SUBJECT: House Bill 245

From a publications and printing aspect, HB 245 is a good attempt to stimulate Alaskan businesses in this industry. However, I must draw your attention to the need for modifying language in the bill. In effect, the bill includes maps with all other publications because the wording does not specifically exclude maps. An exception is needed. The situation presented in the bill would preclude publication of large format maps since no state agency or in-state print shop could publish an E-scale map of Alaska in one piece, even if doing so would save the state thousands of dollars (see enclosure E-scale map 88-1).

Because of the size of our state, large geographic areas of study are common. The maps displaying these areas must also be large for the following reasons:

1. Scale reduction would require the omission of essential information.
2. A single sheet is easier to use. It provides space for information necessary to read and interpret the map, such as the legend, cross sections, graphics, tables, and text.
3. Large maps printed in sections and spliced together will not stay together whether taped or pinned to the wall. They are rarely registered correctly, usually overlap, and the missing information is confusing.
4. A single map split into several smaller maps is always much more expensive to produce. This increased cost is due to multiple press set-ups, overlap of materials, and hours of duplicated effort in preparation.

A map recently published by this agency (see enclosed PR 100) shows detailed geologic mapping just south of the ANWAR Coastal Plain. A scale reduction would completely lose rock units that are important to understanding formations with potential oil reservoirs to the north. As HB 245 is now written, the map would have to be produced in a minimum of four sheets and even then only one Alaskan printer could bid. The largest image area that can be printed in-state is 26x38 inches. Most print shops in the state would need to divide the map into at least eight pieces. Registration would be a nightmare, and assembling the map would be a major chore. Printing costs alone for this job would have been about $4,000 more than the single sheet method-- double what the map actually cost to print. Preparation time would have been significantly longer and supplies would have cost more.

In summary, I request that Sec. 15 AS 44.99.200 and Sec. 16 AS 44.99.230 be changed to specifically exclude large maps from mandatory use of in-state printing facilities. This exclusion is justified because of the size of the areas that must be portrayed and the complexity of the essential information.

This agency has always used Alaska printers whenever possible. Large maps however, are printed outside for the above stated reasons. To my knowledge, only three commercial printers in the Lower 48 are interested in or capable of printing small quantities of large maps like PR 100.

Furthermore, it is in Alaska's best interest to continue to utilize these print shops. As computer graphics and Geographic Information Systems (GIS) advance, more large maps will be generated. Since no in-state private shops are available to print them, the options would be very limited. The state would need to spend millions of dollars on a large-format print shop, ask for assistance from the federal government, or cut-up all the maps and put them into a book like a taxi directory.

Dear 2~

Thank you for your recent inquiry concerning employment opportunities with the State of Alaska.

Recruitment for most positions with the State is limited to Alaskan residents, that is, those persons who are currently domiciled in Alaska. Exceptions include certain positions which require a highly specialized academic, administrative, or technical background. Currently, we are accepting out-of-state applications for the job classes listed below. If you are interested and feel you are qualified for any of these job classes, please contact us and we will be happy to send you recruitment bulletins and application forms.

LOCAL HIRE

Staunch supporters still strive to mandate and enforce an Alaskan hiring preference.

Laborers Local 341's Andrew Piekarski calls the problem of non-resident workers competing for Alaska jobs "pretty frustrating."

By Jeffrey Richardson

SEE PAGE 28 FOR DISC. OF PROCUREMENT

What makes good political fodder, behaves like a legal quagmire and confounds simple analysis? Local hire in Alaska. It's an issue that in many guises persists in haunting public policy forums.

Local hire, also known as resident hire, or Alaska hire, is kind of a coat of many colors, a patchwork of interrelated concerns, intentions and frustrations predating statehood. Alaska's sometimes ill-fated efforts to create a resident hiring preference, with the anticipated effect of increasing wage retention and prosperity, can be traced to the broader struggle for economic self-determination and independence from federal and absentee commercial interests that has long characterized the state's history.

Getting a statistical grip on the nature and magnitude of the local hire problem is easier than it used to be, but that isn't saying much. It's a many-faceted issue; research on some aspects is good, but in other areas, it is limited or non-existent.

The state's Department of Labor reports that in 1988, 17.3 percent of Alaska workers - 50,719 individuals - were non-residents, an increase of 5,500 workers over the 1987 level. Labor analysts also know that in 1988 Alaska's rate of interstate unemployment insurance benefits mailed to out-of-state recipients was four times the national average. At 23.5 percent, Alaska's payment of unemployment to non-residents was the highest in the nation.

By any measure, the seafood industry is the most prominent employer of non-resident Alaskans. More than 15,000 non-resident workers - nearly half the non-residents in the state's labor force - exported about $78.7 million from the Alaskan economy in 1988. Non-resident workers in the oil and gas and the heavy construction sectors took home $84.3 million in wages that year.

Measuring the state's local hire enforcement efforts should give some idea if state policies are making headway against the intrusion of non-resident workers. But because existing state enforcement of hiring preferences has been so circumscribed by the courts, and because many of the offending companies are based outside the state and don't operate here during the kind of slump from which the state is just now recovering, enforcement statistics don't shed much light on the story.

Anecdotal data about the local hire issue is statistically suspect but is sometimes easier to come by and does convey some of the deep-seated feelings of Alaskans who have long endured high unemployment rates and a seasonally fluctuating economy.

Andrew Piekarski, president of Laborers Local 341, says of non-resident workers, "It's pretty frustrating. They come, they work, they leave. It's real easy for a contractor in the Lower 48 to pick up workers on substandard wages, $10 to $12 an hour. That's a lot of money in right-to-work states like Idaho, Montana. But up here, that doesn't cut it."

Piekarski says non-resident workers aren't paying the high mortgages and other living expenses incurred by resident workers. "We make a good scale, but we haven't had a raise in six years," Piekarski says.

Historically, local hire policy-making and litigation in Alaska traces a long and winding road. A major milestone came in the late 1970s when the U.S. Supreme Court threw out Alaska's mandate for resident hire in the private sector. That defeat was sufficiently resounding to discourage another try in the private arena, and to this day such an effort likely would be doomed.

"That's a pretty widely held belief," says Randy Carr, deputy director of the state's Division of Labor Standards and Safety. The division has responsibility for enforcing what local hire provisions there are on the books – and there aren't many.

In 1984 a resident preference for publicly funded projects was nixed by the Alaska Supreme Court. The legislature read the opinion carefully and tried again in 1986, enacting a comprehensive statute that carefully followed constitutional parameters.

That law attempted to address a long-standing dilemma of definition in local hire policy-making. One aspect of the issue involves Alaskans and the rest of the world. The other, often overlooked aspect is the hiring disparity between different groups of Alaskans, especially in the Bush. Rural residents have longed complained they have to compete with two kinds of outsiders for jobs in their own communities: those from the Lower 48 and those from Anchorage and Fairbanks.

The 1986 law created hiring preferences for Alaskans in general, as well as for women, minorities and rural residents, and created reporting requirements that allow state analysts to assess when hiring preferences would be triggered. It was baptized by legal fire when the state tried to enforce its provisions at the Red Dog Mine. Enserch Alaska, a development contractor for the mine owner, resisted. In a 3-to-2 decision, the Alaska Supreme Court effectively threw out the rural, minority and female hiring preferences.

"We're darn close," says a determined Dave Donley, an Anchorage legislator who has long monitored local hire issues. His optimism stems from the closeness of the vote, suggesting that lawmakers are getting within range of a constitutionally viable hiring-preference mechanism.

"It's getting immensely better. For the first time we've got the backup data. We're establishing a record," says Donley.

From the standpoint of actual enforcement, what remains of the 1986 law is the statewide hiring preference for Alaskans on projects funded by public monies. Currently, such projects must employ 90 percent

The salmon are waiting in Valdez.

In Valdez, you'll find everything you're looking for in an Alaskan vacation.

You can try your luck — it doesn't take much — at the best silver salmon fishing in Alaska. We're famous for our abundant pinks, too. In the nearby rivers, you'll find world-class king salmon and trout — and halibut in the clear blue waters off shore.

Then take a cruise to magnificent Columbia or Shoup Glacier. Stroll around town. Or raft through the most beautiful scenery you've ever imagined.

Come experience the finest salmon fishing in Alaska — and a lot more. Experience Valdez.

Alaskans. The actual ratio is re-evaluated every two years according to statutory criteria.

While that provision, too, is under fire in the courts, Carr says, "It's kind of at a standstill." The Labor standards and safety deputy director adds, "We have no tools except public pressure and what we hope would be good common business sense."

Carr says many companies based outside Alaska have established good local hire records when the work is available, realizing they are saving substantial sums by not having to import a qualified work force. Alaska-based companies generally comply with the local hire intention and always have, he adds.

Alaska has not always had a trained work force, but the pipeline era marked the beginning of substantial state investment in training and retraining. Donley says that contractors still claim Alaskans lack credentials, but that it is just a "bogey man argument" to justify hiring familiar faces.

"We've spent tens of millions of dollars doing that (training) since the pipeline. We've got plenty of qualified people," Donley says.

Changing Focus. Some concerns have been voiced about diminished funding to track the local hire problem in Alaska. Federal constitutional guidelines mandate that research and analysis supporting a finding of economic disadvantage (which typically triggers a hiring preference) be held to a high standard.

The Department of Labor's Eileen

Plate explains that funds for analysis have been cut in the wake of the Enserch decision, but information is still being collected, chiefly because it's useful for other department programs. "We're still maintaining the database," Plate says.

One area not covered by the state's monitoring efforts is local hire preference on federal projects. Alaska Sen. Frank Murkowski secured a congressional measure in 1986 mandating Alaska hire on federal military construction projects in the state. According to a spokesman for Murkowski's office, complaints about violations of the requirement have tapered off and none have been heard recently, at least in Washington, D.C.

But back in Alaska, the story is a little different. Says Donley, "The Murkowski amendment is a great idea that's been dismally enforced."

For several years, the requirement went completely unenforced. Now, one part-time staff person monitors compliance in a venue that includes massive construction projects, recent or ongoing, from Galena to the Aleutian Islands, from Fort Richardson to Fort Wainwright, and the backscatter radar development in the Interior.

"I would expect a part-time person to be insufficient," says Carr, one of the state's local hire enforcers.

Laborers Union President Piekarski agrees with the Carr and Donley assessments. "The big problem on the local hire is that the Murkowski amendment is not working. It's turned out to be a hiring hall for Washington and Oregon. It's gotten worse than it's ever been," he says. Piekarski calls the provision a "showpiece with no teeth."

Murkowski replies, "If we are aware of a problem, we'll see that enforcement gets done. We'd push to the limits to see that enforcement gets done."

Capital Projects Push. Use of non-residents on state projects could become more prevalent in the near future. The administration of Gov. Walter Hickel is pushing a capital projects budget that is significantly larger than those of recent years. The Hickel administration also has high hopes for major resource developments, such as the gas pipeline and opening the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to oil drilling.

Such major-scale projects historically have drawn the Outside companies with their cadre of non-resident workers in tow. Is the state ready for this?

Nancy Usera, commissioner of the Alaska Department of Labor, says yes. "What we're looking at here is the creation of stable, permanent jobs in the private sector," she adds. "That's the thrust of the projects the governor is working on. We have to be sure the work force is compatible with jobs when they become available."

Responding to concerns that a large capital projects agenda will cause some form of economic dislocation - exacerbating employment disparity between male and female members of the work force or between urban and rural workers - Usera says such fears are based on exaggerated assumptions of sudden or abrupt shifts in the labor market.

"It's important to realize this is not going to happen overnight. We do have time to methodically and systematically adjust," Usera says. Rather than disruption, she sees continued economic health and recovery: "Gov. Hickel was elected on a plank of creating jobs for Alaskans, not just snapshot jobs that come and go, but adding stable components to the state's economy."

In terms of strategies, Usera advocates a two-pronged approach to accomplish local hire: persuasion and focused training. She feels it is premature to discuss new legislative mechanisms.

"I think there are other alternatives to mandating good business practices in local hire. It's important to educate employers that hiring locally is beneficial to them. It's a marketing function. You need to establish good will in the community where the project is located. By fostering that kind of cooperation, it's good for everybody, including the company," Usera says.

She acknowledges that skill levels of the work force in some rural areas are a problem, but notes that programs already exist to address deficiencies. "We at the Department of Labor are working to target communities in need of that kind of training," Usera says.

In the meantime, the new commissioner intends to enforce existing local rules to the extent that the state still has the ability to do so. "We're going ahead enforcing the 90 percent rule until we hear differently," Usera concludes.

Grass-Roots Efforts. Another person in the business of local hire persuasion is Dave Thompson, the new executive director of Make It Alaskan Inc. The statewide non-profit organization focuses on encouraging state and local governments and private companies to purchase products, supplies and services that are Alaskan in origin.

According to Thompson, in the average state in the union a dollar circulates in its economy 7.8 times. In Alaska, a dollar only turns over 2.1 times before "leaking" away.

MANY PATHS. ONE SOLUTION.

Business Insurance Brokers

"Once the money's gone, needless to say, it doesn't come back. People are in the habit of buying things Outside they can get in Alaska. We try to convince people that goods and services are competitively available in Alaska and that buying locally supports your neighbors. That is the obvious answer to local hire," Thompson says. "2.1 is not good enough; if we could just double that number."

While the Alaska Department of Commerce and Economic Development certifies Alaskan-made products, Make It Alaskan Inc. also certifies services provided by Alaskans. The state and private certification programs work together.

Thompson says a key goal of his organization's program is to tighten up the definition of what is "Alaskan" and to ensure that the state government's own procurement procedures fully reflect the local purchase intention. "It's just too easy for Outside firms right now to get that preference," says Thompson. He advocates that companies seeking the Alaskan-made certification demonstrate they have a state business license, a local inventory and local overhead, including employees qualified to draw Alaska Permanent Fund dividend checks.

State procurement often violates the spirit of local purchasing because of inconsistent regulations and bad judgment. Thompson cites the example of an Anchorage firm that bid on a state contract but lost because a Seattle company was able to bid "lower" by excluding the cost of shipping. Further, civil servants made several trips to Seattle to monitor progress in manufacturing the requisitioned equipment, which cost a lot more than driving across town.

Thompson says, "The Anchorage guy was definitely the low bid. That's why we say there's a lot of room for improvement there. The state has a contradictory standard for its own procurement."

The whole thrust of the Make It Alaskan program is that buying from local companies pays the salaries of local workers, Thompson explains. Although Alaskans may have to pay 10 percent more to buy Alaskan, they should understand that the money comes back to them through their community, he adds.

But some local hire advocates haven't given up on even stronger measures than those contemplated by Make It Alaskan. For his part, Laborers Local 341's Piekarski feels "local hire will be better with a capital budget." But he also thinks more could be done: for example, extending tax breaks to companies that hire Alaskan. At the moment, "there's no incentive out there," Piekarski says.

Perhaps the most ambitious strategy on the table is a bill introduced by Sen. Pat Rodey of Anchorage that would authorize state agencies involved in capital projects to enter into collective bargaining agreements with construction trade unions. According to Mano Frey, business manager of the Laborers union, collective bargaining agreements are one place where the courts have tolerated local hire preference clauses.

"We've been talking about this for a long time," says Frey. Resistance in the past has come from some who see such a proposal as politically self-serving to unions. But Frey thinks with so many other remedies exhausted and greater awareness of the importance of wage retention to overall economic prosperity, the bill stands a chance. ❖

Greetings:

On behalf of our Board of Directors, thank you for using our second annual Alaska Products Catalog. We are very pleased with the popularity of our first catalog, and most excited about our second.

During the past year, we have completed a number of projects which have strengthened the data base that is the foundation for this publication. Among these was a state wide certification drive that produced over 300 additional listings of Alaskan manufacturers. We also verified the existing listings.

Please review the Table of Contents which show the general listings, and the category they will be found in. Changes in this years publication include an index, beginning on page 54, and listings in each category are now shown alphabetically, by location.

All entries in next years catalog are required to be certified in the "Made in Alaska" program. The form for certification can be found at the end of the catalog. If you are not yet certified, fill out the form and send it in. There is no charge.

The 1990-1991 Alaskan Products Catalog was partially funded by a matching grant from the Department of Commerce and Economic Development. The ads in this catalog are from Alaskans who contributed financially towards its completion, and deserve your support. It is possible that this is the last year we will receive state funding for this publication. Next years catalog will be solely funded through advertising, and donations. It may be that a small listing fee will be required from all manufacturers.

We trust this catalog will be helpful to you. To Alaskans; this catalog gives you the opportunity to keep your money at home. To the rest of the world; we are proud to present to you products manufactured in the great State of Alaska!

Kindest regards;

GOLD STAR PRIDE SHINES IN EVERYTHING ALASKA MAKES.

There's a certain amount of pride that goes into everything you see in this catalog. Everyone of these Alaskans is saying, "I made it myself, right here where I live." It's a great feeling of accomplishment.

We know about that feeling at Tesoro, too. Our Kenai refinery produces the highest quality gasoline and petroleum products right here where we live. We call it Gold Star Energy, and we couldn't be more proud of our products.

And, from what we've seen, that kind of pride shines in everything any Alaskan makes.

ALASKAN PRODUCTS CATALOG

The Second Annual Alaskan Products Catalog has an index beginning on page 54, which shows all of the companies and individuals who are listed in the catalog. The listings in each category are now listed by location, alphabetically. If there is no company name, the product is listed by the individual's first name. Example: Mary Smith, a gift manufacturer in Soldotna, would be listed under "gifts", grouped together with other gift manufacturers in Soldotna, under "M". Also, please recognize that there are a number of communities close to major locations. For example, if you are looking for a product in the Juneau area, Auke Bay and Douglas are in the immediate area. North Pole is close to Fairbanks. Eagle River and Chugiak are just a few miles out of Anchorage. Palmer, Wasilla, Talkeetna, Houston and Willow are found in the Matanuska Valley. Kenai, Soldotna, Sterling, Kasilof, and Nikiski are located fairly close together on the Kenai Peninsula.

THE "MADE IN ALASKA" PROGRAM

The logo, consisting of the two bears ("Toklat and Mishka"), is copyrighted by the State of Alaska, Department of Commerce and Economic Development. The primary purpose is to allow Alaskan manufacturers the right to use the logo on their products, providing the market assurance that their product is made in Alaska.

There is no charge for certification into this program, and the benefits are many. If you manufacture a product in Alaska, we encourage you to review the requirements found at the end of this catalog, fill out and mail the application. Please call us at Make It Alaskan, Inc., 258-2878 if we can be of any assistance.

THE "ALASKA GROWN" PROGRAM

This is an on-going program administered by the State of Alaska, Department of Natural Resources. It is used to identify those products that are grown in Alaska. This program is operated much the same as the "Made In Alaska" program. Please contact the Division of Agriculture at 745-7200 for further information.

THE INTERIOR MANUFACTURERS ASSOCIATION

This organization was started in 1986 to promote the sales of locally manufactured products in the interior. Further information can be obtained by calling 456-3296 in Fairbanks.

VECO, INC., Anchorage 561-1701,
fax 564-6130

VECO is a major general construction, oilfield service, and oil response contractor based in Alaska. With its beginnings twenty years ago in Kenai as a one man operation to its current family of both a merit shop and a union contractor, two drilling companies, and Anchorage's oldest daily newspaper, VECO has grown to include offices around the state and in California and Washington.

From cleaning up the Prince William Sound oil spill, to strong local hire on the North Slope, VECO remains committed to the state where the challenges are in great part the reward.

Make It Alaskan, Inc. is proud to join Ogden Allied Facility Management of Alaska, Inc., in sponsoring yearly Alaska product trade shows. These trade shows are held each fall in Anchorage, and each spring in Fairbanks. Alaskan manufacturers must be certified in the "Made In Alaska" program to participate, and are encouraged to call 451-7800 in Fairbanks or 279-0618 in Anchorage for information on the shows..

RESOURCES

The shows are an all out effort to bring Alaskan made products under one roof, and present them to the rest of Alaska. Our goal is to educate Alaskans as to the importance of supporting and purchasing locally manufactured products. We need to become aware of the variety of Alaskan products which are available, and local manufacturers must be given an opportunity to compete with those products that come in from "Outside".

"DISPLAY ALASKA", our name for the trade shows, will take place September 28, 29, & 30, 1990 in Anchorage. A final date at the Carlson Center in Fairbanks for spring 1991 has not yet been set.

Display
ALASKA

The MADE IN ALASKA program is an ongoing effort by the Department of Commerce and Economic Development, Division of Business Development, and Make It Alaskan, Inc. for the purposes of identifying and promoting products manufactured in Alaska. The MADE IN ALASKA trademark, a logo with a mother bear and her cub, named "TOKLAT and MISHKA", is registered with the State of Alaska and cannot be used without written permission of the Department of Economic Development, the trademark holder. Before a product can use the logo, it must meet the necessary criteria and be certified by the commissioner of the department. The logo goes to the product and not to the manufacturer.

Any Alaskan business that manufactures a product in Alaska may apply for certification. To qualify for permission to use the MADE IN ALASKA logo, the applicant must meet all of the following requirements, as appropriate:

1. Maintain the product manufacturing operations within the State of Alaska.
2. Produce a finished, manufactured product that is intended for sale by the producer, either wholesale or retail, in which the majority of value added processes were completed within the state.
3. A finished product, that has been partially manufactured in the state may qualify to use the MADE IN ALASKA logo if the applicant can show proof that no Alaskan facility has the capability to do the work being done outside.
4. The manufactured product must be made from Alaskan raw materials unless the manufacturer can show proof that the raw material does not economically exist within the state.
5. Allow the department or its designated representative to inspect the manufacturing facilities to verify in-state production. Where an inspection is not possible due to the location, an affidavit for remote sites is included in the application. Owner's signature must have two witnesses.
6. Have, or be in the process of obtaining, an Alaskan Business License.

We currently have product inspectors at the following locations in Alaska. Please contact the inspector at your location when you have completed the first portion of the application.

Mail the finished application to: Division of Business Development - 3601 C Street, Suite 724 - Anchorage, Alaska 99503

There are no fees or license costs to participate in the MADE IN ALASKA PROGRAM. Once certified, you can purchase logo stickers, tags, and labels at your local print shop by giving them your authorization number. You may use the logo in the advertising of your product. This includes letterhead, brochures, business cards, store displays, etc., as well as on any packaging your product comes in. The logo may be any size or combination of colors you choose. The only requirement is that the integrity of the logo be maintained. i.e. the two bears in a rectangular format with MADE IN ALASKA at the bottom.

IT IS IMPORTANT THAT YOU LET US KNOW OF ANY CHANGES THAT OCCUR IN YOUR BUSINESS, I.E. LOCATION, PRODUCT LINE ETC. PLEASE CALL US FOR THIS OR ANY QUESTIONS: MAKE IT ALASKAN, INC. 258-2878
