RE Support of HB 249, authorizing the McGrath Kuskokwim River Ice Classic.

CC Breat Urset, McGrath Emergency Services (MES)

Dear Representative Kott,

I am writing to you asking for your support of HB 249 which would authorize the Kuskokwim Public Broadcasting Corporation (KPBC) to hold an annual McGrath Kuskokwim River Ice Classic.

The KPBC manages KSKO-AM public radio in McGrath. We are a full, sole service radio station that broadcasts to approximately 4500 interior residents on both the Yukon and Kuskokwim Rivers. KIYU-AM Galena is a sole service repeater radio station of KSKO. We have been under continual budget cuts for the past ten years and as you know, with the decline of state dollars, we are now facing the very real threat of loss of our full service status, leaving us with minimal service as a repeater station. For the past three years we have been looking earnestly for alternative funding to state dollars to keep this vital service at an adequate level.

KSKO and McGrath Emergency Services (MES), a combination of the non-profit groups, the McGrath Volunteer Fire Dept and the Kuskokwim Valley Rescue Squad, are working together to make the Kuskokwim River Ice Classic a reality and a possible funding source for all three non-profit organizations.

We live in a sparsely populated area that is very dependant on all of these non-profits for vital services. Vital services that the state can no longer afford to fund. There are very limited economic resources in the area for alternative funding and we are asking you to please support our efforts in alternative fundraising by voting yes to HB 249, the McGrath Kuskokwim River Ice Classic.

Thank-you for your support.

The Honorable Representative Moses, Chair
House Rules Committee
Alaska State Legislature
Juneau, AK 99811

Dear Representative Moses,

The following letters and signatures were collected in the Interior community of McGrath. The voters who signed this letter believe in and support Community Radio in Alaska's vast Interior region, while understanding the declining state and federal budget.

In HB249, the KPBC would be authorized to conduct an Ice Classic on the Kuskokwim River at McGrath. Experience has shown that Ice Classics generate revenue for non-profit organizations across the state, at no expense to the state.

We strongly urge the House Rules Committee to act on HB249 this session! The KPBC has taken and will continue to take budget cuts. By passing HB249, you would provide the KPBC with an alternate source of funding.

Thank you for your consideration. If you have any questions about the KPBC, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Best Regards,

Dear Representative Kott,

I am writing in support of HB0249a authorizing communities to hold ice classics. With declining state revenues, any organizations are looking for ways to fill the budget gap. The Kuskokwim Public Broadcasting Corporation is responsible for locale radio station KSKO, which reaches numerous surrounding villages. An ice classic is one method that could be used to help keep the station on the air.

I urge you to support this measure.

Dear Representative Kott:

I am writing as a student of the McGrath School in support of the House Bill 249. In my opinion, the Ice Classic raffle should be sold to the surrounding areas of McGrath and to former listeners of KSKO Radio.

I, myself rely on the KSKO Radio for messages, emergency announcements, news broadcasts, entertainment, and for sending important messages to persons of other villages that receive the frequency of KSKO.

It would be a tragedy to the local listeners and surrounding villages of McGrath to see the radio station taken away.

Please support my request of the passage of H.B. 249. Thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,

Kitty Edwards

Dear Representative Kott,

I am writing for your support on bill number HB.249. This will help the radio station KSKO, make money to stay on the air. KSKO is a major service that people in McGrath and the surrounding communities rely upon to communicate. When I'm either hunting or working out of town, I bring my radio with me. The messages that are broadcast every hour give me news that might be intended for me. It is also nice to get a dedication from a loved one. The radio brings everyone together the trappers, hunters, workers and all of the communities. Without it, the towns and people would seem so far away.

Sincerely,

The Honorable Pete Cott, Chairman

Dear Representative Cott:

Your support on the House bill 249 would greatly increase the budget of our local radio station KSKO. In which would be an opportunity for KSKO to support themselves for future on air funding.

The local radio station is an excellent way for bush villages to easily communicate amongst each others. It provides many jobs in our community, and would become a great loss for hundreds of people if it was took off air due to a lack of funding, which could of been made by themselves through the H.B. 249.

Thank you for your time and support.

To Whom it may concern,

My name is Julie Payne and I am writing this letter to let you know that I would really hate to see the budget cut for the public radio stations here in Alaska.

I work as a volunteer DJ at KSKO-870 AM-McGrath. The station not only provides music and entertainment, but news, and it's also a big mean of communication in Alaska. People that live on homesteads or in surrounding villages use the radio to communicate and to keep in touch with what's going on in the world and around where they live.

Lots of the stations are already struggling with funding.

Thanks for considering and supporting this radio station.

My name is Karissa Knight and I'm a 6th grader at McGrath School. I'm writing this letter because I heard that KSKO might not be able to have any more funding. I would hate to see KSKO go out of funding because that is where I get my local news like the weather and things that are going on around town. I also listen to the great music that they put on. I certainly hope that you get enough letters to keep funding it.

HB 249 - MCGRATH KUSKOKWIM RIVER ICE CLASSIC

Number 364

CHAIRMAN KOTT stated the next order of business would be HB 249.

Number 366

DEBORAH OSTENDORF, LEGISLATIVE SECRETARY TO REPRESENTATIVE IRENE NICHOLIA, PRIME SPONSOR OF HB 249, testified that HB 249 changes AS 05.15.690 to add the McGrath Ice Classic. She said she had received a call from someone in the Bethel area concerning use of the name Kuskokwim River included in the bill. She asked the committee to adopt the committee substitute which would take out the "Kuskokwim River" and rename it "The McGrath River Ice Classic."

Number 379

The committee took a brief at ease at 3:30 p.m. and was back at 3:35 p.m.

Number 384

CHAIRMAN KOTT would entertain a motion to adopt the proposed CS.

Number 384

REPRESENTATIVE MASEK made a motion to adopt the proposed CSHB 249(L&C). 9L-30668/P, Luckhaupt, dated 4-28-96.

Number 386

CHAIRMAN KOTT asked if there were any objections. Hearing none, CSHB 249(L&C) was adopted. He asked Ms. Ostendorf to explain the differences.

Number 389

MS. OSTENDORF stated that it removes the name "Kuskokwim River" from the title, renaming it the "McGrath Ice Classic."

CHAIRMAN KOTT asked why the change was needed.

Number 393

MS. OSTENDORF replied there was a similar ice classic out of Bethel, named the 'Kuskokwim River Ice Classic.' People in Bethel didn't want there to be any confusion.

Number 400

REPRESENTATIVE ROKEBERG commented that in reading the sponsor statement, he could see where the proceeds are intended to go. He asked whether there was anything in statute to mandate them changing where the beneficiary or profits would go.

Number 405

MS. OSTENDORF said the permit holder could have the proceeds go to any organization. In this case, KSKO Radio had opted to keep half of the proceeds and to share the other half with the McGrath Emergency Services. Once they have a permit, they can change that. There is nothing in statute prohibiting them from sharing the money with whomever they want.

Number 412

CHAIRMAN KOTT asked if the Kuskokwim Public Broadcasting Company was also responsible for the Bethel Kuskokwim Classic.

Number 413

MS. OSTENDORF replied no. They do not currently hold the permit for this. She wasn't sure who was responsible for that.

Number 415

REPRESENTATIVE KUBINA said Bethel Social Services.

Number 419

DENNIS BOCHARD, DIRECTOR, DIVISION OF CHARITABLE GAMING, DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE, stated that he was in attendance to answer any questions the committee might have. The division is neutral on the bill as there are several other ice classics, and this would be no different than those they currently oversee.

Number 428

REPRESENTATIVE MASEK commented that with the state being in the situation it's in, they were going to have to have an "Alaskan Classic Day." She made a motion to move CSHB 249(L&C) with individual recommendations and accompanying zero fiscal note out of committee.

Number 434

CHAIRMAN KOTT asked if there were any objections. Hearing none, CSHB 249(L&C) was passed out of the House Labor and Commerce Committee.

Dear Senator Sharp,

The following letters were collected in the community of McGrath supporting HB 249, which would authorize the KPBC to conduct an Ice Classic on the Kuskokwim River at McGrath. I am forwarding these letters to you in the hope that your committee will schedule this bill in the Senate State Affairs Committee soon. I was asked to fax these letters due to the time constraints of the mail. Although a portion of these letters are addressed to Senator Frank of the Finance Committee, I am enclosing them as well as they directly support HB 249.

KSKO is a rural, sole service radio station broadcasting up to 10,000 people in the very heart of Interior Alaska (with a repeater station in Galena). Our audience relies on the services that KSKO provides. Although KSKO has faced declining revenue, its staff and supporter's have continued to maintain the high level of programming with less staff, less time and less resources. Our goal is to continue seeking alternate sources of revenue, to ultimately become less dependant upon state and federal dollars.

Please review these letters, created by individuals who support public radio and HB 249. Quick action by the Senate State Affairs Committee would be deeply appreciated.

Thank you for your time.

Dear Senator Sharp,

I am writing in support of HB 249, which would enable the Kuskokwim Public Broadcasting Corporation, KSKO Radio, to conduct a statewide Ice Classic on the Kuskokwim River at McGrath.

KSKO radio has continued to receive cuts from the State, as has public radio at large. The staff of KSKO, and the communities it serves, are dedicated to this radio station. What KSKO provides simply can not be replaced.

HB 249, when passed, would benefit KSKO financially. Perhaps KSKO could maintain its current level of funding, therefore maintaining the quality of service we are accustomed to.

Please pass HB 249.

Thank you for your time.

Yours Truly,

Dear Senator Frank,

KSKO Radio is an important resource in the community of McGrath and the surrounding villages. The signal is transmitted down the Yukon and up the Kuskokwim, encompassing a vast area that is otherwise void of any radio signals. With looming budget cuts, there is a danger that we in the interior will lose our local radio station if KSKO is relegated to repeater status.

With declining state revenue, KSKO has been seeking ways of replacing State dollars. I am proud to say that I am a paid member of KSKO and will again be this year, but membership fees alone are not enough to offset the budget cuts. I think the idea of an ice classic on the Kuskokwim at McGrath is a great one. It would be fun and would also raise greatly needed dollars to keep KSKO on the air.

Please, show your support for the residents of the Interior and KSKO by supporting HB 249 authorizing an ice classic in McGrath.

Thank you.

Introduction

This report examines the implementation of Alaska's 1992 subsistence law. It provides background for the Nineteenth Alaska State Legislature as it considers whether to reauthorize the 1992 law before key provisions sunset in October 1996, or to make other changes concerning the subsistence statute. This report updates and extends the analysis that ADF&G prepared for the legislature in January 1995 (Report on Implementation of the 1992 Subsistence Law, Alaska Department of Fish and Game, Division of Subsistence, January 1995).

The legislature amended the subsistence law in 1992 to address perceived problems with the 1986 law, including lawsuits that had arisen during its implementation. This report has two major objectives. The first objective is to describe the key differences between the 1992 law and the 1986 law. These involve four primary areas - who qualifies for subsistence uses, where subsistence uses occur, providing for subsistence uses with regulations, and operation of the subsistence preference. The second objective is to examine how the 1992 law is being interpreted and implemented. This report does not address the problems created by dual state-federal management, and does not make recommendations for changes to the 1992 law.

Before proceeding, it is important to consider the purpose of the subsistence law. Alaskans from all walks of life make widely differing uses of fish and wildlife. For more than twenty years the state has wrestled with the question of how to protect the subsistence taking, uses, and practices of the people in the communities with the greatest dependence and historic reliance upon fish and wildlife for domestic consumption. Throughout this debate there has been widespread agreement that there is a need for some sort of protections for subsistence, but considerable disagreement about who should benefit and how to accomplish it.

One aspect of fish and wildlife management during this century has been the uneasy relationship between the fish and wildlife harvest patterns that people follow in small communities in Alaska and the laws and regulations created by government to regulate them.

- Subsistence patterns are developed by custom in small Alaska communities, and passed down through oral traditions and practice. They are "customary and traditional" uses that follow local rules within small communities.
- Subsistence uses of fish commonly include harvesting fish with efficient gear (such as nets, fishwheels, and hook-and-line); preserving fish for use (such as through freezing, drying, smoking, and salting); distributing fish through sharing and small-scale barter and trade; and consuming fish products.
- Subsistence uses of wildlife commonly include efficient hunting and trapping for big game (including moose, caribou, deer, sheep, goats, black bear, and brown bear), small game-fur bearers (including beaver, hare, fox, and wolf), and birds (including geese, ducks, and ptarmigan); preserving meat and furs; distributing meat and furs through sharing and small-scale barter and trade; and using meat and fur products as food and crafts.
- Subsistence patterns are common practices of families in small communities; they serve as a base for the economy, culture, and way of life in many Alaska communities.

The 1986 State Subsistence Law

In passing the first state subsistence law in 1978 the Alaska legislature found that "it is in the public interest to clearly establish subsistence use as a priority use of Alaska's fish and game resources and to recognize the needs, customs, and traditions of Alaskan residents" (Sec. 1 ch. 151 SLA 1978). The 1978 law did four major things to accomplish this. (1) It defined subsistence uses. (2) It required the Alaska Boards of Fisheries and Game to adopt regulations permitting subsistence uses to occur when a harvestable surplus of a resource was available. (3) It established that in times of resource shortage, subsistence uses be given a preference over other uses, such as commercial, sport, or personal use. This meant that subsistence hunting and fishing were to be restricted last whenever it became necessary to restrict harvest opportunities for conservation purposes. (4) It created the Division of Subsistence within the Department of Fish and Game to provide information about subsistence and to assist the boards in carrying out the law.

In 1980 Congress passed Title VIII of ANILCA, which incorporated the basic ideas and language of the state law. The federal law, however, limits the subsistence preference to "rural Alaska residents" (P.L. 96-487, December 2, 1980 [94 Stat. 2371]). The federal law applies to federal public lands, but offers the state the option of continuing to manage subsistence on all lands in the state, if the Alaska legislature enacts "laws of general applicability which are consistent with and provide for the definition, preference, and participation specified [in the federal law]." The state initially attempted to comply with ANILCA by adopting a rural preference in regulation. After this was overturned by the Alaska Supreme Court in Madison, the legislature revised the subsistence statute in 1986, amending the definition of "subsistence uses" to read:

the noncommercial, customary and traditional uses [IN ALASKA] of wild, renewable resources by a resident domiciled in a rural area of the state for direct personal or family consumption as food, shelter, fuel, clothing, tools, or transportation, for the making and selling of handicraft articles out of nonedible by-products of fish and wildlife resources taken for personal or family consumption, and for the customary trade, barter, or sharing for personal or family consumption (AS 16.05.940(23)).

The legislature also defined "rural area" as:

a community or area of the state in which the noncommercial, customary, and traditional use of fish or game for personal or family consumption is a principal characteristic of the economy of the community or area (AS 16.05.940(32)).

The 1986 law also more explicitly defined steps to be taken by the boards in providing for subsistence. It required that the boards first identify the rural areas of the state, and then identify the fish stocks and game populations that are customarily and traditionally used for subsistence in those areas. For the stocks and populations identified as having customary and traditional uses, the board must then determine the harvestable surplus, and the portion of that surplus needed to provide a reasonable opportunity to satisfy subsistence uses. Finally, the board must adopt subsistence regulations necessary to provide for that opportunity.

Introduction

This report examines the implementation of Alaska's 1992 subsistence law. It provides background for the Nineteenth Alaska State Legislature as it considers whether to reauthorize the 1992 law before key provisions sunset in October 1996, or to make other changes concerning the subsistence statute. This report updates and extends the analysis that ADF&G prepared for the legislature in January 1995 (Report on Implementation of the 1992 Subsistence Law, Alaska Department of Fish and Game, Division of Subsistence, January 1995).

The legislature amended the subsistence law in 1992 to address perceived problems with the 1986 law, including lawsuits that had arisen during its implementation. This report has two major objectives. The first objective is to describe the key differences between the 1992 law and the 1986 law. These involve four primary areas — who qualifies for subsistence uses, where subsistence uses occur, providing for subsistence uses with regulations, and operation of the subsistence preference. The second objective is to examine how the 1992 law is being interpreted and implemented. This report does not address the problems created by dual state-federal management, and does not make recommendations for changes to the 1992 law.

Before proceeding, it is important to consider the purpose of the subsistence law. Alaskans from all walks of life make widely differing uses of fish and wildlife. For more than twenty years the state has wrestled with the question of how to protect the subsistence taking, uses, and practices of the people in the communities with the greatest dependence and historic reliance upon fish and wildlife for domestic consumption. Throughout this debate there has been widespread agreement that there is a need for some sort of protections for subsistence, but considerable disagreement about who should benefit and how to accomplish it.

One aspect of fish and wildlife management during this century has been the uneasy relationship between the fish and wildlife harvest patterns that people follow in small communities in Alaska and the laws and regulations created by government to regulate them.

- Subsistence patterns are developed by custom in small Alaska communities, and passed down through oral traditions and practice. They are "customary and traditional" uses that follow local rules within small communities.
- Subsistence uses of fish commonly include harvesting fish with efficient gear (such as nets, fishwheels, and hook-and-line); preserving fish for use (such as through freezing, drying, smoking, and salting); distributing fish through sharing and small-scale barter and trade; and consuming fish products.
- Subsistence uses of wildlife commonly include efficient hunting and trapping for big game (including moose, caribou, deer, sheep, goats, black bear, and brown bear), small game-fur bearers (including beaver, hare, fox, and wolf), and birds (including geese, ducks, and ptarmigan); preserving meat and furs; distributing meat and furs through sharing and small-scale barter and trade; and using meat and fur products as food and crafts.
- Subsistence patterns are common practices of families in small communities; they serve as a base for the economy, culture, and way of life in many Alaska communities.

By contrast, the written laws and regulations of the government pertaining to fishing and hunting have been developed primarily by legislatures, boards, and courts which to a great extent are distant from the small villages geographically, culturally, and politically. Families dependent upon subsistence in small communities have frequently found that their customary ways of taking and using wild foods are at odds with written laws and regulations regarding wild resource use.

This uneasy relationship of traditional practice and government regulation is at the heart of the subsistence issue, and is the main subsistence issue that must be addressed from the point of view of families dependent upon subsistence.

- Subsistence fishers and hunters don't want to be criminals in order to continue to feed their families;
- They wish that their customary and traditional patterns of resource use could be recognized and accommodated by the laws and regulations of government.

In situations where fish and wildlife use are such important parts of people's lives, there has to be mutual trust and cooperation between the people doing the regulating and those that are regulated if fish and wildlife populations and their uses are to be maintained.

The state subsistence law and federal subsistence laws were steps toward addressing these issues. The federal subsistence law and the pre-1992 state subsistence law recognized the importance of the customary and traditional patterns of subsistence hunting and fishing that occurred in "rural" Alaska, and predominately in small villages. This is explicit in the legislative history of both the state and federal laws, as well as implicit in policy and legislation. As early as 1973 the Boards of Fisheries and Game had adopted a policy giving subsistence the "highest priority among beneficial uses." In 1975 the state legislature adopted legislation permitting the establishment of subsistence hunting zones to reduce competition between local residents and urban hunters, although none were ever established. The 1978, 1986, and 1992 subsistence legislation each acknowledged the importance of subsistence uses of fish and wildlife.

While the precise boundaries of the class of people intended to be protected by the state and federal laws are fuzzy, there is considerable agreement about the core of this class. Most commentators seem to agree that the subsistence law should protect uses of fish and wildlife by people living in small communities where a high proportion of residents have historically relied upon fish and wildlife for a large part of their livelihood, and with cultural and social ties based upon those uses. The Alaska Supreme Court concisely summarized these characteristics as including:

... economies which rely on hunting, fishing and gathering activities, strong kinship bonds, isolation from those parts of Alaska that approximate mainstream America, different seasonal activity patterns, concepts of time and scheduling, which in accordance with other cultural divergences, may be quite different from those of mainstream America, and finally, very limited participation in the cash economy. (Alvarado v. State, 486 P.2d 891, 894 Alaska 1971).

The 1986 State Subsistence Law

In passing the first state subsistence law in 1978 the Alaska legislature found that "it is in the public interest to clearly establish subsistence use as a priority use of Alaska's fish and game resources and to recognize the needs, customs, and traditions of Alaskan residents" (Sec. 1 ch. 151 SLA 1978). The 1978 law did four major things to accomplish this. (1) It defined subsistence uses. (2) It required the Alaska Boards of Fisheries and Game to adopt regulations permitting subsistence uses to occur when a harvestable surplus of a resource was available. (3) It established that in times of resource shortage, subsistence uses be given a preference over other uses, such as commercial, sport, or personal use. This meant that subsistence hunting and fishing were to be restricted last whenever it became necessary to restrict harvest opportunities for conservation purposes. (4) It created the Division of Subsistence within the Department of Fish and Game to provide information about subsistence and to assist the boards in carrying out the law.

In 1980 Congress passed Title VIII of ANILCA, which incorporated the basic ideas and language of the state law. The federal law, however, limits the subsistence preference to "rural Alaska residents" (P.L. 96-487, December 2, 1980 [94 Stat. 2371]). The federal law applies to federal public lands, but offers the state the option of continuing to manage subsistence on all lands in the state, if the Alaska legislature enacts "laws of general applicability which are consistent with and provide for the definition, preference, and participation specified [in the federal law]." The state initially attempted to comply with ANILCA by adopting a rural preference in regulation. After this was overturned by the Alaska Supreme Court in Madison, the legislature revised the subsistence statute in 1986, amending the definition of "subsistence uses" to read:

the noncommercial, customary and traditional uses [IN ALASKA] of wild, renewable resources by a resident domiciled in a rural area of the state for direct personal or family consumption as food, shelter, fuel, clothing, tools, or transportation, for the making and selling of handicraft articles out of nonedible by-products of fish and wildlife resources taken for personal or family consumption, and for the customary trade, barter, or sharing for personal or family consumption (AS 16.05.940(23)).

The legislature also defined "rural area" as:

a community or area of the state in which the noncommercial, customary, and traditional use of fish or game for personal or family consumption is a principal characteristic of the economy of the community or area (AS 16.05.940(32)).

The 1986 law also more explicitly defined steps to be taken by the boards in providing for subsistence. It required that the boards first identify the rural areas of the state, and then identify the fish stocks and game populations that are customarily and traditionally used for subsistence in those areas. For the stocks and populations identified as having customary and traditional uses, the board must then determine the harvestable surplus, and the portion of that surplus needed to provide a reasonable opportunity to satisfy subsistence uses. Finally, the board must adopt subsistence regulations necessary to provide for that opportunity.

The Department of the Interior quickly certified the 1986 law as consistent with ANILCA. Beginning that year the boards engaged in an ambitious effort to identify rural areas, customary and traditional uses, and fishing and hunting regulations that provided for subsistence uses. This process was nominally completed for most of the major subsistence hunts and fisheries in the state by 1990. Due to time constraints and conflicts, the Board of Game simply renamed existing general hunting regulations as subsistence regulations in many cases. Both boards noted that they would continue to accept specific proposals from the public for additional changes to subsistence regulations, and to apply the state law on a case by case basis.

The 1986 state subsistence law set up a procedure for state boards to identify subsistence uses by rural residents and provide for them in regulation.

- Areas and people participating in customary and traditional uses were supposed to be identified; and,
- Customary and traditional uses of fish and game were supposed to be identified and provided for in regulation, consistent with sustained yield management.

In addition, two protections for subsistence patterns were provided in the pre-1992 state subsistence law and the federal subsistence law:

- Subsistence practices in rural areas should not be unreasonably restricted by fishing and hunting regulations. That is, regulations must "provide" for established subsistence uses.
- When there are not enough wild fish or game to meet all consumptive uses, subsistence practices should be restricted only after sport fishing, general hunting, and commercial fishing. That is, subsistence has a "preference" over other types of fishing and hunting.

The state's pre-1992 subsistence law was still in the process of being implemented in regulation by the state Boards of Fisheries and Game when state law fell out of compliance with federal law in 1990. There were therefore still many unresolved inconsistencies between established subsistence practices in small villages and what was legal in regulation.

The 1992 State Subsistence Law

The legal foundation for state subsistence management changed abruptly in December of 1989 when the Alaska Supreme Court ruled that the rural provisions of the state's subsistence law violated the Alaska constitution (McDowell v. State 785 P. 2d 1 Alaska 1989). The court prohibited the state from using rural residency as the basis for subsistence eligibility. On remand to the superior court, the rural provisions were severed from the 1986 subsistence law, leaving the rest of the law intact.

This legal decision rendered the state law inconsistent with ANILCA Title VIII, the federal subsistence law, which defined subsistence as a use by rural people. Subsequently, in July of 1990, the federal government took over management of subsistence hunting on federal public lands in Alaska to provide for subsistence uses by rural Alaska residents on federal public lands. The state continued to manage for subsistence hunting and fishing in Alaska under the 1986 state law, but without the rural provisions. This resulted in state subsistence hunts and fisheries open to all Alaska residents (the so-called "all Alaskans" approach), and federal subsistence hunts on federal public lands open to qualified rural residents.

In the spring of 1990 the Alaska legislature considered placing a constitutional amendment before voters that would enable the state to meet ANILCA standards. That effort failed, as did a subsequent effort during a special legislative session in June of 1990.

Governor Hickel convened a Subsistence Advisory Council in 1991, shortly after taking office. He then brought its ideas concerning the subsistence issue to the 1992 legislative session. When the legislature adjourned in May of 1992 without taking any action on subsistence, the governor called a special legislative session in the summer of 1992. A range of subsistence management options were considered by the legislature. The subsistence law that eventually resulted from the 1992 special session made several changes in the state subsistence law. These did not bring the state's program into compliance with ANILCA.

The most substantive change, which was made to comply with the Supreme Court's ruling in McDowell, is that the 1992 law removes any reference to rural residents as the people whose uses of fish and wildlife are protected by the law. Another major difference is that the 1992 law explicitly prohibits the Boards of Fisheries and Game from permitting subsistence hunting or fishing in areas identified by the boards as "nonsubsistence areas". The 1992 law also defines some key terms that had been used in implementing the 1986 law but had not been defined in statute, and sets out specific procedures for the boards to follow in implementing the 1992 law. In summary the 1992 law:

- Allows any Alaskan to participate in subsistence hunts and fisheries if they use the fish or game harvested for subsistence purposes (such as personal or family consumption, sharing, and crafts).
- Directs the boards to identify "nonsubsistence areas" and to prohibit subsistence fishing and hunting in them.
- Establishes explicit procedures for implementing the subsistence preference.
