Senator Mike Colletta
1026 West 6th Avenue
Anchorage, Alaska 99501

Dear Senator Colletta:

The Anchorage Council on Alcoholism has been instrumental in introducing the alcohol education curriculum "Here's Looking At You" to schools throughout the State.

This exciting comprehensive curriculum instructs students in grades kindergarten through twelve in making responsible decisions about alcohol, develops coping skills, enhances self-image, and provides students with tools to deal with problems they encounter today.

This morning I met with Tom Reardon, whose enthusiasm regarding the curriculum equals ours, and he, because of his leadership position in CHAR, will be making the presentation at CHAR's Statewide convention this month to obtain funds to purchase the kits that accompany the units. It was Tom who urged me to let you become aware of the project because of your active concern in the area of alcoholism education and prevention.

Enclosed is a copy of the curriculum for your review and we encourage your support.

Sincerely,

Barbara Hoffmann

Emotion Cards
(12)

1. Discuss various ways we express our feelings and how others know how we're feeling. Introduce each emotion card, identifying the word and giving examples of the feeling. (It may be helpful to use only a few of the cards at first.)
2. Have one child pick an emotion card without showing it to the class. He/she expresses the emotion shown on it while classmates try to identify which emotion is being expressed. Vary the methods used to express feelings:
 - a) Voice only. Child should stand at the back of the room so facial expressions aren't visible to the class. Have child say a given phrase, such as "Oh, Henry" in a tone that conveys the emotion indicated on the cards.
 - b) Body only, no voice.
 - c) Certain parts of the body, such as face, feet, hands, but no voice.
 - d) Body and voice.
 - e) Pick a partner and express an emotion in any of the above ways.
3. Discuss acceptable and unacceptable ways of expressing feelings in various situations. Is it okay for people to cry? to shout when they are angry? to hug someone when they are happy?

PHYSICAL EDUCATION

MUSIC

SOCIAL STUDIES

Play various kinds of music using a record or instrument. Have children act out emotion they feel as they listen. Have children use instruments to create their own music.

Find pictures in magazines and books of families, community helpers, etc., showing different emotions.

ART

SPELLING

MATH

Make puppets for role playing. Give each child 2 paper plates. Child chooses 2 emotions and draws appropriate facial expressions on each plate. Glue plates together on a popsicle stick or tongue depressor (like a hand mirror).

Identify the different shapes of the faces used on the emotion cards. Have children draw their own cards using various shapes.

SCIENCE

WRITING

READING

Have children write one emotion word and draw a picture of themselves expressing it. Share with the class.

Write an emotion word on the board and have the children match it with the emotion card and/or read the word and tell what it means.

LANGUAGE ARTS (oral discussion)

LANGUAGE ARTS (drama and role-playing)

OTHER _____

Build vocabulary by having children think of other words to describe how they feel when they are sad, happy, angry, afraid, etc. Make a chart listing that vocabulary and encourage children to use those words as they discuss their feelings.

Mirror Images
Divide class into partners. One partner is "It". "It" acts out an emotion using voice, body or combination. The partner imitates simultaneously as a mirror.

ready

The student will increase awareness of own and others' feelings and practice various ways to express them.

From the kit:
Feely Head

1. Show children the Feely Head and discuss each emotion. At first, it may be helpful to cover up some of the emotions and introduce new words gradually.
2. Teacher or child turns the pointer at an emotion and gives an example of something that could cause that feeling, e.g., I feel happy when it's my birthday. I feel afraid when I hear people fighting, etc.
3. Create situations which allow children to identify their own feelings. Children take turns moving the pointer on the Feely Head to reflect their feelings. Have each child explain why he/she feels that way. Allow several children to respond to the same situation so different reactions and reasons can be expressed. Examples:
How do you feel, ...
 - when you get up in the morning?
 - when your friend tells you he doesn't like you any more?
 - when you hear two people fighting?
 - when you see someone drinking beer?
 - when you see somebody crying?
 - when you see someone drunk?
 - when you eat an ice cream cone?
 - when your mother/father doesn't have time to play with you?
 - when your mother/father gives you a hug and kiss?
 - when someone says something mean to you?
 - when you're sick?
 - when you hear birds singing?
 - when someone says something nice to you?

 - b) Why do you think Judy fought with the other girl?
 - c) Why do you think Judy cried at the end of the story?
 - d) What might Judy have done rather than fight and cry?
 - e) How do you think the other girl felt about Judy's behavior?
 - f) Do you think the other girl sat on the see-saw to be mean to Judy? Could she have wanted to help Judy by see-sawing with her? (Children should realize that misunderstandings often arise because people see the same situation differently.)

AMY AND THE SURPRISE

Amy is (five, six, seven, eight) years old. Her grandmother has come to visit her and would like to surprise Amy by doing something special for her. Amy's mother made a list of things she knows Amy needs:

- jacket - Amy's jacket is too small for her now and the weather is getting too cold to just wear a shirt.
- dentist - Amy has never been to the dentist to have her teeth checked. There will be a special children's dental clinic next week.
- bicycle - Amy has been riding her friend's bicycle and would love to have one of her own. There is a shiny red one on sale this week.
- books - Amy loves to read. She goes to the library to borrow books, but would like to have some of her own.
- trip - Amy has never been on a train. She has been to the train station to pick up her grandmother and would love to go for a train ride.

If you were the person to choose Amy's surprise, what would you choose?
