REPRESENTATIVE JOHN COGHILL

Date: March 30, 2001
To: Members of the House State Affairs Committee
From: Representative John Coghill
Re: Committee Substitute for HB 193

The United States Supreme Court ruled in California Democratic Party et al. v. Jones, Secretary of State, et al. (530 U.S. 567, 2000) that the petitioners of California Proposition 198 which implemented California's blanket primary violated a political party's right to association. Governor Knowles has completely disregarded this decision by introducing HB 193 and SB 146. His approach is to enact the blanket primary and leave it up to the party to exclude voters from participation. The proper process is to make provisions for a Party inclusion.

The intent of California Democratic Party v. Jones was to implement a primary system that allows a party to nominate its candidates for the general election and provide a mechanism by which they could include voters other than registered party members. In the Courts decision was very explicit in this regard by citing Eu v. San Francisco County Democratic Central Committee, (489 U.S. 214):

"In no area is the political association's right to exclude more important than in its candidate-selection process. That process often determines the party's positions on significant public policy issues, and it is the nominee who is the party's ambassador charged with winning the general electorate over to its views. The First Amendment reserves a special place, and accords a special protection, for that process."

California goes even further in protecting the right of inclusion:

"California blanket primary violates these principles [right to association]. Proposition 198 forces petitioners to adulterate their candidate-selection process—a political party's basic function—by opening it up to person wholly unaffiliated with the party, who may have different views from the party. "

It is noteworthy to cite Justice Rabinowitz in his April, 1996 dissent of O'Callaghan v. Alaska which ended the open primary in Alaska. He stated:

In my view, Alaska's blanket primary statute impermissibly burdens the Republican Party of Alaska's political rights of association in violation of the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the United State Constitution."

Rabinowitz argued that while the blanket primary did not specifically interfere with the Republican Party of Alaska's right to have candidates on the primary ballot, the state prohibited the RPA from selecting candidates according to its chosen method.

It is not the power of the State to include; it is the Party's right to exclude. The legislation implementing a primary election should start at that point. My suggestion is that the director of elections prepares a primary election ballot for each political party. Any political party wanting to include participation of voters other than registered party members may provide written notice to the director of elections by 5:00 p.m. November 1st of the calendar year prior to the primary election requesting that members of other parties or unaffiliated member be permitted access to the party's ballot.

MEMORANDUM

March 28, 2001

SUBJECT: Governor's Primary Election Bill: Draft Committee Substitute; Constitutional Issues House Bill No. 193 (Work Order No. 22-GH1089/A);

TO: Representative John Coghill
Attn: Rynnieva Moss

FROM: Kathryn L. Kurtz KK
Legislative Counsel

Enclosed is the draft committee substitute you requested.

It follows the model you provided as closely as possible while eliminating the portions relating to blanket primary election ballots, which are not needed if each party is going to have its own ballot. As I discussed with your staff, I believe this is consistent with your intent and has the added benefit of producing a shorter bill. If I have gone astray, please let me know.

Issues you may want to address:

- How do you want to handle ballot measures which appear on the primary ballot? (See Article XI, Section 4, Constitution of the State of Alaska, requiring that an initiative be placed on the ballot "for the first statewide election held more than one hundred-twenty days after adjournment of the legislative session following the filing [of the initiative petition]," which could be a primary election.) Should these appear on each party's ballot, or a separate ballot to be given to all voters, or do you want to leave it up to the division?
- Since 1995, the names of candidates nominated by petition under AS 15.25.140 - 15.25.205 have appeared on the primary election ballot. Prior to that, they were listed on the general election ballot. Under the enclosed committee substitute, these candidates--including the candidates of political groups which do not qualify as parties--will presumably be listed on each party's primary election ballot. This may give rise to a freedom of association argument on the part of those groups. Then again, the state's interest in limiting the number of names that appear on the general election ballot may be sufficient to justify an infringement on a group's first amendment rights. Please give some thought to how you would like to handle this issue.

Representative John Coghill, Jr.

- If a person who is not registered as affiliated with a particular party wants to vote that party's ballot, do you want to let the person vote a questioned ballot?

You also requested an evaluation of the constitutionality of the governor's bill. I do not see any glaring constitutional problems with the bill. The governor's bill addresses the freedom of association issue by permitting a political party to restrict who may participate in the selection of its candidates. Your committee substitute addresses the issue by providing a separate ballot for each political party and restricting access to that ballot to voters registered as affiliated with that party, unless the party chooses to expand who may participate in the selection of its candidates. I think both approaches adequately address the freedom of association issue raised in California Democratic Party v. Jones, 530 U.S. 567 (2000).

Re: AccuVote

I talked with John McLaurin from Global in Florida about the possibility of one ballot. He said he is 95 per cent sure they could do it because the software people have been talking about it, but the software solution would be very expensive.

Right now Accuvote has two General Election ballots that use a party declaration. The first one is the "straight party voting" where you mark the block of your party affiliation and the ballot automatically counts the candidates from that party. This wouldn't work because in a primary a party could have more than one candidate running for the same seat.

The second is the "straight party crossover" where you can vote for any party affiliation on the ballot as long as you only vote for one candidate per seat. This again is only used in the general election.

When I told him we were dealing with a primary election, he said this would be extremely difficult because you are throwing so many variables into a linear system. He said it is even more unlikely one ballot programming would be feasible because the party's can determine the method by which their candidates are selected. Those methods could be changes by the party, requiring the software programming to change the ballots. He said this is problematic from the poll standpoint, from the voter' standpoint and from the programming standpoint. Election workers and voters would have to be educated every time a change was made.

John said one ballot would mean a major software rewrite of Alaska's system. He said without the host computer, proprietary software and accouterments for programming a rewrite could not happen. Alaska's system cost $1.98 million to get running. He said he talked to Randy two weeks ago about this. He has also been talking to Lt. Gov. Ulmer the last couple of weeks.

John's mobile phone is 904-235-6645 and office phone is 904-672-0460.

HOUSE BILL NO. 193 by the House Rules Committee by request of the Governor, entitled:

"An Act relating to the primary election; and providing for an effective date."

"Dear Speaker Porter:

The United States Supreme Court decision California Democratic Party v. Jones requires states to recognize a political party's First Amendment rights in determining which voters may participate in nominating its party candidates for placement on general election ballots. This bill that I transmit today implements the findings of the primary election task force that the lieutenant governor convened to respond to this court decision.

The bill requires political parties to notify the division of elections by September 1 of the year preceding a primary election if they choose to not participate in a blanket primary. If a party fails to submit its party primary preference to the division of elections by this deadline, the party's candidates will appear on the blanket primary ballot.

The bill provides for the primary ballot to be designed as a blanket ballot. However, if a political party chooses to exclude voters not registered with its party from participating in their primary election, then a ballot listing appropriate candidates would be prepared for that party.

It is important to all Alaska voters that the legislature adopts a new primary election system this session, in time to conduct the next primary election in an orderly and efficient manner consistent with this court decision.

Sincerely,

Tony Knowles
Governor"

This fiscal note is based on the scenario that all recognized political parties choose to limit who may participate in the selection of their party candidates in a primary election and they all allow unaffiliated voters to participate. This would require the printing of seven different ballots. The cost above is what would be required in addition to the division's annual budgets. These include: additional ballot printing costs ($90.0); revision and printing of forms ($5.2); voter education ($120.0).

It should be noted for the record that the ballot tabulation system may require programming changes. At this time, the vendor has been unable to determine the cost of such changes. The impact of the cost may be determined by the individual party by-laws.

If only the two major recognized political parties choose to limit who may participate in the selection of their party candidates in a primary election, the fiscal note would be reduced by $20.0. This reduction would be in ballot printing costs.

VOTING RIGHTS ACT OF 1965

Sec. 1973c Alteration of voting qualifications and procedures; action by State or political subdivision for declaratory judgment of no denial or abridgement of voting rights; three-judge district court; appeal to Supreme Court

Whenever a State or political subdivision with respect to which the prohibitions set forth in section 1973b(a) of this title based upon determinations made under the first sentence of section 1973b(b) of this title are in effect shall enact or seek to administer any voting qualification or prerequisite to voting, or standard, practice, or procedure with respect to voting different from that in force or effect on November 1, 1964, or whenever a State or political subdivision with respect to which the prohibitions set forth in section 1973b(a) of this title based upon determinations made under the second sentence of section 1973b(b) of this title are in effect shall enact or seek to administer any voting qualification or prerequisite to voting, or standard, practice, or procedure with respect to voting different from that in force or effect on November 1, 1968, or whenever a State or political subdivision with respect to which the prohibitions set forth in section 1973b(a) of this title based upon determinations made under the third sentence of section 1973b(b) of this title are in effect shall enact or seek to administer any voting qualification or prerequisite to voting, or standard, practice, or procedure with respect to voting different from that in force or effect on November 1, 1972, such State or subdivision may institute an action in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia for a declaratory judgment that such qualification, prerequisite, standard, practice, or procedure does not have the purpose and will not have the effect of denying or abridging the right to vote on account of race or color, or in contravention of the guarantees set forth in section 1973b(f)(2) of this title, and unless and until the court enters such judgment no person shall be denied the right to vote for failure to comply with such qualification, prerequisite, standard, practice, or procedure: Provided,

That such qualification, prerequisite, standard, practice, or procedure may be enforced without such proceeding if the qualification, prerequisite, standard, practice, or procedure has been submitted by the chief legal officer or other appropriate official of such State or subdivision to the Attorney General and the Attorney General has not interposed an objection within sixty days after such submission, or upon good cause shown, to facilitate an expedited approval within sixty days after such submission, the Attorney General has affirmatively indicated that such objection will not be made. Neither an affirmative indication by the Attorney General that no objection will be made, nor the Attorney General's failure to object, nor a declaratory judgment entered under this section shall bar a subsequent action to enjoin enforcement of such qualification, prerequisite, standard, practice, or procedure. In the event the Attorney General affirmatively indicates that no objection will be made within the sixty-day period following receipt of a submission, the Attorney General may reserve the right to reexamine the submission if additional information comes to his attention during the remainder of the sixty-day period which would otherwise require objection in accordance with this section. Any action under this section shall be heard and determined by a court of three judges in accordance with the provisions of section 2284 of title 28 and any appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court.

Neither an affirmative indication by the Attorney General that no objection will be made, nor the Attorney General's failure to object," for "except that neither the Attorney General's failure to object", and "on account of race or color, or in contravention of the guarantees set forth in section 1973b(f)(2) of this title" for "on account of race or color", and inserted provisions that in the event the Attorney General affirmatively indicates that no objection will be made within the sixty-day period following receipt of a submission, the Attorney General may reserve the right to examine the submission if additional information comes to his attention during the remainder of the sixty-day period which would otherwise require objection in accordance with this section.

1970 - Pub. L. 91-285 inserted "based upon determinations made under the first sentence of section 1973b(b) of this title" after "section 1973b(a) of this title" and "or whenever a State or political subdivision with respect to which the prohibitions set forth in section 1973b(a) of this title based upon determinations made under the second sentence of section 1973b(b) of this title are in effect shall enact or seek to administer any voting qualification or prerequisite to voting, or standard, practice, or procedure with respect to voting different from that in force or effect on November 1, 1968," after "1964,".

SECTION REFERRED TO IN OTHER SECTIONS

This section is referred to in sections 1973b, 1973j, 1973l of this title.

California Democratic Party v. Jones

What States may do:

1. Require parties to use the primary format for selecting their nominees.
2. Require parties to demonstrate "a significant modicum of support" before allowing their candidates a place on the ballot.
3. Require party registration a reasonable period of time before a primary election."

Regulation must be Constitutional:

"We have continually stressed that when States regulate parties' internal process they must act within limits imposed by the Constitution."

Right to Identify Association:

"the Court has recognized that the First Amendment protects 'the freedom to join together in furtherance of common political beliefs' (Tashjina), which 'necessarily presupposes the freedom to identify the people who constitute the association, and to limit the association to those people only' (LaFollette).

(Page 6, paragraph 2 thru 7)

Right not to Associate:

"a corollary of the right to association, is the right not to associate."

Right to Exclude:

“In no area is the political associations’ right to exclude more important than in the process of selecting its nominee. That process often determines the party’s positions on the most significant public policy issues of the day, and even when those positions are predetermined it is the nominee who becomes the party’s ambassador to the general electorate in winning it over to the party’s views.”

Right to Select Candidate in a Primary:

“There is simply no substitute for a party’s selecting its own candidate.”

Right to Include:

“In Sum, Proposition 198 forces petitioners [political parties] to adulterate their candidate-selection process—the ‘basic function’ (Kusper) of a political party. By opening it up to persons wholly unaffiliated with the party.”

Voter’s Freedom of Association

“The voter who feels himself disenfranchised should simply join the party. That may put him to a hard choice, but it is not a state-imposed restriction upon his freedom of association, whereas compelling party members to accept his selection of their nominee is a state-imposed restriction upon theirs.”

Ruled not compelling interests of the State:

1. Producing elected officials who better represent the electorate
2. Expanding candidate debates beyond the scope of partisan concerns
3. The blanket primary is the only way to ensure that disenfranchised persons enjoy the right to an effective vote.
4. Promoting fairness
5. Affording voters greater choice
6. Increasing voter participation
7. Protecting privacy.

JUSTICE KENNEDY'S CONCURRING OPINION

Point of Law:

"I might find this to be a close case if it were simply a way to make elections more fair and open or addressed matters purely of party structure.

The true purpose of this law [right to association], however, is to force a political party to accept a candidate it may not want and, by so doing, to change the party's doctrine position on major issues."

Right to Inclusion:

"A political party might be better served by allowing blanket primaries as a means of nominating candidates with broader appeal. Under the First Amendment's guarantee of speech through free association, however, this is an issue for the party to resolve, not for the State."

Political Doctrine:

"In a free society the State is directed by political doctrine, not the other way around."

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 99-401

CALIFORNIA DEMOCRATIC PARTY, ET AL., PETITIONERS
v. BILL JONES, SECRETARY OF
STATE OF CALIFORNIA, ET AL.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

[June 26, 2000]

JUSTICE SCALIA delivered the opinion of the Court.

This case presents the question whether the State of California may, consistent with the First Amendment to the United States Constitution, use a so-called 'blanket' primary to determine a political party's nominee for the general election.

I

Under California law, a candidate for public office has two routes to gain access to the general ballot for most state and federal elective offices. He may receive the nomination of a qualified political party by winning its primary,¹ see Cal. Elec. Code Ann. §§15451, 13105(a)

¹A party is qualified if it meets one of three conditions: (1) in the last gubernatorial election, one of its statewide candidates polled at least two percent of the statewide vote; (2) the party's membership is at least one percent of the statewide vote at the last preceding gubernatorial election; or (3) voters numbering at least 10 percent of the statewide vote at the last gubernatorial election sign a petition stating that they intend to form a new party. See Cal. Elec. Code Ann. §5100 (West 1996)

Opinion of the Court

(West 1996); or he may file as an independent by obtaining (for a statewide race) the signatures of one percent of the State's electorate or (for other races) the signatures of three percent of the voting population of the area represented by the office in contest, see §8400.

Until 1996, to determine the nominees of qualified parties California held what is known as a "closed" partisan primary, in which only persons who are members of the political party—i.e., who have declared affiliation with that party when they register to vote, see Cal. Elec. Code Ann. §§2150, 2151 (West 1996 and Supp. 2000)—can vote on its nominee, see Cal. Elec. Code Ann. §2151 (West 1996). In 1996 the citizens of California adopted by initiative Proposition 198. Promoted largely as a measure that would "weaken" party "hard-liners" and ease the way for "moderate problem-solvers," App. 89–90 (reproducing ballot pamphlet distributed to voters), Proposition 198 changed California's partisan primary from a closed primary to a blanket primary. Under the new system, "[a]ll persons entitled to vote, including those not affiliated with any political party, shall have the right to vote . . . for any candidate regardless of the candidate's political affiliation." Cal. Elec. Code Ann. §2001 (West Supp. 2000); see also §2151. Whereas under the closed primary each voter received a ballot limited to candidates of his own party, as a result of Proposition 198 each voter's primary ballot now lists every candidate regardless of party affiliation and allows the voter to choose freely among them. It remains the case, however, that the candidate of each party who wins the greatest number of votes "is the nominee of that party at the ensuing general election." Cal. Elec. Code Ann. §15451 (West 1996).²

and Supp. 2000).

²California's new blanket primary system does not apply directly to

Opinion of the Court

Petitioners in this case are four political parties—the California Democratic Party, the California Republican Party, the Libertarian Party of California, and the Peace and Freedom Party—each of which has a rule prohibiting persons not members of the party from voting in the party's primary.³ Petitioners brought suit in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of California against respondent California Secretary of State, alleging, inter alia, that California's blanket primary violated their First Amendment rights of association, and seeking declaratory and injunctive relief. The group Californians for an Open Primary, also respondent, intervened as a party defendant. The District Court recognized that the new law would inject into each party's primary substantial numbers of voters unaffiliated with the party. 984 F. Supp. 1288, 1298–1299 (1997). It further recognized that this might result in selection of a nominee different from the one party members would select, or at the least cause the same nominee to commit himself to different positions. Id., at 1299. Nevertheless, the District Court held that the burden on petitioners' rights of association was not a severe one, and was justified by state interests ultimately reducing to this: 'enhanc[ing] the democratic the apportionment of presidential delegates. See Cal. Elec. Code Ann. §§15151, 15375, 15500 (West Supp. 2000). Instead, the State tabulates the presidential primary in two ways: according to the number of votes each candidate received from the entire voter pool and according to the amount each received from members of his own party. The national parties may then use the latter figure to apportion delegates. Nor does it apply to the election of political party central or district committee members; only party members may vote in these elections. See Cal. Elec. Code Ann. §2151 (West 1996 and Supp. 2000).

³Each of the four parties was qualified under California law when they filed this suit. Since that time, the Peace and Freedom Party has apparently lost its qualified status. See Brief for Petitioners 16 (citing Child of the 60s Slips, Los Angeles Times, Feb. 17, 1999, p. B-6).

nature of the election process and the representativeness of elected officials." Id., at 1301. The Ninth Circuit, adopting the District Court's opinion as its own, affirmed. 169 F. 3d 646 (1999). We granted certiorari. 528 U. S. 1133 (2000).

Respondents rest their defense of the blanket primary upon the proposition that primaries play an integral role in citizens' selection of public officials. As a consequence, they contend, primaries are public rather than private proceedings, and the States may and must play a role in ensuring that they serve the public interest. Proposition 198, respondents conclude, is simply a rather pedestrian example of a State's regulating its system of elections.

We have recognized, of course, that States have a major role to play in structuring and monitoring the election process, including primaries. See Burdick v. Takushi, 504 U. S. 428, 433 (1992); Tashjian v. Republican Party of Conn., 479 U. S. 208, 217 (1986). We have considered it "too plain for argument," for example, that a State may require parties to use the primary format for selecting their nominees, in order to assure that intraparty competition is resolved in a democratic fashion. American Party of Tex. v. White, 415 U. S. 767, 781 (1974); see also Tashjian, supra, at 237 (SCALIA, J., dissenting). Similarly, in order to avoid burdening the general election ballot with frivolous candidacies, a State may require parties to demonstrate "a significant modicum of support" before allowing their candidates a place on that ballot. See Jenness v. Fortson, 403 U. S. 431, 442 (1971). Finally, in order to prevent "party raiding"—a process in which dedicated members of one party formally switch to another party to alter the outcome of that party's primary—a State may require party registration a reasonable period of time before a primary election. See Rosario v. Rockefeller, 410

U. S. 752 (1973). Cf. Kusper v. Pontikes, 414 U. S. 51 (1973) (23-month waiting period unreasonable).

What we have not held, however, is that the processes by which political parties select their nominees are, as respondents would have it, wholly public affairs that States may regulate freely.⁴ To the contrary, we have continually stressed that when States regulate parties' internal processes they must act within limits imposed by the Constitution. See, e.g., Eu v. San Francisco County Democratic Central Comm., 489 U. S. 214 (1989); Democratic Party of United States v. Wisconsin ex rel. La Follette, 450 U. S. 107 (1981). In this regard, respondents' reliance on Smith v. Allwright, 321 U. S. 649 (1944), and Terry v. Adams, 345 U. S. 461 (1953), is misplaced. In Allwright, we invalidated the Texas Democratic Party's rule limiting participation in its primary to whites; in Terry, we invalidated the same rule promulgated by the Jaybird Democratic Association, a "self-governing voluntary club," 345 U. S., at 463. These cases held only that, when a State prescribes an election process that gives a special role to political parties, it "endorses, adopts and enforces the discrimination against Negroes," that the parties (or, in the case of the Jaybird Democratic Association, organizations that are "part and parcel" of the parties, see id., at 482 (Clark, J., concurring)) bring into the process— so that the parties' discriminatory action becomes state action under the Fifteenth Amendment. Allwright, supra, at ⁴On this point, the dissent shares respondents' view, at least where the selection process is a state-run election. The right not to associate, it says, "is simply inapplicable to participation in a state election." "[A]n election, unlike a convention or caucus, is a public affair." Post, at 6 (opinion of STEVENS, J.). Of course it is, but when the election determines a party's nominee it is a party affair as well, and, as the cases to be discussed in text demonstrate, the constitutional rights of those composing the party cannot be disregarded.

664; see also Terry, 345 U. S., at 484 (Clark, J., concurring); id., at 469 (opinion of Black, J.). They do not stand for the proposition that party affairs are public affairs, free of First Amendment protections— and our later holdings make that entirely clear.⁵ See, e.g., Tashjian, supra.

Representative democracy in any populous unit of governance is unimaginable without the ability of citizens to band together in promoting among the electorate candidates who espouse their political views. The formation of national political parties was almost concurrent with the formation of the Republic itself. See Cunningham, The Jeffersonian Republican Party, in 1 History of U. S. Political Parties 239, 241 (A. Schlesinger ed., 1973). Consistent with this tradition, the Court has recognized that the First Amendment protects "the freedom to join together in furtherance of common political beliefs," Tashjian, supra, at 214–215, which "necessarily presupposes the freedom to ⁵The dissent is therefore wrong to conclude that Allwright and Terry demonstrate that "[t]he protections that the First Amendment affords to the internal processes of a political party do not encompass a right to exclude nonmembers from voting in a state-required, state-financed primary election." Post, at 6 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Those cases simply prevent exclusion that violates some independent constitutional proscription. The closest the dissent comes to identifying such a proscription in this case is its reference to "the First Amendment associational interests" of citizens to participate in the primary of a party to which they do not belong, and the "fundamental right" of citizens "to cast a meaningful vote for the candidate of their choice." Post, at 13. As to the latter: Selecting a candidate is quite different from voting for the candidate of one's choice. If the "fundamental right" to cast a meaningful vote were really at issue in this context, Proposition 198 would be not only constitutionally permissible but constitutionally required, which no one believes. As for the associational "interest" in selecting the candidate of a group to which one does not belong, that falls far short of a constitutional right, if indeed it can even fairly be characterized as an interest. It has been described in our cases as a "desire"— and rejected as a basis for disregarding the First Amendment right to exclude. See infra, at 16.

Opinion of the Court

identify the people who constitute the association, and to limit the association to those people only," La Follette, 450 U. S., at 122. That is to say, a corollary of the right to associate is the right not to associate. "Freedom of association would prove an empty guarantee if associations could not limit control over their decisions to those who share the interests and persuasions that underlie the associations' being." Id., at 122, n. 22 (quoting L. Tribe, American Constitutional Law 791 (1978)). See also Roberts v. United States Jaycees, 468 U. S. 609, 623 (1984).

In no area is the political associations' right to exclude more important than in the process of selecting its nominee. That process often determines the party's positions on the most significant public policy issues of the day, and even when those positions are predetermined it is the nominee who becomes the party's ambassador to the general electorate in winning it over to the party's views. See Timmons v. Twin Cities Area New Party, 520 U. S. 351, 372 (1997) (STEVENS, J., dissenting) ("But a party's choice of a candidate is the most effective way in which that party can communicate to the voters what the party represents and, thereby, attract voter interest and support"). Some political parties— such as President Theodore Roosevelt's Bull Moose Party, the La Follette Progressives of 1924, the Henry Wallace Progressives of 1948, and the George Wallace American Independent Party of 1968— are virtually inseparable from their nominees (and tend not to outlast them). See generally E. Kruschke, Encyclopedia of Third Parties in the United States (1991).

Unsurprisingly, our cases vigorously affirm the special place the First Amendment reserves for, and the special protection it accords, the process by which a political party "select[s] a standard bearer who best represents the party's ideologies and preferences." Eu, supra, at 224 (internal quotation marks omitted). The moment of choosing the party's nominee, we have said, is "the crucial juncture at which the appeal to common principles may be translated into concerted action, and hence to political power in the community." Tashjian, 479 U. S., at 216; see also id., at 235-236 (SCALIA, J., dissenting) ("The ability of the members of the Republican Party to select their own candidate . . . unquestionably implicates an associational freedom"); Timmons, 520 U. S., at 359 ("[T]he New Party, and not someone else, has the right to select the New Party's standard bearer" (internal quotation marks omitted)); id., at 371 (STEVENS, J., dissenting) ("The members of a recognized political party unquestionably have a constitutional right to select their nominees for public office").

In La Follette, the State of Wisconsin conducted an open presidential preference primary.⁶ Although the voters did not select the delegates to the Democratic Party's National Convention directly—they were chosen later at caucuses of party members—Wisconsin law required these delegates to vote in accord with the primary results. Thus allowing nonparty members to participate in the selection of the party's nominee conflicted with the Democratic Party's rules. We held that, whatever the strength of the state interests supporting the open primary itself, they could not justify this "substantial intrusion into the associational freedom of members of the National Party."⁷ 450 ⁶An open primary differs from a blanket primary in that, although as in the blanket primary any person, regardless of party affiliation, may vote for a party's nominee, his choice is limited to that party's nominees for all offices. He may not, for example, support a Republican nominee for Governor and a Democratic nominee for attorney general.

⁷The dissent, in attempting to fashion its new rule—that the right not to associate does not exist with respect to primary elections, see post, at 6—rewrites Democratic Party of United States v. Wisconsin ex rel. La Follette, 450 U. S. 107 (1981), to stand merely for the proposition that a political party has a First Amendment right to "defin[e] the organization and composition of its governing units," post, at 3. In fact, however, the state-imposed burden at issue in La Follette was the intrusion by those

California's blanket primary violates the principles set forth in these cases. Proposition 198 forces political parties to associate with— to have their nominees, and hence their positions, determined by— those who, at best, have refused to affiliate with the party, and, at worst, have expressly affiliated with a rival. In this respect, it is qualitatively different from a closed primary. Under that system, even when it is made quite easy for a voter to with adverse political principles" upon the selection of the party's nominee (in that case its presidential nominee). 450 U. S., at 122 (quoting Ray v. Blair, 343 U. S. 154, 221–222 (1952) (per curiam)). See also 450 U. S., at 125 (comparing asserted state interests with burden created by the 'imposition of voting requirements upon' delegates). Of course La Follette involved the burden a state regulation imposed on a national party, but that factor affected only the weight of the State's interest, and had no bearing upon the existence vel non of a party's First Amendment right to exclude. 450 U. S., at 121–122, 125–126. Although JUSTICE STEVENS now considers this interpretation of La Follette "specious"; see post, at 4, n. 3, he once subscribed to it himself. His dissent from the order dismissing the appeals in Bellotti v. Connolly described La Follette thusly: "There this Court rejected Wisconsin's requirement that delegates to the party's Presidential nominating convention, selected in a primary open to nonparty voters, must cast their convention votes in accordance with the primary election results. In our view, the interests advanced by the State . . . did not justify its substantial intrusion into the associational freedom of members of the National Party. . . . Wisconsin required convention delegates to cast their votes for candidates who might have drawn their support from nonparty members. The results of the party's decisionmaking process might thereby have been distorted." 460 U. S. 1057, 1062–1063 (1983) (emphasis in original).

Not only does the dissent's principle of no right to exclude conflict with our precedents, but it also leads to nonsensical results. In Tashjian v. Republican Party of Conn., 479 U. S. 208 (1986), we held that the First Amendment protects a party's right to invite independents to participate in the primary. Combining Tashjian with the dissent's rule affirms a party's constitutional right to allow outsiders to select its candidates, but denies a party's constitutional right to reserve candidate selection to its own members. The First Amendment would thus guarantee a party's right to lose its identity, but not to preserve it.

Opinion of the Court

change his party affiliation the day of the primary, and thus, in some sense, to "cross over," at least he must formally become a member of the party; and once he does so, he is limited to voting for candidates of that party.⁸

The evidence in this case demonstrates that under California's blanket primary system, the prospect of having a party's nominee determined by adherents of an opposing party is far from remote—indeed, it is a clear and present danger. For example, in one 1997 survey of California voters 37 percent of Republicans said that they planned to vote in the 1998 Democratic gubernatorial primary, and 20 percent of Democrats said they planned to vote in the 1998 Republican United States Senate primary. Tr. 668–669. Those figures are comparable to the results of studies in other States with blanket primaries. One expert testified, for example, that in Washington the number of voters crossing over from one party to another can rise to as high as 25 percent, id., at 511, and another that only 25 to 33 percent of all Washington voters limit themselves to candidates of one party throughout the ballot, App. 136. The impact of voting by nonparty members is much greater upon minor parties, such as the Libertarian Party and the Peace and Freedom Party. In the first primaries these parties conducted following California's implementation of Proposition 198, the total votes ⁸In this sense, the blanket primary also may be constitutionally distinct from the open primary, see n. 6, supra, in which the voter is limited to one party's ballot. See La Follette, supra, at 130, n. 2 (Powell, J., dissenting) ('[T]he act of voting in the Democratic primary fairly can be described as an act of affiliation with the Democratic Party. . . . The situation might be different in those States with blanket primaries—i.e., those where voters are allowed to participate in the primaries of more than one party on a single occasion, selecting the primary they wish to vote in with respect to each individual elective office'). This case does not require us to determine the constitutionality of open primaries.

Opinion of the Court

cast for party candidates in some races was more than double the total number of registered party members. California Secretary of State, Statement of Vote, Primary Election, June 2, 1998, http://primary98.ss.ca.gov/Final/Official_Results.htm; California Secretary of State, Report of Registration, May 1998, http://www.ss.ca.gov/elections/elections_u.htm.

The record also supports the obvious proposition that these substantial numbers of voters who help select the nominees of parties they have chosen not to join often have policy views that diverge from those of the party faithful. The 1997 survey of California voters revealed significantly different policy preferences between party members and primary voters who "crossed over" from another party. Pl. Exh. 8 (Addendum to Mervin Field Report). One expert went so far as to describe it as "inevitable [under Proposition 198] that parties will be forced in some circumstances to give their official designation to a candidate who's not preferred by a majority or even plurality of party members." Tr. 421 (expert testimony of Bruce Cain).

In concluding that the burden Proposition 198 imposes on petitioners' rights of association is not severe, the Ninth Circuit cited testimony that the prospect of malicious crossover voting, or raiding, is slight, and that even though the numbers of "benevolent" crossover voters were significant, they would be determinative in only a small number of races.⁹ 169 F. 3d, at 656–657. But a single election in which the party nominee is selected by non-party members could be enough to destroy the party. In the 1860 presidential election, if opponents of the fledgling ⁹The Ninth Circuit defined a crossover voter as one "who votes for a candidate of a party in which the voter is not registered. Thus, the cross-over voter could be an independent voter or one who is registered to a competing political party." 169 F. 3d 646, 656 (1999).

Opinion of the Court

Republican Party had been able to cause its nomination of a pro-slavery candidate in place of Abraham Lincoln, the coalition of intraparty factions forming behind him likely would have disintegrated, endangering the party's survival and thwarting its effort to fill the vacuum left by the dissolution of the Whigs. See generally, 1 Political Parties & Elections in the United States: An Encyclopedia 398–408, 587 (L. Maisel ed. 1991). Ordinarily, however, being saddled with an unwanted, and possibly antithetical, nominee would not destroy the party but severely transform it. “[R]egulating the identity of the parties’ leaders,” we have said, “may . . . color the parties’ message and interfere with the parties’ decisions as to the best means to promote that message.” Ez, 489 U. S., at 231, n. 21.

In any event, the deleterious effects of Proposition 198 are not limited to altering the identity of the nominee. Even when the person favored by a majority of the party members prevails, he will have prevailed by taking somewhat different positions— and, should he be elected, will continue to take somewhat different positions in order to be renominated. As respondents’ own expert concluded, “[t]he policy positions of Members of Congress elected from blanket primary states are . . . more moderate, both in an absolute sense and relative to the other party, and so are more reflective of the preferences of the mass of voters at the center of the ideological spectrum.” App. 109 (expert report of Elisabeth R. Gerber). It is unnecessary to cumulate evidence of this phenomenon, since, after all, the whole purpose of Proposition 198 was to favor nominees with “moderate” positions. Id., at 89. It encourages candidates— and officeholders who hope to be renominated— to curry favor with persons whose views are more “centrist” than those of the party base. In effect, Proposition 198 has simply moved the general election one step earlier in the process, at the expense of the parties’ ability to perform the “basic function” of choosing their own leaders. Kusper, 414 U. S., at 58.

Opinion of the Court

Nor can we accept the Court of Appeals' contention that the burden imposed by Proposition 198 is minor because petitioners are free to endorse and financially support the candidate of their choice in the primary. 169 F. 3d, at 659. The ability of the party leadership to endorse a candidate is simply no substitute for the party members' ability to choose their own nominee. In Eu, we recognized that party-leadership endorsements are not always effective—for instance, in New York's 1982 gubernatorial primary, Edward Koch, the Democratic Party leadership's choice, lost out to Mario Cuomo. 489 U. S., at 228, n. 13. One study has concluded, moreover, that even when the leadership-endorsed candidate has won, the effect of the endorsement has been negligible. Ibid. (citing App. in Eu v. San Francisco County Democratic Central Comm., O. T. 1988, No. 87-1269, pp. 97-98). New York's was a closed primary; one would expect leadership endorsement to be even less effective in a blanket primary, where many of the voters are unconnected not only to the party leadership but even to the party itself. In any event, the ability of the party leadership to endorse a candidate does not assist the party rank and file, who may not themselves agree with the party leadership, but do not want the party's choice decided by outsiders.

We are similarly unconvinced by respondents' claim that the burden is not severe because Proposition 198 does not limit the parties from engaging fully in other traditional party behavior, such as ensuring orderly internal party governance, maintaining party discipline in the legislature, and conducting campaigns. The accuracy of this assertion is highly questionable, at least as to the first two activities. That party nominees will be equally observant of internal party procedures and equally respectful of party discipline when their nomination depends on the general electorate rather than on the party faithful seems to us improbable. Respondents themselves suggest as much when they assert that the blanket primary system "will lead to the election of more representative problem solvers' who are less beholden to party officials." Brief for Respondents 41 (emphasis added) (quoting 169 F. 3d, at 661). In the end, however, the effect of Proposition 198 on these other activities is beside the point. We have consistently refused to overlook an unconstitutional restriction upon some First Amendment activity simply because it leaves other First Amendment activity unimpaired. See, e.g., Spence v. Washington, 418 U. S. 405, 411, n. 4 (1974) (per curiam); Kusper, 414 U. S., at 58. There is simply no substitute for a party's selecting its own candidates.

In sum, Proposition 198 forces petitioners to adulterate their candidate-selection process— the "basic function of a political party," ibid.— by opening it up to persons wholly unaffiliated with the party. Such forced association has the likely outcome— indeed, in this case the intended outcome— of changing the parties' message. We can think of no heavier burden on a political party's associational freedom. Proposition 198 is therefore unconstitutional unless it is narrowly tailored to serve a compelling state interest. See Timmons, 520 U. S., at 358 ("Regulations imposing severe burdens on [parties'] rights must be narrowly tailored and advance a compelling state interest"). It is to that question which we now turn.

III

Respondents proffer seven state interests they claim are compelling. Two of them— producing elected officials who better represent the electorate and expanding candidate debate beyond the scope of partisan concerns— are simply circumlocution for producing nominees and nominee positions other than those the parties would choose if left to their own devices. Indeed, respondents admit as much. For instance, in substantiating their interest in "represe n-tativeness," respondents point to the fact that "officials elected under blanket primaries stand closer to the median policy positions of their districts" than do those selected only by party members. Brief for Respondents 40. And in explaining their desire to increase debate, respondents claim that a blanket primary forces parties to reconsider long standing positions since it "compels [their] candidates to appeal to a larger segment of the electorate." Id., at 46. Both of these supposed interests, therefore, reduce to nothing more than a stark repudiation of freedom of political association: Parties should not be free to select their own nominees because those nominees, and the positions taken by those nominees, will not be congenial to the majority.

We have recognized the inadmissibility of this sort of "interest" before. In Hurley v. Irish-American Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Group of Boston, Inc., 515 U. S. 557 (1995), the South Boston Allied War Veterans Council refused to allow an organization of openly gay, lesbian, and bisexual persons (GLIB) to participate in the council's annual St. Patrick's Day parade. GLIB sued the council under Massachusetts' public accommodation law, claiming that the council impermissibly denied them access on account of their sexual orientation. After noting that parades are expressive endeavors, we rejected GLIB's contention that Massachusetts' public accommodation law overrode the council's right to choose the content of its own message. Applying the law in such circumstances, we held, made apparent that its "object [was] simply to require speakers to modify the content of their expression to whatever extent beneficiaries of the law choose to alter it with messages of their own. . . . [I]n the absence of some further, legitimate end, this object is merely to allow exactly what the general rule of speakers' autonomy forbids." Id., at 578.

Respondents' third asserted compelling interest is that the blanket primary is the only way to ensure that disenfranchised persons enjoy the right to an effective vote. By "disenfranchised," respondents do not mean those who cannot vote; they mean simply independents and members of the minority party in "safe" districts. These persons are disenfranchised, according to respondents, because under a closed primary they are unable to participate in what amounts to the determinative election—the majority party's primary; the only way to ensure they have an "effective" vote is to force the party to open its primary to them. This also appears to be nothing more than reformulation of an asserted state interest we have already rejected—recharacterizing nonparty members' keen desire to participate in selection of the party's nominee as "disenfranchisement" if that desire is not fulfilled. We have said, however, that a nonparty member's desire to participate in the party's affairs is overborne by the countervailing and legitimate right of the party to determine its own membership qualifications." Tashjian, 479 U. S., at 215–216, n. 6 (citing Rosario v. Rockefeller, 410 U. S. 752 (1973), and Nader v. Schaffer, 417 F. Supp. 837 (Conn.), summarily aff'd, 429 U. S. 989 (1976)). The voter's desire to participate does not become more weighty simply because the State supports it. Moreover, even if it were accurate to describe the plight of the non-party-member in a safe district as "disenfranchisement," Proposition 198 is not needed to solve the problem. The voter who feels himself disenfranchised should simply join the party. That may put him to a hard choice, but it is not a state-imposed restriction upon his freedom of association, whereas compelling party members to accept his selection of their nominee is a state-imposed restriction upon theirs.

Respondents' remaining four asserted state interests—promoting fairness, affording voters greater choice, increasing voter participation, and protecting privacy—are not, like the others, automatically out of the running; but neither are they, in the circumstances of this case, compelling. That determination is not to be made in the abstract, by asking whether fairness, privacy, etc., are highly significant values; but rather by asking whether the aspect of fairness, privacy, etc., addressed by the law at issue is highly significant. And for all four of these asserted interests, we find it not to be.

The aspect of fairness addressed by Proposition 198 is presumably the supposed inequity of not permitting nonparty members in "safe" districts to determine the party nominee. If that is unfair at all (rather than merely a consequence of the eminently democratic principle that—except where constitutional imperatives intervene—the majority rules), it seems to us less unfair than permitting nonparty members to hijack the party. As for affording voters greater choice, it is obvious that the net effect of this scheme—indeed, its avowed purpose—is to reduce the scope of choice, by assuring a range of candidates who are all more "centrist." This may well be described as broadening the range of choices avored by the majority—but that is hardly a compelling state interest, if indeed it is even a legitimate one. The interest in increasing voter participation is just a variation on the same theme (more choices favored by the majority will produce more voters), and suffers from the same defect. As for the protection of privacy: The specific privacy interest at issue is not the confidentiality of medical records or personal finances, but confidentiality of one's party affiliation. Even if (as seems unlikely) a scheme for administering a closed primary could not be devised in which the voter's declaration of party affiliation would not be public information, we do not think that the State's interest in assuring the privacy of this piece of information in all cases can conceivably be considered a "compelling" one. If such information were generally so sacrosanct, federal statutes would not require a declaration of party affiliation as a condition of appointment to certain offices. See, e.g., 47 U. S. C. §154(b)(5) ([M]aximum number of commissioners [of the Federal Communications Commission] who may be members of the same political party shall be a number equal to the least number of commissioners which constitutes a majority of the full membership of the Commission"); 47 U. S. C. §396(c)(1) (1994 ed., Supp. III) (no more than five members of Board of Directors of Corporation for Public Broadcasting may be of same party); 42 U. S. C. §2000e-4(a) (no more than three members of Equal Employment Opportunity Commission may be of same party).

Finally, we may observe that even if all these state interests were compelling ones, Proposition 198 is not a narrowly tailored means of furthering them. Respondents could protect them all by resorting to a nonpartisan blanket primary. Generally speaking, under such a system, the State determines what qualifications it requires for a candidate to have a place on the primary ballot—which may include nomination by established parties and voter-petition requirements for independent candidates. Each voter, regardless of party affiliation, may then vote for any candidate, and the top two vote getters (or however many the State prescribes) then move on to the general election. This system has all the characteristics of the partisan blanket primary, save the constitutionally crucial one: Primary voters are not choosing a party's nominee. Under a nonpartisan blanket primary, a State may ensure more choice, greater participation, increased "privacy," and a sense of "fairness"—all without severely burdening a political party's First Amendment right of association.

Respondents' legitimate state interests and petitioners' First Amendment rights are not inherently incompatible. To the extent they are in this case, the State of California has made them so by forcing political parties to associate with those who do not share their beliefs. And it has done this at the "crucial juncture" at which party members traditionally find their collective voice and select their spokesman. Tashjian, 479 U. S., at 216. The burden Proposition 198 places on petitioners' rights of political association is both severe and unnecessary. The judgment for the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit is reversed.

Opinion of the Court

It is so ordered.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 99-401

CALIFORNIA DEMOCRATIC PARTY, ET AL., PETITIONERS
v. BILL JONES, SECRETARY OF
STATE OF CALIFORNIA, ET AL.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF
APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

[June 26, 2000]

JUSTICE KENNEDY, concurring.

Proposition 198, the product of a statewide popular initiative, is a strong and recent expression of the will of California's electorate. It is designed, in part, to further the object of widening the base of voter participation in California elections. Until a few weeks or even days before an election, many voters pay little attention to campaigns and even less to the details of party politics. Fewer still participate in the direction and control of party affairs, for most voters consider the internal dynamics of party organization remote, partisan, and of slight interest. Under these conditions voters tend to become disinterested, and so they refrain from voting altogether. To correct this, California seeks to make primary voting more responsive to the views and preferences of the electorate as a whole. The results of California's blanket primary system may demonstrate the efficacy of its solution, for there appears to have been a substantial increase in voter interest and voter participation. See Brief for Respondents 45-46.

Encouraging citizens to vote is a legitimate, indeed essential, state objective; for the constitutional order must be preserved by a strong, participatory democratic process. In short, there is much to be said in favor of California's law; and I might find this to be a close case if it were simply a way to make elections more fair and open or addressed matters purely of party structure.

The true purpose of this law, however, is to force a political party to accept a candidate it may not want and, by so doing, to change the party's doctrinal position on major issues. Ante, at 14. From the outset the State has been fair and candid to admit that doctrinal change is the intended operation and effect of its law. See, e.g., Brief for Respondents 40, 46. It may be that organized parties, controlled— in fact or perception— by activists seeking to promote their self-interest rather than enhance the party's long term support, are shortsighted and insensitive to the views of even their own members. A political party might be better served by allowing blanket primaries as a means of nominating candidates with broader appeal. Under the First Amendment's guarantee of speech through free association, however, this is an issue for the party to resolve, not for the State. Political parties advance a shared political belief, but to do so they often must speak through their candidates. When the State seeks to direct changes in a political party's philosophy by forcing upon it unwanted candidates and wresting the choice between moderation and partisanship away from the party itself, the State's incursion on the party's associational freedom is subject to careful scrutiny under the First Amendment. For these reasons I agree with the Court's opinion.

I add this separate concurrence to say that Proposition 198 is doubtful for a further reason. In justification of its statute California tells us a political party has the means at hand to protect its associational freedoms. The party, California contends, can simply use its funds and resources to support the candidate of its choice, thus defending its doctrinal positions by advising the voters of its own preference. To begin with, this does not meet the parties' First Amendment objection, as the Court well explains. Ante, at 13. The important additional point, however, is that, by reason of the Court's denial of First Amendment protections to a political party's spending of its own funds and resources in cooperation with its preferred candidate, see Colorado Republican Federal Campaign Comm. v. Federal Election Comm., 518 U. S. 604 (1996), the Federal Government or the State has the power to prevent the party from using the very remedy California now offers up to defend its law.

Federal campaign finance laws place strict limits on the manner and amount of speech parties may undertake in aid of candidates. Of particular relevance are limits on coordinated party expenditures, which the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 deems to be contributions subject to specific monetary restrictions. See 90 Stat. 488, 2 U. S. C. §441a(a)(7)(B)(i) ('[E]xpenditures made by any person in cooperation, consultation, or concert, with, or at the request or suggestion of, a candidate, his authorized political committees, or their agents, shall be considered to be a contribution to such candidate'). Though we invalidated limits on independent party expenditures in Colorado Republican, the principal opinion did not question federal limits placed on coordinated expenditures. See 518 U. S., at 624–625 (opinion of BREYER, J.). Two Justices in dissent said that "all money spent by a political party to secure the election of its candidate" would constitute coordinated expenditures and would have upheld the statute as applied in that case. See id., at 648 (opinion of STEVENS, J.). Thus, five Justices of the Court subscribe to the position that Congress or a State may limit the amount a political party spends in direct collaboration with its preferred candidate for elected office.

In my view, as stated in both Colorado Republican, supra, at 626 (opinion concurring in judgment and dissenting in part), and in Nixon v. Shrink Missouri Government PAC, 528 U. S. ____, __ (2000) (dissenting opinion), these recent cases deprive political parties of their First Amendment rights. Our constitutional tradition is one in which political parties and their candidates make common cause in the exercise of political speech, which is subject to First Amendment protection. There is a practical identity of interests between parties and their candidates during an election. Our unfortunate decisions remit the political party to use of indirect or covert speech to support its preferred candidate, hardly a result consistent with free thought and expression. It is a perversion of the First Amendment to force a political party to warp honest, straightforward speech, exemplified by its vigorous and open support of its favored candidate, into the covert speech of soft money and issue advocacy so that it may escape burdensome spending restrictions. In a regime where campaign spending cannot otherwise be limited—the structure this Court created on its own in Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U. S. 1 (1976) (per curiam)—restricting the amounts a political party may spend in collaboration with its own candidate is a violation of the political party's First Amendment rights.

Were the views of those who would uphold both California's blanket primary system and limitations on coordinated party expenditures to become prevailing law, the State could control political parties at two vital points in the election process. First, it could mandate a blanket primary to weaken the party's ability to defend and maintain its doctrinal positions by allowing nonparty members to vote in the primary. Second, it could impose severe restrictions on the amount of funds and resources the party could spend in efforts to counteract the State's doctrinal intervention. In other words, the First Amendment injury done by the Court's ruling in Colorado Republican would be compounded were California to prevail in the instant case.

When the State seeks to regulate a political party's nomination process as a means to shape and control political doctrine and the scope of political choice, the First Amendment gives substantial protection to the party from the manipulation. In a free society the State is directed by political doctrine, not the other way around. With these observations, I join the opinion of the Court.

STEVENS, J., dissenting

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 99-401

CALIFORNIA DEMOCRATIC PARTY, ET AL., PETITIONERS v. BILL JONES, SECRETARY OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA, ET AL.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

[June 26, 2000]

JUSTICE STEVENS, with whom JUSTICE GINSBURG joins as to Part I, dissenting.

Today the Court construes the First Amendment as a limitation on a State's power to broaden voter participation in elections conducted by the State. The Court's holding is novel and, in my judgment, plainly wrong. I am convinced that California's adoption of a blanket primary pursuant to Proposition 198 does not violate the First Amendment, and that its use in primary elections for state offices is therefore valid. The application of Proposition 198 to elections for United States Senators and Representatives, however, raises a more difficult question under the Elections Clause of the United States Constitution, Art. I, §4, cl. 1. I shall first explain my disagreement with the Court's resolution of the First Amendment issue and then comment on the Elections Clause issue.

I

A State's power to determine how its officials are to be elected is a quintessential attribute of sovereignty. This case is about the State of California's power to decide who may vote in an election conducted, and paid for, by the

STEVENS, J., dissenting

State.¹ The United States Constitution imposes constraints on the States' power to limit access to the polls, but we have never before held or suggested that it imposes any constraints on States' power to authorize additional citizens to participate in any state election for a state office. In my view, principles of federalism require us to respect the policy choice made by the States' voters in approving Proposition 198.

The blanket primary system instituted by Proposition 198 does not abridge "the ability of citizens to band together in promoting among the electorate candidates who espouse their political views." Ante, at 6.² The Court's contrary conclusion rests on the premise that a political ¹See Tashjian v. Republican Party of Conn., 479 U. S. 208, 217 (1986) (observing that the United States Constitution grants States a broad power to prescribe the manner of elections for certain federal offices, which power is matched by state control over the election process for state offices). In California, the Secretary of State administers the provisions of the State Elections Code and has some supervisory authority over county election officers. Cal. Govt. Code Ann. §12172.5 (West 1992 and Supp. 2000). Primary and other elections are administered and paid for primarily by county governments. Cal. Elec. Code Ann. §§13000-13001 (West 1996 and Supp. 2000). Anecdotal evidence suggests that each statewide election in California (whether primary or general) costs governmental units between $45 million and $50 million.

²Prominent members of the founding generation would have disagreed with the Court's suggestion that representative democracy is "unimaginable" without political parties, ante, at 6, though their anti-party thought ultimately proved to be inconsistent with their partisan actions. See, e.g., R. Hofstadter, The Idea of a Party System 2-3 (1969) (noting that "the creators of the first American party system on both sides, Federalists and Republicans, were men who looked upon parties as sores on the body politic"). At best, some members of that generation viewed parties as an unavoidable product of a free state that were an evil to be endured, though most viewed them as an evil to be abolished or suppressed. Id., at 16-17, 24. Indeed, parties ranked high on the list of evils that the Constitution was designed to check. Id., at 53; see The Federalist No. 10 (J. Madison).

party's freedom of expressive association includes a "right not to associate," which in turn includes a right to exclude voters unaffiliated with the party from participating in the selection of that party's nominee in a primary election. Ante, at 6–7. In drawing this conclusion, however, the Court blurs two distinctions that are critical: (1) the distinction between a private organization's right to define itself and its messages, on the one hand, and the State's right to define the obligations of citizens and organizations performing public functions, on the other; and (2) the distinction between laws that abridge participation in the political process and those that encourage such participation.

When a political party defines the organization and composition of its governing units, when it decides what candidates to endorse, and when it decides whether and how to communicate those endorsements to the public, it is engaged in the kind of private expressive associational activity that the First Amendment protects. Timmons v. Twin Cities Area New Party, 520 U. S. 351, 354–355, n. 4, 359 (1997) (recognizing party's right to select its own standard-bearer in context of minor party that selected its candidate through means other than a primary); id., at 371 (STEVENS, J., dissenting); Eu v. San Francisco County Democratic Central Comm., 489 U. S. 214 (1989); Democratic Party of United States v. Wisconsin ex rel. La Follette, 450 U. S. 107, 124 (1981) ("A political party's choice among the various ways of determining the makeup of a State's delegation to the party's national convention is protected by the Constitution"); Cousins v. Wigoda, 419 U. S. 477, 491 (1975) ("Illinois' interest in protecting the integrity of its electoral process cannot be deemed compelling in the context of the selection of delegates to the National Party Con- vention" (emphasis added)).³ A political party could, if a majority of its members chose to do so, adopt a platform advocating white supremacy and opposing the election of any non-Caucasians. Indeed, it could decide to use its funds and oratorical skills to support only those candidates who were loyal to its racist views. Moreover, if a State permitted ³The Court's disagreement with this interpretation of La Follette is specious. Ante, at 8-9, n. 7 (claiming that state-imposed burden actually at issue in La Follette was intrusion of those with adverse political principles into party's primary). A more accurate characterization of the nature of La Follette's reasoning is provided by Justice Powell: "In analyzing the burden imposed on associational freedoms in this case, the Court treats the Wisconsin law as the equivalent of one regulating delegate selection, and, relying on Cousins v. Wigoda, 419 U. S. 477 (1975), concludes that any interference with the National Party's accepted delegate-selection procedures impinges on constitutionally protected rights." Democratic Party of United States v. Wisconsin ex rel. La Follette, 450 U. S. 107, 128 (1981) (dissenting opinion). Indeed, the La Follette Court went out of its way to characterize the Wisconsin law in this manner in order to avoid casting doubt on the constitutionality of open primaries. Id., at 121 (majority opinion) (noting that the issue was not whether an open primary was constitutional but "whether the State may compel the National Party to seat a delegation chosen in a way that violates the rules of the Party"). The fact that the La Follette Court also characterizes the Wisconsin law at one point as a law "impos[ing] . . . voting requirements" on delegates, id., at 125, does not alter the conclusion that La Follette is a case about state regulation of internal party processes, not about regulation of primary elections. State-mandated intrusion upon either delegate selection or delegate voting would surely implicate the affected party's First Amendment right to define the organization and composition of its governing units, but it is clear that California intrudes upon neither in this case. Ante, at 2-3, n. 2.

La Follette and Cousins also stand for the proposition that a State's interest in regulating at the national level the types of party activities mentioned in the text is outweighed by the burden that state regulation would impose on the parties' associational rights. See Bellotti v. Connolly, 460 U. S. 1057, 1062-1063, and n. 3 (1983) (STEVENS, J., dissenting) (quoted in part ante, at 9, n. 7). In this case, however, California does not seek to regulate such activities at all, much less to do so at the national level.

its political parties to select their candidates through conventions or caucuses, a racist party would also be free to select only candidates who would adhere to the party line.

As District Judge Levi correctly observed in an opinion adopted by the Ninth Circuit, however, the associational rights of political parties are neither absolute nor as comprehensive as the rights enjoyed by wholly private associations. 169 F. 3d 646, 654–655 (1999); cf. Timmons, 520 U. S., at 360 (concluding that while regulation of endorsements implicates political parties' internal affairs and core associational activities, regulation of access to election ballot does not); La Follette, 450 U. S., at 120–121 (noting that it "may well be correct" to conclude that party associational rights are not unconstitutionally infringed by state open primary); id., at 131–132 (Powell, J., dissenting) (concluding that associational rights of major political parties are limited by parties' lack of defined ideological orientation and political mission). I think it clear— though the point has never been decided by this Court— "that a State may require parties to use the primary format for selecting their nominees." Ante, at 4. The reason a State may impose this significant restriction on a party's associational freedoms is that both the general election and the primary are quintessential forms of state action.⁴ It is because the primary is state action that an organization— whether it calls itself a political party or just a "Jaybird" association— may not deny non-Caucasians the right to participate in the selection of its nominees. Terry v. Adams, 345 U. S. 461 (1953); Smith v. Allwright, 321 U. S.

— — — — —
⁴Indeed, the primary serves an essential public function given that, "[a]s a practical matter, the ultimate choice of the mass of voters is predetermined when the nominations [by the major political parties] have been made." Morse v. Republican Party of Va., 517 U. S. 186, 205–206 (1996) (opinion of STEVENS, J.); see also United States v. Classic, 313 U. S. 299, 319 (1941).

STEVENS, J., dissenting

649, 663-664 (1944). The Court is quite right in stating that those cases "do not stand for the proposition that party affairs are [wholly] public affairs, free of First Amendment protections." Ante, at 6. They do, however, stand for the proposition that primary elections, unlike most "party affairs," are state action.⁵ The protections that the First Amendment affords to the "internal processes" of a political party, ibid., do not encompass a right to exclude nonmembers from voting in a state-required, state-financed primary election.

The so-called "right not to associate" that the Court relies upon, then, is simply inapplicable to participation in a state election. A political party, like any other association, may refuse to allow non-members to participate in the party's decisions when it is conducting its own affairs;⁶ California's blanket primary system does not infringe this principle. Ante, at 2-3, n. 2. But an election, unlike a convention or caucus, is a public affair. Although it is true that we have extended First Amendment protection to a party's right to invite independents to participate in its primaries, Tashjian v. Republican Party of Conn., 479

⁵Contrary to what the Court seems to think, I do not rely on Terry and Allwright as the basis for an argument that state accommodation of the parties' desire to exclude nonmembers from primaries would necessarily violate an independent constitutional proscription such as the Equal Protection Clause (though I do not rule that out). Cf. ante, at 6, n. 5. Rather, I cite them because our recognition that constitutional proscriptions apply to primaries illustrates that primaries— as integral parts of the election process by which the people select their government— are state affairs, not internal party affairs.

⁶"The State asserts a compelling interest in preserving the overall integrity of the electoral process, providing secrecy of the ballot, increasing voter participation in primaries, and preventing harassment of voters. But all of those interests go to the conduct of the Presidential preference primary— not to the imposition of voting requirements upon those who, in a separate process, are eventually selected as delegates." La Follette, 450 U. S., at 124-125.

STEVENS, J., dissenting

U. S. 208 (1986), neither that case nor any other has held or suggested that the "right not to associate" imposes a limit on the State's power to open up its primary elections to all voters eligible to vote in a general election. In my view, while state rules abridging participation in its elections should be closely scrutinized,⁷ the First Amendment does not inhibit the State from acting to broaden voter access to state-run, state-financed elections. When a State acts not to limit democratic participation but to expand the ability of individuals to participate in the democratic process, it is acting not as a foe of the First Amendment but as a friend and ally.

Although I would not endorse it, I could at least understand a constitutional rule that protected a party's associational rights by allowing it to refuse to select its candidates through state-regulated primary elections. See Marchioro v. Chaney, 442 U. S. 191, 199 (1979) ("There can be no complaint that [a] party's [First Amendment] right to govern itself has been substantially burdened by [state regulation] when the source of the complaint is the party's own decision to confer critical authority on the [party governing unit being regulated]"); cf. Tashjian, 479 U. S., at 237 (SCALIA, J., dissenting) ("It is beyond my understanding why the Republican Party's delegation of its democratic choice [of candidates] to a Republican Convention [rather than a primary] can be proscribed [by the State], but its delegation of that choice to nonmembers of the Party cannot"). A meaningful "right not to associate," if there is such a right in the context of limiting an electorate, ought to enable a party to insist on choosing its nominees at a convention or caucus where non-members could be excluded. In ⁷See Timmons v. Twin Cities Area New Party, 520 U. S. 351, 370 (1997) (STEVENS, J., dissenting) (general election ballot access restriction); Bullock v. Carter, 405 U. S. 134 (1972) (primary election ballot access restriction).

STEVENS, J., dissenting

the real world, however, anyone can "join" a political party merely by asking for the appropriate ballot at the appropriate time or (at most) by registering within a state-defined reasonable period of time before an election; neither past voting history nor the voter's race, religion, or gender can provide a basis for the party's refusal to "associate" with an unwelcome new member. See 169 F. 3d, at 655, and n. 20. There is an obvious mismatch between a supposed constitutional right "hot to associate" and a rule that turns on nothing more than the state-defined timing of the new associate's application for membership. See La Follette, 450 U. S., at 133 (Powell, J., dissenting) ("As Party affiliation becomes . . . easy for a voter to change [shortly before a particular primary election] in order to participate in [that] election, the difference between open and closed primaries loses its practical significance').

The Court's reliance on a political party's "right not to associate" as a basis for limiting a State's power to conduct primary elections will inevitably require it either to draw unprincipled distinctions among various primary configurations or to alter voting practices throughout the Nation in fundamental ways. Assuming that a registered Democrat or independent who wants to vote in the Republican gubernatorial primary can do so merely by asking for a Republican ballot, the Republican Party's constitutional right "hot to associate" is pretty feeble if the only cost it imposes on that Democrat or independent is a loss of his right to vote for non-Republican candidates for other offices. Cf. ante, at 10, n. 8. Subtle distinctions of this minor import are grist for state legislatures, but they demean the process of constitutional adjudication. Or, as JUSTICE SCALIA put the matter in his dissenting opinion in Tashjian:

"The . . . voter who, while steadfastly refusing to register as a Republican, casts a vote in [a non-closed] Republican primary, forms no more meaningful an association with the Party than does the independent or the registered Democrat who responds to questions by a Republican Party pollster. If the concept of freedom of association is extended to such casual contacts, it ceases to be of any analytic use." 479 U. S., at 235.

It is noteworthy that the bylaws of each of the political parties that are petitioners in this case unequivocally state that participation in partisan primary elections is to be limited to registered members of the party only. App. 7, 15, 16, 18. Under the Court's reasoning, it would seem to follow that conducting anything but a closed partisan primary in the face of such bylaws would necessarily burden the parties' "freedom to identify the people who constitute the association." Ante, at 6-7. Given that open primaries are supported by essentially the same state interests that the Court disparages today and are not as "harrow" as nonpartisan primaries, ante, at 14-18, there is surely a danger that open primaries will fare no better against a First Amendment challenge than blanket primaries have.

By the District Court's count, 3 States presently have blanket primaries, while an additional 21 States have open primaries and 8 States have semi-closed primaries in which independents may participate. 169 F. 3d, at 650. This Court's willingness to invalidate the primary schemes of 3 States and cast serious constitutional doubt on the schemes of 29 others at the parties' behest is, as the District Court rightly observed, "an extraordinary intrusion into the complex and changing election laws of the States [that] . . . remove[s] from the American political system a method for candidate selection that many States consider beneficial and which in the uncertain future could take on new appeal and importance." Id., at 654.⁸

⁸When coupled with our decision in Tashjian that a party may re-

STEVENS, J., dissenting

In my view, the First Amendment does not mandate that a putatively private association be granted the power to dictate the organizational structure of state-run, state-financed primary elections. It is not this Court's constitutional function to choose between the competing visions of what makes democracy work— party autonomy and discipline versus progressive inclusion of the entire electorate in the process of selecting their public officials— that are held by the litigants in this case. Callaghan v. State, 914 P. 2d 1250, 1263 (Alaska 1996); see also Tashjian, 479 U. S., at 222–223; Luther v. Borden, 7 How. 1, 40–42 (1849). That choice belongs to the people. U. S. Term Limits, Inc. v. Thornton, 514 U. S. 779, 795 (1995).

Even if the 'right not to associate' did authorize the Court to review the State's policy choice, its evaluation of the competing interests at stake is seriously flawed. For example, the Court's conclusion that a blanket primary severely burdens the parties' associational interests in selecting their standard bearers does not appear to be borne out by experience with blanket primaries in Alaska and Washington. See, e.g., 169 F. 3d, at 656–659, and n. 23. Moreover, that conclusion rests substantially upon the quire a State to open up a closed primary, this intrusion has even broader implications. It is arguable that, under the Court's reasoning combined with Tashjian, the only nominating options open for the States to choose without party consent are: (1) not to have primary elections, or (2) to have what the Court calls a 'nonpartisan primary'— a system presently used in Louisiana— in which candidates previously nominated by the various political parties and independent candidates compete. Ante, at 18. These two options are the same in practice because the latter is not actually a 'primary' in the common, partisan sense of that term at all. Rather, it is a general election with a runoff that has few of the benefits of democratizing the party nominating process that led the Court to declare the State's ability to require nomination by primary "too plain for argument." Ante, at 4; see Lightfoot v. Eu, 964 F. 2d 865, 872–873 (CA9 1992) (explaining state interest in requiring direct partisan primary).

STEVENS, J., dissenting

Court's claim that "[t]he evidence before the District Court" disclosed a "clear and present danger" that a party's nominee may be determined by adherents of an opposing party. Ante, at 10. This hyperbole is based upon the Court's liberal view of its appellate role, not upon the record and the District Court's factual findings. Following a bench trial and the receipt of expert witness reports, the District Court found that "there is little evidence that raiding [by members of an opposing party] will be a factor under the blanket primary. On this point there is almost unanimity among the political scientists who were called as experts by the plaintiffs and defendants." 169 F. 3d, at 656. While the Court is entitled to test this finding by making an independent examination of the record, the evidence it cites—including the results of the June 1998 primaries, ante, at 10–11, which should not be considered because they are not in the record—does not come close to demonstrating that the District Court's factual finding is clearly erroneous. Bose Corp. v. Consumers Union of United States, Inc., 466 U. S. 485, 498–501 (1984).

As to the Court's concern that benevolent crossover voting impinges on party associational interests, ante, at 11, the District Court found that experience with a blanket primary in Washington and other evidence "suggest[ed] that there will be particular elections in which there will be a substantial amount of cross-over voting . . . although the cross-over vote will rarely change the outcome of any election and in the typical contest will not be at significantly higher levels than in open primary states." 169 F. 3d, at 657. In my view, an empirically debatable assumption about the relative number and effect of likely crossover voters in a blanket primary, as opposed to an open primary or a nominally closed primary with only a brief pre-registration requirement, is too thin a reed to support a credible First Amendment distinction. See Tashjian, 479 U. S., at 219 (rejecting State's interest in keeping primary closed to curtail benevolent crossover voting by independents given that independents could easily cross over even under closed primary by simply registering as party members).

On the other side of the balance, I would rank as "substantial, indeed compelling," just as the District Court did, California's interest in fostering democratic government by "[i]ncreasing the representativeness of elected officials, giving voters greater choice, and increasing voter turnout and participation in [electoral processes]." 169 F. 3d, at 662;⁹ cf. Timmons, 520 U. S., at 364 ("[W]e [do not] require elaborate, empirical verification of the weightiness of the State's asserted justifications"). The Court's glib rejection of the State's interest in increasing voter participation, ante, at 17, is particularly regrettable. In an era of dramatically declining voter participation, States should be free to experiment with reforms designed to make the democratic process more robust by involving the entire electorate in the process of selecting those who will serve as government officials. Opening the nominating process to all and encouraging voters to participate in any election that draws their interest is one obvious means of achieving this goal. See Brief for Respondents 46 (noting that study presented to District Court showed higher voter turnout levels in blanket primary states than in open or closed primary states); ante, at 1 (KENNEDY, J., concur-⁹In his concurrence, JUSTICE KENNEDY argues that the State has no valid interest in changing party doctrine through an open primary, and suggests that the State's assertion of this interest somehow irrevocably taints its blanket primary system. Ante, at 2. The Timmons balancing test relied upon by the Court, ante, at 14, however, does not support that analysis. Timmons and our myriad other constitutional cases that weigh burdens against state interests merely ask whether a state interest justifies the burden that the State is imposing on a constitutional right; the fact that one of the asserted state interests may not be valid or compelling under the circumstances does not end the analysis.

ring). I would also give some weight to the First Amendment associational interests of nonmembers of a party seeking to participate in the primary process,¹⁰ to the fundamental right of such nonmembers to cast a meaningful vote for the candidate of their choice, Burdick v. Takushi, 504 U. S. 428, 445 (1992) (KENNEDY, J., dissenting), and to the preference of almost 60% of California voters—including a majority of registered Democrats and Republicans—for a blanket primary. 169 F.3d, at 649; see Tashjian, 479 U. S., at 236 (SCALIA, J., dissenting) (preferring information on whether majority of rank-and-file party members support a particular proposition than whether state party convention does so). In my view, a State is unquestionably entitled to rely on this combination of interests in deciding who may vote in a primary election conducted by the State. It is indeed strange to find that the First Amendment forecloses this decision.

The Elections Clause of the United States Constitution, Art. I, §4, cl. 1, provides that “[t]he Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof” (emphasis added). This broad constitutional grant of power to state legislatures is “matched by state control over the election process for state offices.” Tashjian, 479 U. S., at 217. For the reasons given in Part I, supra, I believe it would be a proper exercise of these powers and would not violate the First Amendment for the California Legislature to adopt a blanket primary system. This particular blanket primary system, however, was adopted by popular initiative. Although this distinction is not relevant with respect to elections for state offices, it is unclear whether a state election system not adopted by the legislature is constitutional insofar as it applies to the manner of electing United States Senators and Representatives.

The California Constitution empowers the voters of the State to propose statutes and to adopt or reject them. Art. 2, §8. If approved by a majority vote, such "initiative statutes" generally take effect immediately and may not be amended or repealed by the California Legislature unless the voters consent. Art. 2, §10. The amendments to the California Election Code that changed the state primary from a closed system to the blanket system presently at issue were the result of the voters' March 1996 adoption of Proposition 198, an initiative statute.

The text of the Elections Clause suggests that such an initiative system, in which popular choices regarding the manner of state elections are unreviewable by independent legislative action, may not be a valid method of exercising the power that the Clause vests in state "Legislature[s]." It could be argued that this reasoning does not apply in California, as the California Constitution further provides that "[t]he legislative power of this State is vested in the California Legislature . . . , but the people reserve to themselves the powers of initiative and referendum." Art. 4, §1. The vicissitudes of state nomenclature, however, do not necessarily control the meaning of the Federal Constitution. Moreover, the United States House of Representatives has determined in an analogous context that the Elections Clause's specific reference to "the Legislature" is not so broad as to encompass the general

'legislative power of the State.'¹¹ Under that view, California's classification of voter-approved initiatives as an exercise of legislative power would not render such initiatives the act of the California Legislature within the meaning of the Elections Clause. Arguably, therefore, California's blanket primary system for electing United States Senators and Representatives is invalid. Because the point was neither raised by the parties nor discussed by the courts below, I reserve judgment on it. I believe, however, that the importance of the point merits further attention.

For the reasons stated in Part I of this opinion, as well as those stated more fully in the District Court's excellent opinion, I respectfully dissent.

But what is meant by the legislature? Does it mean the legislative power of the State, which would include a convention authorized to prescribe fundamental law; or does it mean the legislature eo nomine, as known in the political history of the country? The [C]ommittee [of Elections for the U. S. House of Representatives] have adopted the latter construction').

CALIFORNIA DEMOCRATIC PARTY ET AL. v. JONES,
SECRETARY OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA, ET AL.

CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

No. 99-401. Argued April 24, 2000— Decided June 26, 2000

One way that candidates for public office in California gain access to the general ballot is by winning a qualified political party's primary. In 1996, Proposition 198 changed the State's partisan primary from a closed primary, in which only a political party's members can vote on its nominees, to a blanket primary, in which each voter's ballot lists every candidate regardless of party affiliation and allows the voter to choose freely among them. The candidate of each party who wins the most votes is that party's nominee for the general election. Each of petitioner political parties prohibits nonmembers from voting in the party's primary. They filed suit against respondent state official, alleging, inter alia, that the blanket primary violated their First Amendment rights of association. Respondent Californians for an Open Primary intervened. The District Court held that the primary's burden on petitioners' associational rights was not severe and was justified by substantial state interests. The Ninth Circuit affirmed.

Held: California's blanket primary violates a political party's First Amendment right of association. Pp. 4-19.

(a) States play a major role in structuring and monitoring the primary election process, but the processes by which political parties select their nominees are not wholly public affairs that States may regulate freely. To the contrary, States must act within limits imposed by the Constitution when regulating parties' internal processes. See, e.g., Eu v. San Francisco County Democratic Central Comm., 489 U. S. 214. Respondents misplace their reliance on Smith v. Allwright, 321 U. S. 649, and Terry v. Adams, 345 U. S. 461, which held not that party affairs are public affairs, free of First Amendment protections, see, e.g., Tashjian v. Republican Party of Conn., 479 U. S.

Syllabus

208, but only that, when a State prescribes an election process that gives a special role to political parties, the parties' discriminatory action becomes state action under the Fifteenth Amendment. This Nation has a tradition of political associations in which citizens band together to promote candidates who espouse their political views. The First Amendment protects the freedom to join together to further common political beliefs, id., at 214–215, which presupposes the freedom to identify those who constitute the association, and to limit the association to those people, Democratic Party of United States v. Wisconsin ex rel. La Follette, 450 U. S. 107, 122. In no area is the political associations' right to exclude more important than in its candidate-selection process. That process often determines the party's positions on significant public policy issues, and it is the nominee who is the party's ambassador charged with winning the general electorate over to its views. The First Amendment reserves a special place, and accords a special protection, for that process, Eu, supra, at 224, because the moment of choosing the party's nominee is the crucial juncture at which the appeal to common principles may be translated into concerted action, and hence to political power, Tashjian, supra, at 216. California's blanket primary violates these principles. Proposition 198 forces petitioners to adulterate their candidate-selection process—a political party's basic function—by opening it up to persons wholly unaffiliated with the party, who may have different views from the party. Such forced association has the likely outcome—indeed, it is Proposition 198's intended outcome—of changing the parties' message. Because there is no heavier burden on a political party's associational freedom, Proposition 198 is unconstitutional unless it is narrowly tailored to serve a compelling state interest. See Timmons v. Twin Cities Area New Party, 520 U. S. 351, 358. Pp. 4–14.

(b) None of respondents' seven proffered state interests—producing elected officials who better represent the electorate, expanding candidate debate beyond the scope of partisan concerns, ensuring that disenfranchised persons enjoy the right to an effective vote, promoting fairness, affording voters greater choice, increasing voter participation, and protecting privacy—is a compelling interest justifying California's intrusion into the parties' associational rights. Pp. 14–18.

Alaska Division of Elections

Primary Election Task Force Final Recommendations to Lt. Governor

March 13, 2001

The Honorable Fran Ulmer
Lieutenant Governor
PO Box 110015
Juneau AK 99811-0015

Dear Lieutenant Governor Ulmer:

On January 25, 2001, the Primary Election Task Force was created in which you invited members to discuss and recommend how Alaska should run its primary election. Last June, in California Democratic Party v. Jones, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that California's blanket primary was unconstitutional. The ruling affected other state's blanket primary election system, including Alaska.

The task force held three meetings. The first was an organizational meeting held on February 9 at which time the purpose of the task force was discussed. Presentations were made by the Division of Elections and the Department of Law which included information concerning the Jones decision, Alaska's primary election and those of other states. On February 27, a hearing to receive statewide public comment was held. Public comments were received from members of both the major and minor political parties, the public, and the League of Women Voters. On March 9, the task force met to formulate a recommendation concerning the conduct of Alaska's primary election system.

We, the members of the Primary Election Task Force, do hereby approve the attached recommendation.

Sincerely,

(Signed by:)
Av Gross, Chairman

Please enter into the record my testimony to the (H) Judiciary committee name
 committee on HB 193, dated 4 April 2001
 bill/subject

The purpose of the primary process is for the various parties to select the candidates they wish to run in the general elections. It seems to me the conflict that brings HB 193 to consideration is that the major political parties wish to have the public pay the expense of their selection process, while at the same time insuring that only their party members be the selection. The best solution to this problem is that the state no longer fund the primary process. Each party could then select their candidates in whatever manner is consistent with their parties by laws.

HB 193 simply continues welfare payment to the Major Political Parties and disempowers those who belong to a third party. In short it would perpetuate the status quo, favor the majority parties, and hinder any third party movement.

A BILL

FOR AN ACT ENTITLED

1 "An Act establishing a right of action for a legal separation; requiring a report about
2 legal separations; and amending Rule 42(a), Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure."

3 BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF ALASKA:

4 * Section 1. AS 25.24 is amended by adding new sections to read:

5 Article 3A. Legal Separation.

6 Sec. 25.24.400. Complaint for legal separation. A husband or a wife may 7 separately or jointly file a complaint in the superior court for a legal separation. A 8 legal separation may be granted no more than once to the same married couple.

9 Sec. 25.24.410. Grounds for a legal separation. A legal separation may be 10 granted by the court based on a finding that

- 11 (1) an incompatibility of temperament exists between the parties; and 12 (2) the continuation of the parties' status as married persons preserves
13 or protects significant legal, financial, social, or religious interests.

14 Sec. 25.24.420. Residency required. One of the parties to a complaint for

1 legal separation must be a resident of the state at the time the action is commenced.

2 Sec. 25.24.430. Consolidation of actions. If, at any time, a party to an action
3 for legal separation files an action for divorce or annulment, the court ~~shall~~ 4 the new action with the action for legal separation.

5 Sec. 25.24.440. Applicability of other statutes. The following statutes
6 relating to divorce actions shall be applied similarly to an action for legal separation:
7 AS 25.24.060, 25.24.140, 25.24.150, 25.24.152, 25.24.160, and 25.24.170.

8 Sec. 25.24.450. Decree. (a) If a court finds that the grounds specified under 9 AS 25.24.410 exist, the court ~~shall~~ ^{must} enter a decree of legal separation.

10 (b) Unless otherwise provided in the decree, provisions for child custody and 11 visitation, child support, and spousal support included in a decree of legal separation 12 are final orders subject to modification only as provided in AS 25.20.110 and 13 AS 25.24.170.

14 (c) If the decree of legal separation includes provisions for division of 15 property and debts of the marriage, the decree must state whether the division is an 16 interim or final order. To the extent the division is not a final order, the court shall 17 determine the parties' respective rights to and responsibilities for property and 18 obligations not finally distributed and as to any property or debts accrued by either 19 party while the order is in effect.

20 Sec. 25.24.460. Effect of separation. A decree of legal separation does not 21 restore the parties to the status of unmarried persons. A decree of legal separation
22 modifies the parties' rights and responsibilities as married persons only to the extent 23 specified in the decree of separation.

24 * Sec. 2. AS 09.05.015(a) is amended to read:

25 (a) A court of this state having jurisdiction over the subject matter has 26 jurisdiction over a person served in an action according to the rules of civil procedure

27 (1) in an action, whether arising in or out of this state, against a 28 defendant who, when the action is commenced,

29 (A) is a natural person present in this state when served;

30 (B) is a natural person domiciled in this state;

31 (C) is a domestic corporation; or

1 (D) is engaged in substantial and not isolated activities in this
2 state, whether the activities are wholly interstate, intrastate, or otherwise;

3 (2) in an action that may be brought under statutes of this state that 4 specifically confer grounds for personal jurisdiction over the defendant;

5 (3) in an action claiming injury to person or property in or out of this 6 state arising out of an act or omission in this state by the defendant;

7 (4) in an action claiming injury to person or property in this state
8 arising out of an act or omission out of this state by the defendant, provided, in 9 addition, that at the time of the injury either

10 (A) solicitation or service activities were carried on in this state 11 by or on behalf of the defendant; or

12 (B) products, materials, or things processed, serviced, or 13 manufactured by the defendant were used or consumed in this state in the 14 ordinary course of trade;

15 (5) in an action that

16 (A) arises out of a promise, made anywhere to the plaintiff or 17 to some third party for the plaintiff's benefit, by the defendant to perform 18 services in this state or to pay for services to be performed in this state by the 19 plaintiff;

20 (B) arises out of services actually performed for the plaintiff by 21 the defendant in this state, or services actually performed for the defendant by 22 the plaintiff in this state if the performance in this state was authorized or 23 ratified by the defendant;

24 (C) arises out of a promise, made anywhere to the plaintiff or to 25 some third party for the plaintiff's benefit, by the defendant to deliver or 26 receive in this state or to ship from this state goods, documents of title, or other 27 things of value;

28 (D) relates to goods, documents of title, or other things of value
29 shipped from this state by the plaintiff to the defendant on the order or 30 direction of the defendant; or

31 (E) relates to goods, documents of title, or other things of value

1 actually received by the plaintiff in this state from the defendant without regard
2 to where delivery to the carrier occurred;

3 (6) in an action that arises out of

4 (A) a promise, made anywhere to the plaintiff or to some third 5 party for the plaintiff's benefit, by the defendant to create in either party an 6 interest in, or to protect, acquire, dispose of, use, rent, own, control, or possess
7 by either party real property situated in this state;

8 (B) a claim to recover a benefit derived by the defendant
9 through the use, ownership, control, or possession by the defendant of tangible 10 property situated in this state either at the time of the first use, ownership, 11 control, or possession or at the time the action is commenced; or 12 (C) a claim that the defendant return, restore, or account to the 13 plaintiff for an asset or thing of value that was in this state at the time the 14 defendant acquired possession or control over it;

15 (7) in an action to recover a deficiency judgment upon a mortgage note 16 or conditional sales contract or other security agreement executed by the defendant or 17 a predecessor of the defendant to whose obligations the defendant has succeeded and 18 the deficiency is claimed

19 (A) in an action in this state to foreclose upon real property
20 situated in this state;

21 (B) following sale of real property in this state by the plaintiff;
22 or

23 (C) following resale of tangible property in this state by the 24 plaintiff;

25 (8) in an action against a defendant who is or was an officer or director 26 of a domestic corporation where the action arises out of the defendant's conduct as 27 such officer or director or out of the activities of the corporation while the defendant
28 held office as a director or officer;

29 (9) in an action for the collection of taxes or assessments levied,
30 assessed, or otherwise imposed by a taxing authority after April 10, 1968;

31 (10) in an action that arises out of a promise made to the plaintiff or

1 some third party by the defendant to insure upon or against the happening of an event
2 if

3 (A) the person insured was a resident of this state when the 4 event out of which the cause of action is claimed to arise occurred;

5 (B) the event out of which the cause of action is claimed to 6 arise occurred in this state; or

7 (C) the promise to insure was made in the state;

8 (11) in an action against a personal representative to enforce a claim 9 against the deceased person represented if one or more of the grounds stated in (2) - 10 (10) of this subsection would have furnished a basis for jurisdiction over the deceased
11 if living, and it is immaterial under this paragraph whether the action was commenced
12 during the lifetime of the deceased;

13 (12) in an action for annulment, divorce, legal separation, or separate 14 maintenance when a personal claim is asserted against the nonresident party [,] if

15 (A) the parties resided in this state in a marital relationship for 16 not less than six consecutive months within the six years preceding the 17 commencement of the action;

18 (B) the party asserting the personal claim has continued to 19 reside in this state; and

20 (C) the nonresident party receives notice as required by law.

21 * Sec. 3. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to
22 read:

23 INDIRECT COURT RULE CHANGE. AS 25.24.430, enacted by sec. 1 of this Act,
24 amends Rule 42(a), Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure, by requiring consolidation of 25 subsequent divorce and annulment actions with legal separation actions filed by the same
26 parties.

27 * Sec. 4. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to
28 read:

29 APPLICABILITY. (a) This Act applies to complaints for legal separation, divorce,
30 and annulment that are filed on or after the effective date of this Act and orders of legal 31 separation issued on or after the effective date of this Act.

1 (b) An order of legal separation issued by a court in the state before the effective date
2 of this Act

3 (1) is not subject to or rendered void by this Act; and

4 (2) remains enforceable between the parties regardless of whether the issuing
5 court was authorized to issue the order.

6 * Sec. 5. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to
7 read:

8 REPORTS. (a) The administrative director of the Alaska Court System shall 9 annually, beginning September 30, 2002, report to the state registrar the number of legal 10 separations granted by courts in the state during the 12 calendar months preceding the date of 11 the report.

12 (b) The state registrar shall, by January 15, 2005, submit a report to the legislature
13 containing the statistics received from the court system under (a) of this section and the 14 recommendations, if any, of the state registrar for legislation on how information relating to 15 legal separations should be organized and whether the information should be made accessible
16 to members of the public through the Bureau of Vital Statistics.

17 * Sec. 6. Section 5 of this Act is repealed May 1, 2005.

HB 196 Sectional Analysis

Revised: April 18, 2001 LS0718\C

Section 1: Adds a new section of law that Provides for Legal Separation as an alternative to Divorce or Dissolution.

25.24.400 A husband and/or wife can file a complaint in superior court for legal separation and may only do so once per married couple.

25.24.410 The basis of the complaint must be incompatibility and that there is a legal, financial, social, or religious reason to remain legally married.

25.24.420 Either the husband or wife must be an Alaskan.

25.24.430 Provides for consolidation of legal separation effort and divorce effort if one of the parties escalates to a divorce.

25.24.450 A Legal Separation Decree will be entered with provisions for child custody and visitation, child support, spousal support, division of property and debts as circumstances dictate.

25.24.460 A couple with a decree of legal separation is still married.

Section 2: Gives the courts jurisdiction in an action for legal separation. This section is large, but the only change to existing law is on page 5, line 13 where "legal separation" is included with divorce.

Section 3: Amends Court rule 42(a) to allow consolidation of subsequent divorce and annulment actions with legal separation actions.

Section 4: A new section of law that defines the applicability of this act to divorce and separation actions filed before, on, or after the effective date of this act.

Section 5: Amends Court rules to require appropriate Reporting.

Section 6: Repeals Section 5 of this act on May 1, 2005. The purpose of this sunset is to generate re-evaluation of size of the reporting task.

14 maintenance when a personal claim is asserted against the nonresident party [,] if

15 (A) the parties resided in this state in a marital relationship for 16 not less than six consecutive months within the six years preceding the 17 commencement of the action;

18 (B) the party asserting the personal claim has continued to 19 reside in this state; and

20 (C) the nonresident party receives notice as required by law.

21 * Sec. 3. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to
22 read:

23 INDIRECT COURT RULE CHANGE. AS 25.24.430, enacted by sec. 1 of this Act,
24 amends Rule 42(a), Alaska Rules of Civil Procedure, by requiring consolidation of 25 subsequent divorce and annulment actions with legal separation actions filed by the same
26 parties.

27 * Sec. 4. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to
28 read:

29 APPLICABILITY. (a) This Act applies to complaints for legal separation, divorce,
30 and annulment that are filed on or after the effective date of this Act and orders of legal 31 separation issued on or after the effective date of this Act.

1 (b) An order of legal separation issued by a court in the state before the effective date
2 of this Act

3 (1) is not subject to or rendered void by this Act; and

4 (2) remains enforceable between the parties regardless of whether the issuing
5 court was authorized to issue the order.

6 * Sec. 5. The uncodified law of the State of Alaska is amended by adding a new section to
7 read:

8 REPORTS. (a) The administrative director of the Alaska Court System shall 9 annually, beginning September 30, 2002, report to the state registrar the number of legal 10 separations granted by courts in the state during the 12 calendar months preceding the date of 11 the report.

12 (b) The state registrar shall, by January 15, 2005, submit a report to the legislaure
13 containing the statistics received from the court system under (a) of this section and the 14 recommendations, if any, of the state registrar for legislation on how information relating to
15 legal separations should be organized and whether the information should be made accessible
16 to members of the public through the Bureau of Vital Statistics.

17 * Sec. 6. Section 5 of this Act is repealed May 1, 2005.

REPRESENTATIVE FRED DYSON

HB 196 Sponsor Statement

"An Act relating to legal separation"

Updated: March 22, 2001

Contact: Representative Fred Dyson's office at (907) 465-2199

For many troubled marriages, a Legal Separation would be very valuable while the individuals work on their own issues and relationships. Legal Separation allows the marriage partners to separate their property and financial affairs and establish custody, without the final step of a divorce.

In a relationship with one partner having problems with substance abuse, crime, domestic violence etc., an interim status such as this Legal Separation allows for a protective status while time indicates if the troubled partner will get on top of his/her problem.

For many Alaskans, religious values make divorce a very unattractive alternative, but a legal separation provides for the partners to protect their assets.

HB 196 adds a section of law that defines and sets the guidelines for Legal Separation.

At this time 17 other states allow for "Legal Separation".

SPONSOR STATEMENT

HB 196 Sectional Analysis

Revised: April 4, 2001 LS0718\C

Section 1: Adds a new section of law that Provides for Legal Separation as an alternative to Divorce or Dissolution.

25.24.400 A husband and/or wife can file a complaint in superior court for legal separation.

25.24.410 Legal Separation complaint must be based on incompatibility that there is a legal, financial, social, or religious reason to remain legally married.

25.24.420 Either the husband or wife must be an Alaskan.

25.24.430 Provides for consolidation of legal separation effort and divorce effort if one of the parties escalates to a divorce.

25.24.450 A Legal Separation Decree will be entered with provisions for child custody and visitation, child support, spousal support, division of property and debts. The decree provisions are final orders unless otherwise provided in the decree.

25.24.460 A couple with a decree of legal separation is still married.

Section 2: Gives the courts jurisdiction in an action for legal separation. This section is large, but the only change to existing law is on page 5, line 13 where "legal separation" is included with divorce.

Section 3: Amends Court rule 42(a) by requiring consolidation of subsequent divorce and annulment actions with legal separation actions.

Section 4: A new section of law that defines the applicability of this act to divorce and separation actions filed before, on, or after the effective date of this act.

Section 5: Amends Court rules to require appropriate Reporting.

Section 6: Repeals Section 5 of this act on May 1, 2005. The purpose of this sunset is to generate re-evaluation of size of the reporting task.

Re: An Act establishing a Right of Action for a Legal Separation;

Dear Wes:

Thank-you for the opportunity to review and comment on proposed Senate Bill 126. First, I am pleased to see a move toward formal recognition of an action for legal separation of marriage. In my practice, I am often asked about legal separation as an alternative to divorce. Although Alaska does not expressly recognize legal separation, in my opinion, existing statutes give the court the authority to address most if not all of the same issues (i.e. custody, child support, spousal support and to some extent property division) outside of the context of an action for divorce. Unfortunately, I have never had the opportunity to test this in practice. On the few occasions I have filed actions seeking such relief, the opposing party has countered with a claim for divorce.

Nevertheless, my perception is that most people who are looking for legal protection against a spouse, do not see an alternative to divorce. Given the prevailing attitude toward divorce, I suspect that legal separation will not be common. However, I am hopeful that with statutory recognition, that option will at least appear more viable to those who do not wish to pursue a divorce.

Having reviewed the proposed act, I have only a couple of questions concerning the interplay between an action for separation and a subsequent action for divorce. I assume that if a counterclaim for divorce were filed in response to an action for legal separation, the matter would proceed as a divorce. I note however, that AS 25.24.450 provides that if the requisite grounds for separation are shown, the court "shall" issue a decree of legal separation. While I suspect that most judges would have little difficulty with this, perhaps it would make sense to clarify which action has priority.

I also had a question about the effect of a divorce action filed after the entry of a final decree of separation. Section 25.24.450(b) would seem to preclude the court from revisiting custody and support issues in a subsequent action for divorce, at least without grounds for modification under AS 25.20.110 and AS 25.24.170. With regard to division of the marital estate, however, I am uncertain as to whether the court in a subsequent divorce could divide assets. There will undoubtedly be couples that obtain a decree of separation only to later file for a divorce. I assume that property awarded to a spouse in a final decree of separation would be considered "separate property" in a subsequent divorce. However, in dividing the marital estate in a divorce, the law in Alaska and in other states, permits the court to divide a spouse's separate property if necessary to do equity. A party unhappy with a final decree of separation might well attempt to persuade a subsequent divorce court to reallocate assets. While this would be rare and unlikely to succeed, the potential for additional litigation might discourage actions for legal separation.

Also, although it would seem that AS 25.24.430 would prevent forum shopping at least within Alaska, there seems to be some potential for a party unhappy with a final decree of separation, to attempt to relitigate property issues in another state.

The Supreme Court would undoubtedly resolve these issues, but it might make sense to address them up front in the statute.

Please give me a call if you would like to discuss any of this further.

Sincerely,
GOLTER & LOGSDON, P.C.

ANALYSIS: (Attach a separate page if necessary)

The department has to make two assumptions. 1) Legal separation is performed under current law; the husband is presumed to be the father; and 3 party affidavits are available. 2) The bill does not intend that legal separations to be public documents. Based upon the yearly reports from the Alaska Court System, the Registrar will examine and make an evaluation and recommendations to the Legislature in 2005. As written the bill has no programmatic effects on the Department.

HB 196 creates a new cause of action which allows married couples to remain legally married but obtain many of the legal benefits of a divorce or dissolution action. The couple remain married, however the rights and responsibilities of the couple can be modified by the decree, including provisions for child custody and visitation, child support, spousal support, and provisions for division of property and debts.

Passage of HB 196 will have no fiscal impact on the Department of Law.

I. INTRODUCTION

In this appeal, Danny Glasen disputes the superior court's decision to deny his request to incorporate the Glasens' 1991 separation agreement into their 1997 divorce decree. Because we agree with the superior court that the separation agreement was not a final order and that it terminated upon the Glasens'
