present those powers have not been exercised, but if they were, the state could find that there were significantly different working conditions for groups of employees based only on which department they worked for. Consistency is important, not only for morale of the employees but also because the state has to comply with the terms of the collective bargaining agreements it enters.

Delegating greater authority to the departmental personnel officers increases the importance of auditing. In the 1980 Report the commission recommended that annual audits be performed either by the Division of Personnel or by some other agency. Mr. Cummings has thought about the question and believes it would be better for a third party to perform the audit since the Division of Personnel needs to remain effective as a service agency, rather than being perceived in a policing role. The division would, of course, work closely with whoever did the audit to provide information and expertise as requested.

Senator Ray suggested that the subsection might be changed to enable departmental personnel officers to adopt only rules which relate to the internal management of the department for classes which are unique to the department.

Don Fisher raised the question of setting up a system for a periodic review of the Personnel Rules to insure that they accurately reflect the changing policies and procedures of the state. Senator Ray directed the staff to investigate the feasibility of doing so.

AS 39.25.155 (Vocational substitution program). Bruce Cummings pointed out that the positions which fall within the program have all been placed in the Local 71 bargaining unit. The program is therefore no longer used, since Local 71 members are hired through a union-operated hiring hall. The union system does not include the kinds of minimum qualifications which the state uses in evaluating applicants.

Lois Jund asked whether subsection (g) which establishes a one-year residency requirement was still legal. Mr. Cummings replied that it wasn't.

AS 39.25.160 (Prohibitions). Senator Ray suggested that subsection (e) should provide that partially exempt employees as well as classified employees are required to resign from their positions in the state service when they seek nomination or become candidates for state or national elective political office.

Bruce Cummings indicated that the Rules do require a partially exempt employee to resign, even though the statute does not.

AS 39.25.170 (Hearings and appeals). Senator Ray asked whether an employee could require that hearing be open to the public. Bruce Cummings replied that the Personnel Rules do give the employee this right. Senator Ray suggested amending the section.

AS 39.25.180 (Status of present employees). Senator Ray pointed out that the first three subsections of this section are obsolete.

AS 39.25.195-200 (Nonpermanent law). The law has not yet been in effect for a full year and therefore it is too early to consider whether it needs to be changed. The commission should review figures on positions which used to be temporary and are now seasonal as a result of the procedures created by the nonpermanent law at a later time.

AS 39.25.210 (Penalties). The commission will consider later the question of implementing a graduated penalty schedule, whether there should be administrative penalties set out in the statute and whether it is appropriate that being found guilty of a willful violation of the Rules leads to conviction of a misdemeanor.

AS 39.10.010 (Nepotism prohibited). The commission agreed that a stronger statute prohibiting nepotism should be prepared for its review.

Senator Ray directed the staff to prepare a work draft of a revision of the State Personnel Act with the help of the Legislative Affairs Agency legal division. The commission will meet when the draft has been completed, which should be in one month.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 2:55 p.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
Capitol Building, Juneau
August 18, 1980

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order at 10:00 a.m. He asked for testimony from the public. Julie Issac called the commission's attention to a problem that she is having with the state's retirement system.

Mrs. Issac retired in 1976, at which time the Retirement Division on four separate occasions had advised her that she was eligible for more than nine years of credited service with the state. As the result of an amendment to the laws three months after she retired, she was also told she would receive credit for an additional three years of military service. Her benefits were calculated on that basis. In 1979 Mrs. Issac received a letter from the Retirement Division advising that their original computations had been in error. She had been credited with 4½ years of service to which she was not entitled, part of which was for employment with the University of Alaska. Furthermore, she had received over $5000 in overpayments which would have to be paid back to the state. In the beginning of January, 1980, the division began reducing her retirement check by $100 per month to be credited towards the overpayment, in addition to having reduced her check because of the decrease in the years of credited service.

Mrs. Issac was advised that she could appeal the division's decision to the Retirement Board at their next meeting. She was unable to attend but a friend did read a letter to the board which preserved her appeal rights. Following that hearing, Mrs. Issac asked that the state waive collection of the debt. According to its interpretation of the statutes, the only ground upon which the division can waive repayment is hardship. The division therefore required that she submit information not only about her own financial situation but also about her husband's. Mrs. Issac questioned why her husband's information should be considered since it is her retirement credit which is under question.

Mrs. Issac added that the basis for denying her period of employment with the University of Alaska was a regulation adopted by the Retirement Division in 1978 - two years after she retired. Without credit for the University of Alaska employment, she needs an additional 13 months state employment in order to claim her territorial service.

Early in July, Mrs. Issac wrote to Commissioner Hudson asking for assistance in finding employment with the state so that she could work for the time needed to then receive credit for her territorial service. She was no longer eligible to be placed on the state's rehire lists because more than 2 years had elapsed since she left state employment. She has also asked the Governor's office for assistance in finding a position in which she can earn the necessary service credits. Mrs. Issac pointed out that she had been a loyal and responsible state employee but that she believes that the state has treated her shabbily and that she is becoming bitter.

Lois Jund stated that while she was at the Department of Health and Social Services, several people had talked with her about receiving similar notices from the Division of Retirement. Bruce Cummings explained that while he was working in the retirement division he noticed that there was a constant flow of files with errors. Therefore, the director of the division ordered a wholesale audit of all of the PERS and TRS records. Any with errors would be adjusted as of the date of the audit. Although he had no sure figures, Mr. Cummings estimated that 3 to 5% of the files contained errors. Because the retirement statutes require that any errors in benefits be corrected, the division does not have the authority to write off any overpayments which a retired person may have received. He suggested that the legislature consider giving the retirement boards authority to waive recoupment of overpayments in certain situations.

Duncan Fowler pointed out that Mrs. Issac's case raises two questions. First, whether the state ought to be prohibited from seeking repayment because she had based her retirement plans on information provided by the state and over 3 years had elapsed since then. The second problem is with the state's investigation into her husband's financial situation when considering whether to grant her a hardship waiver. Lois Jund pointed out that in the federal retirement system there is a statute of limitations and that they can only seek to correct errors which occurred within the past two years.

Dick Smith said that Mrs. Issace has two complaints against the state: being charged with an overpayment which resulted from the state's errors and being denied 4½ years of credited service. It appears that because the Retirement Board is considering her appeal, there can be no immediate appeal to the courts, although, on the basis of the information which she has provided it seems likely that she would be successful in court. He suggested that it would be appropriate to change the retirement statutes to provide for a statute of limitations against attempts by the division to collect for errors which it caused. Bruce Cummings added that since there are between 80 and 90 other employers who participate in PERS and TRS, any changes should be carefully drafted to apply only to the state's employees.

Mr. Smith added that the second part of Mrs. Issac's problems - denial of service credits for her work with the University of Alaska - is harder to remedy since the University is a separate entity according to the state constitution. The University voluntarily joined the retirement system in 1978, but before that work with the University did not apply to the state's retirement system.

Senator Ray suggested that there should also be some recourse for an employee who wanted to return to work for the state to build up retirement credits. Bruce Cummings explained that if there was a 2-year statute of limitations for asserting overpayments, then an employee would still have rehire rights and would therefore be entitled to preference for any vacancy in the job class from which she or he retired. Mrs. Issac also asked that if the commission sponsored any legislation that it be made retroactive to resolve her problems as well as helping other employees.

Senator Ray asked whether the commission approved sending a letter to the Retirement Board concerning the commission's suggestions for future legislation. There was no objection. Staff was directed to work with Deputy Commissioner Smith on a draft of the letter.

The commission began consideration of the memorandum on public inquiries.

Issue 1. Posting of promotional opportunities on bulletin boards. Darlene Livermore explained that APEA and PSEA take different approaches to protecting their members' interests in access to promotional opportunities.

Issue 2. Postsecondary Education Commission. Senator Ray pointed out that whether these positions should be in the exempt or classified service raises the ongoing question of ease of hiring versus protection of the rights of employees. This question will be discussed during the review of the State Personnel Act.

Issue 3. Delay in processing applications. Bruce Cummings explained that the division received some 5,500 applications in July, and that this volume has partly caused the delay. In addition, all of the processing is done manually at present. The division hopes that the number of applications will decrease in August. There has been no turnover in the division staff for the last three months, which should also help reduce the time to process applications. They are implementing a system of block scoring for all job classifications in which that is possible and also hoping to move toward an automated record keeping system. However, if the volume of applications continues to increase, it may not be possible to decrease the time.

Mr. Cummings explained some of his division's long-range plans for speeding up the application process. They are investigating a computerized automatic classification tracking system, but first the state job classification system has to be restructured. This system does not read applications, establish whether the minimum qualifications are met, nor does it score the examinations. However, the state is also investigating a self-administered training and experience rating system which appears to work with the clerical classes but not others. An additional problem in the classification computer system is that it is not designed to fit into the IBM equipment which the state presently uses and therefore there is a conversion problem.

Senator Ray moved that the commission write to the Commissioner of Administration asking him to outline what he thinks needs to be done to shorten the application process time to a more reasonable period. The motion passed without objection.

Issue 5. Geographical cost of living differentials. The commission noted that this is a matter which is addressed in the collective bargaining contracts.

Issue 6. Employee credits. Bruce Cummings explained that employee credits are designed to encourage retention and promotion of state employees and to discourage breaks in service. The system awards these extra points only to permanent classified employees. John Pugh pointed out that the system can work against employees who for family reasons are forced to move from one area of the state to another without having a new job lined up, although they intend to remain in state service if they can find employment. They lose their points as soon as they resign from one job, even though they may return to work within a short period of time. The same thing happens to classified employees who accept employment in the partially exempt or service. They lose their accumulated credits upon resigning from the classified position. Lois Jund suggested that the commission recommend that the state do away with the system of employee credits. Senator Ray proposed that the staff research the advantages and disadvantages of employee credits and other bonus point systems and report to the commission.

Senator Ray asked whether there were any statistics on the number of permanent seasonal positions created for positions which had been previously filled by temporary employees and how many nonpermanent positions there were. Bruce Cummings replied that it is not yet available. Senator Ray pointed out that the newspapers had reported 1100 new positions created by the budget but that in fact from the information presented to the Finance Committee he thought that there were no more than 300. The rest were already in existence because of Revised Programs which had been started before the new fiscal year or through converting CIP positions.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 11:42 for lunch.

The commission reconvened at 1:30 p.m. and began discussion of the Revision of the State Personnel Act memorandum. Only those sections on which there was discussion will be noted.

AS 39.25.040. Director of personnel. The staff was directed to find out what the statutes say about the position of the Director of Labor Relations and the actual duties of the director.

AS 39.25.060. Personnel board. Senator Ray pointed out that this section includes unnecessary language and should be cleaned up. He asked whether there was a need for the Personnel Board since most of their original functions are now performed through collective bargaining. Mr. Cummings replied that there are still five employees who are in the classified service but not members of any bargaining unit. The State Personnel Act and the Personnel Rules govern all of the terms and conditions of their employment. In addition, some of the members of the Confidential Employees Association have petitioned the Labor Relations Agency to be taken out of the CEA unit, which would add them to this group of five. The Personnel Board adopts the Personnel Rules and amendments and some body is needed to continue to do that. Senator Ray asked the staff to contact the Personnel Board to ask whether they should continue in operation.

AS 39.25.080. Public records. Mr. Cummings explained that the Personnel Rules which implement this section provide for confidentiality for personal information about state employees. The public does have access to information about who is a state employee, where he works, how much he is paid, and how long he has been employed. Confidential records include information about an employee's familyand performance evaluations, although any state supervisor who is considering hiring a present state employee does have access to the whole personal file. Every employee can see his entire file at any time and have copies of anything in the file. Secret files are forbidden.

Senator Ray suggested tha the statute be changed to specify which information is open to the public and which information is to be kept confidential rather than relying on the Personnel Rules to set those standards. Mr. Cummings mentioned that there are a number of conflicting laws on this subject already.

AS 39.25.110. Exempt service. The commission discussed the groups who are made members of the exempt service and agreed that the section should be recodified. Duncan Fowler suggested that the commission should hear from those entities which have employees in the exempt service to learn whether there are positions which should be transferred to the classified or partially exempt service. Senator Ray also directed the staff to inquire of Greg O'Claray whether there is still a reason for the employees of the ferry system to be in the exempt service.

AS 39.25.120. Partially exempt service. The commission discussed specific language changes which should be made to clean up this section. In addition, Duncan Fowler suggested that the commission should develop a policy statement for the exempt service comparable to the policy statement found in AS 39.25.130 concerning the partially exempt service. Mr. Cummings explained that positions in the partially exempt service are similar to other state jobs and therefore can be placed in the job classification plan and paid according to the pay plan but they are not susceptible to ordinary methods of recruitment or they require greater flexibility in hiring and dismissal than do positions in the classified service.

On the other hand, exempt service positions are not subject to either the state's classification plan or the pay plan. They are generally meant to be jobs which are so unique or of such short duration that it is more appropriate not to try to fit them into the system. The Division of Personnel makes no attempt to develop a job description for exempt positions, to classify them, or to set the salary for them. There is a need for both the exempt and the partially exempt service, in addition to the classified service. Lois Jund added that the state really has four services: the exempt, the partially exempt, the classified service which participates in collective bargaining with the state, and the classified service positions which are not unionized.

AS 39.25.130. Extension of partially exempt and classified services. Senator Ray suggested eliminating the reference to dates in this section.

AS 39.25.140. Amendment of personnel rules. Senator Ray suggested that the law should provide two methods for adoption of the Personnel Rules. Those Rules which affect the public policy should be adopted through the Administrative Procedures Act. Those Rules which are matters of internal management only, could be adopted without the procedural requirements of the APA.

The commission will meet to review a proposed draft of a revised State Personnel Act in September.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 3:45 p.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau, Alaska
December 4, 1980

MINUTES

Senator Ray, chairman, called the meeting to order at 10:00 a.m. and asked commission members to consider the draft bill limiting the adjustment of retirement benefits. Paddy Moriarty asked why, in subsections (b)(1) of the first two sections of the bill, the date set was after the incorrect benefit was first paid rather than after the individual had retired from state employment. It was pointed out that the purpose of the bill is to set a statute of limitations and that beginning to run the period from the first incorrect payment was a reasonable decision.

Bruce Cummings pointed out that the Public Employment Retirement System board presently has an appeals procedure to consider cases in which overpayments have been alleged by the Division of Retirement and Benefits and the retired person has difficulty in repaying the amount. However, an individual can knowingly allow an overpayment to be made, and in those cases it would be appropriate for the state to seek to recover the amount overpaid. The review system of the PERS board would permit this but the proposed bill would not.

Senator Ray asked how the state should handle the situation in which an employee retires after having received written computations from the division setting out his years of credited service and the amount of benefits to which he will be entitled and later is told that the figures were incorrectly calculated. Therefore, the amount of his benefits will be reduced. Senator Ray asked whether it would be fair to require the state to rehire the retired employee in the job from which he retired. The retired employee would then have an opportunity to earn the credits which he was initially informed he had.

Bruce Cummings suggested that this would injure the employee who had replaced the retiree on the job. The new employee might have resigned from a job to accept the new position and giving the retired person back his old job would mean injuring the new worker. Some other system for addressing the problem should be developed.

Fred Muller asked what the frequency of error in the computations of length of service credits is. Lois Jund explained that a number of cases had arisen at the same time several years ago when the Division of Retirement and Benefits performed a wholesale audit of the retirement system and discovered a number of errors. Many of the cases which were raised involved overpayments of from $1000 to $5000. It was often very difficult for the retired person to repay this large an amount. Mr. Muller asked whether any of the commission members knew how many state employees retire expecting to be eligible to receive retirement benefits and then discover that an error has been made and that they are not eligible for any benefit at all.

Paddy Moriarty replied that the Ombudsman's office has received information of several cases in which people wrote to the Division asking for a computation of their creditable service. They received a written response and then retired. Later the division reviewed their file and disallowed some portion of the service which had been previously included in the computation. Bill Huston added that some of the computation errors occur because of statutory changes. The formulas for computing creditable service are complicated so that an employee cannot simply add up the number of months he has worked for the state and know the length of creditable service or the retirement benefits he will be entitled to.

Bruce Cummings suggested that there are two possible solutions to the problem which the commission is considering. The state could offer assistance to those whose creditable service has been erroneously computed in returning to work, as has been done for Julie Issac. In addition, the PERS board has the authority to waive recoupment of overpayments in cases of hardship. Senator Ray pointed out that in Mrs. Issac's case, the appeal to the board took 2-1/2 years to reach a decision and that her petition was denied because her husband's resources were considered in evaluating whether collecting the overpayment would be a hardship to her. On that information, the board found that it would not be a hardship if she were required to repay the money to the state. The issue was finally satisfactorily resolved through the efforts of the Governor's Office and the Attorney General.

Senator Ray asked whether there was any objection to adding a statute of limitations to the adjustment provisions of the retirement benefit law. Fred Muller suggested that it would be appropriate to require that the larger cases of overpayments be reviewed by the PERS board rather than automatically waiving any recoupment. He suggested that the statute of limitations should not apply to those cases in which the overpayment had been more then 10 per cent of the monthly benefit to which the retired person was correctly entitled. Senator Ray asked whether there was consensus on Mr. Muller's proposal. There was no objection.

The commission then considered the draft bill relating to the nepotism in state employment. Terry Cramer, the administrative assistant to the commission, explained that this bill was an attempt to place the provisions of the Personnel Rules prohibiting nepotism into statutory form. The drafter changed the language of the Personnel Rule, which uses the term "appointing authority" and instead used the term "person making the appointment" in the draft.

Darlene Livermore stated that the Alaska Public Employees Association has three concerns about the proposed bill. The current statute prohibits employment of persons related to the commissioner of the department. The intent of the legislature was therefore probably to discourage political patronage in the state employment. The Personnel Rules probably were drafted with the same theory as their basis. Recently in the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, the federal government repealed a 90-year old nepotism law which had a general application. Congress retained prohibitions against abuse of power by elected officials, aiming again at political patronage. Secondly, Ms. Livermore raised the issue of whether the present draft is in opposition to laws protecting certain classes of people from employment discrimination, particularly, from discrimination based on marital status or change in marital status. The third issue which APEA is concerned about is access to employment. Unlike most locations in the Lower 48, there are a number of communities in Alaska which have only a few major employers. For example, in Valdez there are two -- the division of highways and the division of mental health. Both to provide employment opportunities for the people living in those communities and to provide a pool of employees for the state, the nepotism laws should not be unnecessarily stringent.

Bruce Cummings said that he did not disagree with the points which APEA was raising and that the provision of the Personnel Rules gives the director of the division of personnel authority to waive enforcement of the rule. He added that could not recall an instance in which he had refused to waive enforcement of the rule. However, it is appropriate to have each case of employment of close relatives considered in order to prevent abuse.

Ms. Livermore explained that she did not object to the present situation in which the statute addressed nepotism at the commissioner level and the Rules had broader application, but that putting the provisions of the Rules into the statutes would provide the courts with a greater opportunity for review and limitation. Mr. Cummings explained that the Attorney General has advised the division that the scope of the rule is broader than the rule-making authority granted by the statute. Therefore, enforcement of the rule could probably not be defended successfully in court.

Representative Fuller asked whether there were regulations for elected officials. Senator Ray replied that the State Personnel Act applies only to the executive branch of government. Representative Eliason asked whether nepotism was a lively issue. Mr. Cummings answered that there are some communities in the state in which there has been considerable public interest in the question. Senator Ray asked whether there were any objections to the commission sponsoring a bill which would put the language of the Personnel Rules into the statutes. Darlene Livermore registered APEA's objection.

The commission next considered the draft to require that the regulations adopted by the retirement board be subject to the Administrative Procedure Act. Members commented that the draft did not follow the instructions which the commission had given the drafter and decided to defer consideration of the subject until a redraft was available.

The commission considered the draft bill relating to membership of the Public Employees Retirement Board. Lois Jund suggested that the draft be amended to require that of the four members elected by the members of the retirement system, at least one must be a retired person. The amendment was adopted without objection.

The commission turned to the redraft of the State Personnel Act amendments. Several problems were noted and Senator Ray asked Jack Chenoweth, from the Legal Services Division of the Legislative Affairs Agency to meet with the commission. After reviewing the second draft of the State Personnel Act with Mr. Chenoweth, the commission discussed with him the amendments to the draft limiting adjustments to retirement benefits which had been agreed upon earlier in the meeting.

Terry Cramer advised the commission members of a telephone call from Grace Kack. Ms. Kack is concerned that individuals applying for state positions must be re-examined every two years in order to stay on the register for a job class. Ms. Kack was not concerned on her own behalf, since she is presently employed by the state, but she felt that the requirement was unfair for those who were not presently employed.

Ms. Cramer also advised the commission that several reponses had been received from agencies whose employees were placed in the exempt and partially exempt services concerning whether those employees should remain in their present status or should be transferred to the classified service.

Senator Ray stated that the commission would meet to review redrafts of all of the bills probably at the end of December.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 11:45 a.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau
October 29-30, 1980

MINUTES

The meeting was called to order at 10:00 a.m., by the Chairman, Senator Bill Ray.

John Williams, Commissioner of the Commercial Fisheries Entry Commission, testified in response to the Blue Ribbon Commission's request for information concerning whether his employees should be in the exempt service or would more appropriately be placed in the partially exempt or classified service. Mr. Williams stated that the limited entry commission is a quasi-judicial, independent regulatory body which is granted special status by the Alaska Statutes. According to an Attorney General's opinion, prepared for the Alaska Oil and Gas Conservation Commission, it is appropriate for commissions of this type to remain independent from the executive branch. Therefore, Mr. Williams believes that employees of the commission are most appropriately left in the exempt service. Placing them in the partially exempt or classified service would subject them, and the commission as their employer, to inappropriate regulation by the executive branch.

Mr. Williams stated that the commission had conducted a poll of its employees to learn what their wishes were. Of the 29 employees, 25 participated. Each of the staff was provided with a copy of the State Personnel Act prior to the poll being taken. Every effort was made to insure that the poll was secret. Of those voting, 21 favored remaining in the exempt service and four favored moving to the partially exempt service. None wished to be placed in the classified service.

Mr. Williams added the commission has chosen to follow the practices which the Personnel Rules set out for partially exempt employees.

Greg O'Claray addressed the question which the commission had posed at its last meeting about why the vessel employees of the Marine Highway System are placed in the exempt service. He provided the members with a letter explaining his reasons.

The vessels are, by federal law, under the jurisdiction of the United States Coast Guard for the safe operation, navigation, staffing and examination, and certification of personnel. These federal regulations cover employment rights, health, safety and other conditions of employment of the seamen as well as making requirements concerning the number of qualified personnel who must be on board before the vessel can sail. In addition, employees recruited from the Maritime Unions are covered by private Taft-Hartley health and welfare and retirement trusts and would not automatically participate in the state retirement system or in its other benefit coverage without considerable loss of benefits. For Merchant Seamen, engineers and mates recruited from the private sector, the state's wage classification system would not provide a competitive salary. Therefore, the state decided at the inception of its involvement in the marine transportation enterprise, that the employees should be exempt from the State Personnel Act. None of these reasons has changed and therefore Mr. O'Claray recommends that the Marine Transportation System employees remain in the exempt service.

Roger Thayer added that the ferry system receives approximately 1200 applications a year. They must be submitted to the department between February 1st and March 10th. The personnel office ranks them based on training and education, and shoreside and maritime experience. Grades range from 70 points for a person without a high school diploma and with no relevant work experience to 110, for someone with the previous shipboard experience in a field directly related to steward's tasks who also holds a Coast Guard license for lifeboatman. Hiring is usually done by late April. This system was developed as a resolution to EEO complaints claiming that the ferry system discriminated against women and minority applicants. Most positions which are above the entry level are filled by promotion.

Senator Ray raised the question of the membership of the Public Employment Retirement System board. The statutes presently require that the three members of the Personnel Board sit on the PERS board as well as on the Labor Relations Agency. He asked whether any of the commission members believed that the overlap in membership was important. Cherie Shelley pointed out that as a result of recent legislation, the PERS board is now responsible for decisions concerning the Alaska Supplemental Benefits program and the Deferred Compensation program, in addition to the retirement program. Therefore, their duties have significantly increased. It makes sense to limit the demands on the time of those board members, who are all volunteers. Without objection the commission agreed to draft a bill to change the membership of the Retirement Board. Two alternatives were proposed: to eliminate the members of the Personnel Board from membership on the PERS board and replace them with one member appointed by the Governor and two members elected from the retirement system; and to increase the size of the PERS board while leaving the members of the Personnel Board on it.

The commission reviewed the memorandum on employee service credits and then recessed for lunch.

The meeting reconvened at 1:30 p.m. Eric Yould, Executive Director of the Alaska Power Authority, addressed the members on the question of why the power authority employees are in the exempt service. Of the 16 employees, 14 have college degrees. He believes that they should remain in the exempt service. The Authority would have difficulty meeting its deadlines if it had to go through the red tape of hiring employees through the classified system.

The Alaska Power Authority was structured by the Legislature to permit it to become similar to a public utility district which is a form prevalant in the lower 48. Mr. Yould was concerned that changes which might be made in the structure of the Authority now would foreclose flexibility in the future when the Authority has developed to the extent anticipated by the legislature. He wanted to preserve those options for future employees. It is anticipated that there will be power plant operators, linemen and so on, once the structures are in operation.

In answer to a question from Darlene Livermore, Mr. Yould explained that although most of the employees have degrees, they perform general professional kinds of duties rather than highly-technical tasks. Mr. Yould added that he is not opposed to union membership for the clerical employees of the Authority.

The commission began its discussion of the review on the State Personnel Act. See attached comments and recommendations.

Fred Cook, personnel officer for the Department of Fish and Game, addressed the commission about a number of his concerns. The Personnel Division has been receiving a large number of applications for the positions available, especially for permanent seasonal positions. Changing from hiring temporary employees to hiring permanent seasonal employees has increased the Department's recruiting expenses from $8,000 - $57,000 this past year. Contacting the applicants through phone calls and telegrams has been difficult because frequently people do not reply. Therefore, the department continues to send them telegrams or to call them for other positions. He knows of one gentleman who received approximately 30 telegrams and didn't answer any of them.

Many applicants state they will accept employment anywhere in the State, but when the department contacts them, they say that they are not interested in going to such and such place. Mr. Cook suggests that if anyone rejects a job offer, he be removed from the state register at once. The application form should specify four regions of Alaska (such as Southcentral, Southeast, Central and West) to narrow down areas in which the applicant says he will work. It would speed up the process for his people and also would save the department a tremendous amount of money. He figures that the department, as a whole, spends upwards of $200,000 a year just in recruitment.

Another problem area is in insuring that applicants are Alaskan residents. No one verifies the information provided by the applicant.

The scoring of the applications is also a problem. There are approximately 100-200 applicants with the same score all ranking #1 on the register. He suggested a more sophisticated grading system to rank these applications so that the top group would have fewer applicants in it. The department then would have fewer people to consider when filling a position.

Mr. Cook also suggested changing the length of time for recruitment of bush positions. Presently it is 30 days. He would like it changed to 60 days to enable the recruiting people time to have applications corrected and the applicants time to get it done. He gave an example of a problem he had today. The department has a Fish & Game Resource Specialist II position, at range 16, open and there's an Alaska Native in Angoon that they would like to hire. They want a bilingual person. The applicant forgot to sign his application. In order to meet the application deadline, Mr. Cook had to contact him, which took five telephone calls to Angoon, take the application out to Channel Flying and instruct the pilot on what needed to be done, fly the application to Angoon for the gentleman's signature and have it returned by 3:00 p.m. that afternoon. He estimates that particular problem costs his department $200.

Jerry Reinwand, Executive Assistant to Governor Hammond, addressed the commission at its request. He explained that the Governor's Office is in the process of reviewing the separate agencies which are located within it to decide whether they should remain as part of the Office or whether it would be more appropriate to attach them to one of the departments. There are questions which make the decision difficult in some cases. For example, the Human Rights Commission should avoid even the appearance of being subject to political pressure, and therefore, it would appear to make sense that it be placed in one of the departments rather than the Governor's Office. However, it should also be insulated from the pressures of being a line agency within one department, and therefore, it may be inappropriate to place it in a department. Mr. Reinwand indicated that he has questions about whether the staff of the Division of Budget & Management and the Division of Policy Development & Planning and the Office of Internal Audit need to be in the partially exempt service. Since the review process has not been concluded, Mr. Reinwand suggested that the commission wait for its results as an expression of what the Governor recommends on the question of who needs to be in the exempt service.

The commission recessed at 3:20 p.m. until 10:00 a.m. Thursday, October 30.

Senator Ray, chairman, reconvened the meeting at 10:00 a.m. on October 30.

Kerry Romesburg, Executive Director of the Postsecondary Education Commission spoke in response to the commission's request.

The Postsecondary Education Commission has 30 permanent employees and adds four nonpermanent employees to its staff in the summer. He indicated that although the statutes place himself and the staff in the exempt service, in reality the commission uses the same pay scale as the classified service, the kinds of work which most of the employees do is similar to work done by classified employees and, except for hiring employees from the registers, the commission operates under most of the procedures of the Personnel Rules. Of the 30 employees, 16 are loan repayment, awards and collection clerks. Three others are clerical employees, two are in the administrative assistant class and the remainder are professional employees. He added that as permanent exempt employees, the commission employees receive benefits as do permanent classified employees.

There being no more questions for Mr. Romesburg, he was thanked and excused.

John Pugh commented that it did not appear that the Post-secondary Education Commission needed to be in the exempt service. He recommended that if the Blue Ribbon Commission is going to clean up the State Personnel Act, that each of the boards and commissions which presently has its staff placed in the exempt or partially exempt service be carefully reviewed.

The commission then returned to reviewing the draft of the State Personnel Act. Comments and recommendations are attached.

Senator Ray stated that when a redraft of the Act is available the commission will meet again. Without objection, the meeting was adjourned at 11:30 a.m.

Cherie Shelley was concerned that the Division of Labor Relations might use this section to assert that information APEA needed in preparing cases was confidential and could not be released. Senator Ray suggested adding For the purpose of this Act at the beginning of the sentence on Line 7.

In discussion of paragraphs (1)-(5) members noted that paragraph (1) provides for information on all state employees and that paragraph (2) provides for information about an individual employee. Members decided that the phrase state employee should be used rather than the phrase "state officer or employee".

After discussing the standards proposed in subsection (a), the commission members decided to delete all of (a).

The commission will consider whether the employees of the agenices named in paragraphs (11) and (12) should remain in the exempt service after further testimony on the question.

A question was raised about the difference between the exempt and classified service. An employee in the exempt service is not hired from the register, does not get paid according to the pay plan, and can be fired at will. In the classified service there must be just cause before an employee can be fired.

Assistant Commissioners should be added to paragraph (1).

Page 6 Line 8, 23 & 27 — Commission members asked why the state forester, hearing examiners in the Department of Revenue and the Chief of Subsistence in the Department of Fish & Game should be in the partially exempt service. The question will be considered later.

Page 6 Line 29 — Bob Mourant pointed out that there are airport managers for smaller airports who are not in the partially exempt service. Only the managers of the Anchorage and Fairbanks International Airports are partially exempt. Paragraph (16) should be changed to reflect this.

Page 7 Line 2 — The commission will consider in the future whether the deputy director of the division of tourism and the deputy director of the division of insurance should remain in the partially exempt service.

Page 8 Line 5 — AS 39.25.140. Amendment of Personnel Rules.

The question of the distinction between public policy and internal management was raised. Paddy Moriarty suggested that instead of the phrase "public policy", that the draft should say whether it affects the public or is used by an agency in dealing with the public. Senator Ray suggested looking at the language which was used in the Alcoholic Beveral Control Board bill last session to help clarify the distinction between public policy and internal management regulations. Cherie Shelley pointed out that many of the subjects covered in the Personnel Rules have been included in the collective bargaining agreements. Therefore changes in the Rules which are contrary to the substance of the contracts would have little practical effect.

Page 8 Line 20 — The commission decided that the Personnel Rules should be required to be published in the Alaska Administrative Register and Code and therefore that the word "may" in paragraph (4) should be changed to shall.

Page 8 Line 27 — AS 39.25.150. Scope of the Rules.

The commission decided that the Personnel Board should also approve the classification plan.

Page 9 Line 18 — Senator Ray suggested finding a clearer phrase than "sound employee selection methods" for this paragraph.

Page 11 Line 4 — After considerable discussion about the veteran's preference system, the commission decided not to amend this paragraph. Under the present system, a veteran receives the five additional points only on the applications he files before he is hired. Once he has accepted a position with the state, then any applications for other positions which he has filed are rescored to remove the 5-point bonus.

Page 12 Line 7 — Senator Ray suggested investigating the definition which the director of the division of vocational rehabilitation uses in determining whether a person is severely handicapped. It might be appropriate to include that definition in the State Personnel Act.

Page 12 Line 10 — In discussion of paragraph (23), the commission questioned the definition of programs and disadvantaged persons. Senator Ray suggested adding that the programs could not be against the standards of a merit system of employment.

Page 12 Line 18 — AS 39.25.153. Personnel Officers.

Diana DeSimone pointed out that the Department of Law does not have a Personnel Officer so subsection (a) should be redrafted. It should read: If a principal department of the executive branch requires a personnel officer, then the personnel officer shall be permanently employed by and located within the department.

Page 12 Line 22 — She also suggested that the whole section be deleted since the director of the division of personnel has the authority under AS 39.25.150 to delegate authority for personnel actions to the personnel officers of the departments and since that authority has been delegated recently. Roger Thayer replied that the delegation is recent and that he would prefer to have some authorization for independent action by the personnel officers remain in the Act.

Page 12 Line 22 — The commission decided to delete the language authorizing the personnel officers to act contrary to the Personnel Rules so that subsection (b) begins with the phrase Subject to the provisions.

Page 13 Line 7 — The commission also decided to delete paragraph (4) which would have given the personnel officers authority to make rules concerning the methods and procedures for overtime work and pay.

Page 13 Line 15 — In order to provide for consistency in the personnel policies of the state, the commission decided to require that the commissioner of administration must approve the exercise of any powers under this section, rather than the commissioner of the department in which the employee worked.

Line 13 Line 17 — AS 39.25.160. Generally.

After discussion of the meaning of "precinct level" the commission decided that the phrase should be defined in the State Personnel Act.

Page 13 Line 23 — To clarify subsection (b), Senator Ray recommended changing it to read: ... in connection with securing or making an appointment....

Page 13 Line 26 — Senator Ray recommended that subsection (c) be made to apply to all state employees rather than just those in the classified service.

Page 14 Line 6 — The commission decided that protection against actions based on unlawful discrimination due to race, sex, color, religion, national origin, age or handicap should be extended to all state employees. Classified employees should be protected against discrimination based on political beliefs.

Page 14 Line 11 — Senator Ray recommended adding the word knowingly to the first line of subsection (g) so that it reads: A person may not knowingly make a false statement....

Definitions should be included in the Act for "fraud" and for "knowingly".

Page 14 Line 16 — Subsection (h) should be changed to read: "...person may not unlawfully defeat, deceive, or obstruct....

Page 14 Line 27 — AS 39.25.170. Hearings and appeals upon dismissal, demotion, or suspension.

The commission decided that all state employees should have the right to appeal actions based on unlawful discrimination. Subsection (c) should be redrafted to provide for this. Classified employees should have the right to appeal actions based on unlawful discrimination due to political beliefs.

Page 15 Line 2 — Subsection (d) was phrased unclearly. It should be redrafted to read:

A permanent employee in the classified service who holds probationary status in his present position may appeal a dismissal from the classified service the Personnel Board.

Page 16 Line 6 — AS 39.25.185. Employment of Federal Employees.

The commission decided that this new section should be deleted.

Re: Commission's Place in State Government and Status for Budget Purposes.
Our File: J-66-302-80

Dear Commissioner Hamilton:

You requested our opinion on the place that the Alaska Oil and Gas Conservation Commission (hereafter "the Commission") occupies in state government and the Commission's status for budget purposes. In early January, 1980, we gave you preliminary answers to your questions by telephone. This letter is to confirm the answers we gave you at that time.

I. The Commission's Place in State Government.

AS 31.05.005(a) states: "There is created as an independent quasi-judicial agency of the state the Alaska Oil and Gas Conservation Commission, composed of three commissioners appointed by the governor and confirmed by the legislature in joint session." The Commission came into existence on January 1, 1979, assuming the responsibilities and duties of the former Division of Oil and Gas Conservation in the Department of Natural Resources.

The question of the Commission's "place" in state government has two aspects. The first involves the basic doctrine that governmental powers are separated into three branches: executive, legislative and judicial. The doctrine is recognized in Alaska as the Alaska Constitution provides for a legislature (art. II), executive (art. III) and judiciary (art. IV). See Bradner v. Hammond, 553 P.2d 1 (Alaska 1976) at pp. 5-6 and cases cited.

The Commission, however, cannot easily be "placed" in one of the three branches because it exercises all three types of power. AS 31.05.030(c) provides that "[t]he Commission shall adopt rules, regulations and orders and take other appropriate action to carry out the purposes of this chapter [AS 31.05]." Under its mandate to "adopt rules [and] regulations," the commission takes part "in the legislative function of enacting laws governing the people of the state." Alaska State-Operated School System v. Mueller, 536 P.2d 99, 103 (Alaska 1975). It also has been stated that conservation commission orders "are legislative in character." Cities Services Gas Co. v. Peerless Oil & Gas Co., 220 P.2d 279, 291 (Okla.), aff'd 340 U.S. 179 (1950). Also see California Co. v. State Oil & Gas Bd., 27 So.2d 542 (Miss. 1946). The Commission also acts in a judicial capacity. In addition to the jurisdiction and authority to adopt "orders" under AS 31.05.030(c), the Commission is designated a "quasi-judicial agency of the state" in AS 31.05.005(a), and is given the power to hold hearings, AS 31.05.060(a), and subpoena witnesses. AS 31.05.070. Finally, under AS 31.05.030(c)'s mandate to "take other appropriate action to carry out the purposes of [AS 31.05]," the Commission performs the executive branch function of executing and putting into operation and effect the laws relating to oil and gas conservation. Cf. Alaska State-Operated School System v. Mueller, supra (school system falls within executive branch because function is to execute or put into operation and effect laws relating to public education).

The Commission's blended power makes it impossible to classify the Commission as distinctly executive, legislative or judicial. The difficulty in classifying the Commission was pointed out by Mr. Justice Jackson of the United States Supreme Court, dissenting in FTC v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U.S. 470, 487-488 (1952), as follows:

> [Regulatory agencies such as the Commission] have become a veritable fourth branch of the Government, which has deranged our three-branch legal theories as much as the concept of a fourth dimension unsettles our three-dimensional thinking. Courts have differed in assigning a place to the seemingly necessary bodies in our constitutional system. Administrative agencies have been called quasi-legislative, quasi-executive or quasi-judicial, as the occasion required, in order to validate their functions within the separation-of-powers scheme of the Constitution. The mere retreat to the qualifying "quasi" is implicit with confession that all recognized classifications have broken down, and "quasi" is a smooth cover which we draw over our confusion as we might use a counterpane to conceal a disordered bed.

Mr. Justice Jackson's "fourth branch of government" characterization clearly is a fiction, although it points out the difficulty of conceptually placing the Commissioner in one of these branches. However, in an administrative or bureaucratic sense, regulatory agencies like the Commission clearly are in the executive branch of government in Alaska. Ak. Const., art. III, §§ 22, 26. Many such agencies are explicitly created by the legislature in one of the principal executive departments. See e.g., AS 42.05.010 (Alaska Public Utilities Commission in Department of Commerce and Economic Development). On occassion, such placement is coupled with an express statement that the agency is independent from substantive control by that departme.t. See e.g., AS 14.40.913(b) (Alaska Commission on Post Secondary Education in Department of Education for administrative support services but not subject to direction of commissioner or state Board of Education). Still others are merely established without express assignment to a principal department of the executive branch. See e.g., AS 16.43.020(a) (Alaska Commercial Fisheries Entry Commission ". . . is established . . . as a regulatory and quasi-judicial agency of the state").

However, regardless of a regulatory agency's placement in one of the principal executive branch departments, and regardless of any statutory statement of independence, such an agency is not under the supervision of the executive.

In Boehl v. Sabre Jet Room, Inc., 349 P.2d 585, 588 (Alaska 1960), the Alaska Supreme Court stated that in art. III, §§ 22-26, "provision is made for creation by the legislature of regulatory agencies that are not under the supervision of the executive." (Footnote omitted; emphasis added.) In that case, the court was discussing the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, which "is established . . . within the Department of Revenue." AS 04.05.010(a).

There is no question regarding the Commission's independence, as AS 31.05.005(a) provides that the Commission "is created as an independent quasi-judicial agency of the state." (Emphasis added.) To ensure that the the Commission (assuming the duties of the former Division of Oil and Gas Conservation) no longer is considered a part of the Department of Natural Resources, the legislature expressly stated the relationship between the Commission and the Department of Natural Resources in AS 31.05.026. In subsections (a) and (b), that Department is given standing before the Commission, defined in AS 31.05.026(e) as "the same standing (no more or less) . . . as granted by law to any other proprietary interest." To ensure administrative independence from that Department, AS 31.05.026(d) provides:

> For budget and audit procedures and considerations, the Commission shall have the same standing as any other major state agency. Whenever practicable the Commission may enter into state inter-agency agreements concerning administrative, employee relations, and fiscal duties.

Summarizing, it is our opinion that the Commission is an independent regulatory state agency in terms of its program responsibilities and activities. While it is not responsible to (nor the responsibility of) the governor, it is administratively (i.e., bureaucratically) a part of the executive (as opposed to the legislative or judicial) branch of government.

II. Commission's Status for Budget Purposes.

This brings us to the second half of your opinion request, a determination of the Commission's "status" for budget purposes. We understand your question relates particularly to the procedures which must be followed in presenting the Commission's budget to the legislature and in enabling the Commission to draw on any resultant appropriations, and specifically whether the Commission is entitled to its own separate budget code.

AS 31.05.026(d) gives an explicit answer to this question: "For budget and audit procedures and considerations, the Commission shall have the same standing as any other major state agency." While that is a concise answer, making it clear that the Commission is not to be relegated to the subordinate status of a mere division or subdivision of one of the principal executive branch departments for budget purposes, it does not describe with any particularity the procedures which must be followed in establishing the Commission's budget, presenting it to the legislature, and drawing down any funds ultimately appropriated by the legislature to the Commission. The details of those procedures, as well as the bureaucratic responsibility for carrying them out, must be determined from other provisions of law.

Article IX, § 12 of the Alaska Constitution places responsibility on the governor to submit annually to the legislature "a budget for the next fiscal year setting forth all proposed expenditures and anticipated income of all departments, offices, and agencies of the State." (Emphasis added.) Implementing this section of the Constitution, AS 44.19.015 provides: "The governor shall direct the preparation and administration of the state budget." AS 37.07, the Executive Budget Act, establishes additional guidelines for preparation of the budget by the governor, and makes the Division of Budget and Management the state agency responsible for giving the governor and all state agencies the detailed assistance needed in preparing and submitting the annual budget. For example, AS 37.07.050(a) provides that each state agency, "on the date and in the form and content prescribed by the [D]ivision [of Budget and Management]," is to forward its proposed budget request and supporting documentation to that division and the Legislative Finance Division.

In preparing the budget, the governor has both constitutional and statutory power to organize his annual budget proposal in virtually any manner he chooses. Of course, the process does not end with submission of the annual budget. Article IX, § 13 of the Alaska Constitution provides in part: "No money shall be withdrawn from the treasury except in accordance with appropriations made by law." Statutory language implementing this constitutional provision establishes a budgetary system in which all appropriations are made by legislative act. AS 37.07.030, 37.07.070 and 37.07.100; see Municipality of Anchorage v. Frohne, 568 P.2d 3, 5 n. 5 (Alaska 1977). The legislature is not bound by the budget submitted by the governor; instead, "[t]he legislature shall consider the governor's proposed . . . programs and financial plans, evaluate alternatives to the plans, make program selections among the various alternatives and determine, subject to available revenues, the level of funding required to support authorized state services." AS 37.07.070 (in part).

Once the legislature has made an appropriation, each state agency has full authority to administer its program assignment and is responsible for its proper management "[e]xcept as limited by policy decisions of the governor, appropriations by the legislature, and other provisions of law." AS 37.07.080(a) (in part). The Division of Budget and Management has general oversight responsibility for program execution. AS 37.07.080(b) - 37.07.080(f). The governor is empowered to direct the withholding or reduction of appropriations to a state agency only if he determines that (1) the planned expenditures cannot be made due to factors outside the control of the state, or (2) the state's estimated receipts will be insufficient to match the proposed expenditures. AS 37.07.080(g). However, the Department of Administration is responsible for all state accounting, including development of the accounting system, maintaining accounting records, etc. AS 37.05.130-37.05.150.

Nothing in AS 31.05 specifies the manner in which the Commission's budget request is to be presented to or acted on by the legislature, nor is any particular accounting or funding mechanism specified. In the absence of such specification and under AS 37.05.320(2) and 37.07.120(1), the provisions of AS 37.05 and AS 37.07 respectively appear to apply to the Commission. Accordingly, the provisions of AS 37.07 control the Commission's budget submission, in effect giving the Division of Budget and Management the power to include the Commission's budget request in the overall budget submitted by the governor in whatever fashion the division deems appropriate. Similarly, under AS 37.05, the Department of Administration has the power to establish whatever accounts it deems appropriate to enable the Commission to draw on appropriations made by the legislature to

Natural Resources would be inadvisable. */ The initial bill establishing the Commission, HB 830, stated explicitly that "[i]t is the intent of the legislature that the state's regulatory responsibilities and the exercise of its police powers with respect to oil and gas development be vested in an independent regulatory commission, and that the exercise of these powers be separated in fact and appearance from the exercise of the state's power as owner or proprietor or oil and gas resources." (Emphasis added.) While the bill as finally enacted did not include this statment of legislative intent, it is clear from the several statutory references to independence and the explicit delineation of the relationship between the Commission and the Department of Natural Resources that the earlier statement accurately reflects the legislative intent underlying AS 31.05.

The basic problem seems to be that, in your view at least, the Division of Budget and Management and the Department of Administration are not honoring the spirit of the statutory language regarding independence. From a purely legal standpoint, we do not believe that those agencies,

*/ We note that the Commission's budget request currently appears under the Department of Natural Resources cover program in the budget submitted by the Governor, HB556. By memo dated February 7, 1980 to Ron Lehr, we have suggested that an appropriate amendment be prepared to move the Commission's request out of the Department of Natural Resources program. It is our understanding that this will be done.

having statutory responsibility to make the very decisions you complain of, can legally be compelled to change those decisions. We can only suggest that, in the spirit of comity and cooperation, you work directly with the Division of Budget and Management and the Department of Administration to reach some accommodation.

In addition, we suggest that you make yourself available to the legislature during its deliberations on the budget. As indicated, the legislature may make whatever changes in the governor's proposed budget it considers necessary.

We hope we have addressed your concerns. An obvious problem is that there is no legal answer to what is, at bottom, a political question. While we share your concerns regarding the appearance of independence for reasons of our own, we do not believe the Division of Budget and Management and the governor can be compelled to submit a proposed budget to the legislature in a form different from the form which they have determined is appropriate. Similarly, we do not believe the Department of Administration can be legally compelled to establish any particular system of accounts. If there is a solution to the problems you preceive, it lies in negotiation between the Commission and the Division of Budget and Management and the Department of Administration.

(b) The governor shall designate one member of the commission as chairman of the commission. The member designated shall serve as chairman for a term of two years, and may be designated chairman for successive two-year terms. (§ 1 ch 79 SLA 1973)

Sec. 16.43.030. Term of office; vacancy. (a) The members of the commission shall be appointed for terms of four years. Initial appointments shall be as follows: one member for two years. Initial appointments shall be as follows: one member for two years, one member for three years, and one member for four years. The governor may remove a commissioner from office for cause including but not limited to incompetence, neglect of duty, or misconduct in office. A commissioner, to be removed for cause, shall be given a copy of the charges against him and afforded an opportunity to be publicly heard in person or by counsel in his own defense upon not less than 10 days notice. If a commissioner is removed for cause, the governor shall file with the lieutenant governor a complete statement of all charges made against the commissioner and his findings based on the charges, together with a complete record of the proceedings.

(b) A vacancy on the commission shall be filled by appointment by the governor and the appointment shall be confirmed by the legislature in joint session. A member selected to fill a vacancy shall hold office for the balance of the full term for which his predecessor on the commission was appointed.

(c) A vacancy on the commission does not impair the authority of a quorum of commissioners to exercise all the powers and perform all the duties of the commission. (§ 1 ch 79 SLA 1973)

Sec. 16.43.040. Quorum. Two members of the commission constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, for the performance of a duty or for the exercise of a power of the commission. (§ 1 ch 79 SLA 1973)

Sec. 16.43.050. Qualifications. The commission shall consist of three members with a broad range of professional experience, none of whom has a vested economic interest in an interim-use permit, entry permit, commercial fishing vessel or gear, or in any fishery resource processing or marketing business. BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
Capitol Building, Juneau
August 19, 1980

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order at 1:35 p.m. The commission continued its discussion of the State Personnel Act begun at its meeting on Monday, August 18th.

AS 39.25.140 (Amendment of the personnel rules). Senator Ray pointed out the distinction between those rules governing the internal management of agencies and those rules which affect the public and should be considered matters of public policy. Rules which affect the public should be subject to public review before being adopted or amended. He suggested that subsection (e) be amended to limit the exemption from the Administrative Procedures Act to those rules affecting only the internal management of state agencies. A new subsection should be added requiring that those rules which affect the public must be enacted pursuant to the APA. He also directed the staff to ask the Attorney General's office and the legal staff of the Legislative Affairs Agency to prepare opinions on what legal authority the rules have.

Darlene Livermore pointed out that most of the collective bargaining agreements which the state has entered contain a clause which says that if there is a conflict between the contract terms and the Personnel Rules, then the contract terms govern. Only if the contract is silent on a subject do the Personnel Rules apply to employees who are members of collective bargaining units. Since almost all of the classified employees in the state are members of collective bargaining units, the Personnel Rules have a very limited application. Because of this, most state employees are probably not even aware that the state has Personnel Rules.

Senator Ray pointed out that the political climate is not necessarily favorable to the present public employee collective bargaining situation and that it is possible that the governor or some legislators will sponsor legislation to change the present system. Therefore, it is appropriate to be concerned about the personnel system.

The commission discussed the distinction between exempt, partially exempt and classified employees. There are about 500 employees in the partially exempt service and 5 employees in the classified service who are not members of collective bargaining units. Senator Ray asked for reasons for preserving both the partially exempt and exempt services. Bruce Cummings replied that partially exempt positions are appropriate where the work performed is essentially similar to other kinds of positions in the state. For example, the salary and job title and most of the duties of a clerk typist in the Office of the Governor are comparable to other clerk typists. However, it is appropriate for the Governor to be able to appoint and dismiss the employee with greater ease than if the position were covered by the protections of the classified service.

Positions are appropriately placed in the exempt service when the salaries which must be offered to attract skilled employees are not included in the state's pay plan, when the position is not expected to last long or requires unique responsibilities, and for the political appointments which the chief executive needs to be able to make for policy reasons.

The classified service provides salary integrity and protections from arbitrary hiring or firing decisions.

AS 39.25.150 (Scope of the rules). The commission discussed cleaning up the language of this section to delete material more appropriately included in the rules. Bruce Cummings pointed out that subsection (2) does not make provision for paying employees pursuant to a valid collective bargaining agreement, although the state has interpreted the language to permit paying employees based on pay plans adopted under union contracts. The commission agreed that language should be proposed to address this problem. Darlene Livermore added that while she agrees that the section should be cleaned up, she thinks it is important to preserve the statements of principles which are presently there, such as "like pay for like work."

On the question of crediting work experience as an alternative to formal education, and on the question of tests, Bruce Cummings explained that the laws requires employers to be able to demonstrate that any tests for employment are consistently able to predict that those who receive good scores are more likely to be successful employees than those who receive lower scores. The state is trying to develop validated tests, but it is a difficult process and there are only three employees in the division who are assigned to that project. The state has fewer than 15 tests which would be likely to withstand a challenge in court. Furthermore, the tests which the state is discarding for the validated tests have been, in fact, irrelevant. For example, there was an excellent accountant in the Division of Finance who was marked for promotion. He took the old exam five times and failed it each time. When the new, validated exam was ready he took it and was number one on the register.

Senator Ray pointed out that there is another problem - that of being sure that the job description is kept current so that the job classification actually reflects the duties of the position. The state needs a full scale desk audit program.

AS 39.25.153 (Personnel Rules for certain departments). Lynda McCurry reported that the personnel officers in the departments continue to believe that they can perform their jobs better if they are the employees of the departments in which they work rather than the employees of a centralized Division of Personnel. The Division of Personnel has recently begun to decentralize several personnel functions to the departmental personnel offices.

Bruce Cummings raised questions about subsection (b) which gives the departmental personnel officers authority to adopt regulations for those positions unique to their departments. At present those powers have not been exercised, but if they were, the state could find that there were significantly different working conditions for groups of employees based only on which department they worked for. Consistency is important, not only for morale of the employees but also because the state has to comply with the terms of the collective bargaining agreements it enters.

Delegating greater authority to the departmental personnel officers increases the importance of auditing. In the 1980 Report the commission recommended that annual audits be performed either by the Division of Personnel or by some other agency. Mr. Cummings has thought about the question and believes it would be better for a third party to perform the audit since the Division of Personnel needs to remain effective as a service agency, rather than being perceived in a policing role. The division would, of course, work closely with whoever did the audit to provide information and expertise as requested.

Senator Ray suggested that the subsection might be changed to enable departmental personnel officers to adopt only rules which relate to the internal management of the department for classes which are unique to the department.

Don Fisher raised the question of setting up a system for a periodic review of the Personnel Rules to insure that they accurately reflect the changing policies and procedures of the state. Senator Ray directed the staff to investigate the feasibility of doing so.

AS 39.25.155 (Vocational substitution program). Bruce Cummings pointed out that the positions which fall within the program have all been placed in the Local 71 bargaining unit. The program is therefore no longer used, since Local 71 members are hired through a union-operated hiring hall. The union system does not include the kinds of minimum qualifications which the state uses in evaluating applicants.

Lois Jund asked whether subsection (g) which establishes a one-year residency requirement was still legal. Mr. Cummings replied that it wasn't.

AS 39.25.160 (Prohibitions). Senator Ray suggested that subsection (e) should provide that partially exempt employees as well as classified employees are required to resign from their positions in the state service when they seek nomination or become candidates for state or national elective political office.

Bruce Cummings indicated that the Rules do require a partially exempt employee to resign, even though the statute does not.

AS 39.25.170 (Hearings and appeals). Senator Ray asked whether an employee could require that hearing be open to the public. Bruce Cummings replied that the Personnel Rules do give the employee this right. Senator Ray suggested amending the section.

AS 39.25.180 (Status of present employees). Senator Ray pointed out that the first three subsections of this section are obsolete.

AS 39.25.195-200 (Nonpermanent law). The law has not yet been in effect for a full year and therefore it is too early to consider whether it needs to be changed. The commission should review figures on positions which used to be temporary and are now seasonal as a result of the procedures created by the nonpermanent law at a later time.

AS 39.25.210 (Penalties). The commission will consider later the question of implementing a graduated penalty schedule, whether there should be administrative penalties set out in the statute and whether it is appropriate that being found guilty of a willful violation of the Rules leads to conviction of a misdemeanor.

AS 39.10.010 (Nepotism prohibited). The commission agreed that a stronger statute prohibiting nepotism should be prepared for its review.

Senator Ray directed the staff to prepare a work draft of a revision of the State Personnel Act with the help of the Legislative Affairs Agency legal division. The commission will meet when the draft has been completed, which should be in one month.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 2:55 p.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
Capitol Building, Juneau
August 18, 1980

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order at 10:00 a.m. He asked for testimony from the public. Julie Issac called the commission's attention to a problem that she is having with the state's retirement system.

Mrs. Issac retired in 1976, at which time the Retirement Division on four separate occasions had advised her that she was eligible for more than nine years of credited service with the state. As the result of an amendment to the laws three months after she retired, she was also told she would receive credit for an additional three years of military service. Her benefits were calculated on that basis. In 1979 Mrs. Issac received a letter from the Retirement Division advising that their original computations had been in error. She had been credited with 4½ years of service to which she was not entitled, part of which was for employment with the University of Alaska. Furthermore, she had received over $5000 in overpayments which would have to be paid back to the state. In the beginning of January, 1980, the division began reducing her retirement check by $100 per month to be credited towards the overpayment, in addition to having reduced her check because of the decrease in the years of credited service.

Mrs. Issac was advised that she could appeal the division's decision to the Retirement Board at their next meeting. She was unable to attend but a friend did read a letter to the board which preserved her appeal rights. Following that hearing, Mrs. Issac asked that the state waive collection of the debt. According to its interpretation of the statutes, the only ground upon which the division can waive repayment is hardship. The division therefore required that she submit information not only about her own financial situation but also about her husband's. Mrs. Issac questioned why her husband's information should be considered since it is her retirement credit which is under question.

Mrs. Issac added that the basis for denying her period of employment with the University of Alaska was a regulation adopted by the Retirement Division in 1978 - two years after she retired. Without credit for the University of Alaska employment, she needs an additional 13 months state employment in order to claim her territorial service.

Early in July, Mrs. Issac wrote to Commissioner Hudson asking for assistance in finding employment with the state so that she could work for the time needed to then receive credit for her territorial service. She was no longer eligible to be placed on the state's rehire lists because more than 2 years had elapsed since she left state employment. She has also asked the Governor's office for assistance in finding a position in which she can earn the necessary service credits. Mrs. Issac pointed out that she had been a loyal and responsible state employee but that she believes that the state has treated her shabbily and that she is becoming bitter.

Lois Jund stated that while she was at the Department of Health and Social Services, several people had talked with her about receiving similar notices from the Division of Retirement. Bruce Cummings explained that while he was working in the retirement division he noticed that there was a constant flow of files with errors. Therefore, the director of the division ordered a wholesale audit of all of the PERS and TRS records. Any with errors would be adjusted as of the date of the audit. Although he had no sure figures, Mr. Cummings estimated that 3 to 5% of the files contained errors. Because the retirement statutes require that any errors in benefits be corrected, the division does not have the authority to write off any overpayments which a retired person may have received. He suggested that the legislature consider giving the retirement boards authority to waive recoupment of overpayments in certain situations.

Duncan Fowler pointed out that Mrs. Issac's case raises two questions. First, whether the state ought to be prohibited from seeking repayment because she had based her retirement plans on information provided by the state and over 3 years had elapsed since then. The second problem is with the state's investigation into her husband's financial situation when considering whether to grant her a hardship waiver. Lois Jund pointed out that in the federal retirement system there is a statute of limitations and that they can only seek to correct errors which occurred within the past two years.

Dick Smith said that Mrs. Issace has two complaints against the state: being charged with an overpayment which resulted from the state's errors and being denied 4½ years of credited service. It appears that because the Retirement Board is considering her appeal, there can be no immediate appeal to the courts, although, on the basis of the information which she has provided it seems likely that she would be successful in court. He suggested that it would be appropriate to change the retirement statutes to provide for a statute of limitations against attempts by the division to collect for errors which it caused. Bruce Cummings added that since there are between 80 and 90 other employers who participate in PERS and TRS, any changes should be carefully drafted to apply only to the state's employees.

Mr. Smith added that the second part of Mrs. Issac's problems - denial of service credits for her work with the University of Alaska - is harder to remedy since the University is a separate entity according to the state constitution. The University voluntarily joined the retirement system in 1978, but before that work with the University did not apply to the state's retirement system.

Senator Ray suggested that there should also be some recourse for an employee who wanted to return to work for the state to build up retirement credits. Bruce Cummings explained that if there was a 2-year statute of limitations for asserting overpayments, then an employee would still have rehire rights and would therefore be entitled to preference for any vacancy in the job class from which she or he retired. Mrs. Issac also asked that if the commission sponsored any legislation that it be made retroactive to resolve her problems as well as helping other employees.

Senator Ray asked whether the commission approved sending a letter to the Retirement Board concerning the commission's suggestions for future legislation. There was no objection. Staff was directed to work with Deputy Commissioner Smith on a draft of the letter.

The commission began consideration of the memorandum on public inquiries.

Issue 1. Posting of promotional opportunities on bulletin boards. Darlene Livermore explained that APEA and PSEA take different approaches to protecting their members' interests in access to promotional opportunities.

Issue 2. Postsecondary Education Commission. Senator Ray pointed out that whether these positions should be in the exempt or classified service raises the ongoing question of ease of hiring versus protection of the rights of employees. This question will be discussed during the review of the State Personnel Act.

Issue 3. Delay in processing applications. Bruce Cummings explained that the division received some 5,500 applications in July, and that this volume has partly caused the delay. In addition, all of the processing is done manually at present. The division hopes that the number of applications will decrease in August. There has been no turnover in the division staff for the last three months, which should also help reduce the time to process applications. They are implementing a system of block scoring for all job classifications in which that is possible and also hoping to move toward an automated record keeping system. However, if the volume of applications continues to increase, it may not be possible to decrease the time.

Mr. Cummings explained some of his division's long-range plans for speeding up the application process. They are investigating a computerized automatic classification tracking system, but first the state job classification system has to be restructured. This system does not read applications, establish whether the minimum qualifications are met, nor does it score the examinations. However, the state is also investigating a self-administered training and experience rating system which appears to work with the clerical classes but not others. An additional problem in the classification computer system is that it is not designed to fit into the IBM equipment which the state presently uses and therefore there is a conversion problem.

Senator Ray moved that the commission write to the Commissioner of Administration asking him to outline what he thinks needs to be done to shorten the application process time to a more reasonable period. The motion passed without objection.

Issue 5. Geographical cost of living differentials. The commission noted that this is a matter which is addressed in the collective bargaining contracts.

Issue 6. Employee credits. Bruce Cummings explained that employee credits are designed to encourage retention and promotion of state employees and to discourage breaks in service. The system awards these extra points only to permanent classified employees. John Pugh pointed out that the system can work against employees who for family reasons are forced to move from one area of the state to another without having a new job lined up, although they intend to remain in state service if they can find employment. They lose their points as soon as they resign from one job, even though they may return to work within a short period of time. The same thing happens to classified employees who accept employment in the partially exempt or service. They lose their accumulated credits upon resigning from the classified position. Lois Jund suggested that the commission recommend that the state do away with the system of employee credits. Senator Ray proposed that the staff research the advantages and disadvantages of employee credits and other bonus point systems and report to the commission.

Senator Ray asked whether there were any statistics on the number of permanent seasonal positions created for positions which had been previously filled by temporary employees and how many nonpermanent positions there were. Bruce Cummings replied that it is not yet available. Senator Ray pointed out that the newspapers had reported 1100 new positions created by the budget but that in fact from the information presented to the Finance Committee he thought that there were no more than 300. The rest were already in existence because of Revised Programs which had been started before the new fiscal year or through converting CIP positions.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 11:42 for lunch.

The commission reconvened at 1:30 p.m. and began discussion of the Revision of the State Personnel Act memorandum. Only those sections in which there was discussion will be noted.

AS 39.25.040. Director of personnel. The staff was directed to find out what the statutes say about the position of the Director of Labor Relations and the actual duties of the director.

AS 39.25.060. Personnel board. Senator Ray pointed out that this section includes unnecessary language and should be cleaned up. He asked whether there was a need for the Personnel Board since most of their original functions are now performed through collective bargaining. Mr. Cummings replied that there are still five employees who are in the classified service but not members of any bargaining unit. The State Personnel Act and the Personnel Rules govern all of the terms and conditions of their employment. In addition, some of the members of the Confidential Employees Association have petitioned the Labor Relations Agency to be taken out of the CEA unit, which would add them to this group of five. The Personnel Board adopts the Personnel Rules and amendments and some body is needed to continue to do that. Senator Ray asked the staff to contact the Personnel Board to ask whether they should continue in operation.

AS 39.25.080. Public records. Mr. Cummings explained that the Personnel Rules which implement this section provide for confidentiality for personal information about state employees. The public does have access to information about who is a state employee, where he works, how much he is paid, and how long he has been employed. Confidential records include information about an employee's familyand performance evaluations, although any state supervisor who is considering hiring a present state employee does have access to the whole personal file. Every employee can see his entire file at any time and have copies of anything in the file. Secret files are forbidden.

Senator Ray suggested tha the statute be changed to specify which information is open to the public and which information is to be kept confidential rather than relying on the Personnel Rules to set those standards. Mr. Cummings mentioned that there are a number of conflicting laws on this subject already.

AS 39.25.110. Exempt service. The commission discussed the groups who are made members of the exempt service and agreed that the section should be recodified. Duncan Fowler suggested that the commission should hear from those entities which have employees in the exempt service to learn whether there are positions which should be transferred to the classified or partially exempt service. Senator Ray also directed the staff to inquire of Greg O'Claray whether there is still a reason for the employees of the ferry system to be in the exempt service.

AS 39.25.120. Partially exempt service. The commission discussed specific language changes which should be made to clean up this section. In addition, Duncan Fowler suggested that the commission should develop a policy statement for the exempt service comparable to the policy statement found in AS 39.25.130 concerning the partially exempt service. Mr. Cummings explained that positions in the partially exempt service are similar to other state jobs and therefore can be placed in the job classification plan and paid according to the pay plan but they are not susceptible to ordinary methods of recruitment or they require greater flexibility in hiring and dismissal than do positions in the classified service.

On the other hand, exempt service positions are not subject to either the state's classification plan or the pay plan. They are generally meant to be jobs which are so unique or of such short duration that it is more appropriate not to try to fit them into the system. The Division of Personnel makes no attempt to develop a job description for exempt positions, to classify them, or to set the salary for them. There is a need for both the exempt and the partially exempt service, in addition to the classified service. Lois Jund added that the state really has four services: the exempt, the partially exempt, the classified service which participates in collective bargaining with the state, and the classified service positions which are not unionized.

AS 39.25.130. Extension of partially exempt and classified services. Senator Ray suggested eliminating the reference to dates in this section.

AS 39.25.140. Amendment of personnel rules. Senator Ray suggested that the law should provide two methods for adoption of the Personnel Rules. Those Rules which affect the public policy should be adopted through the Administrative Procedures Act. Those Rules which are matters of internal management only, could be adopted without the procedural requirements of the APA.

The commission will meet to review a proposed draft of a revised State Personnel Act in September.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 3:45 p.m.

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order at 1:35 p.m. He asked for testimony from the public. Connor Sorenson addressed the commission on the issue of how the Division of Personnel computes credit for graduate study when evaluating applicants. The individual for whom he was concerned applied for a position which required 7 years of experience. The job announcement indicated that graduate study could be substituted for the experience on a year for year basis. Although the person had more than 7 years of graduate study, the Division of Personnel indicated that a formula must be applied to the education which resulted in education being worth less than the 7 years of experience. The division therefore found that the person did not qualify for the position.

Ken Kareen explained that the division does evaluate the amount of graduate study an applicant has on a semester or quarter hour basis. To be credited with one year of undergraduate study, an applicant must have either 28 semester hours or 45 quarter hours. To receive credit for one year of graduate study, an applicant must show 24 semester hours. Mr. Sorenson replied that this was not the policy which had reduced his friend's credited years of education.

Senator Ray asked Mr. Sorenson to provide the staff with additional information on the situation and directed the staff to find out whether there were any discrepancies and to establish what the division's practices are in rating the educational background of applicants.

The commission considered the second revised draft of the report and made changes. The commission voted without objection to release the report as amended.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Office Building, Juneau
November 28, 1979

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order and introduced Alexander "Bill" Gillespie, a Finance Officer employed by the Department of Education. Mr. Gillespie was invited to the meeting to address a complaint filed by Lillian Austin regarding a "not recommended for rehire" evaluation she received from the Department of Education.

Ms. Austin filed a complaint with the Human Rights Commission stating that: "I have applied and am eligible for Accounting Clerk II & III positions with Respondent (the State of Alaska), Tlingit & Haida Central Council, Sealaska, and the Bureau of Indian Affairs but have not been hired. I believe that my last evaluation by Respondent which rated me as unsatisfactory and not recommended for rehire is the reason that I am not being hired. I hereby certify that Respondent has violated AS 18.80.220 by unfairly providing me with an unsatisfactory evaluation. I have been employed in different capacities by Respondent for nine years and was rated as satisfactory until the last evaluation which occurred four months after a transfer. I was criticized for not getting along with co-workers, two Caucasian females; but to my knowledge the co-workers were not criticized for not getting along with me. These same co-workers also did not get along with an Oriental co-worker who eventually transferred to another department. I am an Alaska Native female."

Senator Ray stated that the commission is interested in receiving an explanation of the situation because a "black mark" such as not recommending for rehire is a very severe action that usually precludes any chance of being rehired - either in private or state employment.

Mr. Gillespie explained that he is familiar with Ms. Austin as a former employee of the Department of Education. Although he was not Ms. Austin's immediate supervisor, Mr. Gillespie believed that the recommendation had been phrased differently: Ms. Austin was recommended for rehire in a less complex job. Senator Ray responded that if this could be proven with documentation, the problem would be alleviated. Mr. Gillespie elaborated that this information could be found on Ms. Austin's evaluation in Department of Personnel files.

Senator Ray instructed the staff to obtain Ms. Austin's personnel file from the Department of Personnel. Terry Cramer explained that this would be possible if Ms. Austin signed an authorization form to release such confidential material. Senator Ray asked whether the personnel files could be altered. Mr. Gillespie replied that this would be highly unlikely once they are in the personnel system.

Senator Ray pointed out that Ms. Austin had supplied sworn testimony about her evaluation. He asked how she terminated her employment. Mr. Gillespie responded that one day, Ms. Austin became very agitated, told him that she was leaving, and walked out of the office, without supplying a letter of resignation.

Greg O'Claray asked whether Ms. Austin's evaluation was written after she left, or if it was discussed with her. Mr. Gillespie responded that it was written following her termination in 1978. She received a copy of the evaluation and could have discussed it with her supervisor, Merle Flemming, or could have placed a rebuttal in her personnel file.

Ken Kareen asked if there had been any difficulties or complaints about Ms. Austin prior to her termination. Mr. Gillespie replied that she had never spoken with him about any problems and, to his knowledge, had never spoken with anyone else. Mr. Kareen asked how her resignation was recorded on the final evaluation and personnel action. Mr. Gillespie did not recall. Mr. Kareen stated that an employee is normally expected to give 14 days notice, although the requirement can be waived.

Senator Ray again commented that the commission's concern is whether Ms. Austin was not recommended for rehire. Mr. Gillespie stated that everyone must fill out a termination form when leaving, and Ms. Austin's form must be in her personnel file. In order to receive her last paycheck, Ms. Austin would have had to return to the office, although she probably went to see the departmental personnel officer.

Senator Ray stated that the staff would contact Ms. Austin and investigate the situation. He added that black listing is a very drastic step to take against an individual, especially in Juneau. Ms. Austin must have had a good working relationship with someone after being employed by the state for nine years. Ms. Austin points out that her coworkers were never criticized for not getting along with her. Senator Ray concluded that it is easy to ignore this type of situation. He thanked Mr. Gillespie for attending the meeting, and Mr. Gillespie departed.

Senator Ray recessed for an executive conference, and the staff left the room.

Senator Ray called the meeting to order. Mr. O'Claray moved that the commission extend permanent employee benefits to the staff effective with the hiring of new personnel. There were no objections, and the motion passed.

The commission reviewed the Certification, Classification and Recruitment section of the draft report and corrected errors, made other changes, and added sections on review of recommendations against rehiring terminating state employees and on comprehensive classification guides.

The commission decided to meet next on Wednesday, December 12 at 1:30. Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 4:00.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
Capitol Building, Room 124, Juneau
October 17, 1979

MINUTES

Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order. He said that the commission's report to the legislature should contain recommendations on which there is a consensus. He added that each member is welcome to submit a minority report on any issue. The staff was directed to prepare a draft of the report to be reviewed by the commission at its next meeting.

Senator Ray asked if any conclusions had been drawn on the issue of the partially exempt and exempt services. He was advised that the Categories of Employees subcommittee is waiting for additional information on positions in the exempt service before making any recommendations.

Senator Ray asked whether there is evidence of problems with the nonpermanent law. Lynda McCurry stated that it will be difficult to implement the procedures set out in the law, but it will force action that should have been taken long ago. John Pugh added that it will alleviate the problem of by-passing the registers by hiring temporaries and will increase equal opportunity amongst applicants.

Senator Ray stated that there should be a section in the report addressing problems with maintaining open registers. He added that he hopes the commission will be able to make some recommendations on the issue. Pat Murphy pointed out that the Certification, Classification and Recruitment subcommittee voted in favor of recommending that the Division of Personnel receive additional funding for recruitment and examination functions. Senator Ray stated that the report should also recommend that departments request only needed positions in the budget submitted to the legislature. Legislators require more input from agencies on their operating needs.

Members discussed other topics, including: the veteran's preference system, conflicting roles of supervisors who are also union representatives, meeting equal employment opportunity goals, and providing aggrieved employees with protection from those implicated in grievances.

Senator Ray scheduled the next commission meeting for Thursday, November 15. He adjourned the meeting at 4:10.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE
STATE PERSONNEL ACT
Capitol Building, Juneau
October 5, 1979

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order and requested reports on subcommittee recommendations.

CATEGORIES OF EMPLOYEES SUBCOMMITTEE

The Categories of Employees subcommittee voted to recommend to the full commission that all personnel sections of the Alaska Statutes be codified into a cohesive form located in one chapter. The commission voted to pass the recommendation without objection.

Ken Kareen mentioned that the implementation of the nonpermanent law initially sponsored by the commission would be delayed in some areas, but all departments would be in compliance by January 1, 1980. Previous issues relating to temporary employees were reviewed. Senator Ray elaborated that nonpermanents will not receive fringe benefits, health insurance or retroactive credit for retirement under the law and that the commission should not address those issues.

On the topic of contracting, Senator Ray asked if the commission should recommend that rules be adopted to prohibit state employees or corporations composed of state employees from subcontracting with the state while employed by the state. Frank Flavin pointed out that this is already in the Personnel Rules and is considered a "conflict of interest". Complaints have been received about how state contracting is handled and the rule that bids do not have to be solicited on jobs costing less that $2,000. John Pugh pointed out that many of the problems have been cleared up. The state's practice of contracting for services which could be performed by state employees should be left to collective bargaining between the state and the employee unions. Senator Ray stated that he would provide the staff with additional information on the subject if he receives any more complaints.

The subcommittee requested the staff to study the exempt and partially exempt classes in the state and to present a list of those positions and their locations as soon as possible.

The issue of reviewing all vacant PCN's had been brought up during subcommittee discussion. One area of concern is the legislature's "red lining" of vacant positions that have not been filled because of classification and recruitment time delays. John Pugh added that there may be a number of vacant PCN's this year because of underfunding for personal services. Ken Kareen suggested that the problems may dwindle, because under the nonpermanent law, permanent position dollars cannot be used for hiring temporaries and therefore vacancies in permanent positions may be reduced.

CERTIFICATION, CLASSIFICATION & RECRUITMENT SUBCOMMITTEE

The Certification, Classification and Recruitment Subcommittee voted to recommend to the full commission that the Division of Personnel move towards broader classifications. Ken Kareen elaborated that the Division has been in the process of doing so since the beginning of the year. The commission voted in favor of recommending this to the Division.

Regarding the topic of closing recruitment, John Pugh stated that it was a difficult issue for the subcommittee. If there are no eligibles on registers willing to work in rural locations, appointing authorities must first work the registers and then request authority to recruit locally, which can be a time consuming process. Sandra Withers stated that there are complaints whether the registers are open or closed. To keep registers open, there must be sufficient staff to examine and test applicants in the Division of Personnel. Maintaining access to promotional lists in classes in which the registers are closed has been taken to arbitration. Ms. Withers stated that it would take another four staff members in the Division of Personnel to handle open recruitment at all times.

John Pugh suggested that the commission request that the legislature appropriate more funds to increase the Division's staff. Greg O'Claray concurred that additional staff should be funded and registers should remain open, giving the state the opportunity to choose from the most qualified when a vacancy opens. Sandra Withers pointed out that the new nonpermanent law will inundate the Division with applications from temporaries trying to get on registers for permanent positions, and nonpermanents will have to be hired off registers in accordance with the law. There was a general consensus that recruitment should remain open and that the Division of Personnel should be provided with additional staff funding.

Frank Flavin commented that there appears to be too much paper work involved in the application process and that one solution would be to reduce the submissions to one per applicant, regardless of the number of classes she or he was applying for. Ken Kareen responded that the Division has alleviated some problems by offering to give passing grades for lower classifications within a series to applicants who have passed an advanced level test. In many cases this is not possible because at various levels of classifications, different skills are required, and different tests must be used to evaluate those skills.

Applicants who want to be placed on registers by this method are placed in a single group. The division does not try to rank them with the applicants who were tested for the lower level position. Mr. Kareen elaborated that the Division has abolished 183 classes. by merging them with other similar classes or by eliminating them completely. There are now fewer than 1,300 classes in the state.

Mr. Flavin suggested that the commission design the ideal personnel system for 1981, burn everything in existence now and start out all over again. John Pugh asked if the Division has tried using a single application for multiple classifications. Ken Kareen explained that the Division had tried accepting up to five class titles on a single application. The number of positions applied for increased, and the staff still had to review each title separately. Staff members ended up making extra copies of applications themselves to avoid confusion. Sandra Withers elaborated on the ideal system, which would be computerized so that information could be keyed in, applications could be tracked, and classifications for which an individual qualified would print out. Ken Kareen commented that the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities has been working on a system for evaluating and classifying all the planner classes in the department. To date, the department has had to bring in consultants, psychologists and an expert in data processing, and they still don't have a workable system.

Senator Ray asked what role the Division of Budget and Management plays in the classification process. Sandra Withers replied that the Division of Personnel cannot work on a position before there is assurance that it has been funded. The Personnel Rules provide this method for monitoring compliance with legislative changes in the budget. The Division of Budget and Management certifies the availability of funds and has done so since the office was physically located in the Department of Administration. At that time it was an interdepartmental review. The subcommittee had directed the commission staff to invite representatives of the Budget and Management and Governor's office to attend its next meeting (October 11).

Returning to the topic of multiple applications, Ken Kareen commented that the Division of Personnel has come very close to having a production line set up in its offices to handle the large volume of applications. All applications for one classification are gathered together and evaluated at one time. Greg O'Claray observed that the public feels that there is too much paperwork and it doesn't perceive the requirements of the Division of Personnel as reasonable. Sue Greene asked how the Division should be perceived--as an employment agency or as a group of employees performing state functions. The Division's resources are restricted. Is it unreasonable to make things easier for state employees? How far should the Division go to please the public? Which is the top priority--performing services for the user departments or providing services to the public? There have been many changes in the time needed to perform evaluations of applications in the past few years, but there have been no increases in the number of staffing services. Ken Kareen stated that the state has more records than any private industry would dream of because of it is required to account for its actions.

Senator Ray scheduled the next commission meeting for Thursday October 11, and adjourned the meeting at 4:20.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE
STATE PERSONNEL ACT
September 26, 1979

I. ISSUES BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON WHICH NO SUBCOMMITTEE HAS ACTED:

At the February 24 meeting of the commission, the following motion was made and then tabled to be placed on the agenda of the next commission hearing:

AS39.25.153 should be amended to read as follows:

Section 39.25.153 Personnel Rules for Departments

(a) Each department shall appoint a personnel officer to be located within that department.

(b) The personnel officer specified in (a) of this Section shall adopt regulations providing for the activities specified in Secs. 39.25.150 (1)-(10), (13)-(18), (20), and (22) of this Chapter for those classes of employees which are not common to other departments. The determination as to the classes of employees which are common to the various departments shall be made pursuant to regulations adopted by the director.

(c) The personnel officers within the departments specified in (a) of this Section are subject to all provisions of this Chapter not in conflict with this Section.

(d) The Governor may exempt any department with (a) of this Section containing less than 200 employees from the provisions of this Section.

(e) All regulations adopted pursuant to this Section are subject to the Administrative Procedures Act (AS 44.62).

II. CLASSIFICATION, CERTIFICATION AND RECRUITMENT SUBCOMMITTEE

A. Issues on which the subcommittee has acted.

1. Creation of a department of employee relations. The full commission voted to sponsor legislation on this issue. See SB 256.

2. Adoption of the Personnel Rules in accordance with the requirements of the Administrative Procedures Act. This recommendation is accomplished by language in SB 256, which deletes the exemption from the requirements of the APA presently granted to the Personnel Rules. See Section 4, page 3, lines 26-29.

3. Use of a block scoring system for the evaluation of applicants. At the February 23 meeting of this subcommittee, members recommended that the full commission recommend that the state move away from a rule of five system towards a system of block scoring. The question of the number of blocks to use within the scoring system was left to the discretion of the Department of Administration.

B. Issues pending before the subcommittee.

1. Centralization or decentralization of personnel officers. What authority for independent action in classifying and reclassifying positions should the departmental personnel officers hold? Should they be granted greater authority in other areas? If the commission supports decentralization, what provisions should be made for departments whose personnel offices are not equipped to perform the extra work? What provision should be made for departments which abuse the added responsibility? Should personnel officers be employees of the departments in which they work, of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations, or of some other entity?

2. Classification of positions. If the problems in the classification process are not resolved by the subcommittee's recommendations on issue one above, are there other solutions to the length of time it takes to have a position classified?

3. Review of existing classifications. Should the Division of Personnel be asked to undertake a comprehensive study of the existing classifications in order to eliminate duplications, particularly in the number of classifications which appear to be unique to one department?

Should the division consolidate generally similar classifications into broader classifications, thereby reducing the number of classes within the state? On the other hand, should the classifications be made more specific (and the number of classes increased) so that the eligible lists are less likely to contain unqualified applicants? How would a change in the number of job classes affect the time it takes to classify new positions? What effect would increasing or decreasing the number of classifications have on the time it takes to certify eligibles? Should the state review its classes to insure effective career ladders for its employees? Are minimum qualifications reasonable?

4. Certification of eligibles. Should the commission address the topic of closing recruitment for some positions? If so, should the policy of limiting recruitment by closing the application periods for some positions continue? Should that policy be extended to other positions? Can the time for certifying eligibles to the registers be shortened by other methods?

5. Multiple applications for job series. Should the Division of Personnel continue to require a separate application for each job within a series? What effect on the time it takes to certify eligibles would changing the present policy have?

6. Validation of tests. Should the Division of Personnel be asked to make a greater effort to validate the written tests administered to applicants? If so, should tests which have not been validated continue to be used in the evaluation of applicants? Are additional funds necessary to meet this objective?

7. Veteran's preference system. Should the present system which gives veterans a five point bonus when when they apply for initial entry into state employment be changed?

8. Regional registers. Most of the state's eligibility registers are maintained on a state-wide basis, in conformance with PR 4 02.0. Should the registers be kept on a regional basis instead? Should local offices of the Division of Personnel located within the regions maintain those registers? Would this shorten the time required for an applicant to be certified and placed on a register?

9. Interviews for the top five interested applicants. Should either the Personnel Act or the Personnel Rules provide that each of the top five interested applicants for a position be offered an opportunity for a meaningful interview, either in person or by telephone (transportation to be at the applicant's expense)? If the commission chooses to support a system of block scoring for applicants, should interviews for each of the interested applicants within the top block be required? (See issue IIA3 above.)

10. Requiring that agencies fill authorized permanent positions with permanent employees only. If state agencies could not use nonpermanent employees to fill newly created positions, then the classification process would have to be made faster in order for the agencies to be able to meet legislative deadlines imposed at the same time that the positions were created. Forbidding the employment of nonpermanents would provide more accurate budget information, since nonpermanents could not be hired at lower-than-budgeted pay so that the departments "earned the difference" to be used for whatever purposes management saw fit. Should the commission address this issue?

11. Training. The staff will present a proposed position paper on training to the commission for discussion and review as soon as it is drafted.

12. Promotion and equal employment opportunity. Should the commission consider the effect of the state's policy favoring promotion on equal employment opportunity? If so, should some exception to the use of promotional registers be made for members of minority groups to increase their representation in advanced positions in the state?

13. Documentation procedures for work on tasks above class specifications. Should procedures be recommended to implement documentation of work in tasks above job class specifications?

14. Increasing the audit role of the Division of Personnel. The commission recommended in its report that the Division of Personnel increase its auditing role of departmental personnel practices in order to reduce abuses and, to accomplish that, that applicants be provided with the name of a person whose duty it is to investigate and resolve abuses. Should a new position be established to accomplish this goal?

15. Annual audits of the personnel system. Who should perform the audit; who should determine the scope; and, to whom should the auditors report?

16. Creating more effective disciplinary measures for violation of the Personnel Rules. Since the present system for disciplining state employees who violate the personnel rules (particularly those in supervisory roles whose actions as supervisors are improper) are not effective, should some other system be developed or can changes be made in the present system to make it effective?

17. Comprehensive revision of the State Personnel Act. The commission reported that the State Personnel Act is poorly structured. Should a comprehensive revision be undertaken, and if so, by whom?

18. Comprehensive revision of the Personnel Rules. Should a revision be undertaken, and if so, by whom?

III. MERIT SYSTEM/COLLECTIVE BARGAINING SUBCOMMITTEE

A. Issue on which the subcommittee has acted.

1. Creation of a Department of Employee Relations. See SB 256.

2. Exempting members of collective bargaining unions from the scope of the Personnel Rules. At the February 23 meeting, the subcommittee recommended that the commission introduce legislation to exempt members of collective bargaining units from the scope of the Personnel Rules. (See work draft attached.) The full commission has not considered this matter.

B. Issues pending before the subcommittee.

1. Role of the legislature in collective bargaining. Should the legislature's role in the bargaining process be changed? If so, should the legislature take part in bargaining sessions directly or through legislative committee, through a legislative employee, or by some other legislative entity; should the legislature have an opportunity to review and approve collective bargaining contracts before they become effective?

2. Should policy-making supervisors be excluded from collective bargaining rights?

3. Should Alaska adopt a management rights clause? If so, what rights should be reserved to management discretion?

4. Should the Public Employment Relations Act be amended to specify what effect collective bargaining agreements have on conflicting statutes?

5. Cost of living adjustments. Should cost of living adjustments be limited to lump sum increases, or should percentage increases be permitted, as is the present practice? Should the Public Employment Relations Act be amended to address this question?

6. Merit Increases. Should merit increases be in the form of a percentage increase in salary or in a one-time lump sum? If the latter, should the lump sum be constant (e.g. $500 or $1,000) or should it be a percentage of the employee's current salary? Who should decide which employees receive merit increases? What standards should apply? How should merit increases be funded? Should personal evaluations be performed on all employees or only on those performing above or below average?

7. Amplification of merit principles in the Public Employment Relations Act. What principles are essential to Alaska's concept of employment practices based on merit principles? Should these principles be set out in the state statutes?

8. Membership of the Labor Relations Agency, the Personnel Board and the Retirement Board. Should the statutory requirements that the membership on the LRA and the Retirement Board include the three members of the Personnel Board be changed?

9. Staff for the Labor Relations Agency. Should the Labor Relations Agency have a stafff of its own? If so, what positions should be created and should they be classified employees?

10. Methods of adopting the Personnel Rules and the departmental standard operating procedures. The Personnel Rules would have to be adopted in accordance with the Administrative Procedures Act if SB 256 is adopted in its present form. Should the system by which the departmental standard operating procedures be changed? If so, how?

IV. CATEGORY OF EMPLOYEES SUBCOMMITTEE

A. Issue on which the subcommittee has acted.

1. Temporary employees. (Now nonpermanent employees.) See Chapter 67, SLA, 1979. The statute does not address the issue of whether nonpermanents should be eligible to receive fringe benefits such as health insurance, earned leave or retirement benefits.

2. Support of retroactive credit towards retirement for work as a temporary when subsequently hired as a permanent employee. SR 26. This position was adopted at the January 26 meeting of the subcommittee.

3. Support for health insurance for temporary employees after 30 days in state service. See SB 22. This position was adopted by the subcommittee at the January 26 meeting.

4. At the February 23 meeting, the subcommittee decided to recommend to the commission that the Personnel Rules be adopted in conformance with the Administrative Procedures Act. Section 4, page 3, lines 26-29 of SB 256 accomplishes this.

B. Issues pending before the subcommittee.

1. State practices in obtaining services or goods by contract.

2. Scope of membership in the exempt and partially exempt service.

3. Investigation of PCN's which remain vacant for excessive lengths of time.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE
STATE PERSONNEL ACT
Public Hearing
Capitol Building, Juneau
September 12, 1979

MINUTES

Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, called the hearing to order and presented a telegram from Wasilla to commission members regarding complaints about the 120-day limit on temporary employment. It was decided by members that no action could be taken because of legislation passed on nonpermanent hire. Also presented was a letter from Catherine Hubbard concerning summer employment for students going to school outside of the state. (See attached copies of correspondence.) Don Fisher stated that the Division of Personnel permits submission of applications from students outside of the state, and therefore this shouldn't be a problem.

Senator Ray requested public testimony, and there being no response, brought up the topic of collective bargaining. Is the legislature going to continue giving the responsibility of negotiations to the Department of Administration? What will be the method for transmittal of agreements to the legislature for consideration? One proposed change involves requiring that all contracts expire on July 1. At some time prior to adjournment, there would be a deadline by which the Department of Administration and the unions would have to make a presentation to the legislature on negotiated agreements. The legislature would then have the option of approving or disapproving the contracts, and the unions would take whatever action they required to meet their interests.

Senator Ray asked whether the commission would like to make recommendations on the topic. Ken Spray responded that the problems recently encountered could be a catalyst for the establishment of a Department of Employee Relations. Senator Ray stated that the bill in question (SB256) did not receive affirmative action during the last session, and the consensus was that a separate department was unnecessary. However, the fiasco of the regular and special sessions may have changed some opinions. Mr. Spray suggested that the commission support its passage once again.

Senator Ray elaborated on the legislature's desire to take a more active role in the collective bargaining process. Alternatives under consideration include having the legislature directly responsible for the negotiations on behalf of the state, either through staff hired for that purpose or through a standing committee. However, when the legislature was responsible for negotiating with unions in the past, the outcome depended on which organization contributed the most to lobbying efforts. The system was unsuccessful at that time, and the legislature voted to opt out of direct involvement in negotiations. The current system was successful until this last year. He suggested that some legislators consider the added cost of the second and third years of multi-year contracts to be like paying for a "dead horse".

Senator Ray requested public testimony, and Maria Iverson, Leasing Officer with the Division of General Services and Supply, responded. On the topic of collective bargaining versus the merit system, Ms. Iverson stated that she believes employee unions are necessary to correct management neglect of employee needs and morale.

Ms. Iverson went on to discuss a public notice she had seen posted regarding a new APEA by-law giving the union president the right to fire members who do not honor picket lines. She said that other issues of concern to her and other state employees include the widespread discrimination and retaliation actions of management happening when employees speak out on issues. She added that there is a need for incentive programs to encourage talented state workers.

Senator Ray questioned the ability of any union to fire an individual for crossing a picket line. If this were true, management rights would be negated, as well as constitutional rights to express opinions. The state hires in accordance with the merit system, and a union has neither the right to hire nor fire employees. Senator Ray asked Pat Murphy to speak to the issue. Mr. Murphy stated that it was not true to his knowledge and that the notice may have been posted by someone other than an APEA representative. He added that in any case, by-laws have no control over an employee unless they are included in contract provisions.

Ms. Iverson stated that she has reviewed many laws on equal employment opportunity and human rights, and there is little in the Personnel Rules addressing those issues. She said provisions should be adopted to punish supervisors who willfully discriminate against women and minorities. Anyone found guilty of discrimination should be fired, be banned from further state employment for two years, and be made liable for punitive damages. She added that women in all levels of employment, from clerks to managers, are being discriminated against.

Senator Ray observed that complaints have been received stating that women are given advantages over men in the state. Frank Flavin responded that there is a lack of disciplinary actions to punish those who are proven to be discriminating against minorities. Taxpayers pay for rewards in discrimination cases, not the individuals responsible. The state needs to put a new emphasis on making those who discriminate illegally responsible for their actions.

Senator Ray pointed out that the greater percentage of personnel officers in the state are women, and they must therefore have control over discrimination in the hiring and firing of women. Lynda McCurry responded that personnel officers do not have authority to hire or fire. Ms. Iverson asserted that even top administrators often cannot do anything about discriminatory actions. Mr. Flavin pointed out that the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity only conciliates problems, and the Human Rights Commission cannot take disciplinary action. The only one who can take action is a supervisor or manager. Mr. Murphy commented that if it is proven that an individual in engaged in discriminatory practices, and the case can be substantiated, this would be just cause for dismissal under the present Personnel Rules. The method is available, but proving discrimination is difficult. Senator Ray suggested that the women on the commission form a subcommittee to look into the matter. Ms. Iverson expressed concern over the operation of the Word Processing Center. Ms. Greene responded that both the Commissioner of Administration and Sandra Withers are reviewing the operation of the center. Senator Ray stated that the operation is successful in one department and not in the other. Ms. Iverson added that she constantly finds errors in work done by the center and that production rates and quality are poor. Ms. Iverson also objects to the piece-rate standards set by the center and the lack of monetary rewards or incentives to perform well.

Senator Ray noted that the commission has discussed the merit system and the monetary aspects of merit increases. One remedy is to award merit increases in lump sums for outstanding service as decided by a board composed of members from various agencies. The commission is still reviewing the relationship between the merit system and collective bargaining. Ms. Greene pointed out that there is incentive award legislation still in committee, but that there is a question about whether funding will be provided.

Peggie Loken addressed the commission regarding her concerns on the merit system, and suggested that pending legislation on incentive awards may resolve many problems. Senator Ray commented that the legislature considers merit increases as a double-dip for state employees. He feels that if the merit system exists, it should be directed towards hiring practices and performance incentives and suggests that performance evaluations only be submitted on below or above average employees. Requests for increases could then be submitted to an incentive board for consideration. Ms. Loken asserted that there is great concern about granting increases to "chair warmers" for average service.

Ms. Loken stated that there are too many job classifications for the state to accomodate. The system can be circumvented in numerous ways. Senator Ray pointed out that this problem is not unique to Alaska. The commission has also heard testimony that the present classifications are too broad. Ms. Loken stated that some employees are getting paid for functions they are not performing. Individuals can also be performing tasks well above what they are being compensated for. As an example of this problem, Ms. Loken said that it might take two or three months to fill a supervisory position through registers, and when the position is filled, subordinates are responsible for training the supervisor. She also mentioned that examinations do not test for skills actually needed to perform jobs. Ms. Loken concluded that the system doesn't encourage productivity and wastes time and effort in hiring employees.

Senator Ray commented that III's on registers may be willing to accept II vacancies, but they are considered over-qualified and never notified of such vacancies. He added that there are many applicants applying for as many registers as possible, thus flooding the system. Ms. Loken commented that "running" the registers is already excessively time consuming. She added that she would never succeed in hiring an individual if she had to consider all applicants on registers in a job series. Senator Ray asked Ms. Loken if she felt that there are too many classifications that are inconsistent with actual job functions. As an example, Ms. Loken said that accountants are performing work that does not meet class specifications. Senator Ray suggested that the reason behind this is that in prior years, the need for an accountant was valid. Although the duties have changed, the position has not been reclassified and the agency has maintanined this classification to justify its existence to the legislature.

Ms. Greene explained that there is a backlog in reviews of classifications and job descriptions in the Division of Personnel. Mr. Spray commented that it is disturbing to have classifiers in the Classification and Pay Section downgrading positions in which they lack elemental knowledge of the work. He added that he has heard that the problem is in funding and that employees are being demoralized.

Mr. Flavin stated that improvements can be made in the certification area. One subcommittee came up with a recommendation to have block scoring for eligible lists. He added that there is no way to prove who is more qualified within a certain range or category, and the block scoring approach would allow supervisors more flexibility in hiring eligibles.

Cynthia Butler presented testimony on her experiences in trying to get a job in the state system as a double minority--black and female. She submitted her first applications almost a year ago and is now on 26 registers. Ms. Butler suggested that this might be evidence of problems with the system, and especially with having three sets of eligibility lists used in hiring applicants: open competitive, departmental and interdepartmental. The employer has the option of hiring from any of the three lists, which makes it difficult for new people to get into state service. Ms. Withers responded that departmental and interdepartmental promotional lists are composed of persons eligible for promotion and that they are a necessary part of the merit system.

Ms. Butler gave an example of an instance where a white male with a Bachelor's degree and a test score of 85 received a job she had interviewed for, despite the fact that her score was 95 and she has a Master's degree with honors from Yale University. Ms. Butler believes that the applicant was hired over her because he had been in Alaska some three months longer than she and was not female or black. Ms. Butler's response to this episode was a feeling of abuse and frustration. She stated that she was hoping that it would not be necessary to continue waging a "civil rights battle".

Ms. Butler continued, explaining that she is currently working two jobs as a part-time administrative assistant with the state and as a full-time nurse in the evenings. Between the two jobs, she said that she is still not making enough to live and that this is a sad commentary on the personnel system. Ms. Butler added that she had testified before the commission previously regarding her difficulties with the system.

Certification of eligibles and testing are two areas cited by Ms. Butler as needing attention. Her experiences indicate that the people who evaluate an applicant's experience respond to familiar "buzz words" and lack the technical knowledge of at least some fields of work to properly score an application. For one job classification for which she applied, she was given no credit for having a masters degree in that field, because the title of her academic program was not the commonly used title, which the evaluator would have recognized. The evaluator suggested that Ms. Butler write her resume and application for the layperson, rather than using technical terms. Ms. Butler suggested that an applicant should be able to explain qualifications for technical positions with appropriate technical terms. A resume should not have to be written at an eighth-grade level to be understood by the evaluators. She added that she has also found the state tests are not job related.

Mr. Flavin asked whether she had been offered interviews during her search for a job with the state. Ms. Butler replied that she had had one or two, but of rather unusual characther. The positions she applied for were in the health field. She was told that she would be interviewed by one doctor, but received an appointment with another. During her conversation with this second doctor, he asked her a number of "baiting" questions, and the placement of chairs in which they sat suggested that he was trying to intimidate her. He made comments such as "Natives have taken over too much" and "You have three strikes against you: you're a health planner and a Yalie". She did not reply in kind.

Ms. Butler's next encounter in interviewing for a job was an invitation to dinner at the house of the first doctor. He informed her that the department had hired someone else. These were the two interviews which she had during her search for employment with the state.

Ms. Withers pointed out that being on 26 eligible lists does not mean that there are vacancies in all of those classes. There is a low turnover rate in higher salary ranges, and often a list is open for recruitment because there are so few applicants on registers. She added that the Division of Personnel does publish lists of vacancies, but because of the extensive time and work required to create the list, it is difficult to keep current. Ms. Butler presented a different opinion: She believes that she has not been hired because she had not been in Alaska long enough and employers perceive her as being an aggressive and outspoken black female.

Pearl Ancheta, an employee with the Department of Health and Social Services, presented testimony concerning eligible lists and how they discriminate against minorities. She expressed concern over Personnel Rule 4 01.3, which states that the Director of the Division of Personnel may prepare an appropriate list for a vacancy for which there are not appropriate eligible lists from one or more existing related lists. Senator Ray responded that under the merit system, incentives must be given to employees to progress in state service. Ms. Ancheta questioned whether giving preferential treatment to employees was in accordance with equal employment opportunity philosophy. Senator Ray asserted that the EEO system must given equal opportunities to people applying for positions as well as to employees within the system.

Aaron Isaacs, Director of the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity, addressed the commission. He stated that the responsibility of the Division is not only for people in government, but for those trying to get into government employment. Senator Ray responded that competitive lists as well as interdepartmental lists provide equal opportunities. Mr. Flavin suggested that discrimination problems can be attributed to lack of disciplinary measures and the attitudes of people working registers; or, in other words, the "male and pale" syndrome. He stipulated that there is nothing wrong with the lists: Personnel responsibilities of providing equal employment opportunities are being shunted aside and not given proper emphasis. Senator Ray agreed that there is apparently a weakness in supervisory personnel.

Ms. Greene stated that there is a need to monitor supervisory decisions in the hiring process. The Division of Equal Employment Opportunity offers training to supervisors on its policies and procedures which is mandatory for some and optional for others. Mr. Spray commented that the commission should meet with the Chief of the Classification and Pay Section of the Division of Personnel.

Senator Ray pointed out that there is also a problem of supervisors not recommending employees for rehire and issuing unsatisfactory evaluations, as was the case with Charles Dockery in the Division of Data Processing. Again, Mr. Flavin suggested that these problems support an the establishment of a Department of Employee Relations.

Ms. Withers observed that the downgrading of positions is considered negatively, but it is a possibility when identifying actual work being performed by employees. Senator Ray suggested that desk audits may be needed for every position in the system. Ms. Butler asked if there is any way to make sure that any eligible minority person would be considered for any vacant position. In a recent survey taken in the Department of Health and Social Services, Ms. Butler found that only one minority person is employed above range 22, and only about 15% of all departmental employees are minorities.

Marie Darlin, a member of the Juneau Intergovernmental Training Council, testified regarding employee training in state government. (See attached statement.) The Council's main concern is providing education, training and employee development within government. The Council has been in operation since 1967, and with the help of a grant from the Civil Service Commission, some attempts have been made to develop training programs in the state.

Senator Ray asked whether supervisors have guidelines and why they need additional training. Ms. Darlin explained that people need only meet minimum qualifications to be hired, but they have to be trained in the special aspects of jobs. In addition, training teaches employees new developments in their fields and makes them more capable and efficient. She also pointed out that there are no state forms to record an employee's on-the-job or special training. There is training going on, but there is no criteria established to measure results. Senator Ray cited the Word Processing Center as an example of an agency that has established forms for recognition of training and on-the-job performance. Ms. Darlin commented that these are subjective performance evaluations from supervisors.

Senator Ray stated that when the legislature, and especially the Finance Committee, looks at a request for training funds, there is a feeling that an employee should be capable of performing job functions when hired without additional training. He suggested that the staff prepare a draft position paper on the issue of the value and need for training of state employees for submission to the legislature. The commission will review it at a future meeting.

Ms. Darlin stated that training has been addressed in labor agreements and affirmative action plans, but that is the only place where upward mobility and career ladders are addressed. Lynda McCurry suggested that a subcommittee investigate the need for training further. Mr. Isaacs pointed out that the nature of EEO's responsibility is to educate supervisors and managers on the ever-changing nature of laws and regulations. New people in state government must be informed of the technical aspects of equal employment opportunity.

Mr. Fisher added that supervisors in charge of programs have to continue necessary training, even without specific allocations in the budget. He cited data processing as a good example of a field where individuals must keep up-to-date on new aspects of the job. Mr. Flavin observed that the legislature creates training needs whenever they change the laws.

Mr. Spray stated that in hiring program managers, Wisconsin places more emphasis on management skills than on knowledge of actual job functions. Ms. Greene pointed out that the question is what should be expected from supervisors and what status is intended to be given to them: What do we ask of them and how much would be expected in the private sector without additional training and instruction? Don Fisher reiterated that employees need to remain current on new skills, concepts and duties.

In answer to a question on the Intergovernmental Training Council, Ms. Darlin stated that it is composed of state, local and federal agency staff. The objective of the Council is to coordinate training resources available in government agencies. There are not very many individuals responsible for training programs, and training is normally given low priority. Once a year, the Council tries to hold a session in cooperation with the Office of Personnel Management for people in government.

Senator Ray asked what the merit system provides for and what recommendations the commission should make regarding eligible lists: Should we recommend that all lists be open competitive in light of testimony heard? Ms. Withers responded that one merit principle states that employees shall be promoted and encouraged to perform above average. The Personnel Act incorporates the merit principles into the state personnel system. Senator Ray directed the staff to research the merit system and merit principles referred to in the Constitutional Convention in Alaska.

There being no further testimony, Senator Ray adjourned the hearing at 11:30.

- - - - - - - - - - -

Senator Ray called the afternoon session to order at 1:30 and asked if anyone wished to present testimony. There being no response, Senator Ray mentioned a vacancy on the commission and suggested inviting Lois Jund to join. There was unanimous consent.

On the issue of the role of the legislature in collective bargaining, Senator Ray invited discussion on the following recommendation:

1. All contracts should go into effect as of July 1.

2. Notice should be given to the legislature of the findings of the negotiating teams by March 15.

3. The legislature would have to act on the results of the negotiations within 30 days or by the end of the session, whichever came first. The system could provide either that a contract did not take effect unless approved by the legislature, or that the contract would become effective unless disapproved.

Ms. Greene suggested that the commission consider the administration's proposal making the monetary terms of the contract take effect as of July 1, but permit the other terms to take effect whenever the parties specified. Mr. Spray added that effective dates of contracts are a topic of negotiation. He also pointed out that this system may preclude reflection of the quarterly Consumer Price Index in the pay scales negotiated for state employees, since the CPI is figured on a calendar year rather than a fiscal year.

Mr. Spray added that if there was a sudden rise in inflation, state employees would suffer if the contracts did not provide for a pay scale which responded to the CPI. Senator Ray suggested that the legislature might be willing to approve lump sum cost-of-living increases based on figures from the previous quarter.

Mr. Flavin asked where these suggestions originated: Are they from the public or the legislature? He commented that they appear to originate from legislators, negotiators, labor organizations and the administration. Public testimony should be asked for.

Senator Ray noted other areas of legislative concern. One is the issue of cost-of-living adjustments. Many legislators feel that those increases should be in lump sums rather than in a percentage increase. In addition, there is a problem in the funding of multi-year contracts. Can one legislature bind another to continue appropriating money for the later years of a contract? The issue is being researched. Legislators are not in favor of retroactive contract terms and would prefer that all contracts take effect at the beginning of the fiscal year following legislative review.

Returning to the issue of the legislature's role in collective bargaining, Senator Ray listed other proposals which the commission might consider:

1. Return the responsibility of negotiations to the legislature, either through a legislative committee or through staff hired for that purpose.

2. Hire legislative staff to sit with the Department of Administration and the public employee unions in the bargaining process.

3. Require approval by the voters for each contract before it takes effect.

4. Do away with collective bargaining altogether.

5. Present neither recommendations nor proposed legislation on the issue.

6. Recommend that the legislature retain the present system.

Ms. Greene asked if there had been any commission meetings to receive public testimony on the issue. If not, she stated that she hoped the commission would clarify these options and solicit public opinion. Ms. Greene also stated that the administration is backing a proposal for monetary terms to become effective as of July 1, following contract negotiations. Mr. Murphy asked if the commission could work on the proposals from the administration as a starting point. Mr. Spray pointed out that the bill introduced by the House State Affairs Committee during the special session addressed these proposals.

Mr. Murphy moved: If it is the intention of the Blue Ribbon Commission to study changes in the Collective Bargaining Act to make it more compatible, that we consider the two bills proposed by the administration and the Ad Hoc Committee to use in work sessions and for public testimony to come up with a bill to make a change. A vote was taken, and the motion failed.

Ms. Greene suggested that the administration's proposals could be used as a springboard for the commission, but not to limit the discussion to those two. She was also unsure if the commission had decided to make any specific recommendations. Mr. Flavin stated that he was not in favor of presenting only two options to the public and moved that hearings be held on all of the options enumerated. Mr. Fisher spoke in favor of the motion.

Ms. Withers asked what the purpose of the Collective Bargaining subcommittee was and whether this would be within their functions. Senator Ray responded that the issue of collective bargaining is past the point of just subcommittee involvement. He stated that the legislature is appreciative of the commission's efforts and that we have been commended for our activities. The legislature has also made it abundantly clear that collective bargaining and the merit system are concerns we should address. The commission can go forward and create alternative recommendations to present to legislators who do not understand collective bargaining.

Mr. Spray asserted that the merit system should be the number one topic for commission consideration. Senator Ray replied that collective bargaining is the number one issue at the moment but that the merit system deserves attention as well. Ms. Withers pointed out that provisions for a merit system are contained in the state constitution. Senator Ray instructed the staff to research the meaning of the merit system as discussed at the Constitutional Convention.

Phil McMurry, an employee with the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities, presented testimony on the merit system. He stated that after being employed by the state for three years, he and others in the department believe that the merit system should be maintained. In his opinion, cost-of-living increases are important in keeping salaries in balance with inflation, and merit increases are supposed to provide incentives to increase employee productivity.

On the question of merit increases versus seniority ranking, Mr. McMurry stated that the seniority system does have merit. He approved of the way APEA's general government unit contract states that the merit increase and evaluation system will be modified to make it more meaningful to employees. He believes that the longer an individual remains in service, the greater her or his value. He added that a seniority system that rewards longevity makes sense, but increases should not be given without consideration of productivity. Senator Ray asked if Mr. McMurry believed that merit increases should be part of the collective bargaining process. Mr. McMurry replied that the more contained in contracts, the better. For example, Mr. McMurry suggested that discrimination should be addressed in contracts. Then, an individual would have access to grievance procedures in case of discriminatory actions, rather than having to file a complaint with the Human Rights Commission.

Senator Ray said that the biggest opposition to the merit increase system is due to the way the statutes are presently drafted. Increases are almost automatic and left to the supervisor's discretion. Labor organizations have argued that increases should be incentives to achieve high performance standards. Mr. McMurry asserted that there is a need for better procedures and rules for supervisors to follow. Currently, supervisors discuss performance standards with employees only when writing annual evaluations. This often causes frustration on the employee's behalf, especially when the evaluation is inconsistent with the employee's views. Senator Ray stated that evaluations should be made on either unsatisfactory or above average performance. If there was disagreement on an unsatisfactory evaluation, then the matter could be referred to a commission or board for final decision. Mr. McMurry again pointed out that the only time employees receive feedback from supervisors is at evaluation time. He feels there is a need for better communication between supervisors and employees.

Mr. McMurry stated that in some instances, supervisors must receive approval of evaluations written on subordinates from their supervisors. This often leads to rewritten evaluations and hard feelings. Ms. McCurry pointed out that this relates to the real concern of the lack of funding for both training and merit increases. She stated that personal satisfaction and communication between supervisors and subordinates is needed to improve morale. The present evaluation system has its drawbacks, and we should look at expansion of the system to make it more valuable. Ms. McCurry added that the probationary period could be used more effectively to weed out unsatisfactory performers and suggested that this, as well as consistent application of personnel rules, should be priorities of the commission.

Ms. Withers commented that three terms were being discussed: merit increases, the merit system and merit principles. One of the merit principles of the federal system is that there must be systematic job-related evaluations of employees. Mr. Fisher pointed out that as bad as the evaluation system is, it does require that the employer review and discuss employee performance. However, supervisors are not prepared to do so. Senator Ray asked how employees who are average performers should be provided for. He said that it is not a question of rewarding good employees or punishing bad, but a question of where to draw the line. Mr. Fisher responded that supervisors are inconsistent in evaluations and in making determinations as to who is and who isn't outstanding. Senator Ray again questioned where the line should be drawn. Ms. Withers commented that if this were to become a bargainable item, the legislature would have to grant negotiating authority to the administration.

Ms. Greene stated that there must be concrete criteria for evaluations, which means developing agreed-upon standards of employee performance. That entails skill development in evaluating performance and giving supervisors direction on how to evaluate. Mr. Flavin commented that we could do away with the evaluation forms because they have become automatic. Thus, the process that has changed from a management responsibility to a Personnel requirement could be fitted to each agency in accordance with management needs. This would create a need for stronger audits by the Division of Personnel for enforcement. Mr. Flavin believes that evaluation forms are worthless in most instances, and a personal memo to an employee would be an improvement. Senator Ray responded that judging by personal experiences, he believes communicating with employees is a much better approach. Mr. Spray commented that there should be some method to get away from the negative aspects of the evaluation process, such as supplying better instructions on how to use them. Ms. McCurry pointed out that the probationary period evaluation of employees takes a lot of time and consideration, and it doesn't have to be negative. It can be an effective means of presenting agency objectives and the performance standards expected of an employee. Mr. Flavin thought that beefing up the evaluation of supervisors could solve some problems.

Mr. McMurry told commission members that when his supervisor gets letters of commendation from agency users, he makes it a policy to show them to employees. He also writes personal comments on evaluations, which are very helpful and informative. Supervisors perceive evaluations as a yearly task, but keeping in touch with employees requires more than an annual form. Senator Ray asked if the commission wants to recommend that each state employee get a quarterly "report card". Ms. Withers responded that each employee should have a reasonable expectation of the status on their job, and supervisors are obligated to supply this information. A "report card" or another form is not the key. She stated that the answer is in establishing better communications between people. Senator Ray noted that supervisors are not taking that facet of their jobs into consideration. Mr. Flavin suggested that this was another argument substantiating the need for a Department of Employee Relations responsible for audit functions. Mr. Murphy concurred that there is a need to improve the personnel structure with a strong audit function.

Mr. Fisher pointed out that one of the items asked on evaluation forms is whether position descriptions are correct. In his experience, he has found P402's dating back to the 1960's. He asked why the descriptions are not more current if they are being reviewed annually. Ms. Greene responded that there is a backlog on classification revisions, and it is recognized as a problem. Ms. Withers added that the reason for the position description is to show what an employee is actually doing. It is assumed that supervisors filling out evaluations will inform the Division of Personnel of changes in duties. Senator Ray suggested that the scope of audits be defined. Mr. Fisher elaborated on the different types of audits: operational, program and personnel audits. The topic was left to future consideration.

On the topic of merit increases, Don Fisher said that they are currently a management prerogative. Mr. Murphy pointed out that other unions have chosen to incorporate merit increases into longevity bonus programs. He added that APEA's membership wants to maintain merit increases, and this may mean placing the Personnel Rules into contract provisions. Merit increases are currently addressed in the contract, but if the legislature decides that there is a conflict between bargaining and granting increases, the unions should be allowed the option of bargaining on increases. Mr. Murphy asserted that Pat Hunt, when serving on the commission, agreed that the Personnel Rule provisions should be included in contracts. Senator Ray commented that neither the administration nor the Governor believe the two are compatible. It is the commission's responsibility to explore the two and define the problems that exist.

Senator Ray pointed out that conditions during next year's legislative session are ripe for changes, due to it being an election year. He added that he would like the commission to receive recommendations from the public to present to the legislature. Mr. Murphy stated that during his last meeting with Pat Hunt, they discussed Oregon and New Hampshire statutes that exclude employees who are members of collective bargaining units from the scope of the Personnel Rules. The contracts must be consistent with merit principles. He said that this is an issue that will be negotiated. Senator Ray pointed out that there are many different positions on the subject in other states.

Mr. Flavin asked how members would like to plan the next meeting. Senator Ray responded that the staff would prepare a list of proposals made by subcommittees that have not yet been acted upon. The date was set for Friday, October 5. Subcommittees will meet prior to a full commission meeting.

Ms. McCurry appointed Doryce Eggleston, Personnel Officer in the Department of Public Safety, as her official alternate.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting.

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED, AS TEMPORARY EMPLOYEES ARE OPPOSED TO THE 120 DAY WORK LIMIT FOR FOR TEMPORARIES. WE FEEL WE SHOULD HAVE BEEN INFORMED OF THE MEETINGS HELD CONCERNING THIS REVISION BEFORE SEPTEMBER 10, THE DATE WE FIRST HEARD OF THEM. WE ARE CERTAIN THERE ARE OTHER TEMPORARY EMPLOYEES THAT HAVE NO KNOWLEDGE OF THIS MATTER AND WOULD BE OPPOSED IF THEY KNEW. WE FEEL THAT IF THIS REVISION GOES INTO EFFECT IT WILL, REQUIRE CONSTANT RETRAINING OF TEMPORARIES, REDUCE THE QUALITY OF TEMPORARIES WORKING FOR THE STATE, QUALIFIED PERSONS WHO WORK FOR THE STATE AS TEMPORARIES WILL BE FORCED TO SEEK FULL TIME EMPLOYMENT ELSEWHERE, REDUCE THE NUMBER OF ALASKANS WORKING FOR THE STATE, NO ONE CAN LIVE FOR A YEAR IN ALASKA ON FOUR MONTHS EMPLOYMENT, INCREASE UNEMPLOYMENT IN THE STATE, ENCOURAGE SUMMER WORKERS TO COME UP FROM THE LOWER 48. WE ALSO FEEL THAT IF THIS REVISION DOES GO THROUGH PROVISION SHOULD BE MADE FOR ADDITIONAL FOUR MONTH EXTENTIONS TO THE DEPARTMENTS THAT REQUIRE IT.

Senator Bill Ray, Chairman
Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act
Pouch AG, Mail Stop 0123
Juneau, Alaska 99811

Dear Senator Ray:

The purpose of this letter is to offer a couple suggestions concerning the hiring practices of the State of Alaska. The two suggestions that I have are student exemptions related to temporary hiring and that agencies respond to all job applications submitted to them.

Part b, sec. 39.25.195 of the proposed Act HCS CSSB 198, chapter 67 says that every appointment for state service shall be made from an applicable eligible list or dispatching register, except for emergencies. This law would eliminate college students seeking summer employment. The time required to get on the register is approximately six weeks, a goodly portion of the summer season. This law would discriminate against Alaskan students and the states future professionals. Because of this, I strongly recommend that students (especially college) be exempt from this law.

My second recommendation is that all state agencies respond to all job applications that they receive, even if a form letter is sent. When an individual applies for a job it takes time, effort, and money. Common courtesy dictates that a response is made, even from the government.

Although the Alaskan student is a minority, we are a part of Alaska's future, therefore, I urge you to consider my recommendations.

Sincerely,

C.A. Hubbard

JUNEAU INTERGOVERNMENTAL TRAINING COUNCIL

September 12, 1979

TO: The Blue Ribbon Commission

RE: Employee Development and Training

Our training council wishes to express to your group the following concerns:

State government seems to be giving less and less attention and priority to emplovee development and training.

A few years ago an attempt was made to develop and training system for the State and yet none of that was ever implemented.

Currently with no coordinated system for state training efforts:

1. Supervisors and Departments have no guidelines for their training efforts.
2. No recognition of training accomplished or attended is given when no permanent records are kept in the employee's file. (other than what a dept. might elect to do on their own)
3. There is no requirement that training being done by each dept. is being evaluated against any objectives or criteria to show value received.
4. Employees changing careers or jobs are provided no assurance that they will be given help in learning new methods or skills. If a greivance is filed by them should they be terminated, against what standard of performance has the supervisor evaluated them?

Training will still be done by the different departments, particularly those with federal funds and perhaps federal requirements that certain training be done, and the study done by Becky Smith for the Dept. of Education shows that much could be gained from a coordinated effort of State training and employee development.

This presentation is merely to call your attention to the fact that recognition of the important aspect of developing human resources is not spoken to anywhere in the State Personnel rules and regulations, except in the state Affirmative Action Program, and in the negotiated labor agreements.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION
March 13, 1979

MINUTES

Senator Ray called the meeting to order.

The commission considered the draft bill on the hiring of non-permanent employees.

Mr. Humphreys explained that the non-permanent bill made four changes from the draft temporary hiring bill: A language change, replacing the word temporary with the word non-permanent; changes in the intent section; addition in section 4 (b), page 2, lines 4 and 5, of the words "dispatching register"; and addition of provisions for a program or project employee, section 4 (c)(4), page 2, lines 21 through 23; and a definition of program or project employee, page 4, line 26 through page 5, line 2.

Mr. Spray objected to the language appearing on page 2, line 5, which appeared to indicate that the director could waive the union contract requirement that temporaries be hired through a dispatching register.

Mr. Hunt pointed out that according to the memorandum prepared by Ken Rosenstein, dated March 9, 1979, this statute would not bind future collective bargaining agreements without the addition of a statement of intent. Mr. Humphreys agreed that according to the memorandum, the safest course to follow if the commission wished to bind all emp'oyees would be to include a section spelling out that the bill applied to collective bargaining unit members.

Mr. Murphy moved that the commission sponsor the bill. Mr. Spray objected for the reasons stated above. There were no further objections.

The commission considered the draft of the Department of Employee Relations bill.

Mr. Hunt stated that he was concerned about requiring that the Personnel Rules be adopted under the Administrative Procedures Act given the small group of people to whom the Rules apply. He has heard from several sources that it takes six months to process rules through the A.P.A. Mr. Rosenstein's opinion makes it clear that the rules do not apply to those covered by collective bargaining.

Mr. Murphy stated that the Rules do apply to the employees his union represents. Perhaps 50% of the work life of those employees is covered by the Rules. He objected to the commission adopting the position taken by the memorandum without further research on the matter.

Senator Ray informed the commission that he opposed the introduction of this bill during the current session.

Mr. Flavin objected to the present draft as not what was intended by the commission's vote taken at the February 24 meeting. The bill should simply repeal those references to the adoption of the Personnel Rules being exempt from the Administrative Procedures Act.

Senator Ray asked whether the Rules were required to be adopted under the A.P.A. at present. Mr. Flavin replied that they are not.

Since the commission voted at the February 24 meeting to sponsor this bill, no further vote was taken.

The commission discussed the preliminary draft of the report to the legislature. Changes were made. The commission agreed to continue the meeting on Wednesday, March 14, to conclude its review of the draft report.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting.

March 14, 1979

Senator Ray called the meeting to order.

The commission continued to review the draft report to legislature.

The review was concluded, and Greg O'Claray moved and asked unanimous consent that the report as amended be released. The motion carried without objection.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION
February 24, 1979

MINUTES

Don Fisher chaired in the absence of Senator Ray. A quorom was not present, and the Commission met in work session until additional commission members arrived. There was discussion of whether the time limit on temporaries should be shortened from 6 months to 120 days.

Ken Kareen, alternate for Pat Hunt, arrived and a quorum was present. Mr. Fisher called the meeting to order.

Niel Thomas moved that the commission amend the Temporary Hire bill, page 1, line 26, by adding the words "or dispatching register" between the words "eligible list" and the words "unless in exceptional circumstances". A vote was taken. Seven members were in favor, one abstained. The motion failed.

Frank Flavin moved that a sentence be added to page 3, line 2, subsection (g) to read: "No work assignment may be performed by a temporary employee for more than 120 calendar days in a 12-month period." A vote was taken. Six members were in favor, one opposed and one abstained. The motion failed. Mr. Spray served notice of reconsideration.

Mr. Fisher called a recess. The meeting reconvened.

Mr. Flavin asked that the staff prepare a minority report to reflect the views of those in favor of the actions taken today. Mr. Fisher proposed that the staff be directed to prepare the minority report. Mr. Spray objected. Mr. Thomas stated that the commission should make a record and that at a later meeting, the amendments not adopted in the present meeting could be proposed.

Mr. Flavin moved that the draft bill be amended to add a requirement to subsection (h), page 3, line 7 through 13, that the director report to the legislature each year on the hiring of emergency employees as well as on temporary employees. A vote was taken. Eight members were in favor, none opposed. The motion carried.

Mr. Fisher called a break. The meeting was reconvened.

Pat Murphy moved that the commission adopt the draft bill on temporary hire as amended. A vote was taken. Seven members were in favor, and one opposed. The motion failed.

Mr. Murphy moved that members in favor of the draft bill sign the draft copy prepared by Ken Humphreys, containing amendments adopted, in order to place the votes on the record. A roll call vote was taken. Don Fisher, Ken Kareen, Frank Flavin, Lynda McCurry, Pat Murphy, Niel Thomas and John Pugh were in favor. Ken Spray opposed, and Ken Humphreys abstained. The motion failed.

Mr. Flavin moved that the commission recommend to the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations that Section 2 (a) through (e) of the draft bill, adding new sections to the law relating to the methods for hiring temporary employees, be adopted as Personnel Rules by the Personnel Board. A vote was taken. Seven were in favor, two abstained. The motion failed.

Mr. Flavin moved that the commission recommend to the legislature that a Department of Employee Relations be established. A vote was taken. Eight were in favor, none opposed. The motion carried.

Mr. Flavin moved that the Department of Employee Relations to be proposed to the legislature be structured as in the draft bill, without language relating to exemption from the Administrative Procedures Act, which appears on page 3, lines 13 though 16 and page 6, lines 16 through 19. A notation should be made in the report of the commission to the legislature that the section on decentralization of personnel functions, AS39.25.153 (which appears on page 6, lines 8 through 19), is amended only to make the necessary nomenclature changes and that the commission is still considering what course to recommend on the question of centralization or decentralization. Pat Murphy moved to amend the motion to include the language adopted at the meeting on February 23, 1979, relating to the experience required of the Commissioner of the Department. Mr. Flavin agreed to include this amendment in his motion. A vote was taken. Eight members were in favor, one abstained. The motion carried.

The report should include a statement recommending that the legislature consider moving other closely related divisions from the Department of Administration into the Department of Employee Relations.

Mr. Murphy moved to amend the motion to require that the commissioner of employee relations have a total of at least three years of experience in the fields of labor relations and personnel administration. Mr. Spray stated that five years should be the minimum. Mr. Humphreys suggested that the language concerning the experience of the commissioner would be interpreted broadly by the governor making the appointment. Mr. Murphy withdrew his amendment.

Mr. Flavin moved that AS39.25.153 be amended to read as follows:

Section 39.25.153 Personnel Rules for Departments

(a) Each department shall appoint a personnel officer to be located within that department.

(b) The personnel officer specified in (a) of this Section shall adopt regulations providing for the activities specified in Secs. 39.25.150 (1)-(10), (13)-(18), (20), and (22) of this Chapter for those classes of employees which are not common to other departments. The determination as to the classes of employees which are common to the various departments shall be made pursuant to regulations adopted by the director.

(c) The personnel officers within the departments specified in (a) of this Section are subject to all provisions of this Chapter not in conflict with this Section.

(d) The Governor may exempt any department with (a) of this Section containing less than 200 employees from the provisions of this Section.

(e) All regulations adopted pursuant to this Section are subject to the Administrative Procedures Act (AS 44.62).

Mr. Thomas moved to table the motion and place it as the first item on the agenda for the next commission meeting. A vote was taken. Nine members were in favor, none opposed. The motion carried.

Lynda McCurry moved that the commission try to resolve all the questions which are before it by June 30, 1979.

Mr. Spray spoke against the motion. He stated that he could not imagine that the commission could reach an adequate resolution of the issues before it in that time. Most of the commission's time so far has been spent in public hearings, receiving and digesting information presented to it. He believed that it is necessary to continue the work of the commission into the next legislative session. He indicated that he believes that the legislature will resolve the issues on finances, and the budget and adjourn within 120 days, especially given the mood of the Senate.

Mr. Thomas explained that the motion would give the commission a goal to try to resolve the questions before it. The commission has considered the major concepts which it confronts. Four months remain in which the commission can work on its recommendations on the remaining issues. The comssion has only been meeting for a period of four months, so that may be adequate time to resolve the rest of its work.

Mr. Flavin moved to amend the motion to read that the commission does not seek funding beyond June 30, 1979. Ms. McCurry accepted the amendment. A roll call vote was taken. Don Fisher,

Frank Flavin, Ken Kareen (voting as alternate for Pat Hunt), Lynda McCurry, Pat Murphy, John Pugh and Niel Thomas were in favor. Ken Spray opposed, and Ken Humphreys abstained. The motion failed.

Mr. Spray requested the privilege of the floor. He stated that in regard to the employee relation bill, special interests have been reflected in many issues. The same courtesy has not been extended to the issue of collective bargaining negotiations. Special concerns and interests of Local 71 have been ignored, with preference being given to APEA.

John Pugh responded that Local 71 has a maximum of 1,500 members, whereas APEA represents 10,000 employees. He stated that Mr. Spray received more than his share of time and courtesy from the commission.

Mr. Spray pointed out that Local 71 is affiliated with AFL-CIO in the organized labor movement which represents more than 10,000 employees. The AFL-CIO was instrumental in the enactment of the Public Employment Relations Act.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION
February 23, 1979

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order. He proceeded to recommend that the commission submit its report outlining the problems which have been identified thus far and as Wisconsin did, wait until an entire legislative package is ready before proposing any substantial changes. He pointed out that the sentiment in the Finance Committees of the legislature may cause trouble for any measures with sizeable fiscal notes attached.

The commission discussed the temporary hire draft bill. Senator Ray recommended adding a provision for a program or project employee. Project employees should receive medical and leave benefits but not be eligible for retirement benefits. He stated that the bill, as drafted, is not ready for introduction to the legislative process.

Frank Flavin suggested changing the language in subsection (g), page 3, line 2, to read at the beginning of that section: "No position may be occupied by a temporary employee..."

Ken Spray suggested three amendments:

In section (b), page 1, line 27, add between the words "eligible list" and "unless" the words "or dispatching register".

On page 3, line 28, to subsection (2), add the words "unless otherwise provided for in a collective bargaining agreement" between the word "means" and the words "an employee".

On page 3, line 2, section (g), Mr. Spray stated that he objected to the inclusion of that section in the draft bill entirely on the grounds that the matter should be left to the arena of collective bargaining.

Senator Ray suggested that the term "temporary" be eliminated, using the term "casual" as a substitute. Ken Spray commented that in Local 71's contract, casual employees are limited to 15 days. Senator Ray offered a word of caution that there are many individuals dependent upon temporary employment who must be taken into consideration. By eliminating temporary employment, budgets may be cut, forcing many employees back into the job market. Representative McKinnon commented that one problem encountered in the House is the reluctance of the Finance Committee members to turn away from temporary hire because of the additional funding demand this would create for permanent PCN's.

Frank Flavin moved that the bill be passed out of the commission and introduced in the legislature under the commission's sponsorship. Pat Murphy moved to table Mr. Flavin's motion. The motion was tabled.

The commission discussed the contents of the report to the legislature. The report should include a discussion of the tasks of the subcommittees, the problems identified, and indication of proposed solutions which the commission is considering. The Issue Summaries should provide the basis of the discussion. It is important to explain to the legislature the nature of the problems which the commission has examined. The report should indicate that the commission is requesting that its existence be extended so that it may fully address the issues presented in the report. There was a general concensus that the report be drafted for presentation to the legislature.

The commission decided to meet on Saturday, February 24, in the conference room of the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION
February 15, 1979

MINUTES

Representative Buchholdt, in the absence of Senator Ray, chaired the hearing. She invited public testimony.

PUBLIC TESTIMONY

Lois Jund, retired Deputy Commissioner of the Department of Health and Social Services, was the first speaker. She introduced her remarks to the Commission by noting that the staff of the Division of Personnel has a very tough job to do. They are subject to many pressures from many sources and are understaffed for the job they must do in a centralized system of personnel administration. The state personnel system can be improved--and must be.

Ms. Jund gave a brief summary of her own background. From 1948 to 1956, she was the personnel officer for the Alaska Territorial Health Department, which was then operated under the merit system of personnel administration because it was a federal program. From 1957 to 1958, she was a management consultant with the U.S. Public Health Service in personnel and other areas in Region VII and provided services for five states in that region.

From 1962 to 1974, Ms. Jund had overall responsibility for management of the Artic Health Research Center, a federal installation, including personnel administration. In that capacity, she had appointment authority through the level of G.S. 15 and classification authority to the G.S. 11 level. She became familiar with the state personnel system when, in 1974, she became Assistant Chief of the Division of Public Health of the state. From 1975 to her retirement in 1978, she held the positon of Deputy Commissioner in the Department of Health and Social Services.

There are four major areas of the state's personnel system which Ms. Jund addressed: the classification process, the examination process, the recruitment process, and one very serious aspect of the career service. These areas are the major problem areas as she sees them.

1. CLASSIFICATION

Ms. Jund noted that this is one of the state's greatest problem areas. There is a great disparity in pay ranges based on the level of responsibility, both within and between departments. She is a firm believer in equal pay for equal work. In the state personnel system the only consistency is inconsistency. She gave examples of this problem.

A Clerk IV, which is not a high level position, was handling the entire responsibility for a state-wide program, supervising a tremendous staff including two regional offices. She had this responsibility for many years. In 1974, after great effort, she was finally given the position of Administrative Assistant I. Administrative Assistant III's were heading programs with none of the responsibility that this individual had. She is still responsible for the entire program, and is presently classified as an Administrative Assistant II.

There is disparity of salaries between PHN's and Sanitarians within the same department, and between PHN's and Physician's Assistants. PHN's work much more on their own, with tremendous responsibility, yet are several pay ranges lower. There is also disparity between sanitarians working for the Department of Health and Social Services and those working for the Department of Environmental Conservation. In fact, the Department of Environmental Conservation is recruiting sanitarians away from the Division of Public Health. There are cases where an Administrative Officer I heads up a large project in the same department where an Administrative Officer III has few responsibilities.

The cause of this disparity is that the Division of Personnel has no standard classification guide, as does the federal government. In the federal system, the level of responsibility is equated with the range of the job. This would go a long way to do away with this tremendous disparity throughout the state government.

The Division of Personnel, in some instances, analyzes jobs and compares them with similar positions in other states. They fail to realize that--for example--comparing positions in California with positions in Alaska is like comparing apples to oranges. California has a wide-spread county government system, with responsibility for service delivery. A person here would be responsible for a state-wide program.

Few desk audits are presently done, and cannot be done without the assistance of a classification guide. After four years with the state government, Ms. Jund could not recall a single desk audit being done, so how can the Division of Personnel ascertain whether proper levels were set for positions?

Ms. Jund made the following recommendation, recognizing that it would cost money initially, but would save a lot of money in the long run: The Division of Personnel should prepare a standard classification guide immediately, equating levels of responsibility with qualifications and pay ranges. This then would permit a greater use of desk audits and would insure that personnel is functioning at its proper level. However, staffing in the Division of Personnel is insufficient to accomplish this project, but there are many things they could use to initiate such a classification guide.

The second greatest problem in the state personnel system is the inordinate amount of time it takes to classify a position once it has been authorized by the legislature. This leads to positions which desperately need to be filled being left vacant; it leads to the hiring of temporaries; and it leads to tremendous frustration on the part of administrators trying to run programs in the state. Ms. Jund has often heard legislators say that since you didn't fill a position, you evidently didn't need it. That isn't true. The position could not be filled.

One of the causes of the inordinate time to classify positions is that all positions must have individualized position descriptions. This is true in the federal government as well. With few exceptions, all positions must be classified by the Division of Personnel in the Department of Administration. One department may have its own classification authority. Unless pressure is brought to bear (and it is brought to bear by commissioners, by legislators, and by the office of the governor), the position will wait the normal classification process, no matter what the urgency of filling the position.

Ms. Jund recommended that we use standard position descriptions in the state. This would require the existence of a standard classification guide. For example, a Clerk Typist II in one department does practiclaly the same thing as a Clerk Typist II in another department, yet each one nas to have an individual position description. PHN I's do the same work, wherever they are stationed. The few parts of a job which might be different could be noted on a cover sheet attached to the standard position description. This would cut down the classification time. The federal government has implemented this practice effectively for some clerical positions and for accountant positions.

There should be a decentralization of classification authority with positions and funding provided. Some departments have the authority to do so now; however, few take advantage of this authority because they do not have the positions and funding. This decentralization would be for large agencies only and for professional positions in those agencies, using the standard classification guide. A job analysis should be required to be written for each job to be classified in the department, and sent to the Division of Personnel. They would then assume their proper role of setting standards and monitoring departmental practices. This would call for a greater use of the desk audit mechanism of the Division of Personnel to insure proper alignment of positions.

The next point may be controversial. Qualifications are too low in many instances, due to substitutions, to get the job done. Ms. Jund stated that she firmly supports the principles of equal employment opportunity and believes that substitutions should be permitted for entry-level positions, up to and including sub-professional level positions. At the professional level, substitutions should not be required, as they are now by the Division of Personnel.

Ms. Jund gave an example of how ludicrous this can become. She referred to a position that she held as Assistant Director in the Division of Public Health. The job description calls for someone with a college degree, with two years of graduate study in public health administration or a closely related field, plus five years of administrative experience, one of which must be at the level of Administrative Officer I with the State of Alaska or an equivalent position elsewhere and one of which must be in public health. Those requirements are reasonable, and a person with those qualifications could do the job. However, additional experience may be substituted for the requirements of college education on a year-for-year basis.

The result (and this did happen on the register) was that an individual with eleven years of administrative experience, with only one year in public health at any level and one year in a position comparable to Administrative Officer I, could be placed on the register. The minimum qualification of eleven years of administrative experience did not specify at what level this experience must be. Many applicants qualified for the register who could not possibly perform the job functions.

Ms. Jund recommended that substitutions either not be required for professional positions or that they be permitted only to the extent that would be realistic.

2. EXAMINATION PROCESS

The staff in the Division of Personnel responsible for rating the training and experience of applicants is not always sufficiently knowledgeable of the field to properly rate an application. This is understandable, given the large number of jobs with a wide variety of qualifications. This leads to well-qualified individuals being rated ineligible and conversely, poorly-qualified individuals may receive high ratings because of the way an application is written.

As an example, Ms. Jund told of her own experience in filling a position for a Health Facilities Surveyor in Life Safety. They had located an individual who was fully qualified and urged him to get on the register. They were aghast to learn from the Division of Personnel that the person was not qualified because the examiner did not understand that being a fire inspector for an insurance company fully qualified the applicant as a life safety surveyor. That is the type of experience that they really needed. They did manage to get the situation straightened out.

Ms. Jund suggested that professional review panels composed of professionals serving in a volunteer capacity be created to rate applicants for professional positions. The data processing field is an example of the areas where this is most needed. She witnessed its effective use during the time she served on the U.S. Civil Service panel and helped to rate applicants in the professsional field of public health.

3. RECRUITMENT

On recruitment, Ms. Jund mentioned only one point: the inordinate amount of time and money spent by agency personnel in working registers. Frequently, the same names appear on registers where the individual has been reported to the Division of Personnel as not available, out of state, not interested and so forth. Yet, when the agency calls for another register in the same category, the same names appear. It is imperative that there be a central clearing of the common registers used by many agencies.

The recruitment process, after a position is classified, is extremely time consuming. Agencies must first advertise in the state, and for certain positions valuable time is lost in having to do so. You don't get doctors usually by advertising in Alaskan newspapers. You get doctors by advertising in the professional journals.

Ms. Jund recommended that there be concurrent advertising for hard-to-fill categories, both within and outside the state. There are many hard-to-fill categories in addition to physicians. This would save time and effort.

Ms. Jund raised another potentially controversial point. The Alaska Hire Law sometimes impedes state agencies from obtaining the best qualified person for the job to be done. She stated that she supports the Alaska Hire Law implicitly, but raised the question: Is the object of the law to give preferential treatment to an Alaskan who is equally or more highly qualified than someone from outside, or is the object to give preferential treatment to Alaskans no matter where they are on the registers (in other words, to foster employment)? She added that she would prefer to think that it was the former, but it doesn't work that way in the Alaska personnel system.

On the state's registers, all Alaskans are ranked ahead of all applicants from elsewhere. She worked a register for a very high-level position. The highest qualified applicant, with a rating of 95, was 18th on the register. The person was the highest rated applicant from outside the state. The first applicant on the register had a rating of 80, and five points had been included in her score because she was already a state employee. All things being equal (references and so forth), she stated that she would much prefer the applicant with a score of 95 than an applicant who would have rated 75 on appropriate training and experience. The applicant with the score of 95 on the register was not within reach. No wonder agencies are criticized on occasion when they are forced to employ individuals who cannot possibly do the job.

Ms. Jund recommended that all applicants be ranked on the registers by grade, based on qualifications and experience, and not by location of residence. Alaskans who are more highly qualified or who are equally qualified should be and must be given preference by agencies.

4. CAREER SERVICE

Ms. Jund recommended that the commission give attention to merit increases for deserving employees. She distinguished these merit increases from longevity increases. It is argued by some that state employees receive pay increases; so why should the state also give them any more money? However, there is not much incentive for most employees to do an outstanding job for three years when a person hired tomorrow will be receiving the same pay range. This is not the case in private industry, and it leads to a terrible morale problem.

Ms. Jund recommended that agencies prepare standards for performance on which to base merit increases, so that they are given only to deserving employees who are performing at a consistently high level. She also recommended that the legislature specifically allocate funds for merit increases.

It is imperative that personnel functions be decentralized to large agencies. The Division of Personnel should then set standards and monitor performance.

That concluded Ms. Jund's remarks. She stated that she believed she had chosen areas of the greatest concern to most employees of the state of Alaska.

QUESTIONS

In answer to questions on decentralization from Lynda McCurry, Ms. Jund stated that the Division of Personnel will always have to assume classification functions for the smaller agencies. Some decentralization is the way to go. There is reluctance on the part of the Division of Personnel to relinquish classification authority.

Janet Bradley asked about the apparent difference of opinion on the standard position description. In the classification walk-through, Ken Kareen explained that the position description forms the basis for the Division of Personnel's classification, performance standards and employee evaluations. Because they are frequently out of date, the Division of Personnel is unable to do its job.

How do you reconcile this need for a description tailor-made for each employee with your recommendation for standard descriptions to speed the classification process?

Ms. Jund explained that standard forms could be used only for those positions common to many agencies and in which there was very little variance between the duties of those in the positions, such as Clerk Typist I. Standard descriptions would also be appropriate for Public Health Nurse I's. Pat Murphy pointed out that both employees and managers write position descriptions in order to achieve particular results: for example, eligibility for overtime and placement in a particular bargaining unit.

In answer to a question from Pat Murphy, Ms. Jund explained the way the classification system works in the federal government. The personnel officer for the agency classifies a position in accordance with the standard classification guide. An analysis is written of how the personnel officer chose that classification, and it is sent with the position description to the central headquarters for review. If they believe it to be incorrect, they advise the personnel officer of the error. In addition, there would be periodic audits in which the employee describes actual duties to the auditor, and these are compared with the position description. If an error is found in the classification assigned, then the personnel officer receives a written report advising the corrective action needed. This system retains the proper authority and responsibility appropriate while allowing a faster process. It is appropriate that the people in the field make the initial classification, since they have more knowledge about the position than someone in the Division of Personnel possibly can, especially when personnel is responsible for classifying all positions within the state.

If the corrective action leads to a downgrading of the position, Ms. Jund stated that she believes that federal procedures allow the incumbent of the affected position to remain at his or her existing salary for one year before being placed at the lower pay rate, although the position would be shown as the lower level from the time that action to correct the error was taken. It is important to remember that it is not what the employee is qualified to do that matters. It's what the job calls for the employee to do.

DIVISION OF DATA PROCESSING

Mr. Dwayne Herrick, an employee in the Division of Data Processing, identified a number of problems within that division.

The agency has in the past neglected to budget for travel for training, and yet training is necessary if employees are to keep their skills current in the rapidly changing data processing field. The division head justifies hiring new employees from outside Alaska because present employees lack this training. Money which has been appropriated for travel is spent on recruiting trips to the lower 48 to hire new employees rather than sending existing employees to programs to increase their skills. Such training programs are not available in Juneau. Training money has also been used to purchase equipment instead of to provide training. There are self-instruction manuals for new computer systems, but they are not sufficient and should not be considered a replacement for more formal and extensive training programs.

Employees who are brought up and whose moving expenses are paid by the state are then obligated to work for the state for two years or else to pay back a portion of their moving expenses. This increases their allegiance to the head of the division. The director is not concerned with complying with the Personnel Rules and has ignored hiring freezes in order to provide a job for a friend.

The staff of the Division of Personnel is unfamiliar with the fields in which they are rating data processing applicants, and they make mistakes. There is now some communication between the Division of Data Processing and Personnel on how applicants should be rated, so the mistakes are decreasing.

There have been a number of desk audits in the Division of Data Processing without any perceptible results.

Lynda McCurry explained that for positions in the field of data processing there is continuing authorization to accept out-of-state applications, unlike most other positions in the state. The person hiring can then use the justification of unique and unusual circumstances to select the applicant he or she is most interested in, regardless of the applicant's ranking on the register.

Charles Dockery, a Systems Analyst II in the Division of Data Processing, gave an example of the kinds of abuses which are occuring in the division. In late 1977 or early 1978, the director and one of his managers decided that they would avoid hiring any of the "dolts on the register" by specifying that the position for which they were hiring require specialized knowledge. People were hired from the lower 48, but they have not had to use this specialized knowledge, except for one employee who helped with the primary election. In addition, the division has since asked another employee to resign. The present staff of the division has the talent to learn the new skills, but they are not being given the opportunity to do so.

Mr. Herrick added that the director has failed to establish his priorities and to set realistic goals.

Mr. Dockery suggested that the Division of Personnel should audit the appointments of outsiders to attempt to establish whether the unique and unusual circumstances which provided the basis for making the hiring decision actually exist.

Representative Buchholdt pointed out that in the last session, there was a bill before the legislature to increase the funding for training, and that Pat Hunt testified that there was adequate training available.

Mr. Dockery asserted that there should be action taken against program managers who violate the Personnel Rules when making their hiring decisions.

Another facet to the training problem is that the state pays for moving a family from the lower 48 to Alaska, instead of paying for a three-day training session offered through IBM for an existing employee. Training would cost substantially less than moving expenses.

Lynda McCurry stated that the Department of Labor hires data processors from the same registers that the Division of Data Processing uses, and that the department hires from below the top five only when they need a programer skilled in COBOL as opposed to scientific language.

Pat Murphy pointed out that this is an example of the problems created by having the head of personnel at a division level instead of at a departmental commissioner level. He or she should have independent authority to function effectively and to stand up to commissioners of other departments.

Darlene Howard said that APEA studied the use of training funds by the Division of Data Processing. Ninety-five percent of the training money was used by one percent of the staff--the rest did not participate in training programs. There did not appear to be any relationship between the people selected to attend training programs and the need for training in the particular program. Training sessions are used to reward employees, not to increase their skills.

Carl Nelson, a Console Operator II with the Division of Data Processing, testified. Several months ago, Mr. Nelson's supervisor advised him that he was due for a merit increase. The forms were returned, and he was told that he would have to wait another two years. He is pursuing this matter through APEA.

In 1972, the person who was then director of data processing decided that the console operators were overpaid, and initiated action to have the salary ranges lowered by two pay ranges. There was, at that time, no one to speak on behalf of the employees, and the action went through. Since then, the equipment has become substantially more complex. A new CPU unit is capable of handling five programs at one time, and there are only two people working on it at any one time. The workers agreed to a 12½ hour shift, so that the system is constantly operating, and the state is obligated to pay only a minimum of overtime to these employees.

There have been two attempts to have the positions reclassified since the 1972 action. Neither was successful. Morale is very low, and when the positions are compared with similar positions in Washington, Oregon and California, it becomes evident that Alaska salaries are not competitive.

There is a Data Processsing Job Classification Task Force which has been organized to draft a complete set of new flexible, modern, well-defined data processing job classifications. A questionnaire has been developed to gather information to that end. Mr. Nelson supplied the commission with a copy of his completed questionnaire. Lynda McCurry explained that the task force was created to identify problems within that agency. Membership consists of Data Processing managers and representatives from the Division of Personnel and the Department of Labor. Carolyn Hinkey and Dick Kind, employees in the Division of Personnel, are responsible for compiling this information.

Mr. Nelson has worked for the state for nine years, and he has received only one merit increase during that time. In the absence of merit increases, and since he has reached the top of the pay scale for Console Operator II's, there is no incentive for outstanding performance. There used to be four levels of operators, and that number has now been reduced to two. Therefore, no viable career ladder is provided to Console Operators.

Charles Dockery elaborated on the absence of career ladders available to Data Processing employees. There is a 60% turnover rate in the division caused, in part, by the absence of promotional opportunities and merit increases. Some of the best qualified employees are leaving.

Thousands of dollars are spent on recruiting trips to the lower 48, yet there is no money available for training the existing staff, either for travel to programs offered elsewhere or to provide needed training to Alaskans. The division has continuing authority to accept applications from out of state for the positions of Programmer III or Systems Analyst II--both at Range 17. The division hires people from out of state into these positions, and then promotes them to whatever vacancy the director intended to put them in. There is a need for the state to address the problems of enforcing the Personnel Rules when they are violated, particularly when intentionally violated by state program managers.

The staff of the Division of Personnel lacks the skills to rate applications in the data processing field. Mr. Dockery submitted an application for System Analyst I, and received a score on his training and experience of 80. Two weeks later he submitted a xeroxed copy of the application, this time for Systems Analyst II which is two salary ranges higher than Systems Analyst I, and received a score of 85. There would be problems in having the Division of Data Processing score its own application, since there is no committment by the manager to abide by the Personnel Rules and treat applicants or employees fairly.

The division does not permit its employees to obtain training or to use what training they have; yet, in order to be considered for promotion, employees are required to have received additional training. This is one of the causes for the high turnover rate in the division.

Mr. Dockery expects that he will recieve some retaliation from the division for testifying before the commission. He gave an example of one individual who resigned, stating his reasons for leaving very tactfully. The program manager "vindictively" black listed him for doing so. There are many ways in which to seek revenge, such as finding fault and accumulating material in personnel files. Mr. Dockery added that there are many people who make mistakes in the division.

An example of the problems of the division concerns a bright, 20 year old employee. He was the only person with the skills to broadcast the general election results for the past elections. Despite his ability and the fact that he got along well with his supervisor and the other employees of the division, he has submitted his resignation, stated mildly and tactfully. His letter of resignation was pulled from his personnel file so that managers would not have access to his account of problems encountered. The head of the division has indicated that he will see that the employee does not receive another state job.

Mr. Nelson testified that console operators are classified at Range 14. Mr. Dockery stated that that was unacceptable. The data processing salaries of the state do not meet the national standard, except for the salaries of the Operations Manager and Director. The others are at least two ranges too low. Data processing salaries in Alaska are equal to those avialable in the lower 48, but the cost of living in Alaska is much higher.

There was a position which was filled without any public announcement of the vacancy. The person hired was called a resident based on his having worked in the state some years before for a period of six months. The division paid for relocation expenses.

Some of the problems result from poor management. Some are the result of problems in the personnel system. When employees are hired initially, they are placed at advanced steps in the salary schedule in order for the state to compete for the best qualified people, but incumbents are not given the same considerations.

Kit Stewart, a Finance Officer III with the Department of Environmental Conservation, agreed with most of the points made by Ms. Jund. She disagreed on the question of limiting opportunities for substituting experience for college degrees. She felt it was appropriate to allow substitution, except in cases of life and death skills. As an example, engineers who have practiced for 20 years in Alaska are by statute to be treated as though they held engineering degrees.

Small agencies should be able to handle decentralization, just as large agencies are. Specifically, Ms. Stewart indicated that the Department of Environmental Conservation has existing staff with skills to perfrom classifications capably.

Training is a major problem in her department. For example, one employee felt that a particular training course would be beneficial and offered to pay transportation expenses and to take annual leave for the time required to attend, but asked the department to pay the $500 entrance fee. The request was denied; and later, the employee was rated as failing to perform tasks which could have been performed had the training been authorized. At least one department has paid full college tuition for one of its employees.

In answer to a question from Don Fiser, Ms. Stewart indicated that the registers are cumbersome. Almost never are all five of the top candidates available for a position. For lower level positions, about 90% of those on the register are not available.

The Division of Personnel should adopt a policy of handwriting memos on personnel matters so that time would not be lost in waiting for typing to be completed.

Cynthia Butler, Administrative Assistant to Representative Buchholdt, concurred with most of the statements made to the commission. She has had personal experience in difficulties with the raters in the Division of Personnel. She read a position description for a job for which she believed herself well qualified. She submitted her application and a resume in November. As of December, she had not yet been placed on the register. When she was finally placed on the register, she had received a score of only 80.

Ms. Butler inquired about the standards used by the rater in making that evaluation and was told that the information could not be released. Finally, she spoke to the person who had performed the evaluation. She learned that the rater had given her no credit for education or for specific training which she had received that was relevant to the position for which she was applying. She was told that if she had written her application for a lay person, it could have been evaluated to show that experience. She asked a reading expert to evaluate the application, and the expert told her that the language contained nothing above an 8th grade level.

Ms. Butler asked that her application be re-evaluated. The rater said that perhaps that could be done if she would document her education and provide evidence of the field work she had done. Ms. Butler supplied the information, and on inquiry a week later about whether the re-evaluation had occurred, was told that whenever the rater reached that information in her stack of work, it would be done.

Ms. Butler became angry at the time required to correct what she believed to be a mistake on the part of the Division of Personnel staff, particularly since the position for which she had applied was going to be filled soon. She called the Deputy Director to arrange for a personal interview. Subsequently, her application was re-evaluated, placing her from number nine on the list to number one. Because of her inquiries and persistence in asking that the errors of the division be corrected, she now believes that she has been blackballed from working for the state, without ever having held a state position. She was advised that in having her application re-evaluated and having her positionn on the register moved, the division had made an exception. Normally, the applicants must suffer the consequence of a division error without any recourse.

Ms. Butler indicated that she had been told that the division was severely understaffed; and if that is so, then she can understand the inordinate amount of time required to process her application. The state should insure that the division has adequate staff to handle its workload.

In answering questions of commission members, Ms. Butler stated that the positon for which she had applied was for Emergency Medical Services Coordinator. She had not had a formal interview, but she had spoken by telephone with the manager who was making the hiring decision and with another employee. She had not been to the job site.

Darlene Howard gave an example of another applicant who had had problems similar to Ms. Butler's. The applicant had decided not to testify before the commission for fear that she will be blackballed from state employment. The applicant applied for about 17 jobs, and is highly competent, possessing a B.A. and additional education as a media specialist with an emphasis in library work and three years in other related fields with tremendous research experience in private industry.

When the individual applied for a state librarian position, the division found the applicant unqualified because of the techniques used in evaluating teaching experience. If an applicant has a number of years of teaching experience within the same school system, then the division counts all summer vacation periods as experience, whether or not the teacher works during the summer. If the applicant has changed school districts, then the division only counts the time of the school year, or approximately nine months. Therefore, the applicant in question failed to meet the teaching requirements of the position.

The same individual is a professional artist who has tutored in the field of graphics, owned and operated an art business for several years, has had personal art exhibitions and has one year of professional art education. The division concluded in an evaluation that the individual lacked formal art education, despite the public recognition of the artist's talent, and therefore was unqualified for a position involving art work for the state's publications.

The applicant was also not credited with any experience in management or administration, even though the individual had successfully operated a business for income.

The individual encountered the same problems Ms. Butler discussed when appealing the decisions made by the raters. One position had been advertised as being open until a particular date, and the applicant pushed the division to re-evaluate to meet that deadline, only to learn that despite public notices, a register had already been sent out to the hiring department. The register had been issued ten days before the publicized closing date for applicants, and the individual's name did not appear on the register for the position.

Written testimony was presented to the commission by Marcella Stutte concerning the eligibility requirements for longevity increases. A copy is attached.

STAFF REPORT

1. Summary of Correspondence

a. Testimony was received from Mr. Scott Semans, Architect, advising that the personnel system is overloaded with red tape which ties the hands of the people who are making hiring decisions, resulting in losing the best qualified applicants. He advocates speeding up the certification process and allowing those hiring to exercise greater judgement in making their selections of employees.

b. Ms. Margaret Clark, an Administrative Officer with the state troopers, testified as follows:

More than once, a desk audit to upgrade a position has resulted in the position being placed in a totally different classification. The incumbent, who is satisfactorily performing the work, therefore may not be technically qualified. If a person is in the position in such a case, no tests should be required to continue holding it.

She disagrees with requiring people to retake tests after two years on a register. In some positions, there are few vacancies, and an applicant can be on the register for the entire two years without receiving notification of an opening.

Tests don't apply to the work done in daily jobs. She recommends testing a person only once prior to hiring him, and then promoting on the basis of experience and performance, as the federal government does.

She has no complaints about the services of the Division of Personnel--it takes a long time to get anything processed, but that's the fault of the system, not the staff.

c. Ms. Gaile Haynes, who testified before the commission in Anchorage on January 27, wrote in regard to the ratings of promotability. A person who appeals or grieves a matter tends to be regarded as a troublemaker, and is therefore regarded as non-promotable. To have a process not subject to normal review is in effect to insure that boat-rockers will not be promoted, thereby producing a degree of mediocrity in state employees.

2. A work session schedule was set for February 23 and 24.

3. Budget for 1979

Warren Endicott of the Administrative Services Division of Legislative Affairs has inquired about the commission's budget for next year.

4. Theresa Hurt, a student from Juneau-Douglas Community College, is working on a project for the commission as part of a Law Practicum course which she is taking. She will be reviewing the Personnel Rules and the collective bargaining contracts to determine the impact the contracts have upon the Rules.

5. Division of Legislative Finance Computer

Terry Cramer spoke with Jay Hogan, who indicated that the computer programming for tracking vacant permanent positions will not be finished for about six months.

6. USCSC Conference, February 28 and March 1

The commission will be responsible for paying for travel and perdiem for those members attending the U.S. Civil Service Commission Conference on Public Personnel Management Reform. Representative Buchholdt may attend in Senator Ray's place. Greg O'Claray and Pat Murphy will also attend.

I went to work for the old Dept. of Highways in 1968. After working for over five years I became seriously ill and left work. After my sick leave ran out, I resigned because I thought I had to. After a two year recovery period, I went back to work for the Department of Highways in my old job, in my old grade and in step F where I was when I resigned. I thought I was returning to the position and status I had before I became ill. It was the intention of my employing department to rehire me under the circumstances that existed prior to my leaving. Later I was told that because of the wording of the Alaska Statutes

> "Sec. 39.27.022. Pay increments for longevity in state service. (a) Pay increments, computed at the rate of 3.75 per cent of the employee's base salary, shall be provided for an employee after he has remained in the final step within a given range for two years, provided that the employee has worked continuously for the state for seven years and provided that his current annual rating by his supervisors is designated as "good" or higher."

I would be ineligible for longevity increases for a period of seven years.

I have been back at work for 3 1/2 years and have not received a longevity increase although my evaluations are outstanding.

I don't believe this is fair. Had anyone realized the significance at the time of my resigning, of this situation, I may have been permitted LWOP during my illness and would not have inadvertently lost my eligibility.

What recourse do I have to correct this inequity?

Submitted to the Blue Ribbon Commission on the Personnel Act at its meeting on Feb. 15, 1979 by Carl Nelson, Console Operator 2, Data Processing, Dept. of Administration.

The attached questionnaire has been prepared by the Data Processing Job Classification Task Force. The Task Force was organized to draft a complete set of new flexible, modern, well-defined data processing job classifications. In order to accomplish this, we need your input.

The questionnaire has been designed to help identify the various kinds and complexity of data processing oriented work. It covers the range of activities from entry level to data processing managerial functions. Clearly, not all items will relate to you and your work. Please read each item carefully and, if it applies, answer it as accurately as possible. If it does not apply, indicate so and go on to the next item.

Questionnaires should be completed and returned no later than February 16, 1979 to:

I. GENERAL QUESTIONS

The first portion of the questionnaire deals with the more general aspects of work which are likely to be found in any job.

A. General Description:

1. Describe briefly your job: Under General Direction, console operate multi-partitioned IBM CPU, high speed tape drives, high speed disk drives, high speed printers, card reader/punch, diskette readers, and peripheral equipment for timely and efficient processing of data from/for all state departments.
2. What is/are your major task(s) occupying 20% or more of your time?
100% Monitoring CPU. Listening, watching, analyzing instructions and error messages, error lights and any unusual conditions.
25% each; Retrieving tapes, mounting, dismounting, filing, printing and distributing standard and/or special forms.
3. What title do you feel best describes your work?
Operations Supervisor, Lead or Shift Supervisor

B. Supervision Received:

1 Describe the kind of guidance and/or instructions you receive with assignments (how specific, how detailed, how much discretion do you have in following guidance or devising your own methods, etc.):
During our 12.5 hour prime shift, we receive priority slips for those jobs needing special handling and quick turnaround. Since there are numerous other priority slips throughout the day, they are handled & processed by the discretion of the console operator due to the needs of the job. Example; estimated run time, number of tape and/or disk drives needed, special disk packs, tapewriter, etc... Upon occasion, we do receive special instructions, from technical services, for upgrading the system to handle new needs or to correct existing problems.

2. What, if anything, does your supervisor do to your work before you receive it?
He may, from time to time, check and see how much processing time certain jobs may require. Otherwise, he does nothing!

3. Is your work reviewed while in progress?
No.

4. What does your supervisor do to your work when it is completed?
He only reviews "Problem Reports" if there are any.

5. Who, besides your supervisor, influences your work (technical aspects, staff advisors, outside consultants, etc.)? How? Some 200 outside terminal users via on-line access to CPU. Phone calls from users for information on completed or currently processing jobs. IBM CE Technicians working on system hardware problems. Technical Services working on system software problems. Last two they require the entire system, at times, to correct existing problems

C. Guidelines

1. Describe the guidelines available to you, such as prescribed work practices, policies, procedures, rules, regulations, precedents, etc. IBM owners manual for specific components that covers CPU problems in its entirety. Technical Services bulletins. Random special procedures, memos from management/supervisory personnel. Very often, verbal information/instruction from one individual to another, from shift to shift.

2. In what form are the guidelines? (verbal, desk manual, reference books, statutes, procedures manual, etc.)
90% verbal instructions (as mentioned #1 above).
25% IBM Technical Bulletins and/or Reference manuals Technical Service Bulletins and/or memos.
10% Everything else.

3. Are the guidelines for your job clear and specific so that it is relatively easy to identify which is applicable to each assignment, task, question or the like?
NO. As mentioned in item #1 and #2 above, 90% of our guidelines are verbal from one individual to another, from shift to shift. So, to answer this question, there is no standard procedure, we Run and expect spur of the moment changes in so-called established procedures!

D. Problem Solving

1. Describe briefly some typical problems you encounter in your work and how you solve them. Power outage, which is very common in Juneau. Entire system is down and manually brought back up when power service is available. Hardware problems with device units (Tape, disk drives, etc...). These units are manually devices off-line and repaired by IBM CE Technicians and

See attached

2. Do you have a choice of methods for doing your work, assigning priorities, etc? If yes, describe how you decide how, when and what you will do. Yes. Availability of time, importance of the job, the need of tape and/or disk drives, are all major factors in determining priorities for processing jobs. When the system is able to handle these needs, we release jobs for processing.

3a. Describe your most responsible or judgmental task.

b. How often does it occur? Monitoring the system is a very important factor and responsibility. Since there are two partitions, many jobs do require a response from the console operator and if he is not aware of the current status of each partition, time can be wasted if no response is made.

4a. What is the most critical error you could make in your work and its consequences? ① Accidently pull "Emergency Stop" switch on CPU or power supply causing lost user time. ② Mounting wrong tape as output/input during production run. Destroys valuable data or wrong data input into job stream. ③ Print incorrect warrant numbers on pre-printed warrant forms.

b. Who would be likely to catch the error?

I would catch the error or my co-worker would catch it.

c. How would it be corrected? ① System powered back up and made available again to all users. ② Message from console would indicate a wrong tape mounted, operator would correct this error and continue processing. ③ Console operator would visually check pre-numbered forms before continuing.

d. What are the chances of an error such as this happening?

① It has happened once. The switch in question is located in a very bad place. The chances of this happening again are very slim. ② This one happens quite often do to previous jobs canceling and thus those tapes are still mounted. An error message does occur and the operator can correct it, but there is a small chance of it happening. ③ Again, this has happened once before and since this is visually checked, chances of this happening are very slim.

5. What responsibility do you have for making recommendations, decisions or commitments that determine or affect plans, programs, policies, procedures, etc? Give examples. See Attached Since the console operator has complete control of the system, we often make recommendation to our Supervisor on handling procedures which would better serve all users, be more efficient and most practical. 99% of the time, no action is taken on our recommendations. We generally make our own decisions on jobs having bad data or erroneous messages.

E. Supervisory Responsibility (If you do not supervise, go on to item F)

1. List the positions you directly supervise:

No. of Positions	Title
1	DPEO I
1	Peripheral Equip. Optr.

2. Do some of these positions in turn supervise others?
No.

3. Briefly, what is the general purpose or function of the unit you supervise?
Senior Console Operator
Console Operator I
Peripheral Operator
To further answer this question, see I A 1, Page 2.

4. As a supervisor, I (circle appropriate number):

	1	2	3	4
Interview job applicants	(1)	2	3	4
Hire employees	(1)	2	3	4
Evaluate employees	1	(2)	3	4
Promote employees (to a higher position I also supervise)	(1)	2	3	4
Transfer employees (to a position at the same salary I also supervise)	(1)	2	3	4
Suspend employees	(1)	2	3	4
Discharge employees	(1)	2	3	4
Settle grievances	(1)	2	3	4
Reassign duties	(1)	2	3	4
Train employees	1	2	(3)	4
Explain, interpret policy, procedure	1	2	3	(4)
Set work objectives/performance standards	1	2	3	(4)
Ensure timely work flow	1	2	3	(4)
Ensure the quality of work	1	2	3	(4)
Devise new procedures/work methods	1	2	(3)	4
Assess/plan for future personnel needs	1	(2)	3	4

1 = Does not apply.

2 = Recommend - you independently decide what is needed, gather all information, present it to your supervisor with a specific suggestion as to what should be done. Your supervisor takes the official action.

3 = Prior Approval - as described above BUT you take the official action once your supervisor has approved your doing so.

4 = Inform Supervisor - you gather information, make a decision, and take official action, informing your supervisor afterward of what you have done or how you have handled a problem.

5. What amount of your time is spent doing much the same work as your staff? 95 %

6. What amount of your time is spent doing non-supervisory work that is not similar to that of your staff? 0 %

   Briefly, what are these tasks?

7. To what extent are you held accountable for the work of your staff?
   At all times, 100 %

F. Managerial Duties

1. Describe the role you play in planning for needs such as personnel, supply, equipment, etc.

2. What are your budgetary/fiscal responsibilities?

3. What is your participation in long-range planning, establishing goals and objectives, etc.?

4. What responsibilities have you for evaluating the progress toward meeting goals/objectives and in devising/implementing measures to ensure their accomplishment?

5. What studies, such as organization, methods, cost analysis, work simplification, etc., have you participated in during the past year? What was the extent of your participation?

6. For what kind and size of organizational unit do you perform the above managerial functions?

G. Job Requirements

1. Winter is here and you cannot face another Taku wind. You requested and were granted an extended leave of absence, and you have set your sights on a warm sunny beach. Before you go, you are to personally pick a replacement for your job. Describe what you would look for in choosing your replacement. The individual must have at least five years of experience. Knowledge of the following:
   1. Multi-programming.
   2. Remote job entry system.
   3. Handling 3705 Teminal users.
   4. Knowledge of batch processing under POWER/DOS/VS.
   5. CICS System.
   6. 2540 reader/punch.
   7. 2311, 2314 printers.
   8. 2401, 3420 Tape Drives.
   9. 3340, 3344, 3350 Disk Drives.
   10. Willingness to work 12.5 hour shift, day or night, seven on and seven off.
   11. Ability to lift heavy objects, often.
   12. Ability to respond intelligently to outside users.
   13. Ability to work diligently and take supervision.

II. The next portion of the questionnaire deals with specific data processing related tasks. Please circle the appropriate letter which you feel best describes how often you become involved in each activity. Many of the statements may not apply to your job. Once again, read them carefully and if they do not apply, circle "a" (never) and go on to the next statement.

   14. Willingness to get clothes dirty or torn.
   15. Willingness to accept scratches, cuts or bruises.

Never	Rarely	Occasionally	Frequently	Very Often

1355 SCOMM 51: BLUE RIBBON COMN. ON STATE PERSONNEL ACT 1978-1983

III. The last portion of this questionnaire is for you to provide any additional information which you feel is important or in need of special emphasis.

A. Describe briefly those aspects of your job which have not been covered in this questionnaire. Danger in extremely high voltage equipment. Extremely high pressure (constantly!), from our Supervisory/Management personnel, to get the work completed and out from yet a never ending backlog!

B. Is there anything about your job you think needs special emphasis? 12.5 hour shift, seven days on seven days off. We are on our feet 90% of the time. We lift heavy paper boxes. Lighting is very poor. Extremely high paper dust in the air. Extremely high noise volume in the working area. And most important, the console operator is looked upon only as a button pusher. He is not!!!

See page 3 C 1, 2 & 3. last paragraph

C. Do you have any other comments or suggestions?

Yes.

My main concern is for all operation personnel. The employee morale is extremely low and has been since 1972 when Mr. Warren Endicott, then Director of Data Processing, stated that the console operators were overpaid. He recommended a down grade of two pay ranges and Personnel carried his say so through. We were the only ones affected in the entire Division of Data Processing. I personally feel that this action was wrong and unjust. Since then, our duties and responsibilities as console operators have increased substantially and we have, since that time, been requesting a job reclassification to reflect a salary equal to these demands. On two separate occasions we have filled out "P402's" and we were never informed about the results. All we are ever told, from management "we are working on it." They have been working on it for the last five years! Now here we are again filling out this questionnaire, are we again going to get the same results? (See Attached) brought back in-line when the problem is resolved. When these units are taken off-line, we have to work around them and run only jobs that will not be affected by the shortage of those units. JCL errors within programmmers job stream, console operator has 99% effectiveness in manual correction and thus saves the state many dollars in computer rueun time.

As for plans, progeams, policies and procedures, we are always able to give input. But we face the 99% no action. Any changes effecting both the Console Operator Monitor and the user, the user comes out on top. Example: Changing priority jobs to a special class to enable quick accessibility by the Console Operator. This recommendation has not as yet been enforced.

Continued:

Personally, I am one employee who is very disappointed. Since the action taken in 1972, I have only received one (ONE!) merit increase! During my last evaluation several months ago, my supervisor informed me that I was do for my merit increase. I was really looking forward to it, but Personnel returned my evaluation form indicating that I was not eligible until 1981. I want you to know that I have only received one merit increase in nine years! Is this how good, loyal, dependable, hard-working employees are to be treated? I want to know what is going to be done about it! Is this questionnaire going to resolve it? This may not be of any concern to you, but it is to me. I am a single parent of two school age children and I find it very difficult to meet my expenses from month to month. I am currently working on my twentieth year for the State. Do I have anything to look forward to?

As I have previously mentioned of the action taken in 1972, our duties and responsibilities have increased substantially. We have worked under continuous upgrading of new sophisticated IBM equipment, the IBM 360/40, IBM 370/40, IBM 370/50, and now most recent IBM 370/3031 which has numerous features. Under each of these models, multi-programming has increased, workload has increased and above all the duties and responsibilities of the console operator has increased.

In multi-progeamming, theee aee five jobs occupying at all times. The Console operatoe must be awaee of what he is doing at all times, any weeng response could be fatal. In eefeeence to wokkload, we hove neaely 200 teeminal outside usees who hove access to ove system and submit jobs foe peocessing. We handle, on the aveeage, 300 plus jobs dueing any given day. I mention all this because it gives me the basis foe making the following eecommendations and I might add, they most ceetainly need to be implemanted. We need the following positions with indicated pay eange:

Console Opeeatoe Teainee	Eange	11
Console Opeeatoe I	Eange	13
Console Opeeatoe II	Eange	15
Consde Opeeatoe III	Eange	17
Shift Supeevisoe	Eange	19
Opeeations Supeevisoe	Eange	21
Opeeations Maneger	Eange	23

The Shift Supeevisoe is needed to aid opeeation's peesonnel and reliave other pressing mattees feom the Opeeations Supeevisoe and would be diecctly undee him. The Console Opeeatoe III position also is needed, three opeeatoes should be on shift at all times to handle the wock-load, two can not handle it peopeely to keep up the needs of the system.

I want to reiterate that the duties and responsibilities of the console operators have increased at least 400% and expect it to increase again in the near future with the addition of OS installed in the IBM 370/3031. I don't think that my recommendation is ridiculous or unjustified. If anything, upgrading our positions should be granted and made retroactive due to the difficulties we have had in the past in requesting such action. We are not button pushers, we are the backbone of the state and most certainly deserve equal pay for equal work. I rest my case!

Thank you for hearing me out.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION HEARING
Anchorage Historical Museum
January 27, 1979

MINUTES

Don Fisher, Vice Chairman, called the meeting to order and invited public testimony.

PUBLIC TESTIMONY

Daniel DeNardo, a Revenue Auditor with the Anchorage Office of the Department of Revenue, read a prepared statement regarding violations of state Personnel Rules. (Attached is a copy of Mr. DeNardo's statement with supporting documentation.)

Don Fisher suggested that the situation presented by Mr. DeNardo warranted further review by the Ombudsman's Office. Ken Spray suggested that because of the legal implications, Mr. DeNardo should bring the matter to the District Attorney's attention.

Ann Lacey, an employee of eight years with the Alaska Transportation Commission, presented problems she has experienced after being placed in a word processing center. Since 1974, Ms. Lacey had been a Secretary I at salary range 10. She has recently been placed in a word processing center, which is the equivalent of a typing pool. Employees in the center are graded on the type of work being done on a minute-by-minute basis. The supervisors assign work to each typist, and points vary for different types of assignments. This leaves the supervisor with substantial control over how many points an employee can obtain. Ms. Lacey pointed out that the work could be compared to that of a Clerk Typist. She started working 11 years ago as a Clerk Stenographer III, and feels that by being placed in the word processing center, her position has been downgraded.

Ms. Lacey stated that though she is on several registers, she has never been offered an interview for a position. She was on the register for the position of Word Processing Supervisor, but another applicant from the same range and classification was appointed. Ms. Lacey stated that the individual hired was informed of the expected vacancy and given an opportunity to take courses relating to the postion. The individual was thus able to get on a promotional list for the position, even though possessing less time and experience with the state.

Darlene Howard explained that classifications at the clerical level have recently been altered to Correspondence Secretary and Administrative Technician levels to accomodate the word processing system. With the assistance of IBM, a matrix of positions was developed. Values were given to various forms of typing on piece-rate basis for work flow and count factors. Grounds for promotion and demotion are based on the points a typist earns, which are figured by multiplying the time spent in typing a particular item by the difficulty factor assigned to that type of work. A supervisor can therefore control the points available to each typist, by the assignment of high or low-value work. As the use of word processing centers expands, morale problems may develop.

The state justifies shifting to a word processing system by pointing out that with such a system, specialized equipment can be used, typing time can be expedited and greater accuracy can be provided. However, only one specialized unit is in use in the Juneau center. All of the other centers are supplied with Mag Card II's, which are commonly used in all state offices. Despite this lack of specialized units, salary ranges of word processing employees are not comparable to those of clerical and secretarial employees using the same equipment.

Questions arise in regard to career ladders for word processing employees. They are no longer exposed to the day-to-day management of the programs for which they type, and therefore have less opportunity to learn the operation of those programs. Thus, they are less likely to be able to advance beyond the secretarial/clerical level.

Pat Hunt explained that the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations has been closely involved in the development of the word processing centers. The idea originates as a management decision, and the Division is responsible for the reclassification of the positions affected.

Pat Murphy asked how eligibility lists are used in hiring for word processing centers: Are applicants competing on registers for word processing center classifications or are they being transferred? Pat Hunt gave an example of seven positions taken out of the Division of Personnel's budget and placed in the word processing center. Pat Murphy commented that the system is in the process of being implemented within other departments. He believes this will affect employees state-wide.

Niel Thomas suggested that the Commission request information from John Mitchell, Word Processing Specialist with the Department of Administration. Don Fisher added that he would be interested in knowing how the supervisor Ms. Lacey referred to was selected.

Fred Jones, Director of the Department of Employee Relations for the Municipality of Anchorage, testified on the structure of the Department of Employee Relations at the request of the Commission.

Prior to the creation of the department, the Municipality of Anchorage had a division of personnel, but did not employ staff for its labor relation's activity. The Municipality contracted with private attorneys to handle its labor negotiations and grievance proceedings.

In June of 1977, the Mayor formed the Department of Employee Relations, consisting of the personnel division and adding a labor relations staff. Each of the major divisions report directly to Mr. Jones. He listed the divisions as: recruitment, examination, compensation, records, benefits, training, plans and programs (which is headed by the former personnel director) and labor relations. The Municipality has found that this system offers flexibility while maintaining control. The personnel functions and labor relations are combined because of the close relationship of the issues for which they are responsible. He indicated that 87% of the employees of the Municipality are covered by collective bargaining agreements. Mr. Jones, as head of the department, reports directly to the Mayor. This structure is similar to that of those organizations for which he has worked in priviate industry. This direct line to the chief executive is especially critical in the labor relations area.

Pat Hunt asked if the Municipality has a personnel ordinance. Mr. Jones replied that there is a labor relations ordinance that covers all aspects of labor relations as well as creating an Employee Relations Board. The Municipality chose to adopt its own system rather than be covered by the state's system.

The Employee Relations Board has functions similar to the National Labor Relations Board. Representative Buchholdt questioned what had been gained by opting out the the state system and adopting the present ordinance. Mr. Jones responded that matters can be handled more expeditiously with the Municipality's own system. Department heads are informed of the structure of the Employee Relations Department through a manual prepared on the subject. An Employee Relations manual is also being prepared.

The Municipality is obligated to provide for a merit system by statute. Personnel rules are in the form of an ordinance. Prior to the creation of the new department, the Municipality had various regulations.

Pat Hunt asked whether user departments have personnel officers. Mr. Jones replied negatively. The personnel division and department heads interface, and if a problem in personnel arises, it is brought to the attention of the division head. Niel Thomas explained that the Commission is considering the decentralization of unique job classes and asked for Mr. Jones' thoughts on the subject. Mr. Jones stated that this might lead to problems in proper control and that he is a believer in centralized authority for consistency in personnel and labor relations.

Mr. Thomas asked if the Department of Employee Relations has a defined audit function. Mr. Jones stated that the Municipality has centralized headquaters to maintain the consistent application of personnel rules and labor contract provisions. Mr. Thomas expressed interest in where the internal equal employment opportunity function was placed. Mr. Jones responded that it is located in a separate department. There is question as to where the function should be placed. He believes that it should be within personnel and labor relations, but it may be placed in the legal department.

Representative McKinnon asked what the application process is. Mr. Jones explained that there is a regular screening and examination process depending on types of positions. Police and Fire Department applicants are subject to sophisticated testing programs. For other positions, the personnel division screens and matches qualifications of applicants with job specification requests. An eligibility list is then created. This list is referred to departments or divisions for interviewing and hiring. Representative McKinnon asked how long it takes for an applicant to be rated and placed on the list. Mr. Jones said that this would depend on the number of applications received for the position. A vacant position must be posted internally for seven days prior to recruiting. If there is no response from Municipality employees, an eligibility list is usually created and issued within three days. Mr. Jones emphasized that there are hiring halls covering two large organizations that supply qualified applicants within 24 hours.

In answer to Mr. Hunt's questions on the Municipality's recruitment practices, Mr. Jones indicated that most of the applicants for positions with the Municipality live in the immediate area. Very few applications are mailed to the department. When the Municipality has to look outside its immediate area to fill a position, as is the case with the present opening for a Director of Public Works, the process for filling a position takes considerably longer. Typically when an individual applies for work with the Municipality, he is interviewed by one of the well-trained examiners who evaluate the skills of the applicant against criteria supplied by the departments on the job. The city does not solicit applications for positions in which it has no openings, although it does maintain active applicant files.

Mr. Spray questioned whether there were any changes made in regard to personnel plans and programs. Mr. Jones replied that procedures have been implemented that were not formerly a part of recruitment and training. As an example, the Personnel Director has created an employee handbook and is working on an employee relations manual for supervisors.

Mr. Spray requested information on arbitration caseloads. Mr. Jones responded that in 1978, there were a total of 19 cases recorded for 3,000 Municipality employees. Mr. Spray explained that Local 71 had approximately 50 to 60 arbitration cases last year, out of 1,500 members. Mr. Jones commented that the percentage seemed high.

Mr. Spray asked how Mr. Jones would prepare for negotiations on new contracts. Mr. Jones responded that the personnel division would be contacted for statistics and technical information. Otherwise, data is gathered from each user department head on possible improvements, refinements, changes, etc. The negotiating committee consists of various members: labor relations, plans and programs, compensation and classification staff.

Don Fisher asked if the Municipality uses a large number of tests for evaluating applicants. Mr. Jones stated that tests are given to typists, and police and fire department applicants only. He believes that testing should be given only to entry-level and clerical applicants. All others can be evaluated by performing reference checks. John Pugh asked whether there is a requirement to choose from the top five applicants on eligibility lists. Mr. Jones replied that there is a maximum of five applicants on the lists sent to departments. The applicants are not ranked and the department can hire anyone on the list. Don Fisher questioned what reason would be given for rejection of an entire list. Mr. Jones answered that a position can be reannounced, in which case a new list of five applicants would be sent to the department. Reasons would have to be based on in-depth review with the specifics and unique requirements of the job taken into account.

Darlene Howard asked what type of methodology is used to determine who is best qualified and which names should be sent to departments. Mr. Jones replied that interviewers are supplied with in-depth descriptions on each position. There are minimum qualifications that each applicant must meet. Once this is determined, they are matched up with job specifications. The skill of the interviewer is the key. Subjective evaluation is used by the interviewers, and the final selection is made by the user departments.

In answer to a question from Mr. Spray, Mr. Jones explained that all appeals from employees are handled by the labor relations staff, whether or not the employee is a union member. The personnel staff may become involved to answer questions or to provide statistical help.

Ken Humphreys asked how many staff members are in the Employee Relations Department to handle 3,00 employees and how many applications are processed each year. Mr. Jones stated that there are 22 staff members, and approximately 5,000 applications are processed annually.

Darlene Howard asked whether an individual who is not selected as one of the top five for a position can appeal. Mr. Jones replied that any appeal would be made directly to him and that there would be many recourse actions available.

Niel Thomas questioned how new positions are created. Mr. Jones explained that two forms are used (P1 and P2) supplying a description of the actual job functions, which are submitted to Classification and Compensation for review. Once approved, the forms are sent to the Office of Budget and Management and then on to the Mayor. The process is not limited to budget time, but is usually heavier during the beginning of the fiscal year. Mr. Jones also stated that he does not recommend the use of temporaries and cannot understand why the state's classification process takes so long.

Pat Hunt asked who would be responsible for drafting job descriptions for each position. Mr. Jones responded that this is the responsibility of the Compensation and Classification Section. Position descriptions are prepared based on input from departments (P1 and P2 forms) that is included with a supervisor's request.

Ardith Healan, a Park Technician I with the Department of Natural Resources, presented testimony regarding her experiences working in the CETA program. She explained that to become a Park Technician requires certification on a CETA eligibility list. In order to get on the CETA list, an individual must be unemployed for four months. This seems contrary to the goal of the program, which is to reduce unemployment. Ms. Healan mentioned that there is a general concern of departmental employees that $16.00 monthly union dues are being charged unfairly. Don Fisher pointed out that federally funded CETA programs are classified as temporary positions by the state.

Pat Murphy commented that CETA employees are being used to supplant permanent employees, rather than to supplement the permanent work force. There is a state register for Park Technician I's, but the department has decided not to request positions in that class, since CETA workers are available. Ms. Healan is on the state's register, the application and certification process having taken 15 weeks, yet cannot be hired in that job capacity unless as a CETA.

Ms. Healan also pointed out salary inequities. She is earning $1,128 monthly ($6.90 hourly) as a CETA Park Technician yet Park Rangers doing the same tasks are earning $10.00 hourly. Ken Spray added that at the same time, CETA employees are being told that the basis of the program is to help individuals find permanent positions. Niel Thomas stated that federal money is allocated for a certain period of time to help make applicants more competitive for permanent positions. He added that CETA's cannot receive preference over permanent employees. Mr. Spray pointed out that departments make a committment to train and retain a certain percentage of CETA's as permanent employees. Ms. Healan stated that almost everyone in her department is a CETA employee.

Lynne Woods, the Executive Director of the Alaska Commission on the Status of Women, presented testimony on pertinent sections from the Preliminary Study: The Status of Women in Alaska. (Copies may be obtained from the Human Rights Commission.) She explained that the Commission is in the process of recommending status and implementing guidelines on the roles of women and minorities in the Alaska state system. A report is to be released in April.

Representative Buchholdt commented that the draft report on the U.S. Civil Rights Commission suggests that the Blue Ribbon Commission will address the subject of equal opportunity employment and affirmative action. However, Senator Ray mentioned that the Commission will not address these topics. Don Fisher suggested that the concept of incorporating studies on EEO and affirmative action could be included in discussion of merit system principles and hiring from state registers. Niel Thomas stated that there are a variety of approaches in allowing for EEO and affirmative action hire. He cited the following as examples: (1) selective certification - giving priority consideration to minorities. (2) increasing bands of certification to encompass more applicants. Mr. Thomas suggested that one way to address the topic would be to suggest that the Certification, Classification and Recruitment Subcommittee research the options available. Mr. Thomas informed the Commission of an existing Attorney General's opinions on EEO and affirmative action hiring practices.

Ms. Woods said that she had heard of sex discrimination within the state. As an example, she mentioned hearing of women in the state working at range 16 through 20 who are responsible for the same functions as men at range 24 through 26.

Beverly McCartney, an employee with Community and Regional Affairs, testified regarding problems with CETA programs. She believes that permanent positions are filled by CETA employees because they are less expensive to the state and departments are unable to identify funding for permanent positions.

As a solution, Ms. McCartney suggested that rules be adopted to allow a department to fill a position with a CETA employee only once.

Al Carson, Deputy Director of the Division of Lands, Department of Natural Resources, presented a written statement on two areas of major concern: The state's hiring procedures and the use of temporary employees. (Attached is a copy of Mr. Carson's testimony.)

Don Fisher, in response to Mr. Carson's testimony, asked who should be responsible for deciding on the qualifications of an applicant if they are not ranked. He added that the state is required to abide by merit principles. Mr. Carson responded that presently, an applicant must be hired from the top five and justification must be supplied for not hiring within that group. Scoring the abilities of applicants does not accurately relate to job requirements. Mr. Carson added that he has worked with Ken Kareen in the Division of Personnel trying to make the system work. Mr. Carson stated that individuals in the top five are there because of longevity of service within the state and are not the type of people he wishes to hire. Don Fisher suggested that a system to develop criteria based on input from program managers would identify special job requirements and reliability of tests.

Richard LeFevere and Claude Hoffman (a Cadastral Engineer), both employees of the Department of Natural Resources, presented testimony to Commission members. Discussion revolved around registers that are classified too broadly and do not take into account special qualifications necessary for positions in the Department of Natural Resources. Mr. LeFevere suggested that program managers hire temporaries to extend the probationary period and to circumvent registers to hire individuals most qualified for particular positions.

STATE of ALASKA

MEMORANDUM

TO: Blue Ribbon Commission on the Personnel Act
Chairman: Senator Bill Ray

DATE : 27 January, 1979

FROM: Daniel DeNardo
Revenue Auditor
Department of Revenue
Anchorage Office

SUBJECT: Violations of Personnel Rules and State Law

I would like to thank the Blue Ribbon Commission on the Personnel Act for the opportunity of addressing them on serious violations of the State Personnel Rules that have been and are now taking place in the Department of Revenue.

My name is Daniel DeNardo and I am employed as a revenue field auditor by the Department of Revenue. I have been employed by the department since 1974 with a break in service for the period April-October 1978.

I have direct knowledge of the facts I will present and they are all documented. The Blue Ribbon Commission presents a unique opportunity that insures action will be taken to correct the grave violations that have been perpetrated. The scope of the facts presented will be confined to those people still employed by the Department of Revenue.

Case No. 1. In 1975 when the Department of Revenue was located at 509 3rd Avenue, a business license number 56874 was taken out under the name Aardvark Interiors of Alaska. The applicants were Larry Williams, Louis E. Nelson, and Mrs. Donna Crawford. All three were revenue auditors.

Mr. Nelson and Mrs. Donna Crawford are ~~sto;~~ STILL employed by the Department of Revenue in the Petroleum Revenue Division.

The purpose of the business license was to allow the principals of Aardvark to award themselves a contract for remodeling work of the audit division office at 509 3rd Ave. The remodeling was performed by Aardvark and reimbursement was granted by Gary Jenkins, Audit Director.

No prior approval by the Commissioner of Administration was granted. These actions are in violation of Rule:
13.15-Purchases of Commodities and Services
13.16-Conflicts of Interests.
13.18-Penalties
13.18.1-Action to be taken by the Director
11.05.1-Dismissal for violation of Rule 13

In these violations there was complicity upon the part of management and full knowledge of the personnel rules violated.

Mr. Williams has left State employment but Mr. Nelson and Mrs. Crawford are still employed by the Department of Revenue in the Petroleum Tax Division.

Case No. 2. Mr. Louis E. Nelson and Mrs. Donna Crawford continually violated State personnel rules by leaving the State Revenue office for extended periods on unofficial business. Many times these extended periods were spent consuming alcoholic drinks at various bars .

These numerous and continual violations also included returning to the State office in an intoxicated condition both during and after business hours.

These violations have occured over an extended period of time since 1975 and still continue.

These facts were brought to the attention of the Department of Revenue at a grievance hearing in March 1978 in the Diane Painter vs. Louis Nelson case. Mr. John Messenger, Deputy Commissioner of Revenue was in attendance.

Case No. 3. Mr. Nelson was in violation of State of Alaska and Federal law by keeping a secret file on Mrs. Diane Painter. Mr. Messenger so informed Mr. Nelson at the March 1978 hearing. Mr. Nelson was given a new supervisory position in the Petroleum Revenue Division.

Case No. 4. On an audit trip to California in the summer of 1976, circumstances led to the cancellation of a scheduled audit which Mr. Nelson did not report but instead took a weeks leave before proceeding to Los Angeles for the next scheduled audit. Mr. Nelson applied for and received perdiem and never submitted a leave slip.

This is a violation of the fraud Statutes and Personnel Rules.

Case No. 5. Gross violations by revenue auditors and management in the fraudulent misuse of travel funds have come to my attention. Because of the location of the records in Juneau, I do not have access to them. I would be willing to sit with the Commission and share what I know.

The grave abuses and violations I have presented are known to the management of the Department of Revenue in particular Mr. Gary Jenkins-Director of Audit, Mr. Thomas Williams-Director of Petroleum Revenue, Mr. Mike McCormick-Director of Enforcement, and Mr. John Messenger-Deputy Commissioner.

It should be reprehensible to the citizens of Alaska that an agency given the responsibility of enforcing law should be operating on another set of principles.

With the sensitivity of the whole subject of taxes, our Alaskan citizens deserve principled, unbiased, and lawful service from those hired to serve them.

The few because of their position have put the Department of Revenue in an untenable position of enforcing the law while those in command ignore and violate the law.

Attached are memos.

STATE of ALASKA

MEMORANDUM

TO: Daniel DeNardo
Revenue Field Auditor I
Petroleum Revenue Division

DATE : January 22, 1979

FROM: Thomas K. Williams TKW
Director
Petroleum Revenue Division

SUBJECT: Your Request for a Meeting about Personnel Rules Violations

Your memorandum of January 19th presents allegations of serious misconduct on the part of someone in this division. However, you do not indicate who the alleged miscreant is, nor do you indicate the nature of the conduct which you assert to have been in violation of the State's personnel rules. Thus, while I do not wish you to underestimate the gravity of my concern in this matter, yet no clear course of action presents itself for me to take because of the unspecific nature of your memorandum.

On the one hand, if the misconduct has been by someone under Lou Nelson's supervision, you should raise this matter with him as your immediate supervisor, since that is the standard procedure under both the personnel rules and prudent management. The importance of talking with Lou is even greater if Lou is the person you are referring to in your memorandum. Communication in an employee-supervisor relationship is the most effective means of resolving differences in opinion, managerial style and other matters of personal incompatibility. If this fails and no resolution of such differences can be achieved through discussions with the supervisor, then is the better time to bring the difference to the attention of the supervisor's supervisor. For the higher echelon supervisor to perform his own tasks effectively, it is imperative that he ordinarily work through, not around, his subordinate supervisory staff.

On the other hand, if the misconduct has been by someone outside Lou's supervision, then you are correct to come immediately to me. If this is in fact the case, I would appreciate your giving me another memo, going into more specific detail about the misconduct. Then I can discuss it with you further in a meeting before deciding what course of action I should take.

Thank you for bringing the matter to my attention.

TKW

Tom Williams
Director, Petroleum Revenue

Dan DeNardo
Revenue Auditor

This is a response to your memo of January 22, 1979, and our conversation in your office the morning of January 24, 1979.

The course of action subscribed to by me was a confidential meeting. You chose to ignore this request as you did my verbal request for a meeting on October 23, 1978. The October 23, 1978, request was explicitly in reference to Mr. Nelson.

Your insistence on perceiving my requests as a problem of personal incompatibility is to ignore the allegations of personnel rules violations of a serious nature. To discuss and seek amendment of the violations with the violator is not my responsibility. That responsibility is explicitly given to the Director of the division.

Your comment to me in your office on January 22, 1979, referencing "Aardvark" indicated to me that you already knew about Mr. Nelson's and Mrs. Crawford's violations of the personnel rules which were of a serious nature.

Mr. Messenger should be aware of Mr. Nelson's violation of the personnel rules with regard to an employee's privacy under Federal and State law since both Mr. Messenger and of course, Mr. Nelson, were in attendence at the hearing on that and various other violations which culminated in the total reinstatement of Diane Painter.

Discussion at the hearing also focused on Mr. Nelson's and Mrs. Crawford's unauthorized absences from their place of duty while employed as tax auditors by the Department of Revenue.

It is not a case of the violations not being known, but rather a case of the failure of appointed officials to carry out the rules and regulations in an unbiased manner.

The Department of Revenue should be above reproach if we are going to enforce our Statutes and maintain compliance of the law. As public employees, this is a large part of our responsibility to the citizens of Alaska.

DEPARTMENT OF NATURAL RESOURCES STATEMENT

TO THE BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION

ON STATE EMPLOYMENT ACT

Ladies and gentlemen of the Blue Ribbon Commission,

As a representative of the Alaska Department of Natural Resources, I appreciate this opportunity to discuss two items of critical concern to both the Commission and to the Department: state hiring procedures, and the use of temporary positions. My statement will attempt to identify some of the concerns that program managers within a line agency have, and which we feel should be taken into account in this committee's deliberations and recommendations that may be made regarding changes in State Personnel Act legislation. I will identify suggested courses of action which we think would help alleviate some of the problems that have been presented to this committee and which will still allow us to accomplish the many and varied programs that we as managers are hired to do. There are several other line program managers from the Department of Natural Resources in attendance here today who may be able to answer specific questions you may have at the end of this statement.

It is important that this Commission make recommendations which retain sufficient flexibility in the hiring system to allow the program manager to make the choice as to which person he wants to hire to do the job that he or she is responsible for. In order to accomplish this, current state hiring procedures require revisions. We recommend that the Commission consider the following changes in hiring procedures:

1. That applicants no longer be ranked on hiring registers. Applicants should meet certain minimum qualifications to get on the register, but then the program managers should be allowed to select whoever they feel best qualified for the particular vacancy's responsibilities.

2. Establish a review panel for each professional job class. The function of the panel would be to establish criteria for the job class and to hear appeals from individuals denied certification by the normal process. Individuals who are not certified as being qualified for that job class would have the ability to appeal the decision of the analyst to the review panel. The panel could consist of approximately five individuals: two representatives from the Division of Personnel, specifically the Personnel Analyst responsible for certifying eligible candidates for that job class, and the personnel supervisor responsible for that job class; two representatives either working in that job class within State government or in a similar position in the private sector; and a representative program manager who supervises people in that job class.

3. Permanent fulltime probationary personnel should be evaluated in writing on their job performance quarterly for the length of their probationary period. Quarterly evaluations will assist the program manager in determining if the new employee can perform as needed.

It is my opinion that many of the problems and abuses of temporary hires stem from the current hiring procedures that many times do not allow program managers to hire the people they feel are best qualified to do the work. Therefore, by taking care of these state hiring procedures problems, we will also go a long way toward solving the problems associated with temporary hires in state government.

I have the following recommendations regarding temporaries:

1. They should be hired from the unranked registers (as described above.)

2. The State should provide full fringe benefits for temporaries.

3. A category of project temporaries should be established to be used for carrying out one-time, limited duration tasks with a maximum duration of 36 months. These positions should be used for specific tasks mandated by the legislature or the federal government.

4. Temporaries should be able to work up to a maximum of nine months.

I recognize that there have been cases of temporary hire abuse in the past. However, these abuses can be most effectively dealt with at the departmental or program manager level rather than making sweeping changes in procedures and rules because of isolated cases of abuse.

CONCLUSION

In summary, I feel that there are revisions in state hiring procedures and in the use of temporary employees that should be made to make the system more equitable to the employers, the employees, and the taxpayers of the State of Alaska. I have identified some of these recommendations in a general way in this statement, but recognize that much more work and review is needed. Since any proposed revisions of the State Personnel Act will have a profound impact on our ability to accomplish our job, I suggest that future position papers/draft proposals be circulated within state government for review and comments. Thank you for your time and attention.

Statement presented by Al Carson, Deputy Director, Division of Lands

January 27, 1979

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
Capitol Building, Juneau
January 10, 1979

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the hearing to order and invited public testimony.

PUBLIC TESTIMONY

Ivan Lewis, Record and Archives Center Manager, presented testimony concerning problems he has experienced in having his position reclassified and his salary range upgraded. He believes that his classification should be placed in the supervisory unit, in accordance with job responsibilities. Mr. Lewis, under direction of the State Archivist, is responsible for managing the entire Center and supervising Record Handlers. Mr. Lewis' position is at the same range as that of a Records Analyst II, but he must be knowledgeable in the duties of a Records Analyst III to function on a day-to-day basis (attached is the Division of Personnel's job description for Records Center Manager and Records Handler, pertaining to Mr. Lewis' testimony).

Since 1972, Mr. Lewis has been submitting P402's to the Division of Personnel explaining the responsibilities of his position and justification for reclassification. The most recent submission was a total of eight pages, describing his supervisory functions and all other aspects of managing the center. The paperwork was approved by John M. Kinney, State Archivist, and received by the Personnel Department in July, 1978. By October, it reached Carolyn Hinkey, an employee in the Classification and Pay Section of the Division of Personnel. Mr. Lewis pointed out that Ms. Hinkey is a Registered Nurse, but because of general educational requirements, she has been classified as a Register Analyst III. Ms. Hinkey and Mr. Lewis frequently discussed the subject of his reclassification, and Ms. Hinkey eventually requested information on other comparable positions. Mr. Lewis supplied her with information on positions within other states, which were at much higher salary ranges. He also provided detailed information from Robert Martin, President of the Anchorage Records Center, in writing. Mr. Lewis' responsibilities are the equivalent of Mr. Martin's, the only exception being accounting functions which Mr. Martin handles. The state's range 21 would be the equivalent of Mr. Martin's salary.

On January 1, Mr. Lewis was informed by the Division of Personnel that he was reclassified at range 15 at longevity step "J". Mr. Lewis' response to this was discouragement. He has been in this professional position for eight years, yet is being compared to a Mail Run Supervisor. Mr. Lewis stated that Ms. Hinkey misquoted information on comparable positions, and she flatly refused to take information received into consideration. He was told that he should be satisfied with a one step increase even though his range is below that of a Central File Clerk at range 16.

Senator Ray asked Mr. Lewis how long it would take to retrieve a normal record from the center. Mr. Lewis responded that it would be done within five minutes and that he directly supervises three employees responsible for receiving, classifying controlling and storing a variety of office records. The files are organized according to needs and systems are audited regularly. All records entering the center must be inventoried daily. Mr. Lewis and two other employees are authorized to handle security files.

Mr. Lewis mentioned his concern about testifying, stating that he had testified before the legislature in 1976. Following his testimony, he submitted a P402 for a salary increase. It was recommended that his position be downgraded two steps. Commissioner Allen questioned the topic of his testimony before the legislature. Mr. Lewis responded that it was in regard to Executive Order 28, on dividing the archives and placing records under Surplus Property.

Senator Ray asked how many employees were involved in the center's operation. Mr. Lewis replied that there are four people who pull and hand deliver files. The central mail system is not used because of the records' importance. Senator Ray asked if there was an active file retention system. Mr. Lewis responded that files are kept active for six months before going into dead storage and that 2,000 searches are done every month.

Mr. Lewis stated that he had tried to bring this matter to the attention of Pat Hunt, but a Personnel Officer refused to give him permission, even if he took a day of annual leave. Pat Hunt responded that he is concerned about the testimony heard. He stated that Mr. Lewis is apparently responsible for heavy supervisory duties and that he should be compensated accordingly. He suggested that there was a discrepancy between what his functions are and how they have been recorded. Mr. Lewis informed the Commission that all the correspondence he received was signed by Mike McMullen, Chief of Classification and Pay. Mr. McMullen reports to Ken Kareen, who reports to Pat Hunt. Senator Ray commented that the problem should have been brought to Pat Hunt's attention. Pat Hunt asked if Mr. Lewis had spoken with the director of his division. Mr. Lewis stated that he was sent to the Deputy Director, who responded in a negative manner. The matter has since been turned over to APEA.

Greg O'Claray pointed out that it is not the Commission's function to become involved in grievances. Senator Ray responded that it is a concern to maintain an open door policy in all departments. Commissioner Allen concurred.

Mr. Lewis mentioned another problem regarding the elimination of a Micro Film Operator III position. It should be classified at a manager level, and upgrading of the position has been stopped in Classification and Pay. Because of a budget cut of $3,000, the center would be unable to fill the position even if it were classified at a higher range. Mr. Lewis continued, stating that the position could have been filled if the Division of Personnel had acted within six months in reclassifying to a management level. Senator Ray pointed out that if the Finance Committee doesn't hear justification for the existence of a position, it will be cut.

Commissioner Allen stated that he had heard a different version of the story: The Micro Film Operator position was advertised, without any response. Mr. Lewis stated that there had been a response and that if the specifications had been completed for the management reclassificatuon, the applicant would have qualified. There are three individuals employed by the state as Micro Film Operator III's who would seek a management position in that field. This ended Mr. Lewis' testimony.

Bruce Kindred, a temporary employee with the state, suggested that the Commission should recommend that court leave be made available to temporaries. The Personnel Rules state that temporary employees hired for periods of less than 12 consecutive months are not eligible to receive compensation for time spent on jury duty. Section 4 of Article 29 of the APEA contract provides that employees who are called to serve as jurors or subpoenaed as witnesses shall be entitled to court leave. The contract defines the word "employee" as a person in state service who is paid a salary or wage and holds probationary, permanent, or provisional status. The Division of Labor Relations has refused to interpret the definition to include temporaries.

Mr. Kindred pointed out that after being on active jury duty for one week, he lost a sizeable portion of his salary, even though minimally compensated by the court system. He feels that serving on a jury is a civic responsibility and that temporaries should not be treated differently from permanent employees.

Senator Ray suggested that the Commission should recommend that this section of the law be changed. Niel Thomas responded that this might also be applied to military leave for reserve members. Senator Ray pointed out that one chooses to enter the reserves. The question was referred to the Category of Employees Subcommittee.

Don Kinderis, an Alaskan resident, presented his problems in trying to obtain work with the state for over two years. Prior to his relocation to Juneau, he owned a business in mechanical systems balance for commercial enterprises. This work involved knowledge of building mechanics and engineering.

Mr. Kinderis has been on 28 registers during the past two years and is number one on several. He has never had an interview. On many occasions, he has received notification of interviews two or three days after the date of the interview. In some instances, classifications that he has been registered for have been eliminated.

Pat Hunt stated that vacant positions should be sought out by individuals. Often, applicants are unemployed for so long that they are extremely agressive in presenting themselves to prospective employers. He suggested that Mr. Kinderis let the departmental personnel offices know of his availability. He emphasized that the Division is responsible only for sending out registers, and that Mr. Kinderis should find out who is looking for employees by stopping by the Division to look at the lists of vacant positions.

Mr. Kinderis mentioned that he knows many people in the design management and energy conservation fields working for the state. He is listed as number 8 out of 24 applicants on the register for Design Manager I, but there are no others in the state with his level of expertise in mechanical systems balance. He is aware of Building Manager Specialist I, II and III positions that have been open in the state, but he has never been notified or interviewed.

Commissioner Allen asked Mr. Kinderis if he knew whom to speak with in the appropriate divisions where the openings had occurred. Mr. Kinderis responded that he knew of one in the Division of Public Works or Buildings. After going to the Division of Personnel and presenting his problems, he never received a response or the service he expected. He has even been sent to the wrong locations at times. Frank Flavin stated that he has seen this type of problem while working in the Ombudsman's Office. It happens because departments are not required to interview each applicant within the top five on a register. Ken Spray noted that because Mr. Kinderis had been on the top five of numerous registers for some time, program managers are probably avoiding any contact with him, believing that he has been judged an undesirable employee.

Pat Murphy stated that an applicant should not have to be an aggressive job seeker to find a position. That would be losing track of the entire register concept. He believes that each of the top five applicants should have the chance to be interviewed. A prospective employer can get a much better perspective of an applicant through a personal interview.

John Pugh interjected that the Department of Health and Social Services is interviewing applicants on the registers in chronological progression, starting with number one. The interviewing process continues until an applicant is hired. He believes that this should be a state requirement.

Niel Thomas questioned Mr. Kinderis on the times he had received notification of interviews too late to be able to attend: Could the delays be attributed to RCA or the postal system? Lynda McCurry responded, stating that there are serious delays in deliveries made by both. Mr. Thomas suggested that either calling applicants or giving them more time to respond would solve the problem.

Frank Flavin pointed out that program managers have previously testified that registers are not valuable because individuals have been on registers for long periods of time and are therefore not qualified for positions. Mr. Kinderis has presented another side of the situation. Senator Ray stated that someone is needed within the Division of Personnel to follow through on service to applicants. Commissioner Allen supported the concept that all five applicants should be offered interviews and that sufficient time should be given for response to notification of interviews. The departments should not rely on RCA or the postal system.

Frank Flavin added that these matters could be handled much faster if the Department of Administration had a grievance person or trouble-shooter. Not all employees or applicants are aware of the concept of the Ombudsman's Office.

Ken Spray brought up the subject of the state paying travel expenses for initial interviewing of applicants. He related examples of non-residents being brought to Alaska at the state's expense to fill high-level positions. John Pugh suggested that one way to avoid travel expenses would be to use outside locations: There is a need to encourage departments to hold interviews state-wide. One particular complaint is that Anchorage residents are never considered for positions in Juneau.

Niel Thomas suggested that telephone interviews could be a solution, especially for rural residents and where there are no staff members to handle interviews in isolated locations. This would eliminate paying for transportation until an initial screening process had been completed.

Ken Spray responded that, because of Local 71's experiences, he believes initial telephone interviews to be an exercise in futility. John Pugh stated that an individual has the right to be interviewed at least by phone.

Senator Ray commented on the tendency to believe that the Division of Personnel is the "bad guy", responsible for the system's problems. The Division's functions are entirely different from what is generally understood by the public.

Frank Flavin stated that when departments avoid filling vacancies, the Ombudsman's Office receives complaints from applicants not being interviewed. If there was a requirement to interview the top five, the Office would lose this indicator. Commissioner Allen responded that an applicant would be able to distinguuish the difference between a cursory and a meaningful interview. Pat Murphy suggested that a written record of interviews be maintained consisting of general comments and reason for not hiring. Senator Ray concurred that some type of procedure would have to be implemented to justify not hiring. Commissioner Allen commented that the summaries would be the subjective opinions of each interviewer and that putting this information on the register or within the applicant's personnel file would be unfair to the applicant.

Mr. Kinderis suggested that mandatory interviewing of the top five with a short evaluation given to the person being interviewed as a possibility. There would then be an understanding reached when the applicant is not hired.

Commissioner Allen suggested that frequently, when a name is on a register for long periods of time, an interviewer's attitude toward that applicant may be negative before an interview actually takes place. This may have been Mr. Kinderis' problem in finding employment.

Niel Thomas discussed the possibility of supplying a written explanation for not hiring, which would be available to the applicant upon request. This could be based solely on job requirements and an applicant's qualifications. It would do away with paperwork and complaints.

Ken Spray indicated that with Local 71's preferential hiring system, the union contract specifies that the employer must present justification to both the union and the applicant for not hiring. This justification points out an applicant's strengths and weaknesses for future reference. Mr. Spray elaborated that the public looks upon the Division of Personnel as a service-oriented agency. However, the initial concern of the Division is to provide management with positions.

Frank Flavin stated that when discrepancies or problems are brought to the Division's attention, they respond well. The audit and grievance role has not been emphasized and some type of monitoring system should be initiated. Senator Ray concurred that someone should be placed within the Division to monitor the operational procedures to see that people and registers are treated fairly.

Pat Murphy suggested that the audit function be assigned to an outside group, thus ensuring compliance with set guidelines. Commissioner Allen stated that he would like to be in a position to receive complaints within the Department before they are brought to the attention of other agencies.

John Pugh expressed his belief that the audit and grievance functions are very important within private businesses and are treated accordingly. He recommended the creation of a proper audition role. Pat Hunt stated that people represented by unions have adequate means of representation. Senator Ray disagreed, stating that representation is only adequate after a complaint has been filed.

Pat Murphy asserted that APEA cannot, at this time, provide representation until a complaint is filed with them. Senator Ray agreed that action can only be taken after the fact by these agencies. Therefore, an active monitoring system is needed. Ken Spray pointed out that the option of filing grievances and going into binding arbitration is open to employees. He added that Local 71 has represented individuals neither employed by the state nor members of that union. Some are reluctant to pursue grievances. Niel Thomas suggested that case-by-case review of past grievances could possibly identify a number of problem areas, which would be helpful in devising recommendations.

Commissioner Allen commented that the discussion had not focused on a solution. He asked if requiring all top five eligibles be interviewed was something the Commission would like to implement. Senator Ray responded that specific recommendations be drafted and prepared for presentation at the next meeting in Anchorage. Commissioner Allen agreed to consider implementing a pilot program requiring interviews for all top five applicants on registers.

Jim Donner, a temporary Correctional Officer at the Lemon Creek facility, testified regarding his reactions to the state's hiring system. He finds that there are insufficient opportunities for temporaries to fill permanent positions. The time it takes to be tested and to have an application processed is a deterrent to applying for permanent positions. Mr. Donner, after working as a temporary in many departments, is an advocate of Local 71's preferential hiring system.

On one occasion, Mr. Donner was hired in an emergency situation, worked for two weeks and was then hired as a temporary. One month later, he was informed that he owed the state money because he had been overpaid. The money he was offered initially was an inaccurate figure, and he was forced to pay the difference back.

Mr. Donner has been a temporary at the Lemon Creek Facility three times in the past, as a Correctional Officer and as a Chief Steward. Each time, he has been paid at an entry-level range 13, while others in the same permanent positions were at much higher ranges.

Mr. Donner believes that Division of Personnel's tests are discriminatory and do not relate to actual job requirements. Too much emphasis is placed on educational requirements and vocabulary testing. He stated that tests should be based on job descriptions and the actual duties to be performed in each class.

Senator Ray asked if the educational requirements are too high, or if there is too much emphasis placed on requirements rather than experience. Mr. Donner responded that enty-level requirements and credit for experience are fine. Sometimes, credit is not given for experience in particular positions. Pat Hunt explained that the Division of Personnel has created many substitutions for requirements and that the Division develops tests from descriptions supplied by departments. Lynda McCurry added that personnel officers have direct input into the makeup of examinations. Mr. Donner expressed his concern that educational requirements are particularly rigid for women and that the entire application and evaluation process is time consuming. Applicants are not given sufficient time to respond to notification of available positions and registers are circumvented continually.

Senator Ray asked if there is some type of pool of permanent employees within the state to fill in when the need arises. This would be particularly useful in supplying an employer with someone while in the process of filling a permanent position.

Dan Haynes, an employee with the state for ten years, testified concerning his recent termination for insubordination. He explained that there was a personality conflict with his supervisor and that he was not recommended for rehire on his evaluation. As a result, he must work for six months as a temporary or in the private sector before he is eligible for testing and placement on registers. Mr. Haynes pointed out that if he were able to work for another six years, he would be able to retire.

Senator Ray asked if a supervisor has the authority to recommend on a termination evaluation that an employee not be rehired. Ken Spray replied that it is possible. Niel Thomas questioned if this meant that the individual's name would be removed from all registers. Senator Ray asked if the decision could be appealed. Pat Hunt replied that it is grievable and that most often, a terminated employee will not be recommended for rehire for a certain period of time. Commissioner Allen asked why, if Mr. Haynes had been terminated in June, he could not be placed on the registers again, since the time limit had expired. Mr. Haynes responded that he is not eligible because the rule requires that an individual be employed for six months before being considered for rehire.

Senator Ray pointed out that not recommending rehire within the same department would be reasonable, but on a state-wide scope it isn't. Mr. Haynes said that his union did take the matter to the Commissioner's level and then recommended no further action. Ken Spray stated that Local 71 has, in some instances, negotiated "not recommended for rehire" into "voluntary termination". However, clear-cut insubordination is a different story.

Senator Ray expressed concern that one supervisor can stipulate that an employee not be rehired statewide for a certain amount of time. Commissioner Allen agreed that this option should not be used lightly, but said that it seems inconsistent for the state to be able to rehire immediately as a temporary.

Senator Ray suggested that cause for termination should be clearly documented. Frank Flavin stated that he could see no reason for removing an individual from the registers, but did see the need to explain the termination. Niel Thomas pointed out that in state service, everyone has the right to see their written performance evaluations. Ken Spray added that an employee has the right to a rebuttal of any evaluation which is to be included in a permanent employee file. Senator Ray suggested that employee evaluations be reviewed at interviews. He asked if record files follow an employee from job to job. Pat Hunt responded that the Division of Personnel has master files which are maintained for the duration of employment with the state. Departments maintain personnel files for a period of six months, after which they are sent to the Archives Center for storage. Commissioner Allen stated that many employees wish to see evaluations on past performance and that they can be pulled from Division of Personnel's files for review.

Don Kinderis testified again. Three years ago, he worked for the Department of Fish and Game. After ten weeks, he was informend that there was insufficient work to keep him on, and he was dismissed. Two years later, he received a copy of his evaluation, which he had requested many times. The evaluation, dated the day he left, stated that he had too many personal problems to be a state employee and did not address the quality of his work. Mr. Kinderis believes that this information is on his record and is one reason that he has been unable to find a job. Mr. Kinderis explained that his supervisor disliked the fact that he had his own methods of performing his duties, despite the proficiency he displayed. Mr. Kinderis had not seen the evaluation before it was mailed to him, had never signed it and was offered no reason for why it was not discussed at the time of his dismissal.

Senator Ray suggested that this would be a good reason for considering a trouble-shooter or auditor within the Division of Personnel to look into these matters. Don Fisher stated that an evaluation should be made available before an employee leaves a position as well as a statement of the reason for dismissal. Commissioner Allen requested that Mr. Kinderis see Ken Kareen to discuss the discrepancies between his evaluation and the reasons he was given for dismissal.

COMMITTEE BUSINESS

NCSL Conference

Don Fisher brought up the subject of an honorarium for Dr. Couturier. Frank Flavin made a motion that the Commission approve the honorarium in the amount of $500.00. Don Fisher added that Dr. Couturier might come for less. The motion was adopted for an honorarium in the amount of $500.00. Senator Ray and Greg O'Claray opposed. Pat Hunt asked why Wisconsin and Minnesota speakers were chosen to present their state personnel procedures. Don Fisher explained that the two states had recently revised their personnel structures and can offer innovative alternatives for the Commission's consideration.

USCSC Meeting in Washington:

Terry Cramer advised the Commission that there will be a meeting of the USCSC in Washington. NCSL is a co-sponsor and would like to invite three Commission members to attend. Senator Ray appointed himself, Greg O'Claray and Pat Murphy to represent the Commission. Niel Thomas also expressed a desire to attend the meeting at his own expense.

Commission Expenses:

Senator Ray stated that he wishes to be advised of anticipated unusual travel expenditures for Commission members (i.e. car rentals). The Chair or the full Commission must approve those expenditures prior to incurring them.

Subcommittee Reports:

John Pugh recommended that the subcommittees prepare reports to use in drafting the Commission's report to the legislature. The Commission agreed to hold a work session in Anchorage on January 26 for individual subcommittees to prepare recommendations. Senator Ray directed the staff to use the postal service directly to send out summaries and material needed for the next meeting to members in Anchorage.

Niel Thomas asked whether the Commission will request continuation. Senator Ray pointed out that the work of the Commission is in its formative stages, and the Commission should justify its existence by presenting an initial report to the legislature.

PUBLIC TESTIMONY

Kit Stewart, a Finance Officer with the Department of Environmental Conservation, expressed her satisfaction with the state's hiring procedures. One problem that she has encountered is that an employee within the department has a criminal record, which was not revealed in the individual's application.

Senator Ray responded, stating that this is a very sensitive matter. Information on criminal convictions is confidential. Pat Hunt explained that applicants' criminal records are checked when applying for positions in Public Safety or correctional facilities. Greg O'Claray stated that he could not see why it was imprortant that Ms. Stewart have this information. Having to reveal a criminal record could lead to discrimination against the applicant. Ms. Stewart replied that the issue that concerned her was that the applicant had falsified the application form. Ms. Stewart added that, at present, it is impossible to verify whether the employee is misrepresenting facts on an application. Senator Ray questioned the relevance of this ir regard to the employee's performance.

Ron McMahon, an Ecologist with the Department of Environmental Conservation, stated that job classifications assigned by the state do not relate to actual job functions. Existing classifications cover many specialized jobs in different departments. Mr. McMahon suggested that the Division of Personnel consider reclassification studies. He is presently coordinating a project review, which has nothing to do directly with Ecologists, and feels that his title should be Program Coordinator. The Division of Personnel had received the position description and said that the closest classification would be Ecologist.

Niel Thomas asked if Mr. McMahon had read the class specifications on what his duties consist of. He also questioned whether a department hiring from that register would be looking for an Ecologist. Mr. McMahon answered that he is not doing the work of an Ecologist, but must be familiar with the field.

Senator Ray commented that possibly the department is afraid to reclassify existing positions because that might result in positions being placed at lower salary ranges.

Mr. McMahon also brought up the subject of entry-level positions for Chemists. In order to qualify for a Chemist I position, an applicant must have one year of experience. There is no Chemist Trainee classification in the state.

Pat Hunt asked whether the departments would request Chemist Trainees if the class were created. Mr. McMahon stated that it would be filled, providing a career ladder for laboratory techinicians. Ken Kareen explained that the Chemist series has been examined by the Division of Personnel, and departments stated that they need experienced applicants rather than trainees.

Niel Thomas expressed the Human Rights Commission's perspective in relation to equal employment opportunity. The state should compete with private firms for recent college graduates. The lack of trainee positions is one reason why EEO practices in the state are inadequate. To compete with private firms, Mr. Thomas suggests creating a Chemist Trainee class to provide greater opportunities for women and members of minority groups.

Senator Ray pointed out that trainee positions are looked upon adversely by Budget and Management: Why train on-the-job when applicants have received training in school? Niel Thomas responded that in higher-level positions, orientation can take up to a year, even for new employees with prior experience in the field.

Pat Hunt stated that no department has requested a Chemist Trainee position, and that it would be pointless to create a classification without justification. Mr. McMahon responded that he was not the first person to make the suggestion and that a position of this type would be used in his department. Similar fields do have entry-level starting points. Senator Ray observed that one of the easiest solutions would be to rewrite minimum qualifications to allow recent graduates an opportunity to apply. The topic was referred to the Certification, Classification and Recruitment Subcommittee for review.

CORRESPONDENCE RECEIVED

Terry Cramer presented the following summaries on correspondence received:

Mrs. James L. Sumner wrote to the Commission regarding her belief, as a foster parent, that Social Workers should be considered professionals in that field. To maintain the quality of workers, Mrs. Sumner suggests that either educational requirements be increased or training after hire be closely supervised.

A concerned taxpayer wrote in regard to examinations for semi-professional positions. Examinations were described as outmoded, inaccurate, laborious and invalid, as well as not being pertinent to the actual jobs or selection of candidates. Also mentioned was the time it takes to schedule testing in Anchorage (weeks), which is held in a room with inadequate ventilation. The attitude of Anchorage employees in the personnel office was described as "very rude". The individual concluded the letter by stating that it is hoped that the Commission's investigation will result in procedures to teach these people to act as a service organization.

Marilyn Martin attached to her correspondence a copy of a letter to Governor Hammond pertaining to citizen evaluations of Commissioners. She referred to problems experienced when her position as Wage/Hour Investigator in the Resident Hire program was eliminated. Ms. Martin was assured that she would be transferred to another Department of Labor position if the U.S. Supreme Court ruled the Resident Hire Law unconstitutional. She knew of vacancies in unemployment fraud investigator classification and was on the register for Claims Investigator I. Two positions in Anchorage and Juneau were filled by other state employee transfers. A position in Fairbanks was filled by someone who may not have been a state employee. Ms. Martin was not contacted about any of these positions. She is now unemployed and questions the ethics of the situation and the follow-through of Commissioner Orbeck's policies by the Department of Labor's staff.

A copy of a memo to Jay Hammond, Governor, was received by the staff in reference to the Anchorage Field Office of the Division of Personnel. The staff was described as being rude and condescending. The author suggested that if the Commissioner insisted on courtesy, these rotten attitudes would not have existed for the past several years.

Ms. Irene Price elaborated on her testimony before the Commission on December 1. She emphasized that she spoke only on her own behalf. Ms. Price indicated that she believes communication to be a problem between the Division of Personnel and other state agencies, particularly in the following situations:

1. Initiation of tests for a given job classification without the knowledge of the affected unit.

2. Reclassification of positions without communication with the incumbent.

Dan Crevensten wrote in support of an increase in the use of part-time positions. He identified advantages for the state:

1. The use of temporary positions would be reduced.

2. There would be a better match between available positions and the amount of work.

3. Studies have shown that part-time employees have greater productivity and less absenteeism.

4. Equal employment goals could be easier to meet.

In his experience, Mr. Crevensten felt that state agencies should take into consideration part-time work. By the time an applicant interviews with a supervisor, it is too late to implement such a program.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
Full Commission Hearing

In the absence of Senator Ray and Don Fisher, Representative Buchholdt chaired the meeting.

PUBLIC TESTIMONY

Mr. Fathy A. Elshamma moved to Fairbanks from Egypt in 1976 and worked as an Accountant with the Native Association for 13 months. During a vacation, he returned to Egypt and along with his family relocated to Fairbanks. Mr. Elshamma has been seeking employment since his return. He is listed on six registers and willing to accept employment in Juneau, Anchorage and Ketchikan, as well as in Fairbanks.

Mr. Elshamma was contacted on November 7, 1978, by Tom Lusk about a Bank Examiner I position in Juneau. In his conversation with Mr. Lusk, Mr. Elshamma indicated that he would be willing to accept immediate employment in Juneau and would be willing to take the next plane out of Fairbanks if necessary. Mr. Elshamma was instructed to wait for a response. One week later, he received a letter stating that the position had been filled. He questioned why he was never called back and brought the matter to the Governor's Office. The job was still listed as being open on that date, and the office verified the opening by phone. Mr. Elshamma had received a letter stating that the position had been filled.

Niel Thomas asked Mr. Elshamma if he had tried to contact the individual who was responsible for contacting him. He replied that he had not. Mr. Thomas suggested he call back and request an explanation. Mr. Thomas also suggested that a complaint should be filed if a satisfactory explanation was not provided.

Ms. Marianne Berry, a PHN, advised the committee of the problems they continue to have with reclassification of PHN positions throughout the state. Niel Thomas told the committee that the Assistant U.S. Labor Secretary, who is responsible for enforcing compliance with equal pay for equal work laws, has been in the state and is considering U.S. Government suit.

COMMITTEE DISCUSSION

Representative Buchholdt briefly discussed the written testimony received by a representative of the Classified Personnel Organization dated December 13, 1978. Copies will be sent out with committee minutes.

PERSONNEL ACT REVIEW COMMISSION
November 16, 1978

The third meeting of the Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act was called to order in Room 123 of the State Capitol by Chairman Bill Ray at 1:30 p.m., November 16, 1978. Following roll call, Chairman Ray suggested that the proposed rules of procedure be considered. Adoption of rules was approved by acclaimation.

Representative Eliason stated that he had missed the previous meeting and asked for permission to distribute a statement of potential problems the commission should consider.

Chairman Ray suggested that all commission members request and invite their alternates to be present at all meetings. In this way, the alternates will be current on commission activities and can make a meaningful contribution if their principle member is absent. The Chairman asked the secretary to invite the alternates and keep them informed of all meetings. He also reminded the legislators to keep this in mind because of potential conflicts in meeting times during the legislative session.

Don Fisher told the commission about a conference he attended in Olympia, Washington, on October 18 by the National Council of State Legislatures. He explained that the Council's Project TRAIN is focusing on personnel systems and problems involved. The group is headed by Mr. Couturier, who is well known for his work in this field. He suggested that TRAIN would be able to come to Juneau and work with the commission without expense to the State. We only need to furnish a meeting room and group of interested participants for the presentation.

Mr. Fisher moved that TRAIN be invited to Juneau. It was approved by acclaimation. The Chairman and secretary will work to set up a couple of days for the presentation, to be scheduled after the legislature is in session.

The Chairman asked for a subcommittee report from the Merit System/Collective Bargaining group. Niel Thomas stated that they did not meet because of the late notification of the November 9 meeting. They will meet at a later date.

Frank Flavin moved to abolish the subcommittee on Merit System/Collective Bargaining, because the merit system question could be addressed in another subcommittee. Chairman Ray disagreed. He stated that the legislature expects to be informed on that topic.

Discussion followed concerning the areas of responsibility of each subcommittee. The commission must be sure to cover all of the important topics.

A vote on Mr. Flavin's motion was taken and failed. The Merit System/Collective Bargaining subcommittee will stand as is.

Representative McKinnon reported on the Category of Employees subcommittee. They plan to first address the problem of temporary, seasonal, and part-time employees. He also expressed a concern about overlooking certain topics because of vague subcommittee assignments. Chairman Ray referred to the October 3, 1978, meeting minutes listing topics of concern for subcommittees. Because of the over-lapping of members on each subcommittee, he feels sure that the commission will be able to cover all necessary topics.

The meeting was opened to public speakers. Roger Thayer, Personnel Officer, Department of Transportation & Public Facilities spoke first. Mr. Thayer suggested that the personnel system be decentralized to some extent. Recruitment, certification, and classification are areas that individual departments could successfully take charge of. Departmental personnel offices could classify their own unique positions, thus increasing accuracy and eliminating Division of Personnel paperwork. Classificaiton of general state-wide jobs could go through the Division of Personnel. He agreed with the concept of promotions within a department whenever possible and of hiring new people at entry-level jobs.

Discussion followed regarding the need for a person to be on several registers for classifications of the same type. Ken Kareen explained that it was necessary to operate that way because higher levels of the same type of job may require additional skills such as supervisory abilities, while placing less emphasis on technical skills.

The Division of Personnel's veto power over classification was discussed and seen as a problem. Many people see the division as impossible to work with, or through, because of the time involved.

Lynda McCurry explained that classification changes need to be looked at when a person has a change in responsibility. If you have a change in tasks, that may call for a re-classification. If you have a larger volume of work, that may call for an additional person at the same classification.

Danny Plotnik, Coordinator of the Office on Aging, addressed the commission next on the problem of workers in the federally-funded SCSEP Program being classified as temporary employees. He introduced Eileen Rehwald, who expanded on the problem. Several of her people have been terminated because of the time limitations on State temporary employees.

These employees, under the federal program, were still eligible for additional hours of work. Also, federal guidelines preclude labeling employees under the SCSEP Program. She introduced one of the employees affected by this problem, Luberta Escholt. Ms. Escholt appealed to the commission to try to do something that would help her and others in the same situation.

Chairman Ray directed the matter to the Classification of Employees subcommittee to look into establishing these as partially-exempt positions. The APEA will also look into this matter. There should be some work completed by November 30.

Mary McClinton was the next speaker. Mary presently has a case being considered by the Human Rights Commission. She was employed by the Department of Community & Regional Affairs, which reorganized its staff, and had been excluded from transfer to another job. She was the only member of the staff to be excluded. Even though she was among the top five on a large number of registers, she has not found another state job. She would like to see the system improved so that this does not happen to others.

Some discussion followed on related problems. Frank Flavin hoped that if Ms. McClinton was found to be qualified and was indeed discriminated against that some disciplinary action would be taken against those persons responsible.

LaRae Jones, Personnel Officer from the Governor's Office, spoke next. She commented on how little training there was in the state system to provide new employees with the technical training needed on the workings of the specific systems. There have been two training sessions since last May, but she felt there should be more. People could do their jobs more effectively if they didn't have to learn by trial and error.

Public participation ended.

Chairman Ray made additions to subcommittee memberships. Ken Spray, Niel Thomas, and Lynda McCurry were added to the Categories of Employees subcommittee. John Pugh was added to the Collective Bargaining subcommittee.

Chairman Ray reported that the Centralization/Decentralization subcommittee met, heard testimony, and will meet again.

Questions arose regarding the appropriate subcommittee for classification and hiring processes. The responsibility was given to the Centralization/Decentralization subcommittee. Niel Thomas asked if it would be possible to rename the committee. It was moved by acclaimation that the subcommittee be renamed "Classification, Certification, and Recruitment".

Mr. Thomas asked whether the Commission needed to investigate the other classes of state employees; namely, partially exempt and fully exempt.

Mr. Spray stated that there are presently 253 vacant permanent positions in jobs covered by APSE members. He suggested that the situation be investigated.

Chairman Ray stated that the meetings would continue in the order given previously; the subcommittees followed by the full committee. Work will be given at least one week in advance of the meeting dates. Also, note that a quorum of eight people is not necessary to hold meaningful discussions.

Representative Eliason recommended that the "Merit Increase Paper" be referred to the Merit System/Collective Bargaining subcommittee. It was agreed.

Chairman Ray read correspondence received by the Commission from Loren Jones. The letter was referred to the Certification/Classification/Recruitment subcommittee.

Meeting dates were set for the next meetings in Anchorage. They are November 30 and December 1, 1978. All members will be notified of the meeting place and can receive a T.R. from Legislative Affairs.

The next meeting was tentatively set for December 12 and 13 in Fairbanks.

The meeting was adjourned at 4:00 p.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
Full Commission Meeting
Juneau
November 16, 1978

ADDENDA

The following is an addenda to the Full Commission Minutes for the Blue Ribbon Commission hearing of November 16, 1978. The addenda was proposed by Ken Kareen, to be inserted on Page 2, as a substitute for Paragraph 5. The addenda was adopted at the Full Commission hearing on January 10, 1979:

Discussion followed regarding the need for an applicant to take different examinations when the job classes applied for are in the same class series (i.e., Accountant III, IV, V). Ken Kareen explained that different skills may be required and test contents emphasize those differences. Tests for a lower level job are concentrated on technical knowledge in aspects of the work, while higher level jobs in series make more demands on supervisory/management skills and knowledge, which are the subject of testing.

Also, Page 2, Paragraph 6, should read:

The Division of Budget and Management's veto power over classification studies was discussed and seen as a problem.

MINUTES

Personnel Act Review Commission Meeting
October 3, 1978

The second meeting of the Personnel Act Review Commission was called to order in Room 123 of the State Capitol by Chairman Bill Ray at 1:30 p.m., October 3, 1978. Following roll call, Don Fisher reported that he had received more than fifty applications for the director's position, had interviewed just about all of those applicants and, in consultation with the chairman, was ready to make a selection in the next few days. Mr. Fisher reported that there was a possibility of using office space on the tenth floor of the State Office Building adjacent to the division of personnel, but that it would not be available until November 1. Senator Ray reviewed the actions of the last meeting and asked if anyone wanted to contribute public input concerning their problems with the personnel system.

Violet Thetford testified and was concerned with hiring practices and felt that the entire personnel system is bogged down with paper. There had been a problem with redundant testing. Mr. Hunt confirmed the basic facts.

Rosalee Walker testified on problems of in-house promotions. She felt that making political appointments to higher level positions instead of promoting long-time, career employees was bad for morale and resulted in poorly trained management. She hoped the commission might design a different system to alleviate this problem.

Gregg Erickson, director of the Research Division of the Legislative Affairs Agency, was asked to the table. Senator Ray explained formally to Mr. Erickson that he had no particular problems with the Legislative Affairs Agency staff and hoped that the issue which arose at the last meeting could be considered closed. Mr. Erickson was agreeable and thanked Senator Ray.

Chairman Ray brought up a problem which had been called to his attention in correspondence from the project coordinator for the office of the aging. The state personnel division has classified Title IX, Older American enrollees as "temporary" so they are now terminated after six months. Pat Hunt was asked to look into this problem and come back to the committee next time with either an answer or a resolution for consideration by the committee. Pat Murphy objected to the assignment. Following clarifying discussion, Mr. Murphy withdrew his objection.

Correspondence regarding priorities for the commission's work was received from Niel Thomas, executive director of the Alaska State Commission for Human Rights, Pat Murphy, executive director of the Alaska Public Employees Association and from Lynda McCurry for the Confidential Employees Association.

The commission discussed the establishment of priorities for subcommittee assignment. Chairman Ray cautioned members to take a non-partisan view on subcommittee assignments. Pat Murphy moved that three subcommittees be established and that "categories of employees" (see A.P.E.A. letter) be one of three priorities to be studied by a subcommittee. The motion passed without objection.

Pat Hunt moved that the commission make a priority of the determination whether we should have a central personnel system or whether it should be decentralized or whether it should be partially decentralized. Don Fisher proposed an amendment to the effect that recruitment, examination, classification and pay be handled separately. Following discussion, Mr. Fisher withdrew the amendment. The motion carried without objection.

Bob Gates moved that the commission make a priority of addressing the merit system and collective bargaining and their relationship. Following discussion, the motion passed without objection.

The commission discussed Equal Employment Opportunity, dress (cleanliness) code for state employees and the problems of training and job performance assessment. Bob Gates suggested that interested members inform themselves in the area of job performance evaluation and ways of dealing with instances of excellent or substandard performance and that the subject be raised again at the next meeting.

John Pugh moved that the commission recommend legislation which would provide for periodic, external audits of the personnel system like the one carried out the the Division of Legislative Audit in 1977. This motion passed without objection.

Chairman Ray raised the question of the job register. Some discussion of this, as well as the hiring of the commission's staff, followed.

Don Fisher moved to clarify the "centralization/decentralization" topic. He moved that the topic on centralization/decentralization include but not be limited to the study of the problems of certification, recruitment, classification and pay, examination, and equal opportunity and that the subcommittee consider the personnel law, the personnel rules and the existing practices and that they give their recommendations as to the solutions of any problems they might find. The motion passed without objection.

The three subcommittees were formed. They are composed of volunteers from the commission with the understanding that a member, through a representative, could serve on more than one subcommittee and that Chairman Ray would appoint a legislator on each subcommittee as chairman. Each subcommittee chairman was asked to appoint a vice chairman, with the understanding that Representative McKinnon (absent) would do so as soon as possible. Chairman Ray is an ex officio member of each subcommittee.

The subcommittees are as follows:

Centralization/Decentralization Subcommittee

Bill Ray, Chairman
Don Fisher, Vice Chairman
Myrt Charney
John Pugh
Pat Hunt
Lynda McCurry
Ken Spray
Dick Eliason
Thelma Buchholdt
Frank Flavin
Niel Thomas

Merit System/Collective Bargaining Subcommittee

B. B. Allen
Lynda McCurry
Bill Ray (ex officio)

Categories of Employees Subcommittee

Joe McKinnon, Chairman
Frank Flavin (Patti Moriarty)
Pat Murphy
Jay Yakopatz
Pat Hunt
Bill Ray (ex officio)

Ken Vassar presented a copy of the compilation of statutes dealing with the personnel system and gave a brief explanation. Don Fisher was charged with custody of these materials.

The next meeting of the commission was scheduled for 1:30 p.m., Thursday, November 9, in Room 123 of the State Capitol.

The meeting was adjourned at 4:25 p.m.

MINUTES

Personnel Act Review Commission

Meeting of September 15, 1978

The following summary minutes are arranged topically, not chronologically, to indicate the actions of the Commission.

The first meeting of the Personnel Act Review Commission (L.R. #27) was called to order at 9:00 a.m., September 15, 1978 by Jack Doyle, Executive Director, Legislative Affairs Agency for Representative Mike Miller, Chairman, Alaska Legislative Council. A list of those in attendance is attached.

Officers

Following the call to order and introductions, Senator Bill Ray was elected Chairman and assumed the chair. Don Fisher was elected Vice Chairman. Myrt Charney was elected as recording secretary.

Staff Support

It was decided that the Commission would not hire a consultant as primary staff but would reserve the option to use one for specific tasks in the future. Senator Ray felt it would not be appropriate to use Legislative Affairs Agency staff exclusively in the role of director/researcher. It was decided that Don Fisher should proceed to advertise and interview for an administrator/research staff person at salary range 20 and for a full time secretary, preferably with shorthand skills, at a salary range not to exceed 12. At the request of the Chairman, Mr. Erickson of the Legislative Affairs Agency directed Mr. Humphreys to assist the Commission with such additional research as they may require, with priorities as among the Commission's various research tasks to be determined by the Commission.

Budget Considerations

Myrt Charney indicated that $57,000 is currently available to the Commission through June 30, 1979 unless a supplemental appropriation is received or additional Legislative Council funds are made available.

Time Frame

It was suggested that the work of the Committee would probably carry on for at least eight months and possibly up to two years or so.

Office Space

Bob Gates said that permanent quarters could probably be provided through the administration. He was asked to check on that and let Don Fisher know. Senator Ray pointed out that Room 123A in the Capitol Building or other legislative space could be used for meetings, etc. even after the legislature convenes.

Scope and Priorities of the Study

There was some discussion of the scope of the study. Should it broadly embrace the entire personnel system including collective bargaining or be directed primarily toward a revision of the Personnel Act? It was decided that members who were so inclined should submit their thoughts on the scope, priorities and objectives of the Commission in writing at the next meeting. Senator Ray asked Ken Kareen and Pat Murphy to prepare presentations for the group.

There was some discussion of public hearings or meetings and the use of teleconferencing. The general conclusion was that the public needs to be made aware of the study and be given ample opportunity for input before any final product is forthcoming. It was suggested with no objection that releases be given to the press which would alert the public to the Commission's existence and intention to solicit input.

Membership of the Commission

There was some discussion of the possibility of adding additional members to the Commission. A motion by Ken Spray to add a representative from the Alaska Public Safety Employees Association failed. Senator Ray asked Myrt Charney to notify the PSEA that their informal participation was welcomed and to invite them to present their problems to the Commission.

Next Meeting

The next meeting was scheduled for Wednesday, October 3 at 1:30 p.m. in room 123 of the State Capitol, Juneau.

Ken Kareen requested that Legislative Affairs legal staff compile laws that deal with the personnel system besides those in AS 39.25. Senator Ray asked for a survey of the administrative code as well. Pat Murphy was asked to provide material on departmental personnel procedures.

At Frank Flavin's request, Myrt Charney was asked to provide Legislative Audit reports from the past. Mr. Charney was also asked to keep loose-leaf notebooks with minutes and other relevant materials for commission members.

At Janet Bradley's request, Ken Humphreys was asked to provide a copy of the various current collective bargaining agreements.

The meeting was adjourned at 10:55 a.m.

SUBJECT: Merit Increases

Traditionally, individuals both in and outside of State service have held the view that so-called merit increases are automatic and are primarily based on longevity within a specific job. In certain instances this has been a valid assessment and we must take positive steps to insure that increases in the future are granted for meritorious service only.

The establishment of measurable objectives throughout each department is the key ingredient in eliminating subjective evaluations of employees' performance. Those departments which do not already have their plans and objectives committed to writing should immediately commence work in this area. These measurable objectives need to be established, communicated and understood at all levels in each department.

Based on recommendations made by the Merit Increase Review Committee and if we are to operate within our budgeted funds I have concluded that steps must be immediately taken to strive for a uniform State-wide merit increase policy. To accomplish this objective it will require a great deal of effort on your part and that of your managers. However, I am confident that the long-term rewards of a uniform policy will be significant in terms of improved employee morale, better communications between employees and their supervisors and greater recognition of effective job performance.

Quite obviously we must rely on management at all levels to adequately evaluate the performance of their employees and award increases based on merit. To enhance our abilities in this area, each supervisor is expected to adhere to the following guidelines.

1. Attend a specialized training course. The Division of Personnel and Labor Relations offers a training course entitled "Measuring Job Performance." For your information, a copy of the course outline and objectives is attached. The information presented in these training sessions should better prepare supervisors to rate their employees in an objective manner. No supervisor is exempt from this directive except those who have attended this course within the past 12 months. In that case, however, it is recommended that those supervisors retake the course to review and reinforce their training. In the future all newly appointed supervisors should be scheduled to take this course at the earliest opportunity. (Schedules of the time and place of these training sessions have been distributed to departmental personnel and training officers).

All Dept Comm
Bud Sullivan

2. Each division director or heads of offices shall review all evaluations with the rater prior to discussion with the employee. This is being requested to insure that effective performance is being emphasized in the evaluation. More frequent interim evaluations are encouraged to provide an opportunity for the supervisor to discuss employees' progress towards meeting expected objectives.

3. A concentrated effort must be made to have each position description jointly reviewed and updated if necessary, b the employee and supervisor. This review should be an effort by management to establish clearly to the employee what his/her job involves and to clarify any misunderstandings which may exist. This should be an ongoing practice in the future.

4. Following the preparation of an accurate job description it is necessary for specified standards of achievement to be communicated in writing to the employee. In addit on, agreement must be reached between the employee and supervisor as to the degree to which expected perfor ance must be exceeded in order to expect additional compensation.

Accomplishing a massive project such as this will take considerabl time. To assist your department in implementing this directive, I have asked the Director of Personnel and Labor Relations to sche a meeting for all departmental Personnel and Training Officers to discuss and review the Performance Evaluation System and to descri the content of the Measuring Job Performance course. (A notice of the date and time of this meeting will be sent to each departmenta Personnel Officer in the near future). My objective is to have this program commence as quickly as possible and final implementat should be achieved no later than July 1, 1978.

During the interim it is necessary for each of you to examine the amount of funds you have available for merit increases and distribute that amount as prudent management would dictate.

In an effort to provide some guidelines I ask that you consider the following criteria prior to awarding a merit increase to your employees:

1. As mentioned previously, instruct the directors of your department to review the employees' performance evaluations with the employees' supervisor (rater) prior to notifying the employee of the merit increase. It is too late to take away corrective action once the employee is aware of the contents of his/her evaluation.

2. Establish in writing on the evaluation form accomplishments achieved by the employee that qualifies him/her for the increase. Accomplishments other than just coming to work on time, being compatible with peers, dressing appropriately, and etc. Outline tasks that you expect the employee to perform during the next period between reviews. Highlight the employees good points, if there are any, and comment on the employees' weaknesses if they exist. The evaluation is not just an instrument to flatter the employee and advise them that they will be receiving more pay in the future, it is a very vital tool of communicating with the employee and exercising prudent management practices.

3. Instruct the raters to include on the performance evaluation the number of sick days the employee has taken during the period prior to the evaluation. The rater should examine the employees' sick leave record to determine not only the frequency of leave but to see if a pattern of sick leave exists, i.e., Mondays, Fridays, before or after holidays. If there is a pattern, comment on same in the evaluation. In the event that the employee does not use the sick leave privilege in excess, comment favorable on that aspect in the evaluation.

A top management person in your office should spot-check the employees' performance evaluations from time to time to assure compliance in the above outlined criteria.

As I stated previously, you are aware of the funds available to you and all that I request is you emphasize to your managers to use discretion and manage the resources fairly to the State of Alaska and the employee.

In the event you have any questions regarding the short or long-te plan of this program, please contact Commissioner Allen or Deputy Commissioner Robert Gates for assistance.

SUBJECT: Merit Evaluations

I am attaching a memorandum from Governor Hammond which outlines the procedures that we will use in the future when evaluating an employee's performance.

Many State employees have over the years viewed merit increases as being automatic and primarily based on longevity within a position. To correct this, we must emphasize that merit increases will be granted only if it is found that the employee has performed in a manner deserving of such an increase -- in other words, earned it.

You, as raters, have this responsibility in that you must evaluate an employee and make the final determination as to whether the employee will receive a merit increase. Therefore, you should disregard your personal feelings for an employee, and write the evaluation fairly and objectively. It is important that not only good points be brought out and praise given but also the bad points and any constructive comments to correct them. Please remember that an employee rated as "outstanding" should stand head and shoulders above others doing similar work and in fact be looked upon as a special person -- one who could be recommended for greater responsibilities. Ratings are not to be made just to make an employee feel good or bad.

Effective immediately, the following guidelines are to be used when preparing evaluations:

1. All evaluations must be reviewed by the Director, or his designated representative, and discussed with him prior to discussion with the employee. It is too late to take corrective action once the employee is aware of the contents of the evaluation.

2. Establish in the evaluation the achievements, or superior performance, if any, that might qualify the employee for a merit increase. Outline any special improvements that you expect the employee to make prior to next review. Highlight good points and point out weaknesses. Use a second sheet of paper if necessary.

3. Include on the evaluation the number of sick leave days the employee has taken since last review. Examine frequency of sick leave and see if a pattern exists, i.e., Mondays, Fridays, before or after holidays. If there is a pattern you must comment on it. If sick leave is not used in excess, it should be so noted.

To assist you in improving your evaluating techniques, we are presently drafting a list of questions to be completed for each evaluation. You will be receiving drafts of them in the very near future.

SUBJECT: Merit Increases

Certain directors are recommending merit increases for particular employees at the time of annual evaluation. This is not contrary to the existing system or policy providing . . . that employee has demonstrated outstanding and exceptional accomplishment during the year.

State employees are afforded protection from inflation, and more, by their union contract. The merit increase is to be considered an award and not monetary gain which is due and expected annually.

By copy to Deputy Commissioner Ryan I have requested that a copy of all evaluations which recommend a merit increase be provided me. This is in order that I may share and participate in your recognition of such employees and to gain insight as to the sort of activities that makes for an outstanding employee.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau, Alaska
December 15, 1982

MINUTES

Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order at 1:40 p.m. The roll call showed Senator Ray, Representative Jack Fuller, Myrt Charney, John Chenoweth, James Fisher (alternate for Commissioner Rudd), Lois Jund, Mike McMullen (alternate for Ken Kareen), Roger Thayer (alternate for Lynda McCurry), Greg O'Claray, Bob Mourant (alternate for John Pugh), and Lee Powelson (alternate for Cherie Shelley) as present.

The commission reviewed a letter dated December 14, 1982, from Allen K. Korhonen, Acting Commissioner of the Department of Health and Social Services, concerning the status of medical doctors employed by the department. Mr. O'Claray moved that the commission sponsor legislation as requested by the department to place public health doctors in the classified service. There was no objection and the motion passed by unanimous consent.

The commission considered information on the state's nepotism statute. Ms. Jund moved that the commission reintroduce the legislation on nepotism that it had sponsored in the 1981 legislative session. There was no objection and the motion passed by unanimous consent.

The commission discussed recommendations against rehire. Senator Ray suggested that perhaps a committee of impartial individuals should review every performance evaluation which recommends that an employee not be rehired before that recommendation becomes part of the employee's personnel file. Ms. Jund added that a two-step review process might be appropriate. A departmental panel would review the evaluations before they were approved by the department. A second panel would review them before they became part of the employee's personnel file. She also suggested that the information on the back of the personnel evaluation form should include more detail about recommendations about rehire. Senator Ray suggested that the commission write to the Commissioner of Administration to relate these suggestions.

Tom O'Donnell, personnel officer for the Department of Health and Social Services, pointed out that employees receive copies of the evaluation form and have an opportunity to comment before the evaluation becomes final. A review panel would probably not have enough information to act contrary to the supervisor's recommendation. The important thing to bring about is better training for supervisors in making their evaluations. They should also be held accountable for their actions. Mr. Charney replied that many supervisors and employees do not know the effect of recommendations against rehire and therefore employees do not grieve when they receive one. Senator Ray asked the staff to write to the Commissioner of Administration asking that the department consider expanding the information on the personnel evaluation form and implementing review panels for all evaluations on which that recommendation appears and asking for her response within a reasonable time.

Ms. Jund offered some comments on the memorandum on employee discipline which had been discussed at the previous commission meeting. She suggested that the levels of discipline should include verbal warnings, which should be documented by the employee's supervisor in writing;

written admonishments, which are not made part of the employee's permanent personnel file but which the employee is asked to sign;

written reprimands, which the employee is asked to sign and which do become part of the personnel file, although they may be removed at a later time; and suspensions, which the employee is also asked to acknowledge receipt of.

In the section on conduct prejudicial to the best interests of the service (F.3), she suggested that the list include soliciting gifts for political purposes. In the discussion of improper conduct related to state property or vehicles, (F.4). she suggested that operating a state vehicle while under the influence of drugs or alcohol should be listed there as well as in the section on improper use of intoxicants or drugs. Mr. O'Claray moved that the commission write to the Commissioner of Administration asking that she include this information as well as the memorandum previously sent to her when she considers the commission's request that the department adopt a written policy on employee discipline. There was no objection voiced.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 2:10 p.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau, Alaska
December 7, 1982

MINUTES

Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order at 10:00 a.m. The roll call showed Senator Ray, Representative Jack Fuller, Myrt Charney, John Chenoweth, Senator Dick Eliason, Fred Muller (alternate for Commissioner Rudd), Ken Kareen, Roger Thayer (alternate for Lynda McCurry), Greg O'Claray, John Pugh, and Doryce Eggleston (alternate for Cherie Shelley) as present. Also present were James Fisher, Mike McMullen and Bob Mourant.

Senator Ray asked the members to consider the memorandum on Minimum Qualifications for the Internal Auditor Job Series. Bob Janes, Chief of the Office of Internal Review in the Department of Transportation, addressed the commission in support of permitting work experience to substitute for the educational requirements of the job series. He said that before the auditing kinds of job classes were combined some years ago, his office was staffed by Audit Review Specialists. That job series had less extensive minimum qualifications than does the internal auditor series. When the classes were combined, employees were transferred into the internal auditor classes. If those employees, some of whom have many years of experience, were to resign and then later try to return to work in the same position, they could find that they no longer qualify because they lack the added educational requirements.

Mr. Kareen said that the Division of Personnel would review the internal auditor job series and consider whether it ought to be replaced with two parallel series.

Marcia Anne Lutterman, Internal Auditor III, testified in support of permitting work experience to substitute for the college degree requirement. She said that she was initially employed as a Fiscal Compliance Officer before that job class was deleted and her position transferred into the internal auditor series. She pointed out an additional problem with the educational substitutions presently permitted. The State of Alaska now requires that applicants for the CPA exam hold college degrees, so there is no way to qualify for an internal auditor without a college education. She will not be eligible for promotion until she completes the hours required for a college degree which is difficult to do while holding a fulltime job.

Carolyn Guess, Chairman of the Alaska Public Utilities Commission, addressed the commission concerning the associate attorney position in the PUC. The position is currently staffed on a reimbursable services contract with the Department of Law because the position needs to be in the partially exempt service, but the PUC does not have authorization to make it so. While the position is staffed through the Department of Law, it is statutorily placed in the partially exempt service. She asked that if the Blue Ribbon Commission is sponsoring amendments to the State Personnel Act, an amendment to AS 39.25.120 be included to permit the PUC to hire partially exempt associate attorneys. Mr Kareen pointed out that the PUC could request the Personnel Board to place the position in the partially exempt service without having to amend any statutes. Senator Ray added that the Blue Ribbon Commission would be happy to write to the personnel Board in support of the PUC's request.

The commission discussed and revised the memorandum on Employee Discipline. Mr. Muller suggested that the commission send a copy of the revised memorandum to the Commissioner of Administration and request that the department include the information in an employee handbook. Senator Ray asked the staff to prepare the materials to send to Commissioner Rudd.

The commission reviewed the memorandum on Recommendations Against Rehire. Senator Ray recessed the meeting at 11:45 a.m.

Senator Ray reconvened the commission at 1:30 p.m. and continued the discussion on recommendations against rehire. Mr. Charney suggested that the commission ask for a review of the memorandum from the Commissioner of Administration. Senator Ray directed the staff to ask for a response from the department for the next commission meeting.

The commission reviewed the memorandum on the Office Skills Test and the accompanying memorandum from Kaye Hogan, deputy director, Division of Equal Employment Opportunity. Mike McMullen, deputy director of personnel, explained that the Office Skills Test results have been found to be predictive of performance and the psychometrist has established its job-relatedness. The state is in the second year of a two-year experiment in which the minimum qualifications for clerical job classes are waived. The Division of Personnel will review the effect of waiving the minimum qualifications later in the study. For two or three job classes the minimum qualifications are not waived because the division believed that the experience or educational requirement was necessary. For both the retirement and benefits technician classes and the natural resource technician classes the experience requirement is still in effect. A college degree may be substituted. In addition, applicants for those classes must pass the Office Skills Test.

Chet Cottongim, personnel officer for the Department of Public Safety, said that managers in his department have found that employees who have been out of school for a long time have been getting poorer scores on the Office Skills Test than recent graduates. The department has asked the Division of Personnel to look into the situation. It is important to recognize and give credit to experienced good employees and to provide them with opportunities for promotion. The Office Skills Test may block them from qualifying for promotional opportunities. Mr. McMullen pointed out that 96.8% of the applicants who take the test pass it. Senator Ray responded that ranking can be as important as passing the test. Mr. McMullen added that long term employees will have earned employee credits which are added to their scores and a department wanting to promote a current employee can fill a vacancy using an intra-departmental register. There methods ought to provide adequate opportunities to promote deserving employees.

Mr. Chenoweth suggested that the commission review the Division of Personnel's response to the Division of EEO's request that it seriously consider making the Office Skills Test only one component in the determination of qualifications of applicants.

The commission considered correspondence received from Marilyn Martin. Mr. McMullen explained that he had met with Ms. Martin and advised her that if credits from the California Coastal University are recognized by an accredited college or university then the Division of Personnel will accept her degree. Ms. Martin is currently writing to the University to gather the necessary documents and should receive credit for the degree when she presents them to the division.

The commission considered draft legislation on Credit for BIA service under the Teachers Retirement System. Mr. Charney moved that the commission sponsor the legislation in the next legislative session. Representative Fuller asked to abstain from voting. The vote showed eight (8) in favor, none opposed and one (1) abstention. The motion carried.

The commission considered correspondence received from David Hickok, chairman of the Alaska Council on Science and Technology, together with a memorandum prepared by Jim Lear, Legislative Counsel, addressing the points raised in Mr. Hickok's letter. Mr. Hickok addressed the commission. He suggested that the legislation should provide that supervisors of inventors be made aware of the discovery at the time that the inventor discloses the invention to the Council on Science and Technology. Senator Ray responded that the Council has authority under the bill to adopt regulations which provide that the inventor do so. Mr. Hickok asked whether the Council would have authority under the proposed legislation to contract with a nonprofit corporation to develop and market an invention and to grant a share of the royalties to the corporation as well as to the employee-inventor. Senator Ray responded that on page 3, section 39.52.020 the Council is authorized to grant monetary recognition for creations in intellectual work products and that the form could be a share of the royalties.

Mr. O'Claray moved that the commission sponsor the legislation on government interests in intellectual work products developed at the expense of the state in the next legislative session. The motion carried without objection.

The commission considered the draft bill on collective bargaining. Mr. McMullen pointed out that the language on lines 14 and 15 "whichever is later" could create a problem and suggested that those words be deleted. Mr. O'Claray moved that the bill, as amended, be introduced by the commission. The motion carried without objection.

The commission considered court leave for nonpermanent employees, item B in the Staff Memo. Senator Ray asked the staff to write to the Personnel Board asking that they act immediately, at the earliest possible time. He asked whether any commission members would object to sponsoring legislation on the issue if that should prove necessary. No objections were voiced.

The commission considered the status of state-employed medical doctors, item C of the Staff Memo. Tom O'Donnell, personnel officer for the Department of Health and Social Services addressed the commission. He said that his department had not been consulted by the Senate State Affairs Committee when the committee amended the State Personnel Act to place all medical doctors in the exempt service. Senator Ray asked that the department present suggested legislation on the question for the commission's consideration at its next meeting.

Senator Ray asked that commission members review the information about the state's nepotism statute for the next meeting. He asked for recommendations about filling the vacancy on the commission. Mr. Thayer suggested that the vacancy be filled after the legislative organization has been completed. Patsy Fletcher, Assistant Director of the Human Rights Commission, spoke in support of the application of James Chase.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 3:00 p.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau, Alaska
November 9, 1982

MINUTES

Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order at 10:05 a.m. The roll call showed Senator Ray, Representative Jack Fuller, John Chenoweth, Fred Muller (alternate for Commissioner Carole Burger) Lois Jund, Ken Kareen, Roger Thayer (alternate for Lynda McCurry) Greg O'Claray, Bob Mourant (alternate for John Pugh), and Doryce Eggleston (alternate for Cherie Shelley) as present.

Senator Ray asked the commission to consider the draft bill relating to the state's interest in intellectual work products. Jim Lear, legislative counsel, explained the changes he had made at the commission's instructions and answered questions. Representative Fuller moved that the commission approve the bill as drafted for introduction in the 1983 Legislative Session. The motion carried without objection.

The commission took up the draft bill relating to collective bargaining. Don Kubley, representing IBU-Pacific and the International Order of Masters, Mates and Pilots, addressed the commission. He pointed out a problem in the present language which requires that agreements be submitted to the legislature within 30 days after the convening of the session. If negotiations are delayed past the convening of the session, then employees would have to work without a contract for almost a year, until the convening of the next regular session. He suggested that the language be changed.

Senator Ray suggested that the second sentence of the draft, lines 15-18 be deleted. Greg O'Claray read a telegram from Steve Franks of the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association in Seattle, opposing an earlier version of the bill. Roger Thayer suggested the bill be amended by deleting "30 days after the" in line 14 and adding "10 days after signing by the parties or" in its place. Mr. O'Claray moved that the second sentence of the draft be deleted and that the bill be amended as suggested by Mr. Thayer. The motion carried without objection.

The commission considered the draft relating to PERS credit for BIA service. Mr. Muller explained that the bill would preclude state employees with federal BIA service from receiving retirement benefits from both the federal government and the state for the same period of service. Mr. O'Claray asked how the credit for BIA service was funded. Mr. Muller was not sure. Further consideration of the legislature was held until the next commission meeting.

Terry Cramer read the commission a fiscal note from the Division of Retirement and Benefits for the draft bill limiting the adjustment of retirement benefits which the commission has approved for introduction. The division expects there will be some cost but they cannot be measured and in most instances they are expected to be small.

The commission considered court leave for nonpermanent state employees. Mr. O'Claray said that most collective bargaining contracts provide for jury duty pay and that nonpermanents may be the only group of employees who are not entitled to receive pay while serving on a jury. Ms. Cramer advised the commission that the Personnel Board would be meeting next week to consider amendments to the Personnel Rules. Mr. Kareen added that the Rules which the Personnel Board would be considering do not include leave provisions. The State Personnel Act does not direct that the Personnel Rules address leave for state employees. Those provisions will be placed in other regulations. Senator Ray asked Ms. Cramer to advise the Personnel Board of the commission's support for court leave for nonpermanent employees.

The commission considered the request that it recommend a preference for student-loan recipients.

The commission considered the requirement that internal auditors hold college degrees. Mr. Kareen said that the Division of Personnel reflects the views of state managers in setting the minimum qualifications for job classes. Mr. O'Claray asked for more information on how the minimum qualifications for this job class were established, since most minimum qualifications permit substitution of training and experience for educational requirements. Senator Ray asked the staff to invite the Director of the Division of Internal Audit to the next commission meeting.

The commission discussed employee discipline and recommendations against rehire. Senator Ray suggested that the problem with recommendations against rehire is that a supervisor has control of an employee's entire job future with the state. Mr. Muller explained that the Division of Personnel reviews recommendations against rehire to insure that their scope is appropriate. The recommendations can be limited to that job class, to the department as a whole, or to any state employment. Mr. Kareen added that there are adequate departmental review procedures to insure that the recommendation against rehire is imposed only in appropriate circumstances. The employee's immediate supervisor prepares the recommendation. It is then reviewed at the next level of supervision, and finally there is a department level review, frequently by the Personnel Officer for the department. Unfortunately, the reviews are sometimes cursory, and the recommendations are signed automatically. Mr. O'Claray asked whether there were any guidelines to assist supervisors. Guidelines would help insure consistency. Ms. Jund added that many supervisors do not understand what a recommendation against rehire means. Could there be something written to let them know? Senator Ray asked the staff to work with Mr. Muller on this issue.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 11:45 a.m.

October 15, 1982

MINUTES

Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order at 10:00 a.m. The roll call showed Senator Ray, Myrt Charney, John Chenoweth, Senator Dick Eliason, Sandra Withers (alternate for Commissioner Carole Burger), William Huston, Mike McMullen (alternate for Ken Kareen), Roger Thayer (alternate for Lynda McCurry), Greg O'Claray, and John Pugh as present. Also present was Bob Mourant.

Terry Cramer, Administrative Assistant to the commission, advised the members that the minutes of the meeting held September 21, 1982, should be corrected. The second sentence of the third paragraph should read:

> With objection from the Department of Administration, the commission approved the draft bill limiting the adjustment of retirement benefits for introduction next session.

The correction to the minutes was approved without objection.

The commission considered the draft bill amending AS 14.25.107 prepared by the Division of Retirement and Benefits at the request of the commission. Senator Ray explained that the bill addressed a potential problem in the current statutes which could allow individuals to receive retirement benefits from both the federal and state governments for the same period of employment with the federal government. Greg O'Claray moved that the bill be prepared as legislation for introduction next session by the commission. The motion passed without objection.

The commission considered the draft bill relating to collective bargaining. Senator Ray suggested that the draft be amended to provide that if the legislature does not act within 60 days, then the agreement would be considered rejected. Mr. O'Claray suggested that the time for legislative consideration should be limited to 30 days. Mike McMullen asked whether the language in line 15 required that agreement reached after the legislature convened would have to wait until the next session before being considered by the legislature. Senator Ray suggested that the work should be done before the session to avoid any delays. Senator Ray asked that another draft of the bill be prepared for the commission's consideration at its next meeting.

The commission considered the draft bill relating to government interests in intellectual work products developed at the expense of the state. Jim Lear, Legislative Counsel, explained the changes he made in preparing this draft. The commission discussed the proposed AS 39.52.020, and asked that Mr. Lear prepare language providing that the Council on

Science and Technology may, subject to appropriation, either award the inventor a share of the royalties or give him or her a cash award for any discovery, regardless of whether it provides the state with net revenues or whether it is a cost-saving discovery. In addition, the commission requested that he draft language excluding the provisions of the legislation from the scope of collective bargaining and exempting legislators from the provisions of the bill.

The commission discussed standards for recommendations against rehire and for employee discipline. Senator Ray asked Sandra Withers to draft generalized standards with examples of the kind of conduct which would merit that level of discipline for the commission to consider at the next meeting.

Senator Ray announced that the commission would be meeting in November, December and January. He adjourned the meeting at 11:45 a.m.

September 21, 1982

MINUTES

Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order at 10:10 a.m. The roll call showed Senator Ray, Representative Jack Fuller, Myrt Charney, Senator Dick Eliason, Fred Muller (alternate for Commissioner Carole Burger), Ken Kareen, Lynda McCurry, John Pugh, Darlene Livermore (alternate for Cherie Shelley) present. Bill Huston and Cherie Shelley arrived late. Also present were Roger Thayer and Jim Fisher. Jack Chenoweth, Lois Jund and Greg O'Claray were absent.

The commission considered draft legislation on government interest in discoveries and inventions made by public officers and employees of the state. Jim Lear, legislative counsel, explained the provisions of the draft and answered questions from the commission. He said that legislation from the State of Connecticut and the federal Executive Order on patents by employees formed the basis of the draft. Senator Eliason moved that page 4, lines 1 and 2 be amended to delete the exceptions for the Alaska Energy Center and for the Alaska Resources Corporation. The motion passed without objection. The commission requested other changes and also asked Mr. Lear to prepare draft legislation relating to the state's interests in copywrites, particularly in computer programs. Mr. Don Bennett of the Council on Science and Technology was present, but did not testify.

The commission held review of the draft relating to collective bargaining until the next meeting. Without objection the commission approved the draft bill limiting the adjustment of retirement benefits for introduction next session.

Senator Ray stated that selection of a new commission member would be held until the next meeting. He asked commission members to be prepared to discuss employee discipline at that meeting.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 11:45 a.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau, Alaska
August 30, 1982

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order at 10:00 a.m. The roll call showed Senator Ray, Representative Fuller, Myrt Charney, John Chenoweth, Fred Muller (alternate for Commissioner Carole Burger), Lois Jund, Mike McMullen (alternate for Ken Kareen), Lynda McCurry, Greg O'Claray, John Pugh, and Dianne Corso (alternate for Cherie Shelley) as present. Senator Eliason and Bill Huston were absent. Also present were James Fisher, Roger Thayer, Bob Mourant and Doryce Eggleston.

Senator Ray asked Chet Cottongim, personnel officer for the Department of Public Safety, to address the commission concerning correspondence received from Sgt. Richard A. Hemmen who lives in Fairbanks. Mr. Cottongim explained that a vacancy had occurred in the Fish and Wildlife Protection Division in Anchorage which required a seasoned supervisor, ideally one who was also a pilot. The department considered six sergeants and decided that Sgt. Hemmen was the most desirable. Neither Sgt. Hemmen nor the other five candidates for the position were from the Anchorage area. Although the department seldom invokes involuntary transfer, it did so in this case because of the special needs of the position. Sgt. Hemmen refused the transfer because of the financial hardship resulting from the loss of geographic pay differential and having to sell his house in the depressed market in Fairbanks. The department offered him the choice of accepting the transfer, resigning, or being suspended and, if he did not then accept the transfer, being fired. Sgt. Hemmen resigned effective August 1, 1982. He filed a grievance on the involuntary transfer which was decided in favor of the department.

Mr. Cottongim added that Sgt. Hemmen had refused a transfer once before on the grounds of financial hardship. The department accepted his refusal and he remained in Fairbanks and subsequently received two promotions. The Anchorage position actually became vacant on July 16th. Mr. Cottongim stated that so far as he knew, it had not yet been filled. He indicated that the department had hoped that Sgt. Hemmen would change his mind.

Mike McMullen explained that he had served on the contract negotiating team for the Public Safety Employees' Association labor agreement. The terms of the agreement recognize the employer's need to transfer employees, particularly commissioned officers, from one area to another. The contract provides that the employee's moving expenses will be paid by the state.

1356 SCOMM 51: BLUE RIBBON COMN. ON STATE PERSONNEL ACT 1978-1983

Mr. Cottongim added that the department's criteria for making transfer decisions are to provide an opportunity for officers to broaden their careers and to meet the needs of the department. The department tries to avoid imposing a hardship on employees, but the needs of the department must be met.

Senator Ray asked whether here was any evidence that the transfer was discriminatory or a disciplinary measure. Mr. Cottongim said that there did not appear to be any indication of that. He added that the department considered Sgt. Hemmen an outstanding employee. Senator Ray said that there appeared to be no further basis for the Blue Ribbon Commission to consider the matter. He was sympathetic to the situation Sgt. Hemmen had been placed in, but the transfer appeared to be the exercise of a valid management prerogative.

Dale Young addressed the commission concerning issues raised in his earlier correspondence with the commission. He was employed by the Department of Fish & Game, F.R.E.D. Division as the Southeast Alaska Regional Hatchery Manager in 1976. When he was first employed, the state needed to develop a production-scale salmon incubator. He asked his supervisor if he could work on the project privately and was advised to request an Attorney General's opinion on conflict of interest. In 1977 the Attorney General granted him permission to proceed with his work and to obtain a patent provided he followed strict guidelines. Mr. Young secured a patent, and in cooperation with a private corporation, developed an incubator and fish rearing system.

Mr. Young stated that following his patenting of the incubator, his work situation deteriorated, leading ultimately to his layoff on August 15. His performance evaluations changed from rating his work as highly acceptable to finding his work unacceptable and recommending his termination. His supervisor had not spoken with him about the change in the performance of his work or made suggestions on how he could improve. He believed the evaluations and other unfavorable situations in his employment were in retaliation for his having secured the patent.

Mr. Young added that in addition to his personal difficulties, Fish and Game had broken state and federal laws to avoid purchasing his products. The Ombudsman's office had twice investigated the department's purchasing practices and found them in violation of the applicable laws. During the second investigation, they referred the complaint to the Governor's Internal Auditors. The auditors confirmed that the department was violating purchasing procedures.

In answer to a question, Jack Chenoweth, Ombudsman, said that his office had investigated the incubator purchasing practices over the past several years. The purchases involve three agencies - the Departments of Public Transportation, Fish and Game, and Administration. Correction of the problem would require the cooperation of the administration, and therefore, his office had asked for a review by the Internal Auditors. The Ombudsman's office also made several recommendations to each department, but did not receive an entirely favorable response. The Ombudsman's investigation did not consider the employment problems which Mr. Young was raising before the Blue Ribbon Commission.

Mr. Muller asked Mr. Young whether APEA was still involved on his behalf. Mr. Young said that they were. Mr. Muller suggested that the Blue Ribbon Commission should not intervene in the matter until the pending grievances are resolved. Senator Ray replied that in his opinion it was appropriate for an individual to bring anything before the commission at any time. He also requested the commission staff to invite Deputy Commissioner Collinsworth from the Department of Fish and Game to address the commission on this matter at 1:30.

Representative Fuller asked whether Mr. Young's product was used outside the state. Mr. Young replied that there is some small use by private nonprofit concerns on an experimental basis and added that tests have proved the success of the process and equipment. It provides high quality production with a higher survival rate and is the least labor-intensive process available. In response to a question from Ms. Jund, Mr. Young indicated that he had been employed as an assistant hatchery manager by the State of Missouri prior to his coming to Alaska to accept the Hatchery Manager position. In addition, he had owned a private hatchery in Missouri where he began the development work which he continued in Alaska. He believed that his work on incubators was one of the reasons he was selected for the position, but two weeks after he began working it became clear that he would not have time on the job to continue.

Mr. Young added that Fish and Game is justifying his layoff by saying that they are responding to legislative intent that they reduce the numbers of managers in the department. He pointed out that the department has not eliminated any top-level management positions. All of the layoffs in management positions have occurred in mid-level management.

In response to a question from Greg O'Claray, Dianne Corso from APEA explained that Mr. Young has several grievances pending. The grievance addressing the reasonableness of his layoff is under consideration for filing at the Step III level. Mr. Young has the right to pursue that issue through arbitration.

Senator Ray brought a letter from Ms. Eileen Oliver to the attention of the commission and asked Mr. Chenoweth whether there were any recent developments he wished to report. Mr. Chenoweth replied that at Ms. Oliver's request his office has not proceeded further with the complaint, since the position she applied for has not yet been filled.

The commission considered the Issue Summary dated July 20, 1982, concerning issues raised recently.

A. RECOMMENDATIONS AGAINST REHIRE

Mike McMullen explained the state's system on recommendations against rehire. When employees resign in good standing, they have the right to be placed at the top of registers for job classes for which they qualify. Supervisors are not required to hire them but may select them without considering any of the top five applicants if they wish to. When an employee in not recommended for rehire, he or she loses those rehire rights. In addition, if the recommendation against rehire applies to all state employment, the employee's name will be removed from all registers and no applications will be accepted until the employee has worked for another employer for the length of the probationary period for that job class, either six months or one year.

Senator Ray suggested that the penalty is too severe. Unless an employee is dismissed for an indictable offense, a supervisor should not recommend against rehire by the state. Prospective employers should be notified of the employee's unsatisfactory conduct and be allowed to decide whether they wish to employ that person. Mr. McMullen replied that the Division of Personnel is charged with evaluating applicants to insure that they meet minimum qualifications. Part of that review should include consideration of previous work history. If the history shows that there has been a serious problem, then it is appropriate to find the applicant unqualified until he or she demonstrates that the problem has been resolved.

Dianne Corso pointed out that although the system provides for review of recommendations against rehire by the Division of Personnel, in fact employees may have to go through considerable effort to have Personnel reconsider the supervisor's recommendation. Mr. McMullen explained that the departments have an internal review system before Personnel is involved. Recommendations against rehire are part of the employee's final performance evaluation. After a supervisor prepares the evaluation, it is reviewed by the supervisor's supervisor, typically a division director. If the division director approves it, then the commissioner's office reviews it. That review is frequently delegated to the departmental personnel office. Lynda McCurry pointed out that recommendations against rehire can be attached to voluntary resignations as well as to situations in which an employee is fired. Departments do not impose them consistently and internal review is not always adequate. Ms. Corso added that some supervisors have no knowledge of the effects of the recommendation.

Mr. O'Claray asked whether the state has standards for imposing recommendations against rehire. How does a supervisor know whether it is appropriate to impose that penalty on an employee? Mr. Muller replied that there were no standards. Each case is considered separately on its merits. This allows for consideraon of mitigating factors such as a crisis in the employee's home life which is temporarily affecting job performance. Mr. O'Claray pointed out that if you notify employees of the standard which you expect them to adhere to, then in most cases they will do so. Mr. Muller answered that the issue is grievable. Ms. Corso replied that if there were standards, then there would be fewer grievances.

Representative Fuller asked whether the final performance evaluation would not be sufficient to alert future employers to the problem. John Pugh explained that, particularly for positions with high turnover, supervisors are unlikely to request that Personnel send them copies of performance evaluations. Therefore, they would be unaware of an applicant's unsatisfactory work history. Ms. McCurry said that the Department of Labor requests applicants to provide copies of their last several evaluations when they are interviewed.

Ms. Jund suggested that standards should be developed for applying recommendations against rehire within that section, agency, department, or by the state as a whole. Senator Ray said that the commission would consider the federal guidelines on penalties at its next meeting.

B. RETALIATORY LAYOFF

Mr. Pugh suggested that the commission consider both the issue of retaliatory layoffs and also the development of whistleblower legislation. He added that layoffs will become an increasingly important issue in the near future. Private employers, such as Boeing, have systems which permit considering both productivity and seniority when deciding who will be laid off. Unions favor a seniority system. Standards based on seniority tie the hands of management when it tries to improve productivity.

Mr. McMullen explained that the States uses a table to compute layoff points. Points are given based on the quality of job performance established by the employee's last three evaluations, with that figure multiplied by the length of service within the unit. Since layoffs are made by division or region, layoff points may not mean much. An employee with considerable seniority and good work performance may still be the only person within the unit and therefore may be laid off while less senior and less productive employees in other units may remain on the job. Senator Ray suggested that the layoff system should provide a forum for challenging possible discriminatory action and that the issue should be addressed on an individual basis.

C. CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Ms. Corso pointed out that the conflict of interest issue is similar to the recommendation against rehire issue in that standards of employee conduct are not clear in either case. She added that APEA is finding that the problem is coming up with increasing frequency.

Senator Ray recessed the meeting until 1:30 p.m.

Senator Ray reconvened the meeting at 1:30 p.m. and invited Don Collinsworth, Deputy Commissioner for Resource Management in the Department of Fish & Game to address the commission on the employment issues raised by Mr. Dale Young.

Mr. Collinsworth stated that it was his understanding that the commission was interested in Mr. Young's layoff and also in the issues surrounding the patenting of the incubation system. With reference to the layoff issues, he introduced Stan Moberly, Director of the F.R.E.D. Division in which Mr. Young had been employed. He added that because of funding cuts, the department would have to lay off about 11 employees, some of whom have as much as 15 years employment with the state. He pointed out that the Attorney General is investigating the patent issues raised by Mr. Young, and that the Ombudsman has investigated the issue. In addition there are grievances pending on the employment issues.

Mr. Moberly addressed the commission. He stated that he was regional supervisor of the F.R.E.D. Division from 1975 through November, 1980. He has been director of the division since this past June. As regional supervisor he had been Mr. Young's supervisor and had written favorable performance evaluations of his work. Mr. Moberly indicated that he did not know the basis for the unfavorable evaluations written after he left the division.

Mr. Collinsworth explained that in making layoff decisions, he and Mr. Moberly had reviewed the division staff, looking at positions, duties and responsibilities. They did not consider the individuals in those positions when deciding who should be laid off. Mr. Young was not laid off because of his performance, but because the department had to trim the SE program staff. Rep. Fuller asked whether any of the layoffs occurred in upper level management. Mr Moberly replied that some managerial staff were laid off in response to the Legislature's directions. In Anchorage, the managerial staff was reduced from four to three postions and in Juneau, it was reduced from three to two positions. The Anchorage office is responsible for hatcheries in all parts of the state except Southeast.

Mr. Moberly added that in 1976 when Mr. Young was hired there was just one hatchery in the Southeast region. The organization was growing fast and focused its energies on technological development. Since that time the division's task has changed to management of the existing hatcheries.

Mr. Collinsworth said that he had brought Mr. Young's personnel file and asked whether the commission had the authority to review personnel files. Mr. Young stated that he had no objection to the commission reviewing his performance evaluations. Senator Ray asked Mr. Collinsworth to summarize why Mr. Young's work became unacceptable.

Mr. Moberly explained that following Mr. Young's patenting of the incubator processes, it became much more difficult for him to function in a role of regional hatchery manager. Mr. Young's co-workers were unwilling to discuss things openly with him, so there was no free flow of ideas. At the same time the division's focus was changing from technologicial to managerial in nature. In his job as regional hatchery manager, Mr. Young was unable to recommend what incubators the department ought to install in their hatcheries because of the conflict of interest created by his holding the patent. In addition, his co-workers felt that they had contributed to the development of the incubator system and that in applying for a patent, Mr. Young had plagerized their ideas.

Mr. Collinsworth explained that when Mr. Young was first employed, the divison was developing hatcheries and various types of equipment, incubators, water systems and processes. Mr. Young was working as part of a group which was considering incubators. He had, obviously, contributed to the conception of the equipment, but his colleagues felt that they had as well. Because he took the initiative to patent the process, he is the one to benefit financially from the incubation system when the state or other purchaser pay royalties for its use.

Mr. Young replied that he had acted in good faith after securing an opinion from the Attorney General's office that it would be legal for him to proceed. He added that a person cannot patent something that is not original. The concepts involved in the incubator system were ideas that he had brought with him from Missouri. Mr. Moberly suggested that the commission should request a copy of the Attorney General's report on the conflict of interest question when it is available. In answer to a question from Rep. Fuller, he said that the work that Mr. Young had been doing on the incubator system was part of his job assignment with the state. Mr. Moberly added that whether the situation with the patent has developed into a conflict of interest has not yet been ruled on. It has caused managerial problems and finally led to Mr. Young's being asked not to serve as a member of the facility design team.

Mr. Moberly said that the divison has offered Mr. Young another position as the Snettisham hatchery manager. Ms. Corso pointed out that the position would require that he move away from Juneau without his family. Mr. Moberly explained that it was the only job that the division had open. He added that he had told APEA and the labor relations division staff that the F.R.E.D. Division would, to the extent possible, add steps in grade to the position, which is a Range 18, to have as little financial impact on Mr. Young as possible. His last position was at Range 20. Fish and Game tries to return employees who have been laid off to their previous levesla as quickly as possible. Mr. Moberly added that the Hatchery Manager job is important because the Snettisham hatchery is highly visible and has an inventory of several million fish. Mr. Young would be expected to work at the position, not just draw a paycheck while looking for other employment. Mr. O'Claray asked what the timing on the offer was. Mr. Moberly replied that the offer was made about a week ago, immediately after the position became vacant.

Mr. Young challenged Mr. Moberly's statement that there had been no other positions available. He added that when he inquired about the Snettisham hatchery manager position, the supervisor told him that he would have to work the register and that he hadn't made his final decision about how he was going to fill the position. Mr. Moberly replied that he had not been able to offer Mr. Young any other position and that the division cannot let one layoff dictate the management of the whole fisheries program. He explained that the division probably would work the register for the hatchery manager position, but that Mr. Young can be placed on it and that the department's policy is to give preference to employees who have been laid off whenever possible.

Ms. Jund pointed out that in private industry scientists have to sign a release stating that if anything develops during their work which is patentable, it is the property of the employer. She asked whether the state had any similar requirement. The answer was no. She asked whether Mr. Young would have lost his effectiveness with the division if the state had had such a policy. Mr. Collinsworth replied that he believed that Mr. Young would not have. Such a policy would be of benefit to the state and would improve the work environment for scientists.

Senator Ray stated that as chairman he believed that any more discussions by the committee would be premature. The commission will hold the matter until there have been final determinations in the proceedings presently going on. He thanked Mr. Collinsworth and Mr. Moberly for attending.

C. CONFLICT OF INTEREST (continued)

The commission returned to discussion of Conflict of Interest from the Issue Summary. Janet Bradley, Director of the Alaska State Human Rights Commission, pointed out that there is a balance between the employer's needs and the employee's First Amendment rights. Ms. Jund asked whether the conflict of interest Personnel Rules were inadequate. If they are, should the commission try to improve them and make employees aware of their terms? Roger Thayer replied that he had tried to write a conflict of interest policy for DOT/PF and the Attorney General's office had said that it couldn't be done because of First Amendment rights. Senator Ray suggested that the commission look at the issue at its next meeting.

D. ACCESS TO STATE EMPLOYMENT

Myrt Charney suggested that it was appropriate for the state to give higher priority to promotional opportunities than to give access to new employees. Ms. Corso pointed out that a supervisor can choose whether to hire from an open competitive list or from an interdepartmental promotional list. Senator Ray stated that the majority of complaints which most legislators receive is that state employment is a closed shop. Once a person finds employment with the state, he is in, but getting in is very difficult. Ms. Bradley added that the Human Rights Commission has been considering the impact of promotional registers on Affirmative Action. Give that a large proportion of the state workforce is white, limiting access to jobs to those already employed is, in fact, a barrier for other persons who include minorities.

Senator Ray summarized correspondence received from Larry Korkowski. Janet Bradley explained that when the Human Rights Commission receives complaints about its own employment practices, they refer the complainant to other organizations including the Blue Ribbon Commission, the Ombudsman, the Division of EEO and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

Senator Ray suggested that in a pure merit system there would be no Affirmative Action program. Employment decisions would be based solely on the person's qualifications. Rep. Fuller asked how many people take advantage of veterans' points. Jim Fisher, Director of the Division of EEO, replied that the state has not done any studies. In the federal government, a large percentage of the workforce - perhaps 25 or 50% - who are veterans have benefitted from the additional points. Senator Ray pointed out that the commission had sponsored legislation last session which limited application of veterans' points to one time. He added that the commission would look further at the issues of employee credits and promotional lists.

The commission considered the state's retirement system laws. Chuck Elrod, Retirement Supervisor, addressed the commission. The state actually has about six different retirement systems. Senator Ray asked whether it would be feasible to merge some of the systems into PERS. Mr. Elrod replied that that was outside his purview. Major problems in PERS are with the temporary service credit for both federal and state employment. The Attorney General has issued three separate opinions stating that temporary service cannot be considered credited service unless the statute specifically includes it. In practical terms, it is difficult to verify pre-1961 earnings and service.

The commission reviewed and discussed the PERS and TRS statutes.

AS 14.25.045. PARTICIPATION BY NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION EMPLOYEES

Mr. Elrod reported that there is an Attorney General's opinion which says that including NEA employees in TRS is unconstitutional. The Division of Retirement has identified the employees involved. Future NEA employees will not be covered under TRS.

AS 14.25.060. ARREARAGE INDEBTEDNESS

There is also a problem brewing with the state taking over responsibility for the BIA schools. What retirement arrangements will be made for the classified BIA school employees? That will depend on the terms of the participation agreements between school districts and the state, but it will probably be limited to including service from the beginning of state involvement. There will also be a large financial impact on the system from BIA teachers who retire from the state. The TRS statutes allow a teacher with five years with the state to claim up to 20 years of BIA service. A similar impact will occur in PERS if the state buys the Alaska Railroad from the federal government.

AS 14.20.107. CREDIT FOR ALASKA BIA SERVICE

Mr. Elrod pointed out a loophole in the present statute. A person may have worked for the federal government long enough to qualify for federal retirement. If he then works for the state, he is entitled to buy in five years of that federal service. The statute requires that the state reduce the amount of retirement benefit it pays by the amount of benefits which the person is receiving from the federal government for the same period of service. However, if the person takes a lump sum payment from the federal government before retiring from the state, there will be no federal retirement benefits. After his state benefits are established, he can repay the amount into the federal retirement system and then be eligible to draw retirement benefits from both systems for the same years of service.

Senator Ray asked Mr. Elrod to prepare proposed legislation to address the double credit for federal service. He announced that the commission would meet again in two or three weeks and would consider applicants for the vacancy in the commission membership as well as the other issues which have been raised.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 4:00 p.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau, Alaska
March 11, 1982

MINUTES

The meeting was called to order by Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, at 1:35 p.m. The roll call showed Senator Ray, John Chenoweth, Senator Dick Eliason, James Fisher (alternate for Commissioner Hudson), Lois Jund, Ken Kareen, Lynda McCurry, Greg O'Claray, John Pugh and Darlene Livermore (alternate for Cherie Shelley) as present. Representative Jack Fuller, Myrt Charney, and William Huston were absent. Also present were Roger Thayer and Bob Mourant.

The commission reviewed the draft of the 1982 Report to the Legislature and corrected errors and made changes. It was moved that the report as amended be presented to the Legislature. There were no objections and Senator Ray so ordered. The commission adjourned at 3:00 p.m.

APPLYING FOR A

WITH THE STATE OF ALASKA...

WHAT YOU NEED TO KNOW BEFORE YOU START

10M 11/79

Are you interested in working for the State of Alaska? It may help you in your search for public employment to know something about our state government and its personnel system.

Over 15,000 people are employed by the State of Alaska in the three government branches — Legislative, Judicial, and Executive.

The Legislative branch is composed of the elected members of the State Senate and House of Representatives, various legislative agencies and committees, and the staff directly serving them. Its function is to enact laws for the benefit of the people.

The Judicial branch interprets the meaning of the laws and the Constitution. It is headed by the Alaska Supreme Court and includes the judges of Alaska's Superior and District Courts as well as the administrative and support staff of the Alaska Court System.

The Executive branch is responsible for enforcement and administration of the laws. The Governor is the chief executive officer responsible for managing the affairs of the government and providing necessary public services. To assist him in this task, the Legislature has established fifteen Departments, each one responsible for particular programs.

The majority of people working for our state government are employed in positions within these fifteen Departments. They are involved in keeping the state government operating and providing us with public services. It is ninety-five percent of these positions that comprise the Classified Service of state employment.

The State of Alaska has a merit system of personnel administration for positions in the Classified Service.

Why have a MERIT SYSTEM?

As residents of Alaska, we pay taxes and, in return, expect our state government to maintain order and provide us with many public services: roads, airports, health services, management of natural resources and so on. The responsiveness of the government, the quality of public services provided, as well as the most effective use of our tax dollars are all dependent on the quality of the people working for the government. Therefore, we all have an interest in seeing that the best qualified people not only are hired to fill positions in state government, but also that good workers are motivated to stay and make public service a career.

The means of attracting, hiring, and keeping the most qualified people in state government service is through a merit system of personnel administration.

What are some elements of the MERIT SYSTEM?

At the heart of the merit personnel system is the idea that hiring decisions should be based on individual merit. This means that hires are made from among those applicants best qualified to do the job. People interested in a state position must compete with all other interested applicants. They all receive equal consideration in this competition. Each applicant is evaluated on the basis of his/her individual qualifications for the job AND on the basis of how their qualifications compare to those of the other applicants.

Equal employment opportunity is central to the merit system. Each applicant and employee receives fair treatment in all aspects of personnel administration without regard to race, color, religion, creed, national orgin, sex, age, physical or mental handicap, marital status, changes in martial status, pregnancy or parenthood, or other nonmerit factors.

Comparable pay for comparable work is another important principle of the merit system. Salary levels are established according to a plan which takes into account the responsibility and difficulty of the work as it compares to that of existing state job classes. Consideration is also given to conditions in the competitive labor market. The actual salary amount assigned to each level is determined through the collective bargaining process.

Finally, under a merit system, retention of employees is based on the adequacy of their performance as determined by the quantity and quality of their work, the manner in which it is performed, and their faithfulness to their duties. When first hired in a permanent position, employees are subject to a probationary period. During this "working test period," employees demonstrate their ability to do the work and adjust to the demands of the position. Employees must "pass" this trial period before they earn permanent status. Once employees have permanent status, they are regularly evaluated to ensure that they continue to perform in the expected manner.

How did we get a MERIT SYSTEM?

The basic authority for our merit system is found in the State of Alaska Constitution. It required the Legislature to "... establish a system under which the merit principle will govern the employment of persons by the State." The Legislature then passed Title 39 of the Alaska Statutes, "Public Officers and Employees."

Chapter 25 of this law outlines the merit system organization and establishes the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations (in the Department of Administration) as the state's central personnel agency. The Division is responsible for administering the merit system. The law also provides for the establishment of regulations to govern personnel administration under the merit system. The regulations, known as the Personnel Rules, are adopted by the Personnel Board which is a regulatory body created by this law.

Who is included in the MERIT SYSTEM?

ALL positions in state government are part of the merit system except those which Title 39 specifically exempts from all or part of the provisions of the law.

Positions that are totally exempt from the rules and regulations of the merit system are in the Exempt Service of state government. The Exempt Service consists of:

- elected and appointed state officials,
- positions in the Legislative and Judicial branches including employees of the State Court System and persons working for the State Legislature or its agencies,
- all University of Alaska employees,

- members of special boards and commis sions,
- the Commissioners of the fifteen Depar ments,
- the masters and crew members aboar the State ferries,
- and certain other positions specificall listed in the law.

Positions in the Partially-Exempt Service ar excluded from some of the merit system rule and regulations including those coverin recruitment, selection, appointment, promo tion and separation. Partially-Exempt position include:

- Deputy Commissioners of the fiftee Departments,
- attorneys in the Department of Law,
- those Division Directors specifical listed in Title 39 as well as any s designated by the Governor,
- all employees of the Office of the Gove nor and Lieutenant Governor,
- and certain other positions specifical listed in the law.

The majority of positions in Alaska stat government, however, ARE fully covered b the rules and regulations of the merit syste except where modified by collective bargai ing agreements. These covered positions co stitute the Classified Service. Classified Se vice positions are all in the fifteen Departmen of the Executive branch.

There are approximately 8,000 individual positions in the state's Classified Service performing all kinds of work: engineers, nurses, clerk-typists, state troopers, biologists, accountants, and park rangers, to name a few.

These positions are organized by occupation or according to the general type of work (i.e., clerical, physical sciences, administrative). Then, within each occupation, positions are "classified" or grouped together according to the similarities in their duties, responsibilites, and the qualifications required.

Individual positions are grouped together into a single job class when (1) they are involved in the same kind of work, (2) are very similar in:

a. their actual duties,
b. how much responsibility they have,
c. the degree of supervision they exercise and receive;

and (3) when the same skills, ability, and background experience or education are needed to do the job.

All positions assigned to a job class are generally treated the same, no matter which of the Departments the positions are in. They all have the same official job class title, the same class specification, the same salary range, and the same minimum qualifications.

There are about 1000 different job classes in the Classified Service.

Job classes are organized into a job series if they are in the same specialized line of work, but differ in the level of difficulty or responsibility and therefore in salary range. A job series may be thought of as job classes grouped together in the most natural line of promotion.

Who is responsible for personnel administration in the CLASSIFIED SERVICE?

Each of the fifteen Departments has a personnel office responsible for administering the personnel system in their Department. However, the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations is the state's central personnel agency, with the primary responsibility for statewide personnel administration.

Among other things, the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations recruits, examines, and provides eligible lists of qualified candidates for most of the job classes in the Classified Service.

When filling a vacancy in a Classified Service position, a Department requests an eligible list from the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations. The Division certifies to them the names of available candidates in that job class. The decision of whom to actually hire is made by the Department.

All of the competitive job classes are not "open" to application on a continuous basis. The Division of Personnel and Labor Relations projects the needs of the fifteen Departments and schedules recruitment for each job class so that sufficient candidates are available when a position needs to be filled.

How are positions in the CLASSIFIED SERVICE filled?

Remember, the Classified Service is a merit personnel system with the goal of obtaining the best qualified people in each position. To determine who is best qualified, candidates must participate in a competitive examination process in which they are evaluated as to their relative merit, qualifications, fitness and ability to do the work of the job class.

The competitive examination process has four main elements.

Recruitment

When there is a need to establish or expand a list of qualified candidates for a job class, the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations will open recruitment for that job class.

Recruitment openings are made public so that all interested people have a reasonable opportunity to know about them. Interested persons are given a chance to apply and be considered for the job class.

Recruitment may be open to all interested candidates or it may be limited in some way. For example, some job classes are part of a natural career ladder and therefore are usually filled through promotion, so recruitment is limited to candidates with permanent status in the Classified Service. If the position to be filled is in a particular location, recruitment may be open only to those candidates interested in working in that location. For some job classes, however, the need for candidates is constant and recruitment is open continuously.

Application

In order to obtain candidates that have the best potential for success in a position, job related minimum requirements have been established for each job class. The requirements are related to the knowledges, skills, abilities, and other characteristics needed for successful job performance. The minimum requirements are usually a statement of the amount, type, and level of experience or formal education that is needed to qualify for the job class.

Each applicant must possess the minimum requirements and be considered "qualified" before they can continue in the examination process.

Examination

Since the goal is to find the best qualified applicant, there must be a method for drawing distinctions among the qualifications of competing applicants.

A specific examination procedure has been designed for each job class to evaluate and determine the relative merit, ability, capacity, and fitness of competing candidates.

Written tests are not the only method used in the examination process. Other evaluation methods include performance tests, a rating of promotability, or an evaluation and rating of training and experience. A combination of these methods with each other or with written tests may also be used for a job class.

Qualified applicants must pass all parts of the examination process. Successful applicants receive a final score or rating based on the results of the examination. Their names are then placed on an eligible list for the job class, ranked in the order of their final score.

Certification

When a department has an opening, they inform the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations of the job class of the position and where in the State it is located.

The Division certifies the eligible list to the Department with names of candidates for that job class who have indicated they are available for positions in that particular location. The person in the Department responsible for hiring "works" the eligible list. This may involve reviewing candidates' applications, arranging interviews with some or all of the candidates, and checking past work history and references. If a selection is made from the list, it must be from among the top five candidates who are interested and available for the position.

How do you apply for the CLASSIFIED SERVICE? What you need to do and where to go for information is described in detail on following pages.

Very briefly, the steps are as follows:

1. Find out what job classes are "open."
2. Complete an application for EACH job class you are interested in.
3. Complete the examination process.
4. Receive Report of Exam Results.
5. Interview/Selection.

1. Find out which job classes are currently open for application.

Recruitment for job classes is advertised on recruitment bulletins and in a booklet called JOBS. Advertisements are also sometimes placed in the newspaper or on the radio or a special pamphlet is distributed.

You may apply ONLY for those job classes which are described on recruitment bulletins or in the JOBS booklet. If the job class is not described in one of these places, we are currently not accepting applications. If you send in an application, it will be returned to you.

The recruitment information gives a short description of each job class, the minimum qualifications that you need, the salary, and where the positions are located.

When you are deciding which job classes to apply for, choose those that are in locations you are willing to work. Also, read the minimum qualifications carefully and apply only for those job classes for which you are fairly sure you qualify.

Recruitment bulletins and the JOBS booklet are available in the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations offices in Juneau, Anchorage, and Fairbanks and at all State Employment Centers (addresses on the last page).

In smaller towns the mayor, postmaster, or school may receive recruitment information. Chances are recruitment information is available at the place you picked up this booklet.

If you do not know where to find recruitment information in your town, write to the following address to find out:

Recruitment Coordinator
Division of Personnel and Labor Relations
Pouch C
Juneau, Alaska 99811

If recruitment information is not available in your town or village, write to the Recruitment Coordinator at the address above and ask for help in applying. When you write, include the type of work you want, the places in Alaska you are willing to work, your education, and your work experience. The Recruitment Coordinator will write back to you suggesting the kinds of jobs you can apply for.

2. Completing the Application.

You need to fill out and submit a separate State of Alaska Employment Application (form 02-250) for each job class you wish to apply for. You can get applications from Division of Personnel and Labor Relations offices, State Employment Centers, from any Department personnel office, and many other state offices.

The application form is an important part of getting a job in the Classified Service. Fill it out carefully and accurately. The information you include is usually the only basis for determining whether or not you meet minimum qualifications.

Listed below are explanations and instructions for some sections of the application form. The numbers correspond with the numbered sections on the State application form (revision date 9/79). Other items on the form are self-explanatory and are not listed here.

#1. POSITION APPLYING FOR

Use only the title that you found in the recruitment information. Only one job class title can be used for each application unless the announcement specifically states that you may apply for several job classes using one application.

#3 and #5. MAILING ADDRESS and TELEPHONE NUMBERS

List your CURRENT mailing address and telephone numbers. Should your mailing address or telephone numbers change any time after you submit your application, BE SURE to write to the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations and inform them of the changes.

The Division needs to provide current address and telephone information to hiring Departments so they are able to contact you about possible job openings. Your failure to promptly report any address and telephone number changes may result in your losing the opportunity to be considered for a particular job and the state losing the opportunity to hire a well-qualified employee.

#4. SOCIAL SECURITY NUMBER

You are not REQUIRED to put your social security number on the application. The Division of Personnel and Labor Relations uses the number as a cross check to separate the files of people with the same or similar names. The computer also uses social security numbers to sort names of candidates when it produces an eligible list.

Social security numbers must be provided at the time of hire to enable the State to make required payroll deductions.

#6. RESIDENT OF ALASKA

A person applying for a state job is considered a resident if he/she is domiciled in Alaska at the time of application. This means that your true and permanent home must be in Alaska; that you have no present plans of moving from your home in Alaska; and that whenever you are away you intend to return. Should there be any questions about your domicile, you will be asked to complete a residency affidavit.

If, after being placed on an eligible list, you change your residence to outside of Alaska, your name may be removed from the list until you resume residency in Alaska.

Residents of Alaska are given preference in all appointments to the Classified Service. Since there are usually enough qualified Alaskans available to meet the state's employment needs, most job classes are not open for recruitment outside Alaska. We accept applications from non-Alaskan residents only for those job classes for which we have been unable to find qualified Alaskans (about 2% of the job classes).

#8 I AM APPLYING FOR

There are two types of positions in the Classified Service, permanent and nonpermanent.

Permanent positions are established when there is a continuous and on-going job that needs to be done. There are three kinds of permanent positions:

- Permanent full-time. Work hours are 37.5 hours per week, year round.
- Permanent seasonal. Jobs that last a few months each year. Usually they are 37.5 hours per week.
- Permanent part-time. Work hours are 30 hours or less per week, year round.

Nonpermanent positions are limited by time or by the special nature of the work. There are three kinds of nonpermanent positions:

- Temporary jobs that last for 120 days or less.
- "Project" or "program" positions which may last longer than 120 days. Before a person is hired, they are told how long the job will last.

- Temporary substitute for a permanent employee on leave. The job lasts until the regular employee returns.

Employees in permanent positions are eligible for certain benefits (such as earned leave, participation in the retirement program, and the like) that people in nonpermanent positions do not receive.

Look for information in your local State Employment Center or Division of Personnel and Labor Relations office about the kinds of nonpermanent positions that will be available.

#11. EEO INFORMATION

You do not HAVE to complete this section. This is voluntary information and failure to provide it will not subject you to adverse treatment. However, if you do, you will be helping the State of Alaska gather needed information required by federal and state laws.

#12. CERTIFICATION

BE SURE TO SIGN AND DATE YOUR APPLICATION IN INK. If it does not have an original signature, we will return it to you.

When you sign your application, this signifies that all of the information you have included is true and correct to the best of your knowledge. You may be disqualified for consideration for any or all job classes in the Classified Service if you deliberately enter false or misleading information on your application.

#13. WORK HISTORY

Describe all the jobs you have held, beginning with the most recent one. When describing your experience, including volunteer experience, be sure to complete all the blanks: starting date (month/year), ending date, hours worked per week, and so on.

If you were in the military, list separately each new duty assignment in which you had substantially different duties. Include your military ranks and the dates you held them.

Give detailed information about the duties and responsibilities of each of your jobs. Be specific. Do not use general terms or "jargon." Describe your previous work in terms of activities you had. Explain your supervisory or management duties (if any), what kinds of decisions you made, or how much supervision you received.

For many job classes, the examination procedure includes a score based on your previous training and experience. The information you provide in your application will be the only basis for this score.

If you have a detailed resume, it can be a helpful supplement to your application. Please do not try to use your resume to avoid completing the application.

#14. VETERAN'S PREFERENCE CLAIM

Active duty for the purpose of determining Veteran's preference points is defined as:

> periods during which members are assigned by written orders to perform military duties on a full-time basis for an enlistment period that has been determined prior to taking the oath of enlistment.

Active duty which is performed for training purposes (i.e., Basic Training, Military Occupational Training, and Summer Camp) while a member of a reserve component is not qualifying "active duty" status for Veteran's preference points. Members of reserve components who have served on "active duty" for a period of 90 consecutive days or more, as distinguished from "active duty for training", qualify for Veteran's Preference points.

#15. CONVICTIONS

If you have been convicted of a misdemeanor in the last five years or felony in the last ten years, please explain it on a separate sheet of paper.

Whether or not this affects the action taken on your application during the examination process depends on the recency and type of conviction and its relatedness to the job class you are applying for. (For instance, since convicted felons may not carry a hand gun, they are not eligible for such job classes as State Trooper Recruit or Correctional Officer I).

A conviction will not automatically cause your application to be rejected.

#20. EDUCATION AND TRAINING

In Section A, list the names and addresses of colleges you have attended.

Minimum qualifications for state job classes often state that "education will substitute for required experience on a year-for-year basis." A bachelors degree is equated to four years of experience and an associate degree is equivalent to two years of experience. Undergraduate study that has not ended in a degree is counted at the rate of 32 semester hours or 48 quarter hours equals one year. For graduate study, 24 semester hours or 36 quarter hours equates to one year.

When the minimum qualifications state "college graduation", this means a four-year degree is required.

In order to be used to meet the minimum qualifications for a job class, college study must have been from a college or university accredited through one of the regional accrediting associations.

Credits earned from a nonaccredited college can be counted if they are recognized and transferable to an accredited college or university. In such cases, it is the responsibility of the applicant to provide verification that an accredited institution will accept the credits in question.

In Section B, list any training you received at a vocational, technical, business or correspondence school. Typically, these schools do not give semester or quarter credits like colleges do. Therefore, you should list the number of hours that you spent in the classroom or, if it was a correspondence study course, list the number of assignments you have completed.

These kinds of training are equated to work experience on an hour for hour basis; i.e., one hour spent in a classroom equals one hour of work experience.

The training can count toward meeting minimum qualifications only if was from an approved school. This means the school must be approved by one of the accrediting groups recognized by the Council on Post Secondary Education.

#21. TRANSCRIPTS AND SUPPLEMENTAL INFORMATION

Transcripts are not always required, but you are encouraged to include them with your application. If we need to verify the courses you took, we may ask you for them. Transcripts are most commonly needed if: (1) the job class you have applied for requires a certain number of hours in a particular field (such as 15 semester hours in accounting) or (2) if your college degree is not the major specified in the minimum qualifications but is "closely related" to it. In such cases, the coursework on your college transcripts will be compared to the coursework needed for that major.

If you are including a resume with your application or have submitted one with a previous application, mark the appropriate box in the "Supplemental Information" section.

#22. TYPING CERTIFICATION

When you complete the statement indicating how many words you can type and sign your name to it, this is your assurance to a prospective employer of how fast and well you can type. You will be asked to take a typing test if any doubts arise as to your typing ability. If you are uncertain of your current typing skill, you can make arrangements to take a typing test through most State Employment Centers.

#23. CONDITIONS OF EMPLOYMENT

Work Location: List the cities, towns, or villages in which you would like to work. (Do not list regional areas, list only specific places). You will be considered only for positions that are in the locations you have marked.

Note: ANY means just that, including many rural areas. If you mark ANY and then are not willing to accept a position in any location offered, your name may be removed from the eligible list.

Department: You have more opportunities to be called about a job if you are willing to work for ANY Department. However, if you do NOT wish to work for a certain Department, mark it on the application. Again, should you indicate that you are willing to work in ANY Department and then not accept a position because of the Department it is in, your name may be removed from the eligible list.

After you have completed your application, you should keep a copy of it and your transcripts. You may need them later to apply for a different job class or to take with you to a job interview.

Submit your completed application to one of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations offices in Juneau, Anchorage, or Fairbanks.

3. The Examination Process

When the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations receives your application, it is first checked to make sure:

a. you have used an official job class title
b. the job class you are applying for is open for recruitment
c. you have signed the application in ink
d. you are an Alaskan resident

Your application is "accepted" for processing by the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations only after it passes this first check. If it does not pass this check, it is returned to you with a note explaining why or what is missing.

Accepted applications are examined by trained Personnel Technicians. The Technicians compare the training and work experience you describe in your application to the training and experience required by the job class you applied for. They determine if you possess the minimum amount, level, and kind of training and experience required to qualify.

If you do not qualify for a job class, you are sent a letter explaining what additional training and/or experience you need to meet the minimum qualifications.

You and your application proceed in the examination process only if you meet the minimum qualifications and are therefore qualified for that job class.

Keep in mind that there are different types of evaluation methods used in the examination process. The specific examination procedure for any one job class can involve one or a combination of the following:

Written test:

All written tests are multiple choice. The Examination Contents booklet, available at Division of Personnel and Labor Relations offices, lists the job classes that require written tests and the kinds of questions that are asked on each test. If the job class you applied for has a written test, you are mailed a notice informing you when and where to take the test. People living outside the vicinity of Anchorage, Fairbanks or Juneau are told whom to contact in their area to make testing arrangements.

Evaluation of training and experience

Your application is all that is needed for this method of examination. A Personnel Technician evaluates the training and experience you have described in your application and compares it to a reference sheet specifically developed for that job class.

A reference sheet is a scoring chart which lists the kinds of education and experience that would be useful preparation for doing the work of the job class. Points are assigned to each kind of work based on how relevant and useful that kind of background is to the job class.

The Personnel Technician matches your education and experience to the education and experience listed on the reference sheet. From this the number of points that should be included in your final score is determined.

The reference sheet and point values assigned to experience and training are different for each job class. If you apply for several different job classes, you will most likely get a different score for each one. This is because your training and experience are not equally useful preparation for all job classes.

Performance tests

You must physically demonstrate that you possess a skill or ability required for the work of the job class. If you need to take a performance test, you are mailed a notice informing you when and where to report.

Rating of Promotability

Positions in some job classes are nearly always filled by promotion from lower levels in the same job series. For these job classes, part of the examination process is an evaluation that must be completed by the applicant's supervisor(s). We send the evaluation form to your supervisor.

If you are applying for a job class which uses a combination of these methods, you must pass each one in order to continue in the examination process.

You are given a score based on the results of the examination process.

4. Receive "Report of Exam Results"

You are sent a "Report of Exam Results" form for each job class you apply and qualify for.

A score is entered for each type of evaulation method used in the examination process. BELOW PASSING is stamped in red if you failed any one of the tests.

The column to the right of each score indicates what percentage that score is of your "average" score. The average score consists of these individual scores, averaged together according to the weight (or percentage) each part has been assigned.

There are two kinds of "extra" points which may be added to the average scores of people who are eligible for them — Veteran's Preference points or Employee Credits. Veteran's Points are given only for entry into the Classified Service. If you already have a permanent position in the Classified Service, you will not have Veteran's Points added to your score. Employee Credits are awarded only to employees currently working in a permanent position in the Classified Service. They must have satisfactorily completed their probationary period and achieved permanent status before they can earn Employee Credits.

The number entered in the box marked FINAL SCORE is the average score plus Veteran's Points or Employee Credits. Unless you are eligible for these extra points, your final score will be the same as your average score.

Names are placed on the eligible list in the order of final score. If you got a higher score than most candidates, your name will be placed high on the list. If you got a low score, your name will appear lower on the list. Your place on the list is called your rank.

Once you complete the examination process for a job class, it is "good" for two years. Your name will stay on the eligible list for that length of time. This is the maximum amount of time that the examination process is considered valid for any job class. Over the course of two years you may gain additional work experience or new and different types of knowledges and skills. Therefore, you need to be reexamined for a job class after two years to take into account the changes in your relative qualifications.

5. Interview/Selection

You have received a Report of Exam Results form from the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations for a job class. This means your name has been placed on the eligible list of qualified candidates for that job class, ranked in the place your final score has "earned" you.

Now, you wait to be contacted about a job opening in that job class. The contact, in the form of a telephone call, letter, or telegram, will come from whatever Department the vacant position is in. Whether or not you are contacted will, of course, depend on certain other conditions: your rank on the eligible list in relation to all other candidates on that list, if there is a vacancy in the locations you wish to work, and so forth.

You will be asked to let them know if you are interested in the particular position they have open. It is very important that you always respond to these contacts, even if you are not interested in the position. Otherwise, your name may be removed from the active eligible as someone who is currently not interested in positions in that job class.

The Department representative may arrange to interview you and ask you to bring a copy of your application and/or transcripts to the interview. If you are selected to fill a position, the hiring Department will inform you of when and where to report.

The Division of Personnel and Labor Relations is NOT responsible for contacting, interviewing, and hiring employees for the Classified Service. This is the responsibility of the managers of the fifteen Departments.

A. Staying on an eligible list.

Your name may be taken off an eligible list and placed in the inactive file if:

- -- you do not reply to a letter or telegram about an opening
- -- you move and do not send us a written note of your address change
- -- you refuse a job that is offered to you under conditions you stated on your application you would accept
- -- you take a position in the Classified Service at the same or higher salary range
- -- you are not available for employment
- -- your Alaskan residency has changed

If your name is taken off the "active" eligible list, we write and inform you of the reason. You may request in writing that your name be returned to the active eligible list at any time within your two year period of eligibility. Be sure to include in the note the locations(s) you want to work and whether or not you would like to work for all Departments.

It is extremely important that you remember to:

- -- always report address or telephone number changes in writing to the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations. Otherwise, we cannot provide correct information to the Departments so they can contact you.
- -- always answer a letter or telegram concerning a job class.

Your name may be completely removed from an eligible list for reasons which include the following:

- -- you made a false statement of material fact in your application.
- -- you are dismissed from public service for delinquency, misconduct, unsatisfactory performance of duties, or other similar cause.
- -- you use or attempt to use political pressure or bribery to secure an advantage in the examination or selection process.

- you have unsatisfactory references that result in your rejection by one or more hiring Departments.

- two or more Departments request that your name not be certified to them again after they have considered but not selected you from three separate certified lists.

- you directly or indirectly obtain information regarding examinations to which, as an applicant, you are not entitled.

B. Reapplying.

If you would like to try for a better score in a job class, you may reapply and be reexamined if:

1. recruitment is still "open" for the job class.

2. three months have passed since you first completed the examination process for the job class.

You must request to be reexaminined in writing. Include any additional work experience or education you have gained since the last examination process. If more than a year has passed since you first applied, you need to complete a new application.

ALL portions of the examination process must be repeated. If your original score included a Training and Experience rating, your application will be reexamined for this again. If you took a written test before, you will need to take the written test again.

BE AWARE! The newest score will be used, whether it is higher or lower than your original score.

C. If you fail a written test.

You may retake the written test. The same conditions apply as stated above for reapplying. The job class must be open for recruitment, you must wait three months, and all portions of the examination process must be repeated.

D. The Appeal Process

If you receive a letter telling you that you do not have the required experience and/or education as stated in the mimimum qualifications for a job class you applied for and you feel an error has been made, you may appeal this determination.

Your appeal should be in the form of a letter to the Personnel Technician who examined your application. Please explain why you think you meet the required qualifications for the job class. Include any additional details about your previous work experience and/or education that you might not have included in your original application.

Your application will be reviewed by the Technician's supervisor and you will be informed of the results of the reevaluation.

If you do not agree with the supervisor's determination, you can appeal at three more levels: to the Chief of the Recruitment and Examining Section; then to the Deputy Director of Personnel; and finally, to the Director of Personnel and Labor Relations.

The previous section described application procedures for the majority of job classes in the Classified Service. The Division of Personnel and Labor Relations is primarily responsible for recruiting, examining, and certifying qualified applicants for positions in these job classes.

There are, however, other positions with the State of Alaska for which the application procedures are different and you need to apply elsewhere. This section lists addresses where you may write for information about applying for these other types of positions.

CLASSIFIED SERVICE

Jobs in Labor, Trades, and Crafts

The collective bargaining agreement between the State of Alaska and the Alaska Public Service Employees' Local # 71 (AFL-CIO) includes a hiring hall provision. Certain kinds of positions such as heavy equipment operators, carpenters, plumbers, maintenance workers, electricians, cooks, and housekeepers are filled by referral from their hiring halls.

Delegated Job Classes

For certain job classes, an operating Department has been delegated responsibility for accepting applications.

The majority of these are highway engineering positions for which the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities accepts applications. Other Departments that currently accept applications for classified positions are Administration, Fish and Game, and Health and Social Services.

A list of job classes recruited by hiring Departments is in the front section of the JOBS booklet. You can write to the personnel officers of the Departments listed above (addresses inside back cover) for specific information.

PARTIALLY-EXEMPT SERVICE

There is a small number of partially exempt positions in each of the fifteen Departments. To inquire about partially-exempt positions, contact the personnel officer of the Department(s) you are interested in working for.

Nearly all positions in the Office of the Governor and Lieutenant Governor are partially-exempt. Attorney positions in the Department of Law and in the Public Defender's office are also partially-exempt.

To ask about any of these postions, you may write to:

government instead. He added that he did not know whether it would be possible under federal and state regulations. Senator Ray said that it would be better if there were a requirement in the job description which would correct the problem. Where there's a job in an area where the dominant language is Yupik, then for a position which is supposed to serve the people, there should be a requirement that the state employee speak Yupik.

Mr. Kareen pointed out that in order to make that requirement under the human rights laws and the federal equal employment opportunity laws, the state would have to show that speaking both languages was a bona fide occupational qualification. In villages in which almost everyone speaks English or for jobs like Fish and Game Technician which don't require talking with people as part of the job, a language requirement would probably run into difficulties. The situation is different for jobs requiring interviewing local people and gathering information from them. In answer to a question from Ms. Jund, Mr. Kareen explained that Village Safety Officers are employed by the villages under funds that are granted to them by the state. The village selects the individual who is trained by the state but remains an employee of the village.

Senator Ray proposed that the commission recommend that knowledge of the predominant language be a job requirement for rural positions requiring communications and knowledge of the cultural background. The commission should further point out that in jobs with no emphasis on communication, the regular job requirements should apply. It would be good business for the state. Mr. Blank suggested that the recommendation should go further, and Senator Ray replied that constitutionally the commission could not go any further. He added that he fought for Alaska hire, but that he would not support a situation which sets one Alaskan against another.

Senator Ray thanked Mr. Blank and asked if there was anyone else wishing to give testimony.

Sandra Borbridge spoke to the commission about discriminatory practices in the hiring of not only minorities and women, but minority women. She identified three areas: entry into state employment through the registers; the availability of unemployment benefits for women who are seeking administrative positions; and the attitude of Department of Labor employees towards Native applicants and Native organizations.

Ms. Borbridge suggested that there should be a central information clearing house for state positions. When she first went to the Juneau Employment Center a year ago, she completed an application, had an interview and was classified as eligible for an administrative position. From that time to the present she has never been informed about the state register, and she still does not know what it is.

On the availability of unemployment benefits to women seeking administrative positions, she related her own experience. When she interviewed with the Juneau Employment Center after becoming unemployed, she was classified as seeking an administrative position. The application asked whether she could type. Before she would answer, she asked whether that would affect either referrals for employment or her unemployment benefits. She was told that it would not, so she said that yes, she could type. She was later referred to a clerical job requiring that she type 30 percent of her time and paying only 60 percent of her previous wages. She refused that job referral because it would be a waste of both her and the employer's time. One week later she received notice from the state unemployment office that her benefits would be cut.

Then she went through a second referral. She went into the Job Service Center office and spoke with the interviewer about the job requirements. When she objected to the typing, the interviewer agreed that she would be overqualified for the position and that she should not bother to go for an interview. So there were two different policies within the Center.

Ms. Borbridge appealed the denial of unemployment benefits. At the arbitration hearing the initial decision was upheld. In an appeal to the Commissioner of Labor, the decision was overturned because she should not have been referred to a clerical job. Ms. Borbridge said that many women do not have the financial means to wait for an appeals decision, and so they accept clerical jobs. Women should not be penalized for wanting challenging work even if they know how to type.

Ms. Borbridge spoke about the attitude of people working in the Juneau Employment Center and in the Department of Labor towards Natives and Native organizations. In 1975, she completed an application and stated her minimum salary requirement. She was asked whether that wasn't a little high for someone with her education and experience. She was also told that she was acting a little "spoiled". A week later she was offered a job with a private firm at a salary higher than her minimum requirement. During the hearings on her unemployment benefits, someone mentioned that Native organizations overpay their employees. She found the statement uncalled for, unprofessional, and reflective of attitudes which she and others, as Natives, encounter. Until these three different problem areas are addressed, Ms. Borbridge suggested that problems will continue to exist.

Senator Ray asked Mr. Kareen to explain the register system to Ms. Borbridge. Mr. Kareen said that when individuals apply for a job with the state, they go through an examining process. Based on the score they receive, they are posted on a register, also called an eligible list. When a vacancy opens in that job class, the Division of Personnel issues an eligible list to the department with the vacancy. The list ranks the names of all those people who are interested in that job class and have passed the test. Then the department proceeds from that point to contact the individuals on the list, interview them and make a selection.

Ms. Jund suggested that there hasn't been a central place where people can go to find out what jobs are available, how to apply

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau, Alaska
December 21, 1981

MINUTES

The meeting was called to order by Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, at 10:00 a.m. The roll call showed Senator Ray, Representative Jack Fuller, John Chenoweth, Senator Dick Eliason, Lois Jund, Ken Kareen, Roger Thayer (alternate for Lynda McCurry), Fred Muller (alternate for Commissioner Hudson), Greg O'Claray, John Pugh and Doryce Eggleston (alternate for Cherie Shelley) present. Myrt Charney and Bill Huston were absent. Also present was James Fisher.

Senator Ray asked for public testimony. Charlie Mae Moore addressed the commission. She said that she represents a conglomerate of people who asked that she speak. She works for the Department of Education and has been employed in the field of education in Alaska for 28 years. For a period from 1970 to 1978 she served on the Governor's EEO Commission. For three or four years, the Commission worked closely with the state personnel office, and conducted an overview of the personnel system. Ms. Moore worked for the division for one summer and looked at minimum qualifications and requirements for jobs. She discovered one that she hasn't forgotten. A firefighter couldn't fight a fire unless he was 5'8" tall, which she found ridiculous. The EEO Commission was able to work with the personnel office to resolve some of these instances.

In the course of her tenure with the EEO Commission, Ms. Moore said that she became very upset and disturbed for people who came to her and the other commissioners because they couldn't get on with the state system or because they had been with the system for a long time but couldn't move. The EEO Commission did not have enforcement power, so there was nothing that they could do but listen to people. She began to question what they were accomplishing. Through the personnel division, they were able to do some things. They came up with some specific recommendations which the Governor considered and implemented. They revamped the employment application. But problems still remain.

Women employed in ranges 9 to 15 are generally unaware of the possibility of a career ladder. They are provided with very little orientation to the job and they feel frustrated because they do not get enough career counseling. They aren't advised of their function, of what the state government is about and as to their role. So they become discouraged. Ms. Moore suggested that the 18 departmental personnel offices need to relate more to people, especially to women.

Minorities are underutilized in state government. Ms. Moore said that she was concerned about qualified people being hired and then being able to move forward. The buddy system has become more sophisticated in the State of Alaska but it is still used. It is disturbing to see a job advertized when there is already someone who has been chosen for the position.

On middle management, Ms. Moore pointed out that minorities seem to be trapped in ranges 9 to 21. They can never shake that 21. She said that she wasn't asking for preference, but she was talking about qualified people who are productive employees, who commit themselves to take on more to get the job done. Employees should not fear that they will be retaliated against if they speak out about problems. When setting EEO goals, women should be kept as a separate category from minorities. Advancing women does not satisfy the need to advance minority people.

Ms. Moore said that there has been some strengthening in the personnel system, particularly in career counseling. Employees understand what the requirements are for promotions and what classes they might take to become eligible for better jobs. In some cases, classes are paid for to enhance an employee's performance in his present job.

Ms. Moore said that she has talked with people who have said that all they are interested in as far as the departmental Affirmative Action Plan, is to have the plan approved. If things are going to happen, it means more than having the paper produced and getting the Governor's signature on it. Another state employee came out of an EEO meeting and said that he couldn't wait to get out of there. Attitude is what really bothers her, said Ms. Moore. She asks three things: that minority people are thought about, that they be given an opportunity, and that the Blue Ribbon Commission be endowed to do some of the things that EEOC couldn't do -- to act to correct the problems which were identified.

Senator Ray asked Ms. Moore whether she had any recommendations for overcoming the subtleness of discrimination which can happen when an office has five caucasian employees and one minority group employee and the five employees make the office a miserable place for the one minority person.

Ms. Moore replied that she didn't have an answer to that kind of sophisticated discrimination. She also worries about verbal abuse, which can destroy a person. She was once subjected to it and became so angry that tears came to her eyes, and yet, one hour later, the person who had done it was perfectly friendly. People who discriminate can stay within the guidelines so that there is no avenue of recourse open to the person injured, and yet still be effective. She said that when she has been told of problems in her office, she will act as an intermediary to tell the person who did it that the other person is upset, and that he should talk with the other person. Sometimes they are unaware of the effect of what they have done. One-on-one contact is important, to provide some encouragement and to alleviate frustration. Personnel officers or supervisors can fill this role. If minority people find only putdowns and embarrassment in their jobs, they will leave, even if its more money than they've ever made in their lives. Having someone to talk with personally can allay fears of discrimination and show that a new policy is affecting all employees, or that one individual is like that with everyone, not just the minority employee.

Promotions for minority people are another problem. Ms. Moore said that she has been asked "if I promote this person, will the people who work for them resent them because they are a minority?" If a person is a good supervisor, showing compassion and caring for people, employees will work themselves to death to make the supervisor look good.

The high turnover in jobs between ranges 9 and 15 hurts the employer because of the time invested in employees, in training them, in getting the terminology of the department or unit familiar to them. It's important to be supportive of them, to find out whether there is a problem. Senator Ray suggested that what you really need is a group of people who work for the administration who take care of problems as they crop up. Ms. Moore agreed and added that it is crucial that they work for the administration.

Senator Ray thanked Ms. Moore for her testimony. He asked for any other people who wished to testify. No one came forward at this time and the commission turned to considering the issues presented in a memo dated December 18, 1981 prepared by the commission staff.

A. PROBLEMS IN THE HIRING PROCESS

1. Classification of positions.

Lois Jund pointed out that a review of the entire state classification system is long overdue. When positions with comparable duties are classified differently, it results in a great deal of discrimination against employees. Ken Kareen said that the state is working at a slow pace toward that goal and added that it concerns two different items, the classification system and the state pay plan. Senator Ray added that other problems occur when the duties for a position change over time. When the position is finally reclassified, the person who has been fulfilling them may lack the technical requirements for the new job classification. Mr. Kareen pointed out that there are two different considerations -- fairness to the employee who developed the job vs. appearances of the "buddy system" which cases those who want the job to say "it isn't fair because I didn't have a chance to compete for that job".

Greg O'Claray asked about the use of the classification system to encourage employment of protected classes. Is the state interested in hiring the person most qualified for the job? Should the classification system be used to broaden the selection process? John Pugh explained that the Social Services Associates are entry level positions. The minimum qualifications for that job class are lower than for social workers and the state provides closer supervision of the new employee. The Social Services Associate does not do all of the social worker tasks. A career ladder has been developed and after three years as a Social Service Associate, the employee will qualify as a social worker.

Mr. Kareen added that trainee job classes assume that a training plan will be part of the job duties and that the job will be structured to provide close supervision. Where the training is haphazard, the use of trainee job classes doesn't work well. There are also some skills such as typing which are better learned away from the office. On-the-job training should be mixed with appropriate training away from the job site.

Senator Ray asked whether providing training was the state's job. Mr. Kareen responded that it was, in some cases. Most successful private employers spend time training their employees. He added that in comparing the state with private employers, it is important to remember that there is no private employer in Alaska whose workforce is as large as the states's. Senator Ray said that you can't expect the state to provide training to people applying for positions in which the registers are already full of qualified applicants.

Mr. Thayer returned to the question of using the classification system to remedy underutilization and suggested that there should be more flexible staffing of positions. Very few departments make use of the system. They hire at the highest level of a job class instead of opening a trainee position and then upgrading the position and the employee as skills are learned.

Mr. O'Claray suggested that in order to attack discrimination, you have to look at the numbers, and the numbers on underutilized classes are pretty plain. So far there has been no tool which is effective to change the numbers, because there is no mandatory requirement that anyone do anything on EEO. If you decide that you want to do something to correct past inequities then you may have to use affirmative action tools which give a preference to those who have been discriminated against. Senator Ray pointed out that those tools may not be fair to the individual who is not covered by the affirmative action plan. Mr. O'Claray asked whether there was an EEO office in every department. Mr. Kareen explained that there are individuals designated as EEO officers and there are EEO committees in the departments, but for many employees, it's a duty added on to their other job responsibilities.

Mr. O'Claray moved that the commission support a review of the classification system. Mr. Kareen suggested that until the review is made, it would be premature to suggest whether the classificaiton system should be used to encourage employment of protected classes, and that the motion should be limited as it was phrased. Mr. Pugh asked whether there were resources available either for an outside contract or for staff time within the division to accomplish such a review. Senator Ray said that he would look at the budget to find funds to at least provide a preliminary review to identify areas of great concentration in the future. The motion carried without objection.

2. Recruitment.

Representative Fuller said that he had intended to talk with Mr. Pugh about the Nome Youth Facility before raising the question in the meeting. He has heard that positions have been upgraded which has meant that some people who applied have been eliminated from consideration for the positions. Mr. Pugh explained that the positions had not been upgraded, but that there were a number of individuals who did not pass examinations conducted in Nome, so the department held a second recruitment there. The positions are what is called coupled classes. The majority are Youth Counselor I positions, and after six months on the job, the employees will be eligible for promotion to Youth Counselor II.

MEMO ON MALES AND FEMALES ON SELECTED REGISTERS

SenatoR Ray asked the commission to look at the memo on the numbers of males and females on selected registers. The commission has heard much testimony about the large number of women working in the lower salary ranges. The memo shows that there are few female applicants for higher range positions. He asked whether it would be safe to assume that if there is discrimination in the higher ranges, it is in the partially exempt and exempt services rather than in the classified service. Mr. Pugh suggested that it raises another question about why there is such a discrepancy in the numbers applying. Mr. Kareen added that as an employer, the state inherits the difficulties in society and in the educational system. Higher range jobs usually require that the applicants meet educational and work experience criteria. In the past, women have been discouraged from seeking careers in many areas, so they are unlikely to be well represented in the applicant pool for those jobs. You can't expect a balance to be achieved overnight.

Senator Ray pointed out that the memo under discussion did not show the male/female ratio of presently employed in the job classes. Therefore, it is difficult to know whether the state is doing what it should in its hiring decisions. Mr. Kareen said that the state is working to develop applicant flow data which would consolidate that information. The information is stored now, but not in a coherent form.

Representative Fuller asked how many complaints the commission has received about women not being upgraded. Senator Ray replied that the majority of people were complaining about the low number of women in executive positions. He asked the staff to prepare figures on the number of male and female employees presently employed in the job classes addressed in the memo.

Mr. O'Claray asked about the success ratio of the commission with respect to handling individual complaints. He said that he tends to believe that the most effective way of handling discrimination is on an individual basis because it shows results. Senator Ray said that he believes it is about 90 percent. Ms. Cramer added that the commission staff has not kept a formal summary of the results of the complaints received. Mr. O'Claray added that many of these cases can be better resolved on an informal basis rather than through a formal process like a charge before the Human Rights Commission. People tend to solidify their positions if they think they're going to go through legal proceedings. Senator Eliason pointed out there can be some value to having a public airing of a situation. Senator Ray agreed when the situation affects many people, but when it is an individual matter, public hearings can harm the person involved more than help.

A.3. Five-Plus-Five Certification System.

Mr. O'Claray said he has talked with a few of the people responsible for hiring in several different divisions of the state and asked them about the five-plus-five registers. Some use them and some don't seem to have any working relationship with them. Unless there is some instruction given by the division director or the commissioner of that department, the system is not going to be used. Senator Ray asked whether the register system was fair to use or constitutional within the merit system, when it results in going below the top five to reach others less qualified? Mr. O'Claray responded that if you have an affirmative action plan which says that you intend to meet certain goals, then that is the policy, whether or not it is fair. Mr. Thayer explained that each department either has or is developing an Affirmative Action Plan. Mr. Kareen added that the five-plus-five registers can only be used in job classes where underutilization has been shown to exist. Senator Ray asked whether use of the registers in those cases was mandatory? Mr. O'Claray suggested that use of the expanded registers should be mandatory where underutilization is established.

Mr Muller explained that every person on a register is qualified to do that job. Some people rank higher than others, but all are qualified. The five-plus-five register just gives qualified minorities or women a chance to be interviewed and considered for a position. The system is relatively new. On the constitutional question, he added that similar systems have been considered by courts elsewhere. The courts have recognized that under the federal constitution, where there is underutilization, employers can use instruments of this type until the employer achieves a better balance in the work force. Once that has been accomplished, then the employer returns to a system strictly based on merit principles. Mr. Muller added that it is now mandatory that departments receive the five-plus-five list. Hiring from the minority list is voluntary.

Senator Ray asked whether the commission wished to encourage use of the five-plus-five registers. Members agreed that they did. Mr. O'Claray added that according to Mr. Muller, calling for those registers is mandatory. Mr. Thayer asked for clarification because he knew of nothing which had made that the state policy. Mr Muller answered that where underutilization exists in a job class within a division or a department and the appointing authority calls for a register, the system should, as a matter of course, provide the supplementary register. The decision as to whether the appointing authority will hire from the expanded register is voluntary. Mr. Chenoweth asked whether the source for the mandatory nature of the system is the combination of the Governor's Affirmative Action Order and the Personnel Rules. Mr. Muller agreed and said that the motive force behind it is that you do have underutilization and the only way to resolve it is to allow the appointing authority to reach further down the register when hiring. Ms. Cramer read from regulations dated March 25th from Bruce Cummings which said that "when underutilization has been shown to exist the five-plus-five registers can and should request discretionary authorization to appoint from below the top five". She asked whether that regulation had been amended? Mr. Muller said that they had talked about the question at length and decided that so much confusion existed that providing the list to the appointing authority would be mandatory. He added that if the policy had not yet been implemented, it would be shortly.

Senator Ray recessed the meeting for lunch.

Senator Ray reconvened the meeting and the commission returned to discussing the Issues Memo.

A.2. Recruitment

Senator Ray asked the commission to consider the issue of recruitment. Representative Fuller said that he'd like to wait for the discussion on rural hiring before commenting on the issue. Senator Ray suggested that recruitment should be the responsibility of those in the rural areas who are interested in applying for positions, including rural organizations. Representative Fuller added that recruitment is made more difficult because the Native Corporations are actively looking for qualified employees to staff their offices. Mr. Pugh added that Sealaska Corporation has a special assistant to the president whose sole responsibility is placing stockholders in jobs with the corporation, so there is considerable competition for workers.

Senator Ray asked for public testimony. Mr. Paul Blank addressed the commission on the issues of non-resident hire and also Native hire. He was offered a job in Bristol Bay, which is mostly a Yupik village. He wanted to accept the job offer, but he talked with people in Dillingham who said that they wanted a Yupik person in the job. But according to the state policy, the department must hire from the top five applicants, no matter where they live. There is strong resentment to that in the bush.

Mr. Blank suggested that perhaps people should get extra points for living in the region where the hiring is taking place. For example, no white person could possibly go to a place like Bristol Bay and expect to understand the needs and desires of the Yupik people there, especially in a job like public assistance. Senator Ray pointed out that many of those programs are funded with federal money, so there is a problem in giving preference to anybody. Ms. Jund added that the commission had discussed having local registers but that there were tremendous problems in administering them.

Mr. Kareen said that since 1959 the state has operated under a basic philosophy that this is a State of Alaska position, and all residents of Alaska have an equal chance at being hired regardless of where they reside. The state will not distinguish between its citizens. He added that there are other states which have tried to address this problem. One remedy is to say that anyone in the state can take the test to qualify for the position, but it will only be given in the place where the job is. Senator Ray pointed out that this would work against the person in Dillingham who wanted to move to Juneau. Mr. Blank answered that there were plenty of jobs in Juneau and the other cities in the state so there isn't any problem of resentment against the outsider.

Mr. Kareen suggested that there are ways of lawfully addressing the problem. The Department of Health and Social Services in the Lower Yukon and Lower Kuskokwim had a number of positions working in villages to provide liasion between the local population and the department. If the employees were going to be able to do that job they had to speak Yupik and also have an ability in the English language. So ability in both languages was made a job requirement. The Village Council served as a review board for part of the examination and a portion of the interview with them was conducted in Yupik. The Council rated applicants on how well they would get along with the people in the village they would be servicing. The bilingual requirement was bona fide and not used specifically to promote employment of Alaska Natives.

Senator Eliason asked what job Mr. Blank had been going to take and whether the resentment against state employees from outside the village would be the same for all departments or just Health and Social Services. Mr. Blank replied that the job was as an Eligibility Technician I. There's a particular problem with the kind of job he was offered, because most of the people in the village are on public assistance for part of the year and the eligibility technician hands out the emergency funds and gives tentative approvals or disapprovals for long-term public assistance. When the Eligibility Technician can't even speak the language, there's a particular resentment. The only work available is seasonal fishing and cannery work. But the resentment would be there for anyone coming in who gets a better salary than anyone else around.

Senator Ray asked what problems would develop if the eligibility technician were a black or hispanic, for example, and wanted the job and was number one on the register. Mr. Blank replied that that would not make any difference in the village. Senator Ray pointed out that the state has a merit system of employment which must be honored. Mr. Blank replied that the tests don't necessarily show who is the most qualified to do the job. Senator Ray asked whether he meant that in some rural areas, particular job skills should not be counted as strongly as knowing the language, the people and the customs. Mr. Blank said yes.

Mr. Kareen asked Mr. Blank what the reaction would be if some of the services now provided by the state were turned over to the local for those jobs, how to get on the register and what a register is. When she was unemployed once, the unemployment office had a large screen which showed all the jobs the Center was recruiting for. There were books to find out what the requirements of the jobs were, but there was no one to explain how to use the information.

Ms. Borbridge said that she still did not know how to get on the register. Mr. Kareen explained that you complete an application for employment and turn it in or mail it to the Division of Personnel. He added that the Division has a public service counter to answer questions from people who want to apply for state jobs. However, the state does not have a job counselor to deal with the people coming in. The individual at the counter is also responsible for answering the telephone on seven incoming lines and handling some paperwork.

Barbara Fallon said that she is presently unemployed and has been applying for jobs. It would help job applicants if they understood that the Division of Personnel is not an employment service for the individual. Its task is to fill vacancies for the state. No one sits down with an applicant and asks for qualifications, experience and work history and then suggests jobs for which the person might apply. She added that the Division of Personnel staff have been very helpful, within the system.

Senator Ray added that applicants misunderstand another part of the state hiring system. When they are notified that they are on the register they automatically assume that they will be offered a job. They don't understand that they are not much closer to being employed than they were before.

Mr. Kareen said that the job service offices are federally funded, and have suffered from cutbacks so they have had to reduce their job counseling services. The new budget will not provide funds for employing job counselors. All federal funds for the offices will be contingent upon how many placements the office makes.

Senator Ray suggested that there should be a handbook or a flyer providing information about state employment. Roy Henderson, an employee of the Department of Education, commented that there is information presently available through the Career Information System at the Southeast Regional Resource Center. It tells about job descriptions and how an individual's qualifications fit into certain jobs. Senator Ray said that that system is not well known. It would still be helpful to have a short pamphlet for all prospective employees to use. Mr. Muller added that the Resource Center was for the Southeastern area. What about the Southcentral area and the bush? Mr. Henderson replied that the information is available at all Alaska Job Information Centers. Most of the information comes from the Department of Labor.

Senator Ray asked Mr. Muller to explain the state's affirmative action program and the five-plus-five certification system to Ms. Borbridge. Mr. Muller said that one of the biggest problems which the state has in terms of employing both women and minorities is potential barriers to ranking high on the registers. Everyone on the eligible list is capable of doing whatever the job is in that class. To bring people to the attention of the appointing authorities, the state developed a device which allows an appointing authority to hire a minority or a woman who ranks below the top five for jobs in any class in which that protected group is underutilized. The system is still in a formative stage, but it should be an invaluable tool to develop greater parity. Ms. Jund suggested that there still should be a pamphlet to notify applicants about what registers means, and all of the other ramifications of the employment system.

On the issue of Ms. Borbridge's unemployment benefits, Ms. Jund said that, as she understood the system, a person is not required to take employment at less than the previous level of employment. Since Ms. Borbridge had been working in an administrative position and was not interested in returning to a clerical position, they were not supposed to cut off her benefits when she refused to interview for the clerical position.

Ken Kareen handed out copies of a booklet which describe the state hiring system. Senator Ray said that he is still in favor of a one sheet flyer, which would be cheaper and could be updated as changes are made in the system. Ms. Jund suggested that the sheets should be distributed through places like women's resource centers, the NAACP and Native Corporations to get the widest distribution possible.

The commission returned to consideration of the Issues Memo. Senator Ray suggested that bilingual requirements which had been discussed with Mr. Blank should be added to the position descriptions. Mr. Kareen explained that the state has a general description of what, for example, an eligibility technician is required to do wherever the position is located. Then there are individual position descriptions, and those should reflect the language requirements of that particular position. If a position with a language requirement were open, then only bilingual applicants would be considered for that position. That decision should be made in describing the job, before the department is filling a vacancy.

Representative Fuller asked whether there was anything that could be done about the problems which Fish and Game has in filling their seasonal positions. Mr. Muller suggested that Fish and Game should open the registers in the winter and encourage people in the Bush to apply then. When summer comes and the positions need to be filled, they will have people from the local area who they can legally hire. He added that as the executive branch works with the nonpermanent law, it is becoming acceptable and understood. Senator Ray suggested that the registers could be open in February or March, and they could even make selections after that, with the job to begin the first of June. Mr. Kareen agreed. It all depends on the management attitude of the department. Senator Ray suggested that the commission write to the Department of Fish and Game, recommending that they open their registers in the winter and make their commitments then for June hire. Mr. Pugh pointed out that H&SS found that they needed some travel funds to carry out their special recruitment effort for the Nome Youth Center. The commission might want to make the legislature aware of this possibility. Representative Fuller replied that the rural areas have a responsibility too, and that the Native Corporations might be helpful in any recruiting effort.

A.5. Inclusion of handicapped individuals and people over 40 in the five-plus-five procedures.

Mr. Kareen explained that age discrimination under federal law starts at 40. He added that the state has a program to assist the severely handicapped in finding positions without having to go through the regular examination procedures. Senator Ray said that he had never received any complaints from handicapped people about discrimination.

A.6. Employee credit for any type of Alaskan employment.

Senator Ray said that the suggestion was worthwhile, but that it would not be possible to put it into effect under constitutional requirements. Mr. Pugh added that usually those with work experience in Alaska will make a better impression in the job interview, so there will be some recognition given at that time.

A.7. Credit for experience.

Senator Ray said that he favors the idea that job requirements should emphasize practical work experience and place less emphasis on educational requirements although there has to be a balance. He added that some of the test questions he has seen have no bearing at all to the job requirements.

Mr. Kareen responded that federal guidelines about tests require that first, the division study all the jobs within a class and identify what skills it takes to do them. Then they develop the test based on that information. After the test is developed, the division gives it to all those who are actually working in that job class. They evaluate the employees' test results and ask their supervisors to evaluate how well each employee actually performs on the job. Then the division compares the test results with the supervisor's rating. Those who do well on the test are supposed to be those who are rated well by their supervisors. The federal guidelines expect that the test results will be correct 94 percent of the time. The majority of the tests which the state presently uses were borrowed from other states and a number of them were provided by the federal government. Mr. Pugh suggested that the commission meet with Dr. Dilley from the Division of Personnel to learn more about the topic. Senator Ray agreed.

B. ISSUES CONCERNING PRESENT EMPLOYEES

1. Training for Supervisors

Mr. Thayer pointed out that according to a governor's directive, all supervisors have to attend EEO classes which are continuously given by the Department of Administration. Mr. Pugh suggested that the training given now is addressed more to attitudes. Most supervisors don't know about the practical questions - how to use the five-plus-five certification procedures, for example. Senator Ray suggested that a letter notifying supervisors of the procedures and where to go if they had questions about the fine points would resolve the problem.

Ms. Jund asked whether in actuality all supervisors take the EEO training. Mr. Fisher, Director of EEO, replied that in the past two or three years, 1,500 people have gone through the training offered by the division. It is focused mostly on behavior. It might be appropriate to include more emphasis on the law. Ms. Jund suggested that a refresher course for those who have had the initial program would help to provide current information. Mr. Fisher agreed, but pointed out that there is a problem of staffing within the division.

Mr. Pugh asked about the Attorney General's opinion concerning whether the five-plus-five procedures could legally be made mandatory. Mr. Muller replied that the Attorney General had said that it would not be legal to ignore all of the other people on the register when using the five-plus-five certifications, but that if all of the top five were considered as well as the top five minority applicants or women, then the problem was avoided. In regard to supervisory EEO training, Mr. Muller pointed out that the programs are given statewide, not just in Juneau.

B.2. EEO Evaluation of Supervisors.

Mr. Kareen pointed out that the present evaluation form has a box which asks about each supervisor's performance in EEO matters. Ms. Jund suggested that the supervisor's performance should be written in the narrative portion rather than just being recorded by a check mark. Mr. Kareen replied that the narrative portion of an evaluation is to address areas where a person has done particularly well or particularly poorly.

B.4. Changes in the Traditional Work System.

Senator Ray said that the commission should most strongly recommend that the Administration develop the use of flex time. The legislature passed a resolution permitting its development and the Governor was interested in it at one time. Flex time would help people in the rest of the state to do business with Juneau. Offices should also be open during the lunch hour, when people need to do business with the state.

Mr. Kareen pointed out one problem he has run into when calling a federal office in Seattle. The individual he wants to speak to is on flex time. He is never there, the office has no schedule of when he will be there because it varies from day-to-day and he is the only person in the office with the background to answer Mr. Kareen's questions.

Mr. Pugh added that he has found difficulty with employees in trying to set up flexible work schedules. Employees believe that flex time should be a voluntary scheduling and resist management forcing changes in work hours. For example, employees in Anchorage want to work from 7:00 to 3:00 p.m. so that they are off when their children are home. That does not answer management's need to keep the offices open for an hour after people are off work, from 5:00 to 6:00 p.m. Mr. Kareen added that union contracts require that the state pay a swing shift differential for employees who begin work at 10:00 a.m. or after. Senator Ray suggested that that could be changed in bargaining.

Representative Fuller added that the farther you are away from Juneau the more difficult it is to do business with the state. In the far north, there is a three-hour time difference. Juneau state employees need to remember that they provide support services for people around the state. He added that you need to have a decision-maker available. If management is not there, there is no sense in having the office open. Mr. Thayer suggested that one option to include is a four-day work week in which employees would work longer hours for four days and then have three days off. It might permit keeping state offices open for six days a week. Mr. Pugh added that the system should be uniform. If one office is open and another isn't, then the public becomes irritated.

In answer to Mr. Thayer's suggestion, Mr. Kareen said that research elsewhere has shown that flex time is desirable for management because it can increase productivity. However, in the vast majority of cases, compressing the workweek into four days results in a drop in productivity. Mr. Pugh pointed out another problem created by the number of holidays for state employees. If employees are working only four days a week normally, then they go to a three-day workweek during each of the 11 weeks in which a state holiday falls.

B.3. Training Opportunities.

Ms. Jund said that this came from Ms. Randall's testimony at an earlier meeting and that she concurred with her. It is always the top level brass that goes for training. Senator Ray pointed out that this comes down to a budget problem. The commission should mention the suggestion, but it is an administrative problem. Mr. Kareen added that when done properly, some midmanagement training will multiply when the employee who was trained shares the information with other employees. Funds spent for midmanagement training can actually benefit lower range employees too. He added that the budget could identify what level the training was to be geared for. Senator Ray pointed out that there was an Attorney General's opinion which says that the legislature infringes on the executive branch when it tries to direct how money is to be spent through Legislative Intent. Mr. Kareen asked whether the appropriation itself could be directed to a particular level of training. Senator Ray said that it could. However, that still leaves the problem of gaining legislative approval for any training funds at all.

Mr. Pugh added that because of the large turnover of employees in the lower salary ranges, he finds it difficult to justify spending the limited training funds in his division on those employees. Senator Eliason said that the person who has more responsibility should have the

The meeting was called to order by Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, at 1:35 p.m. The roll call showed Senator Ray, John Chenoweth, Senator Dick Eliason, James Fisher (alternate for Commissioner Hudson), Lois Jund, Ken Kareen, Lynda McCurry, Greg O'Claray, John Pugh and Darlene Livermore (alternate for Cherie Shelley) as present. Representative Jack Fuller, Myrt Charney, and William Huston were absent. Also present were Roger Thayer and Bob Mourant.

The commission reviewed the draft of the 1982 Report to the Legislature and corrected errors and made changes. It was moved that the report as amended be presented to the Legislature. There were no objections and Senator Ray so ordered. The commission adjourned at 3:00 p.m.

TESTIMONY FOR PRESENTATION TO THE STATE'S
BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE PERSONNEL ACT

ALASKA NATIVE HIRE IN STATE GOVERNMENT

CHANGING COMMITMENT INTO ACTION - ON NOVEMBER 2, 1981 THE BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT RELEASED A MEMORANDUM TITLED "COMPARISON OF ALASKA NATIVES EMPLOYMENT BY THE STATE IN 1979, 1980 AND 1981". DURING THE THREE YEAR PERIOD, A GREAT DEAL OF EFFORT HAS BEEN MADE TO CORRECT AND IMPROVE THE EMPLOYMENT REPRESENTATION OF ALASKA NATIVES (AND OTHER MINORITIES) IN STATE GOVERNMENT. REPORTS HAVE BEEN FILED, PLANS DEVELOPED, RESPONSIBILITIES PINPOINTED, ROLES CLARIFIED, DATA SYSTEMS IMPLEMENTED, POLICY EXPOUNDED AND THE BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ESTABLISHED. YET, ACCORDING TO FIGURES TAKEN FROM APPENDIX A TO THE 1979 ANNUAL REPORT TO THE HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION, IN APRIL, 1978 NATIVE PEOPLE HELD 518 JOBS IN STATE GOVERNMENT. THIS FIGURE REPRESENTED 5.4% OF THE TOTAL STATE GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES (9,635). TODAY (NOVEMBER 3rd, 1981), THREE AND ONE-HALF YEARS LATER, ACCORDING TO FIGURES JUST RELEASED BY THE LEGISLATURE'S BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT (MEMORANDUM DATED NOVEMBER 1981), NATIVE PEOPLE HOLD 694 JOBS (5.4%) OUT OF A STATE GOVERNMENT WORKFORCE OF 12,903. IN OTHER WORDS, DESPITE ALL THE DIALOGUE, MEETINGS, REPORTS, PLANS, and COMMISSION ACTIVITIES WHICH HAVE TAKEN PLACE DURING THE PAST THREE AND ONE-HALF YEARS, NATIVE PEOPLE IN ALASKA HAVE NOT IMPROVED THEIR TOTAL REPRESENTATION IN THE WORKFORCE OF STATE GOVERNMENT BY EVEN ONE TENTH OF ONE PERCENTAGE POINT.

ALTHOUGH 16 PERCENT OF THE STATE'S POPULATION IS ALASKA NATIVE, LESS THAN SIX PERCENT OF THE JOBS IN STATE GOVERNMENT ARE HELD BY NATIVE PEOPLE. MOST OF THESE JOBS ARE, AS EVERYONE KNOWS, CONCENTRATED IN THE CLERICAL, CRAFT AND PARA-PROFESSIONAL CATEGORIES. VERY FEW PROFESSIONAL AND MANAGEMENT POSITIONS ARE HELD BY NATIVE PEOPLE. THE UNDER REPRESENTATION AND UNDER UTILIZATION OF NATIVE PEOPLE AFFECTS MOST JOB CATEGORIES AND ALL DEPARTMENTS OF THE STATE GOVERNMENT. IN FACT, IN NINE OF THE FIFTEEN DEPARTMENTS OF THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH OF STATE GOVERNMENT, THE REPRESENTATION OF ALASKA NATIVE PEOPLE HAS DECLINED BETWEEN APRIL 1978 AND SEPTEMBER 1981. OF THE REMAINING SIX DEPARTMENTS FOUR INCREASED THE REPRESENTATION OF NATIVE PEOPLE BY LESS THAN ONE PERCENT OVER EARLIER FIGURES. TWO DEPARTMENTS (COMMUNITY & REGIONAL AFFAIRS AND NATURAL RESOURCES) APPEAR TO HAVE MADE SUBSTANTIAL GAINS. (WE WOULD LIKE TO KNOW WHAT THE ACTUAL CHANGES HAVE BEEN.)

IT WOULD APPEAR THAT THE COMMITMENT, SO CLEARLY STATED IN ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NUMBER 59 AS EXPRESSING THE EQUAL EMPLOYMENT POLICY OF THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH OF STATE GOVERNMENT, NEEDS TO BE MORE FORCEFULLY AND IMAGINATIVELY TRANSLATED INTO ACTION. THE ACTIONS OF THE PAST THREE AND ONE-HALF YEARS HAVE PROVIDED NECESSARY AND USEFUL MECHANISMS TO HELP STATE GOVERNMENT RECRUIT, SELECT, HIRE, PROMOTE AND RETAIN MINORITIES IN STATE GOVERNMENT.

THE EXPANDED CERTIFICATION POLICY IS A PARTICULARLY USEFUL STEP IN BRINGING QUALIFIED NATIVE PEOPLE TO THE ATTENTION OF HIRING DEPARTMENTS. BUT WE BELEIVE THAT WHAT HAS BEEN ACCOMPLISHED TO DATE REPRESENTS ONLY THE FIRST FEW STEPS IN AN OVERALL PLAN THAT MUST PRODUCE RESULTS IN NUMBERS RATHER THAN RHETORIC.

ACCORDINGLY, WE WOULD LIKE TO RECOMMEND THREE MAJOR EFFORTS THAT WE BELIEVE ARE JUSTIFIED AND NECESSARY:

1. EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES. A FOUR YEAR EFFORT TO ANALYZE EXISTING JOB DESCRIPTIONS AND ACTUAL DUTIES AND TO REVISE THE JOB STRUCTURE WITHIN ALL DEPARTMENTS TO INSURE:

   A. ENTRY LEVEL POSITIONS ARE AVAILABLE TO THE MAXIMUM EXTENT POSSIBLE.

   B. CAREER LADDERS (INCLUDING ALTERNATIVES) ARE AVAILABLE WHICH PROVIDE AMPLE OPPORTUNITY FOR UPWARD MOBILITY.

   C. SUPPORT SERVICES ARE AVAILABLE INCLUDING BUT NOT LIMITED TO, DAY CARE, CAREER AND EDUCATIONAL COUNSELING, TUITION REIMBURSEMENT AND TIME-OFF-WITH-PAY FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES TO PROVIDE ASSISTANCE TO MINORITIES EMPLOYED BY STATE GOVERNMENT AND SEEKING TO IMPROVE THEIR EDUCATION AND TRAINING. THIS PROGRAM SHOULD BE FUNDED AS A SEPARATE AND HIGHLY VISIBLE EFFORT WITHIN STATE GOVERNMENT, PREFERABLY BY THE OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR. IT SHOULD BE CONTINUED UNTIL PROPORTIONATE REPRESENTATION IS ACHIEVED.

2. NATIVE RECRUITMENT. WE BELIEVE THE STATE SHOULD CONTRACT WITH EACH OF THE NATIVE REGIONAL NON-PROFIT CORPORATIONS TO PROVIDE ASSISTANCE TO THE STATE IN THE IDENTIFICATION AND RECRUITMENT OF MINORITY APPLICANTS. THE SIZE OF EACH CONTRACT SHOULD BE RELATED TO THE NUMBER OF POTENTIAL CONTACTS (THE SIZE OF THE REGION'S ENROLLMENT). SPECIFICALLY, THE CONTRACT SHOULD BE LARGE ENOUGH TO ENABLE EACH REGIONAL CORPORATION TO HIRE ONE OR MORE RECRUITERS TO SEEK OUT AND WORK WITH POTENTIAL NATIVE APPLICANTS.

3. MINORITY INTERNSHIP AND WORK-STUDY. WE BELIEVE A SPECIAL PROGRAM WHICH WOULD PROVIDE SUMMER WORK EXPERIENCE OPPORTUNITIES (WITH GOOD PAY AND REASONABLE BENEFITS) WOULD BE HELPFUL IN ATTRACTING NATIVE YOUTH INTO PUBLIC SERVICE. WE BELIEVE A SPECIAL PROGRAM NEEDS TO BE DESIGNED AND FUNDED WHICH WILL OPEN UP SUMMER JOBS IN VARIOUS AGENCIES AND DEPARTMENTS OF GOVERNMENT. THESE ARE TO BE JOBS LEADING TO PROFESSIONAL EMPLOYMENT UPON GRADUATION. IF THE JOBS TAKE STUDENTS AWAY FROM THEIR HOMES WE BELIEVE ADDITIONAL HELP IN THE WAY OF HOUSING ALLOWANCES AND TRANSPORTATION STIPENDS SHOULD BE INCLUDED. WHILE THIS PROGRAM NEEDS TO BE COORDINATED WITH THE UNIVERSITY OF ALASKA AND THE NATIVE CORPORATIONS, WE BELIEVE IT NEEDS TO BE DEVELOPED AS A HIGHLY VISIBLE PROGRAM WITHIN STATE GOVERNMENT. IF SUCCESSFUL, THE PROGRAM MIGHT GROW BY ADDING AN ADDITIONAL NUMBER OF INTERNSHIPS IN FOLLOWING YEARS.

THESE IDEAS REPRESENT JUST A FEW INITIAL SUGGESTIONS AND PROGRAM CONCEPTS FOR ADDITIONAL ACTION WHICH WE BELIEVE THE STATE MUST UNDERTAKE IF IT HAS A REAL COMMITMENT TO CORRECT THE UNDER REPRESENTATION AND UNDER UTILIZATION OF ONE OF ITS GREATEST RESOURCES - ITS NATIVE PEOPLE. EVEN IF THE COMMITMENT EXISTS, A QUESTION REMAINS AS TO WHETHER THE STATE IS WILLING TO VOLUNTARILY TRANSLATE ITS COMMITMENT INTO ACTION.

MINUTES

Senator Ray, chairman, called the meeting to order at 10:00 a.m. The roll call showed the following members present: Senator Bill Ray, Myrt Charney, Lynn Wegener (alternate for John Chenoweth), Senator Richard Eliason, Representative Jack Fuller, Kenneth Kareen, Lynda McCurry, Sandra Withers (alternate for Commissioner Hudson), Greg O'Claray, and Cherie Shelley. The following members were absent: Bill Huston, Lois Jund and John Pugh. The following were also present: Roger Thayer, James E. Fisher and Darlene Livermore.

Senator Ray announced receipt of an application for membership on the Blue Ribbon Commission from Mr. James Chase, who is a member of the Human Rights Commission. He asked the Blue Ribbon Commission members to consider extending an invitation to Mr. Chase to join the commission. Mr. Chase was not present and the question was held for later consideration.

Senator Ray opened nominations for the position of Vice Chairman of the commission. Myrt Charney nominated Representative Fuller. Senator Ray asked for other nominations. No others were received. He closed the nominations and announced that since Representative Fuller was the only candidate, he was appointed Vice Chairman of the commission.

Senator Ray called for public testimony. No one came forward at this time. He asked Cherie Shelley, executive director of Alaska Public Employees Union, to relate how APEA handles any discrimination complaints they receive. She replied that typically they receive few complaints. They refer those they do receive to the Human Rights Commission. She suggested that Darlene Livermore, who handles employment complaints from APEA members, would be better able to answer the question. Ms. Livermore explained that APEA does receive a number of contacts on issues of discrimination, both on the basis of sex (which are the more frequent) and on the basis of minority group membership. In addition, APEA receives a number of sexual harassment complaints. The staff investigates to determine whether there is a legitimate charge to take before the Human Rights Commission. If the complaint is not specious, then APEA makes a referral to the Human Rights Commission and continues to give support to the complainant through the complaint processing procedures. She added that the logic pattern of complaints from men and women is roughly the same. Where men are seeking employment in a job class typically occupied by women they use the same kinds of arguments that women use in seeking employment in job classes predominately occupied by men.

In answer to a question from Senator Ray, Myrt Charney, executive director of the Legislative Affairs Agency, indicated that he is not aware of any complaints within the agency. There was one sexual harassment charge filed against a legislator one or two years ago which was investigated and found to be without merit.

Ken Kareen, Director of the Division of Personnel, indicated that he does receive inquiries from individuals about whether they may have been discriminated against. They typically are seeking background information to show whether they have come to the wrong conclusion. In one specific instance which happened three years ago, a woman applied for a position and was interviewed. She later received a call at home from the man who had interviewed her asking for a date. She turned him down. She later learned that someone else was appointed to the position. She filed a complaint with the Human Rights Commission and did receive a damage award. Ms. Shelley added that the case was settled without an admission of guilt on the part of the state.

Mr. Kareen added that in the three months that he has been back working for the state, he has been approached by three women who have wondered whether positions which have been offered to them have been offered because of their capabilities or because the person hiring was seeking to fill a quota.

Senator Ray pointed out that it is popular to assume there is a great deal of discrimination in state hiring. However, the commission has found few instances were formalized in the face of complaint. He suggested that one area that should be scrutinized in-depth is the policy of advancement of people who work for the state to the exclusion of first-time hires. A spin-off of this policy is to exclude many members of minority groups, since they are typically not already state employees. This doesn't mean that promotion in itself is bad, since it is also important to bring people up through the ranks, so to speak. Mr. Kareen pointed out that the State Personnel Act and the Personnel Rules provide that current state employees shall receive additional consideration for promotion. The state does benefit by promoting people who know the program already. However, it can also be an advantage to have a new perspective on policies which everyone may have taken for granted, and a new employee can bring some fresh insights into the operation. It is important to balance between the two policies.

Al Baffone, Sr., Business Manager of Local 71, addressed the commission. He explained that the union is presently pursuing a case on behalf of a black member, Mr. Berkley, who was trained as an equipment operator and is now in Wage Group IV, which is one step below journeyman status. There was an opening for a higher position in the duty station in which the member worked. Under Local 71's labor agreement with the state, the employer is supposed to post vacancies before filling them. However, the state transferred another employee from a different duty station instead of posting the vacancy and filling by promotion. Local 71 took the case to arbitration, but the arbitrator ruled that the labor agreement permitted the transfer. The member will file charges with other agencies to contest the matter. He was brought into Local 71 under an affirmative action program four or five years ago and has been waiting for some time for this promotion.

Mr. Baffone added that if there is a subsequent layoff, Mr. Berkley, who has four years of duty station seniority, could be laid off because he is at a lower level than the person transferred. Senator Ray indicated that if Mr. Baffone would provide the commission with the background information on the matter, the staff would investigate it.

Senator Ray asked Senator Eliason whether he received many complaints. Senator Eliason replied that he had not received many about discrimination, probably because there are so few state employees among his constituents.

Senator Ray asked Representative Fuller whether he had received many. Representative Fuller indicated that he had not received too many, but that there are problems in the rural areas of his district. For example, where a new state employee moves to the area, usually his wife will be well qualified and therefore will end up working for the state, rather than that job being filled by someone from the area. He suggested that the only solution is to get the people trained for some of those jobs. He also addressed the question of educational requirements for state jobs. Within the Department of Fish & Game, there are positions for counting sea mammals during the spring hunting season. There are people in the villages who are well qualified to do that work, but most of the people who get the jobs are college students who have applied early and been placed on the state registers. Since they are new to the area, it takes a month or so for them to get adjusted and oriented. Representative Fuller added that times are changing and there are a number of young people in the villages who are interested in getting jobs and are willing to leave the subsistence life style. He pointed out that it does not take an educational background to do a good job. He has a friend in St. Lawrence Island who neither reads nor writes English well, but the department has been depending on him to take the walrus count. He is able to keep the job because he began about 14 years ago before there were tight educational requirements.

Mr. Kareen pointed out that the state does accept experience as a substitute for educational requirements for Fish & Game technician positions, and includes volunteer experience. Representative Fuller agreed bu. said that the system isn't working. You still have to get your name on a register.

Nancy Groshek suggested that the state institute a pilot project to go out to the Bush and solicit applications and explain the hiring process to the people there, particularly for jobs like the Fish & Game technicians.

Cherie Shelley pointed out that one of the complaints she hears frequently is that there is no provision permitting hiring from the immediate area in special situations. For example, when she was in Kodiak, Fish & Game needed someone to work on a boat. They hired a person from Anchorage, but as soon as he arrived in Kodiak, he took a different job on a fishing boat. Then the department hired someone from Kodiak on an emergency hire basis. The Fish & Game boat was out longer than 30 days and Fish & Game was required to get him off the boat. They spent more on helicopters than they paid the person hired. She suggested that the commission consider recommending that the Division of Personnel set up local registers for some situations. Senator Ray questioned how this would fit into the merit system.

Representative Fuller agreed that the authority to hire locally would help. In most cases, the Fish & Game supervisors would know the qualifications of the people they would be hiring. Ms. Groshek added that the state would be saving money in transportation costs for new employees and that regulations could probably be instituted by next summer.

Mr. O'Claray asked if he could return to Mr. Baffone's earlier testimony. He asked whether the grievance which Local 71 had filed with the state alleged that their member had been denied a promotional opportunity on the basis of his race. Mr. Baffone replied that the grievance filed had addressed the legality of the transfer rather than the denial of the promotional opportunity. Therefore they had not addressed the question of discrimination in the complaint. The union believes that Mr. Berkley's case is still alive. However, they have been informed that when his case is submitted for arbitration, the state will submit the decision of the transfer arbitration and say that the case has already been heard since Mr. Berkley figured in the initial case. Mr. Baffone stated that he is taking the position that they have exhausted their internal avenues under the labor agreement.

Sandy Withers, Director of the Division of Labor Relations, offered a comment on the case. The underlying question in the grievance was whether there was promotional opportunity in the first place. She explained that two employees had transferred, and had they not transferred there would not have been a vacancy in the first place. Mr. Baffone replied that because the labor agreement provides for duty station seniority, Mr. Berkley will be laid off if a layoff comes, even though the transferree has less seniority. Under the new classification system, the lower guy in the equipment operator group gets laid off before the higher guy. Senator Ray asked how the situation centered into racial discrimination. Mr. Baffone replied that it did because Mr. Berkley is black and is qualified to do the job. He added that if Mr. Berkley were white, he would not be addressing the Blue Ribbon Commission.

Ms. Shelley asked Mr. Baffone what Local 71's position would have been if one of the transferrees had been black and the man seeking promotion had been caucasian. Would the union have objected to the transfer under those circumstances? Mr. Baffone replied that since there is specific language in the agreement that transfers will only take place after promotional opportunities have been exhausted, the union would have objected.

Mr. O'Claray asked again whether Mr. Baffone alleged at this time that the state acted in a discriminatory manner against the black worker. Mr. Baffone replied that he did. In answer to a question from Representative Fuller, Mr. Baffone replied that had the member not promoted been a white person, the union would have arbitrated that failure to promote, too.

Senator Ray asked James Chase to tell the commission a little about his background and why he was interested in membership on the commission. Mr. Chase replied that he came to Alaska as a result of a military assignment to a remote radar station in 1969. He later transferred to Elmendorf Air Force Base and then decided in 1972 to remain in Alaska. He retired from the Air Force in 1974 and went job hunting. His first job was with the Human Relations Commission of the Municipality of Anchorage. While he was there, the city changed to a municipality and he helped to create the Equal Rights Commission. Then he went to the Alaska Native Foundation where he traveled throughout the state working with school districts, helping them to desegregate. When it was defunded he had to seek other employment. He is now the affirmative action officer for the University of Alaska, Anchorage, and for the community college. In addition to his work, Mr. Chase said that he has been involved in community activities and is currently a commissioner on the Alaska State Commission for Human Rights. He added that that is the position he would like to represent on the Blue Ribbon Commission, since there had been a seat for the Human Rights Commission when the Blue Ribbon Commission was originally established.

Senator Ray explained that the Blue Ribbon Commission has not set aside seats for any particular representation, and that he hoped members represented their own personal convictions rather than their employment. Greg O'Claray asked Mr. Chase whether his employment with the University would offer him opportunity to attend meetings of the Blue Ribbon Commission in other cities. Mr. Chase replied that he would be able to. The University believes that activities like membership on the Blue Ribbon Commission would be ancillary to his job and that he would be permitted to attend, provided only that he met his prime responsibility of getting his job done.

Senator Ray asked whether Mr. Chase saw a pattern in state employment of discrimination on the basis of race. Mr. Chase replied that what appears to him to have happened is that there is a sort of inertia in the system. People become set in their ways and entrenched in their positions. Nothing motivates them to change. Procedures and policies meet with resistance, and unless the total management goes along with a new policy, it's very hard to implement a change. There are people who have been given an "extraordinary opportunity" because of their gender and their race and when they are asked to implement an affirmative action program, thet react to it right away because it means they have to move something. Mr. Chase added that he is stubborn enough to believe that change can come about and there can be improvement in the system.

Senator Ray pointed out that frequently what is perceived as discrimination is not understood by the person doing it as discriminatory. Mr. Chase replied that he believes that it is a requirement of all managers not only to show that there is no discrimination, but also that there is nothing perceived as discrimination.

Mr. O'Claray asked Mr. Chase how he perceived the effectiveness of the current EEO program in the state or the University system. Mr. Chase replied that the University system has changed considerably in the 2-1/2 years that he has been there. When he began, the University did not even know how many employees it had, not to mention the racial mixture. They now have a lot of information about their employees and are working with supervisors to convince them to hire minority applicants and that affirmative action is a necessary thing. The affirmative action job is multi-facted, and at the same time that he has to get the managers involved in the program, he also has to insure that people are applying for positions and that they understand how to write a resume for the University. There has been progress. He added that he knows a little about the state's EEO program and that they have also made progress.

In answer to a question from Mr. Kareen, Mr. Chase said that the University has developed a base on the availability of the workforce in his hiring area for different occupations. It is broken into the seven EEO categories and is further defined by disciplines. He explained that the University recruits locally for positions in the clerical and crafts fields and therefore they use a local base for those job categories. For executives and professional positions, they use a national base.

In answer to questions from Senator Ray, Mr. Chase indicated that he believed that the goal of anti-discrimination laws is to control a person's behavior, not his thoughts. Once behavior is modified, particularly in a hiring situation, then people who may have latent bigotries discover that "it isn't so bad after all" and their attitudes may also begin to change.

Ms. Shelley suggested that, while Mr. Chase was obviously well-qualified for membership on the commission, notice of the vacancy should be given so that others who might be interested could submit applications. She pointed out that the principal membership of the commission is composed of 10 males, one of whom is a minority person, and three females, none of whom are minority group members. Senator Ray responded that the commission has three applications for membership and that it will always accept applications, but that we are not recruiting for them. He urged members not to become sectionalized.

Senator Ray recessed the meeting at 11:30 a.m. for lunch.

The meeting was called back to order at 1:35 p.m. Senator Ray asked for public testimony.

Donna Brooks, a concerned citizen and a previous state employee, addressed the commission.

In 1974 she terminated from state employment and six months later attempted to return. The position was still available, but later the state discontinued her job classification. Since 1975 she has not been notified of the discontinuation of the job class nor has she been offered a rehire position, although she was contacted once about a 30-day emergency position. She is between first and fourth on the registers. Ms. Brooks asked whether hiring authorities automatically receive the names of rehires when they request a register and whether they have to contact the individuals on the top of the list.

Mr. Kareen replied that rehires and transfers are listed on the registers as additional candidates which a manager may consider. Managers are not required to contact those individuals, however. In fact, in working the eligible list, a manager can contact one applicant and as long as that individual is one of the highest five on the list, the manager can give that person the position without considering anyone else. The Division of Personnel recommends that managers contact all of the top five because they won't know which person is best until they make that check.

Ms. Brooks asked what is happening with the affirmative action policy of the state. Mr. James E. Fisher, the Director of the Equal Employment Opportunity Division of the state, responded. The state Division of EEO has three general functions. One is planning, another is training, and the third is handling complaints. Affirmative action is part of the planning area. The plans are goals set which the state can use to measure its accomplishments. The state has only gone through one cycle of departmental affirmative action plans. It is now in the process of revising those plans for the first time.

Mr. Fisher continued. One of things that the state service has been criticized for is not having accurate records to be able to measure precisely what is happening in affirmative action. The state is improving the records available so that it will be able to point out the actual specific problems in affirmative action.

With respect to affirmative action itself, there are ongoing activities within the state which vary from agency to agency, with turnover, and with location. The Division of EEO has an office in Anchorage where Mr. Fisher suggested that Ms. Brooks might wish to inquire for the most accurate answer to her specific concern. Senator Ray added that while all departments may have affirmative action programs, some of them don't work.

Mr. O'Claray asked about the circumstances surrounding Ms. Brooks' termination in 1975. She explained that she had been hospitalized. All her performance evaluations while she was working were above average. She was not aware of any personality conflicts which might have followed her in seeking reemployment. In answer to a question from Lynn Wegener, Ms. Brooks indicated that she is on the registers for Nurse III, II, and I. She had been working for the Department of Health & Social Services at API, the Alaska Psychiatric Institution. Since leaving there she has worked part-time for other employers and is now so employed.

Barbara Schuhmann, Chair of the Alaska Commission on the Status of Women, addressed the Blue Ribbon Commission. She stated that the Commission on the Status of Women had wanted to undertake an overall review of the state's personnel system because of testimony they received criticizing the system itself as discriminating against women. However, they lacked the money and time to undertake such a study and also believed that the study should not be limited to questions of sex discrimination, but should include questions as to other bases of unconstitutional discrimination as well. She asked that the Blue Ribbon Commission undertake the review that the Status of Women Commission would have done if it had the time and resources.

Ms. Schuhmann continued. The most recent comprehensive study of the distribution of women and minorities in state government was done by the Alaska Advisory Committee to the United States Commission on Civil Rights in July, 1980. Among the findings of that study were that: state employment "tends to be mostly white male"; the state offers no child care facilities to encourage women to work for the state; when women are hired they are "for the most part relegated to the lowest paying jobs in clerical, secretarial and technical fields"; the hiring procedures in some departments are "both consciously and unconsciously discriminatory"; and the state has not adequately communicated hiring and promotional opportunities. Ms. Schuhmann added that while there has been some progress since the release of that report, the statistics which it included have not changed significantly.

Ms. Schuhmann pointed out that persons claiming discrimination on the basis of race or sex against private employers often prove their cases by use of statistics. If a statistical case were built against the State of Alaska, the state would have a hard time showing that it has not discriminated in hiring and promotion on the basis of race and sex. A report published by the Civil Rights Commission in 1977 showed that only 8% of the people in the top salary ranges (22-28) were women, while at the same time women occupied over 85% of the positions in the lowest end of the scale (05-09). In five departments, not a single woman occupied a position in those top salary ranges. Minority women fared even worse. In all of the departments of the state government, only one solitary minority woman could be found who occupied a position in the top salary ranges.

Ms. Schuhmann added that a more recent survey of the state's affirmative action effort was released by the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity this year, and it does not show much change from this situation. These figures support what the Commission on the Status of Women believes to be the case -- that despite the fact that Alaska has a preponderance of highly educated, capable, and experienced women in the population, many of them have a tremendous difficulty in breaking into the state personnel system or rising in it once they have entered.

In testimony before the Commission on the Status of Women, women have cited repeated instances where the inflexibility of the personnel system prevented them from obtaining suitable employment or achieving upward mobility. Women in professional positions have had difficulty advancing to supervisory positions and receiving equal compensation for equal work. From the testimony, it appears that women in the lower paid clerical positions are afforded practically no incentive to learn new skills or take on additional responsibility, little on-the-job training for career advancement, and no career ladders. Ms. Schuhmann suggested that a bonus system based on performance to encourage workers to grow and develop is an essential management tool. The existing merit increase system does not fulfill this function and discriminates against those employees in lower salary ranges, since employees in ranges 05 to 09 receive between a 2.6% and a 3% increase when moving from Step A to Step B, while for positions in range 15 or above, the first increase is never less than 3.5%.

Ms. Schuhmann reported that in hiring staff for their own Commission, they found that the classifications of the state personnel system were too rigid to allow for their needs for people with very diverse skills. Too often, this inflexibility causes managers to create more exempt positions, which are outside the EEO directives which the Commission strongly supports.

On a more positive note, Ms. Schuhmann indicated that there are several efforts underway which have great potential for correcting some of the systemic problems in personnel procedures. First, the practice of expanded certification, or the "5 + 5" system, is a valuable management tool for providing managers an opportunity to interview the five most qualified women and minorities to achieve better representation in all levels of the workforce. It enables managers to go beyond paper credentials of applicants and beyond tests which may be culturally biased, neither of which may be predictive of job performance. Female state employees have testified before the Commission on the Status of Women that the main problem with the "5 + 5" system is that it is optional and many managers never request the additional names. The Commission also supports job sharing, since it provides women in particular with the opportunity to combine homemaking and careers. That program as well as flextime and part-time work options and internships or tuition reimbursement plans should be well publicized. It should not require long distance telephone calls to Juneau to find out about these programs, as is often the case today.

The Commission on the Status of Women supports two bills introduced last session. House Bill 906, sponsored by the Blue Ribbon Commission 1/ amends the veterans' preference point system. Passage of a bill limiting the duration of any veterans' preference will have a significant impact on what has been a major source of systemic discrimination against women in the state personnel system.

The Committee Substitute for Senate Bill 248 deserves attention next session. The Division of Equal Employment Opportunity now has the responsibility for carrying out the state's policy on equal opportunity, for monitoring the activities of all departments and ensuring that compliance occurs. The bill would define those responsibilities in state law. Ms. Schuhmann said that the Commission on the Status of Women believes that it is essential to have a fully functioning, adequately staffed Division of Equal Employment Opportunity. She urged the Blue Ribbon Commission's support of the bill as well as support for a fiscal note sufficient to appoint an Equal Employment Officer for each department within the executive branch.

1/ Note: HB 906 was actually introduced in 1980

Senator Ray asked Ms. Schuhmann about the problem of having to make long distance telephone calls to Juneau instead of being able to get the information in the branch offices. She indicated that testimony they had received reported that often the local offices don't have the information readily at hand, so callers are referred to Juneau. In addition, in their own offices, they have had to call Juneau for questions they thought should be able to be answered in the branch offices. Mr. Kareen replied that on specific information concerning an application, there is only one file kept and that is in Juneau. However, for general recruitment schedules and for the process and procedures of the state, the branch offices are equipped for most questions. In addition, Anchorage does hold the records for some applications, which on occasion have to be referred down to Juneau, should an applicant move there.

Ms. Schuhmann introduced Chris Callahan to answer the questions more specifically, and explained that the reason for addressing this topic is to alert the Blue Ribbon Commission to the fact that not all of the Division of Personnel offices in every part of the state always have all the information which they might have.

Ms. Callahan stated that the majority of the primary points raised in the statement of Ms. Schuhmann are well-documented, and added that indications of difficulty in dealing with decentralized offices is not unique to this state. Senator Ray replied that in order for the commission to be constructive, we need specific information. He asked Niel Thomas, Executive Director of the Human Rights Commission how many cases of discrimination in the state personnel system their commission had on file. Mr. Thomas replied that at the last Blue Ribbon Commission meeting he had provided statistics about individual people who have complaints on file, but that does not include cases filed by the executive director on class-wide discrimination, for example.

Ms. Schuhmann added that the purpose of her coming before the Blue Ribbon Commission is to urge that someone take a look at the big picture of state employment. It is a large undertaking, but there are indications of problems. One example is the public health nurse lawsuit. That group of nurses was doing very similar, if not identical, work as were another group of state employees who all happen to be male. And the male counterparts were doing very similar, if not identical, work to the nurses, but are paid more. Another indication that there may be problems is that all women are bunched, at least according to statistics, at the low end of the pay scale.

Senator Ray pointed out that in a pure merit system, the person who had the highest score would be the person hired. On the other hand, some people have suggested that the system should allow anyone with minimal skills to be considered for jobs and then let the hiring authority select whomever he wanted. Under this system, you would have the highest instances of discrimination, both against males and females. To remedy past discrimination, people suggest reverse discrimination. Ms. Schuhmann suggested that perhaps the other side of the coin to affirmative action is the veterans' preference. In a pure merit system, you just depend on an individual's credentials. She reported that she has talked with people in Fairbanks who lost out for a state job by a tenth of a point, and usually a veteran is hired because of the 5-point preference. Senator Ray responded that the veterans' preference provides equal discrimination against males and females who are not veterans.

Mr. O'Claray asked Ms. Schuhmann whether the Commission on the Status of Women had figured the cost of a study of the personnel system. She replied that they had decided it would probably have to be done by a contract with an outside source. She doubted it would cost less than $100,000. Senator Ray pointed out that the Blue Ribbon Commission operates on less than that amount.

Senator Eliason asked whether the Commission on the Status of Women had figures on the effect of the veterans' preference on women. Ms. Schuhmann replied that they do not, and that is one of the reasons they are urging that a comprehensive study of the personnel system be done. She added that federal law is quite clear on the number of women who can be employed in the military and who can be employed in combat. Congress may have a valid state reason for limiting the numbers, but the fact remains that veterans are far more likely to be male than female.

Mr. Charney commented that there are success stories -- the women who do succeed in rising into the top salary ranges in state employment. He suggested that it might be useful to find out what contributed to their success. Ms. Schuhmann agreed and added that her own suspicion is that many of those women are professionals, such as lawyers in the Attorney General's Office.

Ms. Withers suggested that it can be misleading to look at only one part of the statistics. If all of the women who applied to work in the Attorney General's office were hired, then the 8% represents 100% of the applicants.

Ms. Schuhmann agreed. Availability studies are difficult to obtain, as the Commission on the State of Women has discovered in attempting to get studies for the pipeline workers. In addition, one thing the commission heard at least on the pipeline workers experience is that you can't have systematic discrimination against women, sexual harassment and the like, and expect women to call themselves available for those jobs.

Representative Fuller asked how the Commission on the Status of Women had collected its material. Ms. Schuhmann explained that they looked at reports from the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, the Annual Affirmative Action Report of the State of Alaska and held public hearings.

In answer to a question from Senator Eliason, she explained that her commission did not try to resolve complaints against an individual who was discriminating against someone. Those cases were referred to the Human Rights Commission. Where there appeared to be a policy in a department which had a discriminatory effect, they would contact the department head to resolve the issue, with fairly good response. Senator Ray thanked Ms. Schuhmann for addressing the Blue Ribbon Commission.

Nancy Groshek spoke for herself. She said that she is a legislative staff employee, working for Senator Fisher, and the committee aide for the Senate State Affairs Committee. She asked that the Blue Ribbon Commission endorse SB 248 which is currently in the Senate Finance Committee. It is important and addresses some of what Mr. Chase spoke of earlier in the meeting. It has teeth in it and makes merit raises depend on how well a supervisor complies with the affirmative action program. It also addresses other forms of discrimination.

Ms. Groshek suggested that the commission look at some of the forms used by the state. When she became a legislative employee, the form she was given asked for her marital status and sex. Those questions are prohibited by the equal rights amendment to the state constitution. When the forms were sent to the Division of Retirement, someone had added that information over Ms. Groshek's signature. She filed a complaint and believes that the form will be corrected. The University of Alaska also has application forms for programs such as learning to repair airplanes which ask for marital status.

Ms. Groshek also asked the commission to look at the word "qualified". It has become synonymous with "white male". For example, on the Superior Court or the Supreme Court, the Judicial Council says they cannot find any women who are experienced or qualified. But the reason is that women have not been allowed in the legal profession for that long. Ms. Groshek added that while she supports a veterans' preference for the transition period between military service and civilian life, she thought it should be limited to three or five years. People who have had careers in the military will receive credit for their work experience and the bonus of five points on top of that can make a significant difference.

Representative Fuller asked Ms. Groshek whether she believed that it makes much difference to an employer whether a person is single or married. She replied that she did, absolutely. In her own career she knew that some of the people she had interviews with had problems because of her marital status.

Senator Ray thanked Ms. Groshek for her testimony.

Senator Ray asked Mr. Baffone whether he wished to testify. Mr. Baffone replied that he did not.

Dee Lane addressed the commission on the issue of discrimination against women and minorities in state employment. She said that everyone knows that discrimination is rampant in Alaska state employment. She urged the commission to concentrate on solutions to the problems rather than going over and over the statistics. Women don't have the support of the administration. If they speak out, they get the reputation of being a complainer. If there were support in the state government to see that people were treated fairly, there would be more people coming forward to talk about the problems.

Ms. Lane said that she would relate some of her early problems, but not the current ones because she was afraid. She pointed out that retired military persons are replacing women in the upper echelons of the Division of Energy and Power Development. Outsiders are often better educated than Alaskans and are flooding the state. The Molly Hooch case insured educational opportunities for Native Alaskans, but still education in Alaska does not compete with education outside. We only have one university and a community college system that is just recently developed. Parents have to send their children Outside, which means that they must be in the upper salary ranges.

Ms. Lane reported that in 1960 she was hired to merge the records of the Bureau of Public Roads with the newly formed state records. A couple of men, earning three levels higher than she was, had been asked to do it before she was and they had not succeeded, so she was assigned the task. When she was nearly done, she asked her supervisor, a preconstruction engineer, for a raise. She pointed out that the people who preceded her had failed in the job, and that she was doing it on her own schedule and that it would be finished shortly. He replied that (1) women don't belong in the Department of Highways, and then asked (2) do you think that someone on a lower level can maintain this system when you have it completed? She replied that she had set it up so that it could be maintained simply. He then said that he would not give her a raise.

Ms. Lane pointed out that people are afraid of retaliation if they speak out. For example, she was one of the people involved in the Kevin Waring case. He was the Director for the State Division of Planning and he always chose to hire from outside the state. She indicated that she was not one of the people he hired; he overlooked her. Mr. Waring is no longer with the state, but Ms. Lane said that she knows that she has been retaliated against. Senator Ray suggested that perhaps the retaliation is because of her vocal advocacy rather than because of discrimination.

Ms. Lane continued. She suggested that the state should work with Native leaders to improve educational opportunities. It would benefit everyone in the state. In answer to a comment from Senator Ray she pointed out that in state employment, all of the upper echelons are male and the lower echelons are female. How can you possibly say that there isn't discrimination? The women want to be at the top. Senator Ray suggested that there are more men who apply for the upper echelon jobs, and that is why there are more men who get them.

Ms. Lane suggested that there should be a career ladder and definite policy statements that the administration and the Blue Ribbon Commission care about women and minorities in state employment. Many women don't even apply for state employment because they believe they won't be hired. She added that supervisors should get training on their obligation to be nondiscriminatory in hiring. There is much that can be done to establish a climate where people are made to feel that women and minorities have opportunities to be in the upper echelons, too.

A woman from the Tundra Times pointed out that the advertisement for the meeting said that it was on Tuesday rather than Thursday and perhaps that was part of the problem for the low attendance. Another woman said that if state employees knew of the meeting, they would have come to testify. She learned of the meeting through a women's club. Terry Cramer, administrative assistant for the commission, explained that the personnel officers for each department had been asked to circulate notice of the meeting to all of their employees in Anchorage.

Ed Wesley, president of the Anchorage branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People addressed the commission. He suggested that the commission should look back to the civil rights legislation and more specifically the voters' rights legislation. The burden then was not put on the state to prove discrimination. They looked at the amount of utilization and representation. Similarly, once you look at state employment numbers and the population make-up of the state, that should be a signal that more aggressive affirmative action should take place to alleviate the situation. He asked how many blacks who work for the state make more than $50,000. Senator Ray asked how many positions which pay over $50,000 are blacks qualified for, and added that he did not know how many blacks make more than $50,000. Mr. Kareen pointed out that it is difficult to answer the question of qualifications generally. The qualifications will vary greatly between, for example, a judge and a regional biologist or an engineer.

Mr. Wesley suggested that the commission should look at those figures. He agreed with Ms. Lane that until there is visible support of equal employment policy, people will not be willing to testify on the issue. Once the commission looks at the numbers and sees that there is no representation in that top range of positions, then it should use the same concept that the voters' rights legislation used, and decide that the state must take some action to do something with the heads of those departments.

Representative Fuller asked Mr. Wesley how many blacks there are in Alaska. He replied that something like 3.2% of the state's population is black and that there are approximately 9,700 blacks in Anchorage. Representative Fuller suggested that with the rapid inflow of people to Alaska, there might be few blacks in the higher paying positions because they have not been in the state long enough to work their way upwards.

Mr. Wesley reported that there was one gentleman who was a pathologist for the Department of Fish & Game. The department had something like 900 employees and one black. He had problems there from the beginning of his employment in 1976. For example, the department placed a statement that he was hired to meet affirmative action goals in his personnel file. He requested that the statement be removed from his file and from then on he had problems. Eventually the department fired him.

In the Department of Transportation, Mr. Wesley reported that there was a gentleman making over $50,000 as a facility engineer. The department reorganized and abolished his job. There were other people in the same status as he was, all of whom found jobs within the system. He was left out. Mr. Wesley said that he believes the number of blacks making over $50,000 is cut to about five or six in the state.

Senator Eliason asked how the commission can find out what causes these problems. If people are reluctant to talk about the problems, how can change be focused on the regulations which discriminate? Mr. Wesley replied that there needs to be an aggressive approach. He suggested that if the administration has adopted the "5 + 5" policy, that managers should be required to select from the list, even if they have to go Outside in order to meet their goals. Senator Eliason responded that he would not be willing to solicit applications outside the State of Alaska when only 5.3% of the state employees are Alaskan Natives.

Mr. Wesley asked whether there were any blacks on the commission. Senator Ray replied that there has been one application from Mr. Chase, who testified before the commission earlier in the meeting. Mr. Wesley suggested that in addressing a problem that affects individuals or a segment of the community, the commission should utilize members of the group to solve that problem.

He pointed out that historically there has been an overt problem of discrimination, especially with black people, in the State of Alaska back to the 60's. He explained that by discrimination, he meant actions rather than attitudes. Those problems still exist, and when people went to the streets and protested, then there was some change. He added that we know there was not a revolutionary change. The problem still exists. Senator Ray added that when he came to Alaska in 1930 there were signs in the movies "Natives here, and Whites here". There was no mixing. There was rabid bigotry against Native people.

Mr. Wesley suggested that one way to address the problem of discrimination in state employment is to refuse to fund any department that doesn't meet its affirmative action goals. It is not reverse discrimination, it is saying that the person is charged with the task, that the description of his duty to perform includes meeting the affirmative action goal. When that person doesn't carry out his duty, then you don't pay him or else you fire him.

Senator Eliason asked for suggestions which could be implemented into law or regulations to overcome some of the obstacles that have existed. What is the tool to overcome discrimination? He pointed out that APEA would probably resist any firing of a supervisor as Mr. Wesley had suggested and that the Legislature could not cut off funding a department for failure to meet its affirmative action goals.

Ms. Shelley added that it would be difficult to hold one supervisor responsible for meeting a specific affirmative action goal, since registers may or may not include minority individuals and since there might not be any turnover in an office at all.

In answer to a question from Representative Fuller, Mr. Wesley suggested that if the commission were interested in information about what was happening elsewhere in the Lower 48, the NAACP national office has all the historical data and information about problems in every state in the country. They could provide answers if the commission were to pay someone to spend time there working on the question. He added that there is a particular problem in Alaska because there aren't as many blacks here compared with the population as a whole.

Senator Ray thanked Mr. Wesley for testifying before the commission.

Niel Thomas, executive director of the Alaska State Commission for Human Rights, addressed the commission. He indicated that he had not planned to testify, but that a woman had approached him during a break. He offered to speak for her since, for reasons of shyness, she had decided not to testify herself.

She works in a state office which has a very large clerical workforce. There are three people classified at Range 12, probably as administrative assistants, more people at Range 10, probably secretaries, and a group of people who are Range 8 clerk typists. The person who he spoke with is one of the three top people, and the only one who is an Alaska Native. Every time one of the secretaries or somebody further down in the organization is out of the office, somebody has to run that machine or answer that phone. The person who always has to do that, who is in effect demoted for the day, is the Alaska Native. She has been told, "Well, I know that you were a secretary once, and frankly, I can't think of you as anything but a secretary." Mr. Thomas added that he can't help wondering whether the organization isn't losing an opportunity to take someone else and train them on something that is higher level work to cover these situations.

Mr. Thomas said that the woman he spoke with reported that one of the lower level people there is prejudiced and frequently makes disparaging remarks about a black woman who also works there. She also has told the administrative assistant things like "you people have so much cathing up to do". He said that his impression of the person he spoke with is that she is a very intelligent, forward-looking person who would like to advance hereself in state government but runs into barriers of this type from time to time. He suggested that conduct in the office probably discourages people like her from continuing in state employment. She may be the next $33,000 administrative assistant to a president of some corporation because the state has permitted people to treat other people like that.

Senator Ray asked Mr. Thomas to encourage the lady to contact him either directly or through the Human Rights Commission. Mr. Thomas replied that he had suggested that before she makes a formal complaint, she should talk with an individual who is at the top of her organization who he knows will not tolerate that kind of behavior. Senator Eliason added that you may not be able to control what people think but you certainly can control their actions when they are employed by the state government. He asked Mr. Thomas whether he had suggestions of what the commission could do through regulations or legislation to change some of the obvious vehicles used for discrimination.

Mr. Thomas suggested that the commission consider the Committee Substitute to SB 248. Its approach is in the right direction. For instance it insures that an evaluation really does address an employee's EEO performance. The commission might look at both the bill and the fiscal note to see whether they could be improved. Senator Ray pointed out that the Administration is not supporting the bill, even though they are responsible for the affirmative action program. Mr. Thomas suggested that since the commission includes so many people from the Administration, if it could come up with a substitute bill, then the bill should have the support of the Administration.

Mr. Kareen asked Mr. Thomas for suggestions for finding available workforce data which could be used by all employers in Alaska. Mr. Thomas suggested that the Department of Labor has put together a widely-used book called Data for Affirmative Action Planners. They will probably be working on another book based on the 1980 census as it becomes available. If the commission were to meet with the people in the department who are putting the new edition together, they could share any difficulties they are having in developing the material. Everybody in both the private and public sectors needs workforce availability data, so that would be one of the most helpful services the state could perform in the equal employment opportunity area.

Senator Ray advised the commission that he anticipated holding one more meeting before the legislature convenes. He thanked the participants and adjourned the meeting at 4:15 p.m.

STATEMENT ON DISCRIMINATION IN STATE EMPLOYMENT

Presented to Blue Ribbon Commission on the State Personnel Act by Barbara Schuhmann, Chair
Alaska Commission on the Status of Women
November 19, 1981

Chairman Ray and members of the Blue Ribbon Commission, my name is Barbara Schuhmann and as Chair of the Alaska Commission on the Status of Women I am pleased to be able to address you today on a topic which is of great importance to the well-being of Alaska's women and minorities. The Commission on the Status of Women wanted to undertake an overall review of the state's personnel system, following testimony we received that criticized the system itself as discriminating against women. Our lack of money and time prevented us from undertaking such a study. In addition, the Commission felt that if such a review were undertaken, it should not be limited to questions of sex discrimination, but should include questions as to other bases of unconstitutional discrimination as well.

So, my purpose in coming here today is to thank you for holding these hearings, and to ask that you undertake the review that the Commission would have done if it had the time and resources.

The most recent comprehensive study of the distribution of women and minorities in state government was that done by the Alaska Advisory Committee to the United States Commission on Civil Rights in July, 1980. Among the findings of that study are that:

- state employment "tends to be mostly white and male;"
- the state offers no child care facilities to encourage women to work for the state;
- when women are hired they are "for the most part relegated to the lowest paying jobs in clerical, secretarial and technical fields;"
- the hiring procedures in some departments are "both consciously and unconsciously discriminatory;"
- the state has not adequately communicated hiring and promotional opportunities.

While there has been some progress made since the release of that report the statistics which it included have not changed significantly.

Persons claiming discrimination on the basis of race or sex against private employers often prove their cases by the use of statistics. If a statistical case were built against the state of Alaska, the state would have a very hard time showing it has not discriminated in hiring and promotion on the basis of race and sex.

According to the report published by the Civil Rights Commission, in 1977 only 8% of those people in the top state salary ranges (22-28) were women, while at the same time women occupied over 85% of those at the lowest end of the salary scale (ranges 05-09). In five state departments not a single woman occupied a position in these top salary ranges.

While women in general were faring so poorly the situation for minority women was even worse. In all of the administrative departments of the state government, only one, solitary minority woman could be found who occupied a position in the top salary ranges (22-28).

A more recent survey of the state's affirmative action effort was released by the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity this year, and it does not offer much encouragement. Minority women represent less than 6% of the state's workforce and only 1% of the state's officials and administrators. Women in general fare somewhat better than minority women. Women comprise 42% of the state's workforce but that figure alone may not represent any real growth. Over 90% of the clerical positions in state government are filled by women, according to the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity, while at the same time only 17% of the official and administrators are female.

I think these figures support what we in Coman believe to be the case -- that despite the fact that we have a preponderance of highly educated, capable, and experienced females in the Alaskan population, many of these same women experience a tremendous amount of difficulty in breaking into the state personnel system or rising in it once they have entered. You are here today to receive testimony from women and minorities as to the difficulties that they have experienced, and any solutions which they can offer. The Commission which I represent has held public hearings throughout the state at which women have cited many instances where the state personnel system was obstructive to them in their attempts to find suitable employment. I want to share some of their observations with you because the state, as one of the largest single employers in Alaska, can have a very significant impact on the lives of many by correcting the weaknesses in its personnel system.

In testimony to us women have cited repeated instances where the inflexibility of the personnel system prevented qualified women from obtaining suitable employment or achieving upward mobility. Women in professional positions have had difficulty advancing to supervisory positions and receiving equal compensation for equal work. In some instances they have performed comparable work as male counterparts but have not received equal compensation or have had to take extreme measures to obtain it. It would appear from the testimony we have heard that most women in the lower paid clerical positions (where nearly half of the women employed by the state are located) are afforded practically no incentive to learn new skills or take on additional responsibility; little, if any, on-the-job training for career advancement; and no career ladders or clearly defined steps which, if followed, would help them move toward promotion and advancement. The personnel system needs the flexibility to reward employees for shouldering additional responsibilities. Bonuses based on performance and career ladders that enable staff to advance systematically are essential management tools. Without these incentives the employees will no doubt restrict themselves to performing only those duties which are part of the job description. We need a personnel system which encourages all workers to grow and develop and rewards them for doing so. This is not only fair and equitable - it is good business sense. The somewhat perfunctory merit increase which discriminates quite significantly against those employees found in the lower ranges of the state salary system, does not qualify as a monetary incentive for excellence such as what I am referring to here.

We experienced frustration with the inflexibility of the personnel system when we attempted to hire staff for our own Commission. We wanted to hire people with very diverse skills so that in a small office they could each do a wide variety of tasks. The classifications of the state personnel system were too rigid to allow for our needs and I'm sure our experience was not unique. This inflexibility costs the state in more ways than one because too often the solution to the problems caused by the inflexibility of the personnel system is to create more exempt positions than already exist. Exempt positions are outside of the very EEO (Equal Employment Opportunity) directives which the Commission strongly supports, and they are frequently overpriced.

I mentioned that merit increases also discriminate against those in the lower salary ranges and I would like to clarify that point. In positions from range 05 to 09, and employee would receive between a 2.6% and a 3% merit increase when moving from step A to B. On the other hand, in positions that are range 15 or above the first step increase is never below 3.5%. Not only are many women trapped in dead end jobs at the lower ranges of the salary scale but they suffer the double hardship of receiving a smaller percentage merit increase as well.

On a more positive note, we believe that there are several efforts presently underway which bear great potential for correcting some of the systemic problems in the personnel procedures which have had adverse impact on women and minorities. First, the practice of expanded certification or the "5 + 5" system is a valuable management tool for obtaining the opportunity to interview the five most qualified women and minorities to achieve better representation in all levels of the workforce. When the House Committee on Education and Labor reported on the (successful) efforts to extend Title VII to cover government as an employer in 1972, they observed the following:

> "Civil Service requirements (are) replete with artificial selection and promotion requirements which place a premium on paper credentials which frequently prove of questionable value as a means of predicting actual job performance."

What the expanded certification process enables a manager to do is to go beyond those paper credentials which may or may not be predictive of job performance; and to go beyond those tests which may be culturally biased; to go to the actual candidates who meet the basic requirements for the job to determine if their interest, motivation and commitment suggest them as the most qualified for the needs of that office -- including the need for better representation of women/minorities protected classes.

Female state employees have testified to us that the main problem with this tool is that it is optional and many managers simply never request the additional names. We would hope to see a system developed which better encouraged managers to use this tool on a regular basis until their utilization goals were reached.

We also support the law passed several years ago which enables state employees to share jobs. Women frequently interrupt their careers to assume the duties of homemaking and child rearing and are placed at a disadvantage when it comes to full time employment. They often experience greater need for such options as job sharing, flextime and part time work. Our concern in these areas is that too many employees are unaware of the existence of these options, or have great difficulty pursuing them. All such programs, including any internships or tuition reimbursement plans should be well publicized in all state offices and information should be readily available. It should not require long distance telephone calls to distant voices in the central offices in Juneau to find out about these programs, as is often the case today.

In addition to expanded certification, the concepts reflected in two bills which were introduced last session have our Commission's support. HB 906 was introduced for your Commission by the Rules Committee and it addresses an issue which we have also addressed in a slightly different context. It is sometimes reasonable to extend preference for non-merit reasons under certain conditions and one of the conditions which has received such preference is that of veterans' scoring. Because of the original purpose of veterans' preference, which included reward for sacrifice and ease of transition into civilian life it is certainly more reasonable to grant this preference only upon return from active duty and for a period of time not to exceed three years, rather than for a lifetime, as is presently the case. Passage of such a bill limiting the duration of any veterans' preference will have a significant impact on what has been a major source of systemic discrimination against women in the state personnel system.

Finally, the Committee Substitute for Senate Bill 248 deserves attention during the next session. The Division of Equal Employment Opportunity now has the responsibility for carrying out the State's policy equal employment opportunity, for monitoring the activities of all departments and ensuring that compliance occurs. As I understand it this bill (CSSB 248) would define those responsibilities in state law. We believe it is essential to have a fully functioning, adequately staffed Division of Equal Employment Opportunity and would urge your favorable consideration of this bill as well as a fiscal note sufficient to appoint an Equal Employment Officer for each department within the Executive branch.

In summary I would like to say that the testimony we have heard and the reports we have studies make it clear that:

- state employment, particularly at the higher levels of responsibility and salary, is primarily white and male;
- women are for the most part relegated to the lowest paying jobs in clerical and technical fields;
- no systematic process of recruitment and promotion exists which would enable women to recognize and use opportunities for promotion;
- hiring procedures such as the expanded certification process are helpful, but must be used on a regular rather than a hit-or-miss basis if they are to prove effective.

In addition we believe that the subjects of sexual harassment, comparable worth and discriminatory hiring practices should be thoroughly studied to determine the impact they have on women's employment opportunities and conditions.

Finally, we would urge that as much information as is necessary for comparison and analysis be included in all reports. For example, the recent affirmative action report published by the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity does not contain any salary figures and these are essential data for conducting a thorough and comprehensive review.

We appreciate this opportunity to address you and look forward to your work on resolving some of the aspects of discrimination in state employment.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau, Alaska
November 3, 1981

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order at 10:05 a.m. The roll call showed Ken Kareen, John Chenoweth, Representative Jack Fuller, Lois Jund, John Pugh, Cherie Shelley, Bill Huston, James Fisher, (alternate for Commissioner William Hudson) and Senator Bill Ray present. Myrt Charney, Senator Dick Eliason, and Greg O'Claray were absent. Also present were Roger Thayer, Robert Mourant, Darlene Livermore, and Dorothy Whitney.

Senator Ray opened the meeting by asking for public testimony. The first to testify was Niel Thomas, Director of the Alaska State Commission on Human Rights. Mr. Thomas addressed the question of how the number of employment discrimination complaints against the state compares with the number of complaints filed against private employers. He indicated that the information requested by the Blue Ribbon Commission was similar to the material that the Human Rights Commission developed recently at the request of the U. S. Civil Rights Commission. He distributed copies of a computer printout entitled "Total Statistics by Region", dated 10/17/81, RO1-GGU-0001. Based on the information on the printout and handwritten information he had added to the sheet, he reported that of the 410 cases presently pending before the Human Rights Commission, 75 are cases involving the State of Alaska, which is 18.3% of the total. He added that the 18% could be misleading, since of the 75 cases involving the state, 24 of them raise one issue, which is now pending at the public hearing state. That issue is the state's classification of public health nurses when compared with physician's assistants. Treating those 24 cases as a single case, which he indicated gives a fairer representation of the situation, the proportion of cases filed with the Human Rights Commission against the state is 13.4%.

Mr. Thomas continued explaining the handwritten numbers on the printout. Of the 3172 employment cases filed with the Human Rights Commission since the beginning of 1975 or open on January 1, 1975, 321 have been cases against the state. Two years ago the Alaska Advisory Committee to the U. S. Civil Rights Commission requested similar information. As of August, 1978, the total number of cases filed was 2162, of which 200 involved the state as the employer. The percentage of the total then was 9.3% and now is 10.1%. He added that the statistics would seem to indicate that the Human Rights Commission is getting something of an upturn in business from the State of Alaska, but that he did not know whether a statistician would consider the increase significant.

When the Human Rights Commission was preparing information for the U. S. Civil Rights Commission, they asked the Department of Labor what proportion of the total nonfarm workers in the state were employed by state government. The answer was 8 or 9%. Therefore, in 1978, the state employed 8 or 9% of the workforce and was being complained of in 9% of the employment discrimination cases filed with the Human Rights Commission. Mr. Thomas indicated that he did not know whether the proportion of the workforce employed in state government had increased since 1978. If it hasn't, then it would appear that the Human Rights Commission is getting more business from the state than before. Mr. Thomas added that he was providing additional computer printouts to the Blue Ribbon Commission which together represent all of the cases (employment, housing and everything else) filed against the state since 1975.

In answer to a question from Senator Ray, Mr. Thomas stated that of all the discrimination cases filed, about 50% allege race discrimination. He added that he did not have that percentage figured on the cases specifically filed against the state as an employer.

Mr. Thomas continued, addressing the question of what is discrimination. People customarily know that it's discrimination when someone is consciously out to get somebody saying, "I'm not going to hire this person because she is a female and women should not be doing this kind of work" or "we don't want minorities doing this work." This is overt discrimination and is only a small proportion of the cases which involve agencies or wind up in the courts. The majority of discrimination cases arise because a system of rules or a customary way of doing things works out to the detriment of a certain group of people. For example, suppose you believe that to be an effective police officer you need to be an imposing figure who commands respect. You therefore say that police officers must be over 6'6". The last thing that enters your mind is the effect of that rule, which would be to completely exclude women and to exclude most Asian people and most Alaska Natives, except possibly the Indian population. When you discover this unintentional result, you have to review the situation and come up with an alternative which still serves the legitimate purpose of the rule (hiring quality people) but which doesn't have that discriminatory effect.

One of the problems in dealing with discrimination questions is how to get data. Mr. Thomas continued using the example of the tall trooper. Suppose statistics for the Department of Public Safety as a whole indicate that 40% of the workforce is female. You might therefore conclude that the department is not liable to be sued in sex discrimination cases because women are well-represented in its workforce. However, perhaps if you had data by divisions within the department, you would discover that in hiring troopers there is a problem because there are no women. You also need that data by geography, in order to answer whether there is a problem in hiring in a particular office or location. Another kind of data which Mr. Thomas indicated it is extremely important to have is applicant flow data. It shows what happens to the applications as they are processed. In the tall trooper example, for instance, it might reveal that half the people who applied to be troopers are women but that none of those applications get past the review for height qualifications. Therefore, it would show that Public Safety did not need to increase its recruitment efforts but should reexamine the minimum qualifications for the position.

It is also useful to have availability data, which shows the numbers of people available for or interested in a particular type of work. You need that information when setting goals and percentages for each job-type. Without it, they are extremely difficult to set, and involve a certain amount of guesswork. Mr. Thomas indicated that Chuck LaViege, the counterpart to the Director of EEO in the state, has asked the Department of Labor for information to more fully develop figures on availability data. He urged the Blue Ribbon Commission to encourage the development of better population and availability data.

In answer to a question from Roger Thayer, Mr. Thomas indicated that the information provided in the computer printouts on employment discrimination against the state would indicate the types of employment discrimination: whether they arose in hiring practices, promotional practices or other situations. Senator Ray thanked Mr. Thomas for his testimony.

Dove Kull addressed the commission. She indicated that she was representing herself only, although she was a member of the Alaska Advisory Committee to the U. S. Civil Rights Commission and had represented the state at the annual planning and budget meeting. She indicated that, having lived longer than most others in the room, she had seen many changes, and noted that in 1980, the Ku Klux Klan rode for the first time in 75 years, and in the State of Connecticut, not in the South. She recently visited relatives in Mississippi and was amazed and a little frightened at the unleashing of old attitudes and beliefs. She noted that of President Reagan's appointments as reported in a June 18th document, 10% were women (38 out of 375), 4% were Hispanics (14) and 4% were Blacks (13).

She added that as a result of work she had done in the Aleutian Chain, she felt that people there were neglected and isolated. They have something to contribute. She felt that there was discrimination against dark-skinned people and pointed to the situation in the cannery workers union. Stereotyping limits the opportunities for women, too. Although she had heard one boss say that women cannot lift heavy objects, women do so all the time when raising children. She also felt that the canneries did not provide adequate day care.

Senator Ray asked for further public testimony. Florencio Q. Pax replied that he would prefer to testify in the afternoon. There was no other response.

The commission turned to consideration of the "Prisoner Profile Study" from the Division of Corrections, Department of Health & Social Services. Senator Ray asked Bill Huston to introduce it. Mr. Huston indicated that the profile is based on 100% of the prisoners of the State of Alaska on August 19, 1981. The purpose was to determine the kind of long-term facilities needed by the state and what kind of prisoners would be in prison when it opened in 1985. He reviewed the information gathered which indicates that 37% of the state's prisoners are between the ages of 20 and 24; that the highest percentage have a high school diploma and many have completed some college coursework. In 1967 the Criminal Justice Commission indicated that the average educational background for the nation's prisoners was between 8 and 9 years. The average at the correctional institution in Juneau is over 13. In addition, the average educational background of state prisoners housed with the Federal Bureau of Prisons (FBP) is even higher. Caucasians represent 54% of the state's prisoners, 9% are Black, 12% and 32% are Alaska Native, which includes American Indian (12%), Eskimo (18%) and Aleut (2%). This is twice as high as their representation in the general population, which is about 16%. Most prisoners had lived in the state at least three years before committing the crime for which they were incarcerated.

The largest category of prisoners is sentenced for a Class A felony (49%). Presumptive sentencing does not appear to have had an impact yet on the population statistics. Mr. Huston didn't expect that to show up for another few years. (Under presumptive sentencing, for the second or third felony conviction a person must serve the time sentenced, rather than being released on parole early.)

Of the crime classes, 62% of all felonies were considered violent offenses. However, that category was not defined to include property and sex offenses, so the percentage would increase where crimes in those categories which were committed with violence included. Of the state prisoners who are considered to have committed violent offenses, 43% are presently housed under the jurisdiction of the Federal Bureau of Prisons, and will be returning to the state as the FBP decreases its housing of state prisoners.

Bethel had the highest percentage of crimes in the villages. Mr. Huston suggested that this was probably because it is the hub of the Kuskokwim area which covers 85,000 square miles, with 56 villages and between 26,000 and 30,000 people.

He indicated that the report also addresses the current custody classification (maximum, close, medium or minimum) of the prison population, and rule infractions. It indicates that 150 prisoners out of the total population commit the majority of the infractions. He offered to provide Commission members with a tour of the facility if any were interested.

Mr. Huston discussed the Administrative Council which was set up at Lemon Creek following some unrest amoung the population. He indicated that he structured it differently from similar councils found elsewhere to insure representation from the whole population. He required that the prisoners write by-laws, but limited the topics which could be considered at the council to those matters which were not covered in the regulations, administrative law, departmental regulations, or in the Alaska Statutes. The council was to discuss the welfare of the community where they were at. It met about four times and then the members of the council lost interest.

In conclusion, Mr. Huston stated that there is no doubt that the state will need a new facility in 1985, and that close custody inmates will make up the majority of its population. There will also need to be provisions in the facility for some maximum custody prisoners. A discussion of parole followed.

John Pugh pointed out that while 32% of the prison population is Alaska Native, they make up only 16-17% of the total state population. He indicated that there is a new prison facility which will open in Nome in two years, and that there are a number of Alaska Natives willing to work in it. The state should be encouraged to train and provide employment opportunities for them. Representative Fuller added that attitudes in the Bush are changing. One of the best things that has happened in that regard is the Village Safety Office program. Instead of sending in a trooper or having the school teacher serve as authority figure, the program enables villagers to take responsibility for themselves in these matters. Mr. Huston indicated that cultural traditions could make it more difficult for Native people to be as aggressive as is required in correctional work.

Mr. Pugh suggested that with the reduction in federal money, and particularly federal money to Native corporations, there needs to be an increase in training programs to develop opportunities for state employment. Senator Ray pointed out that contracting with Native Corporations for services may provide a bridge between the cultures. Representative Fuller added that contracting would provide a mechanism for training in both the skills required and in cultural differences. Mr. Pugh pointed out that it would be an advantage to the state to train local individuals to fill positions in rural Alaska, since there is a large turnover in people brought in from outside to fill those positions. Often rural Alaskans don't know of employment opportunities and therefore don't apply.

The commission turned to a discussion of the difference between a pure merit system of employment and implementing affirmative action plans. James Fisher said that affirmative action plans permit a temporary variance of the merit selection system to overcome past difficulties. Lois Jund pointed out that although the commission hearings were extensively advertised few people had appeared to testify. Many people were probably afraid to come forward. She suggested that more people might speak out if the meeting were held on a weekend or if people were invited to provide written testimony and assured that the commission would hold their identities confidential. She cited figures from page 36 of the 1979 Human Rights Commission report which show that 18% of the state's minority employees held jobs classified as range 15 or above in April 1978 which rose to 22.8% in January of 1980, while 44% of the state's white employees held positions range 15 or above positions in April 1978, and 44.5% did in January, 1980. Similarly, in 1978, 18% of the state's female employees were in positions at range 15 or above, which increased to 20.6% in 1980. During these same periods, 74.8% of the state's male employees were in jobs classified as range 15 or above in 1978, while in 1980, 75.1% were.

Darlene Livermore pointed out that any complaint about discrimination is difficult to keep secret, since to resolve it, the Human Rights Commission must discuss it with the employer. Mr. Huston added that the Blue Ribbon Commission should consider a Saturday meeting, since any employee wishing to appear would be conspicuous in his or her absence from work otherwise.

Senator Ray asked members whether they had ever received confidential inquiries because of their participation in the commission. Lynda McCurry indicated that several women have spoken with her about being considered but not hired for promotional opportunities. Typically, they were within the top five on the register for the positions involved, and the individual selected was lower on the register than they were. It appears that there may be an "old boys" network, but it is difficult to resolve whether there is discrimination or not.

Mr. Huston suggested that the commission consider recommending a review of departmental and divisional registers to discover criteria which might unintentionally operate to discriminate. Many policies have existed since statehood without anyone questioning them.

Mr. Thayer explained, in answer to another question, that each annual personnel evaluation of a supervisory state employee is supposed to contain a rating on how well that employee is carrying out the department's affirmative action plan. However, he has never seen anyone comment in writing about that factor. Mr. Fisher commented that the Division of EEO is working with the departments on their affirmative action plans. Most have only been in effect for one year. They are presently being revised. The division is also putting out a package of information to encourage affirmative action committees in the departments to use the teleconference network to supplement their meetings, to enhance awareness and for training. He added that he senses a momentum in the EEO division, which was established in the fall of 1978. He hoped it would continue to encourage cooperative activities, to help with preparing the affirmative action plans, with training, and with increasing the awareness within state government.

Lois Jund asked whether the state has a positive recruitment program to help minority persons get on the registers, to encourage them to apply for positions and to advise them of what might be available. Ken Kareen answered that the Division of Personnel has no real outreach recruitment of any kind. The departments do whatever is done. The division does respond to requests for participation in public programs more often if it appears that the audience will be composed of women or minority group members.

John Pugh pointed out one positive note in that area. The Nome Youth Center will be opening in December. The Department of Health and Social Services with the cooperation of the Division of Personnel recruited extensively to encourage residents in Nome to get on the register. Instead of the usual practice of scoring the tests first and then holding oral exams, they took all of the applicants through the orals and then gave the written exams. However, this kind of change from the normal way of handling applications needs to be planned for well in advance. The department began seven or eight months prior to the time that they knew the facility would be opened. The Division of Personnel has become much more willing in the last few years to work with the departments, despite being inundated with general applications for employment. He suggested that the commission recommend to the departments that to work with the Division of Personnel to come up with creative solutions to the problem of getting minorities on the registers.

Roger Thayer added that most villages now have cable TV. The Department of Transportation uses those scanners to provide information about job openings. Lynda McCurry added that additional resources are available through the Job Service Offices of the Department of Labor.

The commission recessed at 11:55 p.m.

Senator Ray reconvened the meeting at 1:35 p.m. and asked for public testimony.

Florencio Q. Pax addressed the commission. He indicated that he was born in the Philippines and was educated under an American educational system, graduating with an accounting major and later passing the Philippine bar examination. He worked for the government as a quasi-judical hearing officer for six years and had also worked for 23 years in the accounting field. He served during World War II with American forces in the Philippines but chose not to come to the United States at the end of the war. He recently immigrated to the United States because his wife's family had moved here. He introduced Mrs. Pax to the commission.

Mr. Pax told the commission that Aaron Isaac suggested to him that he apply for the position of the director of the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity. However, Mr. Pax had never seen the vacancy advertised. Senator Ray asked James Fisher, the new director of that division, to let Mr. Pax know why there had been no advertising. Mr. Pax also indicated that he had been a finalist for the Executive Director of the Anchorage Equal Rights Commission. Although he was not finally selected for the post, he did not quarrel with that. However, he was also a finalist for the position of Affirmative Action Officer for the University of Alaska, Juneau. Another finalist for that position told him that the person finally selected was less qualified than she was, and suggested that Mr. Pax should take steps to challenge the appointment.

Mr. Pax indicated that he had reviewed the United States Constitution, and the constitutional provision of the State of Alaska as well as the State Personnel Act, various civil rights provisions, Executive Orders and the equal employment opportunity provisions in the Code of Federal Regulations. He said that he felt that there are adequate provisions of law in this area and that the problem lies in the effective implementation of those provisions. He suggested that there should be a continuing educational process so that the goals can be effectively met.

On the question of why individuals do not come forward to testify at hearings such as the present one, Mr. Pax suggested that there are a number of reasons. First, there is fear of reprisal. Also, others had suggested to Mr. Pax that individuals do not come before a group composed of white persons to complain about the actions of a white supervisor because they believe that they will not be successful. Mr. Pax added that he does not share this belief. Mrs. Pax also suggested to him that it might be helpful to educate people about the importance of the subject, to encourage them to speak out.

Mr. Pax stated that he has been placed on three registers with the state: executive director of Wage and Hour Officer, as a loan examiner and as a regulations specialist. There were a number of job classes for which he was found not to qualify because the Division of Personnel did not consider his education in the Philippines to satisfy the requirement of graduation from an accredited college or university. Mr. Pax stated that his education had been in the American system and that he is familiar with the curriculum in accounting at the University of Alaska and it is practically the same as the education he received in the Philippines. He also was not credited with his 23 years work experience in the field.

Mr. Pax advised the commission that he and his wife participated in a one-month orientation program when they were first hired by the Seattle Public School District. All persons newly hired were required to take the course which provided information on cultural and ethnic backgrounds as well as topics such as effective communications, office skills, first aid and transportation. He reported that there has been a decision by the U.S. District Court in Oklahoma declaring that a Filipino accent could not be grounds for firing an employee. The case was Karinio (?) vs. University of Oklahoma.

Mr. Pax suggested that there should be separate affirmative action goals for women and for minority persons, and that hiring women should not satisfy the goal for employment of minority persons. He added that he opposes reverse discrimination against whites. In order to meet EEO goals, Mr. Pax suggested that the recruitment system should be computerized to monitor applicants and employees so that it is possible to follow an individual through the application process into the employment history. It should show, for example, whether advanced training for an employee was appropriate and whether he was eligible for promotion. He added that a supervisor should be dutybound to recommend training for a woman or minority person who is qualified for it in order to encourage the promotion of these protected classes.

Mr. Pax concluded his testimony by offering to assist the commission in any capacity, whether as a volunteer or as an employee. Senator Ray thanked him for his testimony and asked whether any commission members wished to ask questions.

ALASKA LEGISLATURE SPECIAL COMMITTEE / SUBJECT FILE 8672

In answer to a question from Lois Jund, Mr. Pax indicated that he believed that minority persons might be more likely to bring their problems to the commission if its membership included minority persons or if there were an intake officer who was a minority person. As an example of what he was suggesting, he pointed out that the Anchorage Equal Rights Commission is composed of nine members, with representation from whites, blacks, Native Alaskans, the Filipino community, and Chicanos or those of Spanish origin, and contains both male and female members.

Verneelia Randall addressed the commission. She has worked for the state for four years, first as a Public Health Nurse and now as the Maternal Child Nurse Coordinator. She is also chairperson for the Department of Health & Social Services EEO Committee. She addressed the commission as a private citizen.

In answer to why so few people chose to speak before the commission, she related reasons given to her by other state employees. These included questioning how many women and minorities would make up the membership on the commission, whether commission members would hold positions of power which could lead to real changes, and the fact that they would have to take annual leave in order to testify. Senator Ray advised Ms. Randall that it is not necessary for state employees to take annual leave to appear before the commission. He indicated that membership on the commission includes the Commissioner of Administration, the Director of the Division of Personnel, representatives of employee unions, the Ombudsman and public members in addition to legislators.

Ms. Randall said that there are two kinds of discriminatory problems, those created by societal habits and those which arise from individual discrimination. Societal problems develop from a system which has not been changed in 30 or 40 years and which have an inadvertent discriminatory effect. Once it is in place, the system tends to resist change, rather than being open to solving the problems which it creates. She gave as an example her own situation. She has a bachelor's degree, a masters, is working on a master's in public health and intends to pursue a Ph.D. in health policy and management. Even then, she will not be eligible for the position of health officer because she is not a doctor, a dentist or a veterinarian. Those requirements were created years ago and may have been appropriate for the position then, but the department has not reviewed them since, even though the health education field has changed significantly.

Ms. Randall criticized testing and experience ratings of applications and pointed out that they work against women and minorities. Tests are culturally based and test a person's ability to take tests more than ability for a job. Experience requirements work against those who have had less opportunity to work. Anyone can learn to take a test and can therefore pass a test. The opposite is also true. For example, until an instructor worked with her on test-taking, she nearly flunked out of nursing school, despite knowing the material thoroughly. After learning how to take tests, she now does well on them. Because of these problems with tests and experience requirements, the registers work against people from different cultural backgrounds. If they appear at all, they are likely to be low on the registers.

Ms. Randall told the commission that the Governor had recently authorized a new register system in which the names of the top five applicants plus the names of the top five from a protected class are shown for those job classes in which women or minorities are underutilized. The problem with this approach is that it is voluntary. The recruiting agency should be required to hire from an affirmative action register for positions in underutilized job classes.

There is a second type of discrimination -- individual discrimination. It may be either conscious or subconscious. Ms. Randall stated that everyone is racist either consciously or subconsciously. Until we recognize that and work to change it, the implementation of any affirmative action policy will not happen on a regular, consistent basis.

Ms. Randall advised the commission of DHSS statistics on minority and women hires. She suggested that DHSS is one of the best departments because women and minority persons are most likely to be either nurses or social workers or office clerks, and DHSS hires a lot of all of those job classes. The figures are based on the department's EEO plan, which identifies the availability of minorities and women for state employment, as compared to the actual employment.

	Female	Minority
Availability of office clerks	79%	21.1%
Employment by the department	90.3%	17.8%
Availability of officials & administrators	44%	19.3%
Employment by the department	26.7%	11.3%

There is a significant difference between the available market and what is actually happening, even if the figures are off by 5%. Ms. Randall recommended that the state use computers to identify underutilized job classes. When a department requests a register in one of the identified classes, they should get an affirmative action register, whether they wanted it or not. A supervisor should have to justify not hiring a woman or minority person for a vacancy if any appeared on the register. The present system requires the supervisor to justify hiring from below the top five even when hiring for job clases in which minorities or women have been shown to be underutilizied.

Ms. Randall acknowledged that this system would be reverse discrimination but pointed out that when you have a relay race and one team started the race 15 minutes after you did, then you cannot expect them to win the race unless you provide some catch-up time. In our society women and minorities began well after the race was underway, and only those minorities and women who are far above the exception even get into the running. You cannot have equal opportunity until society provides women and minorities a chance to catch up.

Ms. Randall said that she had a personal concern for Alaska. It is unfair to group Alaska Natives with other minorities. Alaska is a state of immigration and many minorities who are highly qualified choose to come here. Statistics show that Native Alaskans, who were here first, get drowned out by blacks, Filipinos and Chicanos who immigrated. While 11.3% of the officials and administrators may be minority, 0% may be Alaska Native. Ms. Randall recommended that in underutilization figures, Alaska Natives should be broken out to insure that they have fair representation and that immigrants not be allowed to take the jobs that they would have had.

Ms. Randall shared another area of concern: that of upward mobility. One problem is the opportunity for training. DHSS provides individual training contracts for its employees. An employee can go to the agency and say "here's a course which relates to my job and will give me added skills and I want to take it." If the agency agrees, it will cover the costs provided the employee signs a contract to remain on the job for a specified length of time. Last year, DHSS had 85 such contracts. There are 71 officials and administrators in the department. Of those, 20% had individual training contracts, while only 4% of the office clerks (who number 421) had them. In answer to a question from Lois Jund, Ms. Randall indicated that she did not know how many applications had been filed for training. She did show that 79% of the officials went out-of-state for their training. None of the office clerks went out-of-state. It's the office clerks who need the training for promotional opportunities. To have affirmative action, the state has to provide opportunities for upward mobility. Therefore, training funds should be part of every budget and there should be some system to insure that a fair portion of those funds reach those on the bottom. If 60% of a department's workforce is classed as officer clerks, then 60% of those employees should be getting training.

Senator Ray pointed out that the legislative finance committees have been reluctant to pay for on-the-job training. The legislators feel that there are requirements which employees should meet before getting the job. The state should not have to pay for it. Therefore, a good share of the inservice training money gets cut from the budget. It's an area which has been abused and is still abused. Ms. Randall replied that it is short-sighted to cut training funds. Recruiting and orienting new employees is more expensive than training existing employees who have proven themselves to be loyal to the state and who will stay in the job for a longer time.

A second difficulty in providing upward mobility is that supervisors may discourage their employees from seeking promotions. If that attitude is to change, it must start at the top. She gave as an example her own promotion to her present position. Her supervisor discouraged her, saying that she wouldn't be able to do the work, and the position was vacant for a whole year.

Ms. Randall agreed with Mr. Pax's recommendations that goals for employment of women and minorities should not be grouped together. Women have different problems and circumstances from those of minorities. Problems women face arise in part from the traditional employment system which is based on the employment of men who could work knowing that their families would be cared for by their wives. That is no longer the case. Single parent families are now prevalent and two-working-parent families are a fact of life. Any employer, whether private or public, will have to recognize that the traditional system of hours of work, work days, and annual leave, was made up for the traditional family system. Day care is necessary for even two-parent working families. The employer should be responsive to that need, although the employee should expect to pay for the care provided. In addition, employers should be sensitive to the needs of working parents. For example, Ms. Randall suggested that women be allowed to take annual leave, sick leave, or leave without pay in order to breast feed children while working. This kind of small accommodation could make a family's life much easier and also free an employee to put more energy into the job.

In closing, Ms. Randall said that any program which is developed must have teeth in order to be effective, especially for those who are low on the pole.

Senator Ray asked whether Ms. Randall had been discriminated against in working for the state because she is a black. She replied that it is hard for a non-minority or a male to understand. It is not that there is clear discrimination, but little things happen. For example, when there is a question in her section, people who are above her will first go to the man who is under her and ask him. If he is not available, they will go to the white woman who is not even in her section and ask her. The end result is that those who have been asked come to Ms. Randall for the answer. Ms. Randall indicated that it is probably because of conscious or subconscious racism. In answer to another question, Ms. Randall indicated that whether the motivation is a personal, individual dislike or racism or sexism, the end result is the same. The cause does not matter. The end result for her as a woman and a black, is discrimination. Senator Ray thanked Ms. Randall for her testimony before the commission.

Brenda Randall-Sadek addressed the commission. She is an Accounting Clerk III for the Department of Transportation and has worked for the state for a year in December without promotion. She first spoke of applying for a position with the Juneau office of the Human Rights Commission. There was a vacancy for an entry level, trainee position which she saw advertised. It required a high school degree, and she has graduated from college. She applied, but received no response. The position was advertised two more times and each time she applied. Only after she went to the office did she receive a letter telling her that she was not qualified for the position.

In the time that she has worked for DOT, Ms. Randall-Sadek said that she has asked to take the state accounting course three times. Her requests have been both oral and in written memos. Although she wrote that she intended to stay with the department and hoped to be promoted into a position which would require the knowledge the course offered, the only reply she received was written on the bottom of her memo saying "we do send people when we feel that it is related."

Ms. Randall-Sadek said that she had worked at three different clerk desks in the department. When she was in the research section, she learned that her supervisor planned to hire a Tech I. She was planning to leave that section and her supervisor did not want her to leave. He said she was a good worker and encouraged her to stay in the section. However, he did not hire her for the Tech I position, explaining that she was too low on the register. The person who was hired had worked for the department for less time than she had and was a white male. Ms. Randall-Sadek told the supervisor that Tech I's are under-utilized class and he could have hired her if he had wanted to. Furthermore, in her time with DOT she has seen them hold registers for people who they want to hire and justify hiring anyone they want regardless of where they were on the register.

In the time that she has been with DOT, Ms. Randall-Sadek said that the only other minorities she has seen are Filipinos. She asked several people how long they had worked for the department and found that the three or four white people who had been with the department from four to six years all were at the Tech III or Accounting I levels. She knows of two Filipinos who do excellent work and have been with the department for more than five years, but who are still at the Accounting Tech I level.

Ms. Randall-Sadek agreed with Verneelia Randall on the register system and test-taking. Test resultsdepend on your abilities to take tests. However, she said that if that is the system the state is going to use, then they should stick by it, instead of waiting for the people they want to get on the register. Ms. McCurry added that as a personnel officer she calls the tactics Ms. Randall-Sadek mentioned "crafty techniques". All of them are legal. She suggested that the commission should zero in on these practices and fix them. She added that DOT could have called for departmental promotional lists to fill the Tech I position and that probably Ms. Randall-Sadek would have placed well on that register. A second thing at DOT could have done was use the Five-Plus-Five register and gone below the top five to select her. Ms. Randall-Sadek pointed out that DOT cannot use those registers because their EEO plan has not been accepted yet.

Mr. Thayer asked Ms. Randall-Sadek to provide him with copies of her requests to take the training course and added that it is the practice of DOT to use promotional registers. He indicated that he planned to do some checking on the situation.

Senator Ray asked whether Ms. Randall-Sadek's experiences resulted from discrimination against her because of her race or sex rather than being a situation where the supervisor was hiring a friend regardless of who the other people applying for the job were. She replied that the system seems to work most against the blacks and Filipinos and Indians. Verneelia Randall added that when the system breaks down like this, then white people get caught in it but black people, Indians, Filipinos, minorities get caught in it more. The end result of the race is that since women and minorities are 15 minutes behind to begin with, then when 10 more minutes are added to everyone's time, it makes them 25 minutes behind.

Ms. Jund suggested that the situation might have been better handled if the state's policy were to always provide an EEO register for any vacancy in a job class where underutilization had been shown. The supervisor would have to justify not hiring from that register. This would put it in the proper persepective and get away from the game of crafty techniques.

Senator Ray added that he hoped more people would come to tesity and that if anyone used an appearance in front of this commission to discriminate against a witness, that he wanted to know about it because the commission and the Governor would not tolerate that.

Mr. Pax suggested that the state should enforce laws which provide that the state as grantor to political subdivisions can withdraw funding from any grantee who violates anti-discrimination laws. Senator Ray said that he would ask the Legislative Affairs Legal Division to research the area to insure that the laws in effect were adequate.

Ms. Jund suggested that the commission propose legislative intent to insure that any training funds are used proportionately to categories of people to enhance upward mobility. Senator Ray replied that legislative intent is not enforceable and that the language could be put into a statute. He added that he expected that the departments would resist the suggestion. The commissioners would come before the legislative committee and say that where they really needed training funds is for the specialized classes.

Brenda Knapp, a planner with the Central Council of Tlingit-Haida Indian Tribes of Alaska addressed the commission. She indicated that the council would be submitting testimony in written form to the commission and that she wanted to share the introduction now.

Sealaska Advisory Committee to the United States Commission on Civil Rights produced a report and initiated a series of open meetings in the fall of 1978, including a meeting in Juneau on 11 September, 1978 and the findings of the Alaska Advisory Committee were published in July, 1980. To date, a great deal of effort has been made to correct and improve the employment representation of Alaska Natives and other minorities in state government. Reports have been filed, plans developed, responsibilities pinpointed, roles clarified, data systems implemented, policy expounded and the Blue Ribbon Commission established.

In April, 1978, Native people held 518 jobs in state government. This figure represented 5.4% of the total state government workforce. Today, November 3, 1981, 3-1/2 years later, according to figures just released by this commission, Native people hold 5.4% of jobs in state government workforce. There has been a rise in actual numbers that went from 518 to 694, but the percent of the total state government jobs has not changed, 5.4%.

In other words, despite all of the talks, meetings, reports, plans, commissions, etc., which have taken place during the past 3-1/2 years, Native people in Alaska have not improved their representation in the workforce of state government. Although 16% of the state's population is Native, less than 6% of the jobs in state government are held by Native people. Most of these jobs are, as everyone knows, concentrated in the clerical, craft and paraprofessional categories. Very few professional and management positions are held by Native people. The underrepresentation and underutilization of Native people affects most job categories and departments of state government. In fact, in nine of the 15 departments of the Executive Branch of state government, the representation of Alaska Native people has declined between April '78 and September '81. Of the remaining six departments, four increased the representation that Native people by less than 1% over earlier figures. Two departments, Community & Regional Affairs and Natural Resources appear to have made substantial gains. But, we have no information as to what really resulted in these gains.

It would appear that the commitment so clearly stated in Administrative Order No. 59 as expressing the equal employment policy of the executive branch of state government needs to be more forcefully and imaginatively translated into action. The actions of the past 3-1/2 years have provided necessary and useful mechanisms to help state government recruit, select, hire, promote and retain minorities in state employment. The expanded certification policy is a particularly useful step in bringing qualified Native people to the attention of hiring departments. But we believe that what has been accomplished to date, represent only the first few steps in an overall plan that must produce results in numbers, rather than intentions.

Senator Ray asked Ms. Knapp whether she knew how many state jobs had been contracted out to Native Corporations. These positions would therefore no longer show up in state employment figures and would probably have been held largely by Native Alaskans. Therefore, the number of Native state employees would have decreased, although the number of employed Natives would not have. Ms. Knapp replied that she did not know. However, she pointed out that since the jobs are no longer part of any of the figures on state employment, that she did not consider them relevant to this question. Of the remaining positions, the state should have been able to do better than maintain 5.4% Alaska Natives over the last three years. Good intentions are not translating into action. She pointed out that many Native people were working under CETA positions and that these programs are being eliminated as a result of the current economic trend. These trainees are available for employment.

In answer to another question from Senator Ray, Ms. Knapp said that she did not know whether the number of Native Alaskans who are applying for state jobs has increased or decreased since 1978, but that there are a significatnt number of Native people who are now unemployed and who would like to work. If their number has substantially decreased on state registers, then the important question is "why". Senator Ray agree and said that what the commission is trying to discover is whether there is a discriminatory attitude or whether there is some other problem. Ms. Knapp pointed out that the Native Corporations are able to find, recruit and employ qualified Native people. The state government should also be able to do that. She indicated that the written testimony which the council will provide will include specific recommendations on what the state might do to improve opportunities for Native Alaskans.

Senator Ray thanked Ms. Knapp for testifying.

Mary Lisack, Affirmative Action Officer for the University of Alaska, Juneau, addressed the commission. She reported that the University has been under a compliance review by the federal government since the early 1970's. If it does not show progress in affirmative action, it will lose its federal funding. The University's Affirmative Action Office is under top management rather than part of the personnel office. Her responsibility is to monitor and ensure compliance with affirmative actions plans and employment opportunities. One of the ways in which the University tries to eliminate discrimination is through ensuring that job qualifications are job related. The affirmative action officer has to approve all job qualifications for positions open at the University. The qualifications must be job related. For example, there is no reason that a secretary has to have graduated from high school to do the work. For a large portion of jobs, the qualifications are simply knowledge, skills and ability sufficient to perform the duties of the job. For example, if one of the duties is budgeting, the University will consider that handling a household budget demonstrates the person has the skill to handle that portion of the job.

The University maintains flow charts for every protected group person who applies for a job. The rejection of that person has to be justified on the flow chart. All hiring has to be approved by the Affirmative Action Officer to ensure that the selection process has not been discriminatory. According to the University Affirmative Action Plan, preference is given to members of protected groups wherever applicants are equally qualified.

This year for the first time, the University has funds for staff development. It has earmarked a portion of those funds for training for protected persons, in order to better attract, retain and promote them.

Ms. Lisack pointed out that you can't successfully force affirmative action on a hiring authority. Where a hiring authority, with the agreement of others in the office, has selected a non-protected person, the Affirmative Action Officer cannot require that a protected person be hired. The other employees in the office will say that the only reason for the hire was because of the person's race. The protected person will be made to feel extremely uncomfortable and will probably terminate early. Hiring authorities and co-workers need to be educated. The University does not hire unqualified people. But supervisors need to be trained in how to deal with these situations, how to work with the people they supervise, how to train them to deal with cultural barriers that exist. One hiring authority complained to her about a minority person who had been hired, saying that she could not do the work. But that was not the problem. When Ms. Lisack went to the office at lunch, everyone went out together leaving the protected person sitting there. The hiring authority made no effort to correct the situation. Instead they said that the person could not function.

In answer to a question from Mr. Huston, Ms. Lisack explained that the University testing is done by reviewing written applications and then interviewing the applicants. They also give typing tests where production typing is required.

Senator Ray thanked Ms. Lisack for her testimony.

A woman in the audience asked about hiring the handicapped. She asked whether the statistics in the commission memos included handicapped in the "Other" category. Ms. Cramer replied that the memo was addressed only to the racial make-up of the state workforce.

Ms. Randall pointed out that there is a problem in getting handicapped state employees to speak out. She conducted a voluntary survey and asked handicapped employees to identify any concerns they had. Few of the questionnaires were returned, and most of those said that there were no problems. Ms. Randall indicated that she suspected that handicapped individuals have a harder time and are more reluctant to identify themselves. For example, if handicapped individuals are to work at their highest capacity, they should be provided with desks and other equipment which best meets their needs. Handicapped individuals are not seen in state employment, particularly where their employment would require a change in the office environment. Perhaps the commission should try to find out why they are not there.

Senator Ray pointed out that in all the time that the commission has been in existence, there has not been one complaint from anyone representing handicapped people. John [illegible]gh added that the Governor's Special Commission on Hiring the Handicapped is a very active group and does a very good job addressing this problem. For the Blue Ribbon Commission to look at the area would be an unnecessary duplication. Ken Kareen point out that the Division of Vocational Rehabilitation has counselors who look for job opportunities for handicapped people, either with the state or with private employers. For a position with the state, the counselor can make the referral, the person can be hired as a provisional employee and after four months on the job they can be made permanent. Ms. Jund added that Vocational Rehabilitation also provides training. Another woman asked for a definition of handicapped and wondered why alcohol and drug abuse has been added to it. Mr. Fisher responded that they have been added. The Department of Natural Resources received an award from the Governor's Council for placement of 25 handicapped persons with 80% retention since January, 1981.

Senator Ray pointed out that the Constitution of the State of Alaska provides for a merit system. The state government is supposed to employ people according to their merits. Wages and fringe benefits are attractice and many of the top class of workers in the state are applying for state jobs. The state should get the best employees they can for the money they spend. That's the way a merit system works. He added that those handicapped persons he has been associated with were the most accommodating people and the best workers. The supervisor will recognize the capabilities of the person and provide the equipment that they need.

The woman indicated that she still had a problem with the definition of handicapped. Mr. Kareen indicated that Vocational Rehabilitation uses federal guidelines because so much of their funding comes from the federal government. Senator Ray added that the legislature tried to prepare legislation to provide for free ferry rides for senior citizens and handicapped individuals, but the word "handicapped" was so hard to define to insure that it included those who should be included, but to exclude those not genuinely handicapped, that they had to give up. They have worked on the problem over the interim and developed another definition which will probably be closely examined next session.

Senator Ray asked the commission whether they wanted to hold an election for the vice chairman's seat. Mr. Huston moved that the matter be held over to a later date. The motion passed without objection.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 4:20 p.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau, Alaska
October 5, 1981

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order at 10:00 a.m. The roll call showed Ken Kareen, Senator Dick Eliason, John Chenoweth, Representative Jack Fuller, Lynda McCurry, Greg O'Claray, John Pugh, Fred Muller, Bill Huston, Darlene Livermore (alternate for Cherie Shelley) and Senator Bill Ray present. Myrt Charney and Lois Jund were absent. Also present were Roger Thayer and Robert Mourant.

Senator Ray advised the commission of the Letter of Intent passed by the Legislature when it provided funding for the commission. He asked the members to consider the question of affirmative action and minority hiring within the framework of the provision of the Alaska Constitution calling for a merit system for state employment. Ken Kareen pointed out that the constitution also requires that there be equality of citizens regardless of race, and that the framers of the Alaska Constitution would probably not see a constitutional conflict between those provisions. Jack Chenoweth commented that he found it hard to believe that the state's provisions on the merit system would exclude Alaska from having an affirmative action program. At least the constitution gives equal weight to affirmative action and probably the courts would find that helping people to apply for positions with the state would be enhanced by the provisions of the constitution.

Senator Ray added that affirmative action should mean that every citizen has an equal opportunity to apply for jobs. But what is the use of having a testing and classification system if the state is required to hire, for example, 10% Native Americans and 10% Eskimos regardless of qualifications. He added that the state should, in its approach to affirmative action and other programs, recognize the distinct cultural differences between Eskimos and Alaska Natives.

Senator Ray asked whether females should be considered a minority group. Fred Muller answered that women are classified as a "protected class" because there is an institutional bias which has resulted in lower pay for women. In the past, hey have been barred from entry to a number of positions.

Mr. Kareen suggested that for continuity, the commission should use the federal government classifications and those that the State Human Rights Commission has established. Senator Ray disagreed. He asked whether this is a first step towards eliminating the merit system.

Darlene Livermore replied that this would not be a step to either eliminate or harm the merit system. Senator Ray added that he wants to see more minority individuals employed in government, but how can that be done without reverse discrimination?

Greg O'Claray pointed out that if the state has an affirmative action program then, in effect, they are using two hiring systems -- the merit system and another.

Senator Ray commented that the majority of complaints of discrimination against women which the commission has heard appear to have resulted from personality conflict rather than from outright discrimination.

Ms. Livermore pointed out that it depends on how you define discrimination, whether you are looking at covert or overt acts. Covert discrimination is more insidious because it doesn't leap to the surface, you have to look at patterns to identify it. APEA would normally refer a charge of discrimination to the Human Rights Commission. To establish a charge of covert discrimination requires prolonged investigation. You have to consider comments made over a long period of time and work assignments given. There are certain kinds of jokes which may be accepted as humor, but may also reveal a discriminatory intent behind the surface. It is difficult to bring covert discrimination to the surface. In the case of people who are labeled trouble-makers, they frequently become trouble-makers because they want to stand up for themselves, to ease the tension they are feeling.

John Pugh suggested that the commission focus on the underutilization of women and minorities, on problems of getting on the state's registers and on looking at whether positions are overclassified.

Senator Eliason pointed out that the state does overclassify positions. What is the interest of the state -- getting the best qualified person for a job or providing equal oppportunity for all of its people?

Bill Huston added that the Department of Health and Social Services has sent directives to the correctional institutions to try to hire minority applicants, but very few appear on the state's registers. He used to believe that recruitment should be the responsibility of the Division of Personnel, but perhaps the departments should recruit on their own.

In response to the question of overclassification of positions, Mr. Kareen related that several years ago the Governor's Commission on Minority Employment formed a subcommittee which considered every classification in the state. They recommended substitutions for educational requirements in a number of classificiations, and now there are very few jobs which have an absolute requirement for educational background. Relevant experience has been substituted. But for people living in rural areas of the state, frequently there is neither the opportunity for academic training nor for gaining the substitute experience required.

Occasionally when an individual does have both the education and the training, he may still be lower on the eligibility list.

Since last spring, Mr. Kareen continued, the state has been using a new hiring system called the Five-Plus-Five system, which allows managers to consider not only the top five applicants on the eligible list but also the top five members of a protected class which has been shown by the department's Affirmative Action Plan to be underrepresented in the department's workforce. Underrepresentation deals with many things. Where the administration recognizes that they do have a shortage of women or minorities, candidates frequently do not exist in the labor force for that position or for work in that location.

Senator Eliason pointed to startling employment figures from the Annual Affirmative Action Report of 1981 which show that of a total of 10,479 employees in the Executive Branch of State Government, only about 250 are Alaska Native. (Page 13 of the Report).

Mr. Huston reported that the Department of Health & Social Services just completed a Prisoner Profile Study which was published on August 10, 1981, and shows the racial composition of the Alaska Correctional Institutions. Senator Ray directed the commission staff to request a copy of the Profile from the Division of Corrections. He also asked the staff to ask the Limited Entry Commission for a breakout on the number of permits originally issued to Natives and to Caucasians and the numbers presently held.

Senator Ray asked the commission to consider the goals it wished to pursue in this project and the things which should be looked at. Senator Eliason suggested the classification procedures and asked who writes the class specifications. Mr. Kareen answered that the position descriptions for each position in the classified service are written either by the employee holding the position or by his or her supervisor. From those position descriptions, the Division of Personnel writes the generalized class specifications.

John Pugh suggested that the commission should look more closely at underutilization of women and minorities. It is not clear how many members of those protected classes are actually on registers. Mr. Kareen pointed out that in Alaska the registers identify the race of ethnic background of applicants. The law permits that kind of identification where the purpose is permissible. It would not be permissible to show race or sex if that information was to be used for discrimination. Mr. Pugh suggested that to decide whether there has been discrimination, you have to know whether there have been minority applicants who have not been hired. It may be that the underutilization results from a limited labor pool, that minority workers are not interested in working for the state government in that job class. Then the solutions to underutilization should focus on increased job training.

Mr. Huston asked how many minorities apply for work but fail to qualify and be placed on the register. Mr. Kareen answered that the Division of Personnel hopes to be able to provide that information soon. They are developing a program to provide data on how many people have applied, how many were tested, then how many were placed on the register. All applications will be entered into the system. Mr. Muller pointed out that since the question on racial and ethnic background on state applications is voluntary, the data captured will not be an entirely true representation of those who have applied for state employment.

Mr. O'Claray noted that the Human Rights Commission Report for 1980 on page 44 shows that of the new cases filed, 51% were filed by Caucasians and 25% were filed by Blacks. Fifty-three per cent were filed by females.

Mr. Thayer suggested that it is also important to consider where the job is. Many Natives do not want to leave their villages. Rep. Fuller agreed. Many people choose to follow their cultural traditions, and prefer to be able to leave work for the spring seal hunt, for example. Mr. Muller added that temporary and nonpermanent employees are excluded from the data on state employees which the Division of Personnel is developing.

Senator Eliason asked whether it would be possible to find out the number of full time state jobs located in the Bush which are filled by Caucasians and by Alaska Natives. Mr. Kareen responded that the data exists for the executive branch, but that it would take considerable time to extract it and put it in a usable form. Rep. Fuller added that there are few state jobs in the villages. Most are located in Kotzebue, Nome, Bethel and Barrow.

Senator Ray suggested that educational requirements for state jobs are too strict. Mr. Kareen replied that the largest number of complaints which the Division of Personnel receives about minimum qualifications are from administrators who say the requirements should be stricter because the lists contain too many people who cannot do the job.

Mr. O'Claray asked about current state practices for increasing the number of women and minorities hired. Mr. Pugh explained that expanded certification is used to meet affirmative action plans. Senator Ray asked whether that short circuited the merit system. Mr. Kareen replied that the courts have disagreed about whether considering race for the purposes of meeting affirmative action goals was constitutional or not. In the Bakke case, Mr. Bakke won, but the court did say that race could be considered. Mr. Thayer added that whether a department uses the expanded certification is an individual departmental choice. If a supervisor has 10 employees who are all white males, then he may decide that for the next vacancy he will hire a woman or a minority person. He fills out a form and requests an expanded certification. He will get a person who is qualified to do the job, but not necessarily the most qualified person for that job.

Senator Eliason asked how frequently the departments evaluate the progress they are making on their affirmative action plans. Mr. Thayer replied that it depends on the individual department and the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity. For example, DOT has a large staff in their EEO section, and they provide information every month. Mr. Muller added that the EEO Division in the Department of Administration recently began to monitor the statistics closely. There may be a realistic problem in requiring that applicants from a protected class must be hired for some positions. There is also a question, however, of whether ranking on the register actually reveals an ability to perform the job. He added that there are two basic time periods to consider in looking at discrimination. The first is from the time of application to the time of hire. Once members of protected classes become state employees, then that's a separate area.

Senator Ray asked Mr. Chenoweth if he could provide the commission with a paper discussing his views on the compatability of minority hiring programs with the merit system in the constitution.

James Fisher, Director of the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity addressed the commission. Mr. Fisher explained that he is new to the EEO Division and that he is still learning what has been done, how it is done, and what the division's mission is. The division, under Administrative Order 59 of June, 1980, is to provide management assistance to the executive branch in affirmative action functions, in training functions, and in complaints procedures - to pick up errors in the system. Mr. Fisher said that he is contacting each commissioner of the state government departments to review their EEO systems and to learn how things are going.

Senator Ray asked whether there were any questions for Mr. Fisher. There were none. Senator Ray thanked Mr. Fisher for addressing the commission.

Senator Ray reviewed what the commission needs to do and suggested that one of the statistics it would be helpful to obtain is the percentage of Alaska Natives in the group of employees working in Range 16 and under. Mr. Kareen pointed out that in the information Senator Ray asked for, the Labor Trades and Crafts positions are not covered, since they are on a different salary schedule. Mr. Muller said that the state is in the process of developing statistical tools to track all employees by race, sex, and full employment history (whether they are promoted or not, for example). That statistical review is a year or two away from being operational, however.

Mr. Chenoweth suggested that perhaps the state should consider the diversity of its population. The difference between the state's approach to hiring and the Bureau of Indian Affairs' approach when each had positions in the Bush was that the BIA positions required ability to speak the local language in addition to English. Perhaps the state should consider requiring bilingual speakers for social service positions in the Bush. That would be one way of avoiding a direct consideration of race or ethnic background in hiring. Senator Ray pointed out that many of the social services positions in the rural areas have been eliminated because the state has contracted with Native Corporations to perform those services. Senator Ray asked the staff to check with the Department of Health and Social Services and the Division of Personnel on the number of state employees lost when those services were contracted out. Those positions may have previously been filled by minority group members and those employees may have remained on the job and become employees of the contractor instead of the state. Senator Ray recessed the meeting for lunch at 11:45 a.m.

Senator Ray reconvened the meeting at 1:35 p.m. and reviewed the memo on the status of the bills sponsored by the commission last legislative session. Terry Cramer advised the members that the Senate State Affairs Committee is holding a teleconference hearing in Anchorage on Monday, October 12th, to consider retirement bills.

Senator Ray asked Roger Thayer to review the memo concerning the Marine Highway System hiring procedures. Mr. Thayer explained that all applications for employment on the ferries are group scored and that hiring is done by groups. If there is an opening, then the division contacts all applicants whose scores fall in the top group. Those who respond are interviewed and the selection is made. When the top group has been exhausted, then hiring proceeds from the second group, and so on. However, it's getting harder to find work in the ferry system, and they are beginning a period of reduction in force, so there will be even fewer jobs.

Senator Ray asked why the division could not accept applications all year long. Mr. Thayer explained that there was a discrimination suit filed several years ago which resulted in an agreement that applications would be accepted only for a limited period which would occur before any selections were made. The divison advertizes in 32 newspapers around the state beginning in January of each year and accepts applications from February 15 to March 15. The applications are then graded and grouped and selection begins in late March or early April.

Mr. O'Claray asked whether they hired from any source other than those applications received during the "window period". Mr. Thayer replied that for entry level positions, those applications were the only ones considered. However, for higher level positions, the division accepts and considers applications received all year long. He added that the division has not hired an able bodied seaman from outside the system in two years.

Mr. O'Claray added that the most frequent complaint he hears is not being able to file an application until February. Senator Ray pointed out that the division's public image would improve if the application period were longer. Mr. Thayer indicated that he thought it might be possible to extend the period from 30 days to 60 days, but that he was uneasy at making it as long as 120 days. The reason for the limited period is to insure that all applications are processed before hiring starts.

Senator Ray asked whether there were any other matters before the commission. Ms. Cramer answered that the commission had received documentation from Betsy McGuire who had applied for a Project Coordinator, Range 18 position in Juneau. Initially, the Division of Personnel advised her that she did not meet the minimum qualifications. Ms. McGuire was successful in having the division staff review her application and her score is now 103.65. She submitted this material to the commission for its information.

Senator Eliason asked whether nonresidents make more money than residents on the ferry system. People in his area believe that they do. Mr. Thayer explained that nonresidents are paid less than residents, but that within the Marine Highway System there are two different salary scales - one for the Southeast Alaska ferries and one for those in Southwest Alaska. In Southeast, the monthly wage is based on 240 hours per month while in Southwest it is based on 182 hours per month. Nonresidents are also responsible for paying their own travel expenses to and from Alaska.

Mr. O'Claray suggested that someone from the Human Rights Commission be invited to the next Blue Ribbon Commission meeting and that they be asked to compare the number and kinds of complaints they receive from the public sector as contrasted with those they receive from the private sector.

Senator Ray asked Mr. Fisher whether the Division of EEO has any outstanding complaints on file. Mr. Fisher replied that there are complaints and that the division is in the process of getting a better handle on what has been filed against the state because of the Governor's requirement that all complaints be served on the EEO Division.

Senator Ray announced that the position of Vice Chairman of the commission is vacant and asked members to consider the question so that the position can be filled at the next meeting. He asked whether there was any objection to a meeting in Juneau around the 1st of November and then a public hearing on the issues before the commission in Anchorage about two weeks later. There was no objection. Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 2:10 p.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau, Alaska
February 11, 1981

MINUTES

Senator Bill Ray, chairman, called the meeting to order at 1:30 p.m. Roll call showed all members or alternates present except Don Fisher, Representative Buchholdt, Myrt Charney, Bruce Cummings, Senator Eliason, Greg O'Claray and Fred Muller. The commission began review of the draft of the report to the legislature. Mr. Cummings, Mr. O'Claray, Senator Eliason and Representative Buchholdt arrived.

During the discussion of Section 9, amending AS 39.25.120, page 12 of the report, Mr. O'Claray raised a question concerning the status of employees in the Division of Labor Relations. Mr. O'Claray asked whether those employees negotiate their own salaries. He suggested that it might be more appropriate to place them in the partially exempt service instead of in the classified service.

Mr. Cummings replied that recently those employees had petitioned the Labor Relations Agency to be removed from membership in the Confidential Employees Association. The petition was granted and they are now members of the classified service, but not members of any of the unions which represent state employees. Their salary schedule is the same as the schedule for partially exempt employees. There are 11 or 12 employees in the state who are in the classified service but not members of any collective bargaining unit.

Lynda McCurry added that CEA had released the employees from membership after studying their request. There is nothing to prevent those employees from petitioning the Labor Relations Agency at a later time to be placed back in the CEA membership.

Mr. Cummings pointed out that membership in the classified service insured that selections were made on the basis of merit and that there were some protections for the employees from arbitrary action.

Mr. O'Claray moved that AS 39.25.120 be amended to include the director, deputy director and all of the 12 employees in the Labor Relations Division of the Department of Administration. Discussion followed. Lynda McCurry pointed out that there are clerical employees included in the motion who remain members of the Confidential Employees Association. Their job duties do not directly involve them in negotiations for the state.

Frank Flavin said that the partially exempt and exempt services were created so that the administration can set and control its management policies. It is appropriate to expect that when there is a change in administration, there will be a change in the division to reflect the new administration's policies. Senator Ray added that collective bargaining negotiations are a sensitive and important area in which the administration should have full control over policies.

Bill Huston pointed out that if the employees were placed in the partially exempt service, persons selected would not have to meet the minimum qualifications as is now the case. Lois Jund added that leaving the positions in the classified service provides a career ladder for those individuals and makes the positions more attractive to qualified people.

Mr. O'Claray amended his motion to provide that the clerical employees who are presently members of CEA should remain in the classified service. Those employees who would be placed in the partially exempt service are: director, deputy director, personnel analysts II, labor relations analysts II, labor relations analysts I, senior negotiators, and research directors. A roll call vote was taken:

Yeas: Senator Bill Ray; Representative Thelma Buchholdt; Senator Dick Eliason; Frank Flavin; Representative Jack Fuller; Greg O'Claray; John Pugh; Cherie Shelley.

Nays: Bruce Cummings; Lois Jund; Lynda McCurry; Bill Huston.

Absent: Don Fisher; Myrt Charney; Fred Muller.

The motion carried.

Bruce Cummings suggested that paragraph (9) of AS 39.25.120 in section 9 of the bill be amended to more clearly state that additional special assistants may be created by the Personnel Board pursuant to AS 39.25.130. There was no objection to the change.

Frank Flavin pointed out a problem in section 13, AS 39.25.150-(17). The word "citizen" has been interpreted to exclude resident aliens. He suggested changing the word to provide for grievances from the general public. There was no objection.

Senator Ray suggested that an effective date of July 1, 1981 be added to the bill. There was no objection.

Senator Ray asked whether the commission favored adopting this part of the report and sponsoring the bill amending the State Personnel Act as amended in the meeting. Without objection, the motion carried.

The commission turned to consideration of the section of the report on the nepotism bill. Roger Thayer advised the membership of a problem in the present draft of the bill. Subsection (a) prohibits the hiring of someone related to the person doing the hiring. That prohibition could make it impossible to find employees to fill positions in the rural areas of the state. He suggested deleting the phrase referring to the person doing the hiring. Without objection, the motion carried.

The commission discussed the draft bill limiting the adjustment of retirement benefits and the section of the report concerning that bill. Lois Jund suggested that the report be redrafted to reflect the fact that there were many retired Alaskans in the situation described. There was no objection. There were no other changes proposed for that section of the report.

The commission reviewed the section of the report on the bill amending the membership of the Public Employees Retirement Board. There were no objections to its adoption.

The commission reviewed the section concerning the bill applying the Administrative Procedure Act to the adoption of regulations by the state retirement systems. There were no objections to its adoption.

The commission reviewed Chapter II of the report, concerning "Unresolved Personnel Issues". Senator Ray advised the commission that the legislature does not presently have a classification system for their employees. He indicated that he intended to suggest to the presiding officer of each house of the legislature that the Blue Ribbon Commission be delegated the task of drafting a uniform code for hiring and employment practices for the legislature. He added that he also intended to request that the commission be extended for another year. He asked whether there were any objections. There were none.

Senator Ray introduced Chief Buehler from Kotzebue who was a guest of the commission.

Senator Ray advised the commission of correspondence concerning credit for service in the state retirement systems. The Chief of Police of Seward wrote that he was not able to purchase three years of employment with the municipality into the state retirement system. Under the current law a police officer must work for the state for three years before he is eligible to purchase prior law enforcement time into the PERS.

Bruce Cummmings explained that originally the retirement law provided that the only extra time for which retirement credit would be given was for employment with the Territory of Alaska. That service was credited without charge to the employee after he or she had worked for the state for at least five years. The period of required employment was then shortened from five years to three and other kinds of service were added to the list.

Bill Huston added that the concern of law enforcement officers is that the work is for consecutive years, and yet some of the time counts toward retirement credit and some does not, depending on the agreement between the state and the municipality.

Senator Ray suggested that Bill Huston, Bruce Cummings and Terry Cramer investigate the question and consider whether there is merit in amending the statute. Bruce Cummings suggested that it would be more appropriate to include a referral to someone within the Division of Retirement and Benefits. Senator Ray directed the commission staff to pursue the matter.

Greg O'Claray raised an issue which had been brought to his attention. An individual has been a state employee for a number of years and is now placed in the position of losing seven years of retirement credit. He worked as a vessel employee on the state ferries. Then, in 1977, he was appointed to work as port captain. When that happened, he was no longer eligible to participate in the Taft-Hartley Trust Fund which is the retirement system for marine highway employees. At the time that he accepted the position onshore, he was assured by the Division Director of Retirement and Benefits and by Bill Hudson in the Division of Marine Transportation, that he would be able to transfer his period of service with the Taft-Hartley trust into the state retirement system. He therefore accepted the appointment at reduced pay with the understanding that his retirement benefits payments would continue. The Taft-Hartley trust requires 10 years of employment before a member is vested.

In fact the information which he was given was wrong, and he has now been told that he cannot receive credit with PERS for his period of employment on the ferries which was covered by the Taft-Hartley trust. He is left having to consider suing the state.

Senator Ray suggested that Greg O'Claray and any other interested members be constituted a subcommittee to call on Mr. Hudson to ask for his statement and report to the commission. Bruce Cummings pointed out that as a trustee on the NW Marine Highway Trust he has become familiar with the case. Commissioner Hudson does not dispute the facts. He advised the individual that he could transfer his Taft-Hartley service to the PERS system and that was an error. Mr. Cummings suggested that it might be appropriate to consider amending the PERS to allow time with any other retirement system to be credited with PERS under certain circumstances.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 2:45 p.m.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau, Alaska
January 8, 1981

MINUTES

Senator Bill Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order at 10:05 a.m. The commission began consideration of the draft bill on nepotism. Senator Ray asked for objections to the commission sponsoring the bill. It was noted that APEA had registered its objections to the bill at a previous commission meeting. Bill Huston pointed out that nepotism laws will prevent a child pursuing the same choice of career with the state as his or her parent. Sandra Withers suggested that the disadvantage of that limitation should be weighed against the alternative, which is the appearance of favoritism given whenever a close family member is employed in an office headed by another family member. Frank Flavin added that he would prefer to see the statute focus on the basis of the hire rather than on the existence of a relationship. Many of the complaints which the Ombudsman receives are based on relationships which are as close as marriage without there being any formal legal tie, rather than on a relationship which the draft bill would address. Senator Ray called for objections to the commission pursuing this bill. Doryce Eggleston, Frank Flavin and Bob Mourant objected.

The commission next considered the draft bill amending the State Personnel Act and discussed the bill section by section.

In Section 4, page 2, line 2, the amendment to existing law was deleted, leaving the line reading "authorized by this chapter".

In Section 7, page 3, line 21, the word "and" was changed to "or", to make the phrase read "temporary or special inquiry".

The commission discussed the section concerning procedures for amending the Personnel Rules, Section 11, which begins on page 7, line 9, and decided to delete the material on page 8, lines 15-28 and to amend the preceding paragraph by adding eligible lists, hours of work, and merit increases to the topics which are included within "matters of public policy".

AS 39.25.150(17). In Section 12, page 11, line 7, procedures for resolving citizen grievances were added to the topics which the rules should address by adding the word "citizen" between the words "employee" and "and".

In discussion of AS 39.25.150(21), Representative Fuller raised a problem which has occurred in the conversion of Fish and Game temporary positions to permanent seasonal positions. He provided commission members with background material and explained that for positions in the bush which used to be classified as temporary positions, the change to permanent seasonal has meant that many fewer local residents are qualifying for the jobs. Permanent seasonal positions must be hired from the registers, and many residents of the villages in question (Gambell, Savoonga, Diomede, and Shishmaref, for example) either are reluctant to apply at all, or else, because they do not have much formal education, do not score as well as college students when their applications are evaluated. As a result the Fish and Game Technicians I and III who are hired for monitoring marine mammal harvest and collecting biological specimens are more likely to be from Anchorage and Fairbanks than from the local area. This costs the state more because of transportation costs and the technicians spend a substantial period of time initially becoming familiar with the area, rather than being able to begin their substantive work immediately.

Mike McMullen pointed out that the requirement that employees be hired from the register cannot be waived for permanent seasonal positions, while it could be waived by the Division of Personnel if the positions were classified as nonpermanent. Frank Flavin added that block scoring would be appropriate, since to do the job well does not require technical knowledge. This kind of job classification would benefit from essentially a pass/fail application evalution system.

Senator Ray suggested that the commission authorize him to send a letter to the Governor, perhaps with copies to the Department of Fish and Game and to the Division of Personnel explaining the situation and encouraging the hiring of local residents for these positions. The letter might also be directed to Jerry Reinwand, the Governor's special assistant who had addressed the commission on personnel matters at an earlier commission meeting. There was no objection.

The commission continued review of the bill. In Section 14, AS 39.25.160(i), the word "unlawfully", page 14, line 25, was deleted.

In discussion of Section 15, beginning on page 14, line 28, questions were raised about whether employees who were hired in positions in the classified service only to have those positions transferred into the partially exempt or exempt service have any recourse. Members also asked whether the more routine positions which are presently in the exempt service or the partially exempt service are being transferred into the classified service. Senator Ray suggested that the commission write to Jerry Reinwand asking for a response to the latter question.

Frank Flavin noted that the present draft of the State Personnel Act does not set out a penalty clause. The present statute provides that violation of the Rules is a misdemeanor, but that is not an effective deterrent, since it is rarely enforced. Senator Ray suggested that discussion of the penalty clause should be reserved for future meetings of the commission.

In Section 18, AS 39.25.192, Senator Ray suggested that a state employee's right to make contributions to political candidates and campaigns be listed, since many state employees believe that they are denied this right under the present State Personnel Act. There was no objection. This ended discussion on the State Personnel Act amendments.

Senator Ray brought up recent correspondence to the commission from Donald E. Buehler, Chief of Police in Kotzebue. Chief Buehler has submitted his name for consideration for appointment to the Blue Ribbon Commission. However, since the membership on the commission is full, the commission decided that Chief Buehler should be invited to the next meeting as an observer.

The commission reviewed the draft bill on membership of the Public Employees Retirement Board. The draft dated December 30, 1980 was approved without objection.

The draft bill limiting the adjustment of retirement benefits was under consideration.

The commission considered the draft bill limiting the adjustment of retirement benefits. Lois Jund pointed out that the present draft would not significantly help in the cases about which the commission had initially been concerned. In those cases, the amount of overpayments had exceeded 10 per cent of the amount to which the retired person was actually entitled. Discussion followed. The commission agreed to delete AS 14.25.173(b)(3) page 1, lines 17-18, and AS 39.35.520(b)(4), page 1, lines 28-29.

The commission also decided to eliminate the phrase "which reduces benefits or" from page 1, lines 10 and 20 so that for future payments, retired persons will only be entitled to the correct amount of their payments. A question was raised concerning whether the phrase "credited service with the state" includes territorial service as well as employment after statehood. The commission decided that in order to benefit from the limitation on adjusting retirement benefits, retired people will have to meet all the requirements listed, and therefore decided to add the word "and" between paragraphs (1) and (2) of Section 1, page 1, line 14, and between paragraphs (2) and (3) of Section 2, page 1, line 25.

Paul Arnoldt, Director of the Division of Retirement and Benefits addressed the commission on the retirement bills. He began with a presentation on the bill requiring that the Public Employees Retirement Board comply with the Administrative Procedures Act in adopting future regulations. He pointed out that the intent of the APA is to insure that there is an opportunity for public comment before regulations are promulgated, to provide the Department of Law with an opportunity for review, and to insure that the Governor has input into regulations which are adopted. He indicated that these goals are met by the present system for adoption of regulations. The process of adopting regulations through the APA is involved and if those goals are met now, then it does not seem appropriate to change the system.

Mr. Arnoldt also pointed out that there is a nationwide trend for holding retirement board members personally responsible for their actions which began with the 1974 ARISA Act. It is appropriate therefore to provide the PERS board members with the tools which they will need to carry out their responsibilities. For example, last session, 10 retirement bills were combined and passed by the Legislature in the closing days of the session. These measures had to be implemented expeditiously. If the board had had to comply with the APA in adopting regulations to put the new laws into effect, then considerable time would have been lost. Lois Jund agreed that many agencies find the APA procedures cumbersome. Frank Flavin pointed out that the APA does provide for the adoption of emergency regulations for that situation.

Mr. Arnoldt continued with discussion of the bill affecting membership of the retirement board. He stated that the provisions of the bill were appropriate and he had no objection to the proposal.

On the adjustment of retirement benefits bill, Mr. Arnoldt stated that he agreed that any errors in retirement benefit payments should be found and corrected quickly, but that the two-year limit imposed by the bill was not really necessary. The appeals procedures presently in the law provide the retirement boards with an opportunity to act in consideration of the circumstances of the retired person and to provide an equitable solution to the error. Since the ARISA Act is imposing personal accountability on private sector retirement boards and since the federal government is expected to impose similar provisions on public sector retirement boards, the authority of the PERS board should not be decreased.

Senator Ray pointed out that while the retirement board has the authority to waive collection of overpayments, they can be quite slow to act. The retired person, who often has only the retirement income to live on, is put through considerable grief and uncertainty. Other procedures which do not put the retired person through that sort of experience should be developed to provide the retirement board with the information and control which it requires. Senator Ray was called away from the meeting and Don Fisher, Vice Chairman of the Commission, chaired the meeting.

Bill Huston suggested that in order to keep the retirement fund solvent, errors should be paid for out of the general fund rather than from the retirement contributions of members and employers. Frank Flavin pointed out that the ARISA provisions are aimed at penalizing board members for improper investments rather than for improper payment of benefits. Greg O'Claray replied that nonetheless, the board cannot sit as a fiduciary and condone improper payment of benefits. They would have to correct the payment and collect the improper back payment unless there were provisions to the contrary in the law. Mr. Arnoldt repeated that he felt that this bill would be taking a wrong turn in the direction of retirement legislation. The national trend is in the other direction. Frank Flavin pointed out that the bill does not take away any present powers, it just states that after two years, the board's power to act is limited. Mr. Fisher thanked Mr. Arnoldt for coming to the commission meeting and expressing his views.

Mr. Fisher asked the commission to consider when to schedule the next meeting. Wednesday, February 11 at 1:30 p.m. was selected. He adjourned the meeting at 3:40 p.m.

Since the conversion of our temporary help to permanent seasonal positions, we must now hire from a list of eligible applicants on a statewide register, rather than through local Employment Offices. The net result is that normally we must hire someone from outside of the area, as they will be on the top of the list of available applicants. As a result, we usually end up having to pay the individual travel from and back to Fairbanks or Anchorage and often have to provide a subsistence or per diem payment while on the job.

Some of the reasons this happens include:

1) Registers are usually open for recruitment for limited periods of the year.
2) The time an individual must apply to get on a register is often months away from the time the job will be available.
3) Most people indicate they will work anywhere in the State because they know most Technician jobs are of short duration during the summer, and it is an adventurous experience for them. They don't expect to take the same job more than once or twice.
4) College students are looking for these type jobs for the experience and money and they will almost always rate higher on the register than someone living say at Gambell, with limited education and work experience.

Some possible solutions include:

1) Some preference for hiring local residents.
2) More flexability in getting applicants rated and on registers, by allowing local Employment Offices to examine and rate applicants at the time jobs are actually being filled.
3) When it can be demonstrated that hiring a local resident will save the State money, measurably contribute to the success of the program, or provide a more efficient employee, that latitude be granted the employing agency.

Maybe an example will illustrate the problem. If we intended to place observers in Gambell, Savoonga Diomede, and Shishmaref to monitor marine mammal harvest and collect biological specimens this summer, here is what we would have to do. The positions would be Fish and Game Technicians I and III's and the registers are only open during December. So, during December we would have to try and contact individuals in those villages telling them to fill out State of Alaska employment applications, and be sure and turn them in for a job that won't start til May. As you know it is most likely that only a limited number of individuals in each village will actually fill them out and send in the application form. Also, anyone who happens to not get the word for whatever reason, but who would be available to work in the summer, obviously will not be on the register.

In April we ask for registers for the positions and find that there are over 100 names on the register, almost all from somewhere other than the four villages that we intend to station the positions. Even if there are individuals from the four villages, they will probably be rated much lower that several of the college students on the register, many of whom will take jobs if they are offered, So instead of hiring someone from the village, we have to hire someone out of Anchorage or Fairbanks, pay their travel to the job site and assist in locating housing for them. For the first two weeks they must spend most of their time getting to know the local hunters.

I should make it clear that I don't have anything against college students working for the Department as seasonal technicians, as they have proven to be exceptional employees, and they need the experience, not to mention money, to round out their education. There are simply some situations where local residents could be a decided advantage to the overall program.

In the past I've recommended hiring individuals in various villages, as part time Department employees to perform a variety of tasks such as, sealing furs, issuing harvest tickets, conducting subsistence surveys, recording harvest by village residents, be a contact person that residents of a village could go to for an explanation of regulations, or to voice their concerns about the effects of various Fish and Game regulations. However, I've backed off pushing the idea the last two budget submissions, because it is essential, for such a program to work, that I be able to hire residents of the individual villages.

There are several advantages to the individuals hired as permanent seasonal as opposed to the old temporaries, but the net result is that Fish and Game is less likely to hire someone from the local area now than we used to two years ago.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
State Capitol, Juneau, Alaska
November 3, 1981

MINUTES

Senator Ray, Chairman, called the meeting to order at 10:05 a.m. The roll call showed Ken Kareen, John Chenoweth, Representative Jack Fuller, Lois Jund, John Pugh, Cherie Shelley, Bill Huston, James Fisher, (alternate for Commissioner William Hudson) and Senator Bill Ray present. Myrt Charney, Senator Dick Eliason, and Greg O'Claray were absent. Also present were Roger Thayer, Robert Mourant, Darlene Livermore, and Dorothy Whitney.

Senator Ray opened the meeting by asking for public testimony. The first to testify was Niel Thomas, Director of the Alaska State Commission on Human Rights. Mr. Thomas addressed the question of how the number of employment discrimination complaints against the state compares with the number of complaints filed against private employers. He indicated that the information requested by the Blue Ribbon Commission was similar to the material that the Human Rights Commission developed recently at the request of the U. S. Civil Rights Commission. He distributed copies of a computer printout entitled "Total Statistics by Region", dated 10/17/81, R01-GGU-0001. Based on the information on the printout and handwritten information he had added to the sheet, he reported that of the 410 cases presently pending before the Human Rights Commission, 75 are cases involving the State of Alaska, which is 18.3% of the total. He added that the 18% could be misleading, since of the 75 cases involving the state, 24 of them raise one issue, which is now pending at the public hearing state. That issue is the state's classification of public health nurses when compared with physician's assistants. Treating those 24 cases as a single case, which he indicated gives a fairer representation of the situation, the proportion of cases filed with the Human Rights Commission against the state is 13.4%.

Mr. Thomas continued explaining the handwritten numbers on the printout. Of the 3172 employment cases filed with the Human Rights Commission since the beginning of 1975 or open on January 1, 1975, 321 have been cases against the state. Two years ago the Alaska Advisory Committee to the U. S. Civil Rights Commission requested similar information. As of August, 1978, the total number of cases filed was 2162, of which 200 involved the state as the employer. The percentage of the total then was 9.3% and now is 10.1%. He added that the statistics would seem to indicate that the Human Rights Commission is getting something of an upturn in business from the State of Alaska, but that he did not know whether a statistician would consider the increase significant.

When the Human Rights Commission was preparing information for the U. S. Civil Rights Commission, they asked the Department of Labor what proportion of the total nonfarm workers in the state were employed by state government. The answer was 8 or 9%. Therefore, in 1978, the state employed 8 or 9% of the workforce and was being complained of in 9% of the employment discrimination cases filed with the Human Rights Commission. Mr. Thomas indicated that he did not know whether the proportion of the workforce employed in state government had increased since 1978. If it hasn't, then it would appear that the Human Rights Commission is getting more business from the state than before. Mr. Thomas added that he was providing additional computer printouts to the Blue Ribbon Commission which together represent all of the cases (employment, housing and everything else) filed against the state since 1975.

In answer to a question from Senator Ray, Mr. Thomas stated that of all the discrimination cases filed, about 50% allege race discrimination. He added that he did not nave that percentage figured on the cases specifically filed against the state as an employer.

Mr. Thomas continued, addressing the question of what is discrimination. People customarily know that it's discrimination when someone is consciously out to get somebody saying, "I'm not going to hire this person because she is a female and women should not be doing this kind of work" or "we don't want minorities doing this work." This is overt discrimination and is only a small proportion of the cases which involve agencies or wind up in the courts. The majority of discrimination cases arise because a system of rules or a customary way of doing things works out to the detriment of a certain group of people. For example, suppose you believe that to be an effective police officer you need to be an imposing figure who commands respect. You therefore say that police officers must be over 6'6". The last thing that enters your mind is the effect of that rule, which would be to completely exclude women and to exclude most Asian people and most Alaska Natives, except possibly the Indian population. When you discover this unintentional result, you have to review the situation and come up with an alternative which still serves the legitimate purpose of the rule (hiring quality people) but which doesn't have that discriminatory effect.

One of the problems in dealing with discrimination questions is how to get data. Mr. Thomas continued using the example of the tall trooper. Suppose statistics for the Department of Public Safety as a whole indicate that 40% of the workforce is female. You might therefore conclude that the department is not liable to be sued in sex discrimination cases because women are well-represented in its workforce. However, perhaps if you had data by divisions within the department, you would discover that in hiring troopers there is a problem because there are no women. You also need that data by geography, in order to answer whether there is a problem in hiring in a particular office or location. Another kind of data which Mr. Thomas indicated it is extremely important to have is applicant flow data. It shows what happens to the applications as they are processed. In the tall trooper example, for instance, it might reveal that half the people who applied to be troopers are women but that none of those applications get past the review for height qualifications. Therefore, it would show that Public Safety did not need to increase its recruitment efforts but should reexamine the minimum qualifications for the position.

It is also useful to have availability data, which shows the numbers of people available for or interested in a particular type of work. You need that information when setting goals and percentages for each job-type. Without it, they are extremely difficult to set, and involve a certain amount of guesswork. Mr. Thomas indicated that Chuck LaViege, the counterpart to the Director of EEO in the state, has asked the Department of Labor for information to more fully develop figures on availability data. He urged the Blue Ribbon Commission to encourage the development of better population and availability data.

In answer to a question from Roger Thayer, Mr. Thomas indicated that the information provided in the computer printouts on employment discrimination against the state would indicate the types of employment discrimination: whether they arose in hiring practices, promotional practices or other situations. Senator Ray thanked Mr. Thomas for his testimony.

Dove Kull addressed the commission. She indicated that she was representing herself only, although she was a member of the Alaska Advisory Committee to the U. S. Civil Rights Commission and had represented the state at the annual planning and budget meeting. She indicated that, having lived longer than most others in the room, she had seen many changes, and noted that in 1980, the Ku Klux Klan rode for the first time in 75 years, and in the State of Connecticut, not in the South. She recently visited relatives in Mississippi and was amazed and a little frightened at the unleashing of old attitudes and beliefs. She noted that of President Reagan's appointments as reported in a June 18th document, 10% were women (38 out of 375), 4% were Hispanics (14) and 4% were Blacks (13).

She added that as a result of work she had done in the Aleutian Chain, she felt that people there were neglected and isolated. They have something to contribute. She felt that there was discrimination against dark-skinned people and pointed to the situation in the cannery workers union. Stereotyping limits the opportunities for women, too. Although she had heard one boss say that women cannot lift heavy objects, women do so all the time when raising children. She also felt that the canneries did not provide adequate day care.

Senator Ray asked for further public testimony. Florencio Q. Pax replied that he would prefer to testify in the afternoon. There was no other response.

The commission turned to consideration of the "Prisoner Profile Study" from the Division of Corrections, Department of Health & Social Services. Senator Ray asked Bill Huston to introduce it. Mr. Huston indicated that the profile is based on 100% of the prisoners of the State of Alaska on August 19, 1981. The purpose was to determine the kind of long-term facilities needed by the state and what kind of prisoners would be in prison when it opened in 1985. He reviewed the information gathered which indicates that 37% of the state's prisoners are between the ages of 20 and 24; that the highest percentage have a high school diploma and many have completed some college coursework. In 1967 the Criminal Justice Commission indicated that the average educational background for the nation's prisoners was between 8 and 9 years. The average at the correctional institution in Juneau is over 13. In addition, the average educational background of state prisoners housed with the Federal Bureau of Prisons (FBP) is even higher. Caucasians represent 54% of the state's prisoners, 9% are Black, 12% and 32% are Alaska Native, which includes American Indian (12%), Eskimo (18%) and Aleut (2%). This is twice as high as their representation in the general population, which is about 16%. Most prisoners had lived in the state at least three years before committing the crime for which they were incarcerated.

The largest category of prisoners is sentenced for a Class A felony (49%). Presumptive sentencing does not appear to have had an impact yet on the population statistics. Mr. Huston didn't expect that to show up for another few years. (Under presumptive sentencing, for the second or third felony conviction a person must serve the time sentenced, rather than being released on parole early.)

Of the crime classes, 62% of all felonies were considered violent offenses. However, that category was not defined to include property and sex offenses, so the percentage would increase where crimes in those categories which were committed with violence included. Of the state prisoners who are considered to have committed violent offenses, 43% are presently housed under the jurisdiction of the Federal Bureau of Prisons, and will be returning to the state as the FBP decreases its housing of state prisoners.

Bethel had the highest percentage of crimes in the villages. Mr. Huston suggested that this was probably because it is the hub of the Kuskokwim area which covers 85,000 square miles, with 56 villages and between 26,000 and 30,000 people.

He indicated that the report also addresses the current custody classification (maximum, close, medium or minimum) of the prison population, and rule infractions. It indicates that 150 prisoners out of the total population commit the majority of the infractions. He offered to provide Commission members with a tour of the facility if any were interested.

Mr. Huston discussed the Administrative Council which was set up at Lemon Creek following some unrest amoung the population. He indicated that he structured it differently from similar councils found elsewhere to insure representation from the whole population. He required that the prisoners write by-laws, but limited the topics which could be considered at the council to those matters which were not covered in the regulations, administrative law, departmental regulations, or in the Alaska Statutes. The council was to discuss the welfare of the community where they were at. It met about four times and then the members of the council lost interest.

In conclusion, Mr. Huston stated that there is no doubt that the state will need a new facility in 1985, and that close custody inmates will make up the majority of its population. There will also need to be provisions in the facility for some maximum custody prisoners. A discussion of parole followed.

John Pugh pointed out that while 32% of the prison population is Alaska Native, they make up only 16-17% of the total state population. He indicated that there is a new prison facility which will open in Nome in two years, and that there are a number of Alaska Natives willing to work in it. The state should be encouraged to train and provide employment opportunities for them. Representative Fuller added that attitudes in the Bush are changing. One of the best things that has happened in that regard is the Village Safety Office program. Instead of sending in a trooper or having the school teacher serve as authority figure, the program enables villagers to take responsibility for themselves in these matters. Mr. Huston indicated that cultural traditions could make it more difficult for Native people to be as aggressive as is required in correctional work.

Mr. Pugh suggested that with the reduction in federal money, and particularly federal money to Native corporations, there needs to be an increase in training programs to develop opportunities for state employment. Senator Ray pointed out that contracting with Native Corporations for services may provide a bridge between the cultures. Representative Fuller added that contracting would provide a mechanism for training in both the skills required and in cultural differences. Mr. Pugh pointed out that it would be an advantage to the state to train local individuals to fill positions in rural Alaska, since there is a large turnover in people brought in from outside to fill those positions. Often rural Alaskans don't know of employment opportunities and therefore don't apply.

The commission turned to a discussion of the difference between a pure merit system of employment and implementing affirmative action plans. James Fisher said that affirmative action plans permit a temporary variance of the merit selection system to overcome past difficulties. Lois Jund pointed out that although the commission hearings were extensively advertised few people had appeared to testify. Many people were probably afraid to come forward. She suggested that more people might speak out if the meeting were held on a weekend or if people were invited to provide written testimony and assured that the commission would hold their identities confidential. She cited figures from page 36 of the 1979 Human Rights Commission report which show that 18% of the state's minority employees held jobs classified as range 15 or above in April 1978 which rose to 22.8% in January of 1980, while 44% of the state's white employees held positions range 15 or above positions in April 1978, and 44.5% did in January, 1980. Similarly, in 1978, 18% of the state's female employees were in positions at range 15 or above, which increased to 20.6% in 1980. During these same periods, 74.8% of the state's male employees were in jobs classified as range 15 or above in 1978, while in 1980, 75.1% were.

Darlene Livermore pointed out that any complaint about discrimination is difficult to keep secret, since to resolve it, the Human Rights Commission must discuss it with the employer. Mr. Huston added that the Blue Ribbon Commission should consider a Saturday meeting, since any employee wishing to appear would be conspicuous in his or her absence from work otherwise.

Senator Ray asked members whether they had ever received confidential inquiries because of their participation in the commission. Lynda McCurry indicated that several women have spoken with her about being considered but not hired for promotional opportunities. Typically, they were within the top five on the register for the positions involved, and the individual selected was lower on the register than they were. It appears that there may be an "old boys" network, but it is difficult to resolve whether there is discrimination or not.

Mr. Huston suggested that the commission consider recommending a review of departmental and divisional registers to discover criteria which might unintentionally operate to discriminate. Many policies have existed since statehood without anyone questioning them.

Mr. Thayer explained, in answer to another question, that each annual personnel evaluation of a supervisory state employee is supposed to contain a rating on how well that employee is carrying out the department's affirmative action plan. However, he has never seen anyone comment in writing about that factor. Mr. Fisher commented that the Division of EEO is working with the departments on their affirmative action plans. Most have only been in effect for one year. They are presently being revised. The division is also putting out a package of information to encourage affirmative action committees in the departments to use the teleconference network to supplement their meetings, to enhance awareness and for training. He added that he senses a momentum in the EEO division, which was established in the fall of 1978. He hoped it would continue to encourage cooperative activities, to help with preparing the affirmative action plans, with training, and with increasing the awareness within state government.

Lois Jund asked whether the state has a positive recruitment program to help minority persons get on the registers, to encourage them to apply for positions and to advise them of what might be available. Ken Kareen answered that the Division of Personnel has no real outreach recruitment of any kind. The departments do whatever is done. The division does respond to requests for participation in public programs more often if it appears that the audience will be composed of women or minority group members.

John Pugh pointed out one positive note in that area. The Nome Youth Center will be opening in December. The Department of Health and Social Services with the cooperation of the Division of Personnel recruited extensively to encourage residents in Nome to get on the register. Instead of the usual practice of scoring the tests first and then holding oral exams, they took all of the applicants through the orals and then gave the written exams. However, this kind of change from the normal way of handling applications needs to be planned for well in advance. The department began seven or eight months prior to the time that they knew the facility would be opened. The Division of Personnel has become much more willing in the last few years to work with the departments, despite being inundated with general applications for employment. He suggested that the commission recommend to the departments that to work with the Division of Personnel to come up with creative solutions to the problem of getting minorities on the registers.

Roger Thayer added that most villages now have cable TV. The Department of Transportation uses those scanners to provide information about job openings. Lynda McCurry added that additional resources are available through the Job Service Offices of the Department of Labor.

The commission recessed at 11:55 p.m.

Senator Ray reconvened the meeting at 1:35 p.m. and asked for public testimony.

Florencio Q. Pax addressed the commission. He indicated that he was born in the Philippines and was educated under an American educational system, graduating with an accounting major and later passing the Philippine bar examination. He worked for the government as a quasi-judical hearing officer for six years and had also worked for 23 years in the accounting field. He served during World War II with American forces in the Philippines but chose not to come to the United States at the end of the war. He recently immigrated to the United States because his wife's family had moved here. He introduced Mrs. Pax to the commission.

Mr. Pax told the commission that Aaron Isaac suggested to him that he apply for the position of the director of the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity. However, Mr. Pax had never seen the vacancy advertised. Senator Ray asked James Fisher, the new director of that division, to let Mr. Pax know why there had been no advertising. Mr. Pax also indicated that he had been a finalist for the Executive Director of the Anchorage Equal Rights Commission. Although he was not finally selected for the post, he did not quarrel with that. However, he was also a finalist for the position of Affirmative Action Officer for the University of Alaska, Juneau. Another finalist for that position told him that the person finally selected was less qualified than she was, and suggested that Mr. Pax should take steps to challenge the appointment.

Mr. Pax indicated that he had reviewed the United States Constitution, and the constitutional provision of the State of Alaska as well as the State Personnel Act, various civil rights provisions, Executive Orders and the equal employment opportunity provisions in the Code of Federal Regulations. He said that he felt that there are adequate provisions of law in this area and that the problem lies in the effective implementation of those provisions. He suggested that there should be a continuing educational process so that the goals can be effectively met.

On the question of why individuals do not come forward to testify at hearings such as the present one, Mr. Pax suggested that there are a number of reasons. First, there is fear of reprisal. Also, others had suggested to Mr. Pax that individuals do not come before a group composed of white persons to complain about the actions of a white supervisor because they believe that they will not be successful. Mr. Pax added that he does not share this belief. Mrs. Pax also suggested to him that it might be helpful to educate people about the importance of the subject, to encourage them to speak out.

Mr. Pax stated that he has been placed on three registers with the state: executive director of Wage and Hour Officer, as a loan examiner and as a regulations specialist. There were a number of job classes for which he was found not to qualify because the Division of Personnel did not consider his education in the Philippines to satisfy the requirement of graduation from an accredited college or university. Mr. Pax stated that his education had been in the American system and that he is familiar with the curriculum in accounting at the University of Alaska and it is practically the same as the education he received in the Philippines. He also was not credited with his 23 years work experience in the field.

Mr. Pax advised the commission that he and his wife participated in a one-month orientation program when they were first hired by the Seattle Public School District. All persons newly hired were required to take the course which provided information on cultural and ethnic backgrounds as well as topics such as effective communications, office skills, first aid and transportation. He reported that there has been a decision by the U.S. District Court in Oklahoma declaring that a Filipino accent could not be grounds for firing an employee. The case was Karinio (?) vs. University of Oklahoma.

Mr. Pax suggested that there should be separate affirmative action goals for women and for minority persons, and that hiring women should not satisfy the goal for employment of minority persons. He added that he opposes reverse discrimination against whites. In order to meet EEO goals, Mr. Pax suggested that the recruitment system should be computerized to monitor applicants and employees so that it is possible to follow an individual through the application process into the employment history. It should show, for example, whether advanced training for an employee was appropriate and whether he was eligible for promotion. He added that a supervisor should be dutybound to recommend training for a woman or minority person who is qualified for it in order to encourage the promotion of these protected classes.

Mr. Pax concluded his testimony by offering to assist the commission in any capacity, whether as a volunteer or as an employee. Senator Ray thanked him for his testimony and asked whether any commission members wished to ask questions.

In answer to a question from Lois Jund, Mr. Pax indicated that he believed that minority persons might be more likely to bring their problems to the commission if its membership included minority persons or if there were an intake officer who was a minority person. As an example of what he was suggesting, he pointed out that the Anchorage Equal Rights Commission is composed of nine members, with representation from whites, blacks, Native Alaskans, the Filipino community, and Chicanos or those of Spanish origin, and contains both male and female members.

Verneelia Randall addressed the commission. She has worked for the state for four years, first as a Public Health Nurse and now as the Maternal Child Nurse Coordinator. She is also chairperson for the Department of Health & Social Services EEO Committee. She addressed the commission as a private citizen.

In answer to why so few people chose to speak before the commission, she related reasons given to her by other state employees. These included questioning how many women and minorities would make up the membership on the commission, whether commission members would hold positions of power which could lead to real changes, and the fact that they would have to take annual leave in order to testify. Senator Ray advised Ms. Randall that it is not necessary for state employees to take annual leave to appear before the commission. He indicated that membership on the commission includes the Commissioner of Administration, the Director of the Division of Personnel, representatives of employee unions, the Ombudsman and public members in addition to legislators.

Ms. Randall said that there are two kinds of discriminatory problems, those created by societal habits and those which arise from individual discrimination. Societal problems develop from a system which has not been changed in 30 or 40 years and which have an inadvertent discriminatory effect. Once it is in place, the system tends to resist change, rather than being open to solving the problems which it creates. She gave as an example her own situation. She has a bachelor's degree, a masters, is working on a master's in public health and intends to pursue a Ph.D. in health policy and management. Even then, she will not be eligible for the position of health officer because she is not a doctor, a dentist or a veterinarian. Those requirements were created years ago and may have been appropriate for the position then, but the department has not reviewed them since, even though the health education field has changed significantly.

Ms. Randall criticized testing and experience ratings of applications and pointed out that they work against women and minorities. Tests are culturally based and test a person's ability to take tests more than ability for a job. Experience requirements work against those who have had less opportunity to work. Anyone can learn to take a test and can therefore pass a test. The opposite is also true. For example, until an instructor worked with her on test-taking, she nearly flunked out of nursing school, despite knowing the material thoroughly. After learning how to take tests, she now does well on them. Because of these problems with tests and experience requirements, the registers work against people from different cultural backgrounds. If they appear at all, they are likely to be low on the registers.

Ms. Randall told the commission that the Governor had recently authorized a new register system in which the names of the top five applicants plus the names of the top five from a protected class are shown for those job classes in which women or minorities are underutilized. The problem with this approach is that it is voluntary. The recruiting agency should be required to hire from an affirmative action register for positions in underutilized job classes.

There is a second type of discrimination -- individual discrimination. It may be either conscious or subconscious. Ms. Randall stated that everyone is racist either consciously or subconsciously. Until we recognize that and work to change it, the implementation of any affirmative action policy will not happen on a regular, consistent basis.

Ms. Randall advised the commission of DHSS statistics on minority and women hires. She suggested that DHSS is one of the best departments because women and minority persons are most likely to be either nurses or social workers or office clerks, and DHSS hires a lot of all of those job classes. The figures are based on the department's EEO plan, which identifies the availability of minorities and women for state employment, as compared to the actual employment.

	Female	Minority
Availability of office clerks	79%	21.1%
Employment by the department	90.3%	17.8%
Availability of officials & administrators	44%	19.3%
Employment by the department	26.7%	11.3%

There is a significant difference between the available market and what is actually happening, even if the figures are off by 5%. Ms. Randall recommended that the state use computers to identify underutilized job classes. When a department requests a register in one of the identified classes, they should get an affirmative action register, whether they wanted it or not. A supervisor should have to justify not hiring a woman or minority person for a vacancy if any appeared on the register. The present system requires the supervisor to justify hiring from below the top five even when hiring for job clases in which minorities or women have been shown to be underutilizied.

Ms. Randall acknowledged that this system would be reverse discrimination but pointed out that when you have a relay race and one team started the race 15 minutes after you did, then you cannot expect them to win the race unless you provide some catch-up time. In our society women and minorities began well after the race was underway, and only those minorities and women who are far above the exception even get into the running. You cannot have equal opportunity until society provides women and minorities a chance to catch up.

Ms. Randall said that she had a personal concern for Alaska. It is unfair to group Alaska Natives with other minorities. Alaska is a state of immigration and many minorities who are highly qualified choose to come here. Statistics show that Native Alaskans, who were here first, get drowned out by blacks, Filipinos and Chicanos who immigrated. While 11.3% of the officials and administrators may be minority, 0% may be Alaska Native. Ms. Randall recommended that in underutilization figures, Alaska Natives should be broken out to insure that they have fair representation and that immigrants not be allowed to take the jobs that they would have had.

Ms. Randall shared another area of concern: that of upward mobility. One problem is the opportunity for training. DHSS provides individual training contracts for its employees. An employee can go to the agency and say "here's a course which relates to my job and will give me added skills and I want to take it." If the agency agrees, it will cover the costs provided the employee signs a contract to remain on the job for a specified length of time. Last year, DHSS had 85 such contracts. There are 71 officials and administrators in the department. Of those, 20% had individual training contracts, while only 4% of the office clerks (who number 421) had them. In answer to a question from Lois Jund, Ms. Randall indicated that she did not know how many applications had been filed for training. She did show that 79% of the officials went out-of-state for their training. None of the office clerks went out-of-state. It's the office clerks who need the training for promotional opportunities. To have affirmative action, the state has to provide opportunities for upward mobility. Therefore, training funds should be part of every budget and there should be some system to insure that a fair portion of those funds reach those on the bottom. If 60% of a department's workforce is classed as officer clerks, then 60% of those employees should be getting training.

Senator Ray pointed out that the legislative finance committees have been reluctant to pay for on-the-job training. The legislators feel that there are requirements which employees should meet before getting the job. The state should not have to pay for it. Therefore, a good share of the inservice training money gets cut from the budget. It's an area which has been abused and is still abused. Ms. Randall replied that it is short-sighted to cut training funds. Recruiting and orienting new employees is more expensive than training existing employees who have proven themselves to be loyal to the state and who will stay in the job for a longer time.

A second difficulty in providing upward mobility is that supervisors may discourage their employees from seeking promotions. If that attitude is to change, it must start at the top. She gave as an example her own promotion to her present position. Her supervisor discouraged her, saying that she wouldn't be able to do the work, and the position was vacant for a whole year.

Ms. Randall agreed with Mr. Pax's recommendations that goals for employment of women and minorities should not be grouped together. Women have different problems and circumstances from those of minorities. Problems women face arise in part from the traditional employment system which is based on the employment of men who could work knowing that their families would be cared for by their wives. That is no longer the case. Single parent families are now prevalent and two-working-parent families are a fact of life. Any employer, whether private or public, will have to recognize that the traditional system of hours of work, work days, and annual leave, was made up for the traditional family system. Day care is necessary for even two-parent working families. The employer should be responsive to that need, although the employee should expect to pay for the care provided. In addition, employers should be sensitive to the needs of working parents. For example, Ms. Randall suggested that women be allowed to take annual leave, sick leave, or leave without pay in order to breast feed children while working. This kind of small accommodation could make a family's life much easier and also free an employee to put more energy into the job.

In closing, Ms. Randall said that any program which is developed must have teeth in order to be effective, especially for those who are low on the pole.

Senator Ray asked whether Ms. Randall had been discriminated against in working for the state because she is a black. She replied that it is hard for a non-minority or a male to understand. It is not that there is clear discrimination, but little things happen. For example, when there is a question in her section, people who are above her will first go to the man who is under her and ask him. If he is not available, they will go to the white woman who is not even in her section and ask her. The end result is that those who have been asked come to Ms. Randall for the answer. Ms. Randall indicated that it is probably because of conscious or subconscious racism. In answer to another question, Ms. Randall indicated that whether the motivation is a personal, individual dislike or racism or sexism, the end result is the same. The cause does not matter. The end result for her as a woman and a black, is discrimination. Senator Ray thanked Ms. Randall for her testimony before the commission.

Brenda Randall-Sadek addressed the commission. She is an Accounting Clerk III for the Department of Transportation and has worked for the state for a year in December without promotion. She first spoke of applying for a position with the Juneau office of the Human Rights Commission. There was a vacancy for an entry level, trainee position which she saw advertised. It required a high school degree, and she has graduated from college. She applied, but received no response. The position was advertised two more times and each time she applied. Only after she went to the office did she receive a letter telling her that she was not qualified for the position.

In the time that she has worked for DOT, Ms. Randall-Sadek said that she has asked to take the state accounting course three times. Her requests have been both oral and in written memos. Although she wrote that she intended to stay with the department and hoped to be promoted into a position which would require the knowledge the course offered, the only reply she received was written on the bottom of her memo saying "we do send people when we feel that it is related."

Ms. Randall-Sadek said that she had worked at three different clerk desks in the department. When she was in the research section, she learned that her supervisor planned to hire a Tech I. She was planning to leave that section and her supervisor did not want her to leave. He said she was a good worker and encouraged her to stay in the section. However, he did not hire her for the Tech I position, explaining that she was too low on the register. The person who was hired had worked for the department for less time than she had and was a white male. Ms. Randall-Sadek told the supervisor that Tech I's are under-utilized class and he could have hired her if he had wanted to. Furthermore, in her time with DOT she has seen them hold registers for people who they want to hire and justify hiring anyone they want regardless of where they were on the register.

In the time that she has been with DOT, Ms. Randall-Sadek said that the only other minorities she has seen are Filipinos. She asked several people how long they had worked for the department and found that the three or four white people who had been with the department from four to six years all were at the Tech III or Accounting I levels. She knows of two Filipinos who do excellent work and have been with the department for more than five years, but who are still at the Accounting Tech I level.

Ms. Randall-Sadek agreed with Verneelia Randall on the register system and test-taking. Test resultsdepend on your abilities to take tests. However, she said that if that is the system the state is going to use, then they should stick by it, instead of waiting for the people they want to get on the register. Ms. McCurry added that as a personnel officer she calls the tactics Ms. Randall-Sadek mentioned "crafty techniques". All of them are legal. She suggested that the commission should zero in on these practices and fix them. She added that DOT could have called for departmental promotional lists to fill the Tech I position and that probably Ms. Randall-Sadek would have placed well on that register. A second thing at DOT could have done was use the Five-Plus-Five register and gone below the top five to select her. Ms. Randall-Sadek pointed out that DOT cannot use those registers because their EEO plan has not been accepted yet.

Mr. Thayer asked Ms. Randall-Sadek to provide him with copies of her requests to take the training course and added that it is the practice of DOT to use promotional registers. He indicated that he planned to do some checking on the situation.

Senator Ray asked whether Ms. Randall-Sadek's experiences resulted from discrimination against her because of her race or sex rather than being a situation where the supervisor was hiring a friend regardless of who the other people applying for the job were. She replied that the system seems to work most against the blacks and Filipinos and Indians. Verneelia Randall added that when the system breaks down like this, then white people get caught in it but black people, Indians, Filipinos, minorities get caught in it more. The end result of the race is that since women and minorities are 15 minutes behind to begin with, then when 10 more minutes are added to everyone's time, it makes them 25 minutes behind.

Ms. Jund suggested that the situation might have been better handled if the state's policy were to always provide an EEO register for any vacancy in a job class where underutilization had been shown. The supervisor would have to justify not hiring from that register. This would put it in the proper persepective and get away from the game of crafty techniques.

Senator Ray added that he hoped more people would come to tesity and that if anyone used an appearance in front of this commission to discriminate against a witness, that he wanted to know about it because the commission and the Governor would not tolerate that.

Mr. Pax suggested that the state should enforce laws which provide that the state as grantor to political subdivisions can withdraw funding from any grantee who violates anti-discrimination laws. Senator Ray said that he would ask the Legislative Affairs Legal Division to research the area to insure that the laws in effect were adequate.

Ms. Jund suggested that the commission propose legislative intent to insure that any training funds are used proportionately to categories of people to enhance upward mobility. Senator Ray replied that legislative intent is not enforceable and that the language could be put into a statute. He added that he expected that the departments would resist the suggestion. The commissioners would come before the legislative committee and say that where they really needed training funds is for the specialized classes.

Brenda Knapp, a planner with the Central Council of Tlingit-Haida Indian Tribes of Alaska addressed the commission. She indicated that the council would be submitting testimony in written form to the commission and that she wanted to share the introduction now.

Sealaska Advisory Committee to the United States Commission on Civil Rights produced a report and initiated a series of open meetings in the fall of 1978, including a meeting in Juneau on 11 September, 1978 and the findings of the Alaska Advisory Committee were published in July, 1980. To date, a great deal of effort has been made to correct and improve the employment representation of Alaska Natives and other minorities in state government. Reports have been filed, plans developed, responsibilities pinpointed, roles clarified, data systems implemented, policy expounded and the Blue Ribbon Commission established.

In April, 1978, Native people held 518 jobs in state government. This figure represented 5.4% of the total state government workforce. Today, November 3, 1981, 3-1/2 years later, according to figures just released by this commission, Native people hold 5.4% of jobs in state government workforce. There has been a rise in actual numbers that went from 518 to 694, but the percent of the total state government jobs has not changed, 5.4%.

In other words, despite all of the talks, meetings, reports, plans, commissions, etc., which have taken place during the past 3-1/2 years, Native people in Alaska have not improved their representation in the workforce of state government. Although 16% of the state's population is Native, less than 6% of the jobs in state government are held by Native people. Most of these jobs are, as everyone knows, concentrated in the clerical, craft and paraprofessional categories. Very few professional and management positions are held by Native people. The underrepresentation and underutilization of Native people affects most job categories and departments of state government. In fact, in nine of the 15 departments of the Executive Branch of state government, the representation of Alaska Native people has declined between April '78 and September '81. Of the remaining six departments, four increased the representation that Native people by less than 1% over earlier figures. Two departments, Community & Regional Affairs and Natural Resources appear to have made substantial gains. But, we have no information as to what really resulted in these gains.

It would appear that the commitment so clearly stated in Administrative Order No. 59 as expressing the equal employment policy of the executive branch of state government needs to be more forcefully and imaginatively translated into action. The actions of the past 3-1/2 years have provided necessary and useful mechanisms to help state government recruit, select, hire, promote and retain minorities in state employment. The expanded certification policy is a particularly useful step in bringing qualified Native people to the attention of hiring departments. But we believe that what has been accomplished to date, represent only the first few steps in an overall plan that must produce results in numbers, rather than intentions.

Senator Ray asked Ms. Knapp whether she knew how many state jobs had been contracted out to Native Corporations. These positions would therefore no longer show up in state employment figures and would probably have been held largely by Native Alaskans. Therefore, the number of Native state employees would have decreased, although the number of employed Natives would not have. Ms. Knapp replied that she did not know. However, she pointed out that since the jobs are no longer part of any of the figures on state employment, that she did not consider them relevant to this question. Of the remaining positions, the state should have been able to do better than maintain 5.4% Alaska Natives over the last three years. Good intentions are not translating into action. She pointed out that many Native people were working under CETA positions and that these programs are being eliminated as a result of the current economic trend. These trainees are available for employment.

In answer to another question from Senator Ray, Ms. Knapp said that she did not know whether the number of Native Alaskans who are applying for state jobs has increased or decreased since 1978, but that there are a significatnt number of Native people who are now unemployed and who would like to work. If their number has substantially decreased on state registers, then the important question is "why". Senator Ray agree and said that what the commission is trying to discover is whether there is a discriminatory attitude or whether there is some other problem. Ms. Knapp pointed out that the Native Corporations are able to find, recruit and employ qualified Native people. The state government should also be able to do that. She indicated that the written testimony which the council will provide will include specific recommendations on what the state might do to improve opportunities for Native Alaskans.

Senator Ray thanked Ms. Knapp for testifying.

Mary Lisack, Affirmative Action Officer for the University of Alaska, Juneau, addressed the commission. She reported that the University has been under a compliance review by the federal government since the early 1970's. If it does not show progress in affirmative action, it will lose its federal funding. The University's Affirmative Action Office is under top management rather than part of the personnel office. Her responsibility is to monitor and ensure compliance with affirmative actions plans and employment opportunities. One of the ways in which the University tries to eliminate discrimination is through ensuring that job qualifications are job related. The affirmative action officer has to approve all job qualifications for positions open at the University. The qualifications must be job related. For example, there is no reason that a secretary has to have graduated from high school to do the work. For a large portion of jobs, the qualifications are simply knowledge, skills and ability sufficient to perform the duties of the job. For example, if one of the duties is budgeting, the University will consider that handling a household budget demonstrates the person has the skill to handle that portion of the job.

The University maintains flow charts for every protected group person who applies for a job. The rejection of that person has to be justified on the flow chart. All hiring has to be approved by the Affirmative Action Officer to ensure that the selection process has not been discriminatory. According to the University Affirmative Action Plan, preference is given to members of protected groups wherever applicants are equally qualified.

This year for the first time, the University has funds for staff development. It has earmarked a portion of those funds for training for protected persons, in order to better attract, retain and promote them.

Ms. Lisack pointed out that you can't successfully force affirmative action on a hiring authority. Where a hiring authority, with the agreement of others in the office, has selected a non-protected person, the Affirmative Action Officer cannot require that a protected person be hired. The other employees in the office will say that the only reason for the hire was because of the person's race. The protected person will be made to feel extremely uncomfortable and will probably terminate early. Hiring authorities and co-workers need to be educated. The University does not hire unqualified people. But supervisors need to be trained in how to deal with these situations, how to work with the people they supervise, how to train them to deal with cultural barriers that exist. One hiring authority complained to her about a minority person who had been hired, saying that she could not do the work. But that was not the problem. When Ms. Lisack went to the office at lunch, everyone went out together leaving the protected person sitting there. The hiring authority made no effort to correct the situation. Instead they said that the person could not function.

In answer to a question from Mr. Huston, Ms. Lisack explained that the University testing is done by reviewing written applications and then interviewing the applicants. They also give typing tests where production typing is required.

Senator Ray thanked Ms. Lisack for her testimony.

A woman in the audience asked about hiring the handicapped. She asked whether the statistics in the commission memos included handicapped in the "Other" category. Ms. Cramer replied that the memo was addressed only to the racial make-up of the state workforce.

Ms. Randall pointed out that there is a problem in getting handicapped state employees to speak out. She conducted a voluntary survey and asked handicapped employees to identify any concerns they had. Few of the questionnaires were returned, and most of those said that there were no problems. Ms. Randall indicated that she suspected that handicapped individuals have a harder time and are more reluctant to identify themselves. For example, if handicapped individuals are to work at their highest capacity, they should be provided with desks and other equipment which best meets their needs. Handicapped individuals are not seen in state employment, particularly where their employment would require a change in the office environment. Perhaps the commission should try to find out why they are not there.

Senator Ray pointed out that in all the time that the commission has been in existence, there has not been one complaint from anyone representing handicapped people. John Pugh added that the Governor's Special Commission on Hiring the Handicapped is a very active group and does a very good job addressing this problem. For the Blue Ribbon Commission to look at the area would be an unnecessary duplication. Ken Kareen point out that the Division of Vocational Rehabilitation has counselors who look for job opportunities for handicapped people, either with the state or with private employers. For a position with the state, the counselor can make the referral, the person can be hired as a provisional employee and after four months on the job they can be made permanent. Ms. Jund added that Vocational Rehabilitation also provides training. Another woman asked for a definition of handicapped and wondered why alcohol and drug abuse has been added to it. Mr. Fisher responded that they have been added. The Department of Natural Resources received an award from the Governor's Council for placement of 25 handicapped persons with 80% retention since January, 1981.

Senator Ray pointed out that the Constitution of the State of Alaska provides for a merit system. The state government is supposed to employ people according to their merits. Wages and fringe benefits are attractice and many of the top class of workers in the state are applying for state jobs. The state should get the best employees they can for the money they spend. That's the way a merit system works. He added that those handicapped persons he has been associated with were the most accommodating people and the best workers. The supervisor will recognize the capabilities of the person and provide the equipment that they need.

The woman indicated that she still had a problem with the definition of handicapped. Mr. Kareen indicated that Vocational Rehabilitation uses federal guidelines because so much of their funding comes from the federal government. Senator Ray added that the legislature tried to prepare legislation to provide for free ferry rides for senior citizens and handicapped individuals, but the word "handicapped" was so hard to define to insure that it included those who should be included, but to exclude those not genuinely handicapped, that they had to give up. They have worked on the problem over the interim and developed another definition which will probably be closely examined next session.

Senator Ray asked the commission whether they wanted to hold an election for the vice chairman's seat. Mr. Huston moved that the matter be held over to a later date. The motion passed without objection.

Senator Ray adjourned the meeting at 4:20 p.m.

Testimony of
FLORENCIO Q. PAX
at the
Blue Ribbon Commission of the State Personnel Act
Meeting
November 3, 1981

With the permission of the Chairman and the honorable members of the Blue Ribbon Commission. At the outset I would like to express my sincere thanks for the opportunity extended by your humble letter of invitation from the Commission to express or articulate some problems which although I am new in town is also of concern for me and my family in which I think also would affect also the community in this area. So before I begin, Mr. Chairman, this representation is Florencio Q. Pax. My ethnic background is I was born in the Philippines, I was educated under a American educational system. I finished college as accounting as my major and later on I finished law of the Philippine bar examination and started practicing law since 1964. I served in the Philippine Government under various capacities as a quasi-judicial hearing officer for six years whose duties and functions are similar in some ways of that of the duties and functions of the Commissioner of Natural Resources here in the State of Alaska. I brought along with me my wife who doesn't look, probably, Filipino but looks more of an Indian. Mrs. Pax please stand up.

Senator Ray: Welcome.

Pax: And, four intelligent children, two boys and two girls, who are in the Juneau School District, my two boys are in the senior class 15 and 16 years old and two younger girls, that maybe ....

I also served under the United States Armed Forces during the Second World War, first as an ammunition carrier as a boy, the youngest probably that ever went to the firing line. And later on I was transferred to be an officers' messboy until the Japanese surrendered during the Second World War. And when the outfit disbanded in Manila I had to return home instead of coming over with some American officers who wanted to bring me over to the United States. So, it was farthest from my thought to come over to the United States as an immigrant. Maybe the reason why I came over was because my wife applied as an immigrant in 1969, she being the oldest daughter of an American citizen who was a Filipino but served in the United States Armed Forces and became a citizen immediately after the war. So my wife wanted to follow the brothers and sister over to the United States. Right now she is the only one who is not a citizen and that holds true with me and my four kids. So we have to establish the residence requirement before we could apply for citizenship as an American citizen. So, with that as a background, Mr. Chairman and members of the Commission, I would like to share with you and articulate before this Commission some observations which I feel personally and in representation of the Filipinos in this area, and the other minorities and even women at that. Which I feel would some way alleviate or resolve some of the ticklish problems that are confronting our government and even in the private industry. So if I maybe permitted to search them out I would like to proceed.

Ray: Please do, please do.

Pax: My first inquiry before the commission which is an observation actually, is that I have learned that your EEO Director for the state resigned from his job, as the matter of fact, is now working for the Sealaska Corporation as an Assistant to the President. And jokingly, because we belong to the Juneau Lions Club, when he learned I was no longer working for the City and Borough of Juneau, as the contract compliance officer that prepared the minority and women business enterprise program which is this piece of work, your honor, he was teasing me that I should apply for that job. So I told him, they never published about the vacancy of the position which you vacated as EEO Director of the state. I am referring to Mr. Isaac, Aaron. So I said how can I apply that would give me an opportunity because the position opening is not published? I don't know if that position is still vacant up to now or not.

Ray: No, I don't believe it is. Jamie...

James Fisher: I'm James Fisher, the new Director of EEO.

Ray: You would like to have an explanation perhaps why that job wasn't advertised, is that correct?

Pax: Yes sir.

Ray: Mr. Fisher, would you like to give him an explanation?

Fisher: I don't know if I could give such an explanation, Senator. I might be able to answer him at a later date if I could check.

Ray: OK. Does anybody on the commission know why it wasn't advertised?

(no one indicated that they knew why)

Pax: I ask this, Mr. Senator and the members of the commission, because I just came from Anchorage, I was one of the finalists for the Executive Director position of the Anchorage Equal Rights Commission and I was not lucky to be extended the offer. It was offered to somebody else and I have no quarrel about that. I just recently competed as finalist for the position of Assistant to the Chancellor and affirmative action officer for the University of Alaska. So I was thinking that with my race, background, not only back in the Philippines but here in the United States, along affirmative action, that I would be very much qualified to be extended the offer but I learned from another candidate finalist who informed me that she was better qualified than the one who was hired. So I asked her what are your qualifications, and here are my qualifications too, but I wasn't offered the job. So she was trying to insinuate that I should take the proper step to protect not only her rights but also my rights. So I would like to share these observations before this commission this afternoon.

When I came over to Juneau I was working for the Seattle Public School District with my wife, who is an educator by profession. Incidentally, aside from being a certificated teacher in the State of Washington, my wife is a certificated secondary home economics teacher and a guidance counselor here in the State of Alaska. The reason why I am bringing out this background is I will be driving at some problem areas along the recruitment procedures within the state which I feel should be synchronized in order to effectively cope up (?) with employing minorities, women, and even the Native Alaskans, which I observe was one of the problems that cropped up this morning.

I have gone over all the provisions of the United States Constitution, especially after listening to the Chairman that gives me ... American citizen that were admitted legally in court. I have read the constitutional provision of the State of Alaska and the various civil rights provisions, Executive Orders, equal employment opportunity provisions in the Code of Federal Regulations. I feel at this point, Mr. Chairman and members of the commission, that we have adequate provisions of law along the area of implementing equal employment opportunities to women and minorities and even Native Alaskans because there are specific laws that govern this area. I feel from an unbiased observation, honestly Mr. Chairman and members of the commission, that the problem lies in the honest, sincere, implementation of these provisions of law, whether it is the provision of the constitution, which after all was the very basic law under which all these Executive Orders and statutes both state and local have been promulgated or enacted by the distinguished senators and congressmen. So my view is there should be a more sincere and honest implementation of these provisions of the law. In other words, from the director, if I may say so, or the commissioner down to the supervisor, there should be a continuing educational process along these provisions of law in order that we can effectively meet the goals that is called for under these provisions of the law.

Because as I pointed out, and as was pointed out, there are so many reasons why so many silent complainants do not come before this body or before the superiors or the personnel officers for obvious reasons. First, as was mentioned out earlier this morning, for fear for reprisal. Second, which I would like to point out this is not my, my opinion but it is an opinion that I gathered from those who are actually working for the state as well as for the political subdivisions of the state whether it is the City and Borough of Juneau, Anchorage or Kodiak. One observation is why this minority for example not come and complain to the supervisors or to the Human Rights Commission is "Look, we complain against the supervisor who is white. It is going to be decided by a white panel or body. Where would we end up to?" I do not share that observation Mr. Chairman, because I honestly and sincerely believe in the American judicial and justice system in this country. But I want to correct that impression among, not only the ethnic tribes coming from the Philippines and the other Asian countries but even let's say the Natives, the Alaska Natives.

So right now, we are very lucky that my wife has been hired as a part-time, shall we say coordinator in adult education that would somehow bring some ideas to this less unfortunate brothers of ours who need to be enlightened so that maybe they can come, they will understand the rights and privileges and probably will respond to a call such as a public hearing like this. I overheard this morning that why is there a very few response to such a public hearing when it covers a very important subject to be discussed. And, my wife and I said, "Maybe one area we have to educate the people about the importance of the subject that this is supposed to be discussed during the public hearing", whether it is in aid of legislation or in aid of the hiring authorities in order they can better assimilate the minorities, the women, the handicapped, the aged so.

The other problem area is, if you have noticed in my brief resume Mr. Chairman, I have only been listed in three openings in the state and that is first as Executive Director of Wage and Hour. Second, that of being a loan examiner. In the last one where they give me a rating of 100 is regulations specialist. Now, quite from those openings Mr. Chairman, I applied for other various openings, like to be a purchasing agent, either to be stationed in Seattle or elsewhere in the state. I received a letter that I cannot qualify because I did not show evidence that I graduated from an accredited college or university. There are other positions opening like accounting where I practiced accounting for 23 years, and based on American accounting systems. I used American accounting books, auditing books, and English books and on. And even going at the subject matter in the University of Alaska the curriculum is practically the same as the curriculum where I graduated from the university. And I was told that I did not graduate from an accredited college. Yet I submitted the evidence of my having graduated in commerce and in law by submitting my official transcript of record.

So, I said there must be something wrong in the synchronization of the evaluation of one's qualifications whether it is the four-month training or the experience in the field. That is the reason why I requested Mr. Chairman this morning that I waive my rights this morning and discuss some matters with the distinguished Executive Director of Human Rights, so that we could see eye-to-eye where the problem is. And I feel Mr. Chairman that it would not be appropriate for me to be discussing some problems which are now pending before Human Rights Office or pending before the Courts because I honestly feel that that would be subjudice unless it is in aid of remedial legislation which Congress or the distinguished senator would want to sponsor or our good benefactor, Representative

Fuller here, would like to introduce, in congress next session. But I feel that matters that are still subjudice, I'd rather discuss it in private if it will not in anyway prejudice the pending case.

So I would like to dwell more on these generalities if only to contribute my views and opinions and articulate some problems which I feel this commission should try to remedy or resolve one way or the other. If only to make this place a very wonderful place to live in where we expect with my family to live the rest of our lives. And to share our time, our talents in our free share (?) of good will. A reservior of giving our four-month training and work experience in any area of responsibility which we feel we could be of help, not only to the government, but also to the community.

I would like also to concur with some of the views expressed by the Chairman and those who testified this morning. In some of the problem areas like at this moment as I said, we are fortunate that Mrs. Pax has been hired even on a part-time basis although she is more directed to solve the alarming problems that may be cropping among the Filipino ethnic communities. I am still looking forward that her role will not be limited to just the Filipino ethnic tribes because I for one, I would want to work for the general public instead of just for the ethnic tribes or for women because I feel that we are supposed to be given the equal opportunities as provided for under the constitution. So if given the opportunity we would like to share some areas, problem areas and possible solutions whether it is in aid of legislation or in the amendment of the State Personnel Act, which I believe is the goal of this commission to improve or revise. I have gone over already the State Personnel Act once and to the best of my recollection we have a good personnel act, which is complimentary to the general constitutional provision in the Alaska Statutes and the executive orders promulgated together with that of the executive order of the Governor. But I feel like I said earlier that there should be an honest, and sincere implementation of these various acts from the executive down to the lowest supervisor.

The problems came up like evaluation. We were fortunate with my wife, that before we were hired by the Seattle Public School District, we were required to obtain a one month orientation of all new hiring on the background of cultural and ethnic background on various topics like effective communication, office skills, language skills (?) first aid, transportation. And before I forget, I know that you will notice I don't have the American accent or speak the Americans, I have and I must admit that I have, the Filipino accent although I look like a Chinese or a Japanese and my wife of course looks like an Indian, a Native Alaskan. Fortunately the U. S. District Court in Oklahoma declared that Filipino accent could not be grounds for firing personnel. That is decided by the court in the case of Karinio (?) vs. University of Oklahoma, affecting the Filipino (?) who served in the U.S. Navy for 20 years. When he retired he decided to look for a civilian job.

Now going to the aid of solving some of these ethnic or problems that are confronting the assimilation of minorities and even women, I would like to point out just one flaw. There seems to be a misunderstanding that when you employ women that solves the minority goal of hiring. I think that is superfluous or it is a misnomer. I think that is wrong. So when hiring goals are established in the implementation of equal employment opportunities, you should be specific as to what is the goal for the number of women that should be hired, what is the goal for minorities to be hired, whether it is Asians, Alaska Natives, Indians, or Chicanos or whatnot. So the hiring of women would not, (resolve ?) for the hiring of minorities, or vice versa. Or, as some others also say that is a reverse discrimination. Because the whites are being discriminated out. I will also come to the rescue of the whites in that respect. And if I see that the ... are being discriminated out and there is such thing as reverse discrimination, I will be the first one to come forward and champion the rights of these whites or women. So, that is one area where I feel that with the indulgence and patience of the members of the commission, should be looked into.

In finding a happy solution and still attain the EEO goals that is promulgated by the state or the office, as I understand we have an equal employment oppourtunity goal that is supposed to be followed by all departments. And I have observed that the comment there is underutilization of minorities and even women. So it always comes to my mind that there must be a solution, there must be something wrong maybe we have to regroup some system of recruitment. In one of the areas, as mentioned earlier, is the synchronization of the recruitment system where there seems to be a divergence of opinions or of those who are even waiting once qualifications whether it is four-month or the experience. So, with our computerized system I feel that the department should be monitoring the flow charts of applicants whether it is in the personnel division or in the various departments so one centralized agency that will, shall we say, synthesize all the qualifications of an applicant, whether he was hired whether he is still applying, or either he should be sent for advance training, whether it is to attend a seminar in order to assimilate him or her to ... promotion to break that possibility.

And I think that is one area where the women and minorities should be considered. To be qualified to be sent for training, a lady or a minority then I think it is the supervisor is dutybound to recommend that this lady or this minority should be sent to attend that type of seminar or training so that in the next possibility that the responsibilities open for a higher position then he or she may qualify for this higher position instead staying all the time at the bottom. And naturally they will not complain as I said from the very beginning because for fear of reprisal.

And sometimes it is the ... there is the reluctance to come over to this public hearing to share their views and opinions to the subject matter that impacts fact on the community. So, I think there is more, you have all the press, you have the intersatellite system of sharing ones views and opinions, if your article probably doesn't come out in the paper then I think we should feel free to come to the distinguished Senator or to the representative and say Mr. ---

(Changed tape)

--- So, I would like to offer myself, whether it is voluntary or otherwise, Mr. Senator and the members of this commission. I volunteered once to speak before in front of this state capitol building, when there was a rally against the capital move. Fortunately or unfortunately I do not express any opinion for or against, Mr. Senator, because I said, I have some other suggestions, which I would like to share, in aid of legislation of solving the problem instead of going for the transfer of the capital or the retention of the capital. But I said this is not the proper forum for me to discuss the subject matter. If I am called upon to share these views, I will voluntarily and gladly come over whether it is before the Executive Branch, before the Legislative Branch, before the law department, or even in a commission hearing just like this. But I feel at this time, Mr. Senator and members of this commission, that I am going out of the subject matter that should be discussed in this public hearing.

Suffice to state, Mr. Senator and members of this commission, that because of the time constraint that I was notified to come over here in representation of the Filipino community, I did not prepare a well discoursed, well discussed subject matter that should be propounded before this commission. But I assure this commission, Mr. Chairman and members, that in any subject that impacts not only on the ethnic minorities or the women, but from other subjects which you feel this humble representation can share and experience along the line or area, whether it is in budgeting, financing, planning or otherwise, then I would be very glad to come and share my views and opinions and articulate some ideas which I feel would contribute to a solution of the problem that may be plaguing us in this community and even in the old country. Because I feel with my wife that it is our responsibility, that while we have the concomitant guarantee of equal employment opportunity, we also have that responsibility of sharing with you the burden of trying to rectify all these problems that is plaguing our community and country. So we are dutybound to come and speak up our views and opinions if we feel that it can in some way contribute although it is maybe a ... along the solutions of some problems, because we don't want to missing some drunkards for example on the way. Because that is one course of the rising cause of criminality or a drug addict, we will not want our children to be employed by the deteriorating morality that is existing within the community. We would like to share and bring the good qualities that were inculcated upon us also by American educators back in the country of origin from where we came. So that we will really feel happy that we are contributing to the responsibliity that is called for from us even if we are not yet citizens because eventually whether we like it or not, I think we are qualified to become good citizens of this country in the true meaning of the constitution and provisions of the U. S. Constitution and the Alaska State Constitution.

So again, thank you very much Mr. Chairman and members of the Blue Ribbon Commission for the opportunity you have given me and my wife to appear before this distinguished body. And I assure you that while my views and opinions are mine, at least I articulated some problems of some members of the minorities here and even the women and residents (?) that I have gotten in contact with and I hope that I have contributed my share in this responsibility. Thank you very much Mr. Chairman.

Ray: Thank you very much Mr. Pax. And on behalf of the commission and my personal thanks for your appearance. Do you have time for questions sir?

Pax: Yes sir.

Lois Jund: I was very interested in what you had to say. I had a couple of questions and a couple of comments. Now obviously, you are not intimidated by appearing before this comission because you are an attorney and you have been in public life, but how many, for example, of your own ethnic group who felt that there had been discrimination in state employment would come before this large body to voice their problems.

Pax: I would like to inform you ma'am and the members of this commission that I think in all honesty and sincerity with modesty, of all the Filipinos that came over to Alaska, my wife and myself are better prepared to undertake any responsibility in these areas. Yet, it is sad to say, I think we also have been discriminated against and I would not want to go farther because as I said, I cannot discuss cases that are pending before the courts or the Human Rights Commission.

Lois Jund: Would you feel, and I have no idea if it is even possible, that certainly we have women represented on this commission, but we really have no minority representation, would minority representation on this commission be a vehicle through which minority groups could bring their problems to this group.

Pax: Yes Ma'am. As a matter of fact I was going to point that out because one of the areas, the problem areas is for people who have complaints not coming to you, Ma'am, or the members of this commission, or to their supervisors, to voice out their problems or to the Human Rights Commission, as I said, for fear of reprisal. ... of that wrong notion that because you are complaining against the whites, and the panel that will hear your problems is white, that it will be decided in favor of the white. That is, to me that is wrong, but that is a notion that is being entertained by most minorities. Maybe one reason is they have not been exposed to the same exposure educationally work experience-wise the same way that me and my wife have been exposed to. So I feel that this is in aid of probably inviting these people to come and speak up their minds so that we can really help in solving these problems.

(Testimony of Florencio Q. Pax)

Like I will give you an example, a good example, the Anchorage Equal Rights Commission. I was surprised Ma'am, to find out that, I think, there are nine members of the commission, there are 2 whites, 1 male, 1 female; there are 2 Native Alaskans, 1 male and 1 female; there are two blacks, 1 male, 1 female; there is one Filipino, male; there is one representing the Chicanos or the Spanish origin: and that the Chairman, chairperson looks more of a half Asian and a half European, although I did not venture asking. But, I feel that with this representation, Ma'am, if the complainant is not willing to appear before the entire commission, such as the Anchorage Equal Rights Commission, or this Blue Ribbon Commission, if there is a minority whether he or she is a member of this commission or not, or is working under this commission, probably, I am using the word probably, this minority or woman who feels or thinks that this fellow is more sympathetic to their problem might come forward and bring out the problems before this employee or member of the commission. So whether he or she is a member of the commission or somebody working under this commission to be an intake employee or official to receive these complaints, I think it would aid this distinguished commission. And it is a proper step towards the receiving of at least this problem which should be resolved by this distinguished commission.

Jund: I have one more question but I don't want be the....

Ray: Perfectly all right.

Jund: The other question is I wanted to know, you talked about the orientation program of a month in Washington State. Was that only for the ethnic groups or for all new employees in state government?

Pax: It was for all new employees in the school district ma'am, that had to do with the implementation of the desegregation program. So, we were lucky to be mixed and share our views and opinions with black ladies and men, Chicanos, other Asians, to find out that even with this diversities at least we could come up with a happy solution of a problem that is plaguing the school district. So, I feel that with this orientation where we have not been exposed to, back home, because I don't think we have what you call this racial discrimination (that maybe we have our individual discriminative instincts, regionalistic discrimination but not on the basis of race, sex, age, religion, or color but on the region aspect).

But I can assure you Ma'am that as far as equal employment cases are concerned, we also have such cases back home. And that is where I also want to share some experience in handling these cases not only before the administrative agencies and commissions such as this, but even before the courts. So, with this I feel confident that I can be an asset in this community and not a liability. What is now plaguing us with my wife, she's partially employed and I am unemployed but I hate to be because I am willing to work, whether it is with my hands to hold a shovel or to be in an office or to be working with you people like this. I hate to be under unemployment compensation if I can avoid that.

I'd rather be sent to the street and hold a shovel and work even if I had been holding a responsible position as a key government official. Because I want to show and share the experience that we can still start from the bottom and still climb up the ladder. So even if we fall, we still know how to rise.

Jund: Thank you very much, Mr. Pax, I have no other questions.

Ray: Any other members of the commission have a question? Thank you Mr. Pax.

Testimony of
FLORENCIO Q. PAX
at the
Blue Ribbon Commission of the State Personnel Act
Meeting
November 3, 1981

With the permission of the Chairman and the honorable members of the Blue Ribbon Commission. And when the outfit disbanded in Manila I had to return home instead of coming over with some American officers who wanted to bring me over to the United States. So, it was farthest from my thought to come over to the United States as an immigrant. Maybe the reason why I came over was because my wife applied as an immigrant in 1969, she being the oldest daughter of an American citizen who was a Filipino but served in the United States Armed Forces and became a citizen immediately after the war. So my wife wanted to follow the brothers and sister over to the United States. Right now she is the only one who is not a citizen and that holds true with me and my four kids. So we have to establish the residence requirement before we could apply for citizenship as an American citizen. So, with that as a background, Mr. Chairman and members of the Commission, I would like to share with you and articulate before this Commission some observations which I feel personally and in representation of the Filipinos in this area, and the other minorities and even women at that. Which I feel would some way alleviate or resolve some of the ticklish problems that are confronting our government and even in the private industry. So if I maybe permitted to search them out I would like to proceed.

Ray: Please do, please do.

Pax: My first inquiry before the commission which is an observation actually, is that I have learned that your EEO Director for the state resigned from his job, as the matter of fact, is now working for the Sealaska Corporation as an Assistant to the President. And jokingly, because we belong to the Juneau Lions Club, when he learned I was no longer working for the City and Borough of Juneau, as the contract compliance officer that prepared the minority and women business enterprise program which is this piece of work, your honor, he was teasing me that I should apply for that job. So I told him, they never published about the vacancy of the position which you vacated as EEO Director of the state. I am referring to Mr. Isaac, Aaron. So I said how can I apply that would give me an opportunity because the position opening is not published? I don't know if that position is still vacant up to now or not.

Ray: No, I don't believe it is. Jamie...

James Fisher: I'm James Fisher, the new Director of EEO.

Ray: You would like to have an explanation perhaps why that job wasn't advertised, is that correct?

Pax: Yes sir.

Ray: Mr. Fisher, would you like to give him an explanation?

Fisher: I don't know if I could give such an explanation, Senator. I might be able to answer him at a later date if I could check.

Ray: OK. Does anybody on the commission know why it wasn't advertised?

(no one indicated that they knew why)

Pax: I ask this, Mr. Senator and the members of the commission, because I just came from Anchorage, I was one of the finalists for the Executive Director position of the Anchorage Equal Rights Commission and I was not lucky to be extended the offer. It was offered to somebody else and I have no quarrel about that. I just recently competed as finalist for the position of Assistant to the Chancellor and affirmative action officer for the University of Alaska. So I was thinking that with my race, background, not only back in the Philippines but here in the United States, along affirmative action, that I would be very much qualified to be extended the offer but I learned from another candidate finalist who informed me that she was better qualified than the one who was hired. So I asked her what are your qualifications, and here are my qualifications too, but I wasn't offered the job. So she was trying to insinuate that I should take the proper step to protect not only her rights but also my rights. So I would like to share these observations before this commission this afternoon.

When I came over to Juneau I was working for the Seattle Public School District with my wife, who is an educator by profession. Incidentally, aside from being a certificated teacher in the State of Washington, my wife is a certificated secondary home economics teacher and a guidance counselor here in the State of Alaska. The reason why I am bringing out this background is I will be driving at some problem areas along the recruitment procedures within the state which I feel should be synchronized in order to effectively cope up (?) with employing minorities, women, and even the Native Alaskans, which I observe was one of the problems that cropped up this morning.

I have gone over all the provisions of the United States Constitution, especially after listening to the Chairman that gives me ... American citizen that were admitted legally in court. I have read the constitutional provision of the State of Alaska and the various civil rights provisions, Executive Orders, equal employment opportunity provisions in the Code of Federal Regulations. I feel at this point, Mr. Chairman and members of the commission, that we have adequate provisions of law along the area of implementing equal employment opportunities to women and minorities and even Native Alaskans because there are specific laws that govern this area. I feel from an unbiased observation, honestly Mr. Chairman and members of the commission, that the problem lies in the honest, sincere, implementation of these provisions of law, whether it is the provision of the constitution, which after all was the very basic law under which all these Executive Orders and statutes both state and local have been promulgated or enacted by the distinguished senators and congressmen. So my view is there should be a more sincere and honest implementation of these provisions of the law. In other words, from the director, if I may say so, or the commissioner down to the supervisor, there should be a continuing educational process along these provisions of law in order that we can effectively meet the goals that is called for under these provisions of the law.

Because as I pointed out, and as was pointed out, there are so many reasons why so many silent complainants do not come before this body or before the superiors or the personnel officers for obvious reasons. First, as was mentioned out earlier this morning, for fear for reprisal. Second, which I would like to point out this is not my, my opinion but it is an opinion that I gathered from those who are actually working for the state as well as for the political subdivisions of the state whether it is the City and Borough of Juneau, Anchorage or Kodiak. One observation is why this minority for example not come and complain to the supervisors or to the Human Rights Commission is "Look, we complain against the supervisor who is white. It is going to be decided by a white panel or body. Where would we end up to?" I do not share that observation Mr. Chairman, because I honestly and sincerely believe in the American judicial and justice system in this country. But I want to correct that impression among, not only the ethnic tribes coming from the Philippines and the other Asian countries but even let's say the Natives, the Alaska Natives.

So right now, we are very lucky that my wife has been hired as a part-time, shall we say coordinator in adult education that would somehow bring some ideas to this less unfortunate brothers of ours who need to be enlightened so that maybe they can come, they will understand the rights and privileges and probably will respond to a call such as a public hearing like this. I overheard this morning that why is there a very few response to such a public hearing when it covers a very important subject to be discussed. And, my wife and I said, "Maybe one area we have to educate the people about the importance of the subject that this is supposed to be discussed during the public hearing", whether it is in aid of legislation or in aid of the hiring authorities in order they can better assimilate the minorities, the women, the handicapped, the aged so.

The other problem area is, if you have noticed in my brief resume Mr. Chairman, I have only been listed in three openings in the state and that is first as Executive Director of Wage and Hour. Second, that of being a loan examiner. In the last one where they give me a rating of 100 is regulations specialist. Now, quite from those openings Mr. Chairman, I applied for other various openings, like to be a purchasing agent, either to be stationed in Seattle or elsewhere in the state. I received a letter that I cannot qualify because I did not show evidence that I graduated from an accredited college or university. There are other positions opening like accounting where I practiced accounting for 23 years, and based on American accounting systems. I used American accounting books, auditing books, and English books and on. And even going at the subject matter in the University of Alaska the curriculum is practically the same as the curriculum where I graduated from the university. And I was told that I did not graduate from an accredited college. Yet I submitted the evidence of my having graduated in commerce and in law by submitting my official transcript of record.

So, I said there must be something wrong in the synchronization of the evaluation of one's qualifications whether it is the four-month training or the experience in the field. That is the reason why I requested Mr. Chairman this morning that I waive my rights this morning and discuss some matters with the distinguished Executive Director of Human Rights, so that we could see eye-to-eye where the problem is. And I feel Mr. Chairman that it would not be appropriate for me to be discussing some problems which are now pending before Human Rights Office or pending before the Courts because I honestly feel that that would be subjudice unless it is in aid of remedial legislation which Congress or the distinguished senator would want to sponsor or our good benefactor, Representative

Fuller here, would like to introduce, in congress next session. But I feel that matters that are still subjudice, I'd rather discuss it in private if it will not in anyway prejudice the pending case.

So I would like to dwell more on these generalities if only to contribute my views and opinions and articulate some problems which I feel this commission should try to remedy or resolve one way or the other. If only to make this place a very wonderful place to live in where we expect with my family to live the rest of our lives. And to share our time, our talents in our free share (?) of good will. A reservior of giving our four-month training and work experience in any area of responsibility which we feel we could be of help, not only to the government, but also to the community.

I would like also to concur with some of the views expressed by the Chairman and those who testified this morning. In some of the problem areas like at this moment as I said, we are fortunate that Mrs. Pax has been hired even on a part-time basis although she is more directed to solve the alarming problems that may be cropping among the Filipino ethnic communities. I am still looking forward that her role will not be limited to just the Filipino ethnic tribes because I for one, I would want to work for the general public instead of just for the ethnic tribes or for women because I feel that we are supposed to be given the equal opportunities as provided for under the constitution. So if given the opportunity we would like to share some areas, problem areas and possible solutions whether it is in aid of legislation or in the amendment of the State Personnel Act, which I believe is the goal of this commission to improve or revise. I have gone over already the State Personnel Act once and to the best of my recollection we have a good personnel act, which is complimentary to the general constitutional provision in the Alaska Statutes and the executive orders promulgated together with that of the executive order of the Governor. But I feel like I said earlier that there should be an honest, and sincere implementation of these various acts from the executive down to the lowest supervisor.

The problems came up like evaluation. We were fortunate with my wife, that before we were hired by the Seattle Public School District, we were required to obtain a one month orientation of all new hiring on the background of cultural and ethnic background on various topics like effective communication, office skills, language skills (?) first aid, transportation. And before I forget, I know that you will notice I don't have the American accent or speak the Americans, I have and I must admit that I have, the Filipino accent although I look like a Chinese or a Japanese and my wife of course looks like an Indian, a Native Alaskan. Fortunately the U. S. District Court in Oklahoma declared that Filipino accent could not be grounds for firing personnel. That is decided by the court in the case of Karinio (?) vs. University of Oklahoma, affecting the Filipino (?) who served in the U.S. Navy for 20 years. When he retired he decided to look for a civilian job.

(Testimony of Florencio Q. Pax)

Now going to the aid of solving some of these ethnic or problems that are confronting the assimilation of minorities and even women, I would like to point out just one flaw. There seems to be a misunderstanding that when you employ women that solves the minority goal of hiring. I think that is superfluous or it is a misnomer. I think that is wrong. So when hiring goals are established in the implementation of equal employment opportunities, you should be specific as to what is the goal for the number of women that should be hired, what is the goal for minorities to be hired, whether it is Asians, Alaska Natives, Indians, or Chicanos or whatnot. So the hiring of women would not, (resolve ?) for the hiring of minorities, or vice versa. Or, as some others also say that is a reverse discrimination. Because the whites are being discriminated out. I will also come to the rescue of the whites in that respect. And if I see that the ... are being discriminated out and there is such thing as reverse discrimination, I will be the first one to come forward and champion the rights of these whites or women. So, that is one area where I feel that with the indulgence and patience of the members of the commission, should be looked into.

In finding a happy solution and still attain the EEO goals that is promulgated by the state or the office, as I understand we have an equal employment oppourtunity goal that is supposed to be followed by all departments. And I have observed that the comment there is underutilization of minorities and even women. So it always comes to my mind that there must be a solution, there must be something wrong maybe we have to regroup some system of recruitment. In one of the areas, as mentioned earlier, is the synchronization of the recruitment system where there seems to be a divergence of opinions or of those who are even waiting once qualifications whether it is four-month or the experience. So, with our computerized system I feel that the department should be monitoring the flow charts of applicants whether it is in the personnel division or in the various departments so one centralized agency that will, shall we say, synthesize all the qualifications of an applicant, whether he was hired whether he is still applying, or either he should be sent for advance training, whether it is to attend a seminar in order to assimilate him or her to ... promotion to break that possibility.

And I think that is one area where the women and minorities should be considered. To be qualified to be sent for training, a lady or a minority then I think it is the supervisor is dutybound to recommend that this lady or this minority should be sent to attend that type of seminar or training so that in the next possibility that the responsibilities open for a higher position then he or she may qualify for this higher position instead staying all the time at the bottom. And naturally they will not complain as I said from the very beginning because for fear of reprisal.

And sometimes it is the ... there is the reluctance to come over to this public hearing to share their views and opinions to the subject matter that impacts fact on the community. So, I think there is more, you have all the press, you have the intersatellite system of sharing ones views and opinions, if your article probably doesn't come out in the paper then I think we should feel free to come to the distinguished Senator or to the representative and say Mr. ---

(Changed tape)

--- So, I would like to offer myself, whether it is voluntary or otherwise, Mr. Senator and the members of this commission. I volunteered once to speak before in front of this state capitol building, when there was a rally against the capital move. Fortunately or unfortunately I do not express any opinion for or against, Mr. Senator, because I said, I have some other suggestions, which I would like to share, in aid of legislation of solving the problem instead of going for the transfer of the capital or the retention of the capital. But I said this is not the proper forum for me to discuss the subject matter. If I am called upon to share these views, I will voluntarily and gladly come over whether it is before the Executive Branch, before the Legislative Branch, before the law department, or even in a commission hearing just like this. But I feel at this time, Mr. Senator and members of this commission, that I am going out of the subject matter that should be discussed in this public hearing.

Suffice to state, Mr. Senator and members of this commission, that because of the time constraint that I was notified to come over here in representation of the Filipino community, I did not prepare a well discoursed, well discussed subject matter that should be propounded before this commission. But I assure this commission, Mr. Chairman and members, that in any subject that impacts not only on the ethnic minorities or the women, but from other subjects which you feel this humble representation can share and experience along the line or area, whether it is in budgeting, financing, planning or otherwise, then I would be very glad to come and share my views and opinions and articulate some ideas which I feel would contribute to a solution of the problem that may be plaguing us in this community and even in the old country. Because I feel with my wife that it is our responsibility, that while we have the concomitant guarantee of equal employment opportunity, we also have that responsibility of sharing with you the burden of trying to rectify all these problems that is plaguing our community and country. So we are dutybound to come and speak up our views and opinions if we feel that it can in some way contribute although it is maybe a ... along the solutions of some problems, because we don't want to missing some drunkards for example on the way. Because that is one course of the rising cause of criminality or a drug addict, we will not want our children to be employed by the deteriorating morality that is existing within the community. We would like to share and bring the good qualities that were inculcated upon us also by American educators back in the country of origin from where we came. So that we will really feel happy that we are contributing to the responsibliity that is called for from us even if we are not yet citizens because eventually whether we like it or not, I think we are qualified to become good citizens of this country in the true meaning of the constitution and provisions of the U. S. Constitution and the Alaska State Constitution.

So again, thank you very much Mr. Chairman and members of the Blue Ribbon Commission for the opportunity you have given me and my wife to appear before this distinguished body. And I assure you that while my views and opinions are mine, at least I articulated some problems of some members of the minorities here and even the women and residents (?) that I have gotten in contact with and I hope that I have contributed my share in this responsibility. Thank you very much Mr. Chairman.

Ray: Thank you very much Mr. Pax. And on behalf of the commission and my personal thanks for your appearance. Do you have time for questions sir?

Pax: Yes sir.

Lois Jund: I was very interested in what you had to say. I had a couple of questions and a couple of comments. Now obviously, you are not intimidated by appearing before this comission because you are an attorney and you have been in public life, but how many, for example, of your own ethnic group who felt that there had been discrimination in state employment would come before this large body to voice their problems.

Pax: I would like to inform you ma'am and the members of this commission that I think in all honesty and sincerity with modesty, of all the Filipinos that came over to Alaska, my wife and myself are better prepared to undertake any responsibility in these areas. Yet, it is sad to say, I think we also have been discriminated against and I would not want to go farther because as I said, I cannot discuss cases that are pending before the courts or the Human Rights Commission.

Lois Jund: Would you feel, and I have no idea if it is even possible, that certainly we have women represented on this commission, but we really have no minority representation, would minority representation on this commission be a vehicle through which minority groups could bring their problems to this group.

Pax: Yes Ma'am. As a matter of fact I was going to point that out because one of the areas, the problem areas is for people who have complaints not coming to you, Ma'am, or the members of this commission, or to their supervisors, to voice out their problems or to the Human Rights Commission, as I said, for fear of reprisal. ... of that wrong notion that because you are complaining against the whites, and the panel that will hear your problems is white, that it will be decided in favor of the white. That is, to me that is wrong, but that is a notion that is being entertained by most minorities. Maybe one reason is they have not been exposed to the same exposure educationally work experience-wise the same way that me and my wife have been exposed to. So I feel that this is in aid of probably inviting these people to come and speak up their minds so that we can really help in solving these problems.

(Testimony of Florencio Q. Pax)

Like I will give you an example, a good example, the Anchorage Equal Rights Commission. I was surprised Ma'am, to find out that, I think, there are nine members of the commission, there are 2 whites, 1 male, 1 female; there are 2 Native Alaskans, 1 male and 1 female; there are two blacks, 1 male, 1 female; there is one Filipino, male; there is one representing the Chicanos or the Spanish origin; and that the Chairman, chairperson looks more of a half Asian and a half European, although I did not venture asking. But, I feel that with this representation, Ma'am, if the complainant is not willing to appear before the entire commission, such as the Anchorage Equal Rights Commission, or this Blue Ribbon Commission, if there is a minority whether he or she is a member of this commission or not, or is working under this commission, probably, I am using the word probably, this minority or woman who feels or thinks that this fellow is more sympathetic to their problem might come forward and bring out the problems before this employee or member of the commission. So whether he or she is a member of the commission or somebody working under this commission to be an intake employee or official to receive these complaints, I think it would aid this distinguished commission. And it is a proper step towards the receiving of at least this problem which should be resolved by this distinguished commission.

Jund: I have one more question but I don't want be the....

Ray: Perfectly all right.

Jund: The other question is I wanted to know, you talked about the orientation program of a month in Washington State. Was that only for the ethnic groups or for all new employees in state government?

Pax: It was for all new employees in the school district ma'am, that had to do with the implementation of the desegregation program. So, we were lucky to be mixed and share our views and opinions with black ladies and men, Chicanos, other Asians, to find out that even with this diversities at least we could come up with a happy solution of a problem that is plaguing the school district. So, I feel that with this orientation where we have not been exposed to, back home, because I don't think we have what you call this racial discrimination (that maybe we have our individual discriminative instincts, regionalistic discrimination but not on the basis of race, sex, age, religion, or color but on the region aspect).

But I can assure you Ma'am that as far as equal employment cases are concerned, we also have such cases back home. And that is where I also want to share some experience in handling these cases not only before the administrative agencies and commissions such as this, but even before the courts. So, with this I feel confident that I can be an asset in this community and not a liability. What is now plaguing us with my wife, she's partially employed and I am unemployed but I hate to be because I am willing to work, whether it is with my hands to hold a shovel or to be in an office or to be working with you people like this. I hate to be under unemployment compensation if I can avoid that.

I'd rather be sent to the street and hold a shovel and work even if I had been holding a responsible position as a key government official. Because I want to show and share the experience that we can still start from the bottom and still climb up the ladder. So even if we fall, we still know how to rise.

Jund: Thank you very much, Mr. Pax, I have no other questions.

Ray: Any other members of the commission have a question? Thank you Mr. Pax.

Testimony of
BRENDA RANDALL-SADEK
at the
Blue Ribbon Commission of the State Personnel Act
Meeting
November 3, 1981

My name is Brenda Randall-Sadek and I am an Accounting Clerk III for the Department of Transportation. I have been with the state and the department for it will be a year in December. I have worked constantly the whole year as a accounting clerk, not that I am not on other registers but it is just that I don't get promoted. I basically came to talk about my own personal experience of working with the state and particularly with the Department of Transportation because that is only the experience I have had since I have been here in Alaska. But before I get started on the Department of Transportation I would like to tell you about an experience I had when I first came here with the Human Rights Commission.

When I first came here in, last summer, a year ago this past summer, there was a position advertised in the paper for the Human Rights Commission. It is was entry level, trainee position, and the minimum qualifications were only a high school degree, which I do have a college degree. It is in art and I have three years in accounting. And I applied for it. Three months later, the same position was out. I put in my application again for it. I put in my application three different times for the same position and only after I had done some investigation did I find out that it was, in fact, the same position. And only after I went into the office and had done the investigation did I receive a letter telling me that I wasn't qualified for it. And I don't know when the position got filled or how, but that position was in the paper for months. And I felt that they were discriminating. But I don't have anymore to say about that. I'll go on to the Department of Transportation.

I have been with the Department of Transportation for a year almost. I have worked as a clerk for them in three different positions. I have, ever since the first, ever since the first week that I was there, I have let them know that I was interested in, I was interested in not only staying with the state but staying with them, staying in accounting and also that I wanted more accounting education. I was interested in taking the state accounting course, which I have yet to take and it is not that I haven't put in the proper procedures of notifying my supervisors or sending out memos, because I have. I just have not been selected as one of the people to take the course. And twice I have gone to the Assistant Director and questioned him about it and both times I was given the answer that it wasn't related to my present position. And the first time even before I went to him, knowing that that is what he was going to say (well, I didn't know that was what he was going to say, but I had the feeling that he was going to say that it wasn't related to my present position) I wrote out a memo, sent it to my supervisor, to him, to the director, and to the director of training, stating that I did plan to stay with DOT, I was interested although it was not related to my present position, I didn't plan to stay in that position and I felt that the course would not only benefit me but would benefit them because I was planning on staying with them. And I got no response except for "we do," on the bottom of my memo they wrote "we do send people when we feel that it is related". And that was it. I have yet to hear anything else about it.

And then after being there and being transferred to three different clerk desks I ... Something came up just recently, I was in the research section for the financial management and I find out that my supervisor is going to hire a Tech I. Now, I am not in Research any longer but at the time I had made the decision to leave Research and go to Budget. He didn't want me to leave. He kept expressing to me what a good worker I was and how he really didn't want me to leave there and how he was going to help me stay there. And then he decided that he was going to hire a Tech I. But I wasn't the one who got hired. And, he explained to me why I didn't get hired. This was even before I knew that I wasn't hired. He said that he wanted me to know first off why I didn't get hired. He said that I was too low on the register. Yet, the person who did get the Tech I position had been with the department and the section less than I had, hadn't been there as long as I had been there, and was a white male.

And they, and when he first came to me and told me "well, see this is where you are on the register, that's how come we can't hire you now," I told him, I said, "well Tech I's are underutilized classes you can hire me if you want to." Because during my time at DOT I've seen them hold positions for people for who they want. They said you have to be on the register to get the job, which is true. They can pull anybody from those registers they want to hire as long as they justify it. And they can justify it with any means. I have seen them hold positions open waiting for people to get on registers, I have seen them hold other people in positions until the person they wanted to get that position get on the register. I mean, nothing about where they were on the register, or how they were going to get them came up. They held the position until the person they wanted in that position got on the register. And, I felt that -- I got really upset about it. But what can I do?

I feel that in the time that I have been with DOT the only other minorities that I have seen there are some Filipinos. And I was looking, I had questioned several people about how long they had been with the department, how long they have been working with the state, and the difference I came up with amazed me. Out of about 3 or 4 white people I asked that had been there anywhere from four to six years, they were already up into Tech III or Accounting I levels, where I know of two Filipinos who do excellent work, who have been there both over five years, and they're both still at an Accounting Tech I level. And they are not even considered to be moved, being upgraded. I don't know what else to say. I saw the notice on the board and I felt that I had to come here and express how I felt.

Most of the discrimination that I have noticed is mostly subconscious it is not consciously doing this. Maybe they are, I can't tell. I mean it has got to the point with me where I can't tell where they are conscious or subconscious. Some of it is they are not consciously doing it. But it is still being done. And others of it, ... I feel that they are consciously doing it. Like after I was told of the Tech I, after I was told of the Tech I position that they were going to fill, after I brought this up about underutilized class, I haven't heard nothing else about it. I know only through office gossip that the guy has been promoted. He hasn't told me, no one else has told me, only through office gossip have I heard that he got the position. But once I brought up about the underutilized class and that if he really wanted to hire me he could, I haven't heard another word about it, that position or any other position.

As far as the system of the register, I kind of agree with Verneelia on the point that you know, taking the test depends on your test taking abilities. Just, that test does not accurately show my abilities. That test doesn't accurately show anyone's abilities. But if that's the system that they are going to use, they should stick by it. I don't understand why they, why they sit up and they wait for people to get on registers to hire them when there is already qualified people on the register waiting for positions. And of course, if I was to go to them, they would justify it all. They would justify it to the point that I wouldn't have a leg to stand on to say that they were discriminating against me. If I brought that up about that the Tech I position, the first thing they are going to jump on is "well, see, you are way down here on the register and he's up here so we will have to." In other words they are going to make me feel inadequate or unqualified because I am way down here on the register. But yet I have been with the department, I know the types of work, I know what is going on.

Ray: Then you get the label "troublemaker".

Sadek: Yes.

Ray: And yet, during the testimony that we have here and even with the participation from some other members of the commission here they want to give the supervisors and they want to give the technicians in the department of personnel the highest latitude, or the best latitude they can, to make the tests as they see fit in order to get the highest people in the state. And then they want to give the supervisors the biggest latitude so they can go down and pick out because you have a bunch of cranks up here on the top five, and you have to reach down there to get one of these guys out. And all of them very worthwhile suggestions and all, all of them sensible. But then when you turn it on the other side it gives somebody else a tool to stick in the wheel of the system and to get a flat tire. Just like in your case. I don't know. Of course it's Transportation's fault. Linda would you like to tell us, would you like to apologize for Tranportation?

Lynda McCurry: No, Roger can do that, that is his department. I just wanted to say that Brenda has mentioned, are what I consider, being a Personnel Officer, crafty techniques in working eligible lists. All are perfectly legal within the system. And it seems to me, like, going back to where we were two years ago, those should be the things that we are zeroing in on and fixing. Because if you are a permanent state employee with the Department of Transportation, your department could have called for departmental promotional lists. It would have put you very high, probably, on this list and maybe even reachable. The second thing they could have done is to use the Five Plus Five and gone below to select you. So, these things are available and if the people aren't doing them that's where we should be working.

Sadek: One of the things about DOT is that they can go below the top five but that's only if their EEO plan has been accepted and DOT's EEO plan has not been accepted by the state.

Roger Thayer: The Assistant Director, I won't mention names, but are his initials DG?

Sadek: I'm not going to answer.

Thayer: How many times did you ask to take the course?

Sadek: I have asked for, I have had three different supervisors since I have been there and I had expressed it to all three since I have been there. I've also expressed it to the Assistant Director, because I went to talk to him the first time I was denied.

Thayer: Did you ask, did you do it in writing?

Sadek: No, both verbally and in writing.

Thayer: Would you send me a copy of your request? To the Personnel Officer, DOT, Roger Thayer, 2505.

Sadek: Yes.

Thayer: Lynda is correct when she did say that it has been a practice for the department to use promotional lists. And I will do some checking on that.

Ray: That brings a question to me that the things that we have uncovered here as far as two years ago with the practice and that they, what did you call it, the ...

Lynda: Crafty techniques.

Ray: Crafty techniques. Is this compounded in your own mind because you are a woman or because you are a minority? Now, think for a minute, I mean does this happen to everybody else right along with you is what I am trying to get at. They just don't pick you out because -- do they?

Sadek: It is really hard to ... no, I don't find it hard to see discrimination between being discriminated as a woman being discriminated as a black -- Most of the discrimination I feel I receive is because of my race, more so than because of my being a female. At least with this.

Ray: In this particular job you think it had racial connotations rather than just, you happened to be in this particular position when somebody else could have been in the same spot as you?

Sadek: Since I have been there in DOT, I have seen an Assistant Director come in, I have seen 6 or 7 people from the same department that he left come with him, and I have seen three of them get promotions. And I have seen other people that has been there with DOT for awhile that is still sitting in the same position.

Ray: But are they white?

Sadek: Most of them are whites, most of them are whites because that's the majority of the workers; most of them are female.

Ray: I mean in your spot is what I am saying. So, I am trying to zero in on the fact that these people who use the crafty techniques, they aren't just using them on you because you are black, or because you are a woman, you just happen to be sitting there and he is using them and he would use them if there was a six foot tall Norwegian in there.

Sadek: No, no, I don't think that they are just using them on anyone. I do think that they do pick out the black and the Filipinos, and the Indians.

Ray: Verneelia, did you want to say something?

Verneelia: I just wanted to say, Senator Ray, that just goes back to certain assumptions of who picks, I mean you have your favorites. But when the system works like this, when the system breaks down like this, white people get caught in it; black people, Indians, Filipinos, minorities get caught in it more.

Ray: All right, that is what I am trying to identify, that is what I am trying to do.

Verneelia: Certainly it happens to other people as well, but the end results for, since, we are in this race and we are 15 minutes behind and then they introduce a, they give the runner a 10 minute, 10 more minutes, well, everybody else in the race is 10 minutes behind but the minorities and woman are 25 minutes behind.

Ray: But you have to look at it from another point is, I have to be the devil's advocate here, you know if you were late getting there, and there is a difference between you and I eating, I'm sorry that you got there late, but I am going to sit down and eat.

Verneelia: Sir, I don't begrudge the individual, what I do is begrudge the people who set the rules.

Sadek: I don't know, that's all I had to say.

Lois Jund: You may not know the answer to this, but was this position, was it identified as an underutilized category?

Sadek: Accounting Tech? Yes, all accounting Tech positions are underutilizied.

Jund: I am harking back really to Ms. Randall's point that it is not mandatory even if they do provide the affirmative action.

Sadek: It is not mandatory, but they can justify hiring anybody they want to and they do justify hiring anybody they want to. It's just that they don't want to justify hiring people that they don't want to justify hiring. They justify hiring anyone. I've seen them hold positions for people.

Jund: I'm trying to get at one of the points because it ties in here. One of your suggestions which I thought was excellent, if it is possible, was to identify underutilized categories for minorities, really, then automatically provide an EEO register and if they then do not select from the reigster then they must justify. And I think that is putting it in the proper perspective and will get away from this game of crafty techniques.

Ray: I think it would be to the highest satisfaction of this commission if we could get two people, three people, four people, if we got 100 people in here all saying the same thing and pointing in the same direction, it would -- because I know what you are laboring under right now. I know what you're thinking to yourself, "hey man, when I get back somebody's going to be looking up my PCN Number and wanting to know how they are going to get rid of me." Well, I'm going to tell you this. If you have any indication that anybody in the state government is discriminating against you or using your appearance in front of this commission to eliminate you from state employment, you let me know. You let me know because we will not tolerate that. The Governor will not tolerate it. I know that for a personal fact, because I have talked with him about it. He will not tolerate that kind of activity in the state government. And I want everybody to know that and anybody that gives testimony here, whether they are a private citizen or whether they are a state employee, if they are a state employee and they feel and they can substantiate that they are being discriminating against because of their appearance here, I'll guarantee you we will have who, we will have the guy who is discriminating against head on the table. So if that is any reassurance to you, you can pass that on to the rest of the people that work over in your outfit and tell all those heel draggers over there they can drag over here for awhile and we'll put them right up there where they are supposed to be. Sir..

Mr. Pax: I have just one suggestion to make. It is with respect to other political provisions of the state ... (FROM NOTES: which receive grants from the state. Some federal and state laws provide that the grantor can withdraw funding if a grantee violates anti-discrimination laws.)

(changed tape)

Mr. Pax continuing: ... the grantor like the state even with ... funding that is supposed to be extended to that local political subdivision or agency because of the violation that was perpetrated so many of these recipient of political subdivisions or agencies, will be aware of this provision of law. If we know that the state is ... set on imposing the penalty as provided for in law. Then I think they will think also twice before firing, for example, on the ground of communication barrier. Or an agency firing somebody because he is upset because of Filipino or because he looks black or if he's an Indian. So I think I would like to go back in sincerity in applying this very provisions, very simple provisions of the law. This funding for example, the local ... if I may call that when the agency-recipient is found to have violated any of these discrimination factors then the grantor agency can withdraw the funding or terminate the contract.

Ray: I think, Jack, don't we have that in the, aren't those provisions in the law now? Jack Chenoweth?

Jack Chenoweth: Most of the grant documents state departments use do include some provision that requires the recipient to follow, or not violate federal, if there are federal funds involved, and state law in this area. I don't know that the ... has ever been enforced.

Ray: Put that down for research into a possible amendment to the grant laws of the state. I'll get hold of Berrier and have him research that to see if that is, because that is very definitely, would be something very desirable as far as I am concerned.

Jund: I would like to ask a question Senator I noticed that a lot of the things the legislature does, you know they put the legislative intent. I am wondering if this might not be a possibility for training funds, that they seem to be resistent, but if they put legislative intent that they are to be used proportionately to categories of people, percentage-wise and for upward mobility?

Ray: Legislative intent is a document or an instrument to be used and to benefit of a person or the administration as they see fit, if they want to perpetuate it. But it has no standing or no basis except and perhaps a legal investigation where it would have an expression of intent of the legislature in a certain area. But as far as any, any legal standing, as far as you are trying to get the administration to live up to legislative intent, there is no basis of fact.

Jund: I'm quite cognizant of that. But the agencies always look at legislative intent very, very closely and if at all possible --

Ray: If it serves their purpose.

Jund: As I recall, we used to have to make a report --

Ray: Well, you're outstanding Lois. You were one of the good ones. I mean it.

Jund: I would like to see training funds go to the lower echelons in relation to their percentage and utilize it for upward mobility. It's the only way these people are not going to be kept in forever.

Ray: You could put that in the statutes. You wouldn't have to use that just in legislative intent. You could actually put that in the statutes: a majority of the funds appropriated for inservice training shall be below such and such -- below level 15 or 16 or anyplace you want it.

Jund: I've seen where people were hired from outside because they couldn't have the same training ...

Ray: You could write some legislation on that. Then, you see, you have got to realize that there are two legislators here: one from the House and one from the Senate. We are getting the benefit of your talk and the understanding. The other 58 people are going to be sitting up there and are going to be lobbied by people that is going to tell them. Then they are going to have commissioners come in and they'll say, "Well, hey, you know I can get a clerk a dime a dozen, I can get an accountant, anything that I want. But now this fellow that I really need here, I really need some training, and it is really in the specialized classes I need the training." That is what you are going to get.

McCurry: I think some people will really be willing to talk to them, Senator Ray, as well as if you did see, within the areas authorized training funds, I don't think it should give the departments a license to kill. I think they should have approved training plans.

Ray: Put down there to research the statutes to find a spot for the possible amendment for the delegation of a majority of the funds for inservice training and I'll, I can take it from there. Brenda, thank you very, very much. I certainly do appreciate your testimony. We have another Brenda, Brenda Knapp.

ALASKA LEGISLATURE SPECIAL COMMITTEE / SUBJECT FILE 8672
1358 SCOMM 51: BLUE RIBBON COMN. ON STATE PERSONNEL ACT 1978-1983

Testimony of
BRENDA KNAPP
at the
Blue Ribbon Commission of the State Personnel Act
Meeting
November 3, 1981

My name is Brenda Knapp. I am the planner with the Central Council of Tlingit-Haida Indian Tribes of Alaska. The Central Council is preparing testimony which will be submitted to the commission in written form this week. But what I would like to do now is just share basically the introduction to our testimony with you because it contains some of the figures regarding Native hire in state government that really are the focus of our concern.

Sealaska Advisory Committee to the United States Commission on Civil Rights produced a report and initiated a series of open meetings in the fall of 1978, including a meeting in Juneau on 11 September, 1978 and the findings of the Alaska Advisory Committee were published in July, 1980. To date, a great deal of effort has been made to correct and improve the employment representation of Alaska Natives and other minorities in state government. Reports have been filed, plans developed, responsibilities pinpointed, roles clarified, data systems implemented, policy expounded and the Blue Ribbon Commission established.

In April, 1978, Native people held 518 jobs in state government. This figure represented 5.4% of the total state government workforce. Today, November 3, 1981, 3-1/2 years later, according to figures just released by this commission, Native people hold 5.4% of jobs in state government workforce. There has been a rise in actual numbers that went from 518 to 694, but the percent of the total state government jobs has not changed, 5.4%.

In other words, despite all of the talks, meetings, reports, plans, commissions, etc., which have taken place during the past 3-1/2 years, Native people in Alaska have not improved their representation in the workforce of state government. Although 16% of the state's population is Native, less than 6% of the jobs in state government are held by Native people. Most of these jobs are, as everyone knows, concentrated in the clerical, craft and paraprofessional categories. Very few professional and management positions are held by Native people. The underrepresentation and underutilization of Native people affects most job categories and departments of state government. In fact, in nine of the 15 departments of the Executive Branch of state government, the representation of Alaska Native people has declined between April '78 and September '81. Of the remaining six departments, four increased the representation that Native people by less than 1% over earlier figures. Two departments, Community & Regional Affairs and Natural Resources appear to have made substantial gains. But, we have no information as to what really resulted in these gains.

(Testimony of Brenda Knapp)

It would appear that the commitment so clearly stated in Administrative Order No. 59 as expressing the equal employment policy of the executive branch of state government needs to be more forcefully and imaginatively translated into action. The actions of the past 3-1/2 years have provided necessary and useful mechanisms to help state government recruit, select, hire, promote and retain minorities in state employment. The expanded certification policy is a particularly useful step in bringing qualified Native people to the attention of hiring departments. But we believe that what has been accomplished to date, represent only the first few steps in an overall plan that must produce results in numbers, rather than intentions.

Ray: We have a question that has arisen in the time period you are stating there, I do know the state with the advent or the increase of the duties or functions of the Native corporations, they have assumed certain duties that were previously performed by the state. Those duties have been contracted to the Native organizations, NANA, MANA, and the whole scheme of them up in the slope. And as such they have hired private people who have taken over duties that would be performed by state employees. Now we don't know whether this is -- you've stated in some areas that the Native population and Native hires has increased and others it has just remained static, but we don't know how many jobs that were previously performed by state employees are now being performed by the Native corporations with Native people. In other words, if, -- do you understand what I am saying?

Knapp: Yes. I guess if those positions are no longer being included as part of the total figure, so far as state government employment, then it would seem they would no longer be relevant, possibly. If there were 12,000 state jobs and now there's 11,000 because 1,000 were contracted out, I guess we would still be looking at the remainder, what percent of the remainder are Native people. Presumably most of them have contracted out.

Ray: No, that would be a very simple thing, but that isn't the way it works in state government. Three years ago the increase in the state employment has been what, 10 to 12% in the last, that's each year, the increase in state employees. The increase in Native hire is not, as you state static, or so to speak 5% or whatever it was you gave us. But what I am trying to say is, we certainly have not eliminated those, the duties, but they are just being performed by a Native corporation rather than the state.

Knapp: That's laudable. I think that the extent the corporations can do that, that's...

Ray: But they might not have, but what I am getting at, they might be hiring the Natives that the state would otherwise be hiring in those areas to perform the services. But they are now being performed by a private organization rather than the state.

Knapp: Perhaps so. There are a lot of people, Native people, who have been working under CETA positions and other types of positions that are being over eliminated as a current economic trend. And these people have been trained and are available for employment and even if Natives have been able to perhaps assume more responsibilities for former state positions in the various regions, there is a still significant state job pool that Natives should be well represented in.

Ray: Yes, you still have to take into consideration that those jobs that were otherwise state jobs are no longer state jobs and they are being perhaps performed by a Native that was employed by the state but is no longer employed by the state. He has been employed by a private corporation. And as such he doesn't appear in the statistics, in the stats, as a result you have to overbalance in order to increase it 5% and then you would really have 15% of the Native population who were working in positions which you could call state positions although those positions are being, some of them are being, filled by employees of Native corporations. Very confusing. But you understand, I think you are getting the drift, as poorly as I am explaining it to you.

Knapp: I can see what you are saying. I guess maybe, it makes me look a little dense too. I still think that of the remaining positions that there should be more representation of Native people. There should have been, to maintain the 5.4% over three years does not show that the intentions are transferring into good action. And as far as the contracted-out positions, now, I worked as a planner to the Central Council, I have been there for three years now. I know that in other regions there has been some contracting especially in the area of social services. I'm not that familiar with what other kinds of duties may have been contracted out or how many total jobs this would mean the state has ultimately contracted to Native corporations. I think there still are some difficult areas that need to be worked out to make it more possible for corporations, for Native corporations to take greater responsibility for an even greater share of what formerly has been state ...

Ray: Have you taken into consideration, or have you looked, this is for our information and hopefully you have these figures, of the amount of people of Native origin who are on the state registers as of 1978 and how many are on the state registers as of 1981. That's a very, --

Knapp: I don't have that.

Ray: Well, see then you have no comparison. If the number on the registers has fallen, or has not kept in at the same constancy or the same increase as white people, then really there are less people available for hire.

Knapp: Perhaps so.

Ray: Percentage-wise, is what I am getting at.

Knapp: If that is true, knowing as I do that there are, at least in this region, are a significant number of Native people who are now unemployed that would like to be employed, I think that if indeed their number has substantially decreased on the state registers, the question as to "why" should be asked.

Ray: See, that's where, you've got it. That's what we are trying to find out: if there is a discriminatory attitude or if there's some way that these people are being discriminated against or not hired, that's what I am getting at. And if we could work with you or if you have the figures, if we could call upon you perhaps you have figures in your computers or something that could tell us or help us with that. That would go a long ways toward easing our duties.

Knapp: We would be very happy to work with you. We're local, we are available. We aren't necessarily representative of all the regions.

Ray: No, no. We could get a general look at it anyway, you know kind of a consensus. Yes Madam.

Question from the audience: I just wanted to ask her for clarification, how many whites are there in the region? In the regional (?) corporation. Quite a few that have been taken off the market?

Knapp: Actually not a lot. And I was told when I came here that I was being allowed to come and say a few words to show the Tlingit & Haida ... (FROM NOTES: is an equal employment opportunity employer.)

Ray: Well, you see there, here again as we have how many Native corporations do we have, and how many of those Native corporations, what are their relationships as far as the job market is concerned as how many qualified people, Natives, do they have?

Knapp: When I sit in a senior staff meeting and look around, and usually there's at least 12 people there, I often note that I am the only white person there. The Native corporations are able to find, recruit and employ qualified Native people. I think that the state government could also do that.

Ray: But they do. You see and the Native corporation, they don't have a competitive test and whose on first and whose uncle is the -- after you get by the testing is, if you have an uncle or an aunt or a cousin that is working over there in the supervisor position that could get you off the register, if you are down underneath the top five to put you in there.

Knapp. Sounds like ...

Ray: That's my job to eliminate.

(Testimony of Brenda Knapp)

Chenoweth: Will your testimony, or will the testimony that's being done this week in writing, give us the benefit of some suggestions based on specific items?

Knapp: Yes, it will specifically volunteer some recommendations that we think would help ...

Chenoweth: And, training and internal advancement?

Knapp: Yes, also.

Ray: And how many of your members have limited entry fishing permits? Thank you very much Brenda. Are there any other people from the public who would like to say anything?

Testimony of
NIEL THOMAS
at the
Blue Ribbon Commission of the State Personnel Act
Meeting
November 3, 1981

I am Niel Thomas. I am Director of the State Human Rights Commission in Anchorage. As many of you know, I used to be a member of this group and its very much pleasure to be back. I have some show and tell which I will share with the staff and they may want to make further copies for the members of the group. One thing I did bring quite a number of copies of relates to what I understand the specific request of the group was from the Human Rights Commission. The minutes indicate that Mr. Thayer, I'm sorry, it was Mr. O'Claray, suggested that we come and share with you some information about the number of complaints involving the state which had been filed with the Human Rights Commission and some comparison with the private sector. That's what this sheet is and, if I may I will send it down, quite a few copies here, I'll send it down both sides of the table. If you will pardon some of my handwriting on here I will try to show you what it seems to be saying. I just quickly developed this data before I got on the plane over the weekend.

What you asked for from us is similar to the material that we developed a couple of weeks ago at the request of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission which will further report on the state's equal employment performance. It also ties into some reports that we have made on the subject too.

If I had each of you leaning over my shoulder I could point to some numbers here but let me try to call your attention where some of these key numbers are. If you look at the numbers that are in computer type there in a column that says "Cases Open at the End of the Period", that's how many total cases are pending before us right now. The handwritten number 75 beside that is how many cases are pending before the commission right now involving the State of Alaska, and then it says equals 18.3%. In other words, something like 18% of the total number of cases now open before us, are cases in which the State of Alaska is part of it. The other handwritten numbers going left across the page there then show you how many cases we have closed and of the total; and of the state, how many new cases were filed, and how many cases we started with. In other words, we have fewer cases involving the state on file now than we did at the beginning of the year although our total number of complaints has remained about constant. Now if you look below that, you will find the word "Note" and some more handwriting there. If you went with that number 18.3, you could be somewhat misled because of those 75 cases involving the state, 24 of them are basically people all involved in one issue, which is now pending at the public hearing stage.

So, to really fairly state a proportion, what I did was another calculation down below there. I took that one case involving 24 different complaints and treated it, as it fairly should be I think, as one case. So, if you do that, the real -- the more fair statement is that other percentage down toward the lower right hand corner of the page which says that 13.4% of the cases pending before us are cases involving the state. I think that is a more fair statement of the proportion of our workload involving the state.

Senator Ray: What case is that Niel?

Thomas: That case is the case involving the classification of public health nurses compared with physician's assistants. They appeared before you back when I was a member of this group, I believe, a couple of years ago. Since that time the complaint was -- a group of complaints were filed, that totals 24 complaints on our books, and the case is now pending in the public hearing stage.

Now on the left, then, it begins to get to more specifics of your request. Our case data system takes into account everything that has been filed with us since the beginning of 1975, plus everything that was open on that date. That number 3172 is that proportion of that data filed which are cases involving employment discrimination, as distinguished from housing, credit and finance or other things that we are authorized to deal with. 321 of those 3000 plus cases are cases involving the state, or something like 10%. That's what that first number is there on the left. Now as I said when we started, two years ago when the Civil Rights Commission was in town they asked us for basically the same kind of data. So as of August in 1978, something like 9%, or 9.3%, we told the Civil Rights Commission, of our employment discrimination cases, which the file had in it had been cases involving the State of Alaska. Now, the question is what does this tell you and is it significant. It's tempting to say that if 13%, 13-1/2% of our cases right now involve the state, and two years ago 9% of our cases involved the state, and the whole total case file is 10%, then maybe we are getting something of an upturn in business from the State of Alaska. Now whether that, whether a statistican would tell you that is specifically significant I don't know. We haven't run those kinds of statistical tests, but it does raise a possibility that perhaps we are getting more business from the state than we used to. I think that is as much as we can say on that.

At the very bottom of the page, and this is a figure your staff might want to update for us, but at the time we were talking to the Civil Rights Commission we were wondering, well, does the State give us more business say than the private sector? And that is what I understand that Mr. O'Claray was specifically asking earlier. We asked the Labor Department "if you take all of the nonfarm workers in the State of Alaska, what proportion of those people work for the state as opposed to the private sector?" And we were told that it is something on the order of 8 or 9%, so I guess that it wasn't a figure that they keep very specifically. Well, we told the Civil Rights Commission then that if 8 or 9% of the nonfarm workers in the State of Alaska work for the state itself and if something like 9%, 9.3% (and we are talking 1978 now) of the complaints involved the state, it was probably fair to say that the state probably gives us about its fair share of the business, so to speak. It wouldn't be fair to say that we get far more business involving the State of Alaska say than we do from the private sector. Now whether that is still true, I think you would want to get the current figure. It's probably safe to say that there hasn't been a radical shift between the proportion of people working for the state as opposed to the private sector. And if that is true the ratio is probably similar but there is the question of "are we really getting slightly more business from the state than before?" The raw numbers would seem to indicate that. Maybe it's not basically significant. I think that is your judgment, but at least there is the numbers. That's the first part of the show and tell.

I have brought one copy of the things which I think are basically file documents for your own research purposes and Jim Fisher is going to want this also. In fact since he is closer to me, if I could leave some of these show and tell things and you could make copies for each other of the things I think you're both going to want. The first thing is a printout from our data files of all cases, all of these 300 and some cases involving the State of Alaska, which were closed between when this file opened in 1979 and 1980. That's the ... And this second printout is a printout of all the cases in which, except where that one leaves off, and it is everything that happened during this year. So it is everything that is now open on the books, plus everything that closed this year. So this is the whole file. And it is employment cases, plus everything else, housing cases which ASHA can generate, government services that we deal with, which involve correctional people and things like that. So this is the whole nine yards so to speak that is, and for whatever research purposes may be appropriate. Let me issue one note of caution --

Ray: How many cases of discrimination against minorities -- that is what we are interested in.

Thomas: The minority percentage statewide, and I haven't broken it out, Senator, separately for the State, but I have no reason to believe it is any different, but the minority percentage of people filing charges total is about half of our complaints. In other words, about half of our complaints are filed by whites (most of those are sex discrimination cases) and the other half are race discrimination cases.

Ray: This 9%, is what I am talking about. The 9% that is employed by the State of Alaska in 1978 -- what percentage of that, of the 9% that we are talking about, were complaints by minorities of discrimination. Can you tell us that?

(Testimony of Niel Thomas)

Thomas: Our complete filing rate is about 50%, in other words about half of our complaints are complaints filed by minorities as opposed to complaints filed by whites.

Ray: This is discrimination, is what I am talking about, not housing or anything else.

Thomas: Yes sir, employment discrimination.

Ray: I just wanted to get that clear, Niel, so we know what we are talking about.

Thomas: A couple of other items and things which I sort of gleaned from reading the minutes of the last meeting, and I guess the tape recorder wasn't working right, so I have basically got what the minutes read like, I recognize that they may not be totally accurate. There was a discussion there of what is discrimination, and for what it's worth, let me share with you the basic definition that we use, which might help you in your discussions over the next year's time. I know people customarily know that it's discrimination when someone who is consciously out to get somebody says, "I'm not going to hire this person because she is a female and women should not be doing this kind of work," or "we don't want minorities doing this kind of work". That is what you call the overt kind of discrimination, somebody who is really conscientiously out there to do somebody in. Let me say that that is definitely discrimination, but that that is only a small proportion, I think of the kind of thing that really comes in.

Most of what the courts wind up and the agencies wind up seeing as discrimination cases don't involve what you might call nasty people who are out to do somebody in. More often than not in this business today (and I would say it has been true over the last 10 years) what you see is a system of rules or a customary way of doing things, which works out to the detriment of a certain group of people. Let me give you an example. Suppose you believe that to be an effective police officer, you need to be an imposing figure who commands respect and you therefore say that to be a police officer you need to be over six feet tall, 6'6". You might have very good reason for believing that to be true. Now when they did the studies they found that wasn't even true but you could have legitimate reasons for believing that a person to be an effective police officer should be tall and imposing commanding respect. The last thing that might enter your mind, is the effect of having a rule like that, would be to completely exclude women, and to completely exclude most Asian people and to completely exclude most Alaska Natives, except possibly the Indian population, but certainly Eskimo and Aleuts. That is what I mean between, the difference between a rule or a set of ways of doing things which is created for even seemingly legitimate purpose person which might be questionable but created for any legitimate purposes. Nobody had in mind it's being used for discriminatory purpose, but it works out that way. And what you have to do, and what gets done in these discrimination cases, is to go back over that and to say, "well, we may have had legitimate reasons for having this set up this way but let's take a look at how it is working. Maybe we have to change our mind and come up with an alternative which still serves our own legitimate interest in getting a job done by say hiring quality people." That's what happens in these cases, so I offer that for a working definition of discrimination. To be aware not only of the situations where you've got an evil-minded person at bay, so to speak, but also the well-meaning rules of the game which need to be reexamined because they work out or have the effect of excluding an identifable group of people.

Ray: To capsulize that you are saying that you have premeditated and other --

Thomas: Precisely, Senator. There was some discussion at the last meeting on the question of how to get data. Let me say this to underscore the point that some of you seem to be making, and that is the importance of having data. Let me go back to that example of the tall trooper. Suppose you had statistics for Public Safety as a whole department and suppose you only had the number of women, or a proportion of the total employees in Public Safety who were females. If that is all you had, you might conclude that Public Safety doesn't have a risk of getting sued in sex discrimination cases because 40% of the women who work there, or 40% of the people who work there are women. You would need to have the proportion of troopers who were females, you have to have that particular piece of data, before you could say to yourself, "Wait, now maybe in hiring troopers, Public Safety has a problem, because there are no women." So, one piece of data that is very important to have is statistics by division. You need to be able to say "well Public Safety overall may have 40% women but the troopers may have a problem because in that division there is no women." So it is very important to have divisional data.

It is also important to have that data by geography. Suppose the trooper dispatchments everywhere but in Anchorage have a substantial number of women working as troopers and Anchorage none. Well, now maybe somebody wants to ask some questions about who makes the decisions about who gets hired in Anchorage because everybody else seems to find women for these jobs and it's just this one hiring authority who seems to have this problem. Maybe we need to go talk to this individual and see what the problem is. They may have a perfectly legitimate problem but without the data you can't really know where the problems are. And so, that is crucial. So one kind of data that it is really important to have, I suggest, is statistics by individual division which can also be looked at by geographic territory. Take the Labor Department for instance, it's highly regionalized. Their individual divisional managers with a great degree of authority. They would need to know how things break out in Fairbanks in the different positions by the people who make hiring decisions in order to find out whether one person is having a problem and somebody else isn't.

Another kind of data that is extremely important to have is what we call applicant flow data. You need to know what the proportion of people is who are applying for certain kinds of jobs, and let's keep this example going by saying the trooper, and what happens along the steps of the process. Take for instance, now let's say we have data by division by geography, and it shows us that there are no women working as troopers anywhere in the state. So it's clear that this doesn't seem to be the problem of any one particular person who does the hiring. And, now you might say, without this other type of data that I am calling applicant flow data, well, troopers had better go out and recruit females. Well you could then decide to spend a lot of state money recruiting women like crazy. But if you had the applicant flow data you might take a look and say "wait a minute, half of the people who applied to be troopers already are women. We are wasting our money recruiting more women. We had better find out what happened to those women." That's what applicant flow data does. You see what proportion of the people apply and then what happens to them in steps along the process.

Now what you might find is, go back to the example that I used earlier, this requirement, you have to be 6'6" tall to be a trooper, there is where the problem is. The applicant flow data reveals that because it shows that 40% of the people who apply are females and at the stage of personnel's reviewing for minimum qualifications, zero females qualify. Well, now we have zeroed in on the problem and saved a lot of money going out and recruiting for no purpose. We have demonstrated that the problem is not some evil-minded supervisor refusing to hire females because he doesn't think females make good troopers. It was some rule that was innocently created years ago that nobody has thought about. And that's, as I say, not a farfetched, but in fact a very common true example of what we consider to be the common effect discrimination case. And, as many of you know, it was a very common practice, up to about 6-8 years ago, for most law enforcement agencies around the country to have height requirements. And it's through this kind of data that those things have become passe'. I don't know of any law enforcement agency in the State of Alaska now that has a height requirement and it is because of the impact and the understandings that we have reached about what employment discrimination is. And that is why I caution you people not to leap to conclusions about there being evil-minded people out to discriminate against folks that might explain why some of this data that says we could do better in the equal employment area. I don't think it's evil-minded people, I think it's rules of the game that have been around a long time which need to be reexamined. That pretty much is what I wanted to share with you -- oh, one further word on data.

One of the common problems that exists in this business is to say where do we think we should be. For that we need another type of data and it's called availability data in the trade. We could say off the top of our heads, I suppose, that there are probably a fair number of females who could make good troopers, but how many females who could make good troopers? What is a fair goal to strike at. Should the state hope to have 10% of its troopers be females, or 30% or 40%? To get the answer to that kind of question you need to know how many females are available and interested in being troopers. Now, when you go at that on a job-type by job-type, it gets to be extremely difficult and a certain amount of guesswork. I would say one of the hardest things that people in Jim Fishers' EEO Division and their counterparts throughout the departments have to do is to make that decision. You can't set a goal by picking numbers out of the air. You have to have some rational basis for doing it. The rational basis is the question of "well, what proportion of people who want to be Human Rights Commission investigators and are available for doing that are minority people as opposed to white; or labor department employment security interviewers or secretaries in the Department of Military Affairs." You need to know what the availability is and that data is hard to come by.

The Municipality of Anchorage has asked the State Labor Department, which generates a very nice booklet about that type of data, at least on a population basis, to break it out even further by different racial groups. And I've noticed that some of your staff work attempts to take a look at the state's workforce in particularly with respect to Alaska Natives, not looking at other minority groups, you need to be able to compare that population data. And Chuck LaViege, who is Jim Fishers' counterpart for Municipality of Anchorage, wrote the Labor Department recently asking for that data to be developed more fully. And I would suggest that maybe the Blue Ribbon Commission could do this, help make better population, better availability data, available to people that have to do this kind of planning. It would be extremely helpful, and anything the Blue Ribbon Commission could do to help the state complete projects they it's already got underway to pull data together about the applicants, the people who are applying for the state, the people who now work for the state. I am sure that the state people here, Mr. Kareen and Mr. Fisher, would appreciate your help in those areas because they need it. It does cost money to do this kind of thing but you are shooting in the dark without that kind of data.

Ray: Mr. Thomas, Niel, in the sheet that you put out here, let me see if I can get this straightened out in my mind -- you had 75 cases open at the period of October 17th and out of that 75, does this 24 stand in there or --

Thomas: They are included in the 75.

Ray: Then if we were to eliminate the -- well I don't know if we can -- what I am trying to do is to get the percentage of these cases where -- of the 75 that are considered discrimination against minorities.

Thomas: Oh, I could do a quick count while someone else is testifying, because it would come off of this list that I just handed in, and give you a specific number on that.

Ray: I know that it is soft data but it would give us kind of a indication of what you caseload is or what your reoccurring problems are as far as minorities -- that is our --

Thomas: What I would like to do is to count that for you twice because of the 75 is that 24 all involving females. We will count those one way and then count them the other way and give them to you both ways.

Ray: But the cases involving the females, is that discrimination because they are females, or because of the certain class of work that they are doing?

Thomas: Just sex discrimination and it is all one case. That's why I was trying to make a fair statement by saying let's taken them as one case.

Ray: All right, if you would do that for us, I would sure we would be interested in it. Are there any questions from the commission?

Thomas: I also have a couple of other file documents which I will share with the staff: the Goveror's announcement about pulling together this kind of data which is dated February, 1978, and correspondence between us and the Administration, and my former testimony before the Civil Rights Commission.

Thayer: Sir, do you have a great many cases against the state, of what type they are the hiring practices, promotional practices, -- do you have an idea of where those complaints are fitting in -- what type --

Thomas: That computer file that I handed in has different flags on it which answers all those kinds of questions. The reason I brought it was that I thought you might have research of that type, that you want the staff to do. And we can be sure that they have the code that unlocks what these numbers mean on the sheets.

Ray: Thank you Niel.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT

RE: Issues Summary, Categories of Employees Subcommittee

RESTRUCTURING THE STATE'S CATEGORIES OF EMPLOYEES

The Committee may wish to consider a major overhaul of the categories of employees in order both to eliminate abuses in the use of temporary employees and to better respond to the state's staffing needs. Niel Thomas' memo of January 8, 1979, provides an analysis of the needs which temporaries are filling and of one alternative. Copies of that memo have been distributed to members. More copies are available from the staff, if needed.

STATUTES AND REGULATIONS

STATUTE: The personnel rules shall provide for: (9) temporary appointments to positions in the state service which are determined to be of a seasonal or temporary nature AS39.25.150.

PERSONNEL RULES

PERSONNEL RULE 1: Definitions. "Temporary Position" means a position established with an anticipated duration of less than six months.

PR5 06.0: Temporary appointments shall, when practicable, be made from eligible lists. If the Director has found it impracticable to make certification because of non-availability of eligibles, he may authorize the temporary appointment of a qualified individual designated by the appointing authority. No appointment shall exceed six months except where the Director grants an extension of a temporary appointment because of extenuating circumstances...The period of temporary service shall not be counted as part of the probationary period in case of subsequent appointment to a permanent position.

PR6 02.6: Probationary Periods. Duration: Time served on emergency or temporary employment shall not be counted as part of the probationary period.

PR10.05.6: Leaves of Absence. Temporary Leave: The provisions of this rule do not apply to: Temporary employees hired for periods of less than 12 consecutive months.

PR11 04.2: Separation and Demotion. No permanent employee or probationary employee in the classified service shall be laid off while there are emergency, provisional or temporary employees serving in the same position classification in the same agency or organizational unit or in other position classifications performing work to which the permanent or probationary employee could reasonably be assigned.

PR11 04.7: In the case of emergency, temporary, provisional, part-time or other limited employment of employees from layoff or eligible lists, the appointing authority shall indicate to the employee and the Director...the approximate date of termination of employment.

PR11 05.1: Dismissal. Employees who do not hold permanent status may be dismissed at any time at the discretion of the appointing authority. The employee shall be advised in writing of the reason for the dismissal...If the dismissal was due to discrimination based on race, color, sex, religion or political beliefs, the right of appeal exists.

PR11 07.0: Termination. Termination means the release from employment of a temporary or emergency employee upon completion of his term of service or the need for his services.

TEMPORARY EMPLOYEES

1. Lack of benefits. Of the benefits provided to permanent employees by the state, temporary employees are entitled to receive only holiday pay and unemployment insurance. Temporaries are not eligible for court leave, administrative leave, personal leave, hazard pay or retirement benefits. Even if a temporary employee is subsequently placed in a permanent position, he or she does not receive retroactive credit towards either retirement or seniority.

Temporary employment does not entitle employees to be placed on promotional registers. Since the state has a policy favoring filling positions by promotions, this penalizes temporary employees who may have worked for a substantial period of time for the state. (The question of whether the state should continue its policy on promotions is raised in the Classification, Certification and Recruitment Memorandum.)

If temporary employees did, in fact, work only for a short time in one position, then it might be inappropriate for the state to provide leave benefits. Temporaries would then be hired only where there were deadlines that could not otherwise be met, and if they were out on leave, the department would have to pay, not only their salary, but also the salary of a second replacement temporary.

Because the state does not have to pay for as many fringe benefits to temporaries as it does for permanent employees, it is cheaper for departments to hire temporaries. Program managers may therefore leave permanent positions vacant and hire temporaries instead so as to be able to increase the staff available to work on a project. For the same reason, departments may use temporary employees instead of permanent seasonal employees for recurrent seasonal needs. Some departments have a substantial number of such employees and would probably need a supplemental appropriation to fund benefits if they made use of the permanent seasonal category.

The Local No. 71 collective bargaining agreement addresses the lack of benefits provided to temporary employees. Members who are working as temporaries receive a wage supplement of $1.32 per hour for the first 120 days of work in a temporary position. After the 120 days, they shift from the entry level wage group into a higher level wage group.

REMEDY: Does the Commission wish to recommend that any of the following benefits be provided to temporary employees:

a) Court, administative, or personal leave;

b) Hazard pay;

c) Credit towards retirement benefits;

d) Right to placement or promotional registers based on temporary employment;

e) A wage supplement; or

f) Retroactive credit towards leave or retirement benefits or for seniority if placed in a permanent position?

If so, when should an employee be entitled to receive them?

2. Vacant permanent positions. The legislature reviews the number of vacant PCN's when it considers a department's budget requests. As a rule, those PCN's which have been vacant for more than six months are removed from the budget, unless the department can justify the delay in hiring. There is evidence that despite this policy, a number of PCN's are remaining vacant for several years.

REMEDY: Does the Commission wish to recommend more stringent review of vacant PCN's. If so, who should make this review, and what should be the result of the findings?

3. Time limits on employment of temporaries. The Personnel Rules provide that temporary employees can be employed in one position for a maximum of six months, with extensions possible in extenuating circumstances. PR5 06.0, implementing AS39.23.150(9). (The statute does not set any limit on the period of temporary employment.) Union contracts modify the rule. Local No. 71 members may serve as temporaries a maximum of 120 days before they are entitled to receive a bonus in addition to the $1.32 mentioned in Issue 1 , page 3). The APEA collective bargaining agreement limits employment of its members as temporaries to six months.

The six-month term is seen as excessively long by some. It invites departments to use temporary employees instead of hiring permanent full-time, part-time or seasonal employees, and permits them to evade the merit system established for hiring permanent employees.

On the other hand, some temporary employees and some program managers see the term as inadequate. The time required to establish a new position can cut into the time available for completion of a project, so managers may have no choice but to hire temporaries. If the project lasts longer than six months, then the manager is forced to train a new employee in the middle of the work. One witness suggested that some of the time required for implementation of a new program could be avoided if the legislature requested that departments present P402's for all positions created by a new program at the same time that the budget for the program was being considered.

REMEDY: Does the commission wish to recommend legislation to shorten or lengthen the time a temporary may be employed in one department?

Does the Commission wish to recommend the creation of a new category of Project Employee? (See discussion in the January 8, 1978 memorandum from Niel Thomas, and Issue 8, page 8, herein.)

Does the Commission wish to suggest to the legislature that they request P402's from departments to consider during their consideration of the budget for new programs?

NOTE: The Classification, Certification and Recruitment Subcommittee has before it the issue of time required to classify positions.

4. Category for federal program enrollees. Employees under both the CETA (Comprehensive Service Employment Program) and the SCSEP (Senior Community Service Employment Program) are presently classified as temporaries, although this classification creates some problems. Both programs are aimed at providing employment opportunities for underemployed groups of people.

a) SCSEP program. The state's practice of categorizing SCSEP enrollees as temporary employees appears to violate some of the federal regulations governing the program. (The regulations require that no limit be placed on the length of employment, that the employer provide a procedure for dispute resolution for enrollees, and that fringe benefits be administered uniformly to all enrollees working for that employer.)

To remedy this situation, APEA suggests that enrollees be placed in the permanent part-time category with designated PCN's set aside for that purpose. The terms of employment would be negotiated by APEA, the Division of Personnel, and the Office on Aging, particularly to provide for exemptions from the state's certification and examination competition requirements.

Another possibility is to place enrollees in the partially exempt service, which would allow for the provision of fringe benefits, but would exempt them from the selection requirements of the classified service. It would not provide for access to the grievance procedures set out in Rule 12, since they apply only to members of the classified service, nor would enrollees be APEA members and entitled to participate in the bargaining contract's grievance procedures.

b) CETA program. The federal regulations implementing the CETA program set the maximum salary which the federal government will provide for an enrolleee at $1,039 per month. The state may supplement that amount, should it wish to do so. Testimony was presented on the experiences of one CETA enrollee working at a correctional center. She indicated that she was doing the same work as the Correctional Officer I's employed at the institution, but that they were not part of the CETA program and therefore received significantly higher wages than she did. She knew of an instance where a CETA enrollee was supervising a non-CETA state employee who was much higher paid than the supervisor.

REMEDY: Does the Commission wish to recommend that a separate category for enrollees of these kinds of programs be established? If not, does the Commission wish to recommend whether the temporary category of employees should be used for them?

CETA program: Does the Commission wish to recommend that some measures be taken to address the salary differences:

1. Provide by stature that a program must supplement CETA funds with state funds to insure equity of salaries between its employees?

2. Ask the Alaskan congressional delegation to seek a cost-of-living adjustment from the federal government to reflect the higher cost of living in Alaska?

5. Hiring temporary employees from the registers. Although the Personnel Rules require that temporary appointments shall, when practicable, be made from the eligible lists, (PR5 06.0), most of the temporary employees who testified before the Commission were not hired from the registers. Requiring departments to abide by the rule and to hire temporaries from the registers could eliminate some of the abuses associated with temporary hiring practice. Abuses include hiring people who would not meet the minimum qualifications of a vacant permanent position so that they develop minimum qualifications and be placed in the position; hiring people from out-of-state as temporaries so that they can establish residency and be placed in permanent positons; and using the temporary period to add to the probationary period of permanent employment. Hiring from the register takes some time. Steps include request for and receipt of the register from the Division of Personnel; notification to eligibles on the register of the vacancy; interviews of those interested in the position; and selection from among the applicants. In some instances, program managers may not be able to leave a position vacant for the length of time required.

REMEDY: Does the Commission wish to recommend that legislation be adopted requiring that temporary employees be hired from the register except when there are no eligible lists available for that position?

QUESTION: Does the Commission wish to recommend that the existing Personnel Rules be more stringently enforced by the Division of Personnel? (Note that the Subcommittee on Classification, Certification and Recruitment is considering whether to require that the top five interested eligibles on the register be offered an apportunity for a meaningful interview before a position is filled. Classification, Certification and Recruitment Summary, Issue 9, page 10. It is also considering recommendations on enhancing the Division of Personnel's auditing role, Issue 10, page 12.)

6. Due process rights for temporary employees. Under the Personnel Rules, temporary employees have only a limited right to pursue grievances. The grievance procedures set out in Rule 12 are available to "any employee occupying a position in the classified service who has a grievance relating to his position, working conditions or employment over which the Executive Head of his department may lawfully exercise discretion". However, Rule 6 04.0 limits the rights of probationary employees to appeal or have a hearing for a dismissal, except where the dismissal was due to discrimination based on race, color, sex, religion, national origin, or political beliefs. The Division of Personnel has reasoned that temporary employees have less status than probationary employees, and that therefore if probationary employees' right to appeal adverse decisions are limited, then the right of temporary employees must also be limited.

The Personnel Board appeals procedure set out in AS39.25.170 has been administratively construed to apply to employees having a permanent status, rather than a probationary status, except in cases where dismissal of a probationary employee is due to racial, religious or political discrimination. Whaley v. State, 438, P.2d 718 (1968). Therefore, it is probably also unavailable to temporary employees.

Under collective bargaining agreements, the right of temporary employees to use the grievance procedures is limited as well. In the past, APEA did pursue grievances for temporary employees within their bargaining unit. However, the Division of Personnel began, about a year ago, to hold the association to the letter of the agreement. Under language that had been in the contract since at least 1973, the definition of employee did not include temporary employees.

Art. 1, Sec. 2(c) "Employee" in this Agreement means a person in the state service who is paid a salary or wage and holds probationary, permanent, or provisional status.

Grievances were defined as "any controversy or dispute arising between APEA or an employee of the bargaining unit and the Employer". Article X, Section 1. Given the language, an arbitrator upheld the Division's position, that grievance rights were not available to temporary employees, even though that language had not been challenged by the department in previous grievances on the behalf of temporaries within the unit.

The Local 71 contract provides that temporary employees have the right to grieve on contract terms and penalty pay, but that only permanent or probationary employees have a right to arbitration procedures.

NOTE: The Subcommittee on Merit System/Collective Bargaining is also considering this topic, which is repeated here. It is Issue number 8 of their summary.

QUESTION: Does the Commission wish to recommend that temporary employees be afforded due process rights beyond those presently provided for in cases of discrimination based on race, color, sex, religion, national origin or political beliefs?

7. Union membership for temporary employees. Several of the temporary employees who testified before the Commission objected to having to belong to unions. Temporary employees indicated that they felt that the union was not representing their interests. APEA representatives pointed out that a considerable amount of their lobbying effort last session had been directed at securing fringe benefits for temporaries. Temporary employees benefit from the salaries negotiated for all employees. In addition, members of Local 71 received a wage supplement, as noted above, for employment as temporaries.

The Public Employees Relations Act does not require that all employees within a unit belong to the association which has organized that unit. In fact, it requires that non-association employees having bona fide religious objections to membership in an association be permitted to contribute an amount equal to the dues to the union, which then must contribute that amount to charity. The contracts in force with the state have agency shop clauses, reached through negotiation, which require that non-exempted employees join the union within 30 days of employment.

QUESTION: Does the Commission wish to consider this issue?

8. Project category employees. It is difficult to plan for permanent positions in programs funded through federal grants whose receipt is not guaranteed from year to year. Program managers are not authorized to fill those positions until after funding is definite. This leads to the employment of temporaries in those positions. An alternative would be to create a new category for project employees. The employees would understand that their continued employment would be dependent upon the receipt of funds for the project.

REMEDY: Does the Commission wish to recommend the creation of a category of employee for special projects?

9. Pool of on-call permanent employees. The state could develop a pool of skilled, permanent employees who would be on call to the various departments to fill in during vacations and to be available during unexpected vacancies or periods of peak work. The departments would have to work with the Division of Personnel to identify which classifications are used enough to benefit from a pool. Certainly clerical needs could be filled from a pool, and perhaps accounting. Some positions could be set aside for people interested in working part-time.

QUESTION: Does the Commission wish to recommend the creation of a pool of permanent employees in frequently used classifications to be available to departments as needed? If so, who should be responsible for hiring and pay?

10. Contractual employees. The Subcommittee decided at its organizational meeting to reserve the question of the state's contracting practices for later consideration.

MINUTES

Frank Flavin, Vice Chairman, called the subcommittee meeting to order. Following roll call, Mr. Flavin introduced Bill Mullin, Director of the Division of Finance in the Department of Administration. Mr. Mullin presented the following summary of his division's role in professional service contracting.

Professional service contracts have always been reviewed by the Department of Administration. Shortly after statehood, the review function was placed in the hands of the Division of Budget and Management. It was then given to the Division of Internal Audit, and then finally to the Division of Finance. The review is typically to determine that contracting services and funding are included in agencies' budgets. If the dollars are not specifically enumerated in an agency's budget, the agency is asked to justify the expenditure to either the division or the Department of Administration. Frequently, agencies submit justification along with requests for authorization to enter into contract negotiations. If the request is reasonable, then it is approved. If not, the matter is brought to the attention of the division director and possibly before the Commissioner for consultation. The Division of Finance also reviews travel requests, equipment expenditures, etc., to verify that these items are identified and provided for in agency budgets, or if the need is justified.

In the mid 1960's, considerable efforts by the Division of Budget and Management led to the adoption of a standard contract form. In the early 1970's, the Department of Administration became concerned about contracting practices, and the Commissioner decided that the department should receive advance notice of an agency's intentions to contract for services. This led to the development of a new form known as the ATEN, which is a request for authorization to enter negotiations. This form was designed to put the Department of Administration on notice when an agency wished to negotiate with a vendor for services. In 1971, ATEN's were sent to the Governor's Office for review, and this practice continued through 1976. The Governor's Office then decided that its review was no longer required, and contracting review became the responsibility of the Department of Administration.

At one point, the Internal Revenue Service challenged the state on an allegation that contractual employees were not performing independent business and should actually be on the state's payroll. This allegation led to a reevaluation of the state's contracting practices. In some instances, there were people on contracts who should have been state employees, and they were placed on the state's payroll. In the majority of cases, the state asserted that the contracts were appropriate. The IRS investigation ended last year, and the state's position was successful--it has not had to pay additional IRS or social security taxes.

The function of reviewing contracts was turned over to the Division of Internal Audit in 1975 or 1976, when the Division of Budget and Management was moved to the Governor's Office. In 1977, the function was placed with the Division of Finance.

When the Division of Internal Audit received the review function, it expanded the contracting authorization form, adopted state purchasing regulations and printed information and instructions concerning procedures on the new contract form. When the contract review was transferred to the Division of Finance, it set a tentative work plan for adopting additional guidelines for agencies on how to determine contracting needs, how to execute negotiations, and how to control actual contracting services. These guidelines were issued in July, 1978, and have not been revised since that date.

The Division of Finance determined that contracts should be reviewed by a committee rather than by a single staff member, and this led to the establishment of a contract review committee consisting of the contract review officer of the Division of Finance, the Deputy Director of Supply and Preaudit, and the Director of the Division of General Services and Supply. All professional service contracts and all requests for authorization to enter negotiations are handled by the Contract Review Committee. In unclear cases, the committee may question the agency and receive oral presentations providing justification for entering into negotiations for services not identified in an agency's budget. The contract review officer is responsible for logging in documents, correspondence, bookkeeping and transmittal of finalized contracts to the committee.

Mr. Mullin stated that the division needs a standardized contract form. The original form created in the 1960's was never printed. It was recorded on Mag Cards, and the cards have been changed over the years by each agency. In 1978, the Attorney General's Office, in conjunction with the Division of Finance, drafted a contract form which was only agreed upon two months ago. The form will be printed before the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. Mullin asked if there were any questions, and Frank Flavin asked whether contracting regulations would be placed under the Administrative Procedures Act. Mr. Mullin responded that it has been considered, and as the regulations now exist, they would not meet A.P.A. standards. There is also a separate question as to whether they should be placed under the A.P.A. because they are agency guidelines and have no external impact. Mr. Flavin noted that they do impact vendors throughout the state, and the vendors' ability to compete in the bidding process. Mr. Mullin elaborated that the regulations do provide for various procedures depending on the value of the contract. If a contract is for less than $300, an agency may contract without going through the process. Contracts for services costing from $300-2,000 must be requested on a standard form and be signed by both parties. If a request is for over $2,000, an agency must submit an ATEN form. A request for proposal (RFP) must be submitted for all contracts exceeding $20,000.

Pat Murphy asked whether there are any standards for determining whether an individual is an employee or a contractor and who makes that decision. Mr. Mullin responded that the IRS was prohibited by the U.S. Congress from making that determination. Congresss has been working on establishing a law spelling out guidelines for the last few years, and by 1981 expects to have made some determinations. There are no provisions in the statutes covering the topic, and the only guidelines are common-law determinations. Initially, agencies make the decision of whether there is justifiable need for contracting services. The Division of Finance does occasionally, however, reject proposals following its investigations. The questionnaire on the back of the ATEN form is designed to alert agencies to that question.

Mr. Murphy asked whether Mr. Mullin was aware that 42 out of 45 contracted individuals in the Department of Education had been found, at one time, to be performing duties of classified state employees. He asked how these employees ended up on contracts and why they slipped through the division's review process. Mr. Mullin responded that these individuals were on the state's payroll and were thus paying state and federal taxes in accordance with the law while they were on contract. Some of the employees were certificated teachers, who are exempt by statute. Others were administrators prescribing courses for teachers, and there is not much distinction between these two functions. There was nothing illegal or unusual about contracting for these services.

Mr. Murphy stated that anything other than a strict review procedure creates conflicts between special-interest groups, their memberships, the agencies and the Governor's Office. He added that there are many reasons for contracting out work, such as good management policy. Mr. Murphy again asked if there is really a review procedure or standards for these actions. Mr. Mullin explained that there is no written policy either in the law or in the regulations that mandates when the state shall enter into contracts or when an employee shall be placed on the state's payroll.

Mr. Flavin pointed out that the Attorney General has issued an opinion that the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities is an independent contracting agency. He asked if contracts from that department are still subject to Division of Finance regulations. Mr. Mullin explained that he is not familiar with the department's procedures, but they are exempted by law from review of architectural and engineering studies contracts, which are probably the bulk of their contracting services. The Division of Finance does review at least some of their contracts and ATEN's. Since the department receives federal monies, their contracting review procedures must meet federal standards.

Lois Jund asked Mr. Mullin to shed some light on the problems observed in contracting in the Division of Data Processing. Mr. Mullin responded that he knows of only one individual contracted by the Division of Data Processing in Juneau who is a former state employee. This individual opened his own business, and the division currently holds contracts with the firm for the services of three employees.

There were no further questions, and Mr. Flavin thanked Mr. Mullin on behalf of the commission for his assistance.

On the topic of exempt positions which were enumerated in Terry Cramer's memo, Mr. Flavin asked what the philosophy is for placing positions in the exempt and partially exempt services. Ken Kareen explained that initially, judges were placed in the exempt service, and their administrative staff was placed in the partially exempt service. Because of disagreements concerning salary ranges (partially exempt and classified positions are set in the state's classification and pay plans) all judicial branch employees were moved to the exempt service. He added that in the judges opinion, the separation of powers doctrine forbad the executive branch through its classification actions from dictating to the judicial branch concerning its employees. The judicial branch has adopted its own merit system.

Ms. Jund commented that psychiatrists in the Department of Health and Social Services were placed in the exempt service because of difficulties in recruiting professionals in that particular field and because they command compensation above normal salary ranges. This is also the case for other classifications, such as those of petroleum geologists and engineers. Mr. Kareen stated that some licensed professionals, such as medical doctors, will not accept jobs that require paying union dues because they already pay professional association dues.

Mr. Flavin reviewed the list of positions in the exempt service, and noted that several commissions were exempt. Sue Greene explained that this is in all probability because these agencies wish to maintain the appearance of not being run or influenced by the administration, and being exempt gives them a sort of "symbolic autonomy". This is the case with both the Commercial Fisheries and Post Secondary Education Commissions. Mr. Flavin commented that this autonomy may be valid at the commissioner level, but possibly not for employees. Mr. Murphy asserted that the reason both commissions were placed in the exempt service was simply a matter of someone failing to properly proofread a 50-page bill.

Mr. Flavin asked if the subcommittee wished to recommend that lower-level positions be subject to the merit system of the classified service. He suggested that the subcommittee might present the legislature with examples of positions that might be placed in the classified service so that legislators could make their own determinations. Ms. Jund stated that she would like to hear why certain positions are in the exempt service. She added that she could understand the placement of the D-2 Commission in the exempt service, but could not understand why clerk typists and document processing clerks would be exempt.

Mr. Kareen stated that although there is an Attorney General's analysis of reasons for placement of the Post Secondary Education Commission in the exempt service, there probably isn't anyone to justify the placement of other positions in the services. Mr. Murphy agreed that even incumbents are not aware of the reasons they are in particular services. Mr. Flavin responded that the subcommittee might wish to note its concern in the report to the legislature. Terry Cramer commented that the only partially exempt position that seemed questionable was that of the regional loan manager. Nobody could see any reason for the position being partially exempt, other than its traditional tracking of the PCN. Mr. Kareen said that at the time of statehood, the Governor designated positions to the partially exempt service, and justification was not required. A great many of the positions in the Department of Commerce loan program were designated to the partially exempt service.

Ms. Jund asked whether it would be appropriate to recommend that positions in the partially exempt service be placed under the merit system of the classified service, but excluded from bargaining.

Mr. Flavin pointed out that guidelines do not have the force of law unless promulgated under A.P.A. regulations. Mr. Murphy elaborated that the Personnel Rules are considered guidelines and can be disregarded. Mr. Murphy asked whether a lawsuit brought by an employee or applicant on violations of procedures in the Personnel Rules would be valid. Could the court force compliance? Mr. Flavin responded that the Personnel Rules are a separate case because they are statutorily promulgated by the Personnel Board. Mr. Kareen asserted that there needs to be some latitude for delivering services to the taxpayer in the most efficient and cost-effective manner, and this includes making use of private enterprise or contractors if necessary. Mr. Flavin responded that latitude is often mistaken for license.

Mr. Murphy asked for Mr. Flavin's point of view on promulgating contracting regulations through the A.P.A. Mr. Flavin explained that the Ombudsman's Office does receive complaints from vendors who believe that they can offer a similar service for less and who ask why they were not given an opportunity to bid on a project. The office also receives complaints from state employees who believe they could do the job. Mr. Flavin added that there is a significant amount of abuse of contracting privileges, but not a great amount. Currently, committments vary from agency to agency, and there is very little auditing done in some agencies. Mr. Kareen noted that there are only a few people who will flagrantly violate the regulations, and creating more specific regulations will place a greater burden upon people who are conscientious. There will always be errors and mistakes, as well as a few who will try to get away with what they can.

Mr. Flavin commented that the question only concerned the status of the regulations, not the content. Enforcing regulations already in existence might be a better alternative than making new guidelines and would be more effective if the regulations had the force of law. Mr. Murphy moved that the subcommittee recommend that the full commission be informed of the possibility of making the internal regulations on contracting procedures subject to the Administrative Procedures Act of the State of Alaska. There were no objections.

Mr. Kareen suggested that since the subcommittee had completed its business, that it set a date in the near future for termination. Mr. Flavin agreed that if nothing is assigned to the subcommittee for consideration before the next commission meeting, it should advise the full commission that its tasks are completed.

The meeting was adjourned.

In the absence of Representative Buchholdt and Frank Flavin, Lynda McCurry chaired the meeting. Ms. McCurry referred to the issue of contractual services and employees discussed at the last meeting. Terry Cramer pointed out that the legislative resolution creating the commission specifically directs members to address the feasibility of establishing "a method for regularizing the hiring of specialists who, because of higher comparable salaries in the private sector for the skills involved, must be paid at levels in excess of the salary schedule".

Ken Kareen explained that the state is supposed to use Internal Revenue Service guidelines to distinguish between employees and contractors. Exceptions are made for attorneys and for part-time medical doctors. Teacher contracts are covered by special provisions, and they are technically the only contract employees in the state. All others are considered contractors.

Pat Murphy described his experiences with state contracts used by the Department of Education. In 1971, the Department of Education was delegated the authority to contract out for teacher services, and this privilege was abused when employee services were contracted even though they did not fulfill teaching requirements. Mr. Murphy commented that it took four or five months to straighten out the problem after bringing it to the Commissioner's attention. He added that there are also problems arising in the Division of Data Processing. There are 35 PCN's in the Division, and 16 are vacant because they are being filled with contract employees. There appears to be a question of contracting for services that can be performed by classified employees.

Mr. Kareen explained the procedure for justifying the need for contractual services: When an agency intends to contract for services, it must fill out a form requesting authorization. The request is submitted to the Division of Finance for presentation before a committee of three individuals for consideration. No contract is binding until approved by the Division of Finance. Construction contracts let on bids are exempted from this process. Mr. Kareen added that Mr. Murphy's concerns are universal between any management and union, whether private or public. Mr. Murphy asserted that the issue should be reviewed, citing the Department of Education as an example of 40-45 positions being placed back in the classified service following the 1971 review of contracts. The issue is not necessarily a union/management question, and it should be considered by the commission.

Ms. McCurry pointed out that data-entry services were contracted out for some time by the Division of Data Processing. She asked if there is a cost analysis done prior to contracting. Lois Jund stated that the Department of Administration makes a determination on whether they will approved contracting from what agencies submit. The problem in the Division of Data Processing became evident when that division could not finish a project in time to meet federal deadlines. There was insufficient staff to get the job done, and the division recommended contracting for services. Pat Murphy responded that at least some of the Data Processing contractors were state employees who were terminated and immediately place under contract with the Division.

Ken Kareen explained that development and modification of soft-ware is also considered a contractual job in the Division of Data Processing. John Pugh commented that contracting has also increased recently in the Department of Health and Social Service's Medicaid Program. Mr. Pugh added that he believes there should be some procedure for determining whether contracting is in the best interests of the state. Mr. Kareen commented that contractual services are identified in agency budgets, and inquiries on such expenditures vary from one legislative session to the next. However, the issue is never really ignored because the costs must be justified in the budget process. The subcommittee decided to ask the Director of the Division of Finance to address members on his division's practices in approving contracts. There was no further discussion on the topic.

Referring to the memos on partially exempt positions, Terry Cramer stated that the last memo distributed showed positions placed in that service. There was general agreement that a list of exempt positions would contain the positions on which the subcommittee has questions. Lois Jund commented that the partially exempt list did not appear to be complete. She knew of additional Division Directors in the Department of Health and Social Services who did not appear on the list. Mr. Kareen pointed out that Directors, Deputy Directors and their secretaries are in the partially exempt service by statutory definition. There are criteria set out in the statutes giving the Personnel Board authority to extend the partially exempt service. Positions responsible for the formulation or implementation of policy and those whose duties are not susceptible to normal methods of recruitment and examination may be placed in the partially exempt service.

Pat Murphy mentioned that changes to the classified and partially exempt services handled by the Personnel Board are performed without any advance notice to either the bargaining units or to incumbents. He objected to the methods in which positions are being moved from the classified to partially exempt service. When the Older American Program General Government Unit positions in the Department of Health and Social Services were placed in the partially exempt service, APEA wasn't notified of the action until two weeks after it was taken. Mr. Kareen explained that the Division of Personnel received verbal directions from the Personnel Board following the incident to notify unions and incumbents of such actions in the future. Mr. Murphy pointed out that the Personnel Board consists of volunteers who have no formal staff to perform such functions. Mr. Kareen stated that the statutes were written from a model over 20 years old which did not anticipate collective bargaining in the state. The allocation of positions to the classified or partially exempt service is treated by the Act as a management prerogative. The Commissioner of Administration is petitioned for changes in services, and he/she submits the proposal to the Personnel Board, which has discretion as to whether a notice of the change is posted. The Division of Personnel has always understood that hearings are held at the Personnel Board's discretion. In a few instances, Mr. Kareen mentioned that the Personnel Board has called an incumbent in a position being changed, but that has not been an established procedure. Mr. Murphy commented that in one situation, a Director was moved from the classified to partially exempt service and was then terminated the following day. The procedure can be used to the detriment of state employees.

Lynda McCurry suggested recommending that a procedure manual be written for the Personnel Board. Mr. Murphy stated that it would be helpful to have guidelines for everyone to follow. Terry Cramer pointed out that the Personnel Board has the authority to adopt its own rules of procedure, which are exempt from the Administration Procedures Act. John Pugh stated that the Personnel Board has the authority to adopt its own procedures.

Mr. Kareen asserted that there is another area in the service which is recognized by the federal government as partially exempt: employees who don't promulgate or interpret policy but who must advocate existing policy. There is no provision in the statutes for placing these employees in the partially exempt service. Mr. Pugh responded that the subparagraph permitting positions with responsibility for policy implementation would include those required to advocate the policy.

Mr. Pugh stated that it is critical to reconcile the clash between rights granted to management under the Personnel Act with rights granted to unions under the P.E.R.A. Unions have a right to those positions which fall within their units as established by the Labor Relations Agency. Therefore, they have an interest in changes of positions within each unit from classified to partially exempt. Mr. Kareen commented that in comparison to other states, Alaska has a very low percentage of partially exempt employees. He added that there is concern about excluding career employees with major responsibilities in administering contracts from collective bargaining practices. Mr. Pugh commented that he doesn't believe that this mid-level management group should be removed from the classified service, although it should be prohibited from collective bargaining. Those employees are career service employees. There are dangers to politicizing those positions--they need protection from removal every time a new boss comes in. They should therefore remain in the classified service. In addition, incumbents in positions whose service is changed by the legislature should have appeal rights to the Personnel Board. Ms. Jund asserted that there is a need for another service providing the benefits of the classified service but not collective bargaining. Terry Cramer commented that Mike McMullen in the Classification and Pay Section had informed her of five state employees who are in this situation. However, their right to bargain has not been affected: The Labor Relations Agency held that they were not within any existing units, but they were not forbidden from organizing a separate bargaining unit.

The subcommittee decided to examine the list of exempt positions before making a recommendation on the partially exempt service. There were no objections. Ms. McCurry adjourned the meeting.

Frank Flavin, Vice Chairman, called the meeting to order and asked members if there were issues other than those outlined in the September 26 summary they wished to address. There were no additions.

On the nonpermanent hire law, Mr. Flavin asked if part-time temporaries are limited to 120 days of employment or the equivalent in hours. He also asked if the law applies to exempt employees. The law limits part-time temporaries to 120 calendar days as it does full-time temporaries (nonpermanents). Ken Kareen responded that it does not apply to partially-exempt or exempt employees.

On the issue of state practices in obtaining services or goods by contract, Mr. Flavin pointed out that there are two components to the issue: contractual employees and contractual services. Darlene Livermore stated that the state is drastically expanding areas of contracting and cited the Division of Data Processing as an example of where this is taking place. Mr. Flavin commented that he has found instances where contracted employees should actually be employed by the state, under Internal Revenue Service regulations. Ken Kareen explained that the the Division of Finance in the Department of Administration monitors contracting practices. The procedure calls for their authorization before a contract is negotiated and again before a contract is entered. The standards for distinguishing between someone whose services are contracted for and a state employee are the same as those followed by the IRS. Mr. Kareen believes that the number of contracts entered into by the state has diminished. The Division of Personnel doesn't usually get involved in the procedure. However, in some instances, the Division of Finance does request input from the division. The Department of Education did request assistance from the Division of Personnel on teachers' contracts when there was some question as to the legitimacy of the practices.

Mr. Flavin asserted that the subcommittee could recommend that there be more enforcement of contracting regulations. Mr. Kareen explained that the Division of Personnel does not monitor contracts and not all agencies are subject to review by the Division of Finance.

Darlene Livermore stated that the Division of Finance is responsible for reviewing only monetary terms of contracts to verify that they are consistant with IRS standards. Mr. Flavin asked if the forms used by the Division of Finance question whether services could be performed by a state employee. Mr. Kareen explained that there are different forms, and one is used only by the Department of Education for teachers. At one point, the Department of Education form was used improperly for administrative employees.

Ms. Livermore pointed out that there are former employees of the Division of Data Processing who are now performing the same functions for the division under contracts. Mr. Kareen stated that these employees are now working for contractors used by the state. John Pugh asserted that the Division of Data Processing is a good example of an agency that is contracting for personnel services ineffectively. Mr. Flavin suggested that monitoring contracting practices could be another function of a Department of Employee Relations. Abusing contracting privileges is already illegal, but there is an apparent lack of monitoring and enforcement.

Ms. Livermore commented that some collective bargaining contracts contain provisions regarding contracting and subcontracting. In response to Mr. Flavin's question on the extent of state policy, Mr. Kareen stated that policies differ from agency to agency. Mr. Pugh cited a need for planning of future personnel and program requirements. This should be done on a long-term basis as a cost saving mechanism. Mr. Kareen pointed out that there is another committee studying the practices of the Division of Data Processing.

Mr. Flavin asked whether there are personnel planners to perform such functions. Ms. Livermore replied that there are people who specialize in staffing. Mr. Kareen stated that each manager in the state has responsibility for program planning. The state does not employ any manpower specialists because in addition to the knowledge of personnel planning, they must have expertise in various fields. The state is too small to support such a function. Mr. Flavin commented that there is a need in the budget process for review of new projects to justify their objectives. He asked whether the Division of Budget and Management could question personnel projections and examine the cost efficiency factors. Mr. Pugh observed that presently, only monetary terms are considered in determining what is most economical for a single fiscal year. There is no consideration given to long-term planning of staff and funding requirements. Ms. Livermore pointed out that the federal system has a personnel management office that provides specialists who consult with agencies on program objectives.

Mr. Pugh asked what type of studies are required prior to the authorization of contracts. Mr. Kareen responded that one collective bargaining contract provides that a study be performed to verify the ability of the contractor to provide services at less cost to the state than could state employees. Otherwise, there must be justification through the budget process that contracts are more economical. Mr. Kareen commented that the theory of obtaining the best and most economical services is good. However, it is difficult to identify how services can be accomplished and the costs of alternatives. The ideal would be providing the highest quality and quantity of service to the public at the least expense. He added that there will always be disagreement on whether the proper choice was made. John Pugh suggested that there needs to be more than a study of the financial aspects of contracts. The best alternative for one year isn't necessarily the best alternative in the long run. Mr. Kareen commented that many agencies operate with federal monies and therefore cannot plan for a long-term program.

The subcommittee took no position on the issue.

On the issue of excluding policy-making supervisors from collective bargaining, Ms. Livermore stated that there are many employees in the partially exempt service who have little policy-making authority, but are excluded from bargaining. A number of these positions were assigned to the partially exempt service by legislative action that was not based on policy-making criteria. In the Limited Entry Program, for example, there are 40 or 50 employees who are classified as such without those responsibilities. Mr. Flavin stated that there are some supervisors in the classified service who should be in the partially exempt service. He suggested that the subcommittee review both services. Mr. Pugh commented that any changes made in those services would require statutory revisions.

Mr. Kareen explained that there are three ways in which positions are placed in the various services. The State Personnel Act initially placed legislative and court system employees in the exempt service. Employees in the Office of the Governor, unless their positions are federally funded, are in the partially exempt service, as are attorney members of the Attorney General's Office. Commissioners are exempt, and their secretaries are partially exempt.

The second method by which positions are placed in the exempt or partially exempt service is as a result of case-by-case legislative action. The legislature enacts laws which state that a certain position (s) will be exempt or partially exempt. For example, the Director of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations was recently placed in the partially exempt service. The legislature does not appear to follow clear standards in making its decisions about which service positions should be in.

The third method is created by the State Personnel Act. By action of the Personnel Board, following petitioning of the Commissioner of the Department of Administration, a position may be moved from the partially exempt to the classified service or the other way around. The petition must demonstrate that certain criteria are met before the Personnel Board may act. The Personnel Board has no jurisdiction to change the status of those positions which have been placed in one service by legislative action. Ms. Livermore added that the employees of the Limited Entry Commission has all been placed in the exempt service by legislative action. Mr. Flavin recommended that the subcommittee initiate a study on the numbers of positions in the partially exempt and exempt service to determine placement patterns. The staff was directed to present an overview on the subject.

On another issue, Mr. Kareen stated that someone from the Legislative Affairs Agency had searched through the statutes to isolate references to the personnel system. The results were lengthy, and he feels that the Personnel Act is not codified well. He added that the Personnel Act makes no mention of those scattered positions which are to be in the partially exempt and exempt services. Mr. Flavin moved that the subcommittee recommend that all personnel sections in the statutes be codified into a cohesive form located in one chapter. There were no objections, and the motion passed.

The subcommittee addressed the issue of initiating a study of PCN's remaining vacant for excessive lengths of time. Mr. Pugh stated that because of underfunding in many agencies, there would be difficulty in studying vacant PCN's at this time. Lynda McCurry pointed out that vacant PCN's are going to be used when reclassifying temporaries under the nonpermanent hiring law. Mr. Flavin suggested that the subcommittee table the issue until it has seen the reaction to the new law.

Mr. Flavin adjourned the meeting at 9:30.

WORK SESSION SUMMARY
CATEGORIES OF EMPLOYEES SUBCOMMITTEE
Anchorage, January 26 & 27, 1979

The following are points raised in response to an APEA proposal passed out at the meeting (copy attached):

POINTS RAISED

1. Restricting temporary employment time to 60 days would be too restrictive on departments. A more appropriate solution would be to audit departmental use of temporaries.

2. Legislative finance committees should be informed of the problems inherent in using temporaries, so that they will be willing to create additional permanent positions.

3. The Department of Health and Social Services' policy on hiring temporaries was discussed. A subcommittee will review the policy and make a presentation. Appointed to the subcommittee were John Pugh, Lynda McCurry and Ken Humphreys. In the review, the subcommittee should research the possibility of requiring that temporaries be assigned salary ranges comparable to those assigned to similar permanent classifications.

4. There was discussion of the effects of Kelly vs. Hammond: What effect will the case have on legislative authority? Can the legislature require that departments create and fill permanent rather than temporary positions? Ken Humphreys will research the question and report to the subcommittee.

5. There was discussion on problems within the CETA program. CETA employees are being used by the state as an inexpensive work force. However, under federal regulations, CETA's cannot replace permanent employees. A letter was received from Jean S. Conway dated January 8, 1978 (copy attached). Also attached is a copy of CETA regulations.

The subcommittee adjourned and reconvened on Saturday afternoon. The following are motions adopted:

MOTIONS ADOPTED

1. Pat Murphy moved that the subcommittee recommend legislation on temporaries be introduced this session. The motion was adopted: One member opposed.

2. Don Fisher moved that the subcommittee shall recommend that a maximum time limit be required on temporary employment. The motion was adopted: Two members opposed.

There was discussion on the question of whether the Commission should recommend modification of the Collective Bargaining Act. It was decided that subcommittee proposals should be presented as joint legislative resolutions to have the effect of a policy statement, except where statute amendment is clearly necessary.

3. Don Fisher moved that all temporaries shall be hired from eligibility lists (registers). The motion was adopted: One member opposed.

4. Pat Murphy moved that the number of temporaries shall be limited to 10% of the previous fiscal year's man-months worked, based on permanent classified positions within each department. The motion was adopted. Three members opposed.

Paddy Moriarty amended the motion that the number of temporaries shall be limited according to future figures, after futher research. The amendment was adopted. Three members opposed.

5. Representative McKinnon moved that the subcommittee shall adopt a resolution to support the bill sponsored by Senator Ray on retroactive retirement benefits for permanent employees for prior temporary employment. The motion was adopted. Two members opposed.

6. Pat Murphy moved that the subcommittee shall adopt a resolution to support legislation introduced in the Senate recommending health insurance benefits for all employees after 30 days in service with the State of Alaska. The motion was adopted. Two members opposed.

DISCUSSION

The subcommittee discussed requiring Division of Personnel authorization before any department could hire a temporary. Justification for hiring a temporary rather than a permanent employee would be required, as is currently required by the Department of Health and Social Services. Pat Hunt and Ken Kareen will present their evaluation of the proposal at a later subcommittee meeting.

The subcommittee work session was chaired by Representative McKinnon.

CATEGORIES OF EMPLOYEES
Work Session Summary
February 23, 1979

Representative McKinnon chaired the work session. A summarization follows:

SUBCOMMITTEE DISCUSSION

Ken Humphreys presented a revised copy of the Temporary Hire Bill, pointing out changes that had been made to the draft in accordance with amendments discussed at the last work session.

Pat Hunt asked what would happen if a department tried to have a permanent position authorized but the legislature refused to fund the position: Would the director be able to authorize the department to hire a temporary for this position, assuming the department had other funds availabe? Mr. Humphreys explained that the bill, as drafted, might prohibit the hiring of temporaries in such cases. Authorization could be granted if either the legislature authorized the work to be done by temporaries or if an urgent program need unexpectedly developed and permanent staff could not handle the workload. (Page 2, line 3, subsection (1) and line 10, subsection (3).) However, the Director could find under subsection (3) that the department could not reasonably meet the program need through a permanent position since the authorization was denied and therefore could permit hiring a temporary. These cases would have to be addressed as they arise, considering the individual facts. In addition, if the department had requested that new positions be created, but the Governor refused to include them in the budget, the director might then be able to provide for them. If funding is made available for personal service, but the legislature refuses to authorize permanent positions, then the director will have to authorize the department to hire temporaries.

If the legislature provides a personal services appropriation to a department, then this act sets a priority on permanent positions, and the department should hire permanent employees instead of temporaries.

Pat Murphy questioned whether only the legislature can create a permanent position. He referred to Kelly vs. Hammond, where a position was authorized by the executive branch. Representative McKinnon clarified Mr. Murphy's reference, stating that the Office of Management and Budget may authorize a permanent position during the legislative interim, which automatically becomes a request for a new permanent position for the next legislative session.

Discussion followed on a proposed effective date for the draft bill. There was a general concensus that the subcommittee recommend to the Commission that the effective date be September 30, 1979. This would not coincide with the peak temporary employment period and would allow sufficient time for notification of departments.

Niel Thomas brought up the topic of violations of the 120-day limit on temporary employment. He asked what provision is made for federally funded programs and projects which exceed that time frame. Ken Humphreys expressed doubt that the limit would be violated because the director would have the authority to decide whether a temporary position could be extended, as would be the case in projects of limited duration exceeding 120 days. In this instance, an employee would have to be informed of the duration of the project in advance. The civil liability section (page 3, line 19) applies only to appointments of temporaries and not to violations of the time limit set.

The topic of benefits provided to temporaries was introduced by Niel Thomas: What is the subcommittee's intent? Pat Murphy explained that a bill is in the House State Affairs Committee which, if passed, would provide medical (health) insurance to temporaries after a 90-day employment period. The bill originally read after a 30-day employment period, but has been changed by the Committee. There was general agreement that the topic should be addressed at the Commission work session.

The Legislative Affairs Agency has researched the question of what effect changes in the Personnel Act (AS39.25) have on the scope of collective bargaining. Their informal opinion is that if the Personnel Act amendment is clearly intended to apply, then it would control contract negotiations in the future, though it would not amend existing contracts. If the draft temporary hire bill were introduced and passed by the legislature, then it would establish the limits within which collective bargaining could occur. A contract could further limit the times permitted. Personnel Rules are changes which are made without legislative action and therefore do not affect the scope of collective bargaining, except to the extent that the rules are implementation of statutory direction. Representative McKinnon requested a memo from Legislative Affairs on that subject.

Frank Flavin moved that the subcommittee recommend to the Commission that the Personnel Rules be made subject to the Administrative Procedures Act (A.P.A.). This would open the process and would provide the legislature with an opportunity to consider changes made in the rules. A member of the public (or an employee of the state or a union representing employees) could petition for a rule change, but the department cannot be required to propose rules. There is no recourse if the department refuses to act on a suggested change.

The A.P.A. requires that a notice of intent to adopt rules be given and that an opportunity for testimony be provided, although that opportunity can be in the form of accepting written comments only. The comment time is a minimum of 30 days. Then, before the rules can become effective, they must be filed with the Lieutenant Governor's office for 30 days. In emergency situations, the department can adopt emergency rules which have effect for 60 days, and also begin the process of adopting permanent rules. If the rules govern only the internal management policy, then they are exempted from the process. To the extent the rules affect the general public, they would not be exempt. The Department of Law provides advice to the other departments on what is and is not exempt, but the departments are free (as is any attorney's client) to ignore that advice. The question arises only when the department has labeled a rule as an internal matter and someone has challenged that ruling.

VOTE: Four (4) were in favor. One (1) opposed.

WORK SESSION SUMMARY
CATEGORIES OF EMPLOYEES SUBCOMMITTEE
Anchorage, January 26 & 27, 1979

The following are points raised in response to an APEA proposal passed out at the meeting (copy attached):

POINTS RAISED

1. Restricting temporary employment time to 60 days would be too restrictive on departments. A more appropriate solution would be to audit departmental use of temporaries.

2. Legislative finance committees should be informed of the problems inherent in using temporaries, so that they will be willing to create additional permanent positions.

3. The Department of Health and Social Services' policy on hiring temporaries was discussed. A subcommittee will review the policy and make a presentation. Appointed to the subcommittee were John Pugh, Lynda McCurry and Ken Humphreys. In the review, the subcommittee should research the possibility of requiring that temporaries be assigned salary ranges comparable to those assigned to similar permanent classifications.

4. There was discussion of the effects of Kelly vs. Hammond: What effect will the case have on legislative authority? Can the legislature require that departments create and fill permanent rather than temporary positions? Ken Humphreys will research the question and report to the subcommittee.

5. There was discussion on problems within the CETA program. CETA employees are being used by the state as an inexpensive work force. However, under federal regulations, CETA's cannot replace permanent employees. A letter was received from Jean S. Conway dated January 8, 1978 (copy attached). Also attached is a copy of CETA regulations.

The subcommittee adjourned and reconvened on Saturday afternoon. The following are motions adopted:

MOTIONS ADOPTED

1. Pat Murphy moved that the subcommittee recommend legislation on temporaries be introduced this session. The motion was adopted: One member opposed.

2. Don Fisher moved that the subcommittee shall recommend that a maximum time limit be required on temporary employment. The motion was adopted: Two members opposed.

There was discussion on the question of whether the Commission should recommend modification of the Collective Bargaining Act. It was decided that subcommittee proposals should be presented as joint legislative resolutions to have the effect of a policy statement, except where statute amendment is clearly

Paddy Moriarty amended the motion that the number of temporaries shall be limited according to future figures, after futher research. The amendment was adopted. Three members opposed.

5. Representative McKinnon moved that the subcommittee shall adopt a resolution to support the bill sponsored by Senator Ray on retroactive retirement benefits for permanent employees for prior temporary employment. The motion was adopted. Two members opposed.

6. Pat Murphy moved that the subcommittee shall adopt a resolution to support legislation introduced in the Senate recommending health insurance benefits for all employees after 30 days in service with the State of Alaska. The motion was adopted. Two members opposed.

DISCUSSION

The subcommittee discussed requiring Division of Personnel authorization before any department could hire a temporary. Justification for hiring a temporary rather than a permanent employee would be required, as is currently required by the Department of Health and Social Services. Pa Hunt and Ken Kareen will present their evaluation of the proposal at a later subcommittee meeting.

The subcommittee work session was chaired by Representative McKinnon.

CATEGORIES OF EMPLOYEES
Work Session Summary, February 6, 1979

Representative Joe McKinnon chaired the work session. A brief summary of the subcommittee discussion follows:

A. Review and discussion of the draft bill on hiring of temporary employees.

1. Add language to subsection 2 (c) (2), page 2, line 6, concerning the hiring of temporaries where new positions have been created but have not yet been authorized by the Division of Budget and Management and the Division of Personnel to read:

(2) there is an urgent need to fill an authorized permanent position and it is impractical to complete the establishment of that position, or there is an urgent need to fill a vacant, permanent position and it is impractical to make certification within a reasonable time because of a lack of eligibles for that position; or

2. The penalty section (page 3, line 6) was discussed briefly. The approach is to establish a rebuttable presumption that an illegally hired temporary can recover from the supervisor who authorized the hire personally for the amount of past wages.

3. Goals of the bill: (1) to provide maximum controls on the hiring of temporaries without (2) stepping over the bounds of the separation of powers, and (3) without ham-stringing the executive branch from operating its programs effectively.

4. Technical amendments were suggested:

Page 1, line 17, add "permanent seasonal" to "permanent full-time and permanent part-time".

Page 3, line 5, substitute the word "terminate" for the word "dismiss".

Page 3, line 18, substitute the word "employee" for the word "person".

5. There was discussion of the effect of the bill. It may serve to aid collective bargaining negotiation, since there will be one readily identifiable person authorizing all temporary positions.

The bill would give considerable discretion to the Director of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations in making a determination that a temporary position should be authorized. The Director is required to consider the standards provided, but there is no review of his decision.

There was concern expressed that the review of requests for temporary employees by the Director must be immediate, so that delays do not occur.

Ken Humphreys will redraft the bill and bring it to the next subcommittee meeting for further consideration.

B. Imposing a maximum on the number of temporaries a department may hire.

It was suggested that the subcommittee propose that a limit of 10% of the departmental PCN's be established.

Opposition to the proposal pointed out that this should be left in the collective bargaining arena.

If the Director of the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations is required to report each year on the number of temporary employees he has authorized, then there will be review and consideration of the issue each year.

It is more important to evaluate the effectiveness of departmental hiring practices than to focus on the numbers of temporaries hired.

C. Imposing a maximum time limit on the length of temporary service.

Mr. Murphy moved that a section be added to the work draft of the bill on temporary hiring to set a maximum of 120 days on the service of a temporary, with a provision that under extenuating circumstances, justified to the Director in writing, he may approve the extension of that time limit.

Mr. Spray proposed an amendment: That the issue of time limits of temporary employment be left in the arena of collective bargaining.

Mr. Murphy objected to the proposed amendment on the grounds that it was a new motion, not an amendment.

VOTE: A vote was taken on Mr. Murphy's motion. It was adopted four (4) to two (2).

D. Scope of Commission activity: Concern was expressed that the Commission avoid intrusion into collective bargaining issues. The Commission risks jeopardizing its effectiveness and credibility if it enters into this area, and may create increasing divisiveness both internally and within the legislature. Commission time would be better spent on other matters.

E. Issue of Contract Employees: When the subcommittee considers this issue, it should request information from the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities on Deputy Commissioner Scoogil's memo stating that the department should limit the size of the state work force by contracting out jobs where possible.

F. Issue of Vacant Permanent Positions: Staff was requested to check with Jay Hogan, Director of the Division of Legislative Finance, on the computer programming which his division is implementing to track vacant PCN's.

G. Scope of Exempt and Partilly Exempt Categories: There was some discussion of this topic. The subcommittee should consider this subject at a later time.

STAFF NOTE:

Terry Cramer checked with Jay Hogan, Director of the Division of Legislative Finance, on the computer program to track vacant PCN's. He indicated that the program should be completed in about six months. It has been held in abeyance because of a change in computers. When completed, the program will track the source of the money used to fund a position and whether the position is vacant.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
Categories of Employees Subcommittee
Anchorage Legislative Information Office
January 4, 1979

MINUTES

The Categories of Employees Subcommittee hearing was called to order by Representative McKinnon. Public testimony was invited.

PUBLIC TESTIMONY

Jim Thiele, a temporary employee with the Department of Fish and Game, presented his views on the six-month limitation of temporary employment as specified in the new APEA union contract. Mr. Thiele explained that it is not economically feasible to live the whole year on six-month's salary. He feels that his position could be classified as a permenent seasonal category since it is recurrent. The new limitation on temporaries in the APEA contract denies individuals the right to return to employment within a department for a period of six months after termination from that department. The explanation provided Mr. Thiele on why the Department of Fish and Game did not reclassify his position to permanent seasonal was that each PCN number must be approved by the legislature. He does not believe temporary employees consider receiving fringe benefits as necessary as having opportunities for employment available.

Mr. Thiele is on a number of registers, but has never been hired from one. After being tested for a Fisheries Biologist I position, he worked as temporary in that classification for two years. When he took a reexamination, he received a lower score despite his additional two years of experience. Another inequity in the testing process was highlighted when Mr. Thiele took two tests, Game Biologist I and II, and scored much higher on the more difficult test for Game Biologist II. Mr. Thiele, in answer to Frank Flavin's question on whether he would prefer to become a full-time employee, stated that he preferred to have the flexibility available to temporaries.

Pam Rogers, a permanent employee with the Planning and Research Division of the Department of Natural Resources, expressed her concerns regarding the lack of opportunities available to temporaries to fill permanent positions. Temporaries working within the department are not considered for employment in newly classified permanent positions because many are not within the top five on registers, even though they have experience in working in the department. Ms. Rogers believes that time spent in temporary positions should be counted towards the probationary period for permanent postions.

On the topic of registers within the state, Ms. Rogers stated that supervisors are circumventing the eligible lists to hire temporaries. Upon initial hire in temporary positions, individuals are being promised permanent positions as soon as funding is approved and PCN's are created. These temporaries are hired at salary ranges that are inconsistent with their level of skill. People already employed by a department are given preference over others on registers in hiring.

Pat Kirschner, an employee with the Planning and Classification Section of the Department of Natural Resources, asked committee members if, after the six-month temporary has ended, whether an employee can work for another state department as a temporary. She had heard many conflicting rumors. Niel Thomas answered that you can be employed by the state again within another department. Representative McKinnon believed that was part of the new contract provisions. He stated that in the past, a temporary could go from one position to another within the department after the period had expired. Ms. Kirschner expressed her desire to continue working in a section where she is familiar with the work for more than six months.

Ms. Kirschner sees the move to severely limit the temporary employment period, or to do away with it altogether, as being undesirable. Even if additional permanent positions were created, her department would still have to use temporaries on various projects that are not recurrent but do last longer than six months. Representative McKinnon agreed that there is a valid need within the Department of Natural Resources for temporaries because of the fluctuating time periods of projects. The duration of these projects is dependent upon the time needed for completion and the funding available. As an alternative to temporary employment without benefits, Ms. Kirschner suggests that promotions and merit increases be available to temporary employees based on performance and longevity of the individual's employment on the project. Niel Thomas commented that a "project" category would also be valuable to employees within the Department of Fish and Game.

Ms. Kirschner concluded by stating that she prefers a nine-month period for temporaries, because the individuals could at least survive economically on that basis. The six-month period presents economic problems for specialists who are limited by their expertise in a particular position in only one department.

Jim Curatolo, a temporary employee with the Department of Fish and Game, presented his belief that temporaries are being taken advantage of more than ever because of restrictions imposed by the new union contract. He stated that many temporaries work in that capacity because they find it preferable to work only nine months a year, gaining experience and skills that would otherwise be unavailable to them.

Mr. Curatolo believes that salary ranges for temporaries are much lower than those of permanent employees, regardless of skills and qualifications. Temporaries can provide for their own benefits and retirement if they are compensated with higher salaries.

As previous witnesses testified, Mr. Curatolo would like to continue working on his present project for an extended amount of time. He is aware of another project that will be available after his six months has ended, but because it is within the same department, he will not be eligible. The project he is working on is federally subsidized with OCS funding. Niel Thomas asked how Mr. Curatolo's position would be classified if he were working as a permanent employee. Mr. Curatolo explained that his is a Biologist II position, but that he is being paid at a Biologist I level. Representative McKinnon asked whether the proposal for the project could have included provision for a permanent position which would terminate at the end of the project.

Mr. Curatolo said that he would rather have the option of choosing the project he wants to work on each year, and that if a permanent seasonal position classification was authorized, this choice would be eliminated. Representative McKinnon asked whether he would be required to return to the project he had last worked on. Niel Thomas asked whether there would be a number of positions within the same classification which he might apply for. Mr. Curatolo responded that his experience in a particular project would lead to being employed in the same position.

Frank Flavin inquired whether the six-month temporary period was a product of APEA bargaining or if it was a decision between the state and the Legislature. Representative McKinnon noted that judging by testimony heard, temporaries are being misused and are not given the benefits of permanent employees. Using temporaries is a way of avoiding application of merit principles. Instead of improving the abusive treatment of temporaries, the APEA contract has created many additional difficulties. Niel Thomas added that it seems there is a need for a "project" category which would not apply to seasonal recurrent positions and would allow the position to last for the duration of the project.

Claude Hoffman, a Cadastral Engineer with the Department of Natural Resources, presented his opinions as a Program Manager. Mr. Hoffman supervises 31 employees. He is involved in a departmental survey that has been funded with $7 million by the Legislature for 12 months. Permanent positions were authorized by the Legislature at the end of the last session. Mr. Hoffman has been hiring temporaries for the program who are capable of doing the job. Many of his professional staff were in the top five on the registers and were temporaries within the department. Mr. Hoffman believes that he has been hiring temporaries fairly and placing them in permanent status whenever possible. He has reduced the number of temporaries in his department by 80% over the past six months. Despite the reduction, he must retain some temporary positions, and would like to be able to offer temporary employees the same benefits as permanent employees. Mr. Hoffman does not believe that program managers should hire temporaries and promise permanent position when they are unsure whether that is a possibility. He prefers to have permanent employees in the department, but because of the process involved in writing out P402's, having them put into the budget and approved by the Division of Personnel, creating PCN's and getting registers, this is very difficut when there are immediate deadlines set. These "crash" programs leave very little time to plan for the department's employment needs. Mr. Hoffman suggests that a possible solution would be in having the Division of Personnel work jointly with the department in preparing a budget package to include positions in permanent, seasonal and temporary employment categories.

Niel Thomas asked if there would be any problem in hiring temporaries from the registers. Mr. Hoffman replied that a major problem is the time involved in the processing of paperwork to and from Juneau. Mr. Thomas suggested that temporary positions could be reduced to very short terms, with exceptions for employment on specific projects to permit time to have permanent positions classified. Mr. Hoffman also pointed out that in order to get qualified people, Department of Natural Resources had to advertise state-wide. Mr. Thomas stated that some type of incentive for Personnel to move as fast as possible in classifying permanent positions would be helpful. Mr. Hoffman agreed that the Division has problems in the extensive workload involved in filling new positions. His department has the budget for positions, but is unable to expedite the creation of permanent positions, and has had to use temporaries in the mean time.

Niel Thomas inquired whether Mr. Hoffman believes there are too many classifications. Mr. Hoffman replied that was not a problem in his department's series of positions. Frank Flavin asked what Mr. Hoffman's opinions were regarding the registers. Mr. Hoffman answered that he is please with registers and the way applicants are placed on them. He also believes they provide an adequate selection.

Mr. Hoffman also expressed his ideas on the ranking of individuals on the registers. He believes that there are inequities in scoring which result from different personnal analysts within the Division of Personnel using a variety of scoring standards. He suggested that evaluation of applications be based on qualifications and skills gained during work rather than on number of years in service. Mr. Hoffman stated that he had spent quite a bit of time with the Division of Personnel earlier in the year, and the staff members there had probably been rated on longevity and been hired from the top five on the register.

Frank Flavin asked whether working with the top five or with the top one-third on the registers would be preferable. Mr. Hoffman responded that working with the top five is not difficult. Normally, one or two eligibles will decline to take a position because of special duties they cannot handle. Sometimes, Mr. Hoffman does have to go below the top five to fill a vacancy because some applicants refuse the positions and others are still on the register although they have found employment.

Niel Thomas asked where Mr. Hoffman reports in the department. Mr. Hoffman answered that he reports to the Assistant Commissioner, who oversees three divisions. Niel Thomas asked if he had been instructed in Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action matters. Mr. Hoffman replied that the basics had been covered. Representative McKinnon inquired concerning whether restrictions are placed on hiring temporaries for new positions. Mr. Hoffman answered that no restrictions were put upon hiring of temporaries, and he initially hired temporaries and had positions classifications changed to permanent. Many temporaries have left because they were unable to get on the top of registers to be hired as permanent. He does not believe in using unethical methods to come in below budget and is not tempted in hiring temporaries to cut down on spending.

Ed Levy, an Engineering Technician with the Department of Transporation and Public Facilities, offered a different perspective. He is the only permanent seasonal employee working in his division. The majority of the employees within the division are college students who cannot complete the six-month period of seasonal employment because they have to return to school in the fall. These temporaries are being trained by the division, but cannot achieve permanent seasonal status even though they return each year. Local 71 will send them back out to the department annually because they are familiar with particulars of the work, but does not allow their classification as permanent seasonal because they are not able to finish the season. This problem is causing financial difficulties for temporaries because they are not credited with their time in service and cannot go beyond initial temporary wages. Representative McKinnon asked what happens when the students return to school. Mr. Levy explained that the division fills in as best it can until the end of the season. College students feel that they are being used by Local 71 and that they are paying dues for nothing. Mr. Thomas asked if Mr. Levy would lose his job as a permanent seasonal if he left in September. Mr. Levy answered affirmatively, and added that the Local 71 contract does not permit an employee to be considered as permanent seasonal unless the individual can work the entire duration of the season.

Patricia Fowler, a permanent employee with the Department of Natural Resources, is an Associate Planner. She presented her complaints regarding the time it takes to get on a register and the difficulties in trying to be promoted to a higher classification. Ms. Fowler was promoted from her position as a temporary Research Analyst II to her present classification. If she had wanted to try for a permanent position as a Research Analyst II, she would have been unable to get on the top of the register because her specialty is planning. Four to six weeks after Ms. Fowler applied for the position of Associate Planner, she tried to find out what her status was concerning the application. She was unable to get an answer.

Ms. Fowler pointed out that in the past, temporaries had been employed by the department for up to 18 months. This practice is only now beginning to change. Ms. Fowler began as a temporary employee and worked towards getting a permanent position. Methods suggested by her colleagues included making herself invaluable to the department. Experience as a temporary, according to Ms. Fowler, is not considered in the placement of temporaries in permanent classifications. Because of the turnover in temporaries, the department has to train employees over and over again. She has observed that in order to place temporary employees into permanent positions, her department notifies the top five applicants on the register, but discourages interest in the positions to be able to get to the people they want. Ms. Fowler has personally responded to notifications, only to be told that the position is extremely undesirable. Temporaries are one way of getting around the register.

Ms. Fowler continued, commenting on the fact that offices with a large number of temporaries are subject to recurrent turnover and have organizational problems. Most temporaries have no future with a department, and because they are aware of this, they have no incentive to perform well.

Niel Thomas asked what Ms. Fowler's position is within the department. Ms. Fowler replied that she is a Coordinator for A95, which is a permanent position where she works on casual management. Mr. Thomas also asked how the duties of the position were presented to her when she began as a temporary. She replied that the person occupying the position prior to her arrival had taken a leave of absence. Ms. Fowler took over her functions within the office and was never asked if she wanted permanent employment. She was never informed by the department that there was a vacant permanent position available. Ms. Fowler, like many temporary employees does not like short-term positions. She enjoys being able to get involved in her work and not having to spend her time constantly seeking permanent employment. She was informed at the time of her hire as a temporary that the duration of her employment would not exceed four to six weeks. At that time, she thought that it would be highly unlikely that the position would be for such a short period of time. Other employees in the department explained to her that everyone there had started out as a temporary, and that supervisors liked hiring temporaries because it gave them additional opportunity to observe an employee's performance. Ms. Fowler added that it is very difficult to terminate permanent employees because supervisors don't want to go through grievance proceedings. Another discrepancy that Ms. Fowler had noted was that permanent postions at higher ranges are not being filled. Temporaries are being hired to fill these positions at lower ranges to make up for budget limitations.

Brent Petrie, Chief of the Water Department Section of the Department of Natural Resources, testified regarding problems he has witnessed as a program manager. The problems he addressed were in hiring, administrative budgets, and putting in proposal for changes. Mr. Petrie has worked as a temporary, permanent, supervisory and general government unit employee during his tenure with the state. He currently is working under a program supplemented by a federal grant, where temporary employees are needed for more than 30 days. Some temporary positions can last for up to nine months. To put temporaries into permanent classifications, he must identify funds available. Federal programs run for specific projects that may only last for a year. By the time Budget and Management and Legislative Finance have approved the permanent classifications, only six months may be left in the fiscal year. The program would need temporaries, in that instance, for the six months spent in getting approval for permanent positions. It is difficult to plan for positions in recurrent federal grant programs subsidized by discretionary state funds since the formula application must be approved annually by Budget and Management.

Niel Thomas inquired concerning Mr. Petrie's definition of discretionary funding. Mr. Petrie explained that this funding is generally used in contracted projects. Temporary employees often do a variety of jobs on short-term projects of up to nine months. It is very difficult to get permanent classifications based on discretionary funding. Some funds are coming in annually, in which case estimates can be made of tasks to be accomplished. Mr. Petrie added that he would prefer to create permanent classifications for this need. Budget and Management can authorize the classification of positions through confirmation that funds are available. Program managers are reluctant to spend the time involved.

Mr. Petrie offered an example of the time it takes to have a permanent classification created. He wrote a P402 in May of 1978, and it took until December before he could actually request a register. Something had to be done in the interim to provide the staffing necessary to handle the project. Pressure is applied by the Legislature to complete projects on schedule, but the task is made very difficult by the lengthy procedures involved in processing paperwork through the state. Mr. Petrie suggested that the Legislature should examine a package including P402's and the departmental budget to expedite the implementation of new programs.

Mr. Petrie suggested that when a large grant or appropriation comes through, the Division of Personnel might consider adding to its staff with funds appropriated from the agency's project budget to process P402's for that program. Representative McKinnon commented that this is a fairly common practice in other states. Projects created by the Legislature are forcing departments to submit large amounts of paperwork to the Division of Personnel.

Another suggestion presented by Mr. Petrie was to create a means of compensating temporary employees for their lack of benefits through a pro-rated hourly salary adjustment that would increase depending upon the duration of employment. Mr. Petrie thought that by staggering the paperwok submitted to the Division, some of the delays might be avoided. Frank Flavin pointed out that there may be too many categories of employees and that a solution would be to combine categories. He also suggested that benefits of permanent employees be available to temporaries after 90 days.

Mr. Petrie listed a number of problems the commission should consider:

1) lower salary ranges and lower classifications put on temporary employees

2) discouraging employees from accepting positions so as to reach applicants below the top five on the register

3) Unqualified applicants being placed on registers because personnel analysts lack knowledge of skills needed for positions and their dependency on the descriptions supplied in P402's

4) inconsistent evaluations and ratings of applicant skills and experience

Representative McKinnon questioned whether the department could more accurately describe job classifications. Mr. Petrie replied that they could if personnel officers in both the Department and the Division of Personnel conferred with program managers to create lists of qualifications and backgrounds essential to the work involved. Niel Thomas asked if he was referring to the decentralization of personnel functions into individual departments. Mr. Petrie believes that the personnel offices of the departments could handle this function with additional staff.

Mr. Petrie asked how someone would go about applying to departments and how applicants could be consistently rated by each department. Niel Thomas answered that applicants would probably not know where to go and that an information pamphlet would have to be written with instructions on how to go about applying for a job. Frank Flavin pointed out that this would leave audit functions the responsibility of the Division of Personnel.

Mr. Petrie concluded his testimony by stating that he will encourage others to testify at the January 27 meeting in Anchorage.

Peggy Merritt, a temporary Game Biologist I with the Department of Fish and Game, agreed with previous testimony offered by her colleagues within the Department. In regard to recruitment, Ms. Merritt has found that the Division of Personnel often evalautes applicants incorrectly. In one case, an applicant who knew very little about the special skills involved in working in a certain position was on the top of the register. The department was forced to hire someone very low on the register to find an applicant with the skills necessary. She suggested applicants be judged by a peer group and not by the Division of Personnel. Her supervisor would like her to stay on longer than six months, but she cannot regardless of the inefficiency resulting from her termination.

There is one PCN for Game Biologist I for that division, and the position was moved to Nome. Her supervisor, who has been in the same division for many years, has been unable to get a permanent classification for anyone else in the division. The funding is unavailable, yet there is a great need for someone who is familiar with new scientific methods to renovate the archaic practices still used by the division.

Niel Thomas asked what percentage of temporaries in the department are women. She replied that there is one woman working as a permanent Game Biologist and approximately six women temporaries elsewhere in the department. Mr. Thomas also asked if the department has a hard time reaching applicants with skills necessary for the job. Ms. Merritt explained that some of the most qualified applicants are very low on registers, although their peers would rate them very highly.

Ms. Merritt continued, explaining that she resents the cut off of temporary employment to six months when the job still needs to be completed. Because of budget cuts, permanent positions are no longer available and termination of temporaries is now mandatory because of the APEA contract. The union has taken action that temporary employees do not approve of and never voted on.

One other problem not mentioned previously is the non-existence of hazard pay for temporaries. Ms. Merritt travels by air continuously in hazardous conditions, yet receives no additional compensation as do permanent employees. Niel Thomas asked if she is paid for actual hourly work. Ms. Merritt responded that once above a certain pay range, extra hours put in on the job are not compensated. Ms. Merritt would like to be compensated for this lack of benefits.

Ruth Moulton, an employee with the Department of Natural Resources, presented her questions to the committee members: Why are temporaries being penalized to eliminate abuses within the personnel system? Aren't the unions, Division of Personnel and the Legislature aware of the fact that employees become more and more valuable with time spent in positions? Representative McKinnon explained that the APEA contract with the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations sets out the rules which departments must follow. Frank Flavin stated that none of these parties has the unilateral ability to change the policies. Representative McKinnon continued by explaining that there are laws in the books stating that temporaries cannot receive benefits, retirement and annual leave. Temporaries benefit from salary increases negotiated by unions and from lobbying efforts to increase fringe benefits available to them. Therefore, they do receive some return for their dues. Ms. Moulton replied that her best interests have not been represented by the union. Frank Flavin noted that the union is concerned with the supervisory abuse of temporary employees and has tried to eliminate this problem by limiting the duration of temporary employment. Temporary employees are not receiving benefits and are working unlimited amounts of time. Ms. Moulton pointed out that one advantage of being a temporary is in being able to go from one position to another, thereby gaining valuable experience.

MINUTES

The meeting was called to order by Frank Flavin, Vice Chairperson. Public testimony was invited.

PUBLIC TESTIMONY

Mr. Daniel Brewster spoke regarding his wife's problems in paying union dues. She had worked as a temporary for four summers, and each time she was hired for a temporary position, she was required to fill out documents indicating how she wished her union dues paid. She chose to have them deducted by the state. However, each time the state deduction was a month behind. She received letters from the union threatening termination of membership if the difference was not made up, which would result in the loss of her position. Eventually, she became disgusted with the system and refused to pay, which resulted in her termination, despite the good evaluations she had received for her job performance. Mr. Brewster stated that he believes that it is unfair to force an employee to pay dues when they are not being represented by the union.

Bob Mourant explained that the union has been working to secure better benefits for temporary employees and that it is required by law to represent all members of the bargaining unit. Darlene Howard indicated that each time service of a temporary is terminated, they are considered a new employee when hired by another section. APEA must then rely upon documentation from the state to continue membership. The reason for the delay in sending out new membership contracts is because of the time involved in the state's processing these reports. Ms. Howard continued to say that thus far, APEA has successfully negotiated holidy pay and higher pay rates for temporaries at the bargaining table.

Bob Sanderlin, a temporary Fish Biologist I with the Department of Fish and Game, suggested that temporaries being hired by the department could be put in permanent seasonal status because the positions are recurrent, but require less than a full year's work. In some instances, the jobs do require more than the time limit placed on temporary employment, resulting in having to train two people for one job and the loss of experienced workers.

Changing these temporary positions to permanent seasonal jobs would create an additional cost of 15% to the state for benefits such as retirement, medical insurance, time-off and sick leave. The department and the Division of Budget and Management have refused to request reclassification of these positions because they find it less expensive to use temporaries. However, APEA has taken action on this question.

Charles Fields, a former employee with the Division of Aviation, approached the committee with one of his recent experiences. He had been laid off from his position as a Civil Engineering Assistant because his time as a temporary employee was not credited for the purpose of seniority, which would have averted his being laid off. He stated that the experience he gained as a temporary was considered in evaluating his qualifications for the position. He applied for a permanent position with the state but his subordinate was hired because the subordinate's Veteran's preference was considered and was of sufficient value to place him slightly above Mr. Fields. Mr. Fields had accumulated a total of 17 months of temporary service with the state during the years he worked as a temporary. He was told that the reason that temporary time could not be considered for seniority was that the hiring process was not competitive for temporaries. He disagreed with that because he was required to pass an examination and his performance was evalauted before he was given raises during his temporary assignments.

Bob Sanderlin spoke again concerning the Kodiak Temporary Employees Advisory Committee. He had asked for a list of all the temporaries employed by the Department of Fish and Game in the state. Pat Hunt stated that because that would in effect be providing them with a list of union members, he would have to talk with the Executive Secretary of APEA before releasing the list. Mr. Sanderlin has had difficulty in finding this information, which would be used to send out questionnaires to all temporaries.

David Valesko testified that he had lost retirement credit for his time as a temporary employee, even though he went directly from a temporary position into a permanent position. Therefore, he lost a longevity bonus. Ken Spray explained that Local No. 71 now has a contract with the state which credits the 120 days of temporary employment to permanent status if there is a direct shift from one to another.

COMMITTEE DISCUSSION

There being no more testimony from witnesses, the committee discussed its functions and future tasks. Ken Spray suggested the committee create recommendations for a report to the legislature in February. Terry Cramer presented the tentative schedule for the Project Train seminar on February 6 and 7.

Frank Flavin questioned what type of submission should be put together for this year's project. Niel Thomas suggested that something should be put together immediately on the inequities of temporary employment. The staff will prepare a summary of the issues heard to date for the next meeting, focusing on the problem of temporary employment. Ken Humphreys' research paper on other states' statutes will be used for back-up data.

Frank Flavin also suggested that the various categories of temporary employment be looked at individually, rather than as one group. In response, Pat Hunt stated that one of the major concerns of the committee is temporary employment. He questioned what the committee intends to recommend on temporary employment. There are currently nine bargaining units in operation covering temporaries. He believes the committee must address the conflict between union contract provisions, personnel rules and state statutes.

Ken Spray pointed out the benefit of the 120-day temporary employment period negotiated by the union. He doesn't want to see the union's power taken away by legislative action.

Frank Flavin concluded that the Commission should work out the best personnel management system for temporary employment and then make adjustments in response to political and regulatory input.

Representative Buchholdt brought up the question of retroactive reimbursement for temporary employment toward retirement benefits. Should the Committee create a cut-off date?

Since the personnel rules do not apply to the partially exempt, and since classified employees are covered by union contract, the committee should consider increasing application of the rules to the partially exempt. Also, not to be overlooked, are the benefits of flexibility which the temporary employee position provides for EEO hiring.

It was requested that all committee members provide a list of questions and issues they wish to see addressed for a work session to be scheduled at a later date.

FCCS SCS CSHB 720	181

AN ACT

Relating to the disposal of state land; and providing for an effective date.

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

* Section 1. DESIGNATION OF LAND FOR DISPOSAL. (a) The director of the division of lands in the Department of Natural Resources shall, no later than November 1, 1978, designate 30,000 acres of state land for disposal under the homesite entry program established in AS 38.08 and the open-to-entry program established in AS 38.05.077.

(b) Not less than 25 per cent of the former mental health land described in sec. 3(a) of this Act which is located within a municipality entitled to select land under AS 29.18 shall be designated for disposal in fiscal year 1979 under AS 38.04.020 enacted in sec. 5 of this Act. A municipality may select that former mental health land to satisfy its entitlement under AS 29.18 but title to the land may not be transferred to the municipality by the director until the governing body of the municipality certifies that disposal programs will be undertaken by the municipality which will meet the needs of persons residing in the municipality.

* Sec. 2. ASSESSMENT OF SUPPLY AND DEMAND OF LAND. (a) The director of the division of lands in the Department of Natural Resources shall assess the supply and demand for land under the homesite entry program established in AS 38.08 and the open-to-entry program established in AS 38.05.077. The assessment shall be based on applications submitted by persons in the state who are eligible to participate in those disposal programs. The applications shall be made on forms supplied by the division of lands which shall be available to the public at each district office of the division of lands in the state. The applications shall contain provisions so that each person may indicate a preference for the type of disposal program that best suits his needs. To the extent possible, the director of the division of lands shall determine by region of the state which disposal program or combination of programs specified in this subsection is suited to the differing needs of eligible persons residing in that region.

(b) The closing date for the initial determinations of eligibility is October 1, 1978. The director of the division of lands in the Department of Natural Resources shall determine the eligibility of persons submitting applications and before November 1, 1978, advise them whether they are eligible to participate in disposals under AS 38.08 or AS 38.05.077. Persons determined to be ineligible shall be advised of the reason for their disqualification and the actions they may take to establish eligibility. The director shall compile a master list of all persons found to be eligible to participate in the disposals specified in (a) of this section. The master list shall be revised at regular intervals after the initial determination period so that it accurately reflects the eligibility of applicants.

(c) The director of the division of lands shall present to the legislature the plan for the disposal of land under the programs specified in (a) of this section. The plan shall be submitted not later than the 15th day of the First Session of the Eleventh Legislature. The plan shall set out the location of the land for disposal and the amount of acreage to be included in each program.

* Sec. 3. REDESIGNATION AND DISPOSAL OF MENTAL HEALTH LAND. (a) Land granted to the state under the Mental Health Enabling Act of 1956, 70 Stat. 709, and patented to or approved for patent to the state on July 1, 1978 and land designated as mental health land which was received by the state in exchange for land granted under that federal land grant is redesignated as general grant land and shall be managed and disposed of by the Department of Natural Resources under applicable provisions of law.

(b) The redesignation of mental health land in (a) of this section does not affect the validity of a deed, contract for sale, lease, easement, right-of-way, permit, mineral lease disposal, or a reservation for public use of that land by statute, in effect before July 1, 1978 or land management actions including use classifications under AS 38.05.300, and interagency land management assignments of that land made by the Department of Natural Resources before July 1, 1978.

* Sec. 4. AS 37 is amended by adding a new chapter to read:

CHAPTER 14. MENTAL HEALTH FUND.

Sec. 37.14.010. MENTAL HEALTH FUND ADVISORY BOARD CREATED. (a) There is created in the Department of Revenue the Mental Health Fund Advisory Board composed of the director of the division of mental health, the chairman of the Mental Health Advisory Council, and the commissioner of the Department of Revenue.

(b) The board shall elect a chairman from the membership of the board. Members serve without compensation but are entitled to per diem and travel expenses authorized by law for other boards.

Sec. 37.14.020. POWERS AND DUTIES OF BOARD. The board has the following powers and duties:

(1) to hold regular meetings and special meetings considered necessary;

(2) to have prepared an annual accounting of the total principal and income of the mental health fund established in sec. 30 of this chapter;

(3) to prepare long-range investment plans for the fund established in sec. 30 of this chapter.

Sec. 37.14.030. MENTAL HEALTH FUND ESTABLISHED. (a) There is established as a separate fund the mental health fund.

(b) The principal of the fund consists of sums transferred under sec. 70 of this chapter.

(c) The income of the fund consists of the interest and dividends earned from investments of the fund under sec. 60 of this chapter.

Sec. 37.14.040. DUTIES OF COMMISSIONER OF REVENUE. The commissioner of revenue is the treasurer of the fund and shall

(1) act as official custodian of the cash and securities belonging to the fund and provide adequate safe deposit facilities for them;

(2) receive cash belonging to the fund;

(3) collect the principal on securities acquired for the fund and deposit it in the fund;

(4) collect interest and dividends earned on investments of the fund and credit the income account of the fund;

(5) invest and reinvest the principal of the fund in accordance with sec. 60 of this chapter.

Sec. 37.14.050. FUND UTILIZATION. The principal of the fund shall be retained in the fund for investment as specified in sec. 60 of this chapter. The income of the fund may not be appropriated for a purpose other than the support of the state mental health program.

Sec. 37.14.060. INVESTMENTS. (a) The commissioner of revenue, with the approval of the board, may invest the principal of the fund in the same manner specified in AS 39.35.110 for the investment of surplus pension funds.

(b) The commissioner of revenue may

(1) invest and reinvest the principal of the fund;

(2) sell, exchange, convey, transfer, or otherwise dispose of an investment of the fund by private contract or at public auction;

(3) vote upon a stock, bond, or other security; give a general or special proxy or power of attorney with or without power of substitution; exercise a conversion privilege, subscription right, or other option and make payments incidental to it; consent to or participate in a corporate reorganization or other change affecting corporate securities, delegate discretionary power, pay an assessment or charge in connection with the delegation; and generally exercise any of the powers of an owner with respect to stocks, bonds, securities, or other investments held in the fund;

(4) make, execute, acknowledge, and deliver documents of transfer and conveyance and instruments necessary or appropriate to carry out the powers granted;

(5) register investments held in the fund in the name of the board;

(6) do all acts whether or not expressly authorized which are considered proper for the protection of the investments held in the fund.

Sec. 37.14.070. CONTRIBUTIONS. During each fiscal year the commissioner of the Department of Revenue shall transfer to the fund a sum equal to one and one-half per cent of the total receipts derived from the management of state land, including amounts paid to the state as proceeds of sale or annual rent of surface rights, mineral lease rentals, royalties, royalty sale proceeds, and federal mineral revenue sharing payments or bonuses.

Sec. 37.14.080. DEFINITIONS. In this chapter,

(1) "board" means the Mental Health Fund Advisory Board;

(2) "fund" means the mental health fund established in sec. 30 of this chapter.

* Sec. 5. AS 38 is amended by adding a new chapter to read:

CHAPTER 4. POLICY FOR USE AND CLASSIFICATION OF STATE LAND SURFACE.

ARTICLE 1. PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LAND USE.

Sec. 38.04.005. POLICY. (a) In order to provide for maximum use of state land consistent with the public interest, it is the policy of the State of Alaska to plan and manage state-owned land to establish a balanced combination of land available for both public and private purposes. The choice of land best suited for public and private use shall be determined through the inventory, planning, and classification processes set out in secs. 60 - 70 of this chapter.

(b) In classifying state land for private use and settlement purposes, the director shall make adequate provision for public open space which is accessible to communities so that natural areas are easily reached from all communities and settled areas. The amount of that land shall be sufficient to meet existing and projected needs for accessible public recreation land. Special care shall be taken to preserve public access to public water and to retain state ownership of sufficient land which combine high value for recreation and other public purposes with accessibility to settled areas. This classification for public purposes does not constitute dedication to open space, but the division's management of land so classified shall be in a manner to preserve the identified values.

(c) In allocating land for private use and public retention, the requirements of future generations shall be considered. To this end, a supply of state land of a variety of types and locations shall be reserved to provide an opportunity for future decisions.

(d) Private land use rights are integral to the material well-being of the people of Alaska and our society.

(e) Involvement of municipalities and local residents is essential in the decision-making process which leads to making state land available for private use.

Sec. 38.04.010. PUBLIC INTEREST IN MAKING LAND AVAILABLE FOR PRIVATE USE. (a) The primary public interest in conveying rights to state land surface to private parties is to make them available to individuals and other persons for direct use in areas classified as suitable for these purposes. In making state land available for private use, the director shall seek to guide year-round settlement to areas where public services already exist, or can be extended with reasonable economy, or where development of a viable economic base is probable.

(b) State land which is located beyond the range of existing schools and other necessary public services, or which is located where development of sources of employment is improbable, may be made available for seasonal recreational purposes or for low density settlement, with sufficient separation between residences so that public services will not be necessary or expected.

Sec. 38.04.015. PUBLIC INTEREST IN RETAINING STATE LAND IN PUBLIC OWNERSHIP. The primary public interests in retaining areas of state land surface in public ownership are

(1) to make them available on a sustained-yield basis for a variety of beneficial uses including subsistence, energy development, aquaculture, forestry, grazing, sport hunting and fishing, hiking, snowmobiling, skiing, and other activities of a type which can generally be made available to more people and conducted more successfully if the land is in public rather than private ownership;

(2) to facilitate mining and mineral leasing by managing appropriate public land for surface uses which are compatible with subsurface uses;

(3) to protect critical wildlife habitat and areas of special scenic, recreational, scientific, or other environmental concern;

(4) to restrict development in hazardous locations such as floodplains and avalanche zones; and

(5) to guide the location of settlement and development to minimize public costs and maximize social and economic benefits.

ARTICLE 2. LAND AVAILABILITY FOR PRIVATE USE.

Sec. 38.04.020. TIMING AND AMOUNT. On a continuing or annual basis, the director shall make available for private use an array of state land suitable for a variety of uses. During fiscal year 1979, the director shall make available a minimum of 50,000 acres, not more than 10 per cent of which may be made available for leasing and 30,000 acres of which shall be for disposal under the homesite entry program established under AS 38.08 and the open-to-entry program established under AS 38.05.077 based upon a statewide assessment of supply and demand for land conducted under sec. 2 of this Act. Annually thereafter, the following three options for the state land availability program shall be submitted to the legislature along with the administration's budget: an increased-level program, a current-level program, and a reduced-level program. At least one option shall include at least 50,000 acres.

Sec. 38.04.025. VARIETY OF USES. In making state land available for private use, the director shall endeavor to accommodate persons with a current need and anticipated use for the land. To this end, the director shall assess the nature of the supply and demand for state land in different regions and locations of the state, taking into account the supply of available land under other ownership, and shall make land available in locations and under programs suited to the differing needs of prospective users throughout the state.

Sec. 38.04.030. LAND AVAILABILITY PROGRAMS. Programs which may be used by the director to make the state's land surface available for private use under this section include sale of whole or partial rights to the fee simple estate, including conveyance of agricultural use rights; leasing; open-to-entry; homesiting; homesteading; permitting for construction and occupation of cabins in isolated locations on land retained in state ownership; and other methods as provided by law.

Sec. 38.04.035. CRITERIA FOR PROGRAM SELECTION. In determining which land availability program is appropriate for state lands in different locations, the director shall be guided by the following criteria:

(1) To cover public costs associated with private land use and to provide the public with a fair return for publicly owned property, conveyance of state land to private parties should be at fair market value except where otherwise authorized by statute, or by an administrative regulation the adoption of which is specifically permitted by statute.

(2) Sale or lease programs should be used where land is readily accessible to a major community center or where, because of a prime location on waterfront or a transportation route or some other location characteristic, land has relatively high real estate value.

(3) Sale programs are preferred but lease programs should be used

(A) where special land use controls are required and there is a high public interest in having certain types of land used for particular purposes;

(B) when the intended use is a temporary one;

(C) in commercial or industrial situations when a leasehold can provide cash flow advantages to the lessee;

(D) when a unique location with special public values is involved, as in a deep water port, hydroelectric site, or aquaculture facility;

(E) where current demand for private use is high, but projections suggest that, in the future, the land may be more valuable for public use, as in accessible waterfront recreation areas.

(4) For enabling isolated cabin development in remote locations where survey and conveyance is impractical, a system for cabin permits on public land may be used.

(5) Limited or conditional title may be granted when the state's best interest so dictates. Among other things, title limitations may include grants of agricultural interest only, retention of development rights, and retention of scenic or other easements. A conditional title may be tied to a development schedule or other standards of performance.

Sec. 38.04.040. AVAILABILITY OF SCHOOL LAND AND UNIVERSITY LAND. School land and university land may be made available at fair market value for private use under the purposes of this chapter; however, any action to do so shall be in accordance with statutes pertaining to these lands and the authority of the Board of Education and the Board of Regents of the University of Alaska.

Sec. 38.04.045. SURVEY AND SUBDIVISION. (a) State land to be conveyed in fee simple or less than fee simple estate shall be subdivided so that lots and tracts are of a size which fits the requirements of individual users and reflects the physical characteristics of the land, except that in locations where there is an inadequate margin between the demand for and the supply of vacant land, the state may make land available for private acquisition in parcels that are larger than required for individual use.

(b) Before the conveyance of surface rights to state land, an official cadastral survey shall be accomplished, unless a comparable, acceptable survey exists that has been conducted by the federal Bureau of Land Management. The rectangular survey section corner positions shall be monumented and shown on a cadastral survey plat approved by the state. However, for those areas where the state may wish to convey surface estate outside of an official cadastral survey grid, the director may waive monumentation of all individual section corner positions and substitute an official control survey with control points being monumented at approximately two-mile intervals and shown on control survey plats approved by the state. No portion of land to be conveyed may be located more than two miles from such a survey control monument. The lots and tracts in state subdivisions shall be monumented and the cadastral survey and plats for the subdivision shall be approved by the state. Where land is located within a municipality with planning, platting, and zoning powers, plats for state subdivisions shall comply with local ordinances and regulations in the same manner and to the same extent as plats for subdivisions by other landowners. State subdivisions shall be filed in the district recorder's office. The requirements of this section do not apply to land made available through a cabin permit system, material sales, or short-term leases; however, for short-term leases the lessee must comply with local subdivision ordinances unless waived by the municipality under procedures specified by ordinance.

Sec. 38.04.050. ACCESS TO PRIVATE USE AREAS. Wherever state land is surveyed for purposes of private use, adequate rights-of-way and easements shall be reserved as necessary for access and, where appropriate, for power and telephone service to each parcel of land. Where necessary and appropriate for the use intended, the director shall arrange for the development of surface access as part of the land availability program. The direct cost of local access development shall be borne by the recipient of the land unless otherwise provided by state statutes or regulations.

Sec. 38.04.055. ACCESS THROUGH PRIVATE USE AREAS. The director shall reserve easements and rights-of-way on and across land which is made available for private use as necessary to reach or use public water and public and private land.

ARTICLE 3. INVENTORY, PLANNING, AND CLASSIFICATION.

Sec. 38.04.060. INVENTORY. (a) The commissioner shall prepare and maintain on a continuing basis an inventory of all state land and water and their resource and other values, giving priority to areas of potential settlement, economic development, and critical environmental concern. This inventory shall be kept current so as to reflect changes in conditions and to identify new and emerging resource and other values.

(b) The commissioner's inventory shall include land and water under interagency assignment of land management authority and land and water proposed for such an assignment. That land and water must be reviewed at regular intervals to analyze current and proposed uses as these uses relate to alternative uses for all or part of the land and to determine the uses which best provide for the public interest.

(c) As funds and manpower are made available, the commissioner shall provide local and federal governments and major private landowners with data from the inventory for the purpose of planning and managing the uses of land in proximity to state land.

Sec. 38.04.065. LAND USE PLANNING AND CLASSIFICATION. (a) The commissioner shall, with local governmental and public involvement in accordance with AS 38.05.305, develop, maintain and, when appropriate, revise land use plans which provide, by regions or areas, for the use of the state-owned land.

(b) In the development and revision of land use plans, the commissioner shall

(1) use and observe the principles of multiple use and sustained yield;

(2) consider physical, economic, and social factors affecting the region or area and involve other agencies and the public in achieving a systematic interdisciplinary approach;

(3) give priority to planning and classification in areas of potential settlement and critical environmental concern;

(4) rely, to the extent that it is available, on the inventory of the state land, its resources, and other values;

(5) consider present and potential uses of state land;

(6) consider the supply, resources, and present and potential use of land under other ownership within the area or region of concern;

(7) plan for compatible surface and mineral land use classifications; and

(8) provide for meaningful participation in the planning process by affected local governments, state and federal agencies, adjacent landowners, and the general public.

(c) As a basis for more detailed land use planning and classification, the commissioner shall develop regional land use plans for the use of all state land. These regional plans shall identify and delineate

(1) areas of settlement and settlement impact, where land must be classified for various private uses and for public recreation, open space, and other public uses desirable in and around settlement; and

(2) areas which must be retained in state ownership and planned and classified for various uses and purposes in accordance with sec. 15 of this chapter.

(d) Official regional or area plans and subsequent amendments adopted by the commissioner after public and local governmental participation shall be signed and dated by the commissioner. Land classifications shall be made in accordance with these official plans.

(e) Land shall be classified as provided in AS 38.05.-300.

(f) Decisions about the location of easements and rights-of-way, other than for minor access, shall be integrated with land use planning and classification for the appropriate area or region.

(g) Land use plans adopted by the commissioner under this section shall be consistent with local governmental land use plans to the maximum extent he determines to be consistent with the state interests and the purposes of this chapter.

Sec. 38.04.070. MANAGEMENT CATEGORIES. State land classified for uses and purposes involving retention in public ownership may be included in the following management categories:

(1) state public reserve lands: areas of public land to be managed for a wide variety of compatible uses and purposes in accordance with the principles of multiple use and sustained yield; land designated to this category may include, but need not be limited to, state forest reserves and state wildlife reserves as well as land classified for public purposes within settlement impact areas;

(2) state parks: areas with special recreational, scenic, cultural, historical, wilderness, or similar values, to be managed primarily for the public use and enjoyment of these values;

(3) state trails: a system of public historic or recreational trails;

(4) wild and scenic rivers: a system of rivers and adjacent state land with special natural, scenic, and recreational values located within or adjacent to a wild and scenic river area managed as part of the national system of wild and scenic rivers in accordance with the federal Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (82 Stat. 906; 16 U.S.C. 1271 et seq.);

(5) state public domain: land within areas designated on regional plans as settlement and settlement impact which are not part of the management categories listed in (1) - (4) of this section; through classification, this land may be made available for private use, settlement, and development as well as for public uses associated with settlement and development.

ARTICLE 4. GENERAL PROVISIONS.

Sec. 38.04.900. REGULATIONS. (a) The commissioner shall adopt under the Administrative Procedure Act (AS 44.62) regulations he believes are necessary to carry out the purposes of this chapter. Within 120 days after the effective date of this Act, the director shall submit to the commissioner draft regulations implementing this chapter and revising regulations in effect on the effective date of this Act pertaining to planning, classification, management, and disposal of the state's surface estate in land. New and revised regulations shall be integrated in a single comprehensive draft compatible with the structure of the Alaska Administrative Code. In preparing this draft, the director shall seek to simplify and clarify regulations governing land planning, classification, management, and disposal.

(b) A municipality has standing to petition the commissioner for the adoption of a regulation, or for the amendment or repeal of an existing regulation, or to appeal a decision of the commissioner with respect to classification, management, or disposal of land made under authority of a regulation adopted under (a) of this section with respect to state land outside the corporate boundaries of the municipality to protect any interest which the municipality is authorized to regulate outside its boundaries under AS 29.48.037.

(c) If the regulations adopted by the commissioner under (a) of this section fail to provide for a process by which decisions of the commissioner may be appealed, an interested person may petition for reconsideration of a decision. The petition shall contain the information required to be submitted by AS 44.62.220 and shall be acted upon by the commissioner in the manner provided in AS 44.-62.230. For purposes of this section, a municipality is an interested person with respect to its interests in land defined in (b) of this section.

Sec. 38.04.910. DEFINITIONS. In this chapter, unless the context otherwise requires,

(1) "commissioner" means the commissioner of the Department of Natural Resources;

(2) "director" means the director of the division of lands of the Department of Natural Resources;

(3) "fair market value" means the price at which a willing seller and a willing buyer will trade;

(4) "multiple use" means the management of state land and its various resource values so that it is used in the combination that will best meet the present and future needs of the people of Alaska, making the most judicious use of the land for some or all of these resources or related services over areas large enough to provide sufficient latitude for periodic adjustments in use to conform to changing needs and conditions; it includes

(A) the use of some land for less than all of the resources, and

(B) a combination of balanced and diverse resource uses that takes into account the short-term and long-term needs of present and future generations for renewable and nonrenewable resources, including, but not limited to, recreation, range, timber, minerals, watershed, wildlife and fish, and natural scenic, scientific, and historic values;

(5) "official cadastral survey" means a United States public land survey or a survey executed under survey instructions issued by the division for the purpose of preparing a cadastral survey plat, and approved and accepted by the division for the state's official records;

(6) "official control survey" means a position marked on the ground by triangulation or traverse stations established in conformity with standards adopted by United States Coastal and Geodetic Survey for first, second and third order work, whose geodetic positions have been rigidly adjusted on the North American datum of 1927 and approved by the division;

(7) "short-term lease" means a lease for a term of five years or less;

(8) "state park" means an area of state land designated by law to be managed for public use and enjoyment of recreational, scenic, cultural, historical, wilderness, and similar values, including but not limited to areas designated under

(A) AS 41.20.050 - 41.20.060, roadside rests and recreational beaches;

(B) AS 41.20.130 - 41.20.160, 41.20.330 - 41.20.345, ch. 61 SLA 1966, and ch. 26 SLA 1967, state recreation areas;

(C) AS 41.20.170 - 41.20.320, state parks; and

(D) AS 41.35.030, state monuments and historic sites;

(9) "state trail" means an area designated by law to be managed as a public historic or recreational trail including but not limited to

(A) trails designated under AS 41.20.070 - 41.20.120, wilderness trails and campsites; and

(B) trails and footpaths designated under AS 41.20.355 - 41.20.375;

(10) "sustained yield" means the achievement and maintenance in perpetuity of a high level annual or regular periodic output of the various renewable resources of the state lands consistent with multiple use;

(11) "wild and scenic river" means a free-flowing river or stream designated as provided in the federal Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (82 Stat. 906; 16 U.S.C. 1271-1287).

* Sec. 6. AS 38.05 is amended by adding a new section to read:

Sec. 38.05.057. LAND DISCOUNT PROGRAM. (a) The director shall grant to eligible persons a discount on the purchase price of land sold for residential use under this chapter at the rate of five per cent of the purchase price of the land purchased for each full year that the purchaser is a resident of the state. A discount granted under this section may not exceed 50 per cent of the total purchase price of the land or a value of $25,000, whichever amount is less. A discount may be used by an eligible veteran to purchase land offered at a restricted sale under sec. 67 of this chapter.

(b) To be eligible for a discounted purchase price under (a) of this section, a person shall

(1) have been physically present in the state for the 12-month period before the sale, except for brief intervals, military service, attendance at an educational or training institution or for absence for good cause;

(2) maintain a place of residence in the state;

(3) be registered to vote in the state;

(4) not have claimed residence in any other state for any purpose during the 12-month period immediately before the sale;

(5) show by all attending circumstance that his intent is to make Alaska his continuous residence; and

(6) have attained the age of 18 at the date of sale.

(c) A person seeking to establish eligibility for a discount under this section shall present proof meeting the criteria set out in (b) of this section to the director. A person who submits information to the director under this section knowing it to be false is guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, is punishable by imprisonment for not more than five years, or by a fine of not more than $50,000, or by both.

(d) A person is entitled to not more than one discount on the purchase price of land under this section in his lifetime. A discount granted under this section may be applied only to the acquisition of surface rights to state land. A discount may not be applied to costs such as survey costs, road development costs, utility assessments, or other costs as determined by the director which are reimbursable to the state. In all cases, a cash down payment of at least five per cent of the price of the land shall be made at the time of acquisition.

(e) The commissioner may adopt regulation to implement the provisions of this section.

* Sec. 7. AS 38.08.010(a) is repealed and re-enacted to read:

(a) The director shall designate, classify and make available for homesite entry state land in amounts and at times as required in AS 38.04.020 or as may otherwise be required by law.

* Sec. 8. AS 38.08.010 is amended by adding a new subsection to read:

(d) The director shall, to as great an extent as possible, classify land for homesite entry based upon the distribution of population in the state.

* Sec. 9. AS 38.08.020 is amended to read:

Sec. 38.08.020. OFFERING OF LAND FOR HOMESITE ENTRY. The director shall publish notice of the availability of the land for at least three consecutive weeks through the electronic media and in at least three newspapers of general circulation in the state, at least one of which, if possible, shall be a newspaper of general circulation in the vicinity of the available land.

* Sec. 10. AS 38.08.030(a)(2) is amended to read:

(2) submit proof acceptable to the commissioner that he is a resident of the state at the time of application, and that he has been a resident of the state for not less than three years immediately preceding the date his application was submitted, or that he has been a resident for 20 years cumulatively;

* Sec. 11. AS 38.08.060(a)(2) is amended to read:

(2) erects a habitable, permanent, single-family dwelling on the homesite, which meets all applicable state and local regulations, within five years of the date of issuance of the homesite entry permit; for the purposes of this paragraph, mobile homes are not considered to be permanent dwellings unless they are placed on a permanent foundation;

* Sec. 12. AS 38.08.110 is amended to read:

Sec. 38.08.110. REGULATIONS. The commissioner shall adopt regulations in accordance with AS 44.62.180 - 44.62.290 to carry out the purposes of this chapter, including, but not limited to, regulations relating to easements and access routes.

* Sec. 13. AS 38.50.040 is amended to read:

Sec. 38.50.040. LAND SUBJECT TO EXCHANGE. Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, the director is authorized to convey for purposes of exchange any state land or interest in land regardless of the authority under which the land or interest was obtained by the state. The conveyance of university land and school land shall be approved in the manner prescribed in AS 38.05.030.

* Sec. 14. AS 38.50.110(a)(6) is amended to read:

(6) mail the notice to the appropriate board or other entity or person with approval authority as indicated in sec. 40 of this chapter and AS 38.05.030, when university land or school land is involved in the proposed exchange;

* Sec. 15. AS 38.05.035(a)(13), 38.05.365(8), and AS 38.08.110(b)(1), (2), (3) and (5) are repealed.

* Sec. 16. Sections 3, 4, 13 and 14 of this Act and the repeal of AS 38.05.035(a)(13) and 38.05.365(8) contained in sec. 15 of this Act take effect July 1, 1978.

* Sec. 17. Sections 1, 2, 5, and 6 - 12 of this Act and the repeal of AS 38.08.010(b)(1) - (3) and (5) contained in sec. 15 of this Act take effect immediately in accordance with AS 01.10.-070(c).

Approved by the Governor: July 18, 1978
Actual Effective Date: Secs. 3, 4, 13 and 14, July 1, 1978; Secs. 1, 2, 5 - 12, and 15, July 19, 1978

SECTION Personnel
Chapter No. ____ Title Recruitment, Appointment & Separation
Subject Selection & Appointment of Temporaries

SUPERCEDES P & P No. 210-2 (& *memos below)
DATED February 2, 1978
(Please Destroy)

I. PURPOSE: To establish uniform policy and procedure to govern the selection and appointment of temporaries (including Rule 5 07.0 emergency appointments) within this department.

II. DELEGATION OF AUTHORITY TO APPOINT:

Subject to the provisions of governing bargaining unit agreements, Personnel Rules 5 06.0 and 5 07.0 and the guidance in Sections III and IV, below, division directors and separate office heads, or their written designees, are authorized to make temporary (including Rule 5 07.0 emergency) appointments within the Budget Request Units (BRU) for which responsible.

III. POLICY: A. A temporary appointment shall be considered only when a permanent/probationary appointment, or promotion to fill the requirement is made infeasible by one of the following:

1. Clearly defined tasks have evolved that must be accomplished in order to achieve the goals/objectives set forth in the approved program of the BRU; such tasks cannot be done by authorized employees of the BRU; the BRU has the necessary funds to cover the cost of the temporary employee; and the classification required is not one that has been requested in the BRU and denied by the Legislature for the current fiscal year.

2. An emergency situation exists whereby a new program for which funds are available to the BRU must be undertaken immediately; hiring and employment must occur before a permanent position (or register) can be made available; emergency appointment procedure under Personnel Rule 5 07.0 will not suffice; and a permanent position has been (or is being) requested which will be filled from a register within 30 days of the availability of the position/register.

3. A critical situation exists in a BRU caused by unusually heavy workload, prolonged absence of authorized permanent staff, imposition of revised program requirements beyond the capability of existing staff or a similar exigency beyond the control of the BRU, and the BRU has the funds to cover the cost of a temporary employee to alleviate the problem.

B. The Labor, Trades and Craft (LTC) bargaining unit agreement and this P&P shall govern the hire of temporaries for classifications covered by the LTC agreement.

C. Personnel Rule 5 06.0, the applicable bargaining unit agreement and this P&P shall govern the hire of temporaries for classifications covered by the Confidential, General Government and Supervisory bargaining unit agreements.

D. Personnel Rule 5 06.0 provides that "Temporary appointments shall, when practicable, be made from eligible lists. If the Director [of Personnel and Labor Relations] has found it impracticable to make certification because of non-availability of eligibles, he [the Director of Personnel and Labor Relations] may authorize the temporary appointment of a qualified individual designated by the appointing authority..."

E. Personnel Rule 5 06.0 also provides that extension of a 6 months temporary appointment requires approval of the Director of Personnel and Labor Relations. Extension of temporary appointment for classifications in the Confidential, General Government or Supervisory units shall be authorized only upon approval of a written request through program channels to the Commissioner's Office setting forth full justification for the extension and its duration. The combined period of such extension and the period for which originally appointed shall not exceed 9 months.

F. Article XIII, Section 8 of the LTC unit agreement provides that there shall be no extension of the 120 day maximum temporary appointment for classifications governed by the agreement except by mutual agreement of the State and the Union. The Department of Health and Social Services shall not seek exception to the 120 day LTC temporary hire maximum.

G. Division of Personnel and Labor Relations SOP 05-75-002, Section VII provides that "An employee who separated in good standing while holding a permanent or probationary position may be reemployed in the same class without examination or certification. Reemployment must take place within three years of the date of ...separation. Reemployment may be in a lower class in the same class series or in a parallel class series if approved in advance by the Director of Personnel...".

IV. PROCEDURE:

A. Hire of Temporaries Other Then LTC - With the exceptions set forth in paragraphs D, F and G below, which provide for temporary hire under specified circumstances without the use of a register, an authorized individual of the division or separate office will request a register for temporary employment from the servicing personnel office, work the register when received and make a selection in the same manner as for a permanent/probationary appointment. The "Rule of 5" shall apply to temporary appointment. When the selection has been made, the annotated and certified register will be attached to the completed Form 06-5418 (attachment #1) and forwarded to the servicing personnel office for issuance of an appointing Personnel Action Form.

B. Hire of LTC Temporaries - Upon receipt of authorization to hire a temporary whose classification is within the LTC unit, the servicing personnel officer will contact the appropriate Union hiring hall to request dispatch of candidates to the employing office unit/institution. If the Union is unable to furnish names of prospective temporaries within time limits prescribed in the agreement, the employing official will be so informed and furnished guidance by the servicing personnel office for further action to fill the requirement.

C. Duration of Temporary Appointments - It is the responsibility of the division or separate office concerned to assure that a temporary is hired for the absolute minimum period necessary to accomplish the functions for which hired and is terminated when the work assignment has been completed, or when the period of temporary hire approved under this P&P expires, whichever occurs first. The servicing personnel office will closely monitor the period of hire for all temporaries and take timely and appropriate action to effect termination upon completion of the number of days shown in item No. 4 of Form 06-5418, or of any extension of period of temporary hire approved under Section III, Paragraph E, above.

D. Rehire of a Former Employee as a Temporary

1. Rehire in a temporary status of a former permanent or probationary employee who meets the prerequisites of Paragraph G of Section III above may be accomplished without a register when such former employee is not on the applicable register but:

(a) Is qualified as an Alaskan under the definition of Personnel Rule 1 (i.e. "Alaskan means a person whose domicile is within...Alaska... Domicile means the true and permanent home of a person, from which he has no present intention of removing and to which he intends to return whenever he is away...");

ALASKA LEGISLATURE SPECIAL COMMITTEE / SUBJECT FILE 8672
1359 SCOMM 51: BLUE RIBBON COMN. ON STATE PERSONNEL ACT 1978-1983

(b) Has submitted a signed application to the hiring official which stipulates a desire for appointment to a classification held in permanent/probationary status within the preceding three years;

(c) The DHSS servicing personnel officer has confirmed in advance of such job offer and hire that the applicant for temporary appointment was a permanent/probationary employee of the State in the applied for classification and was separated from such employment in good standing within the preceding three years. CAUTION: The hiring official shall request that the DHSS servicing personnel officer make this determination prior to any job offer.

2. The DHSS Personnel Officer will determine, in coordination with DPLR, for DHSS servicing personnel officers at their request, whether (c) above is applicable.

3. The DHSS Form 06-5418 will be accompanied by the signed application of the appointee and will be annotated in the "Certificate" block as follows:

"In lieu of hire from a register this appointment is of a former permanent/probationary employee who meets the prerequisites of Section III, Paragraph G and Section IV, Paragraph D, P&P 210-2"

E. Temporary Appointment of Former State Employee Above Step A -

When a former State employee was separated in good standing from a given classification within the three years preceding the date that the former employee is to be hired on a temporary basis in the same class, an appointing authority has the option of hiring the former employee at A step, the highest step held, or any step in between A step and the highest step held in such classification.

F. Temporary Appointment When Register is Incomplete -

When a permanent position (PCN) cannot be filled because the register for the PCN has been found incomplete under Rule 5 03.5 and the prerequisites below have been met, the appointing authority may approve the hire of a temporary for not to exceed ninety days, without the use of a register. The prerequisites to be met are as follows:

1. A request to subfill the PCN with a probationary appointment has been considered under Rule 5 03.7 and the appointing authority has determined that:

a. Such action would generate a genuine emergency by excessively delaying provision of essential program services (as contrasted with generation of a worrisome but non-critical work backlog); or

b. A subfill classification could not do enough of the duties of the PCN to adequately carry out the mission of the work unit for the time required by a subfill incumbent to achieve eligibility for the higher classification of the position. If an incomplete register is declined and a subfill register requested by the appointing authority, the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations (DPLR) will take action in the following order of priority:

i. If deemed feasible by DPLR, forward to the appointing authority a register with names of persons on registers for classifications related to the classification of the PCN but of the same range as the PCN to be filled; or

ii. Request the appointing authority for a written description of the job content of the lower classification and range to be used in subfilling the PCN to be filled. (DPLR needs such information to be assured that the subfill appointee will neither be expected nor required to perform duties other than those included within the class specification for the classification of the subfill. Time may be saved when requesting a subfill register if the description of the duties of the position when subfilled is forwarded with the request for such register.)

2. When it has been determined under Subparagraph 1a or 1b above by the appointing authority that subfilling a PCN for which there is an incomplete register would present a genuine emergency, the appointing authority may authorize a temporary appointment for not to exceed ninety days under Section III, Subparagraph A 3 above to alleviate "A critical situation [that] exists in the [the] BRU caused by...emergencies beyond the control of the BRU..."

3. Simultaneously with issuance of the authorization for appointment without use of a register, the appointing authority shall take the following action:

a. Request, through the servicing personnel officer, that DPLR implement emergency recruitment procedures in the applicable classification and geographical area to obtain candidates to fill the PCN on a probationary/permanent basis. Attach to the Form 06-5418 the request for recruitment prepared as a memorandum to the Director of Division of Personnel and Labor Relations, through the servicing personnel office, and identify therein the requesting agency BRU and eight digit code against which the costs of advertisements are to be allocated. DPLR officials will expedite such a request to make a register available within sixty days listing the eligible respondents to DPLR recruiting action.

b. Request the local Employment Center for referral of qualified applicants and make a selection from this source if possible.

c. If a selection could not be made from among referrals from the local Employment Center, consider any other available sources for temporary hires;

d. In addition to the narrative justification for the temporary hire required in Form 06-5418, include the date, PCN and classification of the applicable incomplete register and state "This temporary hire is authorized without a register for not to exceed ninety days or until PCN ___ is filled by a probationary/permanent appointee, whichever occurs first, and the individual hired as a temporary has been, or will be, informed of that fact".

G. Emergency Appointment for Thirty Days or Less -

1. Personnel Rule 5 07.0 governs emergency hire for not to exceed 30 days. Rule 5 07.0 is extremely limited in its application and must be carefully reviewed to determine whether it is applicable in a given case. When the division director or separate office head determines that Rule 5 07.0 is applicable, Form 06-5418 will be used to request the servicing personnel office to appoint an individual who meets the minimum qualifications of the classification without use of a register. Full justification to DPLR for the emergency hire as prescribed by Rule 5

07.0 must be attached to the properly completed Form 06-5418 when the servicing personnel office is requested to make the appointment. Also, the Form 06-5418 will be annotated under the subject to add "EMERGENCY under Rule 5 07.0".

2. Occassionally, the hire of a temporary for a period of 30 days or less is dicated by emergency circumstances which fail to meet the criteria of Rule 5 07.0 for emergency appointment but are of a degree of urgency which precludes selection from a register because the processing time required would impose an unacceptable delay in the appointment. In such a case, the division director or separate office head may request the appointment of an individual who meets the minimum qualification for the classification, without the use of a register. Such (quasi-emergency) temporary appointment will be for a period not to exceed 30 calendar days and will be authorized with the understanding that there will be no extension or repetition of such appointment of that individual in that work unit. To request an appointment under this provision, the appointing authority will submit, to the servicing personnel office, the properly completed Form 06-5418, citing "P&P 210-2, Section IV, Paragraph G" following the narrative justification, accompanied by a signed copy of the appointee's signed application for temporary appointment in the applicable classification. If the tasks to be performed that necessitate the appointment will require more than the authorized maximum of 30 calendar days to accomplish, the division director or separate office head shall, simutaneously with the submission of a request for such temporary appointment, also submit a request for a register from which to select an individual for temporary appointment under Paragraph A, above, or for permanent/ probationary appointment.

H. DHSS Servicing personnel officers will critically review each request for temporary appointment to insure that the provisions of Personnel Rule 6 06.0 and this Policy and Procedure are strictly followed. Personnel officers are authorized and required to return requests for appointment which are contrary to this P&P.

To: Members, Blue Ribbon Commission on the Personnel Act

From: Paddy Moriarty
Deputy Ombudsman

Subject: Ombudsman position on APEA's 1/22/79 proposal

At the meeting of the Subcommittee on Categories of Employees this morning, it was requested that Subcommittee members express their agreement or disagreement with an APEA recommendation of January 22, 1979, proposing specific statutory changes.

For the record, the Ombudsman is in support of this proposal (See Mr. Flavin's January 11 memo attached). Mr. Flavin would prefer that the APEA proposal #2 read: (6) the procedure for certifying eligibles to any position in state service other than interim or emergency positions.

The specific language in APEA's proposal #3 and #4 may need some further review, but in substance and intent it has Ombudsman support. Perhaps an administrative appeal mechanism could be devised to address those few exceptions mentioned at this morning's meeting which do not fall within language in #3 or #4. It will not be possible to draft these sections to encompass each set of meritorious special circumstances.

MEMO

TO: Blue Ribbon Commission - Subcommittee, Categories of Employees

FROM: Patrick E. Murphy, Executive Director, Alaska Public Employees Association
Patrick E. Murphy
Ombudsmans Office, TOO

DATE: 1/22/79

SUBJECT: Recommendations for Subcommittee Adoption

In a memo dated November 24, 1978, titled Position on Temporary Employees, APEA set forth some of the problems felt to be of major concern as it related to temporary employees. APEA still feels the problems set forth in that memo are valid and that immediate measures should be taken to correct the inequities.

Therefore APEA makes the following proposal relating to the issue of temporary abuses:

Exempt Local 71 EE's; Marine Transit EE's

1. That two categories of employees exist within the classified state service system.

   A. Permanent employee: to encompass the current categories of permanent full-time, permanent part time and permanent seasonal.

   B. Interim employees: to encompass the current categories of temporary, short-term.

2. Amend AS 39.25.150(6) to read: (6) the procedure for certifying eligibles for permanent full-time, part-time, project or seasonal positions in state service.

3. Amend AS 39.25.150(8) to read: (8) emergency appointments to positions in the state service for a period not to exceed thirty days, made exclusively under conditions necessitating immediate action to provide for the publics' safety and health. Successive emergency appointments or more than three emergency appointments for one person within one calendar year are prohibited.

4. Delete AS 39.25.150(9) as presently written and replace with: (9) interim appointments to positions in the state service, for a period not to exceed sixty (60) days, which are determined to be of a non-reoccuring, nature. Successive interim appointment to the same position are prohibited. No position in the state service shall be filled through an interim appointment for a period in excess of sixty days. Interim appointments must meet minimum qualifications and may be made without competitive examination.

5. Repeal AS 39.25.150(10) dealing with provisional appointments.

The following sections of Title 39 would also require modification to conform to the proposed changes in Chapter 25.

AS 39.20.270 Court Leave - change to read: shall be granted to an employee who is classified as delete, [full-time whether permanent or temporary] add a permanent employee

AS 39.20.310 Exceptions (7) delete [temporary employees hired for periods of less than 12 consecutive months] add: interim employees hired for periods of less than 60 days

AS 39.30.100 Definitions in § 90 of this chapter

(1) "eligible employee means"
(A) An employee who has served in permanent full-time or part-time employment with the same governmental unit for 30 days or more except an emergency or delete [temporary] add interim employee

It is the position of APEA that limiting the span of temporary employment to a maximum of 60 days provides adequate management flexibility in times of high work load, on set of new programs and provides lead time for personnel classifications. Most important the shorter time period emphasizes the need of the program planning, development of sound personnel administration and management. It will also serve to promote the identification of truly reoccuring seasonal position needs and encourage utilization of seasonal and part-time employment.

If action is taken to limit temporary employment to 60 days, the need to secure additional fringe benefits becomes moot.

Thank you for your consideration.

BLUE RIBBON COMMISSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT
CATEGORIES OF EMPLOYEES SUBCOMMITTEE
Legislative Information Office, Anchorage
November 30, 1978

MINUTES

The meeting was called to order by Representative McKinnon, Chairperson. Public testimony was invited. A summary of the points raised follows.

QUESTIONS AND ISSUES PRESENTED

1. Temporary employees working within a bargaining unit are required to belong to the appropriate union.

A. Temporaries have to pay the same union dues as permanent employees but do not receive the same benefits.

B. Employees who have philosophical disagreements with belonging to unions are required to join the appropriate union to hold a state job.

Discussion

Unions are required by law to represent all employees within the bargaining units which they represent. Union negotiating and lobbying efforts benefit both permanent employees and temporary employees, at least on the issues of salary levels. Recent APEA efforts resulted in securing holiday pay for temporary employees. Over half of the lobbying effort of APEA last legislative session was spent trying to persuade the legislature to extend to temporary employees the health and annual leave benefits provided to permanent employees of the state. The legislation passed the House but not the Senate.

C. Have temporary employees been polled on the union's negotiating priorities?

D. Have temporary employees ever been represented on the governing board of APEA?

E. Can members of the union have a prioritized list of the union's bargaining positions?

F. Has a temporary employee ever served as a member of the union negotiating team?

G. There should be a board position for a temporary employee to represent directly the concerns of other temporaries.

Discussion

Before new contract proposals are drafted, APEA polls all of its members, including temporary employees, on negotiating priorities. The questionnaire indicates the employment status of the person answering, so that issues can be identified according to class of employment. The union uses results of the questionnaire in preparing its proposals.

There is nothing to prevent a temporary employee from holding office in the APEA, although Ms. Howard is not aware of any temporary employee who has ever been elected to the board. Under the present by-laws, a temporary could be an active union member only during the time of employment for the state.

2. Benefits for temporaries.

   A. No medical leave or retirement benefits.

   B. No job security.

   C. Temporary employment does not apply to the probationary period, even if the temporary employee is hired as a permanent for the same job.

   D. Union contracts can address the inequities of benefits for temporary employees.

Discussion

Lack of medical, leave and retirement benefits can only be addressed through the legislature, and, as indicated above, APEA spent considerable effort last session attempting to have legislation passed to do so. By union contract, APEA members can have one-third of their time as a temporary applied towards the probationary period required of a permanent position provided that there is no break in service and that the jobs are the same.

Local No. 71, Public Employees union, has negotiated to increase the wages of temporary employees to compensate for the lack of benefits. Temporaries receive an additional $1.32 per hour during the first 120 days they work as temporaries. If that period is extended by agreement, then the base salary of the temporary shifts from Level A of the wage scale to Level B. This system discourages the state from hiring temporaries for positions which should be classified as permanent. The union has found cases in which the state has ignored the union contract provisions about increased pay and has had to force compliance through arbitration.

3. Time limitations on length of temporary jobs.

   A. A limit of six months as a temporary was recently instituted for positions within the APEA bargaining unit. The limit used to be nine months.

   B. Local No. 71 has negotiated a 120-day limit to temporary employment, with extensions possible by mutual agreement between the union and the state.

Discussion

The new time limit for APEA members has caused a problem where supervisors were misinformed and therefore misinformed temporaries. The problem came about partly because there were a number of new supervisors in that particular job in a short period of time.

For discussion of the Local No. 71 system, see discussion under (2) above, Benefits for temporaries.

4. Promises to temporary employees about being hired for future permanent positions.

A. Division of Personnel does not always classify a new position as the program manager may have expected.

B. The better practice is to make no promises about permanent hire to temporary employees.

Discussion

If a program manager promises a permanent position to a temporary employee and then learns that the Division of Personnel has classified that position at a lower range than expected, then the temporary must wait while the position is reclassified. The time required for that process may extend beyond the time the temporary is permitted to work. That will cause the temporary to lose the cross-over of time served toward probationary period.

No promises should be made to temporary employees about permanent employment beyond a committment to consider them as any candidate with similar experience and skills will be considered. This is to ensure that the program manager is not locked into a committment and therefore unable to hire someone more qualified, should such an applicant appear on the register at the time of permanent hire.

5. Compensation for temporary employees who take time from work to testify before this commission.

Some supervisors are refusing to consider the time that their temporary employees spend testifying to the committee as time spent working for the state. Therefore, some temporaries were unable to attend the meetings. The APEA representative in Anchorage will work with the employees who did attend and with their supervisors to ensure that they are compensated for their time. If she is unable to do so, she will advise the commission.

6. None of the temporary employees who addressed the committee had been required to be on the register before being hired for their present positions.

7. The use of temporary employees in positions for which there are permanent funds available.

A. Local No. 71 has identified some 500 unfilled permanent positions within the scope of its bargaining units which it believes should be filled or deleted from the budget.

Discussion

Local No. 71 believes that the state is hiring temporary employees rather than filling presently vacant permanent positions in significant numbers. The union secured from the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations a list showing vacant PCN's within its bargaining unit. It has identified some 500 such vacancies, some of which have been vacant since the early 1970's. (A copy of the list is available from the commission staff.)

Some of the 500 positions may be funded through the Capital Improvement Funds, and therefore, the statistics may be skewed to that extent. Sue Greene of the Governor's office indicated that perhaps 100 of the positions might be CIF positions.

Local No. 71 has received requests for temporary employees within the job classes covered by the permanent-position vacancies on the list.

The Legislative Budget and Audit Committee is programming a computer to provide information on all PCN's vacant for more than a reasonable length of time. The legislature can then delete the position from the agency's budget, should it wish to do so. There is presently a monthly list prepared by the Division of Personnel which shows all of the vacant PCN's in the state and indicates the date of vacancy. Mr. Kareen estimated that approximately 20% of the PCN's are vacant at any one time.

B. Departments contract with private firms for work which could be performed by state employees. Contracting costs more to the state and increases the risk that public services will be jeopardized through a strike.

Discussion

Departments can contract with private firms for work which state employees could perform as well without any oversight by the Division of Personnel. In some cases, contractors with the state fail to fulfill all of the contract committments, leaving the state to hire its own employees to pick up the slack. For example, one contract called for the private contractor to provide janitorial services. When the contractor failed to do so, the state had to hire a member of Local 71 to fill the gap. One private contractor submitted two bids for a construction job, one based upon using his own equipment, and the other, at about $40,000 less, based on using the state's equipment. The higher cost bid was accepted, but then the contractor used the state's equipment to perform the work.

In some cases, the higher cost of subcontracting with private firms results from the higher wages charged by members of private industry unions.

Since state statutes place limitations on public service unions' right to strike, which are not placed on unions operating in the private industry field, there is greater danger that projects will be impeded by strikes when the state contracts with employers using private industry members than when the state hires its own employees.

Albert Baffone charged that the state of Alaska was following a policy of reducing the size of the Local 71 membership with the aim of drying up that union.

8. Problems with the use of CETA program employees within the Department of Corrections.

A. As temporary employees, CETA's within the Department of Corrections are limited to a nine-month period of service and receive no benefits, as permanent employees do.

B. CETA employees are taking the place of permanent employees within the Department, in violation of federal regulations.

C. Some CETA's are placed in supervisory positions over permanent employees who are paid at a higher salary rate than the CETA's.

D. CETA's are paid much less than permanent employees doing the same job.

E. Because of the Department of Correction's reorganization of staff, the state has frozen the Correctional Officer I register, and CETA's cannot apply for permanent positions.

The Comprehensive Employment Training Act is a federal legislative program aimed at providing people who are members of groups which traditionally have difficulty finding jobs with experience to enable them to find permarent employment. Federal regulations prohibit replacing permanent employees with those paid through the CETA program. The federal government provides $1,039 maximum per month in salary for those employed under the program. States using the program are free to supplement that salary if they desire.

The Division of Corrections has a number of CETA employees, classified as temporary employees by the state, who are paid at a salary range 9. The positions were meant to be Media Appreciation and Recreation Aides. However, because the Ridgeview Correctional Center (where approximately 27 CETA's work) is severely understaffed, the CETA employees have been doing the work of Correctional Officer I's, who are classified at SR 13. These positions have just been reclassified from SR 11. CETA's are paid $2.00 less per hour than Correctional Officer I's. Since CETA's are classified as temporary employees, they have no benefits or job security. There is nothing in the federal legislation requiring that CETA's be classified as temporaries. There are non-CETA temporary employees who are paid at the Correctional Officer I salary range. There are CETA employees working in supervisory roles over Correctional Officer I's who make substantially more than they do, which is bad management practice.

Niel Thomas suggested that the commission should consider recommending that the legislature provide a supplement to CETA funds so that departments are required to pay appropriate salaries for the CETA's they employ. The federal government could also be asked to provide a wage supplement to the salary money it provides to Alaska, since the Alaskan cost of living is so much higher than the cost of living in the lower 48 states.

Aggravating the other problems faced by the CETA's employed in the Division of Corrections is the fact that the Division is undergoing reclassification of Correctional Officer positions. No job applications are being accepted for the positions of Correctional Officer I, so CETA's whose period of temporary employment must end because the six or nine-month period has elapsed cannot get on the register for a permanent position in the field in which they have been working.

The Division of Corrections has answered these problems by deciding to employ no more CETA's rather than by trying to keep the program and provide an opportunity for the underemployed to gain skills and experience to make them employable by adjusting the inequities in the present system.

At one time, there were a number of CETA positions within the bargaining unit of Local No. 71. However, by contract, the state was required to pay each CETA employee the existing wage rate for any union member. The state no longer has any CETA positions within the bargaining unit.

The CETA regulations require that people employed under that program receive equal treatment with other employees similarly situated. That language has been interpreted by the state to mean treatment comparable to any other temporary employee. The Municipality of Anchorage, which has a substantial number of CETA's, treats them as permanent employees entitled to all the benefits provided other permanent employees.

9. Problems of Program Managers in staffing programs.

    1. Time to get permanent positions filled from register and yet to meet legislative directives.

2. Treatment of temporary employees.

Discussion

Because creating new positions and hiring form the register takes a considerable amount of time, departments cannot use that system when given legislative directive to remedy a problem quickly. Last session, the legislature passed HB720, directing that by November 1, 1978, the Department of Natural Resources designate 30,000 acres of state land for disposal under the homesite entry program and the open-to-entry program. The act included other directions, and the legislature appropriated funds for 100 new positions for the department. By the time that the legislation had passed (it was approved by the Governor on July 18, 1978), enough time did not remain to both meet the legislative deadline and also to hire permanent employees from the register to fill the new positions. Temporary employees were hired and the department at the same time began the process of creating new permanent positions. (P402's had to be prepared for each new position describing the particular duties of the employee in this job, even though most fell within existing job classes.)

In order to allow the department to staff the program quickly, the Division of Personnel set aside all other tasks for four to six days to speed the paperwork. There was some delay in the Division of Budget and Management, which had to sort through four different appropriation bills affecting this program to ensure that proper authorization existed to establish these positions.

Departments may have short term projects to handle which require particular expertise. If the department lacks the time to be able to hire a permanent employee, it will hire a temporary while beginning the paperwork to establish a permanent position. The project may last beyond the six-month limit on the employment of a temporary, but it is quite possible that the permanent position may not yet be authorized. This hinders the department in the operation of its programs.

When hiring temporaries for professional positions, there is a problem using the register. Most professional people who are good candidates for a particular position are likely to already be employed and will be unwilling to leave a permanent job, with the benefits and protections it affords, for a temporary position, even if there will be a permanent position to replace the temporary one. Furthermore, it is bad management practice to advise any temporary employee that she or he will be hired for a future permanent position, since not only is there the possibility that the permanent positions will be established at a lower salary range than the department expects, but also, by the time that the department is authorized to fill the permanent position, there may be someone more qualified on the register whom the department will prefer to hire.

When filling a temporary position, the registers may be of some assistance in locating possible employees. Mr. Reed stated that it was his practice to call for a register, to review the applications of those on the register and to contact those whom he did not know personally to inquire whether they were interested in the temporary position available. Those whose situation he knew, he would not contact unless he expected them to want a change.

WITNESSES

1. Barbara Eakin, temporary Administrative Assistant II with the Division of Lands of the Department of Natural Resources since July 31, 1978. The Division of Lands is in the process of seeking classification of a permanent position of Accounting Clerk III for which she expects to be "strongly considered."

2. Karen Holser, a temporary Water Technician with the South Central Division of Water Section of the Department of Natural Resources. She is working under a program created by HB720 to reduce the backlog in water rights applications. The legislature authorized 52 permanent positions, all of which have been filled. In addition, the department created temporary positions funded from money made available problable through the vacancy of permanent positions.

3. Ruth Moulton, a temporary employee of the Division of Planning and Classification of the Department of Natural Resources. She has held temporary positions with the state three times and prefers to work as a temporary employee.

4. Al Baffone, Business Manager of Local No. 71 of the Public Employees Union.

5. Helen Collier, a temporary employee under the Comprehensive Employment Training Act (CETA), working as a Media Appreciation and Recreational Aide with the Department of Corrections.

6. Barbara Kelly, a temporary Accounting Clerk I with the Division of Lands of the Department of Natural Resources.

7. Steven Reed, Chief of the Planning and Classification Division of the Department of Natural Resources. He has held the position for one year.

8. Bob Dawkins, Journeyman Plumber with the state.

9. Eleanor Andrews, Field Representative with the Anchorage APEA.

INVITED WITNESS

Frank Flavin advised the Committee that he had invited Mike Smith, Assistant Commissioner/Director of Lands with the Department of Natural Resources. Mr. Smith was unable to attend.

MINUTES

CATEGORIES OF EMPLOYEES SUBCOMMITTEE HEARING
November 16, 1978

The Subcommittee on Categories of Employees met at 9:00 a.m., Thursday, November 16, 1978, in Room 123 A of the State Capitol Building, Representative Joseph McKinnon, Chairperson, presiding.

Representative McKinnon suggested that the subcommittee identify short and long-term goals.

TOPICS IDENTIFIED

1. Use of Temporary Employees: The use of temporaries circumvents the merit system because departments are not required to hire from the register. Temporaries do not receive most state employee benefits and are therefore cheaper to employ. Departments can hire individuals as temporaries in order to allow them to fulfill experience or residency requirements and then hire them as permanent employees.

2. Contractual Employees: The same kinds of abuses (by-passing of tests, eligibility lists and mininum job qualifications) that occur in the use of temporaries can occur when departments contract out work that could be done by permanent employees.

3. Categories of State Employees: Is it appropriate for the state to have all of the categories presently in use--permanent full-time, permanent part-time, permanent seasonal, probationary, emergency, temporary and contractual?

4. Proliferation of Unique Job Classifications: Alaska has an excessive number of classifications when compared with other states having a similar number of state employees.

5. Equal Pay for Equal Work: Job categories which were created many years ago tend to be set at lower salary ranges than those created more recently, even though they may require the same kinds of training, experience and responsibilities. The salary ranges of some positions, such as secretarial, are tied to the salary range of the employee's supervisor rather than the requirements of the job.

6. Delays in processing applications to get on eligibility registers.

7. University of Alaska employees and court system employees are outside the state's merit system because of constitutional provisions.

8. Effect of the Rule of Five on Affirmative Action: Where EEO problems exist, affirmative action hiring can be accomplished by establishing EEO compliance as a justification for looking below the top five candidates.

9. The state's system of reclassifying positions.

SUGGESTIONS ON OPERATION OF THE COMMISSION

1. The Committee Structure: Care should be taken that problems are not overlooked because they fail to fall within existing committee structure. After more public input, the committee structure should be examined to consider modifications. Is the Merit System/Collective Bargaining Subcommittee necessary?

2. Adequate input from program managers who have particular knowledge of problems in the state's personnel system needs to be gathered. The Commission should consider preparing a questionnaire for distribution to state employees.

3. A crash course or dictionary on the terminology and paper flow in the personnel system for commission members. Staff will work on this.

JOB CATEGORIES IN THE STATE PERSONNEL SYSTEM

1. Trainees are generally employed in short term, probationary positions in which the employee involved is trained for a particular permanent job classification. Individuals employed under a federal program in which there is no assurance of continued funding (for example, the CETA program) are also classified as trainees.

2. Permanent seasonal positions are used where the job is needed for less than the full year, and departments concerned expect the individual to return to fill that job from year to year. For example, Fish & Game has salmon counters who are permanent seasonal employees. If the department does not expect to have the same individual returning to the job from year to year, then the department lists the job as a temporary position. The Personnel Division encourages departments to use the permanent seasonal category, but since there are adequate applicants for temporary jobs, departments with budget limitations will use the temporary category.

3. Emergency employees are appointed by some departments only where there is danger to life or property. Others will use an emergency appointment where it saves them money. An emergency appointment is authorized for 30 days with three one-month extensions possible. The employee does not have to meet the minimum qualifications, and the department can appoint to any job classification it wishes. Division of Personnel is notified of the appointment after it has been made. There are two categories of recurring emergency appointments: escorts for mental patients and for prisoners.

4. The temporary employee category was designed to meet the short-term needs of an agency. It can be used where a permanent position becomes vacant, and the agency needs to have someone to do the work during the selection process. Temporaries usually do only part of the work assigned to the permanent position.

A temporary position lasts for a period of six months with a possible three-month extension. Unlike emergency appointments, temporary employees must meet the minimum qualifications of the job class to which they are appointed, and the duties they are to perform must be consistent with the duties of that job classification.

The Division of Personnel does a post-audit of the departments temporary positions. Presently, the division examines about 10% of the positions. The division has the authority to remove a person improperly filling a temporary position. It gives notice to the department involved, and the department has two weeks to correct the error (for example, by reclassifying the positon to one for which the holder has the necessary minimum qualifications), or to let the employee go.

In making temporary appointments, the department is not required to consult the register for the job classification. The Department of Health & Social Services is the only department that has a policy of hiring temporary employees from the register. A system could be established to accomodate a requirement that departments hire temporaries from the register, though it would require some time to ensure that applicants on the temporary register were willing to be considered for temporary positions and to speed up the process of providing registers to departments.

Sometimes departments are put in a position of having to use temporaries because of a delay in receiving federal funds. The department makes timely application for a program to the federal government indicating, for example July 1 as the starting date of the state program. The department gets no formal response from the federal government until August 15--45 days into the program's life. In order to get the program going quickly, the department hires temporaries immediately, rather than take additional time to advertise and screen applicants for permanent positions. The department may have received verbal assurances that the funding would be approved prior to receipt of the formal approval. It could therefore have gambled on formal approval being granted, and could have begun hiring for permanent positions to permit program operation as soon as federal funds were received. However, if the federal money did not appear, the state would have to pay for salaries it had not intended to finance. Emergency appointments are not used in the same way, as an alternative to permanent appointments.

Mr. Thomas suggested that the use of emergency appointments could be expanded, but the requirements for temporary appointments should be tightened. If an agency had a vacant secretarial position, it could hire someone instantly for the five days it would take to hire a secretary from the register.

APEA has gathered information on the use of temporaries by the state, which show that many of the needs temporaries are filling are permanent needs, either seasonal or full-time. Pat Murphy presented the following data:

	TOTAL # OF TEMPS	DEPT. OF FISH & GAME	DEPT. OF LABOR
July, 1978	1,701	522	93
July, 1977	1,863	508	158
July 1976	1,887	500	112

In answer to a question about whether those needs are year-long or seasonal, Mr. Murphy provided the following figures:

	TOTAL # OF TEMPS	DEPT. OF FISH & GAME
November, 1977	1,146	163
November, 1976	1,196	177
November, 1975	1,148	109

Mr. Murphy asserted that the Department of Fish & Game appears to have a recurring need for some 500 to 525 permanent employees each summer, and the Department of Labor some 100 to 150 permanent employees.

Mr. Kareen pointed out that a temporary position stays on the payroll, whether or not it is filled by an employee, until the department fills out papers indicating that position is no longer needed. Wages are drawn only according to the time sheets turned in to the Division of Finance. Mr. Murphy indicated that his figures were not checked for whether the position was actually filled.

Mr. Murphy stated that he had no problems with managers having discretion to hire temporaries for 45 to 60 days, but did have problems with 6 to 9 month terms.

Mr. Kareen asked whether there was anything that precluded APEA from negotiations on the length of time of a temporary position. Mr. Murphy explained that Mr. Hunt held the position that the length of temporary employment was statutory, and therefore non-negotiable.

PUBLIC TESTIMONY

Eileen Maki, a Public Health Nurse I (PHN I) working at the Juneau Health Center, spoke. She identified problems of concern to PHN's.

1.) Classification: At present, Public Health Nurse I's are classified at Range 14, Public Health Nurse II's at Range 15, and Public Health Nurse III's at Range 17. Public Health Nurse Trainees are at Range 12. In February, 1978, the Chief of the Section of Nursing requested that all PHN's prepare P402's describing their duties and justifying reclassification of those positions to higher salary ranges. The deadline for delivering the P402's to each nurse's supervisor was March 17. The forms were reviewed, and in early April, they were sent to the Section of Nursing for further review and for the development of a uniform job description for each job class. They apparently remained in the Section of Nursing for about six months, until the end of October or the beginning of November.

On November 3, Ms. Maki and another PHN I from the Juneau Health Center, Constance Trollan, met with Mike McMillan, a Personnel Analyst with the Division of Personnel. Mr. McMillan told then that he had just received the requests for reclassification and that he would not be able to perform his evaluation until after the Division of Budget & Management had identified funding for the potential increase of the Health & Social Services budget.

At the November 3 meeting, Ms. Maki and Ms. Trollan discussed with Mr. McMillan the discrepancy between the salary ranges assigned PHN's and those assigned other positions in state employment, such as institutional nurses. In particular, they questioned Mr. McMillan about the classification of Physician's Assistants to Range 17, while PHN I's are at Range 14.

The justification for classifying Physician's Assistants reads, in its entirety:

> This new class aligns internally with the class of Associate Attorney I at SR-17. It also aligns with SR-17 pay-wise for similar jobs in private industry. (Memo from Daniel H. Morrissey, Chief, Classification and Employee Development, Division of Personnel & Labor Relations, and Lee Antrim, Personnel Analyst, April 15, 1976)

Mr. McMillan checked the PHN files kept by the Division of Personnel for a classification analysis for PHN I's to compare with that of the Physician's Assistant. Apparently, none exists, since Mr. McMillan was unable to find one.

Ms. Maki explained the educational and training requirements for PHN I's and Physician's Assistants. A PHN must have a B.A. in Nursing from a school accredited by the National League of Nursing, with course work in the public health field. She or he must be licensed as a Registered Nurse by the State of Alaska. A PHN is authorized to practice within her area of expertise without the supervision of an M.D., including diagnosis and treatment of some conditions. In addition, she or he is responsible for nursing kinds of care for some of the patients, beyond the responsibilities of Physician's Assistants. Physician's Assistant is required by the state to have a Certificate of Competency from an Physician's Assistants Program. The state does not examine the source of the certificate to evaluate its program nor is a college degree required. Some have been military medical programs, others have more extensive training. The state does not have an examination and licensing program for Physician's Assistants, as it does for Registered Nurses. Physician's Assistants are allowed to diagnose and treat conditions within the level of their training and are required to be supervised by an M.D.

Some discrepancy in range assignments may result from the fact that the PHN classification has existed since statehood, while the Physician's Assistant classification was only recently created. Of more concern is the fact that apparently all of the Physician's Assistants employed by the state are men, and all of the PHN's are women.

2. Career Ladder: At present, there is no career ladder in the PHN's field, since there are only a limited number of supervisory positions and the itinerant PHN is located only in rural areas. To advance beyond the PHN I level, an employee is forced to relocate.

The Trainee position cannot be considered an entry-level position for PHN I, since advancement to that level requires a B.A. with public health course work. Experience cannot be considered a substitute.

There is a PHN Trainee in Ketchikan who has just completed a training program in Women's Health Care, but despite the added skill she brings to her job, she remains a PHN Trainee because she lacks a four-year degree.

COMMITTEE DISCUSSION

1. Reclassification procedures: Mr. Kareen explained that the Division of Personnel policy requiring identification of funding sources before proceeding with a review of the reclassification requests was established when Joe Henry was Commissioner of the Department of Administration. Because of the magnitude of the reclassification of PHN's, the Division of Personnel can only proceed after it receives approval from the Governor's Division of Budget & Management, which will first get approval from the department in question. This ensures that the Governor is informed of the fiscal impact of proposed changes. Given its present level of staffing, the Division of Personnel can only afford to do a limited number of reclassification studies, and this system provides some insurance that those on which further action will be taken receive priority. The Division of Personnel does not have the authority to change this system unilaterally.

A member of the audience pointed out that a budget document justifying the requested reclassifications should be prepared by the department and sent with the P402's to the Division of Personnel for transmittal to the Division of Budget & Management and that if this were not done, that Budget & Management might refuse to act. Mr. Thomas pointed out that in private industry, this kind of insistance on paper flow would not hold up a valid personnel action.

Representative McKinnon asked whether a department could reclassify a position to become effective at the beginning of the next fiscal year if funding were approved by the legislature. Mr. Murphy answered that that was proposed for the position of Pioneer Home Aides, but the Commissioner of Administration refused to allow it.

It was proposed that the system be changed to provide that the Division of Personnel have the responsibility for initiating reclassifications where inequities exist. Personnel should make its recommendations to the Division of Budget & Management, which would have the responsibility for identifying funding needs. If Budget & Management determined that sufficient funds were not available in the department, then it would prepare a supplemental appropriation for submission to the legislature. Once the Division of Personnel decides that a reclassification is valid, the those positions should have to be appropriately reclassified.

At a minimum, the Division of Personnel should make recommendations on all reclassification requests submitted to it so that the Division of Budget & Management has sufficient information on which to make its decision. APEA has found a number of instances in which Budget & Management refused to ask for additional funding for what were valid reclassifications, and therefore, the legislature was never presented with the question on funding for its consideration.

2. Potential State liability for failure to reclassify: If the PHN's of the state choose to bring suit under the Federal Equal Pay Act, the state would face a potential liability in the neighborhood of $2.5 million. Assuming 50 PHN's at Range 14 earn an average of $20,000 annually, the total present salary of PHN's is $1 million. If PHN's were reclassified to Range 17 (the Physician's Assistant range) averaging $26,000 annually, the total salaries would be $1.3 million. The Federal Equal Pay Act allows consideration of the salary levels of the past two years, and if the plaintiff/employee proves willful misconduct, damages may be awarded for the pst three years. In addition, the court may award attorney's fees and interest to successful litigants. In some cases, attorneys will work on a contingent-fee basis. Instead of charging clients by the hour for time spent on the case and requiring payment as the case progresses, an attorney will charge clients a predetermined percentage of the judgement in the event the case is successful. This enables clients who cannot afford to pay attorney's fees in advance to bring suit.

The state should recognize that there is a chance that if suit were brought, the state could lose. In private industry, that kind of potential liability is enough to cause the employer to ensure that appropriate changes are made so that the employees affected do not choose to sue.

One of the reasons that the state does not respond in the same manner is the budgetary system of paying for judgements. Payment for judgements against the state is proposed by an Attorney General's bill, which the legislature rarely scrutinizes. On the other hand, increased funds for reclassifications of positions within a department become part of the department's operating budget, which the legislature may examine and question in some detail. The system therefore makes it easier to pay a more expensive judgement than for the department to act on its own initiative at a lower overall cost.

Pat Murphy pointed out that the legislature appropriates money for permanent positions (PCN's) as part of the general appropriation. Therefore, permanent positions do not decrease the funds available for departmental programs. However, temporary positions are not part of that general appropriation, and funding for temporary employees may have to come from program funds.

3. Legislative budgetary process: Representative McKinnon noted that the House automatically, in most instances, adds the necessary funds for reclassifications to the maintenance budget. Legislative oversight should not hinder valid reclassifications.

Senator Ray cautioned that a decision by a department to reclassify positions does not bind the legislature to fund all of those positions. The legislature cannot reclassify the positions, but it can refuse to fund some of them, causing the department to have to decrease the number of its employees in order to pay the increased amount.

4. Letter to the Governor: Representative McKinnon, as Chairperson of the subcommittee, will write Governor Hammond requesting his position on the reclassification difficulties experienced by the PHN's. The staff will assist in drafting the letter.

5. Future subcommittee meetings: The next subcommittee meetings will focus on temporary employees. Later meetings will consider the reclassification question.

BLUE RIBBON COMM SSION ON THE STATE PERSONNEL ACT

RE: Issues Summary, Certification, Classification & Recruitment Subcommittee

CENTRALIZATION OR DECENTRALIZATION OF PERSONNEL ADMINISTRATION

1. A thread throughout many of the issues presented below is whether the personnel functions of the state should be centralized in the Division of Personnel or decentralized to the separate departments. Decentralization of the certifying of eligibles for unique job classes could result in more accurate classification of positions and evaluation of applicants and take less time than Division of Personnel now requires, leaving the Division with more time to handle the general job classess and fulfill its audit and service roles. The audit role would be more important under a decentralized system because there would be need of insuring consistency among departmental decisions.

Decentralization could result in confusion for applicants if there were no central locations for applying for jobs. It would be possible to have the Division of Personnel serve the public by establishing offices for information about jobs. These offices could be coordinated with Department of Labor's Job Service Centers and could accept applications and forward them to the appropriate departments.

On the other hand, it would be possible to have all personnel officers be employees of the Division of Personnel. This might insure better communication between the Division and the departments, and better control by the Division over personnel decisions within the departments. Testimony was presented to the commission indicating that a centralized system could result in considerable friction between the Division and the department in question and that this friction could hinder the effectiveness of the personnel officer.

Some departments have statutory authority for hiring their own personnel officers who are also empowered to adopt regulations for those classes of employees which are unique to that department. The departments include the departments of highways, fish and game, education, labor and health and social services. AS39.25.160.

QUESTIONS:

a) Is communication and control of personnel functions increased if personnel officers are employed by the Division of Personnel?

b) Does centralization create more problems than it solves by creating friction between departments and the Division?

c) Will the state be able to find and hire better people faster if the departments are responsible for all phases of the filling of positions in unique job classifications? Components of filling jobs include recruitment, application evaluation, writing exams, evaluating exams and establishing registers.

d) Will having personnel decisions decentralized lead to greater abuses of the merit principles? Can the Division audits prevent such abuses?

e) Will there be added expense in a decentralized system resulting from having to increase departmental personnel staffs? Could the money involved (if any) be better spent increasing the staff of the Division of Personnel or its operational budget?

f) If unique job classifications are decentralized, how should the system of applying for a state job be structured to insure that applicants receive knowledge of vacancies for which they might wish to apply?

g) Would job classifications be combined so as to be unique to each department, or would a single list be maintained by all of the departments using that general classification? For example, would engineering classes be made unique to the departments and separate lists maintained according to the type of engineering skills involved: Department of Environmental Conservation (Environmental Engineer), Department of Transportation and Public Facilities (Civil and Architectural Engineers), Health and Social Services (Sanitary Engineers); or would there be a single list for all engineers through which departments would search for those with specialties in the areas required for a particular vacancy?

CLASSIFICATION

2. Classification process. The process used for classifying new positions differs little from the process used for reclassifying existing positions. Testimony has indicated that both can be slow and cumbersome. The process includes:

a) Preparation of job descriptions (P402's) describing the duties of the position and justifying the requested title and salary range. For new positions, the P402 is prepared by the immediate supervisory of the postion. For reclassifications, the present job holder prepares the form.

b) Departmental review varies widely among the departments.

c) Review and approval by the Division of Budget and Management, if the classification or reclassification requires an increase to departmental budget.

d) Classification study by the Division of Personnel and Labor Relations, including a comparison to similar positions in other departments, other states, and in private industry.

While most time is spent in the classification study, the process of classifying positions can develop delays at any of the steps. The time required leads program managers, who must meet legislative deadlines for programs and handle the normal work of the department, to hire temporary employees, which often leads to circumvention of the controls of the merit system.

REMEDY: Does the Commission wish to recommend that responsibility for handling classification of positions in unique job classifications be delegated to the user departments? If so, do the departments have adequate staff in their personnel offices to accept the responsibilities delegated? What would be the net cost difference?

Discussion: New job classification or existing positions' reclassification could be done by the user department's personnel section. The department would prepare Budget and Management forms and submit them directly to the Division of Budget and Management for budget authorization. The Division of Personnel would be given a copy of the entire submittal and would have a limited time to approve or veto the proposed classification action. If no response were received from Personnel within the time set, then the action would stand, subject to post-audit review, which would be limited to changing actions found to be contrary to established rule or law.

This concept makes the classification time responsive to management at the departmental level, which can set priorities for action by its personnel section. Division of Personnel would retain an oversight role to insure consistency in classification standards throughout the state. This process could also be more responsive to applicants.

3. Division of Personnel recommendations to Division of Budget and Management on reclassifications. Testimony received indidates that the Division of Personnel evaluates and makes recommendations on proposed reclassifications only after the Division of Budget and Management has authorized funding for the change.

Federal law requires that employees be paid on the principle of equal pay for equal work, as does state law. Under federal law, employees who have been underpaid may be entitled to back pay with interest and attorney's fees in case of litigation. The present system of approving reclassifications gives Budget and Management a veto over reclassifications before Personnel has established the merit of the proposed change.

REMEDY: 1. Does the Commission wish to propose that the Division of Personnel place more emphasis on initiating reclassification studies? 2. Does the Commission wish to propose that where the Division has found that a reclassification should be made, that those positions must be reclassified, regardless of funding available? If funding is not available, and if the legislature decides against a supplemental appropriation to the departmental budget, then this policy would require a decrease in the number of positions to pay for the higher salaries of those remaining. 3. Should the Division of Personnel perform evaluations on all reclassification requests before Budget and Management makes recommendations and authorizes funding?

4. Structure of classes of positions. The Commission heard testimony on several components of the structure of the state's job classes.

a) Consolidation of job classifications. At present, there are 1,600 job classifications in the state, which is a larger number than other states with similarly-sized work forces. Reducing the number could speed the classification process and could help to prevent some of the inequities in salaries assigned to different classifications. At the same time, the consolidation could help to develop rational career ladders within classes.

b) Minimum qualifications for positions. Testimony was presented that minimum qualifications for some positions over emphasize educational requirements, which then eliminate candidates who could perform the work satisfactorily but who lack the educational background specified. This is a particular problem for filling positions in the bush. On the other hand, one witness thought that more stringent educational standards should be required for social workers employed by the state.

STATUTE: AS39.25.155 requires establishment of vocational standards as alternatives for education or experience levels now required for non-professional occupational areas. Applicants will be placed on eligible lists for the vocational classification indicated on their applications, ranked by assessment of their technical ability and place of residence, without written examination. The purpose of the vocational substitution program is to establish a liberal system under which Alaskan residents not employed by the state may demonstrate their abilities and be hired. It is intended for use primarily in remote or underemployed areas where there is a local need for employees with certain vocational skills.

c) Career ladders. Two problems with career ladders were brought to the Commission's attention:

1) In the Public Health Nurse class, there is no viable career ladder system. There are a number of PHN-I's in the state, only a handful of PHN-II positions and a few PHN-III positions. PHN-III's are itinerant health nurses, located in rural areas and traveling throughout a wide area. Nurses working as PHN-I's have no realistic opportunity of remaining with the state in their field and receiving a promotion to another job classification.

2) In the Chemist class, there is no position available to chemists just out of college. The Chemist I position requires the applicant to have a master's degree or one year's experience as a chemist. There is no typical entry-level chemist classification which requires a college degree in chemistry and no additional experience.

REMEDY: Does the Commission wish to recommend that a comprehensive review of the present job classifications be undertaken by the Division of Personnel and the departments to reduce the number and provide consistency between positions; to provide career ladders within all classes; and to provide for entry level positions with minimal educational requirements in each field? Should the policy set out in AS39.25.155 be extended? Should experience substitute for education except where educational requirements are necessary for licensing in that occupation? What are the equal employment opportunity implications?

CERTIFICATION

5. Certification process. The process for certifying applicants and placing them on registers takes in the majority of cases between three to eight weeks which is too long. There are several components to this problem:

a) Open Recruitment. The state's policy of open recruitment of applicants has led to a substantial increase in the number of applications submitted to the Division of Personnel. This increased workload has added to the time taken for evaluation, testing (where required) and placement on the register. The Legislative Auditor suggests in Recommendation No.2 of his report of January 27, 1977, that the Division should accept applications based on forecasted turnover of positions rather than continue accepting all applications submitted. The Division replied that the state would have to have a greater pool of employees before it could accurately forecast future staffing needs.

Applicants may be encouraged by the fact that the state has accepted an application to believe that there is expected to be a vacancy in that position. If no vacancies occur for a considerable time, the applicant may become frustrated and feel that he is being unfairly treated by the Division of Personnel. On the other hand, if recruitment is closed for a period of time, then the state could not accept applications for any position within that classification. This could present a severe handicap particularly for classes with a number of specialized positions.

b) Unreasonable departmental requirements. One applicant found the application process for the position of Correctional Officer I to be unduly cumbersome and overly technical. The Division required that he be fingerprinted at a particular state office within a limited time, although fingerprints do not change and there were other more convenient state locations for being fingerprinted.

c) Evaluation of applicant's experience. It can take longer for the Division of Personnel to evaluate an applicant's experience than to administer an examination, even though the testing process is lengthy. For unique job classes and for professional level positions, the personnel analyst in the Division may lack the knowledge of the field necessary to perform an accurate evaluation. If the responsibility for filling positions in unique job classifications were delegated to the user department, this problem would be avoided.

d) Location. All application evaluation is done in the Juneau office. Applications from people in other areas of the state must be delivered to Juneau. Mail delivery time and frequent mail delays add to the time before action can be taken on the application. Applicants in other locations do not have ready access to the person making the evaluation and therefore are less able to challenge the results, should they feel that the evaluation is incorrect. The Division's field offices in Anchorage and Fairbanks are not authorized to process applications submitted to them.

e) Data Processing. The Legislative Auditor, in his report, recommended that the Division adopt an automated application processing system. The Division indicated in its response that progress was being made on the implementation of that system. The Auditor also recommended that files be kept by social security number and that employee records should be automatically interfaced with the Payroll Section for immediate and constant updating. The Division replied that because of considerable public and legislative concern about the expanding use of social security numbers as identity numbers, a social security based filing system did not appear advisable.

REMEDY:

a) Open recruitment. Should the state's policy of open recruitment be limited?

b) Experience evaluation. Should the department's be responsible for the evaluation of applications for positions in job classes unique to that department?

Could the application be structured differently to assist the applicant in directly presenting his or her skills, training and experience to assist the rater in making an accurate evalaution?

c) Location. Does the Commission wish to recommend that regional offices of the Division of Personnel in Anchorage and Fairbanks be authorized to evaluate applications and grade examinations and maintain regional master personnel records?

Should eligible lists for positions assigned to salary range 10 or below be kept on a regional basis according to the location in which the applicant will accept work? If so, how should the regional boundaries be drawn? (See also discussion on Lists of Eligibles, issue number 9, page 9).

d) Data processing. Does the Division of Personnel have sufficient funds to fully implement the data processing of applications? Should the Commission recommend additional funding for that purpose?

If the Commission chooses not to recommend decentralization of the classification process for unique job classifications, does it wish to recommend that the user departments evaluate the training and experience of applicants for unique job classifications?

6. Multiple applications within a job series. The Division of Personnel now requires an application for each job classification within a series. Applicants are therefore required to file several applications and to take several tests if they wish to apply for different levels within the series.

For example, accountants must take different examinations for the different levels within the accounting field. The Division of Personnel has found that giving multiple examinations within a job series is necessary since different levels of a series may require different kinds of skills. Furthermore, performance on an examination for one level does not accurately predict the applicant's performance on an exam for a different level.

REMEDY: Does the Commission wish to recommend that the Division of Personnel require a single application for several classifications within a series - e.g. a Clerk Typist application would cover the positions of Clerk Typist I, II and III - or that the Division require only one application for all positions for which an applicant wishes to be considered?

7. Veteran's preference. One witness testified that he and his subordinate each applied for a vacancy outside the classification series of their present positions, but closely similar to them. His subordinate received the job because he was slightly higher on the register as a result of the five points added to his score because he was a veteran.

STATUTES: AS39.25.150(23) provides for the granting of preference to veterans each time they apply for non-promotional employment. In determining the qualification of applicants for entrance into the classified service under the merit system examination, five points are added to the passing grade of a veteran and ten points are added to the passing grade of a disabled veteran.

REGULATIONS: PR3 07.3 implements that statute.

REMEDY: Does the Commission wish to recommend that the employment preference given to veterans be limited by requiring that it be available only within a limited time after separation from the service (e.g. 10 or 15 years) or that each veteran may receive a bonus a specific number of times?

8. Promotional lists. Because the state's policy is to fill vacancies from promotional lists whenever possible, applicants who are on the competitive (rather than the promotional) register may never be considered for vacancies. This may lead to the applicant on the competitive register becoming frustrated with the state's hiring system.

In being considered for promotion, one correctional officer learned after the fact that his experience outside of the state's employment was not considered in his evaluation. He was advised that he should have specifically requested that it be considered, but such advice was given only after he questioned the rating he received.

STATUTES: AS39.25.150(4) provides that vacancies be filled by promotion whenever practicable and in the best interest of the state service.

REGULATIONS: PR3 01.3 provides for promotional examinations.

PR5 02.3 When hiring from a promotional list, selection shall be from among the top five available eligibles.

REMEDY: Does the Commission wish to recommend that the policy of the state be changed to eliminate the preference for hiring from promotional lists?

Does the Commission wish to recommend that the Division of Personnel audit the use of promotional lists to insure that no abuses occur?

9. Hiring from the list of eligibles. Both program managers and applicants have concerns about the lists of eligibles.

a) Program managers. Program managers have found that some eligibility lists are not current. This occurs sometimes because of regional preferences of applicants and sometimes because the applicant has become unavailable for work or has accepted another position with the state and is no longer seeking the same level of placement.

An applicant may remain on an eligibility list for a period of two years. There are procedures for supervisors to indicate that an eligible should be removed from the register, but apparently, there is some confusion about how to do so. The Divison of Personnel puts a lower priority on updating the eligible list for this kind of information.

b) Qualifications of top five applicants on registers compared with qualifications of those following. For regions with a large number of applicants, the top five eligibles may not be significantly more qualified than those who follow. Federal regulations used to require that the state hire from the top five interested eligibles for programs funded by federal money, but that may have been changed by federal civil service reforms.

c) Interviews for top five applicants. Departments are required to hire within the top five on the register (except where they justify not doing so) but they are not required to interview each applicant within the group.

Supervisors may be prejudiced against an applicant because he or she has been on the register for a considerable length of time, and be less willing to hire him or her for that reason. The failure to interview all of the members of the group rewards those who are aggressive in seeking interviews with program managers and those who are in the location in which there is a vacancy. A prospective employer will have much better knowledge of an applicant after an interview than he or she could glean from reading the written application.

The Department of Administration is in the process of preparing regulations for a pilot project which would require that all of the top five interested applicants have an opportunity for a meaningful interview before a position was filled. The interviews should be scheduled long enough in advance to insure that the applicant will receive notice and be able to attend. Supervisors may wish to ask departmental staff in the applicant's area to conduct the interview, if the applicant prefers not to travel to the office with a vacancy. Interviews might also be conducted by telephone. Either of these methods is less desirable than an interview between the applicant and the person hiring.

The applicant would be responsible for any transportation costs to the interview.

REGULATIONS: PR4 02.0 Eligibility lists are statewide in scope except where Rules or action of the Director call for establishment of lists by geographical area, agency, or organizational unit.

PR4 03.0 Duration of eligibility lists (not to exceed 2 years)

PR4 04.0 Removal of names for specified reasons

PR4 05.0 Eligibles' right to restrict the conditions under which he will be availabe for employment

PR5 03.14 If an eligible is passed over three times by a department for the same classification, that department can request that the eligible's name not be certified to them again.

PR5 03.3 Concurrent certification of eligibles. The Rules do not require the simultaneous certification of the same name on different certifications made concurrently. This means that even though two certification lists (registers) are issued at the same time for the same classification, they will not necessarily contain the same names.

RECOMMENDATIONS: 1. Does the Commission wish to recommend that eligible lists for positions assigned to salary range 10 or below be kept on a regional basis according to the area in which the applicant will accept work? (See also discussion on Location of Certification, issue number 5, page 7). 2. Does the Commission wish to recommend that the state adopt a different merit system selection process? In his memorandum on "Merit Systems in Other Jurisdictions", Ken Humphreys provides a list of some of the options:

a) Rule of the List. Under this method, eligibles are certified aon a pass/fail basis. All who pass are certified as eligible for appointment. This is the most open alternative.

b) Zone or Category Scoring. Individuals are ranked within specified ranges. Such categories might be called outstanding, well qualified, qualified or not qualified. Selections would be from the highest category unless the number of eligibles in it fell below a certain level, in which case the next category would become eligible. This is the method under the new federal law. It is worth noting that zones or categories may be tailored to suit different job classes.

c) Block Scoring. All candidates within a specified block of scores are certified.

d) Rule of____. Any arbitray number such as one, seven or ten may be inserted.

3) Does the Commission wish to recommend that in filling a vancancy, departmental staff be required to provide the top five applicants on the register with the opportunity for a meaningful interview? If so, should the Commission recommend that this requirement be accomplished by statutes or by regulations only?

AUDITING ROLE OF DIVISION OF PERSONNEL

10. If the Division of Personnel increased its review of personnel actions taken by departments, abuses of the personnel system would decrease. Testimony has indicated that one of the major areas of abuse is in departmental hiring practices. In order to avoid unfair treatment of individuals who are hired because of improper departmental actions, the division should be able to respond quickly upon notification of a problem. To insure that the division learns of improper actions, applicants for state employment should be provided with the name of the person responsible for investigating and resolving abuses.

REMEDY: Does the Commission wish to recommend the creation of a position of trouble-shooter within the Division of Personnel who would be responsible for investigation and resolution of problems? If so, what authority should the trouble-shooter have for requiring departmental compliance with his or her findings in each case? What authority should the trouble-shooter have for initiating investigations prior to receipt of a complaint?

AUDITS OF THE DIVISION OF PERSONNEL

11. At the October 3 meeting of the Commission, the Commission voted to "recommend legislation which would provide for periodic external audits of the personnel system like the one carried out (by) the (sic) Division of Legislative Audit in 1977." Minutes, Full Commission, October 3, 1978, page 2.

The Commission should consider who it wishes to recommend to perform this audit - Legislative Audit, Internal Audit or an outside firm? In addition, who would the auditor report to and who would establish the scope of each audit?

PERSONNEL ADMINISTRATION - OTHER

12. Violation of the personnel rules. There is no workable system to penalize supervisors who circumvent the personnel rules or who disobey equal employment opportunity laws in the decisions they make. In the Prohibitions and Penalties section of the rules, there is a provision making any person who violates the personnel rules guilty of a misdemeanor and providing that any state employee who is convicted of that misdemeanor shall immediately forfeit his office or position. PR13 18.0. This is a harsh remedy, and therefore likely to be used only in extreme circumstances.

REMEDY: Does the Commission wish to recommend that an Ethics Committee be established to hear obvious abuses by supervisors and other state employees of the Personnel Rules and state and federal statutes?

Composition of committee - criteria for selection, who selects
Scope of authority
Powers to compel testimony, authority to obtain records, etc.
Effect of decision - recommendation to department or mandatory upon department
