Ethics can complicate real estate transactions

By Niel Thomas, CCIM

Over coffee at the office someone says he might be house hunting. Do you have a real estate agent to recommend?

Your colleague ends up working with the agent you recommend. Later a very generous gift certificate arrives from the agent, with a thank you note.

How do you feel about the ethics of the situation?

Try another case.

You locate a home and the seller accepts your offer. You need to have the home inspected and to get the deck rebuilt. The agent gives you the name of a contractor he says is competent.

You don't know what business or personal relationships there might be between the agent and the contractor. Are you going to take the recommendation?

Another case.

You have been shopping the inventory of resale homes and nothing seems quite right. You decide to consider building and start to shop for a lot. You enlist an agent's help and say there is one neighborhood in particular that appeals to you.

A week goes by and the agent suggests three lots. Each has similar appeal. You choose the one that is priced better, which happens to be the one the agent says he owns personally.

When the title report comes out, you learn the agent bought it the week after you voiced interest in obtaining a lot for yourself. Do you ask how this happened? Since it's the best priced lot, do you care?

Some of these scenarios have legal implications. The law governing agent conduct is designed to protect the public. It draws some clear lines. Not so clear sometimes are the ethical considerations of real estate practice in Alaska today.

The law, for instance, forbids anyone who is not licensed from receiving payment for real estate services. You may be able to send a lot of business to your favorite agent, but the agent isn't allowed to give you anything of value.

Chances are your relationship is partly friendship, too. Can he or she charter a plane for day of fishing, or take you out to dinner? Probably no one would quarrel with that. If you get a certificate good for you and the family to go fishing, that might be different.

Even the "mostly social" event could be viewed as a technical legal violation. Chances of enforcement are small. The ethics of the situation are troublesome, however, since the agent is going to be motivated by an honest desire to say thank you.

Nothing in this scenario approaches the blatant kickback, where a return is requested in exchange for the referral.

There are also ethical considerations when the agent refers you to a service provider. As a real estate consumer you need title insurance, a mortgage loan officer, an insurance agent, an appraiser, and maybe an attorney, a contractor, a home inspector, and an engineer.

Agents work with such people all the time and can make a recommendation that takes into account your unique need. The recommendation can be colored by the experience of the service provider. It can take into account price and who is available on your schedule.

The ethical problem develops when there is a more than an arm's length business relationship between the agent and the service provider and the relationship is not disclosed.

The business practice locally is to provide more than one name, accompanied by information about the provider's qualifications and recent history that is relevant to the current need. You might be told for instance that both contractors are licensed, bonded and insured but contractor A has just completed a similar repair and the report on the job was favorable.

There is nothing illegal in an agent suggesting a relative for a service you need. The risk, from the agent's point of view, is that if you are unhappy with the service you are going to be unhappy with the agent, too. For this reason some agents will shy away from recommending people they are close to.

How do you feel about the last case, where the agent bought a property and now wants to resell it to you? If you ask, you will learn that the agent knew of a distressed seller who "just wants out." The agent may have told him the property was worth more, but in the interest of a quick, sure sale the seller sold at a discount. The discount was so deep that the agent is now offering you the property at a favorable price.

Recent changes in the real estate law require the agent to decide who is the client. Every party to the transaction has the right to know whom the agent is representing. (The law has always required disclosure when an agent is selling his or her own property.)

To whom does the agent owe complete loyalty? If the seller is the client, was it a breach for the agent to buy a deeply discounted property from him or her? Can the agent close on that property and then make you, the buyer of that property, a client?

Were you in effect the client all along? If so, did you have the right to expect the agent would give you the opportunity to make a good buy in the market?

The legalities may not be absolutely clear in each of these cases. In the less greedy '90s, however, it is possible that the ethical considerations will receive greater weight.

Buyer must be diligent, seller must disclose

By Niel Thomas, CCIM

When buying real estate, there is no substitute for a competent inspection. Sellers are understandably nervous about the process, however. In commercial real estate the industry term is "due diligence." This standard recognizes the buyer's responsibility to make a reasonable investigation of a property before closing.

A due diligence investigation begins with seller disclosure. Sellers are expected to disclose any information about the property that could affect its value.

Under current real estate practice, sellers fill out a form that asks lots of questions about the condition of the property and the seller's experience with it. Buyers are asked to sign that they got a copy.

If an agent is in the picture, Alaska case law says the agent must point out adverse facts about a property that he or she, as a real estate professional, reasonably should be expected to know. This could extend to things even the seller didn't appreciate. The case involved a well that wasn't on the property, where a look at a survey would show this to be the case.

The choice of home inspector may be dictated by what is known about the property to begin with. A new home carrying a builder warranty may need no additional inspection if the buyer has confidence in the city's building inspection process.

One should remember that Anchorage only conducts building inspections in the Anchorage bowl. Most smaller communities have no building inspection program. Even in Eagle River the Municipality of Anchorage issues a building and use permit and the building codes apply, but there are no inspections during construction.

A pre-owned home that is only a few years old and that appears to have been well cared-for may only need a check-out by a competent general contractor. More care may be appropriate, however, if a lending institution has foreclosed on the property and the owner is out of the picture.

Another third-party owner prevalent in Anchorage is the relocation company.

These companies acquire properties from corporate and governmental employees because the terms of that transferee's employment provided a home sale benefit.

Relocation companies routinely hire inspection services to check out properties. If there is a defect the relocation company often first requires the employee to make the repair. This is why buyers often believe that a relocation company property can be a safe bet.

Most purchase agreements include an addendum that reserves a right of inspection. The understanding is that the buyer takes the property as-is, after having a reasonable opportunity to inspect it as closely as he or she wishes. Nothing requires the buyer to inspect. If the buyer doesn't inspect, the sale closes as-is without recourse against the seller, short of provable misrepresentation or fraud.

Some properties invite inspection by someone with a high degree of expertise in a particular discipline. I once hired a structural engineer to look at the foundation of a foreclosed duplex I wanted to buy. It was a modular structure that had been moved to the site. I wanted to know whether the building was going to stay there in adverse conditions.

"Everything looks great," he said, brushing aside all the cowboys. "What's all that wire down there?" I asked, naively assuming the former owner was a telephone lineman. "We'll this was once a great pot farm with tons of grow lights," he replied.

So there's a lot one can learn from a home inspector!

Inspection reports get passed around, often with unanticipated side effects. Many lenders insist on a copy and will pointedly ask buyers if they have obtained a report. Not wanting to risk being charged with committing fraud on a lender, a copy ends up with the underwriter.

Even if the buyer and seller didn't have a problem with a seemingly minor property defect, the underwriter may, if the underwriter makes repair a condition of the loan, the buyer and seller may have no choice but to negotiate the cost in order to close the sale.

An example was a deck at ground level that was not even attached to the structure of a home in Geneva Woods that sold two years ago. The seller told the buyer some of the support posts were weak. The buyer said he'd have a relative fix it during his visit to Alaska the month after closing.

The lender balked, convinced someone might break a leg, sue the buyer, cause him to go bankrupt and therefore default on the loan. "Fix that deck support or we won't give you the loan," they said. So instead of a weekend family project, the hapless buyer and seller hired a general contractor, at considerable expense.

Not satisfied that the job got done, the lender next insisted on an inspection signed and stamped by an engineer holding an Alaska license.

The work was done over Labor Day and supervised by the home inspector, an engineer who did not hold an Alaska license. By the time all the other engineers came back from fishing there was no way short of tearing up the deck again for the engineer to be able to see the work and sign that the contractor did the work properly.

The lesson is that if the home inspector is not an engineer licensed in Alaska and a lender insists on repairs, someone needs to plan on the expense of hiring a second engineer to write the sign-off letter.

If an adverse inspection report causes a transaction not to close because the buyer and seller do not agree on the fix, all later prospective buyers are entitled to the report. In many cases an adverse inspection report can make a property unmarketable.

These unfortunate scenarios grow out of the lending community's experience with bad properties acquired in the mid-1980s through foreclosure. As partners with the buyer because of their loan, lenders are understandably skittish. The pendulum may be at an extreme today.

A final caution is to realize that a property being marketed as an assumption or with 100 percent owner financing won't have a new lender scrutinizing it. This means that an owner with a property that can't qualify for new financing can still get it sold.

The buyer needs to appreciate, however, that unless he or she addresses the problem some day, new financing may never be available.

Real Estate

There are forums for real estate complaints

By Niel Thomas, CCIM

The most nervous real estate buyer I ever worked with came to our relationship convinced he was going to have problems. Suspicious of absolutely everything, he took nothing at face value.

It's smart to look ahead to where a transaction's rough spots might be. But this fellow was a genius at thinking up far-out, worst-case scenarios. Virtually nothing he created in his head ever came to pass, happily.

At the end of it all—after a three-hour closing which included a solemn reading of every word of every document—he told me the experience was the worst thing he had been through since the death of his mother!

If your real estate deal is driving you crazy, you aren't limited to personal advisors and the medical profession. Where you go for help depends on the nature and seriousness of the problem.

The place to start is with the agent and his or her organization. Real estate agents are independent contractors in their own organizations. Every real estate office has a broker. By law the broker must supervise the agents.

Whatever your problem with an agent, march to the broker first. Do you have a negotiation going and a deal that should go together just isn't happening? Do things not seem to be as the seller represented? Is your buyer making unreasonable demands which are different from what you first agreed to? Has the lender matched a problem? If the agent doesn't seem to be addressing the issue to your satisfaction, march to the broker.

Remember that the brokerage probably won't get paid unless it can resolve your problem.

But not every problem with an agent or a transaction can be resolved at the broker level. You may need to press on to forums provided by Realtors, the Real Estate Commission, and the courts.

Most brokerages and their agents are members of the National Association of Realtors. A licensee can be called an agent and say that he or she is a Realtor—with a capital "R"—only if a member of this professional society.

The Anchorage Board of Realtors started a mediation program for homebuyers and home sellers this spring. Local Realtor President Joan Sheppara reports two completed mediations, with requests for four more pending.

The parties to the dispute choose the mediator from a list provided by the Board of Realtors. The only possible result is an agreement the parties themselves structure. The mediator can only facilitate this non-adversarial process. Earnest money disputes, claims of problems with a property after closing, disagreements over advice from an agent or his or her professional conduct, and landlord-tenant disputes are fair game for mediation.

Fees range from $50 to $100 per party. Involvement with the process does not require that anyone give up the right to pursue any other legal options. The Anchorage Board of Realtors phone number is 561-2335.

The Alaska Real Estate Commission oversees the actions of all licensees. This is probably not the place to go with a pure buyer-seller dispute. If the agent's conduct is questionable, however, a call to the commission opens up two avenues.

The first is an administrative proceeding directed at the agent's license. The broker's license can be involved, too, if the case involves conversion of trust funds or alleged failure to supervise the agent. There are no fees.

The result can be license suspension or revocation. Any victim of the misconduct receives no direct benefit from the process. For redress, you have to work through the commission.

misrepresenting something. These are the cases where someone says an agent should have known better: repeating the seller's statement that the well is on the property when looking at a survey would show otherwise; saying one can run a business out of a building when zoning regulations say no, for example.

Arbitration differs from mediation because the results are binding. What the arbitrator rules is almost impossible to overturn, even in court. If you win an arbitration, a judge will turn it into a court order.

Arbitration is built into many business contracts. An example is language in the standard real estate purchase contract of the Anchorage Multiple Listing Service, in which buyer and seller agree to arbitrate disputes over the disposition of earnest money if the deal comes apart.

The informality of arbitration has been characterized as "trial by ambush" because the protections of formal rules of evidence and civil procedure do not apply. You can say or do just about anything in an arbitration and the arbitrator will listen to it "for what it is worth."

Arbitrators can be appointed by mutual agreement. Lists of arbitrators with particular skills are available from the American Arbitration Association in Seattle. A judge will appoint an arbitrator if there is an agreement to arbitrate and the parties can't agree on one.

Arbitrator's fees are billed with the award. You may have the additional expense of a legal representative, although you can go it alone if you wish. The American Arbitration Association

Surety Fund.

The Surety Fund is funded by fees collected from the agents, in lieu of their being bonded. To collect from the Surety Fund there must be a link between agent conduct and a loss. If the parties to the transaction damaged each other and the agent wasn't involved, then you may find yourself in arbitration or in court.

To collect from the Surety Fund you have to show that the agent's misconduct was intentional. The Surety Fund is also available in fraud cases and where trust funds were unlawfully converted. The Alaska Real Estate Commission phone number is 563-2169.

Alaska is the only state that holds agents to account for damaging someone by negligently or innocently phone number is (206) 622-6435.

If you are headed for court, you need a lawyer. Hardly any cases get that far, but many threaten to and settle long before trial. In many jurisdictions attorneys go to closings and even write purchase agreements. Here, attorneys prepare deeds accompanied by a letter disclaiming that they represented anyone in the transaction and that's about all.

The Anchorage Bar Association has an attorney referral service that keeps a list of real estate attorneys. The phone numbers are 272-0352 in Anchorage, (800) 770-9999, elsewhere.

If things go bump — better tell your buyer

By Niel Thomas, CCIM
For the Alaska Journal of Commerce

If things go bump in the night at your house, be prepared to tell your buyer before you sell it next year.

Gov. Walter J. Hickel signed a real estate disclosure bill into law June 22. Its effective date is July 1, 1993. The Real Estate Commission has until then to come up with a list of what you must disclose.

Some facts that might become legal requirements may go beyond the current practices of the real estate industry.

For instance, the commission's recently published newsletter discusses "psychologically-impacted properties." The most drastic cases are those in which unsavory events took place: murders, suicide, drug dealing.

"The safest course to follow, therefore, is to disclose any psychological factors which could impact the buyer's opinion of the value of the property," says the commission. The italics are theirs.

Consider the true story of a homeowner who bought the home of someone who died in a car crash nearby. The despondent husband subsequently shot himself, not in the house, but outdoors, probably on the property.

Suppose you had bought that property. Maybe you felt OK about it. You might have hired a "house cleanser" - there are such folk - to say the right prayers, burn a few herbs, and gently encourage unwanted lingering spirits to leave.

A few years later you want to sell. Will the earlier facts about the property hit a hot button in your buyer's mind? How do you tell? Send your buyer to a psychologist?

The disclosure requirement of the new law mostly ratifies current industry practices. What's new is giving the Real Estate Commission the authority to tell you what you must disclose.

"The bill was one of the most hotly debated of the session," according to Rep. Max Gruenberg, co-sponsor with Rep. Pat Parnell and Rep. Bettie Davis. "It is great consumer legislation."

Principal sponsor Rep. Parnell agrees, saying that "lots of politics" surrounded the decision to take out of the bill a list of mandatory disclosures. Earlier drafts included most of the text of the form most real estate companies now use.

None of these forms asks questions about "psychologically-impacted properties." Even the Real Estate Commission's article is quick to say that sellers should not disclose that people in a home had HIV or died from AIDS, since this violates fair housing laws.

The law only applies to single family homes and duplexes, one of the points of compromise from earlier drafts that would have included larger multifamily and commercial properties. Rep. Parnell notes the irony that the transaction which first inspired the legislation involved a poorly constructed condominium.

Disclosures, once made, insulate the owner from liability for the defect. To qualify, the owner must make his or her disclosures before the buyer makes an offer. If the disclosure comes later the buyer has the right to cancel the offer. Circumstances can change and the law creates an additional obligation to disclose these facts, in writing. Up to the day of closing the seller who wants to comply and escape liability for undisclosed defects should amend the disclosure.

There are two standards of care for seller. The negligent failure to disclose makes the seller liable for actual damages. Willful violations make the seller liable for up to three times as much.

The building industry won an exemption for new homes, in recognition of builder warranties common in Anchorage.

The buyer and the seller have the right to agree to skip all these legal requirements. This recognizes that in rural areas real estate transactions tend to be less formal.

Representative David Finkelstein, Chair
Select Committee on Legislative Ethics
Alaska State Legislature
3111 C Street, Suite 465
Anchorage, AK 99503

Dear Representative Finkelstein:

Attached is my application to serve as a public member of the
Select Committee on Legislative Ethics.

I am a retired physician. I practiced internal medicine in Anchorage from 1958-82, then was public health director for the Municipality of Anchorage, 1982-87. The latter experience broadened my knowledge of the people and institutions of Anchorage and the state.

Since 1987, I have run for the Alaska House of Representatives twice, served as a commissioner of the Alaska Public Offices Commission, 1989-90, and most recently have served as vice-chairman of the legislature's Health Resources and Access Task Force. In 1990, I talked to Mr. Michael Josephson of California for a hour or so and helped APOC critique his elaborate proposal on legislative ethics.

As legislative chairman of the Alaska State Medical Association for many years in the late 1960s and 1970s, I gained familiarity with the way the legislature works and the way legislators behave.

For many years I have been an active member of Providence Hospital's Ethical Issues Forum.

I believe that I could be a reliable, thoughtful, fair-minded public member of the Legislative Ethics Committee.

Sincerely,

Rodman Wilson

Welcome, Dr. Wilson

Gov. Steve Cowper has picked just the person to bring new life to the five-member Alaska Public Offices Commission: Dr. Rodman Wilson of Anchorage. As director of the city health department for Mayor Tony Knowles, Dr. Wilson put public health above politics. He wasn't afraid to speak his mind, damn the political consequences. His call-'em-as-you-see-'em quality will serve the public well as he grapples with the commission's often controversial cases.

Dr. Wilson takes one of the two Democratic seats on the commission, but he does not have the reputation as a highly partisan politicker. He is not inclined to set double standards or pull his punches for political reasons.

Once Dr. Wilson comes aboard, he and his colleagues face an important task: choosing the commission's fifth, non-partisan member.

The person they select should be forceful and honest. He or she should be someone with integrity and stature in the community, someone who's willing to stand on principle and take flak where necessary. Someone, in other words, like Dr. Rodman Wilson.

Sen. George Jacko, D-Pedro Bay: Two senators are calling for the investigation of a weekend incident in which Jacko called police while trying to enter the motel room of a female legislative aide.

Eye of the storm: Jacko flap has lawmakers talking politics

By TIM HUBER
and DIRK MILLER

THE JUNEAU EMPIRE

Senators fumbled today when passed the ball in determining their role in a possible investigation into Sen. George Jacko's weekend attempt to gain entry to the hotel room of a female legislative aide.

Senators went into closed-door caucuses this morning after the majority and minority could not agree on appointments to the Ethics Committee, which could be called on to investigate Jacko's conduct.

At least two senators have said they want an investigation into the incident.

In addition to calling police for assistance in gaining access to the woman's room Saturday morning, Jacko asked the desk clerk at the Driftwood Lodge for a key.

Jacko and the woman were guests at the Willoughby Avenue motel.

The Pedro Bay Democrat also pounded on the aide's door repeatedly and called her room in the early-morning hours, said Lucy Perreard, who was working the front desk.

Though the police incident report says Jacko said he needed to talk with the woman on official legislative business, the senator has denied that report. The Empire has requested from Juneau police a copy of the taped phone calls from Jacko.

Though no complaint has yet been filed with the Ethics Committee, the panel could instigate its own investigation.

Senate Democrats today said they want Sen. Suzanne Little, D-Soldotna, as their member on the panel, but Senate President Rick Halford, R-Chugiak, bypassed the minority's recommendation and asked for Sens. Jay Kerttula and Mike Miller.

Kerttula, a Palmer Democrat, is a member of the minority; Miller, a North Pole Republican, belongs to the GOP-controlled majority. Jacko was the lone Democrat to defect to the GOP majority coalition, giving them control of the Senate.

Jacko was trying to gain entry to the room of an aide to Little, and Halford said that connection concerns him in Little's appointment to the panel that could investigate Jacko.

The legislative aide declined comment today.

Jacko has declined to discuss the incident further.

Senate Minority Whip Judy Salo, D-Kenai, said Little had been selected before this weekend's incident.

8 JUNEAU EMPIRE, TUESDAY, JANUARY 19, 1993

During a break in today's closed-door meetings, Senate Minority Leader Jim Duncan, D-Juneau, said Democrats still want Little.

The legislative ethics law sets up a panel with five public members, plus two from the House and two from the Senate split between the minority and majority in each chamber.

The House panelists are men, and three of the five public members are men. "We feel it is particularly important that there should be gender balance of the ethics committee," Duncan said.

Senate Majority Leader Robin Taylor, R-Wrangell, and Halford said politics are behind the nomination conflict.

"I need to go on the floor and try to figure out how to keep this body from tearing its guts out," Taylor said before the start of today's floor session.

The political process is complicated by the reality that Halford needs a two-thirds majority for confirmation of ethics panel appointments, meaning he needs at least three minority members to go along with his selections.

Salo and Duncan were prepared to speak on the Senate floor this afternoon, calling for an interim committee to investigate the weekend incident.

Four of the five public appointees to the Ethics Committee said today the Jacko situation was the type of incident that would likely fall under the new ethics law.

"This type of conduct, if it's true what I read in the paper, broadly would come under scope of this thing," said Rodman Wilson of Anchorage. "It's incorrect to try to get in someone's room and doubly incorrect to try and get law enforcement to do it. That's my initial assessment."

The lack of Senate appointees to the panel is unfortunate "because it looks as if things are moving beyond us that need attention," said nominee Ruth Apgar from Kotzebue.

"If he in fact was using police and troopers for personal reasons, and I don't think we know if it was personal or not, then we might want to do some investigating," Apgar said.

Under the rules, only the Senate and public members would sit in judgment on a senator's case. Any penalties would have to be approved by the full Senate.

While the Senate debates its role in the matter, further details of the incident show Jacko's persistence went beyond calling police to gain entry to the room.

He asked for a key at about 3:30 a.m. Saturday, desk clerk Lucy Perreard said Monday. "He just persisted over the next two hours," she said. "He wanted into the room bad."

Perreard said Jacko did not seem agitated and was not rude, but didn't seem reasonable either. Although he was a guest at the Driftwood, Jacko refused to identify himself, Perreard said.

The police report said the incident involved alcohol and Jacko has admitted to consuming a couple glasses of wine.

Perreard said Jacko smelled of alcohol and seemed intoxicated.

Jacko made two or three requests for the key, and Perreard turned him down, citing hotel policy and common sense. "When someone comes to the desk at 3:30 in the morning, you just don't give out a room key," she said.

When Perreard would not give him a key, Jacko asked her to enter the room and contact the woman, Perreard said. The clerk refused.

He also tried more direct approaches.

"He pounded on the door all night long," Perreard said, "hard enough that I could hear it in the front office."

The woman's room is near one end of the L-shaped complex. The office is near the middle. The pounding also prompted another guest to call the office and ask whether someone was breaking into the room, Perreard said.

Jacko also called the woman's room repeatedly. The woman finally took her phone off the hook, Perreard said.

Though Jacko said he "really needed to talk" to the woman, he did not say why, Perreard said. "It was personal," she said. "I don't think business was discussed at 3 in the morning."

In his first call to police, Jacko said he needed to talk about legislative business with the woman. On his second call to police from a phone in the hotel office, the senator was "throwing his name around," said Perreard, who overheard Jacko's end of the conversation.

Police said that Jacko later admitted during the second call that his request involved personal business.

"I remember him backtracking," she said. "I'm not going to say that he did say it was official business."

Jacko made the second call after police visited the hotel, determined that the senator's request was personal, and declined to help him.

Jacko's second call to police actually was for the Alaska State Troopers, whose number rings at the Juneau police department on weekends.

City-borough officials are reviewing media requests for access to tapes of both calls.

Police Capt. Mel Personett said the tapes will not be released until a supplemental report is completed by the investigating officer and municipal attorneys decide the tapes are not evidence in a criminal case.

The city-borough law department also is weighing concerns about the legislative aide's privacy. The tapes may have to be edited to remove her name and any references to her, municipal attorney John Corso said.

"I think that the senator ought to be prepared anyway for the possible release of information," Corso said.

Dear Chief Justice Moore:

I am applying to serve in the select committee for legislative ethics. I am interested in serving on the ethics committee because I am deeply committed to honesty and ethical dealings in government.

Since January 1989 I have been a member of the Alaska Board of Veterinary Examiners. I am a member of the Animal Appeals Board for the Municipality of Anchorage. In both of these capacities I have dealt with ethical and legal issues involving owners and their pets, and my fellow veterinarians and their interaction with clients and patients.

As a registered non-partisan voter, I feel I can be fair and impartial on ethical issues. I would be pleased to help serve the people of the state of Alaska as a public member on the select committee for legislative ethics.

Sincerely,

Dear Representative Finkelstein:

It is my desire to contribute to good government through community service.

I am a life-long Alaskan who is committed to this country. My family arrived in Alaska in 1922.

I am mature and sensible with a healthy moral personal philosophy. My family's life success was built on personal observation of ethics.

I am a registered Republican but have no further association with any political party or special interest group.

Thank you for your consideration.

Yours truly,

S. Kay DuBois

To Whom It May Concern:

I recommend Kay DuBois as one of the most valuable people I've had the good fortune to work with.

Kay has worked with me for the past six years, during which time she re-organized our accounting department, set-up billing and vendor systems and tracked our income by category. She helped to computerize our time accounting and payroll.

Working as the Company's Controller, she is in charge of both income and accounts payable including weekly payroll.

Kay works with the bank, managing our Line of Credit.

She works extremely well without supervision. She is very conscientious and completes all of her work in a professional manner.

Kay will be an asset to any company or government agency as an employee.

I will miss Kay as my associate here at McLane and Associates. She has been invaluable in coming up with workable ideas to improve and expand our capacity as a professional entity.

Kay is personable, professional and efficient. She has personal integrity and sound professional ethics.

I could not recommend anyone higher than Kay.

If you have questions, please call me at 283-4218.

To whom it may concern:

I am furnishing this letter of recommendation on behalf of Mrs. C. L. Kay Mayes.

Kay has been responsible for maintenance of all listing and transaction files; accounts payable; balancing of the bank accounts; advertising promotions; a magazine which is owned by Beluga Realty, Inc; Corporate Activity Reports; all records of the Sales Associates; Purchasing Agent for all supplies, furniture and improvements. In addition, she performed the function of Executive Secretary.

Always professional and pleasant, Kay has been a true asset to Beluga Realty. We have worked closely during her association and I have always found her to be helpful and in control of her responsibilities.

I have been personally acquainted with Kay for the past 25 years, and know her to be very loyal, caring and a responsible person.

It is my deep regret that Kay has decided to change to another type profession. She will always be eligible for rehire.

To whom it may concern:

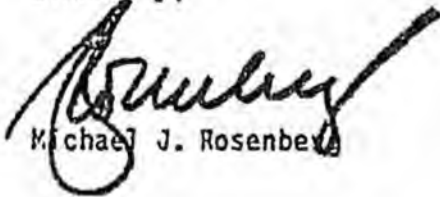

It is a pleasure to furnish this letter on behalf of Mrs. Kay Mayes.

During the period of February 1 to June 20, 1980, Mrs. Mayes reorganized and streamlined the administrative functions of our "paper-intensive" office in a superb fashion. The company policy and procedures manual she developed for us is a model of substance and completeness and has been of great lasting benefit. During this term of administrative reorganization, she concurrently performed the daily tasks of research, typing, filing, bookkeeping, personally and telephonically greeting clients and customers, and a myriad of other details usually associated with an active and demanding business office. As a self-starting perfectionist, she required no supervision and little direction.

Following her term of employment with our company, we have called upon her periodically to inspect and improve our administrative systems. In this capacity as an independent contractor, she has also conducted highly specialized and sensitive research on a project-by-project basis. Thus, she continues to be a valuable resource for us.

Mrs. Mayes is a poised, tactful, conscientious, and intensely loyal administrator who always maintains control of her responsibilities. It is always a great pleasure to have Mrs. Mayes with us, and I unreservedly recommend her for any position requiring solid administrative capabilities.

Sincerely,

Michael J. Rosenberg

Re: Legislative Ethics Committee

Dear Rep. Finkelstein

I would appreciate having my name considered as a member of the "Select Committee on Legislative Ethics".

As a former elected official I feel I would have the necessary insight and understanding to deal with the type of issues this board will be responsible to handle.

My involvement in the community of Sitka for 27 years, prior to moving to Juneau 2 years ago, earned me a reputation of being honest and up-front while at the same time maintaining a good report with the people I worked with.

This committee needs people who will be able to review, digest and form a solid opinion of the information and facts presented, and to do it with honesty and candor. I believe I am such a person.

Thank you for your consideration.

Dear Mrs. Klose,

This letter confirms the notice which you have received by telephone that the Senate and House Judiciary Committees will hold a joint meeting on Friday, March 12, 1993 at 3:30 p.m., Room 120, State Capitol Building, Juneau, Alaska. The purpose of the meeting is to review your background and qualifications to serve on the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics.

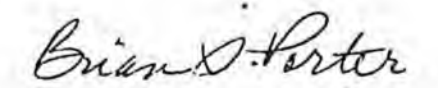

Travel arrangements may be made through your local travel agent. Travel expenses will be reimbursed by the Legislature.

To facilitate the joint committees' review, we are asking you to grant permission for a review your criminal history records (if any). The present state of the law is somewhat unclear regarding the Legislature's authority to obtain criminal history records if the subject of the request objects to such access. To eliminate any possible uncertainty, we are requesting your permission to obtain your criminal history records (if any) through the Alaska Department of Public Safety. We are confident you will agree that the confirmation process will be best served by a complete and fair evaluation of all relevant aspects of a nominee's background and qualifications to serve on the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics. A review of criminal history records may assist the committee in one aspect of this evaluation process. Please complete the attached criminal history release form and return it via facsimile (fax) to 465-3834.

We look forward to meeting you on March 12th.

Dear Representative Finkelstein,

Please accept my application to serve as a public member on the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics.

My interest in serving on this committee is out of curiosity and education of the legislative process. I do not have a hidden agenda. Skills I have to offer you include: the ability to work well with people in groups and individually, experience in policy development, community development, and working with budgets. I am an objective person and believe developing and enforcing a code of ethics is essential to cost effectiveness, efficiency and reestablishing trust in our government.

Thank you for your consideration.

Dear Rep. Finkelstein:

Enclosed you will find my application and resume' for the position of Public Member of the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics. I am applying for this position because I believe I possess the skills needed for this position, and I am vitally concerned that those in government adhere to a standard of ethics. I have seen many scandals by those in public office over the years, and would like to play an active part in contributing to the high standard of ethics as outlined in AS 24.60, and as Amended by CCSB 185, 1992. I have already had clearance through U.S. Customs (Anchorage office) in 1986, and am willing to bring such findings up to date. My wife works with the U.S. Dept. of Justice, and received sensitive clearance in 1992.

I believe that my ability to work with the public in a caring but firm manner and my past experience in law enforcement makes me highly qualified for this position. While working at the Alcan Border as a Customs agent, I had a very high record of maintaining border security with many illegal drug siezures and illegal entries.

Therefore, I submit this application with the confidence that I will meet all qualifications for this position.

Sincerely:

J. Alan Patterson.

Travel arrangements may be made through your local travel agent. Travel expenses will be reimbursed by the Legislature.

To facilitate the joint committees' review, we are asking you to grant permission for a review your criminal history records (if any). The present state of the law is somewhat unclear regarding the Legislature's authority to obtain criminal history records if the subject of the request objects to such access. To eliminate any possible uncertainty, we are requesting your permission to obtain your criminal history records (if any) through the Alaska Department of Public Safety. We are confident you will agree that the confirmation process will be best served by a complete and fair evaluation of all relevant aspects of a nominee's background and qualifications to serve on the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics. A review of criminal history records may assist the committee in one aspect of this evaluation process. Please complete the attached criminal history release form and return it via facsimile (fax) to 465-3834.

We look forward to meeting you on April 5th.

Sincerely,

Subject: Application, Select Committee on Legislative Ethics

Dear Representative Finkelstein:

I have enclosed an application for appointment as a public member to the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics. A brief resume is also attached in support of this application. In addition:

- Contribution to the Committee: My background is based upon the administration of large civil works building programs as a professional engineer. A substantial portion of this work history was centered here in Alaska. However, many years were spent in the Middle East and Africa where political fraud and deception can be rampant if program administration is unregimented. Because of the positions I have held, I have been fortunate to interface with government representatives and legislative programs, both foreign and domestic, for many years. I believe this experience is unique and will prove valuable to the Select Committee.
- Reasons and motivation for this application: I share the current strong public interest in legislative ethics. Further, Alaska has been very good to me and my family and it is "pay-back" time. I have tried to discharge a portion of this debt through service on the Chugach Board of Directors; but, I feel I should do more. The Select Committee on Legislative Ethics appears to be an opportunity to do that.

If any additional information is required please advise.

Sincerely,

Ed Granger, P.E.

Rep. David Finkelstein

Dear Mr. Finkelstein:

I would like to apply for a public position on the Ethics Committee. I have been an Alaska resident for only a year and a half, but I plan to make Alaska my permanent home.

I believe I have three things to contribute to the committee. First, my background as an economist means that I am well trained in analytical thinking. Legislation often has unintended side effects that are only visible from the economist's point of view—and too often these side effects can benefit one group at the expense of another. Second, I have a "can do" attitude and work rapidly. When I have a job to do, I get it done in the minimum amount of time. Finally, my newness to Alaska should be considered an asset to the Ethics Committee: I have no ties to business, labor or any other group, and my position as a UAS professor hardly constitutes a platform for special interests.

I've enclosed a recent resume and the application form. If you need any additional information, please contact me.

I look forward to meeting you.

Sincerely,

William S. Brown, Ph.D.

Dear Representative Finkelstein:

This letter is to serve as my explanation of why I want to serve as a public member of the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics.

I have been working in the public sector for twenty eight years. During that time, I have been subject to various regulations of my employers and the statutes and regulations to which they were subject as state agencies. I have learned those statutes and regulations, have followed them, and have tried to change them when I felt it was necessary. In addition, I have membership in both state level and national level professional organizations that have their own code of ethics to which I subscribe.

I would like to be of service to the legislature and to the people of Alaska by bringing to the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics my experience and my own personal and professional standards.

Thank you for your consideration of my application.

Very truly yours,

Dear Representative Finkelstein,

Enclosed herewith is my application and brief resume for your and others consideration for appointment to serve as a Public Member of the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics.

I have, as you may recall, for several years now, been actively concerned with the development and administration of ethic criteria in government in Alaska, not only for Legislators but encompassing all parties who serve the government of this state.

I have recently, after 5 1/2 years of service as a Commissioner and later Chair, rotated off Alaska Public Offices Commission. Prior to that appointment in Feb of 1987, I was an active member of the Alaska Republican Central Committee where my interest in ethics legislation (and enforcement) increased fourfold as it was regularly demonstrated a need for practical and effective ethics dictates.

For the last 6 years I have been a participating member of an international ethics forum, ie: COGEL (Congress on Governmental Ethics Laws) and for the past three years, have been privileged to serve on the 13 member Steering Committee of that organization. You may recall that in Sept. of 1990 the COGEL annual conference was held in Anchorage and I had the pleasure of hosting that conference for Alaska and APOC, and also serving as chair of that conference. I remain active in COGEL and have just recently returned for Toronto, Canada where I participated in this organization 12th annual conference. This association has given me much insight into ethics problems;;, proccdures, and practices on the international level and has strengthened my desire to serve with a facility in Alaska such as the Select Committee on Legislative Ethics. I am enclosing a copy of the membership roster that you may be aware of the vast resources available through such conferencing.

Your attention to and consideration of my application for appointment to this committee will be much appreciated.

I am enclosing herewith, a list of references, each of whom has been personally contacted and each of whom has given his/her consent to be contacted as to my character and competence.

Respectfully,

Annie Laurie Howard
